The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Sigurdson, Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education and Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour, pursuant to the Veterinary Profession Act, the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association 2014 annual report; pursuant to the Land Surveyors Act, Report of Proceedings of the One Hundred and Fifth Annual General Meeting; pursuant to the Workers' Compensation Act, the Workers' Compensation Board Alberta 2014 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a point of order was raised today by the Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, have you done tablings?

The Speaker: Yes.

Ms Jansen: I have a tabling, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Yes. Proceed.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Ms Jansen: All right. Thank you. I rise to table five copies of each of eight job postings in NDP-held constituencies. They include Calgary-Cross, Banff-Cochrane, Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, Edmonton-Gold Bar, Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, Lethbridge-East, Edmonton-Manning, and Peace River. Mr. Speaker, each requires the applicant to submit their CV to an individual who is the executive director of the NDP. They also describe Alberta's NDP as an employment equity employer even though the actual employer is the LAO.

One more, Mr. Speaker. I also have five copies of the current LinkedIn resumé of the individual vetting potential new non-partisan constituency assistants. As of today he is still listed as the executive director of the New Democratic Party.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a letter to the Clerk that I've just recently submitted asking him to investigate the practices of the hiring of constituency assistants that was advertised in a number of different advertisements in which the employer is not correctly identified as the LAO and, indeed, the employees are identified as reporting to the MLA and the director of caucus. I table these five letters and look forward to the Clerk's investigation into this matter.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, we were on such a roll in question period. I rise on the point of order today on behalf of the Member for Drumheller-Stettler. I would say that the Official Opposition was very, very quiet during question period today, and I thought we were doing a great job trying to do move the House forward.

The Speaker: Hon. member, could you say the point you made, that the hon. Government House Leader was – did you make that comment?

Mr. Cooper: No. I said earlier that the Member for Drumheller-Stettler rose on a point of order, and the citation will be under section 23(i), "imputes false . . . motives to another Member" of the Assembly. Let the record show that this member has received a pardon for any accusation that the member across may make of him when it comes to actions in the past. As such, it is as though that never took place. In fact, a law was changed as a result of this hon. member's actions. He received a full pardon from the Prime Minister of this great land.

I find it so disingenuous of the Government House Leader to impute such false motives at a time when he's speaking about another member of the Crown and his frustration with the way the opposition may have asked a question. To use as a defence, "Well, that guy did something wrong," even though that guy received a full pardon, is likely to cause disorder, and as a result that individual rose to call the point of order.

Additionally, if we continue into the standing orders under 23(k), it says: "speaks disrespectfully of Her Majesty or of any . . . member of the Royal Family." Given that this member has received a pardon from the Prime Minister in his function as the head of our government and subsequently the Queen, that leads our country, it could be said that this member is speaking disrespectfully against the federal government and then onwards to the Queen.

But the biggest challenge here is the very fact that while he is rising to answer a question that was based in facts on what this individual has said about himself, the defence he used is to try to impute the motives of a member on this side of the bench. Totally unacceptable. I would be more than happy for him to withdraw his comments so that we can go home for the rest of the afternoon.

The Speaker: I would certainly, again, as a part of my studies over the summer – I may have misunderstood and misread the history of the place, but I thought that the government was responsible to the Legislature and not to the Queen. But I may be wrong, hon. member.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View rose with questions with respect to the minister for the status of women and the environment's participation in a book written over 10 years ago while she was attending the University of Alberta. I rose on a point of order and expressed in the strongest possible terms my concern that the opposition, Wildrose, was again lapsing into the same pattern of behaviour we had seen before the election, and that is to engage in character assassination and guilt by association. We, unfortunately, have not received the Speaker's ruling on that matter, which bears directly on the question that came today from the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

I just wanted to indicate, with respect to the arguments of the hon. Official Opposition House Leader, that I don't agree that I imputed false or unavowed motives to another member. I merely suggested that the opposition was being hypocritical in suggesting that because some passages of a book written by someone else, not the minister, had suggested civil disobedience as an approach – it was somewhat hypocritical given that the hon. Member from Drumheller-Stettler had been involved in a civil-disobedience action with connection to the Canadian Wheat Board, in which he refused to pay a fine. [some applause] You see? There you go. You see? This is exactly my point. Now we've got the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre applauding that action because he told the House about it yesterday. He stood up and said that the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler had accepted a short jail sentence because of his actions in attempting to sell his wheat illegally into the United States.

Whether or not there is a pardon involved doesn't change the fact that that occurred, and members opposite are very proud of the Member for Drumheller-Stettler for the actions that he took. That was just witnessed once again with the applause of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. So with respect to that, I did not impute false or unavowed motives. I simply stated a fact and accused the Official Opposition of hypocrisy on this matter, which is a statement, Mr. Speaker, that I do stand by.

With respect to the argument made by the House leader for the Official Opposition that this amounts to speaking disrespectfully of her Majesty or of any other member of the Royal Family, Mr. Speaker, I can say that I've heard a lot of real long shots in my time here. That one is the longest shot I think that I've ever heard in this House. To suggest that you can't be disrespectful towards the federal government without violating our rules, because you're effectively criticizing the Crown, is something I hope that the Official Opposition takes to heart when they try to speak disrespectfully of our government, because we, of course, derive our authority from the Crown in the same way that the federal government does. So thank you for that. I'm looking forward to nothing but great respect from the Official Opposition going forward.

But, Mr. Speaker, I don't wish to cause offence to the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, whom I have found, over a considerable amount of time, to be an honourable member and a hard-working member for his constituents. While I disagree with many of his views, I respect the fact that he holds them and he brings them to this place. So with a view to trying to create good harmony in this place and to set an example for some members opposite, I would respectfully apologize to the member and the House for raising that matter in the way that I did.

The Speaker: We understand this matter to be closed. Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Imputing Falsehoods against a Member Reflections on a Nonmember

The Speaker: I would now address the point of order that was raised yesterday in the House. I took under advisement a point of order raised by the Government House Leader about comments made by the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

I've had time to review the Hansard and consult the authorities on the subject, and I'm now prepared to make a ruling. The point of order was raised during the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View's first supplementary question concerning a foreword, written by the Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the status of women, to a book. The member referred to the author of the book as a "radical's radical." The questions and responses can be found on pages 231 and 232 of yesterday's Alberta Hansard. The point of order was argued by the Government House Leader, the Official Opposition House Leader, and the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, and it is found on pages 240 to 242 of Alberta Hansard.

When the questions were asked, I wondered what they had to do with the government's actions or policies. Members may wish to refer to the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, at pages 501 to 502, where it states that the primary purpose of a question period is "seeking of information from the government and calling the government to account for its actions." The thrust of the Government House Leader's point of order was that members should not cast aspersions on those outside of the Assembly, a point which finds some support in Beauchesne's, sixth edition, paragraph 493(4), and House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, at 616 and 617.

I am very much aware that members enjoy the freedom of speech in this Assembly. I do not want to be seen as limiting the ability of members to ask questions or to raise matters in debate. Members of the Assembly, with this great freedom comes great responsibility. Members must remember that when they refer to people outside of the Assembly, those individuals have no ability to respond to the allegations that may have been made in here.

Balancing those principles, I do not find that the member's comments constituted a point of order; however, I'd like to caution yet again the members that their conduct reflects not only on them but on this institution and to use their language carefully in accordance with the rules and precedents by which this Assembly conducts its proceedings.

We are all going to take a break from this House. I want to remind members of their collective commitment to demonstrate respect for each other and, lest you forget, to this institution. You are about to go into a period where you will not be in this House, but you will be speaking to the media. I hope that you remember that when you come back here in the fall. I hope that members will strive to maintain their commitment to this principle of respect for the upcoming sitting and beyond.

Statement by the Speaker

Page Recognition

The Speaker: Hon. members, if I might. We are soon going to end this session. One of the things that is very important to do is to recognize the role played by the pages, the support to this Legislature. If you don't mind, I'd like to just have us do a collective recognition of the pages before we continue the Routine. [Standing ovation]

With the indulgence of the House, could the pages please come to the front. Now, I may be making the Sergeant-at-Arms nervous by this request. I've learned not to make the Sergeant-at-Arms nervous. I would ask that the pages come to the front of the House. I'd like to read the following letter.

Dear Mr. Speaker,

The 29th Legislature may have just begun, but we face the regrettable reality that, for some of us, our time as Pages on the Chamber floor has come to an end. To you, we are the students who distribute bills and collect amendments. However, to us, our time at the Legislature has been a lesson in life and politics that no high school or University, could provide.

You're right about that.

For this, we would like to express our sincerest gratitude for the incredible opportunity we have had to serve the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

We would like to thank the Table Officers, for their guidance and support; the Sergeant-at-Arms for being a model for leadership and service; the staff in 315 and 412 for teaching us what it means to be truly devoted to one's work; and the Security Staff for showing us that it's important to find a job you look forward to, with people you enjoy working with. And we would like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, and all the Members of the Legislature Assembly, without whom, our role in the Chamber would not exist. It has been an honour to serve every member of this Assembly, each with their own unique talents, quirks . . .

There's a footnote.

. . . and interpretation of Standing Order 23 H, I and J.

Lest any of this Assembly think that we are wiser than these young people, let that stand as a statement.

None of us could have imagined walking out of the Legislature with the amazing breadth of knowledge we possess today. But it is not the Parliamentary procedure that will stay with us. Rather, it is the broader understanding of the human side of politicians and those who support them. We now appreciate that members are regular people, forming relationships, entering into negotiations, and resolving conflicts. And given the opportunity to observe them, we have seen first-hand the capacity for regular people to do great things with their lives. Letting these members stand as an inspiration for ourselves, we wish to never cease striving for more than we ever thought previously possible.

Now that our time is up, we look forward to passing on the torch to future Pages, each of whom we can only hope has as incredible an experience and education as we have been privileged to have. If nothing else, our immersion in Alberta politics has taught us that all members, regardless of party affiliation, share in one common goal: to make this great province an even better place. It is now our turn to use that knowledge and our knowledge of the political process to improve society in whatever path we choose. Farewell, and don't forget us.

Hon. pages, words cannot express our thanks, nor can any particular gift, but our deputy is going to try to do both right now. The hon. Member for Peace River and Deputy Speaker.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members, it's with regret that we are going to say goodbye to 10 of our hard-working pages at the end of this session. They are: Perrin Michalyshyn, head page; Matt Owens, Speaker's page; Melina Sinclair, training development page; Brendan Samek; Christina Luo; Danielle Seymour; Devyn Godziuk; Jenna Geldart; Isaac Bushewsky; and Tianna Groeneveld.

I ask that you join me in recognizing the efforts of our diligent pages, who daily show patience and understanding of our many demands. They carry out their tasks with grace and attention to detail. On behalf of all members each departing page is given a token of our appreciation and our best wishes. We are truly honoured to have our pages work with us here in the Legislature and help us serve Albertans. I know you guys are headed for great, wonderful things.

I'd like to ask our Deputy Chair of Committees to hand a gift to the Speaker's page, Matt Owens, who is representing all of the retiring pages, and Matt will in turn present a gift to each of the retiring pages.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you. We in turn learned much from you today. Thank you very much.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Adjournment of Spring Session

9. Mr. Mason moved:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 3(9) the first session of the 29th Legislature 2015 spring sitting of the Assembly shall stand adjourned upon the Government House Leader advising the Assembly that the business for the sitting is concluded.

The Speaker: Members of the Assembly, this is a nondebatable motion.

[Government Motion 9 carried]

Committee Referral for Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007

10. Mr. Mason moved:
Be it resolved that:
1. The Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007, be referred to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities for the purpose of conducting a comprehensive review of the amendments to legislation made by that act;
 2. The committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued;
 3. In accordance with section 54 of the Mental Health Act the committee must submit its report to the Assembly within one year after beginning its review, and that report is to include any amendments recommended by the committee.

The Speaker: This is a debatable motion. Are there any questions?

[Government Motion 10 carried]

Committee Referral for Personal Information Protection Act

11. Mr. Mason moved:
Be it resolved that:
1. The Personal Information Protection Act be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future and the committee shall be deemed to be the special committee of the Assembly for the purpose of conducting a comprehensive review pursuant to section 63 of that act;
 2. The committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued;
 3. In accordance with section 63(2) of the Personal Information Protection Act the committee must submit its report to the Assembly within 18 months after beginning its review, and that report is to include any amendments recommended by the committee.

The Speaker: Any members who wish to speak?

[Government Motion 11 carried]

Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee

12. Mr. Mason moved:
Be it resolved that:
1. A Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee of the Legislative Assembly be appointed to review the Election Act, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, the Conflicts of Interest Act, and the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, consisting of the following members, namely: Gray, chair; Payne, deputy chair; Anderson, W.; Clark; Cortes-Vargas; Cyr; Jansen; Loyola; McLean; Miller;

- Miranda; Nielsen; Nixon; Renaud; Starke; Swann; and van Dijken.
2. In carrying out its duties, the committee may travel throughout Alberta and undertake a process of consultation with all interested Albertans;
 3. The committee shall be deemed to be the special committee of the Assembly for the purpose of conducting a comprehensive review of the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act as provided for in section 37 of that Act;
 4. In carrying out its duties, the committee may solicit written submissions from experts in the field;
 5. The committee is deemed to continue beyond prorogation and may meet during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued;
 6. Reasonable disbursements by the committee for advertising, staff assistance, equipment and supplies, rent, travel, and other expenditures necessary for the effective conduct of its responsibilities shall be paid, subject to the approval of the chair;
 7. In carrying out its responsibilities, the committee may, with the concurrence of the head of the department, utilize the services of the public service employed in that department or the staff employed by the Legislative Assembly Office and the officers of the Legislature;
 8. The committee must submit its report, including any proposed amendments to the Acts, within one year after commencing its review;
 9. When its work has been completed, the committee must report to the Assembly if it is sitting; during a period when the Assembly is adjourned, the committee may release its report by depositing a copy with the Clerk and forwarding a copy to each member of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any comments or questions with respect to Motion 12?

[Government Motion 12 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure, humility, and fatigue that I want to thank all members of the Assembly for their contribution to our short spring session. I think that we have done good work. There's been good, healthy debate and very good questions that have been raised in the Assembly. By and large, I think that we should all be very pleased with the work that we've done together. But as sad as it may seem, we have come to an end of the business of the House, so I must advise you that our business for this session is concluded.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to the Government Motion 9, agreed to earlier this afternoon, and Standing Order 3(4)(b), the Assembly stands adjourned until Monday, October 26, 2015, unless otherwise ordered. Fellow Assembly members, enjoy your vacation. Please be safe as you travel around this province. It's been a pleasure working with you.

[The Assembly adjourned at 3:59 p.m. pursuant to Government Motion 9]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 1st Session (2015)

Activity to June 25, 2015

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter numbers until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, October 26, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Welcome back.

Let us reflect. As we commence proceedings today in this Assembly, let us think about and contemplate our opportunity to once again work together; to find a way in which our collective efforts will make our world and our province better; to find hope, not fear; to co-operate, not compete; to be inclusive, not exclusive; to share, not keep. As we move forward, let us reflect on all families who have shared the burden of public life. Amen.

Hon. members, as is our custom, we pay tribute on our first day to members and former members of this Assembly who have passed away since we last met.

Mr. Elmer Elsworth Borstad
August 27, 1924, to July 18, 2015

The Speaker: Mr. Elmer Borstad was elected to the Alberta Legislative Assembly as the Member for Grande Prairie on March 14, 1979. During his term in office Mr. Borstad spearheaded the establishment of a women's shelter in Grande Prairie and then worked with fellow members to set up provincial provisions for the ongoing funding for shelters. Mr. Borstad also brought about amendments to the urban parks program to allow smaller cities in the province to receive funding for redevelopment and maintenance. In 2004 he was the first recipient of the Grande Prairie Regional College Alumni/Foundation's volunteer award, and in 2005 he received the Alberta centennial medal.

Mr. Harry Keith Everitt
April 2, 1923, to August 26, 2015

The Speaker: Mr. Keith Everitt was first elected to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta as the Member for St. Albert on June 18, 1959. He was subsequently re-elected in 1963 and again in 1967 in the same constituency. Over his 12 years of service he sat on many standing and special committees. Mr. Everitt carried on the family tradition when he purchased his grandfather's farm and set up as a dairy farmer. After leaving provincial politics, he became a school trustee for Sturgeon county from 1977 till 1986 and a councillor from 1980 to 1992. He and his wife, Thelma, were married for 72 years.

Mr. Stewart Alden McCrae
December 30, 1929, to September 2, 2015

The Speaker: Born in Gladstone, Manitoba, Mr. Stewart McCrae moved to Calgary to take a position in corporate law. In 1973, when a by-election was called for Calgary-Foothills, Mr. McCrae successfully ran for office. Mr. McCrae was re-elected in 1975 and again in 1979. He was a minister without portfolio from 1975 to 1979 and minister of government services from 1979 to 1982. During his tenure Mr. McCrae served on many committees, including those of the offices of Ombudsman, Auditor General, and Chief Electoral Officer.

In a moment of silent reflection I ask each of you to remember Mr. Borstad, Mr. Everitt, and Mr. McCrae as you may have known them. Rest eternal grant unto them, O Lord, and let perpetual light shine upon them. Amen.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark, and I would invite all of you to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Hon. members, welcome back to the First Session, second sitting of the 29th Legislature.

I would invite the Leader of the Official Opposition, the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin, to proceed to the main doors of the Chamber.

Presentation to the Assembly of Mr. Prasad Panda Member for Calgary-Foothills

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have received from the Chief Electoral Officer of Alberta the report of the returning officer for the constituency of Calgary-Foothills containing the results of the by-election conducted on September 3, 2015, which states that a by-election was held in the constituency of Calgary-Foothills and that Mr. Prasad Panda was duly elected as the Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to you Mr. Prasad Panda, the new Member for Calgary-Foothills, who has taken the oath as a member of this Assembly and has inscribed the roll and now claims his right to take his seat in this Chamber.

The Speaker: Congratulations. Let the hon. member take his seat.

Thank you to the House for acknowledging the very newest member of this Assembly.

1:40 Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, with our admiration and respect there is a gratitude to the members of the families who shared the burden of public life and public service. Today I would like to welcome on your behalf members of the Borstad, Everitt, and McCrae families who are present in the Speaker's gallery. If the family members would please rise as I call their name and remain standing until I've introduced everyone. First of all, from the Borstad family: Lane Borstad, son; Jeanette Borstad, daughter-in-law; Owen Borstad, grandson; Noel Borstad, grandson; Chloe McMillan, granddaughter. From the Everitt family: Judy Heap, daughter; Barb Wilcox, daughter; Murray Wilcox, son-in-law; Warren Everitt, son. From the McCrae family: Mary McCrae, wife; Clint McCrae, son; Chantal McCrae, daughter-in-law; Mike McCrae, son; Lori McCrae, daughter-in-law.

Thank you, all, on behalf of this Assembly for the service that you, your families, and each of your loved ones has paid in their public service to this province. I would ask the House to express our greetings to them.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Are there any school groups with us today?

Seeing none, I would call upon the new Minister of Municipal Affairs and Minister of Service Alberta for some introductions.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you Marcel Desjarlais, a resident of East Prairie Métis settlement in the wonderful constituency of Lesser Slave Lake, who is the former treasurer of the Metis Settlements General Council, a strong member of the Frog Lake First Nation, a powerful advocate for the cause of missing and murdered indigenous women, as well as one of my very caring, supportive people in my life. Thank you so much. I'd ask that all members join me in giving these guests our warm welcome.

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education and Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Mr. Bill Kobluk. Bill is a constituent of mine who kindly adorned his lawn with one of my campaign signs. Bill is a retired high school teacher, and for 28 years he brought his students to the Legislature to view question period. He also ran for the NDP four times. I'm pleased that we could make his dream of an NDP government come true and that he is here today to witness the first day of the fall session with us. He is seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. I ask that you join me in giving him the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Westhead: It brings me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two very important people without whom I would not be here today. My parents, Linda and Tim Westhead, have travelled to our fine province from Whitby, Ontario, to see for themselves if it's really true that their son was elected as the MLA for Banff-Cochrane here in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, I trust that you can vouch for me and that my attendance record in this House has been impeccable.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity to recognize the lifetime of public service both my parents gave to the province of Ontario during their careers. My mother worked the majority of her career as a court reporter and spent the last few years working at the office of the public guardian and trustee before her retirement. My father was a high school English teacher for 30 years, most of them as head of the department and also teaching English as a second language to thousands of new Canadians in Scarborough, Ontario. Having now both retired, they are gradually circumnavigating the globe and spending my future inheritance as quickly as possible. The many years my parents dedicated to public service and the deep satisfaction they derived from their working lives inspired me to choose a career where I, too, could make a positive difference to those in my community, much like they did. I'm truly grateful for their support and guidance, that helped me to get where I am today. They are now standing, and I ask the members of this Assembly to please give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: I'm sure the hon. member would agree that since he has a new income, his parents could spend all of the money.

Mrs. Schreiner: Mr. Speaker, I have two guests today. First I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Brian Brake. Mr. Brake is the executive director of Habitat for Humanity in Red Deer. Originally from the proud province of Newfoundland, Mr. Brake joined the Canadian Forces and served our country for 37 years, retiring as a lieutenant colonel. Since then he has used his exemplary leadership skills in the private and nonprofit sectors. He has been honoured with several prestigious formal recognitions, including the 125th anniversary of the Confederation of Canada medal and the Alberta centennial medal.

Joining him today is Mr. Alfred Nikolai. Mr. Nikolai holds an unwavering belief that home ownership through Habitat for Humanity can transform generations of families from the cycle of poverty. Under his leadership the nonprofit moved from helping a handful of families per year to the largest Habitat for Humanity affiliate in Canada. Just earlier this month as a reflection of his service and commitment to the community Mr. Nikolai was recognized with a special citation award from Ernst & Young as a social entrepreneur for the prairie region.

Would the House please welcome these giving and generous individuals, Mr. Brian Brake and Mr. Alfred Nikolai.

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly my immediate family members: Michèle Carlier, my wife and constant companion in this exciting world of public life; my parents, Ervin and Jacqueline Carlier, visiting from my hometown of Val Marie, Saskatchewan, who in a few days will be celebrating their 65th wedding anniversary; my brother Ervin Carlier Jr.; my sisters Vickie Reid and Lesley Stone; my brother-in-law Dave Stone; and my mother-in-law, Maxine Brekke. I'd ask them to remain standing to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be back in the Legislature with one more Wildrose MLA.

Provincial Budget

Mr. Jean: Tomorrow Albertans will finally see a budget from this government. That's helpful. What isn't helpful is that this budget will have a record deficit. Indeed, we now know that this government has no plans whatsoever to balance the budget for many, many years to come. To the Premier: when exactly did her government first decide that they would not balance the budget in fiscal 2018?

Ms Notley: Well, thank you. Mr. Speaker, first of all, let me just say that it is also a pleasure to be back in the House, and as well I'd like to extend my welcome to the new MLA for Calgary-Foothills.

As the member has outlined, our Minister of Finance announced last week that the year in which we would be balancing the budget would be pushed out one year as we become more aware of the extended low projections for the price of oil. This was an issue that was put to Albertans in the last election. They said, "Take a balanced hand, act as a shock absorber, and take care of families," and that's what this government will do.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign the NDP said that they would balance the budget in fiscal 2017. That's what voters voted for. But then they realized they got their budget math wrong by almost $4 billion, and they said that 2018 would have to do. Last week the Finance minister told us that, whoopsie, 2018 wasn't going to happen. We might get a balanced budget by April 2020. To the Premier: why has she broken her most important election promise? Why won't she balance the budget before the next election?

Ms Notley: Well, as I said, Mr. Speaker, what Albertans talked about in the last election was the fact that we are faced with an unprecedented drop in revenue for this province as a result of becoming unnecessarily reliant on it. They were asked to consider draconian, radical cuts, or they were asked to consider a measured, balanced approach that protects families, and we've seen the result. We will do what we promised to do for Albertans. I know that's kind of a new thing for you, but we are going to keep our promises and protect families.

Mr. Jean: With this many waffles by the government we'll balance in 2052.

The government is blaming the downturn in oil prices for their inability to balance the budget. Albertans might believe that except that this summer, when the Finance minister presented the Q1 fiscal update, he increased the projected price of oil. This government jacked up oil revenue projections in August, but now the low price of oil is their excuse to push back balancing the budget. Will the Premier admit to Albertans that this government won't balance the budget no matter what the price of oil is?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, we've talked to Albertans, and what they've told us is that they agree with our three-pronged plan. First of all, they want us to stabilize public services to ensure that Albertans have those front-line services that contribute to their resiliency and their ability to respond to the downturn that we face. Secondly, they want a plan to balance, a reasonable, careful one, and that's what we're going to be offering. Thirdly, they want someone who is going to focus on job creation, not layoff after layoff after layoff, and that is what this government will deliver.

The Speaker: Second question. The Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Jean: NDP promise made, NDP promise broken.

