Mr. Drysdale: Well, you know, it was $4.1 million in savings in our operational budget. As all government was asked to watch their spending and expenses, a lot of it was actually manpower reduction. Like, we have 119 vacancies in Alberta Transportation right now, so that was a big part of our operational savings.

Mr. Strankman: I still don't understand. I appreciate the savings, and I appreciate the reduction in manpower, but were the savings rolled forward in the budget, or were they taken back to general revenue?

Mr. Drysdale: No. It's supplementary supply for this year's budget. It's savings that we've shown in this year's budget. So going forward, you'll have to wait till March 26, and we'll show you our budget going forward for next year.

Mr. Strankman: Okay. I accept that.

I'd like to move on to Aboriginal Relations. I understand that there is a supplemental requirement of $8.6 million and $5.6 million that's particularly on one location. Could you give me some understanding of what that was?

The Chair: The Associate Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Dorward: Yes. Mr. Chair, on behalf of the Premier and Minister of Aboriginal Relations I'm pleased to stand and let the member know that there are two specific areas of work done in that regard.

One is a really good news story, Mr. Chair, in Lubicon Lake, where, many will know, there was a critical shortage of housing. There was the opportunity to get 19 units of the trailers from Slave Lake and move them into Lubicon to address those critical needs, that were in fact identified by the Minister of Energy, which at the time was the Minister of Aboriginal Relations. Kudos to the present Minister of Energy for identifying that and working with Billy Joe Laboucan, the new chief there, to take care of some of the absolute, critical needs.

The total in that regard is $5.6 million. That included much more than just moving trailers on site. It included as well setting those trailers up, which needed to include water and sewage arrangements. Also, there was a small portion of that that allowed the start of water delivery into the community, and that invigorated the community a lot, Mr. Chair.

Having been there twice, I can tell you that the chief and the people of Lubicon are absolutely invigorated by this demonstration on behalf of the people of Alberta towards their needs in that community. As you know, they don't have a land settlement there yet. It's under way, and that's something that the federal government is involved in more than Alberta. So I'm glad to see that this situation worked together, and we're able to help the people of Lubicon.

The second one, Mr. Chair, is $3 million, which makes up the total amount, and that was under a long-term governance and funding arrangement, the LTA, for the Métis settlements . . .

The Chair: Hon. members, if I may, the side conversations are making it a little hard to hear the member speaking. So if you could keep it down just a little bit, I'd really appreciate it.

Please proceed, hon. Associate Minister.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Three million dollars was allocated to absolutely critical infrastructure needs on Métis settlements. There is a long-term agreement for funding by the province of Alberta to Métis settlement areas similar to a municipal situation where there are dollars allocated for infrastructure. This $3 million was absolutely critical to get done in this last fiscal year, so we're pleased to be able to assist on that. There is in place under the LTA an $85 million long-term arrangement over 10 years, so this certainly fit into the parameters of that program.

I thank the member for these great questions.

The Chair: Thank you.

Hon. member, you have just under nine minutes left.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Back to the member. He used the acronym LTA. Could I use the acronym LTA? Could I be understanding of that?

Mr. Dorward: Yeah. The LTA, Mr. Chair, is an acronym for long-term arrangement, which is an arrangement with the Métis settlements whereby they will have access to capital funding in their areas, as I said, similar to an MSI kind of arrangement, where the province assists and supports programs that they have in their areas that are selected by the council of elected representatives of those Métis settlement areas.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. member.

4:40

Mr. Strankman: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I had the fantastic opportunity to have the gathering of the Métis organizations in my constituency in Stettler last summer, and it was an enlightening experience.

You mentioned again the LTA. Can I be understanding of whether that's a provincial-federal partnership along with the Métis settlement, or is it simply a relationship with the province and the local Métis? The Métis are far more diverse in their settlements of the prairies than First Nations.

The Chair: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Dorward: Yes. I thank again this member opposite for these informed questions because it allows me the opportunity to address the Committee of Supply and let the committee know that there are two distinct areas, which is the Métis Nation of Alberta – that would be Métis individuals who are self-identified that are not living in settlement areas. Those are distinct and separate from the eight Métis areas that are designated in Alberta and have for decades been the only place in Canada that has set-apart land for individuals, Métis individuals, who wish to live in a settlement area.

There are eight settlement areas, Mr. Chair. This is a provincial program. There is no federal component of that, so it's us supporting the eight Métis areas – we call them settlements, Métis settlements; they're generally in the north – and that's completely separate and distinct from individuals who are self-identified as Métis but do not live in settlement areas. This LTA arrangement is only with the settlement areas.

The Chair: Hon. member, do you wish to continue?

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to move on. It's unfortunate; it doesn't appear that the Minister of Education is here. Is there anyone willing to . . .

The Chair: Is there someone that will speak on behalf of the Minister of Education?

Mr. Strankman: I have information that $215 million is being added to the capital budget for Education, and this is an increase of 32 per cent. Can I have some understanding of how this 32 per cent raise was arrived at? Is there a list of priorities that we could see?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy on behalf of the Minister of Education.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise again for the supplementary estimates that we're discussing here today to give an overview of the Ministry of Education's supplementary request of $215.7 million in total requests. The majority of the request relates to reprofiling of funds for projects.

As everyone knows, the government has a number of school projects currently under construction, both new and modernizations. The majority of the funding request, about $137 million, was to reprofile funds from one fiscal year to the next, Mr. Chair. Of that amount, $42 million was reprofiled for Alberta's 35 phase 1 school capital projects announced in 2011; $65 million was reprofiled for phase 2 school projects. These are the 50 new schools and 70 modernizations announced in 2013 and 2014. Approximately $30 million was needed to reprofile various other school and modular projects in the '14-15 fiscal year. These adjustments better reflect when the money will be spent within project schedules.

Mr. Chair, I'm sure you're aware and I suspect the member would be aware that when working with large and complex projects such as this, variance from initial schedules is not unexpected. We are required, of course, to book the expenses when they occur. The government also wants to make sure that the right planning is done at the front end of any project in order to ensure that projects are completed on budget.

Another large portion of the Education request was to address student accommodation pressures, Mr. Chair. Education approved $30.6 million for the Calgary board of education to address urgent enrolment pressures identified in its interim capital plan. This included four starter schools, planning for a new high school, and eight modular classrooms.

Education also approved $19.4 million for emergent needs in the rest of Alberta, Mr. Chair. This funding was approved in order to address urgent student accommodation pressures identified by several school boards. The funding was for eight new starter schools, the completion of an existing starter school, and modular classrooms for several high-growth areas. Just as a reminder, those 12 new starter schools just mentioned are now moving forward as fully built schools so more students can be accommodated in classrooms sooner.

In addition, Mr. Chair, to help address the deferred maintenance needs in all school jurisdictions, an additional $20 million was approved to supplement the infrastructure maintenance and renewal program.

Also announced in the fall, $10 million was approved to allow planning work to begin on 57 new schools and additions and 20 modernizations and replacement schools. These projects are urgently needed to address enrolment pressures in aging school facilities, Mr. Chair. By providing planning funds earlier in the process, government is enabling these projects to proceed much more quickly once they are approved to go to construction.

In conclusion, Mr. Chair, Education has also had one other small change, a decrease of $963,000 as a result of lower than budgeted capital spending in other programs.

That summarizes the supplementary request of the Department of Education, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. member.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks again, Mr. Chair. I'd like to question the hon. member. He made a comment that pressures determined by the interim capital fund led to a $30.6 million expenditure for the Calgary board of education. But below that we have a $10 million expenditure for phase 3 announced during a certain period of the by-elections. Can you explain to me how the $10 million planning expenditure was actually arrived at? Was it interim capital funding, or what was the methodology? That's what I wanted to drive at.

The Chair: Hon. minister, do you have that information, or is that something you might have to provide to the hon. member?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chair, I will repeat that the $10 million was approved to allow planning work to begin on new schools and additions. It was approved in the normal process of capital approvals within the government, through the Department of Infrastructure and the Department of Education, and the spending was booked when it was done.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. member.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks again, Mr. Chair. I want to also mention to the member that in my constituency I hear about a lot of rural remote fuel tax benefits that were taken away from some of the rural remote school divisions. Are there any allowances for that? Because in the rural areas a lot of those distances are becoming greater between residents, and I don't see any particular increase or decrease in relation to that.

Mr. Oberle: Again, Mr. Chair, the estimates before us are supplementary estimates, so they represent spending supplementary to the government's 2014-2015 budget. There are many, many programs contained within that budget that were spent and allocated as planned that would not be reflected in the supplementary estimates for this year. The member may want to engage the Minister of Education once we get into Budget '15-16 to discuss what the program is going forward.

The Chair: Thank you.

Hon. member, you still have 30 seconds.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the time.

The Chair: Thank you.

We will move on to the members from the third party. I would recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre. Before you start, hon. member, would you like to have your time combined with the minister's?

Ms Blakeman: Yes, please.

The Chair: I'm assuming that the minister is – unless they tell me otherwise, then we will proceed as such, so you may begin.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much.

The Chair: You have 20 minutes.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you. I'm very aware of the 20 minutes. It actually makes me kind of crazy that we are working under this particular budget process, which was never what was intended when we started into this because, you know, the opposition members are trying to debate $6,820,677.77 per opposition minute. That's, you know, a lot to cover in a minute.

An Hon. Member: And you just wasted two of them.

Ms Blakeman: Well, the wasting would be in your opinion, then, I take it. It's a poor process, and it doesn't serve this place well at all.

Let me talk a bit about the disservice that's going on. In the Department of Education there has been a refusal on behalf of the government to tell us where these schools are. This entire presentation is odd, to say the least, because we keep talking about – wait for this – $65,161,000 for 50 new schools and 70 modernizations reprofiled.

Reprofiled: what's that mean? Like, moved? Well, I thought: "Okay. I'll go to the dictionary. What the heck." Reprofiled. Profile is the outline or contour of a human face; a picture or representation of the side view of a head; an outline view of a city or a mountain; an outline of an object, as in a moulding, formed on a vertical plane passed through the object at right angles to one of its principal horizontal dimensions. I'm thinking: are you guys making up words now because you can't think of another way to not tell us something? Reprofiled? What is that?

I mean, what the minister has said in English is that there's money that's been moved, I assume reprofiled, to 2014-15, but when we keep asking, "Where are these schools that you claim are built?" we get no answer. Nobody over there will tell us. So please tell us exactly where the schools that are completed and have children sitting in desks looking at a teacher who is teaching under the Alberta curriculum are located.

I know this is amusing to the Minister of Energy, that this is a big tee-hee joke, but I'd like to know because I listened to the questions today during question period, and all I heard was a bunch of numbers about: we've got 35 schools in development. Even listening to the minister today – you know, it says "$19,400,000 for emergent needs in the rest of Alberta." The Minister of Energy explains that on behalf of the Minister of Education as eight new schools and a certain number of starter schools, but then he says that the starter schools are fully built.

So what's a starter school exactly, please, by definition and by location? Where are these starter schools? Where have these starter schools now been fully built? Exactly where are they located, please, and in what district? Now, you've got that the planning for 57 schools is under the $10,000,000, planning for phase 3 new schools and modernizations. Where are those 57 new schools? We'd like to know.

The Chair: Were you hoping to get an answer at this point, hon. member, or are you still going to make some more comments?

Ms Blakeman: Oh, Mr. Chair, I'm just hoping to get any kind of an answer that actually makes sense, and so far I haven't had it. So I live in hope.

The second question you can answer for me is: what is $41,766,000 for 35 new schools and modernizations reprofiled to 2014-15 due to project delays?

Sorry. One more question, Mr. Chair. Where are the schools that were promised to be finished in 2011? Where are they? These schools that are coming due: when were they started? You really are doing yourself a disservice. It makes it look like you're deliberately trying to hide what you're doing when you can't answer really simple questions about where these are and when they were started and when they were finished. It doesn't serve you well.

I'll let the Minister of Energy answer for the Minister of Education.

The Chair: So, hon. member, in the context of the supplementary supply, the hon. Minister of Energy on behalf of the Minister of Education.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The member doth protest too much, I think. First of all, we're not in a budgetary process. The government through the course of the year spends in accordance with the budget, and in the event they spend supplementary to budget estimates, we're required, of course, to debate the supplementary spending. That's what we're debating here, supplementary estimates.

Now, the government, of course, is required to spend in accordance with the timing of the budget, and in the event that that doesn't happen, we need to move funds. It's not unusual that a four-year construction timeline, for example, might involve budgetary spending within four years, and the movement of those funds between those four years would require that we properly book them. That, of course, is what reprofiling means. The member is cute with the definition of reprofiling although I had never ever thought that reprofiling could mean some change in the shape of my head, Mr. Chair, which is intriguing indeed because of my German heritage and the size of my head. It's something that's of obvious concern to me. I'm well aware that if this head was a planet, it would have several moons orbiting it.

The construction of schools. I understand the member's obvious concern. Where the schools are: well, first of all, they're all in Alberta, Mr. Chair. I can assure her of that. Second of all, every single one of them is listed on the website by name, by location, the phase of construction, when they're finished, how many tiny children's parts are occupying the chairs within those schools if she would just go look them up.

We're here to discuss supplementary estimates. I've fully described the spending of the government in accordance with the rules of spending, and I'll take my chair, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. Well, I'm going to try and look this up and see if I actually get this information. I'm doubting it, but I'll try.

Reprofiling still isn't a word that appears in the dictionary, so I do congratulate the government on developing new language as a way of describing the movement of money between a four-year period of construction. That's pretty good. But the questions that I was asking were about where the schools were that he actually described that were part of this supplementary supply request. How does one go from building a starter school, which he mentioned as part of I believe it was the $19,400,000 for emergent needs in the rest of Alberta – how does it go from being a starter school to a fully built school? That is a perfectly legitimate question to be asking given that he himself referenced it in the supplementary supply money that he offered previously.

I would also like to know: what is the current deferred maintenance budget, or debt, I guess we should call it, that $20 million is being applied toward it in this supplementary supply budget? What is the remaining amount of money in that deferred maintenance debt, again using exactly the words that the Minister of Energy described, the $20 million for capital maintenance and renewal as deferred maintenance? Taking a chunk out of deferred maintenance, what does that leave the deferred maintenance debt at?

That's two more questions. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Yes. I apologize to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre for not addressing the starter schools question. Mr. Chair, the conversion was done in accordance with a couple of public announcements that the Minister of Infrastructure made, to begin with that we would build starter schools, which was a concept proposed by a particular school board that was under some pretty significant growth pressure, the thinking being that we would develop the core of a school sufficient to put children in, but perhaps it would be lacking in a few facilities, one of them being a gymnasium, and that as time progressed, we would add facilities on while the school was occupied. That was made in accordance with a public announcement. The funding proposed for it was also made public.

Subsequent to that, the minister also announced that we were converting those to fully built schools, I guess a reversion to the more traditional model of constructing a school. That was done, again, in consultation with a school board and also in accordance with the fact that the particular way of proceeding afforded us some cost savings. I referred to the starter schools because that's how they were referred to in the budget, but in fact they've been converted, as I said in the presentation.

Secondly, Mr. Chair, we are in supplemental estimates, and I described $20 million that was approved to supplement the infrastructure maintenance and renewal program. The infrastructure maintenance and renewal program is a line item in the '14-15 budget. It was approved by this Legislature last spring, as the member is well aware. I don't have the budget in front of me, but if she would flip to the appropriate page, she would find what the budget number is for the deferred maintenance and renewal program.

Ms Blakeman: I know that this Minister of Energy is a bright man, and I know that he's very capable of understanding the questions that I'm asking. The fact that he's not giving me the information is making me think that he doesn't want to give me the information, so let me try again.

To the minister: what is the deferred maintenance debt? You should be able to tell me that if you are standing in for the Minister of Education when there is an additional $20 million going towards it. Yes, there is additional money in the budget – aha; true enough – but you're adding $20 million to it, so that should be taking money off your total deferred maintenance debt. What is the end number from that? That is part of the supplementary supply budget. I know the minister is capable. I know he's very capable of understanding and giving me that.

The second question I have for him now is: what is the additional number of students that we are having to accommodate under the $30,600,000 for the Calgary school board of education, and how many additional students are we accommodating under the emergent needs in the rest of Alberta? How many additional students are being accommodated and/or anticipated? If you know you're spending that money, you must know how many additional students you're expecting.

I'll let him answer those questions. Thank you.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chair, I am not, in fact, privy to a total infrastructure deficit amount. As I pointed out, if the member were to refer to the '14-15 budget, she would find the number for the infrastructure maintenance and renewal program. Obviously, $20 million beyond that budget number is what we spent and what we're speaking to today, $20 million. I cannot tell her what the total number is. I'm not sure that that's available.

I also cannot tell her the number of students that the spending pressure is addressing. I would be more than happy to refer that question to the Minister of Education on her behalf, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Hon. minister and hon. member, you have six minutes and 15 seconds left.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I look forward to receiving that information. It would be preferable if I could receive that information before I had to vote on the supplementary supply bill itself, which should help me actually do that.

Can the minister tell me whether the total amount of $30,600,000 for the Calgary board of education and the $19,400,000 for emergent needs in Alberta, those being additional and/or anticipated additional students, is all being used for capital? It's under a capital budget. Is any of it being used for anything besides bricks and mortar? Is it being used for desks? Is it being used for Smart boards? Is it being used for supply budgets? Is 100 per cent of that money going towards building schools? I'll look for that answer.

Thank you.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chair, the money is going to capital or operational as identified in the budget, and I believe the money she just referred to is identified as capital in the budget, which would mean it's going towards capital expenditures, which would be the construction of the schools. It's not going to Smart boards as supply as the hon. member asked. It's booked in the supplementary estimates in accordance with the rules of our spending, which, I think, are quite clear. So if money is booked as capital, it's spent on capital.

The Chair: Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Yes, that's true. But there is a certain amount which any department will not expense out of the year. It becomes a capital expenditure. Computers is one that often comes out as a capital expenditure, especially if they're replacing a number of them. If they replace one, it's going to be expensed out in the year. If they replace 20 of them, it's going to be expensed out as capital. What is the dividing line in this particular ministry between operational and capital? Is he able to tell me that or if it's consistent between departments? I know that it used to be about $5,000, but the last time I was on Public Accounts was a few years ago, so perhaps it's higher than that.

Mr. Oberle: I'd be out on a limb here to share a line that I'm not aware of inside the Department of Education. Again, I'd be more than happy to refer the question of the hon. member to the Minister of Education.

The Chair: Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Thanks. I look forward to that.

The flood money out of 2013, appearing on page 24 of the supplementary supply document under vote 6, 2013 Alberta flooding, it has a credit back of $963,000, so just under a million dollars. Can I get specifics about where the credit came from, in which part of vote 6? Vote 6 is a big number, so specifically where did that number come from in order to be able to be used as a credit towards some of the other overexpenditures that happened?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chair, the information I have and shared with the hon. members is that $963,000 is the result of an accumulation of lower than budgeted capital spending in other areas, so it was transferred capital expenditure to use as a credit in other areas. It was $963,000 underspent on other capital projects, and I don't have a detailed list thereof.

Ms Blakeman: Well, it says in vote 6 that it's 2013 Alberta flooding. Does he have no additional information about where the savings were in connection with Department of Education capital spending and the flooding? Or maybe he could get the minister to send us that information as well.

Mr. Oberle: I'd be happy to ask the minister that question as well, Mr. Chair. I suspect that when it's related to capital spending of the Department of Education and flooding, it relates to individual flood recovery projects in schools funded by the Department of Education. I will refer that specific question. If the member wants a list of schools, I'm sure it's available.

Ms Blakeman: Great. Thanks very much.

I'm a little curious why the number for debt servicing program under vote 3, school facilities, is appearing in this document when there's no additional money. The current estimate and the final estimate is exactly the same amount of money. Are you able to explain why it's appearing on the budget page, again page 24? It's showing the capital programs at the top of the page under three programs – school facilities, basic education programs, and 2013 Alberta flooding – and then it references debt servicing program, also under vote 3 for school facilities. It's curious to include it when there's no change.

The Chair: Mr. Minister, can I ask you to maybe provide that information later to the member.

Mr. Oberle: Yeah.

The Chair: Thank you very much. The time has expired, so I think that's fair.

I'll go to the member of the fourth party. I see the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Would you like to combine your time as well, hon. member?

Mr. Mason: I think we can try that. Yeah. It seems fair to me.

The Chair: Try that? So you will have 20 minutes starting now.

Mr. Mason: Okay. Thanks very much. Well, Mr. Chairman, I've been going through the document, which we've just received not too long ago, and I guess I'd like to start with the Environment and Sustainable Resource Development budget. In this budget – and I'm just sort of going from front to back, no particular order other than it's the order that they're presented – there is under operational on page 30 $8 million to maintain the operational infrastructure and grounds at the Kananaskis golf course during rehabilitation of the course. Then you go down to capital, and there's another $1,170,000 for the Kananaskis golf course.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we've heard from the Premier that there is no money in the budget for the Auditor General or the children's advocate – and these are small amounts by comparison – yet, as I see it here, there is over $900 million for the Kananaskis golf course. I'd like to ask the relevant minister why this is a priority for this government and, you know, why the Kananaskis golf course isn't able to sustain itself from green fees and operate pretty much on a break-even basis. Who is going to answer that, Mr. Chairman?

The Chair: That would be the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour on behalf of the Minister of ESRD.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Chair. On the funding for Kananaskis, it's obviously for flood repair. As the hon. member asked the question, "Can it maintain itself?" I guess that after the repairs are done, it can. Certainly, there will be a part of that funding that will be requested of the federal government, but in the meantime the repairs have to be done. This represents those additional expenditures during this year to do that. I think the other part of the question was: can it maintain itself? I'm not sure that – my understanding is that the course can more than maintain itself once it's repaired. But at this point the government's intention is to fulfill the promises to put it back into workable condition so that all Albertans can enjoy it.

Mr. Mason: Hon. minister, right above the $8 million there's another $14 million to continue with the implementation of flood infrastructure recovery measures. So I'm not sure that it's for flood rehabilitation. But I guess the question is: if it is as a result of the flood, being heavily damaged and it needs to be repaired, why didn't the government have insurance?

Mr. McIver: Again, some of the insurance is actually through the federal government and disaster recovery.

Mr. Chair, I think the Minister of Municipal Affairs has something to add if . . .

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you. I'd be happy just to supplement to this as well, to the hon. member as well. This is part of the disaster recovery program, which is also 90 per cent eligible from the federal government. So it meets that eligibility criteria. If anything under these floods had insurance, of course then they couldn't be eligible for the DRP. So in order to access the 90 per cent federal funding, this is the avenue that we're able to make sure.

Mr. Mason: So is this $8 million our share? Is that our 10 per cent?

Mrs. McQueen: What you have to do first is you have to actually pay out, and then you apply for up to 90 per cent with the federal government.

Mr. Mason: So you're saying that we're going to get 90 cents back on the dollar on this?

Mrs. McQueen: We could receive up to 90 per cent. As we know from other disasters in the province, when we applied to the federal government, we can receive up to – doesn't mean we always receive, but generally as a rule, yes, we can receive up to. But it takes awhile, a few years by the time all of the accounting and everything goes forward, once the federal government also reviews all of that, to receive that money back.

Mr. Mason: Why is this a higher priority than the children's advocate?

The Chair: One at a time and through the chair if you would, please.

Mr. Mason: Oh, yes. Sure. I thought she was done.

I wonder why this is a higher priority than the children's advocate.

The Chair: Hon. member, we're dealing with supplementary supply here. I don't know if the minister might be able to answer that.

Mrs. McQueen: You know, we have to deal, I guess, with apples and apples. The disaster recovery program, which is 90 per cent federally funded, is different funding and a different – this is about supplementary estimates on that. This is not about the overall budget in different ministries.

The Chair: Thank you.

Hon. member, you may continue.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I'll just let that go because I have a number of other things to ask.

This question is for Justice and Solicitor General. There are 5 and a half million dollars for legal aid to maintain current service levels and to increase eligibility guidelines. Now, there have been a lot of issues that have been raised around legal aid in this province in the past. I guess my question is what specifically this money will accomplish in terms of legal aid and whether or not it will address the outstanding issues that have been raised repeatedly in this House.

The Chair: The Minister of Human Services on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, hon. member. With comments from the hon. Minister of Justice, the commitment to legal aid is certainly shown in the $5.5 million in additional funding that was provided, and appropriate funding of legal aid was in the Minister of Justice's mandate letter as well. Certainly, making sure that we ensure that the vulnerable are protected and ensure that the AISH clients can continue to use services of legal aid is very important.

In the 2014-15 budget, as you're well aware, legal aid received a total of $64.3 million in funding, including $53.5 million from the government and $5.5 million in additional funding and $10.8 million from the federal government.

We know this is a priority for this government and, as well, the continuing challenges with the federal government and the amount that they put in versus the amount that we put in.

Mr. Mason: How does this 5 and a half million dollars specifically help those vulnerable Albertans who require legal aid?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, I think, as the hon. member has noticed, it will ensure that they have greater access to legal representation; that's what it's going to be doing. At the end of the day, it's absolutely necessary to do this, and that's why the Minister of Justice brought this forward.

Mr. Mason: Is this for additional caseloads or additional compensation for legal aid lawyers?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you. I would indicate that what we have been told here is that it's maintaining current service levels and increasing the financial eligibility guidelines so more applicants, including individuals receiving AISH, have greater access to full legal representation.

Mr. Mason: Moving along, Mr. Chairman, to Service Alberta, I have a couple of questions relating to that and, specifically, around the $7 million for motor vehicle services such as secure drivers' licences and ID cards and increasing transaction volumes and another $277,000 to safeguard information systems. My question is whether or not this amounts to a subsidy of the private registries in our province and why additional transaction volumes are not paid for by the fees that we all pay now whenever we renew our registration or driver's licence or do other transactions at these privatized registries?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, hon. member. Certainly, we know that the registry agents across Alberta do incredible work. We also know that the fee that is charged per transaction, the $9 fee that is charged, helps them to defer the expenses for their own costs. With the increased population growth that we had this last year, the almost over 100,000 people that have come to Alberta, we know that there's additional demand for drivers' licences and ID cards. So that is what the additional expense is about, the transactions and the volumes. It's also about the security and integrity of the IT system, the updating that's required on a regular basis to ensure that the information is accurate and to ensure that the registry agents have access to that information to do their good work.

Mr. Mason: Is this money paid directly to these privatized registry offices?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, hon. member. No. This money would go directly to – it's within Service Alberta in terms of what they're doing with the ID cards and the drivers' licences, so that's where the money would be flowing from Service Alberta.

Mr. Mason: It's an indirect subsidy of the privatized directory rather than a direct subsidy.

The Chair: Do you require an answer to that one, hon. member? I guess not. Okay; carry on then.

Mr. Mason: I was just simply summarizing what I thought the minister said, so thank you very much.

Now I want to go to Health next if I can. This is a very large area. First of all, there's a supplementary amount of $157 million, which is combined with $206 million that are made available from lower-than-budgeted expenses in other programs. I'd like to ask the Minister of Health, and I don't mind if he just wants to remain seated when he answers. First of all, I guess the question is: where did you save this money? Was this all in your department? How did you not spend $206 million given the pressures that the system is clearly experiencing now with respect to waiting times and other types of pressures?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you. Our need for additional funding would be even greater if we didn't have the $206 million from this year's budget. Surpluses include lower-than-anticipated operating cost requirements of the South Health Campus in Calgary, grants and initiatives related to continuing care strategy, lower-than-expected demand for flu immunization, and reduced requirements of some children's health initiatives, revised implementation plan for family care clinics, lower-than-expected use of allied health services, cost efficiency and favourable exchange rates in the purchase of blood and blood products, savings from outpatient cancer therapy drugs due to lower-than-anticipated usage and demand for these drug therapies, and a prior-year surplus in health services provided at correctional facilities, and cost savings in frozen information technology projects.

Mr. Mason: Would the minister be prepared to provide to the committee of supply in writing a detailed breakdown of where these savings have been found?

Mr. Mandel: You want us to put numbers beside them? I'd be more than pleased to do that.

Mr. Mason: And break it down. That was quite a long list of areas, so I'd be very interested in seeing that.

There's $170 million for higher-than-anticipated volumes and costs and for not implementing the pharmacare program in drugs and supplemental health benefits. Now, I'm very curious about this. How come it cost you money to not implement a program?

Mr. Mandel: The program was supposed to be implemented. It was placed into the budget, but it was not implemented.

Mr. Mason: Why did that cost so much money to not do it? Usually when you implement a program it costs you money.

Mr. Mandel: Well, when you put a program into the budget but you don't gain the revenue from it, you're short the money from the revenue.

Mr. Mason: I see. Well, how does that balance against the projected costs of the program, then? Where does that go?

Mr. Mandel: Well, the problem is that a pharmacare program was to be implemented. The 2014-15 budget included that pharmacare program, the potential revenue from it, but then they did not implement the program, so they were short the revenue of $137 million.

Mr. Mason: Didn't they save on costs as well?

Mr. Mandel: They didn't do it.

Mr. Mason: Did they not project costs for the program as well as revenue?

Mr. Mandel: No. I'm not explaining myself very well. At the time the government made the decision that they were going to have a pharmacare program. They put that as a potential revenue source into the budget, but they never implemented the pharmacare program to collect that revenue. So you have in the budget a hundred and X numbered million dollars that you're expecting, but you didn't implement the program, so you have no money to cover it back.

Mr. Mason: I understand that part, but surely the program had some costs that were planned as well, that were anticipated.

An Hon. Member: It was a money-saving program.

Mr. Mason: So this was a way to make money on drugs?

Mr. Mandel: Well, it was a way to generate revenue. Yes.

Mr. Mason: Why didn't you do it?

Mr. Mandel: I wasn't there at the time. They made a decision not to do it.

Mr. Mason: I see. Okay.

The Chair: I'm thinking the minister may need to send you a summary after this, or a short summary, because back and forth might be a little hard to try to – it sounds like there's an explanation, but I think it might be a little hard to garner that right here.

Mr. Mason: Yes. I would appreciate that because I'm using up my $6 million minutes quite quickly here.

The Chair: If you would continue with the rest of your question.

Mr. Mason: There's a $15 million reduction to operating costs for new facilities, resulting in a net increase in grants to Alberta Health Services of $105 million. I would really like an explanation for how you reduce something by $15 million and it gives you a net increase of $105 million, because you may have solved your budget problem right there, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Mandel: Where did you . . .

Mr. Mason: It's page 34, right near the bottom.

The Chair: Item 11, hon. member, on that page, I believe, is what I'm following.

Mr. Mandel: I'm trying to find it.

Mr. Mason: It's $5 million for support services.

Mr. Mandel: Well, there's $15 million for diagnostic and therapeutic services and $5 million for support services. Now, that's partially offset by a $15 million reduction in operating costs for new facilities. So our new facilities were costing us less. The South Health Campus cost us less money, resulting in a net increase in grants to Alberta Health Services of $105 million. You have to add them all up. The $120 million is the gross amount, and then you take away the others ones, and you end up getting the $15 million, and the $105 million gives you the $120 million.

Mr. Mason: Okay. Thank you.

I'm just trying to find my section here on Education. Under capital on page 22 there is $65 million for 50 new schools and 70 modernizations, reprofiled to 2014-15 to accelerate some projects and address other delays. I know the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre dealt with this a little bit. Reprofiled really means putting it in a different budget year, doesn't it? Doesn't it usually mean, you know, the same project. It could be earlier, but it usually means these are being delayed.

The Chair: Hon. Minister of Energy on behalf of the Minister of Education, you're acknowledging that?

Mr. Oberle: Yeah, I acknowledge it.

The Chair: Okay. Carry on, then, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Then there's close to $42 million for 35 new schools and modernizations, reprofiled to 2014-15 due to project delays, and then $29,740,000 for various other schools and modular projects, reprofiled to 2014-15. As I see this, there are 50, 85 – how many schools have been delayed?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chair, I don't have that specific information in front of me. Again, I'd point the member to the website, where school by school, location by location the status of each school is clearly on the website of the Minister of Infrastructure. The member would be able to access that information.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, we're here to approve a very large budgetary amount and to ask the responsible ministers to explain why. Telling me that I should go and look it up on the website when I just got the document just an hour ago is not particularly helpful. The question really is that we're being asked to spend here, I add it up, pretty close to $125 million for delayed schools. I'd like to know how many schools are being delayed and why it costs so much to delay them. If you postpone them, why does it cost you money?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chair, I'd be happy to refer the question to the hon. Minister of Education. These are not all delays. They're reprofiling it. The money that was needed to be spent on school projects was spent at a different time and outside of the regular budget, so we need to repost the spending. Now, a school-by-school list, while it is available, I would be honoured to forward the question to the hon. Minister of Education. However . . .

The Chair: The time is expired for this segment, hon. minister, but you did make a commitment to forward that last bit of information to the hon. member, so I would imagine he'll be looking forward to that.

I will recognize the next member, the independent Member for Rimbe- Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. You, sir, have 20 minutes. You have the option, if you would like, of going back and forth as the other members have. Is that your wish?

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. To go back and forth I think would be a more efficient use of time if that's okay.

The Chair: Wonderful. You may start.

Mr. Anglin: Well, my caucus got together, and the discussions are lengthy and very confusing sometimes, but I think we're going to try to get some clarity. How's that? My question – this is somewhat difficult because I need to make sure it falls within the proper ministry, because it's going to be dealing mostly with flood mitigation. I suspect most of the responsibility is going to be ESRD although some will go to Infrastructure and other to Municipal Affairs.

Page 31 on ESRD. I'm hoping the minister can tell me the monies allocated for parks flood recovery in the community stabilization, under flooding, and the infrastructure recovery. Is this money that's being spent not just the responsibility of the ministry, but is the ministry assuming the liability for the recovery program? So if something goes wrong, are they there to ensure that it is done right? Can that be clarified for me?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Chair, the government after the flood took it upon themselves to do some of the repairs. I guess when we do the repairs, by default we take some of the responsibility for that, so it's kind of part and parcel of what we do. When we do work, we're accountable for it. I guess if I heard the question correctly and understood it correctly, the short answer is yes, and I just finished the longer answer.

Mr. Anglin: I presume from that answer, then, when I go to Infrastructure on page 43, that when we look at $891,000 for reconstruction and accommodation and for the $19 million for floodway relocation – I'll get to the $19 million in a second. On the $891,000 for reconstruction and accommodation it is the province that assumes the liability for not just the spending of the funds but for the outcome, which in other words is: whatever they build or whatever they reconstruct, they assume the liability.

Mr. McIver: That was a Transportation question.

The Chair: Oh, Transportation, then. The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Anglin: Do you want me to ask the question again?

Mr. McIver: Yeah.

Mr. Anglin: Okay. Page 42 of the estimates.

The Chair: That's Infrastructure; 42 is Infrastructure.

Mr. Anglin: I can't hear you.

The Chair: Page 42 is Infrastructure, hon. member. Just rephrase your question, and I'll get someone on behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Anglin: Do you want me to go with the question?

The Chair: Just rephrase your question, hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Okay. The question is simply this. The $891,000 that's allocated for reconstruction and accommodation: I just want clarity again that whatever this money is spent on is something that the provincial government takes liability for, that it's done right, and it's done properly.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health on behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mandel: So let me just get the . . .

The Chair: This is about the $891,000.

Mr. Mandel: Yes.

Mr. Anglin: Do we got an answer?

Mr. Mandel: I'm looking.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chair, if I could weigh in on the question.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chair, the member seeks, it seems, clarity around the apportionment of liability, and I would assume he's talking about in the event that there's a failure, which then I would assume he's talking about in the event of some future flood. Certainly, if there was any liability attached, that would be a decision most likely of the court of law in the province of Alberta. There's certainly no budget for a liability assumed in the supplementary estimates that we're discussing today. It's possible that as a result of the works of any party that some subsequent event happens that causes damage. That's always a possibility when people do works of any kind, and the liability is often determined after the fact. We have not booked any liability in the operations.

Mrs. McQueen: Do you want me to add . . .

Mr. Oberle: Yeah. The Minister of Municipal Affairs would like to supplement.

The Chair: Minister of Municipal Affairs, please supplement.

Mrs. McQueen: If the hon. member is okay with that, just as a supplement. So if a homeowner is choosing to have the property replaced, then they are choosing that once and once only. If another event happened, if they chose to have their house reconstructed, they could not have that happen again, so further down the road Alberta taxpayers would not be responsible for that. As is, we're moving through the ministries, and the public safety committee is really talking about making sure that we're not allowing – and the legislation was put forward last year by the then Minister of Municipal Affairs ensuring that municipalities cannot rebuild in those areas. We're actually doing in our ministry the regulation in consultation with our partners and stakeholders on that piece. But rest assured, if a home is rebuilt now, it's one time, and it will not be funded. I think that's the essence of your question if I'm not wrong.

Mr. Anglin: Actually, you're way ahead of the curve on me on that one. I'm going to get to that one. But I think the Minister of Energy was closer to the point. What we have here is – did I just get that wrong? [interjections] Okay. I was going to say that I see you guys laughing. You guys move portfolios around sometimes. I gotta keep up.

The question I have is: as we implement these flood mitigation measures – and in the case of the mapping, of course, that's a different set of liability because the province now will designate what is a floodway, what is not a floodway. What I'm looking at is that when we're doing things like the dredging, the armouring of the banks, and any type of change in waterways, you can affect downstream, you can affect upstream, depending if you inhibit the flow.

What I'm looking for here is – and I've been asked this question by the communities. As you know, I have the community of Sundre. Here we are again. We're in March, and clearly we're facing another flood season. There are issues, and the issue that we're facing is one of liability. Once work is done to any floodway, to any flood fringe, who is responsible for that liability? Is it going to be downloaded on the community? Is it going to be downloaded onto the municipality, the county, or does the province assume that liability because it's a provincial project?

Mr. Oberle: A curious line of questioning, Mr. Chair. I guess what the member is trying to get at is that if the province spends some money here, we're creating what could be quite a large liability. We could in fact do that if we in some way negligently planned or approved a project to be put on a waterway, which subsequently . . . [interjection] No, that could never happen.

The Chair: The member has the floor, hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: The member correctly points out that that could never happen, Mr. Chair. If, indeed, in the event that that could happen, that the province did somehow negligently construct or plan some facility, where later the facility itself caused damage, I guess there could be some liability owing. That, of course, would be determined in the court of law. But in actual fact what is happening here is that the province and municipalities in concert with a lot of planning and registered hydrologists and engineers and all the people that normally approve these plans have put out structures within streams or along stream banks that hopefully will prevent flooding. Some future flooding event doesn't create a liability there. It certainly creates future damage, and, as this one was, it would be covered by the federal disaster recovery program in accordance with the rules of the federal government.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Minister. Let me sort of narrow right down to the point here. The community of Sundre has roughly $3.1 million, $3.2 million. I'm not sure if it's the community of Sundre as much as it's the county of Mountain View that has been allocated the funds, and I'm not sure how much, if any, funds come from the federal government for a flood mitigation project. I'll let you determine – if someone could point me if it's in this estimate or if it was in last year's budget that still has not been spent.

The problem is this. The liability for a community, as the minister just points out, High River being a perfect example, is that it is the province as the last resort or the federal government. The community has been wiped out. What we have in the situation in Sundre is that we have the money allocated. It's there. They need to build a berm to protect against future flooding. It's been designed, and SRD has been involved in this. One thing is holding it up. Nobody can answer the question as to who's going to be liable if somebody says: you built that berm, and that caused my property to be flooded out versus your property. The community is scared to death to move on building the berm, and it's driving me crazy because we know one thing is going to happen in this community. It's not if there's going to be a flood; it's when there's going to be a flood.

If we could start building – by the way, this berm is actually going on SRD land, so that's one of those issues. We can't resolve the liability issue to move forward so we can build this project when the money is there and it's allocated, and that's what I'm trying to drill down to right now. And when you answer that, if somebody could point out to me where that money – is it coming out of Municipal Affairs or ESRD? I think it's ESRD, but I'm not sure.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Chair, the hon. member I think is asking a good question in a way, but he's asking a question trying to assign liability to something that has not happened yet. I'm not sure you can assign liability to something that has not happened yet. While I think it's a terrific question, it's not necessarily a supplementary estimates question. I would hope, very respectfully . . .

The Chair: That's where I was going.

Mr. McIver: . . . would suggest that the member send a note to the minister with that question. I think it's a good question; I just don't think it's a supplementary estimates question. I would love to see you get your question answered in the appropriate arena.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. member, yes, you have another eight minutes, but if you wanted to focus more on the supplementary request, it might . . .

Mr. Anglin: I'll make my argument that it is a supplementary request because you do have a number of funds in the supplementary budget going to the same types of projects. That question that I've asked is: preventing a project from going forward. So you can allocate this money, but if that same issue of liability that plagues the community of Sundre plagues any of these other issues – allocating the money is fine, but you know as well as I do that building the project is what gets the job done. In other words, the completion is what provides the mitigation, not the money, although we need the money to build the project.

My concern is this: I'm looking at the various recovery projects and the money put forth to the various projects for flood mitigation, and what I want to see is the flood mitigation projects finished, particularly in the small towns. I'm going to use Sundre as my example. It is the liability of the unforeseen that's holding up the project, and I don't know how we deal with that, particularly in the smaller communities, to move forward so the projects get built. That's the key.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Oberle: In the event that some future flood condition causes damage to any property along the river, whether that damage was caused upstream because there's a berm downstream or anywhere else along that river, the landowner will be compensated like all the landowners that were flooded out – terrific damage in the 2013 flooding event – under the disaster recovery program. Beyond that, the hon. member is asking for a legal interpretation of a hypothetical situation. Nobody in this Legislature can provide him with that.

He is also providing us with a specific example, a specific issue, in his constituency that specifically involves the Minister of ESRD, Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. I would invite him to work proactively between his municipality and that minister to see if resolution can be brought to that issue. But, ultimately, if his municipality feels that they are at risk, I suspect they won't proceed with the project, and there's not much we can do about it. It's really not a discussion item for supplementary estimates.

Mr. Anglin: We'll move on. I think we beat this horse, and it's not moving anymore. Minister of Infrastructure, in dealing with the $19 million floodway relocation program, how much of this money is designated, if you could tell me, to the Sundre area now that it has been remapped and people find themselves in the flood fringe, the floodway, and the various places where their property values have now dropped?

The Chair: Hon. minister, on behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure can you provide that, or is that something you may have to get back to the member on?

Mr. McIver: The hon. member didn't give a page number or a line number, so if he could just give me that, that would give me a fighting chance to know what he's asking.

Mr. Anglin: I don't want to arm him, but page 42 under Infrastructure.

Mr. McIver: Thank you.

Mr. Anglin: It's the second-to-last bulleted item, $19,956,000, and it's allocated for floodway relocation program. So what I'm looking for is: how much of that would be applicable to the community of Sundre now that the flood mapping has been done and the various individuals there have found themselves available for this?

Mr. Mandel: We don't have a specific breakdown of where it all went, so we will get back to you as to what it is when we talk to the minister.

The Chair: So you have a commitment on the record that that information if it's available will be provided to you.

Mr. Anglin: Okay.

The Chair: You can carry on for another four minutes and 24 seconds.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Could you assure me that at least Sundre qualifies for a part of or any or all of that money? I won't go for all of that money, but I want to make sure that the community of Sundre is qualified for that money. I really would like that answered.

Mr. Mandel: Well, I don't have that information, but I will also request that the Minister of Infrastructure – that's not a supplementary question. But, anyway, we will ask the minister and see if we can get an answer for you to that.

The Chair: Okay. You've got some more time, hon. member, unless you're finished.

Mr. Anglin: You read my mind, Mr. Chair. I am actually finished.

The Chair: Thank you.

This time is now available for government members should any government members choose to ask a question.

Seeing none, then I have to start the rotation over again, and I would start with the Official Opposition. If there are no members from the Official Opposition, then I would go to a member from the third party.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Yeah. Sure.

The Chair: You are up, sir.

Mr. Hehr: Well, then I'll keep asking. Here we go. Now, we have the Municipal Affairs minister here, so I'm looking at your budget. Can you tell me what, if any, of the budget money is allotted to flood recovery and how that money is distributed throughout the various jurisdictions and the like?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. Certainly, with regard to page 50 of the supplementary estimates you see as it relates to flood recovery the $1.358 million with that, and the disaster recovery program transformation is on there as well. Those deal with community flood mitigation projects in the High River area as well as can be seen on page 51. Are you okay, hon. member? Okay.

Mr. Hehr: Was any of that money going to Calgary and areas around there?

The Chair: To respond, hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Yeah. So specific to those ones, Mr. Chair, the Calgary ones were in the 2014-15 budget. This is not dealing with that piece. This is on the flood recovery piece. But the budget certainly does deal with it in the overall budget but in supplementary estimates does not. If you would like specifics with regard to Calgary, I'd be more than happy to follow up with you on that, and if you actually want to follow up with a specific question on that, I'm more than happy to help you.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. Then let's ask: where are we at? Is any of this money going out to speed up DRP claims or anything of that matter?

Mrs. McQueen: With regard to the DRP claims, first of all, with regard to appeals, as you know, we tripled our staff in October to deal with the appeals not just in Calgary, of course, but in all of the 2013 floods, to get those appeals completed. We had a target of completing them by the end of December, which we did.

Then we've added now another 15 staff members to deal with the DRP so that we could actually have caseworkers for files. What we did on the appeal side worked, so we wanted to make sure we now have caseworkers assigned to files. We have about 2,000 files left out of the 2013 floods. I think around 1,200-ish are in Calgary, but I could get you the exact number. What we've committed to is that by the end of June 2015 we would complete the majority of those cases if not all. Some of them may then go into an appeal hearing. They have the opportunity to appeal cases and appeal to myself, which goes to the Municipal Government Board, but we've added additional resources so that we can have staff as caseworkers to move these files along more quickly.

Mr. Hehr: So of these 1,200, would these be more complex cases that don't easily fit within a correct or an easy to solve area? I'm just trying to generalize here. Is it conflicting sort of views on floodway, flood path and what the legislation actually says it's going to fund and what is within the spirit of the rule and the actual rule itself? Is that sort of your understanding of where the last 1,200 claims are and why the necessary steps continuing on?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. We had over 10,000 cases, 10,800 cases, in the 2013 disasters in southern Alberta. Of those, we have approximately 2,000 left. We've added those additional staff so that, two things, we can work quicker to resolve those for those people because we want to make sure that we're looking after their files but also take away some of the frustration – and since I've come on to the ministry, I've talked with people – so that they could have the same kind of a pod of caseworkers so that every time they pick up the phone, they're not dealing with someone separately.

The 2,000 that are left are some of the harder ones, and that's why we wanted a caseworker approach to help them through this process. We're also, with the caseworker approach, actually contacting people so that they know that we're doing this and doing everything we can so that we reduce these files by the end of June.

Mr. Hehr: Is any of this money that we're dealing with right now earmarked for some of the projects on either the Bow or the Elbow in terms of future flood mitigation on the capital side?

Mrs. McQueen: Any of the mitigation is through the Minister of ESRD, and the minister would be happy to answer those if you have questions related to that.

Mr. Hehr: Then I'll ask the Minister of ESRD. Is any money being asked for in this budget due to the upstream mitigation projects that are currently going on and being directed by the province?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour on behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Yes, that is. If you look in the ESRD budget under capital, there is 4 and a half million dollars for the Springbank off-stream reservoir project to help control the Elbow. You're asking specifically about the Elbow and the Bow?

Mr. Hehr: Yeah.

Mr. McIver: Okay. All right. There is a general flood recovery erosion program primarily to reinforce riverbanks. I guess I don't have anything from Calgary or from Elbow or Bow broken out of that. Again, $3 million is for the watershed resiliency and restoration program, and I don't have that broken out. But the big project – of course, some of the Kananaskis golf course repairs will likely include the riverbanks in some of the riparian areas because, of course, the golf course bridges that. I think that is the answer to your question.

Mr. Hehr: Now, it appears that most of this money is operational. Can you explain why that is and the process of what that operational account looks like?

Mr. McIver: You know what? No. I can only tell you that on the operational side – you're talking about the Kananaskis golf course if I understand your question correctly.

Mr. Hehr: Yeah.

Mr. McIver: Okay. There is $8 million there on the operational side to maintain the infrastructure and grounds during the rehabilitation of the course, and there are obviously costs involved in that. Then, I guess, if you're looking for specifically, you know, moving off of one hole and onto another, I don't have that order of detail here for you. But it's $8 million for operating. Again, what is eligible from federal funding will be applied for and with a maximum of 90 per cent returned to the Alberta taxpayers, at the maximum. Up to 90 per cent is the correct terminology.

Mr. Hehr: I guess in terms of the flood mitigation projects going on along the Bow River side of things, you said you didn't have the details of where they are or what they're doing. Could I get that information?

Mr. McIver: We will ask the minister to provide you with that in whatever detail is available, sir.

Mr. Hehr: Okay.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Yeah. It's my understanding, too – and we can follow along in the paper, I guess – that there have been some new reports out that Bow River flooding could also happen in the future. I'm wondering if any of the money earmarked in this allotment that you're providing is going towards looking at any additional upstream mitigation projects that may have to go on in the Bow or anything of that nature.

Mr. McIver: Respectfully, Chair, the supplementary estimates are what the government has asked for money to do, not for what may be asked for in the future. While it's a great question, I think the hon. member might even agree with me that it's not necessarily a supplementary estimates question.

The Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Hehr: I have the hon. Minister of Health here, and I think I may have time for one question here before we run out of time. Line 12 is primary health care, addictions and mental health. There is a $62 million cut to addictions and mental health, and that seems to me like a pretty severe reduction given the need. I don't think our gambling addiction rates are going down, nor are there any calls for fewer supports for mental health. Can you tell us what services will be closed or reductions that are going to happen in mental health as a result of this cut?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Yes. I'm just getting to my notes. The biggest reason for that is the family care clinics, the FCCs. We didn't go ahead with them, and that was the savings. So, really, it was in that category, but it was the family care clinics.

Mr. Hehr: It was money that was earmarked that you didn't spend.

Mr. Mandel: That we just didn't spend. It's in the category of primary care, mental health and addictions, but it really is for the family care clinics. We didn't spend the money.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. Was that money then transferred into any other projects on mental health or addictions counselling or things to that nature?

Mr. Mandel: It was offset into the overall need for surplus versus added needs for expenses as a result of increased costs.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you.

While I have the minister here, just an explanation. In line 7 human tissue and blood services is being cut by $11 million. What part of the program is being cut? Can you explain that cut?

Mr. Mandel: The wording is a bit misrepresentative. The surplus is due to aggressive contract negotiations by Canadian Blood Services for the purchase of blood and blood products as well as an effective U.S. currency hedging initiative. So it's really a savings because we got a better deal than what we budgeted for. We didn't actually cut buying any of it; we just got it for a less expensive price.

Mr. Hehr: It was just less, and you transferred it over. Okay.

Mr. Mandel: Yeah. And then it all went into this imbalance of what we spent versus what we saved.

Mr. Hehr: Okay.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but you can continue your line of questioning after.

The committee will now stand recessed until 7:30 p.m.

[The committee adjourned at 5:59 p.m.]

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

Supplementary Supply Estimates 2014-15 General Revenue Fund

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply back to order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo was speaking, and I believe he had eight minutes and 34 seconds left.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, and it's great to be back here. I'm just trying to get, if I can borrow a clerk here, back to the Education section, page 22, I believe that is. That's where I'm going to go to.

We had some discussion earlier on reprofiling and the like, and I don't want to revisit that debate on what reprofiling is or isn't and the like. Nevertheless, I look at the $65 million for 50 new schools and 70 modernizations reprofiled to 2014-2015 to both accelerate some projects and address other project delays. Well, as the hon. member who will be answering this question knows, I don't know how in the world some projects need to be accelerated or how they got delayed given that the promises for these schools were made in 2012 and there is a clear need for those schools as, you know, we haven't built schools in a generation.

Just to keep up with population growth alone, we would have needed 87 schools, just to pick a random number. But it's not a random number. It's actually based on population growth. Maybe he could tell me how in the world these projects need to be accelerated at this time given that the need was clear in 2012 or how projects were delayed. Were they delayed by school boards or other people of that nature, or was it delayed by this government? I'd like to hear what these were that necessitated this change in our budgeting here at this time.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As I laid out in the notes relating to the supplementary estimates for the Department of Education, there were a number of reprofilings because of changes in timing of projects over a long construction horizon here. I'll point out to the hon. member that the fact that money was spent in the third quarter meant that projects were actually happening. Obviously, the money was spent on projects.

The Minister of Infrastructure the other day in the House laid out a number of reasons why projects had been delayed and why other projects have been accelerated. I invite the member to visit the Hansard record of the Minister of Infrastructure's comments. If that's insufficient to answer his question tonight – and I'm not sure whether that will be or not – I'd be happy to refer questions to the Minister of Education or the Minister of Infrastructure on his behalf, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hehr: I guess, to refer to these questions, what were the delays? I've been in these budget debates and now this supplementary budget, where every minister of both Infrastructure and Education told me it was their job number one to build these schools. They told me that point blank, Mr. Chair. I'm not kidding. I went through the budget debates from last year, and the hon. minister of SRD now was the one who told me that it was job number one to get this stuff up and running, so I'm confused about what these delays were. I'd be interested in hearing what they are. You know, nevertheless, it appears to me that the government of the day had every plan just to get the money started on these in this calendar year and were just simply paying lip service to the fact prior to that.

But let me try another question in regard to these line items. The money to go to the Calgary board of education to address student accommodation pressures: is that on an increase in student enrolment numbers, or is that on actual infrastructure, or that will be on capital as well because it says "capital"?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy on behalf of the Minister of Education.

Mr. Oberle: Yes. As the member just answered his own question, that's capital.

Mr. Chair, the hon. member points out that he's talked to Education ministers in the past and Infrastructure ministers who assured him that the construction of schools was job one in our province. That is, in fact, the case. It remains the case. That's why we're in the middle of the largest infrastructure build in the country's history in terms of schools put together by a province. That's where we are. We're building. It's a complex environment. The minister laid out a number of reasons for delays or in some instances advancements. I could summarize for the member that he talked about the difficulties in getting development permits, siting issues, contract issues, redesign issues. It's a very complex environment when you're building this many schools. Nonetheless, we are building. It's job one, and the spending in here indicates that there are, in fact, jobs under way.

Mr. Hehr: Could the hon. minister give me a little more clarity around the $19.4 million that is proposed for emergent needs in the rest of Alberta? What are some of those places, and what are the needs?

Mr. Oberle: I can't give him much more detail than that. That, obviously, would be growth pressures and other pressures that school boards feel, that the minister felt that it was necessary to provide extraordinary funding. Those were pressures that were not evident or made aware to the minister at the start of the school year, Mr. Chair. In most cases those are population pressures. If the member needs more detail than that, I'm happy to refer the question to the minister.

The Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Hehr: You know, according to the government's own figures as of August 28, 2014, deferred maintenance for Alberta's public, Catholic, and francophone school jurisdictions totalled just shy of $852 million, and I believe there's $20 million proposed to help with capital maintenance and renewal. Was this money going into the deferred maintenance projects listed or these other projects that are up and going? Can you provide some clarity around that?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Chair, obviously, capital maintenance renewal is for maintenance projects, so whether an individual project was on the list that formed the maintenance backlog I cannot answer. Either it was or it's an emergent need, some damage done, and a school board identified a need to fund some maintenance immediately. Again, if the member wants individual school project information, I'll refer that to the minister.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. If we can go back to Municipal Affairs, it said in a March 6, 2015, news release that the government announced a third-quarter funding increase of $400 million for the municipal sustainability initiative. However, on page 50 of the supplementary supply estimates it says an additional, I believe, $400 million is being requested for MSI capital grants. Why is there this discrepancy, and what is with the additional amounts of money there?

The Chair: Hon. member, I believe the minister answered a similar question earlier, which might be available on Hansard, or maybe we could ask that the minister provide that for you later, but your time has expired. So thank you very much.

At this time I will go to the fourth party and recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. I just wondered if you wish to have your time back and forth with the ministers, hon. member. If you do, then we should say that now.

Mr. Bilous: This is my only opportunity to have a dialogue with the ministers regarding sup supply?

The Chair: There's a potential for a combined 20 minutes back and forth between you and a minister or various ministers, so if you choose to combine the times, it affords the back and forth just like the previous member had.

Mr. Bilous: Sure. I'll combine my time and go back and forth.

The Chair: Wonderful. So you can have 20 minutes starting now.

Mr. Bilous: Great. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 17, to supplementary supply. You know, I can appreciate that, obviously, the government needs to get approval from this House for spending for the interim here. Going through it, some of the spending here that ranges over a variety of different bills and ministries I quite understand, and others I have questions for. I'll try to go through, and I apologize if some of my comments are repeats of what other members have said, but the purpose of that, if I am bringing up a point that was brought up earlier, in my opinion, speaks to the importance of what we're debating and the amount of dollars that this House, should the budget or supplementary supply bill pass, will be spending.

When I look at this bill, you know, major concerns for me jump out, and they'll be in a couple different categories. One of them is health care and a lot of the cuts that I read when you look at the numbers, and I'll go through and explain my position on this. As well, you know, looking at the area of legal aid, I know that that is something that my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has been very passionate about as far as ensuring that there is adequate funding for this. Then, of course, getting into infrastructure, again, as my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has asked some questions regarding education. The current maintenance deferral price tag that exists versus the amount of dollars that are in the sup supply are quite incongruent, Mr. Chair.

Starting off with health care, I mean, the estimates, from what I read, are basically telling us that the health care budget has been cut by over $130 million, and I'll break that number down because it does look as though we're approving about $157 million, but when you look at the numbers, the numbers tell us that there is $206 million available because it wasn't spent on other programs. For me, I have questions around this and concerns with the fact that, you know, health care is probably one of Albertans' and Canadians' top priorities, and the fact that there's money that is being cut because it wasn't spent raises some alarm bells for me.

In the sup supply there's a need for $170 million for not implementing the pharmacare and $120 million for collective agreements with AHS, but I just want to flag that these aren't new services being offered to Albertans. When you do the math on that, all that should be needed is $73 million for new health spending, but again when you look at that $206 million that was supposed to be spent on health but wasn't, in fact, it means that there is a cut of about $133 million to health care.

The concern comes from, you know, that over the last while you look at emergency department wait times, and I know my colleague mentioned today that the goal that this government set out years ago for this year was that 90 per cent of the people who visit the emergency room are seen within the targeted period of time. In the first week of March only 19 per cent of people who visited the emergency room at the Grey Nuns were seen within that target. That's quite a large difference between under 20 per cent and 90 per cent as the goal and where we should be. In the same week, as well, at the Peter Lougheed Centre in Calgary only a third of patients were seen within that targeted time.

You know, I appreciate that although the government has recently introduced some measures to help address capacity issues in our emergency rooms, these are issues that have been ongoing not just within the last year but have been ongoing for quite some time. To me, how this looks is that instead of dealing with these issues and spending the money that they had, the government chose not to, which, again, is a bit of a concern. So I guess I'll start with: where did the $206 million of unused initial supply come from in terms of lines in the 2014-15 budget?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy on behalf of the minister.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chair, I'll try to address the questions, and then I'll make my best of efforts, but I'll advise the member up front that I'd be more than happy to refer questions to the minister. For those in the House this afternoon it was becoming increasingly obvious that the minister was having a little bit of difficulty and has asked that I accept questions on his behalf.

The budget of Health was not cut. When you do a line item budgeting process, it's very typical that you're over in some areas and under in other areas, and you reallocate dollars appropriately. The minister has identified that they overbudgeted in a couple of areas, and that's where the savings come from. I can't give him details beyond what he has on the page in front of him. The minister was unable to share his notes with me. I offer our sincere apologies. But I'm more than happy to refer the questions to the minister as I'll advise all hon. members in here tonight.

The Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Bilous: I thank the hon. minister for his comments. I obviously quite understand that the Minister of Health was not feeling well, and I appreciate his attempts to answer the question.

I'm just curious, and I do understand, you know, that if money wasn't spent, then you can slide it over. I guess I am just looking for a few more details as to why those certain line items weren't spent, but I won't go back to the minister. I appreciate that we can clarify that at another time.

I will move on from . . .

The Chair: I encourage you to look at Hansard from earlier as well because there was some similar questioning.

Mr. Bilous: Right.

The Chair: Please proceed.

Mr. Bilous: I will. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will definitely review Hansard.

I'd like to talk a little bit about education. You know, I appreciate that there is a significant amount of spending in this that is going towards especially the capital side of our projects. I do have some concerns with, again, the fact that you have project delays. I know it's been discussed in this House and outside of the House as far as where initial targets were and where we are now and that we are quite behind as far as the initial targets, which is why we're seeing them move further ahead and we talk about project delays.

I mean, the importance of infrastructure and critical infrastructure like our schools and hospitals is such that I can't help but mention that this is a situation that we shouldn't be facing the way we are today. I mean, had for a number of years the government invested adequately in new schools, with the growing population and knowing, you know, the birth rate of our province and the number of folks moving here – we're trying to play a big game of catch-up. I get that there are significant program delays. However, not building new facilities for a significant number of years has really placed a burden on families and schools and classrooms and on our students. In my opinion, much could have been avoided had we started building many years ago.

The other thing that I need to flag is that there are schools throughout the province where, you know, the timelines that the government has laid out are quite inaccurate, Mr. Chair. The one example that I spoke of was in Red Deer at the Inglewood elementary school, which was supposed to begin construction next month, and we learned that that hasn't even gone to tender. There are other examples as well.

I don't know how much detail – and I know my colleague the Member for Calgary-Buffalo had inquired a little bit as far as some of the specific line items. I would like to at least get it on record – and I don't know if the minister can answer to that $19.4 million for emergent needs in the rest of Alberta. I'd love to get that fleshed out a little bit more. I mean, it's just shy of $20 million. I know that there are significant pressures in cities like Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, but, you know, as well there are some pressures in other parts of the province. I don't know if the Minister of Education has some more specifics as far as that line item and if he could share them with us, please.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chair, I don't have specifics beyond – and the question has been asked already, so it's on the record. I'll refer that to the Minister of Education.

I do want to talk about the overall build, Mr. Chair. The member says that, you know, we haven't kept up, that we should have been building a long time ago, and that we haven't spent enough. Another party in here says that we spent too much. The fact of the matter is that schools are a pressing item in our province. There's absolutely no doubt about it. We're in the midst of the largest provincial infrastructure build ever in the country. Very obviously, in your timeline some things go faster; some things go slower. The Minister of Infrastructure has been absolutely open about the progress of those. He promised a report card; there is a report card. He has been open and honest about the reasons for delays and the progress of every single school project by name, updated regularly. It was just updated again on Monday of this week, so we fully understand the need for schools.

We're in the middle of a build. We have for some time now had the largest per capita infrastructure spend in the country, and in some circles we're criticized for that. But the fact of the matter is that in my time in this House the province, our province, has grown by more than 30 per cent, from 3 million people to over 4 million people, and that growth rate continues. It's over 100,000 people per year, every year. Obviously, it's a lot of work to keep up to that, and that's what the minister is attempting to do, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. You know, I can appreciate that we've had a very rapid growth rate in this province, but again it needs to be noted that there was a significant period of time in the early 2000s when there were very few new schools built, and those pressures continued to mount until we've gotten to a point where it's toppled over. An example I often use: when you look at maintenance, let's say, by homeowners. If they refuse to look at replacing their roof, replacing their boiler, their hot water tank, any kind of maintenance, over time eventually all of it will come back to bite them, and suddenly they're replacing all of them simultaneously, which, of course, means that it's much more costly, and it's much more difficult to do it all simultaneously. So, you know, I appreciate the fact that trying to do – what is it? – 150 projects in a very short period of time poses its challenges.

My point here to the House is that had we been building all along in a timely fashion, we wouldn't have our backs up against the wall. Those were conscious decisions that were made by the government not to invest in infrastructure. We look at conditions of our hospitals and health care facilities around the province. We've heard of numerous examples this year where roofs are collapsing – there's mould; there's water damage – and injecting money now into it obviously is necessary, but, again, prevention is probably the smartest use of dollars in ensuring that we never get to this point where we're putting lives either in danger or at risk. Also, leaving it to the point where – you know, it's like the example with the roof on your house. I mean, if you don't replace those shingles, eventually you're going to get water damage, and now you're going to be replacing a whole bunch of things in the interior of your house versus just replacing the roof when it was needed.

I do think it's also important to note that a FOIP on deferred maintenance, when we're talking about schools, shows that throughout the province there's more than $850 million in deferred maintenance, or an $850 million price tag. I appreciate that there's money that's being pumped into modernizations and new schools, but, again, when I look at $20 million for capital maintenance compared to the $850 million price tag, I mean, all we're doing is kicking the can forward and hoping to get by a few more years before another school either has to be shut down or gets too expensive to repair.

You know, Mr. Chair, I don't think that that is the most fiscally prudent and smartest way to be planning for a province that is growing and moving forward, especially when we look at something as important as education, the future of our province, the future of young Albertans. I personally take great issue with having them either learning in broom closets or being bused long periods of time each day, which has a negative impact on the education of our children.

So a question that I'll ask the minister is – I appreciate that the Calgary board of education has quite a long list of needs and dollars that are needed, and I see that just over $30 million is here in the line item. You know, I appreciate that that's for CBE, but I'm wondering about growth pressures in other parts of the province as far as the dollars that are going to be allocated outside of just the Calgary board of education. I know that Edmonton is facing a similar crisis. Are we adequately addressing the needs outside of CBE?

Then I'll ask as well – you know, this is all under capital – if the minister can comment about dollars for other teaching resources. I understand that this is going significantly for growth pressures, so it's important to build the facility, but it's equally important to have adequate staffing. So I'm wondering if the minister can comment on that.

Mr. Oberle: Well, there's a number of things in the question and the preceding comments that I would dearly like to comment upon. Where to begin, Mr. Chair? The member said that in years gone by we haven't spent. I'm pretty sure that in my whole time in this Legislature we spent above the national average on a per capita basis for infrastructure, in most years well above. During that time I don't actually remember any hospital roofs caving in. I do remember an issue where some ceiling tiles came down because a water pipe burst in the ceiling above the tiles, but no roofs collapsed that I recall – maybe I'm wrong on that – and certainly no lives were threatened in the case of some ceiling tiles coming down. I stand to be corrected, but I read the newspapers. I suspect that I read further down the column than some members opposite.

Mr. Chair, the fact of the matter is that we are in the middle of the largest infrastructure build in Canadian history. We're working very hard at that. There are a lot of Albertans pulling together to do that. So some of the numbers that the member bandies around – for example, $20 million – are absolutely inadequate for the infrastructure backlog in this province. I wholeheartedly agree. I would point out that that's the supplementary spending, which means it's over and above the budget envelope that was approved in this House in the spring of this year. So it's not the full maintenance spending that we're doing this year; it's $20 million over the original estimated full maintenance spending that we're doing in this budget year.

I would also point out that the $30 million for the Calgary board of education represents emergent needs over and above what was approved as a budget in this budget year. This is not atypical. School boards' budgets are approved in this Legislature in the spring. As they go into the fall, enrolment numbers often don't line up, and Calgary felt some significant and extraordinary pressures both in this year and going forward. So they've identified a budget, and the minister funded an additional $30 million. The same is true for the rest of Alberta, and the funding is there, $19,400,000, which addresses the pressures over and above this budget year for the rest of Alberta. Those are all capital dollars, which means they're going into infrastructure, Mr. Chair.

I would assume, as there are no operational overspends or supplementary estimates in this department, that the spending was kept within budget on the operational side. As we fill chairs and blackboards and other things – I guess they don't use blackboards anymore in schools. You know, as we resource our schools going forward, as we build them, the operational dollars will be reflected in future budgets, not in supplementary estimates tabled in the third quarter, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Hon. member, you have another 33 seconds.

Mr. Bilous: Another 33 seconds. Well, time flies when you're having fun.

Okay. Well, I will read some quick questions here. I'm curious about the Kananaskis golf course and why it's not in parks, recreation, and tourism.

Looking at Human Services, where is the additional $38.8 million made available from lower than budgeted expenses and other programs? Where is that being saved?

Let's see here. In Energy I've got several questions which . . .

The Chair: I would hope that those questions could be provided at some point later, or, again, hon. member, some of those questions were addressed earlier. So if the ministers don't have the ability to provide those, certainly Hansard will allude to those questions that you raised earlier.

At this point, hon. members, we have concluded the first round of questioning. This next portion allows for five minutes each or the potential for five and five combined. I would next recognize the independent member, who's not here.

Then I would ask for any government member – and I'll chastise myself as your chairman for referring to the absence of any member, which I did not intend to do. I will now offer the opportunity to any government member who chooses to ask some questions.

Seeing none, then I would go back to any member and the potential for another five and five. The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, would you like to do a five and five with the minister?

Mr. Stier: That will be fine. Thank you.

The Chair: Wonderful. Please proceed, starting now.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Well, good evening, and thank you very much for the opportunity. To the Minister of ESRD, if I could, I would like to just address a few questions with respect to the flooding. He was a big participant in the past couple of years with that, and I know he has a lot of knowledge. He wasn't here earlier. Just a few things popped into my mind that I wanted to get out.

Tomorrow I'm attending another meeting for the flood situation in High River, and I noticed that on page 30 of the estimates, Minister, we see that there is a supplementary need here for 32 mil for the town of High River flood mitigation projects, rebuilding berms, et cetera. It's kind of curious to me because we have had a number of reports come in very recently, including a meeting I attended in High River on Wednesday evening last week, with respect to the diversions and all that kind of stuff that are now apparently no longer on hold. They are being, you know, told in the area that there is another report now forthcoming from another company called Deltares. We'll see that tomorrow night.

I wondered, first of all: could you explain the $32 million in this document here and if that is still needed or not, please?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Fawcett: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the question from the member. This is a good question. One of the great things that happened in High River subsequent to the flooding in 2013 was that the town and council there immediately sprang into action and developed a plan to build a number of berms and dikes within the town to protect the town. These berms and dikes were built to the 2013 flood conveyance level plus another metre of freeboard, so you can be assured that currently that town is well protected.

As part of their mitigation strategy there have been conversations ongoing about a potential diversion of water from the Highwood River from somewhere upstream of the town during high-flow periods, and there were a number of options, whether they were looking at going north or south. Ultimately, it was narrowed down to looking at a southern diversion into the Little Bow River.

There were two engineering studies – one done by the province, one done by the town – that had some slightly different perspectives on what that diversion might look like. Frankly, the one done by the province, the initial engineering report, was looking at a massive diversion that would have probably cost a significant amount of money. The town itself was looking at a bit of a smaller diversion, with some additional protection with some berms and dikes.

We have contracted out to Deltares, which is a firm that does research and assessment of flooding and river morphology when it comes to flooding. They are from the Netherlands, which has been one of the world's most recognized countries in dealing with flooding. That organization has taken a look at these two engineering reports and looked at what the town of High River has done up to this point in time and is providing recommendations. Those recommendations went out for consultation to stakeholders in the area. We're now finalizing that report, and it will be out for public consumption.

I can assure that what's in the report and what the town is looking at is not going with the more extensive, larger diversion. It just doesn't make sense. What you see with this expense here, the $32 million, was the work that was done on those berms and dikes that are currently in place in the town right now.

Like I said, you know, in chatting with the mayor and the folks there, they're quite proud of the type of protection they've been able to put into the town through the province's financial support, allowing that if there was a flood at the 2013 level, a big portion of that town would now be protected from that. There would be a lot of water running through that channel, but it is there.

There is, like I said, this final piece that we're sorting through with the Deltares report. It will potentially require some additional berms and dikes to be built and some potential infrastructure to be moved and upgraded to allow for the conveyance of the kind of water to go down that river channel. That's what that money was put toward, the current berms and dikes that have been put in place by the town.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you. A supplementary if I could, Mr. Chair. Just to clarify, this is money that has been spent, and this is for that?

Mr. Fawcett: Yes.

Mr. Stier: Okay. If I could just follow up, if we look at the second item down from there, Mr. Minister, we're talking about 4 and a half mil for the Springbank reservoir, or the theoretical one, the project. The question, then: is that money, too, spent, and if so, what has it been for? Is that just for study so far?

Mr. Fawcett: Yeah. That's essentially what it is. That is money that has been spent or is being spent in this fiscal year in the study – engineering, negotiations with landowners, public consultation – for this particular project.

Mr. Stier: Okay. If I could just follow up – and you just mentioned negotiations with landowners – has there actually been compensation paid to landowners in this project at this time? I didn't know it was actually decided that you were at a stage to proceed with that project. It was my understanding that there was another, alternative project and that the actual decision hadn't been made one way or the other. Can you just shed a little light on that if you would, please, Minister?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Yeah. We've been quite clear, actually, since about September that we will be proceeding with the Springbank dry off-stream reservoir project. All initial studies and analysis that have been done are that, of all the factors that we need to consider, which are financial factors, cost-benefit analysis, environmental impact, impacts on landowners, the type of protection it will provide, the impacts on upstream and downstream communities, on balance, this is the most feasible project, and our commitment is to try to move forward with it as fast as possible. However, you're right. This project will require access to and the purchase of or some sort of agreement for the use of private land from landowners, and we're in that process of establishing terms of negotiation in order to have fair and respectful negotiations with the landowners.

While, you know, I think it probably could be understandable to most here that they're not necessarily enamoured with the idea that this project would be moving forward, they do understand in the conversations that we've had with them privately that government has to make some of these tough decisions, and they've engaged with us in good faith in trying to come up with a framework to establish a successful negotiation. That's the process we're in with them right now.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Yeah. Thank you. Just to finish up on that – and I appreciate the minister's patience with my questions on that subject – just as you and, I'm sure, a lot of the members here tonight are aware, with the alternative, McLean Creek, there were some funds spent, I believe, in exploring that particular project. Did these funds, the 4 and a half million, include some of that study work at all, and if not, were there monies spent on exploring thoroughly the McLean Creek alternative? As members here know, a lot of people are concerned about the protection of the hamlet of Bragg Creek and Redwood Meadows and some of those communities. I'm just wondering if any of this money went towards, actually, the feasibility study on that alternative, please.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Yeah. I think that's another good question. What you'll see is what we were referring to, I believe, when you talked about the $4.5 million that was for the Springbank off-stream reservoir. It was a capital expenditure. [A timer sounded] Am I allowed to continue?

The Chair: No. That has concluded, but I think you gave a concise answer, so we thank you.

I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. You, too, have the potential of five and five should you choose to.

Mr. Hehr: Yeah. Five and five. Sure.

The Chair: Proceed.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I've been very interested in this flood discussion, so we can hopefully continue on from there. I note that in January the federal government switched its budgeting on the disaster relief program and what it's going to do in the future to provinces who try to access funds under that program. They move from covering the first $12.4 million in damages to reducing that to just $4.1 million. Have those conversations been had in your ministry on budgeting and in light of what we've been through and the like?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Yeah. I'll try to answer those questions. Unfortunately, the disaster recovery program falls under Municipal Affairs. I don't mean unfortunately; I just don't necessarily have the answers to that discussion.

Mr. Hehr: You were the minister of flooding. You know all this.

Mr. Fawcett: Yeah. I do think that there have been changes made to the federal government's what's called the disaster financial assistance program. You know, I don't think that the floods in 2013 were the complete reason for that. I think it was a challenge for the federal government in looking at where some of their biggest costs were coming from and trying to control costs. If they've made changes, it only, actually, emphasizes the need for us to look more intently at flood mitigation because we won't have as much protection, potentially, on a disaster from a financial standpoint from the federal government if it was to happen again.

The minister might be able to answer that question a little bit better.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you. Just to add to it if you would like, certainly the changes that were made with regard to the federal government are going forward, so they will not affect the 2013 or '14 or prior disasters but do affect going forward.

Mr. Hehr: Also, I got into this a little bit earlier. You know, we're talking about some of this money going to projects on both the Bow River side and on the Elbow side, and you've explained sort of the reasons and the rationale behind the Springbank flood mitigation plan. As I don't have access to the depth or breadth of reports that you guys have, I'll take you at your word that it is the most economically feasible as well as probably the best plan going forward.

Nevertheless, can you comment a little bit on the Bow side of things, you know, what you're doing currently on flood mitigation and whether there's any of this money going towards that and the plan on the Bow going forward and some of the concerns that have been highlighted around that side of things? We've concentrated quite a bit on the Elbow River. Are we looking at expenses and potential future mitigation projects on that side?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Yeah. Thank you. It's a very good question. It's actually a pretty complex one. One of the challenges when it comes to flood mitigation is that not all communities and not all watersheds are created equal, right? The kinds of solutions that need to be put in place are unique to (a) the community and what kind of infrastructure is built in the flood areas and (b) the geography and the way that the river goes and interacts with the landscape. On the Elbow River we've been able to identify some potential projects, large projects that we can move forward with that will get us a large amount of the way to the kind of protection that we need for those communities that could be impacted from flooding on the Elbow.

On the Bow River you don't have as much potential to look at doing a larger project to get that protection, you know, so that's one negative. The positive is that you do have some infrastructure already in place, that TransAlta operates as part of their operations. Last year we had an agreement in place, that was in the original budget, that allowed us to help try to mitigate some of the flows potentially during a flood situation through the Ghost reservoir dam.

The challenge is that we believe that we could actually get an even greater level of protection through further negotiations with TransAlta and working with them with not just the Ghost reservoir dam but some of the other infrastructure that they have along the Bow River watershed. It's a fairly complex issue around what exactly the level of protection is and then what that financial agreement might look like. We're in discussions with them.

The $14 million for funds for continued implementation of flood infrastructure recovery measures: you'll see that our mitigation and resiliency branch is what this funding is for, not specifically for that negotiation, but part of it is to provide the operational funding for us to continue doing this work.

Mr. Hehr: Well, let me ask you this follow-up. Of that $14 million designated for some of this – let's be clear. Obviously, TransAlta is impacted financially as a result of flood mitigation measures they do on behalf of the province, so that's part of the ongoing thing. What is the price tag around that process and in this budget cycle?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I believe that in the current budget I don't have the exact number, but it was in the order of $3 million for this last flood season's pilot project. A longer term or comprehensive agreement will cost more than that for sure. We don't know exactly until we get those details worked out.

For this flood year, you know, the intention is to continue to at least, at the very minimum, have the same kind of deal that we had in place last year, and that will obviously be forthcoming in whatever the Finance minister tables on the 26th.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. In light of what we've learned – and we see the feds, you know, moving out of the disaster relief program at least to a certain extent. Given that, I'm wondering if there's any money being spent in this budget, this supplementary supply, and/or if there are any comments the minister might like to make on whether there's been any progress made on discussions with the national government on national flood insurance and/or whether there's talk of actually going alone here, having a provincial flood insurance program, given that we are the natural disaster capital of Canada, given our proximity to the mountains and the like. I note that just because it seems to be a public policy position that is reasonable, that other jurisdictions have taken, that looks like you have competing claims. To me, it looks like it makes common sense. Wondering whether there are any comments on that.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, and thank you for the question. I can tell you that out of our ministry – and I would assume it is the same with the hon. member's supplementary estimates – there are no dollars that are being requested with regard to that issue. That was the question.

Mr. Hehr: You didn't take the bait.

Mrs. McQueen: I know.

Mr. Hehr: I wanted to discuss more broadly the principle. Nevertheless there, they didn't take the bait. I'll pass to let other members ask a question.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Before I recognize the next speaker, I'll recognize the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Yes, Mr. Chair. I would ask that we possibly revert to Introduction of Guests.

The Chair: Wonderful. The Member for Strathmore-Brooks has asked that we revert briefly to the Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

8:20 Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to take this moment to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislature someone who has visited here a few times before, the mayor of Brooks, Mr. Martin Shields, who, I may also add, is the nominated candidate in the upcoming federal election for our Bow River riding.

The Chair: Thank you.

Supplementary Supply Estimates 2014-15 General Revenue Fund (continued)

The Chair: I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Again, you have the potential for five and five if you so desire.

Mr. Bilous: Yes.

The Chair: Hon. member, that's your wish?

Mr. Bilous: That is my wish, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Proceed.

Mr. Bilous: A couple of quick questions that I think the Minister of Energy can answer because he is the former Minister of Aboriginal Relations. I'm curious about what critical infrastructure projects were undertaken and for which additional funding is requested although my gut tells me that this has to do with flood relief and reconstruction. I'm also curious if the minister can comment on how the funding is split between federal and provincial governments.

The Chair: Is that a question for the hon. Associate Minister of Aboriginal Relations?

Mr. Dorward: Yeah. I assume the member is referring to the $8.6 million in capital funding. Thank you. I appreciate the opportunity to respond to that. There are two components to that. Some is on Hansard from earlier today. I don't want to steal too much of your time. There are two components. Five point six million dollars was for the Lubicon Lake band community to install 19 trailers, that were taken from Slave Lake, and also to provide water and sewage services to those homes as well as to set up a situation whereby the Lubicon community members will have access to a very good waterline. That was part of it as well.

Then in addition to that $5.6 million there's also $3 million, which is part of the Métis settlement funding over 10 years in a long-term governance agreement with the provincial government whereby Métis communities will receive funding similar to MSI funding for municipalities, Mr. Chair.

I'll let the member just ask me further questions instead of using up all his time.

Mr. Bilous: I thank the associate minister for his brevity. Forgive me. The $3 million for the critical infrastructure on Métis settlements: that you had said is split between – is there a portion of that $3 million coming from the federal government, or is it the MSI but only from the provincial government with the Métis settlements?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chair, I wonder if I could respond to that. The $3 million is not for a flood response. We've got a long-term arrangement with the Métis settlements that provides for a move toward the sustainability of the settlements, and there's funding that goes to the settlements. It's similar to MSI, for lack of a better word, although they're certainly not municipalities. They're a much, much different government structure, but it allows them some resources in the community. As part of that agreement we agreed on a critical infrastructure list.

The resources they're provided allow them to use seed money to leverage other money. It might be federal money; there could be grants. In this particular case this is the province's contribution on a leverage of that critical infrastructure money to allow us to begin to pick off a list that both the Métis and the government of Alberta agreed to as part of the long-term arrangement.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Minister, for that response. I appreciate that.

I'd like to just move to Energy in my last couple of minutes here and talk about the line item with Energy. I believe the compensation here is a result of land that needed to be bought back from developers and other owners by the Crown for the purpose of conservation under the lower Athabasca regional plan. My understanding is that these payments are governed by the mineral rights compensation act, so a few questions here. Maybe I'll just ask them all, and then the minister can respond as he wishes.

I'm curious to know, if possible, how much of this money was paid to corporations and what proportion of the funds paid out was in the form of initial principal of cash paid to the Crown, development allowances, reclamation allowances, interest allowances, and how much more money will be paid out through the program.

Mr. Oberle: I thank the hon. member for the question. There are two programs here, two issues that caused the government to move to reacquire land. So let's be clear that the companies' proponents of development don't purchase the land although that's what it's called indeed. It's called a land sale. They purchase rights to use the resources. In this case between the lower Athabasca regional plan and the urban development region surrounding the population centre of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, as would be the case in most, these are undeveloped leases. Somebody has purchased the rights to develop mineral resources, and in the mineral rights compensation regulation there is pretty clear guidance as to how we go about purchasing those leases back. We refund the money that they used to purchase the lease – so that would be the land sales, or bonus payment, as it's known – and then improvements on the landscape. We don't fund for lost opportunity, future resource revenue, those sorts of things.

In these cases, if I had to guess, I would say that 100 per cent of the money went to corporations. I'm not aware of anybody that would be developing oil sands leases as an individual. It's certainly not an endeavour that an individual could undertake, so these would all be corporations. All of the money would have been paid to refund them and to reacquire the rights to those leases so that the lands could go to other uses.

In the case of LARP they went to protected areas. I think we established in the neighbourhood of 2 million hectares – I have the number here someplace – a very large area, protected areas in the lower Athabasca region. In the case of the UDSR surrounding Fort McMurray, we of course are providing for municipal development and municipal expansion and had to extinguish the mineral rights underneath. That's what the program was for.

I hope I've answered the member's questions.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and I'll thank the minister. Just a couple of follow-ups. I appreciate that the government doesn't fund any lost opportunities that the corporation may have with the mineral rights. I appreciate that that's the difference; it's land that's still owned by the Crown. It was just the mineral rights that were sold and then purchased back. Is there, in the repurchasing, an interest adjustment or a value adjustment between what it was sold for and when it's repurchased? I'm not sure if that value changes or if it's determined, if there has been exploration done where, then, the government needs to increase or pay that difference between the original purchase price and the repurchasing of the mineral rights.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Oberle: Yeah. Actually, I think I might want to respond to the member offline, in writing. It's in Hansard. I'll respond. I can't actually answer that. You know, obviously, any company would argue that they've got a certain amount of sunk cost in the lease even if it's not developed. If there's not a physical drilled well sitting there, there could be other costs. Often this becomes a bit of a negotiation. I believe it would include an interest adjustment if the land sale had been done sometime prior. But I honestly can't answer that right at the moment. I will get back to the member with that.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member. You still have some time.

Mr. Bilous: Yeah. One further follow-up question. I appreciate the minister getting back to me on that, and I respect the fact that offhand he may not have that information at his fingertips.

I don't know if the minister can respond to whether there will be more money paid out through this program or if this sum is for the total land that is needed, whether it's for LARP or for Wood Buffalo, or if there is more that needs to be repurchased.

Mr. Oberle: Well, the mineral rights compensation regulation exists for a reason, Mr. Chair, and that is that from time to time the province of course makes development decisions that impact the underlying mineral rights, and occasionally the province is required to reassign the use of land. We've made such decisions in the lower Athabasca region, and the number was more than 2 million hectares of conservation land established.

From time to time those development decisions will happen in our province. We have a land-use framework that brought a lot of stakeholder Albertans to the table to talk about land-use direction. You know, from time to time we establish protected areas in this province, and from time to time our municipalities expand. All of those require a revisit of the underlying mineral rights, and occasionally that requires that we purchase them.

In the case of LARP we've made our decisions there, the lower Athabasca regional plan, and in the case of the Fort McMurray urban development region we've made our decision there as well. But the program exists, and it allows for the fact that we do from time to time revisit land use in this province.

The Chair: The hon. member.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon, everyone.

Let us pray. Dear Lord, help us to be mindful shepherds of this great province in a manner that protects and preserves it for generations ahead of us, as was done by those generations who preceded us. Amen.

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

14th Anniversary of Elected Members

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we go to Introduction of Visitors, may I take a moment to bring to your attention that we are celebrating a special 14-year anniversary of members who were elected 14 years ago to this Assembly. After I've read all four names, could we join in a thunderous round of accolade to each and every one of them: the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, and the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. Would you, all four, please rise so we can thank you for your service.

Introduction of Visitors

Ms Woo-Paw: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly the delegation from the Association of Southeast Asian Nations: His Excellency To Anh Dung, ambassador from Vietnam; Her Excellency Petronila Garcia, ambassador from the Philippines; His Excellency Dr. Teuku Faizasyah, ambassador from Indonesia, and his spouse, Mrs. Faizasyah; His Excellency Vijavat Isarabhakdi, ambassador from Thailand to Canada; and Mr. Sukri Sharbini, Acting High Commissioner of Brunei Darussalam.

The ambassadors and members of the delegation here today are committed to strengthening the ties between Alberta and Southeast Asia. They are here to meet with various ministers and institutions as well as to have a tour of the Industrial Heartland tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker, the 10 countries that make up ASEAN represent one of the most dynamic and fast growing areas of the world, with a combined GDP of $2.5 trillion and a population of 600 million, with a rich culture and tremendous economic potential. This is a relationship that Albertans value, and the ambassadors' visit is a great opportunity to strengthen our existing ties while exploring new opportunities together.

Our esteemed guests are in your gallery, and I now ask all of my colleagues in the Assembly to give them the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome to all of you. Thank you.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism, you have some special guests here in the gallery as well. Please proceed.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly representatives from Alberta's francophone community who are here today in celebration of the 17th annual Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie. Events like today are supported by members of Alberta's French-speaking community, which includes l'Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta and la Fédération des parents francophones de l'Alberta.

In the Speaker's gallery today are representatives from those organizations: representing the French Canadian Association of Alberta, Mr. Jean Johnson, president of l'ACFA, and Ms Isabelle Laurin, executive director; representing the Federation of Francophone Parents, Ms Claudine Lajoie, president. With them are some of the staff members from my ministry, the Francophone Secretariat, which continues to support Alberta's French-speaking community: Mrs. Denise Lavallée and Mrs. Julie Lussier, community liaison officers. Best wishes for a wonderful celebration. I ask all of them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Merci beaucoup, et bienvenue à tous.

Let us move on to other important groups, starting with school groups, Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Strathcona Sherwood Park.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great delight that I introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the students from Nellie McClung school. This vibrant community school in Calgary-Glenmore has students who, besides doing their classroom work, write their own plays, and some of them have even interviewed me about the Calgary southwest ring road. They are joined today by their helpers and teachers: Ms Carla Samuelson, Jaclyn Schmitz, Joanna Yu, Gord Hamby, and Rich Baverstock. I ask the students to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by Red Deer-South.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly 61 of Strathcona county's brightest and best grade 6 students from the Fultonvale school. They're accompanied today by their teachers Ms Cindy Jackson and Mr. Jason Jefferies and a number of parent helpers: Mrs. Bonnie Stiegelman, Mrs. Twyla LaLonde, Mrs. Rachelle McElheran, Mrs. Laura Mihailides, Ms Tianna Mapstone, and Mrs. Marnie Veltri. If I could get you all to rise, please – they're seated in the public gallery – and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a group of students, parents, and teachers from Westpark middle school in Red Deer. Unfortunately, they're not in the gallery right at this moment. They're participating in a guided tour of the Legislature, and they'll have an opportunity to observe the members of this House at 2 p.m. today. I really hope that these students are enjoying their Legislature experience. I'd like to thank the teachers and parent helpers here today and would like to acknowledge them: Mr. Norm Howes, Mrs. Laurie Shapka Thiel, Mrs. Kimberly Streit, Mr. Corey Hunter, and Barb Wooff. If you'd please join me in welcoming them here to the Legislature.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

Seeing no one indicating that there are, let us proceed with other important guests, starting with the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. Your guests are not here yet?

Let us move on, then, to Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Nick Chrapko, Mrs. Ruby Kassian, and Li Giebelhaus. These individuals are from Vegreville, right in the heart of my constituency. They are here today to advocate for a petition to end daylight saving time that I will be tabling later in this House, and it's the most appropriate week, of course, to put this petition forward. This group is led and inspired by Ruby and was developed because of concerns about the detriment that it can have on people. I would ask that they all rise and that they would be greeted with the traditional warm greeting of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to introduce three inspirational Albertans representing 1835 House, Recovery Acres Society, in Calgary. I first visited 1835 House a decade ago as chair of AADAC and last year as Associate Minister of Wellness, so I've seen first-hand the miracles that these fine people work every day. Gerry Melsted became the executive director of 1835 House last October, after serving for well over a decade on the society's board. Rob Laird is the director of fund development, a former RCMP officer, a champion of those struggling with addiction and homelessness and other social issues. Rob was instrumental in the start-up of the Calgary Dream Centre and the Calgary drug treatment court and has travelled internationally to speak to youth about the perils of addiction.

And, finally, everyone will recognize Jamie Salé, 2001 world champion, 2002 Olympic gold medalist, and inductee into the Skate Canada and the Canadian Olympic halls of fame. Jamie and her husband, Craig Simpson, enjoy supporting the work of many Alberta charities, lending their star power, including to 1835 House. Mr. Speaker, our guests are indeed in the members' gallery, and I ask them now to stand to receive the traditional thunderous ovation of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let us move on to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, leader of the Liberal opposition, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and all the Legislative Assembly a very extraordinary Edmontonian, Mr. Harpreet Gill. Harpreet is a 28-year-old professional, a graduate in business administration, an advocate for his community, cofounder of a community magazine. He is an active volunteer on social, humanitarian, and political issues. He has organized fundraisers for humanitarian causes and supports progressive public representatives. He is fluent in five languages and is a committed Liberal. He has served as Edmonton regional chair for the Alberta Liberal Party and is still serving as Edmonton regional chair for the Liberal Party of Canada. Now he is the Alberta Liberal Party candidate for your seat, Mr. Speaker, Edmonton-Mill Creek. Please give him a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two gentlemen with the Alberta Irrigation Projects Association who are here today to show the support of the irrigation community for Bill 13, an amendment to the Fisheries (Alberta) Act. Invasive aquatic species, if they were to get into our irrigation system, would cause untold damage to both the infrastructure and the well-being of Albertans, to agriculture, and to our quality of life.

Mr. Ronald McMullin from Lethbridge is the executive director of the Alberta Irrigation Projects Association and has served agriculture for more than 20 years, working to strengthen Alberta's irrigation community and ensure that Alberta water sources are used wisely. With him today is no stranger to many of you long-serving members, Mr. Jim Dau, who, among the many hats he wears, is the project manager of AIPA's thanks-to-irrigation program. Jim worked here in the Legislature for many years as a communications director for the late Premier Ralph Klein. Ron and Jim are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them now to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ms Tammy Burke, councillor for the town of Rocky Mountain House. I've had the pleasure to know Ms Burke for some time, and we caught up again this morning at the AUMA's MLA breakfast. Rocky Mountain House is fortunate to have such a hard-working and passionate representative. I ask the members of the Assembly today to give the traditional warm welcome to Ms Burke.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two exceptional members of the community, very accomplished gentlemen, and this is their first time watching the QP. I will introduce to you Mr. Mansoor Hussain, who is a petroleum engineer and working in Dubai, accompanied by his father and my dear friend, Dr. Naqvi. I would ask you to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, as with everyone else, will be given two minutes for his statement, and I believe there is a translation on your desks. Please proceed.

Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie

Mr. Goudreau: Merci, M. le Président. Chaque année, au mois de mars, nous en profitons pour mettre en évidence l'un des peuples fondateurs et l'un des groupes linguistiques les plus importants de notre province, la communauté francophone. Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie est une célébration de deux semaines qui reconnaît et célèbre notre patrimoine francophone, qui fait partie de notre province depuis les premiers jours de la colonisation jusqu'à aujourd'hui, où la population de la langue française est l'un des groupes les plus dynamiques en Alberta.

Cette célébration a débuté le 6 mars avec des cérémonies du lever du drapeau dans toute la province et culminera le 20 mars lors de la

Journée internationale de la Francophonie, célébrée dans plus de 70 pays à travers le monde. M. le Président, les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie est une occasion de rassembler les gens pour célébrer la francophonie albertaine par la musique, les festivals et d'autres événements culturels. Les francophones et nonfrancophones albertaines peuvent participer à un grand nombre d'événements à travers la province. De Bonnyville à Grande Prairie, de Lac La Biche à Lethbridge, et partout ailleurs dans la province il y a une communauté francophone fière qui célébrera la joie de vivre.

Compte tenu les plus de 238,000 Albertains qui parlent le français et les plus de 390,000 Albertains d'origine française, il ne fait aucun doute que la culture francophone est une partie vivante et intégrale de notre province. Au fur et à mesure que l'Alberta continue de croître, il est important de se rappeler que notre province est un merveilleux endroit pour vivre, travailler et élever une famille. C'est un endroit qui accueille et célèbre la diversité culturelle et linguistique qui enrichit notre qualité de vie et contribue à développer des collectivités dynamiques et inclusives.

M. le Président, mes remerciements à vous et aux membres de cette Assemblée pour leur soutien continu de cette célébration annuelle de nos communautés francophones.

Merci.

[Translation] Mr. Speaker, every year in March we take the opportunity to highlight one of the founding peoples and one of the important linguistic groups in our province, the francophone community. The Rendez-vous de la Francophonie is a two-week long celebration that honours our francophone heritage, which has been a part of our province since the earliest days of settlement to today, where the French-speaking population is one of the fastest growing groups in Alberta.

This celebration kicked off on March 6 with flag-raising ceremonies taking place throughout the province and will culminate on March 20, which is la Journée internationale de la Francophonie, International Francophonie Day, celebrated in more than 70 countries around the world. The Rendez-vous is an opportunity to bring people together to celebrate Alberta's Francophonie through music, festivals, and other cultural events. Francophone and non-Francophone Albertans can participate in a number of events across the province. From Bonnyville to Grande Prairie, Lac La Biche to Lethbridge, and every town and city in between there is a proud francophone community that will be celebrating the joie de vivre, the act of joyful living that enhances our lives.

With more than 238,000 Albertans who speak French and over 390,000 Albertans of French descent, there is no doubt that francophone culture is a vibrant and integral part of our province. As Alberta continues to grow, it is important for us to remember that our province is a wonderful place to work, live, and to raise a family. It is a place that embraces and celebrates the cultural and linguistic diversity that enriches our quality of life and contributes to vibrant and inclusive communities.

Mr. Speaker, my thanks to you and all the members of this Assembly for their continued support for this annual celebration of our francophone communities. [As submitted]

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. leader of the Liberal Party.

Martha and Henry's Children and Grandchildren

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Decades ago Premier Ralph Klein introduced us to Martha and Henry. This session the Alberta Liberals will focus on Martha and Henry's kids and grandkids. Their priorities are our priorities. As we enter into what will be one of the most important legislative sessions in decades, Alberta Liberals will be talking about Martha and Henry's kids and their grandkids, the generation that has grown up since. They are the people who are now suffering due to the recurring financial crisis in Alberta. This, of course, has been brought on by a failed financial policy that has spent all of Alberta's wealth in one generation. These are my kids and yours. They are parents working hard to look after their families. In this legislative session Alberta Liberals will still provide trusted leadership, standing up for these families.

As I go out and around the province, this generation, Martha and Henry's kids and their grandkids, are struggling, and they're worried. They've worked hard in good times and bad and in some cases have succeeded despite the PCs' poor policies. But many others are suffering, with limited resources and deficient social supports. They're disappointed with a government that does not reflect their progressive values, that ignores the communities by not building the schools and repairing the hospitals, that is failing them, their parents, and their children. Alberta Liberals will stand up for progressive values of equality and human rights, that have defined this generation. Women should not be paid only 63 per cent of what men make for work of the same value. Young parents and mothers, in particular, deserve choice and access to child care and early childhood development opportunities. We will talk about the need for an aggressive urban agenda. A big-city charter is needed now.

Martha and Henry's kids have watched their children's class sizes grow larger, school fees skyrocket, access to postsecondary education go down, and hospitals in our communities crumble. Alberta Liberals . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Let us move on to Lesser Slave Lake. I think we can squeeze in one more before the time.

Adolph and Mary Huculak 65th Anniversary

Ms Calahasen: Thank you. How many of us in this House can say that we've seen 65 years of age? Maybe a few. But to be married 65 years is a long time, in my view, but truly inspiring. I'm so lucky to have the pleasure of knowing two wonderful people who have been married that long and are still together, Adolph and Mary Huculak.

Their exciting story goes back to February 11, 1950, when they got married and professed their undying love for one another at St. Alphonsus church here in Edmonton. By June 5, 1951, they had moved to Kinuso, where Mary, a registered nurse, dedicated her life to working with First Nations peoples and to the children of the Jossard mission. Adolph spent many years working for the Chapel of Memories funeral home in High Prairie. They had seven children. On top of this immense shared labour of love, they managed to thrive as a farming family, in fact cultivating land up to 2013, when they moved to High Prairie.

They have shared plenty of exciting moments together, a few they wanted me to share with Albertans, like in 1984, when Mary received the Serving Sisters of St. John award from the Governor General, Mme Jeanne Sauvé. That same year Adolph shook hands with Pope John Paul II in Fort Simpson in the Northwest Territories.

These once-in-a-lifetime experiences and accomplishments are just indicative of the remarkable life Mary and Adolph are continuing to share together. They're a unit that Albertans everywhere can take inspiration from because Alberta's strength grows out of the fortitude of the families that call this province home. The Huculaks enshrine this perfectly as it is encapsulated in their 65 years together.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I extend my most heartfelt congratulations to Mary and Adolph Huculak, and I would encourage all hon. members to do the same.

Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Timers in Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll start the question period in 30 seconds. However, I want to just tell you that the clock and the computer at the Clerk's table were malfunctioning on Tuesday and partly on Wednesday, and that led to some serious time violations of our 35-second rule. It also prevented us from getting the Blues when we wanted them, just so you're aware. Yesterday we did much better. There were just about 10 or so that went a couple of seconds over, but on Tuesday some had gone 10, 15 seconds longer. So we all bear some responsibility for the clock and the computer. However, they have been fixed, so let's see if we can do better today.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Let us start, then, with the recognition of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition leader. First main set of questions.

Mrs. Forsyth: I'll try, Mr. Speaker.

Health Facility Infrastructure

Mrs. Forsyth: Every year Alberta Health Services puts together an objective list of infrastructure priorities that it submits to the government, and every year ministers of Health have ignored most of these high-priority requests. Now, it seems that this Minister of Health, under a Premier who promised to do things differently, is making health care decisions in the exact same way. Cardston, Strathmore, Wainwright, Red Deer, Fort McMurray: those are all the places that AHS says are a priority. Minister, why are they being ignored by your government if not for purely political reasons?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, this government is investing throughout the province. We're investing money in the South Health Campus, in the Kaye Edmonton clinic, in Fort McMurray, in Lethbridge, in Medicine Hat, everywhere. We're investing money to improve health care for our residents throughout Alberta. That's a passion for this Premier and for this minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Now, Mr. Speaker, we're obviously getting close to campaign time, and I say this because a sure sign of an election is the precampaign promises to the people of Whitecourt again for a new hospital. It happens every four years, going back as far as 1993. That promise was repeated again by the Minister of Health just a few weeks ago. Now, what I find curious, Minister, is why you would make that commitment when, according to AHS, Whitecourt is not a priority. Can you please explain to me the disconnect?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, priorities are set by Alberta Health Services, by Alberta Health, but also by the residents of this province and the needs that they have. Whitecourt has been in need of a hospital for a long time, and we'll work with that community to build one.

Thank you.

Mrs. Forsyth: No, Minister. No, Minister, and I'll share the FOIP with you that clearly lists the priorities.

Yesterday the Minister of Education claimed that he never played politics with schools, and today the Minister of Health says that he's never played politics with health. The Ethics Commissioner says that the Education minister did play politics with schools. Now we see the government making health care promises to areas where it needs to curry favours. Meanwhile mould at the Foothills is ignored, the Misericordia is falling apart, and sewage issues in Wainwright threaten the entire facility. Minister, are you really going to stand here and tell . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, this government is investing about $200 million over a three-year period to invest in the rehabilitation of hospitals. Yes, I say that there are issues we need to fix, but we are fixing them. We're working hard across the province to invest in the future of Albertans and our health care system.

The Speaker: Second main set of questions. The hon. opposition leader.

School Construction

Mrs. Forsyth: The Education minister said in an interview yesterday that construction is a big word. You see, construction, to the minister, can include just about anything outside of actually putting shovels in the ground, having concrete poured, or walls being framed. You have to excuse Albertans for not connecting empty fields and $10,000 signs with construction. Minister, you've seen the photos of the 38 schools you said are being built. The vast majority are empty fields. Can the minister explain to Albertans how you define construction?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have chosen to use a very transparent process to allow the public to see where our various school projects are at. Once a contract is awarded, for the purposes of our recordkeeping that is in construction phase. I can assure the member opposite and all Albertans that once a contract is signed, it's the responsibility of the construction companies to move forward and to start digging in a very short period of time. The vast majority of these schools will be worked on . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's move on to the supplemental.

Mrs. Forsyth: Minister, Albertans know what construction is. It's not planning studies, it's not engineering reports, and it's not asking for permits. That's the planning and tendering phase. When the minister was asked if the schools will be ready in 2016, he said that he's committed to timelines while school boards are saying: we'll be lucky to have students move in by 2017. Minister, will you be honest with Albertans and tell them that you will not be able to make those timelines?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, the fact remains that the phase 1 school projects were announced in 2011, and they opened in 2014, when they were supposed to. The phase 2 projects were announced in 2013, and they will open, the vast majority of them, as described from day one, in 2016 as planned. It's that simple. The members opposite can go and ensure that these projects are moving. I have construction start dates. For example, Archbishop O'Leary school . . .

The Speaker: We'll hear more examples later if you like. Meanwhile I have to recognize the hon. member for her second supplemental.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. This minister has been at the centre of playing politics with our schools since he got the job. He's the man who was scolded by the Ethics Commissioner for his blatant political opportunism, buying a seat before putting the needs of families first. I've been around a long time, and I've seen this play before: promise everything to everyone before an election, only to not keep your promises. There is no doubt you're behind schedule on almost all of these schools. Why won't you do the honest thing, come out and admit it?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, I really don't know where the member opposite gets those facts from. I just am glad that they don't have the ability to construct a budget because with those types of loose figures, I don't think they would really serve the people of Alberta very well.

The fact remains that 108 schools will be open in 2016 as committed to. The members opposite can see the progress. We have had an unprecedented level of transparency in allowing the public to see when something is contracted and moving forward.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's move on to the third main set of questions. Livingstone-Macleod.

Flood Mitigation

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like many others, I was shocked to read the Auditor General's report yesterday. More than two years after the floods of 2013 this report says that this tired PC government has no real plan in place for effective flood mitigation. Among other things, the AG chastised this government for not having up-to-date flood maps, not having adequate risk assessment processes, and not having systems to assess the cumulative effects of mitigation projects. In short, an overall lack of due diligence is taking place. To the minister: why aren't you taking the proper steps...

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's hear from the minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, this government has acted quite swiftly in the aftermath of the floods to undertake important risk-mitigation strategies such as building flood mitigation. This government has invested well over a hundred million dollars in the flood erosion control program. We've announced a program, and you will see money in the budget for the Alberta community resiliency program, and we've continued to work with affected stakeholders along the Elbow rivershed and the Highwood rivershed on large flood mitigation projects.

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

2:00

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, last year in High River this government paid for two costly engineering reports on diversion plans, spent $30 million on flood mitigation projects, and now realizes that these original reports are in fact not acceptable. This stems, actually, from a third report from a company called Deltares, which has now been accepted as a preferred solution. Now, we all know we need to get to the right result here, but thorough, proven planning is part of that process. To the minister:

has all this wasted time and money in High River due to apparent poor planning put this community at any added risk for this upcoming flood season?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, there have been hundreds of millions of dollars invested by this government working with the town of High River on the berms and dikes in High River to protect that community. That is action. The majority of that money was in place for last year's flood season, and we are continuing to enhance this. These are very complex issues that include impacts on upstream and downstream landowners and communities, of which there are also serious environmental impacts. We need to make sure we get this right. But we have moved, and we have seen action on this item.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Stier: Yeah, well, the same government recently proposed another theoretical diversion project in Springbank. When this plan goes forward, it will render acres and acres of rich farmland, prime development property, to a point of sterilization and leave Bragg Creek actually unprotected. We all want to protect our communities, but the Auditor General's report is clear. Not only does this government not have a plan; it doesn't even have the tools and capacity to make a plan. To the minister: what different steps are you taking to ensure that this Springbank project won't end up like the costly projects in High River that are now being replaced?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, first this member is arguing that we aren't taking action, and then he's arguing that we shouldn't be taking on action for a project that makes the most sense based on all the studies and materials that we've been able to gather up to this point. This Premier has been very clear. It's time for action. All of the studies and feasibility studies and environmental assessments that have been done suggest the best plan to protect the communities in Calgary from flooding is the development of the Springbank reservoir, and we're moving forward with that project.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Gay-straight Alliances in Schools

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The Council of Catholic School Superintendents of Alberta's new LIFE Framework document references section 11.1 of the Alberta Human Rights Act. Now, this section was repealed by Bill 10, but the same wording is essentially found and repeated in both the School Act and the Education Act. Can the Minister of Education confirm that the notice and opt-out only apply to instructional materials, programs, and courses of study, not to student groups, including GSAs, held outside of class?

Mr. Dirks: The member opposite is correct.

Ms Blakeman: You know how much I love that.

All right. Back to the same minister. The concern is that the parental opt-out clause is written into this LIFE Framework, so if a GSA student group was requested or a student wanted to join, the parent would be notified. For some kids home is not a safe place, and now they would have been outed by the school to their parents. What is the Minister of Education's strategy to make sure that we don't end up with more homeless LGBT kids that have been kicked out or left their homes?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Dirks: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the member opposite for the question. Bill 10 is a bill that we all supported because we very much want to see children provided with a safe, caring, respectful, inclusive environment. Under Bill 10 there is no requirement for parental notification or consent for a student to participate in a GSA. These are voluntary student organizations.

Ms Blakeman: Good.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I believe that most people will obey the new law, but a few will try to get around it. What strategy does the Minister of Education have in place if school administrations lean on or, let's say, use very strong persuasion to students so that they won't start a GSA or call it a GSA? What's in place?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, I thank the member opposite for the question. Of course, we expect that our professional staff in schools will act professionally, in the best interest of children. They have the duty of care for those children, and I would anticipate that they would follow that duty-of-care expectation.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it has been reported that in two separate statutory declarations allegations have been made about the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, which include involvement in a $10,000 bribe. Now, while none of these allegations have been proven, this behavior could amount to a breach of the Criminal Code. My question is to the Premier. Given the serious nature of these allegations, will he ask the associate minister of his cabinet to step aside until . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I don't know where you're going with this, but if this is something to do with internal party matters, then it ought not be raised here. I don't know what it is.

Is there anyone on the front bench that wishes to comment? The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The leader of the fourth party has talked about some very serious allegations, but they are just that, allegations that have not been proven. It's not appropriate to be commenting based on speculation.

The Speaker: First supplemental, I guess.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, as the Solicitor General rightly notes, these allegations have not been proven, but they are very serious, and they're not at all dissimilar from allegations which are under investigation by the police in Ontario. As a result, good leadership would suggest that one not duck and dodge but, rather, that one take a cautious, judicious approach which recognizes the potential conflict of interest between a member of the cabinet and the best interests of the Alberta public. As such, will the Premier ask that member to step aside from cabinet?

The Speaker: I'm not sure where you're going with this, hon. member, but if it turns out that this is an internal party matter, then we'll have to have a discussion.

In the meantime is there someone who wishes to try and answer to whatever this allegation is? Try and connect it to government policy or government programs or government services if you would.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, there is no connection apparent here, and I would say the same answer from the first exchange.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, again I ask. Statutory declarations have been made that allege criminal behavior. Will the Solicitor General appoint a special prosecutor to be seized of this matter as it progresses and as resolution of these allegations progress?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, once again, I'm not aware of any investigation by any law enforcement agency, but even if there was, it would be improper for me to comment on a live investigation.

The Speaker: Neither am I.

Let us move on. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Sherwood Park.

Childhood Immunization

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday both the Education and Health ministers agreed that vaccines save lives. They're in good company because the World Health Organization, the Public Health Agency of Canada, and the chief medical officer of Alberta all agree. Clearly, there's no problem with the science, but when pressed to show real, progressive leadership, all this government said was that more consultation is needed. If the science is so clear, who exactly does the Minister of Education need to consult?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, I would simply say that there are no regulations or other requirements that Education imposes on school boards relating to compulsory vaccinations. The administration of vaccinations in schools is between Alberta Health in co-ordination with school boards.

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Health minister. It sounds to me like the PCs just want to kick the can down the road, perhaps until after an election, but we have an opportunity to require this now. The only thing lacking is real, progressive leadership for Martha and Henry's grandchildren. Will the minister assure us that our kids and grandkids will be protected by implementing a mandatory vaccination before school resumes in the fall?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. We urge parents to immunize their children. We think it's very important. Immunizations save lives. Again, it's very important. It protects our children, our communities, reduces the burden on our health system. But, again, we're not going to mandate it.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that children with compromised immune systems and others may be risking their lives by attending school, by visiting the park, or going elsewhere because the cadre of children is not vaccinated, how long will you allow unimmunized children to attend school before there's a public health crisis?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I just recently said how important we believe vaccinations are, how we encourage parents to do it, how the school board encourages parents to do it, but again it is a parental decision.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Education Funding

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents in Sherwood Park, especially parents with school-aged children, are concerned about the impact of the current fiscal situation on students. After all, despite the current fiscal challenge, a well-funded K to 12 education system is vital to ensuring the long-term success of our province and young Albertans. To the Minister of Education: what assurances can this government give to my constituents to show the commitment to ensuring our education system remains well funded in light of the current fiscal situation?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Dirks: I thank the member for the question and thank you, Mr. Speaker. We take our responsibility for supporting our students very seriously, and we're committed to funding education services in a fiscally prudent manner. In the 2014-15 school year we have invested nearly $38 million every day for students who are in our schools. In light of the current economic situation, obviously, difficult choices will have to be made by school boards and by government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how will this government address the need for our school boards to receive stable and predictable funding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dirks: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of this government's top priorities is education, of course, and preparing our children for the future. We will continue to invest in schools and in school facilities in a fiscally prudent manner. I have been tasked with implementing a plan for long-term, stable, predictable funding. School authorities have asked for stable funding, and we will do our best to deliver, of course, within available resources.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what steps is government taking to ensure that funding for education reaches those that matter the most, our students?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dirks: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We believe that school authorities, our school boards, are in the best position to allocate resources based on the student needs and local priorities. In fact, I don't know if members are aware of this, but almost 98 per cent of the current Education budget goes directly to school authorities, to school boards, to ensure that local priorities and student needs are being met.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, I understand you are going next in place of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Lethbridge-East.

Tailings Pond Dam Safety

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Auditor General issued a scathing report on dam safety in our province, telling us that the majority of coal mine tailings ponds have not been inspected by ESRD since the '90s and others not since the '80s. We also found out recently that the Obed mine dam that failed, spilling billions of litres of coal slurry from a pond of toxic sludge containing arsenic, mercury, and lead into the Athabasca River, wasn't even monitored or included on the registry of dams. If it looks like a dam, holds water like a dam, and has the risks of a dam . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Now let's hear the answer from the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, Albertans can be confident that their dams in this province are built, maintained, and operated in a safe manner that is aligned with international and national standards. I can tell you that Albertans can have confidence in the public safety of Alberta's dams; however, we know, in accordance with the Auditor General's report, that we must improve the transparency through more effective record keeping and reporting.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, thank heavens for the Auditor General. That's all I can say.

When we raised this matter in the House at the time to the minister, now the Minister of Municipal Affairs, she failed to disclose that this tailings pond's dam was not even on the department's registry and that there is no evidence of an inspection whatsoever. Given that this is either deception by omission or gross incompetence, will the minister tell us which it is?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member doesn't want to take my word for just how safe our dams are, I'd like to read a quote from an internationally recognized professor at the University of Alberta, Norbert Morgenstern, who is a geotechnical engineer. He has said in documents that he's produced that it's the view of the writer that "dam safety systems applied to the Alberta oil sands industry are the best in the world." And I'll table . . .

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, if the dams in Alberta are as safe as the minister is claiming, why did the Obed mine break, spilling billions of tonnes of toxic sludge into the Athabasca River and killing millions of fish? If they're so safe, Minister, why did that disaster occur?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, again, I will say that all of the dams in our province are kept to the highest national and international standards. The Auditor General certainly identified some areas where we can improve in reporting and monitoring these dams. But what I want to say with respect to this particular incident is that this is still under investigation by the Alberta Energy Regulator, and when the Alberta Energy Regulator is ready to put out the findings from its investigation, that will be made public.

The Speaker: Thank you.

AltaLink Transmission Line Consultation

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, Albertans live in or visit our pristine landscapes, some of the finest on this planet. These landscapes are invaluable for tourism dollars, particularly the eastern Livingstone Range, which is actually featured in Alberta's Remember to Breathe ads. The people at AltaLink, owned by Warren Buffett, have proposed 500 kV power lines from Pincher Creek to Crowsnest Pass. AltaLink has conducted consultations with some residents. Citizens north and south of highway 3 in that area are very upset . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

We'll have to hear from the appropriate minister to conclude this. I don't know whom that might be. Is it the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development?

Mr. Fawcett: Yes. You know, certainly, Mr. Speaker, AltaLink has requested information regarding the importance of our natural landscapes in this area, and we expect them to use this information in consideration of their selection. I want to remind all members of this Assembly that the actual siting of this facility is done by the Alberta Utilities Commission, and they will be the one that finalizes this decision.

The Speaker: The hon. member. First supplemental.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There might be something wrong with your thing again. I timed myself.

Anyway, to the Minister of ESRD: is your ministry aware of these consultations and the resulting issues?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, we're certainly aware of it, and all of the advice that our department has provided AltaLink is to make sure that what they're doing is consistent with the south Saskatchewan regional plan. This is why we have this plan in place. We've informed them of all of the key environmental goals such as protecting wildlife corridors and conservation areas such as the Livingstone Range wildland provincial park and maintaining extensive native grasslands and habitats. Again, Mr. Speaker, the AUC has jurisdiction, and they will be the ones that will make the final decision with AltaLink.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Culture and Tourism: if this abomination goes through, how will this development impact our ability to market our province's natural, untouched beauty as an attraction for millions of visitors?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Southwestern Alberta's breathtaking landscape draws many visitors, and it's important not only for our visitors but for our tourism industry and culture as well, as there's much filming going on there. AltaLink has contacted my ministry as a part of their consultation activities, and we will be providing feedback on this project. Stakeholders, including commercial trail rides and horse outfitting operations, are important to tourism. In this area we're encouraging them to work with AltaLink with regard to this project. The uncluttered . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We will check the clock and make sure it's working.

Let's move on to Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Full-day Kindergarten

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The final report of the early childhood mapping project concluded that more than half of Martha and Henry's grandchildren are lagging behind on at least one developmental milestone. There have been six recommendations, and this PC government has committed to following none of them. As I educated the minister on Tuesday, full-day kindergarten is a proven way to spur development. To the Minister of Education: why are you passing the buck on to school boards for the lack of full-day kindergarten when you know it was your government that promised the funding and has never delivered?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, we take very seriously this matter of early childhood developmental needs. That's why the early childhood mapping program is something that we supported, and I'm working with my minister colleague directly beside me on this particular matter to ensure that we're going to be able to continue that important early childhood mapping program. It provides us with a very important wealth of detail that helps us understand what the developmental needs of children in Alberta are.

Dr. Swann: Well, of course. We're understanding the developmental needs. We're just not acting on them, Mr. Minister.

Given that the mapping spent five years and $16 million gathering and analyzing data from 87,000 kindergarten-aged children, why is the minister shutting down the program at the end of the year and not acting on these issues? These are our grandkids.

Mr. Dirks: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not shutting down anything. In fact, as I indicated earlier, almost 98 per cent of our around $7 billion budget goes out directly to local school authorities. Those are school boards. They make the determinations about what the priority needs are in their particular areas. That amount of money I believe amounts to something like $38 million each day for local school boards to allocate in the way that is going to be in the best interests of those children.

Dr. Swann: Let me put it another way, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Education minister isn't funding full-day kindergarten or implementing the report's recommendation, why is this government giving back $11.6 billion more in tax breaks than any other province in the country instead of helping Martha and Henry's grandkids? What's the answer?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the greatest advantages of Alberta is our low tax regime. Albertans are hard-working individuals, and we don't think we should tax them to death like other provinces do. We are very proud of the tax system we have. We're about investment. We're about keeping Albertans working. In today's economic times the last thing we want to do is raise taxes on hard-working Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Landowner Property Rights

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we are all aware, property rights are a very important issue to rural Albertans. It is one of the most important issues in my own constituency. This government has made progress with the Respecting Property Rights Act. However, many Albertans are still troubled by the Land Stewardship Act. This question is to the Minister of ESRD. Will this bill be repealed?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, property rights is an important issue to all Albertans, and Albertans also understand that our population is on the rise and our land is not getting any bigger to accommodate this. The Alberta Land Stewardship Act is an important piece of legislation that allows us to manage our precious resources to the benefit of all users, so we do not have any plans to repeal this legislation, but I'm always happy to hear from any of the colleagues in this Legislature or all Albertans or landowners on ways that we can improve our legislation.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Does the government plan to amend the act to address the concerns that landowners have raised over various parts of it?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act allows for the government to plan wisely for the future needs of Albertans to help manage growth while balancing the rights of property owners. My ministry has no immediate plans to amend this legislation. I'd be happy to hear any concerns from Albertans regarding this legislation with respect to balancing these issues.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is the government planning on having additional legislation to follow up on the Respecting Property Rights Act?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, this government does respect private property rights, and our Premier has been one of the strongest advocates in this area over his career. The all-party committee, the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, has made recent recommendations on property rights, and I've asked my ministry to review these recommendations as they relate to my department.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Along the same vein – the minister is warmed up – when the Premier was running for leadership of his party, he said that property rights would be at the top of his priority list. Since then all landowners have seen is a trumped-up Bill 1 and not a whole lot else. Bill 36 continues to be a gross infringement on property rights, giving the government the hammer over lease agreements and landowner rights. The Premier personally signed a promise to review Bill 36 months ago, but there's still no progress. When can we expect this review to be completed?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, again, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act is an important tool as part of our integrated resource management system, in which we need to make sure that we're utilizing the landscapes, the airsheds, the watersheds and maintaining the biodiversity in this province so that we can get the social licence to develop our natural resources. This is an important tool that we continue to implement through the regional planning process, and this government is committed to that.

The Speaker: Supplemental, please.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Centralized planning hasn't worked in eastern Europe, and it won't work here. If the Premier doesn't fulfill his promise to review Bill 36, which concentrates power in the hands of the PC cabinet, limits rights to compensation for landowners, and blocks access to the courts for citizens, does he expect landowners to be okay with no review, no action, and no repeal of Bill 36?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, again, I need to reiterate the message, I guess. The hon. member isn't quite understanding this. The Alberta Land Stewardship Act is an incredibly important piece of legislation for developing the province's resources. It's the foundation on which our integrated resource management system is based, with which we can go out confidently to the world and say that we're responsible developers of our resources. That's vitally important to the economy, it's vitally important to our communities, and it's vitally important to Albertans, who care about protecting and enhancing our environment.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Final supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With draconian legislation like Bill 2 and Bill 24 still taking away the rights of landowners, can anyone expect this government to actually do meaningful work to protect property rights like repealing these bills, or will they just give more lip service and broken promises on the eve of an election?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, there is no one that has a better track record on protecting private property rights than our Premier. He has a track record and a reputation in this particular area, and there's no one that has a better record of understanding how to balance the development of our natural resources with the environmental consequences of that. This is what this piece of legislation tries to balance in the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, and it's a very important piece to be able to get access to markets for our resources.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

School Construction in Edmonton-South West

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I ran in the 2012 election to bring forward an agenda as a dad of two young daughters to get our area of Edmonton-South West caught up and proactive in building the schools we need today, not 10 years from now. I'm getting a bit nervous, though, as I see the oil prices dropping and the budget ahead, and I'm hoping that there's still money for our schools that we need. Even though we've accomplished securing a commitment for eight new schools in our area, we need to keep building more schools to continue to rapidly expand. My question to the Minister of Infrastructure: given where our province is headed financially, are we still expecting these new schools in Edmonton-South West to be finished on time?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are. The member has three schools in phase 2: Southbrook, Windermere Catholic, and Ambleside. All three of these are schools that have contracts awarded, and the contractors are mobilizing by March 30 of this month. In addition, this member has five schools in phase 3. Four of these were starter schools that are now going to be fully built schools by the end of 2016.

Mr. Jeneroux: I like that answer, Mr. Speaker.

Given that we're planning to open these schools on time, can the Minister of Education tell me if we're going to be able to afford to staff these schools with the resources we need to continue to offer the high quality of education our teachers in Alberta provide?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Infrastructure minister for the confirmation that these schools are going ahead. That's very good news. Our government is committed to investing in education so our children have every opportunity to reach their potential. That means investing in schools, providing the teachers that are needed, ensuring we have an outstanding curriculum and that we can do the very best for our students all while we are living within our means. We take very seriously our responsibility for students to provide the teachers that are necessary.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Jeneroux: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, given that we're seeing an average of 28 to 31 babies born a day – a day – at one of the nearest hospitals, which is a kindergarten class, can the Minister of Infrastructure continue to keep up with the rapid rate of growth happening in Edmonton-South West, particularly in our young kids?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have one of the largest school-build projects in Canadian history ongoing right now in Alberta. I think I previously said 108. It's actually 102 schools that will be opening in 2016; 102 schools will be opening in 2016. Those are schools that were announced in 2013. They'll be ready for 2016. The schools that were announced in 2011 were ready in 2014. We're going to keep pressing ahead to make sure that we have the infrastructure and the schools for our children.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Lethbridge-West.

Rural Health Review

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On September 23 of last year the Premier called for a rural health review to be done in 90 days. Back then the Premier said that we need practical solutions that can be implemented without delay. Well, it's been 170 days. Still no report and no solutions to the problems of longer wait times, doctor shortages, and a crumbling infrastructure. It's just another example of PC electioneering: promising big and underdelivering once the votes are counted. To the Health minister. It's been 170 days. Where's the report?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, what we indicated was that the report would be done in three phases of 90 days each. The first phase was done about December 15. The second and third phases are now complete. The report is just being finalized. It will be released early next week by statements, we think, by the Premier.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, the Premier promised this report, and, as the member opposite says, it's in 90-day increments. This government has not delivered on its word. Folks in my riding are calling this a broken trust. In a recent interview the chair of the health review said that he expected the full report to be released now. Minister, why?

Mr. Mandel: To the hon. member: I think I've answered that question. I think that the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster did an incredible job of putting this report together, and I think that it's a remarkable discussion with Albertans, information, heart-to-heart talks with people about what we need in rural Alberta. I think the results of the report and the information are quite fantastic. We look forward to implementing many of those decisions, and we're quite excited about it.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, this is absolutely frustrating. The priorities are simple. This does not require splitting the atom here. Maintaining and adding rural health physicians, sustaining and improving primary care, ending divorce by nursing home, fixing ambulance service, improving wait times. Why are you going to continue to delay this report?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we haven't delayed this report. It's going to be ready before we had estimated due to the great work of the committee, who worked tirelessly for the first 90 days and the next 60 days in order to get this done. They should be really recognized for the tremendous work that they've done to support Albertans.

The Speaker: Lethbridge-West, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Postsecondary Tuition Fees

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last December the provincial government approved tuition increases for 25 programs at postsecondary institutions in Alberta. Student groups say that these increases broke a promise to students. My questions are all to the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education. Given that Alberta already has the lowest participation rate in postsecondary education, doesn't the minister think that this is going to hurt accessibility in our province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our goal is not to have the cheapest education system in Alberta; our goal is to have the best education system in Alberta. Our aim is excellence. I approved 25 market modifiers in 2014. This decision allows the affected programs to deliver vital, competitive, and responsive programs that meet the needs of students. The market modifier program is going to generate approximately $21 million in additional revenue for the institutions. I am committed to working with all Campus Alberta partners to build a strong system.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 25 programs which were approved for hikes include engineering, commerce, economics, pharmacy, and many nursing programs, some seeing increases of 71 per cent. How are students supposed to afford an education and gain the skills they need to have a successful career when they face overnight hikes like these?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, graduates from Campus Alberta have just made the best investment of their lives. Recent market modifiers do not apply to students who are already enrolled in those programs.

I'm happy to tell the hon. members that our graduates are extremely successful at paying back any loans and finding jobs. Aside from the $408 million available for student loans, we invest $234 million in student aid supports. These supports include scholarships, bursaries, grants, and debt management programs.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, to the same minister. We know that student aid is usually student loans, and therefore students will be paying back this money that they have to borrow in order to attend these programs. How long will Alberta students be paying for these hikes?

The Speaker: Mr. Minister.

Mr. Scott: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Our system has served Alberta learners extremely well, and 90 per cent of Albertans with government student loans pay them back on schedule. Our most recent graduate survey data shows a 94 per cent employment rate for graduates, and those grads who received government student loans had an average of $20,000 owed. Graduates in the survey reported a mean annual income of $60,300. We still have work to do, but we are well on our way. I invite the hon. member to help us build a Campus Alberta that is sustainable, accessible, and achieves excellence.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview in place of Edmonton-Calder, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

School Construction Reporting

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the Infrastructure minister presented an update on school construction around the province, school boards have come forward claiming the information on nearly a dozen schools is inaccurate. After defending this report for three days, the government is now saying that this misinformation is the fault of a couple of typos. To the Minister of Infrastructure: how can you claim that almost a dozen inaccurate dates are simply misprints?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, I know of one specific case in Red Deer where in one instance a school board has asked that a school project be delayed so that they can have consultation with local communities to make sure that the school is a facility that the entire community can use. We'll listen to the local authority, and instead of that school being ready by 2016, it will be ready in 2017.

In another case, Mr. Speaker, we made a mistake and said that construction would start in December 2015 when, in fact, construction has actually already started.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Bilous: Empty fields.

Given that based on what school boards are reporting, there are at least 11 mistakes that this PC government is attributing to typos and given that these 11 delayed schools mean families once again have to bear the burden of your incompetence, will the government admit that it has failed Alberta families, students, and teachers by once again overpromising and underdelivering?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member just went from 12 to 11, and if he has 11 examples, I would be more than happy to look into every single one of them because the fact remains that we want to be very open and transparent about this process. So if there's a mistake, we will look at it. We'll update it so that every single Alberta parent out there can take a look at their project, know when it's going to be ready so that they can plan their lives accordingly. This is critically important for us. We take it very seriously. And 102 schools will be opening in 2016, as committed to.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Final supplemental.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll hold you to that, Minister.

Given that yesterday the Education minister said that construction is a big word by implying a lot of different things are part of construction, what else do you mean by construction: stapling news releases together, constructing sentences inflating your own record on school construction, constructing a narrative to get yourself re-elected, or is it anything besides building a school?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What construction does mean is that when you award a contract, the specific general contractor has to do a few things, first of which is to make sure that their subcontractors are all lined up. That's a very important piece. The second thing, which is critically important, is to make sure the ground is actually thawed so they can start construction, a pretty important point. That's something that is critical so that there are not additional costs to make sure that you have heating and so on when you're pouring a foundation. These are all very important parts, very important pieces . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

I must recognize the next member, and it will be Calgary-Glenmore.

PDD Safety Standards

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The PDD safety standards have been designed to ensure safe-living homes for community members. Unfortunately, with the enforcement of standard 8, inspectors from fire, safety, and health are creating distress. To the Minister of Human Services: how will the government ensure that service providers and their clients are not unfairly suffering because of this standard?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government has a responsibility for the safety of our most vulnerable, and we will not compromise on that. These laws apply universally to all landlord and tenant settings, and these standards are not new. We've been working with the service providers for the past two years, so now they are aware that standard 8 will require inspections.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister. I appreciate the process you're going through. At the same time I'm hearing reports that inspectors are telling family members they have to move where the cat dish is placed in the home. Again to the minister: why is the implementation of this policy forcing people to live in homes that look and feel like institutional settings?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we cannot compromise on the safety of our most vulnerable. We know that these compliances must take place. Often some of the required changes are as simple as putting in a fire extinguisher. Again, we want to work with the agencies to resolve issues. If agencies are not able to meet the deadline, we're happy to talk with them, and they can apply for an extension.

Ms L. Johnson: I appreciate that information, Madam Minister.

Again, with respect, the standard is causing some landlords to consider evicting these vulnerable individuals and forcing them out of their homes. To the hon. minister: will your department put an end to this standard before more damage is done?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we do not take chances with the safety of our vulnerable. As a matter of fact, at this point today 82 per cent of the homes have already been inspected at the various levels across Alberta. Again, we want to work with the agencies. If they need an extension, need to speak with us, we're happy to work with them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Disaster Recovery Program Claims

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been more than 18 months since flood waters devastated communities across southern regions of our province. Many Albertans faced the worst as they lost everything and struggled for months as they tried to rebuild their lives. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: can you tell me why nearly two years since this disaster 2,000 Albertans are still waiting for financial assessment from the DRP program and why they are still out of their homes?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank this member for his excellent question. I want to say how committed we are as a government to help these people get back into their homes. The largest natural disaster that we've had in Canadian history, and we're working hard to complete these files. We have completed more than 80 per cent of the files. There were 10,500 files that were there. We've completed more than 80 per cent of them. Our goal will be that until we're completely finished, we will be there to help all of those files be completed. We've provided over $100 million to Albertans to help rebuild and remediate their homes.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. member. First supplemental.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the process for applying for financial assistance to the DRP is wrought with confusing paperwork, why are you making it so difficult on those Albertans who have already been through so much?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, again a great question by the hon. member. Since our Premier has come here and I've come to the Ministry of Municipal Affairs, we've done a couple of things. One, with the open files we completed all of the outstanding appeals by December 2014, as we said we would, by tripling the staff. Since then, with the Premier and the hon. Member for Highwood, we also added 15 more caseworkers to close the files that are open. We've committed to closing those by June of this year.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Final supplemental.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what are you doing to ensure those Albertans with open files are given the funding they are eligible for so that they can rebuild and move on once and for all?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, when we announced in High River, with the Premier and the hon. Member for Highwood, the addition of 15 more caseworkers, we also announced that we are advancing 90 per cent of the eligible expenses to help fast-track payments for the complex cases. This is making sure that we clear up these cases and we help these poor people that were devastated by this flood.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. That concludes Oral Question Period.

Just in response to the question posed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, your microphone was cut off when I stood up at the 35-second mark. The clock is working just fine. We know that you continued to speak, and I don't know if Hansard picked that up or not. But just to answer that.

Number two, as a result of the reasonably short questions and answers from some of you, we were able to get 108 questions and answers on the record today. So well done to all of you.

Now, in 30 seconds we will proceed with the continuation of Members' Statements, and we'll hear from Calgary-Fort, Banff-Cochrane, and Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: I show the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort going next and then Banff-Cochrane.

Retrospective by the Member for Calgary-Fort

Mr. Cao: Merci, M. le Président. It's known that I will not be returning to the Legislature following the next election. It has been an exciting 18 years. I feel honoured to have had the opportunity to serve the people across Alberta and the wonderful people of the Calgary-Fort constituency and to have been at many places in our great province. I'm grateful to have met and worked with many community organizations and the great people in my political association.

The work of 18 years cannot be said in a few sentences – it's in volumes of the Hansard report – but I can briefly say that I have worked with five Premiers. Memorable moments are many. Just to name a few: celebrating Alberta's centennial with Alberta's official song, cutting Alberta's credit card to symbolize Alberta being debt free, initiating the naming of Alberta's veterans highway, parental maternity leave increase, employment standards applied for domestic workers, removing the wage differential of youth, and, particularly, medical benefits for severely handicapped people. Another memorable time was being elected by my peers, by you, to serve you as Deputy Speaker in 2008 to 2012.

My thanks go to all my office assistants, all LAO staff.

I would like to thank my family for motivation: my wife, Kim; sons William, Winston, Ulysses; daughters-in-law Sarah, Mimi; and grandchildren Dylan, Maxwell, and one on the way.

I thank all members of this Assembly, past and present, for sharing time and space with me.

To the media: thank you for leaving me alone, with a low profile, to serve constituents for 18 years.

This Cao-boy will be riding to a new horizon. I wish everyone all the best in yours.

From the bottom of my improved heart, thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Well said.

Let us move on to the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Action for Agriculture

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Action for Agriculture was established in 1990 by concerned ranchers and farmers in southern Alberta. At the time they felt there was a need for a voice for agricultural working landscapes as urban demands for land use and recreation expanded. As it turns out, 25 years later the need for that voice to be heard is greater than ever.

Over the years Action for Agriculture has educated and lobbied for the responsible management of our watersheds, and they have promoted the understanding that land is a resource and not a commodity to be simply bargained away. The continued loss of productive agricultural land to other uses is a threat to all Albertans as the ecological goods and services of which we are all the benefactors are at risk of being severely impacted by current land-use decisions and practices.

Currently Action for Agriculture is focusing its efforts on methods to allow landowners to preserve their lands as agricultural in perpetuity and, in doing so, to slow down the fragmentation and conversion of agricultural lands so that future generations can benefit from these working landscapes.

One tool available to landowners to achieve this is conservation easements. Conservation easements are voluntary restrictions placed on land that allow for the protection, conservation, and enhancement of agricultural land. However, current legislation in Alberta, specifically the land trust grant program, does not recognize cultivated lands appropriately, and the use of easements as a preservation tool is very limited because of this.

Mr. Harvey Buckley, who is the current chair of Action for Agriculture, and myself recently met with the Minister of ESRD and in July with representatives from Alberta Agriculture to outline the issues surrounding the use of easements on cultivated lands, Mr. Speaker, and we'd like to thank them very much for their consideration.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Members' Statements

The Speaker: Before I recognize the next speaker, hon. members, let me say this. With respect to today's rotation regarding members' statements, today is day 18, I believe, but the sixth spot, which we're about to have filled, was ceded by one member to another. The Speaker has no objection to that happening, provided that there is that kind of reciprocity of mutual understanding. So that is why you will now hear from the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills instead of someone else.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. member, the floor is yours.

Retrospective by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills

Mr. Saskiw: I'd like to thank the Member for Medicine Hat for that.

For the last three years I've had the great privilege of representing the constituents of Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. They entrusted me to work hard on their behalf, and I've tried every day to live up to their expectations and to advocate for their priorities. I hope I served them with the tenacity, integrity, and respect for my constituents that all Albertans rightfully demand from their MLAs. I defended the values of my constituents even when it wasn't the popular thing to do, when it wasn't the easy thing to do. I did it because it was the right thing to do. That's why our constituents send us here: to make the right decisions, not to take the easy way out. I know you all came here for the right reasons. I hope you stay focused on why you are here and that you aren't afraid to make the tough decisions that need to be made.

It has become clear that this Premier is going to call an election a year early. For the sake of future generations I hope this Premier and those who follow will keep taxes low and will keep the flat-tax rate, Alberta's primary competitive advantage, and will streamline government to get spending under control, now and always. I hope you will let yourselves be guided by the common sense of the common people and that the Premier will lead a renewal of faith in everyday Albertans in their abilities to make the best decisions for themselves, their families, and communities.

When the Legislature resumes later this year, my constituents will have elected a new MLA. I will not seek re-election. This has been the honour of a lifetime. I've enjoyed the experience immensely, and I will forever value new, forged friendships. I have not made this decision lightly, and it is with mixed emotions that I stand here today. I look forward to returning to the private sector, to spending time with my family, and to the opportunities that lie ahead.

Thank you to my constituents for their trust and confidence, thank you to my colleagues for their passionate and sometimes even entertaining debate in the House, and thank you, most of all, to my family and friends for your dedication, love, and support. Thank you, all. God bless, and good luck. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Good words.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: I think we have one petition I may have overlooked here. Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, were you trying to catch my eye with a petition?

Ms Fenske: Yes.

The Speaker: Let us go to that quickly, then.

Ms Fenske: Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition that was put together by Ruby Kassian. It asks that the government repeal the Daylight Saving Time Act. These signatures were collected throughout the region of northeast Alberta.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Fawcett: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a dam integrity briefing note prepared by the Alberta Chamber of Resources. In this document there is a quotation from Dr. Norbert Morgenstern, whom I referred to in a question from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. He is an internationally recognized authority in the field of geotechnical engineering and a professor at the University of Alberta and a member of the Alberta Order of Excellence. Dr. Morgenstern states that it is his view that dam safety applied in the Alberta oil sands industry is the best in the world.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, or someone, Edmonton-Centre perhaps, on behalf of?

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have tablings on behalf of the leader of the Liberal opposition. The first one is from the University of Calgary's Faculty of Law on developments in Alberta law on farmworkers. They make the claims of farmworkers for legislative protections even stronger, refuting the argument of the Premier that we need more research and debate before taking action on unconstitutional exclusions. This is specific to constitutional decisions and rights of farmworkers.

The next are all on vaccines. Comparison of Effects of Diseases and Vaccines, prepared by and available online from the Public Health Agency of Canada.

An opinion from the Calgary Herald titled Vaccine Opponents Risk Return to a Dark Age, published February 12, 2015, encourages parents to protect their kids with vaccinations.

An article from the Globe and Mail published November 5, 2013, titled Officials Urge Immunization After Measles Outbreak in Alberta.

The second last, Mr. Speaker, an article from the Metro news published February 16, 2015, titled Alberta's Unlikely to Hit Long-term Targets for Child Vaccination Rates. So the status quo is clearly not working.

Finally – and a little bit of a surprise – from the C.D. Howe Institute, commentary 421, A Shot in the Arm: How to Improve Vaccination Policy in Canada. It calls on Alberta to mandate vaccinations for school entry.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a budget backgrounder produced by the Alberta Federation of Labour that shows government provided, in their view, inflated figures of Alberta's per capita spending. The report finds that the figures are inflated as a result of the government including flood repair money in its calculations in addition to comparing Alberta's spending to the Canadian average rather than specific provincial averages.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any other tablings? Edmonton-Centre, you have one more tabling?

Ms Blakeman: I'm sorry. I have my own tablings. It looks like I've got three. The first is a tabling from Judy Semeniuk, living in Alberta, directed towards the Premier. She is a regular voter and concerned taxpayer and is expressing her concerns with the cuts in the Klein era, which were never reinstated, and how the government is proceeding without consulting taxpayers.

Secondly, from Niko Palmer an e-mail – he also lives in Edmonton – writing about the current crisis in maternity care. I believe he's talking about pregnant women finding it very difficult to find primary caregivers, particularly if they're in remote or rural areas.

Finally, Elena Renderos, also from Edmonton, is writing also on maternity care in Edmonton with concerns about difficulties having consistency in finding care for pregnant women and a critical shortage of obstetricians, fewer family doctors providing maternity care, and the demand on midwives far exceeding the number of registered midwives.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there were no points of order today and no points of privilege, so I believe that right at the stroke of nearly 3 o'clock we can move on to Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 17

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2015

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 17, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2015.

The supplementary amounts provided by this bill reflect the fiscal picture outlined in the third-quarter fiscal update released on February 24. These amounts are necessary for the government to conduct business and fulfill its commitments for the current fiscal year. The additional amounts mainly relate to support for the municipal sustainability initiative and the Alberta community partnership; support for drugs and supplementary health benefits, collective bargaining costs in Alberta Health Services, and payment to physicians; support for capital maintenance and renewal to accelerate school construction and modernization projects; provide emergency funding for firefighting in forest protection areas, mountain pine beetle mitigation; support for municipal disaster and flood controls, mitigation, and ongoing recovery efforts.

I respectfully urge my colleagues in this House to support the bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Do I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre going next? Okay. Thank you. Followed by, I think, Edmonton-Calder, and then we'll proceed after that. Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: Looks like a plan, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much for allowing me to stand and speak in second reading on Bill 17, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2015. Of course, this is the bill stage of the estimates that we debated yesterday afternoon and yesterday evening. Unfortunately, I was not able to return in the evening, so there are a few comments that I would like to offer. It's my fault that I wasn't able to come back, and therefore I can't question and receive answers for the questions that I have.

One of the concerns is around the funding for legal aid, which did appear in the supplementary supply and appears here on page 3 of Bill 17 in the amount of $16,739,000. Now, I believe there is almost $11.36 million for the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees and management compensation agreements. I'm going to assume that that is staff in the department that was entitled, and I think that also included the one-time lump sum that was paid out to employees as part of the agreement but kind of in lieu of an actual percentage raise. I mean, clearly, that shows up in a number of the departments that had applied for supplementary supply estimates, and that's – I was going to say "as it should be." Ideally, we would know that in advance and it would already be part of the budget, but when those settlements come a little after the fact, indeed, I'm glad the government found the money because otherwise our people would not be paid.

Sorry; just while I'm at that, Mr. Speaker. I can't remember who said it over there, but the government has slipped into a habit of giving one side only of the story. And, tsk tsk, I'm going to give you the example so you don't need to crinkle your eyebrows at me. For example, there was much ballyhoo about how our public-sector employees are paid the most or the highest amount in Canada. Oh, my goodness. Huff puff. Well, that only makes sense, and the information that wasn't given was that our private sector also is up in that league. They are on the same level, as a matter of fact, and that tells us that the issue is not an overpayment to public-sector employees. What it is is a roaring, great economy for Alberta, in that everybody is doing really well.

So to just give half of that and to make it sound like the public-sector people were being grossly overpaid is a little sneaky. No; it's really sneaky. And that has become more regular than I would like to see it coming out of Public Affairs around government. So stop doing that because I'm on to you. Now, I know that will change your behaviour. Oh, for sure. But I just thought I'd tell you that I noticed.

Okay. Under supplementary supply is the $5.5 million for Legal Aid Alberta, which was a bit of an arm wrestle, as I saw it, with the Minister of Justice, who was trying to cut costs, but in doing so – the minister has a contract with Legal Aid Alberta, and they have to perform certain tasks, certain duties as a result of that contract. The minister puts in money toward Legal Aid Alberta as does the federal government. But we have an increasing number of people who are in conflict with the law and are also fairly low income, so they're looking for assistance from Legal Aid.

I just want to underline how important that is for women. You know, I talk a lot about equality and seeking and achieving legal equality, social justice equality, and economic equality, and legal aid is very important for women. I wish it had a larger family law section because that's usually where women are most in need of their services, but I won't belabour that at this time.

Now, what was happening was that there's such a thing as a Rowbotham application – I hope I said that properly, Mr. Speaker; I think I did – in which an application can be made to the courts using that argument that says, in essence, that this person really needs to have legal representation and shouldn't be here self-represented. And the judge can say: "Righty-ho. I agree. Go get them a lawyer." In this case the money for the lawyer that's been ordered by the judge is then paid by the Minister of Justice out of his department's budget.

There was such limitation upon the money that was being granted from both the provincial and federal governments to Legal Aid Alberta that they'd had to revise their application criteria downward. They'd actually reached the point, much to their distress, where an individual who was getting AISH, assured income for the severely handicapped, was considered too high income to be eligible for legal aid, which is pretty bizarre and looked terrible when it hit the news. In fact, 5 and a half million dollars was granted to Legal Aid. The minister did come up with the money within about a month, I think, which I'm sure they would have liked sooner, but I was glad to see that it happened in a month.

But what we don't know is where we are going forward. We continue to have I think I was told the other day five to six more of these Rowbotham applications every week, which is a much more expensive way to fund lawyers than the reduced rate that they are eligible to receive under legal aid. So you have an arrangement under legal aid where all lawyers are expected to spend a certain amount of time performing legal aid cases. They get paid at a much lower rate – if you want to look at it, a deal for Alberta taxpayers – but are being paid at the higher rate that is resulting from a judge's order in council, much more expensive.

I don't want to see this again in supplementary supply, so I'm hoping that there is adequate funding and that the minister is quick like a bunny to let Legal Aid know and to sign their operating budget. Last year I think there was a delay where that wasn't signed until June, which is, you know, kind of unfair, Mr. Speaker. They're trying to run a budget, and they haven't managed to get the minister to actually sign off on it, so that places them in a very difficult situation. I hope that the minister is able this year to both supply adequate funding so that we're not getting all of these challenges and to approve their budget in enough time that they can make good use of it throughout the entire year. Those are my comments on the Justice section.

The other area that generated a lot of discussion – I was trying to zoom through the Blues from last night so that I didn't ask questions again, and I do apologize if I didn't read this properly and I repeat a question. I apologize for that. But one of the areas that was generating a lot of discussion was under Environment and around, if I'm remembering correctly, buying out the land leases. The situation there is that when the – I'm not going to remember the full name of it: something, something Athabasca, lower Athabasca ...

An Hon. Member: Regional plan.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you.

... regional plan was finalized, there was certain land that was expected to be brought back into the fold, so to speak, into public land, so there was a certain amount of that that was spent – oh, no. Sorry. I might totally be in the wrong place here. Yeah. Wrong place.

This was the one that had the Kananaskis golf course. Oh, yes. I mean, that looks bad, and it's also kind of curious as to why money would be spent to restore the Kananaskis golf course, which has always had a bit of – what's the word? – scandal attached to it. At one point they imported special silica sand from somewhere – I don't know where – exotic in the world in order to use that sand in their sand traps, and it garnered the then government a good deal of unwanted attention for spending this extra money on this super sand to put in a golf course. Yet here we are: $8 million to maintain the operational infrastructure and grounds at the Kananaskis golf course during the rehab – in other words, they're paying everybody to keep going even though they don't have a golf course to keep going on – plus $1,170,000 for capital for the Kananaskis golf course. That's a lot of money.

I read in one part that it was because it was flood recovery, and that's why they were doing it now. But I do question that allocation of resources when we don't have enough money to do some of the things we'd like to do with children or in Education or in Municipal Affairs, yet we're laying out some serious cash here on a golf course. I hope that doesn't happen again. I am very curious about the government's defence that they did it because the golf course was included under flood infrastructure because it's not here. The line above it actually is talking about implementation of flood infrastructure recovery measures, so I'm kind of curious about the government using that as their reason that the golf course got that amount of money.

There is quite a bit of money in Environment and Sustainable Resource Development around the flood hazard identification program, flood infrastructure recovery measures, and then the usual wildfires. Then there's mitigation programs to build berms, recovery erosion controls, the Springbank off-stream reservoir, and watershed resiliency and restoration, which is around drought and water and the province's watersheds.

My concern around this is that you can't fool with Mother Nature, and I think that the choice has been made to protect some peopled land, particularly in the Okotoks and High River area, by diverting rivers and trying to build reservoirs to divert water into. Boy, you've got to be careful with that. This just happened in a tremendous hurry. So I'm looking for some reassurance from the government that there were, you know, appropriate consultations with some pretty slam-dunk, impressive scientists because I am quite concerned that we will end up implementing a number of things here that will cost us very dearly in the future in that we have tried to fool Mother Nature and she will get us for it, as often happens. We need to be doing this right the first time rather than scrambling after the fact. So I'm looking for a bit of reassurance around that, please.

I think it was fairly clear what the money in Health was being spent for. Human Services was clear enough for me. Thank you. Transportation was fine, but I did wonder in Transportation why there are 119 vacancies, which was part of the money that was talked about by the Minister of Transportation.

Oh, my goodness, it's a bit thin over there.

He said that some of the money that was saved was saved from not filling 119 vacancies.

Some Hon. Members: Look behind you, Laurie.

Mr. Campbell: It's pretty thin over there, too.

Ms Blakeman: Fair enough. All right, then. Yeah. Everybody is out in the fabulous constituency.

I'm wondering why you would not be filling those vacancies. I know it's one way of saving money, but, you know, we are supposed to be budgeting to provide the programs and services, and we need people to do those. If we don't fill the vacancies, that work is not being done, and eventually that costs us quite a lot, as we learned from the deferred maintenance during the Klein years.

Those were some of the issues that I wanted to raise in second reading of Bill 17, which is the supplementary supply act, that the government is looking to pass through over the next couple of days. Hopefully, I can get some answers once we get into Committee of Supply, but I appreciate the opportunity to put my comments on the record.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, after whom 29(2)(a) will be available.

Mr. Eggen: On 29(2)(a)?

The Speaker: After you, 29(2)(a).

Mr. Eggen: Right. Okay. Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak on second reading of Bill 17. I'm just reminded that this is the extension of the estimates from yesterday, so I just had a number of significant and some smaller issues to highlight around the supplementary supply.

Now, it's not unfair to say that sometimes supplementary supply can be quite a significant amount of money, involving many different ministries, depending upon when it occurs. Because we are moving into an electoral period, I think that perhaps the requirement of supplementary supply is somehow made larger. It can be unfortunate in some circumstances because, of course, we're talking about ongoing funding and choices that we make for each ministry. If somehow things do get cut short, I just want to make sure that they stay on the table after the election period does see itself through.

Regardless of who forms the next government in regard to the postelection period, I think it's very important for us to remind ourselves that we need to provide ongoing, stable, long-term funding for essential core services such as health care, education, and infrastructure and that the funding can be counted on, not just over a period of weeks or months but over a period of years, so that we can make the necessary decisions to not just deliver health care and education, for example, but to actually build capacity in both of those areas as well.

Now, what we've seen sort of thematically are some problems in regard to the Health budget specifically and then some problems that we've identified in regard to the infrastructure spending for both health care and for education as well.