Provincial Debt

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, in a recent media interview the Dominion Bond Rating Service warned that it would rethink Alberta's triple-A credit rating if total provincial debt surpassed 15 per cent of GDP. For that to happen, the provincial government debt would have to be around $30 billion. All indications are that this NDP government is going to dramatically exceed that number. Will the Premier set our debt limit at a number that does not risk our triple-A credit rating?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I urge the members opposite to stay tuned for tomorrow because I think they'll find that their concerns are allayed. But that being said, let me just say that what we are focused on doing is keeping the promises that we made to Albertans. I understand that that sort of sounds like duping the electorate over there, but in fact that's how democracy works. You tell people that you're going to make these priorities your priorities, and then you plan on that basis. That's what we've done, and that's what we're going to do.

Mr. Jean: Having a triple-A credit rating is very important to municipalities, to universities, to any agency that borrows through this government. A lowering of the rating will increase the interest that we have to pay on debt. That makes debt much more expensive and takes away money from programs and services that Albertans are so relying on. Losing the triple-A rating significantly increases the amount of money that goes to paying interest on the debt. Does the Premier understand how much this issue matters to all Albertans?

The Speaker: Madam Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what else hurts jobs and security for Albertans? A $3.5 billion cut to services, laying off tens of thousands of employees and front-line service workers, and undercutting our education and our health care: that – that – is what creates instability and creates job loss and hurts the economy. So we are not going to do that. Our budget will be a shock absorber, yet it will still engage in good, sound accounting measures, which I am sure the member opposite will be pleased to see.

Mr. Jean: Like all Albertans, I'd appreciate a promise made by the government and a promise kept, and that hasn't happened in this case.

Recently Alberta Finance has had to increase the sweetener that it pays to place our bonds with creditors. Our 2.35 per cent, 10-year bond now actually costs the government of Alberta 2.587 per cent. Not all that long ago these bonds actually cost less than the posted coupon rate. Lenders don't think our bonds are as safe as they used to be; that's clear. Losing the triple-A credit rating will make matters much, much worse. Will the Premier commit to doing all she can to protect Alberta's credit rating?

The Speaker: Madam Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I will do is commit to doing all that I can to protect the people of Alberta. The member opposite may not have noticed, but essentially the price of oil has tanked, and we're going to lose over $6 billion in revenue. So the question is: what kind of leadership navigates through those troubled waters in a way that makes sure Alberta families are protected and maintain their resilience and are able to come through it and in a way that protects and builds diversification and new jobs? That is the plan that this government will introduce tomorrow, and I just can't wait.

The Speaker: Third question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Budget Document Preview by Opposition

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, let's stay with the budget. Tomorrow the government has said that they will release the hundreds of pages of budget documents. The media will get the documents at 8 a.m. and will have at least seven hours to analyze them before the information becomes public. Seven hours. The members of the opposition: well, we get to see the documents for about an hour and a half. That's 10 seconds per page. Now, we're really good, but does the Premier really think that this lives up to her promise to do things differently than the last government?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, in terms of the length of the lock-up, which I believe is what the Leader of the Official Opposition is talking about, the length of the lock-up will be as long as it always has been. Meanwhile we will have many, many, many hours in this Legislature to debate the details of the budget. Indeed, additional hours were offered and rejected, I'm told, but either way . . .

Mr. Mason: Not rejected. Accepted.

Ms Notley: Accepted. Were offered and accepted. Excuse me.

So there have been additional hours delegated as per the opposition's request and negotiated as per the opposition's request, and I hope that after all that time they'll vote in favour of the budget.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, as you know, we're here to help, but I have it on good authority that the Premier, when she was the leader of the third party, expressed strong feelings about this particular issue. In fact, she knew it was ridiculous – knew it was ridiculous – that the previous government had shrunk the amount of time the opposition had to review the budget. Albertans would think that it would be helpful if the MLAs got more than 90 minutes with the budget before they had to comment on it. It would certainly help. Will the Premier allow elected MLAs to have the same amount of time as the reporters get with the budget? Yes or no?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, we're going to move ahead with the lock-up procedures that have been in place for a very long time. The thing of it is that we've got almost the full month of November laid out for budget deliberations, and I have no doubt that throughout those many weeks the members of the opposition will take every opportunity they possibly can to comment to the media over and over and over again about the budget. I feel very confident that it will be well reviewed and well canvassed in the media as well as on this floor before we get a chance to vote on it. I'm quite confident in the way we're going to go forward.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, it's obvious to all Albertans that this government is struggling to learn its business. The budget will be a record one in the wrong direction. The government's economic policies are being rejected by businesses, rejected by economists. Their policies have our energy industry more concerned than they have been in over 50 years. But this government could maybe, just maybe, get something as important as accountability right. To the Premier: what good reason is there to allow the opposition parties only 10 seconds per page with the budget? What good reason could there possibly be to ignore accountability of this government?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said, I think there's a great deal more time than has already been outlined for the opposition to review the budget, so I think that's quite good. What we have heard from businesses, though, is that they're looking for a government that is actually interested in partnering with them as we move forward through the economic downturn that we are facing right now, and that's why I've created the first economic development ministry since 2006. I've heard nothing but good things from business about the fact that we've made that focus, from many of your friends across the way, who said: "You know what? This is a good thing." That is what we're doing to work with business. You'll see that in the budget, and I'm very proud with how we're moving forward.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Government Policies

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, after leaving Albertans without the certainty of a budget for nearly six months and actually causing tens of thousands of unnecessary job losses, to the Premier: will you give hard-working men and women in Alberta the assurance that you will not tax more of them out of their jobs or increase the cost of living with new taxes beyond what they've already suffered from under your government?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I'll start with two things. You know, we could have had a budget already if the previous government had chosen to pass the budget before they called an election a year earlier than the legislation that was in place at the time. That being said, the budget will come tomorrow, and we will see the outcomes. You know, overall Albertans will pay less in taxes in our budget than they would have under the budget that was put forward by the folks over there.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, Albertans have come to depend upon the Premier of Saskatchewan, who was in Alberta on the weekend, to be their go-to voice in Canada to protect jobs, the economy, and quality of life for their families since May 5 of this year. To the Premier: have you heard enough from Albertans during the summer of discontent to convince you to redirect your government in favour of creating jobs, to stick up for the great work done on the environment by Albertans, and to remove the uncertainty caused by your changes to the Energy Regulator and possible changes to royalties?

The Speaker: Madam Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Speaker. I had a tremendous opportunity to travel across the province over the summer and in the early fall and not only there but to meet with investors in the U.S. as well as eastern Canada. In meeting with those people, one of the things that I heard about, actually, was that they were looking for a government that would engage in a partnership on job creation and economic diversification. As I've said, I heard that message, and we developed that ministry, as announced last week, and you'll see the economic plan that will be laid out in the budget by the Minister of Finance tomorrow. I actually think that we have heard a lot of that message, and I'm very pleased with the opportunity to work collaboratively with business leaders around the province.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, our caucus has talked to Alberta leaders who provide jobs, build seniors' housing, and create wealth to benefit Albertans. In almost all cases they feel they've been ignored with a we-know-better attitude by this Premier's ministers when they've met. Madam Premier, would you ask your ministers to go back and listen this time, do the job right, and actually pay attention to the Albertans that are already creating jobs, already supporting the economy, and actually get it right, because they don't feel heard so far?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I actually think my ministers have been consulting an incredible amount, and I've heard a lot of amazing feedback in terms of how accessible everybody in this government is. But you know what? We can always do better, and we will do better just because we love our province and we want to talk to as many people as we can. I have faith in all of my ministers that they will continue to do that. In particular with the folks that this minister is talking about, I suspect they're going to see a lot of the new Minister of Economic Development and Trade in the weeks to come.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Bow.

Calgary Southwest Ring Road Contract

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many constituents in my riding have approached me regarding the completion of the ring road. There are many questions and concerns revolving around the west end, which crosses through my riding. Throughout this summer a question that was frequently asked was about the implications of proceeding as a P3. My question to the Minister of Transportation: why the decision to go forward with a public-private partnership to develop Calgary's ring road, and what is the current status of the evaluation of tenders?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much for the question, hon. member. It's a very important project for the people of Calgary, and it involves a historic land transfer agreement with the Tsuut'ina First Nation. There is a seven-year time frame on the completion of the ring road; otherwise, the land will revert to the Tsuut'ina First Nation. So on the basis of that and the advice of my advisers in the department that a delay would be engendered if we moved away from a P3, I made the decision that we would proceed with a P3 development. I can tell you that we finished the . . .

The Speaker: I know that the hon. minister is such a novice here that he forgets to speak to the Speaker, but I'm sure it'll come back to him soon.

First supplemental.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister go into details regarding the timeline for completion and touch specifically on the west end of the ring road?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that question, hon. member. We will be announcing the selected contractor for the southwest Calgary ring road in the summer of 2016, and we'll begin construction before the end of next year. As we progress further through the construction of this important project, our government will consider future options for delivering transportation infrastructure to Calgarians.

The Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister please speak to the government's financial commitment to the ring road and whether or not it will exceed the $1.9 billion currently committed? Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that question, hon. member. It is our intention to complete the southwest portion of the Calgary ring road on time and on budget.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Flood Mitigation on the Bow and Elbow Rivers

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In June 2013 Calgary and neighbouring communities were hit hard by flooding, including many members of my constituency. I know that residents in my riding of Calgary-Glenmore have been waiting for information on flood protection, and today the government announced flood protection along the Bow and Elbow rivers to protect the city of Calgary and neighbouring communities. My question to the Minister of Infrastructure: can the minister please tell us more about the project and why the government is confident that this is the right project?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, hon. member. The minister of environment met today with Mayor Nenshi and the Calgary River Communities Action Group copresident, Brenda Leeds Binder, to announce this important flood protection for the city of Calgary. We'll protect families and businesses from the 2013 flood levels by investing in flood mitigation. That's why the government asked Deltares, a world-leading international research institute, to look at projects on the basis of how well they would protect from floods, the cost benefits, risks, and environmental impacts. They have recommended that we go forward with the Springbank off-stream dam, and that's what we're doing.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The residents in my riding and across Calgary have been waiting for this announcement since June of 2013. The plans have been subjected to delay after delay under the former government, and quite frankly, many Calgarians have become frustrated with the process. I need to go back to my riding with the confidence that there are specific measures to protect Calgary and the residents of Calgary-Glenmore. What exactly does today's announcement mean for Calgarians and my constituency particularly?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, hon. member, for that question. The former government's delays and lack of action on flood mitigation have put families and businesses at risk. The Official Opposition's plan is to cut $9.3 billion from infrastructure. That would mean no protection for Calgarians.

Our government has taken swift action to work with the mayor of Calgary, stakeholders, and experts to build a plan that's right for Albertans. In addition to the $297 million to the Springbank project, our government also announced $150 million over 10 years to build flood protection works within the city of Calgary, allowing the city to develop a multiyear flood protection plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat – my apologies. I forgot to ask at the front end about a little bit more patience, the same stuff I asked for in the spring. So this is my second time to ask for that. We had a second supplemental waiting.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned, Calgarians have been frustrated with the process up until today, and many are saying that they're concerned that future plans to protect the Bow River with adequate flood protection will be delayed. Essentially, people need to know that future protection will move forward without delay. Can the minister please tell us in detail what future plans government has to address outstanding concerns?

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, hon. member. Well, timeliness is key to all Albertans affected by floods. Literally, thousands were directly impacted by the events of 2013, and individuals remain vulnerable to future flooding. We believe that we can build Springbank in less time than other options. The mayor of Calgary said that he's very supportive of the creation of the Springbank off-stream reservoir. We look forward to continuing to work with stakeholders and our department to move this important issue forward to protect Calgarians and other Albertans.

The Speaker: Now the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Alberta Health Services Board

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, while in opposition the current Infrastructure minister blasted executive salaries, expense scandals, and the bureaucratic mess at Alberta Health Services. At that time, he asked the previous Health minister if he would, quote, reduce waste, confusion, duplication, and mismanagement and abolish Alberta Health Services. To the Health minister: will you follow through on your party's criticisms and reduce waste, confusion, duplication, and mismanagement by at least decentralizing Alberta Health Services?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, I think I need to point out the irony. That member opposite is proposing that we actually create a whole bunch of waste and confusion and decentralization through having a variety of different health regions. That is never what we proposed in the platform. The Premier was very clear in the election about what she was proposing, and while members opposite maybe don't have intentions to fulfill their commitments, we do.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Infrastructure in his previous life in opposition attacked administrative chaos, escalating operational costs, systemic inefficiencies at Alberta Health Services. He received thunderous applause from his caucus and even the Premier herself. Now, despite the promises of her own party the Health minister has declared that AHS is here to stay, with even more bureaucrats. To the Health minister: as per your own colleagues will you stop creating confusion and waste and wasting money on this bureaucratic nightmare?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud of the board that we announced on Friday. We have seven tremendous community leaders who are willing to invest their time and dedication to make sure that we address inefficiencies and find the very best system possible for Albertans. I have to say that I am very confident in their expertise, and I would much rather have seven individuals running the board of Alberta Health Services than cut $3 million or $4 billion or whatever billion dollars the members opposite might propose today just simply to say: we're having a balanced budget. There will be a smart board that makes smart decisions to increase efficiencies.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, with answers in very short supply I'll change my approach and ask the Minister of Infrastructure himself. The minister has in the past boldly declared – and, again, I'm quoting directly – “A New Democrat government would abolish Alberta Health Services altogether.” To the Minister of Infrastructure, in your own words, please: what will it take for this government to admit that the structure of the Alberta health superboard was a failure and finally return to local decision-making?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question. Since it's a health question, I think it's appropriate that it be directed to the Health minister. What this government campaigned on was making sure that the services were protected that Albertans rely on, making sure that they get the right care by the right professional at the right place at the right investment, and we've got a board that's going to be amazing in helping us deliver on that. Members opposite might think that you can just rearrange, just reorganize, and blame others for the things that they would like to do, which is cut billions of dollars from the system, which would create chaos. This government is committed to stability and delivering for health care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Agricultural Policies

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past summer farmers and ranchers from across Alberta experienced some of the most challenging weather in years. Drought conditions, the worst in over 50 years in some areas, caused tremendous stress to hard-working farmers. Starting in early July, rural municipalities and counties all across our province, some 20, declared a state of agricultural disaster, yet the agriculture minister waited until August 21 to finally offer assistance to drought-stricken farmers, assistance that was for many too little, too late. To the minister: why did you wait so long in offering assistance to Alberta farmers?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. While it was true that there were some very dry, adverse conditions across the province, it's also true that the results coming in with the yield are closer to 85 per cent of our five-year average. So I do believe now that we were correct in being prudent and waiting to see how the harvest was maintaining throughout the season and helping farmers when they needed it, where they needed it.

Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, that points out just how out of touch this minister is. Given that the producers were the worst affected by the drought and that the hardest hit were cattle ranchers and that they were unable to buy feed – in some cases feed was three to five times the regular retail cost – and that summer pastures were drying up and that in some cases these ranchers were selling off the very cow herd that produces their livelihood, Mr. Minister, can you tell us why you failed to take prompt and decisive action to assist and to support our farmers and ranchers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Farming families work hard and are an essential pillar of Alberta's economy. Working with the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, we provided direct, timely support to farmers during this tough growing season and found creative solutions to problems posed by this year's dry growing conditions. Making sure that the member didn't misunderstand my first statement, overall the yields were good, but recognizing that there were areas that were drier, they did get the support that they needed at the right time.

Thank you.

2:20

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, it's a given that producers all summer long were desperate for any good news on the agricultural front, then in October it came in the form of the trans-Pacific partnership. Now, given that the signing of this landmark trade agreement was universally hailed by producer groups across our province because of its potential for expanded market access, why was the agriculture minister so lukewarm in his response to this agreement? Was it because he didn't want to contradict the federal NDP's objections to this deal?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I see that we've changed gears to the trans-Pacific partnership. I think it's important to realize that the trans-Pacific partnership is still just an agreement in principle. No country has yet signed off on it, and we have yet to see any detail whatsoever. All that anyone has been able to see is in the press reports, the releases themselves. Trade is important for Alberta, and our government supports responsible growth opportunities for export sectors. When the actual text is released, for sure we will be looking very carefully at it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Two Hills Mennonite School Construction

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The provincial government is trying to build a school in a swamp in the community of Two Hills, and the project has been delayed for years as a result. The ground is saturated, there are barely three walls up, and those are starting to crumble. The project has had issues with mud, water, and methane gas. This is all because the previous government decided to build on an artesian well, and this current NDP government is not making any better decisions. The community has suggested a better site for this school. Mr. Minister, will you listen to the community, cut bait, and change the location?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for the question from the hon. member. I did meet with the hon. member, and I did investigate this issue at his request. I can tell him that the site was not ideal and that the problems have been mitigated. The cost to complete the school will be 25 and a half million dollars at the current location. That's nearly $10 million more than originally budgeted. The cost to move the school to the other location would be in excess of $35 million, and that does not include land. There is no guarantee that the new site will be safer.

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, this has turned into an expensive embarrassment for the government, and worst of all, our students and families aren't even close to having the school that they were promised in 2010. The minister has had some time to settle into his new role, and now we deserve some answers. Can the minister explain why none of the high-paid bureaucrats did a proper assessment of this land before they started building on it and why they now refuse to admit that they made a mistake? Why is the bureaucracy insisting on going ahead with an unsafe build?

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is not an unsafe building. It was not an ideal site; however, the groundwater and methane issues have been dealt with. This will be a safe school. It would cause about a three-year delay, potentially, to start over at a new site. That site is on private land and has not been acquired. No land has been publicly made available by the school board or the municipality. So those land costs would be in addition to the $35 million to move the site.

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, we all know that if you're in a hole, stop digging, especially if it's a wet one. This project is already years behind schedule and $10 million over budget. All the government has to show is three gymnasium concrete walls and a 10 per cent failure rate of the foundation pilings currently in place. The last government made a mistake in choosing this site. To the minister: why are you doubling down and making the problem worse without regard for the safety and concerns of the community?

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I wonder if you could make your comments to the Speaker, please.

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

I think I've answered the question. I don't think the member is hearing me. This was not an ideal site. It's now $10 million over budget, but if we move to the other site that you're suggesting, it's an additional $10 million over and above that plus the cost of the land, and we don't know if that land will be any different in terms of its geology. It's a very high water table there, so there's no guarantee that the next site will be any better than this one.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Disaster Recovery Program

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following the appalling management of the disaster recovery program by the Alberta Emergency Management Agency and nearly two years of constant public pressure, the AEMA finally committed to holding an independent review of their administration of the 2013 flood recovery. We know that the review took place as hundreds of my constituents and many stakeholder groups were interviewed. We know that the report was delivered to the ministry before the election, and to date this report and its recommendations have not been released. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what does the report say, and will you commit to releasing the full report today?

Ms Larivee: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, I have to say as someone who has lived through both flooding and forest fires in my hometown of Slave Lake that I understand how hard it is to go through something like that. It is clear that there are a number of problems with the disaster recovery program set up by the PCs and that we need to do better. Very shortly, integrating feedback from the report, we will provide an update on our plans to move forward and the lessons we've learned to make the changes to the disaster recovery program so that it's there for Albertans the next time it's needed.

Mr. W. Anderson: Given that a similar government report launched after the 2005 flood was not released for nearly six years and given that there remains over 600 DRP files outstanding, Albertans in general deserve to see the report for themselves. To the same minister: will you please explain why you have not shared this report already so that it could provide benefits to resolving the remaining 602 outstanding DRP claims in my constituency?

Ms Larivee: Mr. Speaker, when disaster strikes, Albertans do need to have confidence that there is an effective and well-managed program to help them recover and that all information will be used to move forward. It is clear that there are a number of problems. The bottom line is that we will use the lessons we've learned to move forward, and we will take into consideration the member's desire to see that report.

Thank you.

Mr. W. Anderson: Seven ministers, five years.

Given that the government committed to improving communication between the DRP and the applicants and that it's infuriating to hear that the Alberta Emergency Management Agency continues to close files without contacting the applicants in my constituency, again to the same minister: what specific actions will you commit to that will ensure that AEMA is communicating with all claimants with any changes to their applications?

Ms Larivee: Mr. Speaker, once again, as someone who, myself, has lived through natural disasters I have great compassion for those individuals. As I previously stated, there are a number of problems with the system that was set up by the PCs, and we do need to improve it. The bottom line is that Albertans that are hit by disaster need help and that the government needs to be there, and we're committed to making that happen.

Affordable Supportive Living Initiative

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, irrespective of political leanings we can all agree that taking care of Alberta's elderly population is a high priority. The previous government recognized this and in October 2014 announced $180 million in grants to create 2,612 new affordable supportive living spaces. My question is to the Minister of Seniors. These projects continue to sit stagnant, delayed due to your government's inaction. Why do you continue to put Alberta seniors at risk by delaying these important ASLI projects, with a full construction season now behind us?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. The reason why we're in such a backlog in terms of needing to have deferred maintenance caught up on is because the party that just asked the question neglected it for so many decades.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, as a point of clarification, these are new projects and not maintenance projects. But thank you.

Again to the same minister: given that in the spring session we heard that a decision was imminent and a letter was sent on July 16 stating that Alberta Seniors staff would meet with proponents in the near future and that there's still no word to the affected parties confirming or denying the funding they were promised, when in concrete terms will these groups get a firm commitment on the funding already announced?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we've committed to do is to make sure that we have our due diligence in terms of reviewing the projects that the last government was so keen to announce over and over again right before the last election. What we've done is that we've made sure we've met with the different proponents over the summer months, reviewed the projects, and also reviewed where the demand is because we want to make sure that if we're investing public money, it's focused on addressing the needs of seniors whether they're in the hospital or whether they're at home. So we're doing that work, we're meeting with the stakeholders, and I look forward to giving an update to this House very soon.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, to the same minister: given that $180 million in grants that was allocated to create only 1,500 ASLI spaces ended up creating a framework for 2,612 new spaces through innovative public-private partnerships, will this government do what is right and continue to partner with both public and private organizations, or will ideology win the day and reduced or more costly public, unionized staff facilities take ultimate precedence over not-for-profit organizations who have made land and other commitments in good faith and not in good time, unfortunately?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting that the member opposite talks about how public-private partnerships are so great, when the last government realized that they weren't being effective and they changed the plan on the new school construction because they weren't able to get good proponents. I'm really proud of the fact that Albertans voted this government in on a platform that includes the building of 2,000 long-term care beds. That platform commitment is under way, and we'll be able to update this House shortly, but know that we are committed to making sure that we bring those beds on stream in a timely fashion.

Municipal Infrastructure Funding

Ms Miller: Mr. Speaker, Red Deer is one of the many Alberta communities that have seen rapid population growth, leading to many pressures from municipal governments, especially as it relates to infrastructure. What is the Minister of Municipal Affairs doing to ensure that municipalities receive the support they need to start and complete infrastructure projects?

Ms Larivee: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, our government ensured through interim supply that funding for municipalities was provided to move local infrastructure projects forward. Our government will not repeat the mistakes of the past. I look forward to the budget and capital plan being presented in the House tomorrow, which will demonstrate our commitment to building much-needed municipal infrastructure. We promised our municipal partners we would support their local infrastructure needs, and we are keeping that promise, including for the Red Deer region, where we recently invested $6 million to expand the Red Deer airport, create jobs, and support that growing community.

Ms Miller: Mr. Speaker, given that many municipalities are also worried about these much-needed infrastructure projects being completed on time, how is the minister working to ensure that these municipalities have the stable, long-term, predictable funding they deserve?

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We heard from local leaders that predictable funding was critical. We listened, and we responded by delivering on these programs that they most value, such as the MSI. MSI delivers funding that is flexible, and municipalities can apply future years' allocations to fund projects. This supports long-term planning and respects community priorities. Through the MSI, Alberta community partnership, federal gas tax fund, and small communities fund the province is providing significant funding to advance long-term priorities.

Ms Miller: Mr. Speaker, given that the years of neglect by the previous government has led to the shortage of much-needed municipal infrastructure, what is the minister doing to ensure that projects are being funded according to priority and to help municipalities get shovels in the ground?

Ms Larivee: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, a key aspect of MSI is that municipalities get to decide what projects to spend their allocations on. They set the priority; we meet it. On the competitive-based small communities fund the selection process involved publically disclosed rating criteria, which helped us select 56 projects out of almost 300 applicants. The successful projects addressed very immediate community needs such as boil water advisories and sewer problems. I will repeat that I look forward to the budget and capital plan, that will demonstrate our commitment to building much-needed . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Flood Mitigation on the Elbow River

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today's announcement of flood protection along the Bow and Elbow rivers is a first step, but I'm left with more questions than answers on the long-term impacts these decisions will have. At the end of the day our province's flood mitigation plans must be made in the best interest of all Albertans and all communities. What consultation and discussion did the minister of environment have with the communities most affected and the municipality of Rocky View before making this decision?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. I am proud that our government is moving forward to provide strong protection to the city of Calgary and other communities, including in the MD of Rocky View, Bragg Creek, and Redwood Meadows. We're looking very much forward to working with them. We took these decisions today based on cost, based on environmental risk, and based on the very real risk of catastrophic failure during construction. These were concerns that folks in Bragg Creek and all along also shared and folks in the city of Calgary shared. We were glad to work with them, to go forward with essentially what amounts to a four-point plan for flood protection in Calgary.

Mrs. Aheer: So no consultations.

Mr. Speaker, the minister of environment spoke this morning about the emotional toll that the floods have taken on the province, and I couldn't agree more. At the same time I want to highlight the immense financial toll that a wrong decision could have on our province in the future. Can the minister assure Albertans that a thorough cost-benefit analysis has been conducted for both the Springbank and McLean Creek locations and that today's decision was cemented by fiscal and not emotional reasoning?

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure this House that it took our government five months to review the documents, to review all of the data presented before us. We commissioned independent reports as well to ensure that we were making the right decision for the city of Calgary and for all of the communities along the Elbow. Our conclusions were that the Springbank project was the most cost-effective, carried the least amount of environmental risk, the least amount of construction risk. We can get flood mitigation in place much quicker for the city of Calgary and much quicker for the people of Bragg Creek with the option that we have chosen. We are proud to have taken this decision today.

Mrs. Aheer: I hear a lot about the city of Calgary. The flood mitigation preparation is about Albertans and preparing for our province's future in a responsible manner. Part of flood mitigation preparation must include the consideration of land valuation in Springbank. This valuation must be clarified. At what point do land value discrepancies and potential court delays diminish the cost and time arguments made by the government in favour of Springbank?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, the members opposite cannot be trusted to get it right on flood mitigation. They would cut $9.3 billion from infrastructure over five years. That would mean that Calgary, the community of Bragg Creek, the community of Redwood Meadows would never see flood protection under their plan. Their approach is to make hasty decisions without complete information. Our approach is to take a clear-eyed view of the facts, change our minds even when necessary, and make the right decision for all of southern Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Forest Industry Issues

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In this continued low-price environment the government needs to continue to build on the previous government's efforts to diversify the economy. For nine years we've had a softwood lumber agreement with the United States, which has ensured tariff-free lumber exports. This agreement expired this month, which has caused much worry in the industry that if a new agreement is not signed, the Alberta forest sector will suffer from levies imposed on exported lumber. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: what are you doing to ensure that the new softwood lumber trade agreement is reached?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. While it is true that the Canada-U.S. softwood lumber agreement expired on October 12, we do know that forestry is a critical sector of our economy. Over 15,000 Albertans work in forestry, and the industry is a key economic driver in at least 70 Alberta communities, including many in my own constituency. There is a stall of one year from expiry. We're hoping to have the opportunity to talk to our federal counterparts to ensure that forestry remains a viable part of our economy in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: given that the government announced the Premier's Advisory Committee on the Economy to diversify Alberta's economy outside of the oil and gas industry and given that the membership of this committee includes members from the Alberta Federation of Labour, the Health Sciences Association of Alberta, the University of Alberta, GE, Suncor, and ATCO, why is there is there no representation whatsoever from anyone in the forest industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm quite honoured to have been named the Minister of Economic Development and Trade this week. The creation of this ministry shows to Albertans that job creation, diversification of our economy, and increased trades are a focus and a priority for our Premier and our government. I'm quite happy to be working with the Premier's advisory council in order to ensure that the plan that we move forward on is the best one, and we're going to act in the best interests of all Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: given that pine beetle infestations are decreasing the Canadian timber supply and that this government's first course of action taken was to terminate the Spray Lake Sawmills agreement, how will this government ensure stable and continued timber allocations with forestry producers?

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do recognize the importance to combat the pest of mountain pine beetle. I am proud to be a champion for Alberta forestry products, and I'm working hard every single day to support this industry and the hard-working families that depend on it.

Thank you.

Members' Statements

Habitat for Humanity

Mrs. Schreiner: Mr. Speaker and my friends here today, I am privileged to introduce Habitat for Humanity from Red Deer, an organization committed to providing dignified and inclusive housing and home ownership for all.

In the last 30 years, since its origin in 1985, Habitat for Humanity has built an impressive 2,712 homes in Canada. Working through 57 different affiliates, Habitat serves 300 Canadian communities. Six of them are located in Alberta. The Red Deer affiliate group, which has been in action since 1994, has built 25 homes, with four more under construction. Sixty-one low-income, working families have had the joy of owning a home thanks to Habitat Red Deer's efforts.

I am proud to share that one of Habitat's better known affiliates is located in Edmonton in the riding of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Since 1991 427 homes were built in Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, making 1,000 low-income, working families proud homeowners. Habitat's Edmonton chapter says that by December 25, 2015, eighteen more families will engage in the festive season in their new homes.

The Red Deer affiliate of Habitat for Humanity hosted an elegant garden party to raise funds for future development, which Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, Lieutenant Governor, attended. The event marked the introduction of Habitat to the city of Lacombe. The organization, its partners, and volunteers in the community have helped to end the cycle of poverty. This has provided the benefits of stability to those who may never have left the poverty cycle. It is a pleasure to introduce them here today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been 173 days since the last election, on May 5, and both I along with my 21 Wildrose colleagues had hoped it would be the start of a new, moderate approach from our NDP government. We had hoped to see leadership that would put the ideology aside and focus on doing what is best for Alberta, leadership that would work for Albertans, not against them. Sadly, this hasn't been the case. In the face of massive private-sector job losses, about 40,000 this year, we have seen this government stubbornly implement policies that are inflaming the current situation – 20 per cent business tax increases, higher personal taxes, doubling the carbon tax, a royalty review – and it doesn't sound like the NDP are done yet. If not tomorrow, then sometime in the future, the message is clear. Albertans can expect even more tax increases to subsidize this government's record spending.

Alberta has been jolted into a cold reality. In my home town of Fort McMurray a 20 per cent vacancy rate exists while unemployment continues to rise. In August a new report was issued that shows that business confidence is nearing historic lows. What has the government done in response? They bulldoze ahead with their dramatic 50 per cent increase to the minimum wage, a move that would mean higher prices for consumers, fewer hours for workers, and would put the viability of hundreds of businesses at risk. This is not the moderate approach Albertans were hoping for.

In this session the Wildrose wants to let the government know that we are still here to help. Let's not intensify the problems our economy is facing. Let's put forward policies and ideas that tell the world that Alberta is a safe place to invest. Instead of calling

Alberta an embarrassing cousin, let's champion our accomplishments to the world. Wildrose remains here to help. I hope this government will listen.

Government Policies

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, this has been a summer of discontent made worse by NDP MLAs. Ideology has replaced common sense. They began with $6 billion borrowed, with no details provided. Government delayed the budget almost six months after the election but found time to add job-killing corporate taxes. This created maximum uncertainty, worsening Albertans' ability to make a living in the energy industry, and made the situation worse by threatening a royalty review, a regulator overhaul, and musings of new taxes. The threat of a $15 per hour minimum wage is putting the entire tourism and hospitality industry at risk while ignoring the reality that low-income Albertans will actually get hurt more than helped by the change. Promises of building seniors' homes have been delayed or perhaps even broken depending upon the budget.

The Premier has told unemployed Albertans to settle down and called Alberta an embarrassing cousin and given up on three of the four possible pipeline directions. Rather than working to save jobs and provide support and training to unemployed Albertans, the minister of jobs spent time trying to get jobs for her pals in the NDP in B.C. The government has sown seeds of discontent so deep that Albertans thrashed the NDP candidates in the federal election. The government has taken their eye off the ball on school construction and then tried to blame the previous government, only to spend an entire week explaining, backtracking, and hoping the issue would go away, distancing themselves from – wait for it – themselves.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans have not been properly consulted or paid attention to. Our PC caucus thanks the NDP for driving Albertans in our direction, but that will not stop us from opposing bad policies. We encourage Albertans to rise up rather than settle down. PCs are proud of Alberta; it's, rather, the NDP who are ashamed. Albertans can count on us to push the government away from one blind ideological mistake after another and towards policies that are good for Alberta and ones they counted on, at least until May 5.

Phil Bobawsky

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to stand here today to speak to this House for the first time about the tireless work of Phil Bobawsky. Phil was a constituent of Calgary-Shaw that I had the privilege of meeting just shortly after the spring election. Little did I know the first time I met Phil that he would educate me a lot about people suffering from vision loss. Phil first lost his vision, 10 years ago, due to complications related to diabetes, and it was then that he reached out to the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, that helped with his rehabilitation.

For the past several years Phil has volunteered with the CNIB and has become an advocate for all those suffering from vision loss. During the last provincial election Phil attended debates throughout the city and province and worked to make sure that vision loss was made the centre of attention during the election. Phil is a man who always has a lot to say, and this is a determination, advocacy work, and contribution that reflects his passion. Phil is a member of the city of Calgary's Advisory Committee on Accessibility and has continued to work with others through his work with the Canadian Diabetes Association, the Rick Hansen Foundation, and the Kidney Foundation of Canada.

This fall I had the honour to be present at an event where he was the recipient of the first annual Don Biberdorf award for his tireless advocacy. Phil would attest that his success today is directly due to the love and support of his family and the support of the CNIB. Phil, who's present in the gallery with his dog Finnegan and representative J.S. Ryu from the CNIB, is an outstanding example of the great work that the CNIB provides for those with vision loss. Their advocacy work across Alberta shows that no matter what your challenges are, everyone in this province can make a difference. I am proud to call Phil a constituent, a neighbour, a friend, and an advocate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Acadia.

Fish Creek Library 30th Anniversary

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to extend warm wishes to the Calgary-Fish Creek area library, which is celebrating its 30th anniversary during Library Month. I personally am a big fan of the Calgary public library and of this branch in particular as it's the branch that serves the neighbourhood where I grew up, the neighbourhood where my family lives now as well as many of the communities in Calgary-Acadia and some surrounding ridings. Our library features programs for all ages, including storytimes for young children, computer coding for teens, ESL conversation club, computer technology coaching, and so much more. These programs offer valuable skills, from early literacy to computer literacy. They also offer a chance for members of our community to gather in a public space to get to know one another as neighbours and as friends.

Fish Creek library is so much more than a place to pick up books. It's a place to meet and to connect through a common interest. It is a hub in our community, a place to gather, to learn, and to play. Over its 30 years Fish Creek and the entire Calgary library system have evolved to meet the changing needs of our communities. Thirty years ago books, music cassettes, and magazines were the norm; today the library also offers newly released DVDs and an expanded collection of well over 2 million materials, with over a billion circulations per year. The library also offers online materials like the e-library, which contains academic resources for children, kindergarten through postsecondary, plus downloadable e-books, audiobooks, and magazines.

I'm confident that the Fish Creek library will continue to serve the communities of Calgary-Acadia and our surrounding ridings for many years to come. I offer a great big thank you to the staff and the volunteers at the library for everything that they do to contribute to our community and their tireless work to promote literacy and lifelong learning. I look forward to seeing what the next 30 years will bring.

Catriona, Jana, and Dara Bott

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, it is with a heavy heart that I rise to honour and remember three young Albertans that were lost in a tragic accident earlier this month at their home, near Withrow, Alberta, in my constituency. Catie, who recently turned 13, and 11-year-old twins Dara and Jana were taken from their family far too soon. In their short time on this earth these three sisters each brought joy and light to those around them, especially to their parents, Roger and Bonita, and their little brother, Caleb.

My heart weighed heavily this week as I heard their parents describe three girls who shared a common love for the farm, fishing, camping, quading, and animals, particularly their horses and cats. These girls were country and proud of it. Visiting Withrow shortly after this tragedy, I was struck by how much these precious girls' caring hearts had touched and impacted their entire community. I offer our condolences though I know that there are no words that can be heard over the roaring silence left in their wake.

I understand the temptation, Mr. Speaker, to fill this silence with the drumbeat of our righteous anger, to seek someone or something to blame. To those who have already started down this path, let me say this: there is no justice to be found in this horrific accident. This is not about politics. However well-meaning our intention, blame will never make us whole. Instead, though words may fail us, let us offer our support and understanding to the Bott family and the community of Withrow. I can only pray that we can have hearts as big and faith as strong as the Bott family's. When asked how they were dealing with this horrific loss, they said: as far as not being able to ever see our kids again, that part is okay because we know we are going to see them again.

Mr. Speaker, let us sit up with them and see them through this night. This is where we are needed. [applause]

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you for your kind remarks. I think the response you received was an indication of the importance of your words and how they struck today.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: I am pleased to table with the Assembly a report by Alberta's Chief Electoral Officer, as required by section 44(1) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, and his accompanying letter to the Speaker dated October 5, 2015, concerning compliance with the election campaign financial reporting requirements.

Members, the period is to end at 3 o'clock. I've had a request to acknowledge some visitors. Calgary-Bow, please proceed.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly my sister Jennifer Prosser. Jenn works for the re-elected member of Churchill-Keewatinook Aski, Niki Ashton. Jenn is one of the hardest working women I know, and she inspired me to be involved in a life of public service. She is a strong voice in feminist activism and will continue to be a role model in my life. I ask you to join me in providing her with the traditional warm welcome to this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two very special individuals in my life. The first is my mother, Mrs. Linda McLennan; the second is my husband's aunt Mrs. Carolynne Fardy. Both of these wonderful women have spent their careers helping others to learn. My mom spent her career as an elementary schoolteacher, often with a focus on special-needs education. Now she enjoys retirement as a yoga practitioner, Stollery children's hospital volunteer, and every so often, when her daughter calls, a very hard-working political campaigner.

Carolynne Fardy spent her career as an instructor in microbiology at Thompson Rivers University in Kamloops, B.C. Her work led to an interest in biosafety. She has devoted her efforts towards making people more aware of toxins in everyday products so that consumers can make more informed choices.

Both of these women are an inspiration to me. I would now ask them to stand so that they may receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who have visitors to acknowledge? The Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to introduce through you and to you a few of my friends who came to Edmonton. They are here to give me support on my first day in the House. I thank them very much for being here on this special day: Venkatesh Jalubula, a PhD student at the University of Alberta, and Kanak Chamarty, a well-known social activist from Edmonton. They both come from my home state of Andhra Pradesh, southern India, where I was born. Also here are Goldy and Priyanka Mathur, a family active in the business community for many years in Edmonton. I ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, I'm sure you will find that you have many more friends in the Assembly.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 201

Assuring Alberta's Fiscal Future Act

[Debate adjourned June 22: Ms Babcock speaking]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Stony Plain, I'm advised that you have some time left, six minutes, to speak to the original Bill 201.

Ms Babcock: I'm done speaking to that. Thank you. I'll give up the rest of my time.

The Speaker: Thank you.

There are, I'm advised, 28 minutes of debate left on this particular bill. Are there other members who would like to speak to Bill 201?

We'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-South East to close debate.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be back in the House and debate issues that are important to Albertans. You know, often when I go to grade 6 classes, I speak to the classes and ask them: what do you think is one of the most important, one of the most special inventions that ever was created? They put up a lot of hands, and they say things like "hockey" or "the Calgary Stampede" or "the Stampeders." A really interesting dialogue I have with those grade 6 classes. I suggest to them: what about the stone wheel? The stone wheel was a great invention, and the thing is that we never ran out of rock. There was lots of rock.

The reality is that with our resource revenue and our resources sooner or later somebody is going to come up with something better, and we need to be ahead of that curve. We need to make sure that we're planning for our future, planning for our children, and that was the whole idea of the heritage trust fund. Now, I don't want you to think in terms of parties or elections and everything that's gone on or even the history of this province. We know that the heritage trust fund was created so that we could plan for the future, put some money aside. It doesn't just affect the future, Mr. Speaker.

It's an investment that we have that also affects things like our credit rating and our standing in the global markets.

Mr. Speaker, I'm hoping that both sides, my friends on the right and my friends across the way, the government, will allow this debate to carry on. I welcome hearing what the plans from the government and the plans from my friends on the right are on how you can make this bill better. Let's have a fulsome debate. Really, it's not about Rick Fraser. It's not about any particular party. It's really about our children, right? It's about our future. That's why I brought this bill forward.

It's never too late to save. When you think about it, if you went to your financial adviser today, they would say: always make sure you put some money aside for yourself, even if it's just a little bit, because that will grow and that will help your standing fiscally, financially, to make sure that you can obtain things like loans, to make sure that you're always saving for yourself first, and then you have a plan to pay off everything else.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the House today to move this bill on to Committee of the Whole so that we can have a fulsome debate. Thank you for your time.

Alberta Local Food Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing me to rise and speak about the Alberta Local Food Act, which was introduced here on June 18. I am grateful to the members of my constituency in Strathcona-Sherwood Park, whom I am privileged to represent in this Assembly. I am honoured to be here today to bring forward a conversation and to open up new dialogues about developing a sustainable, local food system in Alberta. This will allow our local producers to seek direct access to markets and our consumers to enjoy homegrown products.

Mr. Speaker, it has been over a decade since Albertans have been asking for a sustainable food supply chain from their own backyards. In 2004 alternative agriculture markets in Alberta were first studied. Then in 2008 and again in 2012 the intention was to see if there was any value in alternative market sectors for local agriculture products. The 2012 study showed that 95 per cent – 95 per cent – of Alberta households are using or want to purchase food grown or made in Alberta. This paralleled the responses and feedback that I received throughout the summer when engaging with constituents, with farmers, and with Albertans across the province. See, there is a very literal appetite for the increased support of local food systems.

Mr. Speaker, we have three different markets in our communities. There are international, there are domestic, and there are local markets. So why, then, did Albertans choose local markets? Well, the top five influences are freshness, quality, taste, safety, and also support for buying local from Alberta farm families.

This is where my constituents come in. I am so proud to represent them here. I come from Strathcona-Sherwood Park. Mr. Speaker, my constituency is home to farmers who would like to share their products, produce, and harvest with local markets in a sustainable manner. The farmers from my constituency, like several others, face huge challenges in connecting with the wider market. The consumers that would like to support these farmers also face these barriers.

This is an issue that intersects both rural and urban residents, and this bill has the potential of increasing awareness of how to overcome them. There are a variety of tools that producers use to sell their products: direct marketing, co-operatives, and farmers' markets. Previous work in local food systems has consistently noted an increase in co-operation in order to enhance viability of these tools.

So where do they sell their products? One example: a farmers' market. These have always supported Alberta's rural economy, typically serving as a test for small businesses. Many farm enterprises and new agriculture entrants start marketing their products in a local market, due to the lower costs, before expanding their business.

At present we have the Alberta approved farmers' market program, that has reviewed them for the past 40 years, but since 2010 the overall number of Alberta approved farmers' markets has grown by 27 per cent. As Albertans make, bake, and grow, the products have increased considerably. There is a robust market of 8,500 in all markets and at present 130 farmers' markets throughout 108 communities in Alberta. As local producers grow, the local market channels continue to grow in value and are a significant source of farm receipts. We must support the continuing diversification of market access.

According to a 2012 AF study $878 million was the combined market value for farmers' markets and farm retail. This was up 64 per cent from 2008 at $724 million. This increase emphasizes the importance Albertans place on where they get their food from.

When a consumer visits a farmers' market, they spend an average of $55 per visit for everything from fresh fruits, vegetables, meat, eggs, honey, baking, preserves, processed foods, plants, and artisan craft products. That's putting a number on it. But when they visit farmers' markets, they also get the benefit of asking the farmers questions, asking the producers how they grew them.

Mr. Speaker, there's a huge market opportunity for connecting to local food producers with local consumers in Alberta. For example, Explore Local, a rural development division initiative, assists small-scale Albertan producers and processors in building skills to enhance their business. In 2014-15 the Explore Local initiative designed and delivered 27 extension events to increase producer awareness, understanding, access to local market channels. This initiative has resulted in producers and small processors investing in their business, through expansion or improvements, by 77 per cent. Positive growth in sales as a result of additional investment was 94 per cent. Increased profitability: 78 per cent. Gaining new customers due to business practices changes: 96 per cent.

The potential growth of our local food structures can be enhanced by the support provided by this bill. Very recently vertical farming indoor technology was developed in the fields of Strathcona-Sherwood Park. This is the kind of project that would enhance the variants of local food available to us year-round, so strengthening local food structures complements our drive to diversify our economy.

The procurement of local food puts regional identity and a trusting face on food. It also boosts local food economy, and we support agricultural job creators. Hence, Mr. Speaker, we need to explore and deeply evaluate the importance of how to legislate the Alberta Local Food Act, which has the potential of being a driver of the local economy by creating food security and improving a maximized return on local food infrastructure. It will also attract new generations into the farming profession by increasing awareness and opportunities. It will help local farmers grow, produce, process, and distribute locally and help buyers to opt for homegrown, ethically sourced foods.

What I know is that we are driven to grow agriculture, and I have seen that my community comes together in many ways in order to support this growth. It is my hope that with this bill the government becomes a stronger ally for local farmers. If we pass this bill, we would be the third province, after Ontario and Manitoba, to have our own local food act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to listening to my colleagues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour to rise and speak in this new session, and it's an honour to speak to the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park's bill. I did have the opportunity in the past session to speak to her in your lounge, sir, in regard to her bill. At that time I asked her what the member's goal was, and I've heard some of that going forward here, so I'd like to explain to the House and to the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park some of my points of view on the member's legislation.

It's an important piece of legislation. With food, as one radio broadcaster from Drumheller liked to say, if you eat, you're involved in agriculture. Some members across, myself included, know that some of us are somewhat more attuned to that because our clothing shows that.

3:30

Mr. Cooper: Some of us eat more.

Mr. Strankman: More involved with agriculture, Mr. Speaker, I guess we'll say.

It's a topic that's near and dear to me because as a lifetime agrarian, if you will, I've travelled across fields both in Saskatchewan and Alberta in many different ways, so some would say that I do have some experience on this matter. To the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park. I want to say that I have no malice in anything I say here; it's meant to be open information to the member's discussion and that of this House going forward, that we are trying to do this, as you said, Mr. Speaker, in your opening comments today, to be a collective and beneficial way of bringing forward something that will benefit all Albertans.

The concern that I have with the member's legislation is – and some assistants to my position entitled my presentation here Unintended Consequences. With all sorts of actions there are and can and could be unintended consequences. In this case I want to present to the House, Mr. Speaker, some of those consequences. This proposal is somewhat short on specifics and long on generalities. Again I would want to qualify by saying that I have no malice in what I say here.

Once this bill, which contains generalities, goes off to be effected, the regulators come into play. This bill in some cases does not have or state specific definitions for some of the things that are being brought forward, Mr. Speaker. There are troubling directions that this bill takes, and I have some of those concerns. One such example would be the intention to create a stable market, and I have trouble understanding what a stable market might be, in what arena that might be.

One of the comments talked about public-sector purchasing. I had the opportunity – the now Minister of Transportation made allusions to that, my experience in a facility in 2002. The initials were LCC, and they weren't Lethbridge community college. The minister made reference to that. At that facility, a public, provincial facility, Mr. Speaker, the members there, some of which I associated with quite freely, had been producing potatoes. That facility, that government institution, was completely self-sufficient, with milk, with potatoes, with all sorts of fruits and vegetables, and because of government-initiated regulation they were not allowed to do that. These people who were in there, such as myself, for some form of rehabilitation were not allowed to produce this food, and it was a valuable way that they could improve their character. The Minister of Transportation sometimes has questions about my rehabilitation.

The base of this concept, Mr. Speaker, is contrary to proven free-market values. Our agriculture industry has been calling for this for a long time, as long as I can remember. Is there a pressing need to create an artificially stable market? That's one of the questions that I have. To the member: I'd like to hear that. The member made comment that people have been consulted in regard to this. I know people in the Alberta beef industry, in the pork industry, at the farmers' markets, et cetera, and the grain commission, the Barley Commission, the barley growers, the Wheat Commission. These are commercial operators, and they haven't had any consultation with the member on that, and that's an important thing. You know, some of their questions – I've talked to them. They're asking: is it necessary to have government intervention?

The member has talked about wide and varied benefits to this, and the member has also quoted some financial numbers and everything. I'm cognizant of that, and I know that there can be developments in that regard. Alberta's agrifood markets, Mr.

Speaker, continue to grow. Former agriculture minister Shirley McClellan made comment that she was expecting and hoping for $20 billion of export by 2010. It was a very enthusiastic number, but, you know, as an agrarian producer I'd like to see those numbers climb and grow to those kinds of amounts even though we've passed 2010.

There has never been before such a breadth and depth of products grown in Alberta as today, and the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park talks about vertical farming and vertical things growing. There is a potential for some legislation even in urban areas where people would be allowed or legislated to have a certain amount of poultry, whether that be counted poultry of four chickens per household or whatever. There's talk of that, and there seems to be some small demand or some questions, some speaking of that.