First, health care. Although it seems as though – I mean, everything in health care globally is quite large numbers because, of course, it is a very important part of our overall budget. But what we are identifying here is that we didn't spend some of the money that we did budget for last year. You know, in some ways you end up seeing a cut by omission somehow when we actually did provide for budget allocations around pharmacy and for other collective agreements around Alberta Health Services. So there's no service being provided necessarily, but then the money is not being spent as well. It's important for us to identify that there are effective cuts taking place in health care already, even before this budget that we are anticipating here on the 26th of March, and they're having real effects on the capacity for health care professionals and staff, and so on, to deliver the health care that we require.

Also, you know, it can't be understated, the irony that does exist in decisions that the government has made around this supplementary supply in light of cuts and delays that we've already seen for projects that were very essential and important for all Albertans. One that comes to mind straightaway for me is the Tom Baker cancer centre. It's a facility that is not in keeping with the population of not just Calgary but the whole surrounding hinterland that the Tom Baker supplies and services. We know that the expansion and the modernization of that facility has been anticipated for many years. I just find it ironic that we would still have that on the table when we are making other supplementary supply decisions here in this bill that direct money to what I would suggest is maybe not quite as essential and pressing as, let's say, developing the Tom Baker cancer centre.

Usually I don't look at some specific things, but, I mean, it just can't be avoided, seeing how certain infrastructure choices are being made here in this supplementary supply. Maybe, you know, it's symbolic, but at the same time I really question the choice to put supplementary supply money into the Kananaskis golf course, in fact, not just for flood mitigation or for flood reconstruction, but I see – maybe I'm not reading it right – money for operation of the Kananaskis resort as well. I mean, maybe one does not equal the other, but choices do reflect on the intention and the priorities of individuals sometimes. When I look at the Tom Baker cancer centre and the absolute necessity of moving forward on that, I just am feeling a bit conflicted on that particular issue.

Back to health care. There are a number of spending areas within the existing budget that I think we could have sharpened up considerably. You know, the whole emergency wait time initiative issue, I think, is something that is lingering and not being addressed in the most direct way possible. We haven't seen the numbers actually being reduced in a significant way for emergency wait times around the province. I get updates very regularly from different emergencies around the province saying just how overcapacity they are at any given time. For us to look at supplementary supply and not perhaps target funding more specifically, that could help to mitigate the overuse of emergency rooms across the province, from the Misericordia to the Foothills, I think, is something that we could have done better on as well.

The whole issue around, of course, the Child and Youth Advocate. Certainly, it's important to have that extra funding, but we were just, I think, all very conflicted in the Legislative Offices Committee meeting in regard to the cuts that seemed to be imposed by this government on the Child and Youth Advocate. We knew that the relatively modest funding increases that the Child and Youth Advocate required were a reflection of legislation that was directing that office to expand its services. Especially, you know, considered in light of more disclosures of child deaths in care, that we saw here in these last couple of days, it certainly underscores the importance of investing in the Child and Youth Advocate to have the independent investigative capacity of that office expanded, not for the sake of just building a bigger bureaucracy but for trying to solve a systemic problem we have with children in care and the level of protection that we can afford children in care. Again, you can see in supplementary supply the reflective lower number that the advocate was asking for during their budget considerations in Legislative Offices. Again, it just reminds me of a real sore spot that will continue to linger until we start to make more reasonable, logical decisions around funding independent offices of the Legislature.

Again by omission, the choice of cutting the Auditor General's funding: we should remind ourselves of that during the supplementary supply discussion because again we see, clear as day, with the Auditor General's report that we saw yesterday, that a dollar invested in the Auditor General is an incredible investment for saving money and resources down the road each and every time they do their job. Certainly, I know just how modest and careful they are with their budgets. Certainly, we should have supplemented their capacity to what they had required in their budget discussions because, of course, we know that money is tight, and when money is tight, it redoubles the responsibility we have to audit and account for those monies in an independent sort of way.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, in regard to the supplementary supply the other issue I wanted to just bring up is around legal aid. I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre did a good job of reviewing the problem that we have in legal aid. Again, I would suggest that it's an investment for saving money in the legal system down the road. We know the backlogs that we experience in our justice system, and I know that the minister responsible has been looking for ways to expedite some cases and has legislation before the House in that regard. But I would venture to say that a prudent investment in legal aid is the best bang for your buck to streamline the legal process and to help expedite the dispensation of justice in this province. For us to somehow compromise that, I think, is us as a legislative body compounding a problem that we should be in fact trying to solve.

Those are my comments, Mr. Speaker, in regard to supplementary supply, and I thank you for the opportunity to speak. Thanks.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

I don't see anyone rising, so we'll move on to Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 17, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act. I guess, just generally speaking, some of the main points are that when you look at these documents, it appears that overall the government just doesn't have a handle on its spending. I don't think that should come as a surprise to any members of this Assembly. In fact, when the current Premier was travelling across the province, I think he was pretty shocked and astonished at how spending had escalated without any fiscal constraints. You know, it appears as well that they always do, throughout the years, underestimate certain costs such as the cost for wildfires and other types of emergencies. You'd think at this point in time that you'd have a more accurate number, that it wouldn't be out by such a large percentage year after year.

A couple of main points to consider when you look at these numbers: the fact that there has been no attempt to cut what most Albertans, I think, would understand as wasteful spending. One of these is, of course, the carbon capture and storage. Two billion dollars has been wasted since this program was announced by the then Premier Stelmach, and, of course, we thought this was going to be changed, but now that program has been extended by five years, to the year 2020. [some applause] Which ones clapped on that one? You know, this has been experimental technology that hasn't proven that it would actually reduce any emissions. It's corporate subsidies. We feel that industry with the proper incentives could go ahead and make sure that their practices are the best practices throughout Canada and North America. But this carbon capture has been a complete, dismal failure.

We're going to see more of this in the years to come because some of the financial statements and the contracts that went into this are going to be uncovered. It takes time to do FOIPs, but some of the companies that were awarded these contracts had deep connections and tentacles throughout the whole current government, or PC Party, apparatus. I look forward to seeing what those documents reveal.

But on the surface of it, it just appears that, you know, when a private entity like Shell states that this technology is simply not feasible economically, you would have thought the government would have got the hint and cancelled it. In fact, this was a complete flip-flop. I know that during the leadership race the current Premier indicated that this technology was, to my understanding, a waste, but instead they decided to extend the program by five years, to 2020. I would be remiss if I didn't say that this was a dismal waste of money.

The second key component that you can find throughout the supplementary estimates is the federal building, and this, of course, is the extravagant building for MLAs and bureaucrats. The price tag is roughly $400 million, and I don't think that includes the cost of, or the value, I guess, of the transferred land that went into this deal. It includes things like a million dollar sky palace. It includes a garden rooftop – it must be just beautiful – an 80-person movie theatre, I think eight shades or five shades of marble.

An Hon. Member: Fifty shades.

Mr. Saskiw: There could be more. There could be more. That will make for some interesting times in that building with that happening.

You know, this is one of these extravagant things. When you're looking at schools or other dilapidating infrastructure, you'd think that a brand new MLA office building would be the last thing on a priority list. Of course, it went over budget, I think by about $100 million, give or take a few million. This is one of the things that we in the Wildrose suggested could be one of the first assets that the government divests itself of to help balance the budget. Assuming they put 400 million bucks into this building, they got the land for free, you would assume that you could get that same price or roughly the same price on that building. Why not sell that building and put those funds towards the impending fiscal mess and perhaps get closer to balancing the books?

I don't think anyone in their right mind could think that at a time where oil prices are where they're at there is a need for a brand new, fancy federal building. I know the minister at the time called it the crown jewel of the government. I think those words have come back to haunt him. I think that Albertans are going to look at that during the election period and say: well, that's one example of a waste of money that has been perpetrated on taxpayers.

The other aspect, when you look at the supply estimates, is the costs that are being paid out to the cancellation of certain oil sands leases in the north. Of course, this is under the lower Athabasca regional plan, whereby the government unilaterally cancelled leases, property rights, of oil sands companies. I guess the question is: if the government can come and unilaterally cancel oil sands leases, those property rights, what chance does a farmer, a landowner have? Of course, the lower Athabasca regional plan is the first of a series of regional plans. The subsequent plans are more than likely going to trample on even more rights. A lot of the land up north was Crown land, and of course the issues aren't as severe with those facts in hand.

The question that I have for the government is: how much money has gone for these cancelled leases, and who calculated the compensation for the cancellation of leases, and who receives what funds? The fact is that under the law there was no legal right to provide compensation, so the government must have come up with some scenario or formula to compensate the oil sands companies that lost their leases. I think that Alberta taxpayers have a right to know who is receiving those monies, what it's being received for. Is this setting a precedent? When future regional plans are developed and landowners lose their rights or companies lose their property rights, what will the compensation be to them? Under the law there is no right to compensation, so the government did this, apparently, out of their goodwill or to pacify some of these companies that invested substantial amounts of money in the north, which, of course, generates the vast majority of the revenue in this province. What is going to happen to those smaller landowners when their property rights are trampled? There's no right to compensation, so what formula is going to be used by the government to provide that, or is no formula going to be used at all?

The other aspect that's been touched upon by other members of this Assembly was the refurbishing of a golf course and the operation of it. Of course, governments are never good at operating businesses. I'm sure they wouldn't be good at operating things like golf courses. My question is, you know: during a time of apparent economic downturn why would the government expend tax dollars on a golf course? The dollars that you're looking at, maintaining the infrastructure and grounds of the golf course, are $8 million. Obviously, if you ask taxpayers what the priority would be – would it be a school, or would it be health care infrastructure or a golf course? – I think maybe with the exception of some avid golfers they would argue that the golf course would not be on the priority list. You know, if you look at other jurisdictions, it's only in Alberta where they would sink this much money into a golf course.

Again, you look throughout the document. Aboriginal Relations: there's a $5.6 million promise for housing on the Lubicon Lake band. Of course, we'd want more details on this. Why was there this deficiency in the first place, and what exactly are the projects that are going to be funded? The government hasn't really delineated how those funds are going to be allocated and for what projects.

The $3 million for critical infrastructure on Métis settlements. My riding has two Métis settlements, Kikino and Buffalo. Of course, I'd like to examine what exactly the government is proposing here. Where are the details, and why wasn't this appropriately budgeted for in the previous fiscal year?

Mr. Speaker, we see again and again, when you look at the budgeting of this government, that they never do take into account proper contingency rates for disasters, and what I would suggest is that they seek the advice of the Auditor General to do an analysis operationally of why they're always underestimating this and for an explicit contingency to be put in the budget so that they don't always have to request more during the supplemental supply. Of course, you know, if there's funding that's needed for emergencies like the Alberta flood recovery, every member in this Assembly is going to support those types of allocations provided the projects make sense. But at the same time, why not budget for a reasonable amount, a reasonable contingency, in advance so we don't have to come back to the Assembly and ask for more money year after year after year?

We see as well in the Justice and Solicitor General department $5.5 million for legal aid. The government put forward a one-time funding increase in this department. We'd like to ask that the government consider having a funding formula where you have year-over-year consistent funding at the rate of inflation plus population growth to help those most vulnerable in our society get the proper legal representation.

When you don't have the appropriate legal aid in place, what happens is that it clogs the system in place. You have unrepresented litigants in court who then tie things up. The judge typically has to bend over backwards to make sure that their rights are being upheld, and that inevitably leads to delays in the court system. This slashing of the budget and increasing it one year or the next year creates havoc within the court system, it creates havoc within the legal aid system, and it creates havoc with the lawyers that do this type of work generally on a much lower, reduced basis, sometimes pro bono.

We're also looking at, of course, that it made a splash in the news on Municipal Affairs, where all of a sudden the government came up with $400 million in the MSI capital grant program. It'd be nice to get an understanding of why the government can't simply go forward with predictable, consistent funding for municipalities. The timing of this, obviously, appears to be pretty fortuitous, you know, one month before election. It's, I guess, pretty good timing if all they're concerned about is campaigning and getting re-elected.

Mr. Speaker, I guess, just in general, when you look at the overall budget and what's been put forward here, you see a government that just has out-of-control spending. This government spends more per capita than any other province on all sorts of things, yet Albertans aren't getting the best results. I think that this is a telltale of a government that has been in power so long that they'll do anything to get elected, and their spending will just get more and more out of control. By the government's own polling, it shows that the number one concern of Albertans and how they would want to fix the fiscal situation is to cut wasteful spending, and I think that's got to be the priority here.

You know, the PC government has been talking tough about this upcoming budget on March 26, but my guess is that when we see the budget document, it's going to be one of those mushy ones, where they've moved far to the centre to appease certain stakeholders throughout this province. I'm very interested in seeing what this budget is actually going to produce, if it's going to be a tough budget or if it's going to be one of these things where, you know: tough talk without the actual tough action.

By this bill itself, the supplementary supply estimates, you can see that, you know, there hasn't been any restraint in spending: $8 million for a golf course, $2 billion for carbon capture, a federal building. There's no restraint here, so I'd be very surprised if I saw on March 26 a budget that actually showed some fiscal restraint. It'd be a great thing to see. I just don't expect that to be the case given the document that we're debating here today.

With that, again, I look forward to seeing if the government has any actions that would fix this process and would help to ensure that Alberta's finances are in good hands. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

I don't see anyone wishing to pursue it, so let's move on to the next speaker. It will be Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, please.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank my colleague from Lac La Biche that spoke before me and congratulate him. Apparently, being a young newlywed is much more fun than being in here on a daily basis, so congratulations to him.

There are a number of things in the supplemental bill that I hope the government takes under consideration. You know, we have to do the business of government. I applaud the government for looking at things like flood mitigation and some of the attempts at flood mitigation, but I will say this. If you look at the structure of how we're dealing with it, it's piecemeal, and in my view that's inefficient. So here we are with a supplemental bill that even based on my questioning yesterday is trying to get three different and separate ministries dealing with this issue, and that's a systemic problem.

Evidence of the problem just came out in the Auditor General's report, where the Auditor General talked about Infrastructure purchasing homes in a floodway and then ESRD investing money to build a dike to protect that floodway, which changes the floodway to normal land. Now you've got the community saying that now that you built the dike and also purchased the land, they want to resell the land for development. That's a waste of money. That's a waste of money. That money is better spent on more productive flood mitigation.

I think that the only way to deal with this going forward, to make more efficient use of the money that we spend is to look at how we're going to deal with flood mitigation overall, provincially, and maybe bring that under one ministry or one authority so that we can basically not spend and overspend and counterspend between ministries. That's not getting us ahead of the game.

The other thing is that when you look at what has been proposed even in this supplementary budget, in dealing with some of the issues, we're not looking at it holistically. What we are doing is dealing with more of the symptoms of the problem. On the issue of the flood mapping and the studies about floods – and the minister spoke about that today – when you look at the broader picture, we're not looking at the entire watershed.

So on the issue affecting Sundre, which is one of those few communities in this province that has a significant flood problem, we're not looking at the actual watershed in the high country and what the logging is doing to the flow of the river. Without taking that under consideration, we don't know if we're spending the money efficiently. We don't know if we're wasting the money.

When you look at the three different ministries – Infrastructure, ESRD, and Municipal Affairs – each has something in this budget, this supplemental budget, for flood mitigation. The question now comes: are we getting our money's worth? Are we doing what's right? Without that knowledge upriver of how it's going to affect the entire river basin, we don't have that answer. This ministry can't tell me, this government can't tell me anymore than I can tell them whether we're getting our dollar's worth on spending this money. All we know is: we're going to pass this so we can do some flood mitigation work.

My colleague from the fourth party had mentioned something about: he was conflicted over this golf course. I can assure you that I am not conflicted. This thing has to come out of this supplemental budget. It really does. If we are going to go after the Auditor General and tell a committee to reverse a decision, where an independent committee met and decided to give the Auditor General an additional half a million dollars, and we rescind that, but we're going to spend $1.1 million to construct a golf course and another $8 million to make sure it stays operational while we're rehabbing that golf course, that to me is just not something we can reconcile.

Is a golf course a good investment? I'd rather leave that to the private sector. I'm not so sure it is in the sense that up in the high country it is. But I will tell you this. The private golf course owners aren't really thrilled that this government is building a golf course again anyway. They have their own issues. But to have that golf course operational while it's under rehabilitation, to me, you wouldn't do that in the private sector. You wouldn't spend that kind of money while you're rehabilitating your golf course. You'd just fix your golf course. So I think that absolutely has to come out in light of the items that we absolutely need, that are essential.

The minister stood up the other day in this House and said that there are no unsafe bridges in the province. Well, that's absolutely untrue, but I will give the minister credit. It depends on what you define as safe and unsafe. You can change the level all you want, but the fact is that I can name you two bridges in my constituency, and I know the Member for Little Bow can name a number of bridges that absolutely are not up to standard. They need to be fixed. I have a bridge called the James River Bridge that needs a quarter million dollars to be repaired and brought back up to standard. It is absolutely essential that this bridge be repaired because this is an evacuation route for sour gas wells in case something goes wrong. Clearly, we have a critical piece of infrastructure, we have a county who says, "The province hasn't funded us, so we can't fix the bridge," it needs a quarter of million dollars, and we're going to spend $8 million to keep a golf course operational. That doesn't make sense. That you cannot reconcile.

How do you justify that to the public? Do you want to go out to the public in the next election and try to sell that to the public? Do you want to campaign on that? I know one thing; I do. If you approve it, I will be campaigning on it. I'll have fun anyway. How can you build a golf course when you have these other important needs? You just can't do that. How can you tell the public that, on one hand, everybody's got to give up something. Front line: everybody's got to give up something except those who are going to golf up in Kananaskis. That, to me, cannot be reconciled.

We have hospitals that need to be taken care of, that need to be built. Clearly, those are expensive. One of the things that would help tremendously in dealing with these supplemental budgets as well as with our regular budget is to have a list of priorities just like every municipality does on a yearly basis. You list your capital projects by priority. How would this government want to do that? It's flexible. You should do it by ministry, in my view. If you want to do it as a whole, it doesn't matter. But you list by priority what projects should be built next year. You draw a line of what is funded and what is unfunded.

There are always circumstances that arise during a budget year, where projects that are unfunded need to go to the funded level and something needs to move out. The public understands that. But if you want to sell an austerity budget to the public, if you want to sell a supplemental budget that doesn't address the basic needs of their critical infrastructure, then that public, in order to buy into this, would like to know where their critical infrastructure is on the priority list in relationship to the budget you're passing. That's all they want to know. They want that information so that they can rely on it. If this government were to adopt that practice, this is something we could easily sell to the public, saying: this is why we need these things.

With that, I just want to talk a little bit about the money that's going to the Springbank off-stream storage, that $4.5 million. I don't know if it's right or wrong. I watch the newspapers. I know the government is dealing with the experts, and they're deciding whether this is the right deal or not. I will tell you this. There is an argument on whether you should store in-stream or out of stream, which one is better. It is site specific, whether it should be more efficient in-stream or out of stream. That I don't have an issue with. I'm willing to accept the experts' advice on site-specific designs. But I will tell you this. When you look at the money that's being proposed, $4.5 million, compared to the money that would be lost in a flood, the devastation even in a minor flood, the money comparison is not even worth talking about in the sense of how much better this investment is to protect the property damage that could be a result of a flood.

Backing up, provincially speaking, when you look at the value you get by doing something right and how you're going to protect the community, the property, the businesses downriver, it is, to me, paramount that we look at our flood mitigation holistically and think about it in terms of: if $4.5 million can do the trick for Calgary, then why can't we get that kind of money for a community like Sundre and some of these other communities that have not seen that flood mitigation money come in for what I would call a long-term solution that could protect billions of dollars in dealing with a community that is prone to floods? This is something that, in my view – if you take a step back, look at the broader picture, and design how you're going to attack the whole flood mitigation problem by your watersheds, I think the investment dollars would be significant in a sense of what every dollar spent would save in flood prevention and flood damage. I think that would be immeasurable.

With that, clearly we need to pass the supplemental bill. It will pass, but I hope – I hope – before we're done here we get rid of the money that is slated for this golf course. It is unnecessary. It is not good for the public, and it's not good to try to sell an austerity budget that you're planning on selling to the public, where everybody's at fault for our fiscal woes. How do you sell that if we're going to be building a golf course? It doesn't make sense.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I understand, hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, that you wish to participate.

Mr. Strankman: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. I think it's an interesting comment. The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre makes prominent mention of the Kananaskis golf course. The government has been interestingly quiet in their final deliberations in regard to the sale of aircraft that they were using in competition with private industry, so I was wondering if the member could go into the use of government funds for private industry. There also are private owners of golf courses in the province. I think that's an important competitive thing, the idea of using taxpayers' money.

You also made mention that there are uses of interdepartmental rivalry with funding allotments, and there is the $4.8 million transfer from Municipal Affairs to the Department of Seniors. I was wondering if you would like to give some comment in that regard.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure about inter-departmental rivalry. I haven't seen any ministers tackling each other in a rivalry. But I will call it interdepartmental inconsistency. It happens. When this government is looking for efficiencies, as in any business enterprise, as in any organizational structure, if you look at the goals of each ministry, one of the things you have to make sure is that they don't conflict with other ministries. That, I think, is paramount, and it's a never-ending task for an executive branch to look at that, to make sure it is efficient.

I do want to talk about that question on the golf course because the investment of public dollars into a golf course is questionable under a number of standards. In this province, where we have a very, very short season, we know that private golf course owners struggle to get that bottom line. In order to get to that bottom line, they look at the competition. When you've got a government in there, that has unlimited pockets, that can invest in something like a Kananaskis, particularly $8 million to keep it operational while it's under rehabilitation, it really puts at a disadvantage the private golf course owners who are struggling to make sure that they can, you know, make a profit and be successful. It's unfair to them, particularly those within that driving range – driving range: there's a pun for you – within the driving area of that golf course where they compete for the golfers.

You have the two stages of this, where you have government investing in what probably should be private – and I'm not saying that Kananaskis isn't a great place to go. It is, and it always has been, and it probably always will be. The fact is that if we're going to invest in rehabilitating the golf course, which I think is wrong, and then invest another $8 million just to keep it operational while it's under reconstruction, that does not seem logical to me. It is something that I have a difficult time reconciling on spending money.

I see one of the ministers shaking his head. If he can provide a different answer than we got last night, then I'm really interested in hearing it and comparing it to the record we got last night on the $8 million. We were told last night that that $8 million was about keeping this place operational while the construction was under way. I just feel that that is not something that you would ever do in the private sector. Yes, they suffered damage, but if they're going to invest to build their golf course, they would just build their golf course.

In the end, where is the revenue stream that we can see over the last, say, decade, the last five years of this golf course? How much have they spent operationally, and how much revenue have they seen returned as a result of how much money has been spent? We don't know if that golf course has ever been profitable. There's no proof that it's ever been profitable. Then the question is begged. Why are we investing in the first place if it's never been profitable? We need answers to those questions. If it's profitable, then there's no reason for government money to be in there in the first place. It is certainly something that this government should think about turning over to the private sector.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you. We have eight seconds left under 29(2)(a).

If not, are there any other speakers, or are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: The question has been called.

Hon. President of Treasury Board, did you wish to close debate?

Mr. Campbell: Question.

The Speaker: No? Question. Thank you.

Bill 12 Common Business Number Act

The Speaker: You're moving it, hon. member? Thank you.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 12, the Common Business Number Act.

The purpose of this legislation is to enable Alberta to enter into a partnership with the Canada Revenue Agency to adopt a common business number. The common business number is based on a one business, one number vision, where a business is provided with a single unique identifier to be used when dealing with government. Simplifying how businesses interact with government when allowing them to identify themselves with a common business number will particularly support our small-business community. Small businesses are the backbone of our economy, representing 95 per cent of the businesses and creating 35 per cent of the private-sector employment in Alberta.

In 2013 we engaged the small-business community to help determine how we can create the right conditions for small business to continue to thrive in our province. As part of this I led eight in-person engagement sessions across the province attended by 170 small-business owners, and 335 small-business owners also completed an online survey. What we heard was a consistent message, that it can be difficult for small businesses to determine where to find the right information about where to obtain business services, support, or regulatory information from government. Having been a business owner myself, I know first-hand that businesses spend a considerable amount of time looking for information and determining whom to contact in the government for help, particularly in the start-up stages. I also know that our small-business community wants to know what rules apply to them, what government expects when it comes to compliance.

Mr. Speaker, our government listened to what we heard from small-business owners, and we're now delivering that through the Alberta small-business strategy. The strategy is intended to maintain Alberta's favourable investment climate and make it simple to do business in Alberta. One of the commitments made in the strategy is to provide better client service for small business, and adopting the common business number is one of the ways we're achieving this, by allowing businesses to conveniently identify themselves using a single identification number. This will reduce the number of times small businesses provide the same information to various government programs, saving them time and money.

In recent years some provinces have begun to adopt the common business number for their programs as well, and they include our B.C. and Saskatchewan new west trade agreement partners. Jurisdictions that have adopted the common business number have realized benefits for businesses and government, including red tape reduction by eliminating duplicate registration requirements, improving service delivery and program compliance, and expanded opportunities for online service integration and collaboration.

This bill is the first step to achieving these benefits for Alberta by establishing the necessary legislative framework for our province to adopt the common business number. Here are just a couple of examples of the way this bill will do this. First, it establishes the legislative authority to adopt the common business number as our province's business numbering system. This satisfies the requirement under the federal Income Tax Act that only permits the Canada Revenue Agency to share business information with the provincial partners for the purpose of administering a federal, provincial, or municipal law.

Second, the bill allows Alberta to enter into a formal agreement with the Canada Revenue Agency to obtain basic information about a business's identity like its name, date of incorporation, and contact information.

Third, it allows Service Alberta to establish agreements with other public bodies, gradually expanding the use of the common business number across provincial programs.

Finally, the bill contemplates the establishment of an information system hub to facilitate the exchange of certain business information between the Canada Revenue Agency and participating provincial programs to facilitate the use of the common business number and to protect data integrity.

In addition to these measures, the bill contains regulation-making powers that will allow our province to streamline government regulatory requirements and eliminate duplication in procedures.

As you can see, this bill creates a legislative framework that will enable Alberta to simplify how businesses interact with government and by allowing businesses to identify themselves using a common business number. I think this bill is a significant step forward for our province towards its goal of providing a business-friendly environment, and it's been endorsed by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business as a way to reduce red tape for small-business owners.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now move to adjourn debate.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Bill 13 Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2015

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today and move second reading of Bill 13, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2015, on behalf of the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

When the current act was created, aquatic invasive species were not considered to be a large risk in Alberta, and for this reason, the current act does not sufficiently address the issue. The proposed amendments would establish measures to protect our lakes, rivers, and water infrastructure from the devastating consequences of aquatic invasive species. The measures suggested include mandatory watercraft inspections at our borders, new authority for enforcement officers, and a controlled invasive species list.

Mr. Speaker, all Albertans have an interest in protecting our water for recreation, irrigation, and use in our homes and businesses. That's what makes these amendments so critical.

I now move to adjourn debate.

Bill 14 Agricultural Societies Amendment Act, 2015

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise to move second reading of Bill 14, the Agricultural Societies Amendment Act, 2015, on behalf of the Minister of Agricultural and Rural Development.

Alberta's agricultural societies are valuable organizations that work to enhance the quality of life in our communities. They have a long and important history, predating the creation of our province. In fact, the original statute that established agricultural societies was a Northwest Territories ordinance from 1886.

Over the years agricultural societies have continued to evolve. They not only fulfill their traditional role of encouraging awareness and improvements in agriculture but also provide services that improve the quality of life for the residents of their communities. There are currently 293 agricultural societies that administer over 3,000 activities annually. These include rodeos, fairs, farmers' markets, 4-H activities, agricultural education, farm safety education, and scholarships. These societies operate more than 700 facilities such as hockey and curling rinks, community halls, and exhibition facilities.

Mr. Speaker, despite changes to how societies operate, some of the wording of the original 1886 ordinance remains in our Agricultural Societies Act today. It is important that our legislation remains current and relevant to ensure that it is meeting the needs of our agricultural societies and the communities that they serve. In a nutshell, the Agricultural Societies Amendment Act will modernize the existing legislation, make sure that it is well aligned with the Societies Act, ensure that all agricultural societies have effective bylaws in place, and recognize that large and small agricultural societies need to have flexibility in how they are structured to meet their unique needs.

The current act is overly prescriptive, going as far as outlining the order of business for annual general meetings, membership fees and membership eligibility, and entitlements within the legislation itself. Under the new provisions these types of requirements would be contained in each society's individual bylaws. This would allow societies both large and small to tailor these requirements to their individual needs and allow the procedures to be updated from time to time without having to reopen legislation.

To ensure good governance and oversight practices are maintained, minimum requirements for bylaws will be outlined in the regulation. For example, bylaws would have to include provisions for membership requirements, rights and obligations, as well as requirements for directors in terms of office. New or amended bylaws that are introduced by societies will be vetted by the department.

To reflect the evolving role of agricultural societies, we are also updating some of the language in the act to recognize that these societies are not solely agriculture based and are involved in a variety of community activities. For example, the object statement will be broadened to reference communities in general rather than just agricultural communities.

The number of people involved in agricultural production who are required to be part of an application to form an agricultural society has been updated from at least 25 per cent of a minimum of 15 applicants to 25 per cent of at least 50 applicants.

We've also added a provision that further clarifies authorities and responsibilities of societies incorporated under the act. For example, the revised statute states what are referred to as natural person powers to agricultural societies such as the ability to enter into contracts; to purchase, own, use, and dispose of property and assets; and to enter into indemnity.

Mr. Speaker, while we recognize the unique role of agricultural societies in this province, we also want to ensure that the legislation is aligned with the best practices outlined within the Societies Act. This includes provisions that apply to maintaining a members' register, having a registered office, liability protection for society directors, and the process for major decisions such as amalgamations and dissolutions.

Mr. Speaker, these amendments have been carefully considered. My department has been working closely with the Alberta Association of Agricultural Societies and held consultation meetings across the province. All agricultural societies were invited to attend and to provide input. Approximately 200 people representing 97 agricultural societies took part in the consultations.

As a result of these changes, the majority of provincial agricultural societies will have to update their bylaws. However, the societies will have three years to comply. The department will work closely with the Alberta Association of Agricultural Societies to provide ongoing support to agricultural societies to facilitate the changes.

I am confident that these changes will effectively meet the needs of our agricultural societies and support their outstanding efforts and service to their communities. I urge members of the Assembly to support this legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now move to adjourn debate.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 15 Securities Amendment Act, 2015

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 15, the Securities Amendment Act, 2015.

In 2004 Alberta made a commitment to ongoing reform under the provincial-territorial memorandum of understanding regarding securities regulation. Ongoing review of regular amendments to the Alberta Securities Act is required to keep pace with industry developments and to support the ongoing reform of the Canadian regulatory system. The Securities Act was last amended during the 2014 fall session and, for the most part, is amended at least once a year.

As I mentioned at first reading, the proposed amendments relate to four topic areas: enforcement-related amendments, point of sale related amendments, amendments that support the continued harmonization of derivatives regulation, and housekeeping amendments of a technical nature.

I'd like to take a few minutes to provide some detail of the amendments. I'll start with the enforcement related amendments. Mr. Speaker, effective enforcement and compliance are essential to advance investor protection and foster a fair and efficient capital market. Our proposed enforcement related amendment is designed to improve the Alberta Securities Commission's enforcement capacity by clarifying its investigators' statutory authority to electronically record statements or evidence during an investigation.

Other proposed amendments will permit the extension of an ex parte court order appointing a receiver, a receiver and manager, trustee, or liquidator; prohibit the directors of an insurer under an investigation from exercising any of their powers that have been granted by the court to the receiver, receiver and manager, trustee, or liquidator to avoid conflicting exercises of authority; permit the court to revoke or vary an order upon application; and allow for ex parte applications to be made in the absence of the public. Ex parte is, of course, the legal proceeding brought by one party whereby the other party might not be present or represented. Similar provisions exist in other jurisdictions like B.C. and Ontario, permitting ex parte orders to be issued.

Moving on, the point of sale related amendments relate to the third and final phase of the point of sale project to facilitate the development of a summary disclosure document specifically for exchange-traded funds, also known as ETFs. An ETF is a security that tracks a commodity, index, or basket of assets. It trades like a security on an exchange, and like a security, its price can change throughout the day as it's traded. The summary disclosure document will be similar to the fund facts. Summary documents are currently in place for mutual funds and segregated funds which provide investors with the key information about a fund in a concise and easy to understand format.

Mr. Speaker, work continues on the continued harmonization of securities regulations across the country. The proposed amendments relating to the harmonization, including the prohibition on the front-running in section 93.3, will be expanded to apply to derivatives. An example of front-running is when a broker buys up a stock based on information that has not yet been shared with his or her clients.

The Securities Amendment Act, 2015, also proposes an amendment to expand the definition of associate to include persons cohabitating in a conjugal relationship who share material for the purpose of insider trading or tipping and are not otherwise captured under the Alberta definition of the adult interdependent partner. This amendment would capture persons in a conjugal relationship of less than three years or those who have not had a child together.

Other technical and housekeeping amendments to the Alberta Securities Act are intended to clarify or update existing provisions. They are changing "and" to "or" at the end of subclause (ii) and the definition of officer in section 1(II), harmonizing the wording of beneficial ownership in section 5, and striking the phrase "pursuant to subsection (2)" in section 33(3).

Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendments will ensure that Alberta honours its commitment under the 2004 memorandum of understanding to ongoing reform in international commitments as well as the ongoing harmonization of security laws and regulations across Canada. As you know, the co-operative capital markets regulator proposed by Ottawa is not yet operational, and there's been some slippage in implementation timelines. Meanwhile there are several jurisdictions that have not joined the regulator, so it is important that all provinces and territories continue to work to harmonize legislation to strengthen the existing Canadian securities regulatory system.

I ask for your support for these amendments. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I adjourn debate on Bill 15.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 16 Statutes Amendment Act, 2015

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise today and speak on behalf of Bill 16, Statutes Amendment Act, 2015, on second reading.

This bill amends the following pieces of legislation: the Provincial Court Act, the Court of Queen's Bench Act, the Police Act, the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation Act, the Land Titles Act, and the Post-secondary Learning Act.

An Hon. Member: That's a lot. Wow.

Mr. Donovan: There is a lot there. These are the updates that will ensure provincial legislation is clear, concise, and effective.

Now, to provide some details on proposed changes, the most significant ones are to the Provincial Court Act and the Court of Queen's Bench Act. Starting with the Provincial Court Act, there are three amendments that will provide civil procedures and other processes for the Provincial Court to clarify the jurisdiction. The goal of the changes is to make Alberta's civil justice system more effective, efficient, and accessible for all Albertans. So we might not need all the lawyers that are in this room.

The first amendment will increase the maximum monetary judicial award from the prescribed cabinet for civil matters from the Provincial Court from $50,000 to $100,000. It must be noted, however, that the current maximum limit in the court's civil matters will remain at $50,000, which was set in 2014. The proposed amendments give the government the option to raise the limit to $100,000 at a later date, if required, without having to amend the legislation.

The second amendment will update the civil matters section in the Provincial Court Act by repealing provisions governing civil procedures. These provisions will instead consolidate into a single regulation under the act to govern the procedure for civil matters in Provincial Court.

The third amendment provides a procedural foundation for the court to stream down dispute claims into what's going to be referred to as resolution tracks. The aim to make the civil claims process more effective and efficient is to anticipate that the resolution tracks will be part of the pilot project in both Calgary and Edmonton later this year. In this project court officials will direct civil disputes to the appropriate resolution track so that court services are available to matters that are needed by them, while more straightforward civil matters can be resolved quickly and effectively. This will simplify the process, providing alternatives for dispute resolutions and resolving less complex civil claims. Finally, the alternative track in the courtroom not only will ease pressures on the courts; it will also mean more accessibility to the justice system for self-represented litigants.

I'll now move on to the amendments to the Court of Queen's Bench Act. These changes will create a second Associate Chief Justice position and give the Chief Justice the power to issue directives limiting the jurisdiction of masters. Over the past two decades the Court of Queen's Bench has not increased in size to match Alberta's rapidly growing population. The complement of the Court of Queen's Bench in Alberta currently has one Chief Justice and one Associate Chief Justice with 65 Crowns, referred to as regular justice positions, for a total of 67 justice positions.

Calgary and Edmonton are the fourth- and fifth-largest centres in terms of population in Canada, respectively. This presents a unique governance challenge for the court to determine the dedicated Associate Chief Justice needed for each major city to oversee the operational needs such as judicial scheduling. With the proposed increase, the court would have one Associate Chief Justice in Edmonton and one in Calgary, giving the Chief Justice the capacity to provide more strategic direction to the court as a whole. Adding the new Associate Chief Justice would help the Court of Queen's Bench deal with increasing case volumes and give the strategic leadership the needed effectiveness to serve Albertans.

It must be noted that an increase to the court complement requires the provincial government to create a new judicial position and the federal government to make the appointment. It is the province's responsibility to create the new Associate Chief Justice position now so the government of Alberta and the Court of Queen's Bench can work with the government of Canada to see that it is filled.

The second amendment to the Court of Queen's Bench Act gives the Chief Justice the powers to issue directives on the jurisdiction of masters. Masters and judicial officers appointed in the province sit on the Court of Queen's Bench. Currently they primarily hear interim applications in civil matters and applications involving bankruptcies. They also hear certain applications under the Maintenance Enforcement Act. There are some exceptions. Masters have the same jurisdiction as a judge sitting in the chambers. This means that they can expand the types of applications they hear during the interim applications in family matters. In future, in order to increase accessibility to justice, it is anticipated that the masters will be asked to hear interim applications on family matters. As the master's role is expanded, it will be useful to have clear but flexible mechanisms to control the types of applications the litigants can bring forward before a master. This amendment requires the Chief Justice to provide such a mechanism.

Next, under the Statutes Amendment Act changes will be made to the Police Act. This is necessary because a potential inconsistency between the Police Act and the police service regulations has been identified. In 2011 a change was made to the definition of one who can be designated as a presiding officer governing the discipline or performance of a police officer under the regulation. The change was inadvertently missed in the Police Act. Section 13(1) of the regulation identifies that any of the following persons may serve as the presiding officer at a hearing:

- (a) ... [a] former police officer;
- (b) a former member of the judiciary, including judges of the Court of Queen's Bench and the Provincial Court.

Chief of police or current chief of police. In contrast, section 45(3) of the act specifies that "the chief [of police], or a police officer designated by the chief [of police] shall conduct a hearing." All chiefs of police have been advised to immediately cease using the presiding officers who do not currently serve as police members until the change can be made under the expanded definition of presiding officers under the act. The proposed amendment will be addressing the potential inconsistencies.

In addition, there's another small amendment to section 52 to align the legislation with current practices. It is suggested that section 52 be amended to require that the police service and police commission notify the director of law enforcement about the police complaints and how the complaint was disposed of. This change will ensure that legislation is consistent with the current practices of provincial regulations and that the act is consistent.

Next, the amendment to the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation Act. The foundation was established in 1994 to develop an active partnership between sports, recreation, active living, parks, and wildlife programs. However, in 2013, with a directive of the then minister of tourism, parks, and recreation, the focus was mandated on delivering sports programs and services. Since that time the foundation has been operating as the Alberta sport connection. The amendment to the act officially changes the name to the Alberta sport connection. This also includes provisions for the transfer of land previously owned by the foundation. It has not been actively engaged in managing the lands donated and purchased by them since 2013. This change will ensure the Alberta sport connection can officially continue to focus on making Alberta the best place in Canada for sports and sports development.

The transfer of lands is expected to be done over the next 10 years and will only be done under the provision that the new owners honour the original conditions that were set out on the lands.

Culture and Tourism is working with the Treasury Board and the Justice and Solicitor General's office to develop a transfer plan for the lands, and it will involve input from the original donors as well as stakeholders in the near future. In the meantime the lands will continue to be managed by Culture and Tourism.

Next are the Land Titles Act amendments. The Alberta land titles system and its supporting software have served Albertans well for the past 30 years. However, a significant upgrade is currently under way. Once completed, this upgraded operating system will position our land titles office to deliver efficient and effective services for years to come. The key upgrade to this system will be the ability for the subscribers to submit documents to the land titles registry electronically with a unique digital signature. The amendments to this act are required to enable the use of these digital signatures. Specifically, amendments will allow the most frequent land title users, such as lawyers and land surveyors, to become subscribers.

Subscribers will have the ability to affix their digital signatures onto documents they submit to the registries for the land titles office. These types of forms will be accepted, and procedural guidelines for digital signatures will be developed by the registrar of land titles. Paper registrations will still continue to ensure access for those that are nonsubscribers. The registrar will be authorized to recognize a certified authorization for those who will be working in partnership with the land titles office, to maintain the master list of eligible subscribers, and to monitor the compliance with guidelines to ensure that proper practices on the part of subscribers is taking place.

This structure will ensure that unique digital signatures are more secure than traditional pen and paper signatures. The appropriate offence provisions are included to deter the misuse of digital signatures. Where individuals affix an electronic signature in contravention of the act or they incorporate the digital signature of another person, they may be fined up to $10,000 or imprisoned for six months.

In addition to the authorization of digital signatures, the amendments will provide title insurance for companies from making claims against the land titles assurance fund. The assurance fund is intended to compensate the individuals so that true loss will not be done. Land titles insurance companies collect premiums from policyholders, recover the potential claim loss, and they should not compensate the Alberta assurance fund.

Mr. Speaker, Service Alberta has worked extensively with the Law Society of Alberta, the Alberta Land Surveyors' Association, and the Real Estate Council of Alberta to ensure a system that is needed for their professionals and their real estate transactions.

Lastly, a necessary amendment to the Post-secondary Learning Act is being made. It concerns the legal status of the boards of governors for both Medicine Hat College and SAIT. The college was established by an order in council in 1970, and the SAIT board was established by the same in 1982.

On that, I will adjourn debate on second reading of Bill 16. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I realize that I've got that parade on today at 4:30. I would move that the House stand adjourned until 1:30 on Monday.

The Speaker: Thank you. I was hesitant to recognize you because we've hit 4:30, and pursuant to section 4(2) of the standing orders we have to adjourn until Monday, but thank you for making the motion right at the appropriate hour.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, March 16, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Dear Lord and Great Creator, we ask for Your guidance as we begin this week of work on behalf of those whom we are privileged to serve in our Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Amen.

Please remain standing for the singing of our national anthem, led by Robert Clark.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you very much. Let us be seated, please.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a number of guests in the galleries, including the Speaker's gallery, today. In a moment we'll begin with the Premier's introduction, but could I ask all of you with guests to be as brief as possible so that we can get all 22 introductions in.

The hon. Premier.

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly His Excellency Selçuk Ünal, who is the ambassador of the Republic of Turkey. His Excellency is accompanied by Mr. Hakan Cengiz, counsellor from the embassy of the Republic of Turkey in Ottawa, and also by Kenan Tan, who is the honorary consul general of the Republic of Turkey here in Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta and the Republic of Turkey have benefited from a long-standing trade and investment relationship. Ambassador Ünal's visit is a great opportunity for us to celebrate those ties and to build, in fact, on current ties while exploring new areas of co-operation, in particular in a variety of sectors such as energy development and agriculture. We're confident that the future will bring diverse opportunities for even more collaboration between our province and Turkey, not only in terms of trade and investment but also in terms of cultural and educational exchanges, which we value immensely.

Our esteemed guests are seated in the Speaker's gallery. I now ask that they please rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you, and welcome to our guests.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us move on to school groups, starting with Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you students from the Fort Saskatchewan Christian school. They are accompanied today by Mrs. Elaine Baillie, Mr. Uve Knaak, and Mrs. Deborah Pinchuk. They are here to learn about things that happen in the Legislature, but one of the other things that they find very important is to pray for the Members of this Legislative Assembly. I would ask them all to rise right now and to receive the warm welcome of the Legislature, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a good friend of mine, Mavis Giant from the Saddle Lake Christian school. Along with her she's brought two students, Abby, who wants to be a registered nurse, as well as Madison, who wants to get into politics and become the chief of the reserve there. I'd ask that they both rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly eight grades 4 to 9 students from Slave Lake Koinonia Christian school and their chaperones Ms Jasmine Light, Mr. Marc Boissonneault, Mr. Dan Brown, and Mrs. Beatrice Brown. Since choices of where students get an education were made here in this province, this school has been so successful in graduating students, usually with high marks. I know that they are here with other Christian schools, and one of the things that they do value in common is to pray for all leaders. I ask that the students and the chaperones, who are seated in the public gallery, rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Medicine Hat.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very clever group of students from the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. Mr. Speaker, I just want to ask you to keep a secret, that this is my favourite school in the fabulous constituency. I would ask the grade 6 class from John A. McDougall to stand and receive the warm welcome. Their teacher is Ms Veronica Chong, and with them is Mrs. Lily Welsh as their parent helper. They are standing. Please welcome them to the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three fantastic grades 8 and 9 students from Cornerstone Christian School in my constituency of Medicine Hat. They are Rhea Nayak, Cambria Malcolm, and Korina Donnelly. These students are joined by their awesome principal, Sandy Sergeant. I know they pray for each of us. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise now and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My guests are not here – they are from Concordia University College in my constituency – neither are my speaking notes here, but I invite all members to give them a warm welcome. They will be arriving later during question period. We'll be unable to revert at that time, so if we could just give them a little round right now.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, followed by Edmonton-Manning.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions if that's all right. First, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a group of students, parents, teachers from Aurora elementary school in Drayton Valley. They are participating at this moment in a tour of the Legislature but will join us here at 2 o'clock. Touring with the students is their teacher, Amanda Gathercole, and parent helpers Glen Saunders, Becky Poulsen, Jaime Pipke, Nadine Benoit, Angela Erickson, Bradly Balfour, Sarah Payne, Kerri Colwell, and Jocelyn Callihoo. When they come at 2, we'll wave at them and give them the warm welcome of the Assembly then.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would also be pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly President Helen Rice from the AUMA; Mayor Steve Christie; John McGowan, chief executive officer of the AUMA; and President Al Kemmere from the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. I'm thrilled they are here for the introduction today of Bill 20, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015. I am proud of the long-standing partnership between our government, our Ministry of Municipal Affairs, and our municipal partners and associations. Please, if they would rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by Strathcona-Sherwood Park and Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you students from St. Dominic school, located in my riding, Edmonton-Manning. They are accompanied by their teacher, Luisa Molenaar, and parent helper Angela Wright. I'm pleased to see these wonderful and dynamic students be part of the School at the Legislature program this week. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask all my guests to rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group with the Association of Christian Schools, eight of Strathcona's brightest and best with the Strathcona Christian Academy here today visiting the Legislature. They're here with their teacher, Mr. Symonds Botchey, who tells me he just joined Strathcona Christian Academy this year and is very pleased to be there and very proud of this group of eight students he's with today. We'd also like to extend the warm welcome of this Assembly and have them rise. They're in the public gallery.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the invaluable gems in Calgary-Lougheed is Glenmore Christian Academy. I truly enjoy visiting with their students, staff, and parents, and I'm absolutely honoured that they're joining us here today. GCA has built a dynamic Christian environment dedicated to excellence in learning and life development. Their focus is to raise leaders who will become responsible citizens and world-view thinkers who are committed to Christian service. It's a pleasure to introduce eight of their fine students, who have made a special trip to Edmonton to pray for us as provincial leaders here in this building. The students are joined by parent volunteer Debbie Mohamed and Tasha Schindel, chair of the parent council. I'll ask our guests to stand now to receive the traditional warm welcome of this fine Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there other school or education groups?

Okay. Let's move on to other important guests, starting with the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education, followed by Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I have the pleasure to introduce to you and through you the finest and most dedicated student leaders in all of Canada, representing more than 265,000 postsecondary students. I will ask them to stand as they are introduced: from the Council of Alberta University Students Navneet Khinda, Cam McCoy, William Lau, Ray Khan, Erik Queenan, Seija Roggeveen, Levi Nilson, Chris Hollingsworth, and executive director Beverly Eastham; from the Alberta Students' Executive Council, ASEC, Tyler Ludwig, Alex Willkie, Bailey Daines, Justin Nand, Shannon Peacocke, Hasib Baig, Joshua Bettie, Kristen George, Cody Weger, Thomas Ridgeway, acting executive director Teresa Currie, and Alberta campus mental health innovation project manager Jessica Turowski. Please give these student leaders a very warm welcome.

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a wonderful father who has made the effort and spent the money to bring his children – his daughters Breanna, 14, and Brooklyn, 10, and his son Jordan – here from Lethbridge. It is a hike, and few young people are lucky enough to make it from Lethbridge. Dwayne Lesko's dental lab business and my constituency office were side by side, and I have watched he and his wife, Heidi, raise this amazing young family. They have wanted to visit the Legislature and watch us in action, especially while I was still here. Please rise and receive the warm welcome from this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, followed by the Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you two visitors who reside in my constituency of Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley. Seated in the public gallery are Laurier and Doris Ouellette from Girouxville. Mr. and Mrs. Ouellette have lived in my constituency for over 70 years. Laurier grew up working on his father's farm and owned bees for over 20 years before buying his farm 30 years ago. Doris has worked within the local school system as well as a number of local businesses over the years. Together they're very active members of the community. This is their first time visiting the Legislature Building. More importantly, though, Mr. and Mrs. Ouellette are the proud grandparents of Danielle Seymour, one of our pages, who is in the Chamber today. As many of you know, Danielle is a first-year political science student at the University of Alberta, and this is her third year working as a page for us. I would ask all three of them to now rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you some very special constituents of mine that are seated in the public gallery. They're all members of the Athabasca United church. We have Mavis Jacobs, Wally Cummings, and Dan Dennis, who are all members of the Athabasca Rotary Club as am I. We also have Monica Rosborough, who is the minister of the Athabasca United church; Marion Kadikoff, who has been nominated for one of the 2015 minister's seniors service awards; and Cam Dierker. They're here today to meet with me and to provide an overview of the Athabasca area seniors memory projects. I'd like to ask the group to rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with the greatest of honour that I rise before you today, sir, to introduce the farm manager for Strankman Farms. This young gentleman at 24 years old knows the value of a verbal contract. He is my son Jay Strankman. I believe he's behind me in the gallery here, and I hope he will now rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Reid and Joyce Hamula, constituents of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Reid wrote to me in January, a letter that I'll table later today, about the difficulty of living as an AISH recipient who has his CPP disability deducted from his monthly benefits. Reid has been living with one arm since the 1970s and endured a workplace injury in late 2012. Contrary to the advice of his GP the WCB has cut off his entitlement. As a recipient of AISH and CPPD he lives on $1,300 a month. If he were able to work, he could make up to $1,950 as an AISH recipient. I invited him here today to help raise awareness about the unfair PC policy in AISH and WCB programs. I'll now ask Reid and Joyce to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly five wonderful, outstanding Albertans from the Canadian National Institute for the Blind. With us today are J.S. Ryu, director of public affairs; Marc Workman, manager of advocacy; and three CNIB champions: Dudley Hanks, Rob Inskip, and Crystal Boyde. Mr. Hanks is also my boss because he lives in Edmonton-Mill Woods. I would request they please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, I see you're signalling me that your guests have already been introduced, so let us move on to Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very good friend. When I first met him, it was on Twitter, and he called himself the Kaylinator. Then a short time later I met him as Captain Bradley. He's been a reservist and a cadet instructor for multiple years, and he was an award winner of the Queen's Diamond Jubilee medal. Now he's just a great volunteer and a great friend. If Kaylin Bradley could please rise and if members could give him the normal warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Canadian National Institute for the Blind

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to mention the great work being done by the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, some members of which I introduced earlier. Today there are close to 53,000 Albertans living with blindness or partial sight along with over 630,000 Albertans who live with a major eye disease. Unfortunately, due to aging those numbers are expected to increase by 30 per cent in the next 10 years. To help those individuals, the CNIB provides a broad range of rehab programming, community-based supports in six offices across Alberta.

On February 23 I met a group of CNIB champions, clients of CNIB and their family members, who have been personally impacted by vision loss. Hearing their stories of overcoming those obvious challenges associated with being visually impaired was truly inspirational. The champions also expressed their gratitude for the ongoing support CNIB receives from this government, in particular the ministries of Human Services and Health. As a member of government caucus I'm looking forward to working with CNIB to ensure that every visually impaired Albertan is provided with the tools and the skills they need to succeed and to overcome their challenges.

I would like to again commend them on the great work they are doing along with many other organizations in this province who continue to confirm that the strength of Alberta is in its people, including those who live with disabilities yet showcase their tremendous ability.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, 35 seconds for the question, 35 seconds for the answer. Let's go on with Calgary-Fish Creek, who is also the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, for your first main set of questions.

Long-term Care Beds for Seniors

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Make an announcement, put up a sign, and walk away. They do it with schools, and now they're doing it with seniors' beds. Last week hundreds of new seniors' beds were announced, but nobody can say where the beds will go, when they'll be built, or where the money is to staff them. In fact, an AHS vice-president said: cost isn't actually what we're focused on yet, and answers won't be available until April or May. To the Minister of Health. You're giving seniors and their families false hope. This is clearly just campaigning with Alberta's money. When will you stop?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, either the Minister of Health or the Minister of Seniors can speak to this, but in terms of Alberta under new management the Minister of Seniors and the Minister of Health set about with a pre-existing budget envelope of $180 million to build 1,500 senior citizen care spaces. They have, through an RFP process administered by these two ministers, resulted in 2,600 units being delivered to seniors in this province.

Mrs. Forsyth: All right, Premier. Here's a question to under new management. Minister, AHS says that the locations of these beds haven't even been finalized yet. In fact, nobody can say where these beds are, if they're new, or whether these beds were previously closed, and now on the eve of an election they're being promised to be reopened. Hospitals are packed with seniors who need long-term care nursing beds, surgeries are being cancelled, and ER wait times are skyrocketing. Just some straight answers, please. Since you took office in October, how many net – net, Premier – new long-term care nursing beds have been built and put into operation, and where are they . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We committed in September, October to 750 new beds, of which 466 would be done by September. We've moved 303 people into those beds across the province of Alberta. We'll continue to do that. With the able leadership of the Minister of Seniors we're continuing. We will build more.

Mrs. Forsyth: Are those long-term care nursing beds, Minister?
There have been dozens of announcements within the last month alone promising new seniors' beds. An election is on the horizon, and quite literally every second day this government makes a new promise with new numbers, new timelines, and no plan to deliver on them. So let's make it easy. Minister, on March 31, 2014, there were 14,370 long-term care nursing beds in operation. Exactly how many long-term care nursing beds are in operation today?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, once again, we committed to adding 750 new beds. The Minister of Seniors is allowing us to even add more. We think we'll be over 1,000. We committed to adding 466 before the end of the year, which will be done by September, and we've added 303 of those numbers by now.

The Speaker: Second main set of questions. The hon. opposition leader.

Mrs. Forsyth: Still no answer under new management, Mr. Speaker.

Deaths of Children in Care

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. An internal report commissioned by the Minister of Human Services says that the decisions to investigate the deaths of children in care are often arbitrary and without proper guidance in place. Minister, every death of a child in care is tragic and deserves to be investigated and reported. Why is this not happening?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, the death of any single child is one too many. The death of any child in care in this province is investigated by the Chief Medical Examiner, and the death of any child in care is investigated within the minister's department. Of course, if the Chief Medical Examiner so recommends, there is also a fatality inquiry that is convened. We are all concerned about this. These deaths are investigated, and the public needs to be aware of that.

Mrs. Forsyth: The report recommends that all child deaths should be reviewed like the Premier said. Last year the Child and Youth Advocate was given the mandate to review child deaths when in the public interest but not the resources. I think Albertans would argue that reviewing all deaths of children in government care would be in the best public interest as the Premier said. To the Premier: this report says that all child deaths should be investigated, so why did you order members of your caucus to withhold the resources the Child and Youth Advocate needs to investigate all children's deaths?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, as I've said, I'm sure every single member in this House is concerned about this. The death of any child who is in care in this province is a concern to all of us. They are investigated in those circumstances by the Chief Medical Examiner, and there is, in addition, an internal investigation in the case of the department. In addition, in any circumstance where the recommendation of the chief medical officer is that there should be a fatality inquiry convened, that is exactly what takes place.

Mrs. Forsyth: Premier, it's your internal committee that's recommending these, not mine.

Last year the former Minister of Human Services said that governments are really good at commissioning reports. This is your new management, Premier. Isn't that true? Good at commissioning, bad at implementing. A new report – now, this is under your management – says that all child deaths should be investigated. The child advocate is the best person to review these deaths and make recommendations that could prevent further tragedy. Minister, almost a thousand kids in care have died over the last 15 years. Twenty-six have died this year alone. These deaths are still not being reported . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the death of a child in care is one too many. Every critical incident or death is examined internally and externally, depending on the situation: internally through notification with the statutory director and externally with the good work of the Child and Youth Advocate, the council of quality assurance, the Family Violence Death Review Committee, the fatality inquiry group, and the chief medical officer. I can assure you we will continue to investigate all those deaths.

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Premier, the reporting of the unproven allegations against one of your ministers led to his resignation. I will not be asking about the allegations or alleging anything, but sworn affidavits were provided. Premier, on what date did you first learn of the sworn affidavits in question?

The Speaker: Hon. members, I think we're sharply aware that this is largely an internal party matter, but if you wish, hon. Government House Leader, there's nothing illegal in the question. It's probably not government policy, as far as I know, but I'll look forward to your clarification.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I believe you ruled on Thursday that this questioning really skirts the line. I'm not aware of any investigation by any law enforcement agency here. It appears to me that this is entirely a party matter, which in the past you have ruled should not be discussed in this Chamber.

The Speaker: That is correct. The clarification stands. Let's see where you go with your supplemental.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am simply asking when the Premier – the Premier – received specific information, so it's a very simple question. On what date did you or anyone from the Premier's office or anyone under your employ first learn of the unproven allegations against the minister who resigned?

The Speaker: Hon. Premier, if you wish to clarify this from a government perspective.

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, the former associate minister, has stepped aside as he proceeds to clear his name in a matter that is a party matter.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Final supplemental.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Premier, these allegations of course are absolutely not proven, and they have been denied. So in order to clear the air, have you referred the information to the Ethics Commissioner?

The Speaker: Does somebody wish to comment? The hon. Premier.

Mr. Prentice: I've spoken to the allegations, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I would agree.

Let us move on there to Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Childhood Immunization

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week I asked questions about the life-saving benefits of mandatory vaccinations for Alberta schoolchildren. The Minister of Education said he takes very seriously the proposal and he'd like to have consultations with people across the province. The next day the Health minister said: we are not going to mandate it. With the ministers contradicting each other, Albertans still don't know where this government stands on this important public health issue. To the Premier: will the Premier break the tie and tell us if this government is in favour or not of mandatory school vaccinations?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we were very clear. We believe deeply in vaccinations. They are very important. Immunization is an important part of the protection we can give our young people. At the same time we believe we should consult with different groups, and our public health people should be the first we should consult with. We will take the next step, to discuss that with them.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a bit encouraging. One thing that we can all agree on is that vaccines save lives. What this government can't agree on is the process. The Education minister said that he's going to consult, but he was also ultimately passing to the Health minister the responsibility to work with the schools. This is certainly blurred communication. Again to the Premier: how can you come up with a credible plan to ensure children are immunized when your ministers can't agree?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, that's far from the truth. The fact of the matter is that we do agree. Immunization is very important. We do believe, though, that discussing with the public is an important step, not just mandating things without any public consultation.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's assume for a minute they do consult with Albertans about mandatory immunizations. We're still unsure which of the ministers is going to take the lead, what the consultation process will look like, and when a decision will be made. Albertans want to know when this government will put the health and safety of our children ahead of politics.

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we always put the health of our children ahead of everything, politics and everything else. The minister and I have talked, and we will work together to put together a program for consultation to discuss with our public health people to see what is the best way to do this. We think it's an important step, and we'll move forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. As the PCs frantically rush to nominate their slate of candidates, serious allegations have emerged about the conduct of certain candidates, including the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, who has been forced to resign from the cabinet. Far from being an internal party matter, this is an allegation of criminal activity. So far the only investigation into these allegations of criminal activity will be conducted by the PC Party. Will the Premier admit that the allegations of criminal activity should be referred to the police and not investigated by the same political party that is involved...

Speaker's Ruling Referring to Party Matters

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I think this matter has been clarified and has been nicely summed up as being contrary to parliamentary tradition here. It states here – I hope we've stopped the clock, Clerk, but I want to deal with this because I can see where this is going. It's been clarified by both the Premier, just now, and by the Minister of Justice that it is in fact an internal party matter, and there is a statement here that I'll refer you to in case this comes up some more so that we can stop the discussion on that, in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, and it clearly states here what questions should be all about or should not be all about. I'll refresh your memories quickly once right now. Further, "a question should not ... concern internal party matters, or party or election expenses."

I have let a few questions go already. Last week we heard three questions from your leader. Today we heard three questions from the Opposition House Leader, and now we're hearing another one, but at the time I conclude that this is a party matter as clarified.

I'll pass to the Minister of Justice if he wishes to reclarify, and if not, let's hear what your second supplemental might sound like. The hon. Minister of Justice. No? Okay. Thank you.

Let us move on, then. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Ms Notley: Point of order.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, let me ask this question. If someone inside a political party murdered somebody else in that political party, would it be ruled that it is an internal party matter and no questions are allowed?

The Speaker: Hon. member, you see, you've just illustrated the point why we don't perhaps allow internal party matters to come forward like this, and in this case I did allow some. So don't let's have any griping about this. I did allow some last week. I just allowed some now. I think the matter has been dealt with. You know where it's going. You know what's been undertaken. So I would ask you now to look at your third and final supplemental, please, and be cautious in the wording you use.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think it's settled.

This is a general question to the Premier. Does he not think that as Premier of the province he has a responsibility to ensure that allegations of a potentially criminal nature are investigated by the appropriate authorities and not brushed aside to be dealt with by a political party, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Justice, do you wish to clarify, please?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I wish I could rise on something new, but this again is an internal party matter, and that's where it should stay, outside of this Chamber.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's move on now to Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Calgary-Lougheed.

Long-term Care Beds for Seniors

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two hundred and eighty-seven thousand: that's the total number of alternate level of care bed days just this year. Every day 822 mostly seniors are not getting the right care in the right place by the right team, the main cause of long wait times, delayed and cancelled surgeries. A study released today by Dr. Donna Wilson at the University of Alberta shows that we actually need up to 20,000 more additional nursing care beds, not the 300 restorative spaces the PCs are promising. Why isn't the Health minister building the beds we need instead of making more promises just before an election?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have not seen the study. I have heard the numbers, and they're pretty wild. We will continue to do what we believe is best for the seniors in this province and those who need long-term care. We'll continue to develop the programs and the support systems that are necessary. We've had great leadership from the Minister of Seniors. This year alone, as the Premier noted, well over 2,500 beds we're going to be improving and building. So we'll continue to do what we need to do to meet the needs of Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The Health minister must be aware by now that Alberta Health Services' own figures put the average cost of a hospital bed at $777 a day compared to a long-term care bed, which is $170 a day, and, of course, much cheaper for home-care services. This PC government has no claim to fiscal or social responsibility, wasting $182 million last year by clogging up beds, 10 per cent of many of our hospitals.

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I can only say that this government is committed, and we're showing that by building more and more facilities. We care passionately about our seniors. We'll continue to build these facilities. The reality is that those people in need of this support will get it somewhere within our province, and we hope that we'll continue to build the long-term care beds. But if we do need to keep people in acute-care beds to ensure their safety and security and health, we will do that.

Dr. Swann: Well, that's precisely the problem. They're not safe and secure in the wrong place by the wrong team, Mr. Speaker.

Given that ambulances cannot transfer patients through to emergency because it's full and the ER is full because upstairs is full and the beds upstairs are full because this government has not built the long-term care beds needed, does the Health minister still not realize the severe lack of nursing home beds is harming every aspect of our health care system?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, we've committed to building a substantive number of beds, delivering beds today, building beds for tomorrow, and we'll continue to do that. We understand the challenges. That's why we put a program in place to add $50 million to improve our emergency departments. We understand some of the challenges. They're being dealt with, we think, efficiently, effectively, and we will continue to be committed to improving the care of Albertans in this province.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. leader of the ND opposition, did you have a point of order around 2:04, when the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood was speaking? Did you have a point of order or somebody there?

Mr. Eggen: Yes.

The Speaker: Yes, there is a point of order? Well, you'll let me know. Let me know if there is or if there isn't.

Let's move on to Calgary-Lougheed, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Seniors' Housing for Couples

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I often hear from my constituents in Calgary-Lougheed about the urgent need for more seniors' housing and care facilities. They're concerned that the human side of this issue may sometimes be overlooked in favour of numbers and statistics. I've heard stories of husbands and wives who've been together for decades but due to overcrowding or differing needs are placed into separate facilities in their golden years. My first question is to the Minister of Seniors. How do you respond to the criticism that we need to make better use of our existing infrastructure to ensure situations like these do not occur on a go-forward basis?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for his question. He's absolutely right. We need to make better use of all of our resources, and we are. The Premier's vision to put all of the housing elements into one ministry has created a much more efficient and effective way to deliver projects. This one-window approach has improved collaboration between departments, proponents, and community operators, which has led to lower cost projects that produce more spaces and innovative solutions to meet the needs of Alberta's seniors, including keeping couples together.

Mr. Rodney: My first supplementary question is to the same minister. Can he assure my constituents that seniors' housing is constructed and operated in a manner that puts families first so that divorce by nursing home becomes a thing of the past?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it's a very good point. Many of the spaces coming on stream are actually designed to keep couples together even if their individual care needs escalate or are different. Just last week I was at the Bethany care centre in Calgary to announce the new beds. Within a campus of care, a variety of care options on the same footprint within the same facility, we're seeing supportive and assisted living, independent living, dementia units, and long-term care or nursing home beds. This campus of care is exactly what the Premier has mandated us to do to ensure Alberta's parents and grandparents can age in place with their spouses and their loved ones in the communities that they helped build.

Mr. Rodney: My final question is to the same minister. Can he assure our most experienced Albertans that their needs will be high on the list of provincial priorities and that all of these recently announced seniors' facilities are actually going to get built despite current economic realities and challenges?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we're keeping our commitments. The money is in the budget. We announced last fall that we were building new spaces, and we moved quickly with facilities to get the work done. We'll see more than 2,600 new spaces come on stream, a thousand more than we anticipated with the same dollars. This success is because of the collaboration and the redesign under the new management that we spoke of earlier. We're moving today to get these spaces built, and I think that the member would agree that the assisted living and continuing care spaces for our seniors qualify as a critical need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently an internal letter from the Minister of Service Alberta to the Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council, better known as AMVIC, became public. Among other things the letter talked about misuse of enforcement tools and an inappropriate enforcement hearing that could be construed as illegal. A report into this situation is finished, but so far only the minister knows what took place. To the minister: what is going on within this government agency?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question, and I want to thank him for bringing some awareness to Service Alberta and the important work we do in protecting consumers. I'd like to address the question by saying that my position is that we support AMVIC. AMVIC is doing good work. We're currently undertaking a review, and the review is to help AMVIC do their jobs better.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, it's not so.

Again to the minister: given that AMVIC should fill an important role for Albertans by promoting trust and integrity in the province's motor vehicle industry and since you won't show Albertans what they deserve by releasing the report, will you do the right thing today and tell this House whether any government officials have broken the law or acted inappropriately?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, again I'd like to thank the hon. member for his question. Specifically to the report, we're currently working with the board chair and the board on the report. The report is a draft report. Once we have an indication of the board and where they're going with the report – we had a meeting with the board. It was a very collaborative meeting. We're quite happy with the results of our meeting. When we've given the board the appropriate time to get back to us, we'll look at making that report public.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Final supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. It's not a draft report, Minister.

Any actions that would violate the trust of Albertans and the morale of front-line workers should be brought to the light of day. Will you do the right thing, Minister, and reassure Albertans and immediately release the full report or a timeline for that?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I do want to correct the hon. member. The report is indeed a draft report. We're currently working with the board and the board chair. We're supporting them in their efforts to help and assist the operational side of AMVIC, and once we've gotten some feedback from the board, we'll take a look at making that report public.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Elk Population

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been receiving many calls on the extremely high elk population in my constituency of Grande Prairie-Smoky. The increased number of elk has caused a tremendous burden to the farmers on the land and fences that it has destroyed, and the crops that were once viable feeding sources are no longer. My question is to the Minister of ESRD. When is your department going to properly manage the harvesting of elk?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, we definitely recognize that this is a significant issue, and we're working towards balancing the needs of all users on the land, which includes sustaining healthy elk populations while limiting the impacts that they have on the livelihoods of ranchers and farmers. We are working through our draw system to encourage high levels of hunting for this particular species, and we'll continue to conduct aerial surveys to inform harvest goals and the effectiveness of our program and make adjustments as they're needed.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McDonald: Well, thank you. To the same minister: given that not only are the elk destroying the hay and the feeding sources, but they're now contaminating feeding areas, does your department have a compensation plan for the feeding areas and feeding tents?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Financial compensation is provided to producers through the wildlife damage compensation program delivered through Agriculture Financial Services Corporation. ESRD does consult with producers that are seeking financial compensation, as does fish and wildlife enforcement, and we'll continue to provide information, advice, and fencing materials to agricultural producers who need the help to protect their farm assets.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. McDonald: Well, thank you very much. Finally, to the same minister: is your department considering property-owner harvesting in timely areas of the harvesting season?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Yeah. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Landowners are eligible for special hunting tags to help reduce the elk populations that are affecting their property. They can apply for a landowners' special licence that enables them, if they were unsuccessful through the draw process, to harvest antlerless elk on their land. Applicants must own a minimum of a quarter section in a single parcel of a 160 acres, more or less, or be involved in the direct farming operations on that land.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

School Fees

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In Alberta every family – single parent, two parents, rich, or poor – pays a school fee for every child. Now, contrary to what the government would like Albertans to think, these school fees aren't for luxuries. They are for things like supervision of students at lunchtime and participation in fitness activities. When the government is boasting about low personal taxes, I bet they aren't mentioning this regressive tax on parents. To the Minister of Education: is the minister planning on dumping this regressive school tax, a tax specifically on parents of students?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, we take very seriously the role that local school boards play in providing quality education services to our students. It is up to local school boards to decide what fees they may or may not decide to apply to support their particular education programs. These are of course not to fund basic education services.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Back to the same minister. Well, given that the average school fee across Canada is $50 to $75 per student but Albertans pay an average of $286 per student, how does the minister justify his government's policy that allows local boards to not only tax parents but tax them at four to five times the rate of other Canadian provinces?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, I believe we lead the country or are almost at the top in the country in terms of the amount of money that this government provides to local school authorities to provide quality education to children. Now, we leave it up to the local boards to decide if they want to augment that funding for nonbasic educational activities for children, and that is important, that we provide that kind of local autonomy for boards. We respect them, and we're not going to engage in directing them in that regard.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: Well, you've got to kind of square that circle there, Minister, because you're saying that you're providing them with money but clearly not enough money because they are having to tax parents. Let's say parents of two kids: that would be $572 cash on the barrelhead every September. Or three kids: $858 cash up front every September. Clearly, the ministry is not providing school boards, schools, or parents enough money.

Mr. Dirks: Well, for the benefit of all members of the House the Education budget this year is about $7.6 billion. I said billion, Mr. Speaker. That's an increase of $413 million over the previous year, $38 million every day being spent to educate the children in Alberta. As I said earlier, we are at the high end in this country on how much we spend per student. We have a great education system that we can be proud of.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Energy Policies

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all know that the energy sector is hurting right now. Commodity prices remain low, market access remains a challenge, and the export of LNG from the west coast remains uncertain. We can act decisively and collaboratively with the governments of B.C. and Saskatchewan to enhance competitive advantage for all western Canadian energy stakeholders. My question is to the Minister of Energy. What is our government doing to advance these regional collaborations and their practical impacts on Alberta's competitiveness?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed true that it is critical, maybe even more so, in these times of low prices that we're able to access world markets and get world prices for our products. I can tell you that the department, indeed the entire government, is working very aggressively. That's right from the Premier, who's done work to renew the New West Partnership with British Columbia and Saskatchewan and has done work with Ontario and Quebec and the federal government, and through the work of our trade representatives, Jay Hill in the west and Rob Merrifield working in Washington and Ottawa. We have been very aggressive on this file.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: To the same minister: where is our government in the design and the implementation of a strategy to further stimulate the added value here in Alberta for natural gas liquids?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, value-added diversification is another item in my mandate letter. I think that the hon. member would be aware of the incremental ethane extraction program, which allowed for 91,000 barrels of incremental ethane to go as feedstock into the petrochemical industry right here in Alberta.

Wherever there are opportunities, we'll chase those. I'm looking at an opportunity in the propane value-added chain right at the moment.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: That makes me happy.

To the same minister: with the recent approval of the site C hydroelectricity dam in B.C., has there been any regional dialogue about upgrading Alberta's interties with B.C. to enhance our ability to import hydroelectricity?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the member would be aware that the Alberta Electric System Operator, or AESO – it's their job to ensure that Alberta has a robust, resilient, and effective electricity system. We do have a productive relationship with B.C., and we will ensure that steps are taken to expand interties where necessary. I can tell you that AESO is planning to work right now with B.C. Hydro on a discussion to identify mutual opportunities, including the possibility of new transmission. I'll also assure this House that we'll do so on a level playing field to ensure that our investor-driven market is . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Surgery Wait Times

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning the NDP released documents yet again showing a crisis in Alberta's hospitals. The overall number of cancelled surgeries in Alberta due to a shortage of hospital beds is up 30 per cent compared to the same time last year. That means more hips that don't get replaced, longer periods of time that Albertans suffer painful conditions, and more children on a roller coaster of anxiety over hospital visits. To the Minister of Health: will you admit that Albertans are being forced to pay a very painful price for your government's chronic neglect of our health care?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Any time in our province an individual's surgery is delayed or adjusted, we are very concerned because it does have a tremendous impact on their lives. But the statistics show that less than 1 per cent of our total of 158,000 people have had surgery cancelled this year. So we would like to have zero and will work towards that, but at this point in time .87 per cent is not different than other years.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that at the Stollery hospital the number of surgeries for children that are cancelled is on track to more than double this year and given that these delays are not due to the long-term care crisis that your government is responsible for but, rather, simply due to a shortage of acute-care beds for kids, to the Minister of Health: will you explain to those Alberta families why at the Stollery in 2014 142 more kids than the year before had to struggle with the pain and suffering that comes from having a surgery cancelled?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, our hearts and thoughts go out to those individuals, those families that went through that situation. It's not something we are comfortable with. We'll continue to work hard. But we had a 17 per cent increase in emergency surgeries last year, which helps drive up the numbers. We have a lot of people coming from outside the province. This main centre, the Stollery, is a wonderful facility. We're investing money in it, so we'll hope to reduce that next year, but a lot of times it depends on the year, the circumstances, and what drives the results.

Ms Notley: Well, it sounds like mismanagement to me.

Given that when parents take their child to the hospital for surgery, it's extremely stressful because they have to prepare their child for all the new, anxiety-provoking situations that entails and that to go back repeatedly for a surgery that gets postponed multiplies the stress and anxiety experienced by parents and their children and given that under your government's neglectful eye the number of cancelled children's surgeries at the Stollery has grown 100 per cent in the last year, why should Albertans trust you to protect any part of our health care system?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we feel the same way as the hon. member, that for any person that has to come to the hospital and that has surgery cancelled, it's a very traumatic experience. For a child it's even worse. We will as circumstances allow continue to expand operations at the various facilities. But the reality is that we've had a lot of pressure this year, with a 70 per cent increase in emergency surgeries, which does create some problems within the system. We'll continue to work with the families. We apologize for what has been done, but we will continue to work hard.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Open Data Portal Information Disclosure Policy

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Concerns have been raised about government plans to dump the freedom of information requests to the government open data portal once a week. Along with the concern of hiding information, the public has raised concerns about their private information being shared online. My question to the Minister of Service Alberta: what is being done to assure that the information of Albertans is not dumped online for all to see?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government stands by the fact that public information belongs to the public. Service Alberta is currently working on a public disclosure policy, and my ministry will be working in consultation with the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner to make sure that the rights of all Albertans are protected. Our draft policy is centred on sharing responses to general FOIP questions so that private information of Albertans is protected by the protocols of FOIP.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why is this government seemingly rushing to start off the process of simultaneous disclosure for FOIP responses? Is there something this government is trying to hide?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The short answer is: absolutely not. A strong public disclosure policy will offer transparency to all Albertans, and that's the absolute opposite of hiding. A FOIP is considered public information, and we are providing that information to the public. When our policy is finalized, we'll ensure that there is sufficient time for applicants such as media to receive their responses before the responses go public.

Mr. Quadri: To the same minister: the FOIP Act review has been discussed for nearly two years now. When will we see some actual results?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for the question. It's a good question. The FOIP Act, as we all know, was implemented in 2002, and since that time technology and public data have changed considerably. Substantial work is already completed on analyzing the impact of proposed changes in the review. We'll continue our work with Justice and Solicitor General as well as consultation with the office of the Privacy Commissioner. Service Alberta will continue to work hard on the review, and we trust that in the upcoming months we'll have a lot of good work to show Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, this morning we learned that the Ministry of Human Services decides whether or not to investigate the deaths of children in care without proper guidelines or oversight. Isn't it time that we stopped playing bureaucratic games with both reporting and investigating the deaths of children in care? To the Minister of Human Services: why have you failed to properly investigate the deaths of all children in care and to protect vulnerable children from suffering the same fate in the future?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the death of a child in care is one too many. I can assure you that every critical incident or death is examined internally and externally depending on the situation, internally with respect to the statutory director and, of course, externally with the good work of the Child and Youth Advocate, the council of quality assurance, the Family Violence Death Review Committee, the chief medical officer, and the Fatality Review Board, if necessary.

Mr. Eggen: Well, given that with all of these layers of potential investigation I wonder how come the job is still not being done properly and given that delays in reporting children's deaths in government care only serve to make a bad situation even worse, to the minister again: how can you claim to be properly investigating the deaths of children in care when it isn't even clear that deaths were properly reported months after they happened?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, every critical incident or death is examined internally and externally. I have to say that the implementation oversight committee, headed by Tim Richter, has done a lot of great work – a lot of great work – that we have started and will continue. We are the leader. Alberta is a leader in public transparency and disclosure, and we will continue to do that.

Mr. Eggen: Really, Mr. Speaker, given that you, Madam Minister, preside over such a confused and murky internal system of dealing with the deaths of children in care and given that you have an independent officer of the Legislature, the Child and Youth Advocate, staring us all in the face, who could do the job properly, to the Minister of Human Services again: why don't you reverse the cuts that you made to the Child and Youth Advocate, empower them to investigate the deaths of children in care, and put this matter to rest?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Working with the Child and Youth Advocate on a regular basis is very important to me. The work he does is absolutely critical, as I have mentioned previously. If there's a need to enhance and refresh what we're doing already with respect to oversight and quality assurance, we will continue to do that. I will continue to support the Child and Youth Advocate, with the good work that he does, through my ministry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Wildlife-human Coexistence in Southwestern Alberta

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The constituency of Cardston-Taber-Warner contains some of the richest farming and ranching areas in our province. The beautiful Waterton biosphere reserve is on the west end of my riding, and it is home to farming, ranching, and many species of wildlife, including large carnivores. To the Minister of ESRD: what programs are in place to protect both the wildlife as well as the people who make their living raising grain and livestock in this area?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, Alberta has the wildlife predator compensation program in place, that provides financial compensation to livestock producers who suffer wildlife-caused predation and injury to livestock as well as shot-dead livestock. Alberta also operates the problem wildlife program, which provides intercept feeding, fencing, bale wrapping, and hazing for wildlife that causes depredation problems on agricultural land, infrastructure, and feed.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that wildlife is a natural resource and an asset to all Albertans and visitors, it seems unfair that the farmers and ranchers in this part of my riding should have to bear – pun intended – as much of the cost of predator kills as they currently do. What is the minister going to do to provide adequate, reliable, timely, and predictable compensation to these hard-working people and their families?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, I would agree. This program should be easy and straightforward for ranchers and farmers. We do work with the predator compensation committee to identify ways to proactively manage predator-related livestock mortality. We're developing program efficiencies between agencies to ensure that the livestock owners are fairly compensated using current market averages. Once these processes and working relationships are streamlined, you will see more efficient investigations, and payment processing will occur faster.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the predator-kill compensation system works well some of the time but too often leaves producers holding the bag, the Waterton Biosphere Reserve Association has provided you with useful and fair recommendations. Will the minister please tell us when all of these recommendations will be implemented?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Yeah, Mr. Speaker. In fact, these recommendations were discussed at the last predator compensation committee meeting, that happened this past February. Some of these recommendations will be implemented once a draft policy and program are defined later on in this year, so we are trying to make progress on these recommendations.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Municipal Funding

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. In 2007 the government promised municipalities that they would receive a pot of money worth over $11 billion over 10 years. Now, just a few years later Premier Stelmach changed it to a promise of $1.4 billion every year to ensure stable, consistent funding for municipalities, and then Premier Redford one-upped him and promised to make it $1.6 billion every year. Well, it's all a fantasy 'cause we've never come anywhere close to those figures. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why does the government continue to shortchange their promise to municipalities?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question, especially as we have our friends here today from AUMA and AAMD and C in the gallery. It's nice to have them here with us.

Mr. Speaker, this government takes the MSI funding very seriously: for municipalities, an $11.3 billion commitment. We have delivered over $6 billion with that. We continue to work with our municipalities on important infrastructure for them, on the MSI.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. I'm really interested that the minister quoted the $1.3 billion figure, yet all the press releases that came out recently were talking about $1.6 billion. So she's no longer including the basic municipal grant as part of that money?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad that the member asked the question. What I quoted was the $11.3 billion, the whole MSI funding, and of that $11.3 billion $6 billion has been delivered in both infrastructure and operating dollars.

Ms Blakeman: All right. As part of the last election campaign the then Premier, a lot of them, promised that the MSI grant would be extended and would be around until 2023. Is the government standing behind that promise?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government, today's government, under new management has made the commitment as well to make sure that the $11.3 billion for MSI funding is there for the municipalities. These are our partners; we value their partnership. The Premier has signed an MOU with AUMA, AAMD and C, and the two large-city mayors with charters. This is a government and a Premier that are honouring these commitments and are working with our valued municipal partners.

School Construction

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, as we all know, oil prices have dropped dramatically over the past six months. As a province we're looking at somewhere near a $7 billion shortfall in the budget. Clearly, spending will be reduced. It should be reduced. However, there were some promises made that we absolutely must honour. No matter where we sit in here, we know there is a great need for new schools in this province. To the Minister of Infrastructure, the man on the hot seat for this: will you commit to Albertans that these schools are a priority and will be built as promised?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. Yes, in short, the schools will be built. We have a number of organizations that are coming out and saying that capital spending in private industry is going to go down as a result of oil prices, but what the public can know is that this is a great opportunity for us to invest in our public infrastructure, to build the schools we need, and, potentially at this point in time, save some dollars while we're doing it.

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Committing to building these schools is absolutely a priority. However, many people are skeptical that the timeline is going to be pushed back, that the construction period will be delayed because of the shortfall in funding. To the same minister: can you assure Albertans that this is not the case? Will you build these schools on the timeline that you promised?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said in this House before, phase 1 schools were announced in 2011, opened in 2014, three years later. Last week we had 39 schools on which tenders had closed and contracts have been awarded. This week, as of right now we have 45 schools from phase 2 where contracts have been awarded.

2:40

Mr. McAllister: My final question, Mr. Speaker, is for the Minister of Education. Minister, I'll be the last person to criticize the government for cutting spending and being fiscally responsible. I think we all know that that is a priority given the provincial financial reality. However, we do not want this to affect our kids in the classroom, and that is the bottom line regardless of where we sit. Can the Minister of Education assure us that whatever is done in the Education portfolio will not trickle down and affect our kids in the class?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier to members in the Assembly today, I believe that our annual budget this year for Education is about $7.6 billion. So we are committed; this is indicative of our commitment to investment in education so our children have every opportunity. We take seriously our responsibility to support students and do so in a fiscally prudent manner. Alberta's education system is, in fact, one of the best in the world, and we all ought to be proud of our education system. Once our new budget is released, members will see that we continue to work with our stakeholders.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Stony Plain.

In Vitro Fertilization

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Becoming a parent is one of the greatest joys in life, but out of necessity some of our families have to turn to in vitro fertilization to conceive. Unfortunately, oversight of fertility clinics in Alberta is lacking. Oversight is lacking, and there's no standardized fee structure. In fact, some clinics may be denying treatment because of skin colour, according to recent reports, while some families just don't have the financial means. To the minister: will you commit to ensuring that families who require in vitro fertilization will have reasonable access to treatment?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, those kinds of issues we'll leave between their doctor and the individual. We do offer programs and support for people. We encourage them to speak with their doctor about how they can access the things that we allow in the province of Alberta.

Dr. Swann: I'm talking about supplemental public funding, Mr. Minister.

Given that the public health funds for these services actually reduce costs to the health system because they reduce the number of premature infants and multiple births, is the minister considering providing public funding for IVF? If not, why not?

Mr. Mandel: In this period of time, Mr. Speaker, we have tremendous demands on our system, and we'll continue to deliver the services that we have committed to, but looking at expanding those services at this point in time is very difficult given the current restraints.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, given the media reports that some physicians may be refusing treatment based on skin colour, will the government tell us that they are investigating the matter and tell us how it plans to ensure that there's no discrimination in these services?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I will keep that under advisement. If that is the case, this is not something this government or any government should tolerate.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. The time for Oral Question Period has expired. In 30 seconds from now we will continue with the second members' statement, and we'll hear from Cypress-Medicine Hat.

The Speaker: Let us begin, then, with Cypress-Medicine Hat – you have two minutes – followed by Little Bow.

Government Accountability

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like most Albertans, I was shocked when this Premier told me and everyone else to go look in a mirror over our fiscal challenges. After all, Albertans didn't plunge Alberta back into debt or waste taxpayers' hard-earned money. Albertans didn't run up massive deficits or loot our savings accounts for future generations. Albertans didn't run the most expensive government in Canada. Albertans didn't usher in an era of unprecedented waste and entitlement. The members opposite did.

Albertans worked hard to do their best for our province. I don't know what kind of Albertans the Premier knows, but the Albertans I know have worked their fingers to the bone holding our province together when this PC government's waste and entitlement was threatening to tear it apart. Here in the Official Opposition we thank Albertans for their hard work, Mr. Speaker. We thank them for their honesty, their determination, and their will to succeed despite this PC government. We don't blame them for political inconvenience.

I won't rush to judgment, though; maybe the Premier's mirror is broken. But his comments beg the questions: what does he see when he looks in the mirror? Does he see the members of his caucus who are caught misusing taxpayer resources? Does he see the masterminds behind sky palace, Tobaccogate, the Olympic trip, or government planes? Does he see the members currently facing serious accusations of bullying and bribing grassroots supporters? He must not since he gave these very same members glowing endorsements. Or maybe he knows he's wrong, but he's just looking to place the blame somewhere it doesn't belong.

Either way, this Premier is showing he doesn't have the right stuff to lead. After all, real leaders don't blame their mistakes on others; they take the blame.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Agricultural Safety Week

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm honoured to rise in recognition of Canadian Agricultural Safety Week. Each year the Canadian Agricultural Safety Association along with the government and other partners dedicate a week in March to enhance awareness of safe farm practices. This year's theme is Be the Difference. It encourages individuals, organizations, and communities to make a difference in ensuring Canadian farms are a safe place to work and live.

The government of Alberta is currently piloting the Alberta farm safe plan, a tool to help farmers implement health and safety systems on their farms. The plan is expected to be available to all farmers later this year.

Education is critical to support farm safety and prevent incidents. Last May we launched an online farm safety directory that includes a comprehensive list of contacts to provide farm safety awareness, education, and training. Through the Growing Forward 2 program we also have funding initiatives to enhance farm safety education awareness, including programs directed to rural children and young farm workers.

The Ministry of Agriculture and Rural Development continues to provide funding for the Farm Safety Centre to encourage the safety smarts farm programs to deliver to all rural school-aged children. The ministry is also working with the Farm Safety Centre on pilot projects for the Alberta sustainable farm family program, which provides farm workers and their families additional tools to effectively manage their well-being and their safety.

Mr. Speaker, Agricultural Safety Week is an excellent opportunity to provide awareness, to provide some of the important safety programs that are going on here in Alberta. I encourage all producers and their families to keep safety in their minds every day and have a solid safety farm plan to ensure their family is safe where they work and live and to make sure all their employees are treated the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Big Brothers Big Sisters of Lacombe and District

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all know the importance of youth in Alberta. They are our next leaders. They will be our teachers, our front-line caregivers, our innovators, and our lawmakers. Our youth excel in a range of areas, whether it be academic excellence, attending one of Alberta's fine educational institutions, or through a sport, trade, activity, or charity.

There is one organization, however, that I would like to highlight and talk about the amazing work that they are doing in my constituency, the constituency of Lacombe-Ponoka, because without this organization many of our youth would not have been able to hone their skills or gain the confidence that they now exude. It is the Big Brothers Big Sisters of Lacombe and District. This wonderful group has been serving youth in central Alberta now for 26 years.

Proudly funded by the community initiatives program grant and generous support from the community, there are currently 83 youth enrolled in this positive mentoring program that Big Brothers Big Sisters offers. Some of the programs that they have include community and in-school mentoring, Kids 'n' Kops police mentoring, as well as subsidies for kids going to camp.

This has meant Big Brothers Big Sisters has been widely recognized, winning multiple local, provincial, and national awards. Among these are the Alberta Solicitor General crime prevention award in 2010, the Chamber of Commerce charity of the year award, and the national Big Brothers Big Sisters of Canada team spirit award. This amazing team of 90 volunteers helps kids in the Lacombe area and the wider region reach their fullest potential.

Every child that needs a mentor will have a mentor, Mr. Speaker. Big Brothers Big Sisters will continue to mould the minds of our youth, creating the leaders of tomorrow. This organization really is the little engine that could.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Edmonton-Manning.

Waterton Biodiversity Reserve

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Located in the south-western corner of Alberta in my riding of Cardston-Taber-Warner is the Waterton biosphere reserve, WBR, one of only 16 biosphere reserves in Canada. It encompasses some of the most spectacular, ecologically diverse landscapes in the Canadian Rockies and prairie grasslands. Designated in 1979 by UNESCO, the WBR fosters and encourages a sustainable, community-based regional economy with quality biodiversity, landscape, and social values.

Biosphere reserves are recognized internationally for demonstrating practical approaches to balancing biodiversity conservation and sustainable human use of the land. The Waterton biosphere reserve includes a protected 505 square kilometre core area in Waterton Lakes national park but extends well beyond the national park to include the buffer zone of surrounding private ranch, farm, and residential land and a broad transition zone that supports many people in a wide range of economic activities.

Currently the transition zone includes the MD of Pincher Creek, Cardston county, and Crowsnest Pass, including the Piikani and Kainai reserves and a portion of the Rocky Mountain forest reserve. Here the goal of sustainable resource use is explored and encouraged through research, education, and community-based planning. Land use in the buffer and transition zones is not regulated or restricted in any way by having the biosphere status.

Over the last 30 years volunteers working on behalf of the WBR have supported our communities in many practical ways by providing funding and support for projects, forums, and research that address local land management concerns.

The Waterton biosphere reserve is a living demonstration of the value we place on our natural and cultural resources, our traditional livelihoods, and our commitment to work together as good stewards of the land we hope to pass on to future generations.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Multicultural Seniors' Housing

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak about something that is truly important to my constituents of Edmonton-Manning, our seniors. Our seniors worked hard to make Alberta a great place, the great province that it is today, and we must ensure that they are able to continue living independent and fulfilling lives.

Alberta is a multicultural place that's blessed with a multitude of people from many cultures who bring with them a diverse range of traditions. Several family members in Edmonton-Manning have suggested a great idea. Since many of their elderly parents cannot speak English, they would like to see more workers hired who can speak their mother tongue. Their vision for their parents' care would be one that is culturally familiar to them, where they can find a menu that caters to the tastes of their homelands.

Mr. Speaker, I know that our government is one that is inclusive and respectful to the needs of all its citizens, and I hope that this multicultural initiative is one that can be considered in greater detail as a possible alternative for our seniors.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 19

Education Amendment Act, 2015

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, I ask for leave to introduce a bill, and the bill is Bill 19.

If I could just make some brief comments. Bill 19, Education Amendment Act, 2015, is the title of this legislation that, through a series of amendments, will assist in ensuring that the Education Act is, upon its proclamation, successful in focusing education on the student and supporting educational choice, enabling school boards to be more collaborative and responsive to their students. During the process of finalizing the Education Act regulations, a process that's nearing completion, a series of amendments were identified by legislative drafters' legal services as required for the act. Bill 19 does not change the intention of the Education Act; the amendments are largely administrative in nature, with the purpose of providing increased clarity and accuracy, ensuring alignment with other legislation. This bill is a result of due diligence in ensuring that the Education Act will be effective in serving the long-term needs of Alberta's students.

With that, I ask for leave to move first reading of this bill.

The Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Bill 20 Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today and request leave to introduce Bill 20, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015.

The Municipal Government Act, or the MGA, creates the framework in which municipalities operate. It impacts every Albertan, the private sector, and every ministry in government in one form or another. Mr. Speaker, the world we live in has changed since the MGA was first proclaimed in 1995. The act is in need of updating to reflect changes in technology, new economic realities, and evolving municipal roles and responsibilities. The proposed amendments are the result of extensive public consultation and collaboration with municipal partners and stakeholders. This is the first set of amendments coming from the MGA review process. These changes have broad support from the municipal associations, the cities of Calgary and Edmonton, and key business and industry associations.

I look forward to speaking more about this legislation. I'm proud to table Bill 20, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015, and I move that the bill be read for the first time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 206, the Childhood . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interject here. The Minister of Human Services has caught my attention, and I believe there is a supplemental motion here.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move pursuant to Standing Order 75 that Bill 20, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

The Speaker: Thank you. Apologies for not catching your eye sooner.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: I believe that now we can move on.

Bill 206 Childhood Comprehensive Eye Examination Act

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I request leave to introduce Bill 206, the Childhood Comprehensive Eye Examination Act, or CCEE Act.

Bill 206 would ensure that children of school age are set up for success by requiring a comprehensive eye exam by grade 1. The CCEE Act could help reduce potential learning and behavioural difficulties that affect children with visual impairments. As we know, more than 25 per cent of school-aged children have vision problems that can limit their potential in all aspects of learning and life. Thanks to the work of initiatives like the Eye See . . . Eye Learn program, more children are getting their eyes examined. Still many children in Alberta begin school without a comprehensive eye exam.

Mr. Speaker, you need to read to succeed, and Bill 206 is an important step to ensuring that children in our families and communities across Alberta have the tools to succeed in the classroom and in life. After all, children are Alberta's most important priority.

I move that the bill be read a first time.

The Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 206 read a first time]

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I've had a flurry of notes here, but I have to recognize the Government House Leader given the time on the clock.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to ask unanimous consent of the Chamber that we can continue the Routine past 3 p.m. notwithstanding rule 7(7).

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: I believe we have unanimous consent to proceed, so let's go to the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

3:00

Bill 207 Independent Budget Officer Act

Mrs. Forsyth: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise here today to introduce Bill 207, the Independent Budget Officer Act.

After 22 years in the Legislature, Mr. Speaker, this will be my last private member's bill that I will introduce. I don't know if that's good or bad. If passed, this legislation would establish an independent budget officer reporting to the Legislature. Its mandate is to provide independent analysis to the Leg. Assembly about the state of Alberta finances, including the budget and quarterly updates and the trend in the provincial and national economies. When requested by a committee of the Leg., the independent budget officer would undertake research for the committee into Alberta's finances and economy. He would also be empowered to investigate cost estimates of government proposals at the request of members of this Legislature. At a time when confusion has never been greater over the state of Alberta finances, the independent budget officer would bring clarity and credibility to the numbers.

I sincerely hope to receive the support of all members of this House on this important piece of legislation, and I am honoured to move first reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 207 read a first time]

The Speaker: Just before we proceed with the next item of business, could I have your unanimous consent to revert briefly for one introduction of guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Whitecourt-St. Anne, would you proceed.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you visitors here today to listen to the debate on Bill 203: from the Alberta Forest Products Association CEO and President Paul Whittaker; Brock Mulligan, director of communications from the Alberta Forest Products Association; Rory Koska, technical adviser with Wood Works!; Jim Rivait, the chief executive officer with the Canadian Home Builders' Association of Alberta; and T.J. Keil, the external relations manager with CHBA. I'd ask them to stand and be recognized.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: We'll begin with Edmonton-Centre, followed by Calgary-McCall. We have several today.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three sets for the leader of the third party, the Liberal caucus, and one set for myself. The first is with regard to question 4, that the leader asked regarding immunization.

The second tabling is called What Is the Right Number of Nursing Home Beds for Alberta? – 20,000 More, authored by Donna Wilson, a professor at the University of Alberta; Ryan Brow; Robyn Playfair; and Harpreet Gill.

The third tabling is actually three different articles, all on the 18th question, that was asked by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. They are all articles on in vitro fertilization clinics from the Globe and Mail, CBC news, and more CBC news.

The tabling that I have, Mr. Speaker, is from a constituent, Susan Cake, who is writing with her concerns particularly about the promises that were made by the Premier when he was running for election as the leader of the party opposite. She's deeply concerned that the Premier "is backpedaling on his promise to restore funding" and undercutting her belief in politicians. She feels very strongly that "increases in tuition are not the fix for this situation" and that neither are market modifiers.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week it was an auspicious occasion when the Minister of Infrastructure made the announcement on the status of promised new schools. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of an award of excellence on behalf of Albertans to the PC government for schools not built. Since the Minister of Infrastructure is not here to accept his award, I will send his award to the Minister of Education.

The Speaker: I understand that the tabling from Calgary-Mountain View has been dealt with, so let us move on to Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, you wish to cover both?

Mr. Bilous: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you'll indulge me, I'll make my tabling, followed by the tabling on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter between myself and Reid Hamula, a constituent of Edmonton-

Beverly-Clareview who wrote to me about his struggles living as an AISH recipient who has had his CPP disability deducted from his monthly benefits. I am tabling this document in hope that it'll raise awareness of the unfair PC policies in the AISH and WCB programs.

Mr. Speaker, my second tabling. On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a sworn declaration addressed to the Premier that alleges that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie attempted to bribe a member of his constituency association to withdraw his name as a candidate for the nomination in the member's constituency. While it is acknowledged that these claims haven't been proven in court . . .

Mr. Denis: Point of order.

Mr. Bilous: . . . we call on the government to appoint a special prosecutor or refer this matter to the police.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I heard a point of order during a tabling, which is a bit rare, but let me hear what you're . . .

Mr. Denis: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I believe you ruled earlier on this. I rise in accordance with 23(h), (i), (j), and (l) but also the citation you talked about dealing with party matters. I believe this tabling to be out of order, and I would ask you to rule accordingly.

The Speaker: Okay. I was just looking it up, in fact, and that's what distracted me momentarily. We'll deal with this at the appropriate time. Thank you.

Hon. members, I believe we have two points of order, one that was raised during Oral Question Period at approximately 2:04. I'm not sure that they wish to proceed, because I haven't heard otherwise, but could I recognize the hon. leader of the ND opposition? I'm assuming you wish to proceed with the point of order, so proceed and raise your citation, and we'll move from there.

Point of Clarification

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, on behalf of the ND opposition House leader I rise pursuant to section 13(2) to ask the following question. This is with respect, of course, to the Speaker's ruling around internal party matters, what is and is not.

Given that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood was attempting to ask the Solicitor General about the appointment of a special prosecutor, a matter which is solely and squarely within the scope of his ministerial responsibility, and given that the precedent of the Saskatchewan Conservative Party a decade ago demonstrates that party activity can also amount to criminal behaviour by cabinet ministers in certain cases and given that the issue is not what a question touches on but actually, rather, that the issue is about the primary focus of the question and given that the focus in this case is the degree to which the people of Alberta can be assured that any criminal investigation which may arise out of the allegations made against a former member of cabinet will be conducted under the advice of a clearly independent special prosecutor, can the Speaker please explain why he shut down a line of questioning which dealt with prosecutorial independence simply because the alleged criminal behaviour occurred in relation to activity within the PC Party?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, this member I have a great deal of respect for. She's legally trained, and she's got many more years at the bar than I do. That being said, I'm really shocked at her argument here.

There are two clear delineations here. First off, dealing with criminal activity, when I had the difficult task of reporting someone who used to serve in this Chamber to the RCMP, of course, we then appointed a special prosecutor from Ontario for exactly the reason that she enunciates. It's a perceptual issue, but it's also an operational issue. But, again, that only deals, Mr. Speaker, with criminal activity. This is a party matter. There has been no charge laid. There is no investigation, to the best of my knowledge, so the bottom line is: yes, we would appoint a special prosecutor if this were a criminal matter. As this member well knows, this is a party matter. There have been no charges laid, and there is no investigation, to the best of my knowledge, at this point.

Mr. Speaker, you ruled on this on Thursday, but this member continues to persist. I would suggest that this point is out of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. Briefly, please.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Government House Leader cannot have it both ways here. There are allegations of a criminal offence. There are allegations. That's important to note, that the evidence is strictly an allegation. This opposition has an unfettered right to ask the government about any type of allegation, particularly when there is no investigation, there is no criminal complaint, but it does affect the operation of the actual government.

Now, you have a privilege, once it's under investigation, to say that it is now within the judicial system – I understand that – but it's not there. So to ask the government whether or not they're going to investigate or whether or not this is going to be put to the proper authority is the right of the opposition. There is no privilege defence against a criminal act. The location of the criminal activity, any alleged criminal activity, is irrelevant, whether it's internal to the party or whether it's out on the street. It's the allegation that affects the government that the opposition has a right to question and ask the government what it intends to do.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, and I believe that will conclude our speakers list on this point.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, I rise today on a very serious matter. Everyone in this House knows that these allegations have not been proven, and the member has denied them, but these are allegations of a criminal offence. I would submit that this principle should govern in a scenario like this. It does not matter if a political party is involved. A potential criminal activity should trump any political party aspect in this regard. In other words, if there's some type of criminality involved, even if it involves a political party, that should be subject to debate here in this Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, by shutting down this line of questioning, it is outside of any possible precedent that our staff could find across Canada. You would be ruling in a way that no other jurisdiction – every other jurisdiction would allow this question to be asked. It's only your ruling here today that is inconsistent with that precedent.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, as well, when members here receive information that's very serious, whether it's coming from outside of a political party or from the public, the same principle applies. If it's a very serious matter, we can deal with it here in this Legislature. What your ruling does is that it essentially shields the government from any questioning, where a government official puts on a party hat and says: no, you can't question me here in this Legislature. This is unprecedented. It would be the only jurisdiction in Canada where we couldn't ask this question.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I heard that there was a point of order. I'm not sure exactly if the point of order that was being requested at the time or has since been attempted for clarification is with respect to more of a clarification of the ruling that I made earlier. I'm going to accept it that way because, as you know, you can't really raise a point of order against the Speaker, so you were careful in how you phrased that. Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills went a little bit further, but I'll deal with that in a moment.

Nonetheless, this request for clarification is more just that than it is a point of order, so I'll make a couple of comments in that respect. One is that when today's issue arose, it was brought up by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. It was very clear in what he said, and I have the Blues in front of me, which, assuming their accuracy amongst other things, attribute the following words to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood: "So far the only investigation into these allegations of criminal activity will be conducted by the PC Party."

At that point he immediately had my attention because, as you well know because it's been said so many times in this House, you should not be raising questions that have anything to do with internal party matters. That's the point that I raised, and I cautioned members about that last Thursday. I gave you the citation today, and I, in fact, read it today. They should not go into internal party matters, or we would be here potentially dealing with all four parties and their issues. Can you imagine if other members started raising points to do with your party?

I understand the gravity of the allegations, but they are being dealt with, I'm told by the Premier today in question period and by the Government House Leader today, as an internal party matter. As such, that means that House of Commons Procedure and Practice page 504, which I will not take time to read again, applies. I hope that clarifies that and that having alerted you to that last week would have stood today, particularly since it was from the same party that raised it on Thursday for the first time. These are allegations, and we know how serious they are.

Secondly, I would just further my brief clarification by referring all members to page 636, which is also in the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, with respect to ruling on a point of order, and here for your short emolument and edification is the following statement on page 636.

Ruling on a Point of Order

The Speaker has the duty to preserve order and decorum and to decide any matter of procedure that may arise. The Chair is bound to call the attention of the House to an irregularity in debate or procedure immediately, without waiting for the intervention of a Member. In addition, the Speaker decides questions of order once they have arisen and not in anticipation. Though raised on a point of order, hypothetical queries on procedure cannot be addressed to the Speaker nor may constitutional questions or questions of law.

When a point of order is raised, the Speaker attempts to rule on the matter immediately. However, if necessary, the Speaker may take the matter under advisement and come back to the House later with a formal ruling. In doubtful cases, the Speaker may also allow discussion on the point of order before coming to a decision but the comments must be strictly relevant to the point raised.

And then it goes on and talks about other authorities. You can read the rest for yourselves.

Suffice it to say that I have clarified this now, and I hope I don't have to clarify it again for anybody tomorrow. We understand the gravity of the situation. I did allow the questions. I listened very intently last Thursday to every single word that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona phrased and found those to be okay. They didn't break any rules as such. Today it was clear by the member's own admission that he was dealing with an internal party matter.

So that brings that point of clarification to a close, and the matter is now concluded and ended. Thank you.

I believe there was another point of order that the Minister of Justice had. Did you have another?

Point of Order Tabling Documents

Mr. Denis: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think you've spoken mostly on this. I rise, again, on 23(h), (i), (j), and (l) but also House of Commons Procedure and Practice page 504, that you've enunciated. The tabling from the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, again, deals with a party matter, and it is highly irregular to table legal documents in this Chamber. I would suggest that these tablings are, respectfully, out of order.

The Speaker: I'll have a look at that. I don't know that there's anything illegal about what was tabled, but I want to review the wording and the content. So I'll reserve judgment on this until tomorrow, and maybe there'll be some clarification required on that. Otherwise, they will be allowed to stand as they are. However, should it be necessary, I will come back to the House with another comment on this tomorrow.

Mr. Saskiw: Will we have the opportunity to argue on this point? Are you going to make a determination tomorrow? Can we make a submission on this today, or will you allow us the opportunity to make the submission tomorrow?

The Speaker: Please allow me the time to at least look at the Blues. As I indicated, I was looking up the very point on that ruling during the tabling, and I was caught a bit off guard by it. So I do want to review it, and then I'll let you know the procedure tomorrow. Okay? Thank you very much.

Let us move on, then.

Orders of the Day Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 203 Safety Codes (Sustainable Structures) Amendment Act, 2014

The Chair: I recognize the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It is indeed my pleasure to speak to Bill 203, Safety Codes (Sustainable Structures) Amendment Act, 2014. I would like to thank the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne for his leadership in bringing forward this legislation to allow six-storey wood buildings in Alberta. This bill has helped to drive the adoption of six-storey wood building requirements as part of the Alberta building and fire codes. Alberta is now at the forefront of evidence-based standards for six-storey wood buildings because of the initiative of the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne and his leadership. Six-storey wood buildings combine the very best of safety standards, environmental sustainability, affordability, and innovation.

I am pleased to table today a draft amendment to Bill 203 that helps to clarify the importance of the regulations under the Safety Codes Act. This draft amendment calls for six-storey wood buildings to be constructed in accordance with the regulations under the Safety Codes Act. Mr. Chair, would you like me to wait before I read out the amendment?

The Chair: Just pause, hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Absolutely.

The Chair: We'll have the amendment distributed. Being the first amendment, this will be A1.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you.
Should I proceed, Mr. Chair?

The Chair: Yes, please.

Mrs. McQueen: Okay. I move that Bill 203, Safety Codes (Sustainable Structures) Amendment Act, 2014, be amended in section 2 by striking out the proposed section 65.1 and substituting the following:

Wood construction
65.1 A building that is 6 storeys or less in building height may be of wood construction if the building meets the requirements of this Act.

With this amendment the Ministry of Municipal Affairs strongly supports Bill 203, recognizing the demand for six-storey wood construction across the nation. The technical building requirements are published in the Alberta building code, which comes into force starting May 1, 2015. A wide range of code, building, fire service, engineering, and other experts developed these codes through the National Research Council. The proposed amendment ensures these structures will be constructed based on the work of these experts.

Some of the specific safety measures that will be mandatory with this type of building construction include protection during construction of the building. One of the leading causes of fire at construction sites is arson. The additional items outlined in the national standards for six-storey buildings will further enhance the security of the construction site against unauthorized entry and help reduce the risks of intentional or accidental ignition after hours, when arson is most common.

Mandatory sprinkler systems to protect against high-intensity residential fires, which were adopted in the national building code. The application of the sprinkler system was expanded to areas such as attics and balconies.

Street access to the building. Another safety measure that would be mandatory for this type of building construction is a requirement for at least one street access to the building. This provides emergency responders with increased ability to access the building's exterior and interior, and it could help limit the spread of fire.

Fire rating of roof assembly. Typically in sprinklered buildings the roof assembly is not required to be provided with a fire-resistance rating. However, for six-storey wood buildings the fire-resistance rating for the roof would be not less than one hour. This means that the materials used in the construction of the roof will provide protection from flame and heat for a period of at least one hour based on tested conditions. This limits the risk that a rapidly developing fire will spread to the roof space, which could lead to the spread of fire to an adjacent space or building.

Structure and earthquake design. These standards would reduce the risk of building sway and shear force such as stress on the building walls caused by seismic activity, that can lead to building collapse.

Ceiling and drainage. The standards would also require designers to consider wood shrinkage in their designs. This will protect against moisture penetration of the wall and roof system or the building envelope, which is the exterior shell of the building. This means that the ceiling and drainage requirements of six-storey buildings will have increased protection.

Emergency power. The duration of emergency power for fire alarm and emergency lighting would also be increased from 30 minutes to one hour for buildings.

As Minister of Municipal Affairs my first priority under the Safety Codes Act and the Alberta building code is the public safety of all Albertans. I wish to emphasize that these changes in no way affect the choice of designers and builders to build with other materials such as concrete or masonry. This is simply another choice that the Alberta building code will provide.

Again I would like to thank the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne for his initiative and leadership on this important legislation.

Mr. Chairman, you have the copies of this draft amendment to be passed out, which you have done. I thank members for the opportunity to speak on this matter.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll look to any speakers from the opposition.

Mr. Kang: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have heard discussions on this before, and the concern was the firefighters fighting fires, you know, in case the building is on fire. I think with this amendment we can address that, but still there will be concern about fires. That's my only concern about this bill. Otherwise, I fully support this bill. I said that last time, too. This will bring in affordable housing, a demand for lumber, and will create more jobs.

I support the bill, but my concern is with fire only. I think this will address the fire issue somewhat. It may not address it to my satisfaction, but I can still support this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: Okay. I'll recognize next the hon. minister of . . .

Mr. Fawcett: I'll wait till the bill is amended.

The Chair: Okay. So on the amendment. Any other speakers on the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Now back to the main bill.

The hon. Minister of ESRD, followed by the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Fawcett: Yes. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Unless I have some opposition in between.

Please proceed, hon. minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Oh, yeah. Okay. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to this bill, a bill that I think is very important for the forestry sector, a sector which I as Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development have the pleasure of working with on a day-to-day basis to ensure the vitality, health, and sustainability of the industry as well as making sure that the industry operates in a manner that takes care of our environment and the health of our forests.

What I will say, Mr. Chair, is that as minister for approximately six months now, I've toured many of the mills and facilities that this industry has in this province. At every one that I tour, I am amazed at the level of innovation that goes into this particular industry. I think regular Albertans – probably I would include myself as one of those – kind of have our traditional way that we think of the forestry industry, you know: a bunch of lumberjacks that climb trees, cut them down, and the next thing you know, there are two-by-fours that are being pounded in to build our houses and those types of things. But I can assure you that it's a much more sophisticated industry than that, that it's come a long way both from an environmental standpoint and how we manage our forests but particularly on the innovation side.

In fact, I believe that just over I would say the last five years a lot of our mills have become 15 per cent more efficient in productivity. That's an indication of how much this industry is investing in being innovative in how they operate. One of those things is certainly in the innovation of the kinds of products that they are producing. I think that what this particular bill does is that it allows them to be more innovative and have more options available when they look to what kinds of products they want to develop and sell to consumers and to customers.

Mr. Chair, you know, it's very important that we ensure that any of our buildings or structures are safe and that public safety comes first. We cannot compromise the public safety of our buildings and our structures for economic purposes. But, as I was mentioning, there have been a number of advances from an engineering standpoint, from a product development standpoint that suggest the time is right to allow for this change to take place. This will provide builders many more opportunities to be flexible around the types of materials that they use from both an architectural standpoint and an economic standpoint, so I really like that positive aspect of it. As the Minister of Municipal Affairs just indicated, we're not forcing any builder, any architect, any engineer to use any one particular type of material, but this does give the opportunity for those producers of wood products to go out and market their products as an economically viable alternative to the ones that are currently used. That is a very positive step in the right direction for our forestry industry.

We all know of the economic challenges that we're facing in this province right now. They've been talked about at length in this Assembly so far this session. But there is one area we can be quite proud of, Mr. Chair, and that is our forestry industry, for the reasons that I just mentioned before. This is just one more, I guess, notch in the belt for the forestry industry to become an even more economically viable player within our economy.

For that, as minister responsible for forestry I can only commend the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne for bringing forward this initiative at this time. I believe the time is right and we shouldn't hesitate as an Assembly in passing this bill so that we can let our businesses, whether they be in the forest sector or the building sector, start to make the decisions that will allow this province to become even more economically viable, to have more choices available. That's really what this bill leads to.

With that, Mr. Chair, I'll sit down and cede the floor to someone else. I encourage all members to make sure we support this bill and get it back.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise on Bill 203, the Safety Codes (Sustainable Structures) Amendment Act, 2014. Just a couple of brief comments. I think this is an example of a type of bill that should in fact be on government business. You know, we have the member opposite. He's got a fair amount of pull. I'm sure he could probably put this on government bills. The reason I say that is that I think the proper process here, that could have taken place with Bill 203, is that you go into second reading. Obviously, the vast majority of the members would approve of the overall intent. But then you put it to a committee where you have proper consultations so that a full series of amendments could be proposed and then come back to this Assembly at Committee of the Whole, put forward a series of substantive amendments, and then have them pass.

Of course, we were lucky in this circumstance that there was a break in the sitting, so there was apparently some time for a bit of consultation where one of the hon. ministers put forward an amendment that she probably drafted based on some of the feedback that was provided. If this is such an urgent bill, if this is a bill that the government wants to pass right away, if the industry wants it, and all these other things, as the member opposite stated, that we shouldn't wait to pass this bill, if it's that important, put it as government business. The government then has the ability to make sure that it's shepherded through reasonably and quickly whereas this bill right now, depending on when a potential election is called, may not even pass.

That's my main argument, Mr. Chair, that on bills like this it makes no sense not to put this directly on government business and leave private members' business for other measures that aren't, obviously, on this government's agenda that's being put forward.

Mr. Chair, we look forward to seeing the final reading of Bill 203 before passing final judgment on it. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair, and I thank the last speaker, the hon. member, for sharing that with us. He somewhat missed the point of private members' business, which is that the private member gets to decide what the business is.

Such being the case, I have to inform the House that it's with a slightly heavy heart that I rise today. I do want to congratulate the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, and I know I spoke to the bill in support of the industry in second reading. This makes a lot of sense, that we should build wood structures six stories high. It's done in other jurisdictions. Wood, as I said, is a renewable, remarkable, sustainable building material. It's one of the best insulators out there, a natural insulator, and it really speaks to the energy of a fantastic Alberta business. But we always watch for unintended consequences of the bills that we pass in this Legislature, and I want to point one out, Mr. Chair, and that is that it exposes a fundamental flaw in the children's fairy tale that any of us in this House that had children told to our children. That, of course, is the story of the Three Little Pigs. In this story – I'll recount it quickly if you'll allow me.

Of course, with the Three Little Pigs, the first pig built a house of straw, and the wolf huffed and puffed and blew his house down.

The second little pig built a house of sticks, and the wolf huffed and puffed and blew his house down. Of course, the third little pig built a house of bricks, and the wolf was unable to huff and puff and blow his house down, and that's the end of the fairy tale that we all grew up with and that we all understood.

Actually, the flaw in that tale – and it's exposed by this bill – is that that didn't end the tale. Of course, when winter came, the poor little pig in the brick house came close to freezing to death and starving to death. As he went out in search of food, fortunately there was a pile of straw nearby from the first little pig's house. He went out in search of heat. Fortunately, there was a pile of sticks nearby from the second little pig's house. But he got caught by the wolf, who was smart enough to know that he wouldn't survive the winter in a stone house.

I can propose a revision to the fairy tale, and that is that there actually was a fourth little pig, Mr. Chair, and that fourth little pig built a house of wood, a sturdy house, that was warm and comfortable and welcoming in the wintertime, and he was smart enough to build the thing six stories high. As time went on, he opened up a home for wayward pigs. It's just a wonderful story from there on.

Mr. Chair, wood is a part of our national identity. It is a beautiful, remarkable, environmentally responsible building material. We are known as hewers of wood and drawers of water. We've built our houses out of wood since the beginning, and our First Nations partners did it before them. We've taught the world a lot about how to manage forests and how to build things out of wood, and I hope we continue to do that in our children's and grandchildren's lives. I wholeheartedly support this bill, and I thank the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne for having the vision to bring it forward.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there other speakers?

If not, I'd invite the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne to close debate.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I was bugged by a number of my colleagues today asking me: "Why are you wearing a green tie today? It's not St. Patrick's Day." I said, "I wear a green tie today to stand for everything that Bill 203 stands for: green, sustainable, and looking into the future, as most of us all know."

It's my pleasure to rise and offer some concluding remarks, but before I do, I want to thank all members of this House for being so supportive. The folks that are here with us today, the organizations like the Alberta Forest Products Association, the Canadian Home Builders' Association, the Canadian Wood Council and Wood Works! have been very strong advocates of Bill 203, and I want to thank them for their attendance here today.

Mr. Chair, the safety of all Albertans is paramount in all that we do. Bill 203 will ensure that this continues to be a top priority. Fire-resistant ratings for floors and roofs must be met and require a fire-resistant rating that is the same as any other material, whether it be steel or concrete. Sprinkler systems must be designed to meet the National Fire Protection Association 13, or NFPA 13. Exterior wall cladding must be noncombustible on a minimum of 90 per cent of each material face, and 25 per cent of the building parameter must be within 15 metres of a road, allowing firefighting access. This will enable full and proper access to homes of Albertans when they are faced with an emergency situation. The minimum emergency power must be exceeded by 60 minutes so that proper action can be implemented when emergency situations arise. Finally, buildings must be constructed at a minimum distance from the property line.

I think the comments from my colleagues were evident that there's wide support for this bill. I'd offer these concluding remarks and thank everybody for their input.

The Chair: Thank you.

Hon. members, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration Bill 203, the bill to amend the Safety Codes Act.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 203 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chair, I would ask for the unanimous consent of the House to waive Standing Order 9(1) to proceed to third reading.

The Chair: That would be after. We would rise and report, and then ...

Mr. Denis: I'm sorry. So I would ask that we rise and report. My apologies, sir.

The Chair: I'll offer you the opportunity to ask that question again, hon. Government House Leader.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration Bill 203. The committee reports the following bill with amendments. I wish to table copies of all the amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Having heard the report by the hon. Member for Little Bow, does the Assembly concur in the report? Agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I'd ask all members in the House to allow me to go to the third and final reading, so I'd ask for unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 9(1) and proceed to third reading of Bill 203.

Thank you, sir.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne has moved to waive the provision to allow the House to go straight to third reading of Bill 203. This requires unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Bill 203

Safety Codes (Sustainable Structures) Amendment Act, 2014

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all the hon. members who rose to speak today. I think that my concluding remarks will be very short and very brief. The members of this Assembly have been very outspoken in support of this bill, industry has been very outspoken on this bill, and I'd ask for third and final call.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

There is an opportunity to speak. Are there any other speakers to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne has moved to close debate on third reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a third time]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 204

Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving Demerit) Amendment Act, 2014

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today to begin debate on Bill 204, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving Demerit) Amendment Act, 2014.

The purpose of Bill 204 is to increase punishment for distracted driving by amending the Traffic Safety Act to include a monetary penalty of $250 and three demerits for each distracted driving offence. Currently the punishment for distracted driving is $172. Alberta's distracted driving law came into effect in September 2011. The original intent was to reduce and prevent incidents of distracted driving. Under the legislation drivers could be charged and given a $172 fine; however, it has become clear that this is not a great enough deterrent.

I had the pleasure to meet with the inspiring Renaye Wade last week. This young woman suffered a crushed pelvis, a broken jaw, and a severe brain injury that left her in a coma for 34 days after her car was struck by another vehicle. The driver who struck Wade later pleaded guilty to careless driving. She is a passionate advocate for stiffer distracted driving penalties, and after meeting with her, I felt stronger than ever that we must act now to prevent distracted driving on Alberta roads.

The current law hasn't noticeably reduced incidents of distracted driving. Mr. Speaker, RCMP Corporal Chris Little has said that distracted driving incidents have actually risen since legislation was first introduced. He has said that incidents of distracted driving are worse than ever. The deterrents currently in place are not working. Distracted driving leads to accidents and even fatalities, yet this is easily preventable. Bill 204 can help to greatly reduce those incidents.

Mr. Speaker, technology has provided us with a lot of great things, but we sometimes find ourselves multitasking with our phones, our GPS, our iPads. These distractions lead to driving errors. Driving errors are a factor in 87 per cent of total collisions in Alberta. When it comes to driving, it requires our full attention. Texting takes your eyes off the road for 4.6 seconds. At 88 kilometres an hour that is like driving an entire football field blindfolded.

Mr. Speaker, no Albertan should be put at risk because of careless, distracted drivers. Distracted drivers are three times more likely to be involved in a crash than attentive drivers. Cellphones are one of the most common distractions. Drivers who are texting are 23 times more likely to be involved in a crash or near crash event compared with nondistracted drivers. International research shows that 20 to 30 per cent of all collisions involve driver distractions.

There needs to be a behavioural change amongst drivers. The deterrents currently in place are not working. That is why I am proposing these changes in Bill 204. Alberta has one of the lowest provincial fines for distracted driving. Distracting driving punishments in Canada range from $100 to $280. Some fines rise with the subsequent number of offences. Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 would position Alberta's distracted driving laws as some of the toughest in the country.

The annual social costs of a motor vehicle collision in terms of loss of life, medical treatment, rehabilitation, lost productivity, and property damage are measured in tens of billions of dollars in Canada, Mr. Speaker. Even if that were divided equally among the provinces, that represents over $1 billion. That number can be significantly reduced by preventing distracted driving.

The addition of three demerit points may be an even stronger deterrent than the fine itself. While many Albertans can afford to pay the $172 fine and treat it as a minor inconvenience, a three-demerit fine can lead to a suspended licence and pose a serious punishment for what is a serious infraction. A new, harsher punishment I believe will encourage more people to take steps to ensure they are not breaking the distracted driving law.

Reducing distracted driving involves strong legislation, education, and enforcement. Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 allows us to do our part by ensuring strong legislation. Distracted driving laws do more than just restrict people from texting or calling. There are many other potential distractions that drivers need to be aware of such as using electronic devices like laptop computers, video games, cameras, et cetera. Entering information on a GPS unit, writing, printing, or sketching; personal grooming; and pets sitting in the front seat or in the cab can cause distraction. Although cellphone use makes up most cases of distracted driving, these other factors are risks as well, Mr. Speaker. With close to 90 per cent of all collisions caused by driver error, most of which is caused by distracted driving, it is important that we make real, meaningful change to influence people into changing their behaviour.

Mr. Speaker, adding three demerits for distracted driving gives the punishment some real teeth. Drivers can no longer ignore the perils of distracted driving, and if they do, they will be off the road with a suspended licence. By adding this extra deterrent, I believe Albertans would be motivated to enact widespread behavioural changes. The potential of losing one's driver's licence will give Albertans pause before answering their cellphone, replying to a text, or otherwise engaging in distracting behaviour. The physical and possible financial implication of losing one's licence acts as a strong deterrent. We need drivers to focus on the road and not risk their lives and the lives of others by being distracted. Texting and driving kills 11 teens each day in North America.

Changing driving behaviour isn't easy, and although we saw a decrease in distracted driving initially after previous legislation was introduced, it proved to be short lived. For behaviour to be truly changed long term, Bill 204 is needed. It will not happen overnight, Mr. Speaker, but by increasing the fine and adding demerits, we can make significant strides and really tackle this devastating problem. It is time to stop needlessly endangering Albertans on our roadways, time to stop the avoidable accidents as fatalities attributed to distracted driving, time to give our law enforcement officials legislation that can help them reduce these careless accidents and make Alberta roads safer for all Albertans.

Bill 204 isn't dictating to Albertans, Mr. Speaker; Bill 204 is responding to Albertans. Albertans want harsher penalties for distracted driving because they see it endangering those around them. Ultimately, it will be Albertans who dictate whether or not this bill will be successful in reducing distracted driving. For there to be meaningful change, societal change has to occur. Distracted driving should be treated with the same social stigma as drinking and driving for it can have the same deadly consequences. Bill 204 can spark this conversation amongst Albertans and show that the Alberta government is serious about the dangers of distracted driving. Our leadership can bring about real change in the way Albertans think about distracted driving.

This is more than a problem amongst teenage and early-20s drivers. People of all ages have been guilty of letting themselves become distracted by one thing or another while driving, Mr. Speaker. We need to introduce tough legislation now and spur societal change. Then, hopefully, we will not have to wait a generation for distracted driving to become unacceptable. Anyone not getting that message risks losing their licence as well as hefty financial fines.

Government has often been slow to adapt to changing technology. It would have been difficult for anyone to predict the exact dangers new technology would cause. However, Mr. Speaker, now that we have seen the dangers and reviewed the statistics and evidence, we can no longer turn the other way and let this behaviour continue. These changes proposed in Bill 204 need to be made to protect Albertans and help keep our roads safe.

I look forward to hearing the debate on this subject and encourage all my colleagues in the House to participate and to support this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand up and tentatively, if I may, support Bill 204, Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving Demerit) Amendment Act, 2014. The idea of second reading, obviously, is to discuss the intent of the bill, and I'm going to be listening to the conversation. I think what's going to be more important is when we get into Committee of the Whole. I like where this member is going because I'm one of those drivers that are on the road continuously, and I can't tell you how frustrated I get when I'm driving, whether it's in the city or whether it's on highway 2. I am wondering what the driver in front of me is doing as they're weaving on the highway or, for that matter, on the street. I can be somewhat nosy at times and catch up to them and find out that they're texting. Most of the time that's what I see, them texting. I have been known to give a honk of my horn and just let people know how I feel about that, as the Member for Calgary-East has explained in his notes and as we saw in the gallery last week when he introduced the young lady who had been so severely injured by a distracted driver.

I think what's important to me is that we brought this legislation through three years ago, the distracted driving legislation. I haven't heard a lot of comments back and forth about: has it increased, has it decreased, how many more tickets have been given? Fortunately – knock on wood – Mr. Speaker, I have not been the recipient of a lot of tickets. I say that and hope that I'm not jinxing myself on that. We originally had legislation on driving without – I think, it's due care and attention legislation. I'm somewhat confused if this has kind of been absorbed into I think it was Bill 16, the distracted driving legislation. I'm not sure if police – maybe the Justice minister and Solicitor General knows if the police can still ticket for undue care and attention or if it's under . . .

Mr. Denis: Yes, they can.

Mrs. Forsyth: Okay. Yes, they can.

It's interesting to me to find out in the last three years how many tickets have been issued under the distracted driving legislation. I look forward to the Minister of Transportation providing those details, which I know he can, and exactly what those tickets were for. Were they for texting? Were they for cellphones? That kind of thing. Because I think it's something important to consider as we move forward.

I would also like to know from the Minister of Transportation and the Minister of Justice how many more police and sheriffs, for that matter, are going to be hired to monitor this particular piece of legislation. I think that is more important than anything if we're going to be passing legislation, that we have what I consider boots on the ground or in the car, if I can use that, to start monitoring this. I do think the increase in fine is well worth the effort.

But, again, I'd like to see from the Minister of Transportation how many tickets have been given since this legislation was enacted three years ago and what those tickets are for. I'd also like to know whereabouts in the province it is. I know he has access to that. If it's in the city, if it's in the rural areas, I think that's important to know because then we'll know where we have to put the boots on the ground, if we have to put more sheriffs in the rural areas. Do we have to put more police in the urban areas? Is that the priority for the police officers?

The three demerit points. I think sometimes that you're all in or nothing. I, honestly, have seen what, to me, is a travesty when you're driving, and to this day we still see people texting. The information that I've been able to access briefly just after the Member for Calgary-East introduced this bill is that it's young people that are most distracted on this type of stuff. He did mention, you know, eating, putting on lipstick, dogs, kids, and all those things, but I really feel that the biggest distracted driving issue is texting and probably cellphones.

I was trying to do some research just before question period, but of course it's very busy. I came across a research page that talks about the 10 most distracted places. I didn't have enough time to even pull it up. It was one of those where it talks about the 10th and what it was doing, and then you have to go to the next slide, and it's the ninth and the eighth and the seventh, all the way down.

I think it's incumbent upon the minister to provide us that information. I know he's probably wanting to get up and speak to this bill. I'm sure he's getting up to speak in support of this bill. If he could provide to the House, as I said, how many tickets have been issued since this Bill 16, I think it was, the distracted driving legislation, was brought in, what those distracted driving tickets were, and what areas of the province they were in, I think that will give us a good idea of how many more police or sheriffs we will have to add for this when this bill is passed.

I look forward to Committee of the Whole as we move forward. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I'll recognize the Minister of Transportation next.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I could answer those questions specifically, but I'll wait. I've seen all those numbers, and I know them, but going off the top of my head, I don't want to misquote, so I'll bring them back to Committee of the Whole. I could almost say the number, but I would be afraid I might be wrong. It is lots; I have seen the stats. I'll bring that back to committee.

Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Transportation I'm pleased to rise today and speak to Bill 204, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving Demerit) Amendment Act, 2014. Before I begin my comments, I'd like to acknowledge and thank the Member for Calgary-East for bringing this bill forward. His commitment to the safety and well-being of Albertans is evident, and I commend him for his efforts.

Bill 204 aims to assign three demerit points to anyone charged with distracted driving as defined by the Traffic Safety Act. It also proposes to raise the monetary fine for this offence from $172 to $250. Mr. Speaker, I've said before in this House – and I'll say it again – distracted driving is simply unacceptable. It puts everyone on our roads at risk. That's why in 2011 this government enacted legislation that made distracted driving illegal in Alberta, and at the time it was one of the most comprehensive anti distracted driving laws in the country.

But legislation is only one piece of the traffic safety puzzle, Mr. Speaker. We need to use a combination of education and enforcement to encourage Alberta drivers to comply with the law. To this end, we launched the innovative Crotches Kill campaign to educate Albertans in an effort to shift behaviours. We know meaningful change in driver behaviour doesn't happen overnight. It can often take years. In fact, it has taken decades for Alberta to see a 95 per cent compliance rate for seat belts.

Mr. Speaker, my department continues to educate motorists in our efforts to keep Albertans safe on our roads. Last month 16-year-old car driver Parker Thompson from Red Deer helped us launch distracted driving awareness month by speaking to about 600 staff and students at a south Edmonton junior high school about the dangers of distracted driving. His goal is to reach out and educate youngsters, before they start driving, in an effort to create a new generation of Albertans who will grow up knowing how unacceptable distracted driving really is. Mr. Thompson's goal is to travel the province and give his presentation to as many students as possible. It's a bold and innovative approach to ending distracted driving, and his efforts should be commended.

In spite of all these efforts, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't appear Albertans are getting the message. We all have a role to play in reducing the number of deaths and injuries on our roads. Government, law enforcement, and our many traffic safety partners are committed to finding solutions through updates to Alberta's traffic safety plan, which, I'm proud to say, was the first of its kind in Canada when introduced in 2007. Since its introduction the traffic fatality rate in Alberta has decreased by some 22 per cent, and that's while the number of drivers and vehicles on the road has been increasing at the same time. This is clear evidence that our innovative approach to traffic safety is working, but we know we can always do more.

Mr. Speaker, it's important that drivers also realize the important role they play in keeping everyone safe on the road. When we get behind the wheel, our main task is to stay focused on the road ahead and not on other distractions. We know that every text message that's sent takes our eyes off the road for five seconds. It only takes a second for a collision to occur, and lives can be changed forever. Research shows that between 20 and 30 per cent of all collisions are due to distracted driving, and it's very clear some Albertans aren't getting the message. It's also clear that we need to be doing more to address the very serious problem on our roads. The Member for Calgary-East recognizes this and has brought forward this legislation to address it.

Mr. Speaker, while I support the spirit and principle of the bill, the assignment of demerit points and fine amounts is something better done in the Traffic Safety Act regulations. Historically this is where these kinds of changes have always been made, and this is how we adjust sanctions for other traffic violations under the Traffic Safety Act. Making this change in the regulations rather than through legislation also gives government the flexibility to make future adjustments to distracted driving sanctions, should they arise, regardless of whether the Assembly is in session or not. It's quicker and easier to adjust it in regulation.

I want to be clear, Mr. Speaker, that my reluctance to deviate from the regular process through which we make adjustments to Traffic Safety Act violation sanctions should in no way be interpreted as a reluctance to strengthen penalties for distracted driving. I agree that current sanctions have not served to deter Alberta drivers from driving distracted, especially when it comes to using their phones behind the wheel. My job as Minister of Transportation is to ensure Albertans are able to get where they're going safely and efficiently. Any injury or a fatality on our roads is something I take very seriously and very personally.

In conclusion, I'd like to again thank the Member for Calgary-East for his work on this bill and bringing this issue to the forefront. Mr. Speaker, I'll be voting in support of this bill, and I urge all my hon. colleagues to do the same. I look forward to the remainder of this important debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak to Bill 204, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving Demerit) Amendment Act, 2014. I'm pleased to say that our caucus will be voting in favour of this legislation because it's a fundamental piece to ensuring greater levels of safety on our highways and our roads as they relate to Albertans travelling every day from place to place and ensuring that they do so as safely as possible.

This bill introduces new penalties for distracted drivers by increasing the fine and by giving out demerits. It essentially brings Alberta into line with the rest of the country. Strangely, up until now we were the only province that didn't offer demerits as a penalty for distracted driving. As well, until this bill is passed or adopted by the government and passed, we also have almost the lowest fines for distracted driving in the country.

My big concern, really, if we pass this bill is that the government actually act on it in a timely way, because we understand that as a private member's bill it's not, of course, binding. Really, relative to the rest of the country on something that is as important as this issue, we really are very far behind, Mr. Speaker. I don't know why that is exactly, but that's just the way it is. In B.C. they were slightly lower than us; $167 was their highest fine. But they've now changed their legislation and raised it. That's what the government has done, so it's actually been done as opposed to here, where we're just leaving it to a private member's bill. Of course, they also have demerits. In Saskatchewan the maximum fine is $280. New legislation in Ontario makes the fine between $300 and $1,000, so you see that it's being taken more seriously there. Before that, it was $280, still above where this bill takes us. Then, for instance, in Newfoundland we see that it goes up to $400.

If we pass this bill and if the government then chooses to make it its own and make it law, because, of course, it's still very much discretionary, then we will be in the middle of the pack. So as much as everybody is making all these various sentimental comments about their concerns for safety, I think we need to keep in mind that all we're doing here is that we're passing a private member's bill that may or may not be brought into law by the provincial government, that takes us from dead, dead last to almost the middle of the pack. As everyone is getting super pumped to give themselves a party about how much they care about public safety, let's be sure that we keep it in context and remember that we're not really quite as excited about public safety as most of the rest of the country.

That being said, we're certainly pleased to at least support this first step for all the reasons that have already been identified. We understand that traffic fatalities and traffic injuries go up dramatically with distracted driving. We also understand that with the increasing complexity of communication devices there's greater and greater temptation for people to engage in distracted driving.

Distracted driving: it's really jaw-dropping when you consider the amount of time people will spend reading things on devices while driving a moving vehicle at, you know, 120 kilometres an hour.

Mr. Denis: That would be speeding.

Ms Notley: Indeed, it would be speeding, but it's something that has developed as a pattern. It costs not only families, of course, when horrible injuries occur, but it costs taxpayers to pay the cost of ameliorating those horrible injuries. So it makes perfect sense that we would move forward on this. As I say, it's long overdue.

We support both the addition of the demerit process as well as the increase in fines. We think that if we were as concerned about public safety as everybody here is talking about, we might actually be putting just a little bit more teeth in this legislation so that we're not moving ourselves carefully and quietly to almost the middle of the pack. Of course, we would also urge this government to move towards adopting this legislation or a more stringent version of it.

This is certainly a very important public safety issue, and I think that as our young people, who are probably more attached to their devices than we could ever possibly imagine, move towards having licences, then this problem is going to grow more and more significantly, and it's going to jeopardize and threaten the safety of Albertans even more. Then there are even some older people out there who have a growing reliance on their devices, as I'm seeing from across the way. That being said, I think that we all know – anyone with a teenager knows – that it's a new way of being. So this is something we need to act on.

I'm pleased to see it come forward. We're pleased to support it. I hope the government will take a more energetic approach to establishing both the demerits and the fines than we see here and, in any event, that we don't allow this bill to lie dormant once it has received the support of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank all speakers for their comments but particularly the Member for Calgary-East for bringing this to the forefront. This is an opportunity to save many lives. To the member: thank you very much.

The purpose of this bill would be to increase penalties for distracted driving, including a monetary penalty of $250 and three demerits on each of the offences. Now, presently it's $172 with no demerits. To give a comparative example, Mr. Speaker, if you exceed the speed limit by 15 to 30 k, which, of course, none of us ever would, it would be three demerits. If you failed to stop at a red light, it's also three demerits. If you failed to stop at a stop sign, it's also three demerits, and if you failed to yield the right-of-way to a pedestrian, it's also three demerits. Now, of course, if within two years you receive 15 demerits on your licence, you are suspended for 30 days. I think this strikes the right balance, adding those three demerits.

The original law came into effect in 2011, and I wanted to thank the former Minister of Transportation, who would often talk about people's texting machines as this law was coming in because there was a lot of controversy at that time. Many have, though, since said, Mr. Speaker, that this law does not do enough to deter people from distracted driving, and many have also said that the current law has not noticeably reduced incidents of distracted driving even anecdotally. I've often said in the past that this is something that we would consider if the evidence was there. Police agencies across the province have presented me with this evidence. But also speaking anecdotally, I drive a lot. I drive a lot between Calgary and Edmonton. I think I drove over 40,000 kilometres last year, and I see it absolutely everywhere. Some of the instances are absolutely shocking.

Last week, though, I had the opportunity to really put a human face to what can happen if an individual drives while they're being distracted. I met Renaye Wade. Now, two years ago she was in a car on the Yellowhead Trail when she was hit by a distracted driver and thrown into the path of a semi. I've seen some of the footage from that even. The startling thing is that she was in a coma for 34 days, Mr. Speaker, with a brain injury that very few survive. In addition to her brain injury she had a broken pelvis, tailbone, and jaw. Now, while I've met this remarkable woman and she's had an incredible recovery, some of her injuries continue to challenge her everyday life. What bothers me about this most, though, is how preventable this accident was. Not all accidents are preventable, but accidents relating to distracted driving are 100 per cent preventable.

Now, we've done major strides in this Assembly to tackle drunk driving. Drunk driving has been a problem since cars became widely used. However, cellphone use causing distracted driving is a relatively recent phenomenon. Cellphones have been rapidly adopted. I'm actually advised that this is the most rapidly adopted technology in human history, and it has become a staple in many vehicles. I, for one, have a cellphone charger in my vehicle out of what used to be a cigarette lighter when more people smoked. I'm sure many people here do as well.

I was just as surprised to learn how many people are addicted to their phones, and, Mr. Speaker, I'm guilty. Talk to anyone that works with me; I'm constantly on my phone, trying to keep up, and BBM is the best way to reach me. But that being said, the actual addiction is so prevalent that there is a name for it. It's nomophobia. Nomophobia: that's the fear of being without one's smart phone. That just shows how prevalent that is in our modern-day society. It's when you notice your cellphone is out of sight or, worse even, out of hearing range, and you stop everything until you find it. I can think of loved ones close to me that are in that category. While this is a recent compulsion occurring on a massive scale, it's no wonder distracted driving has become a serious issue.

I found out when I was doing some research here, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians send approximately 10 million messages per hour. Ten million text messages per hour. Of course, I'm not using my phone right now. All too often, though, these texts are sent while driving. This diversion reduces awareness, decision-making, or performance, leading to a risk of driver error or near crashes or crashes, sometimes even fatalities. A driver's awareness of their environment and level of attention to what is happening around him or her when using these devices while driving is reduced. It's time that we toughen up our legislation. It's time that we put demerits on distracted driving.

If I want to say thanks to anyone, it's the Minister of Transportation for hearing me harp about this every time I saw him for the last few months.

Distracted driving is a very real problem with very real consequences, but there are ways around this, Mr. Speaker. One of the simplest solutions for a driver to do is to purchase a Bluetooth device. I have. In fact, many new cars already have a Bluetooth as a standard feature. However, we're still seeing too many people talking on a handheld device, texting while driving, or engaging in other types of distracted behaviour.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if this legislation is adopted, we are not outliers in this country. I'll give you a comparative. B.C. has a $167 fine with three demerits, and just to the east Saskatchewan has a $280 fine with four demerits. That kind of puts us in the middle of the pack, as the last speaker had mentioned.

Also, many law enforcement officials have told me that there is a disturbingly upward trend in distracted driving. Clearly, the current legislation that we have needs to be beefed up. Increasing fines and introducing demerits is one way that we as legislators can help change attitudes and get the message through that distracted driving is not acceptable.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we all depend on vehicles in this Chamber. I'd say most if not all Albertans do depend on vehicles in one way or another, but the Supreme Court of Canada has repeatedly said that driving is a privilege, not a right. No one has a right to drive. It is a privilege that we enjoy as Canadians. That privilege can be taken away, and there have to be some parameters around that privilege. I would submit to you, sir, that we should never see situations like Renaye Wade's, where her right to live as an ordinary young woman has been severely changed because someone was abusing the privilege of driving.

Mr. Speaker, many people talk about legislation like this. They say that it's the nanny state; we shouldn't be doing this. Well, I again ask: what about Renaye's freedom in that particular case? That's the question that I ask. What about her freedom?

Similarly, Mr. Speaker – I'll close with this – I remember as a child that my father, Brian, and I would drive off into Medicine Hat to see my favourite aunt, Pat. As soon as we crossed the border, my father would say to me that this province doesn't have seat belt legislation, and we would think about how ridiculous that was. We adopted seat belt legislation in this province in 1987. At that particular time there was very low compliance in this province for seat belts. I would ask any one of us: do we even think twice about getting into a car, starting it up, and going without putting our seat belt on? In fact, 95.1 per cent compliance for seat belts in 2011. I think that's great. I'd like to see that same level of compliance when we talk about distracted driving. The first step is passing this legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour to speak to Bill 204, brought forward by the Member for Calgary-East. The bill will affect the following legislation, the Traffic Safety Act, by adding a subsection that will increase the distracted driving fines to $250 from the current $172 and give three demerits. You know, the polls have been done, and 93 per cent of Canadians believe that distracted driving is a problem in Canada, and 86 per cent of people have supported demerit penalties for the offence. Distracted driving has taken over. I think it's the number one killer now. I think it's even overtaken impaired driving. When the law was brought in in 2011, I think we should have gone much further, even with the penalty. I wouldn't mind if the penalty was raised not to $250. Let's hurt the people who are not obeying the law heavily in the pocket. Maybe they will – you know, the demerits are kind of hidden. A person gets demerits, and they forget about this. If there's a heavier penalty, maybe they will keep that in mind before they break the law because they know it's going to hurt them in the pocket.

This is very good legislation. You know, when we are driving on the highway, I have followed people. They do their texting. They're talking on the phone. They're in the inside lane, and they're blocking the traffic. Both lanes are blocked. People are getting, like, mad. They're getting road rage on the highway because people get so upset. Then people are racing to pass the guy on the highway, and that has caused accidents or fender-benders, right? With the distracted driving, like Renaye Wade – she was here – it's totally going to cost somebody's life, or some person could get maimed for the rest of their life, or they're in a wheelchair or whatever, which just costs us money in health care costs as well.

You know, I don't know if it's the enforcement. We brought the law in in 2011, and it didn't make any difference. You look around. People are talking on the phone. They are texting. They are doing whatever. People think a car is there like it's their home, it's their private property, and they can do whatever they want in their car, but that should not be the case. We can bring in all kinds of laws. If there's no enforcement – I think that education and enforcement are going to be the key in saving people's lives and saving people from not getting into accidents, saving people from not killing innocent people.

With this law I think we should follow Ontario's lead, not $250, you know, $250 to $1,000 and three demerits. Let's go all the way and make people think that, you know, breaking the law is going to cost them dearly. I think about the Alberta Liberals. Way back I think it was Mr. Hugh MacDonald who brought in some kind of motion or law against distracted driving. The Alberta Liberal caucus has always been supportive of some kind of law because things evolve. We've got cellphones. We've got the technology, and we have been addicted to the phone, even myself. I've got Bluetooth. Most of the time I'm on the phone, too, but I have Bluetooth. We have all done it. It's not like we're immune to this because I think the cellphone has really taken over our lives. We can't even sleep at night without the phone right on the headboard or whatever.

If we have to legislate to change people's habits, you know, so be it. If it's going to save lives, so be it. If the fines are going to be heavy, so be it. If we have to bring in demerits, so be it. I'm glad finally something is getting done to enforce, to bring in some strict legislation, which will make people think twice before they break the law. Like I said, no matter what kind of law we bring in, if there's no enforcement, I don't think the law is as good as the paper it's written on. So we have to think about enforcement. We have to put more money into enforcement if we want to have laws which are going to be effective.

With that, Mr. Speaker, we have always supported safety laws, and I'm supporting this Bill 204 as well wholeheartedly. Let's put more teeth into this. Let's be more strict than what it is.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 204, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving Demerit) Amendment Act, 2014, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Speaker, I am certainly in favour of this legislation, and an essential component of Bill 204 is the addition of penalty demerit points to the monetary fine that is already in place when charging a citizen with distracted driving. As we've heard here today, at present the repercussion for a distracted driving charge is a penalty of $172. There are no demerit points alongside this monetary penalty. Bill 204 calls for amendments to the Traffic Safety Act to include a steeper monetary fine as well as the introduction of three demerit points for distracted driving offenders. These amendments are proposed to change the penalty for those offences.

Mr. Speaker, the penalties proposed in Bill 204 are the three demerit points and increasing the monetary penalty from $172 to $250. It is suggested that an increase in the monetary penalty and the provision of demerit points would lead to the improvement of road conditions by successfully deterring distracted driving. The increase in the monetary fine intends to create a bigger impact on the offender by making them dig deeper into their pockets to pay for their offence. Bill 204 helps to leave a more profound impact on the offender by changing and increasing the consequences provided to them. By increasing the monetary fine, there is a deterrent to the Alberta driver by targeting their pocketbooks. It has been suggested that the driver is more likely to follow the rules of the road when there is a more substantial cost to them for their actions. As it now stands, a $172 fine is provided to drivers who plead guilty. The increase should make a substantial difference in their driving habits but perhaps only for a short term.

The hon. member, though, is suggesting long-term consequences in order to have a stronger impact on the driver and their future decision-making. The provision of demerit points is a longer lasting consequence due to the fact that demerits may only be rewarded back to the driver after one year. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's bill directly takes into account the risks of distracted driving with an emphasis on long-term consequences. These long-term consequences support safe driving practices due to the fact that drivers have to work around lost demerit points. This will leave them with less demerit room on their licence for infractions should they find themselves in that position.

Distracted drivers are three times more likely to be involved in a crash than attentive drivers, making it a serious concern for Albertans. Mr. Speaker, with 90 per cent of collisions in Alberta being attributed to driver error, it is safe to say that distracted driving is a serious issue that we as a government have been focused on targeting. With the exception of Nunavut every province and territory in Canada has implemented laws dealing with distracted driving infractions, with an emphasis on cellphone use by drivers.

The Alberta government is dedicated to achieving lower numbers of distracted driving infractions as well as related fatalities. Efficient ways to effectively prevent infractions are taken very seriously within our government. Bill 204, as proposed by the hon. member, suggests that the increased monetary fine as well as provision of demerit points as the driver's penalty will be efficient as a preventative means.

Mr. Speaker, penalties specific to distracted driving infractions are set within the Provincial Offences Procedure Act. The demerit point program alongside the service of documents regulation oversees demerits for traffic regulation. Demerits for distracted driving have not been brought up within the demerit point program and service of documents regulation. The hon. member's bill moves for contemplation of amendments to the Traffic Safety Act in order to assist in the enforcement of the Alberta distracted driving law.

Other jurisdictions and their distracted driving legislation have undergone a series of incidents where monetary fines are increasing. Ontario is suggesting that they plan also to increase sanctions by including three demerit points and setting the monetary fine at $1,000. British Columbia is moving to stiffen their policy on penalizing distracted drivers though they already include three demerit points and a $167 fine. Repercussions to distracted driving infractions range across this country, with a movement at present to include demerit points and increase the fine.

The Alberta government takes these infractions seriously and has every interest in driver and pedestrian safety. Mr. Speaker, every year the number of people killed on our roads is approximate to the population of the number of students you would find in the average elementary school class within our province. Distracted driving can directly affect the driver in ways similar to impaired driving. With this information we know that distracted driving penalties are a serious consideration. The complex task of properly operating a motor vehicle must be taken seriously. Driving is a privilege and not a right.

Mr. Speaker, those of you present here today and who were here last week would have met a young lady, Renaye Wade, who has undergone, as we have heard, a horrendous incident in her life. Many of us were present yesterday when we met on the steps of the Alberta Legislature to mark the second anniversary of this horrific incident that changed Renaye Wade's life forever. Renaye has become a spokesperson for change. We must do better. The financial and emotional costs to families is so immense. Yesterday Renaye outlined the cost to Albertans in the form of how many doctors and how many surgeries and how many hours of rehabilitation that she has had to undergo because for just one second someone's attention was not on the road ahead.

Mr. Speaker, it's very important to consider road safety and pursue the best practices possible in doing so. I commend the hon. member for bringing Bill 204 forward. The issue of traffic safety is important to Albertans and to their government. I look forward to seeing this bill passed by this House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and contribute to the debate on Bill 204, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving Demerit) Amendment Act, 2014, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-East. I would like to thank the hon. member for being a strong advocate for promoting road and traffic safety and responsible driving.

It is important for Albertans to understand that approximately 25 per cent of all collisions involve driver distraction, and anything we can do to help change serious or risky distracted driving behaviours will have a tremendous benefit. Driving in the province of Alberta is a privilege and not a right. The research speaks for itself, Mr.

Speaker. Distracted driving is a form of impaired driving as a driver's judgment is compromised when they're not fully focused on the road. A driver who is distracted is more likely to be in a crash than drivers who have two hands on the steering wheel and eyes focused on the road. We need to discourage distracted driving and to reduce collisions, injuries, and fatalities resulting from this type of behaviour.

Mr. Speaker, if passed and proclaimed, Bill 204 would amend section 158 of the Traffic Safety Act by adding the following after subsection (4). I thought it would be of interest to review what, actually, the bill states. It states:

A person who is guilty of an offence under section 115.1 [titled Cellular telephones, electronic devices, etc.], 115.2 [Display screen visible to driver prohibited], 115.3 [Global positioning system] or 115.4 [Prohibited activities].

Also, it includes

- (a) is liable to a fine of $250, and
- (b) shall be assessed 3 demerit points in accordance with the regulations.

Currently the penalty for distracted driving is a fine of $172, and offenders are not penalized with demerit points. Anyone wishing further information in this area can refer to the Provincial Offences Procedure Act procedures regulation. Also, it's important to note that in Alberta drivers that exhibit what is deemed to be more serious or risky driving behaviour could be charged with driving carelessly under the current Traffic Safety Act. The penalty for the existing driving carelessly offence carries six demerit points and a fine of $402.

As we debate Bill 204, we should consider examining the issue from other jurisdictional perspectives. For example, in June of 2014 the Northwest Territories Department of Transportation almost tripled the fines for distracted driving from $115 to $322, which include a 15 per cent victim of crime surcharge. In Ontario the provincial police have indicated that distracted driving is the number one killer on their roadways. In that province it is against the law to operate hand-held communication and electronic entertainment devices, which include iPods, GPS, MP3 players, cellphones, laptops, and DVD players, while you are driving and to view display screens unrelated to your driving. If you break this law, you can receive a fine of $225 plus a victim surcharge and court fee for a total of $280 if settled out of court and a fine of up to $500 if you receive a summons or fight your ticket.

Although the province of Ontario has seen success with their distracted driving law and public education efforts, the Legislative Assembly of Ontario recently referred Bill 31, the Transportation Statute Law Amendment Act (Making Ontario's Roads Safer), 2015, to the committee for general government. Highlights of the making Ontario's roads safer act include increased fines for distracted driving, from a current range of $60 to $500 upward to a range of $300 to $1,000. This would become one of the highest fine ranges in Canada for distracted driving. In addition, it was proposed that regulatory changes would apply three demerit points and add a distracted driving prohibition to the existing graduated licence system driver's licence conditions.

In October 2014 the province of British Columbia – traffic violations are under the heading Careless Driving Prohibited, section 144, where it states in subsection (1):

A person must not drive a motor vehicle on a highway

- (a) without due care and attention,
- (b) without reasonable consideration for other persons using the highway, or
- (c) at a speed that is excessive relative to the road, traffic, visibility or weather conditions.

Also, it includes subsection (2), which states:

A person who contravenes subsection (1)(a) or (b) is liable on conviction to a fine of not less than $100 and, subject to this minimum fine, section 4 of the Offence Act applies.

A driver found using a hand-held electronic device while driving may receive a $167 traffic violation ticket that also carries three penalty points, Mr. Speaker. Offences and infractions that include penalty points will remain on a person's driving record in Ontario for five years and can lead to further penalties, including a driving prohibition. Stricter limitations are also imposed on drivers in the graduated licensing program, GLP, as risks are demonstrated to be higher among new and young drivers due to a combination of inexperience and a tendency toward greater risk taking and significantly higher than average use of electronic devices, and all combined make this group of drivers particularly vulnerable.

Mr. Speaker, these examples demonstrate that legislators are taking a renewed active interest to fight the problem of distracted driving head-on. Distracted driving is both dangerous and intolerable. Many had initially hoped that education and awareness campaigns against distracted driving would result in changing driving behaviours. In many cases it is too early to determine whether increased severity in penalties will have the desired effect in jurisdictions that have adopted such measures.

But what we do know, Mr. Speaker, is that demerit points are a far more onerous penalty than mere fines. As such, there is good reason to believe that adding demerits as a penalty may be a far more compelling deterrent for distracted driving. The increased penalties proposed by Bill 204 simply reflect a broader intent and a broader trend that have been occurring in other provincial jurisdictions. It is clear that the hon. Member for Calgary-East believes that we should, and he makes a very strong case for the change.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to add to the debate. I support Bill 204 and look forward to hearing alternate perspectives. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today to speak to support Bill 204, Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving Demerit) Amendment Act, 2014, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-East. I would like to begin by acknowledging the efforts that this hon. member has made, not only representing his constituency but, actually, all Albertans. I'd like to add that as the MLA for Calgary-Hawkwood I personally have met numerous constituents who expressed similar concerns to those this hon. member has brought forward, and I'm sure they will be very happy to see me speak on their behalf to support this one.

Bill 204 has significant value in that it brings the issue of traffic safety to the forefront to be debated and discussed. For this purpose here, I'd like to bring some studies and facts showing how Canada and the U.S. are contributing to this issue here. Federally, Canada has made strides in areas of education and awareness regarding distracted driving. National statistics point to a very strong correlation between distracted driving and road safety. According to the Canadian Council of Motor Transport Administrators, or CCMTA, distracted driving is a diversion of attention from driving as a result of drivers' focusing on a nondriving object, activity, event, or person. They included a whole list of things, including using cellphones.

The organization conducted studies and has concluded that using devices while driving reduces drivers' awareness of their environment to the extent that they are not paying attention to what is happening around them. The study concluded that it has shown an increase in chances of a collision from 38 per cent to 400 per cent. That's a very large number. In 2006 a survey of the Canadian public about distracted driving was conducted, and it found that two-thirds of respondents were concerned about cellphone use while driving. The study focused on cellphone use while driving in the previous seven days. It was reported that 37 per cent of respondents admitted to using their cellphones, but this was even higher in those aged 16 to 34; it rose 55 per cent. Overall, about 3 per cent of Canadian drivers were observed to be using cellphones by the study commissioned by the CCMTA.

Another study in Canada was carried out in 2009 and 2010. This one indicated that Alberta is among the worst in our nation for offenders, people driving while being distracted, with 4.9 per cent of drivers being observed using cellphones while driving. The next-worst offender is Nova Scotia, with 3.6 per cent.

The public awareness about the risks of distracted driving in general and the use of telecommunication equipment while driving in particular can be increased so that distracted driving is no longer acceptable. Even though the use of hands-free devices is not prohibited for most drivers, research has shown that they can be just as distracting as hand-held devices. Awareness of the risk of hands-free equipment needs to be increased, and I think our Canadian colleagues and CCMTA stakeholders have done a great job of raising public awareness. Recently they launched the Leave the Phone Alone pledge campaign, and the whole purpose for that is to increase public awareness.

Mr. Speaker, let me take a few seconds to compare how our brothers to the south, the U.S., are comparing to us in terms of their studies and research in this area. The U.S. Department of Transportation regulatory campaign against distracted driving is a multimode effort that includes automobiles, trains, planes, commercial vehicles. On September 30, 2009, President Obama signed an executive order directing federal employees not to engage in text messages while driving government-owned vehicles, when using electronic equipment supplied by the government, and while driving privately owned vehicles when they are on official government business. The order has encouraged federal contractors and other entities doing business with government to adopt and reinforce their own policies balancing texting while driving on the job.

The Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration, or FMCSA, banned commercial truck and bus drivers from texting while driving in September 2010. Later, in November 2011, it banned all hand-held cellphones used by commercial drivers. In February 2011 the Pipeline and Hazardous Materials Safety Administration banned texting with electronic devices while operating a motor vehicle containing hazardous materials in conjunction with the proposed FMCSA act. The Federal Railroad Administration similarly banned railroad employees from using cellphones or electronic devices on the job following the September 2008 Metrolink crash in Chatsworth, California, that killed 25 people.

Many people in the United States are in the process of enacting laws such as banning texting while driving or using the graduated drivers licensing system for teen drivers to help raise awareness about the dangers of distracted driving.

According to the U.S. National Highway Traffic Safety Administration in 2009, 16 per cent of fatalities and 20 per cent of injuries in the U.S. involved a driving distraction. The highest proportion of distracted drivers involved in fatal crashes was under 20 years of age, 16 per cent, followed by those aged 20 to 29, 13 per cent, and light truck drivers and motorists, who are most often distracted, at 12 per cent.

Analysis involving eye glance behaviours indicated that eyes off the road for a duration of greater than two seconds significantly increase the risk of crashes and near-crash situations. Furthermore, the study found that secondary task disruptions such as cellphones contribute to over 22 per cent of crashes and near crashes in the U.S.

Mr. Speaker, as we can see, Bill 204 is a very timely piece of legislation. Again, I would like to thank my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-East for bringing up this piece of legislation in a timely fashion so we can strengthen the safety of Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by Calgary-Fort.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. I also want to thank the Member for Calgary-East for bringing this forward. I think it is important legislation that we need to move forward on.

I also wanted to take a moment to bring to light another issue, and that is that – I don't know about you – certainly I see someone driving distractedly at least once a day when I'm out there. I mean, it's at least once a day. These people, when they are doing this, are a danger not just to us who share the road with them but to everybody else out there who is sharing the road with them. I do believe that there's something more that we do have to do, and that is that we've got to bring people's attention to it.

Now, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek said that what she does is that sometimes she beeps her horn – okay? – just to say: hey, you shouldn't be doing that. Maybe that's something that we should all be doing whenever we see it occurring. You know, just a little beep-beep could then become a signal for everybody: "Okay. Watch out. Somebody is not paying attention here." Maybe this is something that we should just sort of pay attention to ourselves, and perhaps it might also help bring attention generally to distracted driving. It's maybe something that might catch on to such an extent that people actually stop doing it. I think it's something that might start shaming people to the point where they realize that this is an activity that they do have to stop. So I'd like to bring that to everyone's attention as a suggestion as to how we can all be part of a solution.

Again, thank you very much to the Member for Calgary-East for bringing this forward.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'm mindful of the time, hon. members, but if we're brief, we might be able to get two more speakers in.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by Calgary-West.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and contribute to the debate on Bill 204, Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving Demerit) Amendment Act 2014, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-East. Today I would like to thank the hon. member for bringing Bill 204 for debate.

Mr. Speaker, if passed, Bill 204 would amend the Traffic Safety Act by increasing the severity of penalties for persons accused of distracted driving. Currently Alberta experiences one of the lowest fines for distracted driving in comparison with other provinces. Widely supported by Albertans, Bill 204 would introduce demerit points for each distracted driving offence plus an increase in fines. Each offence will be met with a monetary penalty of $250 plus three demerit points issued on the person's driving record.

Today 90 per cent of collisions are believed to be caused by driver error. Hence, distracted driving is a major issue that must be addressed with diligence and the promise to ensure the safety of Albertans on the road. Mr. Speaker, in 2004 there were reported 387 fatalities due to distracted driving in Alberta. Soon after 2006 the government launched the Alberta traffic safety plan, which was, unfortunately, still met with 453 distracted driving fatalities. Now, one would believe that with such an initiative we would see fatalities decline, but it was not the case. Instead, fatalities rose by over 60. Finally, in 2010, after the renewal of the traffic safety plan, we saw a record low of 344 fatalities. While this can be seen as a small victory, our job as legislators is still not over.

We currently have one of the lowest distracted driving fines in Canada, with fatalities decreasing in provinces that have implemented harsher penalties. Mr. Speaker, we must implement fines that will deter Albertans from endangering road users. Campaigns alone are not enough; they must be met with legislation that supports them. Furthermore, because our devices are integrated into everyday life, drivers mistakenly assume they can be used safely while operating the vehicle. Nearly 3 Canadian drivers out of every 4 admit to driving distracted on a regular basis. We must work toward lowering the statistics. Data available today conclude that 8 out of every 10 collisions are caused by distracted driving. Text messaging creates a crash risk 23 times worse than driving while not distracted.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, as of 2011 there are more than 352 million cellular phones in use in North America. Nearly 15 people die each day in the U.S. in crashes related to distracted driving, and another 1,200 people are injured. Using hand-held cellular phones while driving is now illegal in 71 countries. This is a telltale sign that change must happen now, and legislators must take notice. Campaigns alone are not going to promote the change that we urgently need to protect Albertans. They must implement it in conjunction with appropriate legislative measures. For this I congratulate the hon. Member for Calgary-East, who is bringing this forward, and I'm looking forward to hearing from other members.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-West, I believe you are next on the speaking list. You have about a minute and a half before the clock will summon us otherwise.

Mr. Ellis: Well, then, I shall be brief, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. It is an honour, of course, to rise and speak to you about Bill 204, Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving Demerit) Amendment Act, 2014. My focus today is to explain what distracted driving means and how this impacts a person's ability to drive, which can ultimately lead to accidents. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-East for bringing this bill forward.

The traffic safety amendment act would enhance the Traffic Safety Act by proposing that monetary penalties be increased from $172 to $250 plus the reduction of three demerit points for every offence. The Traffic Safety Act, introduced in 2007, was the first strategy of its kind in Canada and was due to the significantly high number of collisions, deaths, and injuries on Alberta roads. Since the implementation of the plan the numbers have declined considerably, and of course over the past four years traffic fatalities have dropped by nearly 32 per cent. I'm certainly proud to say that I myself have written some of those tickets while I was a police officer in the past. You know, for me, of course, I look at incentives as being a way to further assist in preventing people from driving while distracted, and I certainly believe that this act would help.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I do hesitate to interrupt, but as indicated, the time limit for consideration of this item of business has now concluded, as the clock has just signalled.

Speaker's Ruling Tabling Documents

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed with the next item of business, I had indicated earlier today, when the Government House Leader rose on a point of order, that I would be rendering a decision on that point of order tomorrow. However, I have since spoken with at least one of the opposition members and a couple of others who asked about the ruling. So with their good co-operation I need to indicate a ruling on it today.

I would also preface my comments by saying just a couple of things very briefly. First, whereas many other jurisdictions are quite restricted in what is allowed and what is not allowed to be tabled, our protocols and procedures in this House are actually very permissive. It's not infrequent that we have seen the tablings of such items as affidavits, statements of claim as well as other documents that may or may not contain certain allegations.

Secondly, I would note that previous Speakers have in fact brought this matter of what is appropriate to be tabled and what isn't appropriate to be tabled to the attention of House leaders, and I would again request that our current House leaders might want to review that matter yet again.

In conclusion, I have reviewed this matter, and noting what the past precedents of this House have been, there is no point of order in this instance. That will conclude this matter.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: Hon. ND opposition leader, is that you who is up next? Please proceed, then.

Coal-generated Power

507. Ms Notley moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to commit to the immediate study and drafting of a plan to phase out all coal-generated power in Alberta by 2030.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak to Motion 507 in Motions Other than Government Motions. I will say that this is kind of exciting for me because in my seven years as an MLA this is the first time our caucus has actually gotten either a motion or a bill up while the House is sitting. So, yes, it's a rare thing. Anyway, I'm pleased to be able to speak to this motion.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Now, this is an important issue, Mr. Speaker. In October the Premier himself stated that Alberta could phase out coal, quote, more quickly than anybody is doing on the U.S. side of the border and that given that coal plants in Alberta, some of them anyway, are nearing the end of their useful lives, this, quote, gives us an opportunity to do the right thing and phase out coal. That, of course, was a correct statement.

In addition, we know, according to a poll done by the Canadian Association of Physicians for the Environment, that 80 per cent of Albertans when asked would like to see Alberta rely more on wind power to help reduce reliance on coal.

We also know that in the fall of 2013 Albertans witnessed the second-largest coal tailings spill in the history of our country as a result of a dam that the government didn't actually even know existed, let alone had inspected. I, frankly, think that the cost of that particular brilliant piece of management is one that we still have not gotten the full accounting of. Certainly, I know that we've not received the report yet about how that happened, so another thing that is overdue. That tailings breach occurred at the same time that the province of Ontario was preparing to shut down its last coal plant and only a year or two after Alberta finished the process of approving yet another coal plant.

You know, there are a lot of reasons why we should be focusing on reducing our reliance on coal, but just let me talk a little bit about some of the targets that I think are reasonable for us to consider. They're not definitive because – you know what? – here's the thing. The government is the one that has access to the resources and the studies and the information in order to actually come up with the best research plan forward. An opposition of four doesn't have as many resources. To some extent that's why we're bringing this forward today as a motion, because we think that where this needs to start is by having this Assembly approve the motion to have a study conducted and completed using all the resources that the government has at its disposal. That would be the responsible thing to do.

We think that we could probably talk realistically about adopting a target of getting at least 90 per cent of electricity from renewable sources by 2050 by phasing out coal entirely by 2030, by ensuring that we adopt a target, at least, of trying to meet 50 per cent of our electricity requirements from renewable energy and energy conservation by 2030, and by adopting a target of meeting 20 per cent of electricity requirements from renewable energy and energy conservation by 2020. None of that is undoable, Mr. Speaker. All that it requires is strong leadership and a commitment to doing better by our environment.

Now, this government has been very good at making grand statements and putting out a lot of press releases about its so-called world-class environmental initiatives. We know that that's mostly just paper. Probably the most clear example of that is this government's climate change strategy, which has been roundly criticized by our Auditor General. Indeed, in 2008, when our climate change strategy was first put forward, it included a number of targets, but within that, it included a business-as-usual strategy: this is what it's going to look like if we don't act now. Well, guess what? We're actually in excess of our business-as-usual strategy. Not only have we not met our targets; we've actually exceeded the predictions of where we would be in the absence of doing absolutely nothing.

So that's where we are, and that's, of course, why our Auditor General has taken the time to tell us that we do such a bad job on that. That's really problematic, Mr. Speaker, because the fact of the matter is that scientists have come to a consensus that we need to ensure that we do not have the temperature of the Earth go up more than two degrees by 2100, or we're looking at catastrophic consequences. Yet the path that we're on right now as a world means that we're going to hit that level at 2035. So everybody – everybody – has an obligation to do their part, and that includes Albertans. There is stuff we can do, but we haven't been doing it.

Now, the fact of the matter is that we also need to do this from the perspective of promoting and supporting our energy industry overall, as has been talked about countless days and times by folks over on the other side. We have a problem with everybody wanting to take our nonrenewable energy product in their markets, and we have a bit of a black eye, and we deserve that black eye. But there is a strategy to win back some of that social licence, and that is to potentially eliminate our reliance on coal. Indeed, the greenhouse gas emissions produced right now annually by coal are almost the same amount as what's produced in the oil sands as a whole. It's not quite as much, but it's close, and if we could eliminate that greenhouse gas emission from coal, we would earn a great deal of credibility internationally.

Now, this all sounds really good, but the problem is: will we do it? You know, there are lots of nice proclamations and statements that we've heard, but here's where we sit right now. We're the only province in the country without an energy efficiency strategy. We're the only province in the country without a renewable energy strategy. As I've said, our climate change strategy, which was meant to be redone because the Auditor General told us it was not worth the paper it was written on at this point, has been delayed and delayed and delayed. Of course, now it will be delayed until after the election.

So our record is not good, but we can do better. Now, why would we want to do better? Well, there are the health issues. We know that physicians that are opposed to coal-fired electricity talk about the cost that is experienced through the most measurable health consequences, roughly $300 million a year as a result of visits to ERs, admissions, asthma, and lost days due to asthma simply because of the impact of coal in our environment right now. So there's a lot of money that could be saved there.

Imagine how many pre-election press conferences the Minister of Health could have if he had another $300 million a year. It would be just a gold mine. Also, imagine the health that would be protected and the number of Albertans who would not suffer from the negative health consequences of us being the province in the country that relies the most – the most – by a long shot on coal-fired electricity.

What we need, then, Mr. Speaker, is a plan. We need to do more than talk about why this is a good idea and how it might be a plan and how maybe sometimes we say: you know, hey, that's not a bad idea. We need to do more than that. We need a comprehensive plan, and we need one that all Albertans can be part of. That's why we're bringing this motion forward. Because if that is done, then all Albertans can engage, and we can learn about the pros and the cons: what could work, what won't work, what kinds of challenges we would face, what kind of sacrifices we might have to face, all those kinds of things. But we could do it together, and we could achieve something about which we could be very proud. It would be good for our health, it would be good for our environment, and it would even be good for our energy industry. So it's something that we need to do more work on.

There are so many ways we can do it. We can make an immediate phase-out by relying more on natural gas. We can rely on cogeneration. Ultimately, we have the authority to undo the gift that the Harper government gave to our coal plants by extending their life to 50 years. Move it back to 40, and then look at how we can compensate the three plants that could argue that they didn't have fair notice on that one. We need to look at renewables. We need to look at wind. We need to look at solar. We need to look at hydro. But we're not doing that on an organized basis, and, Mr. Speaker, that is something that is long overdue in this province.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to Motion 507 today, which seeks to phase out all coal-generated power in Alberta by 2030. I do agree, obviously, that reducing coal-fired generation is one action to address greenhouse gases and climate change, but we're already working at addressing this issue from a balanced social, environmental, and economic perspective. This triple-bottom-line perspective is consistent with this government's approach in addressing all greenhouse gases across our economy, not just in power production, which the member herself pointed out.

One of the most notable actions on this issue is the federal government's new, stricter rules for greenhouse gases from coal-fired plants. Set out in November of 2012, these rules require Alberta's coal plants to retire after they've been in service for between 45 and 50 years. Alternatively, they will need to meet clean-as-gas emissions standards; that is, produce the same emissions level as burning natural gas. Under this schedule roughly 60 per cent of Alberta's coal-fired units will retire by 2029. This is a good time to point out that we're already seeing a decrease in coal-fired generation in Alberta. In 2014 natural gas generation capacity exceeded coal generation for the first time in Alberta's history.

The second action on this issue, Mr. Speaker, is the specified gas emitter regulation. This regulation requires large emitters to reduce their emissions intensity or pay $15 per tonne into the climate change and emissions management fund. This money is used to fund innovative technologies. To date $249 million has been invested into 100 clean energy projects such as wind energy and waste heat recycling. And I should point out that the coal industry pays the vast majority of this $249 million.

A third action, Mr. Speaker, is government's participation in the Clean Air Strategic Alliance Association, or CASAA. CASAA provides strategies to assess and improve air quality for Albertans, and its partners include industry, government, and nongovernmental organizations. CASAA's electricity framework has provided a set of recommendations to government for the management of nitrogen oxide, sulphur dioxide, particulate matter, and mercury air emissions from the electricity sector. All of these actions are being reviewed by the Climate Change Task Force, and these actions are only part of the story.

As I mentioned earlier, Alberta is in the middle of a transition away from coal. In 1990 81 per cent of our electricity came from coal. Currently coal-fired generation accounts for much less than half of Alberta's generation capacity mix. Our system planner, the Alberta Electric System Operator, projects our current coal will decrease by a further 10 per cent by 2030. That would mean a total of only 2,500 megawatts of coal-fired generation remaining in less than 20 years. With this transition in mind, Mr. Speaker, it's clear that power generators are making the prudent choice. We don't want to make any knee-jerk reactions that will undermine the reliability of our electricity system. Albertans expect the lights will turn on when they flick the switch, and coal-fired generation is a critical part of meeting our daily minimum demand or baseload. It is relatively inexpensive and reliable. The cost of building different types of generation to replace coal in a shortened time would have a material effect on Albertans' power bills.

Mr. Speaker, earlier than planned retirement of coal-fired generation would undermine Alberta's open and competitive electricity market. In this market investor-owned companies decide what type of generation will be built and when. The companies that built our existing coal plants did so with the expectation that they would recover their costs over 50 years. Forcing the retirement of the newer units in 2030 would mean that the companies would not realize the full value of their investments. They would lose six to 31 years of operational capacity. But it's not just about the losses; it's what the losses would mean for Alberta's electricity system and for Alberta's consumers.

We only need to look to jurisdictions like Ontario or Germany, for example – often-cited Germany – where well-meaning measures have been taken to promote alternative energy. To accomplish an aggressive phase-out of coal the Ontario ratepayers have paid for delays in new plants and cost overruns. Ontario consumers have seen their bills increase dramatically, and they're expected to continue to increase in the future. Mr. Speaker, Ontario currently charges consumers a global adjustment, which adjusts for the regulated costs of the nuclear and hydro generation, the cost of new gas-fired plants to replace coal generation, renewable electricity build, nuclear refurbishment, and contracted rates paid to existing generators. The global adjustment levels for Ontario for October and November 2014 were about $100 per megawatt hour. For context, the year to average pool price in Alberta was $52 a megawatt hour. So if we were to adopt Ontario's global adjustment level, it would triple our power prices, and I'm pretty sure the opposition's polls didn't ask whether Alberta consumers would be willing to bear a triple electricity rate.

This is also true in Germany, where there has been a sharp increase in household electricity bills to offset the subsidies provided by the government to promote the transition. Germany has drifted back to coal power, and unfortunately much of that is produced by brown coal, which has very significant greenhouse gas effects. The graph I saw the other day: in Germany last year 47 per cent of their electricity production was from coal fire.

At a time when Alberta's growth and demand for electricity has been amongst the highest in North America, we cannot go down that road, Mr. Speaker. We cannot cause investors to lose confidence in our system. Over the next 20 years our electricity system will need $20 billion worth of investments to meet the projected demand. This includes building 12,000 to 14,000 megawatts of new generation to replace the coal units scheduled to retire and build additional capacity to accommodate our growth. The only other way to accomplish this, short of the market-based system that we have, is to do public.

Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that in addition to Ontario's current electricity rates, Ontario is carrying $44 billion in utility debt. Quebec carries $53.7 billion in utility debt.

Mrs. McQueen: How much does Alberta have?

Mr. Oberle: Alberta has zero, Mr. Speaker, in utility debt. We have built an electricity system larger than the size of the province of Saskatchewan since deregulation with not a penny in public debt, and that's the way we're going to keep going.

Mr. Speaker, it's for these reasons that I will not support this well-intended motion, yet I support the intent. We can and we will do better. We will release a climate change strategy that will put Alberta at the forefront. We will release a greenhouse gas strategy and build upon that a renewable energy strategy, electricity strategy that the member calls for, because it's the right thing to do, and it will place Alberta at the forefront. We'll be ready for Paris this year.

I cannot support this motion in its current form. Our transition away from coal-fired generation needs to balance the pace of change with reliability and the cost to consumers. We need to ensure the reliability of our system and at the same time look at opportunities for innovation. I believe that a responsible course is already being charted out for the phase-out of coal-fired electricity and that we have a full understanding of the effects of early shutdown.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that this motion should be rejected. Thank you for the opportunity to address it.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, I have quite a long list of speakers, so I just note that.

I'll recognize next the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Livingstone-Macleod, followed by Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the Minister of ESRD.

Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hearing the minister – and I'm going to respectfully disagree with what the minister just said about being so-called debt free. Alberta subsidizes its market, so-called free market, with a zero-congestion policy to the tune of tens of billions of dollars, and I'm not so sure what the public gets from that. What the motion calls for is a plan to accelerate the decommission of these coal plants. What would that do for Alberta if we actually came up with a plan that sped that up?

Now, this is what's interesting about it. We have a problem accessing international markets. Everyone here recognizes that. Our own industry knows that. What's the problem? Well, the problem really is environmental. We know this. We see the argument south of the border. It is the environmental argument that is hurting us accessing that market, and it still haunts us today. We speak a lot of good words about what we're doing, but what we're not doing is demonstrating actual progress. So as the minister points out about our specified emitters regulations, what it's not doing is actually achieving results. What we need to do is actually achieve results, and we're not doing that. So if we were to put in place a plan – and that's the difference here. We're not talking about shutting the lights off; we're talking about putting in place a plan that could get us further down the road where we can demonstrate to our markets that we are not just promising but we are delivering on environmental progress. That is really the key here.

Now, I'm going to back up a little bit because I want to talk about the SRD committee dealing with the issue of hydroelectricity. We have two primary sources of delivering on an accelerated pace. One is that we could tap into dams. Site C in Manitoba is actually looking for a customer source, a market to access, because they lost the U.S. central states as a market. They've got an incredible excess of hydroelectricity. Now, here's the key. With our zero-congestion policy that we instituted in this province, what happens almost on a daily basis with our coal plants is that B.C. Hydro comes and purchases electricity for around 3 cents a kilowatt hour almost every evening as they dial back their dams, and then during the day, the very next day, they're selling it back to us for 6 cents a kilowatt hour. Those are rough figures.

But that continues on a regular basis. Is that to the advantage of the consumers in Alberta who are paying for all these excess transmission lines so they can do this? We can actually turn around in a plan and start putting some of our own assets to work for us. If we wanted just to develop our own hydro, which I'm in favour of, we can do that. We have to, though, come up with a plan on how we're going to do it.

The second thing is that by running an east-west grid connecting Manitoba and B.C. Hydro – we have the ability to tap into B.C. Hydro immediately, but we've got to get Saskatchewan and Manitoba on board. [interjections] Manitoba is on board. They need another customer. Now, you can giggle about that, but you can't compete with that. That's the problem. The cost of that hydroelectricity is that much cheaper than coal.

The thing about coal is – and it's well established. The Harvard six-city study, which is about 50 years old and has been re-evaluated and built upon decade after decade, shows that for every 10 microns of particulate matter the death rate in a city of a million people increases by 100. Now, here we've got a perfect formula because you're dealing in the Edmonton area with a city of approximately 1 million people. This gives you an idea of what we're dealing with, never mind talking about nitrogen oxide, sulphur dioxide, mercury, lead, and cadmium, all those nasty things that coal does to us environmentally.

What we have here is the ability, and I don't think we have to subsidize anything. I think what the government needs to do is come up with a plan, just as this motion suggests, and on that plan have the incentives to allow the development in areas where these investors would more than happily go. But you have to make that readily available. An east-west grid does a number of things for us environmentally and for our grid. It stabilizes our grid for a much lower cost energy source.

One of the things that we forget when we compare hydro to coal to natural gas is that hydroelectricity is about 90 per cent efficient. Coal never gets above 50 per cent. Natural gas gets above 50 per cent but doesn't get up into the 60 per cent range. So you're talking efficiencies. The lifespan of a coal plant versus a natural gas plant is somewhat comparable. The lifespan of a hydroelectricity station is 100 years and growing. We always do the comparison as if it's 50 years in cost; it's not.

These are the things. If we develop a long-range plan, we could come up with an economic plan to help us environmentally. One of the things by doing this is to allow us to go to the international markets and say: take a look at our environmental record, not our so-called environmental promises. We don't have the record yet. We need the record. By putting together a plan, we could actually build towards something, and that's really important.

With that, going back to the whole issue of particulate matter, when we look at greenhouse gases, our top five coal generators on that scale are not just the top five in comparison to our oil sands but also are the top five in Canada for producing greenhouse gases. We are dealing with on an international market something that is called the low-carbon standard, and we have to think about that when we're trying to access these markets. We have to lessen our carbon footprint. If we approach the markets arrogantly and say that we do not, we could find ourselves penalized because we did not take advance action or progressive action or proactive action, however you want to call it, to get in front of the market.

I will say this. It is not this government's responsibility to ensure that the investors of these coal plants make their profit. That's their business because they wanted that free market. What upsets me is how much consumers are subsidizing those coal plants on a daily basis, and they're not getting a return. I will tell you this. The whole idea of a grid that has zero congestion is a fallacy, yet we're trying to build to that. That is a subsidy that I believe is not conducive to any market at all. These people should be paying for it if they wanted this so-called market, and they're not. They're being subsidized. It prevents other people from entering the market, and that's just fundamentally wrong, in my view.

Dealing with the issue of the greenhouse gas intensity, the data is absolutely clear on this. Coal as a proportion of the electricity generation in Alberta very rarely – I know the minister made a comment that natural gas finally surpassed the amount of generation, but as you would check right now, at this very moment coal is at around 47 per cent of our generation, and natural gas is right around the 40 per cent level for the baseload. Coal routinely is over 50 per cent of our baseload for this province. We need to reduce that. That needs to be part of a long-range plan to reduce that.

I will tell you this. Alberta has something going for it that we have never ever built upon. Where most jurisdictions would love to go to a distributive generation model, what they lack is the infrastructure to even implement it. What Alberta has is the infrastructure. We have natural gas all throughout this province. We have natural gas generators located all throughout this province. The natural gas infrastructure is there. What we lack is the political will to make that distributive generation model work so we can make the system more efficient, less costly, and we can then start implementing renewable energy sources so we can actually advance an environmental program that will get us ahead of this curve.

When I look at the grid and I look at the supply of electricity, what Alberta is lacking is a renewable energy that can cover baseload. That renewable energy is at our doorstep. It's called hydroelectricity. That renewable energy is inside our own home. We have not developed it. We have hydroelectricity potential, and we should tap into that. That needs to be part of the long-range plan, how we can make those investments work, and that would work for Albertans.

Even when you approach our oil sands producers, when they look at the amount of energy they need, if we were to develop the hydroelectricity potential north of Fort McMurray, that services our industry. The other thing is that on an environmental level, particularly dealing with flood mitigation, in water conservation, by having these hydroelectricity dams, we're able to conserve and work with our environment.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and good afternoon, everyone. An interesting topic and one that I think is significant to a lot of us, particularly for myself because there's a lot of renewable energy in my riding down south. If you've been down around Pincher Creek and so on, you'll see an awful lot of stuff down there pertaining to renewable energy.

Nonetheless, with respect to the motion that's been made by the hon. member here, what they're asking for – and I think this needs to be underlined a little bit to get us on track here – is that they're looking to do an immediate study and drafting of a plan to phase out coal-generated energy. I think we've talked a little bit about the stats and all about the other things to do with coal to a great extent here, and I'm not going to take a lot of time with that. Regardless, just a couple of years ago I was involved on the Resource Stewardship Committee, and we did spend an awful lot of time studying one of the things that the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has referred to, and that is hydroelectric energy.

My suggestion is that the Wildrose is in support of this motion because of two things. First of all, there's a great amount of known information about the harmful effects of these coal-generating plants. We also know that there are a lot of good things about the coal we have here in Alberta, and we have some good technologies to try to offset it. There's no question about that. However, we know that we must move to another source. If the motion is truly about what it seems to be – that is, having a study – I think that the study the Resource Stewardship Committee did on hydroelectric, that spent I don't know how many months doing so, is a great start. I think that this motion could be carried out with little cost and could be, you know, easily accomplished by taking the report that the Resource Stewardship Committee had already filed to the House, dated March 2013, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Oberle: What did they recommend?

Mr. Stier: They recommended an awful lot of stuff. I'll get to that.

In any regard, I think it would be a good start, an extra study to look into how coal plants could be phased out. We could phase over to perhaps hydroelectric as an alternative. That would be a good alternative.

You know, I have some other points here with that in mind. Just for those of you that weren't involved with that committee, we know that eventually we're going to have to phase out coal generation at some point in time. I think we've all agreed to that here. There are some viable alternatives down in my area. We have a lot of wind energy, as I've said, and there's been a lot of talk about solar and so on and so forth.

But nothing is more efficient, from the report that we did, than hydroelectric. Certainly, there are some costs. I'm sure that that is what the minister is kind of chuckling about at the moment. Regardless, as we're looking at this motion and trying to figure out how to move forward – after all, this motion is only to do a bit of studying on how we could move forward – I don't necessarily find the humour in it, quite frankly. We have some good recommendations that we worked upon. There are ways that we can go about this.

You know, these run-of-river systems that they put in place nowadays for the hydroelectric types of plants are marvellous systems. They can include sluiceways that will allow wildlife to be protected, and fish and so on can still travel through the various watersheds, et cetera. It's probably one of the most efficient ways that we can go, and today it represents 60 per cent of Canada's energy portfolio, but it only accounts for 6 per cent in Alberta. It was our conclusion that this was something that we should pursue as soon as we could. It's an untapped potential. It's something that makes good sense as we go ahead. We've already got the information.

To conclude, really, we know that the coal is critically important to current power generation and consumption needs in Alberta, but we must acknowledge that there are other ways to go about phasing it out. I think that I would like to encourage the government to explore these alternative methods, including hydro. The report is done. We're talking about doing an extra study just to see how we could phase coal out. I don't see why we would be against this motion to study a little further. We've already got a lot of the information. You know, yes, we are moving to clean-burning propane and natural gas and all that kind of thing, but this motion is only asking for a study, people. We do a lot of studies in this business, it seems. Some of the information is here. Let's just supplement it, as has been suggested by the hon. member.

That's about all I have to add at this time, Mr. Speaker. I'm in favour of this motion. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the Minister of Finance.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Very pleased to stand and support Motion 507, which will accelerate the phase-out of coal electricity in the province. You know, it's interesting to hear the government talk about a holistic approach in 2015. Unfortunately, if it is being done, it's not being shared with the rest of us because we've seen 30 years of anything but comprehensive analyses and proper planning for the benefit of Albertans. We've seen short-term decisions made, incentives given, failure to take into account externalities, external costs, including the health and social and environmental costs.

Now we see a government that is struggling to sell its primary products because of our failure to do comprehensive analysis and look at full-cost accounting. By full-cost accounting, of course, I mean starting with the impacts of mining, the social and health and environmental impacts of the mining itself, then the transportation, the impacts of the building of the coal-fired generators, the jobs that that creates relative to the jobs other energy-producing industries would create, the greenhouse gases, the pollutants, including mercury and other contaminants, that have added their impacts to our environment and reduced our international reputation.

To tout in this House that there's been a broader approach, a triple bottom line, in 2015 begs the question of where this government has been for the last 30 years as we've paid the price in human lives, in social disruption, in environmental contamination, and now in rivers that we can't eat the fish out of because the mercury levels have exceeded the health advisory, in most southern rivers, at least, in this province. Without doing a proper analysis, a full-cost accounting on other, alternate energies such as hydro, such as wind and solar, we're not getting true cost accounting.

This government talks about a level playing field, but we don't have anything like a level playing field. We've been subsidizing the fossil fuel industry for 75 years, and suddenly we're hearing from the government that they want a level playing field. Solar producers get the minimum price because they put in as they're able to while the coal companies got up to $690 a kilowatt hour last year at the peak demands in the summer. At the same time solar producers were getting $15 a kilowatt hour. At the same time the coal companies were able to bid at the last minute for the highest price, which is something like $690 a kilowatt hour. What kind of a level playing field is that when it's so stacked against the renewables, that actually produce greater numbers of jobs, that actually produce much less, if any, pollution – and solar, obviously, produces virtually zero – and indeed add to our international reputation such that our own primary fossil fuel industry could gain a stronger foothold in international markets?

The other issue that, unfortunately, isn't talked about enough is demand reduction. We constantly talk about energy production, energy needs, but we fail to look at the demand side of energy and how much we could be doing by providing incentives for retrofitting buildings, commercial and residential; helping people with energy-efficient appliances; funding public transit as an alternative to fossil fuels; and even looking at some of the agricultural impacts on greenhouse gases as it contributes to the most serious threat, as I think we all recognize, in this generation, which is climate warming.

I want to just say a little bit about the need to change our terms from "climate change" to "climate warming" because the warming is indeed the real issue here. Certainly, there are disruptions and extreme weather events associated with climate, but we need to emphasize that the climate is warming. The warming is causing loss of icefields, the raising of sea levels, causing acidification in our oceans. It's impacting our fish life. Surely, as Albertans we know that we have to do better. Our international reputation is certainly impacting our economy, not to mention, as I mentioned, our social and health indicators and, bottom line, our economy. I am very interested to hear the minister talk about a more holistic approach to planning. We have yet to see the evidence that they are taking a comprehensive look, including the social, environmental, and job costs of continuing on the same path.

Now, in 2012, as the minister rightly says, the federal rules changed, and there was some sense that there was going to be some phase-out, but unfortunately they added five years to the original plan for phase-out, which means another 40 per cent increase in our greenhouse gas emissions and increased health impacts, particularly, can I say, in the Edmonton area because Edmonton is right downwind from the big Wabamun plants, some of the oldest in the province. Why should we be allowing a company that was supposed to phase out at 45 years to go to 50 years? Because they can, because they can lobby, and because this government is extremely sensitive to lobbying and to the economic bottom line of their donors.

I looked at some of the donations in 2012, Mr. Speaker, and it was something like $400,000 from the coal companies in Alberta prior to that election. This really was shocking, and it added new incentives for me to speak out on the importance of a comprehensive, full-cost accounting in our energy mix instead of just assuming that because coal is $50 per kilowatt hour, according to the minister, that included all of the externalities, which, of course, it doesn't. Emergency room visits, asthma, lung cancer, chronic obstructive lung disease: all of these don't figure into any of these calculations that the minister is giving on the price of a kilowatt hour. Nor does he comment on the very small number of jobs associated with coal-fired power and the four to five times as many jobs that are associated with clean technology and green energy.

There is a real opportunity here to not only talk the talk but walk the walk in terms of putting out all the facts as they are in the literature and to recognize that we are not finding the balance and not accelerating in a way that most of the world can appreciate or respect. We have a serious international reputation problem, and we're losing scores of people every year as a result of our failure to recognize the health impacts.

In my view and in the view of a growing number of Albertans, there are some tremendous new technology opportunities, not the least of which is combined heat and power in association with the oil sands, which could be providing a tremendous addition and an earlier phase-out. I don't know if the minister is aware of the opportunities in the oil sands for combined heat and power, which would double the efficiency, in fact, of our power generation and reduce our greenhouse gases by about 30 per cent.

The minister is busy talking to somebody else, but I hope he will be interested in speaking to the oil sands operators about this tremendous opportunity that simply needs incentives. It needs some financial and other incentives, recognizing that the economic bottom line is not the only bottom line. There are tremendous gains to be made on the triple bottom line if we look at accelerating the phase-out of coal-fired power and taking advantage, obviously, of the transition fuels we have here, natural gas and natural gas liquids.

So the Liberal caucus will certainly be supporting this motion. I'm very grateful for the member raising this real step forward in what many Albertans are anxiously awaiting: a comprehensive plan, a real commitment to moving forward, not just the talk but walking the walk of a comprehensive analysis based on a longer term vision and a plan to include all the externalities, social, economic, and environmental.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I will recognize the Minister of Finance, followed by the Minister of ESRD.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a proud union coal miner for 30 years I have to rise to speak against this job-killing motion put forward by the NDs. This is not just a study, as the Member for Livingstone-Macleod would suggest. If you read the motion put forward by the member, it is to "urge the government to commit to the immediate study and drafting of a plan to phase out all coal-generated power in Alberta by 2030." So it's not just a study. As a member from rural Alberta I think he would want to stand up for rural Albertans and make sure that we have positive jobs for them moving forward into the future.

The coal industry has been providing jobs to thousands of Albertans each and every year right across this province. In fact, over 1,800 coal mines have operated in Alberta since the 1800s. In the 1860s coal mining began near what is known now as Lethbridge. The first mine to operate right here in Edmonton was in 1883. Of course, my constituency of West Yellowhead was built on coal through the coal branch south of Hinton and Edson. One of the reasons I came west, Mr. Speaker, as a fourth-generation miner is that I was proud to come and work for Luscar coal company.

Mr. Speaker, in 2009 Alberta produced 31 million tonnes of marketable coal. We have strong environmental regulations already in place for the coal industry. The coal industry's reclamation is world renowned for the work they do. The bighorn sheep, for example, are icons not only in Alberta but right across North America of the work done on reclamation in the coal industry. Existing measures are already in place reducing our reliance on coal. However, it needs to be said that there's enough coal right now for the next 600 years to supply Alberta with the energy they need moving forward, and we could be a leader in clean coal technology if we wanted to be.

This year we estimate that natural gas, including cogeneration, will surpass coal as the largest source of electrical generation in Alberta. In 2013 just half of Alberta's actual electricity generation came from coal. The share of coal has been declining for more than two decades. These mines have always provided opportunities for Albertans and create good-paying jobs and in most cases good-paying union jobs, Mr. Speaker, and that should not be lost on anybody. In fact, the average coal mining wage is more than twice that of the average national wage according to information gathered by PricewaterhouseCoopers. The estimated average salary in 2011 was $92,785 in the coal industry while the national average salary was $43,700. Jobs in the coal industry provide families with great sources of income, which helps support our communities, our economy, and provides income taxes to both the provincial and federal coffers.

In addition, coal companies support nonprofit organizations that support our rural communities. For example, in my riding alone the Edson Kinsmen spray park was donated by a coal company. Luscar in Hinton provided the curling rink, worked on the community centre, and provided all kinds of different nonprofit organizations with the money to help them through their process. Also Grande Cache Coal was a prime mover in getting the town of Grande Cache built and all the work that they needed in their rec centre and employing people in that area. Mr. Speaker, there are countless examples of how industry supports our rural towns and villages, whether it's Forestburg, Hanna, Wainwright, or Wabamun. In addition to supporting nonprofit organizations, the industry creates opportunities for small businesses and entrepreneurs which contribute to our economy.

Unfortunately, we've seen what can happen if the industry isn't successful. The community of Grande Cache in my constituency of West Yellowhead is one of those examples. It's heavily dependent on the coal industry. The local mine has been struggling as of late and has had to lay off employees, which has devastated the town. Following the layoffs, a number of small businesses have had to close their doors. This not only has an economic impact, but it creates a psychological impact as doors to businesses close and people move away. The community is struggling, and the ND motion would only create an even more dire situation. We need to do what we can to ensure the industry is viable so communities like Grande Cache can thrive and survive.

Mr. Speaker, with families across this province losing jobs in the oil and gas industry, we must keep Albertans working. Keeping Albertans working is a priority for our government. Unlike the NDs, we are not going to take actions that cost Albertans their jobs. From Coleman to Robb this industry is important to communities across the province. I am firmly against the ND motion today as it would kill jobs and negatively impact communities in my riding, including Jasper. And people say: why Jasper? Because CN has a hub in Jasper, and those employees take coal to the coast from all of the mines in West Yellowhead. Grande Cache, Hinton, Edson, Robb, Brûle: all communities in my riding that depend on the coal industry.

Let's keep Albertans working, and let's support rural Alberta in our economy, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

The hon. Minister of ESRD.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in opposition to this motion for many of the same reasons as outlined by the hon. Minister of Energy and the hon. Minister of Finance. I will say that I think the spirit and the intent of the hon. member with this motion is admirable. However, I think it lacks considerable foresight about some of the consequences of what she is actually proposing.

Most importantly, Mr. Speaker, is that a lot of the work which the hon. member talked about is already being taken into consideration in a way that accounts for some of the consequences brought forward by the Minister of Energy and by the Minister of Finance. The makeup of our electrical generation from coal to other sources is changing. My colleague the Minister of Energy brought forward the reasons as to why that's happening, so I won't reiterate that, but to quickly summarize these points, there are already federal rules for greenhouse gas emissions from coal-fired power plants. About 60 per cent of Alberta's existing coal-fired power plants will be retired by the year 2029. At that time only 10 per cent of the province's electricity generation will be from coal-powered plants.

The world of alternative energy is an important one for this province and for all citizens across the world. It's important to ensure that as we heat our homes, power our devices, and provide the comforts in our home and elsewhere, it is being met through cleaner sources of electricity that are economical for consumers both large and small. Over the next 15 years I'm sure that we are going to see great progress on this front from solar to wind to biomass and other sources.

At the same time Alberta has an electricity emissions management framework in place. This requires significant improvements in emissions performance in coal-fired units as the years go on. This framework allows for the replacement of older, more emission intensive generation with newer, less emission intensive generation as part of Alberta's electrical system. We're currently reviewing our energy and climate change strategy and approach, including but not limited to the electricity system, and we have publicly committed to shifting to a lower emission source of power, which has co-benefits of air quality improvements in these airsheds. While this strategy is not complete or decided, the preliminary direction indicates that we are committed to the existing provincial and federal air quality and greenhouse gas emission requirements to ensure Alberta has a healthy environment.

Mr. Speaker, just to conclude, the air quality in this province is of a high quality for 96 per cent of the days in the year. This is something that we measure, the ambient air quality, as part of the Alberta Environmental Monitoring, Evaluation and Reporting

Agency. That will be something that we can continue to monitor to make sure that these emission sources don't impact Albertans' health, and as we see the reduction of them over time, we believe that we do have the right plan in place to do exactly what the hon. member is wanting from a health standpoint for Albertans while considering the economic consequences highlighted by the Minister of Energy and the Minister of Finance.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

We may have two minutes left for the Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to participate in the debate on Motion 507 brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Motion 507 calls on Alberta to phase out coal-generation power by 2030. However, I believe the implications embedded within this motion are harmful for a number of reasons. As we know, due to low oil prices Alberta is undergoing difficult economic times that have overreaching effects on a number of sectors. In order to make the best decisions that do not cripple our economy, we should focus on the promotion of fiscal strength and the continued success of our province's industrial sector.

Alberta is well under way in our efforts to reduce coal-powered plants, as we have already heard. We must be more concerned with how this would affect employees working in the industry; namely, the many individuals who rely on coal plants to feed their families. Mr. Speaker, employees who work in our coal industry are hard-working people who believe in the integrity of the jobs they do and the services that millions of Albertans rely on every single day. Motion 507 fails to consider the human aspect of Alberta's coal industry. What Motion 507 also fails to provide is a viable job strategy that should be implemented in order to address those who will be unemployed as a result of coal plant phase-out.

Reducing coal-generated electricity could help to reduce pollution and smog, allowing for the growth of clean and renewable energy. But these changes take time, and these changes should be done in a well-orchestrated and responsible manner. Any good policy requires extensive planning, and Motion 507 fails to realize any viable workforce plan or strategy. Motion 507 would render many Albertans jobless, without any immediate transition.

Mr. Speaker, how does this motion benefit Albertans, especially those relying on coal-generated electricity as a source of energy and as a source of income like many people in my constituency? Frankly, it does not.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt you, hon. member, but Standing Order 8(3) provides for five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate.

I would offer the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona this time.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much. I will try to take less time than that. Just a couple of quick points. First of all, on the issue of jobs this was a motion to put in place a plan. A plan would include a strategy to preserve and maintain and promote jobs. I find it incredibly rich that a government that has dedicated its whole being, it's whole existence, to shipping long-term sustainable jobs to Texas would lecture me on jobs. That's ridiculous. Moreover, the fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that economists will tell you that the multiplier effect on renewable energy is much higher than coal and that, in fact, in the long term there will be more jobs, not fewer.

Let me make it very clear, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's NDP is about creating jobs, not about killing them. I'm very tired of these ridiculous, tired old fearmongering talking points from a bunch of folks that don't want to move forward, because this is about moving forward. This is about making a decision to understand that we're a modern province that needs to take responsibility for the environmental consequences of our decisions. That's what leadership is, that's what planning is, and that's what good government does. This kind of negligent see no evil, hear no evil, stick our head in the sand kind of approach has not served Albertans well. It didn't serve people living downstream from the dam that wasn't even inspected, and it's not going to serve us going forward.

I'd like to make a couple of points. There was a change in regulations around coal, and as the Member for Calgary-Mountain View rightly pointed out, those changes made the problem worse, not better, and the Minister of Energy knows that. As for the specified gas emitters regulations, that's what the Auditor General said was not working and was not going to get us anywhere because this government is not doing a good job on it. That's why we need to change this.

Let me just finally renew or re-emphasize a point made by my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View, because I hadn't realized this: $400,000 in election donations in the last election year from the coal industry. Mr. Speaker, really? We are so far behind the rest of the country, and now I'm starting to see even more why that is. That's why we need a change in government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope people will vote in favour of this motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, March 16, 2015

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Transmittal of Estimates

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, I have received a certain message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Acting Speaker: The Lieutenant Governor transmits interim supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province and of certain sums required from the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2016, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, I now wish to table the 2015-2016 interim supply estimates. When Budget 2015 is tabled on March 26, the fiscal plan for the entire fiscal year will be presented. However, these interim supply estimates will provide spending authority to the Legislative Assembly and to the government as of April 1, 2015. When passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize the approximate spending of $61.5 million for the Legislative Assembly and $10.6 billion in operational funding, $1.3 billion in capital funding, $256.8 million in financial transactions funding for the government, and $386.9 million for the transfer from the lottery fund to the general revenue fund.

Madam Speaker, interim supply amounts are based on the department's need to fund government programs and services.

Government Motions

21. Mr. Oberle on behalf of Mr. Campbell moved:
Be it resolved that the message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2015-16 interim supply estimates, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

The Acting Speaker: This is a debatable motion under Standing Order 18(1)(i). Are there any members who wish to speak to the motion?

Seeing none, we will ask the question.

Would you like to close debate, hon. minister?

Mr. Oberle: No. I'll call the question, Madam Speaker.

[Government Motion 21 carried]

22. Mr. Oberle on behalf of Mr. Campbell moved:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(2) the Committee of Supply shall be called to consider the 2015-16 interim supply estimates for six hours on Tuesday, March 17, 2015.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, this motion is not debatable under Standing Order 61(2).

[Government Motion 22 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

We have had a request to revert to introductions. Are there any opposed to reverting to introductions at this time?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a friend of mine, Brian Willoughby, in the government gallery. Brian is a long-time friend and a member of the Camrose council. I just wanted to welcome him and introduce him to the House.

We have Kristen George from Grande Prairie, Shannon Peacocke from CSA, Cody Weger from CSA, Joshua Bettel from SAIT, Bailey Daines from Red Deer College, Alex Willkie from Medicine Hat College, and Thomas Ridgeway from the ASEC association. I ask all hon. members to welcome our visitors to the gallery.

Bill 17

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2015

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Chair: Chair.

Mr. Strankman: Madam Chair. I'll get it right yet, possibly, if I keep going around the bases there.

I would like to reiterate some of the comments made the other evening regarding the supplementary supply estimates. There are several interesting line items in there that are onerous, I guess, to say the least, with the financial situation of the province. One of them is the potential of an injection of cash funding into carbon capture and storage, some $2 billion to date, and there is potential for further allocation. It's my understanding that this is not necessarily a complete science, and I think it should be made known to the Chamber and to others across the way that this is questionable. There's an ongoing question that's being debated, and I think possibly during the election cycle that will become a situation if the government does decide to go ahead.

One of the other things that I'd like to bring forward is the expenditure of some $400 million on the federal building. To me, Madam Chair, that's exorbitant, extraneous, and extremely wasteful in this day and age, in what we might consider to be a frugal government. Certainly, it's not necessarily, as the members opposite call it, a government of new management because that was brought forward previous to that. It's certainly, again, an example of an overextension of the government.

The final thing I would like to bring forward is, I think, probably the most significant comment here and something that was specifically mentioned as a line item. It relates to the refurbishment, I guess, of what you might call in some people's minds an extravagance, the Kananaskis golf course. The Kananaskis golf course competes against private industry, and it's not necessarily the government's place in this case to compete against private industry much the same as the government took a position on government aircraft that government aircraft is also not necessarily required nor should compete in private industry. It's not government's place to compete with private industry; it's government's place to create regulation or reduce regulation to allow private industry or private enterprise to go forward.

Madam Chair, those are my main points. I think there may be further discussion in this regard as we go forward. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd just like to respond to a couple of the comments and to clarify the situation on carbon capture and storage for the House. You'll recall some years ago now that the government of Alberta set up a $2 billion fund to invest in carbon capture and storage technology. This was not a go-alone thing. We're in fact co-operating with a number of other nations in the world: the United Kingdom, Norway, and others that have science institutions. We had planned to incent a number of projects up to $2 billion.

What eventually happened was that two projects came forward, funded to the tune of $1.3 billion. We've only paid out about $300 million of that right now as both of those projects are under construction and they don't get paid until they meet construction timelines. Since assuming the helm of the Department of Energy, I committed that we would suspend our spending at $1.3 billion. We will not go beyond that, yet the funds flow from the current $300 million until we reach $1.3 billion. The two projects in question: the quest project will be finished at the end of this current year, so most of that will be in payout this year; and the Alberta trunk line will be in full production next year. So over the next two years the rest of the $1 billion will be paid out for those two projects.

Madam Chair, the carbon capture and storage fund that the member says is incomplete science: generally incomplete science requires that you complete the science. We're participating with other organizations in the world. But we've frozen our spending at $1.3 billion. There are no cost overrun provisions in either of those contracts, so the spending will not go beyond $1.3 billion, but it does require some time to get there until they meet the timelines.

Most recently the Department of Energy in the United States is examining our projects. They want to be involved from a science point of view in the validation and monitoring research that's going to go on. They've proposed that we establish a centre of excellence on the data. We fully intend to do that. It's going to be housed in Alberta, though, not in the United States. We've decided to suspend any further spending, additional projects, until some of our international partners (a) have a chance to review the data that's happening here and elsewhere and (b) we think we've made our contribution.

The member talked about the federal building. I think everybody heard the Infrastructure minister say that all things being equal, if that project were proposed today in our current fiscal climate, most likely we would not have proceeded with it. Nonetheless, we did proceed with it some years ago. We've got contracts in place, and we're not going to break contracts. In addition, Madam Chair, that's a heritage building. The cornerstone was laid by none other than John Diefenbaker, I believe. It was sold to the province for a dollar some 20 years ago and sat languishing, roof leaking and everything else. The hon. member will get to see the inside of it in detail. His office is going to be in there as are many other members of the Legislature. It's a beautiful building, and it's an Alberta heritage building, so it was important.

The Kananaskis golf course, that he mentioned. We're not competing with private industry there. In fact, we've got private industry that was lobbying to have us complete that golf course because it's a major economic driver in the region, and lots of spinoff businesses are sitting there with no business because people can't use the Kananaskis golf course.

Kananaskis is also an asset of the government of Alberta, in fact of the people of Alberta, and we're going to maintain our assets as prudent property owners do, Madam Chair, so that's what that's about.

Finally, the planes. Of course, the member knows that we sold the planes. The Premier, under new management, decided that we would sell the aircraft. We were not competing with private business there. We had our own aircraft; many governments do. The Premier, we think rightfully, decided, "enough of that" and we sold the airplanes. Not much more to say than that, Madam Chair. We don't have any planes anymore.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any others? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's always good to enjoy hearing the minister, but I will tell you this. To hear that a government-funded golf course is not somehow competing with private enterprise: I would have to disagree with that.

Madam Chair, I have an amendment to this bill, and I have the 95 copies here.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we'll pause for a moment while we distribute the amendment.

Hon. members, this amendment to Bill 17 will be known as amendment A1.

Hon. member, if you'd like to, go ahead.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 17, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2015, be amended as follows:

- A Section 2 is amended by striking out "$459 250 000" and substituting "$451 250 000."
- B Section 3 is amended by striking out "$704 609 000" and substituting "$703 439 000."
- C The Schedule is amended
 - (a) on page 3 following "Environment and Sustainable Resource Development"
 - (i) by striking out "200 014 000" and substituting "192 014 000", and
 - (ii) by striking out "48 085 000" and substituting "46 915 000"
 - and
 - (b) on page 4
 - (i) following "Operational amounts to be voted under section 2" by striking out "459 250 000" and substituting "451 250 000", and
 - (ii) following "Capital amounts to be voted on under section 3" by striking out "704 609 000" and substituting "703 439 000".

Now, Madam Chair, what this amendment is proposing to do is to take that money slated for a golf course and remove it from this authorization. It's quite simple. We are hearing from government members that this is a unique time in budgeting. In other words, everyone has got to pull up their bootstraps. Everyone has got to be willing to cut. We made a proposal to cut the Auditor General after the committee, an independent committee, authorized about a half million dollar increase. We cut the Child and Youth Advocate's office. We're looking at roughly 9 per cent across the board in total cuts – right across the board, universally speaking – in every department. We've had the Premier tell the public-sector workers they have to be prepared to renegotiate, to give up something.

All this may be well and good – that's a debate for another day – but the debate today is simply this. A golf course got damaged, and that is sad. It really is sad, particularly if you're a golfer. But the fact is: should we be spending $2 million to build a golf course – we have $1.1 million, $1.2 million in this budget – and $8 million to keep it open just while we're fixing it? That doesn't even make sense. You can't ask the public to accept that when you're asking them for cuts. This is about priorities, and this golf course, well intentioned – and it may be a five-star golf course in the sense of pride and joy of this government – does not warrant this kind of expenditure at this time.

A prudent, reasonable businessperson who had suffered this same damage, in spending $2 million to fix their golf course, would not spend $8 million to keep it open. They would at least just spend $2 million to fix it while they remained closed. This is something that the public will not buy into, and it's imperative that this government take a look at this in terms of looking at priorities. What should be funded as: this is what we need? What should not be funded because we want something? That's critical to this.

I mean, there are lots of options for this golf course. We could lease it out if it's a money-maker. One of the things we can't even find out from this government is: what is the revenue source from this golf course? How much revenue do we actually make in a year? We don't get that information; that's quite interesting. Now we're going to be throwing this kind of money at it. What is the bottom line here? What is the bottom line?

This amendment requires that we just take this money out and tell the public: we're going to cut back here. You know what? If the government members want to hold a golf tournament, they can go to a public golf course versus Kananaskis. We don't need to be funding that today. That's simply what this amendment does.

I want to know from the government members: are you willing to actually go out on the campaign trail and say that we spent $9 million to almost $10 million to fix a golf course while we're going to cut teachers, while we're going to cut front-line workers? I know you say that you're not going to, but they're feeling the pinch today, and we don't have room to squeeze. You're looking at cutting various departments like the Auditor General, who could actually help us, who could actually show us where we can cut efficiently, because where we're spending money, there's no proof that it's actually producing anything.

I would hope that the government members would actually support this amendment. Let's withdraw that money from this bill, and let's be prudent and reasonable and spend money wisely. These are taxpayers' dollars.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Speaking to amendment A1 on Bill 17, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2015, the hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Fawcett: Yes. Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's an honour to stand up and speak against this amendment. I have to give the member some credit in the sense that he certainly knows how to generate some talking points or a sound bite in the time of fiscal austerity that we're going through. Certainly, you know, I don't imagine that if you went out and asked Albertans at this time, they would say that a golf course is a priority.

However, the member is clearly leaving out some of the facts around this particular item in the supplementary estimates. The facts are that he alluded to what a business would do. I can tell you that if a business had an asset – the golf course is about a $50 million plus asset which was destroyed significantly during the floods – and had an insurance policy on that asset and if the insurance company was going to step forward and pay for that company to rebuild that asset, particularly a big portion of that, but you did have a small deductible, let's say about $2 million on that asset to rebuild that asset for the company, and if the insurance company was willing to do that, it would make sense for that company to take the insurance company, that they've been paying all along, up on that agreement to rebuild that asset, to pay the deductible.

Now, to rebuild that asset takes time. That asset wasn't completely destroyed. There was approximately $18 million of that asset that was still intact. It does not make sense to allow that portion of that asset to go into disrepair while the rest of the asset is being rebuilt, funded in the majority by the insurance company. This is strictly asset management, which on this side of the House we understand needs to be done prudently on behalf of taxpayers. In fact, there actually would be more additional expenses to the taxpayers through the remediation of the site there – those would include cleaning up all of the debris and doing something with the current assets that are still available – that would be over and above what is actually being paid by the government right now to rebuild that asset.

Now, if that hon. member wants to have a debate around whether this government should own a golf course or not, that's fair. That's a fair debate. But that's not what this is about. This is about asset management. We currently own an asset which suffered significant damage. We had an insurance policy on that in the form of provincial assets being covered by the disaster recovery program in the arrangement between the provincial government and the federal government. What we're doing is capitalizing on that to make sure that Albertans have the same asset afterwards that they had before the flood.

I could go into a whole bunch – I believe the hon. Minister of Energy talked about it before – about the economic spinoffs around that. You can be assured that the hon. member was right when he said that the other businesses were supportive of this. This is a place where tourists go, where Albertans go, yes, to recreate. It is the job of government to provide opportunities for Albertans to recreate. Many people that go and visit this golf course do a weekend trip and go visit another golf course in the area, that is owned by a private business. They understand that, and that's why they wanted this provincial asset rebuilt. Again, there is well over a million and a half dollars created in taxes every year from this golf course. It employs 150 people on an annual basis. That's directly. Indirectly there's other employment.

So while the hon. member sounds really good – and I'm sure he's going to try to take all the credit he wants in front of the camera about this being a misspent priority in a time of frugality – he's missing a whole bunch of facts and not explaining those to Albertans. This is sound asset management, and in fact it would cost Albertans more in the remediation of the site and with some of the contracts that are in place and getting out of those contracts than it actually would to do what we're doing, which is to then rebuild a provincial asset that was there before the flood, that will now be in place years afterwards, that will create a whole bunch of economic benefits for Albertans, particularly in the tourism industry and particularly in the Bow Valley area, that was impacted significantly by the floods in 2013.

Mr. Anglin: A great argument. I'm just not buying it, Madam Chair. I'm not buying it. It's a great asset, yes. What makes you think that you have to reclaim it this year if you don't fix it this year? That's the part that doesn't make sense to me. It did get damaged. Now, you mentioned the debris, the removal of the debris alone. Well, if you're going to fix the golf course, you've got to remove the debris anyway. If this is a natural preserve – I mean, I'm not buying the argument that it's got to be fixed this year. I will buy the argument that it's a valuable asset. I don't have a problem with that. What I have a problem with is that we're looking at expenditures this year. It got damaged 18 months ago. I understand that. Maybe it needs to be repaired over a longer period of time, when we're in a better position budgetwise.

But when you're going into a position with an austerity budget where there are county bridges that are impassable right now because there's absolutely no funding for those bridges and we're going to fix a golf course, that doesn't make sense to me. There's a bridge in James River Bridge, which is a community. They need a quarter of a million dollars to fix the bridge, and they're being told there's no money coming to fix the bridge. But we're going to spend $8 million for a golf course just to keep it open while we spend another $1.1 million to finish it and fix it. That doesn't make sense to me. The operational money makes no sense to me. We don't need it open for one more year.

The other thing that the member says is: we're not presenting all the facts. The answer is true. You're not presenting all the facts. What is the generating revenue from your so-called $50 million asset? Has it ever paid for itself? Does it even make money? I mean, we can go on and on about this, but you're not giving us the figures. You're not being transparent, and we need that to make sure that the money is being spent wisely. This business of saying... [interjections] Could I ask you to be quiet, please? Thanks. It's just loud in my ear.

Okay. What we're looking at is priorities. That's it. I'm not saying that you get rid of the asset. I'm not saying that you don't fix the asset. But the Health minister will even tell you that when he looks at a hospital and he's going to look at building hospitals versus fixing hospitals, one thing he will absolutely stand up and defend me on is that he'll prioritize what's best for us. Building that golf course is not in the best interest of the public right now. If you say that it is, then I ask you to prove it. Show the revenue that it's going to generate, that if we spend this kind of money now, we will get a return of X amount that shows that it's worth it. You can't do that because it's not happening. That's the problem.

My argument is simply this. I'm not saying don't do it. I'm saying: in this supplemental budget pull it out; do it when you have the money. We have senior citizens who need certain medications that are life-saving, certain medications that make for a better quality of life going into their final days, that are not covered by the province because we don't have the money. We have all sorts of priorities that are in line that are not funded.

All I'm saying in this amendment is that this is not a priority here and now. If you say that it's a worthwhile endeavour and it's a worthwhile asset, I'm okay with that. I'm just not okay saying that we've got to spend that money right now while we're asking everyone else to cut, because – you know what? – golfing is nice, but you know as well as I do that the golfers in this province are heading to Palm Springs in the wintertime, and when these golf courses open, they're all over the province. There are lots of golf courses. Having one golf course not operational while it's under repair or while it's waiting to go under repair because we just don't have the money now is not the end of the world for this province. It is not a high priority, in my view, and that's where I'm going with this. So I'm not saying that we have to reclaim it. I'm not saying that we have to abandon it. I'm just saying that it's not a priority this spring, in 2015. Maybe it needs to be moved out.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Energy on amendment A1.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Madam Chair. I always look forward to the comments of the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, who, as the Minister of Environment points out, does occasionally omit the facts, occasionally makes up a few while he's talking, and that's always an entertaining conversation. For example, he started his motion for amendment by talking about 9 per cent cuts across the board, even across every ministry. There is nothing whatsoever in the record of this Assembly or any motion or budget or anything before us that would suggest any such thing. It's just simply not true, Madam Chair, but that doesn't matter. We'll make up facts as we go along.

He talked about that we'll be breaking contracts left and right.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Deputy Chair: A point of order has been called. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on the point of order.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I think that the hon. member, by suggesting that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is omitting the facts, is violating the rules of the Assembly. Furthermore, I would like to point out that the Minister of Finance of this province is on the record in public making the assertion that not only will there not be any increases included in this budget for inflation and population growth, but there will be an across-the-board reduction of 5 per cent. Now, the government may have changed its mind, and it's well that they might because I would suggest that the firestorm of public opinion would consume them. But I think the fact of the matter is – and I want to put it on the record – that those statements have been made in public by the Finance minister, and for the minister to assert otherwise is simply not true.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, can you give us the citation for your point of order, please?

Mr. Mason: Yeah; 23(h), (i), and (j).

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Chair, those citations would suggest that I had somehow impugned the hon. member or made some incorrect statement when the actual fact of the matter is that this hon. member can go on what he may have heard or hadn't or what CBC had quoted or hadn't. What I said was that there's no such suggestion before this House that's being considered at this time. We'll have to wait for the budget, to see what that brings about. That's a statement of fact, and I believe that automatically means there's no point of order.

May I continue, Madam Chair?

The Deputy Chair: I will just rule on that point of order. Just give me one minute, please. Half a minute.

Thank you, hon. members. We know that in this Assembly members will certainly disagree from time and time, and there may be a dispute as to facts. Clarifications have been made, so let's move on.

Debate Continued

Mr. Oberle: Madam Chair, in his introduction he also talked about the necessity of breaking contracts when, again, no such facts are in evidence before the House here. In fact, if the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood wants to bandy quotes about, the actual quote given is that we won't be breaking contracts. So let's just straighten that out. None of those things ever stopped the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Let's just put this in simpler terms. About the golf course: the federal government under the disaster recovery program will fund up to 90 per cent of the flood damage cost of this facility. He mentioned in his discussion about prudent businessmen what a prudent businessman would do. Well, perhaps he could describe to me one prudent businessman in the world who would pass up 90 per cent cost recovery to repair his asset that was damaged in a flood. If indeed we accept his amendment to stop the payment on the flood-damaged golf course, the citizens of Alberta will be liable for the cost. Even if we don't lay it out, we lose the value in the asset, which, I might point out, becomes an item in the budget, and we lose a writedown of $10 million instead of getting up to 90 per cent back from the federal government. No prudent businessman in his right mind would consider any such thing. Again, the member omits facts where it's convenient for him to do so.

Now, Madam Chair, I want to point out something else about the member, and sometimes his facts don't line up. When, some time ago . . . [interjection] oh, pain, pain. No hon. member attempted to make greater hay than this hon. member in discussing the transmission system of Alberta. We were wrong to build transmission, we were wrong to use DC conversion, and all of that hocus-pocus. So what does he say today in his debate? He argues in the first half that we need distributed transmission because we have a huge transmission overbuild: if we would just distribute generation out around the province. Then in the second half of his speech this afternoon he argues that we should build transmission across to Manitoba to pick up hydroelectric power. Who is going to pay for that one? And it requires DC conversion because you can't get across the Saskatchewan border without DC conversion. So the hon. member uses the facts quite loosely.

He's always got the sound bite ready, as the hon. minister of Environment says, but the fact of the matter is that none of his arguments hold water. It is a prudent investment for the government of Alberta to repair this golf course and recover their money and maintain their assets. We don't pay for it; it's an insurance policy. If the member really wants to argue that we should forgo an insurance policy and pay for it ourselves: knock yourself out. I'm sure he'll figure out a way to do it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

On Bill 17, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2015, A1, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and I'm pleased to rise to speak to this amendment, which I am going to support. This amendment follows some questions that I raised when we first debated the supplementary supply estimates last week. You know, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has stated that he's not in favour of this particular golf course because it competes with the private sector. I take a somewhat different view with regard to that. I believe that this is an amenity of the park that the private hotels and resorts that operate in that park want to see operating because it brings them customers. So I would flip it around the other way and say that this particular golf course is actually a hidden subsidy for private companies. Nevertheless, it's an asset that we have.

I am not opposed to having a publicly operated golf course. The city of Edmonton has a couple of them and is able to offer golfing at reasonable prices for ordinary people. I'm not saying that the Kananaskis is anything like that. The question, really, for me, Madam Chair, is a question of priorities: what are the priorities of the government at a time when revenues are tight? We've never said that you don't have to make changes or adjustments when your revenue is less than you expect. It's just a question of which changes you make and which programs you support and which programs you don't support.

Now, I was struck that when the committee that directs the officers of the Assembly – help me out here, Madam Chair.

Some Hon. Members: Legislative Offices.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, all you helpful hon. members.

The Legislative Offices Committee tried to provide an increase in funding for the Auditor General's budget, and they voted in favour of that. We supported that. They also voted down a motion to increase the funding for the children's advocate. We didn't support that decision; we thought that that funding should be there. But then the Premier thundered from on high that there was absolutely no money, and he directed the committee members to go back and reverse their decision, which, like the dutiful caucus members that they are, they did.

Now, my question is this, Madam Chairman. If we don't have a few thousand dollars for the Auditor General and for the children's advocate to look after children who are in care – and we dealt with that issue quite extensively just today in the House, and the need for that is so clear. If those children aren't a priority and the golf course is, then there's something wrong. If the Auditor General, who does a wonderful job most of the time in keeping track of government waste and making sure that the government is on track with its own policies, is not a good investment, I don't know what is.

To me, it's not that they're going to pay $8 million in operating costs for this golf course, and it's not that there's another, oh, almost $2 million, 1 and a half million dollars, something like that, in capital that is being spent. When children who are potentially in danger are told that the cupboard is bare, then I think that the government should be ashamed of itself because it clearly has the wrong priorities.

Now, the ministers have said: well, we're going to get back 80 cents or 90 cents on the dollar for this investment. They haven't offered a shred of proof of that, Madam Chairman, and there's no guarantee, in my view, that this money will be returned to us. If they have some, I'm happy to see that, but in the meantime I'm going to take that suggestion with a grain of salt.

I think, in the end, that this really reveals a callousness on the part of the government in how they establish the priorities for the government and for the various programs. You know, when it comes to making sure that we protect tourism and the tourist industry in this province, they are willing to spend a lot of money. When it comes to protecting vulnerable children, they're not. And nothing could be more telling of what's wrong with this government, Madam Chair, than that.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Oberle: Oh, thank you so much, Madam Chair. I should offer some proof, I suppose. If the hon. member has ever visited the federal government's website and reviewed the disaster recovery program, which was approved for Alberta and in which we need to spend money in order to get the money back, that, I think, would be fairly rock-solid proof unless the member doesn't believe the written policy of the federal government and the payments that have been made to this point. That's entirely possible. I'm not sure what bats circle his belfry.

Madam Chair, you know, you talk about callous. What does the spending on the Auditor General or the child advocate have to do whatsoever with a golf course? We make a decision on spending based on what's the right thing to do. In the case of the golf course it's the right thing to access an insurance policy. We actually believe – the hon. member won't agree with this or believe it – that the child advocate and the Auditor General should be funded properly. They are, as a matter of fact, amongst the highest in the country, which is why we don't support additional spending. This government is prudent with the taxpayers' money. The investment that we're talking about this evening is cashing in on an insurance policy, and anybody that wouldn't do that, I'm afraid, is not managing their assets very well. It's just simple. I'll drop my argument right there.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

On Bill 17, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2015, the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler. Amendment A1.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I certainly am coming to enjoy the discussions in this Chamber. We're going from bats to energy to corporations. I happen to live beside a corporation – if I should follow the argument of the Member for Calgary-Klein – and the corporation is called Saskatchewan. In that corporate jurisdiction they believe that the government should also operate buses and run it on a profit and loss. You know, in other jurisdictions across the country that private enterprise – not relating to bats, but relating to dogs – is called Greyhound, and they operate that private enterprise, so there's a jurisdictional difference there.

In this case I take would some umbrage at the Energy minister's comments saying that we have to spend the money so that we can get the money from the federal government. I think that's possibly certainly true, but the perceptions in his mind and the perceptions being presented are onerous at best. In my riding I have health needs, and many members will be reminiscent of my fighting for the simple reallocation of some small amount of funds to the Consort acute-care beds. There are people who need those facilities, and they forego luxury.

There's a difference between a need and a want, and that operates in many corporate jurisdictions and should operate in government jurisdictions. The funding that's being brought forward here in the case of the Kananaskis golf course, I believe, is simply more of a want than a need. It's illustrious, and it's extravagant, and it flies in the face, if you will – no pun intended about the flies – of frugality. In a government that's reaching a new level of indebtedness, why not set an example of leadership? And this would be only one way that you could exhibit that leadership.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre on A1.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, I think we were discussing A1 all this time if I'm not mistaken, but we ended up into electricity. That's just shocking. I don't know how that happened.

Mr. Mason: It's revolting.

Mr. Anglin: Revolting is what it is.

And it's interesting because the member talks about stretching the facts. I don't know where we separate on this. But one is that Manitoba would be willing to build 2,000 kilometres of transmission line to the States versus 400 kilometres to the Saskatchewan border. That's a no-brainer for Manitoba, to try to access the market. The key is to try to get Saskatchewan involved, but that's another negotiation. But the other side of the province with site C, that's a piece of cake for Alberta because we get generation trapped in Grande Prairie.

Now, getting back to the subject matter at hand. I just wanted to clear up that the member, you know, is a little bit low on voltage on the understanding of what's going on in the transmission system. But I am not low on voltage when it comes to understanding the spending. Now, if I hear the minister correctly, they are in charge. This government is in charge of tabling all the proof necessary to prove what it is saying, but it has not done so. In other words, if you have a $50 million asset, what is it producing on an annual basis for revenue, and is it actually making money? Because you were talking about the businessman mentality here. I want to know, the opposition wants to know: is this really producing for our province? I mean, that's what you'd base this on.

The insurance money that the member's talking about. I have a lot of questions about that, but without proof of the insurance being tabled here, the policy itself, I can't ask those questions. But this one question does beg an answer. Sure, fix it for $1.1 million. Why $8 million to keep it open? That's a valid question. That's a valid question. If you think it needs to be operational during this short period of time for $8 million, that doesn't make sense to me. That doesn't make sense to me. Now, if you want to be prudent – I presume it's an 18-hole golf course. Nobody ever said anything different. But if that presumption is correct, why don't you fix it into a 9-hole golf course, tell them to play two rounds for 18 holes, and save yourself a little bit of money? And then when the times are good, go back and rebuild if you want to do something like that if the investment is worth it. I don't know.

What I do know: on a level of priorities, you have a golf course that – I presume part of it is functional by the way you're talking. Part of it is functional now. Part of it is not functional; it needs to be fixed. That's what I'm taking from your conversation. If that's the case, what I'm saying here is simply this: there are times that we need to be reasonable and prudent, and if you're telling me that this is a $50 million asset that must be fixed now, before this next budget is tabled and out there, I'm asking you to show proof and table it in this House so we can question that. And you have never done that. But what you have here is a luxury. And it is a nice luxury. The fact is: I'm not buying the argument without proof that it's got to be done and it's got to be done now.

I'm going to tell you what needs to be done and be done now. We need some rural bridges fixed, we have some communities that have senior facilities that need to be built, we need schools to be funded, and we don't have that. We have teachers that you say you value, but you're going to squeeze them, and you're going to squeeze them even more. That's a valuable asset. When we look at other areas of services this government provides that are good services like our road system – we need to fix our roads – some of that is going to wait. And those are valuable assets. This is about priorities, and I can't see how this golf course is a priority, and I've seen no evidence that it has to be fixed now and cannot be fixed after our next budget comes in or even next year. That has not been stated.

The other thing about insurance policies – and it's been done before. You have the ability to negotiate, even with the federal government, based on our own fiscal situation. Presumably the government understands the situation we're in because Canada's in it. They understand that. I see no reason why you can't go back and say, "Hey, we have this situation here. Can we extend this one or two years?" Because it's just not reasonable to spend that money now, given all the cuts that we're going to bring forward.

Just in closing, Madam Chair, it was the Minister of Finance who basically used that 9 per cent across the board, and he publicly stated so. I believe it had to do with the cost of inflation plus that 5 per cent cut that the member from Edmonton here recently mentioned. We were listening to that. We're waiting for every little evidence of what the budget will be when you table it on the 26th, but right now we're dealing with this issue and why we have to spend this kind of money when Albertans are going and getting pink slips, one after another. We're talking about raising revenue. We're talking about cutting spending, but we're going to spend money on a golf course. It makes no sense to Albertans. You can't sell this during the election. We're going to campaign on it. When I say we, that's anyone in the opposition. It's a bad priority.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

On amendment A1, Bill 17, the hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Fawcett: Madam Chair, it's amazing. The more that that member speaks, the more that he actually makes the argument for why we need to actually make this investment today. So I'm going to start off just real quickly educating the hon. member. It's very obvious that he doesn't golf very much, and that's fine. He's busy. He's got a big constituency. He probably doesn't get out to golf too much, and that's fine.

A golf course is typically 18 holes. This golf course, I believe, was a 36-hole golf course, and there were all but a handful of holes that were damaged, meaning that if you really wanted to play golf on the course right now, you could probably play on four or five holes. For me personally that would be okay because I would actually have a chance to break a hundred, Madam Chair, but, you know, most people actually want to play on a golf course that actually has a regulation 18 holes. Okay. So what happens with those four holes that don't need to be rebuilt? They need to be maintained, right?

On a golf course there's this stuff called grass, and it's usually one of the biggest parts of a golf course. The grass has to be nice, has to be taken care of. You don't want weeds on it. You want it to be nicely watered in order for it to be maintained, or else you end up having to replace it in the future. So on those holes that currently exist that you could play on, we need to maintain them up to a standard where you could play on them, or else they would go into disrepair and need additional work some time on in the future before that becomes playable again.

What this hon. member just argued was that we should postpone the rebuilding of the golf course because we don't have enough money. He was saying: I'm not going to argue that you shouldn't rebuild it and take up that insurance policy. He said: you should postpone it. And what, continue to pay on an ongoing basis the maintenance on the asset that is currently of value? That doesn't make any financial sense, hon. member. You know it doesn't, and we all know it doesn't.

Hey, this is a very unfortunate circumstance that happened to tie into a very unfortunate financial position that we are in as a government, and I'd be the first one to admit the optics aren't great, but when you're on this side of the House, you're asked to make decisions that go beyond just optics and asked to make decisions around what makes the most rational, thoughtful decision. I can't conceive of anything that is any more irrational than saying, "Let's put this off and do it two, three years down the road," while continuing to pay and maintain the operating costs for the assets that weren't damaged. That doesn't make sense whatsoever. What makes sense is to try to build this and get the construction done as soon as we possibly can to take advantage of the insurance policy that is in place so that we can eventually get it up and operational and start collecting the revenue that it generates when it's in operation. That's what makes the most financial sense, Madam Chair, and I would ask all members for that reason to turn down this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Well, I just want to address one thing because I know that it's been part of the government's speaking notes with respect to the decisions around the children's advocate and the Auditor General's requests for funding that were turned down and the 2 per cent reductions that were made across the board to the officers of the Legislature.

I know that the Minister of Energy has just repeated that these two offices are the best funded of their kind in Canada, more than adequately funded and that they don't need any increases and they can sustain the 2 per cent reduction. I just want to point out a few things, Madam Chair. With respect to the request from the office of the Child and Youth Advocate this was to pay for three investigators and two analysts.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, can you bring that back to A1? We're on the amendment.

Mr. Mason: Yes. What I'm trying to do here, Madam Chair, is to respond to some claims that were made in debate on this by the minister. I had started the debate by trying to contrast the government's priorities for golf courses with their refusal to fund these two important offices, so I think it's very important to clarify exactly what these requests were that were turned down, and I'm going to turn my attention as well back to the golf course.

Five staff had been previously approved by the same committee to handle increases in investigations after the mandate of the office was broadened to include investigations into the deaths of children and youth within two years of them receiving government services. So those positions are no longer funded, apparently. I don't know what adjustments the office is going to make, but they have increased responsibility for investigating the deaths of children in care or who are receiving services, and this is what the government unfunded. So that's one indication of the priority of this government.

The second claim that's been made about the Auditor General is that he's the most lavishly funded Auditor General in Canada. What they fail to point out is that the Auditor General in Alberta, in addition to making operational audits of government departments, is also the auditor of record for the various agencies of this government that spend money or handle a great deal of money. So AIMCo, Treasury Branches, and a number of other organizations are additional responsibilities of the office that Auditors General in other parts of the country simply don't have. To claim that because our Auditor General's office budget is larger and, therefore, he can sustain the cuts doesn't make sense.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, could you bring it back to amendment A1, please. You made your point.

Mr. Mason: Yes. I would like it if the Auditor General had the resources to look into this decision to fund this golf course, Madam Chair, because I think that he could shed a great deal of light on what the government is actually trying to pull here.

Again, Madam Chair, I just want to clarify those particular points, and I want to say very clearly that I think this government has the wrong priorities. We should be putting children and finding real savings in government expenditures ahead of lavish luxury golf courses at fancy resorts.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre on amendment A1.

Mr. Anglin: Absolutely. Still on the amendment and the rationale for spending the money. We're talking about the reasonableness, whether or not this is a prudent expenditure or whether it's a waste of money. If I hear the government correctly, they've got to spend this money now or they lose a $50 million asset.

To the hon. Minister of ESRD. Could you, then, answer me: why are we rebuilding a 36-hole golf course in a flood plain that is at risk of being flooded out in the next flood? It's a very reasonable question. We've done this with homes where we're not allowing them to rebuild, and we're actually paying for properties in some cases. There are flood victims out there that have yet to see a finalization of their monies that are required, and that's just for basic living, but we're talking about a 36-hole golf course here and the luxury of it. The minister himself said that he would prefer to play on a regulation 18-hole golf course.

By the way, we do play golf in the west country. It's a little bit rougher than the luxury some of these ministers might be used to. We're a little bit tougher golfers out there, I guess. We break more clubs. I don't know. The fact of the matter is simply this: the priority of spending this money. The big question is if it's such a valuable asset, why are we rebuilding it in a flood zone, in a flood plain that is at risk of being washed out again in the very next flood? Are we throwing more money away, again, when this should not be rebuilt there? That's why maybe this money needs to be pulled out now.

I will say this. What has not been given, and maybe it should be, is how much of the golf course is operational. I don't know. Maybe the minister can answer that question. I'm trying to understand why the public should fund this with taxpayers' dollars now, why this can't wait. Why can't we do so much? You can't tell me that we can't go back to the federal government and negotiate here if it was so important that you fix it. The fact that that money now has priority over so much else is just not sellable. It's not sellable to the public. They're not buying it. It is a lost ball, as far as I'm concerned, on the golf course.

So if the minister could explain that, I really would like to hear that.

Bill 15 Securities Amendment Act, 2015

[Adjourned debate March 12: Mr. Campbell]

Mr. Oberle: I believe the minister had completed his remarks, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any other members who wish to speak in second reading on Bill 15, Securities Amendment Act, 2015? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to rise and speak to Bill 15, the Securities Amendment Act, 2015. This bill is a continuation of the old Bill 42 from 2013 and Bill 3 from 2014, so it's been around for a long time and somehow just never really managed to make it through the Assembly. We have some interest in this bill in that it ensures the proper enforcement relating to securities and point-of-sale-related amendments and amendments that support continued harmonization of derivatives regulation. As well, it has some housekeeping amendments.

Under this Constitution, the Constitution of the country that was really created in its original form in 1867, a very, very long time ago, regulation of securities was given to the provinces. Now, Madam Speaker, it's my view that that is no longer the appropriate way to regulate securities, which are largely in these days very international. To have a system where each province separately regulates its securities in the absence of national regulation is a parochial and antiquated system. Now, having given the power to the provinces, they are unprepared, of course, to relinquish the power.

The question, then, really is where we ought to go. There's a recognition of this, a recognition, I think, even on the part of the provinces as they try to move towards some more harmonization of the regulation, but they won't admit that it is really not appropriate any longer in today's world for the provinces to hold this particular jurisdiction, so securities do continue to be regulated by a patchwork system involving provincial-made statutes governing the basic framework that varies from coast to coast as well as instruments set out by the Canadian Securities Administrators, which act as binding rules, and CSA national policies, which act as interpretive guidelines. Most of the actual rules and regulations are contained in the national or multilateral instruments as determined by the CSA in consultation with each province and industry experts. Each exchange also has its own set of rules and standards for listing.

Now, derivatives are not as well regulated as other securities and are mostly traded over the counter, meaning they're not subject to many of the exchange requirements or the investor protection that those other exchange rules create. Derivatives played a very large role, Madam Speaker, in the 2008 global financial crisis precisely because they were not adequately regulated. Bad debts were bundled into securities, which were bought by investors without the ability to know what was underlying those securities. It was difficult for investors to have access to enough information to know in what they were actually investing, and no one was providing adequate oversight because of the enormous regulatory gaps. Because most derivatives were traded over the counter, meaning not traded through exchanges, there was even less oversight. We think that this bill in that sense is a positive step towards increasing transparency and investor protection in the ever-growing derivatives market.

However, the same deficiencies that exist in securities regulation as a whole will continue until they are addressed. For example, Madam Speaker, derivatives will now be regulated similar to most other securities but are still subject to some exemptions which are outdated or not working properly. When were the thresholds for the accredited investor exemption last updated? A net income of $200,000 is no longer particularly rare or exceedingly high. That's a lot of money to most people but among the investing class perhaps not considered to be a very, very large number.

We need to have a national regulator, in our view, though, Madam Speaker. Of those countries which regulate securities, Bosnia and Herzegovina is the only other country in the world without a national securities regulator. You know, calls for a national regulator date back to 1935 and include the 1964 Porter Commission, a 1979 study by the department of consumer and corporate affairs, the 1994 memorandum of understanding between the Atlantic provinces and the federal government, the 2003 Wise Persons' Committee report, and the 2006 Crawford panel. There has been a regular call from people who've studied this issue in this country for the national regulation of securities. As it stands, it looks like B.C., Ontario, and the federal government are going to be entering into a co-operative regulatory system, and Alberta will be left out.

The need for this legislation perfectly illustrates the absurdity of continuing on without a national regulator for securities. We have to keep wasting government time and resources or those of the ASC in updating legislation and harmonizing with other jurisdictions across the country. If we had a national regulator, all of that time and resources could be better spent on enforcement and investigation to better protect Alberta investors. Madam Speaker, capital markets are increasingly integrated and increasingly global. It's inefficient and in many cases impossible for a provincial regulator to handle these complexities. A system of 13 different territorial and provincial regulators also leaves us vulnerable to fraud or simply increased regulatory failure.

The asset-backed commercial paper crisis in 2007-08, costing billions of Canadian dollars, was a symptom of the problem. Asset-backed commercial paper, or ABCP, is a type of commercial paper that is collateralized by other assets and typically matures within a month. They are derivatives. The IIROC, or Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada, found plenty of blame to go around. Banks and investment dealers sold ABCP to unsophisticated retail investors without a clear understanding of the product. The rating agency DBRS bestowed its highest score on much of the paper even though rival agencies Standard & Poor's and Moody's refused to even put a rating on it because of the flawed, Canadian-style liquidity agreements.

Canada's financial services industry and indeed all industry is less competitive without a national regulator. There are significant costs to companies and investors when they need to research 13 sets of laws and rules, applied through 13 different securities commissions, for each deal or investment. The lack of a national regulator also places a significant regulatory burden on small and emerging companies, who don't have the resources of major companies to deal with each regulator's filing fees and requirements.

Now, it seems clear that this PC government's opposition to the national model is at this point a case of putting the interests of oil and gas and its investors ahead of the interests of less sophisticated investors. It's smaller investors, with less knowledge of our securities system, that are at risk without a national regulator. They're the ones that fall victim to Ponzi schemes and high-risk investments as they try to keep up with a fast-moving economy.

Madam Speaker, Canadians as a whole lose billions of dollars a year to securities fraud. I've had the opportunity to meet with a number of individuals who've been put in this position and have spent years and years trying to recover their investments. Reports put the loss at about $2.1 billion just for Albertans alone, so I think we have a responsibility to ensure that the rest of the province is not taken advantage of. The stakes are simply too high when you're talking about someone potentially losing their life savings. As I mentioned, I've met with people who have lost their life savings, and it's heartbreaking as they try to recover them.

It was too good to be true is a very, very harsh lesson to someone on a fixed income, and it appears that our provincial regulator is not strong enough to prevent this type of thing from happening. There are countless examples out there: for example, the Harvest Group, facing a half billion dollar class-action suit after bad real estate ventures; Platinum Equities, which took $51 million from Albertans; or Shire International Real Estate Investments, a $20 million fraud. In many of these cases the provincial regulator took action but only after the fact, due to wide exemptions on who has to register and report under our securities laws. In the case of Platinum one of its top marketers had already been fined by the Alberta Securities Commission, but that was clearly not enough to prevent it from happening again. Madam Speaker, that leaves vulnerable investors holding the bag.

I want to just indicate that we're generally going to support this bill despite those very serious reservations because there is some strengthening of securities protections for investors in this matter, as I indicated at the beginning of my speech. But I do want to firmly and once again put on the record the position that we've taken all along, which is that some form of national regulation of securities is essential in this country. That doesn't mean that it has to be entirely within the control of the federal government. It's quite possible that provinces working together could establish a national regulator for securities by being co-operative with one another, and that would satisfy the constitutional requirements and, at the same time, provide the kind of protection for investors and the type of regulation of securities that we believe is necessary.

We put this forward. Unfortunately, the province has not shown leadership, and now the federal government is moving in with the support of Ontario and British Columbia to establish a federally controlled regulator. It's not ideal, but they have capitalized on the glaring inability of provincial regulation to protect investors, and we've seen more than enough examples of that right here in Alberta, Madam Speaker.

On that note, I'll take my seat.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on Bill 15? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark?

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Alberta Liberal caucus supports the bill without amendments. Canada, unlike many other countries, has a decentralized securities regulatory regime. As such, it must rely on its provincial governments to enact legislation supporting the ongoing reform of the Canadian regulatory system. The changes proposed in Bill 15 are part of a national effort to harmonize securities rules and mirror those being made in many other Canadian jurisdictions. Bill 15 builds on the earlier regulatory changes that our caucus supported during the spring and fall 2014 legislative sessions.

Madam Speaker, as a province and as a country we need to be doing everything possible to protect investors and maintain the integrity of our capital markets. If the 2008 global financial crisis taught us anything, it's that complacency and a lack of regulatory vigilance can quickly and catastrophically shake world markets. No country or jurisdiction is immune from the effects of a market collapse. Therefore, it is important that we all do our part to support the health and stability of the world financial system.

Madam Speaker, Alberta Liberals acknowledge that the proposed changes are necessary for Alberta to be able to honour its national and international commitments to improving securities regulation. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now in effect. Are there any members who wish to question or comment on the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark?

Seeing none, are there any other members who wish to speak in second reading on Bill 15, Securities Amendment Act, 2015?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a second time]

Bill 13

Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2015

[Adjourned debate March 12: Mr. Fawcett]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members who wish to speak on Bill 13, Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to speak to this bill. This bill approaches a very important issue, the protection of Alberta's waterways, particularly those in southern Alberta, that serve so many purposes from recreation to irrigation to drinking water.

Now, Madam Speaker, I want to indicate that we support this measure. The threat of invasive species, including zebra mussels, is too great to ignore. It's high time, I think, that we take steps to protect this. The bill would create a mandatory inspection system for boats along the southern border with Montana and the eastern border with Saskatchewan. Manitoba, which is always a progressive, forward-looking government, that our government often copies and steals a lot of their really good ideas from – and that's a good thing because they're good ideas, you know – has taken similar legislation. In fact, if you want to know what the Alberta government is going to do, just look at what the Manitoba government did three years earlier, and you'll probably get an idea of what's coming.

Dr. Sherman: They copy Liberals, not New Democrats.

Mr. Mason: I'm sorry. The government of Manitoba is not a Liberal government. I hate to disillusion you, hon. member.

The bill also serves to enhance the authority of fisheries officers and guardians and would not result in additional costs for boat owners. Those owners who are found to have zebra mussels or other invasive species on their vessels will have their boats cleaned at the province's expense. Inspections will be placed at the existing inspection stations already owned and used by the province for other reasons.

I think there are lots of things that we can say about these species. Zebra mussels have caused millions of dollars in damage by clogging up water pipes. They've altered the food chain in lakes. They present a threat to swimmers, who may cut themselves when stepping on sharp shells, and they create toxic algae blooms that can kill fish and birds. They decrease property values.

Another one, Madam Speaker, is Eurasian water milfoil, which reduces biodiversity by competing with native plants. It reduces oxygen levels in water, that can kill fish. It hinders recreational activities like swimming, boating, and fishing due to accumulation of plant debris. It can create stagnant water, which is the ideal habitat for mosquitos, impede flood control, water conservation, and irrigation works.

I think that some things have been done, but more needs to be done. It's been proven that washing boat hulls reduces the chance of transfer of invasive species to a new lake. Almost two-thirds of boaters do not currently clean their boats before changing lakes. A study suggested that additional management efforts would be helpful, so, Madam Speaker, it's more than enforcement. There have to be education measures included, and we think that the bill is a useful step in improving the environmental record of this government, but they sure have a long, long way to go.

The NDP has been a long-time supporter of environmental protection, and the government has not, in our view, done all that it should in the past to deal with things like blue-green algae and, you know, of course, the birds in the tailings ponds in the oil sands and so on. There's a lot of work to be done to protect wildlife, to protect our natural environment, but this is, I think, a positive step in the right direction. As a result, Madam Speaker, we will be supporting this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate that. I couldn't help but rise and show appreciation for my colleague across the aisle and say how much I appreciate him and agree with what he said because if I heard him correctly – and I was listening carefully – he said that our government constantly brings forward ideas that are right and proven. He did say that, and I agree with him.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, this is not Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Mason: I'm making a point of order.

The Acting Speaker: Oh, all right. The hon. member has called a point of order.

Mr. McIver: Madam Speaker, sometimes it's hard to give a compliment.

Mr. Mason: You're very good at giving compliments to yourself.

The Acting Speaker: Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, your point of order.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Mason: Yes. Well, Madam Speaker, under 23(h), (i), and (j) I would just indicate that I did not say that the government always does the right thing. I did say that sometimes they get the few good ideas they do have from the Manitoba NDP government.

Debate Continued

The Acting Speaker: Thank you for your point of clarification, hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Again, Madam Speaker, as I just said, the hon. member made it clear that this government brings forward ideas that are both good and proven, and I thank him.

The other point that I would like to agree with the hon. member on as well as the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, that brought this forward, is that this is important. It might be one of the most important things we do this year. I would urge members to support it. Protecting our waterways: I can't think of anything more important, Madam Speaker. There's nothing more key to our success as a civilization, and the waterways are important for agriculture, for everything that we do.

I thank hon. members for their support, and I'm certainly proud to stand and express mine as well.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Is anybody wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, we'll move to the next speaker, the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think it's very interesting that we talk about this aquatic invasive species. Only as recently as last summer I was travelling on an irrigation tour with the Member for Little Bow. We had a very informative time and very interesting discussions about the species. So some of the information that I'm going to relate may be divisive, and possibly the Member for Little Bow could weigh in to provide discussion on my comments here.

While no one wants to see the devastation in Alberta that can be brought about by this invasive species, we have some questions and some concerns about the wording of the bill. Section 25 empowers officials to enter or pass over land without warrant to enforce or ensure compliance with this act. Section 26 empowers an official to enter and inspect any place or conveyance without warrant to carry out inspections to determine if there are subject organisms. Madam Speaker, that's concerning, to say the least.

Firstly, we'd like to ensure that prevention of the spread of AIS is the focus of any amendment or the bill. Passing over land should be done only in circumstances where fisheries officers have reasonable grounds to believe that AIS does exist on that property.

Secondly, we would like assurance that this level of authority to enter and inspect any place or conveyance or boat is limited to inspection stations. We also have questions about the implications of implementing these mandatory inspection stations.

As I've previously stated in the Chamber, I live along the Saskatchewan border, and I know that it's a very porous border both for farm implement transport and the transport of any sort of husbandry or, in this case, possibly watercraft. So my questions are: where will these stations be physically placed? Do they require buildings and/or specialized equipment? How will these inspection stations be staffed and at what cost? Will the impact of transportation or traffic be minimized?

Again, while we do not want to see AIS here in Alberta – and the Member for Little Bow and I saw possible visible problems in relation to that – we want to balance the level of the threat, while at this point it's quite low, with the level of authority needed to ensure that Alberta remains free of AIS.

Madam Speaker, I have had some experience, again, in my residency along the Alberta-Saskatchewan border with the control of rats that like to transport in from Saskatchewan both in feed and animal husbandry.

We would also like the government to explore alternative means of controlling the threat, including public education and benign biological impediments, if and when required, as opposed to relying solely on laws and legislation.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Anybody wishing to make comments?

Seeing none, we'll go to our next speaker, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I've been following this issue probably for two and a half years now and was first exposed to it when I attended PNWER. It certainly was an issue that was on everyone's agenda who is aware of the danger that this province faces if zebra mussels and quagga mussels get into our system.

I think at this point in time – and I know that the hon. member that just spoke ahead of me had many questions. I'm not sure that we're at the question point. I think we simply cannot do nothing. We must do something. Irrigation is the heart of our sustainable resource, which is agriculture, in this province. Oil and gas is great, but we still make your food in southern Alberta, and we need water to do that. If these little mussels get into our irrigation pipes, most of which are now closed – they're not the open canals of the old-fashioned way of doing irrigation – they could clog them, probably within months. They're very, very difficult to get at. You would have to pull your pipes apart to actually remove these little mussels.

One of the things that is really important – and I did personally go to a couple of inspection stations last summer. It was voluntary at that point, and certainly some people with their boats just drove by, but some did stop, and I asked them why they stopped. What made them stop? They said: because they had actually spoken to somebody in Arizona, where they know that both Lake Mead and Lake Havasu are devastated because of these mussels. These are the mussels that then attach themselves to boats and come into Alberta.

These mussels originated, if I'm correct, from Russia. They came in on the big boats in the great lakes. They have gone from the big boats, and they've gone down the east coast of North America. They've come across the bottom via boats, and now they're working their way back up. They actually can still survive in the Alaska cold. This is a huge, huge, issue.

The inspections, I am very pleased and I'm trusting – and I thank the NDP for their support for this bill – will be mandatory. One of the easy ways to do it, that doesn't take an awful lot of people's time, is that there are dogs that are trained to sniff out these mussels. Often with the boats, particularly the ones that have the big ballast tanks, because they create bigger waves and people can sort of almost surf behind these boats, that water stays in there, and it's very, very difficult to get inside the tanks and actually look. Even if you drain them, the little mussels could still be in there, but the dogs can sniff them out, and then people can go further. The other place that they often hide is on the propellers of the boats. They'll go up into the water intake.

I'm just going to speak a little bit more because I will speak more in committee when I actually have my notes. The education part, I totally agree, is one of the most important parts of it. Any of the boat shows that are in the province I know have people there to be able to explain exactly what happens and why we need to inspect these boats and why we're not trying to make life difficult. I can assure you that for $75 million a year it would be very, very difficult if it ever got into our irrigation ditches and our pipes.

There are other invasive species, certainly, that have been mentioned already, and they are also something that we must pay attention to. But at this point in time I am working very hard toward the eradication of any kind of mussels that would come into our province. I was raised on Lake Winnipeg lakefront property, so I know what a good lake should look like. Lake Winnipeg, unfortunately, is not one of those anymore. They also now have the mussels, that have come in on boats from wherever. Some of the rocks that people use as protection against the waves on their lakefront properties are now covered in those mussels, and certainly you wouldn't dare walk on them without very heavy shoes because they would just rip your feet apart.

I think I will leave it there because I will be speaking more in committee, but in my mind – and, of course, it's because I'm focused on it – I think it's one of the most important bills that we're going to pass during this spring session. It's very important that we get it, that we get it passed, and that we get working on it right now. People will be coming back with their boats, the snowbirds will be coming back with their boats, and if we can stop them at the border and get that education part of it going, I don't think it will take long before the whole province or any boater really understands the danger of not cleaning their boats.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members who wish to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Strankman: Yeah. I'd just like to ask the member a question.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd just like to ask the hon. member a question. She says that these mussels are extremely difficult to control, so I want to know if any organic treatment is available. I understand that it is, but I want to know the efficiency of it.

Ms Pastoor: I'm sorry that I can't answer that question with any great authority, but my understanding is that there isn't an organic that would actually dissolve them. You have to physically scrape them off. They're almost like barnacles. I don't know if anyone's ever had a boat that had barnacles on it from the sea. I know from my experience on a seagoing yacht that we had electrical wires around the inside of the boat, and it would sort of vibrate, and it kept the barnacles off. But, basically, you just take your boat to dry dock and scrape them off, and I think it's fairly similar with the mussels.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We have a few minutes left under 29(2)(a). Are there any other members who wish to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, we will go back to second reading of Bill 13. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think this government has barnacles, but I'm not sure they can scrape them off. Maybe they can be voted out. Who knows?

An Hon. Member: It's your job to get rid of barnacles?

Mr. Anglin: That is my job. That's right.

The bill itself is a good bill. This is, as some of the members have stated, serious business. It's a serious issue. I do have a question for the minister, and I hope that when we get into Committee of the Whole, the minister can answer some questions relative to the funding and the personnel for actually enforcing this, because it's going to take manpower. This is not just something that we can legislate and pretend it's going to be done very easily. I'm real curious as to, when we're dealing with the specific issue of how we're going to battle this invasive species, where the funding is coming from and how it's going to actually be implemented so we can get ahead of this and do what we need to do. This is something that, in my view, is a good bill on the intent side, and it's a necessary bill, but it has to work. It just can't be something in words. In practicality we've got to be able to make sure that we can make it work so that it does what we want it to do.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to say a few words of thanks to PNWER, the Pacific NorthWest Economic Region, because they were actually the ones who really started targeting this problem. I've got to name one state within PNWER that was very much the leader, and that's the state of Idaho. We were very lucky to actually hire one of their experts. We hired Kate Wilson away from them. She has been the very effective lead in this area, and we really appreciate her in the ESRD staff.

There were some earlier questions about control measures. There were some promising results using potash in Manitoba. We tried it in Manitoba. We actually did manage to stop them in the small bays that they were in, but it didn't, of course, kill the whole lake, so they are still there. We have shown, you know, that in a concentrated, small area, yes, the potash will work, but in a larger body of water there's just not that much potash to be able to dump in there. So in terms of the controls that are available to us, if they do ever get up here, then I'm afraid that at this point we have not yet found what would do it.

I just wanted to make sure that PNWER was recognized for taking the lead on this. Of course, they're closer to Lake Mead, where it's essentially totally wiped out that lake for anything except for the quagga and zebra mussels.

Anyway, I'm very glad that this is moving ahead. We do need that extra strength of making it mandatory for your boat to be inspected, and hopefully we can keep them out.

There is one other point I wanted to make. We are very lucky in that we have the headwaters to pretty well all of our waters, so if we can keep them out, we will be able to keep them out of Alberta. Unfortunately, the converse is also true. If we get infected in Alberta, that means that the provinces and the states that are downstream from us also get infected, so our responsibility is actually a little bit higher because of this.

Thank you very much for bringing forward this legislation. I call the question.

The Acting Speaker: We have Standing Order 29(2)(a) first, hon. member.

Seeing none, is there a member?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Madam Chair. I wonder if in view of the hour and of significant progress made, we might move to adjourn this evening until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 17, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. May we find the resolve required to put aside some of the differences that divide us so that progress may be made for those whom we serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Brent Rathgeber. Mr. Rathgeber served as an MLA in this fine Assembly for Edmonton-Calder from 2001 to 2004 and since 2008 has sat as Member of Parliament for Edmonton-St. Albert, which happens to be my federal riding. In September 2014 Brent published a book, Irresponsible Government: The Decline of Parliamentary Democracy in Canada. He will be more than happy to sell one to anybody who wants to purchase for the price of $19.99. Mr. Rathgeber and I correspond on a regular basis as we deal very often with common constituents and immigration matters. I would like to ask Mr. Rathgeber to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with school groups. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you 79 students from Michael Strembitsky school from my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. Joining them today are teachers Ms Natasha Lalani, Ms Palinka, Ms Pennington, Mr. Lucas McCaw, Mrs. Tanya Boyko, and also joining them are five parents: Mrs. Melissa Syrenne, Mrs. Joyce Hebert, Mrs. Sandra Anderson, Mrs. Mandie Taylor, and Jamie Sveinson. This school represents students from 25 different ethnicities and quite a diverse group of students who are here today. I ask my guests – they are seated in both galleries – to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any other school or education groups?

Seeing none, let us move on to the introduction of other important guests that we have. Let's start with the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by the Premier.

Mr. Hale: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my family, who are here with me today. They are seated in your gallery. We have my wife, Maggie, who has put up with me for over 21 years – God bless her soul – and our sons Levi and Blu, future Alberta agricultural producers, who, I must say, have given me more than a few grey hairs. I would ask that the hon. members please give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you the members of the Métis women's security council who are in the gallery. This council was established in December of 2013 to provide the Alberta government with advice and direction on breaking down the barriers that face Métis women in our province. We have with us a group of amazing women: the chair, Michelle Fournie; Audrey Poitras; Brenda Holder; Hope Henderson; Karen Mackenzie; Lisa Higgerty; Loretta Calliou; Manikot Thompson – if you could all stand – also Marie Delorme; Rachelle Venne; Sandra Sutter; and Sherry Cunningham. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask my guests to rise and receive the warmest welcome from this Chamber.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, followed by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of my constituents who represent the Leduc County Coalition, or LCC. They have come today to witness me tabling a summary of some 7,000 letters of concern opposing Edmonton's proposed annexation of some 38,000 acres of Leduc county. I would ask them to rise as I read their names: LCC board members Clarence Shields, Ed Moussa, Lynette Schurko, and Doug Wright; Leduc county manager, Mr. Brian Bowles; Mayor John Whaley; county councillors Clay Stumph and Tanni Doblanko; and county residents Mr. Schurko, Nicky Smith, Dave and Barbara Wedman, Dellia Tardif, Judi Trelenberg, and Jim Niederhaus. I would ask that the members of the Assembly give my guests the warm traditional welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, followed by the Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and introduce to you and through you and to all members of this Assembly Mrs. Sharon Smith. Sharon is a Wildrose candidate for Leduc-Beaumont and has been living in Alberta for over 20 years. I have never met anyone as passionate about speaking on behalf of her community. As a Leduc resident she's here to join other concerned Albertans about the recent annexation proposal for Leduc and its impact on her constituency. She has a beautiful family and, on a personal level, is someone I call a friend. I'll ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism, followed by Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I introduce to you and through you and to the members of this Assembly Kim Bugera and her children Keira and Jackson Laansoo. I see that Keira and Jackson are wearing green today. Kim is a very successful business owner in Morinville, and she is living up the hill from the MLA from St. Albert. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to introduce to you and through to all members of this Assembly two guests from my constituency who are seated in the public gallery. As we all know, postsecondary education is a cornerstone of our society as Albertans. Olds College is a postsecondary institution in my constituency that sets a high standard for all educators. Olds College provides vital courses and education to students from all over our province, our nation, and, in fact, the entire world. It is a versatile institution, and it has become a hub of activity and a pride of the town of Olds. It's my great pleasure to introduce them. I'd ask them to stand as I call their names: Tammy Forbes, associate vice-president of external relations, and Jordan Cleland, vice-president of advancement. Please rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you John Hart, the president of the First Special Service Force Association and the son of Geoffrey Hart, a First Special Service Force member, who has since passed away. Mr. Hart has driven up from Medicine Hat to join us today to recognize the important contribution of the men of the First Special Service Force, an elite Canadian-American commando unit established in 1942, also known as the Devil's Brigade. Last month 42 surviving members were honoured in Washington with the congressional gold medal, and today the city of Edmonton honoured the Devil's Brigade and the bravery borne by this elite group of soldiers. Accompanying Mr. Hart is Bree Claude, executive director of policy, planning, and legislative services branch with Alberta Seniors. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour, my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two constituents from Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. Seated in the members' gallery today we have Matthew Boonstra and his grandfather, Dick Baker, who live in Fort Saskatchewan. Matthew has been involved in many activities in fundraising throughout the community. It is his goal to enter the military and at some point to add political science to that career path. I would ask them to please rise and accept the warm welcome from the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great opportunity to introduce to you and through you my mayor from the town of Whitecourt, Maryann Chichak. Maryann, please stand up. She's a great, dedicated mayor, who is caring and loving and one of my best supporters in Whitecourt-St. Anne. Thank you for being here.

The Speaker: Thank you. Are there others?
The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the House a friend, Ronald Brochu, who is married with two adult children, four grandchildren, and one on the way. He's also worked 40 years as an auditor in private practice with the Canada Revenue Agency and the Alberta government. He's been a senior tax auditor across the province. Mr. Brochu will be a candidate for the Alberta Liberal opposition in Edmonton-Gold Bar. Please stand, and we'll give you the warm welcome of the Legislature.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Two minutes each for these members' statements. I show Calgary-West, and then I'm not sure who is next, so if somebody would alert me to that, I'd be happy to recognize him or her.

Let's start with your statement, Calgary-West.

Devil's Brigade

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Officially they are the First Special Service Force, an elite Canadian-American commando unit under the U.S. Fifth Army, established in 1942 and trained near Helena, Montana, but in legend and fearsome deed they are the Devil's Brigade. The precursor to what we think of as Special Forces, these men fought in the Aleutian Islands, Italy, and France during the Second World War, taking on the toughest assignments and some say never losing a battle.

Last month 42 surviving members of the Devil's Brigade were honoured in Washington, DC, with the congressional gold medal, the highest civilian honour the United States Congress bestows. At the ceremony that day were Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, our Premier, and two Albertans who served in the Devil's Brigade, Maurice White of Edmonton and Leonard Corbett of Calgary. The Devil's Brigade comrades and fellow Albertans Bernard Cooper of Calgary, Henry Planger of Pincher Creek, and Lloyd Lewis of Canmore were unable to attend the ceremony.

Today the city of Edmonton honoured the Devil's Brigade. I'm proud to rise on behalf of the government of Alberta and honour the service of Mr. White, Mr. Corbett, Mr. Cooper, Mr. Planger, Mr. Lewis, and all the surviving members of the Devil's Brigade. Congratulations for this richly deserved honour bestowed upon you by our friends south of the border.

Sadly, the generation that fought the Second World War is leaving this life. It is almost 70 years since the end of the war, and it is a year this month since the end of Canada's military mission to Afghanistan. Just this past weekend family and friends and military personnel mourned the passing of Sgt. Andrew Doiron, who lost his life in Iraq. All of us who live in freedom in this great province in this great country owe a debt of gratitude to the men and women who serve in our armed forces. Thank you to the men and women who serve this province, who serve this country, and to their families for their dedication and tremendous service.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, followed by Lethbridge-West.

Eliminating Violence against Women

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the years we've all stood in this House at different times to applaud impassioned and sincere speeches to mark International Women's Day or stand united in our calls to end violence against women. While it is incumbent on all of us to be vocal in our condemnation of domestic violence and violence in all forms against women, it must go with action. Despite our best hopes and increased awareness, there's no denying that this generation of women – call them Martha and Henry's daughters; call them the new Alberta or the Charter generation – have grown up with violence. A sickening survey from 2012 revealed that 1 in 10 Alberta men said that it was okay to hit a woman if she makes him angry.

Mr. Speaker, violence is never okay. We all must ensure that no woman and no child is forced to remain in a home where someone thinks it's okay. Yet in 2013 17,000 women in Alberta were turned away from women's shelters in this province, 17,000 women that went out in search of help and were turned away from a safe space. This is due to inadequate transition housing for women ready to leave the emergency shelter, and it is due to inadequate income under Alberta Works to be able to afford an alternate accommodation. This blocks access to thousands that then seek emergency aid in the women's shelters and forces them back into danger.

Alberta is less than two weeks away from a budget that this Premier has said would be defining for the next 10 years. Well, the Premier may be right. If in the next 10 years we see thousands more women and children turned away from shelters or denied the help they need, then this Premier will have defined his legacy indeed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, followed by Highwood.

Unlimited Dance Collaboration in Lethbridge

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and speak to this House about some exceptional people who have made myself and Lethbridge exceptionally proud. On March 17 through 21 the University of Lethbridge will play host to a uniquely Albertan show that seeks to break down the barriers for people with disabilities while it entertains the audience. Unlimited is a collaboration between the U of L drama professor Lisa Doolittle and Pamela Boyd, founding artistic director for MoMo Mixed Ability Dance Theatre in Calgary, along with local organizations supporting people living with disabilities. Mike Sawchuk from the U of L was in my office last month explaining that the cast is made up of student performers from the U of L's dance and theatre for all abilities class, which itself has six students with developmental disabilities.

Mr. Speaker, this show is an innovative endeavour that will allow people with disabilities to represent themselves on the stage, which is just as important as including them in the workplace, in relationships, and in the community in general. Unlimited is the third phase of a project initially begun as a series of theatre/dance workshops for people with disabilities, exploring the challenges of meaningful employment in partnership with the Lethbridge Association for Community Living.

The show has grown out of the U of L's unique innovation to proactively include a group of people with disabilities in a for-credit university drama course along with nondisabled students. Professor Doolittle is also investigating the effects of inclusive practices on the postsecondary level of education. Lethbridge is well known as a community that promotes practices which include people with disabilities, and I believe this is yet another example of that attitude.

Mr. Speaker, this government is also firmly committed to the belief that all Albertans are equal regardless of their level of ability, and I believe that Unlimited is a perfect example of that philosophy in action. It is an opportunity for inclusion that deserves recognition, respect, and admiration. I hope that anyone who has the opportunity to attend a performance of Unlimited does so, and I would ask that my fellow members join me in congratulating the University of Lethbridge for this unique and important accomplishment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Okotoks Water Supply

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The town of Okotoks has achieved one of the lowest per capita water consumption rates in North America and continues to reduce water consumption even while increasing population. In fact, they've seen a 41 per cent reduction in water use while the population increased by 45 per cent. Despite these efforts Okotoks has now reached its capacity in drawing water from the Sheep River.

The residents of Okotoks have done everything they can to conserve. They came together and embraced water conservation controls such as having restrictions on watering their lawns so that odd-numbered addresses water on Thursdays and Sundays at designated times while even-numbered homes water on Wednesdays and Saturdays. They also have a popular water conservation rebate program, which reimburses residents as well as institutional, commercial, and industrial utility consumers for purchasing water-efficient appliances. Their efforts have won them a 2015 FCM sustainable communities award.

Okotoks residents have done their part, but they now need the province to meet them halfway. In February the town formally applied for water pipeline funding under the water for life program. It is crucial for the town to secure a new water source, and their proposed option is to build a water pipeline from Calgary. The proposal is supported by the Calgary Regional Partnership, who recently wrote a letter of support on their behalf, and the Okotoks Chamber of Commerce. What benefits Okotoks benefits Alberta. Without this pipeline the town's potential and their ability to build new residential communities and attract new businesses will be severely constrained.

I made it my goal to ensure that Okotoks is successful in obtaining a provincial commitment to help build this water pipeline. I think by now the Transportation minister has come to expect me to raise the issue with him every time I see him, and that will continue, Minister. Securing funding from the water for life program to build this pipeline is an essential part of the strategy to grow our community in a healthy and vigorous manner.

I would also like to thank the town of Okotoks for working collaboratively with their regional partners to find a solution that might eventually be expanded to help others in the region, and I hope to see it become a reality soon.

The Speaker: Thank you.

British Home Children

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, between 1869 and 1940 orphaned and abandoned children arrived in the British Commonwealth countries, including Canada, from Great Britain. They came to be known as the British home children. These children rarely had a choice and were often forcibly taken from orphanage societies or poor families, some with and some without the consent of their parents. All were uprooted from any close family or relatives, and many were separated from their siblings, who were often the only family they knew. About 100,000 boys and girls aged six to 18 were shipped across the sea to Canada.

Some of the children were fortunate to be welcomed into loving homes. Others were not so lucky and were often used as cheap agricultural or other manual labour. Many were denied proper shelter or educational opportunities. They often worked in brutal conditions that can only be described as bondage. Many home children ran away from their guardians, searching for a better life. Some of the children overcame the trauma and adversity of their uprooted childhood and ill-treatment and went on to lead productive and fruitful lives. However, all of them bore the scars of being deported from their home and family.

Two thousand ten was proclaimed as the Year of the British Home Child by the Parliament of Canada, and a commemorative stamp was released to honour these children who had been sent to Canada. Other nations, including Australia and the United Kingdom, have apologized for this shameful episode in history. Nova Scotia and Ontario have proclaimed September 28 as British Home Child Day. Mr. Speaker, I urge the government of Alberta to recognize the lives of these British home children, as other provinces have, and to declare September 28 British Home Child Day.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, for those of you who've sent me notes about the timings, please know that the clock actually froze a day or two ago. It has since been fixed, and we're monitoring it today to make sure that it doesn't freeze again, we hope. So thank you for your notes, but please stand advised of that.

Let us begin with the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Your first main set of questions.

Government Spending

Mrs. Forsyth: Last week when I asked the Premier why he's set on raising taxes, he begged the oppositions for some alternative ideas. It's no wonder why: Michener, licence plates, ending sole-sourced contracts, divorce by nursing home. All opposition ideas. But here is another. Your government just voted to spend another $10 million on the Kananaskis golf course. So why don't you go ahead, take the Wildrose idea, and roll back the ridiculous spending on the golf course instead of raising taxes on hard-working Albertans?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, speaking of Wildrose ideas, the latest is that they should block the Keystone pipeline, which has emerged as a policy of the Wildrose Party. I wonder if the hon. member would really like to speak to that and reassure all Albertans that they've not moved to the left of the NDP in terms of their economic position.

Mr. Saskiw: Point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. Opposition House Leader, your point of order has been noted during that response.

Let us move on to the first supplemental.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I'll be pleased to speak to that. The only people left are you guys.

Premier, Albertans need hospitals. They need schools. Albertans don't need their government spending millions on privately run golf courses, accessible to only the wealthiest of Albertans. Now, today we hear that the Premier is actually increasing the pension top-ups of the highest paid government executives. Those making $140,000 or more will see the taxpayer-funded portion of their pensions increase by 22 per cent. So here's another idea for you, Premier. Why don't you just go ahead and roll back that pension top-up instead of raising taxes on hard-working Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Prentice: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. But another idea of the hon. member's party that we certainly won't accept is her party's suggestion that not only do we block the Keystone pipeline but we immediately start a royalty review. Perhaps the hon. member could reassure Albertans that this is not their case to destroy jobs and investments in our province.

Mr. Saskiw: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Opposition House Leader, your point of order has been noted at 2:04.

Let's move on with the final supplemental.

Mrs. Forsyth: You know, Mr. Speaker, it's funny how he picks up something that's going on in the leadership review, and he refuses to answer the questions that are important.

This pension top-up for the highest paid management in the government will cost taxpayers millions. The Premier says that we're all in this together, but his actions don't follow his words. Last year the government ignored a management wage freeze and instead quietly gave them all a raise costing taxpayers at least $50 million. So, Premier, if you won't cancel the pension top-up for upper management, will you at least take the Wildrose idea and roll back the $50 million pay raises instead of raising taxes on hard-working Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again the Wildrose has got it wrong. There is no pension top-up for senior officials. I can say to you that pension benefits of government employees are not increasing with this change at all.

The Speaker: Second main set of questions. The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, I'll send him the information.

Public Body Executive Severance Payments

Mrs. Forsyth: Last fall's Accountability Act failed to address the massive severance payouts rampant throughout the agencies, boards, and commissions of your government, Premier, severances that have cost taxpayers millions. Under your new management, Premier, these payouts continue. Last year the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission paid out $382,000 in severance to their VP of strategy, transformation, and ethics. That's three times the annual base salary. Premier, are these the kinds of severance payout payments that Albertans should expect from your new government?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the Premier said: we are under new management. We brought in the Accountability Act, that says that we will not pay out any more than six months maximum, and that's going on right now.

Mrs. Forsyth: Let's try this one. That same year the AGLC forked out another $370,000 in severance for another high-paid executive. The VP of lottery and gaming services went home with a total of $567,000 last year. That's a taxpayer-funded position, and under the Premier's watch nothing has been done to rein in these kinds of payouts. Under the new management of this Premier is it acceptable for the AGLC to be handing out $700,000 in severance for just two people?

Mr. Campbell: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, as I said, under this Premier's watch he's made it very clear that we are under new management, and we passed the Accountability Act last fall saying that we will not pay more than six months' severance to senior employees, and we're living to that vision. Thank you.

Mrs. Forsyth: The AGLC is exempt from the sunshine list, and it's exempt from the Premier's Accountability Act. There are hundreds of so-called arm's-length organizations, and they account for the vast majority of government spending, yet basic accountability like salary disclosure and severance caps does not apply to any of them. So much for your new management. When will the Premier get serious about transparency and accountability with Albertans' money and order an end to these massive severance payouts in all areas of government?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have over 314 boards and agencies and commissions in the province of Alberta, and the Premier has put forward a committee to look at reviewing all of these boards to make sure that they aren't redundant or duplicating services. We will make sure that all boards and commissions and agencies follow the same rules that we set out in the Accountability Act, and under this new management of this Premier we'll make sure that we're accountable to all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Political Activity of Premier's Staff Member

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's go back to September 6 of last year. The Premier is elected leader of the party. He's taken the stage. "My election as the leader of this party marks the beginning of a commitment to integrity and the acceptance of responsibility." But now we see the Premier shrugging off allegations of bribery and his staff meddling in party affairs. My question is to the Premier: why is his principal secretary interfering in business while being paid by Albertans?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, party business and government business are clearly different; that's understood by myself and by everyone in my office, and clearly anyone in my office who's involved in party politics does so as a volunteer and does so on their own time.

Mr. Strankman: Respectfully, Mr. Speaker, the principal secretary is paid a handsome $190,000 to help the Premier govern the affairs of the province. Let's go back again to the Premier's speech. "Albertans expect excellence and they expect performance from those who are in positions of trust. They will not accept excuses." Again to the Premier: why is his principal secretary, paid by Albertans, interfering in PC Party business?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think we clarified yesterday that internal party matters . . .

Mr. Saskiw: Point of clarification, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: . . . really have no space or place in the Assembly here. These are rules that I didn't make up. These are rules that you yourselves made, but, hon. Premier or somebody, if you wish to respond and clarify again the position on this and how it might relate to government policy, that would be in order for someone to do.

No one is rising to that, so let us move on to the final supplemental.

2:00

Mr. Strankman: We'll try it again, Mr. Speaker. To be clear, using a government paid sick day to allow you to do partisan activities is unacceptable, no ifs, ands, or buts. These actions directly question the ethics of the government. In that same space the Premier asked Albertans to judge his government on "the actions we have taken, the progress we have made and the integrity we have displayed." To the Premier again: what are Albertans to think if he refuses to explain these actions by his principal secretary's apparent misuse of government funds?

The Speaker: I didn't cut off the questions, so I am wondering if anyone wishes to answer that, bearing in mind what I read yesterday from House of Commons.

I see no one rising to answer, so let us move on to Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Women's Shelters

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. In 2013 17,000 women and children were turned away from Alberta's women's shelters due to lack of necessary resources to help them. Of the many thousands of women who use or need shelters, 50 per cent are aboriginal. In the face of pending PC budget cuts those numbers are almost certainly going to increase. This is a tragic failure of the PC government to protect society's most vulnerable. To the Premier: how have you allowed this deplorable situation to worsen if this government is supposed to be under new management?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The human costs of family violence are immeasurable, as the hon. member has stated, and the impacts can last a lifetime. We must work together as a community to reduce future incidents of violence. Some of the things that we are doing are funding the emergency shelters, having protection orders that allow families to stay safe in their own homes, screening and counselling, and, of course, assisting families through the court process. Annually the government of Alberta spends about $70 million on many of these services to help women and families.

The Speaker: First supplemental. The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These 17,000 women and children are fleeing abuse and violence at home. When they're turned away from shelters, they're forced to return to unsafe, unhealthy conditions. This horrible situation is made worse by the fact that income supports are so inadequate that they don't allow women to escape the abuse and afford a place of their own. With the PCs' radical budget less than two weeks away, will this Premier commit to improving, not worsening, access to these services for women and children in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, shelters are only one part of the equation. It's the second-stage housing, the affordable housing, that we're working on. We know that many of the services that we provide include support for dealing with sexual assault, mandated treatment programs, counselling, and collaborative community response programs and services. In 2013 we developed the Alberta framework to end family violence. Under that framework we established the Family Violence Death Review Committee. We're looking forward to hearing the report from that committee.

Dr. Swann: With all due respect, frameworks and meetings don't solve the problem of transitional housing. It's precisely the transitional housing that is grossly underfunded. That means these 17,000 women and their children cannot get into the emergency shelter because the transitional housing isn't there. What are you going to do to improve that? Are you going to continue to tie the safety of our women and children to the price of oil, Mr. Premier?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government funds fully 97 per cent of all women's shelter spaces in the province. Sometimes women are turned away, but they get additional supports through phone, through counsellors that we can set up with them. It's a wraparound service we provide to women who come to an emergency shelter. We will continue to support women and families, I can assure the House.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, you rose on a point of clarification. My apologies for not noting it, but I have noted it now, and it was at approximately 2:01, during the exchange of questions that involved the Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Let us move on to the leader of the ND opposition.

Hospital Infrastructure Priorities

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When reviewing the state of our Edmonton hospitals, the documents read a little bit like the plagues of Egypt: asbestos, mould, insufficient protection for fire and lightning bolts. Yesterday I released documents showing that crowded hospitals mean cancelled surgeries. In today's documents we learn that because of PC neglect, when people actually get in the door, the buildings themselves have also not received the care they need. My question is to the Premier. Why has your PC government failed to maintain our hospitals, leaving us years behind on critical maintenance?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We spend over $70 million a year on maintenance on facilities across this wonderful province. Where there's an emergency, we move forward and fix it right away. Asbestos is sometimes in a building; it's been there for 20 and 30 years. If it's not touched, there's no danger to it. I think that trying to make a big scare out of this is a bit irresponsible.

Ms Notley: Well, what's responsible is asking the questions that are directed towards you.

To the Premier again. Last night your caucus passionately defended a decision to invest 2 million capital dollars in the rebuilding of a luxury golf club that some experts suggest will likely flood again. Meanwhile today's documents show that for the last five years your government has denied roughly the same amount of money for the removal of asbestos from one of Edmonton's largest and busiest hospitals. A luxury golf course, asbestos removal in a hospital: are these the priorities Albertans can expect under your government's new management?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, that's an incredibly unfair comparison. When we move forward and evaluate the needs we have in our various hospitals, we will take care of the needs. That will be the primary concern. We do spend over $70 million a year, and we'll continue to do that. This government is committed to maintaining the facilities in this province.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can certainly agree with the minister that those comparisons are awfully unfair. They're unfair to the people of Alberta. That's who they're unfair to.

Over the last five years the cost of urgent repairs to Edmonton's hospitals neglected by this PC government has amounted to almost a quarter billion dollars. To the Premier: if this is how well your government stands up for health care in the good times, how can you expect Alberta families to trust you to protect our hospitals when the cutting starts?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, this government will cut costs, not care. We're committed to making sure all of our facilities are in the best of care. There are a lot of facilities in this province. We do a priority list, and we work as hard as we can to make sure every dollar is invested as best as possible.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Lesser Slave Lake.

Municipal Funding

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This PC government talks a lot of blarney when it comes to fair and equitable distribution of industrial tax revenue between regions and different population densities. For example, Strathcona county gets immense benefit from its proximity to refineries while the city of Edmonton relies heavily on inconsistent MSI funding from the province. The government talks about the importance of regional co-operation but doesn't mandate it. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why do you continue to defend a system that leaves some regions looking for a lucky clover while others are rolling in a pot of gold?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to say Happy St. Patrick's Day to everyone in the House. With an Irish background, I certainly want to say that, and I love the questioning.

Mr. Speaker, this government works very hard with municipalities as our partners to ensure the funding is important for them. MSI funding is a formula funding, $11.3 billion, a formula that was made with the partnership of the AUMA, the AAMD and C, and the Alberta government. That's how we deliver programs, in partnership with our partners.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, given that there are gross inequities even between regions of lower population densities, where some are lucky to have a railway or pipeline run through them and others are left with nothing but potato fields, why does the minister allow some municipalities to prosper while others struggle through no fault of their own?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. All of the municipalities have a great deal of work that they're doing in their communities, rural municipalities as well, especially resource-based communities, with the roads, the wear and tear and that. What I will say to this hon. member and to members in the House: as we're doing the renewal of the MGA, this is certainly one of the many, 54, topics that we're discussing.

The Speaker: Final supplemental. The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the city of Calgary, which is the largest population centre in the province, is expected to provide a rainbow of services both for its citizens and those from surrounding communities, all with insufficient funding, why hasn't the minister mandated a more equitable share of revenue from the periphery to where it's needed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that if the hon. member would talk to those in rural Alberta with the AAMD and C or those in urban Alberta with the AUMA or talk to the mayors of Edmonton or Calgary, there's never enough money. I think it would be clear that all municipalities would say that. But in saying that, what we have done is made sure that we work with our municipal leaders and partners to find formulas like MSI that they agree on, that they all come together in consensus on, a long-term program, $11.3 billion, to help them be sustainable. Working with our partners on those funding formulas is important for this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

2:10 Aboriginal Construction Career Centres

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today a new, two-year aboriginal construction career centres pilot project was announced with NorQuest and Bow Valley colleges. The program is designed to bring more aboriginal people into construction careers in the province, and I was really pleased to hear about such a program. But we've been talking about the troubling fiscal situation in this province, and we know that we need to do more with less. My question is to the Premier. Given the fact that we are in this fiscal situation, how are we able to afford additional programs such as these?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, we've been clear that despite the fiscal challenges that we face as Albertans, we still need to invest in programs that are crucial to Alberta's future. That certainly applies to the aboriginal career construction centres opened at NorQuest College and Bow Valley College today, really important projects that pave the way for aboriginal people to have careers in the construction industry, supported by government, by the colleges, and by the private sector.

Ms Calahasen: Again to the Premier: given that this program takes place at the colleges in Edmonton and Calgary yet we have a large aboriginal population in the corners of our province, are students enrolled in NorQuest and Bow Valley the only individuals eligible for this program?

Mr. Prentice: No, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, any member of the aboriginal community who's looked into having a career in the construction industry is eligible and available and is welcome at the aboriginal construction career centres at Bow Valley College and at NorQuest College. This will be incredibly valuable to aboriginal people to get them jobs in the construction industry.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you. To the Premier again: given that recent media reports have suggested that we are looking at a downturn in the number of jobs in the construction industry, is now really the right time to be funding construction-related job programs like these, given the fact that they may even be just the greatest thing that ever happened?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are many opinions on the economic circumstances we face, but this government intends to continue to invest in infrastructure in this province to build the infrastructure we need, and we want to see fair and equal opportunities for employment in the construction industry. These programs give aboriginal Albertans a leg up, a chance to get started, a chance to have a career, support their families in the construction industry. That's why it's so important.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, the Premier prefers to answer questions from his own side than from the NDP.

Allegations of Criminal Wrongdoing

Mr. Mason: Apparently, this government believes that when it comes to potentially criminal allegations against a member of cabinet, the PC Party can serve as police, prosecutor, and judge. My questions today are about government policy. To the Premier: is it government policy that decisions about investigation of possible criminal allegations against a member of the government should be determined by the PC Party and not by police?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, the PC Party and the government of Alberta actually have one thing in common here. We do not investigate anyone. Police investigations are done independently by the police and the Crown prosecution service. I trust this member is satisfied with that answer.

Mr. Mason: Hardly so, Mr. Speaker.

Given that in our legal system we have prosecutors whose job it is to prosecute individuals when there is sufficient evidence that a crime may have been committed and given that these prosecutors work for the public and not for a political party, to the Minister of Justice: is it government policy that prosecutors should no longer worry about deciding whether or not to prosecute criminal allegations against government members because this will be taken care of by the member's party instead?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I previously said, it is a well-established principle in common-law jurisdictions that the Crown prosecution service operates independently of any political interference whatsoever. Nothing has changed in that respect, and I'm not aware of any criminal investigation or anything to which the member alludes.

The Speaker: The hon. member. Final supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, certainly, deciding that some of these matters are to be dealt with as internal party matters may be construed as interfering with the administration of justice.

Given that Alberta has judges who are responsible to decide the guilt or innocence of people accused of criminal acts and given that they also ensure that the accused has a fair trial, to the Minister of Justice: is it government policy that judges will take a back seat when it comes to criminal allegations against government members because a political party will now handle those matters? Will the accused be allowed representation . . .

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Justice, if you wish to try and comment on this.

Mr. Denis: Again, Mr. Speaker, there are three orders of government in this country: the executive, the legislative, and the judiciary. The judiciary operates fully independently in any part of this country.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

School Construction

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton-Manning is a fast-growing constituency with a large number of young families. These families are of course concerned about schools for the children in their community. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Can you assure my constituents that school capital funding will continue to be a major item in this year's budget?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure the hon. member is aware that I can't speak about any specifics ahead of the budget being tabled on March 26, but I can say that it is a major concern for many Albertans. I want to assure this member and others that I'm well aware of the need to continue building infrastructure in this province. Eleven hundred children are born in Alberta every week, and last year 300 people moved here every day. Schools are needed in this province, and we will continue to build them.

Mr. Sandhu: To the Minister of Infrastructure: given the recent announcement that planned starter schools will now move forward as full-build projects, can you please reassure my constituents that McConachie school is still moving forward as a full build?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can assure the member and his constituents that, yes, it is. This school is a kindergarten to grade 9 school. It has an opening capacity of 750 students and can rise to a capacity of 900 students. This is a school that is estimated to have a contract in place by June of this year, with an opening date of sometime late in 2016. The fact remains that within the last week alone six additional schools have now had their contracts awarded . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Sandhu: Again to the same minister: will you make it a point to advocate for more school infrastructure in the capital region, especially since the price of oil is so low?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The capital region is a very vastly growing jurisdiction in our province, obviously. Currently in the phase 2 bundle of schools there are 17 school projects within Edmonton. There are 10 in the construction phase. There are two that are currently out to tender. There are five in the design phase. In addition to that, there are an additional 18 school projects that have been announced in phase 3 of our school build, and we will complete every single one.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Airdrie.

Light Rail Transit Funding

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Alberta's two major cities traffic congestion has reached intolerable levels. The closure of just one major artery in Edmonton has led to traffic chaos for hundreds of thousands of Edmontonians just trying to get to work. In Calgary traffic congestion has been unacceptable for years. Both cities are crying out for funding for desperately needed light rail transit and other public transit. To the Minister of Finance: your government seems to have found a pot of gold for all sorts of other election goodies, so when can we expect some more much-needed funding for our major cities, including light rail transit?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd just ask the member to stay tuned for the budget on March 26.

Dr. Swann: Given that investment in critical public transit infrastructure is often tied to funding from other levels of government and given that the province has tied its funding of these projects to the price of a barrel of oil, when will the government take LRT funding off the royalty roller coaster so that Edmontonians don't have to wait decades before LRT can expand into its rapidly growing west end?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has been quite clear that we're going to come out with our budget on March 26. We'll have a 10-year financial plan. Again, we've been very clear that we are going to get off the roller coaster of oil. We're going to depend on less and less of it over the 10-year plan in our operating budget. I suggest the member stay tuned. I think it'll be good news for everybody.

Dr. Swann: Given that hundreds of thousands of Albertans would not be stuck in traffic today if this government had made funding of public transit a priority, as Alberta Liberals have long advocated, why is this government still continuing to download so much of the financial burden of urban transportation onto already-cash-strapped cities?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I would disagree with the first part of the member's statement, that people will take public transit. I mean, people use their vehicles in Alberta. We understand that that causes some issues, but we will continue to work with our municipalities. We have the GreenTRIP program in place, and we will continue to do all we can to invest in light transit and do what we can to educate Albertans on the popularity of and the importance of taking public transportation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Urgent Health Care Services in Airdrie

Mr. Anderson: Thanks. Mr. Speaker, in 12 months the city of Airdrie will pass the 60,000 person threshold. It is now the largest population centre in all of western Canada without access to 24-hour urgent health care. This is becoming a dangerous situation for such a large population centre in that almost 60,000 residents, who on a good-weather day are 45 minutes away from the nearest 24-hour facility, in the winter are often completely cut off due to dangerous road conditions. To the Minister of Health: will the government ensure Airdrie is provided with access to 24-hour urgent health care as promptly as possible?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we thank the member for his passion for his community. You know, we're looking at programs all the time where we can upgrade and improve opportunities for care within communities. As Airdrie is growing so quickly, we're going to have to take a long, hard look at that community as it is really one of the fastest growing communities in our province. We appreciate the question.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, in co-operation with local health professionals, philanthropists, private developers, concerned citizens, and the city of Airdrie community leaders have submitted a proposal that would build a roughly $35 million health park with access to 24-hour urgent health care which will cost the province only $4 million of that $35 million build. A pretty amazing deal. Minister, will you agree to review the proposal as soon as possible to assess whether it is a fiscally responsible way for the province to address Airdrie's current and future health care needs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, I think it's incredibly exciting that a community would come together and be so dynamic and creative to put together a program in which they can partner with the province. We will take a very serious look at that. I think that more and more in our province communities like Beaverlodge and Bassano and others are coming together in order to work with the province and develop their health care system. We really appreciate the member's community, and we want to thank them very much.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the Airdrie health park proposal would also allow the province to move the beds and equipment from the current eight-bed urgent care clinic to the new health park. It would also allow for small overnight shifts of health professionals to staff the new facility 24/7 and would permit the expansion of urgent care as is so desperately needed given our current facility's multihour waits. This would be an amazing improvement for health care in Airdrie. Minister, will you commit to working with our community to ensure Airdrians have access to the urgent health facilities we need 24 hours a day?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, given the proposal that the community wants to put forward and the needs and the growth of the community, we'd be more than willing to sit down with, discuss, and look at options to make sure that Airdrie gets the kind of care they need. It's very exciting, again, to see communities throughout our province wanting to work with the government to find solutions. Rather than always trying to find a way not to do, they're finding a way to do.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by Highwood.

Disaster Recovery Program Claims

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This PC government promised to close 90 per cent of all eligible DRP files by the end of March of last year. Not surprisingly, that didn't happen. Not even close. The same government made another promise recently to add another $20 million in a campaign-style announcement with the Premier and the Member for Highwood, but this move raised concerns residents had of the timing. To the Premier: we know your government likes to campaign with public money, but how can you in good conscience play politics with flood recovery?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is not playing politics with flood money or flood recovery. More than 80 per cent of the 10,500 files have been completed, and our government has provided more than $100 million to Albertans to help rebuild and remediate their homes. Last year in October we made a commitment to triple the staff for the appeals and made a commitment to have those appeals completed by December. Promise made, promise kept.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. Only six workers, as was just mentioned, were originally assigned to close these files after the devastating floods. This number was raised, as they've just said, to 18 with pressure from the opposition, still less than the number of workers you sometimes see working at a Tim Hortons. Why does your government always have money for MLA offices, severances, planes, cellphone bills, and vacations but can't seem to find the necessary resources to get these files closed and Albertans back on their feet?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In addition to what I just said, we also made a commitment with the hon. Premier and the hon. Member for Highwood to make sure that we added additional staff with the DRP files. We did this so that people in southern Alberta who were devastated by the largest disaster in Canadian history had the opportunity to have a caseworker working directly with them. In addition to that, we removed the eligibility of 50 per cent and increased it, now advancing 90 per cent of eligible expenses to help fast-track payments for complex cases. We have made a commitment to have these most complex ones done . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
Final supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, and thank you to the minister. Again, my question was to the Premier.

Many victims of the 2013 flood continue to remain frustrated by the government's slow and confusing response, delayed now by almost two years after the floods. Premier, we all know the DRP process is complex, but considering more than 20 per cent of eligible files now remain open two years later, do you plan on doing anything differently going forward?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is the largest natural disaster in Canadian history, as I said, 10,500 cases. More than 80 per cent of those cases are completed. We are now dealing with the most complicated cases, and we have made a commitment, our Premier and our government, to make sure we're there until every one of those cases is completed. We're working very hard with the communities and with individuals and with caseworkers designed for them so that they can get the services they need, with an increase to 90 per cent of costs for them. This is real action under new management.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Okotoks Water Supply

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The town of Okotoks has achieved one of the lowest per capita water consumption rates in North America and continues to reduce water consumption even while increasing in population. Despite this, Okotoks has reached capacity. In two short years the town is expected to have a water deficit. To the Minister of Transportation: when can the residents and businesses of Okotoks expect to have approval for a new water pipeline, which will allow development in and around the town?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to this hon. member for the question. She has been a great advocate for her constituents on this issue, and her efforts should be commended.

I'm well aware of Okotoks' desire to increase their water capacity for this proposed pipeline, and we've been working closely with the municipality and the Member for Highwood on a solution. As the member knows, I'm not at liberty to discuss details contained in Budget 2015 until it is tabled on March 26. I'll have more details on the water for life program to share at that time.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Given that much if not all of the provincial government share of the funding for this project would likely be coming from the water for life program, how does this program determine which projects are priorities? And given the urgent need where does Okotoks stand on that priority list?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to ensuring all Albertans have access to clean drinking water. Since 2004 the water for life program has provided more than $875 million to more than 150 projects, and we know the demand is growing. At this time we know that Okotoks' ability to provide residents with a reliable source of clean drinking water is not in jeopardy, and we'll continue to work with the municipality to address capacity issues as the town grows.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Smith: Thank you. Given that Okotoks is a leader in water conservation and yet has still reached its capacity under its current water licences, what will the government do to ensure that water needs for the town are met while we're waiting for this pipeline to be built?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, both the water for life and the Alberta municipal water/waste-water partnership programs are vital to this government's ability to ensure Alberta communities have the water infrastructure they need. Projects for both programs are prioritized on the basis of need, with health, environmental protection, and operations-related issues addressed first.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Edmonton Land Annexation Proposal

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today there is going to be a petition presented by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont with the signatures of nearly 7,000 of his constituents in opposition to the annexation plans of the city of Edmonton, plans that would expand the city and take over some of the best farmland in the world. This government has a history of ignoring Albertans, so what assurances can these 7,000 people have that the government is going to take this issue seriously?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

2:30

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for the question. For those members from those communities that are in the House today, there is a process in this province with regard to annexation, and it's very clearly laid out in the Municipal Government Act. Both the county of Leduc and the city of Edmonton are going through that process. We value that it's an independent process, and we let them work through that process.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the minister represents the neighbouring riding of Drayton Valley-Devon, which includes a portion of Leduc county. This decision will impact her constituents as well. Will she commit to meeting with the Leduc County Coalition and ensure that their voices are heard?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I always meet with my constituents, and I value meeting with my constituents on this issue. But also, what I've let all of the parties know is that there's a process with annexation. It's an independent process and a fair process that's laid out for all municipalities to work together on areas where they can find mediation and come together. At the end of the day they can go to the Municipal Government Board, and that is the independent process that we'll go through regardless of where an annexation happens in this province.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Leduc and Leduc county have shown that they have a good working relationship and that they are willing to sit down at the table and have a real discussion on important issues that impact their citizens, what options are available for the Leduc County Coalition to ensure their voices are not muffled by the city of Edmonton?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. It's very important for the people in the municipalities of Leduc county and Leduc city and the areas of Edmonton as well to be able to voice their opinions and their concerns with regard to annexation. That is all part of the mediation process. That's very well defined in the Municipal Government Act. Certainly, it's very much so that Leduc county hears from their ratepayers in this very important process for them. They are doing that. They are here in the House today. They've tabled a petition that the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont has accepted as well. The process is working, and they'll continue through that.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Tailings Pond Management

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In October 2013 the dams storing tailings at the Obed mountain mine near Hinton failed. This became a significant concern to all of the residents of Wood Buffalo as a large, dark plume of solid particulates travelled up the Athabasca River. While the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo shut off their intake valve on the water treatment plant as it entered the region, residents still feared for the quality of their drinking water. To the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development: while I know the Obed dam break is still under investigation by the AER, what is being done by this government in the interim to ensure that the Athabasca or any other waterway will be protected from other potential spills?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans care deeply about the quality and quantity of their water resources. After the Obed incident all coal mine dams were investigated to ensure that they all had structural integrity. We are on an ongoing basis continuing to work with the cumulative effects management association, stakeholders – such as industry, aboriginal groups, and ENGOs – to gather scientific and traditional knowledge about the watershed to ensure that the river and that the watershed is safe for now and future generations.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the same minister. What has been learned from this dam break, and how is it being applied to oil sands tailings pond containment?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This serves as a reminder of the environmental risk associated with having tailings on our landscape. This is why we take the safety of dams very seriously. Alberta was the first jurisdiction to institute dam safety legislation. This is why we introduced the new tailings management framework last Friday, to make sure that we can reduce the amount of tailings that are on our landscape moving into the future.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Allen: Thank you. Also to the Minister of ESRD. The reclamation of oil sands tailings continues to be a concern. How will the tailings management framework address tailings reduction and ensure that the appropriate cleanup occurs without cost to the taxpayer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Under the new tailings management framework existing ponds are to be remediated, and we want to make sure that we slow the growth of any new tailings. Limits on new tailings will be in place. As well, there will be requirements for the treatment of existing tailings on the landscape. There will be triggers and limits that are in place under the framework to drive escalating regulatory responses to ensure that there is proper cleanup of tailings.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Menthol-flavoured Tobacco Products

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. A student group in Calgary called BAM is joining the chorus today calling for menthol to be included in the flavoured tobacco ban brought in by Bill 206. This has already been supported by the World Health Organization, Canadian Medical Association, Canadian cancer and lung associations, Heart and Stroke Foundation, Alberta Medical Association, Public Health Association, Alberta Policy Coalition for Cancer Prevention, Action on Smoking and Health, and this very Assembly, just to name a few. Why is the Health minister the only one who doesn't think it's necessary?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, this House passed recently the most comprehensive antismoking bill in the country. It actually passed the bill rather than talked about a bill.

Dr. Swann: Why don't you answer the question, Mr. Minister? Why are you the only one that doesn't?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I thought I answered the question. We passed a very comprehensive antismoking bill, which deals with a great number of issues with flavoured tobacco and makes sure that our young people are protected.

Dr. Swann: Given that any doctor or health minister, for that matter, worth their salt would know that preventing smoking is the key to preventing lung cancer and other chronic lung disease and that menthol flavouring increases attractiveness and addictiveness of tobacco, especially for youth, why does the minister who says that, quote, children are the priority, end quote, not support the single most important health policy that would protect them from this addiction?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we do agree with the hon. member that smoking is a very, very, very bad thing to do, and we would encourage people not to smoke. We will in the fall look at other alternatives, but that will be in the fall.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Affordable Housing in Rural Alberta

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Affordable housing is a serious issue across Alberta, but in ridings like mine in rural Alberta it's becoming a crisis. Housing is becoming less attainable, and layoffs are occurring across many industries due to the low price of oil. This makes affordable housing a very serious issue in rural Alberta. In my riding of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake there are few to no opportunities for affordable and attainable housing. To the Minister of Human Services: given that this economic situation has made things worse for our lower income families, what role will this government play in ensuring that those low-income individuals and families do not end up going homeless in rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Regardless of the economic climate we want to see that every Alberta family has a good quality of life and access to supports when they need them. Albertans can contact Alberta Supports, with knowledgeable staff to help them to find basic needs like food, clothing, and shelter, of course, or even health benefits and getting child support payments. In addition, we have 53 Alberta Works offices across Alberta for help and training for individuals to enhance their skills or to advance their careers.

Mrs. Towle: To the same minister: given that the government is facing a $7 billion shortfall this fiscal year, how will the government ensure that attainable and affordable housing remains a priority, and will they review all options and partnerships to build more affordable, attainable housing in rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that more than 10,500 people have received housing wraparound supports since the launch of the housing first program. We're currently working with the Minister of Seniors on a housing strategy, and I think partnerships are absolutely essential. I look at the Alberta rural development network and some of their great ideas. I look forward to working with many partners just like them.

Mrs. Towle: To the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour: given that rural Alberta has unique challenges to access affordable and attainable housing, what is your ministry doing to promote employment in rural Alberta, specifically to ensure that Albertans are not forced to always rely on the use of government programs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Things we deal with in our ministry are people without jobs and jobs without people. In January with Human Services and the federal government we helped fund the Women Building Futures online program to help train women in the trades so that they can get some of those high-paying jobs and look after themselves. We're also working to educate and train Alberta's workers with the federal government through the Canada-Alberta job grant. More than 490 Alberta employers and 3,450 employees have already benefited, and there's more to come.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Medicine Hat.