There are also, Mr. Speaker, now – and the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park talked about farmers' markets. These markets are strictly run and legislated. I'd like to know how these two acts could intertwine or interspace because there may be, as I've said, unintended consequences to bringing this legislation forward. Restaurants already source some of their ingredients from these producers. Why can't the public-sector organizations source from these markets? A fear that I have and a fear that they have is one of liability, of their ingestion of these foods. If there is something that's not of proper acceptance or quality or trace marketing, which is what's required in the beef industry – all beef that's produced and sold has to be market verifiable, producer verified back to its source. That's possibly a loophole for a safety situation here. One of these organizations that does this uses contracts between the producers and the marketers. They have their contracts privately designed, and they're going ahead with doing this. So I have a concern that this legislation may create some form of a subsection of agriculture. True or not, I'll leave that to the rest of the debate and to the rest of the House.

Would it not make more sense to expand the scope of farmers' markets, if needed, rather than starting again from scratch? The Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park is to be approved and complimented on the initiative, but there are some concerns about the demonstrative way that it's brought forward. The member again talked about farmers having difficulty to get their product to market. I'm, Mr. Speaker, a witness to that. I mean, sometimes there are commercial holdbacks and there are financial holdbacks. We are held back primarily by the conditions of what's called winter.

You know, we can't produce food the same. People in greenhouses know. For example, this summer at the Broxburn greenhouse at Coaldale – I think, Mr. Speaker, you may have been on that tour, where they are producing all of the green peppers for a good part of the Calgary Co-op. Outdoors they are producing all of the broccoli, if not the cauliflower – I'm not quite sure – for the Calgary Co-op. Irrigation in that area is a viable and financial form of wealth creation. They are doing it in a commercial fashion. In the case of commercial agriculture if you create over $10,000 of agriculture value brought forward, you're subject to another regulation called the Alberta . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, you've served your time of 10 minutes.

I would now call upon the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak in favour of Bill 202, the Alberta Local Food Act. We've talked about urban and rural, and I am an urban MLA. One of the reasons why my urban Edmonton area is well represented by this bill is because the constituency members in Edmonton-Mill Woods care deeply about the food they set upon their table and share with their families.

One only needs to visit a commercial part of 34th Avenue in Mill Woods to see an array of independent grocery stores catering to a host of different cuisine preferences, and you get a sense of how deeply the people in my riding think about what they eat. The people in my riding care about local food, and we have two different farmers' markets in Mill Woods, the Millwoods Farmers' Market and the South Common Farmers' Market, both of which provide local Albertan food to my constituents.

In the absence of strong government action on this issue, local consumers have pressed ahead where they can to ensure that they're eating fresh, healthy, local foods not only for the nutritional benefits but because Albertans care about helping one another. Urban consumers want to ensure that Alberta's rural farmers are supported in their efforts, so when given the choice, Albertans prefer to buy local foods. Albertans also want to know that their food comes from the lowest carbon footprint possible, and eating locally produced foods helps to do just that.

As we try to engage people in the political process, we need to ensure that the legislation we pass in this House is reflective of the priorities of Albertans. While reviewing this bill, it came to my mind that the Edmonton Youth Council has recently been discussing food as an issue that's important to them in their efforts on Edmonton city council. Coincidentally, the sponsor of this bill is one of the more youthful members of our Assembly, so I know that this bill is not only something that a great majority of Albertans would support but is also an important demonstration of our Assembly's commitment to act on issues that matter to the younger voters in Alberta.

This bill also helps to further diversify our economy, something many Albertans want to see happen. If there is a strong, predictable market for locally grown foods in place, then we will see some Albertans deciding to enter career paths they would not have previously thought viable. We will see more small-scale producers, more local distributors, more restaurateurs catering to specific local cuisine. All of these are welcome spinoffs and things that have already begun to happen on a smaller scale as consumers clamour for these changes.

We are now in the enviable position of knowing that we can further the positive impacts that are happening around local food, absent much risk. We've seen Ontario and Manitoba each successfully pass their own local food acts, and we've seen consumers in Alberta race ahead of their own government on this issue. Now is the time for this government to do its part and to pass our local food act. Passing this bill is good for consumers, good for business, and good for Alberta. I hope all members will support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Under 29(2)(a).

The Speaker: I'm told there is no 29(2)(a).

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to speak to Bill 202. To be honest, this bill has me a little perplexed as to its true intent. As a farmer I have been in the production of local food for my entire life, and with my experience on the board of directors for Federated Co-operatives Limited I've been able to experience the retail and production chain coming together for the promotion of local food production. The question I ask is: what does this bill intend to accomplish that is not already being addressed through the ways and means already in place? The hon. member has mentioned that 95 per cent of our consumers are already able to use local. She also mentioned that production and markets continue to grow through Explore Local. The previous member talked about how consumers are racing ahead of government in their attempt to buy local, and I would suggest that this is probably the most sustainable way to grow the local food economy. Existing departments within Alberta Agriculture are currently working with the local food production industry to continue sustainable growth.

So why is this bill necessary? When I read purpose 2(a), it's "to ensure a resilient, sustainable and strong local food economy and agricultural land base in Alberta." It makes me think that the bill is pertaining to food security or, possibly, that the bill is focused on a land-use framework.

Then when I go on to read purpose 2(b), "to improve and maximize economic return and food security by maintaining agricultural land for the purposes of farming and supporting the development of local food infrastructure for processing and distributing food," again, it looks like a bill about food security and land use but adds in an element of economic and infrastructure uncertainty.

Purpose 2(c), "to provide an increased and stable demand for local food through public sector organization purchasing." To provide economic certainty for local food producers and processors by mandating to the public-sector organizations who to purchase their food from; in other words, indirect subsidization of a certain segment of Alberta food production: is that the intent of the bill?

Purpose 2(d), "to increase public awareness of local food in Alberta, including the diversity of local food." Public education to bring awareness of local food production is occurring already through many different avenues. In fact, if any members wish to learn more, the Northlands Farmfair will be bringing public awareness to Edmonton from November 11 to 15.

Purpose 2(e), "to promote sustainable farming practices." Alberta Agriculture along with industry production units throughout the province have been doing this work for many years and are continuing to evolve and develop an industry that is sustainable for the long term.

Purpose 2(f), "to attract new generations into the farming profession." New producers, young and old, are being attracted into this way of life every day. They are attracted for many different reasons. Government interference in the natural attraction to the farm lifestyle sometimes encourages individuals to enter the profession for all the wrong reasons. This type of growth is often not sustainable.

Purpose 2(g), "to support indigenous food sources and systems." This bill gives no indication as to a definition of indigenous food sources and systems. I have no idea what is meant by this and would need more clarification. Also, what does the word "support" refer to? This could mean many things.

Purpose 2(h), "to promote diversity in scale and marketing in Alberta's agriculture and food system for adaptability and resilience." May I suggest that Alberta's agriculture and food systems are very resilient? These producers and the systems that we have in place with food processing and production have adapted over many years based on true demand. Real demand, not publicly engineered demand, is the surest way to sustainability in the local food economy.

Mr. Speaker, without clear intent of the purposes of Bill 202 it makes me very nervous to allow the Lieutenant Governor to choose an advisory committee and then to have this advisory committee that was chosen by the Lieutenant Governor in turn make recommendations back to the Lieutenant Governor. I refer to section 8.

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations

- (a) prescribing limitations respecting the designation of local food under section 1(b)(ii);
- (b) prescribing organizations to be included within the definition of public sector organization; in other words, deciding what a public-sector organization is;

- (c) concerning any additional matter or thing that is necessary or advisable in connection with the implementation of this Act.

This puts enormous weight in the hands of the Lieutenant Governor, and it appears to me that we are putting a lot of faith in the Lieutenant Governor in Council to understand the purposes of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has many areas of concern for me as a producer of local food. I am extremely concerned about the unintended consequences that this type of legislation may have. I believe that the bill's intent may be good but recognize the risks when government tries to manipulate the free-enterprise laws of supply and demand.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to rise today and speak in support of the Alberta Local Food Act. My family and I have spent many days at various farmers' markets making sure we supported local producers, and we've spent much time on the farm, so I see both sides of this. We've enjoyed the ability to pick out our own produce, our meats, and various products available. The goods we have always been lucky enough to acquire have been of the highest quality and seem to taste better, knowing where they came from and that the environmental cost of our food has been reduced. The impact that my family has had on their farming as well has been that my children have picked their own food out of the fields.

Let me share some of the reasons why farmers are going to get an economic boost as this support is translated into action, with more locally produced foods available. In 2012, Mr. Speaker, 95 per cent of Alberta households indicated a desire to purchase locally, and developing a sustainable local food system in Alberta, especially rural Alberta, is of prime importance to our local producers. Local economies allow direct access for producers to sell their products at reasonable prices, which supports a viable business model for producers both large and small. There is a huge market opportunity for connecting local producers with local consumers right here at home.

The Alberta Local Food Act supports a sustainable food supply chain from primary producers, secondary industry, and consumers alike. In the past the supply chain was not always guaranteed or viable for all involved. There are huge challenges to any producer who is trying to get products to market, so supporting the agriculture industry just makes sense.

When meeting with local interests such as the West-Central Forage Association, it was pointed out to me that insurance does not protect producers against cost increases. For example, because the price of feed is so high right now because some of the crops failed this year, some of the farmers will not be able to feed their animals this winter, so some are exiting the industry. Many feel that we will have fewer beef producers going forward because of this, which would also jeopardize the government's tax base coming from beef farmers.

We discussed the age gap in agriculture. The average age of a farmer is 55 years old, and due to the lack of capital available to younger people who don't have the assets already in place, entering the agricultural industry is prohibitive, to say the least. It is challenging to onboard young farmers who are purchasing farms or taking over family farms, ensuring that the expertise is being passed on and ensuring that business management skills are understood to be a very important skill and increasingly important to run a successful and efficient farm.

The agriculture industry is forward thinking and innovative. I believe that the Alberta Local Food Act is a forward-thinking way of supporting our farmers in the industry. Many producers do not have the capacity to do this very important work full time, so instead they supplement their income by working off the farm, which inhibits the growth of their production capabilities. Farmers are feeling pressure and concern for what the infrastructure is and will be to get their products to market.

There are many good things happening in this industry right now. The Explore Local initiative, brought forth in 2014-15, helped increase producer awareness and access to local market channels, which resulted in positive growth in sales, profitability, and increased business. Young people graduating with an agricultural sciences degree are being taught to approach farming and producing with a strong business model.

The Alberta Local Food Act allows and encourages local producers to grow the local market channels, which in turn increases the value of those channels. This equals a significant source of farm receipts for all producers in Alberta, encouraging stability and growth in the agriculture industry.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand today and discuss Bill 202, Alberta Local Food Act, brought forward by the member representing Strathcona-Sherwood Park. Wildrose supports enhancing a strong local food economy and agricultural land base; indeed, that is the foundation of our province. However, Wildrose does not support the gratuitous and vague legislation which leaves more questions and concerns than it answers.

The stated intention to create a stable market through public-sector purchasing is contrary to the free-market principles that Alberta's producers are looking for. Wildrose does not support government intervention in the economy, no matter how well intended. Will this legislation, in effect, be a kind of subsidy for certain local producers? Wildrose supports free and fair markets, unmitigated by government influence and control. If there are entities that find that it makes more sense to buy local, then great, but legislation is not the answer for such a solution.

I'm confused about the path that the government wants to follow with the proposed legislation. The member who proposed it, I know, is seeking some laudable goals, including diversifying and encouraging growth in the agriculture sector, providing opportunities for consultation with various stakeholders, promoting sustainable farming practices, increasing public awareness of local food in Alberta, including the diversity of local food. However, this bill is so vague that I'm not sure whether it will achieve these goals and whether there might not be a lot of unintended consequences.

In looking at the big picture, a few concerns become readily apparent. Establishing an advisory committee of 12 members provides some substantial challenges. For instance, how will these members be chosen? Is there some regional representation? Is there a cross-section of large- and small-scale farming operators? It doesn't seem so. Who will guarantee the supply of produce? What happens if there is a poor yield? Will the onus, or responsibility, fall to the producer or the government to make up costs of potential shortfalls once government entities become dependent on local suppliers? Who will create the distribution system?

In addition to being extremely vague, there is a recognition of the associated costs. For instance, how much will this advisory committee cost taxpayers? The minister "may authorize, fix and provide for the payment of [remuneration] and expenses to any of the members of the Advisory Committee." Has this cost been budgeted? With limited dollars, are higher costs to purchase food going to take away from front-line services in places like schools, universities, and hospitals?

I also think that many pieces already are in place that could be used to reach some of the same goals without heavy-handed legislation leading to distorted markets and higher costs to taxpayers. For instance, the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation is a provincial Crown corporation with a private-sector board of directors that provides farmers, agribusinesses, and others with small-business loans, crop insurance, and farm income disaster assistance.

In a meeting with the agriculture minister on October 6 a business group from the community of Two Hills presented a concise business plan to diversify the agricultural economy in the region. They were willing to immediately put forward $1 million of their own seed money and sweat equity to get the project going and were looking for a $2 million loan, not a grant but a loan, to get the project up and running. They were referred to and turned down by AFSC. One of the reasons the group was turned down is that they had to come up with 50 per cent of the funding to qualify for the loan, unworkable for a lot of smaller operators. While they could apply for a small grant to hire a consultant to do market research, there appeared to be virtually no other support mechanisms available. Given that the group already had done their research as part of the proposal, the grant was not useful to them, and given that they did not have half of the loan amount, they were turned down for the loan.

Instead of going through with a massive piece of confusing and vague legislation, the minister of agriculture could work with branches such as AFSC to streamline processes and make lending more readily accessible for start-up ventures to support our local economy.

Another organization, by the name of Sunfresh Farms, brings locally grown vegetables from farm to local grocers. Sunfresh Farms is owned by Alberta farmers who grow high-quality vegetables. According to their website they believe in responsible industry practices while following the highest food safety programs. Sunfresh is audited every year and has earned a grade A in food safety. Even their company slogan promotes their interest in local food. As their famous saying goes, "At Sunfresh Farms produce is our passion."

The group of investors from Two Hills had worked with Sunfresh Farms and were assured a letter of intent to purchase every pound of produce that they could grow in their greenhouses, and still they were denied. Again, instead of pushing through this piece of legislation, why does the government not work with small and medium-sized businesses like Sunfresh and farmers' markets to support the diversification and growth of our local food economy? Instead, this legislation actually puts the government in direct competition with private businesses already established and promoting local producers.

What worries me the most about this legislation is the potential for unintended consequences that result from the vague and poorly thought-out elements. While I strongly support efforts to strengthen and diversify our local economies, I do not and cannot support this legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to address Bill 202 this afternoon. As a practising veterinarian I had the great privilege for close to 30 years of working with what I'll call a very local food industry, and that was our producers in Alberta. I will tell you that I will stack our producers in Alberta up against any producers anywhere in terms of their ability to produce wholesome, sustainable, nutritious, quality, safe food.

The mover of this bill in her opening remarks certainly stated a number of areas in which there has been great success in the improvement and the enlargement, in some cases double-digit figures, of local food procurement and access, and I think that is very positive. You know, I think of initiatives like the 100-mile diet, which is one that has been embraced by people all around the world in terms of purchasing food that is produced closer to home. It does make sense.

As one who grew up in the city but then moved to a rural community and then had the tremendous privilege of working with agricultural producers who were tremendously proud of the food that they produced, I was able to procure a lot of the food directly from them. Anyone who has bought a 4-H steer at a 4-H sale will know all about that, and our clinic bought a 4-H steer every year. Some of them were former patients; nonetheless, we bought a 4-H steer every year and were happy to consume it because we knew who produced it, we knew we were supporting the club, and we knew quite often that we were making the dad of that 4-H child quite happy and that likely they would continue to be one of our customers. What goes around comes around.

I want to talk about a couple of other success stories that I'm personally familiar with. There is a farm south of Paradise Valley, Alberta. What a great-sounding place that is, Paradise Valley, Alberta. Well, Paradise Valley, Alberta, is in the constituency of Vermilion-Lloydminster, and I was privileged to do the veterinary work for one of the largest hog producers in that area. Now, they do something very interesting and really quite unusual in the pork industry, and that is that they finish their hogs outside. Once the hogs reach a size of 50 pounds, they turn them outside into shelters that are built out of round straw bales. They're out there year-round. When it's 40 below, they hunker down into the straw, and when it's warm and sunny, those pigs run around and play in the straw.

Because of this unique way of finishing hogs, this producer has been able to market his pork under a special label: Paradise Valley free-range pork. I'm very proud of that because those pigs were my patients, and the thing I know is that when I went out to see this farm – and I would do this on a regular basis – I'd be able to watch these pigs frolicking around in the straw, and these pigs were having a wonderful time.

Mr. Cooper: PC supporters.

Dr. Starke: Well, you know what? If members of the party to the right only want to buy and raise and eat pigs that are raised inside confinement facilities, they are welcome to do that, but I am quite happy to consume these happy pigs that were running about.

In any case, it's not just that, Mr. Speaker. Also in my constituency is an operation known as the Cheesiry. The Cheesiry is a very dairy, and the cheese that is produced according to old-world techniques, that were learned by the owners in Italy, is used all around Alberta in some of the finest restaurants. In fact, not too long ago I happened to be at one of the finest restaurants in Edmonton, and there was the Cheesiry's pecorino cheese on one of their entrees. I'm proud of that.

You know, during another initiative, another opportunity that I had to visit, I visited a goat dairy near Morningside. I believe it's in the constituency of Lacombe-Ponoka. I visited the Rock Ridge Dairy there. The Rock Ridge Dairy milks over 300 dairy goats and produces some of the best goat milk yogurt and some of the best goat feta cheese you've ever tasted. Fantastic stuff. I was introduced to this through an initiative that was started a couple of years ago. It was a co-operative initiative between the department of agriculture and rural development and, at that time, the department of tourism, parks, and recreation, and Ag for Life and the Alberta Association of Agricultural Societies called Open Farm Days. I'd be really curious to know: how many members of this Legislature attended an Open Farm Days event this August? A few. Good.

This is an initiative, quite frankly, that I'm very, very proud of, and I think this is the kind of thing that promotes local food production. It promotes the skill and talent of our local chefs. It promotes an area of tourism that is going to be a burgeoning area, and that is culinary tourism. Tourists are different. Some like to go to museums, some like to go water skiing, some like to do other pursuits, but they all eat. Every last one of them eats. If you can add a culinary experience to their overall tourism, their tour and their time of holidaying in Alberta, I will tell you that that expands and adds to the experience, and that's through Open Farm Days.

Mr. Speaker, we've said nothing, for example, so far in this debate about the tremendous success of Alberta's small brewers. Craft breweries in Alberta are growing and burgeoning. This is an area of value-added for the producers of barley and hops in our area. I can tell you that all you have to do is talk once to the brewmaster of a small brewery here and listen to the pride in the product that they produce, and you'll know that this is an Alberta success story that we should all be proud of. So why do I tell you all this?

Mr. Eggen: To make us hungry.

Dr. Starke: That also is true, Mr. Minister, and especially thirsty.

Mr. Speaker, the reason I say all this is that all of this happened without specific government intervention from a local food act. Open Farm Days is a one-weekend initiative that is growing and flourishing and, I think, does a great deal to support and promote not just local food but the producers that make that food, that supports and promotes the diversity of the products, the wholeness of the products that we produce in the province of Alberta. But it does it without empowering the government to create regulations.

I'm particularly concerned about the regulations under section 8(c), "concerning any additional matter or thing that is necessary or advisable in connection with the implementation of this Act." That is unbelievably open ended. That places in the power of cabinet tremendous leeway – tremendous leeway – to do harm to our free-market economy and, indeed, the local producers that they're trying to help.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of trepidation about that. I would love to support local producers, and I will tell you that local food production is something that I am very passionate about. I will do anything to try and move it forward. If we can take this bill, for example, into committee and then amend it, because it needs amending, I am happy to support it in second reading because I am in favour of local food and 95 per cent of Albertans are. But this bill needs amending.

For example, section 8(a), "prescribing limitations respecting the designation of local food under section 1(b)(ii)." Well, Mr. Speaker, what if, just hypothetically, one of those limitations is whether the farm where the food is produced has unionized workers or not? If it is the ideology of cabinet that only local food produced off premises where the workers are unionized should be designated as local food, this bill gives cabinet the power to designate any local food produced on a non-unionized shop to not qualify as local food. Is that really what you want in this piece of legislation? Is that really what you want? I suggest that it is not and that that particular clause needs to be removed from this piece of legislation.

Setting up a committee, having committee reports published on a regular basis: I don't have a problem with that. But, you know, I question whether that's really going to achieve the objectives and purposes that are stated in here. Quite frankly, I think our producers can be relied upon to do that. Our producers are already doing that. Our producers are showing tremendous resilience, tremendous ingenuity, tremendous creativity in moving their products to market and seeking new partnerships with local restaurants, with local stores and that sort of thing to sell their products. I see that happening all the time. I see that happening with the producers that I get to work with. These people are my friends, and I know the kind of work that they do. If I were to ask them, "Do we need the Local Food Act?" I think they would look at me and say: "What would that do? Why would that be of benefit to me?"

You know, I really think that a lot of this stuff can go ahead without it, Mr. Speaker. I will be in favour of the bill, but it requires significant amendments.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I managed to forget whatever happened to my 4-H calf, but you reminded me, and a tear came to my eye again. I'm visualizing him playing in a big field with pigs.

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take this opportunity to speak in support of Bill 202, the Alberta Local Food Act. In the big picture this bill will enhance the development of a sustainable food system in Alberta and give local producers direct access to local markets while also giving Alberta consumers better access to locally grown food, as was already mentioned. This is something that both producers and consumers alike have been asking for for quite some time.

Of course, local farmers' markets are one of the most common ways to source locally grown food. On the other hand, we can also look towards the value-added supply chain as a benefit to complementary industries such as the food and beverage and tourism sectors, that were mentioned by the member opposite. These sectors will benefit from the greater awareness of locally produced food.

To illustrate this point, Mr. Speaker, I have heard from Alberta-based craft brewers and distillers who have indicated that the Alberta-grown grains that they use in the production of beer and spirits are among the best quality in the world. This creates an incredible, mutually beneficial opportunity for Alberta brewers and distillers to open up new markets to Alberta farmers to showcase the world-class grains produced right here at home.

Mr. Speaker, there is more to the value-added chain for locally produced food that we can explore. For instance, we also know that where there are beverages, there's also usually food. I know that in my constituency of Banff-Cochrane and across the province there are many culinary destinations that have gained a reputation for their high quality and commitment to customer satisfaction.

Mr. Speaker, imagine the potential for enhancing the dining experience if more of these restaurants were to serve a greater proportion of locally grown food complemented by locally sourced beer and spirits. Of course, this comes with an added benefit: an opportunity to enhance tourism right here in Alberta, which helps to move even further up the value-added chain.

Mr. Speaker, think of culinary destinations around the world that already set themselves apart by showcasing the use of local food and pairing that with local beer, wine, and spirits. Many jurisdictions here in Canada have already grown their tourism potential and diversified their economies with this simple formula. Take Prince Edward county in southern Ontario, for example, which has seen the rapid growth of wineries, restaurants, and overnight accommodation spaces over the last decade. And where there's wine, there's cheese, of course, made with locally sourced milk.

You see, Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 has the potential to promote and enhance not only local food production and agriculture but value-added sectors such as beer, spirits, and tourism. At this time, when Alberta is striving for a more diversified economy, Bill 202 will promote increased awareness and capacity for food grown right here at home and can help take us off the royalty revenue roller coaster.

I'd like to thank the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park for introducing Bill 202 and urge this Assembly to support this important piece of legislation to enhance local food security and sustainability and the economic diversification that it will usher in.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to be able to rise today to speak to a bill that does affect a large number of Albertans, a bill that's very important. Now that we've heard the story of Three Little Pigs – I thought the original story was about not building your house out of straw – I trust that we won't build a bill out of straw here that leads to the same kind of problems. While I totally, totally support the idea of locally grown food and support local industry – and I'm glad to hear all of the support for and the benefits of Alberta products. The food actually is better. I totally agree. I am a little bit baffled, though – and I suppose this is the most important thing I want to say – that consumers so often choose a cheaper product. It just happens all too often.

I come from a riding that actually does produce much of its own food, and although Lacombe-Ponoka is not in what I call the big smoke of Edmonton, it is, in fact, still part of Alberta. Indeed, Lacombe-Ponoka is an area that has some of the most rich and productive farmland in all of Alberta and provides a lot of the food actually sold here in the cities, where, unfortunately, we have too much concrete and pavement. Many of the groceries that you will in fact buy here in your stores do come from the producers and the greenhouses of rural Alberta, and I would really encourage you to notice where the vegetables you buy in the grocery stores are actually grown. If they're not grown in Alberta and this matters to you, then why would you buy them if they come from some other place?

The most powerful voice you have, even greater than legislation, is where you choose to spend your money, and I would say: please support the local producers, who would love that you would buy more of their products. We don't have to set up legislation to create this; we just need to be willing to buy them. While I'm inspired by the lofty thinking, I could save you a lot of work researching and consulting if urban people would just learn what rural people could teach them. I do think, quite frankly, that this is somewhat of an urban-rural challenge for us.