Public Service Right to Strike

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2013 this government passed Bill 45, an unprecedented attack on the rights of workers to strike. Since then the Supreme Court of Canada concluded that the right to strike is a fundamental freedom. Given that the Supreme Court has affirmed that legislation similar to Bill 45 is unconstitutional, will the minister of labour please tell us whether he intends to respect the rights of workers to strike and repeal Bill 45?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I think it was last week that the Premier talked about that we are going to go ahead and work on essential services legislation. I made it clear that when we do that, we will have respectable two-way dialogues with our workers and the people who represent them. If the topic of Bill 45 comes up, we will listen to what our employees' and their representatives' concerns are, and we will take those seriously.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the Supreme Court of Canada decision has rendered many of our laws in this province that prohibit striking illegal, including Bill 45, and given that I think that the Supreme Court of Canada's decision was in fact predicated on some of the laws that we have created here in this province in the first place, to the minister of labour: is the government prepared to pay the million dollars a day for every day with unjust and unconstitutional laws that remain on the books here in the province of Alberta?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is talking about a legitimate issue. But, to be clear, the Supreme Court of Canada's decision was predicated on Saskatchewan legislation specifically, not on Alberta legislation. Having said that, the hon. member's concerns are legitimate. Our ministry has begun to act and will continue to study that decision, and we'll act accordingly.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Supreme Court of Canada has affirmed the constitutional right of public-sector workers to strike as a fundamental freedom and given that Alberta's legislation not only prohibits certain public-sector employees from striking but also fines them astronomical amounts for simply threatening to strike, will this minister affirm today that he will not enforce these essentially illegal laws as directed towards public-sector workers?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked if we were going to enforce legislation that hasn't been proclaimed; think about that. I think the answer is quite obvious. We cannot possibly enforce legislation that has not yet been proclaimed.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the bell for question period time has rung, so we will stop here and continue on with members' statements in 30 seconds.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks for your member's statement.

Retrospective by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks

Mr. Hale: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Serving as a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta has been a privilege and an honour. I rise today as a proud representative of the amazing, resilient, and hard-working constituents of Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Speaker, many great things have occurred since I was first given the opportunity to represent the citizens of Strathmore-Brooks, and I am extremely grateful and humbled that my role has contributed in some small way to the betterment of all Albertans. I've been privileged to address a variety of important and diverse issues, including the importance of fiscal accountability and governmental transparency, the importance of the detection of invasive aquatic species, as well as making sure our seniors' voices have been heard in this House.

The bonds forged in my time here have shown me that strength and courage abound in our great province. Mr. Speaker, at the end of the day we are all Albertans. We all want to build on the great legacy that has made our province so successful and catapulted our presence on the global stage.

Some important issues in the constituency of Strathmore-Brooks are the status of the Bassano hospital, the Strathmore hospital, along with wildlife management issues and agricultural policies that still need to be addressed. Rest assured, Mr. Speaker, I will continue to bring to light these issues in whatever capacity I can, as I did as an MLA, a citizen, and most importantly as a proud Albertan.

As Alberta goes through some challenging times, I hope the people of this great province realize that we're all in this together and that we must continue to work together so that we can weather the storm and continue to be proud of our great province.

Mr. Speaker, I will forever remember my days here in the Legislature and all the interesting people I have had the privilege to meet and the many new friendships I have made. I would like to wish everyone the best with this old cowboy saying as you continue to represent the people of Alberta: my friends, may your horse never stumble, your cinch never break, your belly never grumble, and your heart never ache.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the five requisite copies of a summary of 7,000 letters that were presented to me as the MLA for Leduc-Beaumont by the Leduc County Coalition, and they were introduced earlier. The LCC is a group of county business owners, landowners, and residents who are committed to fighting to save our county from the proposed annexation of some 38,000 acres by the city of Edmonton. They believe that this is an unnecessary tax grab and that any boundary adjustments should be through a negotiated process that recognizes the future needs of both communities.

Mr. Anderson: I have two tablings; they're actually petitions, Mr. Speaker. The first is 1,000 signatures – this is in addition to 2,500 that were submitted earlier – with regard to residents in Airdrie asking for a 24-hour urgent health facility in their community.

The second one is 100 letters from parents around Westbrook school who have a very serious problem with regard to speeds in and around their school. I'm hoping that the Transportation minister can look at these letters and decide if it would be warranted to reduce the speed limit around the school to protect those students better.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I had the Member for Calgary-Buffalo next, but I see no presentation there, so let us move on to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to say that Alberta Justice supports victims first, and as such I'm going to be tabling five copies of the victims' services status report for 2013-14. These programs provided services to more than 71,000 Albertans, 15 per cent under age 18. More than 2,800 volunteer advocates, board members, and special-purpose volunteers contributed 161,047 volunteer hours during this report year.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, we have two points of order and one point of clarification to deal with before we move on to Orders of the Day. Let's hear the first point of order. It was raised by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills during the first exchange of questions and responses.

Point of Order Referring to Party Matters

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise according to Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), and I'd like to combine both of those two points of order.

Mr. Speaker, you never hesitate to stand up on so-called party matters, but it was not the case today when the Premier was referring directly to internal party debates, something that is clearly on the surface related to party matters. I suggest that's a double standard, and that's why opposition members lose confidence. Those same rules should apply to every Member of this Legislative Assembly no matter how important they are and no matter if they are the Premier.

Mr. Speaker, if we're going to go down that route, we can talk about promises made during leadership campaigns and all that kind of stuff. In fact, the Premier himself in 2003 promised, when he was running for the leadership of the PC Party of Canada, free tuition for everyone. You know, bowls of rainbows and lollipops and magical unicorns as well, I think, were part of that promise. He promised in the most recent leadership campaign term limits, which, of course, is unconstitutional – and the government hasn't even attempted to put that forward – and no taxes and so forth. The Member for Calgary-Hays promised to have bars open till 4 a.m. Are we supposed to debate that here in the Legislature? The Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs talked about increasing taxes, carbon levies. Is that supposed to be talked about here?

Mr. Speaker, you know, we've been very clear in the Wildrose in our commitment to export our most important product, strongly in support of Keystone – I wanted to clarify that – but I suggest that in the past few days you've prevented us from even speaking on what you deem to be party matters. Here's an issue that's clearly a party matter. So not only was it a double standard not to prevent the member from speaking on these issues; I would ask that at a minimum those comments be retracted in their entirety.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, first of all, for his service the last three years to this Chamber. I didn't have a chance to do so, and I wish him well, whether in the practice of tax law, criminal defence, whatever law he may have practised as well, or in whatever he may decide to do. He's a very honourable professional.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that's where my rainbows and lollipops, though, do end. He was referring to internal party debates. Well, it's routinely referred to as to what members of a party may say, and there's a clear delineation between what a member of a party may say or asking an actual question of a party in the Chamber here. I'm actually going to table five copies of a reference to what the Premier was talking about: a member of his party, someone who is seeking the leadership, wanting a review and study of our royalty policy. I quote: I know this is the kiss of death for any politician to talk about, but I believe that it's time that we put everything on the table; I think it's really time that we looked at that formula.

On top of that, this same member goes on to state: why should we have a Keystone?

Mr. Speaker, this was a matter of opinion that the Premier was talking about, and the reality is that these positions are very similar to the New Democratic Party in this province. These positions are not what a conservative party would say, and that is the delineation that the Premier was talking about. He was simply talking a matter of opinion. There's lots of debate, comparison, and contrast in this Chamber, but it's very, very clear to me that there is no point of order because the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills just doesn't want to concentrate on the inconvenient truth that the Wildrose is very similar to the New Democrats.

The Speaker: Are there others? Does the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition wish to weigh in on this?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, what this member is saying is ridiculous. This is the same member that says that we're so right that we don't know where we're going to be. It's been very clear. I left this party in 2010 because of the royalties that the previous Premier, Premier Stelmach, was bringing in. Including the Member for Airdrie, that's the reason why we crossed the floor in 2010, because of what this government was doing with royalties, what they were doing with health care and everything else that they were dealing with. So if the Premier wants to get off his horse to fight the pigs, we'll be ready to fight him.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? No?

We're dealing with the two of these at the same time, I understand, so that will take care of the point of order raised at 2:03 and a subsequent one that was raised at 2:04.

I want to begin by stating that at the time of this question-response exchange, when the Premier rose to speak, there was such an uproar here that I found it very difficult to hear parts of what was being said, which is why I've ordered the Blues. Nonetheless, I have received the Blues. It's not uncommon for people to raise issues about ideas and policies and so on espoused by members with respect to their party's position on a matter. In fact, in this House it's frequently the case that opposition members, sometimes from all three opposition parties, preface their questions or their preambles by using the word "PC," which typically stands for Progressive Conservative. Now, I wouldn't stand and rule that out of order, as I haven't, so I'm trying to be as consistent as possible. But when matters deal with internal – internal – party matters, they ought not be raised here, and we all know that.

Now, in this instance I have read the Blues, and I will promise you this: I will be more vigilant going forward, assuming I can hear the questions and answers. If you want the Speaker to intervene and stop any references whatsoever to any party matters, I can be extremely strict about that. You may not enjoy it, but I can be extremely strict. Internal ideas, internal policies, internal party matters are something that is a little bit of a grey area, but you can tell by the temperature, the tone, and the temperance, or lack of, there that accompanies each of these questions as to whether or not it is a legitimate point of order that is forthcoming or if it's more the case of a difference of opinion, a dispute on the facts. As we know, there are frequently two different versions of the story and all of those other things that Speakers like myself and others have stated in this House many, many times. Those situations do occur. Hon. members, at the end of the day everyone gets a chance to stand up and clarify what their point is, and I believe that has happened here, so I will be more vigilant going forward, I can assure you that.

However, one thing I did want to point out was that I believe, hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, you said something about how the Speaker prevented someone from asking their question, which is why today I've skipped through Hansard as quickly as I could just to see when and where that might have happened. I don't see it yet, but I will look and see if that was in fact the case because, typically speaking, I have tried to allow the full question to be asked such as happened today when the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler rose. I did not interrupt his question. He asked it in full, according to the Blues, and at the end of that exchange I even stated the following according to the Blues. "I didn't cut off the questions, so I am wondering if anyone wishes to answer that, bearing in mind what I read yesterday," and so on.

So the full question, hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, was asked by you, and I allowed it to be asked. I wasn't sure where it was going, and frequently you don't know where some things are going until you've heard the whole question. I do my best to try and ensure that that is a consistent approach that I apply.

So that is the case, and as such I find no specific point of order here, but I have indicated what I will be doing going forward, so everyone should be forewarned about that, please.

Now we have a point of clarification. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was referring to previous days where you prevented members from asking questions.

Mr. Speaker, on this point of clarification I think this is a vitally important question here. Earlier today the Member for Drumheller-Stettler asked a question about how tax dollars were being used. The question was in reference to whether or not taxpayer dollars were used for partisan purposes. Tax dollars. Taxpayer dollars. Of course, there's precedent for this and why this is important. Previously it was found that government planes were used for partisan purposes. We asked those questions in the Assembly because it involved taxpayer dollars, and those dollars were subsequently repaid by the PC Party.

Here the member asked a question, and it was in reference to whether or not a staff member, who is paid by taxpayer dollars, was doing partisan political activities. That's entirely an appropriate question. Mr. Speaker, I'm asking whether or not that's your ruling, that we in the opposition are not supposed to ask questions about whether or not an employee who is employed by taxpayers can participate in political activities during working hours. If that is the ruling, it is unprecedented, and it is completely uncharted territory.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Anyone else wish to chime in on this? It's just a point of clarification. I'd be happy to proceed.

Seeing no one, let me proceed. Thank you for asking, hon. member, because it gives me a chance to explain a couple of things again. First of all, as I said just moments ago, when I was addressing the first two points of order, I did not interrupt the hon. member's question. In fact, the Blues would show a full question that ends with a question mark in case one, where he asked about a principal secretary interfering in business while being paid by Albertans; in question two, something to do with a principal secretary paid by Albertans interfering in PC Party business; and question three, to do with government funds, also ends with a question mark, so I believe I allowed full liberties there for the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, and the full question is there.

Now, in between those questions and responses I stated the following. I stated, "Hon. member, I think we clarified yesterday that internal party matters..." – and then you rose on your point of clarification – "... really have no space or place in the Assembly here." I went on and made another comment, and I gave it as a cautionary note, but I did not bar the question from being asked in any way, shape, or form.

Also, while I'm on the point of clarification, neither did I prevent someone from answering it. I asked if they would like to answer, and according to what I have before me, the Premier stood and answered question one, and then the point was asked by me if someone from the government side wishes to stand up and explain how this does or doesn't relate to government policy. No one rose, and I stated that. No one rose to answer, but I gave an opportunity, and I did the same with the next one, too. To be clear, I ended that one by saying: I see no one rising to answer the third question either. But an opportunity was provided. That point of clarification is appreciated, and I hope so, too, are my comments in regard to them.

As such, we will now move on.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 17

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2015

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today and move third reading of Bill 17, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2015.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, you wish to go next?

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Speaking on third reading.

The Speaker: I would normally go to the Official Opposition, but I see they've waved off that opportunity, so why don't we go straight to you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate an opportunity to just say a couple of words in closing on Bill 17, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2015. I certainly did outline our concerns in the Legislature here in, I believe, second reading, but just to highlight those again. Certainly, we see the utility of the supplementary supply in many areas, but it also, I think, highlights some indiscretion and poor choices that this government has made in regard to both health care and long-range planning for infrastructure, schools particularly, and then, of course, the issues around legal aid.

I guess an issue that's really come to light, I think, even more specifically than people would have noticed, is in regard to the Kananaskis golf course. Now, in the larger purview of this government and the very large budget that we deal with here each year, the number is not as big, but I think there's a certain symbolism around the Kananaskis golf course that many Albertans remember from its inception, back when it was first built, and the controversies around that. In the intervening years I think it's worthwhile for us to consider again the value of that particular golf course in the Bow valley here in 2015. We know that since the golf course was built many, many years ago, there were many more private golf courses built in the same Bow valley area.

This is very sensitive ecosystem that is very limited in size. The scope of development in the Bow valley over the last 30 years has been quite significant, so maybe this is just a moment in time where we can reconsider the value of that space in the most sensitive area of the Bow valley still retaining itself as a golf course in the first place.

Certainly, in the face of other budget constraints that we have to deal with here in the Legislature, I think that maybe it's prudent for us to reconsider putting extra money into this golf course project when (a) I think that maybe the circumstances have changed considerably in terms of other golf courses being built already in the valley, (b) the chances that this same place would be flooded again with extraordinary meteorological circumstances, and (c) perhaps the opportunity to use this as some other purpose with the view to restoring some of the natural Bow valley ecosystem as well.

So that's one issue that I think that all Albertans should take notice of. Again, sometimes it's not the very expensive budget points but smaller ones that people can have a better sense of. You know, why would we choose to spend money on expensive golf courses when other health and education issues go wanting?

Otherwise, as well, we see that the legal aid is in the sup supply, but again I just wanted to reiterate the value of long-term planning and commitment to this program so that people have access to justice. The instability around legal aid funding has led to many people not being able to access proper legal counsel. We have some restoration of that funding here but only as an intermediate sort of measure. I would like to see long-term, stable funding for this program so that all Albertans have equal access to justice when they need it.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I thank you for this opportunity.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise here today to speak on Bill 17. The only few comments that I would have are that I simply cannot understand why the government would want to expend millions of dollars in order to run a luxury golf course, especially when the Premier has stated that we're in tough economic times, especially when he has stated that the budget is going to end up with massive cuts to our most vulnerable as well as seniors and those types of things. I think when, you know, people go out there and talk to average Albertans and they explain how their money is being spent, if you go door to door and say that this is where your government is spending money, millions of dollars on a golf course, yet they want to raise your taxes or they want to cut seniors' programs and other things like that, I think to most people, when you go to their door, that would be very alarming to them.

Mr. Speaker, I guess my question and my hope is that the government reconsider spending this amount on this luxury golf course and instead do the right thing during this economic downturn and actually start prioritizing. I think that if the government is asking Albertans to pay more in taxes, at a minimum they have to cut wasteful spending to have any type of credibility with Albertans. Of course, we don't need tax increases right now. What we need to do is cut wasteful spending, and this golf course expenditure, where it's millions of dollars, would be the first easy step.

I think that it's shocking that the government hasn't had a reply for why this is a priority over schools, why it's a priority over seniors' programs. I know when I talk to seniors in my community – just last week I talked to a whole bunch of them about, you know, the expenditures on golf courses. They were quite alarmed by that. I think that most Albertans, when they become educated on it, become alarmed at it and completely frustrated with their government. So, Mr. Speaker, I don't think we should be spending money on fancy golf courses, and I hope the government would reconsider that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Are you rising on 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Yes. I'd like to ask the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills – again, he's discussed the golf course and his discussions with seniors. I was noticing that in my constituency a lot of seniors are concerned with the increase of the rental rate of their accommodations. I was wondering if the member could enlarge on that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A great question by the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler. You know, seniors are on fixed incomes. When they see things like their power bills doubling and tripling, you know, of course it's on the fixed component of their power bill, where even if they turned off their lights, their power rates would still go up. Now their rental rates are going up as well. There's a lot less left on the table.

When you're spending millions and millions of dollars on a golf course yet gouging the people who built this province, I think most of them will have a serious problem with that, not only seniors but also their families. I mean, oftentimes if the seniors can't afford to make ends meet, their loved ones have to assist them. I think that if they knew their government was spending tax dollars wisely and it was just a true financial crunch, most Albertans would be okay with it. But the fact is that when you're spending money on things like a golf course or carbon capture and corporate subsidies for carbon capture or brand new MLA offices, severances of upwards of half a million dollars for VPs of strategic relations, I think it's very difficult to go to those people that built this province and say: "No. You have to have rental increases. You have to continue to be gouged on your power bill."

Mr. Speaker, this is where you have a government that has been in power for 44 years, and it's tired. It's out of touch. Again, I thank the hon. member for his question, and I hope that the government would reconsider and stop the funding of this luxury golf course and instead perhaps put it to priorities such as seniors and other individuals in Alberta who helped build this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you. There are still a couple of minutes left in 29(2)(a) if anyone wishes to participate.

Seeing no one, let us move on to the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, these bills are normally routine. It's part of doing the government's business, and we all understand that. But the issue of funding a golf course and particularly spending $8 million to keep it operational while it is being rebuilt is absolutely something that this public cannot understand when it measures what this government considers a priority. That's the question that never did get answered in debate in Committee of the Whole, and it's too bad that it couldn't. The minister brought forward the issue dealing with insurance, yet he didn't provide any evidence of what we're dealing with with the insurance covering this golf course.

There are so many questions around that and the justification of why this should be. Why now of all times, 18 months after the disaster? Eighteen months after the disaster people are still waiting for their settlements, still waiting for their disaster relief, yet we're going to fix the golf course now. We can't wait any longer. The answers that we got just do not fly. The public does not accept what this government has so far provided as evidence of why they've got to provide basically $10 million now and could not wait, could not defer, could not come up with any other agreement.

It's all about priorities. We've got seniors that are in need of medication that is not covered, and this is quality of life and life-saving medication that is extremely expensive that seniors must foot the bills for themselves. That is not funded. We have the issues of flood mitigation, that still are not funded, that communities need to protect against flooding. We have bridges that need to be fixed in rural areas, and they're not getting fixed because there's no funding. The priority list goes on and on and on, dealing with these necessary essentials, and unfortunately this government has decided that this asset, that it claims is so valuable, must be now fixed for the price of around $10 million.

What I do not understand, if it is that valuable an asset, is why are we rebuilding it in a flood plain when we have told other communities that you cannot build in flood plain? That we need to understand. This doesn't make sense. We're not going to allow somebody to build a house of roughly $400,000 in value in a flood plain, but we're going to put this $50 million asset, supposedly, back into a flood plain. It doesn't make sense. How long will it be before it washes out again? Given the fact of what we're dealing with with climate science, I would argue with you that this so-called 100-year event, which seems to occur now about every other year – I don't know why we're calling it a 100-year event given the frequency of these events. But the fact is that it's not a matter of if it's going to be flooded out again; it's a matter of when it's going to be flooded out again.

Again, it goes back to the priorities of this government, and these priorities are a mixed message. They're out of line with the public's priority of what is prudent, fiscal, responsible spending of taxpayers' dollars. That's the one big issue that I have with this bill, the fact that we are spending money on something that is nice. It is certainly, possibly, something that's worth while showcase-wise for somebody that has a lot of money to spend, but we don't have a lot of money to spend. We need to evaluate what is absolutely necessary now and separate that from what . . .

An Hon. Member: Tourism.

Mr. Anglin: I don't have a problem with tourism. Prove it to me that it pays. That's all I ask of the government. Prove it to me that it pays off because you haven't done that. What you've shown me is that this is a black hole for sucking money, taxpayers' dollars, that has not produced a return of profit. I argue to you right now that if it did produce a return, you would have shown us by now. Prove it. All we've asked is to show us how this works, that it has paid off huge dividends for this government. I think the public might be able to buy that, but you've not done that. What we have seen, in the public's view, is a black hole that sucks taxpayers' dollars away from hard-working taxpayers, with no great return. That's what's offensive about spending this money on this golf course now, and it's just not acceptable.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The Member for Drumheller-Stettler on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night we heard the minister of ESRD expound on the values of the golf course, and that's well received and well appreciated, but he also commented that a good part of this funding was federal funds brought forward. To the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre: I'd like to know if he's aware of whether or not the federal involvement, subsistence to this program would and will or could be directed to the replacement of a facility that's on a designated flood plain.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, did you wish to respond?

Mr. Anglin: In the interest of political unity I think I'm done.

The Speaker: Anyone else? There are four minutes left under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

If not, let us move to the next speaker. Does anyone else wish to speak to third reading of this bill?

If not, hon. President of Treasury Board, would you like to close debate at this time?

Mr. Campbell: I'll just call the question, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a third time]

Committee of Supply

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Hon. members, before we commence this afternoon's consideration of interim supply, I would like to review briefly the standing orders governing the speaking rotation. As provided for in Standing Order 59.02, the rotation in Standing Order 59.01(6) is deemed to apply, which is as follows:

- (a) the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may make opening comments not to exceed 10 minutes,
- (b) for the hour that follows, members of the Official Opposition and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (c) for the next 20 minutes, the members of the third party, if any, and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (d) for the next 20 minutes, the member of the fourth party, if any, and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (d.1) for the next 20 minutes, the members of any other party represented in the Assembly or any independent Members and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,

- (e) for the next 20 minutes, private members of the Government caucus and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the minister's behalf, may speak, and (f) any member may speak thereafter.

During the above rotation speaking times are limited to 10 minutes. Once the above rotation is complete, speaking times are reduced to five minutes.

Provided that the Chair has been notified, a Minister and a private Member may combine their . . . speaking times, with both taking and yielding the floor over the combined period.

Finally, as provided for in Government Motion 22, approved by the Assembly yesterday, the time allotted for consideration is six hours.

Interim Supply Estimates 2015-16 General Revenue Fund and Lottery Fund

The Deputy Chair: The Committee of Supply has under consideration the 2015-16 interim supply estimates.

I will now recognize the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to move the estimates. The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Madam Chair. I request leave to introduce Bill 18, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Madam Chair, interim supply estimates provide funding authorization until the new budget is approved. This is not unusual for government. In fact, it is required whenever spending authority is required to bridge the gap between the prior fiscal year and the passage of a new budget. Authorization is needed so that the government can continue to provide services until the budget is passed. These estimates are based on the department's needs to fund government programs and services. Government spending is typically higher in the early months of the year. This pattern occurs because some of the payments are due on April 1 for the first quarter, and some annual payments are also due on April 1. Members will note that the interim supply is inordinately high compared to what is expected for the overall government budget simply because there are a lot of front-ended costs that need to be paid out in the first quarter.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Just to clarify, you are moving the estimates and not the bill.

Mr. Campbell: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: We are moving the estimates. All right.

Members of the opposition. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. I mean, we're talking about millions and millions of dollars, and that's all the minister has to tell us. We're only given this very brief statement, and he's not providing any details at all to this Assembly. It's pretty alarming that he's requesting that we vote on these measures without providing any details whatsoever. Millions of dollars. As the opposition we just got this.

I guess I'll just start with the glaringly obvious one, the $28 million requested for the office of the Chief Electoral Officer. Why on earth would we need this money allocated if, you know, the Premier hasn't made up his mind on whether there's going to be an election?

3:30

I think this is actually almost comical. I mean, the Premier has publicly stated that he's not sure when the election is going to be called, yet they're requesting $28 million for the Chief Electoral Officer. I guess my question is – and, Madam Chair, I'm wondering whether or not we can go back and forth. My question is to the Minister. What is the $28 million for when it comes to the request for the office of the Chief Electoral Officer? Would you be willing to respond, Minister?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. The fact of the matter is that this is basically a vote on the monies that we need to run the government from April 1 until the budget is passed. All of the money that is in the interim supply estimates will be completely debated once the budget is tabled on March 26, so the opposition will have a clear understanding of what the money is for, and they'll have the ability within the estimates to sit down and have that conversation with the various ministers.

Madam Chair, we know that the legislation for the electoral act says that we need to have an election sometime between March and May of 2016. The electoral officer has to prepare for that date, and it takes some time to do that, usually about a year out. We know from reading the Hansard from Legislative Offices that the electoral officer is looking at some, maybe, different ways of handling the votes, some of them being electronic. So it's important that the electoral officer know that he has the funding available and that he can start to move forward with the process that meets the legislation that says that the event has to happen between March and May of 2016.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. I guess if this money is needed right now, the Chief Electoral Officer would have put in a request for the $28 million and specified what exactly he would be spending the money on. Or are you coming here today to this Assembly and simply saying, "Yup, 28 million bucks. Let's go with it"? I mean, what details are there? What is this going to be spent on? I don't think taxpayers would understand saying that, you know, the Chief Electoral Officer is looking at doing some new stuff. I mean, what exactly is this $28 million going to be spent on?

Mr. Campbell: Well, again, Madam Chair, as I said, the budget will come out on March 26. The details of the budget will be discussed after that date. I'm not at liberty to discuss those details right now. I suggest if the member has questions of the electoral officer that he go talk to the electoral officer.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Well, thank you. I guess, presumably, the government, who is requesting $28 million, would either know what the $28 million is going to be spent on or the Chief Electoral Officer would have told them what the money is going to be spent on. But apparently this is some state secret. The minister doesn't know. The Chief Electoral Officer, according to him, hasn't requested the funds. So it's a little bizarre here that we're going to be debating numbers, we're supposed to have a debate in the Assembly, and we have a minister that doesn't know how this money is going to be spent. I mean, I think it's important when you're talking about millions and millions of dollars that you come here prepared to say, you know, what exactly this money is going to be spent on. Just spell it out for us here.

Mr. Campbell: Madam Chair, I suggest the member clean the wax out of his ears. I've already said that the electoral officer went to Legislative Offices and made the request for the funding. That is all in Hansard. If the member has any other questions for the electoral officer, I suggest he either goes and talks to Leg. Offices or he goes and talks to the electoral officer, and he'll get the answers he needs. I'm not at liberty to talk about the budget until it's tabled on March 26.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. I guess you're at liberty to tell us what these numbers represent. I mean, is it not your role to come here to the Legislature and know roughly where the $28 million is going to be spent? Or do you not have that off the top of your head? I mean, it's a large amount of money.

I'll just move on though, Madam Chair. It appears that the minister does not know where this money is going to be spent other than that it's in Hansard somewhere apparently.

I'll move on, Madam Chair, with just a question regarding the $20 million for the Legislative Assembly Office. I'm just wondering if the minister can provide a breakdown of what that money is going towards, whether it's the cost of moving into the new office building.

Mr. Campbell: Well, again, Madam Chair, the support to the Legislative Assembly would have gone in front of Members' Services. They would have brought their request forward. I can tell you that the support to the legislative offices of $20 million is to pay wages, salaries. I mean, we have leg. assistants that we have to continue to pay. We have staff to pay.

You know, the reason we bring interim supply, in fact, is that as of April 1 we have to make sure we have money to run the government until the budget is passed. It's that simple.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chairman. Just a simple question: what's the rough breakdown between operational, capital, and financial expenses in the $20 million?

Mr. Campbell: Again, Madam Chair, the Legislative Assembly doesn't answer to me; the Legislative Assembly answers to Members' Services. The Speaker would have brought forward his budget request to Members' Services, they would have debated that, they would have said yea or nay to it, and that's what we have in front of us.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. My next question is on the $256 million in financial transactions. I'm just wondering whether or not the minister can elaborate on what that means and what that represents.

Mr. Campbell: Again, Madam Chair, I can't make this any clearer to the member. This is interim supply monies to run the government from April 1 until the budget is passed. Until the budget is tabled, I'm not at liberty to talk about what the amounts are or what the amounts are to be used for. On March 26 we will table a budget. All of these figures will be in that budget. The members from the opposition will have to sit down with each minister and talk to that minister about their department and about their spending.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I guess my point is that, yes, these dollars represent the time period from April 1 until the budget is passed. The budget is going to be put forward on March 26. It will be passed in – you know, we can all guess how long it would take to pass a budget. What in that time period of four or five weeks could happen where the Chief Electoral Officer would need to spend $28 million? I wonder what that is. I'm just wondering if the minister can confirm here today that during that time period the $28 million would be for an election. What else could it be for, Minister? What would the Chief Electoral Officer need $28 million for in that short time period between April 1 and how long it would take to pass the budget? What would he need that money for, Minister?

Mr. Campbell: Madam Chair, I don't know if I'm in the twilight zone or if it's Groundhog Day. I made it very clear that we have legislation that says that we have an event that will happen between March and May of 2016. The electoral officer comes to us and asks us for his funding because he has to get ready for it. This isn't something that you just snap your fingers and all of a sudden the electoral officer is ready to go. We know that the population of the province is growing, so that means there are going to be more ballot boxes. There are going to be more people involved in the process. As I said, when the electoral officer was at Leg. Offices, he talked about going electronic, so that has to be looked at and the cost, and money has to be spent on that. That's what the $28 million is for.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. As mentioned by the minister, the election has to be sometime between April 2016 and June 2016.

Mr. Campbell: March and May.

Mr. Saskiw: March and May of 2016. What we're talking about is funding between April 1, 2015, and May or June of 2015. The election is deemed to be in 2016, and we're talking about monies in 2015. If the election is going to be held in 2016, why would he need $28 million in the year 2015?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

3:40

Mr. Campbell: Well, Madam Chair, as I've said, this doesn't happen at the flick of a switch, and our budget runs from April 1, 2015, to April 1, 2016. Any prudent budget person would make sure that there's money available to do the job that has to be done in the time frame as we've done with all of the departments and as we've done with all of the officers of the Legislature. We're prepared to help the electoral officer out so that he can do his job properly.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's interesting that you can say that with a straight face. The question here, I guess, is on the $28 million that he's requesting for this time period of April 2015 to roughly the end of May. In his experience has a Chief Electoral Officer ever had the upfront cost of $28 million a year before the election? Is that typically the case? You know, let's spend $28 million a year before the election. Or would most of those costs happen relatively prior to an election? I guess that's my question. Is the Chief Electoral Officer – are you saying that he came to this Assembly and said, "I need $28 million a year before a scheduled election"?"

Mr. Campbell: Well, first of all, Madam Chair, the electoral officer doesn't come to the Assembly; the electoral officer goes to Leg. Offices. Again, I think the hon. member is a member of Leg. Offices, and I think that he should review the notes that were done there, and he'll understand the process.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.
The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think what we'll do as the Official Opposition is to write a letter to the Chief Electoral Officer and simply ask him whether or not he requested from this government $28 million a year before the projected election. I think he's going to come back here and say that that's not the case, and if that's not the case, then the hon. minister will have misled the Assembly here today. I think there's no way the Chief Electoral Officer asked for $28 million in this time period. It's impossible. It hasn't happened. It's fiction. I was on the committee that hired the Chief Electoral Officer. He was talking about electronic voting and all that stuff. It does not cost $28 million. And he would not implement it a year before an election.

What I would suggest is that a $28 million expense would be the cost of an entire election, which he would not need a year before that election. So I just question it. I'd just ask the minister very clearly this question. Did the Chief Electoral Officer ask for the $28 million during the period of April 1 and the passing of the budget? Because if he hasn't, he has misled the House.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Campbell: Well, Madam Chair, the only person misleading the House is the opposition. I've been very careful in my comments, and I've said very carefully that the Chief Electoral Officer went to Legislative Offices and asked, and it was $28 million to run an election. I've said that that process has to happen between March and May of 2016. I've also said that we will put in our budget the $28 million. The electoral officer knows that he has the money. He can start the plan for what he has to do moving forward. And that's only prudent financing on our part.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. I guess, you know, I think everybody in this room knows that because it's being requested in just that specific time period, from April 1 to about the middle of May – $28 million to be spent in that time period this year from April 1 to the middle of May – that there could only be one possible reason to spend that money, and it's an election. I think it would be interesting if the minister could actually just spell it out and say that there will be an election during that time period. It's interesting how he can say that that's not the reason for the money with a straight face. It's astonishing. It's a skill set.

I guess, Madam Chair, I'll continue onwards. The other questions that we had were with respect to whether or not the minister can with these dollar figures let us know in terms of, specifically, support for the Legislative Assembly and whether that breakdown is partially in capital, partially in operational, and whether any of that $20 million that's requested for that time period is for moving MLAs into the brand new MLA office building. Is any of that $20 million for that?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Madam Chair, I don't have that information right at hand, but I can get it for the member.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.
The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. Could I use some of my time at the end of the allocation?

The Deputy Chair: Yes, you can.

Mr. Saskiw: I'll cede the floor, then, to the other opposition party.

The Deputy Chair: Just a minute. I've got to get a ruling on exactly what you meant there because you had an hour slot between you and the minister, and you've used about 18 . . .

Mr. Saskiw: I'd like to add that on the end instead.

The Deputy Chair: I've been informed that if you want to give up your time to other opposition members, you can do that, but we'll continue with the rotation, so no guarantee that you'll get your 40 minutes back.

Mr. Saskiw: Sure. I'll keep going for a little bit here.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Continue, then, please.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm just going to continue on with breakdowns here. Just referring to the Executive Council expense of $6 million: can the minister provide the Assembly with a breakdown of whether that's operational or capital expenses and what the proportion is?

Mr. Campbell: Again, Madam Chair, this is money that the departments have brought forward. This is all money that will be debated during the budget. The breakdown will be there, where the member will see exactly what the monies are, what is operational, and what is capital.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: I've concluded. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The next opposition member, from the next party, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair. We have a new designation as the next party, which seems hopeful, looking towards the future somehow. Well, the next party has quite a number of questions, that hopefully will be dealt with expeditiously.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, I think, almost exhausted the most obvious question, which is the $28 million allocation to the Chief Electoral Officer. To that, I will quote, with apologies, Gertrude Stein, who said that a "rose is a rose is a rose." That an election is an election is an election really is what we are seeing here. We all kind of know that, but it would be nice if people could just say it out loud. I mean, the whole process of going through an election needs to have some certainty around dates because, in fact, people spend a lot of money on these elections, and the preparations are considerable. I think that for the sake of democracy, you know, this sort of game that the government is playing, while eminently readable, like the nose on their collective faces – the dates, I think, are a responsible thing to disclose to the public for the sake of planning and for good governance and democracy.

Anyway, with that in mind, I just want to go through a couple of ministries that I would like to have a question about. First, Culture and Tourism. I saw that in 2014-15 the total operational budget for Culture and Tourism was $157.5 million. Almost 46.6 per cent of that budget here is being spent in three months, the way I read it. I'm just curious to know what the money is being spent on there. Why is it such an increase? We should have maybe expected to plan for the budget so that it's comparable to the outlay or the budget expenditures from last year. It just seemed as though there was a big surge in the Culture and Tourism budget there towards the end that required this interim supply addition.

Okay. Maybe I can just start with that one.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Well, again, Madam Chair, you know, Culture and Tourism has put in their request for what they need for the first little part of the budget to make sure that our services are being provided. I would suggest, you know, that Culture and Tourism is one of the departments that looks after grants, and a lot of those grants come due and have to be paid out. I would suggest that some of those monies would be for year-end because I think that April 1 is actually the first-quarter end. I think that on March 31, actually, the cheques go out or something like that. So all that's got to be looked after, and then they run a regular business.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Certainly, I'll forward that to the culture minister as well just because it seemed to be more of an expenditure or an outlay than the budget from last year.

In regard to Energy we were just identifying a 2014-15 budget item. The ministry budgeted zero for financial transactions and then this year were putting in an interim supply for $33.6 million on this line item just in three months. I'm curious to know what that is. I really don't know, but if someone could point us in the right direction, that would be great. [interjections] What I'll do is that maybe I'll group a couple together, and then, you know, we can work through that way.

In regard to Environment and Sustainable Resource Development the capital investment for this department in the interim supply is $44.8 million, which, as far as we can see, represents three-quarters of all capital spending in the department for 2014-2015. I'm curious to know what explains this considerable increase in funding for capital projects in these first three months in Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. If I can put that one onto the record, please.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Campbell: Well, Madam Chair, under the Energy piece, on the financial transactions all I can say is that some of that money would probably be for buying leases back. When you look at the lower Athabasca plan, in the areas where we put in conservation areas, we have to buy back the leases from those companies, and that's not without payment. So I will suggest that some of that is that.

When I'm looking at Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, I would suggest that with the capital investment, the majority of that would be around flood mitigation. So you're looking at the work that's being done on Springbank, the Ghost River reservoir, the Highwood and the work being done around the diversion down there, and then some of the flood mitigation that's being done around the province, the flood resilience program. Some of that money would be for that because some of those projects have been approved and are moving forward.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thanks for the answer. I appreciate that.

The next one I have is around Health. We're seeing a $19.3 million capital investment in the Health budget, and considering the global budget of $18 billion, I mean, we find this to be very low even by the standards of last year's budget. We know that we've identified through questions and through research – and health professionals have told us clearly – that the capital investment right across the province is inadequate, so we would expect there would be at least 25 per cent of the yearly funding for 2014-15. The funding in the interim supply gives 17 per cent for capital investment, so there's a proportional number, sort of a gap here, that I was just curious about. Again, it's reflecting what we see as a lack of investment in health infrastructure and a proportional lack of investment as reflected in this interim supply bill. I'm curious to know why that would be so.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Campbell: Well, again, Madam Chair, without getting into the real specifics, I can tell you that the capital investment in Health will be quite considerable. Again, this is a portion for the first part of the year that the minister has deemed he needs to get going on some of the projects, but I can say that you'll see that grow as the year continues.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Minister.

Madam Chair, my next questions are in regard to Infrastructure. In the 2014-15 general estimates the budget for capital spending was $1.143 billion, but the interim estimates only show $153 million, or 13.4 per cent of the budget for 2014-15, as being invested in these three months. Again, there's a gap here in proportionality. Considering the three-month period we are dealing with and the overall investment, is this indicative of a considerable reduction in investment in Alberta's infrastructure over this next fiscal year? Is it a precursor or a shadow of the cuts that we can expect? If not, I'm curious to know why so little money is being spent in these three months on capital projects when capital spending is up in so many other departments during these same months. Again, the proportional shortfall in the interim supply is causing me a concern around infrastructure investment. I'm curious if someone could illuminate me and the public on that issue here today.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Well, again, thank you, Madam Chair. Without getting into the specifics, I can say to the member that we added I think it was $6.9 billion, budgeted for 2014-15 for Infrastructure. I can say to you that you can add this on top of that. I will suggest that as the member stays tuned for the budget, he will see the full Infrastructure plan unrolled over the next five years, and I think he'll be quite happy with that.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair. My next question is in regard to Innovation and Advanced Education. The $815.7 million in expenses is, in our estimation, around 30 per cent of the operational costs of advanced education. But the quarter of the year that we are concerned with here involves two months in which universities and colleges are in their less busy summer months. My question is: why is almost a third of the annual spending required for a quarter, that's coming up, that is considerably less busy than other parts of the year?

As well, the $195.9 million in capital funding in Innovation and Advanced Education is almost the entire amount budgeted for capital projects for 2014-15. I'm just so curious: so much funding in the first quarter compared to the last fiscal year as well. It just seems to be again considerably out of whack with other spending considering the seasonal requirements of advanced educational institutions. I'm curious to know something about that.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Campbell: Well, again, Madam Chair, as the member is probably aware, we, through the government, actually fund a large part of the universities through our SUCH programming. What we're doing, basically, is playing catch-up. When universities and colleges spend their money, we at the end of the year have to make up that difference, so sometimes we have a little extra that we have to pay. We do that with municipalities and school boards, and actually Health comes out of the SUCH sector.

As far as the capital investment I can suggest that there are projects that are shovel-ready, and the minister would want to get those ongoing as we are entering, you know, the time to put the shovel in the ground and actually get some dirt moved.

The Deputy Chair: The Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Madam Chair. My next question is to the Justice and Solicitor General ministry, of which I see the hon. minister here, which is great. I think it's important for the ministers to actually be here because, I mean, we're talking about sometimes tens or hundreds of millions of dollars here. So I appreciate the Minister of Justice being here to perhaps entertain these questions.

In the 2014-15 general estimates there was $134 million to be spent on capital projects. These interim supply estimates have less capital spending than would be expected if this figure was to continue into the next year. Does that make sense?

So my questions are: why is there less than anticipated capital spending in the current estimates, $28.8 million rather than $33 million? Does that make sense? I'm just curious to know. Maybe it's due to the fact that there'll be less capital investment in the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General in the upcoming fiscal year. If so, where are we aiming in terms of cutting projects or finished projects that were undertaken last year if there were any?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Yes. I thank the Member for Edmonton-Calder for referencing that I'm here, because I am. He was talking specifically about capital. There is very little capital in Justice and Solicitor General. There hasn't been in the last couple of years. Typically, Madam Chair, what's happened is that we have a major project, which is the Alberta first responder radio communications system, otherwise known as AFRRCs, and that is going to continue over a longer period of time. I don't think I'm divulging any state secret by talking about how we will continue with this particular project. I do not anticipate any other capital projects in the next year, but it's always been our commitment to get these towers up and get AFRRCs going.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Minister, and thank you, Madam Chair. I'll carry on with my questions. Yeah. I'm curious about this Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. Glad to see the minister of environment is here to ask about the interim supply for his ministry of $44.8 million. It seems like three-quarters of all the capital investment for 2014-2015. I'm just curious to know why we have this explosion of funding for capital projects in the first three months directed to the environment minister. I'd be curious to know what he had to say about that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Fawcett: Yes. I'm just looking at what the hon. member is referring to. Just give me one second. Oh, there we go. You're looking at the capital.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah, capital. That's right: $44.8 million.

Mr. Fawcett: Yeah. I think what's highlighted there – a lot of the capital that our department is expending is on the flood mitigation side. There is a lot of work that has been done. If you particularly look at the windows to get flood mitigation done in time, you're looking at very early on in the fiscal year, so that's why you would see a disproportionate amount in the first quarter.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

The Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. That's eminently reasonable, of course, the seasonal.

I'm curious to know, then, in regard to – I know this golf course has been a big ball that's been batted around here in the last couple of days, so is there flood mitigation from this capital investment going up into the upper Kananaskis, in the region of the 36-hole Kananaskis golf course? Is any mitigation going on there to your knowledge?

Mr. Fawcett: Yes. There will be flood mitigation improvements made as part of the rebuilding of the course to ensure that there is a level of protection to protect the money, both federal and provincial, that's going into the rebuilding of the golf course.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks a lot. That's awesome.

My next question is in regard to Municipal Affairs. I see a considerable sum, $1.19 billion, in expenses for Municipal Affairs. I'm just curious to know if that includes the increased promises for the MSI funding that we've seen announced recently. I don't know if there's someone over there that can try that one.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and nice green that you have on today.

My understanding is that it does, but it goes only for the period in which this would cover. However, I will undertake to contact the Minister of Municipal Affairs for you, and we will get some further particulars for you.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. That's great. Thank you so much.

My next question is in the Department of Transportation. In the 2014-2015 estimates the $1.8 billion throughout the whole year was meant to be invested in capital. In the interim supply estimates, that we see here before us, that we're debating, $730 million is to be spent within a short period that we're debating here today. So I am finding that to be a very significant investment during a relatively short period of time, and I just would like some, perhaps, information. I think all Albertans would like to know why we would be spending, you know, more than half of the whole year's estimates on capital on Transportation in a three-month period.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Madam Chair, I'm a little confused because we're not suppose to be debating the budget till next week, when it's presented, but I know where this money is being spent, mostly because there's one large payment there if we have to purchase that land for the Calgary ring road to the Tsuu T'ina Nation, and it's there. Hopefully, the feds will transfer that land in June. But I'm not sure if we're supposed to be talking about all of these details and debating the budget right now. So I know where the money is going, and I'll leave it at that for now.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. I mean, when we do interim debates, I am going to ask where the money is going, for sure, right? That's a very important development for not just the city of Calgary but for the whole region.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. That's your 20 minutes.

Mr. Eggen: What?

The Deputy Chair: Yes, it is.

So we're moving on to the next 20 minute segment. It looks like we're moving on to the private members of the government caucus. Are there any members?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: The question is being called. Are there any other members who have any other questions?

Seeing none. . .

Mr. Eggen: Sorry. The rotation, just for clarification, Madam Chair, goes: government, then anybody else. I'm not quite finished all my questions yet. [interjections] What? Sure I can. Now I know what Grant Notley felt like.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you do have five minutes.

Mr. Eggen: Oh, there you go. Perfect. Yeah, I just have five minutes more of questions anyway, so it's perfect.

Okay. So I've got a question in regard to Treasury Board and Finance. For 2014-15 the general estimates state that $15.2 million was expected to be spent on financial transactions. In the interim supply estimates it estimates $256 million is to be spent on financial transactions. I'm just so curious to know what that is being used for, these financial transactions, and why would they increase not just dramatically but, you know, I would say exponentially from the 2014 fiscal year, please.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Fawcett: Sure. Just to get clarification from the hon. member, the first number that you're referencing was from the, I guess, current year budget?

Mr. Eggen: Yeah, that's right.

Mr. Fawcett: Okay. You know, I'm not sure what that is, and I can ask the Minister of Finance to get back to you on that.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you very much. I mean, again, this whole issue around interim supply is something that we need every year, I suppose, in some way. But the scale and the scope of interim supply this year has been exacerbated considerably by this fog of election time, right? So we would be dealing with far fewer numbers here and, really, probably better accounting for each of the budgets and how they make it into the financial year, and interim financing would be much more modest and much more rational if we weren't dealing with this sort of looming fog of an election.

I think that the idea of having an election season, at the very least, really does end up being a much more prudent way for us to spend money in the areas that we are responsible for but also for Albertans to see how that money is being spent. To have giant interim supply bills, I think, speaks to another layer of confusion for how Albertans can see how we are spending these public funds, which are becoming more scarce all the time. If we just could, you know, have a sense of when an election is going to take place, then it's much easier for each ministry to plan, and it's much easier for the public to see what's going on, and we would all be better for that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak?

Seeing none, then I shall put the following questions.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 18, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Holy Creator, we seek Your guidance in helping us to fulfill the responsibilities that come with public office. Help us to make the best decisions possible, that those decisions in turn may help those whom we are pledged to serve in this Assembly. Amen.
Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: We have some visitors who will be introduced shortly, but in the meantime shall we proceed with school groups first? Let us do that, then.

Let us begin with Sherwood Park, followed by Red Deer-North.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the pleasure of introducing to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the students, teachers, and parent volunteers from Woodbridge Farms elementary school. Actually, there are 52 of them, in fact. The teachers are Ms Antonia Triska, Mrs. Carey Cummings, Mr. Tyson Parker, and the parent helpers are Mr. Randy Rosen, Mrs. Karen Dunham, and Mrs. Yvonne Thomas. Located in my constituency of Sherwood Park, Woodbridge Farms is a co-operative community of learners wholeheartedly dedicated to the success of every one of their over 400 students. I would ask that the Woodbridge Farms school group now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Premier has some special visitors.

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a friend and passionate Canadian, the Hon. Bob McLeod, the Premier of the Northwest Territories; in addition, an old friend, the Hon. Michael Miltenberger, who is the Northwest Territories' Minister of Environment and Natural Resources; in addition, Mr. Gary Bohnet, the principal secretary and executive officer of the Territories; and Martin Goldney, who is the Territories' Deputy Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Intergovernmental Relations.

Premier McLeod and Minister Miltenberger are in our capital city to sign an agreement between Alberta and the Northwest Territories that relates to bilateral water management. The agreement really highlights our commitment to work together to manage our water and our aquatic resources, particularly in the Mackenzie River basin. As we all know and as we've discussed in this Chamber, water is a vital resource, and this agreement will ensure that our governments continue to collaborate to develop water management plans that benefit both our communities and the integrity of our diverse and valuable ecosystems. Alberta and the Northwest Territories have a long history. In fact, there was a time when we were part of the Northwest Territories, Mr. Speaker, as you well know.

On behalf of everyone in the Chamber I would like to say welcome to our esteemed guests, and I would ask the people to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome to all of you.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us proceed with Red Deer-North. You have a school group to introduce?

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 58 students from Gateway Christian school in my constituency of Red Deer-North. These students are among the brightest and the best that Alberta has to offer, and I know that our future is in good hands. They're accompanied by – you can tell they're well loved; they're well supervised – three teachers and their 11 parent helpers. The teachers are Miss Shelley Wiebe, Mrs. de Koning, and Mr. Kooman, and the parent helpers are Mrs. Noble, Mrs. Winczura, Mrs. Trost, Mrs. Demers, Mrs. Karri-Anne Brewster, Mr. Reza Torabi – sorry about the mispronunciation – Mrs. Karen Mullin, Mr. Dean Stutheit, Mr. Christopher Mah, Mrs. Krystal Kromm, and Mr. Jon Wieler. They are seated in the public gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school or education groups?

Seeing none, let us move on to Edmonton-Decore, followed by the Minister of Health.

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, it's my honour and privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly guests from the Turkish-Canadian Society board of trustees, the Edmonton ANZAC Committee, and the military, who are attending today in remembrance of this year's historic 100th anniversary of the Battle of Gallipoli, to be commemorated on April 25, 2015. The Gallipoli Campaign took place on the Gallipoli peninsula in the Ottoman Empire, known today as Turkey. The commemorations to be held recognize the bravery, courage, huge loss of life, and sacrifices made by the Allied forces and the Australian and New Zealand Army Corps, ANZAC.

Mr. Speaker, my guests are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and remain standing as I mention their names: Ms Dilara Yegani, chair, board of trustees, Turkish-Canadian Society, whose grandfathers fought in the Battle of Gallipoli and the Turkish independence war; Mrs. Sinem Senol, vice-chair, board of trustees, Turkish-Canadian Society; Mrs. Donna Mae Lewis, secretary, board of trustees, Turkish-Canadian Society; Dr. Hakan Ozdemir, treasurer, board of trustees, Turkish-Canadian Society; Mrs. Gigi Talibi, auditor, board of trustees, Turkish-Canadian Society; Mr. Bernhard Baker, chair, Edmonton ANZAC Committee, and former member of the New Zealand Defence Force; representing the commemoration of the ANZAC landings, Lieutenant Jason Pascoe, former member of the Australian army reserves and current serving reservist with the Loyal Edmonton Regiment, and Warrant Officer Matthew Parsons, former member of the New Zealand Defence Force and current serving member of Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry. I would now ask the Assembly to please join me in giving the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Minister of Health, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this entire Assembly two people here to mark national Dietitians Day. They are Karen Boyd, regional executive director, Alberta and the Northwest Territories, from Dietitians of Canada, and Doug Cook, registrar of the College of Dietitians of Alberta. March is also Nutrition Month, and these representatives as well as others spent the morning in the rotunda sharing their expertise and educating me and my fellow colleagues on the values that dietitians bring to our health care system. Please join me in recognizing them with the traditional welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my constituent Jan Buterman. Jan is a founding member of TESA, the Trans Equality Society of Alberta, and the current president. TESA's mission is to be a witness to and a voice for matters concerning trans Albertans. Jan is active on issues of equality and accessibility. I wanted to invite him here today to thank him for contributing to the debate on Bill 10, advocating for human rights protecting gender identity and gender expression, and rightfully pointing out that LGBTQ human rights are not only an issue of sexual orientation. I would encourage all members of the Assembly to visit TESA's website, tesaonline.org, to learn about the work that still needs to be done in Alberta for trans equality. I'd ask Jan to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so thrilled to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly four very dedicated and hard-working department staff here today from Municipal Affairs. These individuals I'm introducing represent our legislative projects unit, the MGA Review Team, legislative counsel, and the staff that have been working so very hard on Bill 20, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015. They are in the House today to watch debate on Bill 20 in second reading. I would ask that Brandy Cox, Melinda Steenbergen, Katie Nault, and Eric Martin rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly one gentleman seated in the members' gallery. He's a national political consultant with clients in seven provinces and at all levels of government, including many here in Alberta. After four years of working on Parliament Hill, he returned to the private sector to provide political consulting and voter contact services to elected officials, candidates, businesses, municipalities, and advocacy and professional organizations across Canada. This gentleman is the fine-dressed Mr. Jim Ross. I'd ask him to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: We have two minutes per person for these. Let us begin with Edmonton-Decore, followed by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Battle of Gallipoli Centenary

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, in 1915 the shores of Gallipoli in Turkey were the scene of one of the world's most infamous military disasters, a tragedy which epitomized the horrors of the First World War. The narrow Dardanelles Strait, a critical sea route from Europe to Russia controlled by Turkish guns and mines, needed to be secured by British and Allied forces. On March 18, 1915, the main attack by the Allied battleships tried to break through the strait but failed. At dawn on April 25, 1915, the British and the Australian and New Zealand corps, ANZAC, sent ground forces which landed on the shores of Gallipoli. Lack of sufficient intelligence and maps of the contoured terrain along with the trained Turkish soldiers defending the high ground with modern weapons like the machine gun hampered the success of their invasion. After eight months of bitter fighting and heavy battle casualties on both sides, including unsanitary conditions, the campaign ended in failure for the British and ANZAC forces. However, an Ottoman victory resulted, which renewed Turkey's vision for the modern Turkey under the leadership of Commander Atatürk.

The centenary of the Battle of Gallipoli will be remembered and commemorated today and on April 25, 2015, known as ANZAC Day. It is only right that Albertans be encouraged to pause and pay our respects to all the brave soldiers' sacrifice, including the regiment from Newfoundland – extraordinary heroism prevailed and the valour of not only those from the Australia and New Zealand Army Corps but all those who fought and died at the site of the Gallipoli conflict – and also to remember all those who have served and died in all wars, conflicts, and peacekeeping operations since that time.

Mr. Speaker, deepest gratitude to the families of the many descendants, who are vigilant to keep alive the memory of their loved ones as they did not return from the battlefield. Rest eternally in peace.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, followed by Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Government Policies

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's take a trip back to 2007. Spider-Man was number one at the box office, Steve Jobs introduced the iPhone, the U.S. housing bubble was set to burst, the Ottawa Senators were fighting for a chance at the Stanley Cup, and on Parliament Hill the federal Industry minister and now our Premier was waving the flag for Alberta's proposed royalty review. Alberta's new royalty regime had a superhero in this Premier. He cheered loudly about how the review strikes the right balance for Alberta and our oil industry. Despite dire warnings from industry the minister and now Premier gave this new royalty regime his unconditional support.

Now let's hop to 2010. Alberta's oil and gas industry is devastated by this foolish review, billions of dollars' worth of investment has picked up and walked away, the members opposite are taking down yet another one of their leaders, and a new political entity is born that stands firmly on the side of our energy industry.

I'm not sure why the Premier's memory is so bad. Either way, this Premier would be wise to remember that he was a critical piece in the creation of Alberta's royalty review. He wasn't the culprit, but he was an accomplice. I don't think his memory is improving either. Just months ago he said that he'd consolidate Alberta's budget. He didn't. He said that he'd balance the budget and keep new taxes off the table. Well? He said that he'd stick to Alberta's fixed-election law. Well, we know that's not going to happen. He's done everything in his power to wipe out democracy and decimate the opposition. We know this Premier has supported increasing royalties once. What makes us so sure he won't let it happen again?

One thing is for sure, Mr. Speaker. The Wildrose remains the one and only party standing between this Premier and his foolish plans to devastate this province one more time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Rural Health Services Review

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today the Minister of Health and I were very pleased to publicly release the final report of the rural health services review. So what's in the report, and more important, what's going to be done about it?

Well, just like every Albertan, rural Albertans expect and deserve high-quality, patient-centred health care. Patient-centred health care means that sometimes sick patients don't travel to healthy doctors; sometimes the healthy doctor travels to the sick patient. As rural Albertans constantly reminded us, the road goes both ways.

Now, the report also talks about the need for a team of health care professionals, not just doctors but nurses, physicians' assistants, nurse practitioners, midwives, pharmacists, dietitians, and paramedics. While we'll continue to need to attract foreign-trained medical and health care workers, we need to do more to grow our own, and it's time that we devoted the same time and effort identifying and nurturing the next generation of healers as we do hockey players.

Now, EMS remains a major concern, and I would like to acknowledge and thank my colleague the Member for Calgary-South East for his valuable counsel in this critical area. Ambulances need to be used for emergencies, not as taxis, and when a rural crew heads into the city, they need to discharge their patient quickly and head back home. Straight home.

We can and we will make better use of underutilized rural health infrastructure. Just ask the local community leaders and health care providers; they'll tell you how we can breathe life back into rooms that have stood empty and dark for too long. While we're at it, let's ask them for some input into health care planning.

Ultimately, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't have to cost more; it can cost less. But it's not about money; it's about care. In medicine you assess the patient, you come up with a diagnosis, and you institute treatment. The rural health review has done that. It is supported by the Premier and the minister. Let's roll up our sleeves and get to work.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That last statement would be a lot more compelling if it wasn't all focused on fixing the mistakes of this government.

Health Care Funding

Ms Notley: Now, recently the topic of health care continues to be a major issue for Albertans. We've learned that children and their families are showing up for surgeries at Stollery children's hospital only to discover that their surgery has been cancelled due to overcapacity. We've learned that hospitals in Calgary are so jam packed that they couldn't treat patients in need of dire care 66 times in November alone. We've learned that the government has no problem finding $2 million for a luxury golf course, yet they can't find $17,000 to bring elevators at the Sturgeon community hospital up to safety code or find $55,000 to buy a lightning rod that the Misericordia needed three years ago. They can't even find $200,000 that Royal Alex has needed since 2010 for a fire alarm upgrade. It sounds like the PCs need a little help getting their priorities straight.

Today we learned what everybody already knew: that rural Albertans don't have access to the care they need, that small towns across this province have lost their family doctors, that rural Albertans can't rely on EMS services when they need them. The PCs will tell us not to worry, that they've solved the problem once again – nothing to see here – just like they did last year and last decade and the decade before that. Yet the problems still seem to get worse, Mr. Speaker. The PCs have failed to manage Alberta's health care system in the good times. They've failed to invest in crumbling hospitals. They've failed to provide services. They couldn't even fix an elevator, for crying out loud. Now that the price of oil has dropped, now that budgets are tighter, does the Premier really expect Albertans to trust him to fix health care now?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Child and Youth Mental Health

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Calgary-Varsity we receive a lot of questions from people supporting a loved one who's suffering from mental illness. To deepen and widen our outreach on these queries, we hosted a town hall in our constituency last month, inviting a panel of local experts to guide us. Our constituency has been a long-standing champion for dementia care, a disease suffered primarily by seniors in our communities. Of course, dementia remains a priority, but what we realized through this recent outreach was the critical need for child, youth, and student mental health research.

Here are some of the facts. About 50 per cent of all lifetime cases of mental illness begin by age 14 and 90 per cent by the age of 25. Psychiatric illnesses – schizophrenia, bipolar disorder, depression, and anxiety – are the major chronic diseases of young people. Adolescents with psychiatric illness are at an enormously increased risk of suicide.

The province, our postsecondary institutions, and K to 12 educators have been collaborating to support youth and student mental health services and research, but the historical gap between the need for and the availability of both researchers and clinicians is great. This fact was reinforced this week in meetings with student leaders from CAUS and ASEC.

Research needs to be deepened and widened to all levels of investigation from understanding, for example, how cannabis use affects the brain, through the best strategies to identify youth who are becoming unwell, through health system research to make the services for youth more efficient. While there has been investment and action, many believe this commitment is not commensurate with the magnitude of the problem or with the long-term cost to society of not addressing the problems of mental health in our most valuable resource, Mr. Speaker, our youth.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, you are reminded you have 35 seconds to pose a question, 35 seconds to bring forward a response, and at that point I'll have to cut you off if you exceed that. I hope the clock is working today. We've had troubles with it for the past few days, but it should be okay today.

Let us start with the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Government Policies

Mrs. Forsyth: On a day many are calling Bloody Tuesday, about 500 people lost their jobs at Nexen and Talisman Energy. It's the worst possible news for those laid off and their families. I feel for them, Mr. Speaker, and we wish them all well. The question they now face is: how will they manage their family finances with massive tax increases looming on the horizon? Premier, raising taxes on these Albertans is not fair, it's not right, and it's not necessary. Why do you insist on doing that?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, the loss of any job is one too many, and we're all saddened by what we're seeing, particularly in the energy economy, with additional job losses announced today. This is something the government is very sensitive to. It speaks to why we need to manage our finances carefully as a province. It speaks to why we need to ensure that we diversify our economy. As a government we will continue to work with any Albertan that has lost their job, to try to get them back into meaningful employment using every method we can. This is of concern to the government and should be to all Albertans.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. It's clear that the government's priorities are completely out of whack. The CBE, U of A, and AHS have all given their former presidents half-a-million-dollar severances within the last year. On the same day that the Wildrose released information about severances at the AGLC, with one executive receiving a payout worth three times their annual salary, thousands of Albertans find themselves unemployed. Premier, you've refused to take action on severances at agencies, boards, and commissions. What are Albertans to think as they face unemployment and punishing tax hikes?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me that this member is receiving a $627,000 severance herself when she retires from this Chamber. Which way is up?

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Golf courses, golden handshakes, and corporate payouts: these are all PC priorities while Albertans are hurting. Massive severance payouts across hundreds of agencies, boards, and commissions; a bloated bureaucracy; and the most expensive government in Canada: these are the priorities this Premier wants Albertans to pay for with the largest tax increase in Alberta's history just when they're hurting most. Premier, nothing could hurt the economy more than more tax increases. Will you commit to fixing this mess in your own backyard without taxing Albertans?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, $627,000 is what this member is receiving as a severance when she retires from here. Perhaps, maybe, she'd like to elaborate on that.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition question. The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Provincial Elections

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier laughed off questions when asked if the government handing out $28 million to the Chief Electoral Officer meant that an early, unnecessary, and illegal election is on the horizon. Albertans are losing their jobs, worried about higher taxes and making ends meet. They didn't think that was funny. In the real world Albertans aren't talking about election games or asking their government to break their own law. Premier, can you just stop it with the political games and tell Albertans if you're breaking your own law, and if so, what is the election date?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the week ahead the Minister of Finance will rise in this Chamber, and he will introduce a budget that amounts not just to a budget for the next year but a 10-year fiscal plan for the government of Alberta. This responds to the circumstances that we face as a province. It will be fair. It will be balanced. It will be a measured response to what this province needs in the circumstances that we're in. No one in this Chamber is responsible for the collapse of oil prices and the government revenues, but this government will deal responsibly with these.

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Speaker, he didn't answer the question. That answer isn't credible. Albertans aren't stupid. They know that $30 million for the Chief Electoral Officer means an election is coming. Here are the facts. That money could help keep the largest tax increase in Alberta's history off our backs. It could help pay off the debt or support core government services. I'll ask again: Premier, are you breaking your own promise to keep Alberta's fixed election law? Can you stop the games and tell Albertans when the election date will be? Just answer the question, Premier.

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, there will of course be an election in due course, but the real question Albertans have relates to the policies of the member opposite and his party, policies such as blocking and stopping the Keystone pipeline, commencing a royalty review, and, most recently, a suggestion that they will, in order to generate revenue for the government, issue some sort of funny bonds that don't have to be repaid. These are the kinds of economic policies that Albertans can expect from the opposition.

Mr. Saskiw: Point of order.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Opposition House Leader, your point of order has been noted at 1:57 during this last exchange. Let's go on to the last supplemental.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I realize that the Premier, when he was running for the leadership of the PC Party, promised free tuition for everyone. There are all sorts of promises that he's made. There's no question there's a cost to democracy, but there's a cost to breaking the law and not keeping your promises. Fixed election laws are designed to be a contract between voters and their government. The PC MLA for Highwood once said that we need fixed election dates so that elections are, and I quote, not held at the convenience of the governing party. End quote. Premier, do you agree with your colleague? If not, can you tell Albertans what the election date will be? Which one is it?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We dealt with this in estimates yesterday. I think if you turn to Hansard, which is dated Friday, December 5, 2014, in which the Chief Electoral Officer approached Legislative Offices about his increases for the next fiscal year, he talked about needing new electoral boundaries, he talked about having to put more balloting in place, he talked about the fact that he wanted to look at electronic voting, and he talked about the investigations he has going on. If you look back in the history of this province, it's always been the emphasis of Legislative Offices to look at what the electoral officer has asked for two years in advance.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Investigation into Release of Information

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year the PC government was rocked by allegations that a cabinet minister leaked a $20,000 phone bill from the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, who was then running against the current Premier for the PC leadership. To make matters worse, a citizen's privacy was allegedly violated through the fraudulent use of his name to send that leaked phone bill to the media. The Premier at the time was so outraged that he ordered an internal investigation into this very serious matter six months ago. Can the Premier update the Assembly on the status of this internal investigation?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This matter is very serious, and we take it very seriously. As a matter of fact, the office of the Privacy Commissioner has taken over the investigation. As we know, the office operates independently and will conduct its own investigation, and I'm looking forward to seeing what the results will be when she's finished her investigation.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary Police Service also began its own criminal investigation into alleged violations of the Criminal Code for fraudulent impersonation of a Calgarian's identity in order to leak the phone bill to the media on the day of the PC leadership debate. Shortly after the PC leadership race ended and before any results were made public, the Calgary Police Service shut down the investigation. Another question to the Premier: did the Premier or any member of his government have any discussion with the police about this investigation, and can he tell us why it suddenly went cold?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Matters dealing with law enforcement, of course, operate fully independently of government. I would suggest that this member, if he has any further questions, contact the appropriate law enforcement authorities.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, last year the Premier showed he is capable of striking secret deals with his opponents when he convinced the former Leader of the Official Opposition to cross the floor. We've learned his preference is to bring potential political issues into his caucus and out of the public eye. Can the Premier assure Albertans that there was no deal with anyone at Calgary Police Service to make this investigation go away?

Mr. Denis: Again, Mr. Speaker, the same answer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, leader of the ND opposition.

Rural Health Care

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three years ago the Health Quality Council of Alberta reported that constant reorganization of our health care system causes chaos for patients and front-line workers and recommended stability. Hmm. We've had boards, then we had regions, then we had bigger regions, then we had one big region, then we had a central board, then they fired the board, then they had a deputy minister, then a CEO, and now they're hiring the board again, and now they're redecentralizing the government's centralized health care system. My question is to the Premier. Why should anyone trust your government on yet another health care reorganization?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. All we're doing is setting up an organizational structure to allow Alberta Health Services to operate more effectively. This is not as much a reorganization as an operating model which will allow them to operate more effectively, deliver services to rural areas in a more efficient manner, and deal better with the residents of our province.

Ms Notley: Sounds to me like a redisorganization, Mr. Speaker.

Today's report on rural health care makes it clear that health care in rural areas isn't serving the interests of Albertans. It's unacceptable for people to have to drive 600 kilometres for a five-minute consultation. It's unacceptable that people are dying because dialysis is too far away. It's unacceptable that rural communities are losing people and business because they can't keep a family doctor. Again to the Premier: will you admit that your government's original centralization was and is an abject failure for the people of this province?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to say that in this country many jurisdictions are looking to go to a centralized health care system, but centralization doesn't mean just one particular entity; it means finding a best operating model, which is what we're putting in place. We're trying to make sure we relate to our communities to give them the kinds of health services they all desire, and that's what we'll be doing.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, this report outlines hardship and dangerously low or completely absent basic health care services outside of Edmonton and Calgary. Whether it's obstetric care, mental health, dialysis, seniors' care, in almost every way this government has let down rural Alberta. The problem is this: almost every meaningful recommendation in that report costs more money. So how can Albertans trust this government to provide safe health care in a time of fiscal restraint when they neglected and abandoned rural Alberta health care when times were good?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We believe a new, more decentralized system will allow it to be a better system, less costly, with greater care. We think the new system we're putting in place will give Albertans a better opportunity to have access to care, and we'll continue to do that.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Greenhouse Gas Emission Reduction

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The majority of scientists around the world are in broad agreement about the occurrences, causes, and consequences of climate change. Supposedly AEMERA, Alberta's environmental monitoring service, is created on this foundation of broad scientific agreement, yet on Monday the Minister of Finance stood in this Assembly and defended the burning of coal and justified greenhouse gas emissions. To the Premier: do you accept the scientific majority findings that the release of carbon dioxide into the atmosphere poses the greatest risk of irreversible climate change?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We take climate change very seriously in this province, and the work that is done by AEMERA, with the arm's-length agency, is very important work for us, and that is why we implemented that arm's-length environmental monitoring agency. I can tell you that we've worked with the federal government on our coal regulations, and as we work to phase out the coal regulations and bring more cleaner energy into the province, that's very important. The minister spoke about that, and he spoke about the phase-out of coal.

Mr. Anglin: Yeah. But you took 11 climate change deniers. I needed to know.

Given that this government claimed credit for reducing greenhouse gases by 146,000 tonnes from a Bonavista gas plant in 2012 and given that this same gas plant's records reveal that it only produces 50,000 tonnes of greenhouse gases annually, how can this government claim to save 146,000 tonnes when there are only 50,000 tonnes to begin with? Is somebody falsifying documents?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a great deal of examples on the climate change file where we've met our commitments. We set targets in 2010, and we've met those. We're working on our renewed climate change strategy, and we will make sure that we have that shortly. This government, this Premier take very deep concerns with regard to the work we're doing with climate change, and we will continue to move that file forward.

Mr. Anglin: Boy, do we gotta get back to basic math.

Given the reputable audit firm of KPMG has failed greenhouse gas reduction projects because there is no verifiable proof of any reduction and given the Minister of ESRD has overruled more than one KPMG audit without explanation and taken credit for reductions, how can the international markets have any confidence in Alberta's carbon offset system when it appears that the ministry is just fabricating our greenhouse gas reduction numbers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have 34 offset protocols with ESRD with the climate change strategy. We're seeing reductions on the targets that we set. We're meeting those reductions. We have a number of ways that you can pay into a fund. You can use offset credits. This government is working very hard on the climate change file, and we will continue to move that file forward.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's curtail our preambles from this point onward when it comes to supplementary questions. Let's start with Calgary-Mountain View, and then Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner also launched her own investigation into Service Alberta about how the release of the $20,000 phone bill of the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs may have violated the FOIP Act. Conveniently, the minister who was then responsible for Service Alberta was also the Premier's leadership co-chair. He was also the person the media reported was allegedly involved in shopping the same phone bill to opposition parties. To the Minister of Service Alberta: can the minister update the Assembly on the status of the Privacy Commissioner's investigation into his ministry?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for the question. The office of the Privacy Commissioner is an independent office. They are currently investigating this case. I've spoken with the commissioner and given her the assurance that she has our full co-operation in this case.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, to the Minister of Infrastructure. Can he tell us if he's had any discussion with the Privacy Commissioner about this investigation, or has this case gone cold, too?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's an independent officer of the Legislative Assembly. I would suggest that members opposite and all members in this House respect the autonomy of institutions like independent officers of the Legislative Assembly, institutions like our police services, respect their autonomy, allow them to do their job. That's what we believe in here, the rule of law.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I think there's a real danger here that Albertans won't get to see the results of any of these investigations before the next election. Will the Minister of Service Alberta commit to a public disclosure of all information about this investigation before the election?

Mr. Khan: Again, I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question. I'll remind the hon. member that the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner is an independent office. I believe it would be inappropriate for me to influence the investigation. We'll co-operate, as I said, with the investigation, but the timeline is in her hands.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Rural Health Services Review

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the rural health report was released, and I'm so happy to hear that the recommendations will improve health care in rural Alberta. The report contains recommendations that Alberta Health Services be split into eight to 10 organizational districts. Although these districts seem like a good idea, I have some concerns with their implementation. To the Minister of Health: with the recommendations of implementing new organizational districts, is the Minister of Health admitting that the centralization of health services in Alberta isn't working and that we are returning to regions?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, and thanks for the question. Absolutely not. We are keeping a centralized system, but the operating model of that will be the nine districts, eight districts, 10 districts as they go through the system of evaluating what we need to do. I can assure the member that we'll be able to do more and better service at the local level under the system. Alberta Health Services is committed to making sure this works and delegating the kind of authority to the districts to make the system very effective.

Mrs. Leskiw: Given that we have gone through organizational changes in the past, can the Minister of Health confirm that these districts will have real authority, or is it just another letterhead exercise?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Whoa, letterhead exercise. Anyway, yes. Alberta Health Services will be delegating budgets. They'll be setting up facilities' plans. They'll be having the patient-first model. They'll be setting up their advisory councils. This will all be done at the district level under the supervision of Alberta Health Services. This will be meaningful delivery of service, and responsibility and accountability by these districts for this service will be done in a very efficient manner.

Mrs. Leskiw: Given that, ultimately, this review needs to benefit Albertans, how can the minister be sure that the recommendation in this report will actually have a positive impact on patient care?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we're taking steps. We're putting new operating districts in place, the new EMS delivery model system, new local advisory committees, limiting the time that EMS vehicles can spend when they're in urban areas, and enhancing mental health services by expanding telephone programs. I can assure the member that we will be more effectively delivering health care in rural Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by Little-Bow.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the last set of questions, by the way. Ever since this PC government tried centralizing health care seven years ago, our rural health care system has been struggling to provide timely, quality care for Albertans, as we've known. Now this government is finally recommending 10 operational districts to improve regional access. So to the minister: that being the case, how exactly and precisely with today's announcement will you change the authority and centralization of powers that still exist in AHS?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we've said before, this will be a delegation of authority to these districts as an operating model. They will be able to implement different programs. They will set up facility programs, modelling for their advisory councils, et cetera. This will be a very effective model, which we believe will help encourage better health delivery in rural Alberta, and we hope to have it operational by July 1.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Well, thanks again, Mr. Speaker. To the minister. This rural health care review recommends relaunching AHS but this time with standards and expectations, I understand. I know the numbers are bad, but do standards and expectations really not exist under your government's current framework? Really? Precisely which ones are going to be addressed as the very first, immediate priorities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a delegation of authority. This is an operating model. Standards will be across the board the highest in Canada. Alberta Health Services will ensure that all Albertans will get the best health care possible in this country.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Well, thanks again, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister. With respect to rural EMS we've been raising these issues for two years to see meaningful changes in ambulances. Now that the government has again admitted that we need to address transportation issues in the ambulance system, how exactly and precisely are you going to implement changes, at what cost, and when exactly will we see these overdue nonemergency transfer units in place that I've been talking about for two years?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'll be putting in place protocols to make sure that ambulances coming out of rural Alberta that go into major urban centres with particular patients will be able to off-load their patients and then go back to their communities as soon as possible. We'll also be putting in place programs in which local areas can begin to move people through nonambulance facilities in order to make them move smoother, so not using up our paramedics and ambulances for that.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let us move on to Little Bow, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Rural Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For years rural Alberta has voiced their concern with ambulance services. Many Albertans feel centralized on the dispatch of the ambulance service to our local rural areas. The undue stress to our health care providers, our hospitals: our rural Albertans have had enough of it. With today's release of the rural health care report, I feel it's time to ask the minister some of the same questions that he's been asked already.

One of the issues facing emergency medical services is that ambulances are being used to shuttle nonemergency patients. How is the minister going to end this absurd practice from happening for the emergency personnel in emergency situations?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With this specific situation Alberta Health Services is increasing its ability to use nonambulance transfer vehicles such as wheelchair-equipped vans for basic transfers that don't require heavily trained paramedics, to help free up rural ambulances for emergency response. When the rural health group went out and talked to Albertans, they were concerned about their ability to control their ambulance service. We need to work with people in rural Alberta to make sure that they feel comfortable with what we're doing, and we will do that.

Mr. Donovan: To the same minister: given that we have a limited number of ambulances and staff and that their time is best spent responding and delivering patients to hospital yet they're stuck in emergency rooms for up to hours waiting for their patients to be admitted, how is this minister going to make sure emergency personnel are back in the field, where they belong?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'll be putting protocols in place to ensure that once an ambulance goes into an urban area, it must return as soon as possible to its home base. This will make sure that there's safety and security in the rural community.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. member has one final supplemental.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that rural ambulances belong in rural areas yet when they finish a call in major centres such as Edmonton, they're tasked to do shuttling services around the city instead of returning to their base, what is this minister doing to make sure that ambulances return to the communities where they're needed the most?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will put in place, again, a protocol to ensure that once the ambulances come into the cities, whether it's Edmonton or Calgary or Red Deer, they will have to return immediately to their communities. They will not be allowed to be reassigned to local duties. They have to be able to support their own communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Leduc-Beaumont.

Childhood Immunization

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Health can't seem to get his story straight. First he told the Assembly that he's not going to make vaccines in schools mandatory. Then he said that he needs to consult with someone about them somewhere at some time. The government also uses the excuse that mandatory vaccines infringe on the rights of parents and school boards. To the Minister of Health: are you saying no to mandatory vaccinations, or are you still consulting? Which is it?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, across our province we have a program in place to encourage families to vaccinate their children, and my personal belief is that people should vaccinate their children. We have not mandated that, and we will have to evaluate whether that should be done or not.

Dr. Swann: Given that almost every health expert, doctor, and even his own ministry agree that vaccines save lives, who exactly does the Minister of Health need to consult with before taking the necessary next steps to protect the health and safety of schoolchildren?

Mr. Mandel: Maybe Albertans, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member. Final supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that last week this government proved that parental and school board rights do not trump the safety and protection of our children – that's the GSA bill you just passed – does the Minister of Health not see that his own government has already debunked this consultation argument when it comes to GSAs? So why is he still using it? To protect the health and safety of children requires this in potentially life-threatening situations.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Yeah, Mr. Speaker, we've had information come in to us that there are jurisdictions that make it mandatory, but their coverage and their vaccination, immunization is much lower than ours. So there are different ways we can look at it and different ways in which we can ensure that our communities, our children are safe. It isn't as simple as the hon. member would like to think.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Food Processing Development Centre

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With an uncertain resource-based economy Alberta has been diversifying for decades and in 1984 opened the Food Processing Development Centre in my constituency of Leduc-Beaumont, the only facility of its kind in Canada. The food and beverage industry is now Alberta's largest secondary manufacturer, generating in excess of $10 billion in annual shipments. My question is to the newly minted associate minister of agriculture. For his maiden question: what is the government doing to support and leverage state-of-the-art facilities like the Food Processing Development Centre to help grow our economy?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. The development centre that we have in Leduc is an extremely exciting centre that does culinary work all over Alberta. In fact, six development associations have graduated already and invested $50 million in capital across Alberta.

2:20

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one final supplemental for that same minister. Mr. Minister, with the current revenue shortfalls are you planning any initiatives in the near term to use this facility to boost value-added opportunities for Alberta's agricultural sector and, by extension, contribute to Alberta's economic future?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, again. Well, obviously, this facility has been expanded twice already, in 2002 and again in 2007. It's already 140,000 square feet. We're always looking for opportunities, we're always looking for ideas, and we welcome all comers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Medicine Hat.

Deaths of Children in Care

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Friday the Premier said that the death of every child in care or receiving services is investigated. We know that that is simply not true. For example, a one-page coroner report with a signature is not a proper investigation into the death of a child. To the Minister of Human Services: will the minister admit that the Premier misspoke and that this PC government is in fact not investigating the deaths of all children in care?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The death of a child in care is one too many. Every critical incident, as I said the other day, or death is examined internally and externally depending on the situation, internally through the department as well as externally through the good work of the Child and Youth Advocate, the council of quality assurance, the Family Violence Death Review Committee, the medical examiner, and the fatality inquiry when necessary. [interjection]

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that a round-table concluded last January that investigations into children's deaths in care should be standardized and that more than a year later we still see no progress on this, to the Minister of Human Services again: why does this minister not take the obvious solution to this problem, which is to fund the office of the Child and Youth Advocate properly and allow them to investigate the deaths of children in care?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that the investigations the Child and Youth Advocate does with his staff – he does excellent work as well. He does have the capacity to do that and, of course, work with Human Services to make those investigations. [interjections] At the end of the day for me, if we lived in a perfect world, there'd be no children in care, no children hurt, no accidental deaths or medical deaths. It's up to the Ministry of Human Services to ensure those deaths are looked into, and we will continue to be transparent.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, do your best to yield the floor to whoever has been given it.

Let's hear your final question.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government has laid down so many layers of bureaucracy in Human Services that both the minister and the Premier can't even get their story straight on what constitutes an actual investigation into the death of a child, to the minister again: why doesn't this PC government stop the empty rhetoric, reverse their nonsensical cuts to the office of the Child and Youth Advocate, and let the professionals do the job of helping children at risk?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that the work of the oversight committee, led by Tim Richter, and the good work that he has done, including all the other work that goes on in Human Services – all of this work is continuing. All children who die in care will be investigated. Again, it goes back to: if we lived in a perfect world. We wish these things wouldn't happen, but they are going to happen. At Human Services we will continue to investigate and be transparent and open in that regard.

The Speaker: The hon. member for Medicine Hat, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Medicine Hat Addiction Treatment Facility

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my constituency the Medicine Hat detoxification and residential treatment centre is an innovative facility that is being built to serve all residents through southeastern Alberta. It is unlike any other detox centre available to these Albertans and will offer an aftercare program to each of its patients. My constituents have expressed concern that due to government budget pressures this facility may not open as scheduled. My question is for the Minister of Infrastructure. Given the current fiscal pressures can you confirm that this centre will be built as originally planned?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the member for the question. Addiction is a very serious issue in our society. I can confirm to the member that that is a project that is going ahead. The construction has actually commenced. It's a very important project for his particular region, and we intend to ensure that it is completed.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given every detox centre requires highly trained professionals in order to properly run their programs, does the Minister of Health plan on replacing the necessary qualified staff with less-experienced staff so that AHS doesn't have to pay them as much?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are no plans to reduce recovery services at the detox facility. The detox facility fills an important need in Medicine Hat, and its services are critical for helping people recover from drug and alcohol addictions. You know, staff continue to care for patients in a temporary eight-bed facility. We'll continue to do that after the 18-bed facility opens this year. Once the permanent facility opens, existing staff will move over, and we anticipate the number of staff will have to be increased as well with the increase in the size of the facility.

I'd also like to recognize the member for his community's great efforts on homelessness.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister, for recognizing their awesome work.

Again to the Minister of Health: in planning for this new, permanent facility, will there be any cuts to the original number of staff members with the aftercare program, which would undermine this innovative facility?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The temporary detox facility has six detox beds and two additional beds for people attending the day treatment program in Medicine Hat. The facility is currently staffed with two supervisors, six nursing staff, four addictions counsellors, eight client-care assistants, and one recreational therapist. Once a permanent recovery centre opens in Medicine Hat later this year, it will continue to offer the existing eight beds, and it will add 10 more beds for residential treatment. Again, we expect an increased number of staff working at the facility and existing staff to remain employed. Additional staff will be brought in to work in this facility. This is a very important addition to this community.

We thank the member for his question.

Early Childhood Development

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, late last year we learned that this PC government cancelled the five-year, $16 million early childhood mapping project, which provided vital data about the development of our children. The project's final report shows some stunning results. Less than half of the 70,000 kids included in the study are developing appropriately physically, mentally, emotionally, and socially. To the Minister of Human Services: how can Alberta have a bright future when your government is so clearly failing the children of this province?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The mandate that the Premier has given me focuses on early childhood development. The early childhood mapping project is incredibly important information. That's why it was continued until December 2015. It's important to note that the Minister of Education and the Minister of Health are currently working on this together, and we will continue to work in the area of early childhood development.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that the ECD mapping project helped to pinpoint the areas where Alberta's kids have the highest needs and given that these studies estimate that for every dollar spent on early childhood education and development programs, $8 is returned to individuals and to society later in life, will the Minister of Human Services commit to increasing investment in early childhood development, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad the hon. member agrees with me on how important early childhood development is in helping our children. We need to get to the root cause. We need to help children. We know that there's great work going on with the Norlien Foundation with brain development. My concern is getting at children from zero to 5, before they get to kindergarten, so we can help them get out of poverty, have proper nutrition, and give family supports when they're needed at home.

Mr. Bilous: My concern is your lack of answer.

Mr. Speaker, given that the ECD mapping project paints a particularly troubling picture for children who are in underprivileged socioeconomic environments and given that the childhood poverty rate has barely changed in the last 25 years in this province, with almost 150,000 kids living in poverty, to the same minister: why won't this government make good on the 2012 promise to end child poverty that you were elected on?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It might be perceived as a lack of a question.

I think it's important to note the good work of the seven cities across Alberta, the good work we're doing with Mayor Iveson on the task to end poverty, that I've been privileged to be able to be a part of. Ending poverty is a work for all of us. We also want to support families with the primary care networks, that are now open in the evenings so that families can get medical attention they need. There are a whole number of areas, including parent link centres, including all of the supports that we provide for families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Home-care Services

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I have been contacted by several constituents of my riding of Calgary-East who depend on assistance from home care and Alberta aids to daily living or self-managed care. However, they are concerned with the rising costs of their care and have heard that in Edmonton these services are fully funded. To the hon. Minister of Health: is there an explanation for these perceived funding differences between Edmonton and Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure you that funding levels are set in Edmonton and Calgary and all regions of the province. Putting clients first is always our priority. AADL is funded the same across the province, though the cost to individuals can vary depending on the individual's circumstances. For example, low-income Albertans and those receiving AISH or income support are not required to share the cost of equipment and supplies provided by AADL. There are some differences for home care and self-managed care between Edmonton and Calgary that AHS is working to standardize.

The Speaker: Supplemental.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: also, Mr. Minister, I have heard from constituents who suggest that the hourly wage for AHS health care workers is higher in Edmonton than in Calgary. Can you explain these perceived wage differences?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I again want to assure this member and his constituents that the rate paid by AHS for contracted home-care services is exactly the same in Edmonton and Calgary. AHS oversees contract providers to ensure that safe, quality health care is provided but does not determine wages for individual staff members. Alberta Health Services' home-care worker pay follows collective agreements, and the pay scales are identical in both cities. The way in which home-care clients are assessed in Edmonton and Calgary is very similar, though there are some differences that AHS is working to standardize.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also to the same minister: in regard to self-managed care funding, how are funding needs assessed by Alberta Health Services?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. AHS uses an internationally recognized assessment tool to develop an individualized care plan for clients accessing home-care programs, including self-managed care. This care plan helps AHS to determine the funding for all home-care clients, including those eligible for self-managed care. Self-managed care rates are comparable between both cities, with Edmonton's set only 3.5 per cent higher than Calgary's. This is an historical difference between the two cities and is a small difference when we look at the actual funding numbers. We understand that some families or individuals who depend on self-managed . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Mr. Minister.

Let's move on to Edmonton-Centre, followed by Lethbridge-West.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Liberal caucus has been meeting with postsecondary students, and they have confirmed our suspicions. Because of this government's chronic underfunding of our institutions, they've been forced to invent new ways to fund what the government doesn't, all this while Alberta has the lowest postsecondary participation rate in the country because we fund the lowest number of seats. Does the Premier believe that having the fewest postsecondary graduates in the country sets the province up for a knowledge-based economy?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that we, of course, need skilled workers in Alberta, and our government has no intention of slowing much-needed training, apprenticeship training in particular, in Alberta. We're just going to continue to ensure that we are providing the kinds of services to apprenticeship training applicants, providing our province with skilled workers. That's why we make every effort to ensure that opportunities are available at our technical training and postsecondary institutions to address the very issue the member opposite has just raised.

Ms Blakeman: The minister cannot seriously be trying to tell me that increasing and supporting opportunities for trades apprenticeship and skilled workers is answering my questions about postsecondary education that leads to a creative economy. Are you seriously expecting me to believe that?

Mr. Dirks: Goodness me, Mr. Speaker. If anybody thinks that apprentices are not important in our province and they don't contribute to a knowledge economy, I'm shocked. All postsecondary training is important in Alberta. University training, college training, apprenticeship training in our trades institutions: we support all of that. We believe that's very important to the future of our province. We want to see it continue.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you've sent in your point of order at 2:35, during that last exchange. It has been noted.

Ms Blakeman: You didn't answer my question, and you know it.

Back to the Premier again. Since costs to students in postsecondary keep increasing through new approvals for market modifiers and enabling random noninstructional fees, whatever those are, does the government recognize that the tuition cap is effectively gone? There's only one pocket, and it's the student's, and you keep taking out of it.

Mr. Dirks: I thank the member opposite for her question, Mr. Speaker. There are no imminent changes to tuition. Our goal isn't to have the cheapest education; it's to have the best education. Alberta provides one of the highest levels of support to postsecondary institutions. We obtain almost 50 per cent of operating revenue for these institutions from government funding. This is 5 per cent higher than the national average, 16 per cent higher than Ontario. Tuition from Alberta university students accounts for a lower proportion of operating revenues, 30 per cent, than other provinces such as Ontario and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's move on now to the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Seniors' Guaranteed Disposable Income

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are currently 11,000 Albertans who receive the Alberta seniors' benefit and live in publicly funded designated supportive living and long-term care residences. Last year this government made a commitment to those seniors to increase the guaranteed disposable income benefit to $315 a month. This means that low-income seniors living in care facilities are guaranteed $315 a month over the cost of housing, food, medical care, and other supplemented costs. I believe our seniors deserve nothing less. My question is to the Minister of Seniors. Has our government implemented the decision this body agreed upon to ensure that all seniors in care can keep $315 a month?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I thank the member for the question and thank him for the great work that he's done for seniors in his previous role as Minister of Municipal Affairs. I know he did a lot of work on this file in particular. In July 2014 the social housing accommodation regulation was amended to stipulate that all seniors lodge residents must be left with a minimal disposable income of $315. I can confirm for the member that we have followed through on this promise because we're committed to ensuring that seniors are supported appropriately.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: are there any circumstances in government-subsidized facilities where seniors will not be left with $315 a month?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, this benefit is designed to ensure that seniors lodge residents have a minimum monthly disposable income. There should not be any circumstances where seniors are left with smaller amounts. If there are cases where this requirement is not being followed, my department would be happy to look into those.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: can any of these facilities request that seniors sign waivers so that they are not left with the $315?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to confirm for the member that the Alberta Housing Act stipulates that each senior resident must be left with a monthly disposable income of at least $315. As such, any waivers requesting that seniors be left with a smaller amount would not be valid. The legislation would supersede any waivers that would be put in front of them. If there are any cases where this is happening, I'd like to know about it. As I said, my department will assist the housing management bodies and look into this if they're having any difficulty administering the program appropriately.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Serious allegations are swirling about the board of the Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council. The old minister appointed public members to this board. Dozens of Albertans applied, but two of the minister's old law school buddies and one long-time political volunteer made it through. To the minister: do you really think that filling it up with PC insiders is the way to make this board work?

Mr. Khan: I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question and for his efforts to increase the awareness of consumer protection that Service Alberta performs for Albertans every day. The AMVIC board is comprised of industry stakeholders, as he says. It's also comprised of public members. I think it's completely unfair that the hon. member is taking shots at good, hard-working Albertans . . .

Mr. Saskiw: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Khan: . . . who perform a good service for Albertans. I believe it's really unfair, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier committed to merit-based appointments on boards like this. He said, "Political party affiliation is not a relevant consideration." To the minister: what are you going to do about this board, that is filled with friends of the PCs and is damaging the trust and integrity of the motor vehicle industry?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I've met with the AMVIC board just recently. I want to assure this House that the board is filled with Albertans who are dedicating their time and their energy to performing this service on behalf of consumers and on behalf of the Department of Service Alberta. If this hon. member has a specific issue with a person, I think he should have the courage to mention that.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, it's not personal; it's about Albertans. Considering this minister refuses to release a report into what really happened at AMVIC, I'm left to wonder why the reasons for the delay relating to the relationships of board members. Will you do the right thing, quit the stalling, and release this overdue report immediately?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, the member across the aisle refers to a draft report of some issues that we've identified from Service Alberta, from the department, in our efforts to support AMVIC in doing their job, in performing consumer protection for Albertans. This is a draft review. We've talked to the board. We'd like to give the board an opportunity to respond to us. It is my intention to make that draft review public.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we do have another question here. Let's go to Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Energy Industry Update

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With this morning's announcement of oil at $42 a barrel and of the dollar slipping, I'm wondering if the Minister of Finance can answer: does this slip in the dollar and the slip in oil match our revenues, or are we going to be short again?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, we're down to $42.27 a barrel, and the Canadian dollar is down around 77 cents. While the low Canadian dollar helps us, it doesn't make up for the fact that oil is trading as low as it is. It is going to cause us some grief in our budget coming forward on March 26.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. VanderBurg: To the Minister of Energy: now, today with this announcement and the differential that we're having with the price of a barrel of oil, what are you expecting to do in the budget? Is this going to cause you some grief as well?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Minister of Finance pointed out, we're headed for challenging times indeed. At $42 oil we are seeing an additional discount against west Texas intermediate – that will be $12 or $13 today – and even west Texas intermediate is discounted off the world price. We are cushioned somewhat by the low dollar but not anywhere near sufficiently. Absolutely, we have challenging times ahead in all of our budgets.

Mr. VanderBurg: Access to tidewater has been an issue for all of us in Alberta and in our industry. Could the Minister of Energy tell us if we're any closer to getting a pipeline to the east coast, to the west coast, to the north coast, to the south coast? Where are we?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can tell the member that we're working very diligently on market access. It is the number one item in my mandate letter. He'll know, as all members do, what the situation is with the Keystone XL and the President's insistence on letting the process go all the way through. We are making great progress on Energy East in talks with Ontario and Quebec and in addressing their concerns there, and we are making progress on talks to access the west coast. It is my number one mandate item. I've got a lot of people working on it.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, what an interesting day: 112 questions and responses today. Congratulations. That was well done.

Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, your point of order at 2:39, during the exchange between the Minister of Service Alberta and the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, has been noted.

Thirty seconds from now we shall continue with the final member's statement, and we'll hear from Chestermere-Rocky View.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us hear a member's statement for two minutes from Chestermere-Rocky View.

Chestermere High School Basketball

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to applaud the unprecedented success achieved by the basketball teams at Chestermere high school in the riding of Chestermere-Rocky View. This has been a remarkable year of accomplishments. It really has, and I'll lay it out for you.

The school has four teams, junior boys and girls and senior boys and girls. All four of these teams going into the zone finals tournament ranked number 1 or number 2, the top of the heat, Mr. Speaker. After all was said and done, the junior girls won the zone tournament. There are no provincials for them. If there were, I'm sure they would chase that title down. The junior boys did lose a heartbreaker in the first game of their tournament, but they went on to rebound and win the consolation bracket.

The senior girls and senior boys both played in the zone finals; the boys taking gold, the girls taking silver. Both of these teams, though, are off to provincials this weekend. The boys will be in Fort McMurray. The girls will be playing in Taber. Now, the senior boys' team has been undefeated all year. In fact, Mr. Speaker, this streak extends back to November of 2013, made all the more impressive by the fact that their two star players were hurt for a third of the season, and they still succeeded.

All of these teams have demonstrated the tradition of success at Chestermere high school. Excellence is an expectation at this school. By setting the bar high and putting in the hard work, these four teams continue the tradition of success at Chestermere high. I wish both these teams the best of luck at provincials on the weekend, and I applaud their athletic director, Brian Utley, along with their coaches. There are four of them: Rob Wilson, Erhayat Ozcan, Dan Isbister, and Howie Leong. They have done a tremendous job with this group of kids.

To my colleagues in the Legislature as well I'd like to say: should your teams be playing the Chestermere Lakers at provincials or at any other time, buckle up your chinstraps because we're bringing our A game, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore. You have a petition?

Ms L. Johnson: Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to present a petition with over 1,100 signatures. This petition was organized by the Calgary Association of Parents and School Councils. The petitioners are urging the government to consider increased funding for public education.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. I understand you have a bill that wish to present. I invite you to do so.

Bill 208

Alberta Human Rights (Commission Accountability) Amendment Act, 2015

Mr. Saskiw: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great privilege to rise today and introduce my last bill as an MLA. As an opposition member this is the only way which I can introduce legislation that is important to my constituents, and it is an indictment of this PC government that they have limited debate in this House so much that it is unlikely this bill will even come close to second reading.

This bill, the Alberta Human Rights (Commission Accountability) Amendment Act, 2015, seeks to restore and protect the right to free speech that all Canadians enjoy. It seeks to hold the Human Rights Commission accountable and put an end to frivolous and vexatious claims that unfairly target people for their personal beliefs. For example, my constituents believe that their priests should be able to teach freely from the Bible in church on Sundays. They also believe that you are free not to go to church if you don't want to. My constituents believe that everyone has the right to be offended, to voice their opinion, to proudly share their values, and that they should have these rights without the fear of government prosecuting them.

We will never have a society that agrees on everything. This bill recognizes that we are not all going to agree all the time on every issue, and that's a good thing. This bill recognizes that we as Albertans should be able to have free, open, and fair debate in our communities without the fear of persecution or prosecution.

I urge all members to support this bill, and when I am no longer in this House, I urge all members to fight for the freedoms Albertans deserve: freedom of speech, freedom of religion, freedom of assembly, and freedom of conscience.

In closing, I would like to remind all members of our provincial motto, Strong and Free. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 208 read a first time]

2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the Government House Leader.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of an e-mail sent to me by a constituent to raise awareness for Worldwide EndoMarch 2015. March is Endometriosis Awareness Month. Endometriosis affects more patients than asthma, diabetes, and breast cancer combined. We are trying to raise awareness here with EndoMarch and trying to attain nonprofit status for this group and to raise money to assist women who are afflicted with this disease.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of a letter on an article which I referred to yesterday during debates as required. It is an article called Wildrose Leadership Candidates Face Off in Telephone Town Hall, March 16, by James Wood of the Calgary Herald. It refers to, among other things, someone who is standing for leadership of that caucus, Linda Osinchuk, who . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Denis: . . . would like to go forward with opposing the Keystone pipeline and also thinks that it's time that we look at the royalty formula. I'll table five copies with the page.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has raised a point of order at 2:51:30 in response to and during, I assume, the tabling that was being given by the Government House Leader. We'll hear about that shortly.

Let's move on to Edmonton-Centre on behalf of Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've had a number of these sent back, and I apologize. I haven't been tabling these very well on behalf of my colleague the leader of the third party opposition. So here we go.

These all pertain to the questions that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View was asking today. There are copies of articles by the Edmonton Sun. The Premier is concerned about the leak of one of our member's roaming bills. Also from the Edmonton Sun: Calgary police investigating impersonation following leaked Alberta Tory documents; Alberta PC leadership candidate for Castle Downs racked up bills over cabinet minister's personal dispute; former Service Alberta minister – I'm at a loss here; I'm sorry; that will get filled in; I don't want to say his name in the House – told opposition parties to FOIP the Member for Castle Downs' expenses; staff members say Alberta Liberal leader, the member for Meadowlark, questioned over Castle Downs' wireless leak; opposition want Alberta's Privacy Commissioner called in after the phone leak; Alberta's Privacy Commissioner looking into the leaked phone bill; and, Mr. Speaker, PCs facing questions of fairness after the previous chief of police for the city of Calgary is appointed as the Calgary-Cross nominee.

Did I get through that with all the right names? If you just give me one second, I'll get the name that I was missing. That would be the Minister of Infrastructure, the Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. You have a tabling?

Dr. Starke: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. It's my pleasure today to file the requisite number of copies of the final report of the rural health services review. This effort came about, really, as a result of a team effort, and I do need to thank a number of people. I'd like to, first of all, thank the Premier and the Health minister for giving me this task although there was the odd time where I wasn't quite so thankful. I'd also like to especially give thanks to the six committee members that I was blessed to work with. These are outstanding individuals, very, very dedicated in their own capacities both as nurses, doctors, and health care advocates for rural Alberta. As I said in my member's statement, I'd like to thank my colleague the Member for Calgary-South East. With his experience as a paramedic the advice he gave me on the EMS section of this was invaluable. I'd especially like to thank all rural Albertans that came and met with the committee. Their passion and their caring for the community was palpable, and we appreciated it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Let us move on to points of order. I believe we have four points of order or clarification, whatever the case might be today. Let us begin.

There was a point of order raised at approximately 1:57 during the exchange between Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills and one of the ministers. Let's hear the point of order, please, Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Point of Order

Referring to Party Matters

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise according to Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), and it was with respect to a comment made by the Premier regarding royalty review changes and so forth. It provides the opportunity, I think, most of all, to provide a clarification. I guess I should go back to an article that was written on October 30, 2007, which states that the federal Industry minister, the current Premier, "threw [his] support behind Alberta's controversial new oil royalty regime Tuesday, giving Premier Ed Stelmach a much-needed political boost." It goes on to say: "Speaking to reporters in Washington, [the current Premier] said he believes the Alberta government struck 'the right balance' by sharply raising the province's take of oil revenues."

It's odd, Mr. Speaker, that he's criticizing it now when you consider his straightforward support of it. Actually, I'll quote from him. "I think that the premier" – this is referring to Premier Ed Stelmach at the time – "and his government have worked to strike the right balance in the interests of Albertans as the owner of the resource." The quote goes on. "I know it's been a challenge and a difficult process to arrive at that balance, but I think they have" – get this – "succeeded in doing that." This is in regard to Stelmach's proposed royalty increases.

It goes on to say that the Calgary MP at that time "dismissed as alarmist warnings by some critics that Stelmach's move would bring an end to Alberta's long-running economic boom." He said that by increasing the royalties at the time, Alberta would continue to prosper and do very well.

Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to point that out, that the Premier is talking about, first off, that the problem is party matters, and he's complaining about some proposed royalty increases, but his comments here are crystal clear. Back in 2007 he fully supported Premier Ed Stelmach's royalty increases. It's plain as record. Maybe that was then. It's now, now, or whatever.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to you that there was a warning yesterday provided to the government that they should not be speaking about party matters. You gave them the warning, yet they continued and persisted in talking about it. So if you're going to give warnings and they don't do anything about it, maybe you should do something about it right now and ask that they retract that statement.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With respect, I'm not prepared to withdraw that statement on behalf of the Premier. I know, first off, that my colleague opposite from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills failed to mention any citation in the standing orders or any other of the constating documents of this Chamber. I again state that the document that I have tabled here is exactly what the Premier was referring to, that a leadership candidate for this party, Linda Osinchuk, talked about raising royalties. She talked about how she was against the Keystone pipeline. These are facts. These may be inconvenient truths to this member, but again there simply is no point of order here.

The Speaker: Anyone else on this point?

Mr. Mason: Why not, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, please be brief.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I note that there was no citation as well. I think that it's quite reasonable to put forward information with respect to the position of a leadership candidate in a leadership race. I think that the matter of the royalties under Premier Stelmach has been mischaracterized by the Wildrose. The current slump in world oil prices has nothing to do with the royalty regime that was put in place under Mr. Stelmach unless he's suggesting that Mr. Stelmach sits around the cabinet table in Saudi Arabia. Otherwise, I would suggest that it has absolutely nothing to do with the current drop in oil prices.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I'm looking at the Blues that have been provided here, and if I have the right spot, I'm going to reference it in a moment, then make a ruling on this.

But in the meantime I thought I heard citation 23(h), (i), and (j). Did I hear that? I thought I did. I don't know if the microphone picked it up, but, hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, that's honestly what I thought I heard. If I'm wrong, then correct me.

3:00

Mr. Saskiw: That's correct.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Okay. So let us move on. Citation 23(h), (i), and (j) you already have. We've referenced them many, many times. It's similar to the point of order that was raised yesterday, and I am not going to take a lot of time on this. I would encourage you to read pages 686 and 687 of Alberta Hansard from March 17, yesterday, just to become more acquainted with this. It will help shorten up my comments right now. I would also encourage you to look at a couple of sections in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, regarding replies to oral questions.

I won't restate them all here right now. But it is frequently the case that someone says something in the middle of the debate, either as a question or as a response, and then hon. members sometimes react to it and there's a bit of disorder created or a little bit of a hubbub or something like that. In the end what happens in most cases is hon. members are encouraged to stand up and explain and clarify their position. Rarely is it a point of order, and I don't find it to be a point of order here. I think both sides have spoken and clarified on the record what their positions on this are, so we're going to conclude that matter and move on to the next point of order.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

The Speaker: I believe the next point of order was somewhere right around 2:34 or somewhere in there. Anyway, proceed Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During the exchange between myself and the Minister of Education, although I have to admit that I was not able to hear the end of the sentence, certainly the tone and the direction he was moving in and the first part of what I heard him utter would be enough for me to rise on a point of order and point out to him that in – specifically, he was talking about how I or my colleagues did not view apprentices as important.

I will just point out on page 508 of House of Commons, under Replies to Oral Questions: "According to practice, replies are to be as brief as possible, to deal with the subject matter raised and to be phrased in language that does not provoke disorder." Now, clearly, when a minister stands up and accuses a member of the opposition of not respecting a certain group or a certain postsecondary institution, it's meant to create disorder. It's meant to get me mad.

I'll also note in Beauchesne's 410(4) that "decorum is of importance," and it's expected that in responses to questions, in the replies to questions, that decorum should be respected and disorder should not be raised. In 417 of Beauchesne's again it mentions that answers to questions should deal with the issues and "not provoke debate".

Finally, Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 23:

A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if [the member] . . .

(h) makes allegations against another Member, which certainly was what was happening, and

(j) uses abusive or insulting language . . . likely to create disorder.

So I would ask that the member please withdraw his commentary, especially since I'm sure the member knows that most of the members of my family have graduated from apprenticeships in the trades and I would be less likely than many to be disrespecting those particular institutions.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Maybe just before I hear from the Government House Leader or somebody on behalf of him, I could just refresh everyone's memory as to what was said. Unless, Government House Leader, you are prepared to do something now.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, this is more of a point of clarification. I appreciate the member's comments. I know she'd never want to create disorder in this Chamber.

The recollection that I have – and I don't have the benefit of the Hansard or the Blues – is that the Minister of Education had talked about: if anyone had said. Because he did not impugn another member or a member's caucus or anything, I don't believe that he is offside, making allegations against a member or false or unavowed motives, again, to another member. That's key. I don't believe that he named another member, Mr. Speaker. That was my recollection.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I hope there's no one else on this point. It's very straightforward.

I'll read to you, first of all, the exchange according to the Blues. The Member for Edmonton-Centre rose at approximately 2:34 and said the following:

The minister cannot seriously be trying to tell me that increasing and supporting opportunities for trades apprenticeship and skilled workers is answering my questions about postsecondary education that leads to a creative economy. Are you seriously expecting me to believe that?

The Minister of Education stood in response and said:

Goodness me, Mr. Speaker. If anybody thinks that apprentices are not important in our province and they don't contribute to a knowledge economy, I'm shocked. All postsecondary training is important in Alberta. University training, college training, apprenticeship training in our trades institutions: we support all of that. We believe that's very important to the future of our province. We want to see it continue.

I would agree, on one hand, that the Minister of Education did not directly comment as to who had uttered that feeling. He said: "if anybody thinks." I think that's where the Government House Leader is coming from. However, on the other hand, I think it was fairly clear that the minister was responding to, if not perhaps looking at, the Member for Edmonton-Centre. As you know, in all matters that come to the Speaker's attention, context, tone, all of those environmental things in terms of speech, are taken into account.

So I think there is a point here, hon. Government House Leader, that can be dealt with very easily if we just on behalf of the member do the right thing, and I'll allow you the floor.

Mr. Denis: I'll withdraw the comments on behalf of the Minister of Education.

The Speaker: Thank you.

That is officially withdrawn and dealt with, and that matter is concluded.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

The Speaker: Let us move on to the third point of order. I believe the third point of order was at approximately 2:39 p.m. and that it was Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills who rose during an exchange that involved the Minister of Service Alberta answering a question posed by Drumheller-Stettler. So let's hear the citation and the point of order.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise according to Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), specifically 23(h), and that's a point of order when a member makes an allegation against another member. The background here is that the minister in question stated, and I quote, that the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler was taking shots at an independent board.

Mr. Speaker, that's a serious allegation. The minister has made an allegation against the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler that he was taking shots against an independent board. That is very serious. These independent boards, as the minister had stated, are independent. Members should not be attacking them like that, and I would just simply ask that the hon. minister withdraw the comment, and we can get on with things.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on this point.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think, again, this is more of a point of clarification. To say someone is taking shots, it's just simply taking questions, not making accusations or allegations. That's the spirit of question period. I don't think that the Member for Drumheller-Stettler did anything wrong, but similarly, with respect, neither do I think that the Minister of Service Alberta did.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Service Alberta, you wish to clarify briefly what you intended there? It would help, perhaps.

Mr. Khan: If I may, Mr. Speaker. It happens from time to time in this House that there are people who cannot defend themselves, as you know, in this House, and, as you also mentioned, the context and tone of particular questions also say as much often as the question. I've worked with this board. The board is comprised of quality people who are doing quality work on behalf of Albertans. I felt that the Member for Drumheller-Stettler was being very critical of this particular board, and I felt it was my duty to defend the board.

That was my interpretation of the comments, and I'll leave it at that.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Is there anyone else on this? Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, briefly.

Mr. Saskiw: Yeah. I'd like to just quickly respond. I mean, the minister had himself criticized the same board in a letter that was written earlier this week. Of course, the question, if you look at the context, was criticizing the minister's appointment process, not the actual members in question.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:10

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, this happened less than half an hour ago, and unfortunately we don't have the Blues available to us, so I can't really go into the verbatim exchange. But I'm going to take both sides at their word here. I listened carefully to what I thought I heard the Member for Drumheller-Stettler saying, and I did not think that he was specifically taking a shot, as it's called, at the particular board in question. He may have been taking a shot at the government. I'm not sure. We'll have to read that. Nonetheless, what he uttered seemed within the rules.

The Minister of Service Alberta, of course, did stand up and say something about shots being taken at the same particular board and I think was trying to defend people who are not here, as he has already stated.

I think that clarifies the matter. We'll all watch our language going on. We know that we've got another week or so before the break. Perhaps we can sharpen up our comments and questions and answers in the next few days ahead. That leaves that point as clarified and now closed.

We will move on to the final point of order for today. I believe it was the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. You had a point of order during a tabling.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, unfortunately, I'm unable to obtain a copy of Beauchesne's and therefore unable to provide you with a citation, so I don't really have a point of order.

The Speaker: Thank you very much. That concludes that matter. We can move on.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 18

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Finance regarding Bill 18.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 18, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015.

The Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015, will provide funding authority to all the offices of the Legislative Assembly and to the government for the period beginning April 1, 2015. It is anticipated that funding authority for the entire fiscal year ending March 31, 2016, will be tabled in the House before that date. Approval of interim supply estimates is required whenever spending authority is required to bridge the gap between the last fiscal year and passage of a new budget.

I respectfully urge my colleagues in this House to support this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 18. You know, when you look at the interim supply in particular, this is dealing with expenditures made from April 1, the day after the fiscal year-end of the government, until the passing of the budget, which typically takes maybe a month, I guess, maybe even a little less.

My question yesterday was with respect to the $28 million that's being allocated to the Chief Electoral Officer in this interim supply. My question would be: what would occur in that time period, from April 1, 2015, to about the middle of May of 2015, that would require the expenditure of $28 million by the Chief Electoral Officer? What could that possibly be? I'm trying to wrack my brain on this. Maybe he's got some – I'm not sure what the Chief Electoral Officer would need all that money for during that period of time given that the President of Treasury Board indicated that the fixed election date is in 2016. It's very difficult. You know, we're debating this. We'd like to know what the response is. Like, why would we need to give the Chief Electoral Officer all this money? What expenditure is he going to make? Are there some capital expenses that he has to make? What would he need that $28 million for?

You know what? In fact, there's a coincidence, Mr. Speaker. The Chief Electoral Officer said that to run a provincial election, it would be roughly $28 million. So I'm just wondering if during that time period, that six-week period, whether – what could it be for?

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to suggest that it's for an election. But, unfortunately, the President of Treasury Board said again and again that the fixed election period is a three-month period in 2016. You know, we debate large amounts of money in this Assembly. This bill is no different. In fact, there's a substantial amount of money. The minister should be required to provide details on how that money is going to be spent. The President of the Treasury Board did not do that; he failed in doing that. Mr. Speaker, how are we supposed to vote on a bill when the minister is not willing to provide us with any information?

The minister said that, you know, the Chief Electoral Officer is going to upgrade some electronic voting systems and that kind of thing, but he never gave any estimates on that. I was on the committee that hired the Chief Electoral Officer. He never at any point indicated it would cost $28 million to upgrade the electronic voting systems and so forth. I think that would be a massive amount of money to do such a project. Of course, if that huge project was going to be done, clearly the President of the Treasury Board would want to tell the Assembly here what roughly $30 million project the Chief Electoral Officer had in mind in the next month, but he didn't have an answer to that. For us in the opposition to debate on these substantial amounts of money, you would think it would be incumbent upon the minister to provide us with some information on whether we should vote yea or nay. These votes are very important, Mr. Speaker.

In conclusion, there's not enough information here that's been provided by the government for us to make a conclusive decision on this. They never separated the monies between operational and capital and financial in any of the departments. You know, it would be nice, Mr. Speaker, if they gave us an honest answer, in particular, to why that $30 million is going to the Chief Electoral Officer. Just get it off their chest, and we can breathe a sigh of relief here in the Assembly that we'd finally know what was going to happen during that time period.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Those are my comments.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by 29(2)(a).

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have to admit that this gives me great concern. I have never seen an interim supply budget that asked for money in an interim supply act for the entire year. I have seen 19 budgets now and probably 14 or 15 interim supplies, which tells you a lot about the on-time ability of this government to produce a budget and get it passed before the fiscal year-end. It's somewhere close to complete failure. I've seen a lot of these interim supply acts. For people that are following along, this interim is meant to cover the period of time between the 1st of April, when cheques need to be cut – people need to be paid; programs and services, contractors, all of this has to go on. So the government has to have permission to cut those cheques, to spend that money, and they haven't passed a budget; they don't have the permission. Thus, you have an interim supply act.

What I've seen is that generally they would give themselves about 40 per cent of any department's budget, which I always questioned them on, why they needed 40 per cent for essentially three months. But some departments are certainly front-end loaded; for example, ESRD with firefighting. Their costs tend to come in the summer. There are others with employment programs that tend to come up in the summer. A lot, obviously, of the construction, transportation, infrastructure: that money tends to be spent more in the beginning part of the year than in the latter part of the year. So there's some good standard reasoning behind certain departments but certainly not all departments to have that much money allocated to them for three months' worth of expenditure.

I've always seen interim supply that ceased. In other words, the permission to be running on an interim supply act ceased at the end of June. So they would give themselves money from the 1st of April through April, May to the end of June. That was the end of it. It was expected they would have a budget by then. This, Mr. Speaker, is giving them permission to spend this money without a budget until the end of the next fiscal year, which is pretty outrageous when you think about it. What it's indicating just on the factual face of it is that we won't get a budget. We may not get a budget at all. There may be no budget debate or any kind of explanation up front about how the government is spending its money because this is it. This is it. No explanation, no votes, no – well, they don't do roll-down votes anymore, anyway. But that's it.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

So you want to know what's being spent in Aboriginal Relations? Well, $51 million and change for expense and $6 million for capital investment. Financial transactions: $19 million. End of discussion. That's it. That's all you get. This is deeply troubling, and I'm quite concerned that this is a trick, and it's a bad one. It's a trick being played on all Albertans that the government would come forward with an interim supply bill that says: we're going to have interim money, between now and then money, for the whole year, until the end of March 2016. Twelve months' worth of expenditure, and this is the explanation. Just let me help you here. That's it, folks. That's it. That's it.

So why has this changed? I'd like to hear from the Minister of Finance on this. Why has this changed? Why have we now gone to an interim supply that gives the government permission to run on this till the end of March, March 31, 2016, an entire fiscal year? Now, I had enough problems with the government giving itself permission to spend money between the 1st of March and the end of June. But from the 1st of March, 2015, to the 31st of March, 2016, on this? Based on this? This is a mockery of this entire Assembly. It's a mockery of every financial officer that works for the public service. It's a mockery of every Albertan out there that expects there to be accountability and integrity in the way this government goes about producing a budget.

Mr. Mason: Oh, I don't think there are many left.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. Well, my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood believes there aren't many left, and nobody is meeting my eyes. That's always really interesting when that doesn't happen, Mr. Speaker.

This is bad enough. This is serious. I want to hear from the Finance minister why this is being done because this is unusual.

Why is the government giving themselves permission to go without a budget, without any kind of explanation or understanding except for a four-page document that – sorry, six pages. My mistake. A six-page document. And just in case anybody has forgotten, there's this really, truly bizarre way of explaining budgets now in which they give a budget amount for the Legislative Assembly, but here are the real goods. There is from general revenue an operational budget that is shown as section 2. Section 3 is capital investments. That's a separate line. Section 4 is financial transactions. God help us, what does this mean, Mr. Speaker? And section 5 is lottery fund payments. So you'd better have your calculator with you because you have to add all of these up in order to understand what's actually being spent in any given department because it doesn't tell you that. It doesn't give you the bottom line. It says: here are all the four different ways that they now allocate spending without actually telling us what the total is.

The note that I'd made to myself when I was thinking about interim supply was how angry I am with this government and how I'm angry and I'm disappointed because there's so much potential in this province. There is so much innovation going on out there in the private sector. There are so many people ready to do amazing things, and this government is lazy. Lazy. You have too much money, and all you do is dump money on something to solve the problem. It's lazy. You've done that for years and years and years.

We had a litany of examples that were brought up by my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona during question period today. You know, why does this particular scandal or problem get money dumped on it when we can't get $500,000 more for the Auditor General, who is actually trying to keep tabs on what's going on here? Over and over and over again she gives you explanations and examples of where the government has decided not to fund health care, children, all kinds of things, but they do find money, a lot of money, to pay for a golf course in Kananaskis. You would think that for all the problems you guys had created for you with that bloody golf course, you would never mention those words again. But then we look in supplementary supply, and there are millions of dollars that are being spend on flood . . .

An Hon. Member: Mitigation.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you.

. . . mitigation plus extra money to the operators to actually pay them for the nonoperation of the golf course while this mitigation is going on. Unbelievable. We have laziness, throw money at problems, don't spend money on other things, a total lack of imagination, and a lack of rigour, frankly. I am angry with that. There are a lot of good brains over there. There are a lot of committed people on the side opposite, and I just don't understand what makes you all go lockstep with this stuff and line up and mouth these points, when they get little notes that they're supposed to speak from. What's it called? Speaking notes.

Mr. Saskiw: Talking points.

Ms Blakeman: Talking points. Thank you. They line up and defend everything that the government is doing. I mean, okay. So we have these hide-and-seek games that the government spends, and it's, you know, it's serious game playing. We have a public release of somebody's phone records, of one of the member's phone records. Then the Premier calls for an internal investigation, but then it drifts off into somewhere else, and everybody goes: not my responsibility, not my problem. That's hide-and-seek. It is hide-and-seek.

I have personally, finally, yesterday received responses to written questions that were accepted 11 months ago. Eleven months it took this government to answer questions back to me, and, of course, I didn't even really get the answers. You know, how can you have a straight face when you do stuff like this? Question: "What progress has been made on the formal commitment to develop the big-city charter, announced by the Minister of Municipal Affairs in a government news release on June 18, 2012?" And I get a response that lists things starting in October. It lists nothing between June 18, 2012, and October 7, 2014.

The Deputy Speaker: You're still on the bill, hon. member?

Ms Blakeman: I am talking about interim supply, Mr. Speaker. It's about the process, it's about how much money is being expended, and it's about how well this government works in giving out any kind of information. You would think the opposition would be the first ones that would be getting information, not the last ones. How do we trust when we have an interim supply that's six pages long and gives us no information and then other examples of getting information 11 months later? Come on. That's not about providing information; that's about playing a game of hide-and-seek. It's meant to be insulting, it's meant to make my life difficult, and it's childish. Embarrassing.

What other little games do we have? Oh, yeah. We've got no information in the budgets anymore. They're starting to look like this. I mean, we used to get a few lines of roll-up where you could tell what programs were actually being funded. Increasingly we're looking at budgets where it's one or two numbers. That's it. You can't even tell what programs they fund anymore because they're not listed.

We have ongoing disrespect to opposition members where an opposition member asks a question and their personal finances are brought up as a way of answering the question. Now, how disrespectful is that, Mr. Speaker? Pretty disrespectful. That's going to be, you know, a reasonable answer to a question. Unbelievable.

Let's look at the money that's coming out here. I'm wondering if under the Health budget, in which we have an expense of $4,690,537,000 and a capital investment of $19,341,000 – okay, so this is a budget for a year, an interim supply for a year. You're putting more money in – I don't know – maybe less money. Are we actually going to get better health care out of this? What are the metrics? So far you haven't even been able to track what your timing is, and where you have tracked it, you've stopped telling us because you did so poorly on the metrics. Every time we get you to actually give us some way of judging and measuring how well you're doing, if you do badly, you just take the metrics away. It really is anger-making, so I have a right to be angry with this.

3:30

Mental health strategies. We all recognize that if you invest money into community-based mental health care strategies, it's going to save you money. Really? Is it in here? Where is it? No idea. How about the mental health care strategies for children? Is it in here? No idea. How are we supposed to know? When are we going to know? No idea. You know what this says? You'll get to know at the end, the 31st of March 2016, once the year has gone by. If this is under new management, I would say that this is real close to criminal, and I mean that. This is wrong on a lot of different levels.

In the last number of budgets we've noticed that the government has admitted that the number of roadways and bridges that are going to be in less repair, less quality – they budget more of our roads and bridges to go down in the quality of what they're doing there. Is that going to continue in this budget? Are we going to see any kind of additional help for what's going on? You see, the other thing that's not in here is any kind of budget comparison, so I can't tell if it's more money or less money. I can't tell what programs have been cut or that the government plans on cutting over the next year, because there's no explanation here.

I know that all the groups from Culture have been hauled in and told with a very sad face by the minister: too bad, so sad; you've been cut off. This is unacceptable, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I'll recognize the hon. Minister of Energy. Is that under 29(2)(a), hon. Minister of Energy?

Mr. Oberle: Yeah. Thank you. Mr. Speaker, it's always been my observation in life and certainly since I was elected to this Chamber that there are far too many people in the world upon whom the entire point of the story of Chicken Little and Henny Penny is completely lost. That member might be one of them.

Mr. Speaker, the rules of this Chamber are absolutely clear. They're crafted by an all-party committee, and they're accepted by this Chamber. If the member alleges that somehow we have violated those rules of order, then she's perfectly capable, I would think, of calling a point of order. She has not done so. I believe we're fully in compliance with the rules of this Chamber.

Furthermore, the legislation governing the tabling of budgets and interim supply and supplementary estimates and all those things is absolutely clear. We table them in accordance with such legislation, and we provide for the appropriate times of debate and everything else. If she is of any belief that we're in violation of legislation, she should probably say so. She has not said so.

Mr. Speaker, from time to time governments table interim supply, which allows for interim spending while we're awaiting a budget that's not likely to be passed before the end of the year. The member knows full well that we're going to table a budget on March 26, and obviously subsequent debate on said budget will take us past the end of the year, so we're required to table interim supply, which will keep our employees, our civil servants, and the services that we provide to Albertans flowing. Without that, obviously, the government would come to a grinding halt, and I suspect nobody would be more upset than that hon. member. Clearly, we're not going to do that.

I'm sorry – and I'll apologize to the hon. member – if she finds it difficult to add three numbers, but the fact of the matter is that the format of the interim supply is absolutely in accordance with the legislation and in accordance with every other interim supply we've tabled in this House as long as I've been here.

You know, Mr. Speaker . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: You have a point of order?

Point of Order

Question-and-Comment Period

Mr. Mason: The rules require the five minutes that are allocated for questions and answers to be shared, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, to be clear, the five minutes – and it's been applied liberally by this chair and other chairs – are usually questions and answers or, in many cases, comments. We've never cut a member off, be it the asker or the replier. Unless you expect some other rule to be changed, hon. member, that is what's been applied by this chair and other chairs in this Assembly.

Mr. Mason: With due respect, there is a subrule that has been enforced – and I don't know if it's been removed – that requires a fixed amount of time for question and answer per person.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, if you can cite me something that I'm not aware of, I will apply it, but if not, then we will proceed, and I'll let the hon. minister carry on.

Ms Blakeman: Excuse me.

The Deputy Speaker: Clarification, hon. member?

Ms Blakeman: Well, sure. You can call it whatever you want.

The Deputy Speaker: You have a citation?

Ms Blakeman: Standing Order 29(2)(a) does allow for the five minutes, but it goes on to say: "to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses to each Member's questions and comments." Therefore, I'm assuming that the speaker has allowed time for me to comment back, because it does specifically say "responses."

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I'm going to respond that in my time in the chair I've seen it go both ways, where one individual has taken most of the time or the other has. This chair has never called on an individual to stop, and I haven't observed other chairs as well. Until we change the rules, I'm going to keep applying the rule as it has been.

I'll allow the hon. member to continue, and I would hope that he would pause and allow you to answer some of his questions, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: And if he doesn't, then you've not allowed me to respond.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I've got the floor.

Hon. members, the rule allows for five minutes of questions or comments, and until there is a change in that rule, I'm going to apply it as such. If the time is taken by one member for comments, so be it. If it's for a question, then so be it. But in the absence of any other rule, I'm going to apply the consistency that this chair has applied in my time in the chair and the time that I've observed other chairs that I've been here. Hon. member, I think we're killing time here.

I would invite the hon. minister to continue and, hopefully, allow the Member for Edmonton-Centre some time to respond to your points, sir. Thank you. Please proceed.

Debate Continued

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, the interim supply numbers we presented here are consistent with the legislation, the rules of this House, and any other interim supply that we've tabled. Now, the hon. member knows quite well, actually, that the interim supply numbers are, of course, to provide spending for the government in the interim period, hence the name "interim," between the tabling and the passing of a budget which goes into the new budget year. It allows for the operation of the government. It's absolutely normal practice. It's in full compliance with the rules of this House and with the legislation. It's, actually, in fulfillment of the legislation. So that's why the government has done that.

It's normal practice, as it is – and the member knows – for the Chief Electoral Officer to request some money. The $28 million in this budget is requested by the Chief Electoral Officer. It's quite often, in the event of interim supply within two years of an election, that the Chief Electoral Officer . . . [interjection] That hon. member wouldn't know because he hasn't been here for re-election. He's not going to be here for another one.

Mr. Speaker, within two years of an election it's quite common for the Chief Electoral Officer to request money in the event that an election might be held, and it is absolutely consistent, again in full compliance with the rules of this House and the legislation, that the legislation grants the Chief Electoral Officer that money. Hon. members opposite also know that in the event that the said event doesn't happen, the money lapses, as does all of the interim supply that's identified in the interim supply request, hence the name "interim."

The hon. member doth protest too much, so I am going to ask her a question. The next time interim supply estimates are tabled in this House, assuming that at some point interim supply estimates will be tabled to provide for interim supply in the event that a budget isn't passed before the year-end, could she change her speech from the last time that she protested about interim supply? You know, it's nice to refresh every once in a while, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, you have 23 seconds to reply.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. The majority of members that are on any of these committees that make the decisions and rules are members of the Tories. You may be fully in compliance, but you have certainly put forward an abnormal interim supply budget. The member has failed to explain why it is for March 31 a year from now rather than three months from now, absolutely failed to explain that, and there are many examples of the Premier changing his mind, including on budget date.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do want to make a few comments with regard to the interim supply. I did want to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre about her assertion that this was for the full fiscal year coming up. I know that the bill does talk about: "to defray . . ." — that is the term that's used — "... charges and expenses of . . . the Public Service of Alberta not otherwise provided for during the fiscal year ending March 31, 2016." But if you look at the numbers and compare them to the amounts for certain departments in previous budgets or the total budget for the province of Alberta in previous years, the funds that are allocated in this budget are clearly insufficient to run a government for a full year. That was really what my question was to the hon. member.

It looks to me like it would be about four months' worth, just doing some ballparking in my head around the Health budget: about $18 billion last year, and in this particular year it's about $5 billion, presuming that it's going to go to $20 billion given the change of mood, the lightening mood over on the other side, moving away from doom and gloom now to this rosy, pre-election outlook, this pill that they've taken that has improved their mood so much. I think the doom and gloom will quickly return following the election, Mr. Speaker, if they are fortunate enough to be given another term by the people of Alberta.

The point I really wanted to make is that it doesn't look, to me, like a full year's budget. It looks to me like about four months' worth of spending. It's an awful lot of money, though, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is absolutely correct. This is a very, very minuscule amount of information that is provided to the House, to the Assembly, in order to make the decision that is required. We certainly have no objection, you know, to voting interim supply for the government provided that a budget is brought forward relatively quickly and, hopefully, debated before the House is dissolved. That would be our view, that that budget needs to be brought forward and debated and voted on before this House would be adjourned. That, unfortunately, is between the Premier and the Lieutenant Governor, and we'll see how it shakes out.

Now, that brings me to the point that was raised by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills about funding in the election. Since it is here, since there is money for the election in this interim supply, I think it's perfectly in order to make some comments with respect to the election. Now, I also believe that the legislation was passed by this House to set a three-month period for an election, being March, April, and May of 2016, which is next year. The intent of the Assembly and the intent of the government as expressed at the time was to provide some certainty to all parties and to the public about when an election would be held.

Now, it's clear that the Constitution of Canada would override any legislation that said that the head of the government can't go to the representative of the Crown and ask for the House to be dissolved and an election to be called. That's constitutional. The act includes that and anticipates that, so the question, really, put to me is: would an election now be illegal? The answer is no because the legislation does permit this to happen, but it was never the intent that we should continue to have elections at the whim of the governing party or every three years. It's expensive when governments have large majorities. Then there really is no reason other than their particular partisan advantage to have elections every three years.

Since I've been here, we've had elections more often at three or three and a half years than we have had at four, Mr. Speaker. It's a very common practice, and I think we have too frequent elections because the government can secure its own advantage. When I talk to constituents about this issue, to explain it I use an analogy. I say: it would be like a number of people running in a foot race, and one person gets to yell "go" when he's ready regardless of whether or not the other people in the race are ready. That is the system that this government is perpetuating. So, clearly, if they do go ahead with an election this spring, they're very much violating the intent of the law that was passed, that was introduced by them and supported by them, and, I think, being unfair.

Now, it brings me to the next point. I know, listening to the House leader for the Wildrose Party, that there's some anxiety on their part about having an election right now. I don't think they're ready, and I noted with interest the Premier's comments with respect to that. He said that it was up to the opposition to be ready for an election more or less at any time. Now, I just want to say, Mr. Speaker, that we are ready, and we're expecting an election. We'll be running in all the constituencies. We have our candidates. We have the election machine that we need in place, and, you know, we're not afraid of an election.

But it is an incredible amount of gall for a Premier who just spent a great deal of time and effort wrecking the Wildrose Party, blowing it up almost, to then blame them for not being ready for an election two or three months later. I mean, I can't imagine the arrogance and the gall that it would take to say: well, you know, it's their fault that they're not ready. No. That was a calculated, deliberate attempt to destroy the Official Opposition of this province to obtain a temporary political advantage, which he will now take advantage of by calling an election that is clearly not intended under the legislation that all the parties supported at the time.

Those are my comments with regard to the funding in this budget for the election. I think that the cynicism of this Premier is record-breaking in its scope and depth, Mr. Speaker.

I don't know how much we can guess about the direction of the full budget, that'll be introduced, as mentioned, on the 26th, from the interim supply, but I think there are some interesting things to say. There is an increase in Culture and Tourism in the interim supply. Now, I don't know if that will then be reflected in the actual budget, but it's interesting.

There's less capital investment in Health, Mr. Speaker. We have released a great deal of information in the last few months on the state of Alberta hospitals and the need for more hospital beds because of our growing province. We released documents that showed that only nine months into the 2014-15 fiscal year 1,376 surgeries had been cancelled across the province because of capacity issues, so I'm surprised that the capital spending for Health is not a higher priority in the interim supply. Carrying on with that subject, the number of surgeries postponed at the Stollery children's hospital has almost doubled over last year, and based on the previous year's numbers, all zones are likely to exceed last year's cancellation numbers.

There is also the question of overcapacity, the overcapacity protocol, how many times that's been activated. The highest risk overcapacity protocol was triggered 43 times in September 2014 in Calgary emergency rooms alone, and on the 24th of September, 2014, every single one of Calgary's ERs reported triggering high-risk overcapacity protocol. In the Edmonton emergency rooms in October 2014 overcapacity triggers were activated 344 times. We've released documents on the need to expand the maternal and the child unit at Northern Lights regional hospital. We showed that this is already insufficient to deal with the current population of Fort McMurray, let alone the population increases that may be expected. Those are just a couple of examples.

I think that we've looked at AHS preservation lists, which show the projects that need to be completed to ensure that our hospitals continue to function. These lists show 37 incomplete projects, totalling $10 million, at Chinook regional hospital, 16 overdue projects at St. Michael's health centre. In Calgary the hospital lists outline a hundred million dollars' worth of overdue infrastructure maintenance projects in three major hospitals.

On the 17th of March, which was yesterday, we released documents about deferred maintenance at Edmonton-area hospitals. They outline $225 million needed for critical infrastructure projects, which included 10 fire safety upgrades, including sprinklers, fire alarms, and long-awaited lightning rods; 11 unfunded asbestos abatements at the Royal Alexandra hospital alone; multiple elevator replacements and upgrades, a mould abatement at the Misericordia hospital.

So, Mr. Speaker, it's pretty clear that we need to be investing more in health infrastructure and not less. We've, I think, indicated that patient care is at risk and is suffering as a result of this neglect.

We've also released a document that outlines $850 million in deferred maintenance in schools across the province.

The AAMD and C estimate that $70 million a year for 10 years is needed for bridges alone. I have met with them several times, and they've talked about the bridges that are under their area of responsibility – these are not provincial bridges but those maintained by municipal districts and counties – and the fact that a number of bridges have to be closed more or less permanently because they are no longer safe. That's an important issue that I think needs to be addressed as well.

Mr. Speaker, we've talked a little bit about the need to support the officers of the Legislature. That's been a matter of some controversy. Conservative members of the committee dealing with the budgets of the officers, the Leg. Offices Committee, of course, had voted to provide an increase for the Auditor General. The Premier thundered from on high that there was no more money and directed the committee members to go back and reverse the decision, which they dutifully did. But it was a bad decision because the Auditor General is our first line of defence against waste and ensures that government programs are working as they are supposed to. The government used the argument that our Auditor General has a bigger budget than Auditors General in other provinces, but it's important to note that our Auditor General has additional responsibilities as the Auditor of record for government commissions and bodies, which is outside the scope of other Auditors General in other provinces, so it's an artful dodge of the facts.

And then, of course, there's the children's advocate. We've seen ... [Mr. Mason's speaking time expired] Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Before I recognize the first speaker, if there is one, might I remind you of the spirit of the previous discussion we had, with no hard-and-fast rule. Standing Order 29(2)(a), any takers?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking to the interim supply bill, it's somewhat comical. I suppose if it looks like a skunk and it smells like a skunk, you can draw any conclusion you want, but when you have a law that says that an election is supposed to take place in 2016 – we're supposed to believe that the Chief Electoral Officer is supposed to be ready for an election call at any time, that we have an interim supply that, you know, authorizes the significant amount of money to carry on an election. At this point in time we have a Premier who has now basically overruled a committee and said, "Go back. We don't have the money. We're going to be very prudent on what we're going to authorize for expenditures," which is kind of ironic in a way, I suppose. Put that together with some – I'm leaving the Legislature speeches, and, lo and behold, we're down to guessing exactly what day the writ is going to be dropped.

The question is this: is that all in good faith, realistically? We're talking about an election that affects all Albertans. Clearly, the government is calling an election, and it's playing a game, saying that it's not calling an election or it could call an election, but the reality is that we are now approving this authorization between now and June 30, and roughly between now and April 13 we're going to probably see the writ for an election call. It's hard to say. It's all a guessing game, and maybe we can play a drinking game with it. But the fact is that it's irresponsible when we're in a position of being prudent or claiming to be prudent and responsible with the taxpayers' dollars.

So I'll offer up some expenditures that could take place roughly this spring, that are significant. If the government wants to hold an election, clearly they probably want people to get to the polls, and there are a lot of rural bridges that need to be fixed. The only thing is that I don't know which members of which parties need to get across those bridges to get to the polls. Maybe the government should look into that before they actually hold the election. A lot of those bridges can be fixed for the sum of roughly $28 million, and there are many other areas where we could apply the money. I think that's the key. I know it was brought up at the AAMD and C today.

With the austerity budget that everyone is expecting – and why shouldn't we expect that? The government told us that we should expect it. So if we're expecting cutbacks and cuts in services, clearly the Premier has told government employees: you need to come back to the table; you need to think about what you're planning on giving up. I mean, the message is absolutely clear. You can frame it any way you like, but the message is absolutely clear.

Now is not the time to actually hold an unnecessary election, when we passed a law that says that we're going to hold one next year. Someone said: well, you gotta spend the money anyway, and you're going to have to have an election. Well, if you have an election every three years versus every four years, you're spending a heck of a lot more money. The math is there. I mean, if it's going to cost you 20-plus million dollars – in this case we're looking at a proposed budget of $28 million – doing that every three years versus every four years is an unnecessary cost.

It goes back to the whole issue of a good-faith promise. This Premier during his leadership campaign made that promise, that there will be an election in 2016. He made that promise. I suppose it goes down on record as the first promise broken. It probably won't be the last. But the public took him in good faith at his word, and now what we're seeing here is clearly the budget for an election call and the game playing and the gamesmanship of not even admitting it or not even telling the public when that election will be called. That's unfortunate. In my view, that shows bad faith.

I think this current government has an interesting case in front of it because it's all about opportunism. I mean, they decimated the Queen's Loyal Opposition or, depending on who you're looking at in the House, disloyal opposition. The idea of going into an election bodes very well for the government in power. It bodes extremely well, and that's the opportunism that they're confronted with. Clearly, they are going to take that, but that's not what the public has asked for. What the public has asked for is for them to abide by the law. What the public has said is: what we will allow you to do is to be prudent with our taxpayers' dollars, and we think you should be prudent and frugal with our taxpayers' dollars, and having an election every three years is not responsible.

With that, I think we've made that point. Regardless, I suppose we'll be going into an election in a few weeks, and people can make their farewell speeches over the next few days and into next week before the writ is dropped.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker. Are there other speakers to the bill?

I'll recognize the hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Oberle: Call the question, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a second time]

Bill 20

Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move second reading of Bill 20, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015.

The Municipal Government Act, or MGA, is one of Alberta's largest acts and creates the framework in which municipalities operate. Our government is committed to supporting communities. A key part of that is reviewing the MGA so that Alberta's municipalities have a strong foundation upon which to grow and thrive. Mr. Speaker, we worked closely with our municipal partners and stakeholders to develop the best updates possible for the act that will serve Albertans and their municipalities well into the future.

We're introducing this amendment bill to address 11 issues that found support from municipal partners and stakeholders. In addition, we are addressing some emerging issues and making some housekeeping amendments. A second amendment will be introduced in the fall based on solutions to more complex issues, with the ultimate goal of having a revised MGA by the end of 2016. Over the past year we hosted 77 meetings in 11 communities to hear from Albertans about how the MGA can best support municipalities.

We also received written input from more than 1,200 individuals, businesses, and organizations. After hearing from the public, we held extensive discussions with municipal partners and key business and industry leaders. The changes before you today have broad support from the municipal associations, the cities of Calgary and Edmonton, and key business and industry associations. Our goal is for the MGA to support municipalities in operating in an accountable, equitable, effective, and transparent manner. To further improve municipal accountability and transparency: a mandatory code of conduct for councillors to hold their elected officials to a higher standard.

Municipalities will adopt a public participation policy that considers participation of the public: their residents, business partners, and industry. Amendments for open council meetings will reinforce existing municipal transparency by clarifying when meetings must be held in public and when private meetings may occur, empowering municipalities to make the petition process easier for citizens through measures such as accepting online petitions, extending timelines for collecting signatures, and improving validation processes. Municipalities will be able to determine their own public notification methods, allowing them to save money and find methods best suited to the municipality and its people, including new and future technologies of communication.

These amendments will increase flexibility for municipalities to establish appropriate administrative roles, functions, and oversight while maintaining current separation between council to govern an administration to implement policy. To enhance municipal viability, these amendments will require municipalities to establish three-year operating plans and minimum five-year capital plans, to be updated annually. This raises the bar for municipalities to evaluate the full impact of present-day financial decisions against longer term municipal goals.

Bill 20 will introduce regulation-making authority for a new, streamlined process for municipalities that voluntarily wish to amalgamate and encourage a co-operative approach to amalgamation. Recent annexations have been highly controversial and received a great deal of media attention. Changes will enable the minister to make a regulation respecting existing annexation principles, processes, and procedures.

To strengthen municipal and intermunicipal planning, Bill 20 will identify the hierarchy and relationship of statutory plans so that each plan will be consistent with the plan above it. The amendments for subdivision and development appeal boards will require mandatory training for board members and clerks.

I appreciate the consideration and collaboration of our municipal partners and stakeholders in identifying these 11 issues as consensus items to move forward this spring, and I'm proud to support the recommendation for the MGA.

As I mentioned at the outset, Bill 20 will address some emerging issues. It will also enable the creation of charters as an important step towards realizing our shared commitment for the development of charters for the cities of Calgary and Edmonton.

The amendments related to off-site levies are proposed to allow municipalities to collect levies for one or more different types of infrastructure at different times over the course of development rather than requiring the developer to pay all the levies up front.

Bill 20 will also find a legislative home in the MGA for regulations under section 603 to ensure the important policies contained in these regulations will be maintained in the appropriate legislative framework. As well, these amendments address several housekeeping items to support consistency, clarity, and readability. The housekeeping changes also reflect recommendations and feedback received during public consultations, particularly from many Albertans who use the MGA regularly to guide municipal activities.

The MGA impacts every Albertan, the private sector, and every ministry within government in one form or another. We all live in municipalities, and we want the best for our communities. Updating the MGA to reflect changes in technology, new economic realities, and evolving municipal roles and relationships will give municipalities new tools to serve their communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests? Is anyone opposed?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some of the members of the MD of Taber, which is partly in my riding now. They've been up here for the AAMD and C convention, and I'd just ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

4:10 Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 20

Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and speak to Bill 20, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015. This, obviously, is very important legislation, and my understanding is that there was an extensive amount of consultation with the provincial bodies AUMA and AAMDC.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I must say that this legislation falls far, far short in the sense that there has been no real massive, substantial reform in this legislation. What the government has done is picked out most of the changes that were readily agreed upon by almost all parties right at the outset. They've apparently spent a lot of tax dollars doing a lot of different meetings and so forth, but the reforms that are made in here I think most people on the face of it would readily agree to. The government has fallen far short of any real reform. There were a lot of recommendations that were provided, and the government apparently ignored those or didn't have the courage to put them forward here in the Legislature today.

Mr. Speaker, my understanding as well is that the legislation allows for the provision of city charters. What I will say here today is that I do not support increasing or providing for new taxation powers via city charters. It will be interesting to see whether or not that's actually in the legislation, and in the Committee of the Whole we will be putting forward amendments on that to guarantee that that's the case.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The previous member is correct in that this version of the MGA was written in '95. I remember debating it quite a bit because there were a number of changes that it became immediately apparent needed to be addressed in the drafting of that.

This is one of our largest acts. It's got 18 sections, I think, and 650 different pieces to it. And because of the Canadian Constitution, of course, the province has the ability to set all the rules for the municipalities. That is set out in the Constitution. That becomes a strain when you have very large cities that, in fact, in some cases are larger than everywhere else in the province combined. They are their own economic driver, and they have particular needs that should be addressed separately that make them unique.

That is part of the strain that is happening right now in Alberta, in that all municipalities, every single one of them – Ryley, Tofield, Camrose, Peace River, Lethbridge, the city of Calgary, the summer village of Baptiste Lake – are treated exactly the same under this legislation. That's a problem because we have two very large cities which combined are two-thirds of the population of the entire province. To have them under the same constraints and limitations as a summer village or a small town is undoable in this day and age. I'll come back to that, but I think that's one of the most important pieces that's not been done.

I understand that these 11 changes are based on a consensus that came about as a result of numerous meetings, and I just want to go quickly through some of them. I'm a tiny bit amused – no, I'm really amused, not a tiny bit – at the requirement that municipalities adopt a code of conduct. Now, this is mostly around administrative procedures and not allowing a council to fire a councillor. But, in fact, this body does not have a code of conduct. We have a financial Conflicts of Interest Act. We have no code of conduct. There is nothing that tells MLAs that they're expected to have a constituency office or meet with constituents or have hours when they're available, nothing that says that they have to help their constituents, nothing that says what hours we have to work or how many days of holidays we're entitled to and whether there's any kind of an expected number of hours a week we put in or any kind of, you know, double time off if you put in more than X number of hours. Nothing. There is no code of conduct for us.

There is a Conflicts of Interest Act, which deals exclusively with financial conflicts of interest. It doesn't deal with integrity or ethics or anything else. If you review the last Ethics Commissioner report, she lays that out pretty clearly in dealing with the last matter that was brought before her. In fact, she does step out and recognize that the act is insufficient to comment wholly on the integrity of the individual. She does comment that it was a strained belief, that this wasn't going to help him in his election campaign when he'd already been appointed as the Minister of Education and was promising schools in the electoral division in which he was elected, but that wasn't a specific financial breach of conflict of interest according to the act. So I'm really interested to see that this group, that doesn't have a code of conduct, is implementing a code of conduct or requiring municipalities to develop a code of conduct.

There are a number of things that are very useful: clarifying when something is a meeting and when it's in private and how often that should happen, the issues around petitions and public notifications.

Clarifications around keeping council and administration separate should be maintained. This is perfectly appropriate and I agree with it, that municipalities should be required to adopt at a minimum three-year operating plans and five-year capital plans. Absolutely. I wish this place still did that. We did have that once upon a time ago. By the time you got to the third year, it was sort of fantasy, and then when we returned to the second year of the three-year plan, we found out that they had changed all of the performance measurements, so you couldn't actually match anything. Same thing happened.

The other problem here is how often the government is very late in actually detailing the amount of money that would be flowing through to these municipalities. So they're expected to make a budget without knowing what their revenue would be. Perhaps if the government could be a bit faster on their side, it would be more helpful.

I have questions about the hierarchy of plans, where the relationship of statutory plans will be sort of stacked. I'd liked to do some more investigation on that. Maybe the minister wishes to address it, or I'll come back in Committee of the Whole to do a bit more work on that because I'm interested in whether he's specifically relating the statutory plans to the land-use frameworks and also the different layers of plans that cities themselves have. For example, in my fabulous constituency there are mature neighbourhood overlays, which are plans that are expected to be adhered to, but they may also fall into an improvement area, or they might be under a zoning development. So what's being anticipated to be covered with this statutory hierarchy?

Of course, the biggest piece of this is the city charters, much anticipated by yours truly. But when I look at this from the start, it says, "on request by a city, the Lieutenant Governor in Council," which is, of course, cabinet, "may, by regulation, establish a charter for that city." By regulation. So that means that it doesn't come back in front of this Assembly. It gets done behind those big doors that I see closing opposite me, and there would be no opportunity for other public input and for opposition members to comment. I don't know if non cabinet members get to comment on that kind of thing, but "by regulation" means that it's not coming here, and I think it should. This is our second go at it because there is the 2005 charter for the city of Lloydminster, that was established. They don't seem to have put that one in regs.

Also, in viewing the specifics that are appearing under elements of the charter, under section 141.4(1) essentially everything is by regulation. Of course, when it's by regulation, the government can give, and the government can take away. So we have a set-up here where the city of Edmonton, for example, could request a charter. By regulation it could be set up. But, you know, if the city of Edmonton doesn't please the government, perhaps doesn't elect enough of a certain kind of MLA, they can have their charter taken away just as easily as it was put there because it's by regulation. It's not by legislation which would become a statute that is produced by this Assembly. The government gives, and the government takes away.

The second thing that's very odd in here – and perhaps the sponsoring member can clarify this. Under 141.4(3)(c): "authorize the charter city to modify or replace a provision of this Act, or any other enactment, by bylaw." That reads as though a city bylaw under the charter can change a statute put forward by the government. I must be reading this wrong, but please explain to me how I'm reading this wrong because it sure looks to me like that's what can happen, and I'm sure that's not what is intended.

The way this is reading to me is that it's a plan about having a plan about establishing a charter, and I'm concerned about that. The first time I raised city charters was in the election in 2008, which is now seven years ago, and my caucus and I – it's part of our platform – have continued to raise it. The first time I think it was raised here was quite a ways in. For certain it was mentioned by the previous Premier by two, who used it in her leadership race, I think, and talked about it, and that was in 2012. Since then there really hasn't been anything concrete move forward, and I don't see it being concrete in what's set out before us in the provisions.

There was a memorandum of understanding to work on it, which expired. A few months ago everybody tripped down to Calgary in their best suits and sat in line, and the Premier got up and announced with great solemnity and happy, expectant faces on the mayors of Edmonton and Calgary that they were going to have another memorandum of understanding, at which point I'm pretty sure I saw the faces of those two mayors settle into a grimace because that was not what they were hoping for. We still have no idea when we might be actually expecting a charter to be implemented, and I'm very concerned that this was being done by regulation. That definitely needs to come out and be done as a separate act, not because I think any of us particularly wants to fiddle with it or change anything or amend it, but this is serious, and I don't want to see this meddled with behind closed doors.

The other examples that I could find of city charters – and the obvious one is Toronto, for example, or Vancouver. I'm embarrassed to tell you that even Manitoba has a City of Winnipeg Act, so that kind of puts us to shame, that they managed to beat us on that one. Those are all stand-alone legislation, so they have their own act that is its own statute, and that's not what's being anticipated here.

I am looking for clarification. I honestly have not had a chance to talk to anybody on city council or in their administration about whether they agreed to this, but I'm finding it very hard to believe that they did because as far as I can tell, based on what I read that the mayor of Edmonton says or the mayor of Calgary, what they're asking for isn't here. This is another possibility of moving towards something eventually. So I do have concerns about it. There's a retroactive operation. There's no effect on the status. I just really have questions about how this is being put together. I don't think it's what people were anticipating.

There are a couple of sections here in the act that are obviously catch-up sections because they're things that have been going on for quite a while. A lot of it is utilities, municipal finance clarification, local improvement road tax bylaw, that kind of thing. One of the things that I'm not seeing in here is any understanding of the severe limitations that municipalities operate under, particularly the large municipalities, the limitations that they operate under financially. The property tax does not address growth, never has, never will. It doesn't help the cities to pay for things that are in response to growth, and, yes, the people that move here bring their taxes, but the cities are the one level of government that doesn't get a piece of that income tax. Federal government gets it, provincial government gets it, but the municipalities don't get any piece of income tax.

Long ago I brought forward a bill in this House – I think it was 204 – that asked that a transfer fund be set up so that a portion of income tax could be put into it and transferred to the cities to allow them to provide all the things that we expect out of cities now. I think what I'm hearing and certainly what I hear a lot of at the doors is that people feel that the municipalities, the cities, don't have the money to provide what people are expecting, like snow removal.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand to speak to Bill 20. I understand that Bill 20 is a result of consultation with municipalities, the two largest cities, with the AUMA, and with AAMD and C. I understand that a consensus has been achieved on the items contained in this bill and that there are many other issues where no consensus has been reached and that may or may not be the subject of further legislation after the election. I think the government has brought forward, you know, an incomplete bill, but it does represent those matters upon which agreement has been reached.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, I do have some thoughts with respect to some of the elements in this. One of the things that we didn't hear from the member who introduced this bill is what a code of conduct is intended to cover. What does the government have in mind in terms of the code of conduct? The Member for Edmonton-Centre has indicated that there's not one for MLAs. Nevertheless, I think that elected officials do have to adhere to high standards.

But I am cautious when I consider what possibilities might be for municipal councils to impose codes of conduct on their members. Having been a member of a municipal council for many years and at times at odds with the majority of my colleagues on certain matters, including secrecy, for example, I am worried about the ability of municipal councils to restrict the legitimate political activities of city councillors to bring to light matters that they think the public should be aware of. That is my serious reservation, so I will be very interested in hearing from the minister on this, hopefully in second reading but if not, in committee, because I have a number of questions with respect to the intent here.

I know that under the bill the minister is given the authority to make regulations that will help define what is and is not in a code of conduct, and that is something, I think, we need to look closely at. Once again, the framework legislation model that the government prefers, to allow the meat of any act to be put into regulation, to be determined by the cabinet at its discretion as opposed to being put out in the legislation for the whole Assembly to see and to debate, is a real concern with respect to this.

The question of the city charters is an interesting one, and as has been noted, this does not limit the provision of charters to Edmonton and Calgary. Now, the main impetus for this has come from those two cities, particularly from the city of Calgary. I would be very interested in knowing, again, a lot more about what the longer term goal is for the legislation. I think that the case can be made that the two largest cities are of a sufficient size that they may require additional authorities that other municipalities do not have and additional capacities to meet those obligations that may not apply to smaller cities or to towns and villages.

I did have the honour during my municipal career of serving on the board of directors of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities for a number of years, and I chaired a committee on the future status of municipalities. We had established at that time the position on behalf of the FCM that there should be certain things recognized in municipal legislation that were fundamental principles. There were three of them, that I recall, that were very significant.

First of all, the municipalities should be given clearly defined roles and responsibilities, things that they're responsible for, and they should be allowed to discharge those responsibilities without undue interference from other orders of government. That was the first thing.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, they had to have access to the financial resources in order to fulfill those responsibilities and not be dependent on other orders of government to fund those things. That could either be through a taxing power or through some designated, specific funding that was allowed for in the legislation, that would allow them to conduct those responsibilities.

Finally, the third principle was that municipal officials should be accountable to their own voters for the discharge of those responsibilities and the taxes or other charges that they may or may not set and not to another order of government.

I think those principles are very important, and I would hope that future legislation following up on Bill 20 would recognize those three principles. I particularly think that it's important that those principles be enshrined in any charters that might be considered.

I think that it's useful to have good, clear guidelines on the protection of personal information.

I have been in the past a strong believer in the right of citizens at the municipal level to petition their municipal government for specific things – specific bylaws, for example – and to have the right, if enough people signed the petition, to place matters on a municipal ballot. I think that that's a very important piece as well.

The act continues the long-standing principle of municipalities not running deficits. I don't see any reason to change that particular position at all.

I think that increasing transparency and accountability is important, and the act goes some way in those areas.

The other issue that I think is important is the issue of council secrecy, and I know that the previous municipal act outlawed private decision-making and required council to come into the open. It can certainly discuss matters behind closed doors but must make any decisions in public. I think that it must be continued.

One of the councils of the four that I served on decided that it was going to make decisions behind closed doors. There were all of these special meetings that were happening that the public didn't know about, and major decisions were being made. This was clearly not allowed. One of the things that happened is that at a certain point in the development of the long-term plan for the city – this is the city of Edmonton – they were making decisions behind closed doors. The administration then came forward with a report, which included a timeline of decisions that included those decisions at those meetings.

So what I did was to go to a council meeting and make an inquiry about how those decisions had been made. Well, no sooner had I gotten back to my office than I had the general manager of planning and development with his lawyers in tow show up in my office. The administration didn't like what was going on either, to be very honest with you, Mr. Speaker. But at some point, when they had to report on the progress of the development of the master plan for the city, they had to include the fact that key decisions had been made behind closed doors, which was illegal. So it blew the whole thing up. The mayor wouldn't speak to me for a month, but in actual fact it ended the practice of secret meetings.

I think that it's absolutely important that we maintain those kinds of requirements in the Municipal Government Act. It is the order of government that is most close to the people. It deals with issues that are very concrete in most cases. They deal with roads and fire protection and municipal facilities and so on. There's no reason why a high level of transparency cannot be maintained at the municipal level, and I think that, by and large, it has been. It certainly is a shining example for this government about how transparency can operate in government. You can get good government, and the public involvement that flows from an open process, I think, is very valuable, Mr. Speaker. So that's a really important consideration, in my view.

I think that if we maintain the principle that municipal government does not run deficits, that it has an open and transparent process, and that its elected members are responsible to their voters rather than to other orders of government for their actions, we'll be continuing on the right track.

Alberta actually was a leader, back when I was first on council, with the new Municipal Government Act, giving first-person powers to municipalities. I know, Mr. Speaker, that you and I were both involved in municipal politics at that time, and this was a very progressive step forward.

I think we need to continue that progressive direction of allowing municipalities more and more authority, treating them as an equal order of government rather than as the child of the province, which is, I think, one of the flaws in our 1867 Constitution. It sees municipalities as junior partners or children of the provinces. I think we need to move away from that. We can't change the Constitution readily, as I found out in the FCM, but we can adopt an adult relationship with our municipalities through our legislation and treat them as equal partners, and I think that the Municipal Government Act needs to do that and adopt that as a fundamental principle.

Those are my comments with regard to this act, Mr. Speaker. We will be supporting this piece of legislation, but clearly the real difficult decisions are going to perhaps come forward in the next iteration of the Municipal Government Act. I would just point out that many of these decisions have been delayed and delayed and delayed, put off until the next election and then put off until the election after that. An example would be the charter in this respect.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to participate in second reading debate on Bill 20, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015, on behalf of Minister McQueen. Alberta municipalities need a solid legislative foundation to support the strong local and regional decision-making required for municipalities to thrive. On January 22 the Premier and the Minister of Municipal Affairs made a commitment to complete the MGA review by working together with our municipal partners. The MGA review framework memorandum of understanding agreement was signed by the Premier, the minister, and presidents of the municipal associations and supported by the mayors of Calgary and Edmonton. This bill is a major milestone towards fulfilling that commitment.

I know that the minister is very proud of the collaborative process that produced this bill and that continues to produce consensus and strategic direction for additional amendments that will come forward this fall. Many hours of fruitful discussions with President Helen Rice of the AUMA, President Al Kemmere of the AAMD and C, Mayor Nenshi, and Mayor Iveson were spent to identify where the MGA should shift to best support municipalities into the future. This round-table met with representatives of key economic sectors in Alberta to see where consensus could be found on the issues to move forward this spring. Bill 20 is a result of those discussions.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 20 is a result of working together to serve Albertans at the municipal, provincial, and business levels throughout the province. These proposed amendments to the MGA contain municipal-driven solutions to address 11 issues that found broad support from municipal partners and stakeholders.

Our goals for the MGA are to support municipalities in operating in an accountable, equitable, effective, and transparent manner. To enhance municipal accountability and transparency, a mandatory code of conduct for councillors will provide municipalities with a tool to hold their elected officials to a higher standard. Municipalities will adopt a public participation policy that considers participation of the public – the residents, business and industry, and other relevant stakeholders – in order to enhance transparency in consultation processes with their communities. As well, amendments for open council meetings will reinforce existing municipal transparency by clarifying when meetings must be held in public and when public meetings may occur.

Bill 20 will empower municipalities to make the petition process easier for citizens through various changes that our stakeholders have asked for. This shift will make it easier for the public to successfully petition a municipality and will provide greater flexibility for municipalities by bylaw to vary requirements for petitions to municipal councils.

To enable more efficient municipal operations, Bill 20 will empower municipalities to determine their own public notification methods. This shift modernizes the way municipalities communicate to the public, enabling cost saving and accessibility by allowing for current and future technologies to be used for public notification purposes. These amendments will allow for municipalities to be more flexible in being able to establish appropriate administration roles while maintaining status quo separation between the council to govern and the administration to implement policy.

Municipal viability will see amendments that require municipalities to establish a three-year financial plan and a minimum five-year capital plan. These will be updated on an annual basis. This will empower municipalities to consider the full impact of present-day financial decisions against longer term municipal goals and create a more transparent process for the community to better understand the workings of their municipal governments.

Regulation-making authority will be granted for a new, streamlined process for all municipalities who want to voluntarily enter the amalgamation process. This change is being made to increase efficiencies and encourage co-operation. Bill 20 also presents changes that will enable the minister to make regulations respecting existing annexation principles, processes, and procedures.

Bill 20 will also address municipal planning by identifying the hierarchy and relationship of statutory plans so that each plan will be consistent with the plans above it. This is something that has been missing in the Municipal Government Act and will be certainly welcomed by all municipalities.

The amendments for the subdivision and development appeal boards address concerns over training. Mandatory training for board members and clerks will be required going forward. It will also create a placeholder in the Municipal Government Act to enable the creation of charters for Edmonton and Calgary, a commitment publicly announced last fall.

The amendments related to off-site levies are proposed for collection over the duration of a development project as opposed to all at once at the beginning of the project. These levies would be collected for one or more different types of infrastructure, and this is certainly something that will enable the development industry to better finance and get their projects off the ground.

Bill 20 also addresses the various regulations under section 603 to encapsulate some pieces of legislation while others will have regulatory authority enabled. Bill 20 is also addressing various housekeeping amendments. These reflect recommendations and feedback received during public consultation, particularly from the many Albertans who use the Municipal Government Act regularly to guide municipal activities.

As one of the largest pieces of legislation in the province of Alberta the MGA impacts a significant number of stakeholders and Albertans. We hope to update the legislation to reflect the realities Albertans face today, be it our current economic times, evolving roles of the municipality, or reflecting current technology. We endeavour to create the best conditions for our municipalities, and I'm confident that this bill addresses changes needed for that. Albeit this is the first step in a very long process of amending the entire act, it is one that has been reached by a collaborative process. It has brought the many stakeholders together at the table around a consensus base, and moving forward on the more difficult issues will be all that much easier because of the relationships established over the last year with the many stakeholders involved in this process.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there other speakers?

I'd invite the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West to close debate.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you very much. I appreciate the comments on all sides of the House, and I would ask that we call the question on second reading of Bill 20, please.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 16 Statutes Amendment Act, 2015

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's an honour to rise to speak to Bill 16, Statutes Amendment Act, 2015. This is an omnibus bill that has rectified a whole bunch of little issues in different departments. The Wildrose Official Opposition will be supporting this legislation.

Mr. Chair, besides some really, really minor housekeeping issues, there is an amendment that would provide for there to be two Associate Chief Justices rather than one in this province. I think this is peculiar to Alberta and Quebec, which have a two-city dynamic. You know, I think the hon. Member for Little Bow did a great job explaining why that would be necessary in this province.

The second change has to do with the Land Titles Act and allows for electronic filings for land title documents as well as e-signatures. I think that's simply catching up with other provinces in that respect. Most other provinces do that. Then there's also a very minor issue where they close a loophole in the insurance portion of that particular legislation, which we have no objections to.

The amendments to the Post-secondary Learning Act: they are simply correcting mistakes with respect to the status of the board of governors of Medicine Hat College as well as the board of SAIT. They weren't discovered till recently. It appears this amendment clarifies that with respect to two orders in council, the 1970 order on Medicine Hat and the 1982 order with respect to SAIT, neither was rescinded. In fact, the board of governors of both institutions, according to this amendment, would have been operating lawfully throughout that whole, entire time, and I don't think anyone would disagree with that. I don't think it's retroactive legislation but just simply clarifying that they were operating legally. It's probably a good thing that they weren't operating outside their bounds for the last few decades.

The Provincial Court Act introduces the concept of binding judicial dispute resolution proceedings. This would occur pretrial. Right now the situation is prior to the Provincial Court hearing. You'd have a judge that would talk with both parties, get an explanation of what witnesses they would call and what evidence each side would present. The judge would then provide both parties with an explanation of what he or she would decide if that case was heard before them. What this would do is that it would go one step further. It would be binding in advance, so both parties would be subject to that decision. I think this would provide more flexibility within the court system. It would be interesting to see how this works. I think a lot of parties, especially with smaller claims, would rather just have a quick trial, without the expense of getting a lawyer, although lawyers could still be involved in these cases, especially with the increase in the small-business claims amount.

Also, there are 11 sections of the act relating to civil claims that are being removed from the act and put into regulation, and this would allow more flexibility on a go-forward basis. Without having to come to the Legislature to make an amendment, the minister could simply adjust that. The most obvious one is the level for the small claims amount. You know, I think the limit right now is 50 grand, which is still pretty low, especially with a lot of the litigation that's going on right now and could go on even more so if the economy keeps on its current trajectory.

Mr. Chair, we support this piece of legislation, and we do not have any proposed amendments in this regard. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair, for the opportunity to speak in Committee of the Whole on Bill 16, Statutes Amendment Act, 2015. I know the Minister of Energy will be awaiting the usual statements that I make on my concern about rolling together a number of acts which, to my eye, are completely unrelated here. This is the sleight of hand that the government performed when they moved from miscellaneous statutes to calling these just a statutes amendment act, which means that the opposition is no longer consulted on which pieces they feel are significant enough and have a significant enough change in its originating act to be pulled out and debated separately.

My biggest concern when I looked at this act was particularly based on the moves that the Justice minister has been talking about but also implementing around the traffic court – it would now move to having the hearings not presided over by a judge, there would be no appeal, and the police officer that laid the charges wouldn't be in court; it would be based on their notes – and a number of other concerns there, where I really thought that people were not going to get their day in court and wouldn't get their appeal if they felt there was something truly wrong. So I looked at these justice statutes with some dismay.

However, my concerns about the traffic court are not reflected in the amendments that I'm seeing here, or at least not to the level that I've been able to investigate them given the time that we've had. The judicial changes, the Court of Queen's Bench Act amendments: that's obviously about that our population has increased but the number of judges and courts that we have to hear everything has not increased, and it's put the backlog of cases to quite a timeline, that's moved far beyond where it should have. I think this is an attempt to shorten up the timelines there.

The number of sections that are being moved to regulation always makes me nervous, but most of what is being moved there are the civil claims. They really don't like being called this, but I think that for most people they understand it as small claims court. But we should learn to be calling it civil claims because there's nothing small about it anymore, and that does not understand and give respect to the people that are working in those courts.

Under civil claims we've got sections on issuance of civil claims, dispute notes, notice of hearing, change of hearing, service of documents, service of counterclaims, notice to attend, proof of service, payment into court, adjournment, parties confined to particulars, and admission of liability, so all of those sections, which are really the sections in the act between, I think, sections 25 and 35. Then we also have sections 38 and 40 to 44, which are conclusion of a claim and processing of judgment to the court. That's including withdrawal of claims, default judgments, failure to appear, setting aside judgment or dismissal, counterclaim, and costs and interests. Those are all going into regs, which means they don't come back here. They can be changed by an order in council or by ministerial order. I think all of that is fine.

The Ministry of Innovation and Advanced Education. Now, when I first asked about this, I thought perhaps it was the moving of Mount Royal and MacEwan universities from a level 2, which is, really, larger undergraduate universities, and that they're very much interested in moving up to a level 1, which is the comprehensive research and intensive undergraduate and graduate studies. But, no. In fact, this was fixing mistakes that the government made some time ago, where they accidentally rescinded some powers of the board. So they are moving that back.

The land titles amendment is great. Thank you for that, and a big sigh of relief that they didn't privatize the Land Titles Act, because that's what everybody was worried about. But, no. In fact, this is allowing for electronic signatures.

I am curious, and I haven't had time to do a very good stakeholder loop with the changes that are coming under Culture and Tourism. What's being done here is that the foundation that gets the money has been changed into the sport connection. Originally this was Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife, which is the second of the big lottery foundations which received money from the lotteries and disbursed it to enhance quality of life. So you have the Alberta Foundation for the Arts; Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife; and then we had Wild Rose, which was deleted or repealed some years ago.

I was concerned that the recreation, wildlife, and parks portion was being dumped. It's not. It's being transferred to the department, but I am concerned that this could be signalling less interest by the government in those areas in that the sports get special recognition and get to keep the foundation, and there's also land that was donated to it specifically, which the foundation is now going to be allowed to sell off. I do wonder if this is a degradation or a signalling of less support for those areas of recreation. Things like orienteering, anything that's sort of active lifestyle but not sport directed, would have been included in that recreation.

Wildlife, of course, is covering groups like the Wilderness Association, the World Wildlife Fund, a number of those organizations that do absolutely amazing work on pinched pennies, especially given the direction this government likes to go on very strange decisions around animal habitat. I'm a little worried about that one, so I'm withholding my judgment on that.

The remaining sections, I think, were all fine. Yeah. I just have the concern about moving that much regulation, but it appears to be for a good reason. I will support that although it shouldn't be made precedent or taken as precedent for any reason.

The Police Act is retroactive, I think. It's to make sure that any decisions that have been made are still legit if they had a previous police officer or a retired judge that was running the hearing. The Alberta, Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation Act; the Land Titles Act; the Post-secondary Learning Act: I've covered everything there.

I have reservations, and I'll try to get my homework done before – oh, this is Committee of the Whole. Okay. I'll try to get the rest of that work done before we're in third reading so that I can better articulate my concerns around that, or maybe they will have been relieved by that point.

So thank you for the opportunity. I am still interested in why Mount Royal University and MacEwan University cannot fulfill whatever the government is looking for to elevate them to a level 1, because they're certainly interested in doing that. But I'll leave that for the time being.

The Liberal caucus is in favour of supporting this bill. We just really don't like the use of the Statutes Amendment Act to roll everything together. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the next speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Is there a minister present that we can, you know, direct questions to? In committee sometimes you can get answers from ministers with respect to the legislation at committee stage.

The Chair: We have the bill's sponsor here.

Mr. Mason: Oh, boy. They're letting you do something. Okay. Good luck.

Okay. Well, I want to begin, Mr. Chairman, by echoing the comments of my colleague from Edmonton-Centre, and this is something that we've said ever since this change was brought in, that we do not like the fact that in some cases more substantive amendments are included in an omnibus bill. It used to be that items were agreed to in advance by consensus, housekeeping types of changes and so on, but the government in recent years has adopted the practice of putting in things, not always really dramatically important things but more substantive things and things in which there's not a consensus amongst the parties in the House. That changes things. We used to be able to give it unanimous consent without debate. Now, of course, it's debatable, and it takes time. So I just want to indicate that, by and large, despite that reservation, we do not have any basic problems with the various components of this act.

First of all, the Provincial Court Act. It changes the maximum for civil matters that the cabinet can allow from $50,000 to $100,000 and updates the resolution mechanisms to allow for more flexibility. The Court of Queen's Bench Act adds a second Associate Chief Justice, and that will, we understand, assist in the progress through the courts and allow the Chief Justice to give direction on what the masters can hear and what they cannot. I'd like a little bit of clarification on why that is an important piece of this legislation. So if the hon. member can help me with that, I would be very grateful.

Mr. Donovan: I just got a note on that one. Can you just give me a brief...

The Chair: Through the chair.

Mr. Mason: Do you want me to go on to something else?

Mr. Donovan: No, no. Just ask your question again. I was just reading another part. I'm sorry.

Mr. Mason: Sure. Yeah. One of the changes under the amendment that amends the Court of Queen's Bench Act will allow the Chief Justice to give directions on what masters can hear and what they cannot. Why is that change important?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you for the question. The amendment on the Chief Justice, the powers directed on the masters side: that allows the preliminary hearing on civil matters for applications involving bankruptcies. They can also hear certain applications under the Maintenance Enforcement Act. I think we're just trying to free up some time in the courts, allowing the masters to deal with some of those.

The Chair: Thank you, and for the record that was the Member for Little-Bow. I think I called him something else.

I'll go back to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

5:10

Mr. Mason: Yes. I've called him something else, too, before, Mr. Chairman.

I just have this question. My notes say that the Post-secondary Learning Act is being changed in Bill 16 to correct a mistake that occurred with orders in council, which accidentally abolished the boards of SAIT and Medicine Hat College. Did that really happen? Did you really do that? Were they mad?

Mr. Donovan: I think it was a clerical error at some point. The order in council established the college board in 1970 for Medicine Hat, and SAIT was done in 1982. Going through there, there were some errors discovered, and the information was requested to respect one of the institutions, and that's when it was identified. So we're just trying to clarify and fix the problem that was identified.

The Chair: Back to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Raising the civil claims to be heard in Provincial Court to $100,000 may be a positive, but it will also have an impact on the work of the court. I think there's a legitimate concern as to whether or not the capacity is there and whether or not enough funding is going to be provided by the province in order to allow them to handle those additional cases.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The goal of this was to make the civil justice system more effective. Now, the amendment from cabinet will increase it to $100,000 from $50,000. However, it should be noted, hon. member, that the current maximum limit for the civil court matters will remain at $50,000, which was set in 2014. The proposed amendment gives the government the option to raise the limit to $100,000 at a later date if required without amending the legislation, just so it's easier to be able to go through and do that.

The Chair: The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask about section 6(9), that deals with hearing procedures, which will allow the court to direct some of the hearing procedures like the amount of hearing time, the number of witnesses, the amount and type of testimony and evidence as well. I'd really like to know what the purpose of that change is and how we can protect individuals' fundamental rights to access justice and a fair trial if this greater scope is given.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm just trying to dig up 6(9) myself. I was hoping he was going to go for 13(1) of the regulations, but I didn't have that luxury.

Mr. Mason: It's easier to ask questions than answer them.

Mr. Donovan: That's why I truly appreciated being in the opposition also at one time in life. Sometimes you have to make the decisions rather than just look at them.

I'm going to have to get back to the member on that. I'll have to dig through that.

The Chair: Thank you.

Hon. members, before I go back to the next speaker, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the hon. members of this Assembly a councillor from Mackenzie county, Eric Jorgensen, who's here at the AAMD and C convention and has stepped into the House this afternoon to watch the proceedings. I'd ask Eric to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Bill 16

Statutes Amendment Act, 2015

The Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, did you want to speak again, or are you satisfied?

Ms Blakeman: No. I have to do more work.

The Chair: Okay. Then back to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: That concludes my questions. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Okay. Are there other speakers at this time?
Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 16 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Bill 15
Securities Amendment Act, 2015

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak very briefly to Bill 15 in Committee of the Whole. I think the Securities Amendment Act, 2015, really takes us back to the lead-up to the 2008 global financial collapse because at that time the market for over-the-counter derivatives was mostly unregulated. So there was a whole – well, who knows? – countless number of transactions that occurred that were completely invisible to any kind of securities oversight or regulation or monitoring or compliance. I think it's generally agreed by a number of people that watch this sort of thing that that was a bad idea.

There's been quite a bit of work done since then to put in place some regulatory reform of over-the-counter derivatives around the world. So we're catching up and we're harmonizing, which is essentially what's happening here. There are enforcement-related amendments here and then a harmonization, all of which needs to happen.

I just find the funniest part of this, if I'm allowed to do that, is that they've had to change the definition of "associate" so that they can pick up the one-night stands for exchange of information.

Mr. Saskiw: Whoa. Language. Language.

Ms Blakeman: One-night stand is language?

Well, because it was relying on the definition of adult interdependent partner, which was the invention of my beloved colleagues opposite as a way of trying to get around not recognizing same-sex marriages. So they invented this whole other grouping of people, which, of course, included everybody that wasn't a male and female that were married. But in that, it's all about long-term relationships. It's about two years plus, and they don't kick in until you've gone two years unless there's a child or unless people signed a contract. That was how that was set up. So if you actually had a shorter term relationship – in other words, anything from a one-night stand to a one-year-and-363-days stand – you would not be captured under the current definition of "associate," and you could have all the pillow talk on over-the-counter derivatives that you wanted to without coming under any kind of prohibition.

In the delicate wording that you always find with this, it's meant to capture persons cohabiting in a conjugal relationship who are sharing material information for the purpose of insider trading. They're trying to ensure that they're capturing people that are not covered under that. It's a very serious matter, Mr. Chair, but I just knew that definition was going to bite this government in the behind a number of times, and that's one of those times.

Given that, our Liberal caucus is in favour of what's been proposed here. We have duly slogged our way through all of the different sections. This is one of these bills that take a lot of time to find out not a heck of a lot, but we appreciate the work that's been done, particularly around regulation on this one.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there other speakers on the bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 15 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

5:20

Bill 13
Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2015

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's an honour to rise here today to speak to Bill 13, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2015. I just have a few questions regarding this particular act. What this act is doing is that it is making mandatory the inspection of boats entering our borders. I'm just wondering whether or not someone can answer some questions about where exactly these monitoring stations are going to be and whether the government is going to have to purchase land in order to create these monitoring stations. Right now my understanding is that boats are inspected on a voluntary basis and that there are a little less than half, like 40 per cent or so, of individuals that voluntarily allow their boats to be inspected upon coming into the province of Alberta. My question is whether or not the government is proposing to purchase land for these sites. Is there anybody on the other side that's speaking to this?

The Chair: Hon. member, I'll recognize the sponsor of the bill, the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Do I do my amendment first?

The Chair: Well, you could answer that question and then . . .

Mrs. Leskiw: Okay. Those details haven't been worked out, but right now the inspections are going to take place at the various places that we have already like the weigh scales, and so on. But purchasing land and any of that, hon. member, hasn't even been brought up for discussion.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you to the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

The Chair: Hon. member, I'm going to recognize the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake again. I believe she has an amendment, so I think we should get that on the floor.

Hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, you have an amendment? I believe you've sent me the original. Would you give your copies to the page to be distributed?

Mrs. Leskiw: The minister was supposed to have them.

The Chair: Oh, they're at the table here. Okay.

Mrs. Leskiw: Are they? Okay.

The Chair: Okay. Would you introduce the amendment and move it, hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Chair, I would now like to move an amendment to Bill 13. This amendment has been tabled and is prepared for circulation to all members.

The Chair: If you could pause, we'll have the pages distribute those, and then I'll come back to you in a brief moment.

For the record, hon. members, this will be amendment A1.

Hon. member, you may speak to the amendment at this time, please.

Mrs. Leskiw: Since the recent Legislative Review Committee deliberation, edits to Bill 13, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2015, have been recommended by the constitutional law section of Justice and Solicitor General's legal services division. To enhance the potential success of the enforcement provision of the amending act being upheld if challenged in the courts, we are seeking a small amendment to Bill 13 as recommended by legal counsel.

The bill is amended as follows. Section 19 is amended in the proposed section 22(1) by striking out "A" and substituting "Except as prescribed, a". It will now read:

Except as prescribed, a fishery officer, for the purpose of ensuring compliance with this Act or while lawfully engaged in the exercise of powers or the performance of duties under this Act or any other applicable law, may signal or otherwise order an individual . . .

This amendment enables the development of future regulations which may be required to support section 22 of the Fisheries (Alberta) Act. Legislative Counsel has advised that these changes can be considered editorial in nature. Making the changes now will help to avoid having to open up the act in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Is there anyone speaking to the amendment?

Mr. Mason: I'm just trying to follow, Mr. Chair. Sometimes these acts are written and numbered in a strange way. I'm on page 12.

19 Sections 22 to 27 are repealed and the following is substituted:

Power to stop and order movement of conveyances
22(1) . . .

And this says, "striking out 'A,'" "a fishery officer," and then it will say – okay. That's where the "A" is. I was wondering which "A" it was. And then "Except as prescribed." So who prescribes?

The Chair: I'll go to the sponsor, the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, if you have an answer.

Mrs. Leskiw: I don't quite understand your question, sir.

Mr. Mason: Well, it says that except as prescribed, the fishery officer can make you stop, right? If it's prescribed, he can't. So who prescribes, and what is the prescription? I'm just not following this. I'm sorry.

Mrs. Leskiw: Okay. I'm going to have to get back to you on that one, sir.

Mr. Mason: Okay.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Just to assist the member, it looks like if you look at page 3 in the explanatory notes, it has things like "prescribed waters." It basically means waters prescribed by regulations, so I'm assuming it would be the minister that would prescribe in the regulations.

It looks like if you look at page 4 of the bill, it has the definition of "prescribed" under subsection (1.5), and it defines "prescribed" to mean

- (i) . . . "prescribed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council" means prescribed or otherwise provided for by regulations made by the Lieutenant Governor . . . and

- (ii) otherwise, means prescribed or otherwise provided for by regulations . . .

So it means regulations or whatever the Lieutenant Governor provides by regulations.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. So my understanding, then, is that this just allows, with regulation, to put limits on when the fishery officer can make you stop your boat. So he just can't sort of show up in your pond and pull you over.

Ms Blakeman: In your koi pond?

Mr. Mason: Yeah. Whatever. Okay. Good. Thank you very much for that clarification.

The Chair: The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: I want to thank the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills for assisting in answering that from a lawyer's perspective.

The Chair: Are there other speakers on amendment A1?
Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: We're now back to the bill as amended. Speakers on the bill as amended? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I guess the one question that we have when reading this act is that it appears that a fishery officer may without a warrant enter a place to which a licensee applies, yada, yada, yada. So I guess my question is: should there be some protections to landowners or individuals? You know, if this fishery officer can just come into your place without a warrant, would the hon. member think that there should be some type of reasonable and probable grounds to kind of come onto your land and check for these mussels and stuff?

The Chair: Thank you.

Mrs. Leskiw: I can answer this one. First of all, let me answer some of the questions that some of the members had posed yesterday. The Member for Drumheller-Stettler had a few questions regarding Bill 13 that I would be pleased to address. The member had questions about mitigating concerns regarding the new inspection powers under sections 25 and 26 of the bill. Inspection powers under 25 and 26 do not apply to any private dwellings. This is clearly outlined in the proposed section 28.02. In fact, if you look on page 15 or 17 of the bill, it definitely explains what they can and cannot do.

5:30

I would also point out that under section 26(2), an official may only inspect places if the official has reasonable grounds to suspect that the place or conveyance may be carrying an invasive organism. These reasonable grounds are clearly outlined in section 27(1) under the heading Power to Search. Overall, inspection authorities will be similar to other enforcement powers. There will be no nonlegislated people with authority.

There were also quite a few questions regarding the inspection program and the implementation, which I would be happy to touch on. The member had questions regarding station locations, something that one of the other members had asked. Where possible, inspection stations will be located in existing Alberta facilities; for example, commercial vehicle scales.

The member also questioned about specialized equipment. The inspectors themselves require basic equipment for carrying out inspections, and the decontamination of watercraft can be performed at a weigh station.

Members had questions about how the inspection stations will be staffed and costs. There's a commitment to ensure that this program is successful, so I understand that there will be seasonal staff at 11 stationary inspection station sites as well as three roving crews.

The member had questions about minimizing the impact to traffic. Inspection stations are located along major highways throughout the province, which will allow boat traffic to move off the highway and not impede the traffic.

As for the member's question around the use of organic treatments, those are not available at this time, which contributes to the large concern that aquatic invasive species pose, specifically zebra and quagga mussels.

The member's final question was regarding the funding that will be allocated to enforcement. I understand that along the funding through existing budgets, creative sentencing options are in place within the Fisheries (Alberta) Act and would allow fines to be directed to the aquatic invasive species program.

So I just wanted to answer some of the questions that various members in the opposition had posed yesterday.

Again, thank you to the member for his assistance in the last question.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Saskiw: Thanks. That does answer my question regarding the enforcement provisions, that it would just be going after a boat or a vehicle rather than being able to enter a dwelling or something like that.

Just generally speaking, I'm curious about where the biggest threat comes from. Is it from the U.S., or is it the mussels coming from the east to the west, or from B.C., the other way? If you have some comments on that.

Mrs. Leskiw: Well, right now in Canada: Manitoba, from Lake Winnipeg, would be a threat. But also they found them in B.C. and in Saskatchewan, so we have boats travelling back and forth. It's important for us to safeguard our waters.

Ms Blakeman: I'm going to apologize to the sponsoring member, because I have a cold, and it's possible that my ears are plugged and that I didn't hear her correctly. But when I look at section 25, it talks about rights of entry and passing over land without a warrant. It reads:

A fishery officer or fishery guardian may, without a warrant, enter on and pass over land for any purpose involved in

- (a) ensuring compliance with, administering or enforcing this Act or any other applicable law, or
- (b) ascertaining the presence of any invasive organisms.

That says that they can go on your land.

Powers of entry with inspection, under 26, 26(2) specifically says:

An official may, without a warrant, for any purpose involved in ensuring compliance with, administering or enforcing, or any other blah, blah, blah,

... enter and inspect any place or conveyance.

Conveyance is mostly on wheels – that's a boat, trailer, car, motorhome, whatever – but any place: that would include going into your cabin, walking over your land, looking in the garden shed. So I don't understand. I think I heard the member say that they wouldn't be able to go on private land or to inspect private buildings, and she gave that in answer to someone else's question. Did I not hear her correctly, or am I missing something when I read this?

When you go further into section 27, which she was specifically noting, you end up with the same thing, which is power to search. So you've got rights of entry, powers of entry with inspection, and power to search. Power to search in section 27 says, "subject to the conditions in a warrant or without a warrant," if they believe on reasonable grounds that there might be something that's a "danger to human life or safety or a threat to Alberta's ecology," and it's not practical to get a warrant, they can go on if

- (a) there is anything
 - (i) by means of or in relation to which this Act has been contravened, or
 - (ii) that will afford evidence of a contravention, or any activity or any invasive organisms. That to me reads like: yahoo, go crazy. They can enter onto, they can inspect, and they can search, which seems to pretty much cover from (a) to (c).

So if I can get a clarification of that, I would appreciate it, and then I have some additional questions.

Mrs. Leskiw: If you take a look on page 17, 28.02, places and conveyances limited under section 28, no private dwellings. Stop. So it cannot. Then if you go back to section 25, you're talking about fishery officers and fishery guardians may without warrant. It would be just like having a checkstop and requiring the police to have to get a warrant for every car that they search while they were at a checkstop, which doesn't happen.

The Chair: Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: This is one of these little family arguments that you get into, like gun registries and laws on guns. So it's kind of an uncomfortable place for me to be. My father calls them the Fish Feds. I suspect he's not going to be happy about this, but I don't know how not happy he's going to be. And he really follows the law. So I'll have to check that out and get back to you in third reading.

I am appreciative of the list that is attached in the back of the bill, on pages 32 and 33, which actually lists all of the invasive species. For most of them the conditions to actually bring them in are that they have to be dead or dead and eviscerated. That's pretty clear. It does list some 25 different species, including the tubenose goby and the ruffe and the western mosquitofish. It also talks about freshwater dwelling invasive plants, and wouldn't you know it? The one plant I've managed to get to grow would be the yellow flag iris, which is now on the prohibited list. So I guess I'll be getting a shovel out on that one. Fair enough. If they're the ones that – you know, invasive species are always the ones that sort of grow exponentially, and they tend to take out everything else that's usually part of the ecology. But just dang. Wouldn't you know it?

So I will make sure that I talk to my father about what his concerns might be with this act – it'll be a long discussion – and I will get back to the sponsoring member in third reading. But other than that, my colleagues are supportive of this. Yeah, really supportive of it. You know, you can't fool with Mother Nature because this is what happens: she'll get you.

Okay. Thanks.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

5:40

Mr. Mason: Thanks. Just one question. In the section that was just amended, it gives the fishery officer the power to basically stop any conveyance, move it to a particular location and stop it. I looked at the definition of “conveyance,” and that is in (c.2), on page 2 of the act. “‘Conveyance’ means a vehicle, being a device in, on or by which an individual or thing may be transported or drawn, and includes” trailers, aircraft that are not in flight, watercraft, docks and wharves, and railway cars. So this would seem to indicate that the fisheries officer can stop trains and move them around. I wonder if this is in conflict with the federal railways act.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, do you have a comment?

Mrs. Leskiw: I’ll have to look into that. I’m not sure, sir.

The Chair: Other questions?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question on the bill as amended?

[The remaining clauses of Bill 13 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: I wonder if I might move, Mr. Chair, that the committee now rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 16 and Bill 15. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 13. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading (continued)

Bill 12 Common Business Number Act

[Adjourned debate March 17: Mr. Denis]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: I move second reading of Bill 12, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: It’s been moved.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park has already spoken. You had some time left. Did you wish to continue, or are you finished your comments?

Mr. Quest: No. Mr. Speaker, I’ve moved second reading. Unless there are any questions, I have nothing more to say.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. I’ll look for other speakers. Are there other speakers at second reading? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Just to indicate that there is support from the Liberal caucus and without amendments. Yippee. Yahoo. This is going to help our small and medium-sized businesses with some of the red tape. The Common Business Number Act, I’m sure, will be very welcome by that community, which is the community that generates and hires the most people in the country, contrary to what most people think.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Are there other speakers? The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think it’s a good thing because we support the development of customer-oriented services for businesses in Alberta, and that includes developing a system of common business numbers between the federal and provincial governments.

Mr. Speaker, with this bill we see that the government is finally catching up to something many other provinces already have, most notably Manitoba. Manitoba’s NDP government brought in a similar system a number of years ago. Again, the pattern is repeating itself, the PCs in Alberta just being a few years behind the NDP in Manitoba. That seems to be a real theme here. If we were to be elected in the next election, we wouldn’t have to wait several years. We’d just, like, get it done and get on with things. I note that the text of this bill is almost word for word the same as an equivalent bill that was passed in Saskatchewan in 2013, and I guess the Saskatchewan Party follows the NDP in Manitoba, too. It’s a shame, I think, that it took so long, but fortunately the government has at long last decided to get on with it.

While it’s important to modernize government operations to support businesses in Alberta, privacy, convenience, and flexibility must be respected every step of the way. In section 2, for example, the minister can enter into an agreement with the government of Canada to establish a system of common business numbers. It’s rather vague like much of the act. It’s important that the government should be up front with Alberta’s businesses about how the system will be implemented. Specifically, will the common business numbers be the same as those used by the Canada Revenue Agency? I think that’s something that should be clarified for businesses in this province.

There’s a similar lack of clarity in section 4, which, for the purpose of establishing a system of common business numbers, enables any public entity to share business information with any agency of the government of Canada. So my question is: why is such broad permission required if communication is really only needed between the province and the Canada Revenue Agency?

Section 4 also enables a public entity to require information from a business entity in order to assign a common business number. It then also allows the public entity to provide this information to the government of Canada or to one of its agencies. The public entity may also use the information currently in its possession for this purpose. Given the extent of the information sharing there must be adequate systems or regulations in place to ensure that business information is used only for the purpose of assigning a common business number.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, section 4 creates the sanction that any public entity may refuse to act on information provided to it by a business entity should the business fail to provide the information necessary for the system of common numbering. So if a business does have legitimate concerns about the privacy implications of this information sharing, why shouldn't it be able to opt out, then, without a penalty?

Section 4(3) requires that business information be provided "in any form or format that the public entity considers appropriate." Whatever that format is, it must not place an additional burden on the business. Preferably, businesses should have the option of providing information in different formats depending on what's best suited to their needs.

Section 4(5) and section 5(4) require that the business information received by public entities be provided to the minister. There are no restrictions on the use of this information or direct justification for this clause with respect to establishing a system of common business numbers. If public entities may provide business information to the government of Canada themselves as per section 4, why must the minister receive the information as well? The role of the minister in implementing the system should be clarified.

Section 6 pertains to the creation of an information system for the common business numbers. As per 6(2)(d) the information may hold "any other prescribed information" about the business. This needs clarification. Who will make the prescription? What limitations will be placed on it? Will the information system be expanded or be capable of storing information other than the information set out in section 6? If so, how will the scope of the information system be expanded?

Section 6 also fails to identify where the information held in the information system will be stored and who will be responsible for controlling access to the information other than the minister. We must ensure that these things are clear in the regulations and that such information remains secure.

Section 7(1)(a)(ii) enables the minister to disclose the information system to a public entity for the purposes of law enforcement. However, given the murky scope of the information to be held by the system, it is disconcerting that it may be used for law enforcement purposes. Businesses must know what information will be held in the information system before being forced to comply with the legislation.

Lastly, section 11 pertains to regulations. Here 11(a) sparks the most concern because it enables the Lieutenant Governor in Council, that is to say the cabinet, to define, enlarge, or restrict "the meaning of any term or expression used in this Act but not defined in this Act." In other words, the government may significantly alter the implications of the legislation without ever having formally to amend it. Mr. Speaker, one would only have to read Brave New World to understand the importance of language in government.

We want to make sure that Alberta's businesses benefit from this bill as opposed to simply handing over more information to the government with less oversight. So with regard to those questions we will be looking very closely at the regulations, and I hope that the comments that I've made will be taken into account. We know that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business indicated that it does support this as it will make life easier for their members.

I guess those are more or less my comments. I certainly think that when we get to committee, I would like the government to be prepared to answer some of those concerns and also to answer questions about the potential costs of this program. Otherwise, I expect that there will be broad-based support for the bill, Mr. Speaker, and that includes the NDP.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 12. I'll be very brief, just noting that we support the general intent of the bill on second reading and look forward to digging into the details in Committee of the Whole.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there other speakers?

If not, then I'll invite the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park to close debate if he so desires.

Mr. Quest: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll take everybody's comments under advisement. The intent of the bill was not to collect any more or less information than is being collected today. It's not to be shared. It's more like a key.

Really, as has been stated, it's supported by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. This is a very, very good bill for small businesses. As a former small-business owner I have a pretty good understanding of some of the complexities of navigating and getting information and so on from government. This will make things a lot easier for our small-business people.

I'll close debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Yes. Mr. Speaker, in light of the hour I would suggest that we might call it 6 o'clock and adjourn till 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:54 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, March 19, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Gracious God and Holy Creator, as we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we ask for renewed energy to help us continue our work back home at the local level with the people in our constituencies. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, I believe you have a visitor in the gallery.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mrs. Cecilia Villanueva Bracho, consul of the United Mexican States in Calgary. Thank you for being here with us. Cecilia is accompanied by Ms Lilia del Carmen Morales, deputy consul from the consulate of the United Mexican States in Calgary, and Mr. Pérez, liaison officer for the seasonal workers agriculture program with the consulate of Mexico.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta and Mexico benefit from a long-standing relationship, including significant trade between our two jurisdictions. In fact, Alberta opened its office in Mexico more than a decade ago, and since then our relationship has flourished. Over the years Mexico has grown to become Alberta's third-largest trading partner, with two-way trade between our jurisdictions totalling close to $2.4 billion.

Today it is my pleasure to ask our guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, it is my special honour and privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly two very remarkable Albertans seated in your gallery.

It is my pleasure to recognize Mr. Laurie Hawn, Member of Parliament for Edmonton-Centre. He was first elected in 2006 and will be retiring from politics at the next federal election. He served as a parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Defence from 2007 to 2011. Mr. Hawn had a distinguished career with the Canadian armed forces, rising to the rank of lieutenant colonel.

In 2010 Prime Minister Stephen Harper appointed Mr. Hawn to the Queen's Privy Council of Canada, and in 2011 he was appointed to the Treasury Board subcommittee on the strategic and operating review. Mr. Hawn was also selected as a Canadian representative and co-chair of the Canada-United States Permanent Joint Board of Defence. In 2012 he was appointed to serve on the Treasury Board cabinet committee, and in 2013 the Prime Minister appointed him to the Treasury Board Sub-Committee on Government Administration.

Mr. Hawn is a servant of the people. His leadership is principled in approach, coupled with an unwavering commitment to the constituents of Edmonton-Centre. He is a true friend of mine and supporter of many individuals and groups within Edmonton and area communities.

Laurie is accompanied this afternoon by his lovely wife, Mrs. Judy Hawn. Mr. Speaker, heartfelt, sincere thanks to Judy, a dynamic spouse, mother, and grandmother. She embodies the ideals we cherish as Albertans: strength, loyalty, and commitment. She has given selflessly and made tremendous sacrifices, all in support of her hero, Laurie, the person she loves dearly.

To both Laurie and Judy, on behalf of all Albertans, our debt of gratitude for your immeasurable contribution and service to our great country, province, and city. May your life's journey continue to be filled with an abundance of blessings. I would now ask the Assembly to please join me in providing the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, and congratulations. Thank you on behalf of all.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, you have a group to introduce?

Mr. Denis: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm also very happy to see Laurie and Judy coming to join us today.

I'm also privileged today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 11 individuals from the Department of Justice and Solicitor General who are here today for question period. These are all individuals who work hard every day to help keep our communities safe, put our victims first, and provide access to justice for all of us. I'd ask them each to stand, one by one, as I call their names: Morgan Peachey-Dupon, Kiernan Adams, Nikki Thompson, Carrie Coburn, Lisa Goldrup, Paula Vo, Janet Hughes, Gayln MacIsaac, Barb Hermans, Andrea Muller, and Marcus Smith. I ask that you please give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Let us move on with other important guests, starting with school groups.

Strathmore-Brooks, I believe you have a guest to introduce.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature on behalf of my colleague from Airdrie 101 visitors from C.W. Perry school here today to watch our proceedings. I would like to introduce the teachers and group leaders and parents with them: Miss Stephanie Wilson, Miss Jolie Nelson, Mr. Curtis Fong, Mr. Brian Jackson, Mrs. Jolene Roberge, and Mrs. Laura Hudson. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school or education groups?

Seeing none, let us proceed with the Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to introduce two residents of my fantastic constituency of Edmonton-Glenora. Marlene and Richard Hauser have come to the House to watch the proceedings and catch a glimpse of their wonderful granddaughter Lindsay in action as one of our hard-working pages. I thank them for coming this afternoon. I would ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the Minister of Seniors.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly

Vasant Chotai, who is the president, and Susan Morrissey, who's the executive director of the Edmonton Social Planning Council. Now, the Edmonton Social Planning Council is celebrating its 75th anniversary of serving Edmonton and area with very high-quality research. In fact, later I'll be profiling their most recent document, A Profile of Poverty in Edmonton. I would ask them to please rise and accept our congratulations on their 75th anniversary, and please welcome these two to our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors, followed by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you some very special constituents that I have here today. Seated in the members' gallery, Herb Holgate is a second-generation farmer from Thorhild county. He and his wife, Rose, have been married for 56 years and worked the same farm his family first homesteaded in 1914. They're accompanied by their daughters: a very good friend of mine, Deb Hamilton; Cindy Wietzel; and Bonnie Ollikka.

Alberta's greatness is borne on the backs of determined, hard-working families like the Holgates. Like families before them, they've dedicated their lives to enhancing the resources our province is naturally blessed with and leaving our communities better than we found them. They're certainly doing that. The Holgates made the journey to Edmonton today to receive the Alberta Century farm and ranch award in recognition of their ongoing contribution to Alberta's proud agricultural and cultural heritage. It's truly an honour for me to be their MLA.

I'd like to ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you 19 interns who began their local government careers in the municipal intern program in May 2014. This program provides an opportunity to gain real-life experience within our departments as we support towns, villages, counties, municipal districts, and cities across this province. This group will join more than 200 interns who have participated in this valuable program since 2002. I would ask them to rise as I say their names: Ryan Westerson, Kaylee Galipeau, Nicola Wood, Stefanie Drozda, Carl Kurppa, Jason Lussier, Darlene Bezeau, Logan Robicheau, Jeff Chipley, Léanne Labossière, Tyler Andreasen, Jenelle Braun, Karl Mielke, Matthew Siddons, Reed DesRoches, Dustin Bisson, Kate Churchill, Jaiden Henry, and Anna Lim. The Municipal Affairs staff with the program: Wendy Peters, Melanie Wood, Chelsea Williamson, and Erin Hambleton. Let's give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Thank you. Your second introduction, please.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm also pleased to introduce to you Brian Alford, president and chief executive officer of the Safety Codes Council, and his colleagues Tyler Wightman and Erin Stroud. These folks are in the House today for the introduction of Bill 21, the Safety Codes Amendment Act, 2015. Also seated in the public gallery are my staff from the public safety division of Municipal Affairs: Bruce McDonald, James Orr, Colin Robertson, Asha Clarke, Karen Pottruff, and Alex Morrison, who have been hard at work on Bill 21. Thank you for your outstanding work. If you could rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you three individuals. First, a social work practicum student, Kelsey Ackerman originally comes from Lethbridge and pursued studies at Lethbridge College, Bow Valley College, and Vancouver Island University, and now she is at Grant MacEwan in the social work program. She is planning to work with youth at risk, and she is a very, very excellent prospect, I think, in that regard. The second person I would like to introduce is a first-year social work student working in the office of Friends of Medicare, Robyn Bryant. She is working toward her diploma as well at Grant MacEwan and comes from St. Albert originally. The third person I'd like to introduce is Sandra Azocar, who is the executive director of Friends of Medicare. The three of them came here together today. I'd ask the three of them to rise and receive a very warm reception from the members.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have two minutes each.

Let us start with the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

International Day of Happiness

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The International Day of Happiness will be celebrated tomorrow in all 193 United Nations member states, who have adopted a resolution calling for happiness to be given a greater priority. Here in Alberta we have so much to be thankful for that every day could be considered a provincial day of happiness. Albertans have built a province in which we are privy to a quality of life that is second to none, and since we're under new management, I have no doubt that we are on course for even better things in the future.

We are blessed with some of the most beautiful scenery and greatest recreational opportunities on the planet: mountains, parks, forests, waterways, and grasslands that are so gorgeous we have to Remember to Breathe.

We create unforgettable memories, cheering on the Stampeders, Flames, Oilers, Eskimos, and our amateur sports teams. We enjoy the Calgary Stampede, West Edmonton Mall, a myriad of festivals and celebrations, and so much more.

We have natural resources in abundance; a young, skilled, productive workforce; a strong commitment to innovation and knowledge-based industries courtesy of a financially responsible government provincially, which has created a highly competitive business environment, built modern and efficient infrastructure and the best tax regime in the country by far. Add to that world-class education, health, and human services, Alberta Get Outdoors, or GO, Weekend, which is celebrated on the second weekend of April every year. This year it's April 10 to 12.

Mr. Speaker, during the International Day of Happiness tomorrow, the first day of spring, and on every day that follows, we would do well to remember the words of our Premier: we cannot win a bigger lottery than living right here in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

Childhood Immunization

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Over the past several weeks Alberta Liberals have called on this government to take action on a simple question of public safety, mandatory choice on vaccines for school enrolment. When faced with this issue, the PC government has simply offered platitudes about the importance of vaccination but refuses to show real leadership. It says that it needs to consult with school boards and parents to ensure their rights are not infringed upon. Of course, this was the same argument used against gay-straight alliances, which, it was later proved, was inappropriate when it came to protecting the safety of our schoolchildren. That's exactly what vaccines do.

Ensuring our schoolchildren are immunized for these diseases not only protects them but those around them who may not be able to be immunized such as newborn infants, those with allergies, or seniors with immune deficiency. In fact, school immunizations are a great way to protect the whole community, from infected children and the vulnerable to senior citizens. Under our policy Alberta would join four other provinces that require either proof of immunization for students registering in public school or mandatory choice; that is, they would require that a formal decision be made by parents. While exceptions are made for those that cannot be vaccinated or those with religious or other objections, the result is that once given information and faced with a choice, parents often opt to protect their children.

The Minister of Health claimed that provinces with mandatory choice provisions have lower vaccination rates, but that's wrong. Newfoundland has mandatory choice, and its immunization rates are the highest in the country: 95 per cent immunization for mumps, meningitis, measles, and rubella. Alberta is only at 74 per cent. While no one should be forced to take any vaccine, an informed decision should be made. The discomfort of my Conservative colleagues with this issue is obvious, but this issue, a serious public health issue that's growing, needs to be addressed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Albertans' Response to Economic Environment

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Here in the Legislature we have had much discussion regarding the impact that $42 oil prices continue to have on our provincial government and the upcoming Budget 2015. I speak today on behalf of my constituents and the many Albertans that also face uncertainty. Our current economic environment has meant that tough decisions are being made province-wide. The total number of layoffs now reaches into the thousands. I am hearing reports of smaller lineups in the food courts and parkades of downtown Calgary. A constituent who is in corporate computer hardware and IT sales had over $1 million in sales contracts cancelled in just one day.

Through it all and true to our determination as Albertans, constituents are also informing me of innovative ways by which employers are protecting their employees. This has included reducing payroll and overhead costs by introducing new vacation packages and decreasing top-management salary expenses. These steps ensure that employers are still able to get the job done and meet their operational demands.

Layoffs are always difficult and can be a significant burden on individuals and their families. I remind all Albertans that this downturn will not last, and we will get through it together. Our government will continue to work with employers to offer relevant support services to their employees where needed.

This evening the canvas auction for the 2015 Calgary Stampede will take place. The tarp auction for the chuckwagon race is to many Calgarians an indicator of the health of the local economy. I wish success to the bidders and their wagon teams. A gathering of citizens is good for our city and for its people. Mr. Speaker, we are all in this together, and I hope that Albertans remain confident in knowing that we will persevere through these tough times.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I believe we have time to hear one more. Let's hear from Edmonton-South West, please.

Compassionate Caregivers

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A little over a year ago, on February 1, 2014, Albertans gained the ability to take eight weeks of unpaid, job-protected leave from employment in order to serve as compassionate caregivers for their loved ones. I'm immensely thankful to have had the privilege of spearheading the Employment Standards (Compassionate Care Leave) Amendment Act, 2012, and I am proud that Albertans now have this opportunity.

But the story behind this milestone for caregivers goes back to my earliest days as an MLA. Knocking on doors and speaking with families in Edmonton-South West back in 2012, one thing kept coming up over and over again, the importance of healthy, stable, supportive families. I was shocked to learn that so many people were being forced to choose between their jobs on the one hand and caring for palliative family members on the other. Alberta was the only province not to have any legislated supports in place to help these compassionate caregivers or to give them the peace of mind that they would not lose their job should they need to take time to care for a loved one.

Over the 2012-2013 fiscal year alone 573 Albertans accessed the federal compassionate care EI benefits, which was a 16 per cent increase over the previous year. However, the federal EI benefits don't protect the caregivers' jobs. I was deeply disturbed by this, Mr. Speaker. Having consulted with stakeholders and experts such as the Canadian Cancer Society, the Alberta Caregivers Association, and a research team at the University of Alberta, the need for legislation that would protect compassionate caregivers was obvious. The expertise and support of these organizations and individuals played a huge part in ensuring this bill was passed in the House in the spring of 2013.

Now Albertans have had access to job-protected compassionate care leave for a full year thanks to the hard work of these motivated individuals and the families and caregivers who spoke up. No longer will any Albertan have to make the choice between being a caregiver for a loved one or keeping a job. Albertans are better served by it, and I'm proud to have played my part and even more grateful to have been of service to young families in my constituency and across the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, 35 seconds maximum for the question, 35 seconds maximum for the response or reply.

Let us begin with the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Health Care Performance Measures

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Five years ago this government made a commitment that by this March we'd have the best health care system in the world. The report was called Becoming the Best. It promised that all surgeries would be completed within 14 weeks. So how have we done? Knee surgeries take 49 weeks; hip and back surgeries take 37; stomach surgery, 47 weeks. Minister, I get that this province is growing, and I get that your bureaucracy is growing. After that failed plan, why would Albertans believe that the plan you announced yesterday will be any different?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have the same challenges in health care that I think every Canadian jurisdiction is wrestling with. Five-year plans are important goals, they're important targets, and they're long-term objectives that the government aims to pursue. We will keep working towards them. We'll keep working with the front-line staff, the people that provide that compassionate care, caring for Albertans when they need it. We'll keep working with them, ensuring that there's local decision-making to help ensure that Albertans are always looked after.

Mrs. Forsyth: Minister, you failed every one. Every single one has been a failure.

Health experts have repeatedly told us that the most important measurement of the health care system is the ER benchmark. It's why we held an emergency debate in this Legislature in 2010. Five years ago Albertans were promised that by March of this year 90 per cent of patients would be admitted within eight hours. Here's how we're doing. In Calgary 40 per cent of patients are admitted within eight hours. In Edmonton it is even worse, at about 30. Minister, rejigging isn't helping. What are you going to do about it?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, what we're going to do is ensure that Albertans have a quality health care system that is there for them when they need it. It is a system – let's be very honest – that can use improvement, absolutely. We'll continue to make improvements in the system by working with the front lines to make improvements. There are developments happening. For example, wait time for radiation therapy for cancer was three weeks last year, in March of 2014, whereas it was 5.3 weeks just four years ago. Steps are moving. Things are moving. We are continuing to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, and we'll probably hear more in the next supplemental.

Mrs. Forsyth: Tell that to somebody who's waiting for radiation. Three weeks? Come on, Minister.

Five years ago Albertans were promised that by this March patients needing a specialist would see one within one month of referral. [interjection] It's not funny. Today they wait three months, but in Calgary patients waiting for a spine specialist can't even see one. The U of C is turning people away because they have 1,803 people on a wait-list. This is unacceptable, Minister. Since 2010 we've spent $75 billion on health care, and today someone can't even get the access that they need to get spine surgery. Minister, what are you . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's let the minister respond.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said before, Alberta is a vastly growing jurisdiction. We have more and more people coming to our jurisdiction every single year. Nobody brings a hospital with them. Nobody brings a doctor with them. Nobody brings a specialist with them. That's why we're building infrastructure that's needed for health care. That's why we're working with the front line of health care providers to ensure Albertans are taken care of. That's why when we bring forward our budget next week, it'll be a sound, principled fiscal plan that'll ensure Albertans are getting the core services they need.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Provincial Elections

Mr. Saskiw: It takes a lot of guts, courage, and determination to bring in a fixed election law: that was what the ESRD minister said just three years ago, fawning over his government bringing in a fixed election law. Now, the Premier laughs and shrugs it off, but the reality is that Albertans expect leadership they can trust, not just more of the same broken promises. To the Premier: do you agree with your minister that this law is important to protect the integrity of our democracy?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I think that under our Constitution any election is important to protect our democracy, and as someone who shares my same profession, I'm sure that the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills would agree.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That same ESRD minister spoke about fair play when he rightly noted the unfair manipulation of the election process by former Liberal Prime Minister Jean Chrétien. You see, he called an early and unnecessary election just days after Stockwell Day, a former minister of this province, became federal Leader of the Opposition. Sounds familiar. To the minister: do you agree with your colleague that using Liberal tactics and manipulating the date of an election is below the office of the Premier?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These are very challenging times, as you know. We've got challenges where we've got oil sitting at $40 a barrel or just above that and we've got a $7 billion hole in our budget. But this is a time, as we prepare our budget, when we go out and we talk to Albertans about what's important to them and hear from them. That's what's important to this government, to hear from Albertans.

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Speaker, if you called an election when oil and gas went up and down, we'd have elections all the time.

The Premier once asked Albertans to judge him by, and I quote: the integrity we have displayed. Getting some clarity on how he can break the integrity of his promises and the word of his MLAs matters to Albertans. The PC MLA for Calgary-Shaw said that "fixed election dates do work" and that it's important to not leave "the advantage to the government of the day and denying Albertans the certainty of an election." It's not bad advice. If the government is going to break its own laws, will they at the very least give Albertans the certainty of the election date?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's very important that we talk with Albertans and we hear from Albertans. These are challenging times. These are not business-as-usual times. This Premier has a great deal of integrity. We'll be laying out a plan on March 26 with the Finance minister, and then we'll want to make sure that Albertans have an opportunity for input as we move forward in the years to come.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Agency and Government Management Compensation

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the Premier is set to pin the blame on Albertans with the largest tax increase in Alberta history, today we found more fat, waste, and mismanagement across government. Travel Alberta rakes in $50 million every year from taxpayers. According to the public service pension plan Travel Alberta has 50 managers. The total number of their staff: 100. Minister, how can you justify a $2 billion tax grab when we have one manager for every employee at Travel Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to tell you that the job that Travel Alberta does is quite amazing. The funds that come to Travel Alberta come from the tourism levy, which is specifically set up to promote tourism and develop tourism.

Thank you.

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Speaker, to the minister. The fact is that while your PC government has the most bloated, most expensive government in Canada, you're asking average Albertans to take the hit. After the Wildrose exposed excessive waste like $1,000 dinners and tuxedo rentals, the government ordered a review of management at Travel Alberta. The CEO has been tossed, but records show that there are 50 managers in a 100-employee organization. Minister, how can you expect Albertans to put up with your doom and gloom when you can't even clean up your own house?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The work that Travel Alberta does is incredibly important to the economy of this province. That is how we are diversifying this economy. Money is being brought in by tourists, and we are encouraging Albertans to travel within our province as well.

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Speaker, golf courses, golden handshakes, corporate handouts, and maintaining perks for their bloated bureaucracy: these are PC priorities. While Albertans everywhere are hurting, managers across government have never seen it so good. Fresh off an 8 per cent pay raise this summer, senior managers will see the taxpayer-funded portion of their pension bumped up by 22 per cent, and while they're going to raise taxes, the Premier and his MLAs are the highest paid in Canada. Minister, when are you going to stop cleaning out Albertans' wallets and clean up this mess?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I think the member knows well, or at least it's been explained enough times in this House, that the pension benefits don't change. The government is moving to ensure that the pension fund is sustainable and solvent, and I think that's a prudent thing to do. That's what a real fiscal conservative would do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Investigation into Release of Information

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the government told us that it halted an internal probe into alleged breaches of cabinet confidentiality and FOIP laws because the Privacy Commissioner is conducting an investigation. We also learned that the Calgary Police Service investigation into the same matter has gone cold. The Minister of Infrastructure has been publicly accused of peddling dirt on his colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs to the opposition and the media. To the Minister of Infrastructure: will he categorically deny his involvement in leaking the phone bill?

2:00

Mr. Khan: I thank the hon. member for the question. As the hon. member alluded to, we've answered this question a number of times, Mr. Speaker. This is an independent investigation led by the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner. It would be inappropriate for us to try to interfere or to try to rush the report along. We have confidence that in due time the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner will complete her report.

Dr. Swann: So the minister doesn't deny it.

When faced with these allegations, the only answer the government can muster is that it's part of an ongoing, independent investigation. While we respect the independence of these offices, Albertans have a right to know the scope of the investigations, especially if cabinet ministers are involved. To the Minister of Infrastructure again: are you being investigated by the Privacy Commissioner for breaching the FOIP Act and peddling personal information about your caucus colleagues? Yes or no?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, as I identified yesterday to this member – and maybe he wants to check Hansard, but for his own edification, the police operate fully independently of any political authority in this country. What's happened, if there is an investigation or not: what I would suggest is that this member simply go and contact the Calgary Police Service and ask them because I'm not about to. I don't interfere in investigations.

The Speaker: Thank you.

A final supplemental, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Metro news reports today that the PC Party has called in a former Calgary Police Service officer to investigate claims of alleged bribery in an Edmonton nomination race. While that seems odd in itself, what is more surprising is that allegations against one member of the cabinet led to his resignation while he tries to clear his name, while the Minister of Infrastructure remains in the front bench. Why hasn't the Minister of Infrastructure stepped aside while these investigations are going on? Why the double standard, or is he waiting to be told to step down?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader. The matter is under some review, under some investigation.

Mr. Denis: It is under investigation, that he mentioned, part of the matter, that is. But, Mr. Speaker, again, I've answered these questions before, and I have no further comment.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Surgery Delays at Stollery Children's Hospital

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday I asked why so many children at the Stollery children's hospital have to suffer the emotional toll of cancelled surgeries. I was told that it was a blip, it was flu season, you know, all the kinds of answers we're used to. Today the interim chief of pediatric surgery at Stollery stood with me and challenged the minister's assertions head-on. He told us that it's not a blip; it's a trend, and it's getting much worse. So again to the Premier: will he explain why Alberta families are seeing 100 per cent more cancelled surgeries at the Stollery hospital this year over last?

Mr. Bhullar: Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, because last year there were 1,643 emergency surgeries, and this year there are 1,931 year to date already. So the fact is that there are 287 more emergency cases that have to be dealt with. Approximately 200 of those emergency cases were dealt with without affecting any other surgeries or cancelling them. About 87 of those emergencies did result in other surgeries having to be cancelled or postponed for the day, but it was because of emergencies.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, our numbers don't include emergency surgeries, so it's completely not relevant to this issue.

Now, the minister told us that a number of cancelled surgeries are only 1 per cent of the total number, but he included in-patient and outpatient surgeries. In fact, the cancelled surgeries for in-patient kids are the most serious, and those are the ones that are being turned away. The chief of pediatric surgery suggested today that sometimes the rate of cancellation of in-patient surgeries is as high as 30 per cent. So again to the Premier: can he explain why we don't have enough beds for the kids who need these surgeries?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the member's question and the statements before are something that she needs to consider very wisely because she herself said that in-patient surgeries are the ones that have had to be cancelled or postponed. The reason why that happens is quite simply because an emergency comes in the door. When an emergency comes in the door, they have to find a way to fit in that surgery, and sometimes that means delaying the surgery that is not an emergency.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the chief of pediatric surgery says that the information that we're getting from this government is just wrong, and the problem is that we don't have enough beds. In fact, the Stollery is performing four times as many surgeries now as they did 10 years ago, and the number of beds has hardly changed. They simply aren't doing their job providing the health care for Alberta's children. Why? Why is that?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We continue to ensure that Albertans are getting access to timely and effective health care treatments. This is always a continuous effort to ensure that we are bettering the services for Albertans, but sometimes what is needed are suggestions that are constructive to actually make things better. We welcome them from the other side or doctors or anybody else at any time. We're moving forth to ensure that Albertans have the health care they need when they need it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Maintenance Enforcement

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the ways to build for a better future is to crack down on the deadbeat parents so that Martha and Henry's grandchildren are getting the money to which they are entitled, yet according to Stats Canada 65 per cent of maintenance enforcement cases in this province are in arrears, so those kids don't get to play hockey or go on a school trip. To the Justice minister: why are 65 per cent of MEP accounts in Alberta in arrears?

Mr. Denis: Well, first off, Mr. Speaker, I reject the premise of that question. I don't have the statistics in front of me, but I will tell you one other thing, that maintenance enforcement plays a very important role in dealing with child support. I know that this member agrees. But every case also has to be handled on an individual, case-by-case basis. It's a fundamental principle of justice.

Ms Blakeman: Wow. That was a non answer. All right. I don't think he knows.

Back to the Justice minister. Twenty-eight thousand three hundred and seventy-five maintenance enforcement cases have money owing at the end of the last fiscal year, a total of just under half a billion dollars that Alberta kids are not getting for food, for clothing, for recreation, for school fees, whatever. Why has this number not improved at all, almost, over the last decade?

Mr. Denis: Again, Mr. Speaker, the reality is that with more and more people coming to this province, unfortunately, maintenance enforcement does require some more resources, and we have provided more resources. Maintenance enforcement is an incredible part of our child support program. But again I say to this member that every case must be decided on an individual, case-by-case basis.

Ms Blakeman: No. The year before there were 44,000 enrolled, and then there were 43,000 enrolled last year, so, no, not a whole bunch more.

Back to the same minister. Now, despite this minister consistently going over budget on the maintenance enforcement file, we continue to have kids in Alberta going without because the government couldn't collect for them. Why is that, Minister?

Mr. Denis: Again the same answer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Provincial Grant and Loan Guarantee Programs

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has two seasons, winter and construction. Without the latter season our land and buildings would not be able to weather the winter storms, and, as we all know, Alberta is beginning to feel the effects of a very tight budget. Will we expect to see grants from municipalities cut? While there are some things that we can afford to lose or postpone, funding for roads, land, and building construction are not among them. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs. My municipalities are waiting. When can we expect to find out the recipients of the collaborative government initiative grants?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question, a very important question. I thank the member for asking it because this was asked at AAMD and C as well. Our stakeholders and partners, municipalities, want to know this. Our municipal partners can expect by the end of March – we're starting to roll out now. Alberta community partnership program applications have already been under review, and they'll be rolling out. In addition to that is the small communities fund partnership with the federal government. Application deadlines for those are April 2.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. To the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. The Vegreville hospital sits on a flood risk area as it is right next to a large creek. It's only common sense to be able to deal with this issue before it becomes a bigger issue. Can we expect to see some funding from their request to the community resilience program for the Vegreville hospital?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you. Thank you, hon. member. The hospital itself is sited in an area that is above the 1 in 100 years flood level. However, as seen in past flood events, road access can be impacted during significant flood events. There are a number of programs available to help municipalities mitigate the potential risks of flooding to protect Albertans, and I understand from the Minister of ESRD that an application for flood mitigation funding has been submitted by the town of Vegreville under the Alberta community resiliency program. It's a long-term program that will help reduce floods and will be rolling out soon.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. My final question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. The feeder association loan guarantee program has extended the amount that can be borrowed but demands 5 per cent, which is up to $50,000 of the total value, to be paid before receiving cattle. Can we expect to see this percentage dropped in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In August of last year the minister did change the loan limit from $500,000 to $1 million, and that is the first action taken from the rural development action plan. In fact, a comprehensive review of the plan is in process right now, and we look forward to the results.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Allegations of Criminal Wrongdoing

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this government seems intent on investigating itself. Despite allegations of bribery directed at the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and former Associate Minister of Persons with Disabilities, the government insists that it is purely an internal party matter. Now the PCs have hired a former police officer to conduct their internal investigation. What they don't seem to understand is that allegations that would appear to violate sections 119 and 121 of the Criminal Code of Canada need to be investigated by the real police.

So to the Premier: will you do the right thing and forward the sworn statement that is . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice. The time for the question expired, so I have to recognize you.

Mr. Denis: Okay. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If this member has any information that he thinks would be of interest to a law enforcement agency, I highly encourage him to go and contact that particular agency. Any further answers have been done on Monday. I would suggest that he check Hansard.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. An interesting answer since the information that I am referring to was addressed to the Premier. Would you give the same advice to the Premier that you just gave to me?

Mr. Denis: Again, Mr. Speaker, this has been asked and answered.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While I want to give the government one last chance to do the right thing and, frankly, to do their job, if the government won't appoint a special prosecutor or forward the evidence to the police themselves, then we will. Last chance, Mr. Minister. Will you do the right thing and appoint a special prosecutor or forward the evidence to the police? Yes or no?

Mr. Denis: Again, Mr. Speaker, to appoint a special prosecutor, what we would have to do is actually have a charge laid. To my interest there has been no charge laid. Again, if he has any information, this member should be declaring it directly to the police and taking it out of this Chamber.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month the Canadian Food Inspection Agency confirmed a positive case of BSE in an Alberta cow. Now, the animal did not enter the human food or animal feed systems, and that's vitally important, but, as we all know, when it was first diagnosed in 2003, BSE caused a widespread export ban on Canadian cattle and devastated our beef industry. We've worked hard to reassure both domestic and world-wide customers that our beef is safe and to reopen our export markets. Now this. My question to the associate minister of rural development: what specific action is our government taking to support our beef producers?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. McDonald: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The cow was identified through the BSE surveillance program and, as the member said, did not enter the food system, and there were no implications for human health. We continue to work closely with the Canadian Food Inspection Agency as they are the lead on this investigation. Alberta and Canada have a comprehensive animal health food safety system in place to assist the situation and have demonstrated that it does work.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Starke: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the U.S. lobby group R-CALF is using this case to justify the continuing requirement for very damaging mandatory country of origin labelling, that costs our producers millions of dollars, what specific measures is our government taking to refute these spurious and vexatious arguments linking BSE and MCOOL?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. McDonald: Well, thank you again, Mr. Speaker. As the member mentioned, there is no legitimate connection between BSE and mandatory country of origin labelling. The World Trade Organization has already ruled three times that the U.S. is failing to meet its trade obligations because of COOL. We are very confident that the WTO will once again rule in Canada's favour, and we expect that report to be released in the spring.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that we export over 1 billion dollars' worth of beef annually and given the vital importance of maintaining open export markets and given that China, South Korea, Taiwan, Indonesia, Peru, and Belarus have all placed a ban on imports of our beef, what exactly is our government doing to stop more countries from joining that list?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few countries have temporarily halted their beef imports. Now, the total impact for Alberta is less than 5 per cent. Our major trading partners have indicated that they're confident in the processes that we have in place, and all steps are being taken to ensure comprehensive and effective investigations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-McClung.

Legal Aid Funding

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It is well known that our courts, particularly family courts, are clogged with people self-representing because they can't afford a lawyer but, paradoxically, make too much money for legal aid. Now, this government's negligence on legal aid in effect makes the children of the Marthas and Henrys out there fall through the cracks with repeated delays in our family courts. To the Justice minister: why does the minister feel that it is appropriate to let almost 50 per cent of the children and grandchildren of Martha and Henry languish through family court with no legal aid assistance for parents to hire lawyers?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, the provincial government funds approximately 80 per cent of legal aid already, and through an intersessional deposit we provide an additional 5 and a half million dollars for legal aid. Of course, we have a budget coming next week. I would suggest that this member stay tuned.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Back to the same minister: given that as of the upcoming budget the considerable expense of any court-appointed legal counsel comes from legal aid coffers, thereby further diminishing their funds available for regular legal aid, is the minister committed to covering court-ordered counsel past April out of the department's resources?

Mr. Denis: Again, Mr. Speaker, this member will have to stay tuned for the March 26 budget.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Well, can the minister share with us his reasoning for failing to approve, despite being required to do so, Legal Aid's revised internal budget for 2014-15, which they submitted back before Christmas? How come?

Mr. Denis: Again, Mr. Speaker, we have to act in the best interests of all actors, including taxpayers. Five and a half million dollars will be provided in addition to legal aid this year, and I also raised this at the national meeting of Justice ministers several months ago, about the federal government's lack of funding for this important program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Postsecondary Education Accessibility

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the low price of oil, layoffs are occurring across many job fields and industries. Often when people are laid off, they choose to go back to school in order to update their skills or train in different fields of study completely. Given these concerns my question is for the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education. Does the minister have concrete measures to accommodate the demand of this possible influx in enrolment?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can say that there is capacity across Campus Alberta, and the system is responsive to changes in demand. My department is working very closely with our Campus Alberta partners to determine how both short-term and long-term pressures can be addressed, and this is something that we do on an ongoing basis. Accessibility is extremely important and will be one of the biggest priorities in our postbudget consultation process across Campus Alberta. I look forward to the member's input as we work with all of our Campus Alberta partners to build a system that is focused on accessibility, sustainability, and excellence.

Mr. Xiao: To the same minister: given that students may have to live away from home in order to obtain the skills they require, are financial support systems in place for living arrangements?

2:20

Mr. Scott: Again, Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to say that Student Aid Alberta provides funding to help Albertans cover the living costs associated with pursuing a postsecondary education. When a student applies for Student Aid Alberta loans and grants, their living costs are assessed using a standard monthly budget based on their marital status and whether they have dependent children. We will continue to review these costs to ensure Albertans get the funding that they need to pursue their postsecondary education. The member will also be happy to know that outside of student loans, we invest $234 million in student aid supports. These supports include scholarships, bursaries, grants, and debt management programs.

Mr. Xiao: Again to the same minister: given that the government has promised to rein in spending, how much funding is currently available to assist out-of-work Albertans with their postsecondary education needs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is right that we will be very fiscally prudent with government spending going forward. We know Alberta is facing a significant fiscal challenge. We will continue to support Albertans who want to further their training and their postsecondary education. In 2013-2014 nearly 61,000 Albertans received a total of $775 million in combined federal and provincial loans and grants to support their educational goals. In addition, the Alberta government also provided $74 million in scholarships and other awards. In recent years we made it easier to access student loan funding by streamlining processes.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Flood Recovery Funding

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is grabbing almost $20 million from taxpayers to rebuild the Kananaskis golf course despite the fact that thousands of Albertans are still waiting for disaster relief claims to be addressed. Minister, you've missed your target deadline to complete 80 per cent of eligible DRP claims by over a year now. How can you possibly justify spending taxpayer money like a drunken sailor on this golf course when a hundred per cent of flood victims are not yet back on their feet?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To start with, I'd like to correct an inaccuracy. Of 10,500 flood claim cases, 80 per cent of those files have been completed, and we've added 15 extra people to ensure that we'll have those completed by June. I want to also say that the estimated cost to rebuild is $14.6 million, and $2.3 million has been spent on work to date. The matter is certainly under review, and it is right now. The dollars that were spent, the $2.3 million to date, for the golf course consists of flood cleanup and salvage.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's two years later, and Albertans from Canmore to Highwood are still waiting for disaster relief. I think Albertans have been patient, but when they see this PC government spending $16 million, $14 million on a golf course, whichever it is, when they're still trying to rebuild their lives, they have a right to be concerned, I think. Minister, is rebuilding golf courses really worth more to you than getting people back into their homes?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to say that the Premier shares concerns about this matter as well. No further funding will be spent on this, and the matter is under review right now.

Mr. Stier: Okay. Well, that's interesting. That's a new piece of information.

Minister, given that you're back on track to rebuild the golf course by June '16 but missed your target deadline to close eligible DRP claims by one year and counting, can you tell us when you will finally get around, then, to closing a hundred per cent of all eligible DRP files and getting the money to the people that really need it?

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With all due respect, I'll say it slower. We have said that we've added 15 extra people. We have committed to have the outstanding cases, just under 2,000 cases, completed by June of this year. We've put the staff in place to do that, and we're on target to do that. As I also said in the question before, there is no further funding for the golf course, and it's under review.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Small-business Assistance

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Small businesses have a profound impact here in our province, making up 95 per cent of all businesses in Alberta. In 2012 Alberta small-business GDP per capita was almost $20,000 while the Canadian average was about $13,000. Last year I had the privilege of working on creating what became the small-business strategy for Alberta, a strategy to become an action plan that responds to the needs expressed by Alberta small businesses, making it simpler to do business in Alberta. My question is for the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education. What's this government's plan in addition to the small-business strategy and the Common Business Number Act, which was introduced on March 11, to ensure the burden on small business is reduced even further, allowing Alberta...

The Speaker: Thank you.

We'll have to hear the answer now. The time for the question has expired.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much. I'd like to thank this member for all his work on the small-business file. Well done.

Alberta is the best place in Canada to do business, and we intend to keep it that way, Mr. Speaker. As a key contributor to the small-business strategy the member knows that small business needs a big voice in government, and that's what we are giving to them. Deliverables from the small-business strategy allow us to have constant feedback from Alberta small-business owners and entrepreneurs. Our new business adviser service is also up and delivering on their goal to get small business the information they need with a hands-off approach, no runarounds, and no red tape.

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: in light of the government's diversification economic strategy, what are you doing to ensure that those that work in Alberta's labour industry experience as little negative economic impact as possible during what are becoming very difficult times?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government of Alberta provides support to help employers and workers through these difficult times, including career counselling and resumé preparation. We are working with underrepresented groups such as youth and aboriginal people to connect them to the workforce and ensure that they have the skills to stay gainfully employed. In January, for example, we joined the federal government and Women Building Futures to announce funding for their online learning initiative to help train women in construction trades in all corners of this province.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Quest: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what efforts, if any, will be taken to help companies avoid layoffs and to encourage continued labour investment here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Scott: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Although we are seeing some short-term declines in new job openings across multiple sectors, we expect Alberta's labour market to remain strong in the years ahead. Employers considering layoffs are encouraged to take advantage of the federal work-sharing program, designed to help employers and employees avoid layoffs when business activity decreases. We're also working with employers to educate and train Alberta's workers through programs such as the Canada-Alberta job grant, through which more than 490 Alberta employers and 3,450 employees have been approved for a variety of training programs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The former Minister of Service Alberta expanded the number of public board members at AMVIC and filled it with close friends. The present minister appears to be unaware of this. Take Andy Hayher; this member is clearly close to the former minister. On Twitter they bragged about selling memberships for this Premier. Minister, will you review the appointments at AMVIC and ensure these members are there because of qualifications and not connections?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for the question. What I want to assure you is that I have met with the AMVIC board. I want to assure the hon. member that the members of this board add value to AMVIC. The members of this board are passionate Albertans who care deeply about our consumer protection agenda, and we're very lucky to have these members onboard.

Mr. Strankman: Interesting information, Mr. Speaker.

Given that two other board members went to law school with the former minister and considering that they are personal friends, I continue to ask, Minister: are you ready to clean house and make merit-based appointments at AMVIC?

Mr. Khan: As the hon. member alludes to, Mr. Speaker, a number of members of the AMVIC board are lawyers. They're professionals. They care passionately about the consumer protection agenda that we have in Service Alberta. I want to assure the hon. member that all of our members on that board are passionate Albertans who are doing a very good job.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, the minister is clearly not doing his job. He has a job to protect Alberta's consumers, but he is only protecting PC friends. Minister, you keep hiding behind a draft report. This report will tell Albertans everything they need to know about this agency. You know the report is ready. This House knows the report is ready. Will you do the right thing and release this report today?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, again, this member has asked this question a number of times, and my answer remains consistent. We have a draft review. We're working with the board on the draft review. Our intention is to make that report public, and we will in due course.

2:30 Support for Victims of Child Sexual Abuse

Mr. Jeneroux: Mr. Speaker, Edmonton's Zebra Child Protection Centre, which serves a good portion of northern Alberta, is literally bursting at the seams, so much so that they've had to make a public appeal for $1 million so they are able to expand their space to properly serve the growing numbers of children needing their specialized help. My question is to the Minister of Human Services. What is this government doing to ensure that victims served by centres like Zebra are receiving the services they need and don't have to resort to public appeals?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No child should ever have to suffer sexual abuse or exploitation. The Zebra Child Protection Centre does excellent work, and we provide service to a lot of children and families. Currently we are working on a proposal with the Sheldon Kennedy centre, the Caribou, and the Zebra to develop a provincial practice framework for this, and I can assure you that in this department about $26 million is spent every year to help these children and families.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General: why is this government not adequately funding Zebra and any other community organizations like them who do the heavy lifting to protect our children?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I echo the comments of the Minister of Human Services. One child being exploited or abused is obviously one too many. That's why our ministry provides a three-year, $450,000 grant from the victims of crime fund to the Zebra centre. I've toured the Zebra centre. They as well as the Sheldon Kennedy Child Advocacy Centre in Calgary do amazing work, and I think it's a good use of the victims of crime fund.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how are you working with the representatives of the centre to ensure that these victimized children are not further traumatized in our courts?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, both of these centres, particularly the Zebra centre, which the Member for Edmonton-South West talks about, provide very important work, but they also provide wraparound services in the context of the children's age and the circumstances they may have. The Crown prosecution service, the RCMP, the Edmonton police, the victim service providers: they all work together at this one place. It's a one-stop shop. Again, not only is it a good use of our tax dollars; it supports victims first, which is part of Alberta Justice's mission.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Calgary-Hawkwood.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The deregulated electricity system in our province has resulted in a number of middlemen profiting off Albertans, causing retail prices to remain among the highest in the country. More than this, we've learned that some customers of Direct Energy have been receiving faulty bills for property they don't even own or for entire apartment complexes. To the Minister of Energy: will you admit that the deregulated system, that your government sponsored, has failed wildly in providing Albertans with affordable electricity?

Mr. Oberle: Not at all, Mr. Speaker, because it just simply isn't true. In the time since deregulation, in which we introduced a private market for generation in this province, Alberta has built an infrastructure build as large as the province of Saskatchewan, all of it without one penny of public debt. British Columbia carries $20 billion; Ontario, $44 billion; Quebec, $54 billion in public debt; Alberta, zero.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm talking about consumer debt.

Given that even the Premier himself admitted last October that we've been paying more than we should for electricity in our province and given that these unnecessary electricity retailers add costs to Albertans' power bills, back to the same minister: will your government take action to save Albertans money on their electricity bills by removing these middlemen?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the Premier said no such thing, as a matter of fact, last fall. What he did say is that he would look into the regulated rate option to determine whether or not fluctuations were impacting consumers. We did exactly that, and we're moving to act on that right now.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that customers who have been locked into electricity contracts have not experienced the advantages that come with lower wholesale prices and given that some of the retailers have been investigated in other provinces for forging signatures on household utility contracts, when will this government finally do the right thing, re-regulate electricity in this province, and save Albertans money?

Mr. Oberle: It's just simply not going to happen, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member, rather than passing innuendo, has any evidence whatsoever of anybody forging signatures, I very highly recommend that he forward that to the police. Otherwise, the innuendo is not a useful part of the debate in this House.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

Asia Pacific Trade

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Market access is crucial to the Alberta economy. One of the new initiatives, called the trans-Pacific partnership, or TPP, led by the Prime Minister of Canada, promotes free trade among countries like Canada, China, Australia, Japan, and other Pacific nations. My question is to the hon. Associate Minister of Asia Pacific Relations. How are we working with the federal government to capture this opportunity and advance Albertans' interests?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Opening new markets for Alberta's goods and services is the most pressing issue facing our province. The trans-Pacific partnership holds tremendous opportunity for Alberta, representing a market of 792 million people and a combined GDP of close to 40 per cent of the world's economy. A strong working relationship with our federal counterparts is critical to our success internationally. I'm pleased to inform the member that since Canada entered into the TPP in 2012, Alberta has been invited to participate in 14 negotiating rounds to represent . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's hear the first supplemental.

Mr. Luan: To the same minister: given that China is paramount to Alberta's resources, however China is not part of the table for TPP, how is our government helping to resolve this?

Ms Woo-Paw: Mr. Speaker, China's fast-growing economy holds a lot of opportunity for this province. Our exports to China have more than tripled in the last decade, making it our second-largest trading partner, and 80 per cent of China's investment in Canada, $54 billion, is in the province of Alberta. Some of the examples of things that we're doing in this area include the Ministry of IIR working with external stakeholders to offer Alberta's SMEs seminars to ensure that they have the competence to tap into this market. Our international offices are helping companies both ways, and we are also opening an office in Guangzhou, China, this year.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Luan: To the same minister: Alberta has the potential to export large quantities of agricultural products to Asia Pacific countries. What is our government doing to promote that?

Ms Woo-Paw: Mr. Speaker, like I said, a strong collaborative working relationship with our federal counterpart is critical. Some of the things that we're doing in this regard include working together to eliminate tariff barriers that impact our agricultural sector and active participation in trade agreement development such as the recently implemented Canada-Korea trade agreement. That all helps to enhance exports and trade to this very dynamic, fast-growing region, in turn creating jobs and creating wealth for Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by Stony Plain.

Utilities Consumer Advocate Advisory Board

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past week was the annual AAMD and C convention. This convention was a great opportunity for the provincial government to connect with our municipal partners. At this convention a number of municipal leaders brought forward concerns that this government is planning to dissolve the advisory board of the Utilities Consumer Advocate. To the Minister of Service Alberta: after our municipal partners have expressed their concern with dissolving the UCA Advisory Board, does this government still intend to take away their only method for stakeholder input into the unregulated utility market?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question. He's absolutely correct. We did meet with a number of stakeholders at the recent conference of the AAMD and C. We met with some partners from AUMA, and we met with some members of the board. Traditionally the UCA Advisory Board has played a role of policy and regulatory advisement. Recently they've developed into more of a stakeholder group working with the UCA, and because of that I'm very happy to say that we will not be dissolving the UCA Advisory Board.

Mr. Casey: To the same minister: if the UCA Advisory Board was established to provide advice to the advocate when the market was deregulated, what will be their role moving forward now that the advocate is established?

Mr. Khan: Again, I'd like to thank the member for the question. That's a very good question. I've recently had a number of discussions with the chair of the UCA Advisory Board as well as members of the board. There's a commitment to work with our department to develop a framework for that stakeholder engagement piece, which we all recognize is very important in the success of the UCA and their office.

Mr. Casey: To the same minister: if the advisory board is still required to ensure that stakeholders can bring their concerns forward, is the office of the UCA doing an effective job?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure this hon. member and all members of the House that the UCA and his office are doing an outstanding job protecting consumers when it comes to issues around electricity and gas from a consumer perspective. I want to inform the House that last year the UCA received over 28,000 calls and has fielded almost 112,000 hits to their website. They do a remarkable job. We're proud to support that office.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The time for question period has expired. In 30 seconds from now we will continue with Members' Statements, and we'll start with Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Edmonton-McClung.

Melinda Hunt

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday our family received devastating news. We were shattered, we were broken, and over the weekend we took some time for togetherness. Today I want to tell you the story of Melinda Hunt. Melinda is a vibrant, smart, amazing 18-year-old, who our family loves and adores. She is my niece, and her dad, Ron, was my brother. I felt strongly that I couldn't do her justice today, so I'm going to tell her story in her own words.

Last week my neurologist said: I'm sorry, Melinda; you have juvenile Huntington's disease. Of course, I broke down, and my world shattered. Then he opened the other envelope and said: you have 63 CAG repeats. The juvenile version means that the symptoms of Huntington's start earlier, and they're more intense, and they progress much faster.

I started to realize that I act exactly how my dad did when he was sick. At work it was 10 times harder for me than it should be, my short-term memory was messing with me, and I was having intense troubles counting money, making change, or counting anything. I would stop what I was doing, and I would break down. My dad had a rare case of Huntington's and had high CAG repeats also. It came with the label that he's going to die young, and he did. My CAG repeats are higher. That means mine is worse than his.

With such a high number of CAG repeats and the term juvenile Huntington's, I'm terrified that my death isn't far into my future. I'll be 19 in three months. I've just learned to live life as best I can. I love it and make the best of it, like my dad. I don't hate my dad for giving me his disease. He's my hero, and he always will be.

However, that doesn't mean my world isn't shattered. I've never felt my heart sink so low into my chest. I haven't cried so much since my dad passed, and I feel sick. Having them look at your face and tell you that you have Huntington's disease and you're going to die is paralyzing.

Mr. Speaker, we have one job, and that is to live an extraordinary life. We share this story with all Albertans to help bring awareness and some compassion to those with such rare diseases as Huntington's.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Seniors' Supports

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government knows that Alberta's seniors are an essential part of our communities, who need adequate programs to support their needs. Through their many sacrifices they have enriched our communities. Ensuring that our seniors are well cared for and well looked after is something I am deeply committed to. Seniors make up 7 per cent of my wonderful constituency of Edmonton-McClung.

Like all great societies, we as Albertans are only as good as those who have come before us. Because of all the hard work they have done to help build this great province that we know and love today, it is our obligation, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that seniors across our communities continue to have the support they need to live independent and fulfilling lives and that they are provided with the right care in the right place at the right time.

That is why the government of Alberta has been acting quickly to provide more spaces for seniors and to enhance the safety of seniors' lodges and apartments across the province. Of the more than 26 new spaces almost 400 will be allocated for long-term care throughout the province and more than 300 for restorative care in Edmonton and Calgary. Supportive living provides a homelike setting where residents remain as independent as possible with access to services and care that meets their changing needs.

Mr. Speaker, I'm grateful that we have a government which has made seniors a priority not just through words but by action.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Bill 21

Safety Codes Amendment Act, 2015

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 21, the Safety Codes Amendment Act, 2015.

The amendments will strengthen the administration, governance, and enforcement of the safety codes system throughout Alberta. The purpose of Bill 21 is to ensure that Albertans continue to be safe no matter where they live, work, and play. I look forward to speaking more about the benefits of this legislation, and I'm confident that it will result in enhanced safety for Albertans.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Bill 205
Police (Protection of Victims of Sexual Violence)
Amendment Act, 2015

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise this afternoon to introduce Bill 205, the Police (Protection of Victims of Sexual Violence) Amendment Act, 2015, on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

This bill will allow the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General to make regulations governing the procedures and processes for police services to follow in undertaking and managing investigations into sexual assaults. This will complement the work that's being done by the Minister of Human Services and the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. I invite you to join me in debating this important piece of legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 205 read a first time]

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Government House Leader, were you trying to catch my eye with respect to Bill 21, as moved by the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane?

Mr. Denis: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me. I would move that Bill 21 be added to Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View or someone on behalf of? Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you very much. I do have two tablings on behalf of the hon. member. These, of course, are related to the questions that he asked today. The first is a book by Anne Geddes, Protecting Our Tomorrows: Portraits of—oh, I'm not going to get through this word properly. It's portraits of children who have suffered from meningitis. I will table that.

The second tabling on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Mountain View is the commentary by the C.D. Howe Institute, A Shot in the Arm: How to Improve Vaccination Policy in Canada.

May I proceed with my own tablings, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Yes, please.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Earlier I had introduced the president and the chief executive officer of the Edmonton Social Planning Council, who are celebrating their 75th anniversary this year. I'm very honoured to be able to table the appropriate number of copies of their most recent report, which is entitled A Profile of Poverty in Edmonton. This is an absolute gold mine of information, and the one on my desk is well thumbed. Just as an example, they talk about how the province and the region are producing a lot of jobs, but we still have over 59 per cent of Albertan children in poverty, living in families where one or both parents worked full-time for the entire year. There's that and a number of other excellent observations and statistics complete with charts. I recommend that everyone take advantage of this report.

Thank you very much.

2:50

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others?

Seeing none, permit me, then, to rise and table today the requisite number of copies of the 2013 Legislative Assembly Office annual report, titled Respecting Our Past, Embracing Our Future.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Campbell, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, pursuant to the Members of the Legislative Assembly Pension Plan Act the Members of the Legislative Assembly pension plan annual report for the year ended March 31, 2014; pursuant to the Insurance Act the Automobile Insurance Rate Board 2014 annual report.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. There are no points of order today. That's a good sign of progress being made in a harmonious fashion. Therefore, let us move on.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Committee Membership Changes

23. Mr. Denis moved:
Be it resolved that the following changes to
- (a) the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services be approved: that Mr. McAllister replace Mr. McDonald;
 - (b) the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future be approved: that Dr. Starke replace Mr. McDonald.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, this is a debatable motion. Does anyone wish to rise? I see no one.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: The question has been called, so let us ask the Government House Leader if he wishes to close debate or go straight to the vote.

Mr. Denis: I would move that we close debate on this controversial motion.

[Government Motion 23 carried]

Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 18
Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. I wasn't going to rise to speak to this particular bill at Committee of the Whole previously, but due to some of the responses earlier today in question period I think it's imperative that we do discuss this.

In response to some questions from the Member for Livingstone-Macleod the Minister of Municipal Affairs had indicated that they were not certain that they were going to proceed with the fixing-up of the Kananaskis golf course. So she is now requesting sixteenish million dollars in the appropriation interim supply without knowing whether or not those dollars are going to be used. So my question here, of course, is: are you or are you not going to use these monies? If you're not going to use these monies, let's take it out of this bill. Clearly, it's not a priority. Wouldn't it be the safe thing to do, to just take this out of the bill itself if you're not going to use these?

I mean, Madam Chair, like, there's this massive inconsistency, and I think this is going to be the conclusion of it. I think this issue is not going to go away because Albertans right now, when they're going to hear about doom and gloom and the budget and how terrible everything is, they're going to at the same time say: well, why would you request upwards of tens of millions of dollars to fix a golf course if things are so bad, especially when the minister said that she wasn't certain whether these monies were going to be used? I just want to know whether or not this government is actually going to proceed with that.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. As I said during question period, there are concerns that we have about this. It is under review. If we don't use it, we won't spend it; it'll be left in there. That's very clear: if it's not used, it will not be spent.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any others who wish to comment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to rise again and speak around the issues that are brought to the fore by Bill 18, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015. I did have some time to do some checking. I was saying that previous versions of the interim supply had listed an end date of June. In fact, they hadn't. They've always listed the end of the entire fiscal year that's being addressed. So in this case they are talking about the fiscal year ending March 31, 2016. The outline and promise or plan from the government has always been given orally that the money is to be used and a budget will be passed before the end of June. I, unfortunately, was not able to find in Hansard where the government has indicated that this time. So I don't know if it's the end of June. It might be the end of July.

I was also really interested that the Minister of Energy was so taken with my speeches on this particular subject that he wanted to hear more and even different versions. You know, honestly, Madam Chair, I am more than happy to give him a different version if I can have a different government that actually delivers information in a different way, in a way that actually gives information.

I continue to be quite alarmed by the amount of information that this government won't release. It won't give us any kind of adequate information in budget documents. The written questions and motions for return are delivered a year after the fact, after they've agreed to produce the information. For my purposes, receiving something in March 2015 that was agreed to in April 2014, you know, you figure that they sat on it that long deliberately. I mean, the press releases were press releases, for heaven's sake. We could have had the background to this information pretty quickly, but the useful part of that was long past useful to me by the time I got the information.

It's a game that the government plays about what they're doing. I think for the public there is less and less patience for that hoarding of information because with the Internet, in this day and age, lots of people can get access. They can watch the live streaming. They can go back and see what people have said previously and how ministers are deflecting the questions. I think that's a real issue.

Of course, with interim supply, you know, every question we ask, the answer is: wait for the budget. So it's a bit of a frustrating debate because we're not given any information to go on, and then the government gets irritated when we stand up and say: there's no information here. So it's a bit of a mutual-loathing loop, if I could put it that way.

As well, the government has moved to this odd – I was going to say queer, but that's not appropriate – system of the four different categories. No, I don't have a problem with adding them all up. I just find it really interesting that the government itself can't manage to do that in its own documents. They leave it for everyone to whip out their calculators and, I guess, do it while we're standing here.

3:00

An Hon. Member: Where's your calculator?

Ms Blakeman: It's on my computer, but I'll get it for you if you really need it.

Of course, there have been a number of people that have noted the extra amount of money, quite a high amount of money, $28 million, that is being allocated to the Chief Electoral Officer. I'm less exercised about this than some of my opposition colleagues because I've seen this one come around before. They always have enough money for the full election in the third year of an election cycle, and frankly this is why: if the government goes early. I've had one other election that was called early, by the then Premier Klein, who called one at three and a half years, but the rest of them were all around the four-year mark. It is extraordinary to have an election called almost three years to the day from the last one. I think the 2012 election was April 22. The bookmakers are telling us April 27 this time, so, you know, five days' difference.

We're looking forward to seeing the budget a week from now, and I really encourage the government to share some information. Given the budget process that we now work under, when I talk to people about, you know, why it is important to have opposition, why opposition matters, I talk about holding the government accountable, but I'm also showing how the government has moved the measuring sticks. What are they called in football? There are two guys with chains, one on either end, and they move it along for the downs. Help me. I just don't do the sports metaphors very well.

Ms Pastoor: Linesmen.

Ms Blakeman: Linesmen. Okay. So the linesmen. Thank you very much.

I'd like to see that move forward because we get so little time to debate this and almost no information to debate it with. I just don't think it's serving the government well or anybody else well when we have to plod our way through: “Okay. Well, what is this covering? How many employees are there? What happened to this program? Is that program still there?” It’s not hard to put that information in, and I don’t think anyone in the public would begrudge a couple of extra pages in the budget documents in order to have that information be made available to not only the opposition but, in fact, the public at large and business and everyone else that uses those books.

It’s just a little cheap, a little churlish of government to continually refuse to do this, and I just loathe that budget process. It is almost a waste of time at this point. We can get so little information, and we’ve got so little time to ask. I mean, honestly, 10 minutes allocated to discuss the budget of Health at $17 billion: you know, yeah, sure, that’s the worst example, but that’s one of almost every department I can think of where we’re trying to get information out of government ministers that should be easy to get.

Unfortunately, it’s all devolved into a rather tawdry and sad situation now. I hope that we can see some improvement, but you know, Madam Chair, I really don’t think we’re going to until the government gets such a scare that it will smarten up. We did see a bit of a scare when they thought the Wildrose was really going to cream them. All of a sudden there were better manners in the House and a bit more cordial reaction between people, a little bit more willing to co-operate, but after they ate most of the Wildrose, that disappeared, so I really don’t have very high expectations of this government. I’d love to be surprised, but I don’t have very high expectations.

You know, what am I supposed to say to this interim supply? Yeah – whoopee – we’re going to give a blank cheque to the government to spend billions of dollars without any idea about what they’re going to do with it? We, hopefully, are going to get a budget document next Thursday, but then I look at a number of other things that the Premier said were going to happen that didn’t happen, and I think: well, I guess that’s not for sure either because we could get to next Thursday and for whatever reason he’s decided not to put a budget down or lay a budget in front of us. I just hope that those are a few of the promises that the government can keep, and I look forward to actually seeing the numbers that are supposed to be in the documents.

Thanks very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It’s my honour to rise and speak here in Committee of the Whole on Bill 18, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015. I’ve got a few different comments and concerns about this bill. I will be supporting this bill because I do understand the intention and the necessity, so that the government can continue to provide services and meet its obligations from April until June. I do find it interesting, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out, that in previous years the interim supply has not been requested by government to go until June, which raises some eyebrows and confirms suspicions about, likely, a looming election.

Some of my concerns with the bill are because the spending is significant in certain areas, that I’m going to highlight momentarily, which causes concern if that is an indicator of the spending that the upcoming budget may look like. I mean, part of my concern – I’ll get right to it, Madam Chair – is the increase in spending in Culture and Tourism. If we look at what’s being requested in this bill, if that was to continue throughout the year, it would amount to a huge budget increase to Culture and Tourism. Now, this budget increase would be positive in the increase to tourism for the province, the economic impacts. Obviously, we’re well aware that tourism is one of the significant contributors to revenue in the province and has a significant economic benefit to Alberta.

But our hope and my hope, Madam Chair, is that if there is this significant increase, there would be an increase to the funding of arts. We’ve been advocating for increased support to the arts for many years. We know that the arts also have a significant economic impact and value to communities, both directly and indirectly, throughout the province. We have been advocates of increased funding for the Foundation for the Arts, more support for television and film production within the province, and supports for libraries, et cetera. So if investment in culture and in the arts is actually increased in this budget, that’s something that is very positive, in our view.

A concern is that there is less capital investment in Health, Madam Chair. You know, we’ve been releasing and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona especially has been releasing much information in the last few months on the state of Alberta hospitals and the need for more hospitals because of the growth that our province has been experiencing for some time and continues to experience. This week, for example, we released documents that show that only nine months into the 2014-15 fiscal year 1,376 surgeries have been cancelled across the province because of capacity issues. That’s a grave concern to us. The number of surgeries postponed at the Stollery children’s hospital has almost already doubled last year’s numbers, and we’re still in the first quarter.

We released documents highlighting the number of times that the most overcapacity protocols have been activated, which is alarming. The highest risk level overcapacity protocol was triggered 43 times in September of last year in Calgary emergency rooms alone, including September 24, 2014, when every single one of Calgary’s ERs reported triggering high-risk overcapacity protocols. In Edmonton emergency rooms in October 2014 overcapacity triggers were activated 344 times.

We released documents on the need to expand the maternal child unit at the Northern Lights regional hospital, showing that this facility was already insufficient to deal with the current population of Fort McMurray, let alone if the population increases, as is expected.

It’s also quite alarming, Madam Chair, when you look at the state of and the ability of our facilities to keep up, especially when you look at the growth within the province. I’d draw attention to Fort McMurray and Grande Prairie. As far as the growth rates and their birth rates, Fort McMurray and Grande Prairie are the two fastest growing cities in the country. I mean, these are some examples of the serious need for more hospitals in this province, but from the indication in Bill 18 the capital investments in terms of interim estimates are not likely to reach the investment level that is desperately needed throughout the province.

Now, Madam Chair, our hospitals don’t only have issues with overcapacity, but unfortunately they are in a very pitiful state as far as their integrity and structure. You know, it’s evidenced here, clearly, that the PC government has squandered our resources and failed to invest in hospital infrastructure, which is very alarming. The Alberta NDP has released AHS preservation lists which show the projects that need to be completed to ensure our hospitals can continue to function. These lists show 37 incomplete projects, totalling $10 million, at the Chinook regional hospital and 16 overdue projects, totalling almost $5 million, at St. Michael’s health centre. For Calgary hospitals these lists outline $100 million worth of overdue infrastructure maintenance projects in three major Calgary hospitals.

On the 17th of March we released documents about the deferred maintenance at Edmonton area hospitals, and they outline $225 million needed for critical infrastructure projects, which include 10 fire safety upgrades, including sprinklers, fire alarms, and long-awaited lightning rods; 11 unfunded asbestos abatements at the Royal Alex alone; multiple elevator replacements and upgrades; mould abatement at the Misericordia. Clearly, we are in need of more investment in health infrastructure, definitely not less.

Within the capital budget for Infrastructure we have schools, hospitals, among other things. Madam Chair, as I have travelled the province speaking especially with school boards from around the province, they are desperate for dollars for deferred maintenance. You know, they're getting to a point in their deferred maintenance price tag where schools are soon going to be in the category of being unsafe, or it is going to be unaffordable for school boards to do all the major infrastructure upgrades that are necessary just to keep the doors open. We're not even talking about modernizations. Considering there is such a shortage of school spaces, of classrooms, and of new schools, this is just going to exacerbate an already ballooning problem.

Again, to jump back to our hospitals, there's definitely a thread here going through all of our different infrastructure. I mean, I could go on about bridges and roads as well, but when we look at hospitals, they're already bursting at the seams, and there already is a shortage of beds. Again, it's been pointed out by my colleagues that we need a serious investment. We needed it many years ago. If this bill is any indication of the dollars that are going to be injected into our health care system and our education system as far as infrastructure goes, we are really in a lot of trouble here, Madam Chair.

I just wanted to mention that on February 18 the Edmonton Catholic school board reported they were going to be spending $3.5 million for necessary infrastructure upgrades, money they could have otherwise spent or used directly on educating students. This PC government is forcing school boards to divert money away from the classroom, away from one-on-one instruction, away from educational assistance and supports needed in our schools to ensure that kids get the one-on-one support that they need. They will be forced to divert money away from the classroom to spend on updates and on necessary infrastructure like ceiling repairs because this PC government continues to inadequately fund our education system, our schools, and is neglecting the urgency with which we need to invest in our schools and hospitals.

Madam Chair, we have a document that was released to us through FOIP that outlines an $850 million deferred maintenance price tag for schools alone across the province. That is significant. That number is going to continue to increase and will balloon. As that number increases and we fail to invest in the critical infrastructure that Albertans deserve and need, that price tag is going to be exacerbated and grow very quickly as things like roof repairs lead to leaks, you know, and water damage within these very buildings and are going to be much more costly to repair than if they had been caught early on.

Our roads and bridges are desperate for investment. The Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, AAMDC, estimates that $70 million a year for 10 years consistently is needed for bridges and bridge repair alone. I mean, that is again something that is critical for trade and getting goods to market. Many of the roads and bridges throughout the province are used by the oil and gas industry, our forestry industry, our agricultural industry to move products to market. You know, when a bridge is forced to be shut down because of potential issues of safety, that has a huge economic impact on families and on the Alberta economy. Failing to invest in infrastructure, which this PC government has done year after year, is not the solution and is going to have a very significant negative impact on the Alberta economy and on Alberta families.

Madam Chair, the challenge is that a few years ago we had record-high prices for oil. We've had incredible resource wealth in this province, yet this PC government has managed to squander it all away and failed to invest in critical infrastructure and has left Albertans with a very serious infrastructure deficit.

So those are my concerns with this bill and with the indication that this government has given on how they're going to fund things from our critical infrastructure to our health care system to our schools.

I do want to flag a couple of things, Madam Chair, in my last few seconds here. The $28 million that is appropriated for the office of the Chief Electoral Officer: I find it quite rich that members opposite had stood up and spoken when the former Premier, three Premiers ago – we seem to be going through them very quickly – stood up and introduced a bill that would provide Albertans with a fixed election season. Now, the opposition pushed for an actual fixed election date. We didn't quite get that far, but we had an election season. Members opposite from the PC caucus stood up and spoke about how this would provide stability, how this would provide the opposition with the ability to plan for an election, that they're not going to use their status as government to make a bunch of election promises prior to an election. Yet this seems to be going completely out the window.

Clearly, this current Premier has no problem with going back on bills, and neither does his cabinet, clearly, who thought that this was a good idea and trumpeted the fact that this bill was being brought forward. You know, I'm curious to hear an actual answer from a minister as far as how and why $28 million is being allocated right now for Elections Alberta if our election is not supposed to occur for another 12 months.

As well, I appreciate the fact that earlier today the Minister of Municipal Affairs talked about how the dollars allocated for the golf course would be under review. I think many Albertans find it quite outrageous, you know, that critical infrastructure needs like a cancer institute in Calgary or, again, repairing the massive infrastructure deficit around the province, cutting down on wait times, et cetera, seem to be less important than reconstructing a golf course and getting them up and going. Again, as other members have pointed out, there are still families devastated from the floods from years ago, that are waiting for remuneration, waiting to get back on their feet, yet that seems to be less of a priority than building a golf course.

Madam Chair, we will be supporting this because of our understanding that this is necessary for programs and services to continue, but we do call into question some of the dollars being appropriated and what this means as this bill is a window into the budget for the rest of the 2015-16 fiscal year.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak in Committee of the Whole on Bill 18?

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 18 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That's carried.
The Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. At this time I would move that we rise and report.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 16 Statutes Amendment Act, 2015

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise and move third reading of Bill 16, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2015.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Just to recap, this act will amend the following pieces of legislation: the Provincial Court Act; the Court of Queen's Bench Act; the Police Act; the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation Act; the Land Titles Act; and the Post-secondary Learning Act. These updates will ensure that provincial legislation is clear, consistent, and effective. There will be no more amendments to this bill during Committee of the Whole, and I would like to thank all hon. members in this House for supporting it.

The Provincial Court Act amendments. The three amendments to the Provincial Court Act will improve the civil procedure and other processes for the Provincial Court to clarify its jurisdiction. First, it'll increase the maximum monetary jurisdiction that may be prescribed by the cabinet in civil matters in the Provincial Court from $50,000 to $100,000. The second will update the civil matters section of the Provincial Court Act by repealing provisions governing civil procedure. The third provides a procedural foundation for the court to stream disputed civil claims to the resolution track, which will be part of a pilot project in Edmonton and Calgary later this year.

The Court of Queen's Bench Act amendments will create a second Associate Chief Justice position to help the Court of Queen's Bench deal with increasing case files and give the strategic leadership needed to effectively serve Albertans. It also gives the Chief Justice the power to issue directives limited to the jurisdiction of masters, who are judicial officers appointed to the province, sitting on the Court of Queen's Bench.

The Police Act amendment, the next act, has necessary changes to it for potential inconsistencies between the act and the police service regulation which have been identified. It is in regard to the definition of those who can be designated as presiding officers governing or disciplining the performance of the detail of a police officer in the regulation. This proposed amendment will address a potential inconsistency. In addition, there is another small amendment in the alignment of the legislation to require the police service and the police commissions to notify the director of law enforcement about police complaints and how the complaint was addressed.

Next is the amendment to the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation Act. The foundation was established in 1994 to develop activity partnerships in sports, recreation, active living, parks, and wildlife programs. The amendment to the act officially changes the name of the foundation to the Alberta Sport Connection, which it has been operating under since 2013. It also includes provisions for the transfer of land previously owned by the foundation as it has not been actively engaged in the management of the lands donated to them or purchased since 2013. In the meantime the lands will continue to be managed by Culture and Tourism.

Next, the amendments to the Land Titles Act. The Alberta land titles system and its supporting software are undergoing significant upgrades. A key addition to the system will be the ability for groups of subscribers to submit documents to the land titles registry electronically with unique digital signatures. The amendments to this act are required to enable the use of these digital signatures. In addition, the amendments will prevent title insurance companies from making claims against the titles insurance fund, which is intended to compensate individuals where there's a true loss suffered due to defect in title.

Lastly, the amendment to the Post-secondary Learning Act shall be made. It consists of the legal status of the board of governors for both Medicine Hat College and SAIT. They were established by an order in council in 1970 and 1982 respectively. A number of years later both of these orders were rescinded by new orders in council. In the interim it was a simple rescind, expiring the board appointments and appointing new members. In some cases, due to the drafting errors, the entire order in council was inadvertently rescinded. The errors were discovered, and the information was required in respect to the establishment of one of the institutes. Alberta Justice and Solicitor General has reviewed the file and concluded that rescinding the orders in council left it unclear as to the status of the boards of SAIT and Medicine Hat College. Therefore, to ensure there's no question about the legal establishment of these boards, a retroactive amendment is required. This amendment is a simple, straightforward way to clarify the legal establishment of the boards of the two southern Alberta institutes, and it will resolve unequivocally the peace of mind of the students' facility and the instructors.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, Bill 16 was developed with input from a number of stakeholder groups, including the judiciary, Alberta legal communities, and the public and with the support of these amendments among these stakeholders. It reflects the work that we are doing here in government to ensure Alberta laws are clear and consistent and that the provincial legal system is kept up to date for everyone's benefit.

I want to thank everybody in the Legislature for reviewing and considering Bill 16, and I ask for their support in third reading. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I first wanted to thank this member for carrying his first bill in the Chamber.

Secondly, I just wanted to mention a couple of other things. The addition of a second Associate Chief Justice in the Calgary area will have a significant impact on the operations of the Court of Queen's Bench. I've had many meetings with judges in that regard, and I'm sure that they will be pleased that we are taking this step.

I also just wanted to mention, Mr. Speaker, that a lot of the work being done here in the Provincial Court of Alberta is actually groundbreaking in this entire country. We increased the limit of the Provincial Court from $25,000 to $50,000 effective August 1, 2014, which gives us the highest limit anywhere in Canada with the exception of Quebec, which has a different legal system, of course. The new limit will allow the minister by way of order in council to go up to $100,000.

3:30

But perhaps most important, Mr. Speaker, is the bringing in of resolution tracks. What are resolution tracks? Well, I don't believe that anyone should have to have a lawyer to go and settle a small matter. Sixty per cent of the disputes that are in this level of court are small debts. They don't require full trials. With the consent of some of the parties involved, you're going to really speed up their access to justice and their experience with the system. I would fathom to say that more people will have experience with the Provincial Court than any other court in the province, and being able to address their concerns in a timely and efficient manner is going to speed up other levels of the court. It'll improve access to justice. As the Supreme Court of Canada has often said, justice can't simply be done; it must be seen to be done. These people are going to see justice be done and leave with a better experience of our judicial system.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and speak to Bill 16, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2015. I think it's important to point out at the start that, you know, when the PC government brings forward bills like this, there's a real concern. Again, it's often put to us as: this is mostly housekeeping. But really we're talking about omnibus bills that group together significant pieces of legislation that should be given their due course for debate in this Chamber. You know, it definitely provides a real concern and hinders our ability to get into each of these bills as separate issues. I'll try to go through and speak to this.

I believe I did speak to this bill in its second reading, but I'm happy to speak to it again because one of my major concerns with this bill is around the issue of legal aid. Mr. Speaker, access to legal aid is extremely important to ensure that Albertans have access to justice. Now, it's interesting that around 1 in 3 Canadians will experience a legal problem in a three-year period. In British Columbia their legal aid provider found that 83 per cent of B.C. residents with incomes under $50,000 were likely to have a civil law problem. Of these, 11 per cent retained a lawyer, 44 per cent dealt with it themselves or left it unresolved, and 22 per cent sought nonlegal assistance.

Mr. Speaker, the Court of Queen's Bench Chief Justice Neil Wittmann stated that there's certainly connectivity between the legal aid issue and self-representation. That affects our whole system. It's a systemic problem that gives rise to more and more time being spent on the cases where there isn't legal representation for all parties. Now, clearly, the dearth of funding for legal aid is having an impact not only on those Albertans who cannot afford legal representation and are being denied legal aid but on the court system as a whole.

This government, I want to point out, Mr. Speaker, has shown considerable failures when it comes to legal aid. In October the government announced that Legal Aid in Alberta was going to receive a one-time payment of $5.5 million and that there may not be any funding for them in the next budget. We've long been advocates, especially the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, for better access to justice, and we've been critical of this government's failure when it comes to legal aid.

The $5.5 million we're voting on today is simply not sufficient, Mr. Speaker. Who knows what's going to happen down the road, in the future? You know, Legal Aid predicts that they'll need another $8 million a year and will have a deficit of $15 million by 2016-2017. They've had to reduce their services, which means a drop in services. They've cut 35 jobs in regional offices and 12 in Calgary alone as a result increasing obligations in Alberta courts for government-appointed lawyers for individuals denied legal aid. I also want to say that there have been 33,000 more applications made for legal aid services. So this is a significant concern for us, especially, you know, that legal aid is a right, and it needs to be adequately funded for access for all Albertans for justice and access to the courts.

Now, you know, Mr. Speaker, in light of the $7 billion hole in the province's revenue cuts, legal aid should not be one of them. There are numerous examples, time and time again, of the positive gains that occur when legal aid is adequately and properly invested in. In the U.K., for example, researchers found that the social return on investment on debt and housing cases was over $9 for every $1 invested. In the U.S. there's a 2007 study on Nebraska, and they estimated the benefit of legal aid at $13.5 million whereas the cost was only $3.4 million. The benefits included benefits awarded to litigants, benefits and cost savings to improve the quality of life, tax savings, and an increased economic opportunity, which is significant.

I'm going to change gears now and talk briefly about the modernization of the Land Titles Act. Now, we recognize the importance of modernizing that act, and most of the changes allow the use of electronic documents in bringing our practice up to speed, up to date, and allowing the streamlining of this process. So for that section of this bill, Mr. Speaker, I'm in favour of these changes and view them as positive. You know, I also understand the need for administrative changes in addressing issues like those that mandated the amendments to the Police Act and the Post-secondary Learning Act. So those two are quite positive, but again the concern is the act's omnibus status, and again that is largely because it doesn't allow each separate piece of legislation to have its own due course through this House and time allocated for each piece.

So, Mr. Speaker, as I said at the beginning of this, I will be supporting this bill in this third reading, but I have tried to highlight some of my concerns and areas where we, the Alberta NDP, have been strong advocates, as I have said, of investing in legal aid and ensuring that all Albertans have access to justice in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I see no one rising under 29(2)(a).

Is there anyone else who wishes to enter the debate?

If not, are you ready to close debate, then, hon. Member for Little Bow?

Mr. Donovan: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'll close debate on that and call for the question.

The Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a third time]

Bill 15 Securities Amendment Act, 2015

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the President of Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance I'm pleased to rise today to move third reading of Bill 15, the Securities Amendment Act, 2015.

As we heard at second reading, ongoing review of and regular amendments to Alberta's Securities Act are required to keep pace with industry developments and to support the ongoing reform of the Canadian regulatory system. As a quick recap, the proposed amendment relates to four areas: enforcement-related amendments, point-of-sale related amendments, amendments that support the continued harmonization of derivatives regulation, and house-keeping amendments of a technical nature.

The proposed enforcement-related amendments are designed to improve the Alberta Securities Commission's enforcement capacity.

The proposed point-of-sale amendments will facilitate the development of a summary disclosure document for exchange-traded funds. This is similar to the new fund facts documents that are now being prepared for mutual funds and segregated funds, which provide concise information about a fund in an easy to understand format.

3:40

The proposed amendments relating to harmonization include the prohibition on front running and the creation of a new definition of associate. These amendments are intended to curtail insider trading and tipping.

Finally, there are several technical and housekeeping amendments to Alberta's Securities Act, which are intended to clarify or update existing provisions.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendments will ensure Alberta honours its commitment under the 2004 memorandum of understanding through ongoing securities regulatory reform and to meet international commitments. Regardless of what happens with the national regulator initiative, the reality is that it will not yet be operational. So it is incumbent upon Alberta and the other provincial governments and their securities regulators to continue to work co-operatively on improving securities regulation to ensure the fair, efficient, and effective operation of our capital markets and improve protection for investors.

I ask that members of this House support the bill, and I move third reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, are there any others who wish to enter the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll keep my comments fairly brief. I just want to highlight the fact that, you know, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has been calling on the need for a national regulator and a need for tougher regulation on securities for years now. I do want to just cite the fact that Bosnia and Herzegovina are the only countries in the world besides Canada without a national securities regulator. Most other countries around the world see a need and a role for it. I know that there are other provinces that are pushing for it, and of course it's this PC government that's been resisting the need and the call for a national regulator.

Calls for one date back to 1935 and actually include the 1964 Porter Commission, a 1979 study by the department of consumer and corporate affairs, among the 1994 memorandum of understanding between the Atlantic provinces and federal government, the 2003 Wise Persons' Committee report, and the 2006 Crawford panel. So as it stands, to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, only B.C. and Ontario and the federal government are going to be entering into a co-operative regulatory system, and once again by choice this PC government in Alberta will be left out.

We have in this House, because this is the revamp or the second coming of a bill from the past, to continue to use resources and time in updating legislation, in harmonizing it with other jurisdictions across the country as opposed to just having a national regulator that could deal with this for our whole country. I think it's important to know, Mr. Speaker, that capital markets are increasingly integrated and increasingly global. It's inefficient and in many cases impossible for a provincial regulator to be able to handle these complexities. It's also not the best use of resources when we can deal with this on a national level.

I think part of our concern is the fact that a system with 13 different territorial and provincial regulators leaves us fairly vulnerable to fraud or to just increased regulatory failure. When you look at the crisis that occurred back in 2007-2008, the asset-backed commercial paper crisis, it cost billions of dollars to Canadians and was a symptom of this problem. I think that if we truly want to protect the citizens of this province and protect the integrity of our system and ensure that the industry is properly regulated, we should be moving toward a national securities regulator.

Again this bill continues to come back to the House in various forms and needs to be updated every couple of years. I think we should deal with this once and for all, move forward, working with other provinces and our federal cousins, and ensure that Albertans are protected and that we are less susceptible to fraud and other potential problems that could occur if we try to deal with this solely within our own province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others who wish to join in? The hon. Member for Rimbe-Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise and, like the other members here, am going to support the bill. But the bill is, I think, a haphazard attempt at regulation that doesn't quite fit the current state of affairs in our financial industry. Maybe it is the answer that we have a national securities regulator. There are arguments both for it and against it.

One of the things that I picked up out of this bill, which is carried on from the previous act, is that the commission by any order can exempt any person, company, trade, distribution, security or derivative from all or any provision of Alberta securities laws. Now, that to me is a massive hole in our regulation. I don't know how a small jurisdiction – when I say small jurisdiction, when we're dealing with derivatives, derivatives are a world-wide phenomenon in the financial industry, and Alberta is a player in that. It's in many ways a small player but a player nonetheless. So I don't know how it puts us at an advantage or a disadvantage when the regulator themselves can take a specific deal and exempt it from our security laws.

You know, dealing with over-the-counter derivatives like puts and calls, various options, is one aspect, but the over-the-counter trades are the majority of derivatives trading. They have caused tremendous problems in our financial industry. They are the cause of the 2008 financial collapse in the world. They are the cause of the 2012 issue that we dealt with around the world. If you go back, you can look at other situations where derivatives have impacted the world financial system in a very negative way.

I realize the ministry is trying to figure out how to regulate this or how to control it in what, I would hope, would be in the best interest of the public, but in all honesty, it fails miserably if we're not negotiating on a national or an international level to come up with solutions. We cannot solve this problem alone.

I would like that to what's happening in the oil industry today. The price of oil is dropping, yet the price at the pump is rising, and we are told that that is somehow a world market situation. Oil and gas is probably one of the major derivatives traded on the futures exchanges in and over the counter. How that impacts the daily price is always an interesting phenomenon. Whether that's a manipulation, free market, or collusion is always a question.

Here we are on a local jurisdiction level, a province trying to regulate, and to be perfectly honest, I think we're blowing a lot of hot air into a hurricane. There is a bigger problem here, much bigger than Alberta, and I think it needs to be dealt with on an international level. So with a local securities regulator taking this on, I'm not sure how they can possibly do this.

What I don't know and I don't think anyone in the government can tell me is how this is affecting our capital markets here in Alberta, whether it affects the raising of capital or infringes upon that and is an impediment to raising capital. I don't know that. I just know that it is problematic. It's problematic on a local level, which is provincial, a Canadian level, and an international level, and it needs to be addressed. But it can never – never – be addressed on just a local level.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to support the bill.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

I see no one. Is there anyone else who wishes to chime in on the debate?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education on behalf of the Minister of Finance to close debate.

Mr. Scott: Yes. I move to close debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The question is then called.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a third time]

Bill 13

Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2015

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to rise today and move third reading of Bill 13, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2015.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 13's proposed amendments will enable mandatory watercraft inspection and other risk mitigation measures, give law enforcement officers greater opportunity when dealing with containment watercraft and greater clarity regarding the role in ensuring compliance with the law and providing education about it, and include a controlled invasive species list in the act, including aquatic invasive species of concern to Alberta. At present the term "invasive" is not found anywhere in the Fisheries (Alberta) Act, and we have very little specified authority to address harmful aquatic invasive species.

Mr. Speaker, this approach is based on what is working to keep the western states below us mussel free. Increasing authority will allow designated fishery officers such as the RCMP, fish and wildlife officers, conservation officers, and forestry officers the ability to stop vehicles transporting watercraft that fail to stop at designated inspection stations. Watercraft inspectors are also proposed to have limited authority in inspecting and cleaning watercraft on-site at an inspection station. The watercraft inspectors must request fishery officers to be present if there is any need to take additional steps beyond inspection and cleaning. While the initial focus will be on watercraft, fishery officers and guardians will have the authority to inspect, detain, and quarantine any conveyance, container, or equipment that may be harbouring aquatic invasive species.

I would like to address some of the questions that were raised in Committee of the Whole yesterday. The main intent of the legislation is to allow authorities to address all circumstances where there are reasonable grounds that there is a potential contravention of the fisheries act or, specifically, that there are invasive species present. What constitutes reasonable grounds is not set out in the legislation. In this respect the legislation defers to the courts to determine whether the conditions for reasonable grounds are met. Section 28.02 ensures private dwellings are not to be entered or inspected by officials without first having permission from the person in possession or responsible or unless a warrant has first been obtained.

There are some specific reasons why the use of "any place" is captured in the legislation. An example would be to inspect a pond if there was a report of invasive plants or other invasive aquatic organisms in an area. Another would be to inspect retail fish markets where live aquatic species are routinely held. If reasonable grounds exist to inspect a container on a train, it would be done in a manner that would not conflict with federal transportation regulations.

Mr. Speaker, this is good legislation that will make a big difference in the efforts to protect our precious water resources. During Alberta's 2014 watercraft inspection season we inspected over 3,700 boats and intercepted four mussel-infested boats. Unfortunately, only 50 per cent of the boats stopped for voluntary inspection. Increasing authority for designated fishery officers will give them the ability to stop and detain any vehicle transporting watercraft that fail to stop at a designated inspection station, thus greatly reducing the risk of infested boats entering Alberta water bodies.

Mr. Speaker, if we don't take action on this, the cost of invasive mussel infestation would be upwards of $75 million annually. These amendments ensure we have sufficient compliance authority and mechanisms to manage the potential introduction and spread of aquatic invasive species.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. As promised, I did make contact with that incredibly powerful and knowledgeable group of people called old guys that fish and was able to get some really interesting and useful feedback, I think. One of the main points that they raised was that we don't have very many officers that are working in compliance. The member talked about: well, it could be the RCMP; it could be a warden; it could be all kinds of people. But what I'm hearing from old guys that fish – that's a powerful group; I wouldn't go messing with them if I were you – is that they're not generally stopping vehicles. Now, they don't have enough time to. There are not enough of them to actually follow through on that.

So the concern and the question is: well, okay; we see what you're trying to do with these invasive species, but you don't have enough people doing the job right now, so how are you going to add more to their job and expect that we're going to be able to keep up with all of this? If you can't keep track of what's happening now and you don't have enough people in the field, how are we possibly going to manage it when we heap even more on their plate? I think that's a real concern. You know, I think: oh, well, maybe they're going to start using RCMP. But when you come through the border, they don't have time to look at that. They're just not looking at that stuff. Of all the times that I've gone back and forth with a snowmobile trailer, they've looked at it exactly once. They just don't have time. If you're going through Coutts – yeah, Coutts – that's a really busy border crossing. They've got a lot of stuff going on there and a lot of traffic going back and forth. They don't have time to stop these vehicles.

I didn't hear the member talking about a lot of increased staffing being put into this, and that may not be appropriate. Times are tough. Friends are few. Government is looking to cut positions. But this is what happened last time. We cut a lot of the people that do the monitoring and the compliance and enforcement, people like park wardens and licensing officers and the like. As a result, we basically lost control of poaching and, you know, clean, safe campgrounds and all that kind of stuff because there was just nobody there to do the work. So certain things fell into disrepair. There was certainly some pretty blatant flaunting of the law around hunting licences and poaching, et cetera. We might be in the same kind of situation here.

The second question was around training. I know the member mentioned that there was going to be a new kind of officer, a water specialist or something, a fishery guardian or a fishery officer, which is a new position that can be created under this act, but it's not giving us a great deal of detail about how they get trained. I think a lot of us would be kind of hard-pressed to be able to tell you exactly what a pumpkin seed looked like or a bighead or an orfe, or an ide, or a tubenose goby, a ruffe or a zander. So how are we training these people to be able to recognize these invasive species that they're supposed to? Like, what is the training program that's involved there? Having enough officers to actually perform this, what kind of training are they going to get?

The final piece. I think the hon. member sponsoring and I were talking somewhat at crosspurposes. She was talking about that no one can enter a private dwelling. That's true, but in sections 25, 26, 27, and 28 there are all kinds of powers that are being doled out here, and that includes the power to stop and order movement of the conveyances, which is literally to stop somebody pulling a trailer and say, "Move over," and the person is supposed to comply. That makes sense.

But I was asking the member about section 25, which says: "enter on and pass over land." Now, that's not a private dwelling. That can be done without a warrant according to section 25, so they can come onto your land and go across it in order to ensure compliance here or to ascertain the presence of any invasive organisms. They are entering private property there although it's not where you actually live.

Later the term "inspect any place or conveyance" – so "any place or conveyance" starts to turn up repeatedly. When I went and checked the definitions of that – and this appears on page 3 if anybody is following along here. The definition for "place" is a "building, structure . . . a tent or . . . temporary shelter." That could be a garage, could be a shed, could be a boathouse, could be one of those Quonset hut things that people have on their property for machinery. It's basically any structure that doesn't have someone living in it. They have the power to enter and inspect. That's the power of entry in section 26.

But in section 27 they have the power to enter and search any place or conveyance, again, without a warrant. Then you get to section 28, and they have the power to seize. Cross over, inspect, search, and seize: they can do all of that in any kind of structure except where you actually live on a permanent basis but not on a temporary basis. A lean-to or a tent, that kind of thing, they can go into without a warrant and enter, cross over, search, and seize, all of those things.

Again, when those kinds of powers are given and the power of discretion is given to officers on the front line, you want to know and feel very comfortable that they have had absolutely top-notch training and that you really can trust that they're going to come on and do exactly what they're supposed to do and that they're going to do a good job of it. That I am not seeing in this act.

So those were the problems that were specifically raised by old guys that fish: the number of staff that are available, the actual time in their jobs. That is the last piece that was raised. What is the ranking? We already have a number of other wardens and park people and wildlife licensed officers and monitoring officers that are out there, and they've already got a lot of jobs to do, and this is now being added to that. What's the hierarchy? Is the hierarchy that they're supposed to do this first and wildlife poaching second? Where's the hierarchy spelled out about exactly the way they're supposed to be approaching their jobs? I think that's important to know, not only for us as citizens or people who potentially will comply with these requests but also for the people doing the job, and I would hope that we could get that kind of information from the sponsoring member.

Once again, the number of officers available, how their time is ranked as to what they're supposed to do, training, the fact that we're giving them the power to cross over, enter, investigate, search, and seize, all of which are, you know, significant powers, and that they can come into every structure we have and cross our land except for the actual place where we live permanently: I'd be interested in hearing how those questions get answered, and then I can cut out the Hansard and mail it out to old guys that fish.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others who wish to join the debate? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As much as I am a supporter of this bill – to deal with the issue of any invasive species, I think, is honourable. It's what the government should be doing, taking measures to actually do something about it, which I support, but where I have difficulty with this bill is the power of the search without a warrant. There are times in any type of law enforcement when this is tolerable, when it is necessary: when we're dealing with issues like first responders, and in this case under section 27 it talks about circumstances of danger to human life. Well, that makes sense to me, but what doesn't make sense to me is when we extend that privilege, where there is no threat yet we still don't require a warrant to enter onto someone's property.

That's what we're doing right here. We're actually legislating the ability to abuse. Now, I'm not going to say that anybody is intending to abuse power, but I think the safety margin that we should be taking any time we draft legislation is to never actually give the ability to abuse power. There need to be checks and balances.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre brought up the issue of training. We're creating this new position here of a fisheries guardian, and it's an interesting title. I don't know exactly what it is any more than anyone else does, yet the same title may or may not have the ability to enter onto private property without a warrant. When I think in terms of warrants, I'm thinking in terms of a qualified law enforcement officer, who has been trained, versus somebody who has been appointed or just anointed with the new title. It's really important that we have clarity in legislation to make sure that we don't abuse the power that we give to these law enforcement officials.

Because of that issue, I'm not going to support this bill. I'm going to take a principled stand on it, as much as I support – it will pass. We need to do something about protecting Alberta from invasive species, but in terms of allowing unfettered access to property and abuse of power, this one section, 27(1), does not protect the innocent, does not protect the average citizen for due process of law. What it does is that it gives the ability of abuse of power and the exercise of that abuse of power without very much of a recourse for the innocent citizen.

With that, I still support the government's effort to deal with the issue of invasive species. I will not support the violation of fundamental rights, things like freedom of speech, freedom of association – now, I know Bill 45 is coming back; we'll discuss that later – also the idea of the freedom of the enjoyment of your private property. To have some arbitrary authority say, "I can come onto your property" and that they can basically make it up and justify it as being reasonable: I think that's wrong. There has to be just cause, and it's not listed there. The onus is not on the law enforcement to prove their issue; it is now on the landowner to defend and prove that the entry was somehow unlawful. That's wrong. The onus of proof is on the wrong side of the equation.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I see no one wanting to take advantage of that.

Is there anyone else who wishes to speak? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

4:10

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments from my two hon. colleagues ahead of me, and I can certainly concur with some of their concerns. I'm sure, as everybody knows in this house, I'm not really someone that takes orders well either or being told what to do. However, I come from southern Alberta. I have irrigation. This could destroy our irrigation. This could destroy the largest sustainable resource in this province, and it's called food. So if you'll permit me, I'd like to do just a little biology lecture here, and I think it's probably even lower than 101. Anyway, let's go for it.

Zebra and quagga mussels are virtually impossible to eradicate. They can cause millions of dollars in damage to water-operated infrastructure, disrupt natural food chains, and create toxic algae blooms. They can kill fish and birds, decrease property values, and reduce recreational enjoyment of natural areas. Any freshwater mussel that is attached to anything – that can be hip waders, kayaks; it doesn't have to necessarily be a motorboat. Anywhere that someone has spent time in water where there already exists mussels can easily have those attached and then spread them. They spread quickly. One female mussel can produce up to a million eggs in a year. The population estimate for quagga mussels in Lake Havasu, Arizona, is 3 trillion while an estimate for zebra mussels in the Great Lakes is exponentially larger than that. Those numbers are pretty scary. I know they're little, tiny things, but when they start building on each other, it's like a concrete wall.

Ecologically speaking, zebra mussels, as I've mentioned, can wipe out entire populations of other species as they dominate a body of water. One of the harmful things these mussels do is deplete the water of calcium, which they absorb. Zebra mussels are filter feeders. That means that they strain water to absorb the food and nutrients they need from their environment. Mr. Speaker, a single adult zebra mussel can filter upwards of one litre of water per day. Nearly all particle matter is removed from that water. That includes microscopic plankton organisms, which form the basis of the entire food chain in a body of water. Other species depend on this food source for their survival. Zebra mussels also require calcium in order to build and maintain their shells. They absorb this calcium from the water around them, therefore depleting the calcium levels and certainly depleting that calcium level that is so necessary for all of the other species in that body of water. They literally can choke the life out of an ecosystem.

We should be very concerned, and I am very pleased with Bill 13 because it does say that we are concerned. The fact that we are having mandatory boat inspection, I think, speaks volumes to how important this is, and we will be able to get started on this right away. The boats that are coming in from the south, where there are huge infestations, will have a chance to be inspected properly, because of the snowbirds that are coming back with their boats.

As I've said before, irrigation is fundamental to farming, and ranchers require water transportation in order to care for their livestock. Pipes figure heavily, not the XL but pipes, in the work of irrigation, and they frequently draw from natural resources. Irrigation pipes are different than in the old days, when we had irrigation canals. They are now enclosed pipes. The difficulty would arise when zebra or quagga mussels got inside those pipes and proliferated. They could clog them and actually close them, and they're very difficult to get at because it's closed.

Again, Bill 13 is an exceptionally important bill, particularly in southern Alberta but certainly to any body of water that people enjoy as a recreation facility, so having it in third reading and being allowed to speak to it, I think, is a nice way for me to wind down a political career. I've worked very hard on this bill for two and a half years through PNWER and also brought it up as an issue with the Can/Am Border Trade Alliance, that I sat on for a couple of years.

Back to my former colleagues and what they had to say: this is an important first step. Better to take a first step than no step. I'm pleased to say that we are – well, I'm assuming that this will be passed, and we can start doing the educational portion, that will be so important.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. No one taking advantage of it?

Let's move to Drumheller-Stettler, then, and hear his words.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope to be brief and coherent. Some of the members opposite will disagree with that. The Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2015, is an important piece of legislation. I happen to live along one of the interprovincial borders in western Canada, and I know it's one of the most porous borders. Certainly, the regulation isn't necessarily going to talk about this border – I understand – but the idea of ultimate control was tried a long time ago in China, and it didn't really work out very well either, and it didn't work out very well in portions of Germany either. I certainly understand as an agrologist or a producer of food the importance of this. I understand the importance of water, but some of the legislation spoken to by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre about rights of entry and improper legal access is of great concern to me.

I think it would be important if that was considered to be an amendment or something forward. I don't think that it's a hill to die on, but I hopefully would present that information to the Assembly so that if there are issues in the future, it's recognized. This may be a form of cutting one's nose off to spite their face. It could well be possible overkill, so I just wanted to recognize the severity of some of the legal implications there.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see no one.

Is there anyone else who wishes to enter the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll weigh in very quickly and, first of all, just commend the member for this bill. I know this is a very serious issue. My only, you know, question and I guess concern is that if this is as serious as the mover of this bill has articulated, which I don't disagree with, then I hope that the government will be allocating resources because I know that the officers that work very diligently to protect our wildlife and natural resources are stretched quite thin. I mean, it's important to bring forward regulations in this area, but if they aren't enforced, then there is little point to bringing forward legislation. So my question to the government is: how will this be resourced, and will there be resources to ensure that we continue to protect the natural habitats of this province?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing no one, is there anyone else who wishes to speak at this time?

If not, then let me go to Bonnyville-Cold Lake to close debate.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you. There are just a few things I want to say to close the debate. We will have enough manpower to staff the 11 stations 10 hours a day, seven days a week. There are also five roving crews that will be sent to secondary roads to respond to emergencies in events that draw a lot of boaters like fish derbies, water board tournaments, and so on, so staffing is not going to be an issue there.

Training. We all hope that—as with anything, when we train, you hope that you're training to the best of your ability. There's never any guarantee in any type of training or any type of profession whether the individual is going to be to the calibre that someone may expect. They found out that the trained dogs can inspect the boat in two to three minutes, and they've been tested that they've been a hundred per cent correct every time.

The inspection. We can inspect your pond without warrant but not without reasonable grounds. We hope that all officers of the law will follow the law and have reasonable grounds when they inspect.

I encourage all members to support this bill. Like the member to the left of me said: the first step is better than no step at all. This is the first step to educate the people, and if we don't do anything, the cost is just too, too tremendous.

At that, I hope that everybody will support this bill, and I close debate.

4:20

The Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 13 read a third time]

The Speaker: I believe you have unanimous consent on that, so we'll move forward. So ordered and so carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just before we end today, I would like to ask the Assembly for unanimous consent to revert to Notices of Motions.

The Speaker: You've heard the request from the Government House Leader to revert to Notices of Motions. I'll ask this question.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: There has been an objection, so no unanimous consent is offered.

Let me return to the Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As it is near 4:30, I would move that the House stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. on Monday.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:21 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, March 23, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. Great Spirit and Holy Creator, as we begin our deliberations for this week in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, we ask for balanced insight to help inform the decisions we make for the benefit of our province and the people whom we proudly serve. Amen.

Hon. members, please remain standing for the singing of our national anthem, which today will be led by Miss Hayley Grundy.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you, Hayley, and thank you for having recently joined our heritage interpreters and tour guides at the Legislative Assembly of Alberta some few weeks ago. Welcome. [applause]
Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Member for Lesser Slave Lake 26th Anniversary of Election

The Speaker: Hon. members, 26 years ago, on March 20, 1989, to be exact, one of our esteemed and honourable members was first elected to our Legislative Assembly. In addition to being the longest serving woman to ever serve in this Assembly, a total of 9,500 days including today, this hon. member is also the 16th longest serving of all members in the history of our Assembly. Please join me in expressing our congratulations and our gratitude for her dedicated service to her constituents and all Albertans.

Hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, congratulations. [Standing ovation] Thank you and congratulations.

Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly His Excellency Dr. Bálint David Ódor, the Ambassador of Hungary, who is with us. His Excellency is joined today by Éva Simon, who is the consul of the embassy, and by Alexander Szenthe, who is the honorary consul of Hungary here in Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, I've always believed that cultivating mutually beneficial partnerships with jurisdictions around the globe is a priority for this province, and that's why I'm so pleased to introduce to the Assembly these special guests. They build on a strong relationship that exists between Hungary and Alberta, which includes ties in terms of trade, in terms of investment, education, and culture. I don't think I'm alone in saying to them that there are so many distinguished people in our province and indeed in our country who are descendants of Hungarians who have come to Canada, so we're proud to have them with us.

Between 2010 and 2014 Alberta and Hungary have benefited from an excellent two-way trading relationship, and Alberta's postsecondary institutions have also been exploring a variety of partnerships with Hungary, everything from language to faculty and student exchanges as well as knowledge sharing. Their visit here today is an important occasion to reinforce our shared priorities. I'm confident that our relationship will continue to thrive and that we will strengthen the excellent relationship that exists between us. His Excellency Dr. Ódor and Mr. Szenthe are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I would ask our honoured guests to receive the traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with school groups. Let's start with the Associate Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Right in the middle of the wonderful constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar is Clara Tyler elementary school. We have grade 6 students here today with their teacher, Mr. Zane Wei, and also parents and helpers Tammi Bexson, Karen Hiebert, and Pauline Gillanders. They're in School at the Legislature this whole week. I'll be dropping in several times for little visits with them. If that group from Clara Tyler, the students along with their guests, could please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school or education groups?

Seeing none, let's move on to other important guests, beginning with the Minister of Service Alberta, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some fantastic community leaders from St. Albert. We're joined today by Suzan and Ward Krecsy and Charlie Schroder. They're sitting in the members' gallery beside Michael Cooper. We've got a St. Albert row up there. If I could ask them to rise while I introduce them.

Our community, Mr. Speaker, is made up of families from all walks of life, and that includes some families in need. Our guests here today are with the St. Albert Food Bank and Community Village. The community village aspect as well as the food bank is a service that provides programs, services, and support to assist people to return to a state of independence, personal safety, and an improved quality of life. It's a hand up as well that our food bank provides. Suzan has been the executive director for almost 10 years. Charlie Schroder, the current chair of the board, has served in a leadership capacity for almost that long. Suzan's husband, Ward, after a distinguished career in the military and as the executive director's husband has done pretty much everything at the food bank. I'm so proud to call them friends and to call St. Albert home, and one of the reasons is because of our dedication to the well-being of everybody in the community. These fine folks represent that spirit incredibly well.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of everyone in the Legislature I would like to provide a special welcome to our guests, and I ask the honoured members of this Assembly to provide them with the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let us move on to Edmonton-South West, followed by Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly a gentleman seated in the members' gallery that many of us members are familiar with. He's a federal Conservative candidate for Edmonton-St. Albert and has been involved with politics since he was 14 years old as an active member of his local constituency. Looking at him, you may think that was just yesterday; however, he's matured significantly since then. He's currently a lawyer at Ogilvie LLP. It is my pleasure to introduce my friend and future Member of Parliament, Mr. Michael Cooper. I'd ask him to now rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some folks representing an association that has a common professional interest with me, although I suspect that their patients have less likelihood of moaning and kicking. My guests are from the Alberta Association of Midwives, and obstetrics is certainly something that is more than a passing interest in my practice, especially this time of year. I'd like to ask them to rise as I read out their names. My first guest is Joan Margaret Laine, the president of the Alberta Association of Midwives. Joining her today is Nicole Matheson, the vice-president; and also the executive director, Lolly de Jonge. They're seated in the members' gallery.

The association provides midwifery services to over 1,600 Alberta women and their babies annually. [some applause] Yes, exactly. I'm certainly looking forward to meeting with them later. We had a very excellent presentation to our rural health services review from the association, and we're going to continue on that discussion with regard to services to be provided to rural and remote areas of Alberta as well as the rest of the province. Now that they've risen, I'd ask my colleagues to join me in the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a fine young Albertan who like many other boys wrote his annual letter to St. Nick before Christmas. His name is William Kendall, and he's sitting in the members' gallery. When St. Nick read his letter, he had his elves send it to me as Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. Why, you ask, would St. Nick do this? Well, it wasn't because William asked St. Nick to put a note in his brother's gift for him to be a little bit nicer. I come from a house of three boys; I know that request has been made lots and lots of times. It's because William asked St. Nick to help stop global warming and to help the big cats and for the world to be more environmentally friendly. I have long said, as has the Premier, that Albertans are conservationists at heart, and this is why our ministry takes its mandate so seriously. I would ask William and his proud parents, Chris and Valerie, and William's siblings, Tyler and Katie Kendall, to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health, followed by Edmonton-Riverview. I understand you may have more than one introduction.

Mr. Mandel: I've got two.

The Speaker: Please proceed with both.

Mr. Mandel: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through to the members of this Assembly members of the Mental Health Patient Advocate office. As many of the members in this Assembly know, navigating the health care system can be challenging for those struggling with mental illness. The office of the mental health advocate works with patients and health providers, serving as an independent investigative body and as a resource for the mental health community. They're here today to see the tabling of the 2013-14 mental health advocate's office annual report. I would ask the guests to rise as I call their names: Carol Robertson Baker, the Mental Health Patient Advocate; Beverly Slusarchuk, patient rights advocate; Ryan Bielby, patient rights advocate; and Lorraine D'Sylva, administrative assistant. I'd like the Assembly to give them the traditional welcome.

Mr. Speaker, again it's my pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly some strong advocates for skin cancer prevention. They're here today to witness the tabling of a very important piece of legislation that will have significant positive impacts on Albertans and future generations of Albertans for years to come. I'm talking about Bill 22, Skin Cancer Prevention (Artificial Tanning) Act, that will be introduced later this afternoon. I would like to ask each of these guests to rise and remain standing as I call their names. First, we have Raheem Suleman. Raheem is a medical student at the University of Alberta. Next, we have Mrs. Sarah Hawkins, who is a public policy analyst for the Canadian Cancer Society. Also here today is Ms Cathy Gladwin, who is with the Alberta Public Health Association. We are also fortunate to have with us Miss Violetta Ambrozuk, Ms Becky Lynn, and Miss Evie Eshpeter, who are skin cancer survivors. Thank you for joining us and witnessing this today.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two representatives from the Edmonton Federation of Community Leagues. The EFCL does an amazing job of representing the diversity within our city. With us today are the president of the EFCL board, Mr. Masood Makarechian, and the marketing director and lead for the 100th anniversary project, Nora Begoray. Yes, 100 years of the EFCL. They are seated in the public gallery, and I ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure and honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some very special visitors. With us today are Dr. Brent Saik, and I believe with him there are his wife, Jenelle Saik; and Brenda Saik-Martin. Dr. Saik is the founder and organizer of the world's longest hockey game, which took place at Saiker's Acres in my constituency of Strathcona-Sherwood Park from February 6 to 16 this year: 40 dedicated players, 250 hours on the ice, over a million dollars raised for the Cross Cancer Institute in the fight against cancer. They're seated in the members' gallery, behind me.

I would ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly my very, very best friend and tremendous partner. She has been at my side for over 41 years now, an incredible journey. She is the mother of our three great daughters. I would ask Angeline, who is sitting in the public gallery, to now stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

That concludes the introductions that were forwarded to my office, but if there are others, I would be able to recognize you to recognize them.

I see none.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have two minutes for each statement. Let's proceed, starting with Little Bow and then the Leader of the Official Opposition.

The hon. member.

Agriculture

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great honour today to rise and talk about agriculture in rural Alberta. Agriculture is the backbone of this province and the provincial economy. If not for agriculture we wouldn't have roads, bridges, railways, and a lot of this province would have never been found out and flourished the way it did. Agriculture was one of the first starts to all the stewardship and, in future, to the environmental movement in this province.

It's been a great pleasure to me, under the new management of our Premier, to be able to tour the Harmony Beef plant in Balzac with the minister of agriculture and the Premier to show how important agriculture is in this province. This state-of-the-art, European Union-certified plant will allow Canadian beef, up to 800 head per day, to start shipping all over the world to show how our triple-A beef is nothing but the best.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is Canada's largest beef-producing province. We have 151 feedlots in this province, that have more than a thousand head per feedlot, 1.8 million head per year. Sixty-nine per cent of Canada's feed cattle production is done in this province alone, not to mention the fact that 41 per cent of the national herd is in this province. These are great things that we can be very proud of.

Other things we have that we can be proud of in rural Alberta and agriculture are the 50 million acres that are under crop in this province between crop, grass, forage, and pasture land. We also have dairy production, poultry production, egg production. Even our honeybee keepers do a great job in this province, Mr. Speaker. Potatoes and beets are among some of the other great things that we have in this province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm a little biased. As a farmer myself I can't be prouder of what we do in this province for rural Alberta and agriculture. All I can tell you is that it's a true honour to be the MLA for the Little Bow riding, where Feedlot Alley happens to be. As a farmer myself I couldn't be prouder to be part of this Legislature and tell everybody about how great Alberta agriculture and rural Alberta are.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member of Calgary-Fish Creek and Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Retrospective by the Official Opposition Leader

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is with all likelihood the last member's statement I will give. It was over 22 years ago that I joined Ralph's team. We were sent here not for a job but to do what is right and to always be a servant to those who elected us. I would hope that despite the political battles I've been a part of, my friends, colleagues, and my constituents will say that I never strayed far from those values.

1:50

Mr. Speaker, I have always believed that our role as MLAs is to speak up for those without a voice. There is perhaps nothing more heartbreaking than stories of children involved in prostitution. I am grateful that we passed the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act, a first in Canada. I hope someday soon my legislation requiring the mandatory reporting of child pornography will finally be proclaimed. As Solicitor General I brought forward the Amber Alert program, the first in Canada and now right across this fine country. When I became minister of children's services, we passed important legislation to protect drug-endangered children. While I would never have imagined being Leader of the Opposition, the support from Albertans has been truly overwhelming.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is one face who stole my heart, and I will never forget little Aleena Sadownyk, suffering from a rare disease and looking for treatment. I had the honour of meeting the little one and her family just two years ago. All Aleena ever wanted was the energy to dance. Her daddy prayed that he could be her dance partner. Through endless work and advocacy she finally received the treatment that was long overdue. She now has energy and has a bright smile, and she can dance with her daddy. As I fade away from public life, I ask that we never forget the story of little Aleena and how our work in this Legislature can make a difference.

For all the staff who have touched my life, hugs all around. For my family, who have allowed me to follow my dreams, I love you so much, with all my heart. Lastly, to the constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek and, for that matter, to all Albertans, it's been an honour, and it's been a privilege. Happy trails until we meet again. [Standing ovation]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Well, in a moment I'm going to turn to the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, but before I do, let me just remind all of you that we have 35 seconds for each question; we have 35 seconds for each answer. I will then interrupt you if you exceed either of those two limits.