The reality is that, as has kind of been stated already, in recent years the local production of industrious farmers has increased a lot in Alberta; in fact, many multiple times over. It amazes me that industrious farmers have figured out how to grow vegetables year-round, through sunny summers and freezing winters, even in minus 40 degree temperatures, in greenhouses here in this province. The greenhouses have been growing immensely in number and in acreage that they're covering. These greenhouses are major economic contributors to our agri-economy. They supply a great deal of local Alberta food, and they do it in an economically sustainable manner.

My point is that rural Alberta is producing a lot of local food and, in fact, would willingly produce everything and more that urban city dwellers would actually buy. So the challenge here is not to research the production of local food but the buying habits and biases of city dwellers. The food could be made available if people would always choose to buy it. I guess I would say to a government of primarily urban MLAs that I really invite you – and I know that a couple of you have, but I would invite the rest of you to come out and actually tour the agriproduction that's going on in this province. There is a lot of it happening, and it is increasing; it is growing. So I add my voice to those who say: I don't see, quite frankly, how legislation is going to help it.

Rural Alberta would feed you if you were not so inclined to buy food that contradicts your values for local food consumption. The stores simply can't and won't sell what the buyer won't buy. The food is available. It's being grown in huge amounts. Some of it is even being exported. The farmers of Alberta actually have the answers to your urban questions, and I really hope that you will be consulting them in more than just a condescending kind of way. Such a conversation, I think, would really increase the needed conversation between urbanites and rural people and maybe resolve, actually, a lot of tensions in our province with regard to a lot of what happens in our different levels of government.

Here are some of the issues, though, that I know farmers, at least from my riding, would begin to raise. For instance, we've talked a couple of times – several of you have mentioned the importance of the brewing industry here in Alberta. Some of the best hops – not hops but . . .

An Hon. Member: Barley.

Mr. Orr: . . . barley. Thanks. A mental stop for a moment.

Some of the best barley production that happens in the world happens in central Alberta. In Alix there's a huge facility that was seeking to expand, and rather than being allowed to, they were prevented by Alberta sustainable development, I think it was. No. Oh, again I lost track of the word there.

An Hon. Member: Environment.

Mr. Orr: Environment. Thank you.

I think we need to solve some of these problems. There are opportunities. There are farmers willing to produce more. Rather than create legislation, we need to solve the problems. That would allow so much more to actually happen. And it can happen. If you mandate public bodies to buy locally – this would be another question – does it matter that those bodies pay more? Just because they're public bodies, can we blindly believe that it doesn't matter what they pay?

Further, farmers ask: since this is an act to study the issue and not to actually grow food – only one of those two can you actually eat – I wonder how much this nonedible product is going to cost. Has it been budgeted for? How will it be funded? By heavier taxes on those who actually produce food?

A reeve in my riding, a reeve of one of our rural counties, recently said, and I quote him, that the thing that has changed farming the most is the Internet. Farmers today know the price of world markets up to the millisecond. They know all the regulatory issues, the animal health treatment plants, the increasing values of farmland in different areas, the newest technologies, the cost of financing. The reality is that farming is a very complex, scientific, technological, economic world, and except for hobbyists, the days of going out into the dirt with a hoe are so far gone that it's almost laughable. I truly hope that as you prepare for this bill, you will take into account the complexity of these factors, because without doing so, the results will be much less than desirable.

Farm production also is not entirely in our control. We are part of an international community. We are members of trade agreements. Any research into farm production must also take into consideration the realities of our international trade agreements, or we will be embroiled in years of international legal challenges. These are some of the complexities that this bill raises.

Although I support the intent, I do think that there is a need for a significant number of amendments to it and would be willing to see that it go to second reading so that some of these amendments could be suggested. I trust that the members across the floor here would be willing to accept some of them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for allowing me to rise in support of Bill 202, the Alberta Local Food Act. The Alberta Local Food Act will allow our local producers to seek direct access to markets and our consumers to enjoy homegrown products. I know my constituents from Edmonton-Manning feel passionate about this issue and would like me to rise to address it.

There is a huge market opportunity for connecting local food producers with local consumers in Alberta. Currently many of our farmers are selling directly to Albertans at Edmonton's local farmers' markets as well as through self-directed home delivery programs. These programs have continued to grow as the increased demand for local foods continues to rise. As the cost of imported foods continues to rise, local food becomes a better fiscal alternative.

Edmonton-Manning is home to many urban farmers. Our farmers share their products, produce, and harvest with our neighbours, our suppliers, and our surrounding markets. These farmers not only grow potatoes, vegetables, and berries; they also provide community engagement and education through their amazing outreach work, such initiatives as the great potato giveaway, at which we saw kilometres of Edmontonians going and picking their own potatoes. They also have a community food garden, which provides an open-farming educational opportunity for our nonprofits and allows people to come out and support our local food banks, and, of course, Open Farm Days, where many were able to come out and pick local berries with their children.

Hence, Mr. Speaker, not only is this a rural conversation, but it's an urban conversation. We need to explore how the legislation in the Alberta food act will impact not only urban farmers but rural farmers. There's a potential for there to be a driving force in all local food economies by creating food security and improving and maximizing the return on local food and infrastructure in both rural and urban communities.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my absolute pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 202, the Local Food Act. I do have some serious concerns about the way this bill is currently being presented. The main concern, Mr. Speaker, is how it will affect Alberta families. The important question is this. If we are mandating that public bodies buy local, how will this affect farmers' markets and those families that already do buy local? The new demand placed on buying local will drive costs as large users – end-users, hospitals, seniors' homes – drive up demand. Will the small but growing section of organic and local produce start to disappear from our grocery stores as government entities buy it up, or will the option to buy local or organic simply become too expensive for the average family and be reserved only for those that can afford it?

While the breadth of product has never been as wide as it is today, we still need to rely on other products from other markets for the health and well-being of Albertans. I've never really seen a pineapple grow in this climate.

Mr. Speaker, this leads to another important question that this bill needs to answer, and that is whether this will affect the quality of care for our seniors. By forcing seniors' facilities to buy local, the cost of providing meals to seniors could increase. How would this bill be an advantage to Alberta seniors if we drive up their food costs and eat into their budgets?

What about school lunch programs? Already school boards struggle to pay for these programs. Will mandating where these organizations obtain their food impact the cost of delivering these important programs?

Mr. Speaker, the list goes on of the negative consequences this bill would bring to Albertans. I will end my time by talking about the group this bill intends to help. What is the evidence that any Alberta farmers are having any difficulty getting their products to market? Alberta's agrifood exports continue to grow, and local farmers' markets continue to thrive. It's entirely unclear what problem this bill is attempting to solve. There is already a vehicle developed for small producers, organic or otherwise, to sell and distribute their wares, and that is through the Alberta approved farmers' markets. It would be better to expand and improve the current farmers' market system rather than to create a new, competing system with a bloated bureaucracy that might put undue burden on limited tax dollars.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta does not need a 12-member advisory council to evaluate what foods can and should be grown locally. The free market has already done an excellent job ensuring we have a wide variety of healthy and locally grown food, and I've seen it start to get advertised right here in my local grocery store. It's fantastic.

I'm concerned that we need to ensure that all Albertans can make the choice to access this locally grown produce and not lose out when this government mandates that all locally grown food be distributed to its own facilities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise on this. I think that many members of the House but perhaps not all may know that I spent 25 years in the food business before I was elected. Unlike my colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster, who dealt with livestock while they were still walking and making noises, I dealt with them in the meat business after they were done walking, after they went to camp. As such, I have a strong feeling for agricultural producers in Alberta since I spent a good part of my life actually getting what they produce to market and, I believe, helping them get a fair price for it and bringing rewards back to the farms in Alberta, that continue to support our economy and did back then, short term and long term.

Let me also say that I want to compliment the basic idea behind the hon. member that brought the bill forward. I think it's a great idea to encourage Albertans to buy food locally. It is, full stop. I wish it was just that simple, Mr. Speaker. I know we heard an hon. member here, that obviously has some roots in the farming business, say: why wouldn't you buy local? I agree with that. The problem is that the bill talks about putting undetermined rules in place that may restrict some element of local food production. It's a place we have to be careful of.

Albertans are industrious people, so industrious that in every major area of the economy Albertans produce way more product than Albertans can consume. It's true in the energy industry, it's true in the tourism industry, it's true in the forestry industry, and it's most certainly true in the agricultural industry, in the food industry, Mr. Speaker. So we have to be careful. As well intentioned as the rules that somebody might put in might be to encourage people to buy locally, if we restrict products coming into Alberta, then there's a very good chance that someone else will restrict products going out of Alberta, and of course if that happens, then we choke off the tremendously valuable agriculture industry, that this province has depended upon since before we were a province. These are concerns of mine.

My colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster talked about some of the restrictions that may be put on producers, and while I agree with what my colleague said, I'm going to add another concern, Mr. Speaker, and that is on how much the legislation may open it up. Some decisions need to be made locally. I live in a city. In Alberta I know that there are some cities that allow, for example, chickens to be grown in the city. Myself, I think it's a bad idea. I do. A wise person once told me: "It took us a hundred years to get the livestock out of the city. Why would you let them back in?" It's not that we don't love livestock. You know, I have a confession to make: I'm addicted. Like many members of this House, I'm addicted to three meals a day, and those meals largely don't come from the city. They come from rural Alberta.

To the hon. member that talked about giving rural Alberta credit: I applaud that. He's bang on. I think that as part of this discussion it's worth a couple of minutes to just talk about that. When we go to some of the best restaurants – and I know my colleague talked about that – whatever you see that comes out on the plate generally speaking does not come from the city. Yeah, sure, there are some exceptions – I appreciate that – but it's an area where we need to appreciate one another. I think rural Alberta already appreciates the fact that their products get consumed in greater amounts where the population is bigger, and people in those bigger population centres actually need to have a genuine appreciation for those people that toil every day to prepare those foods at the beginning, whether it's livestock or whether it's crops of some sort.

But my concern, Mr. Speaker, with this legislation is indeed the rules that may be put into place. The devil, as they say, resides in the details. I think that at this point I will repeat, because I don't want anybody to get the wrong impression, that I applaud the member who brought this forward. Encouraging people to buy local is a great idea. It really is. Unfortunately, the words, the black-and-white words that Albertans will have to live with if this gets passed, leave it open that some of the rules may be counterproductive to Albertans' better interests and even counterproductive to perhaps the better interests of Albertans that produce food within 50 or a hundred miles of where people live. So as it is, I can't support the bill for that reason even though it's well intended.

Let me say this. As my hon. colleague suggested, if there was a motion to send it to committee to iron out some of these things, I think I could support that, but in its current form – and I mean no disrespect – not a chance. And not a chance because I'm afraid of hurting the very thing that I believe the bill is intended to help. The words don't, in my opinion, match up with the intention as well as they could, and they're left too wide open, in a way that could be negative instead of positive.

So there it is, Mr. Speaker. With the right amendments or a referral to committee I could support it, but in its current form, even though I agree that it's well intended, I'm unable to support it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of the Alberta Local Food Act and echo as well the sentiments that have been expressed here about the great farmers we have in Alberta and about the great produce that makes our foods very, very good. As we have heard, the objective of this bill is to promote a resilient and sustainable local food economy and agriculture land base in Alberta.

The issues addressed by the bill are important to the constituents of Calgary-Cross and, more specifically, to the community of Vista Heights, the home of the Vista Heights container food garden, where children are learning about agriculture and, hopefully, attracting the next generation of farmers from the urban centres. The community garden is a project that seeks to address the issues of lack of access to affordable and healthy food as well as limited growing space, that is a reality of an urban community. This bill is great because it will develop a local food and agriculture strategy, which is very important to my constituents as well as all Albertans. It will create a new market opportunity to connect local food producers with local consumers in Alberta, and I would ask my colleagues to support it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 202. Like many in the House, I commend the member for raising this important issue. You know, we've seen a number of things over the past 175 days or whatever it's been since the election on the 5th of May, and one thing that we've seen very little of from this government is a discussion, a conversation, a mere mention of the agriculture industry in Alberta. In fact, if we reflect back – and I know it's a while ago – to the throne speech, there wasn't even the word "agriculture" in the throne speech. I know the constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills were disappointed in that lack of acknowledgement of the importance of rural Alberta. In fact, the throne speech I think said "farmer" once but didn't address that significant, significant role that agriculture plays in our province.

I'm super pleased to see the private member today bring this bill to the House so that we can have a discussion, so that we can have a conversation around agriculture and its importance. One thing is very clear, that when it comes to our province's economy, it all begins in rural Alberta. Whether it's the ag industry or the energy industry, basically all of the things that power our economy begin in rural Alberta, and it is of utmost importance that we continue to have this discussion around the importance of agriculture.

I think another thing that we've seen today is a significant difference between the government side of the House and the opposition side of the House. We've seen many government members today rise on this private member's bill and express a desire to support Bill 202, and we've seen a number of folks on the opposition side rise today and express some significant concern, and at the heart of that concern in many respects is this chasm between the government and the opposition, where we see bills like this. While they may not be intended to provide expansion in the scope of government – government overreach, adding to the size of government, and, generally speaking, growing government and providing avenues for more government intervention into the economy – we see the government supporting a bill that really has the potential of doing that. We see many of the opposition members speaking about the strength of local producers, the strength of the free market, the strength of our agriculture industry, the strength of a government that's smaller, not larger.

It's interesting. Even when we're talking about the Alberta Local Food Act, this ideological divide between government members and opposition members can present itself. As you go through the bill, you can see so many potential risk factors and areas that really should provide pause. People on both sides of the House should look and say: what sort of doors, what sort of boxes are we opening that present serious risk and, particularly in a couple of cases, some really, really big, gaping holes? While I recognize that the intention is laudable and well meaning, the risks are way too great to support, particularly when we write into pieces of legislation – and I recognize that it's not the cabinet but that it is the Lieutenant Governor. I'll just briefly read from the bill, from the definitions. We have these catch-all statements like: "any other organization prescribed in the regulations." Well, we take out of the hands of the Assembly and put into the hands of the regulations this wide-sweeping power to then begin to add into or write into legislation. Even though it doesn't actually wind up in the bill and ends up in the regulations, this is some significant risk.

Another significant risk in the intention of the bill when it comes to definitions is that it speaks a lot about agricultural lands in the bill, but there's no definition of what agricultural lands mean in the definitions portion of the bill. So we have a significant risk or concern that we wind up getting bogged down around: well, is this agricultural land, or is it not?

I guess a couple of other questions really need to be asked. What exactly will another committee do or solve that's not already being done out there amongst the agricultural producers? We've seen so many times in previous governments and other forms of democracy where these well-intentioned committees wind up costing extreme amounts of money but never actually produce anything that's meaningful to the front-line producer.

As we continue through the bill, we ask the question: why do we need more government intervention? I guess the other real question that I have when it comes to this particular piece of legislation and certainly for the member is: what sort of discussion has actually taken place with producers? We have all sorts of committees right across the province, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to agricultural committees, whether it's hog producers' associations, beef producers, grazing lease folks, just all sorts of different committees who are already working diligently on issues of feeding not only the province but, in fact, our country. What sort of consultation has taken place? I think that we run the risk of passing a piece of legislation and then consulting after, and we've seen many of the detrimental effects of that in the past when we take this sort of government-knows-best approach.

I think some members from the third party have made a reasonable suggestion to send this to committee and allow expert testimony. I know it's something that we have spoken about a lot, the need to reform this Assembly and be able to utilize committees so that we can provide expert witnesses because not everyone – I know it's hard to believe – on that side of the House actually has all the answers, and not everyone on this side of the House actually has all the answers. But there are producers and experts out there that, if it was a committee, we would have that opportunity to receive information from and find out if this is, actually, really needed.

The other question that I'd like to know about – and some people have talked about it today – is a cost-benefit analysis. The cost that's going to be spent on the committee: is it, in fact, going to deliver any tangible results for Albertans? And not only just for Albertans but for producers of local food as well, because it's so critical that we don't get in the way of producers any more than is absolutely necessary. If the government can do one thing well, it should be to get out of the way of Albertans.

We see that every time the government expands their role, every time we see the government adding ministries like diversification and trade, we run this risk of providing more intervention. We run the risk of the government being in charge of picking winners and losers, the government providing more corporate welfare. While that may not be the discussion exactly around the Local Food Act, this divide between ideologies is so clear, where they want to expand the government and we want to shrink the government. The government ought to be doing what they can to get out of the way of local producers, not getting in the way. I love it when we talk about these ideological divides as well because it gets the government so excited about the ideas that the Official Opposition have to provide for them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'm honoured as a retired, well, semiretired, I guess, restaurant manager to kind of clarify a lot of the things that I saw with my experience in the market. As it comes to buying local, we have started seeing that huge trend of it becoming something that's very big. The one thing that I want to say that's a little bit unfortunate that I see, to clarify for the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, is that while there is food tourism that does exist, there's a surprising amount of it that does exist out of province. So what I think that this bill – and I'm happy to stand here and support this bill – really looks at encouraging is finding ways for a lot of these local restaurants to get access to the local products that they need. This will really help us diversify our tourism sector and really help a lot of these markets grow as well.

Some of the things that we see the biggest challenges in are a couple of things. One is from local suppliers not being able to fully grasp what the demand is for products. I had an opportunity recently to speak with a local brewer, several actual local brewers, and they outlined that there is an issue seeking out local hops in Alberta. The problem is that they have difficulties connecting with the farmers and letting them know that there is an existing demand for local hops. So a lot of hops for microbrews, unfortunately, come from out of province, where this could be ultimately a more profitable margin for some of the local farmers to seek out. Ultimately I see that this bill has a good way of encouraging growth within local farms and also local businesses as well.

Some of the other challenges that we see for smaller restaurants that are looking to diversify is that they are actually one of the biggest purchasers of local products. A lot of the larger chain restaurants use prepackaged, precooked foods, not all but some of them, which is buying outside of the province, buying products that are not manufactured here, locally. Now, the challenges that we see of these smaller restaurants is that because they are competing against larger players, they are having to buy local products, they are having to seek out the providers for them, and subsequently it's costing them a lot more than it would the larger businesses, and it's creating a difficulty for them to diversify and ultimately expand.

The biggest challenge that I saw as a local restaurant manager was the fact that these smaller players are having a lot of challenges getting access to the products, and some of the local farmers are having a challenge selling these products. Ultimately I think that we have an opportunity with this bill to bring it forward to a review panel that can identify some of these issues and then bring them forward and help us remedy these. We see a lot of successes out of other provinces. In Ontario, when it comes to some of their local farm products, you see tagging of this. As much as we see in this province that there's a huge amount of pride for things like Alberta beef, I would love to see that pride exist for Alberta potatoes or even Alberta greenhouse cucumbers, if you will. We've already seen some players embracing this concept. In Calgary the Calgary Co-op chain out there has really embraced the buy local model. Unfortunately, they are a large player, so they have the resources to do this, whereas the smaller players may not necessarily have those.

Mr. Speaker, just speaking in regard to this, I support this motion because I really believe it will help a lot of the smaller players excel and help us diversify this economy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank, too, the member for bringing this forward, for the opportunity for both sides of the House to discuss one of the most important things to us in such great length and to hear so many different viewpoints. Five thoughts have been running through my mind as I've been hearing the debate, and I would just like to briefly touch on those.

I'd like to tell you a little about the constituency that I'm very fortunate to represent, Cypress-Medicine Hat: about a hundred miles by a hundred miles, with ranches on one side of it often as big as a township. You say to the rancher, "How many cows does that section support on an annual basis?" and the answer is quite often: one, maybe two. You move west, and we have the irrigated land and the type of crops that the Member for Calgary-Shaw just talked about – because of irrigation we grow potatoes, we grow sugar beets, we grow beans, and we grow all kinds of alfalfa and wheat – turkey farms, all kinds of wheat farms, all kinds of strong, independent farmers.

Then I heard the word "greenhouses" used in this debate quite a bit. The town of Redcliff, with 6,500 people, right beside Medicine Hat in the constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat, has 160 acres under glass, that produces an amazing $40 million to $50 million a year. At the opposite ends of this production a lot of greenhouse operators, when they're busy working somewhere on their facilities or when they're just away, leave the front door open with a little cash box that says: "Help yourself to a tomato or a cucumber or whatever you want. Leave me two bucks or three bucks or whatever you think." It's an absolutely vibrant local community, a local economy.

On the other end the producers have set up Red Hat Co-operative, with probably 300 or 400 employees, that packages and provides food for the entire province, for Canada, and for the northwestern United States. Such a good business now, a big business now, where in the winter, when things are a bit slow or when production gets too good, they actually buy from California or Mexico and repackage. It's a strong, strong local business that has become almost an international business.

In three and a half years of being an MLA and asking many, many of these producers what they think government needs to do to support a strong local food economy, an agriculture land base, the answer is consistent, and it's: "Get out of the way. Stay out of the way." I think of the greenhouses going along great guns until the federal government changed the legislation on temporary farm workers. They are scrambling as to what the changes may mean.

I look at the Red Hat facility, that provides so much for the constituents of Cypress-Medicine Hat, for the recipients of tax dollars for Alberta. It's in the town limits of Redcliff. If it was a mile or even half a mile further away, totally different zoning rules would apply, totally different government rules would apply, and the temporary farm workers would be under agriculture, not under the work part, and the whole problem would go away. Colleagues, this is government regulation at its worst.

The second thing that I think about when I hear the debate, not so much in the last throne speech but certainly in the PC throne speeches before, the talk was always: "Let's do what we can to reduce interprovincial trade barriers. Let's reduce interprovincial trade barriers. Let's strengthen our trade with B.C., Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and the rest of Canada. Let's build trade like what's going on around the world so we can have more jobs, so we can have more value, so we can have more diversification with added value in food processing." This could be a huge step in the way of that. I absolutely believe and I absolutely hope that the one thing that your government does is go as far as you can to reduce interprovincial trade barriers so that there are more opportunities for all Canadians.

The third thing I thought of: let's look at a business that the government is not involved in, the food business. In Medicine Hat when I walk my dog at 10:30 at night, I see Safeway and Superstore and Co-op and Sobeys with trucks lined up and food being provided and the work going on all night. You go into the store the next day: all kinds of selection, all kinds of good prices, and on top of that we've got vibrant farmers' markets. We've got the greenhouses that I was talking about. We have a strong, vibrant business that works on its own, that has great prices, great selection, and provides great, great value for Albertans.

Let's look at a business that the government is involved in. Let's look at the opposite. Easily the number one concern, the number one complaint in my constituency office is Alberta Health Services. People call me that have just paid $27,000 to go to Kalispell or Great Falls, Montana – yeah, those two booming economic metropolises – to get their knees or hips done because we couldn't do them in Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, particularly about Cypress-Medicine Hat. However, the time limit for consideration of the business has concluded.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Child Care Facilities

502. Cortes-Vargas moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to consider the feasibility of including child care facilities in new government buildings where these facilities are in short supply and urge the federal government to do the same.

Cortes-Vargas: Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing me to rise again and speak about the need for child care facilities in our government buildings. It is my privilege to be here today to suggest the opportunity that our government buildings present in providing much-needed child care spaces. To provide some context, in March 2015 Alberta had just over 105,000 child care spaces, with approximately 86,000 enrolled. Provincial enrollment is at 82 per cent of space capacity, and I know that within my own rural constituency finding buildings with extra space to accommodate child care facilities is hard.

Large urban centres, in particular, are pressure points for child care spaces. In March 2015 Calgary enrolment was 95 per cent of the total space capacity, down slightly from March 2014, when enrolment was 98 per cent. By comparison, enrolment in the Edmonton region was 81 per cent of the total space capacity, closer to the provincial average of 82 per cent. In March 2015 there were just about 2,500 active child care programs, and approximately 50 per cent of those were for-profit programs, and 50 per cent were not for profit.

As of December 2014 825 child care programs, approximately 35 per cent, were located in schools and provided around 32,000 child care spaces. School spaces, however, are subject to the demands of educational needs; therefore, these programs must relocate if the school's need demands more space. This kind of disruption to programming creates uncertainty for many working parents that plan months in advance to co-ordinate their busy schedules. Preschools and out of school care programs linked to schools have several benefits. Preschools attract new children into school communities and provide an early learning opportunity for preschool children prior to entering kindergarten. Moreover, out of school care programs extend the hours of care for kindergarten and school-aged children for parents who are working or studying.

Mr. Speaker, access to child care space plays an important role in advancing women's equality by enabling more women to enter the paid workforce or pursue education. It is in this way that we can support both jobs and families in Alberta, by providing child care facilities. In the early 1990s the federal government helped establish workplace daycare centres in federal buildings across the country, providing full rent subsidies as long as 70 per cent of the spaces were used by parents working in the public service. One excellent local example of child care spaces is the Canada Place Child Care Society, which is a not-for-profit organization that operates a daycare program, giving priority to children of employees of the Canada Place federal building.

Currently, assistant deputy ministers of Human Services, Education, and Infrastructure have identified that further work is necessary to find workable solutions under the current legislation's framework, and longer term solutions may involve legislation changes to support government capital investments for child care programs in government buildings such as schools, civic centres, leisure centres, and museums. Mr. Speaker, we should not miss out on this opportunity to support Albertans' families through child care spaces in our government buildings.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, it's my pleasure to rise today as shadow minister for Human Services and the Status of Women. As a working mom I understand the pressures parents face when it comes to making child care choices for their families. I would like to thank the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, the luckiest member in this House, I might add, for putting forward this motion. I know this motion is an attempt to make child care more affordable and accessible for families, and this is an admirable goal, as most parents here would agree. The motion we are debating today urges the government to consider the feasibility of building child care spaces in new government buildings.

Let me start off by saying that I agree with the spirit of the motion. Meeting the need to access child care for working families is a very noble goal, but I do have some concerns about the way this motion is worded. Maybe the wording is too vague, but I can only assume that any potential outcomes from this initiative would either be aimed towards provincial employees as primary clients or moving in the direction of making the provincial government the primary supplier of child care services.

Let me be clear. We highly value the work of our public-sector officials. They keep our government running and help deliver the services that Albertans rely on, whether it's in education, health care, or transportation. They deserve, just like any other Albertan, to have the best child care choices available to them, that are best for their families. The question is really not whether public servants deserve quality access to child care but whether, given the extraordinary financial circumstances our province is facing, it is a good way to spend limited resources on improving child care support for all Albertans.

The way this motion reads, it certainly gives the impression to most Albertans in the private sector that they would have a limited ability to use these new mandated child care spaces. For the thousands of parents who work in the private sector or who are self-employed it's hard to imagine a scenario where they would benefit from this. Let's remember the pain that Albertans are feeling right now. In the energy sector alone there have been 40,000 jobs lost. In several companies there have been wage reductions and hours cut. Many parents are working without the piece of mind of knowing that they'll have a job at the end of the month.

However, it's hard for us to understand whether or not this proposed study would focus just on new buildings for MLAs and government-sector employees here in Edmonton or apply to new schools and health care facilities as well. Would it apply to seniors' homes or just buildings like the new federal building? How beneficial would it be? What would the cost be? How would these facilities operate? Would the new government allow for choice and private operators, or would it be strictly government run? Would private operators pay rent to help cover the costs of construction? Would there be changes to the programs that currently exist, and how much choice would this take away from families who want freedom in choosing the type of child care that works best for their families? Ultimately, this could create massive new spending increases while producing limited benefits for the majority of Alberta families.

If the province is going to spend valuable taxpayer resources studying ways of improving child care in Alberta, I believe that there are better ways to do it. The Wildrose wants to see government child care grants become more flexible in the type of child care they can be used for. The Wildrose wants to maintain a child care approach that prioritizes support for parents with the highest financial need. This means supporting parental choice in child care and ensuring the province has resources available to support these decisions. With Alberta's birth rate among the highest in the country, we need to make sure that every parent who needs access to support can receive it.

I tend to think our Premier had it right when she said in opposition, "We still at the end of the day in this province need a child care strategy that actually addresses the growing child care needs of Alberta's young families." This motion as it reads fails to achieve this goal. There would be no caps on potential costs, and it would leave tens of thousands of young Alberta families paying more in taxes to subsidize child care for MLAs and their government-sector counterparts.

For these reasons, while I applaud the member for the spirit of this motion, I cannot support it as it is written. There are just too many questions that can't be answered. I'm concerned the motion will mean the waste of valuable resources as we prepare for the province's largest deficit in provincial history. I want to look towards strategies that will benefit all families from Medicine Hat to Calgary to Edmonton to Airdrie to Grande Prairie and to Fort McMurray. At the end of the day this motion falls short in achieving that.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't going to stand up, but the Member for Airdrie has gotten me thinking about a couple of things, and I did want to speak now because I feel like I have to correct something that is just jarring me a little bit.

First of all, I want to say that I absolutely support this motion. Absolutely. I have to say that as a single mom with a child, who worked shift work for an entire 25-year broadcasting career, I really needed daycare. It was the first thing I thought about when I woke up in the morning; it was the last thing I thought about before I went to bed at night. Who's going to pick my daughter up in the morning? Is she going to be sick, and will I have to call in sick because of it? All of these stresses you have to face as a single mom.

When the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park brought this forward, sure, there are a lot of questions. Frankly, these are things that – you know, motions are motions. They're an opportunity for us to sit and discuss things that are very important, and for that I say kudos. I think this is a fantastic opportunity to discuss something that is badly needed. Moreover, I think where I would like to see this discussion go is where it helps people like me when I was working shift work, moms who work shift work.

As associate minister of family and community safety a little over a year ago I had an opportunity to go to Yellowknife for a first ministers' meeting on women's issues. One of the things the ministers around the table talked about was the need in every single province in this country for not only affordable child care but child care at times when women needed those child care spaces so they could take the kinds of jobs that were available mostly to men, especially when you look at areas like the trades and you look at oil and gas jobs, et cetera.

I would say this. I am fully supportive of this motion. I think it's a fantastic opportunity to discuss something. The details, to me, are there to be worked out in the discussion, and I think that that is really not the most important part of it right now. To me the important part is: how do we make it accessible for women so that they can access the kinds of jobs so they have that equality, the equality of pay, to look forward to as well?

So kudos to you, Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park. I would look forward to discussing this in our committees and hopefully moving forward with it somewhere. I applaud you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to raise a few questions and concerns about the motion brought forward by the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park. The motion says that all new government buildings should receive daycare facilities. Does this mean daycare for schools, daycare for hospitals, daycare in seniors' centres? Now, I understand that the motion says: where feasible. The question I have relates to the meaning of the word "feasible." Where do we draw the line to determine what is feasible?

As the Member for Airdrie said, we do support the spirit of this bill. Increasing child care spaces in the province is something that we need to study and we need to take a look at very seriously. It is a noble goal. It's something that as Wildrosers we support. We believe that it should be supported by the government and by all members in order to be able to help all Albertans, not just one sector.

I do believe that this motion is vaguely phrased. An evaluation of child care programs in Alberta may be a good thing, but this motion focuses on spaces only and ignores other aspects of provincial child care. Since the motion is for government buildings, the government would need to perform an evaluation of the need and plan for the space. It does say: child care in new government buildings. We know that in Alberta we need more spaces, but we also desperately need other new infrastructure. We just heard about the need for major changes to the Royal Alexandra hospital in Edmonton, as an example. The motion says: where feasible and where in short supply. But, again, who decides what that means?

Allowing Albertans to have access to child care through this motion is, again, as I said earlier, a noble goal. But there are many ways to allow people to have more access to child care; for example, lower taxes, which we promote. A strong economy benefits everyone, including families and low-income families. We need to take a look at the big picture as well as the single issues to make sure that we've got the right solution.

If they follow the public model, then they may be paying caretakers close to minimum wage. I spoke with a daycare facility in Grande Prairie just recently. They pay their employees $12 for minimum experience and $17 an hour for a full-time degree in that industry. Not only that, but with the increase to minimum wage a person with a degree may not want a job that only pays $2 an hour more than minimum wage. This daycare pays their graduate employees over 50 per cent more than minimum wage. The increase to minimum wage to $15, which we will see shortly, will hugely increase the cost of daycare. Those people with a degree are still going to want a 50 per cent increase over the minimum wage, which will be closer to $22.50 an hour.

Now, as a father of five children I'm concerned and interested when it comes to the options for child care in Alberta and look forward to future discussions in the House on this topic. I appreciate what the member is trying to achieve with this motion. I just believe that we need more details and a wider consideration of this issue at this time. One of the things that I believe is very important is to understand the consequences of other policies that this government is bringing forward – and I've talked about it a little bit – such as the $15 minimum wage.

We have 50 per cent of the child care spaces provided by public and 50 per cent provided by private. The question that I've received as I've talked to different people in this industry throughout Alberta is: where is this government wanting to take the child care industry? Is it going to be all public, or are they going to keep the ratio at 50-50? In my opinion, this is something that a lot of people need to have discussion on, and I hope that the government will take this and look seriously at the implications before driving forward with this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation and Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll just speak very, very briefly to this. I believe that members should support this motion. I think that it is actually very valuable.

It is not a comprehensive report or a comprehensive policy on child care. It merely says that when the government is opening new buildings, it should consider the feasibility of including child care. Now, somehow that has been transformed by our colleagues opposite in the Wildrose into a tremendous number of things that it doesn't say. It doesn't say that it has to be public child care or private child care or any kind of child care. It doesn't say that it's going to increase the deficit. It doesn't say that it's going to bring the end of civilization as we know it. It just says that we should consider the feasibility of including a child care centre when we build a new government building.

Now, it doesn't mean that that takes away from private child care. We believe that child care should be available on an affordable basis for all Albertans who are working. I as a father had a wonderful opportunity with our youngest son. My wife worked, and I worked. We had access to a city child care when he was very young, and we also used a private child care, and we were satisfied with both. But to read into it all of these things in order to create a pretext for voting against the motion – and that's all it is, Mr. Speaker – belies the Wildrose's claim that they actually support child care. I don't think they do. I think they are being a little bit disingenuous.

When the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner talks about the minimum wage adding to the costs of child care, he's simply underlining the low value which society places on child care workers. It's women's work, it's undervalued, and it's not needed: Mr. Speaker, that seems to be the implication that is being made here.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order has been noted.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to a point of order under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). The hon. minister knows it well. Language that

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner never, ever once in his comments implied, discussed, or said anything of the nature that child care work was women's work. In fact, I'm quite insulted. This language is clearly creating disorder in the House, and I think it would be wise for the member to withdraw his comment.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, I appear to have touched a nerve on the opposite side, and it's not unusual to create disorder on that side. In the event that I perhaps went too far in imputing that, I would apologize to the hon. member in the House for that comment.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. It was going so well that I thought we were going to get there before.

Please proceed. You were making another point.

Debate Continued

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Having said that, it does really speak to the fact that child care work is undervalued in our society, and the suggestion that it should be done for minimum wage is, I think, an unfortunate one. Our children are our most valuable assets, and they deserve to have very high-quality care and to have the people that provide that care properly compensated. That was the point I was trying to make.

The basic point that I'm trying to make is that it's a simple motion to say that we should review whether or not child care facilities are needed and warranted when we build new government buildings. I think the same thing applies and should apply across the board in the private sector as well. It's no reason to fear that this is the thin edge of a wedge of some sort of socialist master plan to enslave our children, Mr. Speaker.

I think we should support this motion. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hopefully, the words that I say aren't going to incite a riot or anything here. I don't think they will.

I rise today strongly in favour of this motion. You know, there are many parents in this room who can understand the difficulties in finding accessible and affordable child care. I live in Beaumont, but my constituency of Leduc-Beaumont was one of the seven fastest-growing in Canada for a number of years, and it's extremely hard to find child care. The opportunity to offer child care spaces in public buildings such as schools would be invaluable to a large number of Albertans, especially women looking to re-enter the workforce or further their education.

Preschool and out of school care linked to schools is incredibly helpful to many parents. I know this personally because having my youngest son in preschool at the same school as my older son was a godsend to us. My wife works shift work, and it's extremely hard to find child care for shift workers. We don't have any family here. Actually, truth be told, my brother-in-law lives in the city, but he's an urbanite and never comes out to Beaumont, so it's a little tough to get him out there. So having a shift worker in the family and myself working full-time was always very hard, but having the preschool in the school, the opportunity to work together and have out of school care after was fantastic for us and a lot of people that I know in my area.

I think that as has been said here, this motion is a positive step forward. It's a base for us to go from. We can have discussions about it. It's not talking about details or giving any, you know, specifics right now because we want to have this discussion. It's extremely important to have this discussion because Alberta is just a burgeoning province that people move to, and to have no child care spaces available is extremely difficult.

I'll keep mine short – the minister said his was brief, but mine will be sweet, I guess – and say that this is all because I think of what my wife had to go through working shift work a lot, and it was extremely difficult for us. I'm hopeful that this will make it a lot easier for a lot of Alberta families.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to Government Motion 502? Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much. Like my colleague from Calgary-North West, I was somewhat inspired by what many people had to say here. I was a shift worker for many years. In fact, I knew nothing different. So I can tell you on behalf of emergency services such as the police and fire and, I'm sure, my colleague here to my right from the EMS that affordable child care is something that I would be in favour of. I can tell you that there are many, many police officers that have had to put their careers on hold, male and female.

For those of you that do not know – and why would you? – I was a single father for a number of years. My significant other had died in a tragic car accident. Like many of my teammates that I worked with downtown, we were on our way to the tactical team, but I had to sit back and reflect: do I really need to make my daughter have no parents? I can tell you that child care was an issue for me back then. I'm very fortunate that I had my mother and other family members to rely upon, but I can tell you that not all Albertans have that.

I was kind of not sure what this motion was. I give kudos where kudos are due. The hon. Infrastructure minister, you know, really explained that this is just a motion to sit there and say: "Hey, you know what? It's just something that we want to consider for new buildings that are being created." I don't have an issue with that. If it's something that's going to spark further discussion and it's going to help, as I say, single parents or any young family or women that are trying to re-enter the workforce or even men trying to re-enter the workforce, then I would be, of course, in favour of that.

Thank you very much for your time.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to point out to the members opposite that one of the best examples of child care in a seniors' home is located in Strathmore-Brooks, where a seniors' home not only houses a child care facility and therefore provides a child care operator with good, permanent space at a reasonable rate, but it provides the children with the ability to interact with the older residents, and it's really been of mutual benefit. In the same riding there's a project going on where a child care facility is going to be located in a long-term care centre. I think it's really important for the members opposite to know that even in their own riding there are some very innovative projects that model what the motion is trying to do, and I really commend the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park for bringing this forward.

I recently had the owner of a private child care come to my office because the landlord had raised her rent about 300 times. This is one of the best operated child cares in my riding and is facing a lot of uncertain time. By providing child care in provincial and federal government buildings, we are going to ensure that child care operators, be they private or nonprofit, have access to secure rents so that they can continue to provide the kind of child care we need in our communities.

I really would urge everyone to support this motion.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to Government Motion 502?

Ms Luff: Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured today to rise to speak to Motion 502. I also am a mother. I have two children under the age of three, so this motion particularly speaks to me and particularly as an MLA from Calgary. Calgary is one of the fastest growing cities in Alberta, and in Calgary enrolment in daycare is often 95 per cent of space capacity. In talking to people in Calgary, space is hugely an issue. I have a friend who runs a day home. She has a master's in education degree. She arrived here from the Philippines. She's really making a go of it, but a huge barrier to her expanding her daycare, which is in huge demand, is lack of available space. What we're really talking about here is space and making space available. We're not talking about whether we're having public daycare or private daycare. We're just talking about looking at making more space available. I support that absolutely.

One type of opportunity I'm particularly interested in is the linking of child care centres to schools. Many of the schools that we're building are in these new communities that are growing. They have young families. These are communities that need daycare, and I can tell you that you really can't underestimate, as my colleagues have said, being able to drop all your children off at daycare and school in the same place. I have friends who drive across the city an hour – they add an hour of commute to their day every day – to drop their children off at a child care space that they feel comfortable with. To be able to have child care in your school so you can drop off all three of your children at the same place every day really can't be underestimated.

We actually have a really amazing example of school-based daycare, not quite in my riding. I believe it's in the hon. Minister of Finance's riding, but our ridings hug. It's a preschool program. It's at Jack James high school, and it's a really innovative program. It's unique. It provides quality, community-based preschool, and it also helps high school students study for a career in child care. It's a community-based preschool – anyone can go there – but it's also a training program. There are two qualified preschool teachers but also on any given day 10 to 16 grades 11 and 12 students who are practising to be child care providers. As a mom I can't imagine a better spot for my kids than somewhere where there are all of those people helping to create a positive educational experience. That's the kind of model that we could look at when we're thinking of school-based child care programs.

Really, I just feel that I wanted to speak to this bill because it really speaks to who we are as an NDP government. We're a government that's really striving to create a more equal society and one that celebrates parenting. Too often women, especially, get punished for having children because it means they're going to have to take time out of work, and the lack of child care spaces is a major issue.

An Hon. Member: Men, too.

Ms Luff: Yes, men too. My husband is a stay-at-home parent, so he's struggling right now. Absolutely men. I mean, that's a whole other subject. There are all sorts of things that we need to do to make it more okay for men to stay home and take care of children – oh, my goodness – but we won't get away on that.

Really, here I just feel that this motion speaks to our government. It speaks to what we want to do. We really want to make a more equal society, one that values children and honours them by providing spaces close to where their parents work. I think it's hugely important, and I really commend the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park for putting this forward. I know that when I was her age, I was certainly not thinking about child care issues. I'm so proud to be part of a government that's brought this forward.

I just wanted to say that I speak in support of this motion. I think we should all support this motion. More options for child care are always better.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you. And my apologies for not identifying you by the correct constituency.

It's been pointed out to me in my preface to the last point that it is a motion other than a government motion, Motion 502.

Are there any other members who would like to speak? I recognize Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to touch briefly on these mentions that were made about how fathers can stay at home as well, prior to my becoming an MLA, I was a stay-at-home dad. I was on parental leave with my baby daughter. As the father of three young children I stand here in support of this motion. There are a lot of things that worry me. The job market has changed. To kind of go on the theme that we've been seeing about the struggles that many of the parents who are in this Chamber have had, for my wife and I, prior to my having this position, one of the biggest struggles that we had was that in order for us to make ends meet, we both had to work. In many ways I had to hold myself back from a promotion, and it was simply from the fact that it would not have worked out well when we are transferring kids between each other. We would literally pack them up in the car, drive off to the next place, and pass them on. So I can really appreciate the challenges that many parents across this province have on the simple merits of child care as well.

Now, one of the biggest concerns that I have as the father of three young children is: what would happen if my wife or myself weren't around anymore? Where would my children go? Now, our government is working towards providing affordable, accessible, and good quality child care for all Albertans, but it is important to recognize that in this province space is at a premium. We are not asking to reinvent the wheel here. We are just asking for an assessment that would find some good alternatives for child care space.

We've already seen this with schools across the province converting classrooms, gymnasiums, and common spaces into noontime supervision space. We also have some schools that already have supervision programs in place, and it accounts for 35 per cent of the existing programs within this province as of this year. It seems quite wasteful to me to allow these spaces to go unused during certain parts of the day when they could normally be better suited to things like child care. As we continue to work towards economic recovery, many individuals in my riding are looking to go back to school and into university programs themselves, but one of the biggest concerns that they have is finding access to affordable child care and to child care currently.

Mr. Speaker, one of the biggest challenges that is occurring across areas like the city of Calgary is access to commercial space for the use of child care. As the Member for Calgary-East attested to, 95 per cent of child care spaces as of March of this year are at capacity, so there is very little room. It's not uncommon throughout this province to see government space that is unused, and many government buildings have already established this as well. At city hall in the city of Calgary we see child care space incorporated, and we also see it at the Canada Place federal building in Edmonton, as the member alluded to as well.

You know, at the end of the day, we're looking at something that can help individuals thrive, and this will help many individuals, from the father who's going back to school to the mother who's doing her apprenticeship to the single parent who's trying to keep a roof over their child's head as well. That is why, Mr. Speaker, and for the benefit of all families in this province I support this motion.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park has brought forth an interesting motion that would allow parents to bring their children to work if you work in the public sector, possibly. While the motion pertains to new government buildings, how does the member opposite define government buildings? In my estimation, very few new government buildings are needed, but publicly owned schools and hospitals are required. Would that also be in the definition of government buildings?

One of my concerns is also that once we start down the road of government involvement in starting to supply facilities for child care spaces, the natural extension of this is to go down the road of not only new buildings but retrofitting existing buildings. Where does the mandate stop? The mandate to include daycares in new government buildings is too broad for me. Is it for schools? Will this possibly delay the process of getting schools built? We are always behind on schools, and they are often at over capacity as soon as they are open. Forcing school boards to include daycares up front is not effective. On the other hand, allowing daycares to open up in schools with declining enrolment makes a lot of sense, and this is already happening across the province.

I appreciate that the member has said: where feasible. The question then becomes the element of feasibility. I heard from the Member for Sherwood Park the discussion about secure rent and that by allowing a facility to be available in government buildings, it allows the daycare operator to have secure rent without the fear of increasing rent. Is that the government's intention, to essentially provide subsidized spaces for the daycare operators?

I do believe that efforts to encourage more child care should help all families equally. The Wildrose wants to explore policies for child care that help to support families equally, and this means programs that help all Albertans. I'm a father of five and a grandfather of four. I love each child dearly. Government support for child care choices should and must be available to all families. It should respect their decisions, much like the federal government's universal child care benefit. A program such as the universal child care benefit provides child care support to all parents and gives them the choice as to how their children should be looked after. While I'm not advocating for the introduction of such a program at this time, it is this sentiment of inclusion, equality, fairness, and choice that the spirit of Motion 502 should adopt.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 5 my baby turned 39. This conversation was going on then. Like the hon. member across the floor, I was a single parent, and that was a pretty important discussion for me. I hate that we're still having this discussion. It is time to make something happen. I applaud the member for putting this motion forward, and I urge everybody to support it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to this motion? I will call upon the Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I'll be brief. It is, as was said, just a motion, but things that happen here sometimes have consequences down the road, so it's worthy of discussion. One of the things that's missing for me here is that it says: in new buildings. I think that probably the bigger opportunities for Albertans might be in old buildings. One of the members of the other party talked about that. There are many municipalities in Alberta that are short of schools, but there are other municipalities where the population is shrinking. There are inner-city communities where the population is shrinking. I think there could be opportunities to save the taxpayer some money, keep those inner-city schools open by taking a wing of the school that doesn't have classrooms full anymore and maybe look for other services that – actually, and respectfully, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't have to be a daycare. It could be any other publicly provided service.

At any rate, Mr. Speaker, I think it's worthy of discussion, hopefully at committee at some point where all these things – again, I think probably there are more opportunities in old buildings than new ones because presumably the government won't consider it feasible in a new government building where you're storing sand for the highways. I'm just making the assumption that the government's going to get that one right. I will say this with a warning, that we and particularly the government will be judged on the decisions they do make where they consider it feasible, and I caution them to get it right. But I will say that I think it's worthy of discussion.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we had a very lengthy discussion about the pros and cons to the extent that this can go, but I think it is important to highlight, once again, that it is a consideration of feasibility of new government buildings. I think it has been explained multiple times that we are looking for alternative ways to have more child care space available to Albertans. It has been explained, through multiple experiences from the members of this Assembly, that it is needed.

So I urge you to support this motion and to continue the conversation that was started today. Thank you.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, October 27, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us reflect. As we contemplate the matters before us here today, it will be important that we appreciate the impact of our decisions on Albertans from all walks of life, from the most fortunate to the most vulnerable. Let us not allow the sometimes dramatic events of this place to overshadow the importance of our first responsibility, public service and the public good.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to introduce a fine constituent of Calgary-Lougheed, the former MLA for Calgary-Glenmore Linda Johnson. Linda has always worked very hard on behalf of her community in myriad realms, including literacy, and I expect that she always will. But Linda also has her hobbies, and she's pleased to advise this House that in recent months her golf game indeed has greatly improved. Linda is a proud, staunch supporter of the PC Party of Alberta and is looking forward to today's session as well as eagerly anticipating the province's ongoing commitment to the southwest Calgary ring road. At this time I would ask Linda to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you, of course, and through you to all members of this House two individuals. First of all, Mr. Nusrat Akhtar. Mr. Akhtar is a successful entrepreneur who is dedicated to community involvement in Edmonton. Mr. Akhtar is seated in the members' gallery.

I would also like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a former colleague of mine, Mr. Sohail Quadri. Mr. Quadri served as MLA for Edmonton-Mill Woods from 2012 to 2015 and was Alberta's first MLA of Pakistani origin. Mr. Quadri is a local small-business owner, with deep roots in Edmonton. Mr. Quadri is seated in the Speaker's gallery.

I would ask both individuals to stand up and receive the traditional warm welcome from this Assembly. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to hon. members of this Assembly a man that I'm proud to call a friend. Steve Young, the former MLA for Edmonton-Riverview, served as our whip, served as an honourable Edmonton police officer. He is a dear friend, works hard in the community, and he is an even greater dad and husband. I'd like him to rise and have the House welcome him warmly, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you Mr. Trent Johnsen, who is a leader in Alberta's technology industry. Mr. Johnsen, if you could stand up and please accept the warm greeting of the Legislature.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly social studies teachers Pawel Romanowski and Don Segberg and his wife, Jessica. I'm not sure if they're in the House. They're here from St. John Paul II Catholic high school. JP II along with other Elk Island Catholic schools in Fort Saskatchewan brought their community together this summer with the refugee on the roof campaign, putting their principal on the roof of their high school for 24 hours. Instead of raising their goal of $9,000 to bring a refugee family from Myanmar to live in the Fort, they raised $16,000. They exemplify the spirit of community that is in everything Fort Saskatchewan does. Please join me in extending to them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two guests. Val Cudmore is the executive director of the Candora Society in Abbotsfield. The Candora Society has been operating in Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for over 25 years. Their mandate is people helping people make a difference, and Val has made a huge difference in the lives of many families in our constituency.