With that having been said and a wonderful speech just having been made, let us recognize the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Government Policies

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There were three boxes to tick on the government's survey on the budget: hike taxes, slash spending, run a deficit. It's not hard to figure out that hiking taxes has been the Premier's preferred choice for months. He's talked about introducing a sales tax, a sugar tax, higher income tax, higher gas tax, and a tax on everything he can think of. Premier, Albertans are wondering what tax you'll bring in and how much you'll be taxing them. Can you clarify to the House what your favourite tax is and how much Albertans will be paying for it?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, there are obviously no easy choices in the circumstance that our province faces. The Minister of Finance will deal with this in the coming days. We are all concerned about the loss of jobs in our province and what's been taking place over the last several months. It's something that this government is dedicated to deal with. It's about strengthening our economy. It's about diversifying our economy. It's about all the things that we need to do to make this province stronger. The hon. member will hear in the fullness of time this week the plans that the government has.

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another day, another shocking story about our health care system. This weekend reports emerged that a woman in Fort Saskatchewan sat uncomfortably in a public waiting room chair for seven hours while she miscarried a child. It's just one story at one hospital on one evening, but we know it happens all the time. It's absolutely appalling that in a province that spends half of its budget on health care, this continues to happen. Premier, how are we going to address these horrible situations?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, first of all, our thoughts and prayers go out to the individual this happened to. It was a very sad situation. This government is spending a tremendous amount of money – $50 million was just announced – investing in our emergency departments and increasing the number of long-term care facilities, long-term care beds. We're making every effort to try to put the system in balance, and we'll continue to do that. Unfortunately, our hearts and prayers go out to that family.

The Speaker: The hon. member. Final supplemental.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. Five years ago this government said that we would have a patient-accessible electronic health care record by this year. It would improve communication between patients, physicians, and specialists, and it would ensure the continuity of patient care. Two years ago Greg Price died because this system still wasn't in place. The Health Quality Council wrote all about it, acknowledging the role it played in Greg's death. Fast-forward to today, and it's still not in place. Premier, this government promised the Price family that this system would be created. Why has it not been done?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I can't speak too much about previously, but we are working diligently with a group of people today to put in place the proper computer system that will allow records to be effectively put in place for this province so these things don't happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Premier's Address to Albertans

Mr. Saskiw: For weeks the Premier has been telling Albertans that there is no more money. He made it crystal clear that he has no intention of passing his budget in the House and will instead be using it as a PC Party central campaign platform, which is why Albertans are furious that he is spending over 100,000 taxpayer dollars on a PC campaign commercial. The Wildrose said no to this absolute farce. Premier, will you do the right thing and have the PC Party pay back taxpayers for your campaign ad?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a strong and entrepreneurial and resilient province, but it has been clear for several months that we face serious economic circumstances with the collapse of oil prices, the effect on our public finances and our economy. We see job losses in this province beginning to mount. Albertans want to know where their government stands on this, what their government will do. They need to hear from their Premier. They need to hear about our steps to diversify the economy for a hopeful future, and so they will.

Mr. Saskiw: You don't need an ad, Premier.

Here are the facts. The previous Premier spent $45,000 to fly to South Africa while this Premier is paying $100,000 for a campaign ad that includes $10,000 to write a speech, that includes $3,000 per minute in production costs, a makeup artist, production directors. The list goes on. Again to the Premier: why on earth would you need to blow taxpayer money right now, before a budget that blames and punishes Albertans for the fiscal mess you got us in?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, we are a strong province. We face serious economic circumstances. There's not a single person in this Chamber who has not been affected at this point by someone, directly or associated with them, who has lost a job in the province. Albertans want to hear from their government. They want to hear from the Premier. They want to know about help for those who are unemployed. They want to know about the stabilization of our public finances. They want hope for the future, and they want to know what we're going to do to diversify our economy. I intend to address Albertans and speak to them about those issues.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans don't want a TV ad. You made it clear that you do not intend to pass the budget in this Assembly; you'll run a campaign on the budget. So this is $100,000 in a campaign ad, twice the amount Redford spent to go to South Africa. It is clearly a purely partisan piece of PC propaganda. Again, since taxpayers will receive no benefit, will you do the honourable thing and have the PC Party pay back taxpayers immediately?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, Her Majesty's Opposition was afforded the opportunity to speak directly with Albertans and to share their plan. I think the essence of it is that they do not have a plan. They don't have a plan that will address Albertans relative to the diversification of the economy, how we're going to stabilize our public finances, and what we're going to do for young people and the future of this province. They don't have a plan, so they're not prepared to speak with Albertans. We are.

Mr. Saskiw: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, your point of order was noted 30 seconds ago, and it will be dealt with later.

Let's move on to Livingstone-Macleod, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

2:00

Navigator Ltd.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's cozy relationship with Navigator has been well documented, from the sole-sourced contracts to PC nominations to the backroom, floor-crossing deal that was made in the dark of night out of the Premier's office. This Premier said that he would do something about sweetheart deals for companies like Navigator in the past, but so far it's been business as usual. To the Premier: to what extent does your ongoing relationship with Navigator influence the business of this government?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier made it very clear when he took on as Premier that we are under new management. He made it very clear that there would be no more sole-sourcing contracts, and we've lived up to that bargain.

Mr. Stier: Well, earlier this month the government promised to spend upwards of $80 million to upgrade and install sprinklers at all seniors' facilities in this province. It seems like this should have been a no-brainer decision, certainly, but it took extensive lobbying to have the government act on this file, and according to the lobbyist registry it was Navigator that was doing the lobbying. Premier, it's time to start being honest on this. I'll ask you again. To what extent does your continued relationship with Navigator influence the business of this government?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to say that this government is doing the right thing because it's the right thing to do. One of the things that the Premier has us mandated to do is to upgrade our seniors' facilities so they're up to current safety standards. That's one of the main things that I got as a mandate as the Minister of Seniors along with creating more affordable supportive living and renewing our rural lodge program, on which we've taken great steps and expedited. We're trying to do a very good job with that.

Mr. Stier: Well, I was asking about Navigator in that question, minister.

The Premier's excuses simply don't wash. It's clear that the access to the Premier's office is facilitated by the people at Navigator. In return the Premier leans heavily on Navigator for their advice on both party and government business. Records indicate that Navigator is also being paid MSI funds to lobby the government on behalf of the town of Okotoks for the funding of a water pipeline. Now, we all know this pipeline is needed desperately, but Navigator shouldn't be scoring on the deal. To the Premier: why is government money being paid to Navigator to lobby this same government for more government money?

Mrs. McQueen: Mr. Speaker, any MSI grants that are given out are given out without strings attached to municipalities. Municipalities make the decisions on what's most important for their communities, and that's how they use and invest the MSI dollars that are given to them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Privately Operated Seniors' Housing

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. During this session the Liberal opposition has spoken a lot about Martha and Henry, the severely normal Albertans mythologized by past PC governments. Today many of those original Marthas and Henrys are seniors, and thanks to this PC government they're being treated as cash cows by private, for-profit seniors' home operators. Public Interest Alberta released today government documents reporting projected profits for Alberta's two major corporate care providers at $5,500 per bed annually. The same corporations received millions in capital construction grants. To the Premier: why are you padding the coffers of private care providers while at the same time forcing seniors to pay . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, let me try and clarify. The affordable supportive living initiative in Alberta is a very successful program that leverages government dollars to partner with private and nonprofit resources to create a greater number of spaces. With this year's ASLI, which the member alluded to, we're leveraging our $180 million taxpayer investment into projects totalling $850 million. We're building a thousand more beds than we initially projected. We're doing that by partnering, and we'll partner with anyone who can help increase the quality of life for our seniors.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Liberals recently released AHS figures showing the low cost of publicly provided long-term care compared to the high cost of keeping individuals in hospitals. To the Premier again: why are you providing funds to private, for-profit companies instead of investing in public, community-based home care and long-term care?

Mr. Mandel: We're investing in home care, long-term care, acute care. We are trying to ensure that all Albertans get the best care possible. This government has made a tremendous commitment to ensuring that there is a greater investment, as the Minister of Seniors said, in the continuing care continuum. We'll continue to do that as we continue to be effective.

Dr. Swann: One hundred and eighty million dollars wasted every year on in-hospital beds.

The government has been unable to ease the access-to-care crisis due to its failed seniors policy. It recently announced that it would double down on ASLI grants to solve the crisis, which hasn't worked in the past and won't work this time. Why does the Premier, who talks about making decisions based on conservative fiscal principles, insist on subsidizing by millions lower quality, higher priced care?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think the many nonprofit and private providers out there should take great offence at that last comment. They're delivering excellent care to our seniors across this province.

Mr. Speaker, let's talk about the facts. The facts are that Alberta seniors enjoy the second-lowest regulated accommodation rates in the country. ASLI grants help seed projects in communities that demonstrate need for supportive living, and any unit developed with ASLI money must charge the government-regulated rate for 30 years. So let's be clear. We're focusing on low-cost rent for seniors, that affordable housing piece, as opposed to focusing on who owns the building.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, leader of the ND opposition.

Emergency Room Wait Times

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I released more documents showing the ongoing crisis in Alberta's hospitals. Five years ago this government promised that 90 per cent of the sick would be admitted into Alberta emergency rooms within eight hours. Instead, our numbers show that, in general, people are waiting three times that target, and in some cases people are waiting not hours but days to be admitted to a ward. To the Premier: do you think it's reasonable for someone to have to wait 71 hours to be admitted to emergency care?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I think there's a bit of number-playing here. In the province of Alberta the Foothills, Peter Lougheed, Rockyview, Grey Nuns, Misericordia, Royal Alexandra, and University hospitals all have far less time today than they did five years ago.

Ms Notley: Well, actually, no, Mr. Speaker. Compared to two years ago, everything's gone up a long ways.

Emergency rooms are crowded, they're stressful, and they're not meant to house for days on end people who need to be admitted to the hospital. This weekend we heard about a young mother who miscarried in the emergency room while waiting for care. To the Premier: don't you understand that your government's long-term failure to improve emergency wait times has real-life consequences for the Albertans who depend upon our health care system?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, the latest real data from CIHI show that our emergency access is similar to other provinces or even better. As a matter of fact, the national average is a 3.2 hours' wait, and we're at 3.1 hours. You know, for example, for ages 20 to 64 in emergency Ontario is way higher than we are. So we're doing all we can to continue to build a very, very fine health care system in the province.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the numbers show that it's getting worse here.

Now, over the last two weeks of this soon-to-be-abbreviated session I've asked the Premier 17 questions about the state of our health care system, and he has not risen to answer one of them. So my question, again to the Premier: is your failure to answer these questions because you don't know about health care, you don't care about health care, or is it because you looked in the mirror and decided that somebody else was responsible for health care?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, actually, the reason that the Minister of Health has answered the questions is that we have a remarkable and extraordinary Minister of Health.

Childhood Immunization

Dr. Swann: Children's lives continue to be at risk with this government's lax approach to mandatory choice for school vaccinations. Although the Minister of Health and the Minister of Education both said they believe in vaccines, one has already categorically denied he will make the choice mandatory for school enrollment. Both have said they need more time to consult on what is a clear medical and scientific fact. The Premier is failing to provide leadership for all Albertans on this file by allowing this confusion to continue. Let's try and get some clarity. To the Minister of Human Services: does the government vaccinate children . . .

The Speaker: We'll have to hear from the minister now. Minister of Health, I think you got something out of the preamble.

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I'll respond that we've looked at the information. There is a variety of processes and procedures that you can take, and mandatory has not been shown to be the most effective. We need to look at what is the best way to ensure that every child in our school has the proper process for vaccination and there's a proper record in the school for them.

2:10

Dr. Swann: I'll try it again. To the Minister of Human Services: does every child in Human Services, every child in care, receive vaccination? Are they vaccinated?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that many families use the public health clinics when they go to get their shots. We know that. We work with parents at the parent link centres. We provide support to them. We provide them with all the choices to get the necessary vaccinations to protect their families.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you for the non answer.

Given that we are continuing to see a rise in vaccine-preventable disease and this government only spends 3 per cent of its budget on prevention, given that this government vaccinates children in care, will you do the right thing, Minister of Health, and direct the government to make vaccines mandatory, at least a mandatory choice for vaccines before children go into school?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we've already answered that question several times. We need to look at what is the most effective way, not just a mandating way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Employment Skills Upgrading

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The current low price of oil has led, unfortunately, to major layoffs in our oil and gas industry. Our province is expected to lose 31,000 jobs by the end of 2015. Generally during a tough fiscal environment people need to return to school to build their new skills for the upcoming good times. That is why we need to have the government help. My question is to the hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour. What steps has our government . . .

The Speaker: We'll have to hear now from the hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I heard the hon. member talking about layoffs, and I can tell you that two big concerns of this government under new management are people without jobs and jobs without people. When there are layoffs, we encourage employers to work with the federal work-sharing program. We have programs to help underrepresented groups in the workforce such as youth, aboriginal people, and women. We work closely with the federal government on the Canada-Alberta job grant. There is more work to be done, and I can assure the hon. member that we will keep doing it.

The Speaker: First supplemental. The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: how much funding is currently available to assist out-of-work Albertans to get training during these tough times?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, on an individual basis, for example, on the Canada-Alberta job grant there's up to $15,000 per person out of work either to get trained for a new job or get upgraded for a better job, out of which the government pays two-thirds, up to $10,000, and the employer pays up to $5,000. That's just the one program. There are several thousand Albertans that have already qualified for this, and we have other programs, which I'd be happy to talk to the hon. member about at his leisure.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education. Given that it is important for Albertans to have access to retraining and stay longer in school in these tough times, what efforts has our government taken to work with our postsecondary institutions to meet the training and learning needs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Ed.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud that our postsecondary institutions offer many opportunities for Albertans looking to retrain or upgrade their skills, and our goal is to make the system as accessible as possible. In addition to traditional learning at one of our 26 institutions, the Campus Alberta system has a wealth of flexible online learning programs and opportunities. There are more than 900 online courses and 70 programs offered by our postsecondary institutions. This includes academic upgrading for provincially approved certificates, diplomas, and applied degrees. Albertans also have access to financial support. If you apply for a student loan and you qualify, you'll get one.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Kananaskis Country Golf Course

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has approved spending millions of taxpayer dollars on a golf course while Albertans are still waiting for DRP relief. Last week the minister said that the government will be reviewing this situation, but the money has already been approved, and millions of dollars have already been spent. Minister, will you take this boondoggle off the backs of taxpayers?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, I share the hon. member's concerns about this. This is not an appropriate time to be expending public dollars on rebuilding a golf course. No additional spending authorities have been given since December of 2014. The Kananaskis golf course rebuild is under review, and no further public dollars will be devoted to this purpose without further notice.

The Speaker: A point of order has been noted from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills at 2:15, following that last exchange.

Let's move on to the first supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. The government has just handed over $5.4 million of taxpayer money to a company with close ties to the PC Party for this golf course, but you claim that only $2.3 million has actually been spent. Will you make this contract public so Albertans can see what you are doing with their tax dollars?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right. There has been that amount of money paid as part of the contractual obligations to an operator as a result of doing the maintenance on the upkeep of the assets that are there and the contractual obligations for a lack of funding. The additional money has been used to do the flood cleanup as the result of the flood. As the Premier has indicated, there will be no more public money going to the rebuilding of this golf course.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, it's been in supplemental supply and estimates.

The Premier has a tough time settling on priorities, whether it's an $18 million golf course or $10,000 for speeches and makeup sessions. This Premier is wasting taxpayers' dollars just as he's about to bring down record tax increases. Minister, will you hold off on spending any more taxpayer dollars on this golf course until you close every last DRP claim?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, I think the Premier was quite clear just a couple of minutes ago that there will be no more money going towards this project. It is under review, and we will make sure that in this time of fiscal restraint the priorities of Albertans are reflected, and we are ensuring that there will be no more money going towards the rebuild of this golf course.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, your point of order was noted during that last exchange, 30 seconds ago.

Let's move on.

Bighorn Sheep Harvest

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, recently the Department of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development announced plans to change the hunter harvest of bighorn sheep in Alberta. The proposal is to require horns of harvested rams to have a full curl instead of a four-fifths curl. This has raised concerns from hunters, big-game outfitters, and taxidermists, who may be affected by the potential lack of harvestable animals. All of my questions are for the Minister of ESRD. Can the minister tell the House why the change is being proposed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to be very clear that we are reviewing this as a potential change to the hunting regulation and that no decision has been made yet. However, there are concerns that have been brought forward by hunters and outfitters and the like regarding the quality of trophy rams in this province over the years. Analysis of over 30 years' of data supports these concerns that overharvesting is occurring and the quality of trophy rams in our province in Alberta has been decreasing.

Dr. Brown: Can the minister say what scientific evidence there is that such a change, if it goes ahead, will result in better trophy size?

Mr. Fawcett: The harvest of trophy rams, Mr. Speaker, is exceeding the 5 per cent target for rams of this size to survive the posthunting season, which is not sustainable over the long term. Biologically, there needs to be some mature rams left in the population to ensure a healthy age and size class structure for this range to succeed over the long term.

Dr. Brown: Can the minister assure hunters and outfitters and others affected that there will still be a sufficient number of animals available for harvest in the initial years if this change did go ahead?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. These proposed changes to the hunting regulations will reduce the harvest of trophy sheep in the short term and will allow for fast-growing rams to reach maturity prior to being harvested. We are in a process of ongoing consultation. We will continue consulting on this issue, and this will result in a review of the bighorn sheep management plan as well as habitat studies regarding sheep resiliency. We'll continue to make that data available publicly so that we're transparent about any decisions that are made.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed Edmonton-Decore.

2:20 Greenhouse Gas Emission Reduction

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. As far as I can reckon, the Alberta government's main strategy for climate change has been prayer. At the time I observed that the '08 strategy was back-end loaded; in other words, not much done now but much hope and prayer that something, anything, maybe some technology, would appear toward the end that would save them. My question is to the new minister of climate change. No one but this government has ever believed that the '08 strategy would achieve reduction targets. What has changed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, with responsibility in this area.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has actually achieved its targets in a number of ways. Just to give you a couple of examples: wind has increased from 1 per cent to 9 per cent; conventional coal has decreased from 52 per cent to 39 per cent. Today more than 45 per cent of Alberta's electricity generating capacity comes from alternative and renewable energy sources. Total flaring has decreased by 10 per cent. Solution gas has decreased by 13.5 per cent. I could go on – and you're waving me off – and I will in the next question.

Ms Blakeman: All right. The government has always diminished and obfuscated on climate change by basing reductions on a business-as-usual scenario rather than the start date and by using emission intensity to measure change rather than the actual reduction of emissions. So will this new, perhaps old strategy of the government please stop using these two mystifying terms?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, Alberta has established, as we know, a carbon price that has led to a cumulative reduction of 51 megatonnes and a contribution of $500 million to the climate change fund. We've invested $1.3 billion and will invest $1.3 billion in carbon capture and storage, which alone per year will reduce emissions by 2.7 million tonnes. We are committed to slowing growth of emissions while protecting the economy. We set realistic targets, and that is why we are renewing our climate change strategy to meet our 2020 targets.

Ms Blakeman: Well, in 2012 you produced 249 megatonnes, so I don't know that getting rid of 50 is going to make that much of a difference here.

You know, in the past I've heard the Premiers and the climate change ministers complain that there is really nothing they can do while Albertans continue to drive cars because what comes out of the tailpipes is far worse than what comes out of the oil sands. Now, is the minister planning to achieve climate change targets by making it the commuters' problem?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would say to the member: stay tuned as we renew our climate change strategy. We'll be looking at a variety of measures in order to meet the 2020 targets. We'll be doing this. If you think about this, our population has increased by 1 million people between 2002 and 2015, and we have a strong economy, which this government is responsible for making sure that we protect while meeting our reduction targets.

Seniors' Care

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, it is important to me that all seniors live in situations of dignity, with needed supports, and my questions are to the Minister of Health. Given that two years have passed since the move to give large firms the contracts for providing home care and given the controversies surrounding that change, to what extent will the Legislature be receiving a comprehensive review of the results and the effectiveness of the major change in home-care service delivery to seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'll make it clear that this wasn't a major change in the way we do home-care delivery, and we've always contracted providers delivering nonprofessional services such as personal care and assistance with their medication through individuals. What changed two years ago was that Alberta Health Services went through a request for proposal to make home care more efficient and cost-effective by consolidating and standardizing services. I am pleased to note that home-care spending has grown by 26 per cent. We have 112,000 individuals on support right now, and we are putting together a program which we can give . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, and we'll probably hear more in the first supplemental.

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that a recent study by the Canadian Institute for Health Information, CIHI, shows that the $506 per capita cost of seniors' care in Alberta is 19 per cent below the Canadian average of $625 per capita and given that there is a clear and substantial shortage of long-term care beds for seniors, will the government be increasing the per capita seniors' care spending to the national average in order to fund more long-term care beds for seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, first of all, we spend about $2 billion per year in continuing care. We've announced, under the Minister of Seniors, tremendous expansion to the continuing care program, which in itself and by itself requires a tremendous increase in investment in our seniors. Furthermore, in Alberta 12 per cent of our population are seniors; other areas of the country are at 15 per cent. So you need to put those numbers in balance, not necessarily on a per capita basis but with the number of seniors, so that you put them in the proper perspective.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the current care and accommodation standards established by Alberta Health give facilities eight weeks' notice of inspections and given that such notice may undermine the very purpose of such inspections, will the government ensure a policy of regular and unannounced inspections of all seniors' care facilities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Our goal is to make sure that seniors are receiving safe, appropriate care, and that includes ensuring that facilities meet our standards. My ministry and AHS formed a continuing care audit working group. They're hard at work thoroughly reviewing continuing care audits and assurance functions, including the practice of giving facilities notice. I do agree that we need to do this on a very individual basis and go there without any notice.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Red Deer-North.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Despite the Premier's last-minute, pre-election change of heart, in the last year the provincial government has already spent $5.4 million on the Kananaskis golf course. Given that the Minister of ESRD has said that the money is justified because, quote, the grass has to be kept nice and given that he should have added, "Nice for the Tory insiders operating the golf course, who are being subsidized through a sweetheart contract whose terms are being kept secret and which was awarded despite other bids being superior," to the Minister of ESRD: will the minister immediately make public the terms of the secret backroom deal, and if not, why not?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, again, the Premier has been very clear on this. We will not be spending any additional funds on the rebuilding of this golf course. It doesn't fit within the fiscal priorities of the government at this time. You know, we do have the contractual obligations with the operator that operated this golf course prior. We have to keep those contractual obligations, but as far as rebuilding the golf course, we will not be putting any money towards that.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the minister refers to the contractual obligations of the government, but he dodges the question as to whether or not he will make public the terms of the contract. Will he or will he not make it public, and if not, why not?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, again, it's very clear. This project is under review. We're reviewing all of the legal obligations and necessary obligations of the government. There was considerable damage there as a result of the flood. It has required that the government do some cleanup like it has everywhere else that was impacted by the flood, and that work was conducted. As the Premier said, it's under review, and right now it doesn't fit within the financial priorities of this government.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister completely dodged the question for a second time, let me ask him this. The supplementary estimates are going to be passed, or they'll have passed third reading by later today, which means the government can always spend the money, if it chooses to, after the election. Will the minister or the Premier undertake to repeal that section of the supplementary estimates so that the government does not have the authority to spend the money?

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, again, the Premier has been very clear in this Assembly and to me as the minister that there will be no additional expenditures on this particular project until a review has been conducted and we understand the realities of the situation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Eye Examinations for Children

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Children with undiagnosed visual impairments often have serious challenges learning to read, the foundation for all learning. Children with undiagnosed visual impairments usually suffer a loss of self-confidence and self-esteem, further impairing their ability to learn, and in many cases develop behaviour problems in the classroom and the schoolyard. To the Minister of Education: given that comprehensive eye exams are one of the best ways to diagnose visual impairment and that the government covers the cost of these exams for children to the age of 18, how supportive are you of having every child receive a comprehensive eye exam prior to grade 1?

Mr. Dirks: Well, Mr. Speaker, kindergarten students may take part in the Eye See . . . Eye Learn program, a very important childhood eye health and vision awareness program funded by Health. Educational materials to support school staff in the identification of possible vision problems as well as information for parents about the importance of eye examinations are available through this program, and free eyeglasses are provided to children who require them.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: given that studies have shown that children with undiagnosed visual impairments often require additional supports in the classroom and are unable to learn to their full potential, what is your ministry doing to ensure that all parents and guardians are aware of the importance of comprehensive eye exams prior to grade 1, where learning to read begins?

Mr. Dirks: I thank the member for the question, Mr. Speaker. We support our colleagues in the Ministry of Health to ensure that possible vision problems are identified in children and students as soon as possible. However, Education does not regulate parental choices, including those related to child health. The Eye See . . . Eye Learn program requires parental consent, and participation is not mandatory. However, during the '11-12 school year 44 per cent of Alberta five-year-olds completed eye exams. This collaborative partnership between Health and Education is a good example of working together to inform parents.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the Minister of Health: given that the government already covers the cost of comprehensive eye exams for all children up to and including the age of 18 and that fewer than 44 per cent of all children starting grade 1 have received a comprehensive eye exam, will our government continue to be committed to funding comprehensive eye exams for 100 per cent of all children prior to grade 1?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the member for the question. I deeply believe that if we don't have our children's eyes examined before they go to kindergarten or at least in their early years, tremendous problems can happen, so we are committed in Health to ensuring that every child has an eye examination, working with the optometrists' association to make sure that's done. We need to be more creative in how we do this. We need to be more proactive in making sure children get this. This is very, very important.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Calgary-Bow.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today Public Interest Alberta released freedom of information documents detailing the government's policy of funding private corporations to provide seniors' care. Of all the disturbing information in this document, of which there was plenty, the numbers speak the loudest: $36.5 million to private corporations, 27 per cent profit, and average profit of $5,500 per year per bed. To the Minister of Seniors: what is the upside of providing such exorbitant profits to friends and insiders of your government?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I take exception to those numbers. I think there's a fair bit of homework to be done before you could disclose those kinds of facts out to the public. That's certainly not what we're seeing, but let me tell you what we are seeing. We are seeing that it would have taken $850 million of taxpayer funding to produce all the units that we just produced with the ASLI grant, and we did that with $180 million of taxpayer funding. That's good news for seniors.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that companies can expect to make $5,500 profit per bed – those numbers are good – and given that the money could do a whole lot more to raise the quality of care in the facilities for seniors, hiring more staff, having better ratios for health care staff, better quality of food, to the Minister of Seniors again: wouldn't the money that we invest in seniors' care be better spent in nursing care and other services that seniors need rather than thickening up these companies' profit bottom lines?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think a couple of things are important to consider. One is that that $5,000 a year is coming off potentially a unit that cost that private provider $300,000 to build, so you can do the math on what the return is there. The other thing that's important to know as a taxpayer is that those units are secured for 30 years at discounted or rebate rent accommodation prices, and those accommodation prices are the same whether it's in a private facility or a nonprofit or government-owned facility. So we're actually spending less to build the building but securing the exact same operating costs for 30 years.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that many Alberta seniors and their families are struggling to find quality seniors' care and given that the government has given millions of dollars in profits to these for-profit corporations, not just for the set-up but also for the building of these structures as well, to the minister: finally will you stop the practice of outsourcing public health care to the private sector, save our province millions of dollars, ensuring our seniors are not paying for the profits of PC friends and insiders?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure if the member heard me, but I'll rephrase it. Seniors who are staying in these facilities are paying the same price regardless of whether this facility is run by a private or whether it's run by a nonprofit like Covenant Health or the Bethany Group. These folks are doing good work. This is about making sure that seniors can age in place and age in their communities and with their spouses and with their families in the communities they helped build, and we can only do that if we build more facilities. By partnering with privates and nonprofits, we've been able to build a lot more facilities. Taking care of the seniors is what this is about.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Flood Mitigation on the Bow River

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 2013 floods were the worst natural disaster in the history of the province. Tens of thousands of Albertans were forced from their homes. Hundreds of businesses were shut down, including downtown Calgary. In the aftermath the government began negotiations with TransAlta to create an agreement for use of their dams to minimize the impacts of major flooding on the Bow River. Lowering water levels at the Ghost dam prior to flood season would create storage for incoming floodwaters, yet despite negotiating for almost two years now, there's still no agreement in place. To the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development: are we close to an agreement with TransAlta that would allow their . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Minister of Environment and SRD.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government is committed to providing protection to flood-affected communities. Leveraging TransAlta's existing infrastructure is one of the more immediate and effective options that is available. We continue to work on an agreement with TransAlta that builds on the pilot project that we had with them last year on the Ghost reservoir. Although the focus this year is to get that immediate flood protection in place for the community for this flood season, we are continuing to work with them on a longer term agreement on water management along the Bow River.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. To the same minister: given that sediment buildup over time reduces the storage capacity of dam reservoirs, is TransAlta committed to maintaining the reservoirs so that there is adequate room for flood water during future events?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A survey to measure the water depths and assess the reservoir bed has been partially completed at the Ghost reservoir. This will address the question of storage loss due to sediment infilling and the impact of lower reservoir levels on fish habitats. If there is an opportunity to reshape the bottom of the reservoir to provide more storage capacity while not negatively impacting the fish habitat in the reservoir, we will pursue that option.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. To the same minister: why were three dry dams, initially considered for construction above the Bearspaw dam on the Ghost River and across Waiparous Creek, not recommended for detailed study?

Mr. Fawcett: These three dams that the member is alluding to, Mr. Speaker, were investigated as part of the initial assessment of flood mitigation options. They were rejected because they would not provide the acceptable levels of flow reduction because of either their location or the size of the reservoir. Although those locations did not pan out, we are continuing to explore other locations in combination with the work we're doing with TransAlta to try to maximize the level of protection we can provide for communities that are affected by the Bow River.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Calgary-West.

Legal Aid Funding

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the Minister of Justice make the business case for me in which an NGO which provides a legal assistance program is underfunded to the point that judges order counsel to be provided at full cost? Can he make that business case for me, please?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, with respect, I reject the premise of that question. We're funding legal aid, if that's what she is referring to, adequately. We have given a 5 and a half million dollar additional stipend this year, and we continue to ask the federal government to pay their share, as they once did.

Ms Blakeman: To the same minister: can this minister explain why he has implemented a number of changes to cut down on court time and court costs but, at the same time, a group which offers lower cost legal resources, which saves the government money, is resolutely underfunded?

Mr. Denis: The same answer.

The Speaker: Hon. member, final supplemental.

2:40

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Legal Aid has two revenue sources, government and the Law Foundation, which is interest off of trust accounts. They incur the expense, but they can't control the revenue. At the same time, we have more people in Alberta and more laws under which people can get into trouble. So to the Minister of Justice: whose fault is it if Legal Aid runs a deficit?

Mr. Denis: The same answer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Police Officer Deaths

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently a ceremony in the town of Mayerthorpe marked the 10th anniversary of the killing of four Royal Canadian Mounted Police officers. The event elicited a variety of emotions: grief, respectful remembrance as well as optimism and hope. To the Justice minister: in the 10 years since this tragedy, what lessons have been learned and what recommendations have been implemented which have come out of the fatality inquiry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the member's concern as a former police sergeant with the Calgary Police Service. What happened in Mayerthorpe 10 years ago was a sobering reminder of the inherent dangers that our police and peace officers face every day, and indeed one of them lost is one too many. As reported in the public fatality inquiry by Assistant Chief Judge Daniel Pahl, "There were no failings in the training, experience or abilities of the officers who lost their lives." I've been to the monument honouring the Fallen Four in Mayerthorpe, and I encourage Albertans to go.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that we have very recently witnessed the St. Albert tragedy, in which another officer lost his life and another offender with a significant criminal history was walking the streets, what is this government committed to do in order to prevent such a tragedy from happening in the future, and what are their plans to revisit the bail reform initiatives from 2008 and 2009?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the first things that I did when I learned of the tragedy of Constable Wynn's death in St. Albert recently is that I ordered a review of the Alberta Crown prosecution service involvement with the shooter. This review remains under way. We all know that any aspect of this case could have been handled differently. If we can find that out, we want to prevent and ensure best practices to ensure that this does not happen again and that his death is not in vain.

Mr. Ellis: Given that many incidents of officer-involved deaths were perpetrated by individuals who had a history of violence or a current history of being before the courts, in 2009 this government introduced bail reform, which was intended to put more police officers on the street and put the role of the hearing officer back in the hands of the Crown, but this initiative was shelved. To the same minister: when is the government going to reopen this reform initiative with stakeholder consultation and provide a better, safer service for citizens intended to prevent such past tragedies and not allow public perception of the administration of justice falling into disrepute?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned in the last exchange, the review is looking specifically at the Crown's involvement in this case, and I expect that it will look at the bail process in general to some degree. That being said, it's my expectation that if this report identifies that more work needs to be done in reviewing the bail process in more detail, this work will be undertaken as well. As, again, this is a fully independent review, I will make it public when it is available to me, but it's too early for me to speculate on next steps, and the review is not expected likely for the next few months. I wish to thank again the member for his inquiry.

The Speaker: The bell for question period has sounded, so we will move on to the continuation of Members' Statements, and we will do that in 30 seconds from now.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Let us begin. We have two minutes allotted for each of these statements.

We'll start with Strathcona-Sherwood Park and go to Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

World's Longest Hockey Game

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I feel fortunate to have the opportunity to rise today again and recognize the 2015 world's longest hockey game, held February 6 through 16 at Saiker's Acres in Strathcona county. The founder of the game, Dr. Brent Saik, and his team once again organized an incredible event that raised over a million dollars for the Cross Cancer Institute and the fight against cancer. The proceeds from this year's game are directly supporting the purchase of a PET/MR scanner. The device will produce extremely detailed images of cancer in its earliest stages and provide invaluable information for research and care. This will enhance our doctors' ability to deliver the right treatments at the right time while cutting patients' radiation exposure per scan in half.

This year's game was an unequivocal success, once again setting a new Guinness world record. Mr. Speaker, 40 brave players spent 10 days on the ice, each player skating for about 4,200 minutes, which is equivalent to two nonlockout NHL seasons. During this time more than 1,200 smokies, 1,000 hot dogs, and 2,000 cups of coffee were purchased and consumed, raising another $17,000 for the cause. Eighty-one volunteer referees kept score, as well as the peace, while 50 volunteer massage therapists and 20 nurses ensured that weary muscles were kept moving; 2,100 rolls of tape kept sticks on the ice and pads to shins while 4,220 goals found the twine. What we get when we add these numbers up is an incredible display of generosity, grit, and determination.

I would like to thank all of the participants, volunteers, and all those who helped make this year's world's longest hockey game the best event yet. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let us move on to Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, followed by Calgary-West.

Ernest Côté

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I wish to acknowledge Mr. Ernest Côté and thank him for his contributions to Alberta and Canada. He recently passed away at the age of 101.

Members may recall that Mr. Côté was our veteran of the Second World War who made national headlines after being tied up and robbed in Ottawa. What most people do not know is that he studied law at the U of A and classical French at the Edmonton Jesuit College. In 1939 he joined the Royal 22nd Regiment as a lieutenant. On June 6, 1944, he landed in Normandy, responsible for the logistics of the third division of the Canadian infantry. Seventy years later he returned to commemorate their arrival.

What most do not know is that in 1993 Mr. Côté donated cash to U of A's Campus Saint-Jean, establishing bursaries awarded to students studying there. He revisited the campus only a few weeks before his death. Also, Mr. Speaker, only a few years ago he spoke at the 75th anniversary of Jean Côté, a small community in my constituency of Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley. He was there to celebrate and remember his roots and his father, Jean-Léon Côté, who gave his name to Jean Côté. Mr. Jean Côté was a surveyor, a mining engineer, an MLA here in Alberta from 1909 to 1923, and then a Senator, appointed in 1923.

I'm very proud to have had met Mr. Ernest Côté, who left his mark on Alberta, Canada, the United Nations, the World Health Organization, and as a Canadian ambassador to Finland. We lost a man of tremendous leadership and courage. He was a true role model for all of us.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by Stony Plain.

Police Officer Deaths

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every member knows the importance of our front-line emergency services. In regard to the law enforcement officers who carry out their role under federal, provincial, or municipal jurisdiction, each of these courageous individuals has made a commitment to protect Albertan lives.

With this commitment comes risk, risk that not every person is willing or able to take. They are the chosen few who respond to situations in which their actions are sometimes unappreciated, but their split-second decisions can mean the difference between life and death. Often berated, police officers put their lives on the line to make sure that our lives are protected. Police officers who have made the ultimate sacrifice and lost their lives in the line of duty provide a stark reminder of the ongoing and ever-present dangers they face.

As a former police officer myself I would like to read the following poem, anonymously written, which humanizes the consequences of their job.

I have been where you fear to be,
I have seen what you fear to see,
I have done what you fear to do,
All these things I have done for you.

I am the man you lean upon,
The man you cast your scorn upon,
The man you bring your troubles to,
All these men I've been for you.

The man you ask to stand apart,
The man you feel should have no heart,
The man you call the man in blue,
But I'm just a man, just like you.

And through the years I've come to see,
That I'm not what you ask of me,
So take this badge and take this gun,
Will you take it? ... Will anyone?

And when you watch a person die,
And hear a battered child cry,
Then do you think you could be,
All the things you ask of me?

There should be no higher honour than that given to those men and women who give their lives in the line of duty. Their actions should never be forgotten.

I will be working with Alberta Justice in an attempt to reform the judicial administrative process to ensure that tragedies such as Mayerthorpe and St. Albert never happen again.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

2:50 St. Albert Food Bank and Community Village

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and acknowledge some very special guests we have joining us today. Joining the hon. Member for St. Albert today are some guests doing great work in his constituency. On his behalf I welcome Suzan and Ward Krecsy and Charlie and Marilyn Schroder with the St. Albert Food Bank and Community Village. The St. Albert Food Bank and Community Village provides vulnerable people in the community and surrounding area with free services so they can return to a state of independence and an improved quality of life. It's the compassion and community dedication shown by people like the Krecsys and Schrodors that make Alberta such a fantastic province to call home.

We are pleased to support food banks in St. Albert and my constituency of Stony Plain and all across the province. Organizations such as the St. Albert Food Bank and Community Village help to empower vulnerable Albertans to achieve their full potential. Some of the services that are provided include liaison work connecting individuals and families to the appropriate social services. That includes accessing housing and food, family violence prevention, and employment services. The best way to measure a society is by how well they treat their most vulnerable citizens. That is why food banks like the Parkland Food Bank have recently received CIP funding.

Mr. Speaker, we are dedicated to ensuring that public support is available to Albertans, but we need the ongoing dedication of community members like our guests here today as well. It will take both the government and community working together to ensure that all Albertans have access to the services they need. I want to thank our guests here today for their dedication to the betterment of St. Albert and the surrounding area. Their work has made a difference.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Bill 22

Skin Cancer Prevention (Artificial Tanning) Act

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 22, the Skin Cancer Prevention (Artificial Tanning) Act.

This new legislation would ban businesses from providing artificial tanning services to minors, prohibit advertising of artificial tanning directed towards minors, mandate health warnings in artificial tanning facilities and on advertising materials, and prohibit unsupervised self-service artificial tanning equipment in public places. Research shows that using tanning equipment before the age of 35 increases the risk of melanoma skin cancer by 59 per cent. Every Albertan, especially our youth, should be able to enjoy a life free of preventable cancers.

I would like to move first reading of the skin cancer prevention act. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that pursuant to Standing Order 75 Bill 22, the Skin Cancer Prevention (Artificial Tanning) Act, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill, Bill 24, being the Public Sector Services Continuation Repeal Act.

Mr. Speaker, this bill . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, the Government House Leader had, I thought, waved to you, but in actual fact he was waving at himself. So I hesitate to interrupt, but let me recognize the hon. Government House Leader first.

Mr. Denis: First off, Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask the unanimous consent of the House to continue the Routine past 3 p.m., pursuant to rule 7(7).

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: We will conclude the Routine when it concludes post-3 o'clock.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, actually, I would also like to ask the Assembly for unanimous consent to waive the notice required by Standing Order 39(1)(d) to allow the introduction of Bill 24, the Public Sector Services Continuation Repeal Act.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: On that note, we will now move to the hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Bill 24

Public Sector Services Continuation Repeal Act

Mr. McIver: Thank you for your patience, Mr. Speaker. I now request leave to introduce a bill, being Bill 24, the Public Sector Services Continuation Repeal Act.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, if passed, would repeal the Public Sector Services Continuation Act, which was passed in December 2013 but was never proclaimed or put into force. Government is currently in the process of exploring new models of public-sector legislation to ensure that the essential services Albertans rely on are provided. New legislation will align with the recent Supreme Court of Canada decision regarding labour legislation. Repealing the Public Sector Services Continuation Act is a first logical step in this developmental process.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: We'll start with the Minister of Health, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the five requisite copies of the Mental Health Patient Advocate office annual report for the year 2013-14. This report was submitted to me in accordance with the provisions of section 47(1) of the Mental Health Act. The report is entitled We're in This Together: Compassion, Hope, Help. It highlights how the Mental Health Patient Advocate office protects the rights of persons in accordance with the Mental Health Act and the patient advocate regulation. The office of the Mental Health Patient Advocate opened 2,050 new files in 2014-15. I'm very proud of the important work they have done over the years, and I'm pleased they were able to join us today to see this report tabled in the Legislature. I would like to thank them for their continued work in supporting some of our society's most vulnerable populations.

The Speaker: Let me move straight on to Edmonton-Centre, followed by Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Ms Blakeman: I regret, Mr. Speaker, that I was overly optimistic about tablings today. I'll try for tomorrow.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's go to Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of 26 different letters written by my constituents and Albertans struggling with Lyme disease. They highlight how our current system leaves many Albertans jumping hurdles as they seek help and answers for their illness. They are truly heart-wrenching stories.

I thank you for this opportunity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an analysis conducted by the Holy Spirit Catholic school board on how a 5 per cent cut would affect education quality. This analysis found that two schools within the district would have to be shut down. It also found that 32 full-time teaching positions would be cut in addition to nine support staff. We at the Alberta NDP stand with teachers and students in this province. I table this analysis with hope that the government will realize the real damage that cuts like these would do to Alberta's future generations and their families.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary Shaw, I understand that you have two tablings. Please proceed with both.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do rise with two tablings today. The first is a letter by Ian and Rita Campbell. Ian is a cancer survivor, and the family stopped by my office and wanted to discuss the importance of moving forward with the cancer centre in Calgary. I have the requisite number of copies of that.

I also have a letter here by a grade 11 student in my constituency, Ms Syameena Pillai. She is the president of Student Voice at Centennial high school and wanted to submit a letter about her thoughts around the implications of potential cuts to education.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, followed by the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise as well to table a document, including the appropriate five copies, a paper that was signed by approximately 540 concerned citizens of Berwyn, Whitelaw, Bluesky, Grimshaw, Brownvale, Fairview, Peace River, and the surrounding areas opposing the closure of the North Peace Housing Autumn Lodge in Berwyn. Certainly, they are very concerned about the closure of that particular lodge.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:00

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, I want to table the requisite number of copies of the letter to St. Nick from the young Albertan that I introduced today. I'll read it real quick. It'll take 30 seconds.

Dear Saint Nick,

Hello!! How are you? How are your Reindeer? Since I have learned that you only give 1 gift, not that I'm complaining, I will give you 3 things to choose from appropriate to my goodness:

1. to put a note in my brother's Gift that will tell him to be a little nicer.
2. to stop Global warming and help save big cats.
3. for the world to be more environmentally friendly.

Sincerely,

William Kendall.

And then he writes,

P.S. I would prefer #2 or 3.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to table five copies of an e-mail received in my office from the Alberta Association of Optometrists supporting my private member's Bill 206, the Childhood Comprehensive Eye Examination Act. The e-mail states: "In response to your request, the Alberta Association of Optometrists has reviewed the draft Private Member's Bill 206, 'Childhood Comprehensive Eye Examination Act' and has no objection to the optometric provisions within the Bill."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a letter from the town of Whitecourt supporting Bill 203, the Safety Codes (Sustainable Structures) Amendment Act, 2014, and what a great bill that was, too.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am rising to table five copies of an article by CBC news, March 17, 2015, in which one of the leadership candidates, Linda Osinchuk, for the Wildrose Alliance Party talks about, "moving from fakers and takers to the makers," and indicates: "We should be looking at selling bonds, Alberta bonds. And we can actually use this to create revenue." Those are actual quotes. Actual quotes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Stony Plain.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville has been recognized, and she does have the floor. Let us give it to her with grace.

Carry on.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings, of which I have five copies of each. Would you like me to do all three in a row? Just go one after the other? Thank you.

The first tabling I have is New High School, New Name from the Fort Saskatchewan Record on Thursday, March 19. The new high school that is proposed for Fort Saskatchewan has a new identity and new name. St. André Bessette was chosen for the name of the Elk Island Catholic high school, and it's going to open adjacent to the Dow Centre.

My next tabling is not such good news, Mr. Speaker, and that would be a news report that was on Global on March 21 about a local Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville constituent who had to wait seven hours in a hospital waiting room. I'm certainly concerned about the triage and the grief that that particular patient went through. That should not happen to anyone else, and we need to see that change.

My last tabling, Mr. Speaker, is recognizing Carole Bossert, who is a teacher at James Mowat elementary school in Fort Saskatchewan, for her work in creating a program that links seniors and grades 4, 5, and 6 students together. That appeared on Thursday, March 19, in the Fort Saskatchewan Record.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with the requisite number of copies of a news release from the Alberta Forest Products Association, in which the president says: “This is great news for the forest industry and for Alberta’s economy.” Naturally, he’s talking about that great bill, Bill 203.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite copies of two tablings. The first tabling is a search under the consultant lobbyists registration entitled CL0128, and it states that the lobbyist there is Navigator for the sprinkler systems.

The second tabling, with the requisite copies, is a search from the consultant lobbyists registration dated March 11, 2015, and it is with respect to the lobbying for certain infrastructure in Okotoks. It clearly states that Navigator is the registered lobbyist.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Mandel, the Minister of Health, pursuant to the Health Professions Act the College of Licensed Practical Nurses of Alberta 2013 annual report; pursuant to the Public Health Act the Public Health Appeal Board 2014 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we have three points of order to deal with now.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

The Speaker: The first one was raised, I believe, just around 2 p.m. by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, so if you would please proceed with your citation and your point.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise according to Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), and it is with respect to a comment made by the Premier in reference to a hundred thousand dollar campaign ad that taxpayers are paying for. He had indicated that the reason for the Wildrose not participating in this, what I would call, farce of wasting taxpayer dollars was that the Wildrose had no plan.

Mr. Speaker, this is categorically untrue. Not only do we have a very robust plan, some of the most substantive policies of all the political parties – you can check it out at www.wildrose.ca – but we do also advocate for things like lower taxes, decentralization of health care, protection of property rights, formalizing a process to lower power bills, and, of course, freedom: freedom of speech, freedom of religion, freedom of conscience. We have policies on essentially every single ministry.

Of course, on this particular issue, Mr. Speaker, it was the Premier’s chief of staff that approached our party, and we made it very clear that the reason we were not participating – it was made very clear to the Premier’s chief of staff – was because we felt that it was a waste of taxpayer dollars. The Premier should have been made aware of this, that that’s the reason why we rejected wasting taxpayer dollars like that, not according to the reason that he had provided.

So, Mr. Speaker, you know, we could dig into this a little bit more tomorrow. If the Premier is not willing to clarify his statements, we can keep digging on this. But we made it very clear what the reason for not participating was, and he has misled the Assembly in indicating why we didn’t participate.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It’s almost terrible that this member continues to use this type of language when he knows that you can’t have a point of order on a point of order. I’ll just leave it at that.

Mr. Speaker, if you look at what the text of 23(h), (i), and (j) says:

(h) makes allegations against another Member.

The Premier didn’t do that.

(i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member.

That didn’t happen either.

Third,

(j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

He didn’t do that either.

Mr. Speaker, it’s a statement of opinion, not fact, when someone says “we have a plan” or “we don’t have a plan.” That is a fair comment. This member talks about free speech – and I’m with him on free speech – but this is one of those cases where you can accept, respectfully, two versions of the same facts. I’m sorry. I don’t have the Beauchesne citation that you often indicate.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

I hope there’s no one else on this. It’s a very straightforward point. We frequently hear different accounts of different things, and the House has been reminded many times that Beauchesne 494 is quite applicable, and I’ll quote briefly.

It has been formally ruled by Speakers that statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their own knowledge must be accepted.

And it goes on and says:

On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident.

I believe the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills has clarified his side of this. I see no point of order here, nor do I see the need to allow us to engage in any further debate on the point of order.

So that closes that matter.

Point of Order Appropriation Process

The Speaker: We’ll move on to point of order 2, and that was enunciated at approximately 2:15 p.m. It’s again the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, so please proceed with number 2.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’ll actually combine the second and third points of order together. I’m rising according to Standing Order 23(h), (i), (j), and, actually, in this case (l). This is in regard to a question from the Official Opposition with respect to the Kananaskis golf course. In response to those questions both the Premier and one of the hon. ministers indicated that they would not be proceeding with spending any more money on that particular topic.

Why this is interesting, Mr. Speaker, is that in the Legislative Assembly we actually passed legislation in supplementary supply that indicated that money would be spent on that golf course. So you have an instance here where the Premier of Alberta under the Executive Council of government is overriding the will of this Assembly. These members across the aisle voted in favour of allocating money to the golf course, and now the Premier is stating that that money will not be used. That, again, is overriding the will of this Assembly. It's similar to points of privilege, actually, that were put forward previously in terms of overriding independent committees. This is even one step further, I would submit. Versus a delegated committee from this Assembly, he's actually overriding the entire will of this Assembly.

Perhaps the proper recourse would be a point of privilege here, where the Premier has overridden the will of this Assembly that has specifically stated that monies will be spent for a golf course. Now, if he is, by his own whim, ignoring the entire will of the Assembly, ignoring legislation that was passed, that would be improper, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask that that be clarified or that we give notice that a point of privilege will be called tomorrow.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, if this member wants to call a point of privilege, please, go right ahead and do so.

I went to dictionary.com on my BlackBerry, and it talks about estimates. "To form an approximate judgment or opinion regarding the worth, amount, size, weight . . . [or] calculate approximately". And then it goes down to say: "The department will use the estimates for budgetary purposes." That's the first definition.

Now, this member had referred to Bill 17 and Bill 18. I have a copy of them in front of me, Mr. Speaker, and it doesn't talk specifically about a golf course here. But the point here is that even if it did, the estimates are just that. What happens when a department doesn't spend the money? They're not obliged to. They're just authorized to. When I was minister of housing I would routinely return money back to the treasury. There is not a requirement under the Standing Orders or Beauchesne's or anywhere else that this go back to the item here.

This might be more of a point of clarification, but there certainly is no point of order here. If this member wants to make a point of privilege, he is at liberty to do so as a member of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, unfortunately, I'm forced to agree with the Government House Leader with respect to this point of order. There is no compulsion on the part of the government to spend money that is budgeted for.

The parliamentary process is that the Legislature or the Parliament must be consulted to gain approval for the taxation and the expenditure of funds, but it is not something that is then mandated when the Legislature votes certain sums. That is why in my question today I asked for the government to repeal the approval of the $8 million because my fear, of course, is that as soon as the election is over, they will spend this money. That's why a repeal is the only answer. The point of order just doesn't do the trick, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Well, once again here, I hope there is no one else wishing to chime in to take up the time, but if there is, I'd recognize you briefly. I see no one, so let's move on.

I would agree that this is simply a matter that is frequently characterized as being a dispute as to the facts. We know what estimates are. We've been here. We've been through this, some of us for many, many years. Estimates are in fact estimates, and they're titled that for a reason. It does not oblige the government to follow through necessarily. It provides, perhaps, a guideline or however else you might want to interpret it. But at the end of the day if a government wishes to change its mind about something that it's been directed to do or requested to do or has in its estimates to do, then the government is certainly at liberty to do that. It's within their purview to do so.

Accordingly, I find there to be no point of order on this matter, but I do thank the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills for clarifying his statements on it once again and for rolling the two together to save the House some time.

On that note, we can move on.

Bill 204

Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving Demerit) Amendment Act, 2014

[Debate adjourned March 16: Mr. Ellis speaking]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-West, I believe you still have eight minutes. If not, we can pass it over to someone else. I would be happy to recognize Calgary-Glenmore in that case, and then we'll bounce back and forth with opposition members who may wish to participate.

Hon. member, you have the floor.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise and speak to you about Bill 204, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving Demerit) Amendment Act, 2014. My focus today is to explain what distracted driving means and how this impacts a person's ability to drive, which can ultimately lead to accidents.

As I begin, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-East for bringing this bill forward. The traffic safety amendment act would enhance the Traffic Safety Act by proposing that monetary penalties be increased from $172 to $250, with a penalty of three demerits for every offence.

The Traffic Safety Act, introduced in 2007, was the first strategy of its kind in Canada. The legislation was introduced due to the significantly high number of collisions, deaths, and injuries on Alberta's roads. Since the implementation of this plan the number of traffic fatalities has declined. In fact, over the past four years the loss of life has decreased by nearly 32 per cent.

As drivers we all know that distracted driving can be a very dangerous act. Alberta is known for our harsh winters, with our often terrible road conditions, and after a large dump of snow driving collisions peak. We also experience very unpredictable weather in all regions of our province.

Mr. Speaker, everyone knows that distracted driving is dangerous and that in just five seconds someone can die, whether immediately at the side of the roadway or hours, days, weeks later, and the impact to loved ones, co-workers, and the community is large.

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

Individuals know that it is illegal to use a phone while driving, whether for texting or writing e-mails, and it is even illegal to talk while using your phone as a speaker. But we Albertans are clever, and no matter what the excuse some of us may give, we know that a distraction from the road is dangerous. What I do believe is that as drivers we too often assume that the distracted driving mistake will not happen to us, and we underestimate the profound effect driver errors have on others.

Bill 204 will amend the Alberta Traffic Safety Act, encouraging drivers to stop looking at their laps and to focus on the road. Alberta has done an exceptional job with increasing awareness and improving safety on our highways. In 2004 Alberta suffered 387 fatalities due to the improper actions of drivers and distracted driving. In 2006 these fatalities rose approximately 20 per cent, to 453 fatalities. In 2007, the same year the Alberta traffic safety action plan was implemented, 458 collisions and fatalities occurred, unfortunately another year of increases.

Five years ago this month, in 2010, my family was impacted when we lost a family member as a result of a traffic fatality. It was a wonderful spring day when my mom and dad went for a drive along highway 822. Unfortunately, an accident happened, and the vehicle they were in was T-boned, and three days later my mom was no longer with us. The impact was felt not only by our family in Alberta, but friends and family in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, British Columbia, and Ontario were soon receiving the news that Helen had passed. While I am not alone in this Assembly in having lost a family member to a traffic fatality, we all feel, we all hurt, and we all want to work to make our roads safer. [some applause] Thank you. Life goes on, and daily, when I witness careless and distracted driving, I honour my mom and remind myself of the importance of paying attention behind the wheel.

Madam Speaker, I am pleased to report that in the following year, 2011, the number of fatalities did decrease in Alberta to 344. While this number is still staggering, Alberta is slowly seeing improvements. In any given year the number of people killed on Alberta's roads is equivalent to the population of an average elementary school. If Bill 204 is passed, it will help keep Albertans safe on the roads and reduce the number of fatalities.

To date Alberta's fatalities from distracted driving have not risen since the low recorded in 2011. The fact that the numbers have improved is a good indication that the reforms of the Alberta traffic safety action plan are working. Unfortunately, though, we are seeing a trend up and that distracted driving is getting worse than in the previous years. Bill 204 would continue with the work that the province has set out to combat distracted driving.

Safe roads Alberta has done an incredible job with their campaign Crotches Kill. The posters, radio spots, and other advertisements were impossible to miss. These posters featured the all-too-familiar picture of a driver looking down at their lap while operating an automobile. The ad campaign had an impact, to lower the number of distracted driving offences that were committed in the last year. While the ads were offensive to some individuals, they did get the attention of the target market, and Albertans are talking more about the dangers of distracted driving.

Another agency concerned with distracted driving is the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. In their practices distracted driving is a form of impaired driving since a driver's judgment is compromised when they are not fully focused on the road. Their campaign states that every time a person texts, they take their eyes off the road for five seconds, which is too often the cause of fatalities on our roads. So let's count here, Madam Speaker, five seconds: one one-thousand, two one-thousand, three one-thousand, four one-thousand, five one-thousand. If each of us were driving, how far did we just travel?

A study conducted by the Canadian Council of Motor Transport Administrators found that in 80 per cent of collisions the driver had looked away from the road three seconds prior to the crash. Even when drivers use a hands-free device, they are less aware of the traffic around them as they tend to react more slowly to a critical event or, worse, they do not detect the danger at all.

Madam Speaker, Alberta's roads can be dangerous no matter what the season, but they are particularly bad during the winter months. Can you imagine the effect the added danger of poor road conditions has on a distracted driver when they are three times more likely to be in a crash than an attentive driver?

Bill 204 will support the Alberta government's efforts to stop distracted driving. Although everyone is well aware of the dangers of texting while driving, it also needs to be mentioned that cyclists are also subject to distracted driving laws. While cyclists are not operating a motor vehicle, they are on the same roads and therefore can cause harm to themselves and others when disobeying the law. Cyclists have to follow the distracted driving laws also.

Distracted driving legislation states that it is illegal to read any printed materials or electronic devices; use of hand-held phones, speaker phones; programming a GPS; personal grooming; watching digital screens; having an animal sit in the front seat; reading; writing. All kinds of activities are distracted driving.

Madam Speaker, the foundation has been laid for ending distracted driving in Alberta, and it is clear what changes need to be made to improve the system. When Bill 16 was passed, there was a drastic change for the better on Alberta roads; they became safer. Unfortunately, five years later distracted driving is back on the rise and a leading cause of collisions and fatalities on our roads. Bill 204 will help make the next necessary changes required for Albertans to be safe on the roads once again.

Bill 204, the traffic safety amendment act, would bring safety back to our roads, so please join me in supporting this bill to move forward. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and contribute to the debate on Bill 204, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving Demerit) Amendment Act, 2014, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-East. Today I would like to thank the hon. member for bringing forth Bill 204 for debate. He has proven to be an important advocate working towards safer roadways across our province.

Madam Speaker, if passed, Bill 204 will amend the Traffic Safety Act by increasing the severity of penalties for persons accused of distracted driving. Currently Alberta experiences one of the lowest fines for distracted driving in comparison with other provinces in Canada. Since the introduction of distracted driving legislation the fine for distracted driving offences has been only $172. It is the opinion of many RCMP officers that this fine has not done enough to improve the statistics of distracted driving incidents on Alberta's roadways. Widely supported by Albertans, Bill 204 would introduce demerit points for each distracted driving offence plus an increase in fines. Each offence will be met with a monetary penalty of $250 plus three demerit points issued on a person's driving record.

Madam Speaker, it is clear that current distracted driving legislation does not dramatically reduce the incidence of distracted driving. Today 90 per cent of collisions are believed to be caused by driver error. Distracted driving continues to be a major issue that must be addressed to ensure the safety of all Albertans. In 2004 there were a reported 387 fatalities due to distracted driving in Alberta.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The RCMP have promoted various suggestions which we can use to avoid distracted driving while operating a motor vehicle. Before you drive, it is suggested that you know your route before you begin your trip. Preprogram your trip if you're using a GPS system. Better yet, have your route memorized. The RCMP have also suggested allowing yourself plenty of time to reach your destination. If you are not rushed, you are less likely to be distracted by the time or the pressure to arrive. In addition to presetting your GPS system, it is also in the driver's best interest to preset all seats, mirrors, climate control, and radio stations.

Mr. Speaker, the RCMP have also recommended that teaching your children these simple tasks while they are first learning to drive can further their discipline and knowledge of distracted driving immediately when they receive their licensing. Bill 204 would be a deterrent to younger adults developing habits of distracted driving because the repercussions of an offence would be relatively high, further incorporating better driving habits at a young age that will stay with them through their adulthood.

Other recommendations by the RCMP for lowering your chances of driving while distracted are to secure loose objects so they do not roll around your vehicle, becoming a distraction, nor will you be tempted to reach for them while you're driving. Also, prepare your children with everything they need by giving them larger items to play with instead of small ones. Secure pets properly in the back seat. If they are moving around in the vehicle, they can easily become a distraction or a physical barrier for the driver's line of vision and ability to manoeuvre the vehicle. Finally, turn off the alerts on your phone so you're not tempted to check your texts and your e-mails. The RCMP continues to communicate to the public on what they see and hear every day regarding distracted driving behaviour and ways in which they can prevent it.

Mr. Speaker, last month was Distracted Driving Month, and Alberta RCMP officers joined together to increase distracted driving enforcement in an effort to raise awareness and educate Albertans on the various risks it imposes on not only themselves but the general public. The goal was to reduce the number of fatalities and serious injury crashes caused by distracted driving. Sindre RCMP Sergeant Jim Lank said that there is a need to change the public attitudes and values towards distracted driving; everybody, to some degree, is not complying with this law, and that is a huge traffic safety issue.

3:30

Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 speaks to all RCMP officers across the province and supports them in their efforts to reduce fatalities caused by distracted driving. Other RCMP officers have been quoted as saying that the problem is that society has become so dependent on the use of their mobile phones and other portable devices that there is a very low compliance rate.

Mr. Speaker, how do we increase the compliance of Albertans? Bill 204 would be a big step in the right direction and can work towards decreasing the number of fatalities seen by front-line RCMP officers in our province. According to an Alberta RCMP press release, since distracted driving came into effect on September 1, 2011, there have been over 60,000 distracted driving charges laid by Alberta RCMP officers. There were 23,913 convictions alone for distracted driving committed on roads patrolled by Alberta RCMP.

If a vehicle is travelling a hundred kilometres per hour, it travels a distance of approximately 30 metres per second. Alberta RCMP state that during a three-second glance at a cellphone, that vehicle travelled almost a hundred metres, or 270 feet. The three-second glance equates to a hundred metres at a hundred kilometres per hour, which is more than enough to get into a serious collision.

Mr. Speaker, these kinds of collisions occur across the country every single day. In many communities it has overtaken impaired driving as the leading factor in vehicle collisions. Bill 204 would help to establish an increased deterrent for distracted driving in an attempt to further protect Albertans on our roadways. Distracted driving is a major issue, and we must begin to realize that campaigns are not going to be enough to implement the change we need in order to reduce the incidences of distracted driving and fatalities caused by it. It is in our power to implement legislation that will further protect all Albertans and serve as a catalyst to improve driver behaviour. We must consider implementing measures consistent with our neighbouring provinces to make our roadways safer for all who use them.

Distracted driving continues to surpass alcohol as a factor causing road deaths, and the public is still unaware of how dangerous cellphones are behind the wheel. It is important for the public to realize that distracted driving does not only include cellphones; it includes anything that you voluntarily do in your vehicle to prevent your utmost attention to operating your motor vehicle.

I commend the hon. Member for Calgary-East as we continue to debate Bill 204, and I look forward to hearing from our remaining members that wish to speak to it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand today to debate on Bill 204, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving Demerit) Amendment Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-East. The hon. member has proven time and time again what a passionate advocate he is for safe and responsible driving.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, my apologies. The record shows that you spoke already, so you can't speak again.

Ms DeLong: Aw.

The Deputy Speaker: My apologies. I didn't check the list.

With that, I'll recognize the next speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today and participate in this wonderful bill, Bill 204, Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving Demerit) Amendment Act, put forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-East. I would like to express my sincere gratitude to the hon. member bringing this bill forward. I feel grateful to stand and speak to you about the serious topic of distracted driving.

Bill 204 proposes to amend the Traffic Safety Act in order to combat distracted driving on Alberta's roads. Alberta was not only one of the last Canadian provinces to legislate a law against distracted driving, but it was the only one of those few not including demerit points with their fine. Today we get one step closer to realizing this change. Bill 204 will not only increase the already existing fine of $172 to $250, but it will add a penalty of three demerit points.

Mr. Speaker, distracted driving is one of the most dangerous offences on the road today, and people do not seem to realize the dangers associated with it. We must do the responsible thing by influencing the driver to stop committing this crime. Bill 204 supports those initiatives.

Mr. Speaker, my focus today will be on the importance of adding the line "a person who is guilty of an offence under section . . . 115.3." It is evident from what we have heard here today that many distractions exist to draw attention from the driver, but cellphones clearly represent the most popular form of distraction. An estimated

1 in 4 car crashes on the road today involve cellphone usage. Hands-free technology is incredibly popular today, and it is often the go-to for drivers who don't want to be ticketed for talking or texting while driving. However, new technology can be just as dangerous as using non hands-free devices as your brain still remains distracted from the road for the conversation.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 proposes increased penalties in section 158 of the Alberta Traffic Safety Act. Section 115 pertains to prohibited actions while driving a vehicle and using a hand-held Global Positioning System. Section 115.3 outlines a number of prohibited activities that will become subject to stiffer penalties under this bill.

Mr. Speaker, most if not all drivers use navigation devices to get around on the road today. Although it is a blessing, it is also a curse. The incredible technology market has taken our world by storm, and it has become so blatantly difficult for us to keep up with the ever-changing technology. Yes, we need to continue to use those great new advancements to help us navigate through life; however, we must not forget the importance of staying safe.

Distracted driving involves so much more than just texting behind the wheel; it has also to do with many activities you are performing while you're driving. Focus should be on the road. The only true solution to this problem is to put your phone or any other devices that may distract you away when you're driving.

Section 115 specifically outlines the provision when operating a Global Positioning System, or GPS, while behind the wheel.

Section 115.3(1) reads: "Subject to this section and the regulations made under section 115.5, no individual shall use a global positioning system navigation device . . . while driving."

Section 115.3(2) states:

An individual may use a global positioning system navigation device while driving or operating a vehicle on a highway if the system

- (a) is programmed before the individual [gets behind the wheel], or
- (b) is used in a voice-activated manner.

The use of a GPS is not illegal as long as they are programmed before an individual starts to drive or if it's voice activated, not hand held.

Furthermore, section 115.3(3) states:

If a global positioning system navigation device is portable, an individual may use the system while driving or operating a vehicle on a highway if, in addition to the requirements of subsection (2), the system

- (a) is not held in the individual's hand, and
- (b) is securely affixed to the vehicle in a manner that does not interfere with the safe operation of the vehicle.

3:40

Alberta has some of the most dangerous highways in Canada. The fines should reflect this, and increasing the penalty for distracted drivers should be a priority. Albertans need to start putting their phones and GPS devices away before they start driving on our roads. Mr. Speaker, Albertans need to feel safe on the road, and I feel section 115.3 is an important inclusion to the Traffic Safety Act.

Alberta's current fine of $172 is the only penalty. When comparing it to the rest of Canada, where any driver can receive it when they are convicted of this crime, it is evident that Alberta is in need of new legislation regarding distracted driving penalties. Bill 204 will ensure that the fine is increased, and if a person commits a more severe offence behind the wheel, they will be appropriately fined for it.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that distracted driving is an issue for every province in Canada, not just Alberta. All other Canadian provinces have already taken these dangerous acts into serious consideration by legislating tougher laws. Today the lowest fine in Canada is in Newfoundland and Labrador at $100. However, even with it being $72 less than Alberta's apparently steeper fine, it is still a much greater penalty in that this is the lowest fine of an incremental schedule that peaks at $400 and also includes three demerit points. With Alberta being one of the only provinces that do not enforce the demerit points, places like Newfoundland have a higher penalty because they have demerits and monetary fines.

Section 158(5)(b) in the bill proposes to include three demerit points in accordance with the current regulations. Mr. Speaker, there is no question that having demerit points attached to the fine is not ideal; however, it may be the best solution for Albertans. By enabling law enforcement to assign demerit points, this penalty will no longer be just a nuisance but an offence that will affect driving records, creating a long-lasting effect. If so many Canadian provinces have not needed to increase their fines, then maybe they are doing something right by utilizing the demerits as punitive measures. Adding three demerits to the current penalty will provide a long-term solution for those offenders who are unaffected by the current fine. Distracted driving will decrease with substantial numbers, forcing the dangerous drivers off the road.

Mr. Speaker, increasing the penalty under section 158 of the traffic act. . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 204, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving Demerit) Amendment Act, 2014. I want to express my heartfelt thanks to the hon. Member for Calgary-East for bringing forward this legislation about distracted driving so that we can discuss this important and, I dare say, sometimes life-and-death topic. We all know that the legislation would increase the $172 fine to $250, but what most people really need to pay attention to, I believe, is that it would cost offending drivers three demerit points.

Mr. Speaker, the current legislation applies to all drivers of motor vehicles and bicycles within the province of Alberta, and while the existing legislation is a deterrent to distracted driving, the addition of demerits would add significant teeth to the legislation. That's the word on the street that I've heard. Our government takes all traffic issues seriously but none more than the preventable plight of distracted driving and the sometimes mortal results.

Distracted driving is a serious problem in our society, that has been exacerbated by the ease with which we can access media and communications on our hand-held devices. Cellphones have become such a prominent part of our lives that we use them literally everywhere, including using our phones in inappropriate circumstances, times, and places such as while operating a motor vehicle.

The current legislation prevents drivers from doing a number of things while driving, including using hand-held cellular telephones, texting, e-mailing, using electronic devices, entering information on GPS units, reading, writing, personal grooming, watching a TV screen, and having a pet sit in the front seat of a car. As you can see, many things can distract drivers, but I do want to point out that cellphones are one of the more serious distractions, and here's why, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, statistics show that cellphone use while driving increases a driver's chance of an accident far more drastically than other distractions. A person who is texting on a cellphone is 23 – that's right, 23 – times more likely to have an accident, while someone who is talking on a cellphone is four to five times more likely to have an accident. Those are very serious numbers. Non cellphone related activities also increase a person's chance of an accident, with both reading and applying makeup – I don't know how often that applies to you, Mr. Speaker – increasing the odds by three times.

Regardless of what is distracting drivers, the most important point is that it harms and sometimes kills Albertans, and it can occur on a daily basis. That's simply unacceptable. According to Alberta Transportation distracted drivers are three times more likely to be in a crash than attentive drivers. During 2012 around 130,000 collisions were recorded on Alberta roadways. One hundred and thirty thousand. Property damage collisions represented almost 90 per cent of this total while over 10 per cent were nonfatal injury collisions. Fatal collisions accounted for .2 per cent of the total reported collisions, and while that percentage is relatively small, it does add up to – get this – 307 lives lost, almost one every day on average, due to traffic collisions in our province.

Alberta Transportation estimates that as many as 30 per cent of all accidents are caused by some form of distracted driving. While traffic accidents are something we can't necessarily stop, at least not at this point in time in human history, distracted driving is something that we can make great strides to reduce.

I think it's important to understand the types of people that actually drive distracted. This isn't opinion; this is based on study, Mr. Speaker. There are many myths about distracted driving, but one I'd like to address is that this is solely a problem with our youth. Here's why. We looked into it, and we found that Ottawa's Traffic Injury Research Foundation, or TIRF, conducted a study of the number of accidents that occurred from 16- to 19-year-olds and compared them to accidents from those that are 20 years of age and older. They found some surprising results. The detailed study describes the ways in which distracted driving impacted 16- to 19-year-olds, but it overlooks important points, mainly that the number of distracted driving related fatalities among people older than 20 was actually significantly higher than in the range of the youth. But let's be very clear. This is a problem for everyone of every age group.

In 2013 researchers at the University of Alberta released a statistical analysis about texting and driving. It's good to have information from here at home. Using data months before the implementation of the 2011 distracted driving law – so this goes back a bit now – researchers determined several characteristics of people who appear to top the risk scale by using cellphones while driving. The results are shocking to some. Men actually outnumbered women by almost 10 per cent in phone use while driving. The largest proportion of offenders in both groups fell in the 35- to 44-year-old age category. The majority of mobile users had completed postsecondary education, again a surprise to many, and among income brackets the lowest income earners had the lowest level of cellphone use while driving. I don't think any one of us can be pointing any fingers on this issue, Mr. Speaker. Rates of use increased with each income category. Fascinating. Those earning over $100,000 a year were the top users, or, shall we say, abusers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this study paints a much different picture of who uses their cellphone while driving than some might expect. Some have made the point that current legislation does not go far enough and suggest that for those folks who can afford the inconvenience of a $172 fine, well, the law is just meaningless. If that's the case, the demographics who most likely are driving distracted are likely unfazed by the current fines, and if that's true, more action is needed to prevent drivers of this demographic from driving distracted. Highlighting this demographic today allows us to recognize that this is not just a youth problem but applies to everyone in Alberta and beyond.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 proposes more stringent actions. Why? To prevent injury and death from distracted driving. By adding a three demerit penalty, Albertans may in fact be less inclined to use their cellphones while driving. That's what this is all about. While penalties are an important part of keeping Albertans safe, education is also needed. We need to prevent our loved ones, including the next generation of Albertans, from driving distracted, and it's important that we also target older demographics because, of course, they're role models for the youth of our province. If adults set a proper example early, we can help to end distracted driving in our province altogether.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to again thank the hon. Member for Calgary-East for his dedication to keeping Albertans safe. It's been an honour and a pleasure to discuss this topic and also to hear the debate surrounding this really important issue.

I do look forward to hearing the rest of my hon. colleagues discuss this topic, and, Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your incredible attention to this ever-important topic.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. Member for Stony Plain, you have one minute in this segment.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand today to debate Bill 204, Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving Demerit) Amendment Act, 2014, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-East. This bill is an excellent demonstration of that advocacy, and I'd like to use some examples from elsewhere in the country. The Ontario Provincial Police reported that in 2013 57 people lost their lives to impaired driving and 44 to excessive speed, but 78 were killed as a result of distracted driving.

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

It is shocking that distracted driving is responsible for the majority of deaths in car crashes. Indeed, it has been found that 75 to 85 per cent of motor vehicle accidents are the consequence of distractions of various sorts, yet here in Alberta distracted driving is among the least punishable driving offences. This is disproportionate to the gravity of the situation, as I'm sure you all agree. Given the frequency of car accidents resulting from driver distraction and especially given the severity of consequences ... [Mr. Lemke's speaking time expired]

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East to close debate on Bill 204.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you, all hon. members who rose to speak to Bill 204 on both sides of the House. As discussed, the goal of Bill 204 is to reduce distracted driving on Alberta roads by increasing the fine from $172 to $250 and three demerit points. This would position Alberta as one of the provinces with the strongest distracted driving fines. Bill 204 proposes a strong deterrent for distracted drivers and would spark a societal change in how distracted driving is treated by Albertans. Distracted driving is no longer acceptable, and these new measures reflect that.

Madam Speaker, incidents of distracted driving have gone up in recent years, with some Alberta police officers calling it worse than ever. Now is the time for the Alberta government to show some leadership and to listen to what Albertans are telling us. Bill 204 shows we are serious about protecting Albertans from distracted driving. A simple monetary fine hasn't been strong enough to deter distracted driving. With Bill 204 repeat offenders risk losing their licence if they do not change their driving behaviour.

Driving requires your full attention, Madam Speaker. Let's make Alberta a safer place by ensuring we do our best to reduce distractions in vehicles. I value and respect all my colleagues' comments regarding this bill. I would like to thank everyone who participated in this debate and urge all hon. members to vote in support of Bill 204.

I call the question.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion carried; Bill 204 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: I would like to ask for unanimous consent to move Bill 204 to Committee of the Whole.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 204 Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving Demerit) Amendment Act, 2014

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Madam Chair. I was very encouraged by the discussion during second reading, and I'm honoured to continue the discussion on Bill 204 here today and begin Committee of the Whole. I would like to thank everyone who spoke on Bill 204 already and everyone who will speak today.

Making real, measurable change is the kind of thing we aspire to as MLAs, Madam Chair, making real change for the people we work for, the people of this great province of ours. I look forward to carrying on debate today as we work towards real change.

Bill 204 is short and effective, presenting two key amendments to the Traffic Safety Act. Even those of us who are not lawyers easily interpret what is being proposed. Imagine, Madam Chair, if all bills were written this way.

Section 158 of the Traffic Safety Act is amended by adding subsection (5). Subsection (5) includes two provisions:

- (5) A person who is guilty of an offence under 115.1, 115.2, 115.3 or 115.4
 - (a) is liable to a fine of $250, and
 - (b) shall be assessed 3 demerit points in accordance with the regulations.

4:00

Both of these provisions are absolutely necessary, Madam Chair, for this bill to be successful in curbing distracted driving. The $250 fine is an increase from the former fine of $172. This new fine would be one of the highest fines in Canada. This fine takes into consideration the severity of the infraction. Distracted driving is a very serious infraction that should not be taken lightly. We have discussed at length the implications and dangers that come with distracted driving, and I hope nobody will forget the conclusion that distracted driving kills.

Many of us have spoken about how many times we have seen distracted drivers on our commutes. A few of us have even admitted to being guilty ourselves. A $250 fine will sting for those who choose cellphones and other electronic devices over safety, and it adds up very quickly for repeat offenders. Bill 204 amends section 158 of the Traffic Safety Act by adding subsection (5), and this will give authorities the power to administer this fine.

Madam Chair, the $172 fine being amended here is one of the lower distracted driving fines amongst Canadian provinces. I proposed Bill 204 because the effectiveness of this fine has been poor. It hasn't reduced incidents of distracted driving and thus hasn't made our roads safer. We must consider that wages in Alberta are the highest, on average, in Canada. Financially many Albertans are able to brush off the fine with few significant consequences.

Madam Chair, we need a stronger deterrent. Our fine should represent the significance of the problem and the seriousness with which we treat it. By raising the fine to $250, we will be in a position where offenders will take notice.

Bill 204 also proposes the introduction of three demerit points assessed to parties guilty of distracted driving. This point is just as integral to the vision of the bill as the increased monetary fine. Madam Chair, previously with past distracted driving legislation, notably Bill 16 from 2011, there weren't any demerits given to drivers guilty of distracted driving. That meant that as long as they had money to pay their fines, their driving records remained clean.

Distracted driving is like playing Russian roulette; if you keep playing, eventually you will lose. You may get away with driving distracted a few times, but you risk your life and the lives of others every time you do. Eventually the odds will catch up with you.

By adding three demerits, we are doing two very important things, Madam Chair. Firstly, we are working to prevent new drivers from becoming distracted drivers. Three demerit points are a significant consequence for drivers with clean records, especially young, graduated-licence drivers. Secondly, we are creating a very strong deterrent for repeat offenders.

Fifteen demerits over two years is all a driver is allowed before their licence is suspended and only eight demerits for drivers with a graduated licence, or GDL. Madam Chair, drivers will quickly realize that distracted driving can quickly result in having their driving privileges revoked. Three demerit points represent 20 per cent of allowable demerits. It represents 38 per cent for those with a GDL licence. That is a significant penalty, especially for those with prior infractions. When choosing between driving distracted or driving focused, I think many Albertans will choose to be focused when their driving privileges are on the line. You can text all you want from home if your licence has been suspended.

Madam Chair, this hard-line approach is absolutely needed to give our police officers a chance to fight distracted driving. Bill 204 will allow us to get serial distracted drivers off the road. Plus, it is important to keep the provision that would allow for the assessment of three demerit points in Bill 204.

Reading through Bill 204, it is important to remember that this is something we as elected officials have been asked for by Albertans. Albertans are the ones driving change here. We can be the conduits for that change. Adding subsection (5) to section 158 of the Traffic Safety Act is a win for the citizens of this province. It is a win for all Albertans, who value safety on our roads.

Madam Chair, this isn't about taking away liberties or punishing people. This is about aligning Alberta's laws with the values of all Albertans. This is a way to remind drivers to pull over to a safe place when responding to a phone call or to wait until they arrive safely at their destinations and to use common sense when attempting to eat while they are driving. It is a reminder that the rear-view mirror is for looking behind you and not for vanity.

I am not here to lay blame on any particular group of people. I am not here to take away your cellphones. I am simply asking this Assembly to help make the future safer than our past. I want us to look forward and work to tackle a problem that has been going on for too long.

Madam Chair, Bill 16 started this conversation back in 2011. Since that time distracted driving has not gone away. In fact, it has gotten worse. It is time to add a new voice to this conversation, the voice of today's Albertans, who are fed up with distracted drivers endangering lives on the road. Bill 204 adds to this voice by increasing the fine and adding three demerits to an offender's driving record.

I'm excited to see this bill discussed here in Committee of the Whole, but I will not be satisfied until this bill is working to deter Albertans from driving distracted. I would like to work with everyone here to make sure that happens, and I urge you to support Bill 204.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 204, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving Demerit) Amendment Act, 2014, and I'd like to congratulate the hon. Member for Calgary-East on this bill and for obtaining unanimous consent of the Assembly to proceed through to committee stage today. We will be supporting this bill.

It is interesting. I look back just a very few years, to when there were a number of us pushing for some form of a ban. At that time it was seen primarily as a ban on cellphone use while driving, and it was referred to one of the standing committees. We heard from the public, and we invited the police forces from Edmonton, Calgary, and, I believe, also the sheriffs to come and make presentations. On the basis of their advice we broadened out the definition from just cellphone use to all forms of distracted driving and brought forward that legislation. There was quite a bit of reluctance on the part of the government at that time to bring forward this legislation, but I think MLAs from all sides began to see the merits of that legislation, and eventually the government was persuaded to allow a private member's bill to proceed. It had the deficiency, I think, in that it did not impose demerits for convictions, so that's an important distinction. As well, the fines have been increased.

The bill brings Alberta in line generally with what is being done in other jurisdictions. We're currently the only province that does not give out demerits for distracted driving. Ontario and Nova Scotia just recently changed their legislation to include demerits.

I think one thing that I just want to mention is that this is also a boon to insurance companies, of course, because it gives them additional opportunities to raise people's rates, and some may see that as an additional disincentive to distracted driving. Others might take a different view with regard to that. Certainly, the increase in fines is justified, and many members today have spoken very eloquently about the impact of distracted driving on safety on our roads.

It's interesting that in the United States a study in 2009 found that 84 per cent of distracted driving accidents were due to carelessness or inattentiveness. In 2010 a study found that 80 per cent of collisions and 65 per cent of near misses had distracted driving as a contributing factor. In 2011 Alberta Transportation found that distracted drivers were three times more likely to be involved in a collision than nondistracted drivers. Madam Chair, it's estimated that in Canada the cost for these collisions is at least $10 billion, and it's clearly a very serious issue that's costing a great deal and threatening the lives of Albertans.

I think that it's an issue that's of considerable importance, and without going on any longer with regard to this, I do just want to get on the record as being supportive of Bill 204 and indicate that our caucus will be supporting it. Thank you.

4:10

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Madam Chair. Bill 204, brought forward by Calgary-East, will go to fix the deficiencies we had in the bill before. You know, we can bring in all the bills, as I said before, but we need the enforcement. This bill will bring our law more in line with Ontario, where they have introduced demerits, too.

In the bill the proposal is to add to section 158:

(5) A person who is guilty of an offence under section 115.1, 115.2, 115.3 or 115.4

(a) is liable to a fine of $250, and

(b) shall be assessed 3 demerit points in accordance with the regulations.

After the last law came into effect, I think people were just becoming complacent. They didn't care. They said: "Okay. I'll just pay the $172 fine. It's not a big deal." You could see that the law was not really working, and I think that maybe enforcement was an issue there, too. I see lots of people driving on the highway. They've got their phone, and they're texting, and they're doing whatever.

As I said before, too, people think that when they are in their car, it's their private property, that there should be no intrusion, that they can do whatever they want. Then in 2011 the government moved to limit the causes of distracted driving, namely the use of cellphones, by banning the use of these devices while operating a vehicle. As time passed, many, including police services, found that people continued to drive distracted without concern for a fine. Some, such as Chief Rick Hanson of the Calgary police at the time, called for demerit points to be issued to those convicted of distracted driving. Currently demerits are assessed and based on the demerit point and service of documents regulation, and this will only be demerits listed in the TSA itself.

Other provinces such as Ontario also have demerit points for distracted driving. As I said before, they have three demerits. The Ontario police have referred to distracted driving as the number one killer on the road. It is the number one killer on the road. You know, the previous Minister of Transportation was a big fan of education, and I think we should go for education, too.

Madam Chair, if you remember, we had those stickers saying: God, give us another boom. Do you remember that sticker? Maybe we should have some stickers for education. We have the report-a-poacher sticker, and I think maybe we should come out with a sticker where it says: report a distracted driver. You know, you see those stickers on cars. When people see a car driving by with the sticker on it, maybe they will think twice before they use their phone to send a text message or be on the phone.

You know, I'm glad. This is a step in the right direction, Madam Chair. As I've said before, too, maybe there should be a heavier fine than $250 because, like the member before said, it's going to save us $10 million in health care costs. It's going to save us all the way down on safety and productivity and all of that, right?

With those comments, Madam Chair, I'm glad to support this bill, and I congratulate the Member for Calgary-East for bringing this bill forward. Maybe, you know, we should come out with those stickers so we can hand them out for education. Even on the seat belts, once they're locked into effect, people will not be really compliant. Maybe it's going to take education and enforcement, so let's do those both.

With that, I wish the best of luck to the Member for Calgary-East, and I will be wholeheartedly supporting this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise and contribute to the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 204, the traffic safety amendment act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-East. Before I get into it, I'd like to reiterate my thanks as well to the hon. member for being a stalwart advocate for safer driving. We're on the verge of making real progress here, and we should be grateful to him for taking the initiative and spearheading this.

Today I'd like to delve into some of the details of the bill. Specifically, I'd like to take a closer look at the amendment adding the fine to section 158 of the Traffic Safety Act. Section 158 is part of the Traffic Safety Act that enumerates the punishments for traffic infringements. Madam Chair, after section 158(4) Bill 204 would add subsection (5), which in turn includes subsection (a). This is one of the chief components of this amendment. It stipulates that "a person who is guilty of an offence under section 115.1, 115.2, 115.3, or 115.4 [would be] liable to a fine of $250." It immediately precedes the addition of three demerit points for distracted driving infractions. In the Traffic Safety Act as it currently stands, the fine is set at $172. This amendment would increase that fine substantially.

Madam Chair, this piece is obviously integral to the intent of the bill as a whole. The whole point of Bill 204 is to discourage distracted driving, and it seeks to do this by beefing up the penalties for offences. A lot of attention has been given to the question of demerit points, but this increased fine is an important part of the solution as well. The amount currently required by the act is $172, which is extremely low when compared to the rest of the country. In fact, it is one of the lowest such fines in the country. Saskatchewan's legislation calls for a fine of $280, for instance, whereas legislation in Ontario allows for fines ranging between $300 and $1,000. Legislation in some other provincial jurisdictions also has a graduation of fines, increasing with each offence. The amendment proposed by Bill 204 would set us on the path of catching up to tougher distracted driving legislation across the nation.

A fine of $250 is not necessarily going to break the bank for all drivers, but it does send a message, and it certainly communicates that message far more effectively than the current fine of $172 does. This is why the new section would prove so vital. The message that distracted driving is dangerous and unacceptable to Albertans apparently has not been getting through. More drivers are injured and killed in accidents caused by distracted driving than even in those caused by drunk driving, yet drunk driving carries a severe social stigma while distracted driving doesn't. People get drunk, and they get it that drunk driving is wrong. The same cannot be said for distracted driving. Far from being stigmatized, it is treated as commonplace.

Adding subsection (5) to section 158 of the Traffic Safety Act should hopefully turn this around, or at the very least it will help to assert more forcefully that distracted driving is no laughing matter. Increasing the fine could set the precedent. It could demonstrate that tougher penalties could be in the cards if improvements are not seen. Despite being an increase from our current fines, the proposed fine of $250 is not as severe as it is in other jurisdictions. There would be room to take further action later on if the results are not satisfactory.

The importance of adding subsection (5)(a) cannot be appreciated fully in isolation. It would be followed immediately by subsection (b), which is the demerit points, when those enter the picture. It's arguably the demerit points that give Bill 204's amendments to the Traffic Safety Act their punitive teeth. Demerit points stick to a driver's record and carry with them the possibility that driving privileges could ultimately be impacted or even revoked. This is almost certainly a more effective long-term deterrent than a fine.

However, the fine proposed by Bill 204 plays a key role in complementing the demerit penalty. This amendment to the act will present offenders with an immediate and tangible consequence for their actions. In the grand scheme of things a fine, no matter how large, probably does not amount to very much when compared with something more lasting such as a poor driving abstract that results in the loss of privileges. But this is ultimately beside the point. The point is that it gets a driver's attention the instant he or she is fined for an offence. It serves as a valuable reality check.

One reason distracted driving may not be taken as seriously as something like drunk driving is that the immediate consequences are not always as obvious. Drivers are probably perfectly sober and aware while they are driving and, for example, texting, so it's not readily apparent that they are as great a risk as if they were intoxicated. But being slapped with a fine brings them back into reality pretty quickly, and that's what this addition to the Traffic Safety Act would achieve. It would add some much-needed kick to this reality check, with a heftier fine. After all, the point of fines for traffic violations is corrective, not vindictive. They serve primarily as a wake-up call.

Research data is conflicting as to how effective deterrents can be regarding traffic violations, but many people do report that receiving a fine does get the message across. It may not work for some people, but it seems to me that the majority have no malicious intent when they do something like driving while distracted; it is simply that they're not thinking fully in the moment. I think often back to the years when we had to put in legislation to make seat belts mandatory. Over the generations that has just become an automatic thing for drivers. All they need is the nudge to remind them of their future conduct.

This amendment accomplishes two things. While the demerits, the real meat of the proposed new penalty, serve as a heftier deterrent, the fine of $250 complements it as a more minor chastisement. Madam Chair, as we have heard reiterated in this Chamber time and time again, distracted driving is a serious and prevalent problem. What I'm also hearing is that we're committed to addressing it. The addition of subsection (5) to section 158 of the Traffic Safety Act represents a great step in the right direction. Subsection (a) in particular will set us on the path of ensuring that more robust monetary penalties are in place to act as a more effective deterrent.

With that, I conclude my comments. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Associate Minister of Asia Pacific Relations.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 204, the traffic safety amendment act, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-East. I commend the hon. member for being an advocate for safety on our roads, and I'm proud to speak to the proposed bill. I will specifically be talking today about how implementing Bill 204 would add subsection

(5)(b) to section 158 of the Traffic Safety Act, which would add three demerit points for each distracted driving offence.

Madam Chair, in any given year the number of people killed on Alberta roads is roughly equivalent to the population of the average Alberta elementary school. Ninety per cent of collisions are driving error related. Distracted driving is a major issue, with performance degradation similar to impaired driving. We know that drinking and driving is wrong, yet texting and driving is still very common. Both inhibit your ability to drive safely. That's why the amendment to section 158 of the Traffic Safety Act would be beneficial. It could hopefully reduce those numbers.

Bill 204 would help with the enforcement of the Alberta distracted driving law by creating harsher punishments for those accused. Madam Chair, with demerit points being allocated and fines increased for an offence, this would allow for greater deterrents to distracted drivers. The purpose of Bill 204 is to increase penalties for distracted driving by amending the Traffic Safety Act to include a monetary penalty of $250 and three demerit points for each distracted driving offence.

The section this bill is attempting to amend is 158 of the act, which reads:

(1) Except as otherwise provided in this Act, a person who is guilty of an offence under this Act for which a penalty is not otherwise provided is liable to a fine or other punishment as provided for under the Provincial Offences Procedure Act.

(2) A person who is guilty of an offence under section 52(1)(c), 65(1)(h) or (2) or 115(2)(g) or (h) is liable to a fine of not less than $500 and not more than $25 000 and in default of payment to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months without the option of a fine.

(3) A person who is guilty of an offence under section 51(i) is liable to a fine of not less than $300 and not more than $2000 and in default of payment to imprisonment for a term of not less than 14 days and not more than 6 months.

(4) A person who is guilty of an offence under section 176 is liable to a fine of not less than $200 and in default of payment to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 2 months.

Now, in addition to those, Bill 204 seeks to add a fifth subsection, which would read:

A person who is guilty of an offence under section 115.1, 115.2, 115.3, or 115.4

(a) is liable to a fine of $250, and

(b) shall be assessed 3 demerit points in accordance with the regulations.

Madam Chair, one objective of the proposed bill is to address distracted driving by introducing demerit points for each offence in addition to an increased fine of $250. Presently the punishment for distracted driving is only a $172 fine with no demerit points, so the addition of demerit points in subsection (5)(b) of section 158 is important because while the immediate penalty of paying $250 as described in subsection (5)(a) stings, the long-term penalty of having the demerit points on one's record can hurt more. If someone receives too many demerit points, an individual can lose their licence, and the insurance premium may increase. If an individual's insurance premium goes up because of demerit points, then it acts as a further punitive measure in addition to the initial $250 fine.

Madam Chair, the individual could be paying for a distracted driving offence in more ways than one. The Alberta driver control board may even suspend a licence if they consider the driver to have a poor driving record based on the number of demerit points they have accumulated. Without subsection (5)(b) the board would not know that someone has been found guilty of distracted driving because they would not have any demerit points.

Fully licensed drivers who collect a total of eight but not more than 15 demerit points will receive notification regarding their driving record. If 15 demerit points accumulate within a two-year period, then an offender will lose their licence, and it will be suspended for 30 days. If a suspension order is issued, there may be conditions that must be completed before the licence will be given back. There's also a fee that must be paid before the licence is returned. So with accumulated demerit points one could face the loss of the driver's licence privileges, increased vehicle insurance premiums, and loss of employment if driving is a required part of the job. Those deterrents do not exist under the current system, which is why I do strongly support Bill 204 and the amendments to the Traffic Safety Act within it.

Many people need to have a clean driving record, or at least nearly clean, to successfully be hired for a job. Whether that person is driving a company vehicle or being reimbursed, that driving record is very important to employers. Employers want to ensure that they are hiring a safe and responsible person to work for their organization. If passed, subsection 5(b) would allow employers the opportunity to know if they are hiring someone who will be a hazard on the road based on how many demerit points they have.

Alberta currently has the most lax laws regarding distracted driving. With no demerit points, it's no wonder Alberta beats the next-worst offending province on distracted driving by 37 per cent. Madam Chair, we all want Alberta to be the safest province in the country, but we cannot achieve that while our distracted driving is out of control. Most Albertans know it is wrong to text or call while driving, and we applaud those people for being safe on our roads. However, those who are distracted drivers have not yet felt the pinch of their wrongdoing.

Implementing Bill 204 would make amendment 5(b) to section 158 of the Traffic Safety Act, which would add three demerit points for each distracted driving offence. This act came into effect in 2011, and the original intent was to reduce and prevent incidents of distracted driving, but it just does not do an adequate job of deterring people from breaking their distracted driving habits. We know this because our province has the worst offender rates in the country by far. The current law has not noticeably reduced incidents of distracted driving. The addition of demerit points under subsection 5(b) is an important piece of this legislation. With current legislation someone could be paying the $172 fine every month but have a clean driving record because there are no demerit points at present.

Albertans are looking to their MLAs to develop new and comprehensive solutions, and they are ready to do their part to help. Bill 204 has substantial value in that it addresses an issue of public safety and awareness that has been a topic of discussion for a long time. That is why Bill 204 is an urgent and necessary piece of legislation. It combats the dangerous result of this recent problem.

Madam Chair, as you can see, Bill 204 is a very sensible and well-timed piece of legislation. This bill has support across the board from all parties, and it's a rare and wonderful thing that we can all collaborate on this issue. I would like to thank my colleagues on both sides of the Chamber for working together on Bill 204. Again, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-East for bringing this discussion forward and for voicing the needs of his constituents as well as the needs of our province. Distracted driving is a very real problem with very real consequences that affect Albertans, and Albertans are ready for change to the current legislation.

It has been a privilege to speak to this bill and listen to the debate surrounding this very important issue. I look forward to hearing the rest of my hon. colleagues discussing this topic.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think most everything has been said, and I just would like to encourage all my fellow members to support this.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm glad to rise and contribute to the debate on Bill 204, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving Demerit) Amendment Act, 2014, sponsored by my next-door neighbour the hon. Member for Calgary-East, an annoying neighbour sometimes. I'd like to thank him for bringing Bill 204 forward for discussion. His efforts are certain to make Alberta's roads safer for everyone.

If passed, Bill 204 would amend the Traffic Safety Act by increasing the severity of penalties for distracted driving. As we know, the penalty for distracted driving is a fine of $172, offenders are not penalized with demerit points, and the cost of the fine does not increase with the number of offences. Bill 204 would change this by introducing demerit points as a penalty for distracted driving in addition to a fine of $250. It would stipulate that a person who's guilty of an offence under section 115.1, 115.2, 115.3, or 115.4, would be liable for a fine of $250 plus three demerit points.

Madam Chair, section 115.2 is an important part of this legislation. It specifies that no individual should drive or operate a vehicle on a highway if the display screen of a television, computer, or other device is in the vehicle. While it may seem obvious that a TV or computer screen would constitute distracted driving, there are cases that require drivers to look at a screen. Exemptions are related to using TV or computer screens for driving. Any other use than the ones listed below are distracting to drivers and would therefore be deserving of a fine and demerits.

The amendments to section 158 would allow for there to be a further distinction of exemptions under section 115.2(2)(a) to (f). That explains that drivers may look at the screen of a GPS while allowing them to navigate. However, in accordance with section 115.3(2)(a) and (b) the GPS must be affixed to the vehicle in a manner that does not interfere with the safe operation of the vehicle and must not be held in the driver's hand. That notation is important because GPS systems serve a valuable purpose in allowing drivers to navigate. They clearly need to be set up for use before the person starts driving, or else they become a hazard. It's particularly important to note that driving and entering co-ordinates is a major distraction that could very well result in an accident. With most of the factory-installed ones I don't think you can enter on them while you're moving but certainly the hand-held.

Section 115.2(2)(b) refers to the exemption of a cellular telephone or radio communication device being used in hands-free mode, which can also be distracting, just not as distracting. This section takes into account the fact that people need to conduct calls in their vehicles. Madam Chair, we know that it's necessary to take calls in our cars with the amount of driving that we do. The section allows all drivers to take their calls in a safe manner. Many cellphone and car companies offer different ways for drivers to use their phones in hands-free mode while driving. In doing so, they allow drivers to take important calls while ensuring that they are still driving safely.

Section 115.2(2)(c) makes an exemption for logistical transportation tracking systems that are used to track vehicle locations, driver status, and the delivery of packages or other goods for commercial purposes. By taking business into account, we're allowing for the flow of commerce in a necessary way.

Section 115.2(2)(d) allows drivers to use a dispatch system while transporting passengers, allowing taxi, limo, and other transport vehicles to use dispatch systems. It lets them do their job, and it allows them to find clients. By allowing transport vehicles to use their equipment safely, we increase the mobility of Albertans and, in doing so, reduce the stress on parking lots around the province.

Section 115.2(2)(e) exempts the use of any collision avoidance system device while it's being used to provide collision avoidance information. There are clear benefits to this exemption in that the device being used is meant to avoid collisions and would therefore be an extension of driving rather than a distraction.

Section 115.2(2)(f) allows for instruments, gauges, devices, or systems that provide information about the status of systems or the location of the vehicle. An exemption of this nature is critical because it allows drivers to handle their vehicles properly. Being able to read something like a speedometer while driving is a function of driving and allows the driver to obey the rules of the road.

References in Bill 204 to sections 158(5) and 115.2 give a clear purpose for each of these exemptions. Simply put, these exemptions allow for drivers to look at screens when they're used for driving. The reason this section disallows watching TV or a computer screen is because it is not necessary or safe to be watching media that is not related to operating the vehicle. Very simply, if a person is not focused on driving, that person is distracted and therefore impaired.

So rather than sort of carrying on with that, I think I've made the point that most others have, that this is a good piece of legislation. I would encourage all hon. members to support it.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members who wish to speak on Bill 204?

Seeing none, I would ask the Member for Calgary-East to close.

4:40

Mr. Amery: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm so privileged to rise to close Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 204. I would like to thank all the hon. members who rose to speak in this debate. You are of great service to your constituencies and a great asset to democracy.

Many of us have spoken passionately about this subject and for very good reason. Madam Chair, Bill 204 addresses a subject that affects all of us. We all use Alberta's roads in one way or another, and we are all put at risk by the actions of distracted drivers. Now, I'm asking that we all do our part to vanquish this problem. I want our grandchildren to look back with shock that we ever texted while we drove, that we ever used our mirrors to apply makeup, or otherwise took our eyes off the road. I want our children to look back on today like we look back on cars without seat belts. Driving distracted should be a relic of a bygone time.

With Bill 204 we can begin to make that happen. I call on all my colleagues to support this bill. Let's ensure safer roads for all future generations.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are you ready for the question on Bill 204?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 204 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Madam Chairperson. I would now move that we rise and report.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

Dr. Brown: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports Bill 204. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly as there are none.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to ask for unanimous consent to move Bill 204 to third reading.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Lyme Disease

508. Mr. Rowe moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to develop a province-wide strategy to combat the debilitating effects of Lyme disease, which, at minimum, would include additional education for physicians and access to additional testing and treatment for patients.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is indeed an honour and a pleasure to introduce Motion 508. I'm sure that everyone in the Assembly has heard of Lyme disease. Lyme disease is not a usual topic of conversation unless you are a family member of or are one of the unfortunate people to have contracted it. Then it is a topic of conversation each and every day if not every waking hour.

Motion 508 calls for the broadening of the treatment resources and options available to those who may potentially be suffering from Lyme disease. I first became aware of how serious this issue has become when two women in my home town of Beiseker contracted Lyme. Unable to get local doctors or AHS to treat them, they went south of the border to the U.S.A., where they were tested. The tests showed positive. Upon bringing their tests home, they found, to their dismay, that the test results were not recognized in Canada, and they were denied treatment. Two separate fundraisers were held, and approximately $135,000 was raised to assist with costs to get treatment in American medical facilities.

The tests done in Canada, Madam Speaker, are done in two stages. First, an ELISA test is done. If this shows a negative result, no further testing is done. According to the centre for disease control the ELISA test alone only detects about 30 per cent of cases at first presentation. In Canada if it shows a positive result, a second test is done, the western blot. The western blot test does have a much higher accuracy but is not done if the ELISA test is negative. By this time the disease has advanced to a point where it is much harder to treat. Additionally, there are in fact two western blot tests, IgC and IgM. Both tests should be done and are done in the United States but are not often administered in Canada.

One of the most frustrating things about the treatment policy in Alberta is that Lyme disease is treatable with antibiotics if caught within two to three weeks of the tick bite. Unfortunately, this is hard to do, because even with the telltale bull's-eye rash around the bite it seems to be very difficult to find a doctor with the necessary education to identify the disease and begin the required treatment immediately. Madam Speaker, this problem will only get worse if we do not address it very soon.

We all know that climate change exists. I will leave the specifics of that debate for others at another forum. Very much like the pine beetle problem that we are experiencing in western Canada, we can expect the tick-borne disease problem to increase. With warmer winters we are not seeing insects killed off by prolonged cold spells.

Recently Bill C-442, the Canadian Lyme disease strategy act, submitted by Green Party MP Elizabeth May, was passed unanimously in the House of Commons. Not a single MP voted against it, the first and so far only Green Party legislation to pass in the House of Commons. In Ontario NDP MPP Michael Mantha's Motion 13, to create a comprehensive and integrated Lyme disease strategy, also passed unanimously on November 27, 2014, again with all-party support.

So, Madam Speaker, I would ask the same of all members of this Assembly. I ask them to pass Motion 508, and let's get on with helping patients, their families, and their loved ones in getting through this difficult and very painful time. This motion will ensure Albertans have the ability to extensively be tested for Lyme disease. This motion takes into account treatment standards that previously exist and will move forward to make more testing procedures and treatments, which are necessary and, indeed, vital to treatment, available. I invite all members to join me in discussing this important piece of legislation so that we may ensure the safety and the good health of all Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak to Motion 508. It's a topic of considerable professional interest of mine, so I'm very appreciative.

Mr. Dorward: Oh, no.

Dr. Starke: What? You're groaning already?

It's a topic of interest to me, and I'd like to certainly thank the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills for raising it. As we know, he's had an outstanding career in municipal government, and he followed that up with time in the Official Opposition, where he was a principled and dedicated although somewhat tenacious member of the opposition, and now we're very glad to have him in the government caucus.

Lyme disease, l-y-m-e, not lime disease due to the citrus fruit. Lyme disease is a very interesting disease because there's a lot that is misunderstood about Lyme disease even today. It gets its name from the community of Lyme, Connecticut, in the New England states, where the prevalence in the U.S. is certainly the highest. It was first recognized by a high incidence of patients that had arthritis in and around Lyme and Old Lyme, Connecticut, in 1975, but in fact the disease was first described in scientific literature in 1908 in Sweden.

The causative organism for Lyme disease: although it's associated with ticks, it's not the ticks that cause the Lyme disease; it's an organism that the ticks carry. That organism is a spirochetal bacterium of the Borrelia genus. So the technical term for Lyme disease is also known as Lyme borreliosis, or borreliosis.

In the late 1970s the American bacteriologist Willy Burgdorfer actually characterized and discovered that the Borrelia that he was studying was in fact the causative organism for Lyme disease, and the organism was officially named Borrelia burgdorferi in his honour. If you're a bacteriologist, that is the highest pinnacle that you be acclaimed for, that they name a disease-causing organism after you.

Last year, Madam Speaker, I was very privileged to attend the 69th International Conference on Diseases in Nature Communicable to Man in Vancouver, the INCNDCM conference, that the people who attended somewhat tongue-in-cheek called the inkdinkum conference. Now, Dr. Robert Lane, who is a renowned entomologist from the University of California at Berkeley, gave a very interesting presentation on some very important facts on the transmission of Lyme disease by the deer tick of the genus Ixodes.

Now, ticks must stay attached for a certain period of time, but there's considerable disagreement as to how long. It's generally accepted that the tick must stay attached for at least 36 hours for Lyme transmission to occur, but some have suggested that it could be transmitted in as little as six hours. Certainly, adult ticks are larger and more noticeable, and quite often they're found within that time window and removed, and if they are, then transmission does not occur. I know that in my practice quite often that's all I would tell my clients. If they were worried about Lyme disease, I'd say: "After you've had your dog out for a walk, check him over for ticks. If you find any adult ticks on them, pick them off, and you shouldn't have any problem with Lyme disease."

In the truth of the matter, though – and this was something that I learned at this conference last year – by far the greater risk of transmission of the Lyme disease spirochete is not the adult deer tick but, in fact, the nymph form, or the nymph life stage, of the deer tick, which is about the size of a poppy seed, so it's very difficult to detect, certainly, on humans, and you can imagine on a long-haired, dark-coated dog how hard it might be to find that. Nymphal ticks, in fact, are many, many times more likely to transmit Lyme disease, and those findings were corroborated by Dr. Lane in the study and in the presentation that he made to our conference last year. That is one of the things that is misunderstood about Lyme disease and why anything we could do to increase the amount of public knowledge and education there is about, you know, this condition is helpful.

Now, the other reason why I wanted to speak today about Lyme disease – and it really speaks to the heart of the challenges that the member who's bringing this forward has highlighted – is that Lyme disease is what in medical circles is called a zebra. What exactly is a zebra? Well, Madam Speaker, a zebra is an American term, actually, that states, basically, that arriving at an exotic medical diagnosis when a more commonplace explanation is more likely is a common fault, especially of inexperienced diagnosticians. What the full phrase is: when you hear hoofbeats, think horses, not zebras.

I first heard this expression, I have to confess, when I was a veterinary student, and it was told to us by Dr. Otto Radostits. Dr. Radostits was the pre-eminent veterinary clinical instructor in large animal medicine world-wide, and we were very fortunate to have him at the Western College of Veterinary Medicine, in Saskatoon. He's originally, though, an Edmontonian, very proud that he came from Alberta, and he was awarded with the Order of Canada late in his teaching career. His son Stephen still operates a veterinary practice in Leduc, Alberta. In honour of Dr. Radostits we always thought that the zebras thing was a Dr. Radostits thing, but in fact it was first coined in the early 40s by Dr. Theodore Woodward, who was a medical professor at the University of Maryland. He told one of his medical interns: when you hear hoofbeats, think of horses, not zebras.

The reason for that is because there is a natural human tendency to glom onto the diagnosis that is unusual, the diagnosis that is, you know, wild and out there, at least amongst inexperienced diagnosticians. But over a period of time and through training, with aphorisms like the one from Dr. Woodward, the tendency is to move away from rare diagnoses and, in fact, to spend less time worrying about rare diagnoses because, by definition, they occur rarely. This is a problem with diseases that have low levels of prevalence, in that more often than not, as is the case with Lyme disease in Alberta, where we are very fortunate that we have a very low prevalence, the truth of the matter is that the disease still occurs, and as was pointed out by the hon. member in his introductory remarks, the testing is not one hundred per cent accurate.

In fact, the presentation of the clinical science is not always consistent. The bull's-eye rash that was described, erythema migrans, in fact, only occurs in about three-quarters of patients. So if you are bitten by a tick but don't develop erythema migrans, you might never know that, in fact, you have contracted Lyme disease.

I mean, the bottom line is that whenever we're dealing with rare diseases, calculations involving probability really have no meaning. Really, the pertinent question is whether disease is present in that individual or not, and whether it is rare or common really does not change the odds for that single patient. If the diagnosis can be made on the basis of specific criteria, then these criteria are either fulfilled in that patient or not fulfilled. It's not like you can have 70 per cent of Lyme disease. You either have it or you don't have it. That's one of the challenges whenever you're dealing with conditions that occur infrequently, and it is something that has been correctly pointed out through this motion. You know, certainly, I think anything that we can do to assist our medical practitioners, our public health workers, and people in general about Lyme disease are important steps to be taken.

As I said before, in Alberta we are fortunate in that the incidence of this disease is very low, but with changes in climate and with other changes that we have seen over a period of time, the incidence is increasing, and of course, as we know, we do travel to other parts of the world where Lyme disease is at relatively higher levels.

The other reason why I'd like to commend the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on this motion is that Lyme disease is a disease that for many, many years has been badly misunderstood and characterized incorrectly even by those in the scientific community. At last year's conference we spent a full day discussing Lyme disease, and there were speakers from all around the world talking about their perspectives on Lyme disease for their individual areas of the planet, and I can tell you that even there there was some disagreement as far as the pathogenesis, transmission, and some of the other key features of Lyme disease. So I really think that it is a disease that, because of its severe, chronic, debilitating effects, we have to always have higher on our index of suspicion, and that holds true for all health care practitioners, doctors, public health officials, and others.

I think, Madam Speaker, the description of Lyme disease that was given by Jonathan Edlow, who was a professor of medicine at Harvard Medical School, when he quoted Ed Masters in his book Bull's-Eye, on the history of Lyme disease, tells that best. He points out the following:

the "track record" or the "conventional wisdom" regarding Lyme disease is not very good: "First off, they said it was a new disease, which it wasn't. Then it was thought to be viral, but it isn't. Then it was thought that sero-negativity didn't exist, which it does. They thought it was easily treated by short courses of antibiotics, which sometimes it isn't. Then it was only the Ixodes dammini tick, which we now know is not even a separate valid tick species.

If you look throughout the history, almost every time a major dogmatic statement has been made about what we 'know' about this disease, it was subsequently proven wrong or underwent major modifications."

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's very difficult to follow the accurate presentations from the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, because both have certain accuracies. I can personally relate to them because my wife has been diagnosed with Lyme disease, so it relates significantly to our household, and we've struggled through the Canadian medical system and the American medical system to try and get some rectification of a difficult disease. The spirit of the member's motion in the Legislative Assembly, bringing forward that we would have a province-wide strategy to combat this disease and to simply learn more about it, is heartfelt to this Member for Drumheller-Stettler. It's a significant disease, and it certainly is debilitating, and it is, as the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster says, complicated and not easily diagnosed.

I have a prepared statement that I will read going forward here. Lyme disease is a bacterial illness spread to humans by ticks which have been found across Canada and within Alberta, as previously stated. Lyme disease seems to be an emerging, potentially serious public health risk as it is on the rise in Alberta, but awareness of the disease is lacking. In some cases, Madam Speaker, if you don't look for it, you aren't going to find it, and that's some of the seriousness of this disease. The testing methods are nebulous – I guess that would be a good word – to say the very least. Many Albertans afflicted with Lyme disease are undiagnosed and untreated and may go on to develop persistent, chronic, debilitating symptoms. Many maintain that the ticks that cause the disease are not found in Alberta and that only those who travel to infected areas have the disease.

As of 2013 the province began the submit-a-tick program to try and discover and learn the areas that this Lyme disease is located in and to determine how many were carrying the organism that causes the disease. In 2013 Albertans sent in 1,221 blacklegged ticks, and of those, only 50 were found on animals, and even fewer, five, were found on humans. Of the 50 ticks found on the animals, five tested positive for this along with one of the five found on humans. So the numbers are very diminishing. In 2013 a surveillance study by Alberta Health found that 20 per cent of the collected blacklegged ticks were found infected with Lyme disease. Only 20 per cent, Madam Speaker.

Lyme disease can have as many as 75 different symptoms and can be easily misdiagnosed as something else. Lyme disease patients may firstly be diagnosed with other illnesses such as juvenile arthritis, rheumatoid arthritis, reactive arthritis, infectious arthritis, osteoarthritis, fibromyalgia, chronic fatigue syndrome, fifth disease, multiple sclerosis, scleroderma, lupus, early ALS, Alzheimer's disease, Crohn's disease, and the list goes on. Canadians and Albertans, including my wife, often travel to IGenX Inc. in California or Stony Brook University in New York for diagnosis. Again, Madam Speaker, in Canada, if you're not looking for the disease, you're not going to find it.

Diagnosis is problematic, again for several reasons. Fewer than 50 per cent of patients with Lyme disease even recall a tick bite. In some studies this number is as low as 15 per cent, and fewer than 50 per cent of patients with Lyme disease recall any rash at all, and the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster had discussed that. Symptoms are nonspecific. It could be anything causing these symptoms. The screening test misses 35 per cent of culture-proven Lyme disease, with only 65 per cent sensitivity, and is unacceptable as the first step of a two-step screening protocol. By definition a screening test should have at least 95 per cent sensitivity. False negatives plague people who have the disease, again leading to a poor testing system.

There are two polarized views of Lyme disease, both in terms of diagnostic criteria and treatment. The Infectious Diseases Society of America, IDSA, Lyme disease guidelines suggest that Lyme disease is hard to catch, easy to cure, and that short-term antibiotic use of a few weeks can cure most Lyme disease. In Alberta the protocol for extended use of antibiotics is not conducive to solving the problem, and my wife ran into that problem. The International Lyme and Associated Diseases Society maintains that cases of chronic Lyme disease require an extended course of antibiotic therapy to achieve symptomatic relief and that the consequences of untreated chronic persistent Lyme infection far outweigh the potential consequences of long-term antibiotic therapy. Again, an idiosyncrasy of the health care system in this province if not in Canada.

There are also two polarized camps in response to the symptoms of the disease: those who truly have the disease and for whom treatment could be beneficial or would be beneficial and those who have nonspecific, sometimes debilitating symptoms which are also called fibromyalgia, chronic pain syndrome, and depression and who believe that Lyme disease may be the cause. For these people the treatment of Lyme disease would not be advised.

With that, Madam Speaker, I'd like to close by saying that for the family of this Member for Drumheller-Stettler it's been a life-changing experience, it's been a life-changing challenge, and I'm pleased that in a past life the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and I sat together in this House and had a long conversation about this disease. It gives me great honour to rise and try to inflict some education on the disease on the Assembly.

Thank you for that.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am very pleased to rise today to contribute to the debate on Motion 508, and I would like to begin my remarks by thanking the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. He's been an impassioned advocate for the cause, and I think all Albertans owe him a debt of gratitude for it.

This motion, as we know, seeks to encourage the government to develop a province-wide strategy that would address Lyme disease. Specifically, such a strategy would target physician education and awareness while also exploring issues like access to testing and treatment for patients afflicted with the disease.

Madam Speaker, I know a number of people personally who have contracted this disease, and I've seen the devastating effects firsthand. That is the reason I feel compelled to speak to this motion here today. As a bacterial illness Lyme disease is spread by tick bites, but it's not common, of course, since it depends on tick bites for transmission. That would seem to leave it confined mostly to those who frequent areas where ticks are common such as forests. Currently cases of Lyme disease are taken very seriously, as they should be, and every single one of them is reviewed very carefully.

Madam Speaker, as a matter of fact, approximately 2,500 Albertans receive testing for the illness every single year. Meanwhile the Public Health Agency of Canada recommends a protocol for laboratory testing for the disease, and this is the protocol, of course, that we follow right here in Alberta. Our diagnostic tests are indeed in line with the approval of federal regulations as laid out by Health Canada, and these standards, in turn, follow the protocols set by the American Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. These protocols do set the standard of practice all over the globe for the testing and diagnosis of Lyme disease.

Madam Speaker, Alberta is very stringent in ensuring that we do follow best practices in diagnosing Lyme disease. Our protocol is structured around a two-stage method. First, an ELISA screening test is conducted, and that, of course, stands for enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay, which refers to the test that identifies the antibodies associated with Lyme disease. The second aspect of the protocol calls for the western blot test, the purpose of which is, of course, to confirm the results of the initial ELISA test. Alberta's Provincial Laboratory conducts the test, and if that's positive or – and this is important – if the results are indeterminate, the sample is then passed on to receive the western blot test at the National Microbiology Laboratory in Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Motion 508 is a tool that can help expand and also promote this standardized process for handling the testing and diagnosis of Lyme disease. We must all acknowledge that the diagnosis of this disease is not quite as straightforward as it may appear on first glance. There are several factors at play that can very much complicate things, including an individual's travel history and the season of travel. Those need to be taken into account regarding whether a condition is indeed Lyme disease. This is all in addition to the probability of tick exposure and the manifestation of symptoms. Now, these factors are considered by physicians when they make their diagnosis, and all play a role when the physician makes a decision regarding whether or not to send a patient for Lyme disease testing.

Madam Speaker, statistics yielded by our established processes do indicate some good news. In the entirety of last year, 2014, there were only seven confirmed cases of Lyme disease here in Alberta. In addition to that, every one of those cases was determined to have originated when the affected individuals were travelling outside of the province in areas which are known to contain disease-carrying ticks. Now, it's true that these are low numbers, but – and this is very important – it does not account for cases that go undiagnosed since it often takes months or even years for symptoms to become severe enough for someone to seek attention. That can be disastrous for a person professionally and personally as well as for their friends, family, and loved ones. Thankfully, we have solid, proven, effective protocols in place to manage cases as they do manifest themselves. However, without proper education and awareness on the part of medical professionals and all Albertans, cases can be undiagnosed, and that can be a very, very serious problem.

That's one of the major reasons why I truly appreciate the hon. member for bringing the topic of Lyme disease to the attention of all Albertans through this Chamber. Increasing the awareness of Lyme disease across Alberta is an initiative that is invaluable even if it just saved one person from this potentially debilitating illness. But I know it will do so much more than just that, and that's, again, another one of the reasons why I will definitely be voting in favour of Motion 508. I ask all of our hon. colleagues to join us in the fight against Lyme disease.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a great pleasure to speak to Motion 508, put forward by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. It goes on to say:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to develop a province-wide strategy to combat the debilitating effects of Lyme disease, which, at minimum, would include additional education for physicians and access to additional testing and treatment for patients.

Lyme disease, Madam Speaker, is an infectious disease caused by bacteria of the Borrelia type. The most common sign of infection is an expanding area of redness that begins at the site of the bite about a week after it has occurred. The rash is typically neither itchy nor painful. About 25 per cent of people do not develop a rash. Other early symptoms may include fever, headache, and feeling tired. If untreated, symptoms may include the loss of the ability to move one or both sides of the face, joint pain, severe headaches with neck stiffness, or heart palpitations, among others. Months to years later there may be repeated episodes of joint pain and swelling. Occasionally people develop shooting pains or tingling in their arms and legs. About 10 to 20 per cent of people, despite appropriate treatment, also develop joint pains, have problems with memory, and feel tired much of the time.

Lyme disease is transmitted to humans by the bite of infected ticks. Usually the tick must be attached for 36 to 48 hours before the bacteria is spread. Diagnosis is based upon a combination of symptoms, history of tick exposure, and the possibility of testing for specific antibodies in the blood. Blood tests are often negative in the early disease, and testing of unusual ticks is not typically useful, Madam Speaker. Several forms of laboratory testing for Lyme disease are available, some of which have not been adequately validated. The most widely used tests are serological tests, which measure levels of specific antibodies in the patient's blood. These tests may be negative in early infections as the body may not have produced a significant quantity of antibodies, but they are considered a reliable aid in the diagnosis of later stages of Lyme disease. Serological tests for Lyme disease are of limited use in people lacking objective signs of Lyme disease, because of false-positive results and costs. The serological laboratory tests most widely available and employed are the western blot and ELISA. A two-tiered protocol is recommended by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. The sensitive ELISA test is performed first, and if it is positive or equivocal, then the more specific western blot is done.

5:30

The reliability of testing and diagnosis remains controversial, Madam Speaker. Studies show that the western blot IgM has a specificity of 94 to 96 per cent for patients with clinical symptoms of early Lyme disease. The initial ELISA test has a positive sensitivity of about 70 per cent in two-tiered testing. The overall sensitivity is only 64 per cent although this rises to 100 per cent in a subset of people with disseminated symptoms such as arthritis.

Concerns have been raised by Albertans who believe they are infected by Lyme disease, Madam Speaker, yet who are unable to get the diagnosis. Typically the physician does not request a second test. Presently Alberta requires a blood test to come back from the laboratory with five positive indicators to define Lyme disease. The European standard requires only three indicators, so many feel that Alberta's diagnostic criteria for Lyme disease are unrealistically stringent, resulting in local labs giving out too many false negatives. Without a positive diagnosis from an Alberta lab any physician willing to treat Lyme disease risks censure by the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta.

In Alberta ticks are collected and submitted for Lyme disease testing. Of the ticks submitted, only about 25 per cent are black-legged ticks, the type that carries Lyme, and even fewer of those test positive for Lyme. Without the proper tests being run for Lyme, patients are left without a treatment plan for their condition. Due to the general rarity of the need for these tests, providing the additional test, the second western blot test, would not be expensive, Madam Speaker.

In 2008 Dr. Taft, then the leader of the Alberta Liberal caucus, called on the government of Alberta to review and revise the Lyme disease testing. I will be supporting this motion, too, and I think all the members should support this motion. I think this will go a long way to help Albertans get tested for Lyme disease, and, you know, maybe we could control it.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to rise today to join the debate on Motion 508, brought forward by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I would like to thank the hon. member for his dedication and his passion with regard to this motion itself and also to all Albertans. I'd also like to take a moment to thank the Member for Drumheller-Stettler for reminding us of the very personal impact of Lyme disease.

Madam Speaker, Motion 508 urges the government to develop a comprehensive strategy in order to improve the diagnosis and treatment of Lyme disease. The main focus of this motion is to increase awareness regarding this disease as well as to increase patients' access to treatment. If left untreated, the effects of Lyme disease can persist for years, resulting in symptoms of fatigue and pain that can reach a level of physical disability equivalent to congestive heart failure or osteoarthritis. What is clear is that anything that might help prevent Albertans from being infected with or having to suffer through Lyme disease is something that we should all honestly consider.

I would like to focus my remarks today on what actions and programs other provinces have taken in order to address this potentially devastating disease. Prevention is a key part in any province. Lyme disease strategy in B.C. is no different. The B.C. Centre for Disease Control outlines the salient issues regarding prevention on its website. This includes information on how to identify potentially harmful species, what actions to take in order to avoid being bitten as well as proper tick removal. It is important to follow the appropriate procedure when removing a tick as not doing so can increase the risk of infection.

Like Alberta, British Columbia uses a two-tier system when it comes to Lyme disease detection and diagnosis. This focuses primarily on the use of an enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay test, also known as an ELISA test, in order to identify specific antibodies. If the ELISA test is positive or indeterminate, the western blot test is used to confirm the results. Western blot is currently the most accurate antibody test, and ELISA testing can often miss the infection.

Lyme disease can be extremely difficult to diagnose, and this only increases the longer the disease remains untreated. Madam Speaker, the development of symptoms, often even months or years after the time of infection, is typically the only way to catch the disease, as routine blood work and testing cannot detect it. Supplementing their provincial program, British Columbia has the BC women's hospital's complex chronic disease program. This provincial referral centre provides comprehensive care to adults with complex chronic diseases such as Lyme disease. The program performs clinical care as well as research.

The Saskatchewan Disease Control Laboratory follows the Lyme disease guidelines set forth by the Canadian Public Health Laboratory Network. They, too, use an initial ELISA test followed by a western blot in order to confirm results. In cases that prove especially difficult, patients may be referred to an infectious disease specialist. Madam Speaker, the government of Saskatchewan similarly outlines precautions to be taken to protect yourself against ticks, symptoms of infection as well as procedures to take if you suspect you have Lyme disease. Tests as well as research on the disease are performed at the University of Saskatchewan.

The government of Ontario also addresses the disease in much the same way. Its website is also a repository for information on the prevention, detection, and treatment of Lyme disease, including links to further valuable information about the condition. What is very much apparent when regarding the approach that other jurisdictions across the country take concerning Lyme disease is that there is a fairly standardized set of procedures already in place. Madam Speaker, the information is certainly out there, and there's no debate surrounding what current best practices are in the detection, prevention, and treatment of the illness.

This is not to say that Motion 508 may not be a helpful tool in winning the fight against Lyme disease. Rather, just by bringing this debate to the floor, we are helping to raise awareness of this disease, and for me this seems like the most significant component in improving our management of Lyme disease. We can always improve how we deliver information, and I am glad that Motion 508 gives us the opportunity to consider how we might change the current process to accomplish this.

Again I thank the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills for his dedication, his compassion on behalf of all Albertans on the issue of Lyme disease.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on Motion 508? Seeing none, I would ask the hon. member to close.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and a special thank you to all of the hon. members who rose to speak to this bill. The support is gratifying. As we have seen throughout debate, extensive research and analysis continue to indicate that the western blot test would work to further protect the safety of all Albertans in addition to the already in place ELISA test. We have the opportunity today to pass a motion with a great deal of positive outcomes. In the wake of an ever-increasing frequency of infections a strategy is needed to ensure that Albertans are able to get the testing and the treatment they need in order to live the lives that we as Albertans are so fortunate to have.

There is no greater lottery to win than being born here in Alberta, and we need to ensure for our children and grandchildren that it continues to be that way in the face of this debilitating disease. Updating our current testing standards and options will ensure that Albertans across this province are able to extensively be treated and tested for Lyme disease, thus lessening the possibilities for the disease to become a long-lasting chronic disease. Albertans' health is a priority, and this motion only works to promote this idea and policy. The health and livelihood of Albertans have been compromised, with more potentially at stake. We have an opportunity here to prevent that from happening again.

I want to thank every member who participated in this debate, and I urge all hon. members to vote in support of Motion 508.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 508 carried unanimously]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It would be my motion at this point that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:41 p.m.]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 18

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Finance it's my privilege to rise today and move third reading of Bill 18, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members who would like to speak in third reading on Bill 18? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Yes, Madam Speaker, that's the place. It's the diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler. It's unfortunate that I can't get the name of the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, but I'm adapting or trying to adapt.

Madam Speaker, it's an interesting time when I am able to speak to the Chamber here in regard to this. Today in the House there was a question in regard to allocation of funding for one golf course in the province, and that's been under review or what I understand to be under review. So we have questions as to how those funds are going to be allocated, where they're going to be finally disbursed, who the disbursers are going to be, and to whom that will be. We have questions on that.

Also, I want to make it known that in this time where we may be facing increased taxes – and all things point to increased taxes because of the low petroleum prices – it certainly will be onerous for the government to try and raise funds or have funds available for projects, especially projects like this, Madam Speaker. It's certainly challenging times.

I think that's about all that I really wanted to get on the record, Madam Speaker, this party's position of concern in relation to that disposition of funds. I'll leave it at that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on Bill 18, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Yeah. Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It is an honour to speak to third reading of the appropriations measures that we brought in to get us through this budget period before everything lines up. I would be remiss not to note that I just came from an Auditor General's meeting, where we touched on many things that are going on in this province. We talked about the fact that we have chronic difficulties in our Northland school division with absenteeism. Some suggestions were made there on how to alleviate that and how to get systems in place and, primarily, more resources up there to assist in trying to get kids to school and having parents understand the importance of that, because if they're not attending school, well, they're not able to learn and become productive members of society.

You know, we also skipped down the thing and went through the Alberta Energy Regulator, and the Auditor General noted some issues there that were stemming from a lack of manpower and a lack of resources over there to introduce some robust systems into place that are needed on that end.

Then we go to the third part of the Auditor General's report, which touches very squarely on what we've discussed here in the appropriations measures. It discussed flood mapping and what we have done or the lack of what we've put together going back to 2006, when it became apparent after the High River flood that we needed new flood maps drawn. Obviously, after the 2013 floods it became very apparent that our flood mapping was out of date and not up to snuff when it comes to dealing with a 1 in 100 year flood, probably more frequent given global warming and the like and weather patterns here in Alberta. Again, what the Auditor General could only point to was that there is a lack of capacity within the department, a lack of expertise to actually do the work of government, and it came right back down to resources.

So if you look at this, there continues to be a chronic need for us to look at this. I know I have made this speech before; nevertheless, there is the need for us to get some handle on our revenue streams. The fact that we've spent all the oil wealth in one generation and now have gone into massive debt and have the inability to produce adequate flood maps can only lead to the conclusion that things are not all well in the province of Alberta. So this appropriation time – in particular, the Auditor General's comments in regard to flooding and that we're still not prepared. We still haven't woken up to what our responsibilities are to not just protect the citizenry but to get it right and develop plans and legislation that ensures we're doing things right going forward.

I bring that up because the hon. minister is here, and I know full well that he wants to get a handle on this flooding and this flood mapping and building berms and dams and dikes all over this province to ensure that, going forward, we're okay. But I just note that the Auditor General has commented on these things, that we've commented here on what we're doing. It appears that even though it seems that we're advancing quite a bit of money to the departments, it doesn't appear to be able to get to what we need to do to provide good government in this province.

Nevertheless, thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege to rise and speak to third reading of Bill 18, which is our interim supply. You know, I appreciate the fact that what we're debating and will be voting on shortly is the interim budget and what the government needs to continue its operations. My only concern comes in a couple of areas, where if we look at the fact that this is roughly for one quarter, the funding is inadequate for the need.

I'll draw attention to, first of all, the area of Health and the fact that, you know, we've got crumbling infrastructure happening throughout the province and that there hasn't been a sufficient investment both on the infrastructure side and on the staffing side. When we look at a quarter of what should be spent – just let me see here – I would expect there would be 25 per cent of the yearly funding for 2014-15 in the interim. When it comes to the Ministry of Health, this bill only allocates 17 per cent of what was given, so a shortfall that's quite significant when it comes to ensuring Albertans can get the access to health care when they need it and to ensure that our facilities are being properly maintained and invested in.

As well, in this bill, Madam Speaker, I'm looking at Infrastructure and the fact that in the '14-15 general estimates the budget for capital spending was $1.143 billion of it. In interim estimates we only show $153 million, or 13.4 per cent of the budget of '14-15, being invested in these three months. Again, when we look at the deferred maintenance price tag that exists throughout the province when it comes to, you know, the integrity and infrastructure of our schools, of our hospitals – and I would extend that to, as well, our roads and bridges – there's a real concern if this is the forecast of what will be spent throughout the year and what's coming down on Thursday. I think some Albertans are going to be more than a little concerned with what's being outlined in here.

I do want to echo some of the comments made by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo as far as the Public Accounts meeting that we were just at with the Auditor General. Again, I look forward to bringing this up if we debate the education bill this evening, Madam Speaker. You know, I find it quite alarming that in the Auditor General's report it was brought to our attention that in the Northland school division there are over 900, or one-third of students, who are chronically absent from school, which is obviously a major concern because if students aren't attending, then they can't possibly be learning and developing the skills and tools they'll need to continue moving forward.

As well, I found the conversation this evening very enlightening looking at the issue of flood mapping and the fact that there are some roadblocks that are currently in the way of moving forward with updating a lot of the flood maps. Despite the fact that, you know, there has been $8.7 million allocated to updating the maps, there is some bottlenecking going on. The fact of the matter is that I really hope the ESRD minister is not only aware of this but, hopefully, is working diligently toward whether it's bringing forward legislation or ensuring that we can get on with having adequate and updated flood maps so that the province, obviously, can work toward prevention so that we don't have a recurrence of what happened a couple of years ago, Madam Speaker.

As I said, you know, I appreciate the fact that this is only for a three-month window, this bill that we're debating. Again, I find it interesting that many of the opposition members and media, obviously, have derived the fact that we will likely be going into an election because of the $28 million allocated to the Chief Electoral Officer, despite the fact that when questioned numerous times in this Chamber, neither the Premier nor the front bench have been forthcoming with members of this House and with Albertans as far as whether we are in fact going to a general election a year earlier than what was established in this House and also what was a piece of legislation that was brought forward by many of the members that sit opposite.

With that, Madam Speaker, I will take my chair. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to talk to Bill 18, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015, in third reading?

Seeing none, shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker: Would the minister like to close debate on Bill 18?

Mrs. Klimchuk: I move that we close debate.

The Acting Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 20 Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. Before I start, I'd like to first of all commend and thank the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West for carrying this excellent bill and for the outstanding job that he's doing with this.

Madam Speaker, as you know, last fall our Premier and I signed a framework agreement with the mayors of Edmonton and Calgary in order to forge a new partnership that recognizes the unique challenges and capacities of these two great cities. More specifically, it was agreed that phase 1 of this initiative, which includes development of an appropriate implementation mechanism, would be complete by spring 2015.

Bill 20 creates enabling authority to move forward with charters; however, during second reading debate we heard some concerns about some of these authorities. Specifically, we heard concerns about the transparency of the development of charters and the ability for municipal bylaws in a charter to take precedence over other provincial enactments. In response to this, Madam Chair, we have prepared an amendment to the bill that will provide additional clarity to these important matters. I would like to make a motion to introduce those now, and I'll wait for a moment while those are being distributed.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. The amendment that is now being distributed will be known as amendment A1.

Hon. member, you may continue.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Please allow me to walk briefly through this amendment with everyone. To begin, for ease of interpretation of the proposed charter section, section A(a) amends the definition of a charter to provide clarity about when the term also includes an amendment to a charter.

Section A(b) adds a provision requiring any new charter or amendments to a charter to be published to the Municipal Affairs website for at least 60 days before it is put into effect. This will ensure that residents, businesses, and industry in a proposed city charter will have the opportunity to see what is planned before the changes come into effect. This additional measure for transparency adds to the fact that as a regulation a charter will also be published in the Alberta Gazette and posted on the Queen's Printer website after it is approved by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

We also heard during second reading, Madam Chair, debate, concern over the transparency of a charter being developed as a regulation that would be approved by cabinet before it would take effect. I want to be clear. This amendment will not alter that approach. If we were to require that charters could only be implemented as legislation rather than through regulation, charters would take considerably longer to develop, and this would not be in the spirit of the agreement we signed in the fall.

Another concern, Madam Chair, we heard during second reading debate was in reference to authorizing a charter city to create bylaws that take precedence over other provincial enactments.

Section A(c)(i) of this amendment provides clarity to the intent of this bylaw clause by specifically stating that any such bylaws would only apply to the city charter and only be able to change an enactment in accordance with the parameters set out in the charter itself. A charter is not a blanket licence to change provincial law. Rather, it may authorize the change of specific enactments as is appropriate for the specific needs of the city.

Finally, as an additional measure of transparency to the charter process section A(c)(ii) of the amendment would require that any bylaw made under the authority we just discussed be advertised and subject to a public hearing in accordance with the rules already in place under the MGA. Madam Chair, this amendment adds clarity and transparency to the charter provisions in Bill 20. It will help potential charter cities to define their charter development processes, help their residents feel informed and engaged. Therefore, I'd like to encourage all members in the House to support this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any others who wish to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to see this amendment coming forward. I just had a question of clarification for the minister on this amendment, and then I would like to also propose questions just on the bill in whole. Now, to clarify my understanding and also for Albertans to understand this very clearly, in the case of a charter city putting forward a bylaw, that bylaw cannot conflict with the existing MGA. The MGA legislation will be the parent legislation, so to speak. If there is a conflict between the two, it's my understanding that it is the MGA itself that will prevail. I'm hoping the minister can just clarify that question, please.

7:50

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yes, the hon. member is right. It cannot conflict with that or any other provincial enactment, just for clarity.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, any more questions?

Mr. Bilous: Sure. Thank you, Madam Chair. A question that deals with the MGA, and it's jumping to codes of conduct if I may. Just to clarify for, again, Albertans, if there is a breach in the code of conduct – because in this act there are provisions for municipalities to enact codes of conduct for their council and mayors – I'm just curious as to what, if there is a breach in a code that a municipality does pass as a bylaw, are either the tools available or the recourse. What are the actions that would follow in the case of a breach?

The Deputy Chair: We are speaking on amendment A1.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, I could speak on that, but those will be developed in the regulations. It isn't really pertaining to the amendment, but just to answer the hon. member's questions with regard to codes of conduct, those will be developed with regulations in consultation with the municipalities.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A1? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. I did not hear all of the last conversation, so this may be redundant, and I do apologize in advance. With this amendment there's going to be a question here. I think that perhaps you can provide some detail. The charter documents which may be developed by regulation: will the cities have the power to change any provincial laws that apply to those regulations? It seems like there's a very broad power indicated here, and I'd like to hear more about how this power will work. What does this power mean for cities and for the relationship between the province and the municipalities? I'm not sure if that's the same as what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview asked over here. Did he? Okay. Then I'll withdraw.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other questions on amendment A1?

Seeing none, we'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: We'll go back to Bill 20, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to present to the committee today Bill 20, the proposed MGA, 2015, especially with the amendments that have been made today. I'd like to thank all members who participated in second reading debate and for their supportive comments.

Madam Chair, Bill 20 is the first step in meeting the commitments made in the January 22 memorandum of understanding between the province, the Alberta municipalities association, and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. This commitment is one that we made with Alberta's municipal associations to reflect the relationship we have with municipalities, one that is predicated on partnership. Mr. Mason asked about this relationship during second reading debate. I want to be clear that we are working with municipalities, government to government, to achieve our shared outcomes.

The parties of the memorandum of understanding agreed to a three-phased approach for completing the review. This bill represents the first phase, which captures the areas of agreement between municipal and industrial stakeholders on issues that were identified by Albertans, municipal partners, and other stakeholders during the 2014 consultations on the MGA.

The second phase will introduce legislation amendments in support of more complex items, considered through the MGA review policy discussions. Meetings with key stakeholders are already under way on these items, and we're pleased that this process has already yielded results, with consensus being reached on several of these items already.

The third phase will see refinement of the legislation and work on regulatory development.

As we discussed in second reading, Bill 20 contains provisions allowing for city charters. To be very clear, we are not creating the content for the city charters through Bill 20. We are merely allowing for the provision to establish city charters. These provisions are a key element in fulfilling the Premier's commitment to the cities of Edmonton and Calgary to demonstrate meaningful progress in the development of charters by the spring 2015. We will be talking to the cities, stakeholders, and to all Albertans, taking their input into consideration before any decision on the content of the charters is decided. The cities will continue to be subject to the MGA and other provincial legislation except in those specific instances where the cities and the province agree that their unique circumstances justify an alternative approach.

Bill 20 also clarifies the administration of off-site levies but does not address the scope of these levies. The bill contains provisions to elevate the substance of several regulations made under section 73(3) of the MGA into the act or to create a new regulation-making authority to continue the existing policies as appropriate.

Finally, the bill contains some general housekeeping items to add clarity to parts of the MGA. The bill is organized in the order of the MGA, so please bear with me as we will be jumping back and forth between policies as we move through the bill.

Section 2(a) is miscellaneous and housekeeping. To begin, section 2(a) contains new and updated definitions. A new definition of “ALSA regional plan” has been added for consistency with the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. The reference to “business revitalization zone” in clause (aa)(iii) has been changed to “business improvement area” at the request of business revitalization zone constituents for consistency with other Canadian jurisdictions.

Sections 2(b) and 2(c): open council meetings. The new regulation-making power allowing the minister to define meetings for the purpose of the MGA and its regulation has been added.

Section 2 also adds a new definition for closed meetings as it relates to municipal councils, council committees, or other bodies. This new section provides clarity on when a meeting is considered closed such as when the public is not permitted entry, when the public is asked to leave a meeting, or when council leaves the room to hold discussions elsewhere. This definition will help in interpreting other parts of the MGA relating to meetings.

In sections 3 through 7 we’re doing miscellaneous housekeeping. Section 3 is a housekeeping amendment of section 13 of the MGA to ensure consistent wording throughout the act relating to conflicts and inconsistencies between documents. Sections 4, 5, 6, and 7 are housekeeping amendments to ensure that the change in name from BRZ to business improvement area is captured in various sections throughout the MGA.

Section 8: the section 73(3) regulation, or control of corporations. Section 8 creates a new regulation-making authority that will enable the creation of new regulations to carry out policy decisions that will come after our full review of all matters related to municipally-controlled corporations. There’s currently no change to the requirements for municipalities through these amendments.

In sections 9, 10, 11, and 12: amalgamations. These sections introduce a new, streamlined process for municipalities who wish to voluntarily amalgamate. This will increase efficiencies and encourage a co-operative approach to amalgamation. Section 9 allows for the amalgamation of non-contiguous summer villages adjacent to a common water body. It also ensures that when contiguous summer villages amalgamate, the new municipality may be a summer village or may be a different municipal status type if it meets the requirements for that status type.

Section 10 is related to the initiation of the amalgamation proceedings. The amendment allows for the current model of initiating the process but also adds the ability for two or more municipalities to jointly initiate the amalgamation process.

Section 11 amends section 105 of the MGA on the report of negotiations to provide clarity on what is required in reporting. The report must include a list of the items on which the municipal authorities in question are not agreed and those on which they are agreed. The report must include a certificate stating that the report accurately reflects the results of the amalgamation negotiations and that the report must be approved by resolution of the councils involved in the amalgamation. Should a municipal authority council not pass a resolution approving the report, the study may include the authority’s reasons for not approving.

Section 12 adds a section allowing the minister to make regulations to allow municipalities to jointly initiate an amalgamation as well as the procedures of joint initiation of amalgamations.

Section 13, annexation. This section allows the minister to make regulations respecting annexation procedures. Annexations can be controversial, and municipalities have indicated that clear and consistent procedures would be helpful.

Section 14, which we just spoke about in the amendment, is city charters. Section 14 introduces a new part, 4.1, on city charters to the MGA, which is an important step towards realizing our shared commitment for the development of charters for the cities of Calgary and Edmonton. These provisions are only enabling provisions. The contents of the charters continue to be developed and will be announced at a future time.

Section 14 establishes the purpose of the new part and that on the request of the city the Lieutenant Governor in Council may by regulation establish a charter for that city. A charter will allow for the legal recognition of the evolving responsibilities and capabilities of cities and of the needs of their communities by setting out that portions of the MGA may not apply or apply differently to a charter city, setting out unique provisions that apply to the charter city in addition to or instead of provisions of the MGA or other enactments. It may authorize the charter city to modify or replace a provision of the MGA or any other enactment by bylaw.

Section 14 also establishes administrative matters relating to charters such as interpretation, the application of the MGA and other legislation to a charter city, the charter prevailing in cases of conflict or inconsistency between the charter and the MGA or other legislation.

Finally, section 14 also establishes that unless a charter provides otherwise, the legal status or the rights and obligations of a city are not affected by the establishment of a charter for that city, nor are the rights of the Crown in Alberta affected by the establishment of a charter for a city.

Sections 15 through 19, accountability and conduct of elected officials and open meetings. In sections 15 and 16 we introduce new provisions related to the accountability and conduct of elected officials. Section 15 is an administrative change to recognize the new division on codes of conduct being created through section 16.

Section 16 adds a new division to the MGA on codes of conduct. This section adds a new requirement for councils to establish a code of conduct governing the conduct of councillors. Section 16 also establishes that a councillor cannot be disqualified or removed from office for a breach of the code. This section also allows the minister to make regulations respecting matters that a code of conduct must address. These matters are respecting the date by which councils must establish a code of conduct, sanctions to be imposed for breach of a code of conduct, matters that must be taken into consideration when establishing a code of conduct, implementation of codes of conduct, and any other matters the minister considers necessary to meet the purpose of the new code of conduct requirements.

To address some of the comments made on this matter in second reading, it might be helpful to consider a few examples of matters that may be included in a code regulation. For example, it could include that councillors must govern their conduct in accordance with the requirements and obligations set out in municipal legislation; not use confidential information for personal profit for themselves or any other person; not communicate confidential information to anyone not entitled to receive the same; not use their position to secure privileges, favour, or advantages for themselves or any other person; and preserve the integrity and impartiality of council. This regulation will be made with the active engagement of our municipal partners to ensure that it meets the intended outcome of this important policy issue, to which everyone has agreed.

Section 17 clearly states that it is a councillor's responsibility to adhere to the codes of conduct introduced through these amendments that we have already discussed. Sections 17, 18, and 19 are related to increased transparency in council meetings and sharing information amongst councillors. Section 18 adds a new section, 153.1, stating that if a chief administrative officer of a municipality provides information about the operation or administration of the municipality to a councillor, then that same information must be provided to all councillors as soon as practical. This provision ensures that all councillors are given the same information about the operation or administration of their municipality on which to base their deliberations and decisions.

Section 19 provides clarity about the procedures relating to closed meetings. This helps to ensure transparency on the basis by which all or part of the council meeting is closed to the public. Clarity is provided for how a meeting or part of a meeting is to be closed, how any member of the public who is present is informed, and on the presence of other persons at closed meetings. Section 19 allows the minister to make regulations to list matters that may be discussed in closed meetings in addition to those matters that are already eligible to be discussed in closed meetings pursuant to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

Sections 20 through 23, responsibilities of council administration. Sections 20, 21, 22, and 23 are related to the roles and responsibility of council administration. Section 20 removes the current section 201(1)(b), related to council's role, as this section was too general in its wording and could result in municipalities taking on administrative functions outside their legislative roles. Section 21 adds a clause to ensure that the council's role in oversight of the chief administrative officer is clear. Section 22 provides a new section 208, that condenses and clarifies the list of responsibilities of the CAO, for existing section 208 of the MGA. Section 23 amends section 209 to clearly establish that the duties of the CAO as outlined in section 208 can be delegated to a designated officer or employee of the municipality.

Public participation policy. Section 24 introduces a new requirement for all councils to introduce a public participation policy for their municipality in order to ensure that the municipalities are effectively engaged with the public, residents, business, and industry as well as other stakeholders. This section also states that the minister may make regulations respecting the content of public participation policies, the considerations to be taken into account by council in establishing the policy, a date by which every municipality must have its first policy in place, requirements for a council to periodically review its public participation policy, and requirements to make that public participation policy public.

Section 24 also establishes that the public participation policy does not affect any other right or obligation held under the MGA or any other act and that "no resolution or bylaw of a council may be challenged on the ground that it was made without complying with a public participation policy established by a resolution of the council."

In sections 25 through 30, the petitioning process, there are requirements for petitions to a municipal council by the minister. Current petition requirements can make it very difficult for the public to successfully petition a municipality. Sections 25 and 26 are amendments consequential to the addition of a new section, 226.1, in the MGA on bylaws modifying petition requirements. Section 27 adds the requirement for a petitioner to include a telephone number or e-mail address, if any, when signing a petition.

In some cases this additional information would assist a municipality and the ministry in validating the petition. Section 28 is also consequential to the addition of a new section, 226.1, in the MGA on bylaws modifying petition requirements. Section 29 extends the time frame, from 30 to 45 days, that a CAO has before making a declaration about whether the petition is sufficient.

Section 30 adds a new section, 226.1, to the MGA, that allows municipalities to modify the requirements for petitions to municipal councils by bylaw, including decreasing the percentage requirement for sufficient petitions, accepting online petitions, outlining online petition validation requirements, extending timelines for the collection of petition signatures, and allowing petitioners to remove their names from a petition within a specified number of days from the date the petition is filed with the CAO. This section also specifies that these bylaws cannot be the subject of a petition and that a bylaw made under this section must not take effect earlier than 90 days after it's passed. This section also adds a provision to protect personal information collected in petitions to ensure that it is only used for its intended purpose.

Section 31 includes a provision to ensure that appropriate notice of public hearings is given in accordance with the act as well as some amendments to clarify that the rules of public hearings apply to those hearings that are legally required to be held.

Section 32 is an amendment consequential to the addition of a new section, 226.1, in the MGA on bylaws modifying petition requirements.

Sections 33 through 36 all work to elevate the content of the current municipal finance clarification regulation, which was made under section 603 of the MGA. There's no change to the requirements for municipalities through these amendments.

Sections 37, 38, and 39. Currently the responsibilities listed in these sections are ascribed to the CAO in section 208 of the MGA. These amendments have transferred these responsibilities more broadly to the municipality so that it is clear that the CAO does not have to personally carry out these responsibilities.

Section 40 introduces new provisions requiring municipalities to at a minimum prepare a three-year financial plan and a five-year capital plan. This section also allows the minister to make regulations respecting financial plans and capital plans as well as transitional provisions for introducing these financial plans.

Section 41 is a housekeeping amendment related to how assessments are prepared. Sections 41(b) and 42 elevate the content of the current SuperNet assessment regulation, which was made under section 603 of the MGA, into the act. There are no changes to the requirements for municipalities through these amendments.

Sections 43 through 46 are housekeeping amendments providing clarity, correcting typo errors, and updating references to other legislation.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to comment on Bill 20? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's my honour to speak briefly to this. I do appreciate the work that's been done and put into this bill. You know, I'm always happy to hear when appropriate organizations and bodies have been consulted and have had the opportunity to provide input. I know that AUMA, AAMD and C, and the mayors of Edmonton and Calgary, among other mayors and councillors, I should clarify, around the province have been able to give their feedback to the government and have input into this bill.

You know, as I've mentioned at other points in time, I do think that this bill takes all of the items that were agreed upon via consensus and puts them forward right now. The cynical side of me does have to ask about the timing, the fact that anything that is controversial or that will need much more time is obviously getting pushed into the fall and likely after the election when folks don't really have much of a say as far as if there's bad news to be given.

A couple of things that I did want to flag. First, I will comment on the fact that amalgamation has been updated and discussed. I do know, you know, having the Municipal Affairs file for the Alberta NDP, that amalgamation and the existing wording in the MGA were something of a concern to a lot of different municipalities, especially summer villages. I do appreciate the fact that their concerns were heard by the minister and that the amalgamation piece has been updated. I do think that that's a positive.

Then I do want to just, you know, question the fact that in this legislation city charters are referred to exactly as that, placeholders for city charters, when the cities of Edmonton and Calgary, the two largest cities in the province, have been very vocal over the last few years in advocating and requesting a big-city charter, or a city charter that applies to both the cities of Edmonton and Calgary. Essentially what they are asking for is special status versus the other 345 municipalities, if my math is correct.

I would like to just take a moment to explain the need for a charter that applies directly to the cities of Edmonton and Calgary. I mean, first and foremost, Edmonton is more than 10 times the size of the third-largest city in the province, and therefore, just based on population alone, the two largest cities, because of their size, are very unique in the sense that there are programs, specialized services, that are only offered in Edmonton and Calgary.