Deanna Fuhlendorf is the executive director of the Fort Road and Area Business Association. Her dedication to Fort Road is inspiring. She has been instrumental in the revitalization of the area, championing projects that celebrate the entrepreneurial spirit in Edmonton.

I would ask both of my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Natasha Semeniuk and Emily Bonnell. Natasha is my constituency assistant. She graduated with a social work diploma from Grant MacEwan University and proceeded to complete her bachelor of social work degree at the University of Calgary. Prior to becoming my constituency assistant, Natasha was a child protection caseworker with Human Services. She's doing an amazing job in my constituency office, helping many Edmonton-Riverview citizens get the services they need. With her today is Emily Bonnell. She's a student from the University of Calgary in the social work program, and she's carrying out her field placement in my office. She'll be with us till December 2015, and we are so pleased to have her. I'd ask them both to stand and ask the members here to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, today I am especially pleased to introduce you to my wife, Megan, and my mother-in-law, Heather Forbes. Ladies, I thank you. Would you please rise and receive the traditional welcome from this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the House a group of outstanding leaders, who are here today to represent their schools and student unions and who advocate for fellow peers and work so very hard. I'd ask that you will all remain seated until I've introduced everyone. Seated in the members' gallery, representing the Alberta Students' Executive Council, we have chair Kristen George, VP external for the Grande Prairie Regional College Students' Association; Cameron Dykstra, advocacy co-ordinator; Teresa Currie, executive director.

Seated in the public gallery, representing the Council of Alberta University Students, we have Dylan Hanwell, vice-president external for the University of Alberta Students' Union; Danika McConnell, CAUS member and Students' Association of MacEwan University VP external; and Levi Nilson, CAUS member and president of the University of Calgary Students' Union. We would also like to recognize Brittany Pitruniak, CAUS vice-chair and president of the Students' Association of MacEwan University, who was not able to make it to the introductions but will be coming later for the budget.

Seated also in the public gallery are my sister and brother-in-law, Clive and Dorothy Switzer. They're both from Wainwright. Dorothy works with the Canadian Forces special operations, Wainwright Garrison, and Clive is a front-line caseworker for Falcon Enterprises.

Last but not least, I'd like to introduce my beautiful wife, Eileen. Thank you to Eileen for all her hard work in putting up with all these things that she's had to get me elected and all the stuff that's gone on during the election and now. Thank you.

I would like to ask you all to rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm privileged today to have three guests. I would like to introduce to you and through you Shawnalee Shwetz and Julie Krahulec from the Anne Chorney public library in Waskatenau as well as Reeve Doris Splane from the county of Athabasca. Would you rise and receive the customary warm welcome of the House.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, I am so pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly two guests seated in the gallery. The first is Mayor Chris Spearman, a truly engaged mayor, whom I am honoured to work with on many, many issues in our city and in my constituency. When one is in the bleachers at a ball game or in the audience at the Yates for a concert, Chris is the person who will speak up and provide a little history and make you feel that you're part of that history. Chris has been an advocate for change throughout his time in Lethbridge and spent a number of years as a school board trustee before being elected as the mayor two years ago. I have found him to be collaborative and forward-thinking and always – always – to have the best interests of the city at the forefront of everything that he does.

My second guest, Randy Smith, is the executive director at Nord-Bridge Seniors Centre. He has been in that role since 1998. He has been a driving force behind the redevelopment of the original Chinook Mall into this very modern and up-to-date activity centre for seniors and seniors' programs, located in north Lethbridge. Under his guidance and an elected volunteer board the centre has grown from 300 to 1,800-plus members today, and I am very happy to say that I'm a member. I can also attest to the achievement of the centre's goal to be the friendly centre, all thanks to the guidance and hard work provided by Randy and his team.

I would ask both Mayor Spearman and Mr. Smith to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two important guests, Tracy McKinnon and Iris Kirschner. Tracy is the board chair of the Fort McMurray Catholic school district and has been a trustee since 2010. Iris is a past chairperson for the Health Advisory Council as well as a member of the Seniors Resource Committee in Wood Buffalo. She's also a senior adviser for the Golden Years Society. They're here today to listen to question period and to listen to the budget speech later today. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The newest member of our Legislature, Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, it's a privilege to introduce to you and through you a couple of fine Albertans. I'm very thankful to have had their help to get me here. Robert Such and his family are third-generation elk farmers, and they have freely given so much of their time and effort to the Wildrose Party over the years and to me personally. I'm so glad to see Robert's young son Riaan here as well to watch these proceedings today in the House. His life in politics has started at a young age. He was already the youngest volunteer on my campaign. I ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed. I think you have a second guest.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour for me to introduce today an incredibly inspirational Albertan, Shelley Wegner. Shelley has displayed invaluable commitment to our province with her long-time dedication working with Alberta's First Nations and Métis communities. She's also participated in the development of the northern Alberta development strategies. But there's much more. Shelley's service to the community includes volunteer work with the Edmonton Police Service, Kids with Cancer, Nina Haggerty, and iHuman, and there's a much longer list. But for today I ask her to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you three fine, outstanding citizens from the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. They come to us today in the form of Mayor Lance Colby of my hometown of Carstairs and the CEO of that same fair locale, Carl McDonnell.

Also joining us today is the vice-president of advancement of Olds College, Jordan Cleland, a gentleman who needs little introduction to the Assembly as he spent a lot of time running around the halls of this place a number of years ago.

If these three fine folks would rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and pleasure to introduce to you and through you today a friend, Mr. Len Wolstenholme, senior adviser, external relations, for the Calgary Zoo, one of Alberta's most visited tourism attractions, now featuring, of course, the rather spectacular IlluminAsia until November 1. I'm also honoured to have called the Wolstenholme family friends since 1967, when I met their family in Lagos, Nigeria. It's a great pleasure for me to introduce you to them today. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you another very good friend, the founder of Matrix Labour Leasing, Shannon Warren. Shannon is very involved in the community, and every dollar that he makes in his business, he shares with those less fortunate. He is a proud Albertan, and I'm proud to call him a friend. I'd like him to rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other guests that you wish to introduce? Proceed.

Mrs. Littlewood: It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to this House Mayor Myron Hayduk and Councillor Taneen Rudyk of Vegreville. I would invite them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Are there any other guests to be introduced?

On behalf of the entire Assembly, welcome to all of the guests that are here today. I know I speak for all sides of the House that they really appreciate the people who are here.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Alberta Health Services Performance Measures

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, just last week Alberta Health Services released its performance report for the first quarter of the year, in October. It's clear why AHS is dragging its feet. Of the 17 performance measures given, AHS has achieved its target in just four. Four. AHS has missed on ER wait times, patient satisfaction, and access to cancer treatment. To the Health minister: how much longer are we going to tolerate waste, inefficiency, and poor performance from this organization?

The Speaker: The hon. Health minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. What the member doesn't point out is the fact that AHS saw growth in every single one of those categories, and I think that that is something to be commended, right? The other thing I want to point out is the fact that the member opposite's party is proposing to cut significant money from front-line services, which obviously would not . . .*

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Speaker: The point of order is noted.

Mr. Barnes: AHS underperformance is nothing new, Mr. Speaker. In fact, members of our current government in the past had plenty of perfectly valid criticisms about its inefficiency, lack of accountability, and chronic poor performance. When AHS does not meet its targets, it's allowed to lower its standards. We went from 52 performance standards to just 17. Again to the Health minister: we all know about the mistakes of the past, but will this government right now commit to restoring complete, transparent, and extensive quarterly reports for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The report is public. It's on the website. That's how the member heard about it. What I want to point out as well is that on the 17 pillars that are there and that we're being benchmarked against – the point is to make progress, and I think that members opposite might want to create some chaos by cutting budgets and by pretending that they can blame certain individuals within the system. What we need to do is provide stability. That's what Albertans voted for, and that's what I'm proud to deliver.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, among the many targets gutted from previous Alberta Health Services public reports are surgical wait times, including hips, knees, and cataracts; the number of seniors waiting for continuing care; staff morale; and department costs. Given how badly AHS was failing, it's no wonder they'd rather not talk about it. Does the minister agree that these standards are crucial for the accountability, transparency, and oversight of our health care system and that Albertans deserve to know?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I will take his recommendation that we expand the number of key pillars moving forward into consideration. What this government is committed to is making sure that we fulfill the commitments that we made in the election. I know that might be a surprise to some members opposite who think that we actually shouldn't be fulfilling our promises from the campaign, but this government is committed to doing that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Linear Property Assessment and Taxation

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the spring session I had asked the then Municipal Affairs minister about municipal funding, which received no clear response. Subsequently, at the AUMA convention this August, when given the opportunity to clarify the government's position, that same Municipal Affairs minister would not commit to maintaining the current linear taxation formula that is critical for rural municipalities. To the new Minister of Economic Development and Trade: will you stand today in the House as the voice of economic reason and commit to maintaining the current formula on linear taxation?

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the question. As the new Minister of Municipal Affairs I think it most appropriate that I take this question. We are absolutely committed to supporting rural Alberta families with the services that they count on, and as our province grows, it is important to recognize that our communities transcend municipal boundaries. This is a complex question, and I'm really looking forward to discussing it with local municipal leaders as we examine whether the current assessment structure is working for rural Albertans.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, we need clarity here. Recently at a central Alberta AAMD and C zone meeting attended by local municipalities, the agriculture minister was asked about linear taxation. He said that while he is the voice of agriculture in rural communities, he could not commit to maintaining the current linear taxation formula and also would not speak against the Premier on this subject. To the ag minister: now that you've had the opportunity to consult with the Premier, are you now able to commit to being the voice of agriculture and rural communities and stand against changes to linear taxation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, on the subject of linear taxation I'm happy to speak again. Having strong services in rural areas means having municipal taxation systems that work across entire regions. Once again, I am looking forward to discussions with our municipal leaders such as AAMD and C to talk about the current assessment structure and to figure out what will work best for the families in rural Alberta.

Mr. Stier: Okay. Well coached, Minister. Let's try this again, then, okay? To the new Minister of Municipal Affairs. With this past level of uncertainty that this government has been demonstrating with these vague comments and innuendo, rural municipalities deserve to know once and for all whether this government plans on changing the linear taxation formula. Will you commit to keeping our rural communities strong and sustainable and to maintaining the current formula in its current form? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I absolutely will commit to supporting rural Alberta families to have the services that they need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Lake Aeration

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Conservation Association has suspended aeration on numerous lakes across the province this winter based on two legal opinions the organization obtained concerning liability. Concerns relate to section 263 of the Criminal Code and the potential risk of an individual being injured or killed by falling through the thin ice by the aeration. Aeration provides a crucial boost to oxygen levels to ensure the survival of fish through the winter. To the Minister of Environment and Parks: is the minister aware of this time-sensitive issue, and what is the government's plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Our department is most certainly aware of this issue. We are examining it, and we will provide an update to the House when we can in the coming weeks.

Thank you.

Mr. Loewen: Again to the minister. I'm sure that this government shares my concern that there is a real possibility that many of our fisheries across Alberta may collapse without this much-needed aeration. Will the minister recognize the immense strain the Alberta Conservation Association is under and lobby the federal government to change the wording of section 263 to allow the due diligence defence and remove the liability threat to the Alberta Conservation Association?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Of course, the Alberta Conservation Association is a delegated administrative authority of the Department of Environment and Parks. We're aware of the challenges right now with respect to the federal government. Of course, we await our federal counterparts, and we will update this House once we have had those fulsome discussions with them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, we simply cannot afford to take a gamble with our fisheries. Albertans will be significantly impacted by a serious loss of fish without aeration on the many lakes this winter. There is still time to find a working solution both for this winter and for the long-term. Will the minister and her colleagues work with the opposition and the Alberta Conservation Association to find an appropriate and immediate solution to protect these fragile lakes?

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the supplemental question. Yes, of course, the province of Alberta is working with a delegated administrative authority of the department on the strength of our fisheries throughout the province, and we will be working with the federal government and working with our own department on the health of fisheries going forward. One of the reasons why we protected the Castle earlier this fall was exactly this, the protection of fisheries in our sensitive headwaters.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Oil Sands Development

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's no denying that Alberta is facing some difficult economic times. In fact, for 2015 already we've seen more than 35,000 people laid off in this province related to the energy sector. Investors want to hear that we're a stable place to invest in. They are not hearing that right now from our government. To the Premier. When earlier this fall you insinuated that your government did not see the value in a long-term development of the oil sands, you risked damage to one of Alberta's strongest industries. Can the Premier tell us what the strategy is going forward: leave it in the ground or get it to market? Albertans want to know.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not really sure what the member is referring to because I've certainly never stated such a thing. In fact, earlier this fall what I have been doing is meeting with investors across the continent to talk about the fact that that's exactly what we want them to know about Alberta, that we are very committed to continuing to be a stable place to invest in terms of our infrastructure as well as our public services as well as our plan to balance. All of those things in concert with the industry, whom we are working with every day on a number of different files, mean that this will continue to be a good place for everybody to invest.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, yet during the recent federal campaign this government's federal NDP brothers and sisters suggested that oil sands oil may have to stay in the ground. When they said this, not a word of dispute was said by this government, who, in fact, campaigned for those same brothers and sisters against Alberta's energy sector. Again to the Premier: do you share this belief, or as you see our major oil and gas players put large transaction after large transaction on hold, will you back away from these beliefs and act to protect Alberta jobs?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, with the greatest of respect to the member opposite, I would think twice about attributing things that their federal cousins had said or done to people. Particularly, those more progressive members of that caucus probably don't want to be wearing that particular sign for very long.

That being said, let me make very clear that this government is committed to working as partners with our oil and gas industry to ensure that it is able to recover from the struggles that it's going through right now because of the international drop in the price of oil, and we've been working with them on a number of different files.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On a recent trip to China the Energy minister stated that Alberta needs a pipeline built right now and that they were looking at whatever gets us there the quickest. A great sentiment, but getting our oil to market requires boots to the ground. Industry still sees a government and Premier apologizing for our oil sands. To the Premier: when are you going to change the dial and start selling Alberta and its industries the way we desperately need you to now?

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I think that one of the things, one of the key things, that has impeded the ability of industry from this province to get a pipeline across is that former government, that caucus's record on the environment and their failure – their failure – to take real action so that investors and leaders in other jurisdictions understand that you can develop our oil sands responsibly and in line with larger economic concerns that all people are concerned about. That's what we're going to do because that's how we're going to get our product to market.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Corporate Tax Collection

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The issue of taxes took up much of the summer sitting as we watched this far-left government and the far-right opposition play out their ideological battle over taxes: more taxes, no taxes. Albertans are willing to pay taxes. They expect our system to be fair and their tax dollars to benefit all of Alberta. However, for the second year in a row the Auditor General has found that the government has failed to collect hundreds of millions of dollars in corporate taxes. To the Premier: how can you plan new revenue measures when you cannot collect the taxes already owed to Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, I think that the fact of the matter is that this issue was fully canvassed, again, in the election last spring. Albertans were asked: should those profitable corporations that are making a good profit contribute just a little bit more, when things get tough, from the profits that they make? Albertans said: yes, they should. They also said the same thing of wealthy Albertans, many of whom, themselves, were quite willing to step up and pay a little bit more because they had done so well. So that is the kind of fairness that we brought into play and that we will continue to bring into play.

In terms of recovering uncollected taxes, we are working on those measures and will have more to say . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Well, given that Alberta is one of only two provinces that administer their own collection of corporate taxes and given that in other provinces the Canada Revenue Agency would have simply given Albertans the funds we are owed and used their experts to go after the corporations, will the Premier ensure that Albertans get their share, avoid the administrative cost of corporate tax collection, and return the administration to the CRA?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will acknowledge that in the absence of my Finance minister I'm not as briefed on this issue. I know that we are looking at that issue, but I also know that we have been given advice that for a number of other reasons we could actually suffer a loss in revenue if we went to that model. So we're exploring it right now, we're giving it due consideration because it's a good point, and once we have a fulsome understanding of what's best for Albertans, that is what we will do.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that Alberta is an outlier in this area. We don't need an Alberta-made solution; there is one already.

The Auditor General found that the government "does not have comprehensive policies and processes to ensure corporations file their returns or to issue a default assessment." Given that returning the administration of our corporate taxes safeguards Alberta's finances and saves on costs, will the Premier commit in this House that she will work to return the administration of corporate tax collection to the CRA? If not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We take very seriously the recommendations and the advice that is given by the Auditor General because he typically knows what he's talking about, so what I can commit to on behalf of the Minister of Finance is that we are looking at how we can best improve our success at collecting corporate taxes. When we find the best way forward, that is what we will do. We don't want to prejudge one solution; we want the best solution. So we're looking for that answer, and we will provide direction on how we're going forward shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Support for Agriculture

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year was especially hard for Alberta farmers and producers. In July of this year in my beautiful riding of Leduc-Beaumont a state of agricultural disaster was declared in Leduc county due to the incredibly low soil moisture rating and crop conditions. This was not an isolated case, and throughout the province we saw states of agricultural disaster declared. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry. What has the government done to help farmers out in this tough year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our government is committed to supporting jobs that support families, and that's especially true when it comes to farming. This has been a challenging year for farmers. Through the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation's insurance programs we have paid out over $297 million in direct support to farmers who have had a tough season. We have also identified some targeted, common-sense measures like making better use of Crown lands for grazing and cutting fees to use our emergency water pumping program in half. We're continuing to monitor the situation to ensure that farmers are getting the support they need when they need it.

2:10

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the challenges with drought this summer and the importance of farmers receiving support as quickly as possible during these difficult times, can the minister provide any information on how much time it took for producers to receive support from the government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the most wonderful question. We know how important it is to provide support to farmers when they need it. That's why during the height of this summer's challenges AFSC reassigned administrative staff to go out in the field and conduct inspections. This meant that even with the high number of claims this summer, we were able to respond to farmers very quickly. As of August 21, which is the busiest time for claims, we were conducting field inspections on average 12 days after the claim was filed and approving those requests within another six days after inspection. Although it was taking less than three weeks from the time the farmer called us with their claim . . .

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the especially difficult year so far what is the minister doing to help and support Alberta's agriculture sector in the coming year?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, once again thank you to the Member for Leduc-Beaumont for his questions as well as his commitment to his rural constituents. We're doing a number of things to support agriculture and rural economic development, including identifying opportunities for greater value-added activity in agriculture, going to bat for farmers by fighting country of origin labelling, and fighting to create and access new markets for Alberta's forest products and agriculture output. Our priority is always standing up for hard-working Alberta families by supporting good jobs, and that's why we'll be working hard to provide farmers with the tools and the support they need to succeed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Job Creation

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgaryans are worried about the economy. The energy sector alone has lost 40,000 jobs this year. The total cost of NDP policies is nearly $800 million on the industry, and this doesn't include the uncertainty that the current royalty review is bringing to the workers hoping to hold onto their jobs every day. To the new minister of economic development: why does the government insist on continuing to hurt Calgaryans while we are down?

Mr. Speaker, since this is my first-ever question, I'm hoping you'll help me get a straight answer, please.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm sure every member of this House would agree that I will make my best efforts to serve you.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the hon. member for his first question in the House. It's my pleasure to rise and respond to it. Albertans elected this government to make sure that our energy industry benefits all Albertans. We especially understand and recognize that the low international price for oil has hurt and continues to hurt Alberta families, which is why our Premier has taken the initiative to create this new ministry that's going to focus on working with our industry and business sector to enhance and improve the Alberta economy through the creation of jobs.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, the people of Calgary-Foothills sent a message loud and clear. They want their leaders to fight for their jobs. Given that the Premier and the Finance minister have already talked about the possibility of raising taxes even more, how does anyone in the government believe that less money in the pockets of Albertans will help create new jobs?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, you know what? I'm quite excited to be appointed lead of this new ministry, and I encourage the member to listen to the budget today when the Finance minister tables it. There are quite a few initiatives that our government is going to be embarking on in order to not only support our existing sectors like energy but looking at enhancing other sectors through diversification and value-added.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, people in my riding have already lost their jobs, are seeing their wages cut. This is about keeping Alberta competitive so the people of my riding will stop having to bear the brunt of the NDP's poor economic policies. Will the minister commit to making sure no extra taxes, regulations, or added costs will be put on Alberta's energy industry?

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find it a little rich coming from the party opposite, who would prefer to cut further by cutting front-line services . . .

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

Mr. Bilous: . . . whether that's through health care or through education. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, our government is committed toward working with job creators to enhance various sectors in our economy. We want to ensure that Albertans, first of all, have access to high-quality services but that we're also encouraging improving our economy and diversification through this ministry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past summer the new government rushed through a decision to increase the minimum wage in Alberta. By 2018 the government plans to increase the minimum wage by approximately 50 per cent, which will get us to the magical number of $15 an hour. To the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour: given that to absorb the minimum wage increase without affecting their customers, many members of the restaurant industry are considering moving to a no-tip policy, how does increasing minimum wage to $15 per hour, minus taxes but eliminating tips, help restaurant staff?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. When we put forward our platform, we wanted to make sure that workers in Alberta made fair wages so that when they went home to their families, they could support them and care for them, and that's what we've done. We've raised the minimum wage less than 10 per cent this year, and now people have more money in their pockets, that goes back into local businesses, and that's actually stimulating our economy.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the minimum wage increase may end up affecting in negative ways those it's intended to assist such as being displaced by automated machines, which will eliminate 6,000 jobs in McDonald's across Alberta alone, will you halt your government's ill-conceived wage plan and review the real business evidence that is before you?

Thank you.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We've already met with many stakeholders in this area back in June, and we absolutely want to work with industry when we move forward on that. We will be looking, certainly, at indicators like the youth unemployment rate, labour stats. We're absolutely going to be doing this in a planful way, evidence based.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. I thought you might answer a question similar to that.

Mr. Speaker, given that stakeholders across this province, including Restaurants Canada, the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, are saying that this plan is a bad idea – and I will table their submissions this afternoon – will this government slow down, listen to the stakeholders? Minister, are all of these experts wrong, or are you?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the member for the question. All those stakeholders that he identified: we've met with every one of them, and we've met with many more. I want you to know that some are saying not to raise it; others are saying to go to $15 right now. Our government has chosen a moderate path forward by only increasing it one dollar this year.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

2:20 Landowner Property Rights

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 36 continues to be an infringement on property rights, giving the government complete control over lease agreements and landowner rights. This is a new government, and Albertans are hoping for the best. Will the Premier commit to repealing all of the offensive sections of Bill 36, that tramples over the rights of all Albertans?

Mr. Mason: Thank you for the question, hon. member. Certainly, when our party was in opposition and before the Wildrose Party had seats in the Legislature, we led the fight on behalf of the rights of property owners in this province against the draconian legislation of the previous government, for which we received great accolades from your former leader, who then was one of their – anyway, I want to assure the hon. member that we are committed to . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Cooper: Well, all that being equal, then, Mr. Speaker, they will know that centralized planning hasn't worked in eastern Europe, and it won't work here. If the Premier doesn't repeal these sections of bills 24 and 36, which now give this NDP cabinet complete control of land use in the province, limit the rights to compensation for landowners, and block access to courts for citizens, does she actually expect landowners to be satisfied with no action, just like the no answer in the last question?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that question, hon. member. I want to assure the hon. member opposite that our party has always believed in due process, in proper notification, rights of appeal. All of the fundamental rights of property owners are things that we support, and we're going to make sure that in the fullness of time those continue to be protected.

Mr. Cooper: Well, that is good news, Mr. Speaker, but I want to be very clear and allow the minister the opportunity to reiterate his position from 2010, when he stated: you shouldn't have your land impacted by a government decision without the right to challenge it. Now, we've all been elected for over 170 days, sir, and this side of the House is looking for action. Does that statement that the minister made still stand, or will this be another NDP flip-flop and another NDP broken promise?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I don't even know what to say to that. I'll remind the hon. member that this legislation was introduced and passed by the previous government over the objections of our party, and I'm quite sure that you'll find that we'll continue to stand up for the rights of landowners in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Energy Industry Layoffs

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sad to report that many people in my riding of Bonnyville-Cold Lake have lost their jobs. As those in the Chamber are aware, jobs in the energy sector are down 15 per cent since last September. This hits home for me as many of my constituents in the riding make a living in this industry. Here in our province 40,000 have lost their jobs in this last year alone. To the minister of jobs: is there a plan to aid the people affected by these mass layoffs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Believe me, our sympathies do go out to all of those, in both the energy sector and other sectors, who have been affected by this economic downturn. I can tell you that this is exactly the reason why the Premier has chosen to create this new ministry at this point in time, which industry and business have been asking for for many, many years, that they get a one-stop shop where they can work with government as a partner working with industry in order to create more jobs. I can assure the hon. member that that is a priority of mine, of the Premier, and of this government, and we will do just that.