I know from speaking to councillors and the mayors from both cities that part of their struggle is the number of Albertans who come into the cities to use our amenities, to see specialists, et cetera. They have no other choice but to come to Edmonton and Calgary because they're only here. But the challenge that that places on the cities is that you have, you know, thousands, tens of thousands if not hundreds of thousands of Albertans accessing services, using services and infrastructure that the city of Edmonton and Calgary are providing. The challenge is that those two cities do not collect any revenue from those individuals in the way of property assessment, one of the only tools that the cities have at their disposal. So this puts significant restriction or constraint on the two cities because they need to be able to leverage many more dollars.

At the same time, I know the cities have also said that they are more than happy to step up as far as increasing their role as the two major cities in the province. You know, I appreciate the fact that the charter placeholder is in this bill – that is something that's very much needed – but the way that it's framed, again, for just city charters, well, many municipalities could apply for a charter. The argument that I'm going to make is that if all 347 municipalities are going to be granted or if they were granted the same tools, then essentially we're right back to an MGA that applies to all 347 municipalities as opposed to acknowledging the uniqueness and the significant responsibilities that the cities of Edmonton and Calgary have. You know, I'd appreciate it if the minister would be willing to comment on this.

But, for me, again, it is very important that we distinguish the roles that Edmonton and Calgary have and the fact that they do need to be recognized. They do have additional costs and other restraints that many of the other municipalities don't have. They don't have the same challenges that other municipalities have, and they have been asking the province to acknowledge their uniqueness and also to ensure that they have the tools at their disposal.

Now, again, I am well aware that the details of these charters will be forthcoming, and hopefully we'll have more details by the fall, but again it's very important to note that Edmonton and Calgary do deserve and need to be treated differently than the other municipalities just because of the size and scope.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's an honour and privilege to be able to speak to this bill. Frankly, it's a good bill that goes forward and that seems to get the ducks in a row, so to speak, to see the development of city charters.

There's been a note that this has been a policy that has been long overdue. You've had the cities of Calgary and Edmonton, going back to around 2008, who have been wanting a big-city charter. I believe it is something that is a necessity given the size and the scope and the responsibilities that those municipalities face. Simply put, they're the arm of government that is closest to the people. They don't simply build roads and segregate different areas for different development. They're playing a role in the lives of their citizenry, whether you go from affordable housing to FCSS funding with many of our nonprofit groups to working on flood mitigation and disaster relief alongside the provincial government. There has to be a recognition that both Calgary and Edmonton, because of their unique size and their unique roles, need that special treatment as to what defines their roles and responsibilities.

I think this bill goes some way to providing the clarity that people want in that fashion. I know the mayors of both cities have been asking for this repeatedly. In fact, I think there was some reference to it – well, there was reference to big-city charters in the 2008 and 2012 Alberta Liberal platforms, and I think it was in you guys' platform in 2012. So this goes some measure to seeing that we're moving along that path.

I will note that for some time here in this Legislature big-city charters seemed to be at a standstill. There seemed to be no clarification between what the front bench wanted, what the municipalities wanted, and what the minister wanted, and it seemed to be that this call for big-city charters was not going to see the light of day, but I'm glad to see that we're at least plodding along that course.

There has to be a recognition, because of the role of Calgary and Edmonton, that they need new tools to engage with their citizenry. My hope – and this won't be decided till the fall, most likely – is that there will eventually be a recognition that the tax generation made available to the cities through property assessments is simply an outdated tool that doesn't serve its citizenry well. Frankly, as the local arm of government closest to their citizens, they should actually be able to engage in debate with their citizens on what they want from a city and how much they want to pay for it. This should be the primary job of the city and its citizens. Because of their unique size and stature and the way they've developed, this has to be a new means of going forward.

Yes, it's going to entail that the provincial government release some of those primary strings that you have on raising revenue from your citizens. I full well admit that, and I think everyone here will as well. But I think it's an idea that big cities in Canada have evolved to the point where they are capable of that responsibility. There's been a call, and many discussion papers out there have said that this is good public policy.

I think the federal government, too, needs to play a role in assessing what tax tools they have and sharing that with their cities in regard to infrastructure and the like and how cities can be more apt to address transit concerns, whether that be by automobile, by bus, by train, and having on those revenue generations that honest discussion with the citizens, the ratepayers, of their cities as to what they truly want. We've got to get to the principle that if you want the services, you should pay the tax, and if you don't want the services, well, then, you don't have to pay the tax.

It seems pretty simple to have that debate on whether you want to live in a city with great things – great access to public transportation, great amenities, performing arts centres, and the like – or you want to live in a minimalist city. I think that debate has to happen at the local level. Far too often there's a lot of bafflegab in between whose responsibility it is, whether it's the province's or the city's. You know, the province will say, "Well, we give the city more than enough money; we don't know why they can't do everything," and the city will say, "Well, they don't give us near enough money; no wonder we can't do everything."

Well, having a big-city charter will clarify those roles to allow more of a distinction between what each level of government does, and frankly I think it will be better for everybody. There will be less finger pointing and more accountability to your local citizens as to what you provide and less, I guess, three-card monte as to who is actually responsible for providing this.

Nevertheless, I'm hopeful this sets us in the right direction. I think this sets the framework to have the tools in place to be able to do that should this government be willing to implement good public policy for the long run, which, you know, at least in my time here they've been awfully timid at doing.

You know, I think we can look at this situation where we are, where we can find ourselves, and say: my goodness, have we really instituted what's been in our best interests for the long run and made that case to the citizens on whether we've actually had representative democracy, which is supposed to have our best long-term interests at heart? I haven't seen a lot of that in my time here at the Legislature.

My hope is that maybe a new day is around the corner, where we understand that we've grown up, where some of the old sacred cows that we held dear and near to our hearts may not be so relevant anymore, where we've matured as a democracy and understand that government has a role to play in our lives; that having functioning schools, roads that are built, and hospitals that are running is part of that equation and that we should as a citizenry participate in contributing to those necessary functions; that the government has a responsibility, in collecting that, to ensure that kids get educated and ensure access to not only good K through 12 education but early childhood learning opportunities, postsecondary opportunities, that our elderly are cared for in dignity, and that we're not simply scrambling around trying to put Band-Aids on problems that we know won't go away unless we act.

I'm hoping that the big-city charter piece will ensure the ability of cities to react to what their citizens' needs are and how we can run more efficient cities and better operating cities and more serving-the-public cities for everyone who lives there.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Chairman. It's a pleasure to get up this evening and speak a little bit about Bill 20 and the MGA, one of my favourite topics and one that I have a little experience in for a change.

Anyway, I'd like to offer my congratulations to the Member for Lethbridge-West in his comments and the work he put into this as well as the minister on this file. I think this is something that has been long overdue, and there have been a lot of experiences in a lot of communities around Alberta where they've had various issues, including in my own riding, that some of these changes will assist, for sure.

We're fairly supportive of this review and have been from the beginning. We know that the AUMA and the AAMD and C have been involved, and I think that's just great. That's a good way to go. The stakeholders have therefore been consulted heavily, and I think that's really important. You know, it's good to see some of these things moving forward now finally, and some of the things like closed meetings and new rules for notifying the public are all also very important. So we're pretty supportive of that.

I'd like to speak, though, a little bit more on some of the stuff that has been mentioned already, just briefly. I don't want to be redundant and hold us here all night. The city charter thing is a new direction that's being considered here, and, you know, there are a lot of people that we're hearing from who are still nervous about some of the things that may be in the city charters. I think everyone knows that. The taxation powers are, of course, one of the things that a lot of people were concerned about. We've expressed support for a charter, and we think it helps the cities, helps some of the problems they face, whether they're current or the one-size-fits-all legislation, which hasn't necessarily worked that well in the past.

You know, we generally support the charter idea, but we have always been clear that the residents of Alberta should not be faced with any new taxes imposed on them through this process. Actually, I had an amendment that we were going to bring forward about that, but it kind of got circumvented by some of the process we have witnessed here tonight. Nonetheless, we do have things that are worrisome in that regard. We still don't know how it's going to unfold, but I gather that as it proceeds along, we'll see that. But we all think that having extra taxes is not necessarily the greatest thing in this kind of environment. Nonetheless, it's moving quickly here.

You know, there are a lot of things that we get worried about when it comes to my own area, being close to the city of Calgary, like annexation, amalgamation, all these kinds of things. Sometimes there are some very difficult situations that arise out of those negotiations. We're seeing that with Leduc and the city of Edmonton and so on. I will be monitoring that and looking forward to seeing how that comes about.

That being the case, you know, it will be interesting to see how the city charter thing goes. We'll be monitoring it. We think that there will be a lot of impact to this. There will be some adjustments and so on and so forth, but we're generally in favour of this, and we look forward to hearing from others and what they say.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill 20, Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015, in Committee of the Whole?

Seeing none, shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 20 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 12
Common Business Number Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any members who wish to comment, question, or have any amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Just some opening comments, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to speak to the Committee of the Whole respecting the Common Business Number Act. To begin, I'd just like to reiterate what this bill is intended to do. Bill 12 establishes a legislative framework that enables our province to enter into a partnership with Revenue Canada to adopt a common business number. By doing so, Alberta businesses will be able to conveniently identify themselves to participating provincial programs using a single identification number.

Use of the common business number is already expanding to government programs across the country. Five federal departments and agencies use the business number, and the government of Canada is examining the mandatory use of the common business number for all federal programs. The provinces of British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick have adopted a common business number for corporate registrations and other programs such as taxation, workers' compensation, permitting and licensing of alcohol and tobacco. Passing this legislation is the first step in implementing the common business number, and it will demonstrate Alberta's ongoing commitment to reducing red tape, improving services for businesses, increasing the competitiveness of Alberta-based businesses, and maintaining a positive investment climate.

I'm looking forward to any other comments on this bill. I'd be happy to answer any questions. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to comment? The hon. Member for Livingstone-MacLeod.

Mr. Strankman: Ma'am, it's Drumheller-Stettler.

The Deputy Chair: Oh. I'm sorry.

Mr. Strankman: It's still the diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker – Madam Chairman. I'll get it right, too.

I think this is an interesting bill, and from my business background, an agricultural background, and growing up having a social insurance number, a corporate number, a farm fuel distribution number, a lot of this sort of thing, PIN numbers of various arrangements, although this doesn't relate to that, I think common business numbers are a boon. The concern I have is the possible cost of implementation, but once it's arrived at, I think it will be a benefit and a bonus going forward.

I'd just like to get those comments on the record from Drumheller-Stettler, Madam Chairman. I'd just like to leave it at that. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's my honour to speak to this bill. You know, first of all, I think it's important, and I speak on behalf of my whole caucus when I say that we support the development of customer-oriented services for businesses in Alberta, and that obviously includes developing a system of common business numbers between our federal cousins and provincial governments.

Interestingly, though, what needs to be pointed out is that I'm happy to see our government finally catching up to something that many of the other provinces already have, most notably in Manitoba. It's worth noting that Manitoba's NDP government brought in a similar system a number of years ago. In fact, what's interesting, Madam Chair, is that the text of the bill is almost word for word the same as the equivalent bill passed in Saskatchewan in 2013. You know, it's unfortunate that it took us this long to get here, but I am happy to see that the government is finally catching up and decided to get on with this.

Madam Chair, it's important to modernize government operations in order to support businesses in Alberta. We need to also ensure, though, that privacy, convenience, and flexibility are respected at every step of the process. I mean, that's going to be the focus of some of my comments. Again, I do want to mention that the Alberta NDP are strong supporters of small business. We recognize that 95 per cent of Alberta's economy is driven by the small-business community. Interesting to note that we were the only party three years ago proposing a small-business tax cut, and our party has actually increased that to cut small-business taxes down to 1 per cent in the province of Alberta.

To continue with ensuring that privacy is respected as well as convenience and flexibility, just a couple of minor questions or concerns that I have that I'd like to share with Albertans and members of this Chamber. Subsection (2) enables the minister to enter into an agreement with the government of Canada to establish a system of common business numbers. Now, as much of the act is worded, it's fairly vague, Madam Chair, and it's important that the government is very up front with Alberta businesses about how the system will be implemented. Specifically, will the common business numbers be the same as those used by the Canada Revenue Agency?

Another area of the bill, section 4, which is equally vague is that the purpose of establishing a system of common business numbers enables any public entity to share business information with any agency in the government of Canada. I'm curious. Why is such broad permission required if communication is really only needed between the province and the Canada Revenue Agency? Or is it as well with a number of participating federal programs?

Section 4 also enables a public entity to require information from a business entity in order to assign a common business number. It also allows the public entity to provide this information to the government of Canada or one of its agencies. The public entity may also use the information currently in its possession for this purpose. Given the extent of the information being shared, there must be adequate systems or regulations in place to ensure that business information is used only for the purpose of assigning a common business number.

As well, section 4 creates a sanction, that any public entity may refuse to act on information provided to it by a business entity should the business fail to provide the information necessary for the system of common numbering. Now, if a business has legitimate concerns about the privacy implications of this information sharing, why shouldn't it be able to opt out without penalty?

Section 4(3) requires that a business's information be provided in any form or format that the public entity considers appropriate. Now, whatever that format is, it must not place an additional burden on the business. Preferably, businesses should have the option of providing the information in different formats depending on what's best suited for their needs, again keeping in mind that we don't want to be burdening businesses any more than we have to.

Sections 4(5) and 5(4) require that business information received by public entities be provided to the minister. Now, there are no restrictions on the use of this information nor direct justification for this clause with respect to establishing a system of common business numbers. If public entities may provide business information to the government of Canada themselves as per section 4, why must the minister receive the information as well? The role of the minister in implementing this system must be clarified, and I really hope that the member sponsoring this bill and the minister will clarify this.

Section 6 pertains to the creation of an information system for the common business numbers. As per 6(2)(d) the information system may hold any other prescribed information about the business. So who will make the prescription? What limitations will be placed on it? Will the information system be expanded or be capable of storing information other than the information set out in section 6? If so, how will the scope of the information system be expanded?

Section 6 also fails to identify where the information held in the information system will be stored and who will be responsible for controlling access to the information other than the minister.

Madam Chair, we must ensure that these things are clear in the regulations such that information remains secure. Again, I think most businesses, if not all, throughout the province, you know, will want to know that the information is going to be secure, that privacy is of the utmost importance in the passing of this legislation.

Section 7(1)(a)(ii) enables the minister to disclose the information in the information system to a public entity for the purpose of law enforcement. However, given the murky scope of the information to be held by the information system, it's a little disconcerting that it may be used for law enforcement purposes. Businesses must know what information will be held in the information system before being forced to comply with the legislation.

Lastly, Madam Chair, section 11 pertains to regulations. Here 11(a) sparks the most concern because it enables the Lieutenant Governor in Council to define, enlarge, or restrict the meaning of any term or expression used in this act but not defined in this act. In other words, the government may significantly alter the implications of the legislation without ever having to formally amend it. I mean, that is and has always been a concern of mine and my colleagues when we're giving, you know, complete authority to a minister or in this case to the Lieutenant Governor in Council to be able to alter the act significantly without it ever having to come back to the Legislature to be adequately, publicly, and properly debated. So that is another great concern that I have with the current legislation as it's written.

Madam Chair, you know, we want to make sure that Alberta's businesses benefit from this bill as opposed to simply handing over more information to the government with less oversight. Again, it's of utmost concern to us or a very large priority that we are respecting the privacy of businesses, that we are ensuring that any information that is being stored is in fact secure and that, obviously, businesses are made completely aware of what information will be stored, how it's going to be stored, how it's going to be used – the last thing we want to see is a very vaguely worded bill passed and the intention, the spirit, of the bill altered or misinterpreted down the road because it's not specifically and clearly outlined in this bill – and, again, most importantly, you know, that it's publicly debated, that it's given the opportunity to be discussed and scrutinized by all members of this House and not done behind closed doors.

With that, Madam Chair, I will take my seat. I truly hope that members opposite were taking note of some of the questions and concerns I have. I would love to hear some of the answers so that we can move forward in our debate.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members who wish to speak on Bill 12?

Mr. Hehr: Yeah.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. My goodness, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview did such a good job going through the details of that bill. I'm not going to muck it up further by getting to details in the weeds there.

Nevertheless, I look at this, and some broad comments sort of pertaining to small business come to my mind here. It looks to me like our small-business community actually is one of the engines that is trying to survive and thrive here in Alberta, is adding value to our economy, and is not necessarily tied to our oil and gas industry, which is a good thing as we all well know that many of our eggs are tied to the one basket. It's natural that a commodity like oil and gas, that generally sells at large profit margins and can provide good wages and actually has people going into that business for many good reasons, is your dominant driver of the economy. Small businesses appear to be one of the ways to balance that approach.

I, too, would echo the comments that I note the hon. minister of jobs indicated, that he enjoyed our conversion on the road to Damascus on small business taxes. I would actually share that conversion on small businesses as it appears to be a reasonable way to try and get more people involved in the economy and starting different businesses. The hope is that with those companies some good ideas emerge, and eventually they become big companies, and then we can take our pound of flesh – right? – Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour. I'm joking here. I'm joking.

Nevertheless, I think it's important that we foster that sense of opportunity amongst people who want to go out and try new things. It may actually be a way to slightly diversify our economy. That always brings me back to note that now the government of the day is pounding a diversification drum again. I'm interested to see what that actually means as many economists that I read and the Alberta Treasury Branch's Todd Hirsch have indicated that this seems to be a very difficult thing to do and almost, even, a dangerous one. I note that he notes for many reasons like I do that we're very good at oil and gas, and it is the driver of our economy and the like.

I have a sense that what should be done with that oil revenue is for it to be saved in the heritage trust fund for the day when oil and gas eventually runs out, or probably what happens more quickly is that the world moves on. Being prepared for that day is primarily through that vehicle, the heritage savings trust fund, which we've ignored for the last 25 years. Or if you're looking at another avenue instead of that, it would be maybe to make the best universities in the world or something if you found a public good where the opportunity costs outweighed the savings. I haven't seen that argument made, and maybe that's what is going to be forthcoming from the government.

But I look at the diversification thing. It's always something that's easy to say, and it might make for good election politics, but I'm not certain how to do it. So I'm looking forward to the government enlightening me on that. Of course, we look to solar and wind and many of those things. As the minister pointed out today in question period, she noted that we have had some successes in that event. Maybe there are some other things we can do in that regard, but that doesn't seem to be diversification but more energy production. Maybe I'm wrong on that.

All I'm saying is that it appears that small business is one of the ways that we actually have a tried-and-true mechanism for diversifying the economy that may actually work and has proven to work. My hope is that this new common business number – it looks like it's been implemented elsewhere successfully. I'm sure they've dealt with some of the challenges brought up by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Hopefully, we're following along with best practices that have been done by provinces before us to ensure that small businesses are getting the information they need and are providing the information that's required yet is not an undue burden on their business practices nor on the privacy concerns of theirs and their customers, which is a slippery slope, as we all know in this day and age, and the like.

Nevertheless, I think it's a good measure forward. I'm looking forward to the government's responses to those questions. I'm always interested in hearing how we're going to diversify things because, you know, it's easier said than done. So I look to be illuminated here in the next little while.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on Bill 12, the Common Business Number Act, in Committee of the Whole? The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the comments from Calgary-Buffalo and Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Just to clarify a couple of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview's questions, first of all, about the security of it and what's being collected. The intent is really to collect no more, of course, than is necessary. The information that is collected for the common business number will be shared only between public entities, Service Alberta, and the Canada Revenue Agency, and it will be completely secure through an information exchange hub.

Also, section 4, the question about if they actually want to opt out. Well, they can't really opt out on the Revenue Canada number, and this is basically the same information. If they choose to opt out, then that'll be their choice, but they would assumedly, then, still have two business numbers, which really is kind of counterproductive. But I suppose they have that option. We wouldn't be able to co-ordinate the common business number for those few cases that may decide to opt out.

With respect to the burden to small business I think we're all agreed that this reduces that burden. This government will do anything and everything it can to continue to reduce the administrative burden to small business.

More questions on sections 4(5) and 5(4). Again, I think we've covered the security part. It will be completely secure through this information exchange hub. With respect to the data collected, we don't expect that we need to collect and store any additional business information other than for the purpose of administering the common business number.

Other than that, I think that covers some, if not most, of what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview was asking. With that, I'll take my seat if there are no further questions.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak in Committee of the Whole on Bill 12, Common Business Number Act? The hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Chair. I'll be brief. I just wanted to thank the hon. member for bringing this forward and the minister responsible. I think that if we carry on this way, people will start to believe that government is acting in their best interests even more so than they already do. I think it's a good example of trying to actually cut some red tape for business, and I intend to support it.

I hope that was as brief as I advertised.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on Bill 12?
Seeing none, shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 14

Agricultural Societies Amendment Act, 2015

[Adjourned debate March 12: Mr. Scott]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education.

Mr. Scott: Question.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak in second reading on Bill 14? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to be recognized from the diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler. I was fortunate enough to attend the briefing that the agriculture minister held in regard to the Agricultural Societies Act.

Being from a rural constituency, I think it's important that this bill be brought forward, and I will be supporting it. What it does is modernize the Agricultural Societies Act in an important way by bringing it to a third-person atmosphere, much like a corporation does. Currently there are almost 300 agricultural societies in the province, and this is an important way of bringing those organizations in tune with the modern era. It modernizes legislation, and it better aligns the Agricultural Societies Act with the Societies Act. Period. It makes it less prescriptive in recognition that different agricultural societies need to have the ability to structure themselves to meet their own needs, and it requires all agricultural societies to have effective bylaws in place to ensure good governance.

One of the things that I found interesting was the stipulation that some of these societies have to maintain a specific distance apart so that there is not overlapping of regulation.

Madam Speaker, I think that the proposed changes are a sensible approach to modernizing these organizations in rural communities. Our rural communities are in some cases, in the constituency of Drumheller-Stettler, becoming further and greater distances apart, so we have to modernize the way that these function. This will allow them to function in a more autonomous fashion and allow them to meet the local goals by developing their local bylaws and objectives.

There are some negative parts to it, but I believe that they are far outweighed by the progressive side or the innovative side coming forward here.

With that, Madam Speaker, I'll resign the floor to you and to anyone else who wishes to speak to the act.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. With regard to the Agricultural Societies Amendment Act, 2015, I do want to just make a couple of brief points. The Alberta NDP does recognize the importance of agricultural societies and the contributions that they make to our communities.

Interestingly, for over a century agricultural societies have provided communities in Alberta with opportunities to come together, exchange knowledge, and share in the bounty produced by our vital agricultural sector. In 1879, Madam Speaker, the Edmonton Northlands agricultural society was established. Today there are over 295 active agricultural societies. However, unlike the societies themselves, the legislation surrounding them has not been significantly modified since the late 1800s. You know, we recognize that this bill intends to modernize the legislation surrounding these societies to enable them to function to their full potential.

I'm happy to learn and to know or to comment on, Madam Speaker, that an extensive consultation process with agricultural societies found there was broad support for these changes. Certain prescriptive details are removed from the act, which should make life easier for these valuable community organizations.

One of the most important amendments contained in this bill will broaden the object statement to reflect the broad community presence of agricultural societies. However, a few other changes are noteworthy, Madam Speaker. One is the addition of a section on amalgamation of agricultural societies. I'm curious to know why the minister sees fit to add such a section. I mean, it is important to clarify whether the minister anticipates that societies will have to amalgamate due to changes in funding or if there are other reasons which we're not aware of.

In addition, the government will no longer guarantee agricultural societies' loans. Ministry staff have indicated that while they felt the provision was unnecessary as it is no longer used by agricultural societies, no consultation, to our knowledge, was conducted on the change.

Significantly, we see in this bill a substantial broadening of the minister's regulation-making powers. For example, he or she may now make regulations "exempting a society from the application of any provision of this Act or the regulations, subject to any terms and conditions that the Minister considers appropriate." Now, again, Madam Speaker, for us and for many Albertans clearly this raises some concern and some flags since the scope of the power that the minister now has is extremely broad.

Any time in this House that bills come forward that allow the minister to make sweeping changes without having to work through the Legislative Assembly is a cause for concern, Madam Speaker. Again, we're not talking about questioning the current minister's integrity or intentions, but the concern, obviously, is that once a bill is passed through this House today, it will stand for many years to come, similar to the fact that the original bill was written in the 1800s, and now, well over a hundred years since, we're making significant modifications to it.

So that concern, I think, is noteworthy, Madam Speaker. It should be clearly outlined in the bill so that it can be debated publicly and so that all members may participate in that debate. That's probably my largest concern with this bill. Having said that, though, I think it's important that agricultural societies receive and continue to receive stable and predictable funding for their activities, which I think all Albertans would agree are of vital importance to the communities that they serve.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak in second reading for Bill 14, Agricultural Societies Amendment Act, 2015?

Seeing none, would the hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education like to close?

Mr. Scott: We move to close and move this forward.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a second time]

Bill 19 Education Amendment Act, 2015

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Dirks: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I ask leave to move second reading of Bill 19, the Education Amendment Act, 2015.

Bill 19 is the result of due diligence prior to proclamation in ensuring the Education Act will be effective in serving the long-term needs of Alberta's students. Bill 19 does not in any way change the intent or overall policy objectives of the Education Act. The amendments are administrative in nature. They were identified during the regulatory review process and ensure that the Education Act will be able to fulfill its full purpose upon proclamation. Amendments of this nature are not uncommon in large, complex pieces of legislation. These amendments aim to achieve further clarity and accuracy of the policy directions of the Education Act. This is beneficial for our stakeholders as they continue their hard work in preparing for the act to be proclaimed.

Bill 19 includes a relatively extensive list of amendments. Let me just give you perhaps one or two examples of these kinds of changes. Again, these amendments are administrative in nature. They do not change the intent or overall policy objectives. Section 18 deals with courses as well as programs of study. As it is currently worded, this section allows the minister, by order, to “prescribe courses or programs of study” and “prescribe requirements for the granting of credits, certificates and diplomas,” course sequencing, and more. Requiring an order for each of these purposes would become an administrative burden and, in fact, is not currently required under the School Act. For this reason, the amendment proposes the minister may prescribe or grant items in this section by means other than an order.

There are some other aspects as well. Perhaps a second amendment, section 56. Through Bill 19 this section would be amended to ensure all requirements regarding records of students and children, the access to these records, the ability to ask for copies or corrections, that these kinds of matters are consistent across all types of school authorities, which would include school boards, private schools, and private early childhood services operators.

I believe these amendments assist in highlighting the importance of Bill 19. I see the true value of Bill 19, the Education Amendment Act, 2015, as helping empower the Education Act, which is a landmark piece of legislation and will have a significant long-term impact on our education system. The purpose of Bill 19 is to ensure the Education Act will be effective in serving the long-term needs of our students, and I sincerely hope that the House will join me in supporting this important piece of legislation.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise on Bill 19. We just have a few comments on this, and I'll get through them as soon as I can due to the lateness of the hour. There seem to be a number of changes here to mostly take care of some housekeeping items, I understand, as the minister has said. I gather many of them come from the shift in term for the school board trustees from three to four years, et cetera.

We're generally supportive of Bill 19, but there are a few changes that we do have a few concerns about, where there are some word changes from “evaluation” to “assessment” in provincial achievement tests, and so on and so forth. We realize that's been taken out, but we think that one of the responsibilities of the education system should be to measure how our students are doing and report that measurement to the students and their parents. For a number of years now, as everyone knows, we've had the provincial achievement tests in Alberta, which were taken at the end of grades 3, 6, 9, et cetera.

While there have been, certainly, some concerns raised about PATs and whether they are the best tool for everyone, the Wildrose has been on record defending some form of standard testing. We feel that's very crucial. The province has recently been piloting a different test called the standard learning assessment, which does not test the curriculum. Instead, it is taken by students at the beginning of the year, I understand. However, it isn't clear that SLAs will do everything that PATs do. Bill 19 doesn't actually make this change from PATs to SLAs, but it strikes out the exact phrase “provincial achievement tests” and replaces the term with “provincial assessments.”

These changes are not unexpected, but we have to make sure that we are making the right moves for students and for the whole system. It's so important that we have consistent, transparent measures of how our children are doing in school. It helps everyone involved: teachers, parents, and the students themselves. To make good decisions about what a child needs to support their education, we need qualitative grading and quantitative grading. This change is part of a policy shift away from the standardized testing, and we need to make sure that we have good, transparent reporting methods in our schools.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise and speak to this legislation. I agree with my colleague the Minister of Education that Bill 19 is effectively a means to an end. It is a piece of legislation that will enable a second very significant piece of legislation, the Education Act, to be effective. As the Education Act has already received royal assent and Bill 19 does not change the intent or the overall policy of the act, I don't see any reason to withhold support of the Education Amendment Act, 2015.

Looking through the bill, it's quite clear to me that the amendments are as represented; they are administrative in nature. For example, I see that Bill 19 includes changes to several sections of the Education Act that are a direct result of amendments that have been made to the Local Authorities Election Act. In recent years the Local Authorities Election Act shifted the term of office for school trustees from three years to four years. Some of the amendments contained in the bill would make the same changes in the Education Act. It is clear that without the corresponding adjustments, the Education Act would be in some aspects outdated or incorrect at the time of proclamation.

I appreciate that the Education Act is a complex piece of legislation. In these cases it is understandable, even logical, that minor changes may be identified and addressed before proclamation. In the case of the Local Authorities Election Act the legislative amendments caused a domino effect that should be rectified. I can appreciate that as a result of additional feedback and review of the act by both governments and stakeholders such a large piece of legislation could, when put into practice, stand to benefit from minor adjustments to increase clarity and accuracy.

I support the content of Bill 19 and also its timing. I believe it is sound practice to make these amendments prior to proclamation as opposed to opening up the legislation once it's already come into force. In some cases the amendments in Bill 19 are actually necessary for progress towards proclamation to continue.

As a former teacher I believe that the Education Act will have a positive long-term impact on the education system in Alberta. Albertans and stakeholders have been involved in the Education Act and, I believe, will be supportive of Bill 19 moving forward. For these reasons, I see Bill 19 as an important checkpoint in the preparation process for the Education Act, and I'm supportive of this legislation.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now available for anybody who wishes to make comments or questions.

Seeing none, we'll move on to the next speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to rise and speak to Bill 19, the Education Amendment Act. You know, I don't disagree with the hon. minister that much of this act has to do with making some administrative changes, including extending the trustee's position from three years to four years and just harmonizing that with what we've done for our municipal leaders, which I am in agreement with. For me, Madam Speaker, there are three areas of concern that I do have, which took quite a bit of thorough examination of the bill and speaking to some school boards throughout the province on this bill.

The first one on what the bill might do and the concerns that I have is around residency requirements. Now, as we understand it, the changes made in sections 2 and 3 are meant to be in line with other changes in the Education Act which focus on the student rather than the parent. For us, obviously, while a focus on students when it comes to education is definitely a positive step, it may be a little more difficult when it comes to proving where a student lives. Now, this is because the parents have bills; they have ways to prove what their residence is. If a child says that they're living with a friend, for example, it can be difficult to prove. It could also lead to difficulties for school boards in ensuring that schools don't become too full and classrooms don't become unmanageable because, again, a student could say that they're living with a friend within the catchment area, and a school board that's already, you know, close to maximum capacity or at that capacity might then be over capacity.

There are going to be difficulties that are raised in terms of funding when it comes to special programming. This is probably the larger concern, Madam Speaker, that students may not have in their home jurisdiction – well, I'll give an example: the Alberta School for the Deaf. It costs a great deal to offer the right programming for students who are deaf. However, the costs of such programs greatly exceed the current per-student level funding that the province gives to the school boards.

Now, this could pose a problem. For example, let's say a child comes to Edmonton to go to the School for the Deaf, and the parents live in Grande Prairie. When the funding falls to the parents' residence, both the parents' home jurisdiction and the board – in this case, Grande Prairie – would work with Edmonton public or the board which offered the special program and would agree to split the additional costs for any special programming from their general revenue. If the funding switches and follows the child instead of the parents and the board follows the child and the board of the residence of the child, the one offering the special programming will not have assistance from the board where the parents are from. Therefore, that board would be solely responsible for the programming for that student.

Again, what this would do, Madam Speaker, is that it would result in a great deal of costs for the boards offering these special programs. Quite frankly, there is concern throughout the province with some of the boards in that if they do not have the ability to share some of those costs with boards from the jurisdictions that the students are coming from, it may end up being so costly that down the road the board may not be able to afford to offer these types of programs. I mean, as a result, it's going to be more difficult to offer specialized programming because of the reduced transfers the boards offering specialized services would receive. That's one concern, which I do hope – and I appreciate the fact that the minister is listening intently to these concerns – that he will be able to address. I think it is a very valid concern that I'm raising.

The second point, Madam Speaker, is ministerial appointment of an official trustee. Sections 15 of the bill and 72 of the Education Act deal with ministerial appointment of an official trustee to conduct the affairs of a board when the minister considers it important for the public interest. Now, we've seen this done in Northland school division. In January of 2010 the then Minister of Education appointed an official trustee to replace the board of Northland school division. They did so because of the serious concerns regarding student achievement with this board. The act, Bill 19, that we're debating here, as it currently stands, does not include any term limit for the appointment of these official trustees. The current official trustee for Northland school division has been in place for five years. Community members, I can tell you, Madam Speaker, in Northland are getting frustrated with the way that this is going and very much want an elected board in place.

You know, there are many challenges that continue to be faced by students and the community in Northland school division, and this was highlighted in the Auditor General's report that just came out, the one which I referenced earlier, that we were talking about tonight in Public Accounts. There are still great challenges regarding improving student outcomes. As well, there were recommendations from many different studies and reports that were made: the need for the schools to be more community centred, including their administration, which is not likely being done with an official trustee appointed by the provincial minister; the need for a governance structure that supports the principle of local control based on a democratic, representative electoral process while recognizing the need for an ongoing educative support system that enables governors to implement visionary, policy driven practices and avoid –

I'm going to leave out that last part.

What the report from the AG shows us is that even after five years of having an official trustee, there have not been huge improvements in attendance. In fact, it says that "poor attendance is ... often accepted as the status quo." I found it quite alarming, Madam Speaker, the fact that one-third of students, or 900 out of 2,700, are chronically absent in Northland school division. There are a number of recommendations that the Auditor General has come out with.

Now, these are issues that I'm speaking of that remain within the Education Act that could have been addressed with this legislation. Again, without providing a term limit, who knows how long an appointed trustee can remain in place as opposed to a democratically elected board of local representatives?

My third point, Madam Speaker – and hopefully I don't run out of time here – is about the subject of dysfunctional boards. Now, some of our community stakeholders are concerned with the power currently given to a board to dismiss trustees. This section of the Education Act as it currently stands, section 87(1)(c), states that a trustee may be "disqualified from remaining as a trustee" if they have "breached the code of conduct," and the board can determine if they should be disqualified.

Now, rather than allow the public, who elected the trustee to be involved in any decision that may disqualify them from their position, it's letting the trustee's colleagues, or board members, make all the determinations.

9:20

Now, as a result of this significant power in the hands of the boards, there have been concerns – and I have been approached, Madam Speaker – that this may result in the unfair dismissal of some unpopular board members. I appreciate the fact that it's not in the scope of this current legislation, Bill 19, that we're debating to deal with such a change. It is something that's an important issue, that I felt should be flagged, and it should be addressed – and therefore I'm sharing it with the minister and all members and Albertans – either by giving the minister the power to oversee it or by allowing a public recall of the trustee or some other recourse rather than simply a disqualification by the board on which the trustees themselves work.

The concern really comes from, Madam Speaker, I mean, the liberty that the opposition members have in this House to express our opinion, to critique legislation, and knowing that we are protected in this House. It is really the cornerstone of our democracy that we can disagree and debate and have a fulsome debate and I don't have to worry about recourse from, say, government members deciding to unelect me or vote me out because they disagree with my opinion or my stance on certain positions. The concern here is that if you have a trustee that is constantly raising either contentious points or who disagrees with the rest of the board, the board has the authority to remove that trustee. I'm not talking about examples where a person is either trying to abuse their position or to be a troublemaker; I'm talking about if they legitimately are raising points that differ from the perspective of other members of the board.

I will point out in my last few seconds here that what's interesting to look at is our municipal legislation, where city councillors may be removed from their position after council forwards a complaint to a judge, who then examines the case and then makes a decision. So there are multiple steps for a council to get a colleague removed from their board, but there's still the possibility for the councillor in question to appeal the decision. There are opportunities and processes in place to ensure that a person doesn't get picked on or ganged up on or, you know, unfairly dismissed from a position via the MGA.

This is a concern that I wanted to raise with the minister. I acknowledge the fact that it's not in the current legislation, but this is a concern, and we need to make sure that there is a proper process. In my opinion, again, if it's the public and Albertans who are electing our trustees, well, they should in fact have a say if a trustee is behaving in a way that they feel they should be removed for as opposed to solely giving that power to their colleagues.

So, Madam Speaker, I will take my seat. I will be supporting this bill. Again, I just wanted to raise some of my concerns. I appreciate the fact that the minister is, you know, acknowledging and taking notes on some of these questions. I look forward to his answers and to further discussion on this.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Five minutes of questions and comments. Anybody on 29(2)(a)?

Seeing no one, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I may be brief because many of my concerns have already been noted. Just two things. I, too, am concerned about the Northland school division. An example that has been pointed out there is that we've had a trustee now in place. What are the term limits? How are we going to get back to local school board control and hopefully effective mechanisms to move the community forward?

I would be remiss if I didn't add that I thought initially, when the Education minister dismissed the board in the first place, it was probably a good move. Okay? There was clearly some situation that was emerging in the Northland school division that was seemingly not moving that jurisdiction forward, and there were some real concerns whether the kids were being educated. That being said, one would think that when this government took that bold a step – they went in in a heavy-handed fashion – they would roll up their sleeves and try and fix the problem.

Lo and behold, here we get an Auditor General's report where five years after they've instituted a trustee, five years after they knew some really serious and egregious practices were emerging that were not getting kids educated, we learned from the Auditor General that things may actually be worse today, worse than they were when this government took the approach of dismissing an entire elected school board. That to me is dumbfounding, Madam Speaker, how they could actually digress even further with the minister and this government taking charge of a board and seemingly recognizing the problems yet seemingly doing nothing over the course of the last five years to make the situation better.

We learned from the Auditor General today that roughly one-third of the students in the Northland school division are chronically absent. That is what we learned. That is a shame, Madam Speaker, where we have a school system that is clearly – and the government knows this – falling down, needing help, needing support, needing a full-scale intervention. The government knew this, and seemingly they have done nothing over the course of the last number of years. That to me is disappointing as all getup, and it really should be addressed in some form or fashion by the new minister because we're failing a generation of kids up there. It hasn't gotten better in the last five years, and I have a suspicion it's been going on for a lot longer or else you wouldn't have had a former minister, actually former Premier now, of this province take the bold action of dismissing the board because he recognized the problem. Yet nothing has been done about it.

That dovetails into the whole conversation that we can have great legislation, we can have glorious intentions and well-written documents, but simply put, if you're not providing the mechanisms or the support and the actual dollars behind your education system, well, it doesn't amount to a hill of beans. There truly have been since 2008 winners and losers in the province of Alberta. Let me be clear. I don't believe the kids of Alberta have been winners during that time period. If we would have even kept the funding at '08-09 levels, we would have 2,500 more teachers in our classrooms today if we had kept up with population growth at that spending rate. Clearly, that has not occurred.

We've seen it nickelled and dimed, not doing the best we can. We haven't moved on full-day kindergarten. In fact, some jurisdictions are even unable to provide full-day kindergarten in jurisdictions where it is much needed. It was targeted where those areas were that were getting full-day kindergarten by the boards in question. They recognized that they needed that support, and that is no longer being provided.

In my view, I think this government knew in '08-09. That's when you saw the publishing of the Emerson report, where it recognized that our fiscal structure was broken. It sort of was paralysis by analysis when this government looked at it and said: "We'll, we're going to do nothing. We're going to drain down the contingency account. We're going to cut public funds to education and health care and infrastructure spending, and – my goodness – there are going to be some people who may not be successful. Hopefully, we'll get to 2020 where we go from 2 million barrels a day sold to 3 million barrels a day sold to maybe reaching payout on a few payments, and maybe no one will notice." Well, guess what? I noticed, and kids in this province noticed, and we may have actually not served them in their best interest.

Yeah, it may have been good politics. But remember, there were winners and losers as a result of the action that we didn't take when, I believe, this government had full knowledge of what was facing us, what the next eight years would look like, and where we, in fact, are today, which is that we've substantially spent all the oil wealth in one generation, gotten into massive debt, and now our . . .

Mr. Dirks: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: Excuse me, hon. member. The Minister of Education has called a point of order.

Carry on, Minister.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Dirks: I believe Bill 19 deals with some very specific administrative amendments to the Education Act, and it seems to me that the member's comments are straying well beyond the intent of Bill 19. I would ask that you consider that and ask him to focus his comments on the specific nature of Bill 19.

9:30

Debate Continued

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. member, please keep your comments directed towards Bill 19.

Mr. Hehr: I understand that Bill 19 is meant to make a better education system, so I'm commenting directly on those amendments and what actually would give those amendments some teeth and allow, actually, for kids to learn in a better place. I'm surprised that the hon. minister would actually not want to hear my thoughts on how to actually make that better, but I've only got about eight minutes left and, frankly, not much time after that. Many people have heard this rant before, so maybe they're more used to giving some leeway on it. The hon. member has just begun to hear this speech, so maybe it's new to him. Nevertheless, there we go.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, keep your comments relevant to Bill 19.

Mr. Hehr: To education and Bill 19 and how it pertains to our kids in this school system and how it is serving them now and how it goes forward.

I'm concerned, too, as the hon. member is, on section 87. Now, let's go back to, actually, the Northland school division, you know, and primarily having that trustee in place, where I thought this province put the trustee in place to make education better. Why was that not successful? Was it because maybe we didn't have the term limit in place? Maybe we didn't put an elected board back in? I don't know. Was that the only failing? Or maybe it was some of the things I was talking about before, that we maybe didn't go to having a community adviser who went in and worked with the parents and the kids and maybe went out to the houses and said: "Hey, look, how are you really feeling today? Do you think it may be wise for you to go to school? Can we work through this?"

You know, maybe with that amendment that we're talking about here on having term limits, if we would clarify that in this legislation, it would allow this government to see the true problems that are up there. It's a fact that 900 of our kids are not going to school and that that problem hasn't gone away in the last five years, and this government has seemingly not done anything about it. Maybe that amendment directly has something to do with the fact that we're failing 900 of our kids. You see how it's connecting right to that amendment, Madam Speaker, and connecting right to the heart of the matter, the education of our kids?

That amendment: it's important for that clarity and how then that term "limited person" can get the information back to this government of how they're failing a whole group of kids up there. Maybe if that amendment is cleared, maybe the minister would have better success in understanding the funding challenges and the differences in community approaches, you know, that have shown: look, they haven't kept up with population growth. If we had that amendment straightened out, maybe they would have called up the minister and said: "My goodness, you know, our population is growing, yet our teacher numbers aren't going up. Why is that? Why is it that our per-pupil funding has gone down over the course of this year when I've got 900 kids who are not coming to class and we have no outreach mechanism?"

That amendment would be great if it got clarified because then maybe we'd have that openness and transparency and that board in place that seemingly could have told this government over the course of the last five years, "We're struggling; our kids aren't succeeding" despite the fact they should have known about it because the former Minister of Education a couple of terms ago eliminated a whole elected board. That's how that amendment connects to the chronic what we have done in this Legislature over the last eight years.

With that, I look for the minister to clarify that amendment and, hopefully, put some progress in place to ensure all of our kids get educated. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a), a five-minute period for questions and comments. Is there anyone who wishes to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, we'll move on. Are there any other members who wish to speak in second reading on Bill 19, Education Amendment Act, 2015?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Education to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a second time]

Bill 21

Safety Codes Amendment Act, 2015

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today it's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 21, the Safety Codes Amendment Act, 2015.

Bill 21 addresses areas of concern that have been identified by key stakeholders. The proposed legislation also addresses opportunities that will enhance and strengthen the safety codes system.

The first proposed change would enable new additions of codes and standards that Alberta has already adopted under regulations of the Safety Codes Act to be automatically adopted. The new addition of codes and standards would come into force 12 months after their publication or by ministerial order. This means that when new codes are developed by nationally or internationally approved agencies, they will automatically be approved in Alberta. It is important to note that the in-force date, however, is not the same as the approval date. For most codes they will come into force 12 months after their publication. The codes may also come into force early by ministerial order or may be delayed if necessary.

The adoption of codes and standards upon publication will allow the minister to implement codes and standards in a time frame that meets the needs of municipalities, industries, and the public. This proposed legislative change would improve the adoption of codes and standards in Alberta while providing appropriate transition time for new stakeholders to prepare for new additions of codes.

The second proposed change would be the transfer of the administration of the act in unaccredited municipalities to the Safety Codes Council. Currently the province is responsible for providing permitting and inspection services for nonaccredited municipalities, largely smaller municipalities. Nonaccredited municipalities are not authorized under the Safety Codes Act to provide services such as permitting and inspections, and they do not have safety codes officers on staff to complete this work. The proposed legislative change would have the Safety Codes Council, through the establishment of the Alberta safety codes authority, manage and monitor the agencies. The authority would ensure appropriate delivery of services for permitting, inspection, and enforcement services to unaccredited municipalities of the province.

A critical component of the proposed change is that the Alberta safety codes authority would use a fee-for-service approach, remitting permit funds to the accredited agencies as work is completed. This is consistent with sound business practice. If an agency failure occurs, the authority would have the funds to complete the outstanding files. This legislative change will result in better services to unaccredited municipalities, greater consistency, improved agency accountability, better performance, and will support the establishment of a more resilient safety codes system.

Madam Speaker, the third proposed change included in Bill 21 would be to enhance the current compliance tools under the act by enabling administrative penalties to be issued. Currently the only enforcement tools available under the act are orders issued by a safety codes officer and prosecutions. Administrative penalties would be issued for repeated noncompliance with orders or for serious accidents that may cause injury. For example, administrative penalties could be used to address serious accidents related to faulty amusement rides, entertainment stages exceeding occupancy loads, and many others. This proposed legislative change would focus on encouraging compliance and remedial action rather than punish noncompliance.

The proposed legislative change would also align with other Alberta statutes such as the Occupational Health and Safety Act, the New Home Buyer Protection Act, and the Fair Trading Act. These statutes provide authority for administrative penalties to be issued for contraventions under those statutes.

The fourth proposed change, Madam Speaker, would be to provide the Safety Codes Council with greater operational independence and to strengthen the council's accountability framework. Currently the council is governed by a co-ordinating committee which is established by council bylaw. In addition, the council membership is appointed by both the minister and the co-ordinating committee. As well, the bylaws that govern the council must be approved by the minister prior to coming into force. In an effort to ensure operational independence, a proposed legislative change would replace the co-ordinating committee with a board of directors as established in the act. This would reduce the number of ministerial appointments and remove the requirement for ministerial approval for council bylaws. These changes will help reinforce the council as an independent body and will clarify roles and the reporting structure for stakeholders and the public.

The last key proposed change in Bill 21 would provide authority for municipalities to establish bylaws with respect to private sewage disposal systems. Currently the act does not allow municipalities to create bylaws that regulate matters under the act. The proposed legislative change would provide an opportunity for some municipalities to address private sewage issues in their communities.

In addition to the key proposed changes discussed, Bill 21 includes a number of other necessary housekeeping and clarification amendments to the act. These proposed changes include amendments to revise or add definitions for clarity; amendments to clarify that the Regulations Act applies to ministerial exemption orders issued under the Safety Codes Act and that these ministerial exemption orders "exempt any person or municipality or any thing, process, or activity from any or all provisions" of the act; amendments to liability protection to ensure the council employees and officers are provided liability protection in carrying out their duties under the act; amendments to clarify the role of provincial safety codes officers within the safety codes system; amendments to clarify that a refusal to issue a written variance by a safety codes officer may be appealed to the council; amendments to align requirements under the Architects Act and the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Act; amendments to provide authority for costs and expenses to be recovered by municipalities and the Crown in case of emergencies; amendments to provide authority for provincial safety codes officers to obtain telewarrants in the course of an investigation; amendments to clarify that both administrators and provincial safety codes officers may enforce orders in both accredited and unaccredited municipalities; deletion of areas of duplication such as release of information provisions that conflict with the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act; as well as other minor housekeeping amendments, including transitional provisions, commencement dates, and coming-into-force dates that support the implementation of the proposed legislation.

Madam Speaker, the key proposed changes in Bill 21, the Safety Codes Amendment Act, 2015, will address concerns brought forward by safety codes stakeholders and enhance the safety codes system. The other proposed changes will provide necessary clarification to industry, municipalities, and the public while strengthening the administration, governance, and enforcement of the safety codes system throughout Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill 21, the Safety Codes Amendment Act, 2015? The hon. Member for Livingstone-MacLeod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to rise this evening and speak in general support of Bill 21, actually. It seems like there are some positive changes here regarding the timely enactment of the codes and standards and so on, as the international and national bodies seem to have. It's my understanding that a lot of stakeholders have confirmed the widespread desire for amendment to this, and with that consultation with the government it seems that the government has listened and that they're going to go forward with that.

While it will provide some predictability to our code update process, we think it's important that we retain the ability to implement standards that are unique to Alberta's circumstances and our specific needs. It looks like this is probably going to be meeting those requirements, so that's good as well.

With respect to the administration it seems like the proposed changes will allow the Safety Codes Council to assume administration of this, and this will manage some of the agencies and some of the municipalities that aren't set up, or it should improve the accountability of some of the third-party inspectors. We think this, too, is a sensible change to improve accountability to residents and municipalities for work done by these accredited agencies.

As far as administrative penalties, another of the proposed amendments in here looks as though it's going to have a section on the introduction of penalties. I think that it's important to have enforcement in these sorts of situations. We support these measures to the extent that they should be levied in a fair and transparent, consistent fashion and certainly to address some of these offenders that have been noticed in the past, and that's the intent of this bill, to try to fix that. I think that's good as well.

There's another section there with regard to private sewage disposal systems. It seems like this, too, is a reasonable change that grants greater authority and responsibilities to those people that are in touch with residents that are working on these situations as they come about.

In a very quick fashion, as you can tell, due to the lateness of the evening, we're fairly supportive here. We believe these amendments are constructive and practical and allow for some flexibility of the safety codes as well as conformity to the codes. With that in mind, I'll let the others take a chance.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to rise and speak to Bill 21. I'm going to keep my comments fairly brief. I do acknowledge the importance of harmonizing our codes with our federal cousins' and understand where that's coming from. I do like the fact that we are updating our safety codes. I mean, I'm a big advocate of strengthening our codes, whether it's our building codes or our safety codes, and then ensuring that they are adequately funded so that they can be enforced because I think that probably the larger aspect when we bring forward legislation is: do the authorities who are enforcing the legislation have adequate funding so that they can do their job? I do see, obviously, that there are some penalties that will be levied or could be levied. I think that's one form of deterrent. I may speak at a later time toward, you know, the actual dollar amounts of the penalties.

I'm sure that many smaller municipalities have been lobbying the Minister of Municipal Affairs as far as not having the resources to be able to administer this act or the capacity to administer and enforce safety codes, so the creation of a safety codes authority does make sense and, I'm sure, provides some relief for them as well as for the government, I mean, considering that when smaller municipalities can't undertake these responsibilities, they probably, from what I know, defer to the province. Then the province is spending its own resources and time and doesn't necessarily collect or get reimbursed for the resources they're expending.

But at the end of the day, Madam Speaker, I think it's important that we have strong safety codes not only for, again, the safety of the people of this province but looking at having codes and thinking long term. What I mean by that is, you know, the minimum of codes or standards that people or builders or companies have to adhere to. We'll save people money down the road if we increase those minimums. I think strengthening our minimums, whether we're talking about actual building codes themselves, is a long-term benefit. Increasing both the standards and the minimums, I think, is very important.

I do also like the fact in this bill, Madam Speaker, that municipalities can make their own bylaws regarding sewage disposal systems. I think that's very important. I haven't spoken to AAMDC personally about this, but I would imagine that they are on board, and this is probably even one of their ideas that they were putting forward to the government. Again, recognizing that in this beautiful province of ours we have varied geography, we have different challenges that different municipalities face, giving them the tools to be able to work within their own realities, I think, is very important.

I also want to acknowledge the fact that when we're looking at enforcement in this bill – and I'll specifically speak to section 29 on section 56(1)(b) – when we're talking about Métis settlements and patented land, there has to be written notice given to carry out an order when we're talking about going onto patented land. I think that's very important, again, to acknowledge – well, I don't want to say the independence – the fact that this authority is going onto Métis land, that they should be given proper notice and due course. So I will commend the mover of this bill for ensuring that we are respecting our indigenous people's rights in this province through this bill.

In closing, Madam Speaker, you know, I do appreciate and like the fact that we're moving toward a timely adoption of safety codes. I think this is a step in the right direction, so I will be supporting this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members who wish to comment or ask questions of the member?

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 24, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray that today we be given the necessary tools of mind and body that are required in order to help us fulfill our duties as elected representatives of those whom we are so proud to serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have many, many introductions today. I ask you please to be brief so we can get them all in and move on with other business of the Assembly.

Let us begin with school groups. The Minister of Service Alberta, followed by Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Khan: Thank you so very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some incredible students from my constituency of St. Albert. Today we're joined by nearly 40 students from Sir Alexander Mackenzie school. They're with their teachers, Ms Lina Rosato and Ms Wawrychuk. I want to congratulate Ms Rosato for being awarded teacher of the month in St. Albert. I'd like to extend a warm acknowledgement to the students. I went to Sir Alexander Mackenzie when I was in elementary school, so it's great to see the students here. If my colleagues could give them a warm greeting.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my very great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 21 visitors from Holden school in the constituency of Battle River-Wainwright. They are accompanied by their teachers, Mrs. Oslund and Ms Arychuk, as well as parent helpers Ms Hoveland and Mrs. Fairless. They are seated in the public gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 26 very bright, enthusiastic students from St. Jerome school in my constituency of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. They are accompanied by Mrs. Laura Blythe, Ms Diane Lacika, and Mrs. Jennifer Lewin. I just want to add that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and I a few weeks back were judges at their annual science fair of some of the best and brightest minds in Edmonton. I would now ask all members to give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there other school or education groups? Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you the members of Inner City High School that are here today to take a tour and to watch the proceedings. I think they might still be on tour, but let's give them a hand for being here anyway.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others?

If not, let's move on to other important guests. Let's start with the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the first time in 14 and a half years I have the great privilege of introducing my family to you and through you to the members of this Assembly. They are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I'd ask them to rise as I call their names: the Jablonski family patriarch, Bob Jablonski, my husband of 44 years, my hero and my everything; my son, Jeremy Jablonski, president and CEO of The Coverall Shop, entrepreneur, and future MLA; my lovely daughter-in-law, Amber Jablonski, a cardiology telemetry RN and one of the best mothers of two that a grandmother could ever hope for – it might be faster if we just hold the applause because we've got to rush through; thank you – my granddaughter Camryn Jablonski, an honours student, competitive swimmer, and a piano player; my granddaughter Morgan Jablonski, also an honours student, incredible dancer, and the Energizer Bunny; my beautiful daughter Amy Corrigan, mother of two, administration manager for The Coverall Shop, and an elected director of the Servus Credit Union; my number one son-in-law, Tyler Corrigan, project co-ordinator for Pumps & Pressure and gourmet chef; my granddaughter Hannah Corrigan, an honours student and lifeguard in training; my incredible grandson Kaden Corrigan, builder of tree forts, Lego creations, and Nordegg breakfast sandwiches; my lovely daughter Krystin Jablonski, pregnancy and babies' family nurse for Red Deer primary care network and wonderful mother of one so far; my oldest granddaughter, Taiya Jablonski, an honours student and dancer extraordinaire; Ivan Smith, a close family friend, bison rancher, and entrepreneur.

Mr. Speaker, this is my family, of whom I'm very proud. I thank them with all my heart for their love and support, and I ask all members to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. Member for Red Deer-North, I believe you have a second set of introductions.

Mrs. Jablonski: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you for making it as brief as possible. That's very considerate of you.

Mrs. Jablonski: Well, Mr. Speaker, every MLA knows that having an excellent assistant makes your life a whole lot easier. I'm fortunate to have had assistants who were always one step ahead of me and to whom I am truly grateful. I would ask them to rise as I call their names. From my Red Deer-North office I would like to introduce Cheryl Christie, a very experienced and efficient assistant. With her is her husband, His Worship Steve Christie, the mayor of Lacombe. I'm also privileged to have another very wise and experienced assistant from the Legislature, Marilyn Nixon. My heartfelt thanks and gratitude to both of them, and I would like to give them the warm traditional welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the Minister of Health.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the House my fiancé, Robert Stephen Spencer. Robert recently retired as VP membership from my Calgary-Bow constituency board. He worked extensively on the recent leadership campaign and the by-elections and is my unofficial and unpaid assistant. Most importantly, Robert has made my last three years as an MLA a joy: more productive and more satisfying. I ask that he stand in your Speaker's gallery and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, a hard act to follow. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this House my constituency assistant, Cindy Ho. Stand, Cindy. Cindy has been an essential and valuable part of my constituency office in Edmonton-Whitemud, and she was also a big part of the previous person's who was there, whom we all know very well. Cindy, thank you for being here.

Mr. Speaker, it's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the wonderful staff I have in the Minister of Health's legislative office. As many of you know, they have been working exceptionally hard to improve health care for all Albertans. If they could stand as I list them: Christel Hyshka, chief of staff; Jennifer Pougnet, chief of staff; Claire Puyaoan, correspondence co-ordinator; Sarah Hamilton, deputy press secretary – look how tall they are – Steve Buick, not so tall press secretary; Allyson Seeney, scheduler; and Debbie Giroux, ministerial assistant. Thank you all very much. Can we give them the normal welcome?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the Associate Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to introduce to you and through you Julie Ali, who was excluded from the Good Samaritan Mill Woods Centre for trying to ensure her family's care. Her sister Rebecca had been evicted from the care home. The Ali family and the Alberta New Democrats are calling on the Health minister to help resolve this matter so that Rebecca can return home to one of the only two facilities in Edmonton that meet her specific medical needs. I would ask Julie to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Aboriginal Relations, followed by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce my constituency manager, Mr. Bernie Trudell, who is capably looking after all the affairs of 42,000 people on the corner of 75th Street and Whyte Avenue in Edmonton-Gold Bar. Bernie retired after a career of service to the public in the GOA, and I'm so pleased that he serves the people of Edmonton-Gold Bar now. Bernie, please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you my chief of staff, Jonathan Koehli; his wife, Elise; and Anthony, the newest addition to their family and potential new Finance minister. Jonathan has been my closest aide for several years. I'd like to congratulate them on their first child. Jon hasn't been as tired as I would have expected, so it tells me how hard Elise must be working. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my constituency assistant and the chief of staff to the independent caucus, who I think is probably one of the most qualified and best assistants that anyone could ever possibly brag about. Now, I understand that everyone believes that their assistants are the best – I understand that – but my assistants have to put up with me, and that makes them superior to anyone else's assistants. If Krista Nelson, my constituency assistant, and Kaelyn MacGillivray could please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly seven guests who have assisted me during these two terms as MLA. My first set of guests is seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to stand as I call their names. They are my current and former leg. assistants: Marshall Thiessen, Justin Brattinga, Shannon Hamelin, and Terri Kemball. I would ask that my guests receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

My second set of guests is seated in the public gallery. They include my constituency staff from Bonnyville: Carmen Banman, who has worked in the office for 16 years and is the heart and soul of our constituency, and Julie Krawiec, who's been with us for five years. Also, it's my great pleasure to introduce my husband of 40 years, Ron. I couldn't have done this job without him. I would ask my Bonnyville guests to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Calgary-Hawkwood.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Jill Sheward. Jill is a partner at Brownlee LLP, practising municipal and commercial real estate law. In addition to her practice, she serves on the board of directors of Junior Achievement of Northern Alberta and the Northwest Territories, is the president of the Edmonton Commercial Real Estate Women, and is a member of the steering committee for the Edmonton Famous 5 Foundation. Jill has spent some time up in the heartland area as a summer student, so she can't get rid of me. I would like her to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two special guests, Dr. Joel Christie and Mavis Christie. Both are avid volunteers in my community, particularly Dr. Christie, who led the aging in place community fair last year, that drew over 800 people. My guests are sitting in the public gallery. Now I would ask them to rise and receive the thunderous warm welcome from this House.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a very important guest with us today. We're joined by Yolanda de Kleer, who is seated in the members' gallery and is the mother of one of our wonderful pages in the Legislature, Erin. Yolanda and Erin moved to Alberta about five years ago from B.C., and they currently live in Spruce Grove. Erin is a student at Spruce Grove composite while her mother, Yolanda, works as a recreation therapist. Don't worry, Yolanda; I want to assure you that Erin, as with all our pages, is doing a remarkable, remarkable job. On behalf of everyone in the Legislature I would like to say welcome. I would ask that you now rise as our guest and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have two minutes per person assigned here.

Retrospective by the Member for Red Deer-North

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, for the past 14 and a half years I've had the privilege of serving the people of Red Deer-North and Alberta as a Member of the Legislative Assembly. During that time I spoke about great leaders in Red Deer, winning teams, and a young man who died because of a drunk driver. I also faithfully spoke each year about the Armenian genocide. This year is the 100th anniversary of that massacre.

I've had the opportunity to work with five Premiers and to make a difference. There have been small victories, and there have been huge victories. Among the most momentous was when I was granted unanimous consent to set aside Orders of the Day and proceed with early consideration of my private member's bill on PCHAD, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act. Today I am still greeted by parents who thank me for helping them to help their children.

I served as minister for seniors and community supports and helped to develop continuing care in Alberta. I helped to develop Alberta Supports, a one-stop program that eliminates duplication and allows people to tell their story once instead of three or four times. I served as chairperson for numerous committees. As the third Speaker in Alberta's 28th Legislature I made history by becoming the first female Speaker to preside over question period.

I would like to thank the hundreds of friends and volunteers who supported me and the PC Party throughout five campaigns and three leadership races. We've had many great moments of victory together. I especially want to thank my husband, Bob, and my children, who have stood by my side through thick and thin, and my five grandchildren, who are just starting to understand why their grandmother was away so often.

Winston Churchill said that we make a living by what we get, but we make a life by what we give. I want to thank my family, the people of Red Deer-North, the people of Alberta, and the members of this hallowed Assembly for allowing me the opportunity to give. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you. Heartfelt comments for sure.

Retrospective by the Member for Calgary-Buffer

Mr. Hehr: It has been an honour to sit in the Legislative Assembly with all of you. With my time drawing to a close, I found myself going through the last seven years, assessing lessons I have learned. The first is that it is not easy being Premier. The second is that having a strong opposition is important to a well-functioning democracy.

Opposition matters. I can point to tangible moments where changes were made to government policy as a result of MLAs speaking out where government policies were unfair, unwise, or unnecessary. Three years ago I found out that Albertans living in long-term care facilities could only get one bath a week. The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and I raised this indignity, sounded the alarm, and the government changed the policy.

Last year I raised another issue about the safety and care of our students in Motion 503, which started the discussion about the need for gay-straight alliances in our schools. Although this motion was ultimately voted down, my fellow Alberta Liberal the MLA for Edmonton-Centre then brought forward Bill 202, which essentially continued the debate on the need for GSAs and as well contained legislative principles that would move this province forward on a path to ensure human rights and dignity for our LGBTQ community. Although this, too, seemed to fail, ultimately the government listened and implemented the main points of her bill.

Without opposition I doubt that kids in all schools would be able to have a GSA today, and I doubt that section 11.1 would have been removed from the Human Rights Act. Further, opposition members have often led the debate on the issues of our times. In particular, the Alberta Liberals and the New Democrats sounded the alarm years ago on the fact that our fiscal structure was broken.

Finally, I would like to thank the citizens of Calgary-Buffer for electing me to represent them in the Alberta Legislature. It has truly been an honour not only to represent them but to share my life with them all.

Thank you, all, indeed. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: With your indulgence, I'd like to go quickly to Bonnyville-Cold Lake for her member's statement. Then we'll go on.

1:50

Retrospective by the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been a pleasure to work for my community and all of Alberta for the past seven years. I'm proud to have been elected the 780th MLA in the province, a number that is more than just historic; it's also my area code. I am pleased to have been part of the class of 2008, which allowed me the opportunity to work alongside Albertans of such high calibre.

I would also like to say how proud I am to work with all the people at the Alberta Legislature, including the staff behind the scenes, who include my constituency staff, my leg. assistants, security personnel, our wonderful young pages, visitor services staff, custodians, human resources staff, and IT, who were always so available when I needed them. Please know that all of us sitting in this House are aware that we could not do this job without the people behind the scenes.

I am blessed to have been able to give seven years to the Alberta Legislature, and I thank God every day for the honour of serving the people of Bonnyville-Cold Lake and the people of Alberta in general.

I have a couple of legislative accomplishments I would like to highlight as a way of displaying the positive impact that individual MLAs can have in this role. In recent years I have brought two private member's motions, both of them numbered 503, that have become legislation because, well, I'm sort of a thorn in the side of all the ministers. My first motion, to eliminate provincial assessment exams for grades 3 and 6, took three years of persistence, and the second motion was a recent amendment to the Fisheries (Alberta) Act, with measures to guard against invasive aquatic species in our lakes.

While I will miss everyone here when my time wraps up and I will miss working in this majestic building, there is one aspect of this job that I will not miss, and that's driving highway 28.

Finally, there is a very special person I need to thank. I could not have done this job without my loving, supporting husband, Ron.

God bless you all. Continue doing the job you do so well, caring for our great, beloved province. Thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members, for your indulgence there. Thank you for those heartfelt comments as well.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Let us move on to Oral Question Period, 35 seconds for each question, 35 seconds for each response. I will cut you off if necessary, as you know. Let us begin with the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition for question series 1.

Government Spending at Fiscal Year-end

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're calling it March madness. It's the government's annual use it or lose it, shop till you drop shopping spree, where departments rush around to make sure that they blow their budgets before a March 31st deadline. Last March spending ballooned by 117 per cent across government when compared to the average monthly expenses. It cost taxpayers an extra $104 million. We've known this culture was rampant through government for some time, but now we have the numbers to prove it. Premier, this is why you can't be trusted with another dime of taxpayers' money. Why should Albertans believe otherwise?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each year a budget is approved for each department. They must stay within approved spending levels. Each ministry is accountable to the Legislature and the public for their expenses. We also have legislation in place, the Financial Administration Act, which provides direction on the disbursement of funds so they are made in accordance with all policies, procedures, and regulations, including several levels of approval.

Mr. Speaker, this Premier also made it very clear in December that there would be no new spending and that all departments will look at constraining their budgets. All ministers have done a good job of doing that. We will continue to do that in the future.

Mrs. Forsyth: On March 31 of last year, after the former Premier resigned, $15,000 was spent on fine china and linen for the Premier's office. Who approved the expense? It was the Department of Infrastructure. At the time it was run by the jobs minister. Under that minister another $81,000 was spent on chairs. If this spending was necessary, it wouldn't have been approved on the very last day of the fiscal year. To the jobs minister. Old management, new management: it doesn't matter. You were responsible. What is your excuse?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, in March of last year I was in the private sector. I can assure the hon. member that the only china in my office is cardboard, and it says Tim Hortons on the side of it. I would encourage you to stop by.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, somewhere we've got glass for the Premier's office, $8,509, and china for your office, so you better find out where it is, Premier.

Every department saw this kind of wasteful spending explode last year. Executive Council would spend on average about $10,000 a month on purchase services, but in March it spent over a million dollars. IIR spent $100,000 on gifts in one month just because they could. March madness cost taxpayers at least $104 million last year, and it's wrong, Premier. To the Premier: will you ensure the end of wasteful spending by your departments and return any surplus that they've . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

We'll have to hear from the Minister of Finance now.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the Premier has made it very clear that under his watch and under the new management of this government we will restrain our spending. He's made it very clear to all ministers in cabinet that we will make sure that the money we spend is in the best interest of all Albertans, and we'll continue to do so into the future.

The Speaker: Second main set of questions. Livingstone-Macleod, please.

Kananaskis Country Golf Course

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are worried about making ends meet and keeping their jobs, and while there's no more money for the Child and Youth Advocate's office, millions are being paid out to the Kananaskis golf course, that has friends high within the PC Party. Reports out today show that $8 million has been paid out since the 2013 flood. The province is on the hook to pay maintenance and losses, apparently. Premier, can you release the contract and tell Albertans how much more money they are on the hook for for this legacy of PC waste and mismanagement?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, I indicated yesterday that I was concerned about this, and I'm pleased to advise the House that the Minister of Finance will commission an independent expert report that will do two things. Firstly, it will review the 1999 and 2013 agreements to ensure that the public interest was protected, and secondly, it will develop an alternate private business model that will not require public ownership of the golf course. The Alberta government should not be in the golf course business.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you. Review or no review, taxpayers are on the hook for million-dollar payouts to friends of the PC Party. In November 2014 your government put out a request for proposals to spend $15 million of repair work on this course, and now Albertans are bewildered that a contract exists between the government and a golf course that covers all their operating losses and almost every single one of their expenses. So can the Premier explain to Albertans how this contract was set up, please, and who at Kan-Alta management is having their bottom lines covered?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, this contract goes back to the 1990s, and under this Premier's watch he's made it very clear that we're not going to spend any more public funds on this golf course. He's asked me to look into the matter. I will bring third-party experts in to look at this and make sure that we get the best deal we can for Albertans moving forward and make sure that the golf course will not be run with public funds.

Mr. Stier: Well, the reality is that Albertans can't trust whether or not you will funnel tens of millions of dollars into more golf courses after the election.

Living close to High River, I don't recall any mom-and-pop shops getting any special contract bailouts from the government for the losses incurred by the flood. In fact, several of them waited for months for any DRP assistance while their houses were still being gutted, and some of them are still waiting. Can the Premier explain to Albertans why these businesses were left out in the cold while his government is stuffing the pockets of golf course owners?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That hon. member knows that we're working very hard with all of those poor citizens that were devastated by the floods of 2013, whether that be the business community or the individuals. We are doing everything to make sure – and we have the resources to make sure – that they are all able to recover from the 2013 floods.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St Paul-Two Hills. Third main set of questions.

Premier's Address to Albertans

Mr. Saskiw: This Premier has tried to suggest that spending $100,000 of taxpayers' money on a PC infomercial is all above board. It's not partisan. This is just the Premier wanting to give Albertans a $10,000 speech with $36,000 in production costs. Well, just this morning the PC Party fired out an e-mail advertising that tonight's speech is a chance for him to "speak directly to [PC] members." We couldn't agree more. Will the Premier, then, stop this taxpayer boondoggle and have his party pay back the money for this purely partisan PC propaganda?

2:00

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly we face serious circumstances as a province. Too many Albertans are losing their jobs. I just came back from speaking at the University of Alberta, where young graduates are worried about their ability to find jobs. In these circumstances people want to hear from their government, they want to hear from their Premier. The Official Opposition may not have a plan to deal with this; this government does, and I intend to speak to Albertans.

Mr. Saskiw: The plan, apparently, is to spend $100,000 of taxpayer dollars.

The Wildrose vision for this province is simple: lower taxes, ending payouts for things like golf courses, golden handshakes, and corporate handouts. The Premier says that Albertans want to hear their Premier give a $10,000 speech about his central campaign platform. Now the PC Party is saying that this is for members. Albertans are saying that this is a waste of money. Premier, I'll ask you again: will you have your party pay back the money for this extravagant PC campaign ad?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, the young Albertans I spoke to this morning are concerned about how we're going to stabilize our public finances, not how we're going to run the province into debt, as suggested by the opposition party, how we are going to diversify our economy, and how we're going to strengthen this province for the future for young Albertans. That's what they're interested in, and I intend to speak with Albertans about that.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, your point of order was noted at 2:01, during that last exchange. Let's go on with your final supplemental.

Mr. Saskiw: It's your party that racked up all of the debt, Premier.

Here in the Wildrose we don't think spending $100,000 on partisan campaign ads is right. The Premier clearly said that there is no more money. He also said that Albertans are set to pay billions of dollars in new taxes to pay for his government's mess. Premier, would you agree with me that, at the very least, spending $100,000 of taxpayer money on a fancy PC campaign ad right before raising taxes is bad optics and that Albertans can't be blamed if they're upset with you and your government for this absolute waste of money?

Mr. Oberle: You know, Mr. Speaker, if you were to take the money that's planned for this event and spread it out on a per capita basis, it would work out to about 2 cents per Albertan. That party was offered the chance to give their two cents' worth, and they declined, so we're never going to know whether it was worth the price or not.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Small-business Assistance

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business released the latest business barometer survey, showing Alberta's small business confidence index fell 6.6 points in February, to 48.2. It's the third straight month of significant declines. Alberta's confidence levels are among the lowest in the country and approaching the recessionary levels of early 2009. To the Premier: why is the government failing to provide the environment where Alberta's small businesses can have confidence?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are doing that, and I'd ask the member to sit tight and listen to the budget on Thursday. All I hear from the opposition is about raising corporate taxes. All they say is: raise corporate taxes, both small and large. We as a government are not about to do that. We are a government about creating jobs and maintaining jobs in this province, to make sure that all Albertans can raise their families in the best province in Canada.

Dr. Swann: Small businesses deserve a tax break, not raises.

Small businesses have definitely fallen off this government's priority list, leaving them to fend for themselves. Another major constraint for them, according to the CFIB report, is dealing with the high cost of insurance, which is, of course, set by the market. To the Premier: what is the government doing to address the high cost of insurance, which has been identified as a major problem for small businesses' bottom line?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad that the hon. member across the way has probably read the polling and realized that small businesses are concerned about their jobs in this province and they're concerned about the fact that the opposition continues to talk about raising taxes. This government has never talked about raising taxes for small business, and we will not raise taxes for small business. We will do everything we can to regulate small business and make sure that we streamline regulations and that small business will have a chance to thrive in the province of Alberta.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, everyone knows that small business creates an enormous number of jobs in this province, particularly during economically turbulent times. Martha and Henry's families are the entrepreneurs driving our province's economy, and it's the entrepreneurs who Albertans will be relying on heavily to create jobs, yet this government is woefully ignoring the needs of small business. When is the government going to stand up for small businesses, cut their taxes, and invest more in the entrepreneurs? Diversify, diversify, diversify.

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that I'm glad to see that the member across the way has finally got it. We've heard the opposition continue to talk about raising taxes, raising taxes, raising taxes. We're not raising taxes for small businesses. We're not raising taxes for large corporations. We're doing all we can to maintain jobs and create jobs in this province. We lost over 14,000 jobs last month, and more to come. This government is making sure that we have money in the pockets of Albertans so they can raise their families in the best province in this country.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, leader of the ND opposition.

Corporate Taxes

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the government released the results of its budget survey, and unsurprisingly the results make it clear that this PC government is out of touch with what Albertans want. Indeed, 69 per cent of Albertans surveyed are in favour of raising corporate taxes. My question is for the Premier. If you're asking everyday Albertans to pay more for less, why don't you think that corporations should pay their fair share, too, especially the most profitable?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad the opposition raised the issue. As I said, last month we lost 14,000 jobs in Alberta, and we lost more in the coming weeks. [interjections] According to Jack Mintz, the Palmer chair in public policy at the University of Calgary, a 1 per cent increase in corporate tax rates would result in a $6 billion loss in capital investments and would also translate into approximately 8,900 job losses.

The Speaker: Hon. member, first supplemental. And if we could just keep the noise down a little bit, that would be much appreciated, please.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, that particular source of evidence also wants a sales tax.

I would suggest that overall the evidence to support this government's assertions about the impact of a balanced, responsible corporate tax increase is tenuous at best, but the evidence to support the life-threatening impact of a 70-hour wait in an ER to a patient is overwhelming, and the evidence supporting the economic loss to a population that can't afford to access postsecondary education is conclusive. To the Premier: why won't you put as much energy into standing up for regular Albertans as you are for standing up for your friends in backroom corporate Alberta?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, these are serious circumstances that we're in. The province expects that their government will have a plan, that it will be a measured plan, a balanced plan, that it will deal with all of the circumstances that we face individually as Albertans. All of us are concerned about job losses. All of us are concerned about front-line services. Whether you speak of health care, whether you speak of education, Albertans want the quality of those services maintained. The government understands that, and we'll be dealing with it.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, today, while defending his government's reckless corporate tax cuts, the Premier said that in pursuing his agenda, it was important not to get distracted by the, quote, political noise. Now, 27,000 Albertans responded to this government's own budget survey by telling them to raise corporate taxes. To the Premier. What you're calling political noise is actually what the rest of us call democracy. So does the Premier want to take this opportunity to apologize to the hundreds of thousands of Albertans he just insulted with those comments?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, Albertans have participated in the survey that the government put forward, speaking to how they attach importance to making sure that we get this right. In a typical year about 1,500 Albertans have taken part in this survey; this year more than 40,000 Albertans. We have heard what they've said. They speak about the importance of front-line services, they speak about the importance of getting off the oil roller coaster, they speak about the importance of diversifying our economy, and they speak about hope and about strengthening the future of this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Red Deer-South.

Farm Worker Labour Protection

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For decades this PC government has ignored the basic 19th century human right of paid farm workers, including children, to have a safe workplace under the guise of, quote, protecting the family farm. End of quote. Somehow our closest prairie neighbour, Saskatchewan, and every other province in the country has managed to balance the rights of workers with the interests of the agriculture industry. Not in Alberta. In addition, 9 out of 10 farm workers are not covered by Workers' Compensation because it's not mandated. To the Premier: when will you close the loopholes and allow the people that feed us to be included in occupational health and safety standards?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that here in Alberta farmers do have the right to choose Workers' Compensation Board. The associate minister of agriculture and I just yesterday met with a bunch of farm and ranch leaders in Alberta, talking about workplace safety, and I can assure you that they are doing a terrific job. Through the ministry of agriculture we have a farm safe program, and in fact we're getting results. The farms in Alberta are as safe as they are in other places, and we're still working on it. [interjections]

The Speaker: First supplemental if we can hear it.

Dr. Swann: Somehow farm workers are treated discriminatorily. Given that nearly 9 out of 10 farm workers are fully covered in every other province for WCB by their premiums, again to the Premier: when will you join the rest of Confederation and protect the people that feed us by including them under WCB? The other 90 per cent of Canada does. Why not Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every farmer or rancher in Alberta that chooses to be under Workers' Compensation Board actually has that right to do so today and has had that for some time. We continue to work with farms. We continue to work with the farmers and ranchers. They care very much about farm safety and make a great effort to keep their farms safe, as I said earlier. Nonetheless, the work goes on, meeting with the associate minister of agriculture and I. We are looking for ways to improve. But Albertans should know that conditions are good today.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been fighting on this issue for a decade in the Legislature. I know the Premier likes to tell us that he's a real conservative, but perhaps he and his government could at least join the 21st century. Given that most farms are now large, industrial operations, not family farms, why is the Premier still allowing big business to profit from a situation that puts both adults and children at risk?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, the hon. member should be grateful for the fact that big business, which is agriculture, the second biggest business in this province, is thriving, and it's thriving because the farmers and ranchers and people that work there are doing a great job. [interjections] Rather than talk ill of them, perhaps the hon. member should be appreciating the great efforts they do, the success that they have, the money that they bring into this province, the taxes that they generate, and the food that they provide for every table, whether you live in the city or in the country.

The Speaker: There's no rule against heckling, but when it gets to a certain level, you can't hear a thing, so let's keep it down a little bit at least, please.

Let's move on to Red Deer-South, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Corporate Taxes (continued)

Mr. Dallas: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all saw the results of the government online budget survey yesterday, but one minister I think had a few extra days with it. Albertans were really clear about this. They said to increase tobacco taxes, to increase corporate taxes, and to move to a progressive tax system. To the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board: why aren't you just listening to Albertans, increase those corporate taxes, cover up that $7 billion gap?

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I just said earlier, Albertans have already seen 14,000 job losses last month, and we're seeing more every week as the days go by, and they're from both small and large companies as they cut their costs in order to keep operating. Jack Mintz from public policy at the University of Calgary has been very clear. A 1 per cent increase in corporate tax rate will result in $6 billion in capital investment, which also translates to approximately 8,900 jobs. [interjections] Raising corporate taxes, especially in times like this, would kill jobs, and that's what the job killers across the way would like to see us do.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I would just ask, please, that you tone down the level of the heckling. If you would, it would be appreciated. I don't want to have to remind you again.

First supplemental, please.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know what Dr. Mintz said, but I also know what Albertans said. They agree with increasing corporate taxes. Won't the Minister of Finance at least reconsider his position on this issue?

Mr. Campbell: Let me be very clear, Mr. Speaker. This government is about maintaining jobs and creating jobs and diversifying our economy, and to raise corporate taxes right now would kill jobs in this province. This government is not prepared to do that at this time.

Mr. Dallas: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Finance risks being – you know, it's said that he's perhaps in the pocket of big corporate Alberta. What do you say to that, minister?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, if you want to talk about pockets, let's ensure that Albertans have jobs where they can put paycheques in their pockets, paycheques so that they can provide for and raise their families in Alberta, paycheques from small businesses, small and large corporations that operate in every community in our province. Our government, again, is about creating and maintaining jobs and not seeing them disappear under the regressive tax reforms that the opposition would see us put forward.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this government wants to ship thousands of jobs down bitumen pipelines to the United States and China. They shouldn't be pointing fingers at anybody.

Mr. Mason: In an answer yesterday that was deliberately confusing, the Minister of ESRD claimed that his government would not be spending any additional funds on rebuilding a golf course, but the government still has to pay out $8 million more to offset losses to the leaseholder caused by flood damage. It now appears that this obligation was only added to the contract after the flood damage had already occurred. Will the minister confirm this?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, we've said that this is under review. I've been asked by the Premier to put a third party in place to look at this. Again I ask the question: how many jobs is the opposition prepared to kill?

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government is well known for using reviews as smokescreens to avoid answering the real question, and he just did it again today. Given that the government has agreed to cover the losses due to flood damage to the operators and given that if the government doesn't repair the golf courses, which it said that it's not going to do, the losses will continue next year and the year after, can the minister please explain how not fixing the golf course and continuing to pay the operators $8 million a year to not operate is going to save the taxpayers money?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's make one thing very clear off the start. This Premier is very decisive in the decisions he makes. When this Premier says that he's going to get something done, we get it done. I've been tasked with the project to look at this. It will be done in a very timely manner. I will make it clear one more time: we will not spend public money on golf courses in Alberta.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, final supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Well, the Premier's answer earlier makes it clear that he's just going to privatize a public park in order to solve this problem. Given that the $8 million payment to the Tory insiders that have the golf course contract was not required before the flood but now apparently is and given that it's clear that this government signed a contract deal behind closed doors to cover the losses of their friends when they had no obligation to do so – they've left the taxpayers on the hook for millions of dollars – what can the minister possibly say to excuse this betrayal of Albertans' trust?

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, this government has no friends in the golf industry.

Slave Lake Family Care Clinic

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, having access to quality health care services is important to people in communities across the province, and constituents from Lesser Slave Lake are no exception. In April 2012 a pilot family care clinic was opened in Slave Lake to improve access to primary care and reduce pressure on the emergency department. Three years since opening, people in the Slave Lake area want to know if these goals have actually been met. My question is to the Minister of Health. What impact has the Slave Lake family care clinic had on reducing pressures on emergency care in the community?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Slave Lake health care centre is meeting provincial wait time targets, the most recent stats showing that 92 per cent of patients are discharged from emergency within four hours. Further, now that people have the option of using the family care centre, which is open from 9 to 9, fewer patients are going to emergency centres for nonurgent cases. From 2012 to 2014 the number of patients going to emergency has dropped on a monthly basis from 1,136 to 951. We're making some great strides there.

Ms Calahasen: To the same minister: if emergency concerns have been reduced, what other benefits is the FCC providing for patients and families in Slave Lake?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In addition to expanding hours, that makes it easier for people, family care clinics offer the benefit of a multidisciplinary care team. Their teams include doctors, nurse practitioners, nurses, mental health therapists, and other health professionals, resulting in better co-ordinated and more accessible patient care. Increased access to primary care in Slave Lake means that services are more convenient and that often patients get same-day access to their health care provider.

2:20

Ms Calahasen: To the same minister: given that we knew when we moved in there that the FCC would need more space, what are the next steps for continuing patient care needs for a bigger and better space?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The family care clinic has outgrown its current space. AHS is planning to move it to a larger place at the Slave Lake health centre. Having primary and acute care services available at the same location will make these services more convenient for many patients. It will help to support and increase focus and attention on wellness for the health of patients and people in the region.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Maintenance Enforcement

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Justice and I agreed that maintenance enforcement plays an important role in supporting our children, and that's where our agreement stopped. I asked why so many cases were still in arrears, and the minister answered that it was on a case-by-case basis. Frankly, that just doesn't make any sense. So one more time: between 2006 and 2014 there has been only a 4 per cent improvement on collection of arrears. Does the minister or the program know why collection on arrears has barely improved?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to answer that member's question. The answer is because it's actually doing fairly well to begin with: 73 per cent regular payment rate, $253.3 million net after refunds. That's $253.3 million that maintenance enforcement collects every year.

Ms Blakeman: Minister, that is what they collect on a monthly basis. I'm talking about the arrears that are sitting there. MEP has been under budget seven of the last nine years. Why wasn't that money used to collect that outstanding half a billion dollars that should be for Alberta children?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, again, 58,109, that is the number of children that are impacted by maintenance enforcement. Again, this is a great program. It always can improve, but if anyone were to suggest that the maintenance enforcement program was failing, they would be incorrect.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Minister, the maintenance enforcement program works by monthly collection and by arrears, and there are arrears there. Given all of the pronouncements about eliminating child poverty, MEP sure looks like a good way to get money to kids. So where's the problem? Why is there half a billion dollars in arrears out there? Is it program organization? Is it political will? Is it a lack of incentives for debtors to pay up? Why can't you score this half-billion dollars for Alberta children?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much. I appreciate this member's passion for maintenance enforcement and putting money where it belongs, in the hands of working families. [interjections] At the same time, Mr. Speaker, some debts are simply uncollectable. [interjections] We have to understand that this . . . [interjections] I can't hear myself think over here. Again, 73 per cent regular payment rate: if you went to university, that would be a B. Of course, there's always room to do better, but this is a pretty good program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Economic Competitiveness

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a former drilling consultant I am fully aware of the instability in the oil and gas industry. However, due to the astonishing fall in oil prices, the oil and gas sector has experienced unprecedented layoffs and closures, leading to investment insecurity in Alberta. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Alberta has a very well-respected international reputation. What is your department prepared to do to keep us competitive in the global market in spite of these recent changes?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member correctly and clearly outlines a deepening challenge that we face as a province and our industry faces. I want to underline that the viability and sustainability of our oil and gas industry is not in question. We have world-class resources being developed by world-class companies, but we are certainly challenged and will have to be careful to maintain our competitive environment: a low-tax regime, regulatory certainties, stable government, all the advantages that Alberta provides. We will also have to work on market access to make sure we get world prices for our world-class resources.

Mr. Hale: To the same minister: given that we're seeing many job cuts and companies slowing down production in our energy sector, what is your ministry doing to alleviate the potential job crisis in the oil and gas sector and provide stability in this industry? [interjections]

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, it is essential that we maintain Alberta's tax advantage, as the hon. member from the NDP just pointed out.

This is indeed a challenge, and we will weather the storm. Our industry will weather the storm as we have in the past. Companies are now reducing their overall level of capital spending and their labour numbers, but significant investment is still continuing, and production will continue to grow while these companies go through difficult times. We expect to see about $25 billion in investment go into the oil sands in this incredibly rough time period for the industry. So, Mr. Speaker, it will be a time of confusion. We will do whatever . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

We'll have to hear the final supplemental.

Mr. Hale: Mr. Speaker, to the associate minister of agriculture: given that agriculture is one of the most important economic drivers in the province and is world-renowned for homegrown and farmed goods such as our highly sought-after Alberta-born and -raised beef, what is your ministry doing to increase our agricultural economics at this time?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the question. We've got a number of programs at work every day to help agriculture in our province. One of them is ALMA, which is the Alberta Livestock and Meat Agency, which provides ideas and innovation for our producers and our meat plants. We have AFSC, which provides lending to our agricultural producers, and insurance programs. We also have the rural economic development action plan, which is helping to work with the kids of our future as we move forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Calgary-North West.

Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that the board at AMVIC is not holding fair, open, and impartial hearings for consumers. We have now learned that the same private eye that the PC Party used to investigate a member of this cabinet has been made AMVIC's lead investigator. Minister, the board is holding improper investigations. How could you allow another party insider to be made lead investigator?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for raising this question and promoting Service Alberta's commitment to the consumer protection agenda, but I want to be very clear about a couple of things. The Minister of Service Alberta does not have a role in the hiring by any political party or, for that matter, any delegated authority. AMVIC is an independent organization, and the executive director of AMVIC is responsible for the hiring of investigators as well as all of their staff.

Mr. Strankman: It's about optics, Mr. Speaker. This PC Party placement is now the lead investigator at AMVIC when the board is already full of major issues. As lead investigator this gentleman will be a peace officer, but his role within the PC Party presents a major conflict of interest. To the minister: why did you ignore this conflict of interest?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I assume you'll talk about the government policy side only.

Mr. Khan: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

Again I want to be clear that as a minister I'm not responsible for hiring at the government party level, nor am I responsible for the hiring policies of AMVIC.

Mr. Strankman: The minister's answers aren't good enough, Mr. Speaker. The decision to appoint this party insider shows contempt for Albertans. This minister has done nothing meaningful to address serious allegations at AMVIC, and he's not releasing a report into what really happened because he knows it will make this government look bad. To the minister: you have a job to do; you're not doing it. You don't have the ability to protect Albertans. Don't you think the Premier should appoint someone else?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure all Albertans that our consumer protection agenda is of ultimate importance to my ministry and to myself. As the hon. member points out, we have a draft review of AMVIC. We've tasked the board with coming back with some recommendations. We're prepared to work with the board. It's always been my intention to make that report public, and we will do so in due time, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Inspiring Education and Curriculum Design

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 17 a member of my constituency in Calgary-North West wrote to me expressing concerns about the zones of regulation concept being taught at her son's school. Her son never had any issues expressing himself or with his academics or his behaviour, yet now he doesn't want to go to school anymore because he doesn't want to have to talk about his feelings in public in terms of what colour he feels like he is. Without question, we do want to make sure that students are prepared for a changing world. My question to the Minister of Education: wasn't Inspiring Ed initially subject to flexibility?

2:30

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, zones of regulation, this concept, which is not part of my pedagogy, is not part of Inspiring Education. Zones of regulation are also not part of the current curriculum or anything that is prescribed through the provincial programs of study. Resource decisions and pedagogy decisions like zones of regulation are made at the local level.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Education: since the introduction of Inspiring Education in 2013 has there been a review of this initiative and its efficacy?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Education does not dictate teacher practices within the classroom. We respect our teaching professionals, and we value their hard work. Inspiring Education is a vision for education based on dialogue with Albertans to share their hopes, their dreams, and their aspirations for kindergarten through grade 12 education in the 21st century and beyond. We continue to use this aspirational document as we move forward in the development of a world-class education system.

The Speaker: Final supplemental, hon. member.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Education: can you confirm that your office will look into the concerns of the parents of Calgary-North West?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, I know I share with the member who is asking the question the deep and abiding desire to make Alberta's education system the best that it can be for all children, so I certainly would be happy to discuss with her any concerns she and her constituents have with Inspiring Education initiatives so that Alberta children can succeed and thrive in this 21st century.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Calgary-West.

Federal Building Redevelopment Plan

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today the Standing Committee on Public Accounts met with the Department of Infrastructure and the Department of Treasury Board and Finance. As I understood it, the topic of the residential component of the federal building, or, as it is more commonly known, the sky palace, was discussed. My question is: can the chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts provide an update to this House on the meeting that took place this morning?

The Speaker: The hon. chair of Public Accounts.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for that great question. We did have a very productive meeting this morning, and the sky palace, to use the member's language, was discussed. The Department of Infrastructure went so far as to advise the committee that the residential component, or sky palace, was only cancelled on Monday, May 5, 2014. That would be more than a full month after Premier Redford resigned, for those who are keeping track.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. That's quite interesting. Thank you to the committee chair for that answer.

To the Minister of Transportation. You were not the Minister of Infrastructure on May 5, 2014, so why did you tell the House that you cancelled the project in 2012, when that clearly is not the case?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The information that was provided today at the Public Accounts Committee meeting is readily available. It's publicly available. It's information that actually came from an Auditor General's report. What we did is cited the information that's in the Auditor's report. This is a project that's long been gone. We're moving forth, building the infrastructure that Albertans need: the schools, the health facilities, the critical transportation infrastructure, not to mention our critical seniors' facilities.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, thank you. We're just clarifying some dates.

Once again, this government can't seem to keep their stories straight, and it gets a little nasty here. The Minister of Transportation gives one story. The Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour gives another. The former Premier gives another, and all we have to show is six shades of marble. To the Premier: are any of your ministers going to be held accountable? Will someone please tell the truth?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We provided information today that's already been made public for many, many months. The Auditor General of the province has actually looked into this matter. He's concluded on this matter. He's put a report out on this matter, and we simply provided information that he provided in his report to members of the committee. The fact remains now that we are focused on building the critical infrastructure that Albertans need to ensure that they have the absolute best quality of life.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Seniors' Care

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Senior citizens in Alberta move into the latter years of their lives with the expectation they will be treated with respect, dignity, and support. However, cases of neglect and abuse unfortunately do occur. To the Minister of Seniors. Funding for fire safety systems and the introduction of the affordable supportive living initiative are just the beginning in improving our system. What future initiatives is the ministry working on to improve the lives of our senior citizens?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the member for his question and for pointing out some of the great work my ministry staff has been doing. In addition to the capital and safety items that we've already announced, the Premier has tasked me with creating a provincial housing strategy and working to review our elder abuse strategy. We've also got our ministry working to help develop initiatives to increase awareness of proactive approaches to preventative cognitive decline. We've also been very focused on initiatives that are going to help our seniors stay and age with their spouses and their families in the communities that they helped build.

The Speaker: Supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the constituents of Calgary-West have raised serious concerns over the accessibility of mental health programs for vulnerable citizens entering supportive living, to the Minister of Health: how does this government plan to address aspects of mental health care such as depression and anxiety as our population continues to age and move into assisted living?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Mandel: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My department and AHS are very aware of the mental health challenges faced by seniors, and supportive living is pleased to provide a mental health consultation service for people in these residences. In addition, Alberta Health Services' seniors health strategic clinical network has a number of initiatives to address seniors' mental health issues, and recently the SCN has had a major success, reducing the inappropriate use of antipsychotic drugs in long-term care facilities by 20 per cent. It's working closely with my department on strategies to care for people with dementia and their families and caregivers. As you know, dementia is something that is just growing exponentially in our society.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Minister. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, back to the Minister of Seniors: given the unique situation that senior citizens face as they move through a transition between nonassisted and assisted living combined with higher levels of dementia and Alzheimer's, what are the ministry's thoughts on a dedicated and stand-alone mental health branch within the Ministry of Seniors to help navigate potential crossministerial confusion?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. He's pointed out a very important issue. I appreciate that those things can be stressful for seniors, especially when there's a diagnosis of dementia. I can tell you that Seniors and Health are working together with other partners, including the Alzheimer Society, to develop a dementia strategy for Alberta. Which ministry takes the lead on this is not as important as getting the work done, work like the $2 million that's been dedicated by Health to improve dementia care, including the creation of a new clinical advice line, that the government hopes to pilot this fall. As well, the number of Albertans with dementia is rising, as the Minister of Health said, and one of our priorities is to make sure they have the care that they need, which is why the dementia...

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I'll address the matter of questions to the chair of Public Accounts very soon.

Let us move on and complete this set of questions. Let's go to Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Thank you for your notes.

Postsecondary Tuition Fees

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has the lowest university participation rate in the nation, all because this government funds the fewest number of seats. Further, as a result of this government's chronic underfunding of postsecondary ed we find it increasingly only accessible to those who have won the lottery, either by 6/49 or by accident of birth or whether or not their parents have money. To the minister of advanced education. Despite our young Albertans being unable to afford postsecondary, word on the street is that your government is going to lift the tuition cap. Can you confirm this?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are no imminent changes to tuition. We're focused on a system that is accessible and sustainable. Alberta provides one of the highest levels of support to postsecondary institutions. Alberta universities obtain almost 58 per cent of their operating revenue from government funding. This is 5 per cent higher than the national average and 16 per cent higher than Ontario. Tuition from Alberta university students accounts for a lower proportion of operating revenues, 30 per cent, compared to other provinces such as Ontario, where it's 50 per cent, or British Columbia, where it's 41 per cent.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I get a little worried, Mr. Speaker, when I hear weasel words like "imminent," so I'll ask the minister a very pointed question. Have you told any members of our postsecondary leadership that you will be removing the tuition cap after the election?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Scott: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I'm committed to working with all Campus Alberta partners to ensure that we have a plan in place for long-term, stable, and predictable funding. This is not business as usual, and all options are going to be on the table, and we have to get off the oil revenue roller coaster. This work is going to go beyond the spring budget. After the budget all Campus Alberta partners will be asked to help build a Campus Alberta system that is sustainable, accessible, and achieves excellence. I'll be engaging with students after the budget and developing a long-term plan.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, I'm not asking for a long soliloquy about what postsecondary education is up to in Alberta. What I'm asking the minister: has he had discussions or has he told members of our postsecondary institutions that he will lift the tuition cap after this election? That's all I'm asking.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, what I told our postsecondary students – we had a great meeting last week, and we talked about the importance of postsecondary education. I indicated to those students that there were no imminent changes to tuition in Alberta, and the students were very pleased to hear that. They are looking forward to engaging with this government going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mental Health Services for Postsecondary Students

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to continue along the theme of postsecondary education. I rise today to question if our government is doing enough to support the mental health of our next generation of Alberta's leaders and workers, our postsecondary students. Students are currently preparing and writing final exams and finishing up their final papers, and I can attest that it can be a stressful time. My question is for the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education. Are there enough mental health supports in place to properly help our students?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education.

Mr. Scott: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Health and I recognize the need to address postsecondary mental health. This is a serious issue across Campus Alberta, and it's an issue that was raised with me last week by the young people who attend our postsecondary institutions. We are working with postsecondary institutions and community partners to develop a provincial postsecondary mental health and addiction framework. The University of Calgary is playing a lead role in its development. Government has provided $3 million a year directly to the universities of Alberta, Calgary, and Lethbridge to expand Alberta's mental health services and develop models of care that can be used on campuses across . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's hear the supplemental, please.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the same minister. There is still a great deal of stigma when it comes to mental health. We've come a long way, but not everyone is comfortable with going into an office to ask for help. What is being done to reach out to the students who won't ask for the help they need?

Mr. Scott: Again, Mr. Speaker, it's not just government that's concerned about this issue. Student leaders are aware of and passionate about this issue and the mental health issues that they experience on campus. Funding has been provided to let student associations run outreach activities that they know will work. Twelve student associations ran awareness campaigns. Several of them brought in guest speakers, offered peer support, ran workshops, and all ASEC members but one have run special, fun activities to give students a chance to blow off some steam and learn about the resources that are available. I'm pleased to say that these activities reached more than 60,000 students across . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's hear the final supplemental.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education. Addressing mental health concerns is not a one-year initiative, and then you walk away. How can students know you'll continue to stand by them?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, this government will not be backing away from mental health issues across Campus Alberta. As I mentioned, our government is working with postsecondary institutions and community partners to develop a provincial postsecondary mental health and addiction framework. There will be a long-term framework. I encourage this member to also bring his passion for this issue to our extensive Campus Alberta consultation happening after the budget. Together with our Campus Alberta partners we will ensure that our system is sustainable, accessible, and focused on excellence.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 102 questions and answers were offered today. That's a good average to strive for. We can do better tomorrow, I'm sure. In the meantime, let's take a 30 second recess, and then we'll continue with private members' statements.

Questions to the Premier

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, 17: that's the number of questions the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has asked the Premier on health care in the last two weeks. One: that's the number the Premier has bothered to answer. When she asked the Premier why he hasn't been answering her questions, he flippantly replied that it was because he felt his minister could handle it.

Well, maybe we should look at his record. Mould, asbestos, overcrowding, postponed surgeries, growing ER wait times, seniors waiting in hospitals for long-term care beds, profoundly inadequate mental health care: these are serious concerns, and Albertans deserve better.

Health care professionals call us to tell us that this PC government's neglect hurts the quality of care Albertans receive, yet the Premier doesn't answer. Families call us to tell us that their loved ones' surgeries are delayed because this government has the wrong priorities, yet the Premier doesn't answer.

Albertans deserve better than a Premier that ducks responsibility on an issue as crucial as their health. Albertans deserve better than decades of neglected hospitals. Albertans deserve better than disingenuous assurances that cuts can be made, thousands of positions eliminated without hurting the quality of health care received in this province even more.

This PC government has had a second chance and a third. In fact, they've had 43 budgets and 43 chances to get it right, but if they can't fix health care in the good times, if they can't fix health care in 43 years, why should anyone trust them to get the job done now? Albertans just can't trust the PCs to fix health care. They broke it, and every time they try to put it back together, they just make it worse. It's time to retire the PCs and elect a government that can do the job.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by Calgary-North West.

Retrospective by the Member for Calgary-Bow

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For 14 years I have had the great privilege of speaking for my constituents in this House and within government. In that time I've been gifted with so many dedicated and wonderful co-workers such as Allison Johnson and especially Colleen Winhold, with me since the beginning as my Calgary assistant, whose compassion for our constituents has been boundless.

I have also been gifted with so many opportunities to make a difference in people's lives along the way. Opportunity placed me as chair of the Seniors Advisory Council, allowing me to bring the voice of our seniors to government.

As vice-president of the Pacific NorthWest Economic Region I was able to give Alberta a strong crossborder voice with our neighbouring provinces and states. Bringing one constituent's vision to the government and thus seeing 2,000 acres at Poverty Rock rise to become part of Writing-On-Stone park was extremely fulfilling. But more fulfilling was working on the low-income review which led to higher AISH payments for those most vulnerable in our society.

Standing here before you, Mr. Speaker, and all my colleagues, I find myself awash in other memories, memories of the warmth and camaraderie of my fellow MLAs, memories of my constituents and how profoundly they have moved and changed me, of baby Sierra and baby Brooklynn, who inspired me to advocate change in the philosophy of children's services to one of strengthening families rather than of apprehension.

Finally, the memory that'll stay with me forever: watching thousands of Albertans come down to Bowness to help their neighbours after the floods swept through our province, mud-caked faces, bright smiles, and hard work, a community in the truest sense of the word. That is what being an MLA in this great province means to me, community.

Mr. Speaker, it has been my privilege to serve my community to the very best of my ability, *and it has been a greater privilege to watch the constituents of my community working to improve the lives of all Albertans. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you. Well spoken; well said.

Let us move on, then, to the final private member's statement for today, and that would be Calgary-North West. Thank you.

2:50 Inspiring Education and Curriculum Design

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the introduction of Bill 18, the Education Act, in 2011 this province has seen the rollout of initiatives like Inspiring Education and curriculum redesign. Albertans have recognized that our education system needs to adapt to meet the challenges and embrace the opportunities of an ever-changing world. Through the Inspiring Education dialogue Albertans have identified a vision for the future where students are inspired to achieve success and fulfillment as engaged thinkers and ethical citizens with an entrepreneurial spirit. We're so pleased that stakeholder organizations like the Alberta Teachers' Association, the College of Alberta School Superintendents, the Alberta School Councils' Association, and the Alberta School Boards Association have all demonstrated support for Inspiring Education and curriculum redesign.

Unfortunately, these innovative initiatives have not always been the original flexible programs they were meant to be. The original rollout of Inspiring Education included province-wide consultation that brought Albertans together to talk about the future of teaching and learning. The outcome was a broad policy framework developed to describe the overall direction, principles, and goals for education in Alberta.

The initiative was not meant to replace the pre-existing traditional method of learning but was meant to assist and aid in new, innovative ways to stay up to date with our current technology. Along with Inspiring Education, a similar initiative was created in curriculum redesign, and the purpose was to make sure it was continually being reviewed and improved to ensure our students are developing the knowledge, skills, and attitudes they need to be successful in the real world.

Although our original efforts were ground breaking, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid we are losing steam by not staying present with the concerns of Alberta education's front-line members. Those are teachers, students, and parents.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Justice, I believe you have a bill.

Bill 23

Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2015

Mr. Denis: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 23, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2015. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of the bill, recommends same to the Assembly.

These changes relate to the province's civil forfeiture office, referred to as the CFO, and specifically to the operation of its fund and processes. I'll start by pointing out that these changes are in no way related to the victims of crime fund or the victims of crime units in our communities. To avoid future confusion between the programs, part of the proposed amendments would be to change the name of the act to the civil forfeiture and restitution act.

The proposed amendments will create a regulated civil forfeiture fund. In addition, the fund will now be able to cover expenses that the CFO incurs in obtaining the forfeitures. We are following the model of other provinces by permitting certain direct expenses to be paid from the proceeds of the forfeitures, which will allow the CFO to operate regardless of the province's budget situation. The amendments would also prohibit a person's objection to administrative forfeiture from being used against the person in a criminal trial and will permit the regulations to be made in the future, which will list offences of cause bodily harm or profit. Lastly, the bill makes technical and minor improvements to business operations.

This is a continuation of our common-sense, conservative approach to justice, and together these amendments will help the province's civil forfeiture office continue its valuable work in reducing victimizations by reducing crime.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a first time]

The Speaker: Before we proceed, could I have unanimous consent to revert quickly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well thank you to the Assembly, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is a great privilege. I've seen two outstanding women enter the Chamber here, a mother and daughter dynamic duo, both from my constituency: an incredible teacher in Drayton Valley and now retired, Becky Prins, and her outstanding daughter Amy Prins, who joined me first as an intern. She was so outstanding, we hired her as a special assistant. Then I had the honour and privilege of her working with me as my chief of staff. I would ask that both of them please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I don't believe there are any others, so let us move on.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Let's start with Calgary-Cross, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

*The text in italics exceeded the time limit and was not read in the House.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is five copies of a letter I received March 4, 2015, from the Injury Prevention Centre, School of Public Health at the University of Alberta. They wrote to thank me for championing a private member's bill in 2001 that made bicycle helmets mandatory for Alberta's children. "You have been responsible for getting thousands of children to wear bicycle helmets and protecting many of them from life-changing head injuries." They are grateful for "the legacy of your work, nearly 15 years later, [as it] is a generation of cyclists who protect themselves and now their children" while enjoying cycling. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table, also, five copies of a news release I wrote, dated February 4, 2015. It highlights the successful programs that have enhanced and protected the quality of life for vulnerable Albertans over the past 20 years.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, I understand your tabling is not today.

Ms Blakeman: No. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any other Tabling Returns and Reports?

Seeing none, I thank you. I think that concludes items other than points of order. We had a couple of points of order.

Let's go with the one that Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills raised at 2:01 p.m. Citation and point of order.

Point of Order

Allegations against Members

Mr. Saskiw: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising according to Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), and it is with respect to a comment made by this Premier. He alleged that members on our side were promoting debt in this province. I think this is more of a clarification, but I would just like to put on the record that it is this government that has put this province into almost $20 billion of debt, and that's on the basis of spending on things like golf courses; brand new MLA offices, about $400 million; hundreds of thousands of dollars for campaign ads; you know, carbon capture and storage, corporate grants to those companies. I think that when he impugns the opposition members, making statements that are clearly false – clearly, clearly, absolutely false – it creates disorder in this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'd ask that you either have the member retract the statement or offer that clarification.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have got to say that if I'm so fortunate as to win a third election, I'm going to really miss this member. I really enjoy our legal banter, and I wish him well in whatever area of law he goes back to. But the one banter I have here is that truth is an absolute defence. It may be inconvenient if somebody actually goes and says something. We may want to cover it up. We might want to run away from it if it's against our own political interest. But I'll quote again a document that I'd quoted from a couple of days ago. One of the leadership candidates, Linda Osinchuk, had indicated: "We should be looking at selling bonds, Alberta bonds. And we can actually use this to create revenue." This is a prominent member of his organization who's talking about debt financing.

Again, what the Premier said, with respect, Mr. Speaker, was true. This is the Wildrose. It does support debt financing. I would just go and ask that this member realize that this is a point of clarification and not a point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're not looking to engage in a large debate on this. As you well know, points of order should not be used as an opportunity to extend debate.

Hon. leader of the Wildrose, why don't you rise and just bring this matter to a conclusion? It is more of a point of clarification, but I will allow you a brief moment to comment.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, if we're going to talk about leadership candidates, maybe we should go back to last June, when the now Premier of the province was a leadership candidate, and to all of the promises he made that he's now broken to Albertans. I think that's something that doesn't need to be clarified. You want to talk about truth. That's the truth. He made a bunch of promises; he's broken his promise not only to people in this Assembly but to Albertans.

The Speaker: And you can see why we don't get into this too much; nonetheless, those points are now on the record, and they have been duly noted.

This is clearly a point of clarification. I believe both sides involved here have clarified their positions, and now we are going to move on. So thank you for that clarification. That concludes the matter.

Statement by the Speaker

Questions to Committee Chairs

The Speaker: Now, earlier today, as you will remember, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek rose and asked a question to the chair of the Public Accounts Committee. I want to make it very clear that a similar circumstance as this has occurred here before. Yes, questions may be directed to chairs of committees of the Legislative Assembly about the schedule and agenda of such committees. For future reference you might want to visit House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 506. There are just a couple of sentences here, but I want to read them into the record because the minute something happens that is a bit unusual, I get notes and comments and phone calls and everything else, so hopefully this will address that. I'll be brief.

I quote from page 506 from the second edition, 2009, House of Commons Procedure and Practice, wherein it says under the heading Questions Concerning Matters Before Committees:

Questions seeking information about the schedule and agenda of committees may be directed to Chairs of committees. Questions to the Ministry or to a committee Chair concerning the proceedings or work of a committee, including its order of reference, may not be raised. Thus, for example, a question would be disallowed if it dealt with a vote in committee, with the attendance or testimony of Members at a committee meeting, or with the content of a committee report. When a question has been asked about a committee's proceedings, Speakers have encouraged Members to rephrase their questions.

And I might well have looked at doing that, other than that it was getting a little bit noisy. Believe it or not, it is difficult sometimes to hear the question being asked when there's the heckling and everything else that I admonished you about earlier today on two or three occasions.

Nonetheless, there is a great deal of leniency that is usually given for members who want to talk about events that have occurred in a committee meeting, but usually there are leniencies given when they are posed in the context of questions to the government. In that respect I would invite you to visit the Hansard of May 1, 1997, page 319, where under the heading Speaker's Ruling, Questions to Private Members it states:

The gist of these rulings is that the purpose of question period is for members to hold the government accountable for its actions. Clearly, there can be no other finding by the Chair, as the principle of the executive being responsible to the Assembly is the cornerstone of responsible government in this country.

And the Speaker of the day went on to conclude by saying:

Secondly, questions may be asked directly of members who chair committees of the Assembly, but this would be a narrow range as these committees are not part of government. Certainly it would be highly unusual for these members to supplement answers by ministers.

So please remember that, and we'll be vigilant for any future circumstances such as that. That is the point of clarification from the Speaker's point of view.

With that having been said, why don't we move on.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 22

Skin Cancer Prevention (Artificial Tanning) Act

The Speaker: Let us move on to the next speaker on Bill 22. The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 22, the Skin Cancer Prevention (Artificial Tanning) Act.

This legislation is related to artificial tanning. It's a priority area under Alberta's cancer plan. Alberta has one of the highest usages of artificial tanning in Canada. Strong evidence exists linking artificial tanning and skin cancer. In 2012 599 Albertans were diagnosed with melanoma; 72 died from this preventable disease. Rates of melanoma are now increasing in Alberta; 700 new cases are expected in 2017. There is also evidence that youth are at a higher risk of skin cancer from artificial tanning than older adults, which is why youth are the focus of this proposed legislation.

The legislation would do several things. It would ban artificial tanning businesses from providing services to minors, restricting those under 18 from using artificial tanning. It would also restrict direct advertising of artificial tanning to youths under 18. Some specific examples would be advertising targeting minors as a main audience such as high school yearbooks or teen magazines. Another important part of the legislation would mandate warnings about the health risks of artificial tanning. Health warnings at point of sale would help consumers be more aware of the dangers of artificial tanning.

We're also proposing banning self-serve artificial tanning equipment. Unsupervised self-serve artificial tanning devices are common in other parts of the world but not yet here in Alberta. We want to get ahead of the curve on this one.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to note that this legislation does not apply to spray tanning as it does not emit cancer-causing UV radiation.

Government made moves years ago to protect youth from the dangers of tobacco. The skin cancer prevention act is another important step on the road to reduce cancer incidence in Alberta. This legislation will help us meet commitments under Alberta's cancer plan and protect the health of all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask this Assembly for its support in passing the second reading of Bill 22. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to stand up and give my initial support on the Skin Cancer Prevention (Artificial Tanning) Act. I was one of those people that – I guess I was older than that – wished I hadn't done what I did as far as artificial tanning because of the ... [interjection] Somebody is yelling. Unfortunately, I don't know how many times people in this House have to be reminded that I can't hear. All I see is a bunch of lips moving, you know, so it goes past.

Mr. Speaker, I was one of those people. I actually started off with the tanning because of a skin ailment, which I know is one of things that you can have a prescribed doctor's note for. I know that for people with psoriasis and that it was extremely helpful. But I eventually liked the colour that I was turning, and I thought: well, this is much easier to get done than trying to sit out in the sun for three or four hours, getting the rays. You know, you go 20 years ahead, or whenever they brought these tanning beds in, and it shows on your face. It just drives me crazy when I go past all of these Fabutans and see these young kids go in, and I think: "Oh, my God. What are you doing to your skin? Do you realize some of the things that can happen with skin cancer?"

It's a good move by the government. There are some things that I'm struggling with, and it's something that I'm hoping, if we have the ability to get to committee, that the mover of the bill, who's just moved second reading, will be able to answer. That's, of course, the enforcement aspect. We've just seen the distracted driving bill pass through third reading, from the Member for Calgary-East, and when I spoke in support of his bill, I also talked about the enforcement part and the need for more boots on the ground – if I can use that – more sheriffs, more police officers.

On page 4 of the bill it talks about the enforcement officers, inspections, and investigations.

The Minister may, by order, designate an individual as an enforcement officer or, by regulation, designate individuals within a class of individuals as enforcement officers for the purposes of this Act or the regulations.

I'm just not sure what that means.

I think everybody in the House has good intentions by the many, many bills that this government passes. I hit the paper about a week ago when Quill and I tried to enter a restaurant in Edmonton and were denied. Well, we all know that the service dog legislation in this province is one of the toughest, but unfortunately with service dogs, Alberta has the worst record. At that particular time – as someone who owns a service dog there are many rules and regulations that you follow. The first thing is to try to inform the restaurant that what they're doing is wrong, and then you leave quietly, and you let the association, the Lions foundation, know that you've been denied entrance. Then they write a letter, and then they ask you to go back after that. Education.

3:10

I can't imagine, when I was out last week just wanting something to eat, that I am going to end up phoning a police officer on a very busy night. So, I guess, how are you going to enforce this? Are you going to do the same thing if you see someone enter the establishment that's under age and that's going to go tanning? Do you phone an enforcement officer? Who are you going to phone? It says in here that "an enforcement officer may conduct an inspection or investigation with respect to any matter." I am trying to understand the process. I do understand the process that I have to go through with the service dog. It has clearly been articulated to me. I'm just not sure how you're going to enforce this, and I am hoping that the minister – do you send a warning to the tanning salon?

You know, there are just so many things. I'm hoping that in committee there will be some questions because it's quite detailed. In fact, section 6.1 is about who is designated. Then it goes on: "An enforcement officer may conduct an inspection or investigation with respect to any matter for any purpose related to . . . [that]." It goes on: "An enforcement officer may, without a warrant, enter premises, other than a private dwelling." And it goes on to talk about reasonable grounds and things like that. So I think it's important to establish who that enforcement officer is, who the designate is, who you'd consider designating to be an enforcement officer as far as the fines, and things like that.

The other thing that I really would like some clarification on is prohibitions, nonapplication, defences. Under section 2 it says:

No person shall sell, offer for sale or provide artificial tanning services to an individual who appears to be less than 25 years of age unless the person . . .

And it has the prescription one that I had talked about.

. . . is satisfied that the individual is at least 18 years of age.

To the minister: is it under 18, or is it under 25? An adult in this province is considered 18. I guess I'm wondering why "appears to be less than 25 years of age" is in this piece of legislation, which is confusing to me, quite frankly, Minister. Are we saying that if I'm 24, considered an adult in this province, I can be stopped from accessing tanning, et cetera? So if you could clarify that for me, that would be extremely helpful.

I'm not going to take a lot of time because I'm sure that there are many other members that would like to speak on that, so I am looking forward to clarification on your enforcement because I think that's important. When you have businesses that are involved in a business that provides a service, I think that they need to know also.

Those are my short questions. Obviously, when we are in second reading, we talk about the intent of the bill. So I will look forward to committee, if we have the opportunity to get to that, to find out what you have to say about that. I appreciate the time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Do we have another speaker at this time? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of this bill. There are some questions that quite possibly the minister could bring in on the enforcement side, I think, in a sense, versus some authority from a provincial level, but opening up these tanning salons to liability from the public under a tort action might be more efficient on an enforcement level.

Now, I speak to this bill on a very personal level. As a person of very fair skin I have been battling with basal cell, squamous cell, and I've been subject to melanoma. I've undergone cancer surgery for skin cancer, most recently within the last couple of months. All of this is, I believe, a direct result of my exposure, particularly when I was in the tropics as a young man, not understanding the damages of what the sun can do. That is the whole intent of this bill. People, particularly young people, who are concerned about their appearance – and it's an odd thing. People with light skin want to have dark skin, people with dark hair want to have light hair – we have all these things going on in our society – and people with no hair want hair. Then people with hair shave their heads. I don't get it. But vanity is vanity.

This bill does a number of things. Not only can it protect our youths; it can save our health care system lots of money and lots of dollars. There's nothing better to save money in health care than preventative health care practices. On the issue of skin cancer I will say this. My son, who is now in university, who is quite fair skinned, has never had the issues that I've had just because of education around this subject matter. People are learning, and this is the whole process that we're going through. The medical field has done tremendous work in dealing with skin cancers. You know, had they had sunscreen back when I was younger, I can tell you I would have used sunscreen. You watch families today protecting their kids. This is significant.

For the issue that we're dealing with today, if we can get this message out to our young people and enforce this bill we're about to pass to prevent the abuse of these skin tanning salons – and it is abuse. The science is there, the medical studies are there to show that this contributes to that. To me, it's a no-brainer in how we want to go forward to keep our medical care costs in control and how we want to go forward to educate people about taking more responsibility for their health. As these young people grow a little bit older, a little bit wiser, they generally get onboard, as most adults do, with trying to eat a little bit healthier and taking care of themselves. For anyone who has experienced any of these types of cancers, after a while it does get old, and you wish that you had taken preventative measures as a young person.

I will be supporting this bill, and I want to thank the government for bringing it forward. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available should anyone wish to take advantage of that. I see no one.

Is there anyone else who wishes to speak?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I won't be long. Yesterday, after the bill was introduced by the hon. member, we had an opportunity to listen to some individuals that have been impacted by skin cancer and tanning salons, and it was quite heartbreaking to hear the impact that it's had on their lives. I think that this particular piece of legislation will begin to go to the heart of it, where there are so many people under the age of 18 using these facilities to make themselves look more presentable or in some way better. At the end of the day, we need to make sure they understand the tremendous risk in doing this form of trying to make yourself more beautiful. I think that we need to enforce it every which way we can. The minister will use the authority that will be allowed under the legislation to take every step necessary.

You know, oftentimes today, as I get older, people look younger, so if you're 25 years of age today, you could look 25, you could be 25, or you could also be 15. We need to be very cautious in how we look at people and make sure we oversee anybody coming in that might have a potential.

I applaud the member for bringing this forward, and I support this. It is an excellent piece of legislation. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

I see no one wishing to take that up, so let us move to the next speaker. It'll be Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise and speak to Bill 22, the Skin Cancer Prevention (Artificial Tanning) Act. I'll keep my comments fairly short. I just want to say to all members of the Assembly and to Albertans that the Alberta NDP do support this bill in its entirety.

3:20

A few facts that I'd like to share with members. The Canadian Cancer Society states that melanoma is one of the fastest growing preventable cancers, and research indicates that using indoor tanning equipment during youth increases the risk by nearly 60 per cent. The National Cancer Institute in the United States says that teen girls make up a growing number of tanning bed customers.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Alberta Health estimates that 1 in 3 17-year-old girls in the province has used indoor tanning equipment. Of those that have used tanning indoors, two-thirds report having started before the age of 16. Even industry is onside with this. The Joint Canadian Tanning Association, JCTA, an industry group based in Kelowna, B.C., said that it welcomes the move, and the province's largest provider of these services, Fabutan, instituted similar bans at its own facilities last summer.

In the end, it seems the only question here is: what took so long? Other provinces, aside from Saskatchewan, have all passed laws like this. It's definitely the right thing to do.

I thank the member sponsoring this bill for bringing it forward, and I will be supporting it. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll look for the next speaker. Call the question?

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park to close?

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate everybody's comments and will address the questions from the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek in committee, assuming we get there.

You took the words right out of my mouth, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that you call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a second time]

Bill 24

Public Sector Services Continuation Repeal Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and move second reading of Bill 24, the Public Sector Services Continuation Repeal Act.

Before us today we have a straightforward proposal to repeal the Public Sector Services Continuation Act, which was originally passed by this House in December 2013 but was never proclaimed or put into force. At the time this legislation was needed to act as a deterrent to illegal strikes in the public sector. It was intended to strengthen our labour laws by introducing higher fines.

Recently the Alberta government announced that it would be reviewing its approach to public-sector labour relations and that it plans to put in place an essential services model of legislation. Of course, maintaining public safety and ensuring that the public has access to essential services during times of labour disputes will be a key part of any new legislation that may be brought forward. Moving to an essential services model will go a long way towards that goal since it will reduce the likelihood of strikes being illegal in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, given this change in the province's approach to labour legislation it is clear that the Public Sector Services Continuation Act is not required. We have already begun reviewing the essential services models that are in place in other jurisdictions in the country, and following our discussions with Alberta public-sector employers, employees, and their representatives we plan to table new public-sector labour legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I recognize the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 24, which is repealing previous legislation. I just find it really interesting that the hon. minister would be tabling this legislation because according to the record in this Assembly he voted for the legislation previously. He voted for it; now he's voting against it. Which one is it? He just changed his mind very quickly. I'm wondering, you know, if the minister is going to provide some justification to this Assembly for his complete flip-flop in a very short period of time. He voted for it, and now he's voting against it. I look forward to the debate in this Assembly where he provides that justification for how things miraculously changed in that period of time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased, very pleased, to be able to get this opportunity to speak in favour of the repeal of what we know as Bill 45 because that was a really awful bill and extremely punitive to the labour movement and the collective bargaining process and, frankly, to working people. I mean, this government is clearly not a fan of the organized labour movement, but it should be because much of what we as Albertans see as basic working rights in fact came about as a result of action that the organized labour movement took.

I've managed to grab a few things that let us know where these came from, things like 40-hour workweeks and/or weekends off, whichever way you want to look at that; breaks at work, including lunch breaks, which came about because of organized labour and the collective bargaining process working for this; paid vacation or paid holiday time; family leave or medical leave; short-term and long-term sick leave; even in one case, which I'll come upon later, social security; minimum wage; a number of laws that prohibit discrimination in the workplace; overtime pay; child labour laws – the government has rather gone backwards in that one because I think they've changed it so that 12-year-olds can work in the food industry, so we'll have to get on that again – occupational health and safety laws have always come out of that sector; workers' compensation; unemployment insurance; in some cases pensions; wrongful-termination laws; age discrimination; in some cases whistle-blower protection; personnel evaluations and merit increases; sexual harassment laws; pregnancy and parental leave; military leave; the right to strike; public education for children; and equal pay for work of equal value.

These are pretty integral parts of our workforce today. They didn't come about because government decided to stand up and just do it out of the goodness of their heart. People had to work very hard to get this, both in negotiations and in some cases having to take to the street.

Let me reinforce here – and I've said this previously, but it needs to be said again – that people do not go on strike because it's fun. They go on strike because they believe every other reasonable avenue to get the employer to make changes has been exhausted. They go on strike to try and get the employer to come back to the table and negotiate in good faith. That's why people go on strike. It's no fun, especially in this country, where we have eight months' worth of winter and four months' worth of construction. You are almost always bound to be walking a picket line in the snow, which is, you know, really not fun.

These are people, in the public service anyway, who wanted to serve, who wanted to be working for the public, who are working for unions. In this particular instance, Bill 45 was very specifically directed against AUPE, which is primarily public workers for the Alberta government. This government really was not, I would argue, bargaining in good faith. They've already designated almost every – I mean, this one really gets me. It really brought it into high relief when the sponsoring member earlier was saying: oh, well, you know, we have to have all these essential services. At one point I met a fellow and said: what do you do? He repairs VLT machines. Oh. Okay. And he was an essential worker. I thought: okay. That whole concept of essential worker starts to disintegrate when the government is designating a lottery terminal repairperson as an essential service. I think that really clarified things for me. You know, I know that the government doesn't like having to step into public service strikes; no employer does. Neither do the people that are going on strike, but it is an attempt to try and get a settlement.

3:30

At the time this bill was brought in, I thought it was regressive and punitive, nasty. There was just a whole tone to the whole debate that was particularly crude. It was quite distressing. It was at the end of session, more or less where we are now although we've only been in for three weeks. Think about this, House leader. Just add another week onto this, and imagine how cranky people are going to be. I did warn you that three weeks is enough. Don't go for four weeks. But, no, you wouldn't listen to me. That was at the end of a particularly long stint in the House, and it was at the end of – well, you can tell by the numbers of the bills, 45 and 46. People had been in the session for quite a while, and we'd seen enough of each other.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. We had. Well, the previous speaker used to describe politics as a blood sport, and I really felt that during this debate. It felt like a blood sport. It felt like a really nasty battle.

So I'm pleased, however this came to be. It's a bit like watching sausages being made. I don't quite want to know how the government came to this point or how the unions got them to this point of repealing this bill. I would like to urge the government not to bring in new legislation that is equally regressive, please. If we cannot negotiate reasonably with the people that we work with, then there is something seriously wrong with the system, and I think that's an indicator of it.

I do approve of this repeal of Bill 45. I'm glad to see that the government got there. As I said, I don't want to know how you got here. It does serve to show us and allows me to highlight some of the reasons why we should value organized labour, the collective bargaining system. The ones I just gave you, I think, were Canadian examples. I pulled some of the U.S. examples. Again, they talk about the weekend, fair wages and relative income equality, child labour, leading the fights for family and medical leave and, in the States, of course, health coverage, which was a big deal there until Obama-care came along.

Some of what's been worked on in Canada are things like mental health advocacy. I know that every year, coming up soon, actually, is the Jim Shewchuk award, which is the fundraiser that – oh, boy; I'm not going to get it – the coalition of civic unions, maybe, puts together for United Way. As part of that, at the beginning of it there's always a graduation ceremony for people who on their own time, as volunteers, have taken courses that qualify them to be counsellors in the workplace, particularly to identify and help people to move on, to get assistance, to get help around mental illness, alcohol abuse, and drug abuse. These are peers. This is a peer support program that union folks volunteer to take and train in to work with their peers in the workforce.

We also can thank a number of the unions for fundraising and for supporting a number of the charities and volunteer-based associations that we have and for supporting legal defence. I've always been a donator to LEAF, which is the Women's Legal Education and Action Fund, which is not a union; it's a women-based organization to fight constitutional challenges. But the same theory and dedication have come through the union movement, who has paid for a number of court challenges that have resulted in a better workforce for everybody, and I appreciate them putting their money toward that.

One of the examples, in the States anyway, was pay equity. We have on the books pay equity in Alberta, but as people pretty quickly figured out, pay equity doesn't help much, so they never used the phrase again. As just a gentle reminder to the minister, pay equity just says, you know, that you're going to pay all truck drivers X amount of money, and if there's a female truck driver, well, she'll get paid the same. What it doesn't recognize is that people tend to work in gendered clusters of employment, so you end up with a lot of administrative support – a huge number of administrative support personnel are women, but a lot of janitorial staff, particularly in the heavier sectors, are men. Well, saying that you're going to pay a male truck driver and a female truck driver the same is great, but it doesn't reflect the diversity of the workforce. It doesn't reflect that you have women in so-called pink-collar jobs who are paid substantially less than men that are doing more or less the same kind of job in a different sector.

Equal pay for work of equal value is about breaking down the jobs and assigning metrics to each that say: "How much responsibility do you have? Do you oversee people? How many? How much physical work is involved? How much strategic or thinking work does it need? What does your reading skill level need to be," et cetera, et cetera, et cetera? That's what makes it a more equal-paying labour force. I would strongly recommend that the government look at this again because this is largely the reason why we have such a huge income gap in Alberta, and we've just had a study come out that underlined that pretty graphically. Here we are, supposedly a wealthy province, with a major income gap, the largest in Canada, between working men and working women, and that just shouldn't be.

I'm sure that lots of my colleagues in here will have great fun and amusement in giving the government a hard time for reversing itself on this bill, but I'm glad they did it. I mean, I'm not going to give any great credit to the government for any light bulb going on, but for whatever reason they came to this decision to repeal Bill 45. I'm glad they did because I do believe in organized labour. I do support collective bargaining. I think that what the government attempted to do with Bill 45 was wrong. At the time I said that it was wrong, and at the time I also could foresee a court challenge coming. In fact, it did, and the government lost, as it should have.

It really startled me to see government ministers talking about people in AUPE without seeming to connect that when they went back to their offices, those were the very same people that they were saying weren't worthy of being paid and weren't worthy of negotiating with to bring them to the table. There was just such a disconnect there. It really started me, so I'm glad to come to where we are today.

On behalf of my caucus members in the Liberal caucus I indicate our support for this bill in second reading. We do not plan on bringing any amendments, and we will be here to support the swift passage of this bill, that will repeal Bill 45.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to speak to Bill 24, the Public Sector Services Continuation Repeal Act. I will try to be brief, but there's lots to share on this bill. First, it does repeal contentious Bill 45, which my colleagues and I fought vehemently against in this Legislature. It was an unprecedented attack on workers' rights. It was completely unconstitutional, which we shared with the Assembly on numerous accounts, although I will jog the member's memory to the fact that this was one of the bills on which the government invoked closure. So not only was it trying to ram through an unconstitutional bill; it tried to do it at breakneck speed by shutting down debate and discussion within this Chamber and Assembly. For that, shame on the government.

Yes, this is a step in the right direction. In fact, this is something that many of our friends in labour are celebrating. However, we should have never gotten here. The opposition warned the government numerous times of this, how it was in defiance of the Constitution and the Charter, and of course the government in its infinite wisdom needed to be reminded after the fact and dragged back.

I just want to highlight why we were so opposed to this, just in case there are members who can't quite remember Bill 45. It prohibited public-sector employees or trade unions from doing anything to cause or consent to a strike, and that was even talking about a strike. If they did, unions were charged $1 million a day for strike threats, paid to a liability fund to recover employers' costs. Fines on unions were $250,000 plus $50 per employee, multiplied by the number of days the strike occurred. There were $10,000 daily fines for individual officers or reps of a union, fines for employees equal to daily pay, and a $500 fine for any Albertan organization for supporting a strike threat. You know, this was any employee who causes or consents to a strike; an employee who does anything considered a strike threat, which wasn't defined in the legislation, of course; a union that engages in a strike threat; a person who counsels anyone to do anything considered a strike threat; an employer that does not suspend the deduction or remittance of dues to unions; a person, employer, or union who contravenes an abatement order.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre in her speech was talking about: why did the government come to this conclusion? I have an answer. It was because of all of the work that public-sector and private-sector unions did: speaking out against this bill, holding rallies, and getting Albertans to speak up around the province. You know, I will note that it wasn't just the public-sector unions that this bill was affecting. This bill was so offensive that workers, unionized and non-unionized, around the province were saying: this is absolutely absurd, that you are trying to shut down speech. This is the irony, of course. I mean, the government has numerous lawyers – either all of them were sleeping, or I'm not sure what they were doing – who should have recognized that this was directly a Charter violation of their fundamental rights in our country. It was the workers and the people of this province, alongside my colleagues in the Alberta NDP caucus, who raised these concerns and spoke out against this.

I can't help but think that the timing of this repeal is more than coincidental, you know, as we're coming up to an early election call, election 2015, that's about to happen, and maybe the government realized: well, we shouldn't be chasing public-sector workers and basically forcing them to turn on us; we may actually need their support. But I'll remind the government that they learned their lesson and saw how you treat them in this.

Going to the legislation, the legislation wasn't about wages or unions. It was about undermining the rights of Alberta workers and the safety of all working Albertans. In second reading of Bill 45 we called this legislation "an unnecessary and heavy-handed piece of legislation that goes too far." We raised the fact that Bill 45 "redefines strike in a way that it has never been defined in this province." It was my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona who said that.

This piece of legislation was absolutely a Charter violation, which has been affirmed by the Supreme Court in their decision in SFL versus Saskatchewan. In section 2 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms it states:

Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

- (a) freedom of conscience and religion;
- (b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;
- (c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and
- (d) freedom of association.

The Supreme Court found that in Saskatchewan a similar bill violated 2(d), freedom of association.

But this legislation was also unprecedented because the following did not appear in other Canadian pieces of legislation or to the degree that it was proposed here in Alberta, and that was the strike threat, the abatement orders, or gag orders, and gag laws on employees and other Albertans who indicate that they support a strike threat. Now, gag law and Albertans: I mean, as far as this goes, section 18 of Bill 45 stifled all dissent. Essentially, it reminded me of the thought police here: $500 daily fines to any Albertan who supports a strike threat, which includes any act or threat to act that can be reasonably perceived as a strike threat.

Section 73 of the Public Service Employee Relations Act states that the fine for an illegal lockout is not more than $10,000. This government doesn't issue fines or penalties for fatalities or unsafe worksites or for corporations guilty of environmental destruction, yet this government has no problems with going after the men and women who place their lives on the line daily for this province and really are the backbone behind our public service and help us to be able to have the life that we do in this province. As I've mentioned, you know, unions would be charged a million dollars a day for a strike threat, which is absolutely absurd.

So I will be supporting this bill. The Alberta NDP supports this bill in its repeal. But I want to give credit where credit is due, and that's not to the government. The credit is due to the public-sector workers, the men and women who spoke out against this draconian piece of legislation to say that it was not only unconstitutional; it was wrong. It was an attack on workers and, essentially, an attack on all Albertans. Essentially, any Albertan could have been fined for discussing a strike threat. Again, the last time I checked, we lived in a country that protected freedom of speech, but apparently this PC government decided it would try to rewrite that legislation. So I'm very happy that this is a victory for Albertans.

Again, we know that it never would have come to pass because of the constitutional challenges in the Supreme Court, but once again this PC government has to be dragged across the finish line to do the right thing because, Lord knows, it wouldn't happen on their own. And I do question the timing of this again, conveniently right before we all head to the polls and Albertans head to the polls, in the hope of trying to glue together the tattered relationship that this government has with its public sector.

You know, in light of all this, Mr. Speaker, I found it quite rich that this piece of legislation came up shortly after the former Premier and numerous cabinet ministers thanked on a regular basis all the men and women for the work that they did during the floods in southern Alberta, risking their lives and reaching out their hands, their wallets, their hearts to help Albertans in need. It was the front line or many public-sector workers, from our EMS, police, fire, emergency crews to social workers, et cetera, and they are the very people that this government then turns their guns on.

Again, I'm glad that Albertans spoke out against it. Once again, I think that this was a victory not only for Albertans. You know, we were very happy to play our part. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I will be supporting this bill, that never should have been introduced in this Legislature, and I truly hope that it never will.

If there is a message that I can pass on, it's that there still is great concern as far as public-sector pensions and legislation that will be coming. That will be coming after the election. So it will be very interesting. We'll keep a watchful eye on how that plays out, yet again another moment in Alberta's recent history where our men and women on the front lines spoke out against a bill that would have been a direct attack on them and their livelihood, and once again here we are where the opposition, in combination with working Albertans, has to shame the government into doing the right thing.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:50

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker, the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of this bill, and I will differ from my previous colleagues speaking on it. It was inevitable that this was going to come here regardless of what happened in Saskatchewan. When this bill was first introduced, Bill 45, closure was passed and enacted before we could even get into second reading. It was quite sad that we would violate the democratic process like that and limit debate and end up here today repealing this. As far as I'm concerned, this is the fruition of bad governance, and I've seen nothing yet to show that we've changed the way we govern. We may have changed the manager in charge, but we have not changed the way we're behaving in the democratic process.

Regardless of what the unions thought of Bill 45, I don't have a problem looking at penalties for illegal acts and debating to make sure that the penalties of an illegal act, the fines, fit the crime, so to speak. There ought to always be deterrents. What this bill did was violate some very fundamental rights: the right of freedom of association and the right of freedom of speech. These are two paramount rights that make our democracy work, and we should never ever pass a bill that infringes upon those rights. Here we are today repealing this, yet we passed a bill just earlier this week where we gave a fish adviser the authority to enter onto people's property without a warrant, violating what I believe is due process of law. [interjections] Fish adviser, whatever. It's a nice title: fish adviser.

It's a sad state of affairs, to be perfectly honest. It's a sad state of affairs. What it shows us is the consistency that we have going on here with a government that constantly has to backtrack, yet it continues to violate the rights of its citizens by not being thorough when it introduces legislation and railroading that legislation through. That is what happened with Bill 45; it's what happened with the amendment on this fish bill that we passed with the fish adviser. It drives you nuts sometimes as you watch this happening, but the sad part is that nothing is changing. We're continuing down that path.

The good news is that we do have a court system that can look at the constitutional aspects of some of these bills, at whether or not they're within the Charter or outside the Charter. This was warned early on, in the beginning, when this bill was brought forward, that it was highly questionable if it was going to survive a Charter challenge. Now, this bill never actually got that far. It never went that far. It was clear from what happened on another law that was very similar in another province that this bill was never going to go down and survive that Charter challenge.

Yet we still as a government here are putting through laws. These people are passing laws, railroading them through without legitimate debate, without the necessary debate, I should say, that would expose some of this and be open-minded to remove some of this from laws before they are passed. I suspect that we will be back here again with repeals of some of these other acts that violate issues dealing with property rights and individual rights before we're done.

I will support this bill. I was opposed to Bill 45 originally; I was opposed to Bill 46 originally. I just felt that they were overkill beyond reason. It violated due process of law, in my view. The idea that we would punish an individual for the acts of two others, even the idea that they would be discussing under their right of freedom of speech, under their right of freedom of association, if somebody were to overhear them discussing anything that could be deemed illegal, not that it was illegal but could be deemed illegal, a third party could be punished – that was never going to survive, in my view, and I'm glad the government finally came around and said: we've got to deal with this.

It was also the way they came around. Clearly, we are now in that election mode of preparing for the election. I know some of the members were heckling earlier as if they didn't understand it, but they should at least look at the supplemental bill we just passed. There's $28 million in there for the election, and we passed that. Clearly, whenever that writ is brought forward and dropped, we will be into an election mode, and the government can go out and say: well, we repealed this. But were they going to do it of their own volition? Were they actually going to do it on the efforts of the opposition or even the efforts of the public? That's debatable. But it was clear that they had to do it because of what happened in the court system.

So here we are. You know, the government gets credit for it. They'll take credit for it in the election, but it was the fact that it was so egregious and such an offence to the rights of the citizens of this province that the higher courts were not going to allow it to stand in the first place. So it was inevitable we were going to end up here.

With that, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker.

If there are no other speakers, I'll offer the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour to close debate.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Several things that the hon. members who spoke said I agree with. This is a victory for Albertans. This is their government and their workers coming together in a closer, more collaborative, more co-operative way and a strong indication that this government and this province are under new management. I believe that repealing the Public Sector Services Continuation Act will indeed be the first step toward a new era and a new relationship with our workers and their collective bargaining representatives, their union representatives.

Mr. Speaker, this government wants to build a new spirit of co-operation with our workers and their representatives because they are a key element in this province. They are the ones that are going to enable us to weather the current economic difficulties and move forward in a sustainable manner. When Albertans get excited about the work done by their government in Alberta, they get excited about the work that the workers do.

For that reason I am proud to carry Bill 24, the Public Sector Services Continuation Repeal Act, and I ask and encourage all of my colleagues in the Legislature to support it. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 24 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 20

Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to present for third reading Bill 20, the proposed Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015.

I would like to thank all members who participated in second reading and Committee of the Whole for their supportive comments. Bill 20 is an important piece of legislation that will fulfill the commitment by the Premier, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, and Alberta's major municipal associations to bring forward legislative amendments on matters on which municipalities, business, and industrial stakeholders have reached consensus; demonstrate progress on the Premier's commitment to develop city charters; clarify administration of off-site levies; confirm existing policy decisions by moving them into the act or creating new regulation-making authority for various regulations; address several housekeeping items to support consistency, clarity, and readability. The MGA impacts every Albertan, Mr. Speaker, the private sector, and every ministry within government in one form or another.

Our government is committed to supporting communities. A key part of this is reviewing the MGA so that Alberta's municipalities have a strong foundation upon which to grow and thrive. Bill 20 is an important step in ensuring that the MGA continues to support strong, viable communities in the future.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 20 is an excellent example of collaboration with our municipal partners and industrial stakeholders, and I am very proud to support it. I would like to encourage all members to support Bill 20.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak at third reading of Bill 20, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015. There are a number of changes in Bill 20 that we are very supportive of, and we fully appreciate the work that the minister, as I said last evening, and the department staff have done working with stakeholders to get agreement on these items.

The new rules around a closed meeting provide some guidance for councils around the province and will support clarity and transparency for meetings and promote better communication with community residents.

Another change that Albertans have asked for is the codes of conduct for elected municipal officials. Adding some clear standards for the behaviour of our elected leaders will help decision-makers, councillors, staff, and citizens to better understand the role of the council and the expectations that we have of them.

However, we do have some concerns, as I mentioned last night as well in Committee of the Whole. Bill 20 has moved very quickly, and several of the provisions in the bill leave the meat and potatoes to the regulations. This means that when we get to the actual rules around annexation, amalgamation, and the codes of conduct, those discussions will not happen inside this Assembly, and citizens and opposition MLAs will not get to talk about the details before they become law. This is not governing with transparency, in our opinion.

It appears that this government has delayed all of the contentious aspects of the MGA review down the road and until after the election. Anything in this bill which could have caused any dissent will be handled safely during the fall and spring. The part that allows city charters does exactly this. Bill 20 allows the city charters to be created through regulation. These charters are enormously important pieces of legislation, and having them developed outside of the Assembly is lacking in transparency.

Yesterday evening the Minister of Municipal Affairs said:

We also heard during second reading, Madam Chair, debate, concern over the transparency of a charter being developed as a regulation that would be approved by cabinet before it would take effect. I want to be clear. This amendment will not alter that approach. If we were to require that charters could only be implemented as legislation rather than through regulation, charters would take considerably longer to develop, and this would not be in the spirit of the agreement we signed in the fall.

So this government has put its timelines ahead of making sure that there is good, thorough consideration of the charter in the Assembly.

We had intended to bring forward, actually, an amendment yesterday evening, and we weren't able to. For the record I'd like to read this amendment into the record today.

Mr. Stier to move that Bill 20, Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015, be amended in section 14, in the proposed section 141.4, by adding the following after subsection (6):

(7) Despite any other provision of this Part, a charter shall not provide taxation powers to a charter city that exceed the taxation powers available to the city under this Act.

Now, there have been several ministers of Municipal Affairs since the last election, and they have taken different positions on new taxes for big cities. One minister was clear that there were no new taxing powers coming. Another said in an interview that perhaps there could be new taxing powers if the city had held a plebiscite.

The city mayors have clearly said that they'd like to have some new revenue-generating tools. Given this history I think that everyone will benefit from complete clarity when it comes to this government's intentions. New taxation powers for our city would be a very impactful change, both for our big cities and for the pocketbooks of Alberta taxpayers, and it's important to be open about it. Our amendment looked for some clarity on this issue, and we don't have that clarity at this point, Mr. Speaker.

I hope that the minister can spell out the intent of the charter legislation with respect to taxation for this Assembly before this bill actually passes. As we've said from the beginning, Wildrose supports the concept of a city charter, absolutely. But the powers allowed to the future charters in this bill are very broad. The power of the charter documents could be very far reaching, and Wildrose believes that these powers need more consideration.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I had spoken to this bill in second and had raised a couple of issues which were in fact covered partially in the amendment that the minister brought forward yesterday and which was subsequently passed. I understand what she's saying, that if all charters had to be negotiated as separate pieces of legislation, it would take forever, but frankly that's just not a very good excuse. This Assembly has far too many examples of passing legislation that's essentially shell legislation. It says that the minister can do whatever they want under regulation, almost anything they want under regulation, and then it's passed off, and it all happens behind closed doors, and that's just not appropriate when we're talking about a big-city charter or a city of Calgary act or a city of Edmonton act. It's not appropriate to have it in regulations.

Now, I will note that I think the city of Calgary has been very clear. They do not want this to be in regulations. They want a city of Calgary act. Good on them. I think the city of Edmonton has been less vocal; as far as I know, they may even be willing to do it under regulations. I'm not willing for them to do it under regulations because it's just not a wise idea if this is going to be the same government in place. What the government giveth, it can take away very quickly, actually, even as a sort of pre-election giveaway or takeaway.

We've had a number of things reversed recently by the Premier as pre-election goodie bags, and some people will be very happy with some of the things that he's done, but it does go to show you that if it's not in legislation in front of this Assembly, it can be reversed without any further discussion ever taking place. What's done on the Assembly floor has to be undone on the Assembly floor. What's done in regulations: poof. Whatever. There's no Hansard. There are no tape recordings. There's no live streaming. As far as I know, there aren't even minutes kept, so the ability of anyone to hold the government to account on deals they may or may not have made behind closed doors in changing regulations: nada. Boy, I wouldn't want to be a big city trying to get a big-city charter or even a small city trying to get a civic charter and have it so unstable that it could just be whisked away by an order in council or a ministerial order or an adjustment in regulations.

An Hon. Member: They wouldn't do that.

Ms Blakeman: Ha ha. Oh, one of my colleagues here is feeling kinder today than I am.

I think it's important that that section not be allowed to go by. I understand that the clause about the city charters is somewhat of a placeholder while they proceed with the actual negotiation on this. Okay. But I still think it's important that it come before the Assembly as an act.

The proposed charter would be published on a website. Yes, that's transparency, but, no, it's not transparency. To be debated in front of this House, where people can come and sit in the gallery and watch us do it or watch it live streaming: it's not the same thing.

The cleanup that happened around giving itself extra powers, it's in here in the amendment under section 14, "authorize the charter city to modify or replace, by bylaw, a provision of this Act or any other enactment, with respect to the charter city, to the extent set out in the charter," which was a fix that needed to happen, although

I'm sure that people I know in the city won't be happy for some of us having outed this one because the way it read, it actually did allow cities by bylaw to change anything in the MGA. No. So that has been clarified with additional language, specifically adding in "to the extent set out in the charter," which is a good thing.

There was also that council has to hold a public hearing before second reading of a bylaw that would be enacted in that particular way. That's fine. Most of them have public hearings anyway. Certainly, the cities of Edmonton and Calgary operate that way. I'm assuming that a number of the smaller ones do as well, but if they don't, then it's giving consistency across the board, and that is a good thing.

Oh, the one other thing was around levies. I've been flipping through here, looking, and I haven't been able to find the section that was specifically, I think, correcting or attempting to correct a problem with levies being assessed against the primary developer. Then if it wasn't all of the assessment that had to happen under the current laws, the city wasn't able to go back and get the rest of the money because the legislation did not allow them to go back and say: "Oh, and there's more." It just said once, and that was it. I understand that that has been addressed in this act, but, to be perfectly honest, I haven't found it yet, and standing here looking for it while I'm talking to you, I doubt I'm going to find it that way either.

I will say thank you very much for the changes here. I still think we've got a ways to go. There are some other things I'm looking for in the additional amendments and updating to the Municipal Government Act. I think there are certainly some things that can be done around zoning permissions, not only who but what.

For example, where cities are trying to say, "No; we want a certain number of homes, you know, 5 per cent of homes, in this development to be handicapped accessible or wheelchair accessible," my understanding is that they don't have the ability to do that now or to say that this will be affordable housing. I think there are some zoning questions, not only sort of what is developed but who it's developed for and some of those other restrictions that have to be offered to municipalities or particularly the larger municipalities that are trying to have some control over how the developments happen.

I know in the city of Edmonton we have a great commitment to not expanding any further and to creating more density in all parts of our city and not continuing to push outward all the time, frankly, outward on very high-quality, arable land. It's just wrong to plunk houses and acreages on land that should be farmed because that's what that land was there for. We are trying to do that. It is a struggle for people, but the city's ability to make all of that happen is sometimes restricted by what is and what is not in the MGA.

I look forward to the additional discussions. I understand that's another act that's coming in about a year. Mr. Speaker, you hear a lot from people about – well, to be honest, I use a swear word . . . [interjections] I know; I'm not going to, so relax – blankety-blank wheat fields, as though that's all there is to Alberta. That's not all there is to Alberta. Alberta is an urban province, and I'm one of the few MLAs in here that actually talk about Alberta being an urban province. Two-thirds of our people live in higher population areas. That includes towns. That includes cities. That includes smaller areas, smaller towns that have a higher density of people, and that's as it should be, but we have an imbalance. We put a lot of time and energy into looking at what needs to happen in rural areas and not a commensurate amount of time and attention and love and care into what is needed to make our cities safe and vibrant and livable and all of those things.

I mean, we have one Municipal Government Act, and we have – I don't know – how many acts that deal with life in lesser populated areas of Alberta? A lot. Even just in front of us right now we've got an agricultural organization bill, and that's quite common, where we have bills that are dealing specifically with life in less-populated areas but only the one bill that deals with what's happening in populated areas.

So I think it's important that we remember that we are an urban province. I go into this election with an aggressively urban agenda, and that's not to say that my colleagues in here are not worthy. Of course, they are. They're going to represent their constituents as well as they can, but so am I, and I'm going to start pushing back more and more and more to make sure that urban Alberta gets their fair share and is able to participate in the life of the province to the degree that they should.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Liberal caucus is in favour of supporting this bill with no amendments, and off we go.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've spoken to this bill at several stages, so I'll keep my comments short. Again, you know, I am glad to see that this bill coming forward was done through a consensus model, that organizations like AUMA, AAMD and C, the mayors of Calgary and Edmonton are on board with these. I do find it fascinating, though, that the easy stuff is taken care of first and done first. Essentially, I think Albertans could read between the lines: take care of the easy stuff, or the pre-election goodies, as I like to think of it, now, and then deal with the contentious items, those that, quite honestly, Edmonton and Calgary specifically have been asking for for a long time now, the tools, the resources, and the ability to provide the services and programs that two-thirds of the population of this province rely on.

I do look forward to the discussion on what tools the province will give to the cities, but quite frankly the current model is not working. Our cities are taking on record levels of debt, infrastructure debt, unable to keep up with the pace of growth that our province is experiencing. You know, a large part of that, Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, is because property tax is a regressive form of tax, but it's also one of the only tools that cities have. Now, I know that Edmonton and Calgary have a few other tools at their disposal, but they are very few and far between. Quite frankly, the cities need new tools to be able to keep up, again, just with infrastructure demands and with the fast growth of our two largest cities.

The other thing that I highlighted last night, Mr. Speaker, which is important to reiterate, is the fact that many Albertans have to come into Edmonton or Calgary to find specialized services that they need, because their communities, whether they're bedroom communities to the two larger cities or if they live in other parts of the province – just because of population they need to come into Edmonton or Calgary to find services. The challenge with that: I mean, yes, it's great for the cities – you have more people coming in, spending money in their businesses, et cetera – but they're also using, you know, city streets, roads, sidewalks. There's the wear and tear issue that's going on, yet the city has no way to recoup some of the costs or dollars from those folks because they only pay property taxes in their home jurisdictions.

4:20

You know, Edmonton and Calgary are under a crunch. Like I said, they're facing record-high levels of debt. It is clearly unsustainable. It's clearly not working and needs to be addressed. This is something that the two cities have been talking about for years.

Again, I'm happy to see a baby step forward in the fact that there is a placeholder for a charter in this bill. I had questioned last night, Mr. Speaker, the fact that it is referred to as a city charter and not a big-city charter, the province reluctant to acknowledge the very different roles that the two largest cities in our province play compared to other urban municipalities.

Now, I'm not saying that other urban municipalities shouldn't be given a more broad set of tools to use as well. I know that cities like Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, Lethbridge, Red Deer are also growing at a very fast pace and are in need of new tools as well, but I think there is a difference between, say, the fifth-largest city in the province and the city of Calgary, you know, again, in their sheer size, in their growth, in their volume, in their use of city resources. I will be curious to see how these details are hammered out.

Again, I wish the government had something to bring forward at this time, which – they don't – is fine. We'll have to wait, but I will continue to be a voice, you know, lobbying for a fair system, one that does take into consideration the unique needs of different urban centres around the province.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, I will be supporting. The Alberta NDP does support this bill. I know we want to get it through fairly quickly – well, I guess we are; we're already in third reading – but I do, like I said, question the timing of this. It does look like pre-election goodies to me. I look forward to a very robust debate in the fall and next spring as far as when, you know, the next bill comes forward that has, I'm sure, more contentious items in it.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Are there other speakers?

Seeing none, I'll invite the Minister of Municipal Affairs to close debate.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll rise and move third reading. In doing so, I'll just make a couple of comments, if I could, and thank, first of all, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West for doing such an outstanding job carrying this bill – as a former minister he did a lot of work on this – and the staff that have worked as well. I also want to thank all the members in the House for the discussion and for the input.

I'd like to just make two comments if I could. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, on the question with regard to what sections the levies are in: section 71. For your reference sections 67 to 69 are areas that you can find that in.

As well, to the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod – I wasn't in the Chamber; I just stepped out for a quick moment, but I heard him – with regard to taxation powers. Mr. Speaker, I want to be clear that we have always said that charters are not about taxation powers for cities. Furthermore, the Supreme Court of Canada has already ruled that taxation powers can only be dealt with via legislation and specifically that taxation powers cannot arise incidentally in delegated legislation such as regulations. In other words, if there ever was contemplation of additional tax powers for cities, those powers would have to be granted to the cities through legislation approved here in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and subject to the full rigours of this House. Therefore, the input that was given: we hear it, but it's already been decided before in the Supreme Court.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would move third reading of Bill 20.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 20 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 24

Public Sector Services Continuation Repeal Act

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise and speak to some of the comments and questions raised earlier about Bill 24, the Public Sector Services Continuation Repeal Act. If I sponsor another bill, I promise to say it three times in advance so that I can say it more easily than I have been able to today.

Some of the comments today. I think we got one question from the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills: why the change? Well, several things have changed, Mr. Chair. Probably the first one, the biggest one, and the most important one is that this government and this province are under new management. Through that we intend to reset our relationship, improve our relationship with our workers and those that represent them, and because of that we made it known that we intend to bring forward essential services legislation. The other thing that has changed – it was raised by the hon. member from the New Democratic Party in his earlier remarks – is that there was certainly a Supreme Court decision in Saskatchewan recently. When you add all of these things together, it's certainly time to make this change.

Government is now reviewing its approach to public-sector labour relations, and we plan to put into place essential services legislation. We want to move forward with a new co-operative approach to public-sector relations, and, Mr. Chair, we've already started with that better relationship. I've started meeting with union leaders from several of our employee groups in a respectful two-way dialogue, that we intend to continue in that manner, asking them what's important when we go ahead with our essential services legislation. I've made it clear to them when we have spoken that any meeting that we've had won't be the last one unless they want it to be. In other words, the door is open for more input, more consultation, more advice, more comments, and that's the way that we intend for it to be.

So repealing the Public Sector Services Continuation Act is a logical step in this process. Mr. Chair, we're interested in working collaboratively with public-sector employees, employers, and employees' representatives through the collective bargaining process and providing Albertans with the services they need when they need them and doing so in a way that is fair and thoughtful to taxpayers and also to the Albertans that do the work.

We have already begun reviewing the essential services models of legislation that are in place in other jurisdictions, looking for best practices, and we plan to table the new legislation that will follow in the not-too-distant future.

Mr. Chair, with that, I will listen, and I'm looking forward to comments from members of the House, hoping for their kind support at the end of it all.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Questions or comments from this side of the House?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on the bill. Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 24 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

4:30

Bill 14

Agricultural Societies Amendment Act, 2015

The Chair: Hon. associate minister of agriculture, did you have some comments to add?

Mr. McDonald: No.

The Chair: Are there other questions or comments? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just want to be extremely brief on this. I'm fully in support of it. I think it's excellent advancement for policy in the province and for the rural areas.

Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: Speaking on behalf of my colleagues in the Liberal opposition caucus, I am in favour of this legislation. Speaking for myself, coming from a background of not-for-profit management, I was really pleased to see this because it is bringing in those agricultural societies, which have a very long and rich tradition in this province, and updating them in line with the Societies Act. I expect that this will help them in their governance and help them move ahead with some of the other advantages that were available to other groups but that they have not been able to take advantage of.

These are groups that do an enormous amount of work in rural areas; I mean, the curling rinks and the ag halls and in some cases, I think, even the exhibition grounds and the fairs. It's just a huge number of volunteers that are involved here. I think there were questions about liability, about governance, as I said, powers of the person, powers of the – no, I'm not going to get that word right. It'll come to me. It allows groups to borrow money, for example, or to purchase land.

I'm just really glad to see this, and I thank the minister for bringing it forward. Of course, we are in committee, but I will notify you that the Liberal caucus has no amendments to this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll make my comments brief. I just want to start by reiterating that we do recognize the importance, the significance that agricultural societies have and especially their contributions to our communities throughout the province. I also want to extend an appreciation to the minister's staff, who responded to me this morning as far as questions I had last night in second reading. Getting a response back was greatly appreciated, and my questions are answered. Therefore, I will reiterate that I'll be supporting this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other questions, comments, or amendments?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question.

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 14 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 19 Education Amendment Act, 2015

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Mr. Dirks: Thank you to all members who have offered their thoughts on this particular bill. I do want to respond to some of the comments that we received yesterday, and I thank you, all, for them.

As you know, the Education Amendment Act, 2015, does not in any way change the intent or overall policy objectives of the act. Let me just briefly comment on four issues that were raised. One was the reference to assessment language. One of the amendments in Bill 19 changes all references to “evaluation,” to “test,” and to “examination” throughout the Education Act to “assessment.” A concern was raised that this substitution reflects a change in approach. I can assure you that this is not the case. This amendment is simply to ensure consistency in terminology across policy and legislation.

Regarding the issue of residency, the topic of residency as defined in the Education Act was also raised. Again, I would like to restate that the purpose of Bill 19 is to provide increased clarity and accuracy to ensure alignment with other legislation. The policy surrounding student residency has been solidified in the Education Act, and the amendments in Bill 19 only serve to provide additional clarity and accuracy to the act. In this case, the amendment ensures that the term “resident” indicates that a student only has to reside in Alberta during the school year, and it is not mistaken for the residency requirements for voting or running in an election.

The questions raised in the debate regarding student residency were not relevant to the Bill 19 amendments but to the Education Act policy itself. That being said, I’ll take a moment to address concerns in this area. Under the Education Act student residency, not the parents’ residency, will be used to determine which school jurisdiction is responsible for providing educational programming to a student. This student-centred approach is one of the main pillars of the Education Act and evident throughout the legislation.

Yesterday the member raised concerns regarding this policy and the funding impacts it may have. From the government perspective, students will be supported regardless. In some cases funding may be directed to a different school board than under previous legislation. While this could have a nominal impact on school boards, I along with others at the ministry will work with our stakeholders to address any concerns that may arise from this change. In the end, however, we believe that this approach, which is consistent with other Canadian provinces, is best for the students.

Regarding trustee disqualification, the question was also raised about section 87(1)(c) of the act, which relates to the disqualification of a trustee. Again, as the member who mentioned this acknowledged, this does fall outside the scope of the purpose of this discussion. No amendments proposed in Bill 19 impact this section of the act. However, I would like to provide assurance that there will be robust processes in place to ensure the integrity of the education system. We will empower boards to have appropriate processes in place to deal with a wide range of situations, including serious matters such as trustee disqualification or potential trustee disqualification. But, again, that issue does not have bearing on the Education Amendment Act.

Finally, with regard to Northland the topic of the Northland school division was raised. This situation is independent from any debate regarding Bill 19. That being said, providing all Alberta students with a quality education is of the utmost importance to me and to the ministry. We are working with Northland school division and local communities on improving student learning and ensuring effective governance of schools in that particular region. I thank the member in the Assembly for her good support.

I would once again like to thank all members who have offered their thoughts on and support for Bill 19, the Education Amendment Act, 2015. This bill will ensure that the Education Act, upon proclamation, will be effective in serving the long-term needs of Alberta students, and therefore I hope all members will join me in supporting this important piece of legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I’m glad I did get an opportunity to speak briefly to this today while we’re in Committee of the Whole. There are a couple of things. Gee, I didn’t read the Hansard from last night, so I hope I don’t duplicate what other people have said, but I’ll tell you that one of the issues that I’m concerned about the minister just touched upon. I’m sure he and I have been so involved in the debate around GSAs. Both of us are aware of very uncomfortable situations with boards of trustees, where one or two members might be seen as the outliers or the other side of the issue or however we want to cast that.

I think it would be very unfortunate if we did not take care to put strong limitations but also appeal processes in place to ensure that a board of trustees cannot eject or disqualify, you know, one or two trustees because basically there’s a differing of ideologies or the way people approach things or how aggressive one side is over the other side in taking on new ideas or old ideas or whatever. I mean, it’s not hard to see. We can even see it here. You do end up with people kind of grouping up with like-minded people, and it can make it really hard for people that are sitting outside of that kind of in-crowd.

I feel really strongly that it’s the voter who is the boss, and if the voters elected that trustee or that MLA to be in place, it’s really not for anyone else to be removing that person. Now, I understand that there are extraordinary grounds, but they should be extraordinary to anyone looking at the situation. So we’re talking about severe mental illness, where, you know, someone doesn’t have control of their finances and of their daily living and that sort of thing. Anybody would recognize that. The test needs to be very high.

It can be tough in this province when every board, every agency, even outside boards and agencies have the majority of people who are appointed to it or that are active with it as members of an hon. colleague opposite’s family. It can be hard to raise issues and stick to your guns about things. I would know this. I think we need to be really, really careful here. I have always been deeply shocked and distressed when I have seen members of cabinet on the government side dismiss a school board or dismiss or appoint an administrator on a town council.

You know, I believe that Albertans are quintessentially sensible, well-meaning, fair, and progressive people, and I really don't like going over their heads to say: no, no, no, we're going to get rid of that town council. I know it happens. I've seen examples of where things just got so out of control and it was so divisive that, literally, a town council couldn't serve their people. I know it happens. We put things in legislation to address those extraordinary circumstances, but we cannot make it so easy that those clauses can be invoked and proceeded with without a great deal of caution, and I would also say this for trustees.

I think we have to use a reasonable-person approach here. We have to be careful, one, that the minister doesn't have the power to wipe out a board of trustees – I just think that's wrong – and, two, that we don't set up a situation where the inside group can boot the outside group. That happens a lot. You know, you end up with those 6 to 7 votes – and it always comes out that way – or 9 to 3 or something like that. Gee, wouldn't it be convenient if they could just get rid of those three people? We have to be very, very on guard about that. So that was one rebuttal I wanted to give the minister.

Special needs: the section on page 4, section 8, amending section 19(1), alternative programs. My concern here is always around funding for special-needs students in schools. Actually, I was door-knocking on Sunday and had a special-needs teacher say to me: "So, Laurie, what are you going to do? What do you think is important? What would you recommend for the school system?" You know, I had some opinions, as I always do. But, really, what I was reminded of was how we fund mild and moderate special-needs students in our system. We tend to fund only the severe special-needs kids but not the mild and moderate. What happens is, as we are doing with the health care system – that's the other place that you see this modelled – that we tend not to be able to or not want to treat people in the beginning stages of something, so we tend to say, "Well, that's okay. You go home for the night. We'll send you home from ER," and then they get sicker, and they come back again at the point where they're really sick. Then they get into the hospital.

Ditto for the kids with special needs. They're not doing well. They're struggling. There are behavioural problems, blah, blah. Well, that's mild and moderate, but that can move into high special needs, and that's when they get the funding. So where's the incentive to try to work with kids to help them integrate better, to make sure that the supports are in the classroom so that teachers can teach and not be dealing with managing inclusion kids in their class, who sometimes can be hostage takers? That's a really dramatic term to use, and I know that. I don't mean to offend the parents, but that can be what happens.

I just want to make sure here – no; I can't make sure. I've been talking about this for 18 years. But, really, if we believe in education – and we as a public do. We all support education. We all pay taxes to education, even people that don't have children, even people that don't have kids anymore or yet. We all support public education because we understand that it's the key to the next generation. If we're going to do that and we want inclusive schools, we have to give the supports for that, and that support has been eroding quite a bit, so I just want to underline the importance of that.

I think what was being done here was that some schools, in order to provide these services, were in fact charging extra, specialized schools, alternative programs. It uses a particular teaching philosophy but is not religious education – making sure that they couldn't be charging extra for that, which is absolutely appropriate.

The other thing that I wanted to raise was education services agreements for First Nations students, page 6, section 13: "or a person authorized by the council of a band" after "Indian Act (Canada)." This is about Northland. The minister did talk about it a bit. I also pulled the Auditor General's special report on Northland school division. You know, clearly, the AG was very frustrated with the inability to enforce attendance. I wonder if this isn't somewhat of a cultural issue that is just not being addressed from a holistic point of view. I know that when my mother was teaching in the Northwest Territories, they really worked hard to make it a fun and cool and safe place to be to get those kids in school and keep them engaged. Mostly what this AG report is going over is that they couldn't even keep adequate attendance records, so there was no ability to enforce truancy. Now there's an old-fashioned word.

An Hon. Member: Very.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah.

I'm not sure that that's really at the bottom of what the problem is here. I know that this has been an ongoing heartache for people in education as they try to address this and to provide not just adequate but excellent education to kids that are living in the north and kids that are living in remote areas. Frankly, it's an issue that I have not seen any real resolution to. I understand that this was to make sure that the education service agreement standards applied to agreements between Alberta school boards and tribal councils or educational authorities authorized by council. The Alberta Regulations Act does not apply to an order made by the minister pertaining to the education service agreement, so I hope that isn't what the minister was talking about earlier. I was trying to grab my file and was not giving him undivided attention, so if he hasn't spoken about that, I'm wondering if he can explain why and what's behind that. If he did explain it already, I will just read it in Hansard, which I'm happy to do.

4:50

The rest of this. The dissolution of the school by the minister, appearing on page 11 under section 22, amending section 117, appears to have only two possibilities, which are, "The Minister may by order declare that any school division is dissolved," and on so doing, the board is dissolved and ceases to have any rights, powers, or privileges, and they can "establish a new school division in accordance with section 112." What's going on here? A lot of what I've seen in here is addressing particular schools and particular situations. In some cases I could sort of go through and call it the memorial, insert name of school here, amending section. I'm wondering what's anticipated by that particular section.

One last sticky note here. Why was the minister taken out of the petition section? Is that just a modernization? Petitions are a very long-held tradition to allow the people, the plain old people, to come forward and present a request to whoever is in power by doing that. I think that that very simple and very direct relationship or opportunity needs to be honoured, so I'm wondering why the minister has been removed from that. Now it just says: "when this Act provides for the doing of anything by petition or an elector wishes to present a petition to a board or the Minister." Now it would just be to a board. The petition must be in accordance with the regulations, so I'm wondering why the minister got cut out of that.

Right. Thank you very much. I appreciate getting responses to those questions, but other than that the Liberal caucus is in favour of this, and there would be no – let me double-check that – amendments.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: I'm just taking my time here because I'm not sure if the Minister of Education is choosing to respond to some of the Member for Edmonton-Centre's questions. Some of the member's concerns: I share those concerns, raised them yesterday evening, so there are some of them that are brought up.

I have a couple of specific things that I want to bring in. First of all, I do want to thank the Minister of Education for responding to my questions. I do think it's important, and I'm happy that he did. I wished all the time that for questions the opposition presented, questions around bills, the answers would be provided. Often they're not, so when they are, it is noted and appreciated.

I do have a couple of amendments that I plan to bring forward at this time. I'm just going to talk for a minute before I actually table the amendment if that's okay with you, Mr. Chair.

The first one is actually dealing with an issue that is occurring in Northland school division. However, you'll see shortly that the amendment deals with the issue of: when a board is dissolved by the minister and a trustee is appointed, I think it's really important that the length of time that a trustee can serve, an appointed trustee, before a board is re-elected needs to be limited and legislated. Right now the situation up in Northland school division is that the board was dissolved five years ago, so there has been a single appointed trustee serving for five years. Now, I'm not trying to point fingers at the trustee. I know that Northland school division is still struggling with school attendance, especially with chronic absenteeism, as I highlighted last night.

It is disappointing that part of the reason the minister at the time dissolved the board five years ago was because the Ministry of Education felt that the board wasn't doing as good of a job, in their opinion, as they could, encouraging attendance and improving attendance and completion rates and success in school. Now, I'm not about to stand here and either pass judgment on whether that was good or bad or otherwise, but the unfortunate part is that five years later, after a trustee has been appointed, we're still facing challenges, especially chronic absenteeism, up in Northland school division, so I think this needs to be addressed.

I'm sure there are members of the House that will have heard from residents up in Northland who are very vocal about getting local authority back, getting their autonomy back and their right to elect a board. That's something that I have asked ministers in Public Accounts in the past as far as when this will come to pass. When will the people who live in Northland school division be able to elect their board?

With that, Mr. Chair, I will give the requisite number of copies, the original is on the . . .

The Chair: We'll just pause for a moment, hon. member. You'll distribute those and send the original to the table, please.

Hon. members, this will be amendment A1, and you may speak to it, hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll read this amendment into Hansard. I move that Bill 19, Education Amendment Act, 2015, be amended by striking out section 15 and substituting the following:

Section 72(1) is amended

(a) by adding "for a maximum term of one year" after "official trustee";

(b) in clause (a) by striking out "section 71" and substituting "section 70."

What this essentially does is what I was speaking about, Mr. Chair. This isn't just about the situation up in Northland school division although that is our clearest . . . [interjections] Thank you.

That is our clearest example of when a trustee has been placed in lieu of an elected board. So the purpose of this amendment isn't just to address the issue in Northland school division; the purpose of this amendment is for the future to ensure that . . .

The Chair: Hon. members, can we keep the side conversations down, please? Thank you.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you. The purpose of this is so that in the future if a board is dissolved and an official trustee is appointed, we limit the amount of time that the trustee can serve. Part of it, Mr. Chair, again, is my concern that at the moment, with the legislation as it stands, there is no limit to how long the official trustee can serve. The concern is that it's been five years; the people of Northland school division are wanting their powers to re-elect or to elect a board of representatives as opposed to one that's been appointed. This amendment ensures that they can elect a trustee and that there is a time limit placed on it. I felt, Mr. Chair, that it was reasonable to put a one-year maximum limit, which should be sufficient time for a school division to sort out the challenges that they face.

5:00

With that, Mr. Chair, I'll take my seat, but I will urge members of the Assembly to support this amendment.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Speaking to the amendment, the hon. minister.

Mr. Dirks: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the concern of the member opposite. I do think, however, that this would be an imprudent amendment to make. In the Northland situation we are moving forward with a process that will eventually result in an elected board of trustees, and to simply say that you're restricted to one year or any terms as such would likely hobble the ministry and may not be, in fact, the best decision at a particular point in time for a board that has an official trustee.

So I will not be supporting this particular amendment and would urge members to likewise not support the amendment.

The Chair: Thank you.

Other speakers to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It does beg the question, and while I have the minister here, I would love for him to comment. When will, then, Northland school division be able to elect a board of trustees and move past the appointed official trustee? If the minister could comment, it would be greatly appreciated.

The Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Dirks: We are in the process of consultation at present, which has just started, as some of the members know, that will lead, first, to a preamble for a new act that will govern that particular division that needs to come into being. Once that act has been passed by this Assembly, then the process of election can begin. I cannot give you a predicted time frame as to the conclusion of that. We'll have to see where the consultation on the preamble to that act goes, and then we'll be in a position to have some indication as to how expeditiously thereafter we might be able to bring draft legislation to this House. I wish I could provide more definition, more clarity for the member, but it will be a process of consultation that we have to go through first. We are committed to move in that particular direction.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and I thank the minister for his response. A couple of questions that the minister may or may not be able to address at this time, again, dealing with this amendment. I am curious, as are many Albertans who live in Northland school division and, truthfully, folks who live throughout the province, as to why this process has taken so long. We've had five years of an official trustee who's appointed versus an elected board. Again, this is where this amendment is coming from, to ensure that in future we're not dragging our feet as far as trying to resolve issues.

The second question is more of a point. You know, the board was dissolved in part because of how the ministry felt that students were falling between the cracks, that there were some major issues and areas of concern going on in Northland school division. My concern today is that the most recent Auditor General's report came out and indicates that, you know, again, chronic absenteeism is still extremely high in Northland school division. In fact, one-third of students are experiencing chronic absenteeism.

Now, obviously, we know and the Auditor General noted that students can't learn if they're not present. If they're absent, they're not going to be learning the material that they need to and developing the skills that students need to develop in order to continue along their educational pathway and be successful. The dissolution of the board and the appointment of the trustee was supposed to curtail some of this absenteeism and, essentially, be a solution or part of a solution, and the reality is that it hasn't. In fact, the absenteeism, again, is about 900 students out of 2,700 who are chronically absent.

Now, I would recommend to the government to be looking into reasons for absenteeism, which the Auditor General couldn't through his report identify, but I'm sure it would be a combination of things, from distance in transportation to potentially looking at the socioeconomic situation of families, looking at value of education, looking at, again, how they're connecting, what practices are being employed.

Now, I don't doubt for a minute, Mr. Chair, that the individuals, the teachers, the staff at these schools aren't trying their hardest because I know that they wouldn't be there if they didn't care about the education and the future of their pupils, but clearly we have a problem here. Again, I don't think having an appointed trustee continue on has necessarily had the outcome that the ministry, I think, had hoped. Questions are: why has it taken so long? I appreciate that the minister has only been the Minister of Education for several months and not five years ago, but again we do have the same government in power, that's been there when the elected board of trustees was removed and this one was appointed.

The purpose of this amendment, again, is to move forward in a timely fashion. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Back to the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I shall attempt to amend this bill again. You know what? I'll send these up to the table before I begin.

The Chair: Please do.

This will be amendment A2, hon. members.

Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This amendment, I'll read it into Hansard here. I move that Bill 19, Education Amendment Act, 2015, be amended by striking out section 3 and substituting the following:

3 Section 4(1) is amended by striking out "in which the student resides" and substituting "in which the student's parent resides."

The purpose of this, quite frankly – and I spoke to it last night, Mr. Chair – is the concern with the changes to the residency requirements and the impact that that will have on school boards and school boards' abilities to provide special programs. The example that I gave last night, if there is – okay. Let me back up before I get to the example. When we switch from a parent to a student residency requirement, it's going to be a lot more difficult for boards to ascertain, to prove where a student lives. Parents have bills, they have records that are much easier to assess where the parent lives. A student could say that, well, they're staying with a friend who happens to live in that catchment area. So the concern of some of the school boards is that they're going to be over capacity because, quite frankly, a student could enrol and claim that they're in a catchment area, and now the school will go over capacity. That's the first concern.

The second concern. The example that I gave last night I think is a very prudent example. For example, the Alberta School for the Deaf: that school costs a significant amount of money to run and to operate, obviously, more so than a standard school, but that programming is very important, and we want to ensure that all students have access to high-quality education. But that school costs Edmonton public school board a lot more to operate than it does another school.

The challenge with the change to the residency requirement. If a student comes from another jurisdiction – let's say they come from Fort McMurray, where the parents live. The student comes to the Alberta School for the Deaf. Edmonton public would go to Fort McMurray or Wood Buffalo public school division and ask them to share the cost of the student going to the Alberta School for the Deaf because the funding that the government currently gives school boards is not adequate for the cost of specialized programming like the Alberta School for the Deaf. So EPSB would recoup the other half of the cost. They would share the cost with Wood Buffalo public school division.

If we moved the residency requirement to where the student dictates, and the student from Wood Buffalo, you know, moves to Edmonton, their residency is Edmonton, EPSB does not have any way to recoup some of the costs of operating that school. The concern is that if this happens, in numerous examples, EPSB will simply not be able to afford to run a specialized school like this because they're not even recouping their cost. What that means is that they're drawing money from other schools. They're using money to pay to ensure that those specialized programs continue to run.

You know, as much as I appreciate the minister's intentions by saying that the government will ensure that schools get the funding, I can tell the minister right now that specialized schools do not receive the dollars that they need to operate. The school boards that operate them are using money that should be going to other schools, to other programs in order to pay for them because there simply is not enough money in their budget.

My concern is that – and Alberta School for the Deaf is just one example of a specialized program. They do exist throughout the province. But they're very, very important, Mr. Chair. Part of the reason they're extremely important is because, again, we want to ensure that every student in Alberta, regardless of ability or disability, has the opportunity to receive the highest quality of education. In order to do that, we need to provide and boards need to provide specialized services. But those specialized services cost money. At the moment this government is not investing enough money into education.

You know, we have examples of schools running massive infrastructure deficits. Interestingly, in Public Accounts this morning the Minister of Infrastructure was quite excited to talk about how the government has decided to put $100 million toward the infrastructure deficit. However, when you look at the current infrastructure deficit, between Edmonton public and CBE, Calgary board of education, it's about a 1 and a quarter billion dollar infrastructure deficit. CBE is getting close to a billion dollar infrastructure deficit in their schools. Edmonton public is at about $250 million. So when you hear of an injection of $100 million versus a shortfall of $1.25 billion, yeah, we're still significantly short. That's only two school boards in the province. Granted, the two largest boards in the province; however, only two out of a significant number.

This amendment, the intention of switching back to the parent residence, is because of the concerns that I have as far as ensuring that boards will get adequate dollars to operate and offer these specialized programs. For that reason, Mr. Chair, I will encourage members of the Assembly to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

Other speakers to the amendment?

Mr. Dirks: I appreciate the member's concern. However, Mr. Chair, Bill 19, as presently stated, is a student-centred approach to the main pillars of the Education Act. It supports that. From the government perspective I did indicate earlier in my comments today that students will be supported regardless, and that's what we want to see for all students. This particular approach on student residency is consistent with other Canadian provinces, so I do not believe that the amendment would be an improvement, and I would urge members not to support it.

The Chair: Other speakers to the amendment?

Ms Blakeman: I was listening carefully to both parties, hoping that there would be clarity. It's interesting because – I think it was actually called the Alberta School for the Deaf at one point – it used to be the only school that was directly under the minister's control. It was the minister's school, and I wonder now if that wasn't partly because of the specific requirements of that school for specialized funding, let's call it.

I am concerned because I represent a downtown riding. I would like to hear from the minister something a bit more specific about how the students would be supported in a school like the School for the Deaf so that we're reassured that the school itself is not pulling finances off the school board, which is the point that my colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview was trying to make and that dovetails with one of the issues that I was raising to the minister earlier, about the funding for special needs.

So, one, I am wondering if either one of you can tell me how many of these schools there are in the province and, two, if the minister could give me the Coles Notes on how these students get – oh, my God. You're not talking about voucher funding, are you, Minister? Okay. That was a good face. Well, sorry. It just occurred to me that you were talking about student-centred learning, and then as I'm trying to work my way through that, I'm thinking: "Oh, yes. Okay. So funding is following the student." Whoa. That's code for a voucher system, where. . .

Ms DeLong: It already does.

Ms Blakeman: Well, not quite in that way. Thank you for the participation. I'm always thrilled when I engage people, even if it's just to have them look at me and go: "Don't you know that already happens? What's wrong with you?"

To be fair, that's not my understanding of it. The voucher system that I'm talking about is the one where the parents are, you know, kind of given: this is the amount of money that you have, and you can send your kid anywhere you want, and the money will go with them. That's a slightly different voucher system than what we're talking about, is it not, Member for Calgary-Bow? Gotcha. So I'm sure that you'll be helpful in correcting me on that one because that is my bottom-line concern on this, that we're not changing the system from the way that we understand it to something like that dreaded voucher system, which I hope you have a different definition for.

But I am also interested in how many times this happens because I think that sometimes we get too caught up in a particular situation that we're sympathetic to, and then we end up doing a monster change for not very many people, and that's not always appropriate. So I'm hoping that I will get some answers from people about this particular situation. If I could just get some idea of how the minister thinks the funding would not be a problem in this particular instance.

Thank you.

5:20

The Chair: Other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I was hoping that the minister was going to jump up because the Member for Edmonton-Centre took the words right out of my mouth as far as how specifically and precisely – if this amendment does not go through and if we leave the wording the way it is, where it's up to a student where the student resides, how do we ensure that school boards do in fact get the dollars they need? I can tell the minister right now that the programming cost to run the Alberta School for the Deaf is more than what they receive per student and that it is the school board that is making that decision because it is a priority to offer that programming. The point is that they are taking operational dollars from other schools, from elsewhere in order to operate the school.

I do believe that these specialized programs are necessary. We should be delivering them and offering them to students throughout the province, absolutely, but they definitely need to be funded and adequately funded. I can tell you, Mr. Chair, that they are not. I can tell you that that's not just coming from school boards. I speak to teachers around the province regularly and can tell you that there is a shortfall of funding. We've got class sizes continually going up. Classroom complexity is constantly growing. We're dealing with, again, I mean, students of varying needs in a classroom. You know, quite frankly, if we want to ensure that students have the best possible education, we need to fund it.

I do hope that if the minister does not have a response at this time, he would in all seriousness provide a response, you know, not just an assurance that funding will be in place for specialized programming but details on how much funding and how he can ensure that that funding will go to the school boards and go to those specialized programs. Again, a simple solution to this is for funding to revert to going to the residence of the parent as opposed to the student.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

Other speakers?

Mr. Dirks: In fact, Mr. Chair, it's not a simple solution. In fact, it greatly complexifies things to do exactly what the member opposite is suggesting. Whether or not there is adequate funding provided for unique, one-off school situations such as the members have been referring to is a matter of debate and discussion and analysis and so on. In fact, we really do want an Education Act which is student-centred. Funding follows students. Where the student lives is where the funding should go, and that particular board will then be responsible. It's not some other board in some far-off locale in the province, geographically speaking, that is now going to be somehow responsible for funding. I do think that we have calibrated the language of the act appropriately and, as I indicated, would not be supporting this and would urge all members to follow suit.

The Chair: Thank you.

Other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Last comments. This is one example that I've provided; this is not a one-off. There are specialized programs that only exist in certain centres, that do not exist in all schools throughout the province because of a capacity and an ability to provide specialized programming or specialists in certain schools.

You know, I appreciate and I accept the minister's comments as far as: it's not necessarily a simple solution. But my concern is that with the way this bill is currently worded, boards are going to have to take more and more money out of other areas in order to continue to operate and fund specialized programming. That just puts even more of a burden onto a system that has already been running very, very thin and doesn't have enough dollars for all of the programs that they'd like to offer and to get the ratios down, as far as student to teacher.

Thank you.

Mr. Dirks: I appreciate the issue that the member opposite is raising. I just think that it is an inappropriate solution to ameliorate the matter that you believe is a real matter. I think that it would be the wrong way to ameliorate that particular kind of unique, one-off or two-off or three-off problem, however many there may be. Completely redefining student residency would not be the best way. In fact, it likely would be a very imprudent way to seek to ameliorate that particular issue, so I would just encourage the member to come at it in some different way, perhaps when, you know, funding estimates are being considered or during question period, to raise it as an issue that could be considered at that time. I don't think that it's really solving a problem. It perhaps is creating more of a problem at the end of the day, and I offer that respectfully to the member opposite.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there others speaking to amendment A2?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. Are there other questions or comments on the main bill?

Shall the question be called?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 19 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 21

Safety Codes Amendment Act, 2015

The Chair: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This act was first passed . . .

An Hon. Member: Agreed.

Mr. Casey: Agreed? Good idea.

This act was first passed in 1994. It's been 20 years. Very few amendments have been made to this act since. This is a great opportunity to update the act, to modernize the act, and to make some really valuable changes that are needed in the industry today, so I'd encourage everyone to support Bill 21.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there questions, comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I do thank the member for bringing this forward. I appreciate what this bill is intending to do as far as its goal, but I do have some concerns. To start, the idea of improving the safety standards for things covered in the act like elevators, gas systems, electrical systems, et cetera, is a good thing, and as long as we're ensuring that standards are moving forward and making everyone safer rather than moving away from regulation, it's a positive thing.

The bill does seek to automatically align the safety standards used by the province with some of the most respected national and international standards or standard-setting organizations such as the Canadian Standards Association or the National Research Council, which I am quite happy to see. But there are a couple of concerns with the automatic alignment of standards as it's laid out in the bill.

First, there are significant loopholes under which the Minister of Municipal Affairs can almost unilaterally halt the application of some standards by delaying their use beyond a few years. If the standards have been signed off on by panels of experts, then why would we want to delay their placement into the standards of our province any longer than we need to? By placing these types of decisions around the acceleration or delay of the standards in the hands of cabinet, I fear that the real concerns that members of this Assembly might have with regard to the immediacy of the need for these standards or legitimate reasons they should be delayed in the Alberta context could actually be ignored.

5:30

The establishment of the safety codes authority, the SCA, in the second section of the bill is interesting. Now, while it's good that costs for actions the province takes in smaller communities without their own designated safety codes authorities will be offset by the greater access to fees, I mean, there is a possibility of an extra level of authority that could hamper the accountability of the system just as we have seen in our health system through the imposition of AHS. However, I do appreciate that in some of the smaller municipalities, this, I believe, is intended to assist them.

Now, it also appears to me that one of SCA's main roles is to ensure that private permitting agencies get paid. I'd like some clarification if possible on the exact integration of the public and private spheres that are going into this bill, into the legislation.

At the end of the day, Mr. Chair, it does seem like a decent development, but again I'm just curious why there's a need for an additional body when these are tasks that the province has been assigned to take care of since 1993. Again, if there is a cost savings, I would like to be aware of it or, again, look at the reasoning behind it.

As for the administrative penalties being added to the list of tools at the disposal of those tasked with enforcing safety standards, just a few questions and a little bit of a concern here that the administrative penalties, which can be rescinded or reduced by officials, could be used in situations where institutions either put people in grave danger or whose negligence actually caused harm to individuals. So while these may be useful in some instances as a tool to increase general compliance, I'm wondering if these tools might be used to reduce the generally applied maximum penalty for contraventions of safety codes. If that's the case, then clearly there is a concern there. I'd like to know more about how this is going to be applied moving forward, and I want to ensure that, obviously, those Albertans and those people who put their lives and communities at risk are properly held to account for their failure to properly recognize standards and to follow them.

The fourth and main thrust of this bill, which allows municipalities to make their own bylaws on code issues, I think, again, is a positive step. I mentioned that last night. Municipalities should have the power to take steps to manage things, like private sewage systems, that could pose risks to their communities. I like to see authority placed back into the hands of people at the local level, who are closest to it.

With that, I hope it is possible to get some answers to my questions. In general I do appreciate the intent and spirit of this bill and what it is going to accomplish, but I've tried to highlight a few of my questions and concerns.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Questions or comments from others? Maybe we'll get the Member for Banff-Cochrane to respond, and then I'll come back to you, hon. member.

Mr. Casey: Just very quickly on the private permitting with the permit fee, what has happened previously is that the minister was responsible for administering the Safety Codes Act in unaccredited municipalities. They would contract with an agency to provide that service, so an accredited agency. That accredited agency would then hire safety codes officers and so on to administer at the street level. Unfortunately, what has happened in the past is that agency that is contracted: the only real authority that the minister has had to deal with that agency for compliance has been the contract. When there have been issues with those people, sometimes they were getting the money, either going out of business or leaving, and then the person actually on the ground doing the work was not getting paid.

The way this will work now with the safety codes administrative authority is that the fees will in fact be paid to that authority, and when the work is completed, that authority then will directly pay back to the safety codes officer. So, in fact, it really does enhance the whole process. It also enables one body to be way more accountable. That body will be able to do the auditing there, so the safety overall will be greatly enhanced in all unaccredited municipalities.

As far as the automatic alignment of the codes goes, you really do need a mechanism because currently once those codes are approved, we will then adopt them automatically, but there is a one-year time frame to allow everyone to adapt to that code. In certain circumstances there are portions of that code that need more work and a longer, detailed discussion, and that allows the minister to postpone some of the portions of the code. It isn't that the minister will step in and do away with parts of the code or interfere with the technical side of this, but what it does is that it allows us to adopt the code after one year but to make certain exceptions to it if there are areas that need further work.

As far as the administrative penalties go, the administrative penalties are really to be used in a case where there are ongoing concerns with a company or a contractor. Currently we only have the courts to deal with, so we issue an order and then we have to go to prosecution with that. The administrative penalty is meant to be high enough that, in fact, you encourage people to comply, right? It's really more immediate. The easiest thing to think about is a fire code violation, where you have an establishment that exceeds their occupancy load night after night after night. They accumulate a whole list of orders and sort of notifications from the safety codes fire officers, but in fact there's very little immediate action that is taken. This allows that administrative penalty to take effect, and every day that they are out of compliance, they could be issued a $10,000 fine, up to a maximum of $100,000.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, and I do thank the member for clarifying. Just a couple of quick questions. I do appreciate the explanation of this system, of actually making it simpler and making companies more accountable to a body. That does make sense to me.

With the example that you gave as far as a situation where the minister may either accelerate or slow down the application of some standards, I appreciate that's the intention. It's just that I get nervous when we through legislation continue to give the minister more authority and the ability to make some unilateral decisions again. I know the current Minister of Municipal Affairs would never think to act outside of the best interests of Albertans. But future ministers: who knows? So, you know, it's making sure that legislation isn't overly restrictive, but at the same time it doesn't give carte blanche to the front bench or to the minister.

Then my last question I think you answered, but my concern, again, is the administrative penalties. Could they or would they supersede the existing maximum penalties for contraventions of safety codes, and will those two align? Again, I don't want to see – and I appreciate with an administrative penalty that the intention is to be a deterrent, but if that levy or fee or penalty is far less than the maximum penalty for contraventions of safety codes, including if it is outside of just a monetary punishment, I mean, for breaching or wilful negligence of safety codes, I wouldn't want to see that company only being given a tiny administrative fee. So I'm not sure if one supersedes the other or if they're going to be in line with that. If the minister could comment, that would be greatly appreciated.

Mrs. McQueen: I think I can help out with that piece. You can either do an administrative penalty or prosecute. You can't do both. I hope that helps. You can't do both, and it in no way affects the maximum penalty for administrative penalties, so clarity for you on that.

The administrative penalty is only issued by the minister's appointee. Prosecutions can be carried out by a local authority. So just to put some clarity around that for you, okay? Perfect.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, boy. This is one of these acts that is always really hard to describe to constituents when they phone in and they have concerns or questions, because it all tends to get sort of muddled up: safety codes, fire codes, who's the inspector, who do they report to, who gets in trouble with whom? So any clarity on this is appreciated.

To my reading of this, there are four sections, four points that this bill is attempting to address: the timely adoption of safety codes, the administrative penalties, bylaws, and the administration of it, which is what they were talking about before. I just want to talk about the last two, which are the administrative penalties, which I think is a very good idea – thank you very much – because I know that there have been problems in that area, where it's too little or too much. As a result, sort of nothing ever really works because in order to levy the big penalty, there's so much of a test. There's such a high threshold that you have to meet in order to make sure that you've been fair in putting that forward, because it's like a court case, that it doesn't happen very often and people – let me be careful here – and companies appear to get away with stuff, which really lowers consumers' faith in the system. Yet this is a system that is set up to make sure that they should have faith in something.

I think the administrative penalties are great because they are a kind of middle ground and they can be done for things like repeated noncompliance, that the sponsor was talking about, and that kind of middle ground of persistent and annoying: not a huge thing, not a small thing, something in the middle. So I'm pleased to see that.

I can't say that I'm thrilled to know about private sewage disposal systems being out there in the world, because that's a little bit of a scary thing. So I'm just as happy to see that there are some controls being put in place to allow municipalities to control these. I guess we shouldn't be surprised because, you know, we used to have government-owned – you know, I really believe in publicly owned utilities and service deliveries, garbage collection and things, but the rest of the world doesn't agree with me there. It shouldn't be a surprise. We've got private garbage collection and recycle collection and, in some cases, water delivery, so I guess we shouldn't have been surprised that there was private sewage. But that is an area that does have a public health component to it, and I think it is very appropriate that the municipalities would get control over that. So thank you for that.

The second piece that I noticed was the addition of barrier-free standards. There it is at the bottom of page 2, adding in, which we didn't have before:

This Act is to be interpreted in a manner consistent with the principles of barrier-free design and access to allow persons with physical and sensory disabilities to more easily and safely access and use buildings, facilities and services to which this Act applies.

Please also make this housing. It does include housing, but I just think we need more housing. There's 5 per cent of the population that is in need of barrier-free-access housing, and we don't build anywhere near enough of that. We make them cope with something else, which is not right, in my opinion. It's very nice to have that put into the definition and expectations.

The fact is, you know, that this is hard to do, to get industry, organizations, municipalities, and safety code stakeholders – that's the name – to get them all to agree that this is what needs to happen. I'm surprised that this is as thick as it is for this bill. I can't imagine trying to mediate your way through that one. Given that those are the people that are really dealing with it and it's also both sides of it – I'm always looking to see whether there's a fair balance in who's been involved in creating, and if there's a good ability to kind of fight it out, I'm usually pretty good with the results.

I'm okay with this. The Liberal caucus is okay with it. There'll be no amendments.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers, other comments?

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Bill 22

Skin Cancer Prevention (Artificial Tanning) Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll just reiterate quickly what the intent of the bill is. It'll ban businesses from providing artificial tanning services to minors, prohibit advertising for artificial tanning directed towards minors, mandate health warnings in artificial tanning facilities, and prohibit unsupervised, self-service artificial tanning equipment in public places. We know that skin cancer is linked to artificial tanning, an especially high risk for our youth, whom this is primarily aimed at.

I just want to address a couple of questions that came earlier from Calgary-Fish Creek. It was with respect to enforcement: who would enforce? This, Mr. Chair, would be very similar to the enforcement practices and the designated enforcement officers that we do with tobacco and alcohol. The penalties are outlined in section 9(1).

The member's other question was with respect to whether the regulations or bill would apply to banning tanning for people that are under 25. Just to be clear, it bans tanning for youth under 18 years of age, but the requirement for the checking of ID is for individuals that appear to be under 25.

Hopefully, that clarifies their questions.

With that, I would just ask that all members of this Assembly please support this very important bill. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there other speakers, questions, comments?

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I would move that we rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

5:50

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure tonight to rise and report that the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 24, Bill 14, Bill 19, Bill 21, and Bill 22. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We can't have false information being perpetrated around here, but it is close to 6 p.m., and I would therefore move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:51 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. Heavenly Father, help us to understand the needs of others and to speak up for those whose voices may be in the minority, and guide us always in our deliveries on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with school groups. Let's go to Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Young: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you 35 visitors from Lendrum school. They are joined by their teachers Ms Andrews and Ms Aucoin as well as parent helpers Ms Andrew and Mrs. Banham. I had a wonderful opportunity to speak with them today and saw them at Read In Week, and they wanted to know what colour my socks were today, so they really appreciated my Read In Week talk. I ask them all to rise today and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members a group of 98 visitors from Richard Secord elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. They comprise four grade 6 classes. They're an exceptional group of students. I'm very, very proud to have them in the Legislature. I'd ask all members to join me in giving them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Are there other school or education groups?

If not, let us move on to other important guests. We have at least 15 on the list, so I would ask you to be as brief and succinct as possible.

Let us start with the Associate Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. I believe you have two separate introductions. Please proceed with both of them.

Mr. McDonald: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a young Albertan who shows great leadership in her community and has been recognized for her outstanding contributions to Alberta's 4-H. Jess Verstappen of High Prairie is a 2014 recipient of the 4-H Premier's award. Miss Verstappen spent five years as a member of the Coyote Acres 4-H Club in High Prairie, where she has held all the positions, from president, vice-president, and treasurer. She has served as a role model for her community and her 4-H club, and I have no doubt that she has a wonderful future as she heads into her pursuits in environmental sciences at Lakeland College. Miss Verstappen is accompanied by Leila Hickman, one of our specialists in ESRD, and they are in the Speaker's gallery. I'll ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction today is from the town of Fox Creek. I have the mayor and their council here. I'd like them to stand as I call their names. Mayor Jim Ahn, Robin Gervais, Jim Hailes, Chris Stadnyk, and Roy Dell. They're in the members' gallery, and if we could give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I have some very special guests in your gallery. The last time I introduced them to this Assembly, two were toddlers, one was an infant, and another was inside his mommy's tummy, and, in defiance of the laws of aging, one is somehow even more beautiful today than she was seven years ago. I'd ask if they would stand so I can introduce them. My oldest son, Derek, is 10. Then there's Bryce and Spencer, both eight. Joshua is almost six years old. And, of course, there's my angel wife of almost 14 years, Anita. Also, one of my greatest heroes, my father, Robert Anderson Sr., is here.

As all hon. members know, our families sacrifice so much for us to be able to do what we do. For me, most Sunday nights these last seven years ended with goodbyes, hugs, a few tears, and promises of coming home to spend a few hours with them between events. It meant Anita having to look after four little boys possessed with the same very agreeable DNA that I possess. Well, no more. Thanks for everything, Mom and Dad. I love you, Anita, and, boys, I'm coming home for good, and we're going to savour the rest of our lives together.

The Speaker: Thank you for that.

Let us move on to Calgary-Fort, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. With great pleasure I rise to introduce to you and through you to all our members my guests seated in your gallery, Mr. Hung Tran and Mrs. Lan Tran from Winnipeg. They plan to move to our great province of Alberta. They are parents of my daughter-in-law Mimi Tran, who was here campaigning for the ban on youth tanning, so thank you, Minister of Health.

Also, another guest is the first piece of conceptual art from my wife and me when we work together. William Cao is the chief legal counsel of a national company in Calgary.

Another very special guest, who gave me the permanent highest promotion to the rank of grandpa, our grandson Dylan Cao is here on his sabbatical leave of two weeks from kindergarten at the University of Calgary.

I call on my guests to stand up and receive the warmest welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by Calgary-Cross.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two very special introductions today sitting in the Speaker's gallery. The first is Carmen Remenda, who was the executive assistant to not only myself but Dr. Taft and the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. It's her 10-year anniversary on April 18 of serving the Liberal leaders in the Legislature. Carmen, I thank you for your service to democracy and to myself and to all the leaders. I'd ask Carmen to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, a very special guest. It's my mother. Her name is Santosh Sherman. My mother wanted to come here, on what may be the last time I have a chance to address the Assembly, to personally thank you for visiting our home at the time when my father was passing, almost four years ago today. My mother was a young, eight-year-old girl when the partition of India happened, and her grandfather was the best friend of Lord Mountbatten when they negotiated the partition.

She came as a young immigrant woman to this country in 1972 and had a baby here and raised four boys. She was a seamstress. As you all know, she sewed the uniforms for the Lakers and the Edmonton Oilers when they won all their cups in the early '80s. Also, Mr. Speaker, anything I am as a man, as an individual is because of my mother, who is a very strong woman and individual, who has raised me and always taught me to be hopeful and positive and optimistic. I would ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I believe you have another introduction. Please proceed.

Dr. Sherman: Just departing comments. I came here as a young child with a dream to come to this country. I never thought I would live the life that I've had: on one hand, being a member of government, an independent member, and I've had the opportunity to serve as leader through now the fourth Premier. It's been a true pleasure for me to work with each and every one of you elected members on all sides and serve under you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you so much. Thank you to Alberta, and thank you to everybody who supported me. God bless you all. [Standing ovation]

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross, followed by Lesser Slave Lake.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly my husband, Lanny Fritz, who is seated up in your gallery. Lanny and I, as you know, first dated when we were 15 and 16, and we're very proud of our two beautiful children, Holly and Matthew. My husband has had an exemplary career in law enforcement. He retired from the Calgary Police Service after 28 years of outstanding service, and he just recently retired from the University of Calgary as the director of campus security after 17 amazing years. Honey, you've been holding my hand for 50 years now, and you've never let go. I love you, and I'm so glad you're here today. Please stand.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week our Premier introduced the members of the Métis Women's Economic Security Council to this House. Today on behalf of his leadership it is truly my honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Legislative Assembly the members of the First Nations Women's Economic Security Council. These councils were the brainchild of the Member for Calgary-Varsity and were established by then Minister of Aboriginal Relations, now Finance minister. Both councils have done an exemplary job, and as a result our government is accepting the recommendations of these two councils, which are aimed at improving social and economic outcomes for aboriginal women in Alberta.

These strong women of the First Nations Women's Economic Security Council are with us today, and I ask that they stand as I call their names: Co-chair Grace Auger, Co-chair Koren Lightning-Earle, Dr. Andrea Kennedy, Angela Grier, Anna Wowchuck, Barb Wendt, Brenda Joly, Cindy Provost, Darlene Plamondon, Janice Tanton, Karri-Lynn Paul, Kathleen Laboucan, Kim Shade, Dr. Lana Potts, Leah Bear Chief, Marggo Pariseau, Nicole Robertson, Peggy Richardson, Rita Marten, Tanya Schur, Theresa Bear Chief. Mr.

Speaker, they are standing in the members' gallery, and I ask that this House give them a very, very warm welcome.

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, followed by the Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. An emotional day as we say goodbye to people. It's my privilege to introduce through you and to you two very special people in my life. The first one is a young man by the name of Evan Menzies, who is our director of communications. He's probably one of the best directors of communications I've ever had the privilege of working with, and it's been an honour and a privilege to be able to work with him.

The second one is Jennifer Wainwright, who works in my Calgary office, who is our guru on Health and has made me successful on the Health file and being able to hold the government accountable.

I want to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly representatives of some of the 40 students who were awarded the Persons Case scholarship this year. They'll be joining us in the House at 2. This scholarship was created to honour the Alberta women who fought and won the right for women to be deemed persons under Canadian law in 1929. The Persons Case scholarships are awarded to students whose studies will contribute to the advancement of women and to those who are studying in nontraditional fields.

We are honoured to have some of them with us today. Please join me in welcoming, first, Ruby Littlechild, MBA in community economic development, former leg. assistant for the Member for Lesser Slave Lake; Quinn Boser, B.Sc. in mechanical engineering and biomed co-op; Rebecca Taylor, MA in sociology; Darcie Kutryk, diploma in architectural technology; Hailey Ross, social work diploma; Salma Elmallah, B.Sc. in electrical engineering; Emily Dutton, BA in women's and gender studies; Leandra Shade, B.Sc. in electrical engineering; and, of course, Wendy Joy, the manager with the women's equality and advancement unit and co-chair of the Persons Case scholarship. Congratulations. Please join me in welcoming them.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the Minister of Finance.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure and honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a few special guests. This week is school break in Calgary, and my guests had a visit to the Legislature on their must-do list. Seated in the members' gallery, from Calgary, are Jeff Gaulin and his two children, Jonah Gaulin, who is a grade 7 student at John Ware junior high school, and Audrey Gaulin, who is a grade 5 student at Nellie McClung elementary school. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, followed by the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Ed.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you my press secretary, Kevin Zahara. Kevin has had a diverse career, being elected to town council in Athabasca when he was 19 years old and elected twice in Edson. He was also one of the youngest radio DJs in the country and continued his career in radio after serving on council. He is dedicated to his community; he is an avid volunteer. I had the pleasure of officiating at his wedding last July. Kevin has spent many hours working on Budget 2015 with the rest of my staff, and I want to thank him for his dedication. I want to thank his wife and his daughter for allowing him to work late into the night. I'd ask Kevin to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education, followed by the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all of my colleagues four members of the Alberta Economic Development Authority Board, whose annual activity report I will be tabling today. This board consists of senior-level executives who are leaders in their communities and whose depths of knowledge and expertise will continue to serve our province well. I'd ask that they rise as I call out their names to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: Mr. Jim Carter, former president of Syncrude Canada and now serving on several boards and on the Premier's Advisory Committee on the Alberta Public Service; Mr. Andy Calitz, CEO of LNG Canada, a Shell-PetroChina-KOGAS-Mitsubishi joint venture, prior to which he was responsible for new business developments and strategic investments; Mr. Yasmin Jivraj, president and co-owner of Acrodex, a leading provider of strategic IT services for numerous Canadian businesses; and Marc de La Bruyère, principal and chairman of Maclab Enterprises. He has served as a board member of several educational, community, and nonprofit organizations and also on the Premier's advisory council on the public service. With them is Robert Fernandez, executive director of the Alberta Economic Development Authority.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If we could all give them a warm round of applause.

I do have one additional introduction.

The Speaker: Please proceed with your second introduction.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the member from the constituency of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo it's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Natasha and Greg Dunbar and their daughter Bailey. We are very privileged to have this family here today as they are joining us for a very important reason. Last year 13-year-old Morgan Dunbar, Natasha and Greg's daughter and Bailey's twin sister, took her own life after being the victim of bullying. The Dunbars are resilient and have been strong in their healing process. They have created a new foundation called Morgan's Mission to raise awareness about cyberbullying. They are here today to meet with government officials to discuss cyberbullying, mental health, and suicide prevention support. I would ask Natasha, Greg, and Bailey to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, we have two more introductions. Let's see if we can get them both in, starting with the Minister of Energy, followed by Calgary-East.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through to all hon. members of the Assembly

Mr. Scott Wenger, who has joined us in the gallery. He's a great representative of his company, Suncor, and a great ambassador for the oil and gas industry in Alberta. I'd ask him to rise and receive the traditional welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a dear friend of mine, Mr. Arman Chak. Arman is an Edmonton lawyer, a bencher of the Law Society, an active member of the community, a dedicated volunteer, and much, much more. Arman is seated in the public gallery. I would ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

We have about 15 seconds left. Is there anyone else with an introduction quickly? I see none.

Hon. members, before we start Oral Question Period, could I just remind you of the memo I sent out yesterday regarding photos that will be taken in Chamber tomorrow. Please review that because there are some photos during the procession entrance, another one right after the prayer, and then during the budget speech.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Let us begin. Thirty-five seconds for each question, 35 seconds for each response.

Let us be led off by the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Health Care Funding

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night Albertans saw two campaign-style TV ads. One was the typical liberal tax and spend message, and the other came from the leader of the third party. The Premier believes taxes are the answer. He calls it a health levy, but it has nothing to do with health care. It's a Kananaskis golf course tax, a pay raise for upper management tax, a billion-dollar corporate welfare tax, a fine china for the Premier's office tax. It's a PC waste and mismanagement tax. Why won't the Premier just call it what it is?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, it's hard to know what to make of that. This is a difficult time for our province. We all know this. It is, however, also a hopeful time for our province as we stick together as Albertans. One cannot help but be moved to listen to the Member for Calgary-Fort speak about his responsibilities as a grandfather or the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark speak about his responsibilities as a son or the Member for Calgary-Cross speak about her responsibilities as a spouse. It's time for all Albertans to pull together.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've heard that Redford hope message before.

The Premier says that Albertans will have to start paying for health care. Who does he think was paying for it all along? We already spend as much on health care as B.C., who has more people and gets better results, but instead of reining in PC waste and excess, this Premier believes more taxes are the answer. It's not, Premier. The answer is acknowledging the sins of this government and governments past and reining in the spending that created the most bloated government in Canada. Mr. Premier, why won't you do that instead of raising taxes on hard-working Albertans?

Mr. Prentice: Mr. Speaker, this government will deal with the challenges that we face on behalf of Albertans. We will deal with the recognition that people in this province are losing their jobs. There is not a person in this Chamber that is not touched by someone in this province who has lost a job at this point. We're cognizant of that. We have a fine health care system. It needs to be improved, and we need to work on eliminating waste. We have excellent front-line workers. We also have an exceptional minister that is hands on, that is doing a phenomenal job in this department.

Mrs. Forsyth: No, Premier, it's not Albertans' fault; it's your fault for spending like drunken sailors.

The Premier talks about a 10-year plan, but it may as well be a hundred-year plan. We've seen three-year fiscal plans and five-year health plans before, and because they never acknowledge that government waste is the problem, they never work. Now new taxes will enable more of what we've seen before: more spending on golf courses, sky palaces, management, and perks for your friends. It's a PC waste and mismanagement tax. Why won't the Premier admit that this government's spending is the problem and save Albertans from the biggest tax hike ever?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are too many inconsistencies and incorrect statements in that statement to respond to all of them, but let me just be clear. This government will deal in a responsible way with the finances of this province. We will protect the interests of Albertans and their children and their grandchildren, and we will emerge from this stronger than we are today with or without the help of the opposition.

The Speaker: Second main set of questions. The hon. opposition leader.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's be clear. The tax increase will damage economic growth. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business says that the idea of this new tax is not something businesses would look forward to, saying that, and I'll quote, the government should be able to recognize that taking money out of the economy for health care premiums is especially going to make tough economic times even more tough. Now is not the time to introduce new taxes on Albertans. Premier, will you back down from the most dangerous tax when Albertans are hurting the most?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me be very clear that we are not going to entertain a health care premium that was done in the past. That was a regressive tax, and it was hard on low-income wage earners. I'd just ask the member across to stay tuned for the budget tomorrow.

Mrs. Forsyth: Minister, it's a tax.

Raising taxes when times are tough shows a serious lack of imagination for economic and fiscal policies. It's unoriginal and short sighted and will hurt our ability to grow the economy. What takes real courage is looking in the mirror and staring back at the fine china, the MLA palaces, the billions in perks and pay for managers, and getting your house in order. Premier, please. Will you stop this tax and finally get serious about cutting the layers of PC fat across government while protecting front-line services?

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, let me be very clear that we are looking after front-line services. We've made it very clear to Albertans in our talks across the province that we'll look after our core services in health care, in education, our most vulnerable, and our seniors. We will do what we have to do to streamline our programming and reduce our spending in a very pragmatic and practical manner so that we do not put this province into recession and we do not kill jobs for Albertans.

Mrs. Forsyth: Minister, you're killing jobs for Albertans because you couldn't keep your fiscal house in order.

Here are the facts, Premier. While Albertans are hurting, PC politicians and managers have never had it so good. While you drain billions on golf courses, fine china, new MLA offices, and corporate payouts, you are asking Albertans to pay more. This tax will mean less for the economy and more money for misguided PC priorities. The idea that you can tax your way back to prosperity is not how we built this great province. Premier, please. On behalf of Albertans will you step back from this awful, misguided policy before it's too late?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's awful rich coming from the Leader of the Opposition, her comments about fine china and spending. I would suggest that the government has been very clear in talking to Albertans that we're going to take a three-lever approach with the situation in phases. We are going to get our budget in balance moving forward, and we're going to do it in a very constructive and a very pragmatic manner to make sure that we don't put any undue hardship on our working poor or our most vulnerable. We will make sure that we have a budget that is in the best interests of Albertans moving forward over the next 10 years so that we are in the best position of any province in the next decade.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Position

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At a time in our province's history when we most need strong, clear, courageous leadership, we now see where the Premier stands. First he blamed the fiscal crisis on oil prices, then he blamed Albertans, and now he's trying to throw past Premiers under the bus. Everyone is responsible except him. Given that you were elected to office for years before becoming Premier, including serving as federal Minister of Industry, why didn't you sound any alarms that Alberta should get off the resource revenue roller coaster? Why were you hiding?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to reassure the hon. member that what he will see tomorrow is, to quote himself, "strong, clear, courageous leadership" from the government, and I hope that he supports us.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, what we saw last evening was Albertans witnessing a remarkable example of armchair quarterbacking. He blamed Premier after Premier for putting Alberta in this fiscal PC mess, yet at no time in the decades that this Premier was a member of the PC Party did he speak up to the leadership of this party. To the Premier: whose interests were you protecting by saying nothing? Whose interests?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, I travelled the province with the Premier during the leadership review in the summer. I've been by his side since he became leader in September. I can tell you that there's nobody in this House that has more integrity or has a better vision for the province of Alberta, and our 10-year fiscal plan will show that moving forward.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The coming election has nothing to do with Martha and Henry's families and has everything to do with this Premier's self-interest. He is calling an early election to reassert his grasp on power and hide the deep cuts he has planned for after the election. Will the Premier admit that you're hiding again from Albertans and not revealing the difficult fiscal decisions you're going to make after the election?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, I suggest the members stay tuned for the budget tomorrow. You'll see a very detailed five-year plan and a 10-year vision for the province. He will see that this Premier will make the tough decisions to make sure that Alberta is in the best fiscal position it can be for the next decade moving forward.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier admitted that his PC government is planning to reintroduce Alberta's health care premium. This waiting room tax is a tax on families while profitable corporations get off scot-free. Albertans know very well that there's a crisis in our hospitals, and they also know that freezing the health care budget will make that crisis worse. To the Premier: why are you asking Albertans to pay more so that they get less, health care in particular?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, to correct the hon. member, I did not say last night that we would reintroduce the former health care premium. That is not the suggestion that was made. All Albertans expect and deserve to have excellent health care. We deserve to have fine health care workers, front-line workers. That's what this government is focused on. We will eliminate waste and inefficiency in the system, but we intend to preserve the quality of front-line health care services for Albertans.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the government's own budget survey a mere 28 per cent of Albertans said that they wanted a waiting room tax while a clear majority supported rolling back the reckless PC corporate tax cuts. The Premier and his PC government continue to ignore the voices of ordinary Albertans. Again to the Premier: if you're not going to listen to a single thing they say, why did you waste the time of more than 40,000 Albertans with your budget survey?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have consulted with Albertans; we've listened to Albertans. There's, again, not a single member in this House who is not affected by the fact that there are Albertans in this province losing jobs. We worry about that. We worry about it for young people; we worry about it for young people who are graduating from universities and colleges. We will not introduce a job-killing tax, where every single point results in the loss of 8,900 jobs in this province. That might be the policy of the NDP; it's not the policy of this party.

Ms Notley: Instead you're introducing a whole job-killing plan.

Mr. Speaker, pay more; get less: this Alberta looks more and more like a big bank every day. Pay more with the PC's waiting room tax; get less with a frozen provincial budget that won't account for 80,000 new Albertans, inflation, or the sorry state of our health care system right now. To the Premier. Your government is ignoring what Albertans want, you've allowed the crisis in Alberta's hospitals to get worse, and now you're asking them to accept fewer services and pay more for them. Why should Albertans accept this?

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, you know, I get a little tired of listening to the opposition fearmonger about the crisis in the health care system. I spent six months in the health care system. I'm here today because of it. I spent more time in hospitals, labs, and clinics than any member in this House has. We have excellent front-line workers, we have excellent doctors, we have excellent specialists. We should be proud of our health care system and proud of this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Electricity Regulation

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: You have the floor.

Mr. Anglin: It takes more than two years to connect the proposed project to Alberta's electricity system. Some projects take up to as much as three years. Industry groups, consumer groups, and all stakeholders agree that streamlining the regulatory process could easily save consumers $40 million annually. Given that we could save consumers money, why does this government refuse to correct the regulatory process governing our electricity system?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have an efficient regulatory system. This member spent the first part of his career here arguing that we didn't have any regulation, and now he's arguing we should have less regulation. It's a little confusing sometimes. I'm sure we all share the same sentiment.

Mr. Anglin: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: A point of order, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, during that last response.

Let us hear your first supplemental.

Mr. Anglin: Did you get my point of order on that? Thank you very much. I want to argue that one.

The AESO's, Alberta Electric System Operator's, role and responsibility have not changed in the 15 years since deregulation, yet its annual regulatory budget and cost to consumers has skyrocketed. Why is the AESO's annual budget ballooning out of control?

Mr. Oberle: The AESO's budget is not ballooning out of control, Mr. Speaker. They're dealing with a significant number of projects as we build out and add to our generation capacity and transmission capacity in this province, and they've had to respond to that.

The Speaker: Final supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nearly 15 years ago this government began its implementation of deregulation. Since that time the cost of regulation has risen from $13 million a year to $150 million a year. To the minister: why have these regulatory costs of a deregulated market ballooned over 1,100 per cent?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, in that same time period Alberta constructed a power system and a grid the size of Saskatchewan for not one penny of public debt. The correct comparator here, the one that Albertans should be interested in, is that our price of power is the lowest it's been since we deregulated.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 2008 this same government eliminated health care premiums. Now we hear that they'll be breaking that promise tomorrow. Flip-flops are now so common in this government that they're hardly news. Will the Premier talk about these health fees, and will it be another flat tax that will hurt working Albertans and charge a single mother making minimum wage the same as a bank vice-president?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member knows better. Stay tuned to the budget tomorrow.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. This Premier is once again ruling by opinion polls and not doing what is best for the province, ignoring the elephant in the room, the unsustainable revenue structure, and distracting Albertans with this on-again, off-again health premium. Why are you waiting till after the election to tell Albertans the real truth about how deep the cuts will be?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, we have a budget scheduled for tomorrow. I think the address is at 3 o'clock. The member should stay tuned, and he'll get the answers he's looking for.

Dr. Swann: Well, given that the health levies and premiums have been ruled out not only by this government but seven other governments in Canada, when will the government stop misleading Albertans and bring in a fair tax structure?

Mr. Campbell: Same answer as before, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Let's move on to the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Highway 732

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the summer of 2014 the town of Fairview, in my constituency, completed a rehabilitation project on Highway 732, that goes within the town limits. This project included new water and sewer lines to replace failing infrastructure. Highway 732 bears heavy traffic. The overlay on this dug-up highway was replaced with uncrowned asphalt patches at the completion of the project and is now failing, leaving the road in very poor condition. To the Minister of Transportation: with the work completed on Highway 732, will the department address the needed paving issues on this section of the highway, as they indicated they would?

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to this hon. member for the question. He's a great advocate for his constituents, and his strong voice will be missed in this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my department is aware of the issue in the town of Fairview, and my department has been working closely with the town to evaluate this stretch of road. We are in the process of hiring a design consultant right now, and there are plans to hire an engineer this summer to re-evaluate the conditions of highway 732, or 113th Street, after this year's spring thaw.

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: when the paving is done on this section, will the department install wheelchair ramps along this section of highway, particularly at the intersections where the school crossings exist?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, wheelchair accessibility is something this government and my department take very seriously. It's critical that Albertans with disabilities have safe access to sidewalks, especially at school crossings. I'm pleased to inform this member and his constituents that the design for this project will include wheelchair access.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good news.

Again to the same minister: will the department also be performing repairs during this project to replace the curbs and gutters that have basically disappeared along highway 732?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, any paving project along 113th Street in Fairview will include the necessary curb and gutter work. My department will continue to work closely with the town to determine the extent of the work needed, and the project will proceed as provincial budgets allow.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Calgary-South East.

2:10 Government Spending at Fiscal Year-end

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's hard to believe that this Premier is adamant about raising taxes while members of his cabinet blew through $104 million in March madness spending. Millions for fine china, napkins, golf shirts, glassware, linen, and cutlery: these are PC priorities. The Infrastructure minister couldn't explain this spike in spending. Minister, if you don't know where or why or how this money was pushed out the door, will you do the right thing and call on the Auditor General to fix this mess?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, let us be clear that this member is speaking about last year. We have been very clear that our focus is to ensure that we are minimizing our spending, focusing on the economy, protecting the savings of Albertans, protecting the jobs of Albertans. That's our focus.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the eve of one of the largest tax increases in history Albertans expect some accountability for this type of excessive waste. If the Premier's office thinks new fine china, glassware, and cutlery are a necessity when times are tough, Albertans deserve an explanation. Wildrose thinks that $104 million in extra spending is a waste. Will your government commit to putting a fresh set of eyes on this spending to protect Albertans from dangerous tax hikes?

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member and his party should know that a year makes a lot of difference, and he shouldn't really be confusing Albertans by comparing last year's spending to what's taking place on my watch as Premier.

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Speaker, if the government doesn't take $100 million in spending every March seriously, how can Albertans expect and know that they need to pay more taxes? I'll give the minister one last chance. Will he call in the Auditor General to inspect this spending, or will the Wildrose be forced to require an investigation because you won't do your job?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The members opposite continue to live in a fantasy world, where they like to impose their ideas of reality upon the rest of us. The rest of us know better. The fact remains that there's no fine bone china. There are catering services, that are required once in a while at McDougall Centre for up to 200 people, and catering-style cups and plates were ordered. Stainless steel knives and forks were ordered, nothing fancy, nothing fine bone. I would suggest that the members opposite please get the facts right.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's move on to Calgary-South East, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Cancer Treatment

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to speak about a constituent that I've come to know through my constituency office and the events that I've held in my community. She's a devoted wife, a loving mother, and she has stage 4 cancer, which has spread to her bones and liver. Many Albertans fight with all their will to combat this terrible disease. Her treatment regimen consists of drugs which are not available in Canada yet like Perjeta. If she wishes to receive these drugs, she must travel out of country, which is a physical and emotional strain on her and her loved ones. To the Minister of Health: she's not covered through the health care system, particularly for the drug Perjeta, again adding further costs to her and her family. Mr. Minister, how often do we review treatment plans and best practices to our approach to cancer so that we can provide more in-province . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's hear from the minister now.

Mr. Mandel: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, first of all, our hearts and prayers go out to the family. I can't speak to individual cases, but we have a strong evidence-based decision-making process for determining which drugs can be used and which can't. Drugs new to the market are covered by Health Canada and approved by Health Canada. Our benefit list is updated monthly when required. Cancer drugs included on the list are provided at no cost to Albertans. You know, Albertans can be assured that we are employing the best practices when it comes to cancer care. I also want to inform this hon. member that the new uses for Perjeta are under review at the national level by the pan-Canadian oncology drug review.

Mr. Fraser: To the same minister. As you mentioned, the situation is heartbreaking, and our hearts do go out to that family. We also know that there are similar stories throughout the province like my own: the loss of my mother, my mother-in-law, my grandmother, and the cancer that's in my father now. Can you tell me, Mr. Minister, that we have a robust and comprehensive plan to beat this disease once and for all?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Yes. I thank the hon. member for the question. I don't think there are many families in this province who have not been touched by cancer. We have Changing Our Future: Alberta's Cancer Plan to 2030, which is the government's plan to reduce the risk of cancer, increase cancer cure rates, and reduce the stress for cancer patients. We'll accomplish these goals by working with partners on various initiatives, including research, screening programs, and providing emotional support to cancer patients. Alberta Health Services' latest report on cancer rates shows that our screening and prevention efforts are having a positive impact.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Minister, can you just tell Albertans how through the Alberta government they can navigate this terrible disease, whether it's through websites or information?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, we have an excellent service, provided by patient navigators, that helps Albertans with cancer find the resources they need. Patient navigators are at the cancer centres across the province to help cancer patients make informed decisions and understand and prepare for the treatments. Patient navigators also improve co-ordination of care by working with other health care providers and helping patients access financial resources and community supports. We do all we can.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Carbon Emission Reduction

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Incentives are designed to change behaviour, and putting a price on carbon to change behaviour has been tried and triumphed elsewhere. This government can bury its head in the sand, but failing to do something other than manipulate figures has had and will have serious consequences for Alberta's environment and its main industry. B.C. has an effective carbon tax, the EU, Norway, so to the Premier: why don't we? Why don't we have an effective carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta was the first jurisdiction in North America to actually put a price on carbon. We have $15 per tonne with a 12 per cent intensity. We also are committed to slowing our emissions, and we're doing a great deal in this province. We were the first jurisdiction to do that, setting realistic targets, and we're meeting those targets.

Ms Blakeman: Don't talk about that $15 levy again. It's just embarrassing.

To the same minister: given that Keystone has taught us that pipelines just will not get built until the environmental protections are embraced as the number one factor – and I know that this government desperately wants pipelines – what will the government do to repair and advance Alberta's environmental efforts and position Alberta as a leader, not some two-year-old kid lagging far behind?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very glad that the member brought up our carbon fund. She may find it embarrassing, but both Saskatchewan and the province of British Columbia are duplicating ours, B.C. under LNG and Saskatchewan modelling ours. We have a great system here in Alberta, that keeps the economy strong while taking care of the environment.

Ms Blakeman: Everyone is paying the carbon tax in B.C., not just our oil and gas companies.

To the Premier. This Premier has a 20-year history with pipelines, yet none of them got built. Is he ready to do something now? Are you ready to shut down coal-fired generation, put a real price on carbon, target 30 per cent more on non oil and gas energy, try feed-in tariffs for solar and wind? Are you ready to try anything at all? You might be more successful.

Mr. Prentice: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member does an injustice to Albertans because she denigrates the system that we have in this province, that people come from all over the world to admire and to follow in terms of their own carbon policies. Frankly, last week the minister beside me announced that Alberta would be a partner of choice with the World Bank, where we lead the world in terms of reducing emissions and venting and flaring of methane. That's the kind of thing that we're achieving as Albertans. The hon. member should take pride in it and celebrate it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Foreign Qualification Recognition

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I often hear stories from my constituents who are underemployed and overqualified for their jobs. They have an education and a background in areas like dentistry and junior accounting from their country of origin, but when they come here to make a life for themselves in Canada, their qualifications are not recognized, and they find themselves serving tables and driving cabs. My question to the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour: with so many Canadians who have come here from other countries so overqualified for their jobs, what is the minister doing so this . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

We'll have to hear from the hon. minister now.

2:20

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As always, we try to help Albertans and Canadians to find work first, but when people come here with qualifications from other places in the world, the very best thing we can do for Alberta, which is also the best thing we can do for them, is to get their qualifications recognized so they can practise in the field of endeavour where they've been trained. There's a lot of work to be done. We work with professional regulatory organizations to co-ordinate that. There's a lot of work to be done, and it goes on. The hon. member is right to point out that this is an issue.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the foreign qualification recognition plan was launched more than six years ago, why have we not seen progress in recognizing those individuals?

Mr. McIver: Well, I'm going to take a little issue with my colleague on this one. We actually have made progress. I can tell the hon. member and you, Mr. Speaker, that since 2009 we have invested nearly $4 million in grants through our foreign qualification recognition innovation fund to support 50 projects to improve and streamline the assessment of foreign qualifications. Examples are the College of Dietitians, who work with the University of Alberta on four web-based bridging programs so that somebody doesn't have to redo their whole training but can, rather, just fill in the blanks of where they need upgrading; also, the physiotherapists and many other professional regulatory organizations.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Final supplemental.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again: given that despite this progress the number of professions included in this plan is very low, why is this program not accessible to more professions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is right. We need to include more professions, and I'm happy to report that it is being done. In the pan-Canadian framework that I mentioned, there are 10 new targeted occupations identified, including midwives, psychologists, carpenters, welders, and electricians. Our government continues to work with the professional regulatory organizations to bridge those gaps, to make sure that in those places where people can't get recognized, we can help them do that, and the work continues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Corporate Taxes

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In this government's own budget survey 69 per cent of Albertans supported large, profitable corporations paying their fair share. The PC government, led by a former vice-president of a big bank, is set to ignore them. It's clear that this PC government cares more about corporate bottom lines than about the people of Alberta. To the Minister of Finance: why don't you make sure that everyone is paying their fair share before hitting Alberta families with cuts to vital programs and health care charges?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that everybody does pay their fair share in Alberta. This government is about creating jobs. It's about creating investment in the province. We are going to make sure that we have the lowest tax regime in Canada so that people continue to come here and invest, corporations both large and small, and we will continue to do this to make sure that this province is successful moving into the future.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, if you laid all the economists in the world end to end, you still wouldn't reach a consensus, and they are depending entirely on one economist for their proof. Given that this government has already cut corporate taxes by over one-third, the lowest in the country, can the minister tell us why, if lower corporate taxes create jobs, these companies have laid off tens of thousands of hard-working Albertans in the last several months, including 14,000 in February alone?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member just made the argument why we won't raise corporate taxes, because they are laying off thousands of workers in the province. We know that we want to continue to create jobs, so we're not going to raise corporate taxes. It's that simple.

Mr. Mason: Well, it's overly simple in this minister's mind, Mr. Speaker.

Given that in 2012 the state of Wisconsin elected a Republican governor, who laid off thousands of staff, slashed the public service, and cut taxes on rich corporations, and given that in the same year Minnesotans elected a Democrat government that did the opposite and given that today Minnesota far outstrips Wisconsin in economic growth and job creation, can the minister explain how Jack Mintz's far-fetched economic theories square with the practical realities of these two states?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, to compare the states to a province is like comparing apples and oranges. For example, one thing: we have publicly funded health care that we will not apologize for; the states don't. We've talked to more than just Jack Mintz. We talked to economists from the major leading banks both in Canada and the United States, and they have all said to us to take a very prudent approach moving forward with the budget. We're going to do so.

Postsecondary Tuition Fees

Mr. Jeneroux: Mr. Speaker, I meet with many of our partners in the postsecondary system. Just yesterday I was at my alma mater, the U of A campus, and I can tell you that like many others, they are nervously awaiting tomorrow's provincial budget. Advanced education is a necessity in navigating today's job market, but it isn't cheap. Students that I've spoken to are concerned that tomorrow's budget will lift Alberta's tuition cap, and they're also concerned that their voices may not be heard in discussions about Campus Alberta moving forward. To the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education. I want to clarify: have you heard the students' concerns about removing a tuition cap, and will you commit to involving students in the postbudget discussions?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Ed.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have heard the students' concerns. I met with students last week, and I heard their concerns about removing the tuition cap. I can tell you definitively that there are no imminent changes to the tuition cap. Our postsecondary budget consultation with Campus Alberta partners will focus on ways to make the system sustainable, accessible, and focused on excellence. Campus Alberta's student leaders will play a large role in that consultation. It's crucial that they have a big voice at the table, and they will.

Mr. Jeneroux: Mr. Speaker, the Premier's mandate letter to the minister specifically directs this minister to create and implement a plan for long-term, stable, and predictable funding. Can the minister please tell me when this plan will be complete?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Scott: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. As the Premier said in last night's address, Budget 2015 will take immediate action to deal with our fiscal challenges in a balanced way, protecting core services and maintaining Alberta's tax advantages. The budget will also look to the future and bring forward a 10-year plan for this province. Campus Alberta is a big part of our future, and we know that institutions are better able to deliver when they have long-term, stable, and predictable funding. This will be a big part of the conversation that government will have going forward and part of our postbudget discussions with Campus Alberta.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. There have been lots of talks with the Campus Alberta system in the past, but can you clarify, Minister: is this just another exercise, and what can you tell students about why this time is different?

Mr. Scott: Thank you again for the question. We don't have the luxury of just talking for the sake of an exercise, Mr. Speaker. We need to get results. The Premier and Alberta's government are focused on a system that delivers excellence. This consultation process with our partners will develop a five-year plan for Campus Alberta. The result of this plan will be a system that is firing on all cylinders, a system that is sustainable, accessible, and focused on excellence. All ideas will be on the table, including funding models, revenue generation for institutions, improvements to student aid, and ensuring that apprenticeship technical training is better aligned with labour demands.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, you were almost superseded by your leader, but I'll recognize you at this time.

Education Funding

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, last night the Premier told us that he intends to cut the Education budget further by holding the line on spending. Eighty thousand people are expected to move to Alberta this year alone, and while it's true that they don't bring schools with them, they don't bring teachers or support staff either. To the Minister of Education: will the minister explain how he can hold the line on spending and still expect to provide the teachers and support staff that our children need to be successful?

Mr. Dirks: I'm very pleased the member opposite has asked this question. I value every opportunity to speak about our stellar education system, one of the best in the world, Mr. Speaker. The reason why it's one of the best in the world is that we invest about $38 million per day right now, and we'll just have to wait for the budget tomorrow to see what our investment will be going forward. One of the reasons why we have such an outstanding education system is because of the very high-quality teachers in our system. We can be proud of every one of them.

Mr. Bilous: CBE shows that per-student funding has been declining for years. Given that classrooms are already bursting at the seams and given that kids are not getting the one-to-one support they need due to a shortage of staff, to the same minister: even if this government finally makes good on its new-school promises, how will they staff these schools with a hold-the-line budget?

2:30

Mr. Dirks: Goodness me, Mr. Speaker. He talks about us, that even if we made good on our promises. Has he not been listening to how many new schools we have been opening in past months, how much great progress we are making on building the new schools, the 232 new school projects, which are a priority for this government and for all Albertans? He ought to be saying in this Assembly that this government is doing amazing things when it comes to funding education. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, you have the floor.

Mr. Bilous: I guess the promise was to hammer signs in the ground.

Mr. Speaker, given that kids with special learning needs do not have the help they need because there simply aren't enough assistants or support staff and given that class sizes are continuing to balloon, to the same minister: how will this PC government possibly support the kids of 80,000 new Albertans when they can't even support our existing students?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, one of the strengths of Alberta is our education system. That's one of the reasons why people move to this province. They want to be part of experiencing for their children a wonderful, world-class education system. We do value every student, and we particularly value those who have special needs. We provide school boards with $38 million a day. We trust them to make wise judgments about how they're going to allocate those dollars so that all of our special-needs children are going to be appropriately educated.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Ambulance Service Availability

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ambulances are an essential part of our medical system. When I or my constituents are in an emergency situation, we rely on an ambulance to get us to a hospital as quickly as possible. I am concerned about the so-called code reds. How can we accept a situation in a province such as Alberta where there are no ambulances available? My first question is to the Minister of Health. How is this an acceptable result of the most expensive health system in Canada?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. A code red means that at a point in time – it might be for two minutes or two seconds – an ambulance isn't available. This year we've had some difficult times, and I appreciate that, but I want to be very clear that it does not directly endanger a patient, and it does not mean any ambulance is not going to be delivered to a site. Be very clear about that.

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. To the Minister of Health: given that any incidence of a code red is cause for concern, is this exceptionally high incidence recently a sign that Alberta Health Services is failing?

Mr. Mandel: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health Services is doing all they can in very difficult times. This government has in the last little while increased the number of opportunities in long-term care beds, continuing care, and supportive living, and as a result of that we've been able to move people out of the system, into these facilities, to open up opportunities within our acute care beds. It's difficult times. We're working hard to ensure the system operates well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. To the same minister: it's a broken emergency service, Minister. What are you doing to fix it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mandel: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, code red is a dangerous issue, but it is very short term, as I indicated earlier. It's two minutes or two seconds. The fact of the matter is that we're making strides though creating more opportunities for paramedics to do more things at the site. They don't have to move people to the hospitals, which will free up our ambulances. We've also recently announced our rural health care plan, which is going to direct that all of our rural ambulances will not be able to stay at hospitals but must return to their home site on an immediate basis. We're doing, I think, an exceptional job in ensuring that all of our people are taken care of.

Education Concerns

Mr. Hehr: Five years ago this government let go school board trustees in the Northland school division because of poor student attendance and a lack of progress being made in educating our kids. Essentially, this government took responsibility to fix what was clearly broken. Fast forward five years. Unbelievably, this situation has gotten worse. The Auditor General reported that as many as one-third of our students in this district are chronically absent. To the minister: how come your ministry has made no progress in educating our kids in the Northland school division?

Mr. Dirks: Well, Mr. Speaker, when I became minister or very shortly thereafter under this government's new management, I became aware of the situation in Northland. Of course, we would want all of our students to be attending school regularly. It's a matter of deep concern to me that a report has come forward indicating that there is a significant number of children who are not regularly in attendance at school. I've met with the Auditor. We've had a good discussion on this matter, and we have every intention of working with the official trustee to ensure that we are putting a good plan in place to ameliorate this attendance problem.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, the report notwithstanding, this government knew five years ago that there was a problem. That's why they got rid of the school board. Nevertheless, what has your department done? We can see absolutely no tangible evidence of your moving forward on this file. Have you inquired what the heck your department is doing to fix this education system?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, one of the solutions to the Northland situation is to have an elected board, which will provide solid governance in that division. That's very important. As a new Minister of Education that is the direction in which I am moving, and I certainly welcome all members to support us in that regard.

Mr. Hehr: Public education has not been a priority since I arrived at this Legislature. We have no full-day kindergarten yet, class sizes have skyrocketed, and we have 1,500 fewer teachers in our classrooms as a result of not keeping funding levels where they were. Schools have been promised and not been built. Can the minister admit that there have been victims as a result of us not fixing our fiscal structure, and they have been our school-aged children?

Mr. Dirks: Mr. Speaker, I take umbrage at the member opposite's suggestion that we are not building schools. That's the first thing he said that was mistaken. In this Assembly we have been talking about the largest school build project in the history of Canada: 232 school projects, new schools, modernizations, renovations in virtually every school division across the province. So I do hope the member recognizes once and for all that this government is leading when it comes to school infrastructure.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Government Revenues

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Member for Red Deer-South asked an important question to the Minister of Finance about corporate taxes, and we've had several other questions today on corporate taxes. We all heard the canned response, but unfortunately I'm not convinced. [interjections] Sorry. To the Minister of Finance. We know we're all in this together. We know that everyone has to share . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry; we'll have to hear from the Minister of Finance now. The time has elapsed.

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't feel like we're all in this together right now.

Before I go on – I won't have another chance – I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for his service in the Legislature. I've had the chance to work with him as a critic. He's always been a very honourable individual. He's got a great sense of humour. I wish him the best in his future endeavours.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I'm sorry, but your time has elapsed as well, so let us move on to the first supplemental.

Mr. Casey: Maybe I'll just ask my first question, then, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Finance: what possible reason can there be for not considering an increase in corporate taxes?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I've been pretty clear on this. Maybe the member is a little older than I thought he was, and his hearing has gone, so let me say it one more time. A 1 per cent increase in taxes means that we're going to lose $6 billion in investment in this province, and we'll lose 9,000 jobs. This government will not introduce measures that are going to kill jobs. Corporations are small and they're large. Many of our small corporations are employing just a few employees. We will do what we want to do to continue to make sure that Albertans work in this province and continue to pay taxes and make this the best province in the country.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that increasing government revenues is essential, will the minister not consider reintroducing the old health care premium system as one method?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I thought I was pretty clear on this, but let me be very clear again. We are not – and I say we are not – introducing the health care premiums that Albertans have paid in the past. They were regressive, and the system had administration costs. The measures we take in the budget are aimed at protecting the most vulnerable, our working families, while fixing our fiscal foundation. Clearly, Albertans have stated that they are not in favour of the old system, and we will not be introducing it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

2:40 Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. AMVIC is still holding improper and potentially illegal investigations, and this government simply doesn't get it. Some of these board members are not qualified. They're PC Party insiders. Their best qualification is that they're friends of the old minister. To the new minister: will you stop defending this clear case of patronage, do your job, protect Albertans, and clean up the board?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure you and this House that all appointments in Service Alberta follow a process in which candidates are vetted closely by the department. All appointments for agencies, boards, and commissions are merit based. I want to assure you and this House that the public appointees on AMVIC are there because of merit, sir.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the minister defended appointing an insider as the lead investigator at AMVIC, and later the old minister defended the merit and integrity of his board to the media despite the fact that AMVIC is well known for leading improper investigations. Now we've learned that the lead investigator resigned over this clear conflict of interest. Further, we're getting information that another insider from this board has resigned due to the same conflict of interest. Minister, even the insiders can see the problem. Why can't you?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, this hon. member keeps insisting upon a peculiar line of logic, that if somehow, some way a person in Alberta happens to know a member of the Progressive Conservative Party or perhaps voted for a member of the Conservative Party or shared an elevator ride with a member of the Conservative Party, they should not be eligible to serve on our agencies, boards, and commissions. If that was the case, we would certainly be depriving Albertans of a tremendous amount of the talent pool in this province.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, despite recent resignations this government board is still full of friends of the old minister. Yesterday he became, and I quote, visibly angry when a reporter asked him about the credentials of his friends at the board. Minister, now that you've had some time to think about this situation, please tell me: what specific skills, qualifications do these board members have that other Albertans who applied for these public positions don't have?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I feel like I've answered this question every day in this House this week. I'll give it another shot for the hon. member. What I'll say is that the folks who populate the board of AMVIC are hard-working professionals. They're passionate and dedicated Albertans. They have legal backgrounds. They have accounting backgrounds. Alberta is lucky to have them on the board.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

The bell has rung, which means Oral Question Period has now concluded. Today we heard 108 questions and responses, so thank you for that. In 30 seconds from now we will hear the first of six members' statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: We have two minutes allocated for each person speaking here. Let us begin with Calgary-Cross.

Retirement Farewell – Calgary-Cross

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's hard to believe that 22 years ago I became the MLA for Calgary-Cross as a member of Ralph's team. I've been honoured to serve with five Premiers, over 200 MLAs, and to be at the cabinet table for 10 years. As I look around this beautiful Assembly, I am overcome with incredible emotion that I feel at having worked with each of you. You really are my second family, and we've had many successes together, all of us. As minister of housing and urban affairs I was proud to develop and implement a 10-year plan to end homelessness in Alberta. Many said that it could not be done, Mr. Speaker. Today we've housed over 10,000 people.

Premier, like you I believe that aboriginal people need our support and encouragement. As the minister of children and youth services I hired Alberta's first aboriginal child advocate as well as the first aboriginal deputy minister to lead a new stand-alone division that I created for aboriginal children and youth in care. I also established the Alberta Vulnerable Infant Response Team, and we have over 750 infants and children that have received the supports they need to survive.

I want you to know, Mr. Speaker, that I'm thankful to many people. I am thankful for the wise insight and counsel of my constituency board and my constituency assistants. I sincerely thank as well the hundreds of friends and volunteers who supported me in my six successful campaigns.

My life really has been blessed with a loving family and many dear friends, and I'm grateful and thankful to them all. It is exciting as I look forward to retiring from public life and enjoying more time with my incredible husband, Lanny, and our children.

Thank you, my friends. I will miss you, I will keep in touch, and I'm wishing you all of God's blessings in the future with this wonderful Premier that we have today.

Thank you, all, very much. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you for those heartfelt words.

Let us move on to Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Airdrie.

Provincial Fiscal Policy

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, with a growing energy and focus on the task of bringing modern, progressive, and fair change to Alberta, I can say that in fact nobody in our caucus is retiring, so I'll have to forgo the moving goodbyes today and instead focus a bit on the issues at hand.

At a time when Albertans are worried about their jobs, the Premier wants them to pay an extra tax out of their own pockets for health care. The PCs aren't offering better health care or shorter wait times in emergency rooms; instead, they want the health care system to endure more cutbacks and have Albertans pay more, too. Anyone who has sat in a hospital with a loved one waiting for care knows that the Premier's revenue proposal is nothing more than a waiting room tax. This government wants Albertans to pay more and get less while they give away billions to the most profitable banks and corporations. PC priorities are not Albertans' priorities, and they're not ours either.

We've heard the Premier say that we need to tighten our belts 'cause we've had the best of everything until now, but Albertans know that that's simply not true: not when people are waiting over 70 hours to be admitted into emergency rooms, not when hundreds of kids' surgeries are being cancelled at the Stollery children's hospital because there simply aren't enough recovery beds. In prosperous times the PCs have allowed the services that families need to fall apart. They've failed to take us off the boom-and-bust revenue roller coaster, and they've failed to save for a rainy day. Now they expect working- and middle-class Albertans to foot the bill. That's not leadership, Mr. Speaker.

Last night the Premier asked Albertans to settle for less. He wants to balance the budget on the backs of Alberta families while his corporate friends keep their generous tax breaks and their luxury golf courses. That's not the kind of leadership Albertans need or expect.

It's time for a new kind of leadership that puts Albertans ahead of special interests, the kind of leadership that makes sure Albertans get a fair deal, and that's the kind of Alberta the NDP will ensure we build.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Retrospective by the Member for Airdrie

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, as I stand for possibly the final time in this House, I do so with a heart full of gratitude. I'm grateful to my family and to the constituents of Airdrie for giving me the opportunity to represent them. All of us in this Chamber, of course, have different reasons for becoming MLAs. For me, I wanted to make sure that when my four boys are grown and must decide where they want to live and raise their families, they choose Alberta. I want them to be able to inherit a province of limitless opportunities and the highest quality of life. In short, I want them to call Alberta home with the same love and pride that I do. That's what I've been fighting for, and it's why my heart is so full today, because finally, after seven exhausting years – and they've left some scars – what I and so many other Albertans have been fighting to see happen is actually going to happen.

2:50

Tomorrow our Premier will unveil a long-term plan that will see our province placed firmly on the path to a sustainable and balanced budget, a debt-free future, the lowest tax regime in the country, and a heritage fund that will ensure that the Alberta advantage is protected long after our energy revenues are gone. Don't underestimate the importance of what this means. This plan is a critical turning point for our province. Following through with it will bless the lives of our children and their children for decades. We must not blink, not even for a second. We must follow through with it this time. We owe it to our children.

Alberta is the best place in the world to live and raise a family. May we ever keep it that way is my humble prayer.

In closing, I want to share the end of my favourite poem.

Two roads diverged in a wood, and I –

I took the one less traveled by,

And that has made all the difference.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you for those heartfelt comments as well.

Let us move on to Red Deer-South, followed by Lesser Slave Lake.

Retrospective by the Member for Red Deer-South

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, seven years have gone by in a heartbeat, yet I struggle to summarize in two minutes. I want to start by acknowledging the contribution of family in our service. The support of my wife, Jackie, our children, and family has been integral to performing duties every day since 2008.

I have always held the public service in high regard. I leave with the knowledge that the women and men serving Alberta act with passion, talent, and energy. They deserve our thanks every day. Throughout Alberta I have supported and worked beside individuals whom I admire. I treasure their generosity, insight, and friendship. To my constituency, legislative, and ministerial staff: know that your contribution makes a positive difference in the lives of Albertans every day. Thank you. To all members of this Assembly: I have been proud to share in your empathy, compassion, and action to support the vulnerable, the ill, the elderly, and all Albertans who rely on us.

My work has been an incredible experience, from child intervention policy to youth homelessness to visitability and more, and has reinforced why government must continuously strive to support all Albertans. My assignments as parliamentary assistants in two portfolios, as a legislative secretary, and as the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations all led me to the same conclusion: when we lead as Albertans, we succeed as Albertans.

Albertans are committed to global leadership in environmental sustainability; to enhancing our reputation as a great place to invest and do business; and to welcoming those who aspire to raise their families in a province that values hard work, creativity, and an entrepreneurial spirit. I cherished the responsibility to take our message to the world.

My city, Red Deer, is a place where vision, ambition, and collaboration lead the way, and I am honoured to have served.

Thank you, Red Deer. Thank you, Alberta. [Standing ovation]

4-H Premier's Award Winner

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going anywhere, but I would like to take a moment to recognize the achievements of a very special young lady from High Prairie, in my constituency, Ms Jess Verstappen, introduced earlier. Ms Verstappen was chosen from among an exceptionally strong group of candidates to receive this year's 4-H Premier's award. This is no ordinary award. The Premier's award is the highest honour for Alberta's 4-H program and is given out to a 4-H member who shows exceptional leadership, communication, and personal development skills.

Jess exemplifies everything that is extraordinary about 4-H youth in this province. She is a remarkable young woman and is committed to being a steward of our land and supporting Alberta's rural communities. With a strong agricultural family background Jess has been a member of the Coyote Acres 4-H Club in High Prairie, where she held numerous positions, including president, vice-president, and treasurer. Jess has participated in 4-H activities across the province, including selections, regional winter camps, provincial sheep shows, and regional summer camps. As a Premier's award winner Jess represents Alberta at numerous 4-H events here and across North America.

I'm sure all members will agree with me about how fortunate we are to have our province represented by such a fine young ambassador and how fortunate we are to have such a wonderful 4-H program in Alberta; 4-H is the longest running youth organization in our province, approaching 100 years of shaping the lives of youth and adults in Alberta.

By following the 4-H motto, Learn to Do by Doing, members take part in activities that meet their interests, increase their knowledge, and develop their life skills, which help members become successful and accomplished members of society. Agriculture is vital to our province, and the 4-H program helps to develop tomorrow's leaders. Our government is proud to support this important program for our province's youth.

Please join me in congratulating Jess Verstappen on this great honour and acknowledging all 4-H members and leaders who make this program such a great success.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

28th Legislature

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are heading into a spring election. Long-term members of this Assembly have been giving their farewell speeches, others are already campaigning. So what has changed since the last election? Well, we have a new Premier with a new slogan: We Are under New Management. It sounds great. It's a good slogan. I suspect it feels good, too, for those who were so disappointed with the last group of managers. The Queen's loyal opposition has been decimated since the last election. It was decimated without a vote, and the people responsible for violating that public trust are welcome with open arms into this team of new managers.

Here is the problem for all Albertans. We added a couple of new members to the management team, and then we added a bunch of floor-crossers who exemplify the maxim that integrity doesn't pay as well as self-interest. The truth is, Mr. Speaker, that not much has changed with this management team. There is a new boss, but he's trying to fix a government with the same people and the same political machine that corrupted the government in the first place.

Nothing symbolizes this problem greater than the $10 million taxpayers will give to a golf course. When we asked to postpone that misguided spending, the minister of environment said, "That doesn't make . . . financial sense." The Minister of Energy said, "It is a prudent investment for [this government] to repair this golf course." Now they are all saying: we should re-evaluate this spending, but please just ignore the fact that we refuse to withdraw the expenditure.

Mr. Speaker, this government wants us to believe it's changing its mind, but that's the same mind that whistles when the wind blows through it. I apologize if the government minds are insulted, but just as they passed into law this absurd paid position called a fish guardian – it would be laughable except this fish guardian can now enter and search private property without a warrant. This is a tragic violation of property rights.

So as we head into next month's election, Mr. Speaker, I only hope Albertans do get the message and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you. I regret the time has expired, and we must move on.

Hon. Government House Leader, you have caught my attention.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would request unanimous consent of the Assembly to continue past 3 p.m. notwithstanding rule 7(7).

[Unanimous consent granted]

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader and Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now would like to give oral notice of the intention to introduce Bill 25, the Alberta Centennial Education Savings Plan Amendment Act, 2015, which will be sponsored by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: We have several, so let's keep these as brief as we can, please, in the interest of time, starting with Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the Minister of Health.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Premier I'm pleased to rise today and table the requisite number of copies of the Métis and the First Nations women's councils on economic security 2014 reports and recommendations and government of Alberta responses.

Thank you.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Mandel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the five requisite copies of the Health Quality Council of Alberta's annual report 2013-2014. This report was submitted to me in accordance with the provisions of section 24(1) of the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, which requires the HQCA board to table an annual report each fiscal year to the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly. In the report you will find an overview of the HQCA's accomplishments and activities in the past year. A condensed version of the report is also available for viewing on the HQCA website.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and in accordance with section 4(6) of the Election Act I would like to table five copies of the report by the Chief Electoral Officer titled Report on the October 27, 2014 By-elections in: Calgary-Elbow, Calgary-Foothills, Calgary-West, Edmonton-Whitemud. Copies of this report are being distributed to members today.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to table five copies of the Alberta Economic Development Authority's annual activity report. This year's activity report celebrates 20 years of the Alberta Economic Development Authority providing sound advice to the government of Alberta. Since its inception the authority has proven to be a responsive, informed, and committed partner. Over the last two decades it has provided advice and insight on a broad range of economic issues, including productivity, innovation, transportation, carbon capture, market access, to name just a few. Over the past year the authority has been active in benchmarking Alberta's competitiveness in relation to other jurisdictions and deeply involved in the province's innovation systems and water strategies, among other timely issues. I encourage all members of this House to read this report.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a letter and a petition from the concerned citizens of the hamlet of Enchant and surrounding communities, 75 signatures asking Alberta Transportation to lower the speed limit on highway 526 in the vicinity of the hamlet. The five requisite copies have been made.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a publication by the Alberta Teachers' Association entitled Who Will Teach Us? It provides a snapshot of the effects that the Premier's deep cuts will have on the K to 12 education system in Alberta. The Premier said that his government will hold the line on education investment, which will directly contribute to skyrocketing classroom sizes and a lack of teachers within them. I table this document in the hopes that the government will not just hold the line when it comes to the future of our students and children in this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of an e-mail I received from my constituent Adrienne Webb outlining the difficulties that she encountered in getting approval for a service dog and some suggestions to improve that process.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My optimism has paid off, and I, indeed, have located the tablings that I was looking for. The first tabling that I have is an e-mail from Leah Dal Ponte. She has written about the wild horse cull and capture. She's quite frustrated at the lack of response to her letters to government, and she personally is heartbroken, ashamed, and feeling helpless that all of her entreaties were ignored.

The second tabling, also an e-mail, from Maureen Hurly of Calgary is also about the wild horse cull, making the point that there is no Disney ending for these wild horses, that the government has been unclear about the official position of whether they're genetically different or not, and that the sensitive landscape that the horses supposedly damage is full of ATVs, cattle grazing, oil and gas activity, and logging activities.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes our Routine except for points of order. I believe we have one that was expressed at 2:04 this afternoon, and it was expressed by Rimbeby-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. Please proceed with your citation and your point of order.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I raise my point of order on 23(h) and (i), in all due respect to the Minister of Energy, and the allegation that I have somehow prior to coming into this Legislature or even in this Legislature advocated for more regulation in the electricity industry when I am absolutely on record – and he knows this – that I was absolutely opposed to the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, otherwise known as Bill 50. I opposed this when I debated that minister in his own riding some six, seven years ago, and he knows that. Now he raises the allegation to impugn my reputation, and that is just not – not – acceptable.

Mr. Speaker, I was opposed to those two HVDC lines because this government was spending a billion dollars more per line, for an extra $2 billion, and got nothing for it. I'm on record, and he knows that. He knows I'm on record to – you want me to stop, I can tell, but I want to really wax him on this one, Mr. Speaker.

I will tell you that he should retract that statement. I am not on record anywhere asking for more regulation. I'm on record opposed to that legislation and every regulation attached thereto.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader briefly, please.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, that's very difficult to follow. First, on behalf of the government caucus I wanted to thank this member for his service the last three years. I'm not rising on a funeral announcement here, but I just wanted to indicate that despite that his comments have nothing to do with regulation and despite the fact that he wanted to run as a PC candidate this election, I'm going to withdraw the comment on behalf of the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Speaker, this one is on me.

The Speaker: Not unlike the eighth wonder of the world. Thank you.

Well, hon. members, we've had a withdrawal. It's really a point of clarification. I believe, hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, you would be satisfied with the withdrawal and with the fact that you had a chance to clarify your position, so we don't have to get into any other ruling on that. That is noted, and that particular point of order is now closed.

With that, let us move on.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 24

Public Sector Services Continuation Repeal Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to move third reading of Bill 24, the Public Sector Services Continuation Repeal Act.

Bill 45 was passed by the House in December 2013 but was never proclaimed and never put into force. Since that time a new government with a new Premier, who has put this government and this province under new management, has come into place. Earlier this month the Premier announced that the government would be reviewing its approach to public-sector relations and that we would put in place an essential services model of legislation. That work, Mr. Speaker, is now under way.

Mr. Speaker, given this change in the province's approach to labour legislation it is clear that the Public Sector Services Continuation Act is no longer required. Maintaining public safety and ensuring the public has access to essential services during times of labour disputes will be part of any legislation that is brought forward. New legislation will also align with the recent Supreme Court of Canada decision regarding labour legislation. We have already begun reviewing the essential services models of legislation that are in place with most other jurisdictions in the country, and we plan to table that legislation in the near future.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, this withdrawal of Bill 45, the repeal, indicates, we hope, a new period of mutual respect and co-operation with our employees and their representatives, and I hope that all members of the House will join me in supporting this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 24, the Public Sector Services Continuation Repeal Act. Of course, I just wanted to point out, again, that less than a year ago this member voted for Bill 45. Now he's voting to repeal it. So he voted for it before he voted against it, and I just wanted to make sure that he was certain this time that he wants to get rid of it.

I think it's very important here that – you know, you need consistency and certainty when it comes to labour relations, and the fact is that there were a lot of members on the other side that voted for this legislation who are now voting against it. So I guess, Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to point that out.

We look forward to further debate on this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:10

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with interest to speak on Bill 24. Certainly, I take a great deal of satisfaction in seeing that this bill is being repealed. We know that we fought a very hard and long battle last winter in regard to Bill 45. I think it's always a good reminder to know where these things come from so that we can learn and that in the future it doesn't happen again.

Quite frankly, what happened in regard to Bill 45 was a very sort of callous attempt to make an attack on the ability to negotiate and to strike if need be. The government saw an opportunity to exercise power on this issue in Bill 45, and indeed it was beaten back quite handily. So while it was never proclaimed, certainly it always kind of sat there, simmering in the background as a symbol of something that needed to be gone.

Always we know, Mr. Speaker, that there's a tension between workers and management. It can be a constructive tension that creates better working conditions, safer working conditions, creates opportunities for better pay, for more equitable distribution of the production of wealth that we have in this province. It allows us healthier working conditions in the widest possible way. You know, that never usually comes out of just everyone agreeing around a table. It sometimes is the product of tension. So we recognize that tension, and we recognize that, ultimately, more sane and reasonable, I think, circumstances have resulted from that.

But if we didn't fight this Bill 45 in the first place, we wouldn't have got here at all. Indeed, the rights and the freedoms that were in jeopardy with Bill 45 were won by previous generations of people who chose to fight for the capacity of free speech and for the right to bargain collectively, the right to organize together to improve wages, health, and safety in working conditions for all Canadians. Certainly, as Alberta New Democrats we weren't afraid to stand up. I would venture to say that without thousands of Albertans standing up against Bill 45 and remaining united in standing against Bill 45, we wouldn't be here today repealing this same odious and difficult bill as well.

We know that there has been a Supreme Court order on this kind of behaviour stemming from similar circumstances in Saskatchewan, so we would know that Bill 45 was, in fact, illegal anyway and needed to be repealed. You know, circumstances being as they may, we're happy to see it repealed here today. We will take it as a symbol of our solidarity with the working people here in the province of Alberta, the power of us to stand together, to fight for more equality and social justice, for better working conditions, for fair wages, and to know that we can utilize that power to generate laws that protect working people in this province and that push back against unjust legislation such as Bill 45.

So on behalf of all working people and on behalf of the Alberta New Democrats we certainly will stand behind this bill. It's a very fine, fine day. Hopefully, we can pass this thing today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is now available. Should anyone wish to speak on 29(2)(a), please let me know. I see no one.

Are there any other speakers? I see none.

The hon. minister to close debate.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will rise to close debate because I believe that repealing the Public Sector Services Continuation Act will be the first step toward a new era in a mutually respectful, two-way relationship with our public-sector employees and those that represent them in bargaining.

To the House leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition I would say – and this would be the second time today that the hon. member has been reminded – that a lot of things can change in a year, Mr. Speaker. The very best and brightest of his caucus is now on this side of the House since last year. The government is under new management since last year. In fact, through a Supreme Court of Canada decision not very many weeks ago the actual labour law in this country has changed.

Add all that together with our Premier and our government's genuine desire to go forward in a mutually respectful, positive way with those who do the great work every day that Albertans love, who provide the services that Albertans are so very proud of, about 213,000 men and women who get paid, you know, through the taxpayer and through the decisions of this government. Those people are important, and this is an important way for our government to say so.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll close and respectfully ask members of the Assembly to vote in favour of this bill.

The Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 24 read a third time]

Bill 12 Common Business Number Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today at third reading to discuss the Common Business Number Act. This bill will ensure that Alberta has a business-friendly environment by reducing red tape and improving services for business. Adopting the common business number will expand opportunities for our government to simplify business registration processes, modernize and improve service delivery, offer secure services online, and improve program compliance.

With that, I move third reading of the Common Business Number Act. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the Alberta New Democrats do support this bill. Creating some correlation between different systems using common business numbers is a good idea. We know that this is something that has been done in other provinces; notably, the New Democrat government in Manitoba did so. You know, it's always important.

I just want to point out that always when we talk about red tape and so forth – right? – you move regulation from one place to another, not necessarily just removing it from all sectors of any given business community or sector. You do need regulation to ensure a level playing field, to ensure that people are not cheating and so forth. Where does regulation belong? This is something that we should all reflect on, I think, here in this Legislature. With the sort of glib concept of, "Red tape is bad, so cut it; make it, you know, a free-whatever-market thing," then the regulation will simply move from a public entity such as this House here to a corporate level. We saw on so many occasions that where government ceded their responsibility to regulate, then larger companies and corporations will do so, but they do it without the democratic element that we provide here in the House.

It's just a word of caution. It's something I've been reflecting on. This is a good bill, certainly, but let's not forget that our primary responsibility is to in fact make regulation in order for good governance to take place here in this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to speak to this bill. It's a good bill. It seems to move us forward on making things easier for businesses to continue to be successful and also cuts out some of the bureaucracy and allows a common business number, that has been seen to work in other provinces. I will note that Alberta seems to have been a little bit slower than other provinces in moving in this direction. I would encourage us to continue looking up best practices where they're available and to move a little more swiftly on it.

3:20

Just commenting on what the hon. member just stated, you know, we often do look at regulation and see it as a bad thing. Then, on the other hand, regulation is often what protects us. It gives us safety in standards and the protections that we hope for when we purchase goods, when we go through processes, when we build homes and the like. Regulation is often the stuff that's necessary to ensure a level playing field, to ensure quality standards and the like. I, too, understand that. We should always look at that as our responsibility to protect the public and to ensure that there are quality goods and services being provided and that they're not getting sold a bill of goods.

In any event, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I applaud the government for moving forward on this initiative.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

I see no one. Are there any other speakers?

Mr. Khan: Just really quickly, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity to first extend my gratitude to the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park for doing the heavy lifting with this bill. He's done a remarkable job on this. I also want to thank the opposing members for their speeches. As they said, this is a good bill. This will create efficiency. This is something that the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education has promised his stakeholders in terms of reducing red tape. It's a very good bill. It will deliver a benefit for our business community in Alberta, particularly our small-business community.

Again I just want to extend my gratitude to the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park for his exemplary work in bringing this bill forward. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

I see no one. Is there anyone else who wishes to speak?

If not, could I call on the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park to close debate?

Mr. Quest: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a couple of quick comments. I appreciate the opportunity to work on this. Just in response to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder and the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer about regulation, I did have the opportunity to lead the small-business strategy for Alberta, what will become the small-business strategy for Alberta document, and what we heard from small business, really, wasn't so much about regulations and what they were. It was their intent, of course, to comply. What they really asked for is easier access to that information. We're moving towards that. This is also something else that they expressed a strong interest in. So I'm very pleased to have had the opportunity to carry this bill through the process.

With that, I would ask that you call the question.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, that closes the debate, and the question has been called.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 12 read a third time]

Bill 14

Agricultural Societies Amendment Act, 2015

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and speak on behalf of the minister of agriculture and move third reading of Bill 14, the Agricultural Societies Amendment Act, 2015.

Since 1886, Mr. Speaker, before Alberta existed as a province, agricultural societies have been working to enhance the agricultural industry and improve awareness in our communities. Over the years the role of agricultural societies has changed with the changing times, expanding beyond the scope of agriculture to include the services provided and enhancing the quality of Albertans' lives. Today the province has over 300 ag societies administering over 3,000 activities every year, overseeing the operations of close to 700 community facilities. From farmers' markets to fairs to curling rinks they are touching the everyday lives of people in their community. Our agricultural societies have evolved, and the legislation must continue to evolve with them to ensure that meeting the needs of these communities is served.

Bill 14 is about just that, Mr. Speaker. The Agricultural Societies Amendment Act will modernize the legislation, ensure that it aligns with the Societies Act, ensure that all agricultural societies have effective bylaws in place, and recognize that large and small agricultural societies are flexible in how they can be structured to their unique needs.

The amendments, for example, broaden the language to recognize that agricultural societies serve more than just agricultural communities. The legislation clarifies the responsibilities of societies to incorporate under the act, including their ability to enter into contracts; to purchase, to own, and to dispose of property and assets; and to enter into indemnity.

The provisions will also address issues like maintaining the members' registration and registered offices, a process for major discussions and decisions along alignments, dissolutions, liability protection of the society's director.

Mr. Anglin: Say that three times.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you to the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. It's always nice to have help out there.

A key part to the amendments also involves removing some of the overly prescriptive items from legislation. Instead societies will now have the flexibility to address items like membership fees, eligibility within their bylaws, and what can be tailored to meet their needs. To ensure good governance, Mr. Speaker, minimum requirements for bylaws will be outlined in the regulations, and new amendment bylaws will be vetted by the department.

Amending any legislation is done with a great deal of care, attention to detail, and the Agricultural Societies Amendment Act is no different. In drafting the amendments, the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development worked closely with the Alberta Association of Agricultural Societies. All members were invited to take part in consultation meetings, and approximately 200 people participated through this, Mr. Speaker. As a result of these changes, many agricultural societies will update their bylaws and will have three years to comply with this. The Agriculture and Rural Development department will work closely with agricultural societies and the Alberta Association of Agricultural Societies to provide ongoing support to facilitate these changes.

I want to thank all of my colleagues who participated in the discussion of this bill, Mr. Speaker. Good questions were raised during debate, and I want to address a few of these points. The first is concerning why provisions for amalgamation have been added. While agricultural societies did have the ability to merge, there's no clearly defined process currently outlined in the legislation. We want to make sure that agricultural societies have a well-defined process to follow. The new provisions, which reflect the procedures outlined in the Societies Act, outline a clear, consistent process should societies wish for whatever reason to amalgamate. For example, societies may have changed recruiting and retaining volunteers and maintaining their infrastructure to choose to consolidate their resources with another society to benefit both organizations.

Another point was brought up during the debate, Mr. Speaker, around the removal of the governance guidance guarantee in the act. The current act allows the Lieutenant Governor in Council to provide a governance guidance guarantee of an agricultural society's borrowing. This outdated clause is not one that has been used frequently by societies. There are currently no loan guarantees under the act, and there has been no intention to offer any guarantee in the future.

We met with the Alberta Association of Agricultural Societies early in the process to discuss all the proposed changes, including the removal of the guarantee. AAAS indicated that there is no issue for their members.

Mr. Speaker, this is the last general comment from the debate that I'd like to address. There were some concerns expressed on moving the provisions to the regulation instead of having them remain in legislation. Moving some of these provisions to regulations helps the legislation remain relevant so we don't have to reopen the act to change every minute detail. It allows the act to serve its intended purpose, to provide the high-level framework for the continued successful operation of agricultural societies in Alberta. There will be a formal process to change regulations, and the changes will be made in consultation with the societies. These changes give us the ability to react, to change the role of the agricultural societies in our rural communities, and to be more flexible to their needs as they evolve.

I recognize the important role that agricultural societies have in Alberta. I think that we should all have the common goal of supporting our local organizations and helping them improve the quality of life in their communities. I'm confident that these amendments will update the legislation to ensure that it continues to meet the needs of our agricultural societies and of all Albertans.

I urge the members of this Assembly to support the legislation. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

3:30

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the Alberta New Democrats do support this bill. I think it's very important to maintain flexible and modern regulation in regard to agricultural societies. Agricultural societies provide a very important pivot point for not just economic development in rural areas but also social and community development. As the hon. member pointed out, several agricultural societies even precede the formation of this province and indeed helped to form some of the very earliest forms of governance and community development, that still carry on today right across this province. We know as well that the regulations need to accommodate for the changing and expanding roles that agricultural societies have in different communities around the province.

As I travel around from place to place, a number of societies stand out in my mind. Camrose is a perfect example of one that's evolved tremendously to provide a whole universe of entertainment and community development. It's in close proximity to the big show, the jamboree, that takes place in Camrose. It's quite a sophisticated, large, nonprofit organization that deals in many millions of dollars. It's important for them to have that flexibility to move into new markets around festivals and casinos and all the other things that they do. That's important, too.

I know that our support for agricultural societies here, from the Legislature outwards, is very important, too, because of course we see a very changing dynamic in terms of population around the province. Some communities are rapidly losing their population, but at the same time it's very important that they don't lose those social and community structures that can help to gain back and create a nucleus for growth in the future for communities around the province.

Certainly, I'm happy to see this legislation being updated and modernized through this particular bill. I'm very pleased for it. In my own family, in fact, we have a long history on my mother's side of participating in agricultural societies in Vermilion, Alberta. I know that from several generations of our own family on my mother's side and then even myself when I was growing up and working with the Vermilion Agricultural Society and so forth, it really helped to not just make Vermilion the great town it is today but also helped in my own development and sense of community as I grew up.

Thanks for the bill, and certainly the New Democrats will support it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberals will be supporting this bill. It seems to move agricultural societies in an updated fashion that will allow them to do much of their good work, both on the economic side and the social and community development side, in a much more robust fashion. It's a good bill, and I'm looking forward to seeing what more good comes from our agricultural societies. As was noted, they've been with us from the very beginning and will continue to support and foster good community spirit throughout this province.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I see no one.

Are there any other speakers?

If not, hon. Member for Little Bow, do you wish to close debate?

Mr. Donovan: I close debate, Mr. Speaker, and call the question.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Bill 19

Education Amendment Act, 2015

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today on behalf of the Minister of Education to move third and final reading of Bill 19, the Education Amendment Act, 2015.

This is legislation that through a series of amendments will assist in ensuring that the Education Act, upon its proclamation, is successful in focusing education on the student, supporting educational choice, and enabling school boards to be more collaborative and responsive to their students' needs. Therefore, I hope you will join me in supporting this very important piece of legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't have a great deal of commentary on this. I think that some of my colleagues have spoken on it already. Yes, the Alberta New Democrats are choosing to support Bill 19. However, I think there are a number of issues that just need to be illuminated here in regard to this bill. I know that because this is an amendment act, it curtails our capacity to go back to different aspects of the Education Act that have problems.

Certainly, I think that there are three areas that I just wanted to focus in on, first of all in regard to the definition of residency requirements for students and then in sections 2 and 3 of this bill, where they focus on the student rather than the parent. You know, it's just really important that when we talk about residency and the money that follows, especially, students with special needs, we have very careful consideration of areas that probably provide more special-needs education and that the money is properly following the student that requires that special-needs education. I think that probably my colleagues used the School for the Deaf as an example. There are others as well. It's just really important that we make sure that certain school boards don't get shortchanged – right? – based on the fact that they do provide more special-needs education, that other places around the province maybe don't have – and we're, of course, happy to share because that's what we should do – and that the money is there to look after the student when they move to a different place.

The other issue that I wanted to point out was in regard to the capacity for school boards to perhaps vote out a member of their board if they are deemed to be somehow not in compliance with a code of conduct and so forth. You know, this is very problematic because, of course, you can use this any number of ways. Remember that trustees are elected through a municipal, democratic process, so it's very important that we do not empower boards, specifically, to have some code of conduct or a hammer that they can hold over an individual member and potentially take out that member, who has been democratically elected to serve. You can imagine some facsimile of that here in this House, where you would have some capacity to take out other members, to vote somebody out of the Assembly. I mean, that would be obviously illogical, and we wouldn't entertain that, but then we're having some version of it, I see, unless I'm reading this wrong, with trustees being allowed to use a code of conduct to vote out an individual member that was otherwise democratically elected into that position. So I just wanted to point that out.

Then the other issue that I wanted to just touch on quickly, Mr. Speaker, is in regard to the minister's capacity to dissolve school boards and then appoint members. I think we talked about that a bit this afternoon in regard to the Northland school division. You know, it's just been going on too long, right? That happened at least four or maybe – I don't know – five years ago, when Northland was dissolved. I think a short-term limit for the interim appointed, nonelected board should be put in place to ensure that we don't have something like what just happened with the Northland school board, where we had five years of appointed trusteeship. The issues that I think maybe precipitated the dissolution of that board in the first place are only getting worse, right? With the problems with absenteeism and low graduation rates, retention of workers and teachers up in the Northland school board, the problem has only festered and carried on over these last five years.

I'm not saying that that's just simply a result of the dissolution of that board and the choice to have an appointed board for five long years, but certainly I think it probably contributed to that. Sometimes we make regulation here to protect us from ourselves, and I think that in this case having the limitation of one year of an appointed board upon the dissolution of an elected board by the Minister of Education would be more reasonable and maybe wouldn't have us in the position that we are in today, with this overdue, difficult situation in Northland.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take leave. Certainly, as I say, the Alberta New Democrats will vote in favour of Bill 19.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberals, too, will be voting in favour of these amendments. We, too, noted the residency concerns and ensuring that money is properly flowing from various school boards, from residences to the location where the child is getting the support they need.

Also, there is a concern out there by many board trustees about the potential for a trustee to be removed under these codes of conduct and, if they're being the so-called sticky wicket or the like, maybe being forced out of their position even though they're democratically elected to do their job. I think the minister needs to keep apprised of that, ensure that democracy is served and that people are able to do their work and carry out what they've been elected to do.

The third thing is also, simply, the situation in Northland school division. There is an amendment that deals with the trustee and getting duly elected boards, that we have to have a function that tries to fill that capacity. Now, I'm not certain, but I probably agreed with the government's decision when they went into Northland school division when they saw the problems that were arising out of that district. I'm very disappointed that very little progress has been made in trying to get kids educated in that community, and I think we can do better from that. Having an amendment that actually reflects getting the proper people in place to support the community and getting the proper resources to that community is imperative.

I will close by sort of saying: look, we have an Education Act, we now have some amendments, we have an Inspiring Education document, and all these things are well and good, Mr. Speaker, but if we don't commit the necessary investments to our public education system, well, it all amounts to, I guess, a hill of beans. You know, you really have to put investments into getting our kids as much education as possible to be ready for the challenges they will face as they grow older and get out into the workforce and raise families and want to become part of the actively engaged citizenry.

I will note that, in my view at least, our supports for public education when I came into this Legislature were higher on a per-student basis, we were doing more robust things, and our education system seemed to be better supported by this government than it currently is. My hope is that we turn the corner and can see it again as an investment and get busy with providing early childhood learning opportunities and investing in education. I note that 25 per cent of the children now in the Calgary board of education are English as a second language students, and we must ensure that they're getting ready and prepared for, I guess, life in Canada. It's not easy to do that with less money. You have to be ensuring that they're getting the help and support they need.

In any event, as mentioned, we'll be supporting these amendments, and we look forward to this government investing in public education. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I don't see anyone wishing to take up that opportunity.

Are there any other speakers?

If not, the hon. minister to close debate.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we close debate, and I thank the hon. members for all of their excellent comments.

The Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 19 read a third time]

Bill 21

Safety Codes Amendment Act, 2015

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to move third reading of Bill 21, the Safety Codes Amendment Act, 2015.

I'd like to thank all members who participated in second reading and Committee of the Whole debates for their comments and wide support for this bill. I would also like to thank the staff of the Department of Municipal Affairs, who have worked very hard to put this bill together, as well as the Safety Codes Council, the safety codes co-ordinating committee, and all their many subcommittees that contributed to this bill.

Bill 21 will provide for the timely adoption of codes and standards, will strengthen the administration of the act in unaccredited municipalities, will provide greater flexibility for municipalities to deal with the development of private sewage-disposal systems, and will strengthen the current compliance tool kit under the act by making administrative penalties available.

Mr. Speaker, these changes will strengthen Alberta's safety codes system, and I would ask that all members support Bill 21. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there other speakers? I see none.

Hon. member, do you wish to, then, just close debate and we'll go on with the vote?

Mr. Casey: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 21 read a third time]

Bill 22
Skin Cancer Prevention (Artificial Tanning) Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to bring forward Bill 22, the Skin Cancer Prevention (Artificial Tanning) Act, for third reading.

The dangers of tanning and the risk of skin cancer have already been highlighted extensively during debate on this bill. Melanoma, skin cancer, is a preventable form of cancer, but unfortunately it's on the rise in our province. Research shows that the use of tanning equipment, especially before the age of 35, increases the risk of melanoma by 59 per cent. We also know that nearly 20 per cent of teens under 18 have already used artificial tanning equipment. What's more, one-third of 17-year-old girls have visited a tanning salon, yet only 3 per cent of parents believe their teenagers have used artificial tanning.

Mr. Speaker, projections show that nearly 700 Albertans will be affected by melanoma skin cancer in 2017. The hope is that through Bill 22, the skin cancer prevention act, we'll start to see these numbers decrease. Nine jurisdictions already have legislation in place that imposes some form of age restriction on artificial tanning. Bill 22 is our opportunity to catch up with others who've already taken action to protect our youth. This legislation will also help adults make informed choices about this risky practice. When passed, Bill 22 not only protects our youth; it also educates our adult Albertans about the dangers of UV radiation through required health warnings.

I'm very pleased with the broad support that this bill has already received, not only from health advocate groups but by members of this Assembly. Bill 22 also has support from the association representing about one-third of the businesses offering tanning services.

In terms of enforcement Bill 22 was drafted to support a variety of options, including a process to investigate Albertans' complaints about businesses that they believe are breaking the law, test purchases by secret shoppers who are under 18 years of age, and escalating fines for businesses caught breaking the law multiple times. The Minister of Health will appoint enforcement officers once regulations are developed, and regulations will be developed with input from stakeholders.

The bottom line is that the government has the responsibility to protect youth from harmful activities and provide adults with information on health risks to help them make informed choices. I would ask that all members support Bill 22.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:50

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberals will be supporting this legislation. It seems to be a proactive move in lessening skin cancer and moving us forward into an age where we can eliminate obvious dangers to people in this province. It's one that we wholeheartedly support. I hope that we can look forward to more proactive legislation of this kind. We often here in Alberta tend to move slowly on these things. I note that we were the last province, I think, to introduce seat belt legislation, the last province to finally ban smoking in restaurants, and the list goes on and on. We should try to move a little bit quicker on this public safety/public health file. We don't always have to be laggards on these things.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, those are my comments, and we can move on.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the Alberta New Democrats do support this legislation as well. We know that the prevalence of skin cancer in our society is troubling, and I think this should be part of a longer, more concerted effort to help to inform and change behaviours around exposure to dangerous forms of sunlight as well over the next number of months and years. In other jurisdictions around the world such as Australia, you know, they made it a big national effort to work in educating the public around exposure to sunlight and to dangerous levels of sunshine. Also, tanning beds around our own country and across different jurisdictions around the world have already been severely curtailed.

You know, I would hope that we could perhaps create a culture where people, even after they're 18 years old, just would choose not to use something like this because of the dangerous effects on skin such as melanoma. It's a step that we can take. Certainly, I know that not long ago these same tanning people were marketing to kids: "For high school grad get a tan" and all this kind of stuff. We've, I think, perhaps slowed that process down. We'll eliminate it by passing this bill. Like I say, there are a whole other range of educative things that we can do to have the public maybe not choose to use this kind of service at all, even after they turn 18, and that we're properly protecting ourselves against the dangerous effects of exposure to sunlight in general.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available for anyone who wishes to chime in.

If not, are there other speakers? The hon. Minister of Health, please.

Mr. Mandel: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I won't be long. I want to recognize and thank the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park for bringing this forward and sponsoring this bill. It's a very important bill, especially when we realize the challenges and problems it creates for so many people 18 and under. When we had the first presentation, first reading, we had people here from across the province who had experienced the challenge they've faced as a result of being in tanning beds too often, the melanoma and the cancer that they've developed. It's very sad. We hope that this bill will help to eliminate any kind of involvement of those under 18 years of age in the tanning salons but also have tanning salons recognize inside their facilities to those that are coming in that there are dangers with tanning beds. We would hope that all members would support this bill. It's vitally important to do this. We think this is a great step forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I see no one.

Are there other speakers?

If not, the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park to close debate.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the hon. Minister of Health for the opportunity to carry what I think is an important bill. It protects our youth. It educates adults. It will result in a lower number of skin cancer incidents. I'd also like to just point out, as I mentioned in the opening comments, that the associations representing some of the larger groups that offer indoor tanning already have restrictions around youth tanning and so on, so this will level the playing field and ensure that everybody does the same thing.

With that, I would ask that you call the question. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The debate has been closed. The question has been called.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 22 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 23 Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2015

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy and Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to rise on behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General to speak to and move second reading of Bill 23, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2015.

The proposed amendments in this act will change the operations and funding model for the civil forfeiture office, or CFO, as I'll refer to it, Mr. Speaker. The proposed amendments will create a regulated civil forfeiture fund. This will improve transparency by setting out what money goes into and out of the fund. One of the things that will be permitted to be paid out of the fund is the expenses incurred in obtaining forfeitures; that is, the cost of obtaining and managing forfeitures will now be paid from the forfeitures themselves.

These amendments will also change other business processes, including prohibiting a person's objection to administrative forfeiture from being used against that person in the criminal trial; permitting regulations to be made which would list offences that cause bodily harm or profit; changing the current name to the civil forfeiture and restitution act to avoid confusion with the Victims of Crime Act; and making technical and minor improvements to business operations. I'll provide some details about the proposed amendments, Mr. Speaker.

The legislation will establish a civil forfeiture fund and clearly set out what money becomes part of the fund and what the money can be used for. To put it simply, proceeds from forfeited property will be paid into the fund. The fund will then be available to support grants for community-based crime prevention or victim programs, comply with court orders to return property to individual victims or innocent third-party creditors, pay the expenses spent storing and selling property, and recover certain operational expenses.

Mr. Speaker, an expense recovery model will allow the CFO to pay the government's cost to obtain forfeitures from the proceeds of the forfeitures themselves. This is not a new approach. Every other province with a civil forfeiture program permits some or all operational expenses to be paid from the proceeds of forfeitures. This expense recovery model will make the program sustainable and reduce the need for Albertans' ongoing fiscal support.

I want to stress that grants will be preserved under this business model. I also want to stress that the victims of crime fund and the funding of victim services units in our communities will not be affected. That is a completely different fund and program. The civil forfeiture program is a relatively new tool to keep Alberta communities safe. When it started, it needed taxpayer financial support. However, the program is now operational and has demonstrated, Mr. Speaker, that it will be able to recover its expenses and also continue to provide grant funding.

I reinforce that this is only a matter of recovering direct expenses. Proceeds from forfeitures will not go to general government revenues. The fund's current reserves will ensure that we can maintain annual average grant levels as we make this important fund self-sustainable. Regardless of the province's fiscal situation this funding model will allow this successful program to continue its work to reduce crime, help victims' programs, and protect third-party property interests, Mr. Speaker.

Another proposed amendment to the act will prohibit a person's objection to an administrative forfeiture from being used against that person in a criminal trial. The proposed amendment provides a clear commitment that civil forfeiture is not used to undermine the criminal process, Mr. Speaker. Civil forfeiture information has never been used in a criminal case, but this is a proactive provision to allay potential concerns.

A further amendment to the act will permit regulations listing offences that cause bodily harm or profit. For example, a regulation might be considered in future listing child sexual exploitation as an offence that causes bodily harm. This would mean that property used in committing this type of offence could be subject to civil forfeiture proceedings, Mr. Speaker. This amendment to regulatory authority will not change the program's scope but will open the possibility of increasing clarity and enhancing responsiveness to victims' needs.

The final amendments will be used to pursue technical and minor improvements to business operations. Mr. Speaker, these amendments will help the CFO continue to reduce victimization by producing crime fund programs that support victims. The program enhancements will ensure that the program continues to protect Albertans by taking the profit out of crime and taking away the property needed to commit crime, essentially turning bad money into good money. Albertans deserve and want safe communities. These amendments will help to achieve that.

Thank you for your attention.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, this is an interesting bill, that deserves some merit and proper scrutiny. You know, I have to say from the outset that it's under a very sort of tight timeline that we are dealing with it. I think we just got briefed on this yesterday, maybe, something like that, so it takes a while for us to go through and make sure that we talk to different people in the community that can help us to understand how any given bill affects the larger society to which it's directed. You know, in the fullness of time I think the Alberta New Democrat team will be able to work through this in a reasonable and constructive way so that we can produce something that will serve the larger society in the best possible way.

This is the way I'm seeing it anyway, that the present Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act allows for the civil forfeiture office to ask the court, any given court, to restrain, seize, and then, later, forfeit property, okay? An order restraining property prevents it from being sold, like a freeze, basically, until a final ruling about whether it should be returned or disposed of. So the civil forfeiture office has to prove – tell me if I'm right about this – based on a balance of probabilities, that the property, first of all, was acquired by illegal means or, two, used to carry out an illegal activity that was likely to cause bodily harm or illegal gain, okay?

This bill that we have before us here this afternoon proposes to modernize the legislation surrounding civil forfeiture to enable it to recover expenses from forfeited property and operate on an expense-recovery basis – okay? – somehow bringing this up to date to fully use the money that can be recovered from a forfeiture, which sounds reasonable. The fund is associated with the civil forfeiture office and then would be a regulated type of ongoing fund, I suppose. A person's objection to forfeiture could no longer be used against them in a criminal trial, which seems fair. Concerns for the party in terms of the forfeiture office and language being used in legislation, I think, are something to consider.

It's very important for us to put victims central in the justice system. We all recognize that. Every effort, I think, must be made by government to properly support programs and services for victims, and this is an evolution that, I think, has been a positive one here in this jurisdiction and across the country.

It's very important for the whole process, however, to stay within the legality and the process of one being tried and being found guilty or not and that the handling of the property follows that due process as well. That's the issue or the sticking point that we have to be very careful of because, of course, you know, a person has their property seized before the trial takes place.

We know that in other jurisdictions – this is always the standard thing we do, right? We learn about how it's going in other provinces. We know that in B.C. there has been a civil forfeiture office functioning for a while, and it's been okay, but it's had some problems, too. I think that we should explore those issues before we import something like that here into the province of Alberta. A judge in B.C., for example, found that this civil forfeiture office had taken, in his words, "zealous measures" in a case and ordered the return of confiscated property. It's unclear in our analysis so far whether we are putting in place adequate safeguards to make sure that we are in fact confiscating and selling and distributing property in an equitable way and then making sure that we don't end up creating more legal cases based on legislation that maybe is not comprehensive in that regard.

I think that a broad definition of a peace officer – it's important to have a peace officer definition here that can work for us, right? The definition's potential to empower many people not intended to be empowered by this act is a potential issue that we should look at as well.

Another issue that I think we might want to consider is around section 7 of this bill. A respondent, according to this, now has only 30 days from the time of being served with a restraint order to apply for a review of their order. Previously the respondent had the time to the disposal hearing to apply for a review, so I think it would be prudent and worth while to explore further why we have this 30-day cut-off in this new legislation, and I would just like to explore that a little bit further.

Similarly, in section 8 there is the provision to give the court additional grounds to dismiss an application for review of a restraining order. Under this bill the application may be dismissed if the court is satisfied that "the only ground for a review is a defect in form, a technical irregularity or an inadvertent error or omission, and that no substantial wrong or miscarriage of justice has occurred." Mr. Speaker, I would just like to explore that further in regard to what the implications of that statement are, and, you know, I think it brings to mind what inadvertent mistakes would be now tolerated, that otherwise this bill seeks to change.

I mean, we've been working under tight time restraint here to have some analysis. We want to have time to pursue this further, like I said, to talk to people outside to find out how the system is working for them now and how this might change.

I think that those are my concerns for now. I also would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that certainly upon a global analysis, a reading of this bill under short time constraints would suggest that Alberta's New Democrats would support this measure in a larger sense, but there are a number of specific issues that I would like to explore further in the various readings of this bill over the fullness of time.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

4:10

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to speak to Bill 23, Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2015. I will note that we were only given a briefing on this bill yesterday, and one would have assumed that if the government had had, I guess, its ducks lined up in a row, we should have seen this bill much earlier on the Order Paper, where we could have had a more fulsome discussion and had time to research more thoroughly and to reach out to stakeholders and the like. We're still working through that process, and we're going forward.

You know, it makes it very difficult for us to do our jobs on this side of the House, to analyze and critique government bills and amendments, when they're put on the Order Paper so late and we're given a briefing yesterday afternoon and expected to fill in the gaps and to be prepared here to come in and thoroughly look at legislation and analyze it and give our open, honest evaluation of it. Nevertheless, we'll try and work through it given those parameters.

What we have here are civil forfeitures, where the Department of Justice, on the recommendation of the police, takes goods and the like when people are accused of crimes under either the federal Criminal Code or the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act. That's essentially used then to try to make amends, with that money, to people who have been victimized through the ongoing criminal process. Bill 23 will create a new fund for civil forfeitures, prohibit forfeiture proceedings in court from being used in criminal trials, and have the civil forfeiture office obtain money for operational expenses from the forfeitures themselves.

That's an interesting proposal that, of course, sounds good in practice given that if you can have a self-funding organization, well, then it does relieve the public purse of obligations to fund government operations. It sounds good, but the devil is in the detail. Whether or not we're creating a system that is sustainable, whether it doesn't create conflicts of interest and doesn't provide challenges by our going to the strict model is what we from the Alberta Liberal perspective are questioning. Under Bill 23 the civil forfeiture office will need seizures to survive. The civil forfeiture office will no longer obtain its operational revenue from the Ministry of Justice. Instead, 100 per cent of its operational revenue will be derived from the forfeitures themselves. The government calls this an expense-recovery business model.

Police will be able to seize assets on an interim basis for a maximum of 30 days in the absence of a judge's order. This is up from the current 10. Bill 23 will create a new fund for forfeiture proceeds called the civil forfeiture fund, a shift from the status quo, where proceeds are put into a ministerial trust account. The bill will also prohibit objections against seizures in civil court from being used in criminal court proceedings. The law's name will be renamed the civil forfeiture act from the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act, as the hon. minister stated, to avoid confusion as there's another act with a slightly similar mandate that also exists.

You know, concerning the funding model, we question – and we’re trying to get our heads around it; maybe the minister can explain this. We see it as Bill 23 creating a conflict of interest on the part of the civil forfeiture office as they will need to seize property to exist. The only way for a conflict of interest to be eliminated under this funding model is for the Justice ministry to guarantee any shortfalls where the property seized is worth less than the office’s operational expenses. You know, we don’t really want to create a situation where the organization, in order to survive, in order to pay its bills, in order to do the work that they’re mandated to do, have to simply go looking for more assets to seize. That’s essentially what I think we’re creating in this situation, not following through. We’re creating a situation where we may be encouraging the organization to go about things in a fashion that may not be fair and may not be the wisest.

We know – it was noted by the hon. member who spoke before me – that this situation has occurred in British Columbia. It was noted by a judge that that office had become overzealous in pursuing seizures. Although civil forfeiture laws were initially intended to target organized crime, they can also be used, if this model is pursued, to go after some people who may not necessarily be the intended targets of what the government’s purpose of this program was in the first place.

Although the executive director of the civil forfeiture office does not anticipate that this model will reduce any grant payments from the fund despite the office’s plan that it will need to raise a minimum amount to ensure that grants can be paid and that enough money does exist to keep the operations going, that is a concern to us. We see it as a conflict of interest. If there is something in the bill that states that the Justice ministry will cover those ongoing concerns and keep it operating as a government entity should there be a shortfall, I think that would be a solution to what we see as a conflict of interest, or the minister could possibly explain as to why we missed the boat on that. Like I said, since we just got it yesterday, there is always that possibility. So I look forward to the minister clarifying that.

You know, this will create a broad-reaching organization. We have to make sure the proper oversight and proper limits are in place to ensure that the act is doing what it’s intended to do and not creating a situation where they act in a fashion that may not be in the best interests of the Alberta people.

In any event, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Those are my comments, and we’ll go forward from there.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on Bill 23, Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2015?

Seeing none, I’ll ask the hon. Minister of Energy to close the debate.

Mr. Oberle: On behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General I now ask that we call the question, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I’d like to call the committee to order.

Bill 23

Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2015

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Madam Chair. Again, you know, like I said, just because we got the legislation yesterday, we are working with stakeholders and so forth to maybe potentially have a couple of amendments here and there, but it’s very difficult for us to actually generate all that in a short period of time.

Like I said from the outset, Madam Chair, this bill globally is something that Alberta New Democrats can agree with. Specifically, I think we just have to be really careful. I know that in other places where they have expanded the forfeiture and seizure of property from the avails of crime, we could say, you run into that roadblock between the due process of finding someone guilty or not and then trying to sort out the property that that individual or individuals might have in their possession and how it all fits into the case. You know, that is a difficult but necessary job. We know that we want to have justice for victims as a central part of our justice system, but you want to make sure that you are doing that in a just and fair manner.

I know, from just looking at the next province over here, B.C., they’ve had some problems with that. It’s not insurmountable, but I think that the responsibility lies with us to ensure that we are building a bill that doesn’t end up creating more activity in the courts in regard to property and so forth. Of course, we want to dispense justice, but we also want to make sure that the court system is functioning properly and fluidly.

I’m just looking at this bill in terms of a line-by-line analysis. Right? Section 1 amends the name of the act, which is pretty straightforward, Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act, replacing it with civil forfeiture and restitution act. I mean, that gives us a flavour of what’s to come, I guess, Madam Chair.

Then, of course, in the definitions you have “the fund,” which refers to the civil forfeiture fund that we’re presumably creating, and “peace officer,” which may refer to any other person employed by a public entity, a municipality or the Government of Canada for the preservation and maintenance of the public peace, while the person is in the exercise or discharge of the person’s powers and duties.

The breadth of that definition, Madam Chair, as I had said in my comments not long ago in second reading, is, I think, a cause for some concern, just the breadth of deputizing people as a peace officer in the broadest possible way.

Also in the definitions the definition of a property victim is added. That’s fairly straightforward: a person who’s “been deprived of property by reason of [the] illegal act” that’s been carried out by another person. Fair enough. I guess that where we need clarification is in regard to what the definition of a property victim actually is. Okay? I mean, in some cases it becomes patently obvious, but in other circumstances it could be not so much. So I think that that’s worth pursuing here to some degree.

Section 7 is where we see another significant amendment, and that is the restriction that a respondent has 30 days to apply for a review of a restraint order. As I said before, we’re just wondering about the arbitrary nature of this time. Maybe it doesn’t quite fit in with court proceedings so that, you know, the court case has not really moved that much, but still you only have 30 days to appeal. It’s almost like you have two sort of parallel judgment things happening at the same time, but one has a 30-day limit while the other one could go on for many, many months.

Section 8 is amended as well with this new bill by the addition of this piece here, which says that the Court may dismiss an application for a review of the restraint order if the Court is satisfied that

- (a.1) the only ground for a review is a defect in form, a technical irregularity or an inadvertent error or omission, and that no substantial wrong or miscarriage of justice has occurred.

Our concern with that provisionally is that the addition of that last part, that I just read, might limit the legal recourse available to those for whom the confiscation of the property is a somehow disproportionate sanction or where doubts exist as to whether or not the property was the proceeds of crime – okay? – so kind of where you draw the line with the property that an accused might own.

The other part, 3.1, is added on, and that's on the civil forfeiture fund itself. This is a regulated fund, as far as I can see, receiving, among other things,

- (a) proceeds from property forfeited to the Crown . . .
- (c) proceeds paid to the Crown from the disposal of property . . .
- (d) money appropriated by the Legislature for the purposes of the Fund;

So we would be starting this fund, I suppose.

- (e) advances from the General Revenue Fund for the purposes of the Fund;
- (f) money received as repayment of any amount paid by the Minister from the Fund;

Finally,

- (g) amounts paid to the Court, the Minister or the Fund in compliance with a court order or pursuant to a settlement of a legal action, or relating to administrative disposition proceedings.

Okay. That's a significant part of this bill as well, the function and creation of the fund.

Section 55 is permitting the cabinet to make regulations on this whole procedure, which is, I think, fairly straightforward. Then it also designates illegal acts as specified property acquisition offences and designates illegal acts as specified bodily harm offences as well. That's fair enough, I think. But we just should probably take note that this provision in the bill might effectively curtail debate as to whether designated illegal acts were indeed property acquisition or bodily harm offences. You know, it just kind of mixes things together, in our minds, so we have that concern as well.

Those are the issues that I have up to this point, Madam Chair, because, of course, we are in a dynamic of time and space and intellect, and where those intersect – we just don't have enough of it right now. If other hon. members can help us with the proper analysis of this bill, that would be great, and away we go.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

4:30

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'll be quite brief here. I do note that the Alberta Liberals will be bringing in an amendment, hopefully, that we believe will eliminate some of the conflicts of interest which may arise out of making the civil forfeiture office fully, 100 per cent, responsible for its operational revenue as it will be derived from the forfeitures themselves. Obviously, what the government is calling it is an expense recovery business, which, like I said in earlier debate, is probably what we would like in a perfect world. But it also could drive certain behaviours that may not be in the best interests of the Alberta public.

That amendment, being brought forward by our critic for this area, the Member for Edmonton-Centre, will be forthcoming. It's my understanding that we are working on it as we speak given what was already stated, that we got a bill briefing on late yesterday afternoon. Frankly, we're in the dying days of a session. I'm still perplexed by the fact that this bill wasn't on the Order Paper a couple of weeks ago, frankly, to have us be able to consult, to do our work, to explore whether or not this is working because we do have a case where we should look at other jurisdictions that have gone down this path, that have civil forfeiture offices working and operating, and look at the best practices of those institutions going forward.

As I noted earlier in debate, there has been some commentary out of the justice system in British Columbia that states that having a self-funding organization based on the forfeitures they make has led to the commentary that that office has acted in an overzealous fashion. This can create difficulties for our citizenry if they have property confiscated and, in fact, whether they have the opportunity to get legal consultation to be able to appear before a magistrate or a judge to explain their case and to get their ducks in a row. Well, my goodness. We don't want to have overreach by our civil forfeiture office that would impinge on our civil liberties and wouldn't ensure a fair playing field for those involved in the criminal justice system.

So those are concerns, the apparent conflicts of interest that could be eliminated. If the Justice ministry were to guarantee any shortfalls where property seized was worth less than the office's operational expenses, that may be a fix to this conundrum that would actually allow it to move forward in a better fashion, where the organization wasn't compelled to not act in accordance with the spirit of the legislation or the purpose and the like. So we'd like to bring that intention forward and the careful scrutiny to this bill that I am certain the Member for Edmonton-Centre will bring forward in that.

I do note that there are some changes here that are being contemplated that affect the citizenry and affect the way this bill will work in some form and fashion going forward.

Madam Chair, I do have an amendment in front of me that I would like to pass out. I note the hon. Justice minister was just here, so I'm hoping that he can maybe shed some light on this amendment and that we can go forward and he can understand it and decipher it and give his commentary as to what his thoughts are on it, the reason, the rationale, and, hopefully, how . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, before we carry on and discuss the amendment, we'll take a moment to pass it out to everybody.

Mr. Hehr: That sounds wonderful.

The Deputy Chair: This will be known as amendment A1.

Thank you, hon. member. You may proceed with amendment A1 on Bill 23.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. This is brought on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman to move that Bill 23, Victims Restitution and Compensation Amendment Act, 2015, be amended in section 38, in the proposed section 45.2(d), by striking out subclause (vii).

We feel that this amendment will bring some clarity to the bill, will allow for a more seamless administration of justice, and will allow the bill to proceed with more of a sense of fair play and spirit that is meant to bring some more focus to what the purpose of the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2015, should look like. We believe it will create fewer conflicts of interest and allow the organization to proceed in a fashion that will allow it to do its good work without causing it to overreach or to act in an overzealous fashion and would allow for the department to be more effective in the way it delivers and goes about its business.

I know the hon. Justice minister is here, so I'm certain he will have some comments on this amendment put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. I'm sure that he will see the wisdom in what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is proposing and duly enter it into the books. Like I said, we've been working very hard, with short timelines, to try and get our amendments in order and to understand the bill and the purpose and scope, and we think this amendment will go a long way to making the bill a stronger bill for the people of Alberta.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Denis: Just before I continue, I wanted to thank this member for his service to the Assembly. I remember the day when you and I had a trial opposite each other, Member for Calgary-Buffalo. I've always enjoyed your commentary. Thank you for your service the last seven years.

And, Madam Chair, thank you for your service the last 14 years.

I rise to speak against this amendment. What this would in effect do is that it would remove a section on page 26 of Bill 23:

- (vii) payment of the expenses directly associated with the administration of those Parts of this Act by the office, agency or branch of the Government responsible for administering those Parts of this Act.

Now, one of the piths and the substance of this bill is that we want to move to a self-funding model as exists for the civil forfeiture office in other major provinces. What's happening right now: the civil forfeiture office is doing good work, but at the same time the taxpayers are de facto subsidizing the civil forfeiture office. Of course, that does result in positive things, bad money helping good organizations throughout the last six to seven years that this has been operating.

One of the major tenets of this bill, Madam Chair, is that this office should not be subsidized by the taxpayer. I have yet to hear a good argument against this. With no disrespect to my friend from Calgary-Buffalo and his always congenial friend from Edmonton-Centre, I have to oppose this amendment, and I would encourage all members to vote it down.

Thank you.

4:40

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Madam Chair. Certainly, this is an interesting development. Again, we're dealing with very short, compressed timelines, and it's meant to be educative as well. As I read through the first part of the analysis of the setting up of this fund, it seemed clear that we'd take monies from general revenues to establish the fund in the first place. That's public money. Then, of course, this whole thing is going through the court system, which is a public entity.

The separate fund is what I'm curious about, then. Sure, it's great to have the idea that it is self-sustaining or self-funding – I mean, that's an idea that I think is worthy to pursue – but if it's not, certainly we need to have a provision for it to still carry on and still function. I'm asking the minister and House leader if subsection (vii) there, that we're debating whether we should eliminate or not – that does not preclude the possibility of still having to fund this restitution process using public funds if there's not enough seizure money and/or property to run the show. Am I getting that correctly?

Mr. Denis: I would respectfully defer – and I would also thank you for your service in the last three years and the four years before that.

Without this section my understanding is, again, that we're moving away from a self-funding model. The part of this legislation that is very important is the fact that we want to move away from taxpayers subsidizing this office. My understanding, my read of this bill is that if we pass amendment A1, from the Member for Edmonton-Centre, as the Member for Calgary-Buffalo has indicated, we would move away from that model, and you'd have basically a situation where the taxpayers are indirectly subsidizing this office through the cost of the many hard-working people of the Alberta public service.

Mr. Hehr: Well, now that I've heard the commentary going back and forth, I agree with the minister on the goal of a self-funding organization, okay? If a government body who is existing, the civil forfeiture, under this method can self-fund, great. Cool bananas. That is good in my books, and frankly it's responsible for it to do so if that is operationally possible. What we don't want to find and what this amendment addresses are cases where the civil forfeiture office maybe has a dry year, shall we say. The citizens of Alberta are no longer wanting to be involved in crime, have given it up as a means of pursuing their livelihoods, and just simply put, it finds itself having a difficult time making payroll, paying the people on staff to be able to do so – okay? – which is maybe a stretch but nonetheless a possibility out there. Well, you know, you can imagine a host of circumstances. We have seen how in other organizations, other provinces there has been commentary from the bench that says that these organizations in B.C. have become overzealous in their approach, okay?

What this amendment would do – obviously, it wouldn't take away from the goal or from the Justice minister saying to this organization: "Look here. You guys are primarily on your own. Don't expect any money from us. There's no money in the budget for anything of that nature." But if it comes down to the end of the year and this organization has $50,000 outstanding and they're going to miss payroll: well, my goodness, we better get another forfeiture out there. Or is it better just to have the ministry cover that? We think that having that provision in place wouldn't undercut what the Justice minister is trying to do to have this organization be self-sustaining but would allow the provision where that conflict doesn't occur that the organization has to justify its means by going out there and overreaching, being overbroad and overzealous in their approach.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