Mr. Cyr: We hear all the time from the government about protection of the front-line workers, but we've heard no specific plan to protect the hard-working families in my riding and across the province who work in the energy sector. These workers may not be politically important to this government, but I know and my colleagues know that they are critical to the vitality of this province. What will the government do to assure Albertans once again that Alberta is the best place to live in this country?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, this government cares about every single Albertan no matter what sector they are in: public sector, private sector. Every job is important to our government, which is why we are partnering with the different sectors, including working with energy. We're going to continue to work with the energy sector and look at diversifying our economy, so looking at ways that our government can partner with the private sector to create more jobs, to look for value-added jobs to improve the chain, and, of course, looking for markets to increase our exports to.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. We need jobs now, not value-added later.

To the same minister: will the minister take responsibility for the spike of unemployment plaguing the province and look for meaningful solutions to stop the bleeding in our economy?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I think it needs to be clarified that the Alberta NDP isn't responsible for the price of oil internationally. This is where it's unfortunate that Alberta is a price taker, not a price maker, which is, again, why we will do what we can to work with the different sectors across the province to diversify the economy. There are initiatives and a plan already in place. I ask the hon. member and his colleagues to be patient for the budget, that the Finance minister will table, which speaks to this directly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Aboriginal Relations

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has recently staged a number of photo ops in an attempt to build the perception that her government is working towards building a positive relationship with all indigenous peoples in Alberta. Another attempt was made on October 14, when the Premier held another photo op, this time to announce the Premier's Advisory Committee on the Economy. To the Premier: given that this committee is indeed to focus on diversification, sustainability, and resiliency of the Alberta economy, why did you not appoint any members of Alberta's aboriginal communities to this particular advisory committee?

Ms Notley: I want to thank the member for that question, and he certainly raises a very, very good point. A lot of the reason is because we were doing two things at the same time. We'd begun some very substantive consultation processes with indigenous leaders and First Nations leaders across the province while at the same time focusing on our plan to do economic diversification, stimulation, and job creation. But it's absolutely true that once we've had a chance to meet a bit more with First Nations leaders, there should be a role for them on that committee, and I'm taking it under advisement because it's a very good point.

Mr. Rodney: To the Premier again: given that you've publicly stated your support for the Truth and Reconciliation Commission report and the UN charter on the rights of indigenous peoples and given that all advisory committees that will provide influential advice to your government have fulsome representation, I thank you in advance for correcting the oversight on this committee. But I'm wondering: in the future on a go-forward basis will you appoint at least one of the many talented aboriginal leaders to other committees?

Ms Notley: Well, indeed, Mr. Speaker, that's again a very good point. One of the things we did once we were talking about the implementation of the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples was that I asked our minister of aboriginal affairs, this minister right here, to work with every other ministry to figure out where we can engage more effectively and substantively with indigenous leaders across the province. So that will be happening. The recently announced health board by the Ministry of Health has also allowed for additional appointments from First Nations, and we will continue to do that.

Mr. Rodney: Given that I asked the Premier and the minister in charge this question in the spring session – you know, we have seen the photo ops, the questionable progress. I ask again: what specific timelines will your government commit to for evaluating and implementing the TRC report recommendations, and what specific mechanisms and benchmarks will you make available for all Albertans to hold the government accountable for implementing the recommendations? If the answer is, as we've heard, next year, how could it possibly take that long, and should we expect no tangible action in the meantime?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can start by saying that it won't take 44 years. It is correct that my ministers have been tasked to report back to the minister of aboriginal affairs in the new year, in January, to talk about what we need to do to go forward on both the TRC recommendations as well as UNDRIP. At the same time meetings have begun, led by the minister of aboriginal affairs, with the representatives from all of the treaties and other indigenous representatives to talk about how they want to . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Child Care Supports

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Approximately 70 per cent of Alberta parents with children under the age of six work outside the home. For many Alberta families child care providers play a critical role in their young children's lives. Research has shown that children thrive in healthy, safe, and caring environments, and early childhood development improves their opportunity for success. The problem is that quality child care can often be hard to come by in rural areas due to a lack of child care facilities close to people's homes in these areas. My question today is for the Minister of Human Services. Can the minister explain if there are plans to improve access to approved day homes in . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for your question on this important issue. We know that it's particularly difficult for families in rural areas to find quality child care. Our government made a commitment during the election that we will work towards more accessible, affordable, and quality child care, and that's what we plan to do. We intend to keep this promise as well.

Mr. Piquette: Mr. Speaker, given that affordability is one of the biggest barriers when it comes to accessing child care, again to the Minister of Human Services: does the minister have any plans for improving the affordability of child care?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you again for the important question. Mr. Speaker, our government ran on a commitment to help make child care more affordable as resources permit. For too many Alberta families child care is not affordable, and if they can't find child care, they can't go back to work, and they can't go back to studies. We will be investing in quality child care, as resources permit, to make it affordable for all Albertans.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister, for the answer. One more question to the Minister of Human Services: given that access to child care is so limited, especially in rural constituencies like my home one of Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, how does your ministry plan to increase the number of spaces and improve families' access to child care across Alberta?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Member, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, our government is committed to achieving better access to child care for all Albertans, and that certainly means that we need to create more spaces. But I was very disappointed and shocked to see opposition members vote against Motion 502, which essentially was asking the government to look into the feasibility of creating more spaces in government buildings. That motion was voted against by the opposition. I want to assure Albertans that we will be looking at . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Municipal Tax Collection

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A resident of Smoky Lake county called me recently with a serious concern about his taxation assessment for this year. He found a new tax category had been added, that he along with other residents of Smoky Lake county must pay, called uncollected tax. Apparently, this levy is to cover taxes that are not collected from other people and businesses that do not or cannot pay their taxes. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: is this a common practice in other municipalities, or is this something specific to Smoky Lake?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. It certainly is an interesting premise. I am actually not familiar with that issue at this point. As you know, I am new to the ministry, less than a week. I'm not up to speed with a hundred per cent of the files that we have, so it wouldn't be responsible for me to comment right now. However, I really do look forward to meeting with you and hearing more details about that so that we can try to identify a solution.

Thank you so much.

Mr. Hanson: Again to the Minister of Municipal Affairs – and I realize you are new. This situation may set a disturbing precedent across the province as municipalities are forced to find new ways of meeting revenue shortfalls. Will the government consider helping municipalities collect outstanding taxes instead of standing by while they are forced to raise taxes on already overtaxed Alberta families?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I previously said, I'm not necessarily up to speed on that particular issue. However, overall our government is absolutely committed to supporting municipal governments in being able to provide what they need to the people of their communities and to those rural families. Absolutely, on these issues we are quite committed to talking to municipal leaders, and we'll be happy to talk to them about any concerns or questions that they may have.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you. Unfortunately, this is a three-part question.

In our current economic climate many companies are going out of business, and this situation has the potential to get much worse, especially with our current government. Does this government have a plan to ensure that residential taxpayers won't be on the hook for these uncollected taxes from bankrupted businesses?

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the member who asked the question: absolutely, Alberta is altogether struggling with the fact that oil has gone down, and together we will come up with our own Alberta-made solution to work together – provinces, municipalities, and all the people of Alberta – to find a solution so that we can together move forward.

Resource Industry Policies

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, we all know about the economic downturn in Alberta and, in fact, across the country. Falling oil prices and thousands of job losses have made it especially hard in Alberta, so there's even a greater urgency to ensure that we diversify our economy, ensure that our partnerships will serve Albertans and their interests. This summer the environment minister made an announcement to terminate forestry contracts and other industry operations in the Castle area. These agreements have a direct impact on Alberta families. To the environment minister: how much will these contract terminations cost Alberta families, and will you outline it in the budget?

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I am pleased to update the House on our activities in the Castle area. After 40 years of clear-cutting our government made a commitment to protect the Castle area. That's exactly what we are doing. We are doing it to protect the headwaters for the drinking water in my city and all through the South Saskatchewan River basin. This was a historic first step for Alberta, and I am proud of what we were able to accomplish.

Mr. Fraser: Alberta has a stable plan to phase out coal-fired generation facilities by 2030. Under the former PC government we shut down one plant in 2011 and planned to shut down two more by 2019. In fact, the Keephills 3 plant burns as clean as gas. To the same minister. You've been hinting and creating uncertainty with our industry partners by wanting to phase out coal-fired generation plants at an even faster rate. Again, how much will this cost Alberta families, and will you have it in your budget?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I am so pleased to finally rise in this House and discuss climate change seeing as none of the opposition have wanted to discuss that topic so far. We made a commitment to phase out coal-fired electricity. We will honour our commitment to Albertans. We are working with industry on this matter. This is why we appointed our panel of experts to examine the matter and report back to us with their best advice. Our approach will be measured. It will take into account the communities and the companies that will be affected. I note that the previous government had no plan for what would happen once those coal-fired units were to shut down.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Might I remind the minister that Alberta is a leader in environmental policies, particularly our industry? We're the only people that pay tonnage on CO₂.

To the Premier: given that we have partners already invested in greener energy not just in Alberta but across the country and given that the industry has put up to $14 billion to meet the requirements of the 2030 phase-out, why are you not promoting our industry partners and what they do well but, rather, calling their investments and hard work embarrassing? Shouldn't you be promoting Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we will be receiving the climate change panel's advice on electricity generation very soon. We have been very clear with Albertans on this matter. Albertans have asked us to ensure that we have more renewables on the grid, that we are greening our economy while we do it. We are ensuring a just transition for those communities who might be affected by this. We are taking very careful steps, and we will receive the climate change panel's advice very soon.

Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Orange Shirt Day

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. September 30 is Orange Shirt Day. As we are gathered today on Treaty 6 territory, it is important for us to acknowledge the history of First Nations and the government's relationship with them. That is what Orange Shirt Day is intended to do.

Now in its third year, Orange Shirt Day began when one woman shared her experience in a residential school. Her shiny orange shirt was taken away from her and with it her identity. I need not remind this Assembly of the atrocities committed at these schools or the poor conditions many indigenous people face today. Orange Shirt Day is a day to come together against bullying and racism. Most importantly, it is a day for First Nations, local government, schools, and communities to come together in the spirit of reconciliation and hope for future generations.

On that note, I am honoured to serve with our government as we work toward following the recommendations from the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples as well as the federal Truth and Reconciliation Commission. This will not be an easy task, nor will it be a short one. We have also added our voice in calling on the federal government to investigate the epidemic of missing and murdered indigenous women. I take pride in the fact that our government is working to grow the relationship with Alberta's First Nations.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mental Health Services for Postsecondary Students

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to discuss the importance and continued need for mental health funding for our postsecondary students in Alberta. It has come to my attention that there is a huge discrepancy in what individual students receive for mental health funding. The funds received are solely dependent upon the institution which the students attend.

According to one of the student representatives, students that attend SAIT receive $3.91 per student in funding for mental health initiatives while students attending the University of Lethbridge receive $146.94 per student. Why should funding for mental health for one group of students be more important than for another group of students? I brought this matter up with the Minister of Advanced Education in a meeting we held earlier this month, and I'm hoping that the minister will take my advice to heart and balance out this obvious discrepancy.

The current mental health framework used to support students at all postsecondary institutions was mandated for three years and is coming to an end in 2016. I hope that this government will agree that it is of the utmost importance that students have a venue where they can turn for help, support in a safe and inclusive environment.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that changes need to be made to the current mental health framework in order to provide fair, equal services to all postsecondary students across the province. It is my hope that all members of this Chamber will work together to come up with a fair and equitable framework for all students.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Energy Policies

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, the city of Lloydminster offers a unique perspective of how government decisions can promote or hinder economic process. For years we watched as the Alberta side prospered while the Saskatchewan side lagged behind. But since May the tables have turned. Businesses that service the heavy oil industry drive the Lloydminster economy. Earlier this year falling oil prices were forcing difficult decisions: layoffs, decreased work schedules, and cancelled contracts. What has been discouraging is how those decisions are being made. Businesses that once did 60 per cent of their business on the Alberta side and 40 per cent in Saskatchewan have now shifted to a ratio that is now 90-10 in favour of Saskatchewan. When I ask why, I'm told: "Uncertainty. We don't know what this government is going to do next to hurt us, but we're sure it won't be good. At least in Saskatchewan we know the rules, we know the rules aren't changing, and we know the government actually wants us there to do business."

Now, last time I checked, the world oil price is the same in Saskatchewan as it is in Alberta. Governments can't change the oil price, but their policy decisions can certainly make challenging economic situations much worse, and Lloydminster proves that.

Alberta is not a test lab, and Albertans did not consent to be the guinea pigs in this government's reckless experiments and socialist fiscal intervention. These theories have been tried elsewhere and have always failed. Many Albertans came here to escape the chaos caused by NDP regimes in other provinces, and now they're wondering if they should move back. Capital investment is drying up as investors look elsewhere to find jurisdictions offering the certainty and consistency that used to be Alberta's hallmark. The economic advantage built by past governments working with Albertans instead of against them is being dismantled by this government at a breathtaking pace.

Nearly every day I am asked: How much damage can they do in four years? Well, Mr. Speaker, we're about to find out.

Team Lethbridge

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to be here today to share with you some important information about a very special entity in Lethbridge. I will start by saying that I love Lethbridge, my city, and I hope that you will love it, too. We have a wonderful, forward-thinking people who want you to know and grow with Lethbridge. Some of these people got together and formed a coalition representing 18 different organizations in our city and called themselves Team Lethbridge.

Team Lethbridge collaborates to offer support to the government of Alberta in building solutions for the future and in showcasing how our city can contribute to provincial priorities. Proactively they communicate with government decision-makers. The city and the province can benefit through these interactions. Team Lethbridge includes groups like the Allied Arts Council, the school boards,

Economic Development Lethbridge, the university, the college, city council, family services, and so on.

On the evening of November 25 here in Edmonton all MLAs are invited to a party, a meet and greet hosted by Team Lethbridge. You will learn about the many strengths and opportunities, including a diversified economy, rich arts and cultural heritage, strong public-sector leadership, and industry strength. The team will highlight the progressive work being done and undertaken in our city, express appreciation for the province's commitments in Lethbridge, and offer our support in building solutions for the future.

I hope I have piqued your interest and that you will accept the invitation that you will receive within the next week. Go Team Lethbridge.

The Speaker: The Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

2:50 Anne Chorney Public Library Renovation

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As MLA Payne mentioned yesterday, October is library month. This gives me a great opportunity to recognize the hard work done by . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I believe it's not in order that you identified a name rather than a member. I'd appreciate you referring to the constituency rather than the name.

Mr. Piquette: Oh, jeez. Okay. This was even vetted, Mr. Speaker. All right.

As the Member for Calgary-Acadia mentioned yesterday, October is national library month. This gives me a great opportunity to recognize the hard work done by two very special community activists, who I'm hoping will be coming back into the gallery here: Shawnalee Shwetz and Julie Krahulec. These two remarkable women spearheaded the efforts to relocate and revitalize the Anne Chorney public library in beautiful Waskatenau. They secured funds, organized community efforts, and found a new home for their library.

The Anne Chorney public library first opened in 1973 and was housed in a classroom in the local school. After a year with its books in storage the library reopened in a one-room schoolhouse that hadn't been in operation for 15 years. This presented both an opportunity and a challenge for the library. The library had found its new home, but after being vacant for 15 years, that schoolhouse needed a lot of work. It speaks to the power of volunteers and community spirit that the renovations needed to house the library were performed by the four members of the library board with the help of local volunteers. As a matter of fact, this afternoon they informed me that they also used their own money to be able to finish this library.

I would like to recognize the importance of libraries across the province but especially in rural areas, where they serve as community hubs and, in cases like the Anne Chorney public library, are also projects where communities can come together. Not only do libraries serve to increase literacy and education, but they also allow for more well-rounded individuals and communities. Librarians and volunteers, your efforts are greatly appreciated.

The Speaker: The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Official Opposition

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As late as yesterday our colleagues from across the floor said that Wildrose couldn't be trusted to get it right. I couldn't disagree with that more. Wildrose was given the strong mandate to serve as the Official Opposition in this House, with 22 MLAs from every corner of this province. We value that mandate. They sent us here to focus on the economy, jobs, and restoring the Alberta advantage. Albertans' trust is based on the principles Wildrose stands for: a smaller, more efficient bureaucracy, less government, lower waste, lower taxes, and reasonable policies.

Mr. Speaker, while our political system is an adversarial one, Albertans trust us to work together to take up common-sense suggestions and alternatives from the opposition. We are here to help the government help Albertans. We are here to represent the people that elected us. I hope this government will listen and work alongside us to cut inefficiencies, protect their pocketbooks, all without sacrificing front-line staff. We want a business-friendly Alberta that encourages investment and ensures sustainability of core government services for decades to come.

Trust is something that is earned. Alberta voters placed that trust amongst their most important values. Albertans trust us to make things better for them as a whole. While across party lines we come from different points of view, we do share a common desire to serve. All members are entrusted by those that elected us. Let us strive not to mock those who entrusted us to this Chamber.

Presenting Petitions

Ms McPherson: Mr. Speaker, as chair of the Standing Committee on Private Bills I request leave to present the following petitions, that have been received for private bills under Standing Order 98(2).

One, the petition of Dr. Melanie Humphreys, president of the King's University, and Mr. Bill Diepeveen, chair of the board of governors of the King's University, for the King's University College Amendment Act, 2015.

Two, the petition of Pastor Ron Steinbrenner, president of Bethesda Bible College, for the Bethesda Bible College Amendment Act, 2015.

Three, the petition of Kunal Nand, solicitor for Rosary Hall, Edmonton, for the Rosary Hall, Edmonton Repeal Act.

Four, the petition of Mark Haynal, president of the Canadian University College, for the Canadian University College Amendment Act, 2015.

Five, the petition of Geoffrey Hope, solicitor for Concordia University College of Alberta, for the Concordia University College of Alberta Amendment Act, 2015.

Six, the petition of Audra Reinhardt, member of the board of directors of Covenant Bible College, for the Covenant Bible College Amendment Act, 2015.

Finally, seven, the petition of Pastor Paul Reich, president of the Living Faith Bible College, for the Living Faith Bible College Amendment Act, 2015.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Bill 4

An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 4, an Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to this Assembly.

There are two components to the bill. The first component repeals the Fiscal Management Act and creates a new set of fiscal rules better suited to these challenging economic times while maintaining our commitment to keep debt under control and to present the government's finances in a clear format. This bill will set legislated definitions for government's reporting on the province's fiscal and financial position and prospects. The bill will also amend the personal and corporate income taxes and implement the technical and administrative changes that clarify our tax statutes, correct technical errors in the legislation, repeal expired provisions, and standardize administrative policies across Alberta's tax statutes. More details will be available when I present Budget 2015.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a first time]

Mr. Mason: I don't imagine we have very much more business to complete in the Routine, and I would seek unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 7(7) in order to complete the rest of the Routine with the exception of any points of order, which I assume could be dealt with tomorrow.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: We do not have a unanimous vote.

We will now move to points of order. This was raised in response to Mr. Cooper's point of order that the Wildrose was proposing. I would call upon the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to speak to the matter.

Point of Order Allegations Against a Member

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to the point of order that happened in question period at approximately 2:07 or something like that. I'm rising today and quoting from the Standing Orders in section 23(h) and (i): "makes allegations against another Member" or imputes false motives against another member.

Mr. Speaker, what we have been seeing over the last couple of days is a deterioration in the House when it comes to decorum. [interjections] While the government might think it's funny, they play a very important role in the decorum in this House, sir. What we see is the Minister of Health, in this case . . .

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, citation please.

Mr. Cooper: I already gave it, sir. You should pay attention. It's 23(h), "makes allegations against another Member."

We're getting to the fact that the government has chosen to play very fast and loose with the truth. They make some accusations about our party and our caucus. Today we saw them say that the Wildrose would cut front-line workers, which is at best fast and loose with the truth. Some would say that that was a lie. I wouldn't say that, sir, because it would be wildly inappropriate, but some would say that that was a lie. I would go as far as to say that they're playing with words that do not accurately reflect what is the truth. The Wildrose campaigned at length, and not a single proposal that we campaigned on, went around this province on, ever suggested that we would touch front-line services, sir.

So we have a government that is making accusations in this House. No worker under our plan would have been fired. In fact, we campaigned extensively on the things that we would do to support front-line workers, which is the exact opposite. And some would say that they are making allegations that we would do something that we wouldn't, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I very much regret that the Wildrose caucus has decided that they are going to play out this little point of order to defend their reputation, in their own minds, instead of getting on with the important business of the day, which is the budget speech, which the entire province is waiting to hear. I would think that the hon. members opposite ought to be ready, be wanting to hear it as well. Instead, we are playing games.

Now, I would suggest to you that it is the opinion of many on this side of the House and among the general public that a proposal to cut $2 billion from the provincial budget in one year will result in significant job losses, including losses of front-line workers. That is our view, Mr. Speaker. In any event, it comes down to a disagreement between members over the facts, and that is not a point of order. For us to suggest that that party and that caucus have certain policies is not the same as a member. No one suggested that an individual member otherwise had false or unavowed motives. We can certainly suggest that about the Wildrose Party and not be in contravention of the rules of this House.

So I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is absolutely no point of order here. It is merely an opportunity for the Wildrose to try and delay the budget speech.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As reluctant as I am to be accused of delaying the budget speech, I do want to weigh into this debate because it is in some ways a continuation of a debate that occurred during the last Legislature, and it caused us a great deal of loss of time. Consistently we had situations where statements were made by ministers answering questions that in some way offended the Official Opposition, and they immediately leapt to their feet and, you know, went to points of order. In some cases we had three, four, five points of order after every single question period, and this chewed up a lot of time.

Mr. Speaker, the rulings on this by Speaker Zwozdesky were very clear, and they follow House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, on page 510, which states:

The Speaker . . . is not responsible for the quality or content of replies to questions. In most instances, when a point of order or a question of privilege has been raised in regard to a response to an oral question, the Speaker has ruled that the matter is a disagreement among Members over the facts surrounding the issue. As such, these matters are more a question of debate and do not constitute a breach of the rules or of privilege.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a point of order. In question period there will always be disagreements in the case of the facts that are being stated, and there will be disagreements in the positions between various parties. I know that the members of the Official Opposition are particularly aggrieved by the very suggestion that was made by the ministers of the government, but the fact of the matter is that this is not a point of order. This is a disagreement of the facts, and therefore this should be ruled out of order.

The Speaker: Members of the Legislature, from the arguments I've heard, it would be my ruling that there is no point of order on this matter.

In order to allow adequate time to prepare for the budget process by the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance this afternoon, the House is recessed until 3:15.

[The Assembly adjourned from 3:06 p.m. to 3:15 p.m.]

The Speaker: Members, please take your seats.

Orders of the Day Transmittal of Estimates

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I have received certain messages from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Rise in the gallery.

The Speaker: The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the offices of the Legislative Assembly for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2016, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

The Lieutenant Governor transmits the estimates of certain sums required by the government for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2016, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the 2015-16 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates as well as the 2015-16 government estimates. Further, I also wish to table the Budget 2015-18 strategic plan and the Budget 2015 ministry business plans.

Government Motions

Mr. Ceci: I now wish to table the government's Budget 2015 fiscal plan. Mr. Speaker, earlier today I introduced Bill 4, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, which will set legislative definitions for government reporting on the province's fiscal and financial positions and prospects. The form and contents of the government's fiscal plan anticipate this new legislation.

Budget Address

13. Mr. Ceci moved:
Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, let me begin by thanking the thousands of Albertans who have spoken to me about their priorities and ideas for this first budget presented by Alberta's new government, led by Alberta's new Premier. The values of the people of Alberta came through loud and clear during our consultations. We're a hopeful and optimistic people. We're entrepreneurial and enterprising. We're community minded. We care about our neighbours. What we desire for ourselves, we wish for all. That is the Alberta way, and those are the values that drive this budget.

This government is working towards a vision of a province that is more prosperous and whose prosperity is much more widely and fairly shared. We're working towards a vision of a province with Canada's healthiest and best educated people, and we're working towards a vision of a province that is the world's most environmentally progressive energy producer, a sustainable, diversified engine of the Canadian economy that all Canadians will be proud to support as well as to benefit from, as we've all done for many years.

Mr. Speaker, this summer Albertans told us they want their families' health care and education to be protected while ensuring that every public dollar is well spent and that the rate of growth in budgets is brought under control. Albertans told us that they want to see a plan to return to balanced budgets. Albertans know that lower oil prices mean deficits for the government of Alberta since we are currently so dependent on oil revenues to pay for public services. The citizens of this province want to see a plan to balance the budget within a reasonable amount of time without reckless cutbacks, that will only have to be repaired later.

Albertans told us that they want us to look for ways to diversify. Energy is going to be Alberta's business and the heart of our economy and our economic development for many decades to come, but jobs and diversification must also be at the top of our agenda this year and every year from now on. Albertans are well aware that the recent drop in the price of oil is presenting our province with a serious challenge.

Albertans also know that by making better decisions, we can and we will get through our current challenges to better days. We'll do it the Alberta way, by encouraging a vigorous and successful private sector, by building on our strengths and gifts, and by making better decisions about our future together. We will do it by looking after each other, while looking after our seniors, while looking after our children, while giving those who have been hit hard a hand up, just as neighbours have always done for each other in this province.

Mr. Speaker, this Legislature is going to lead by example. Our government will propose that members of this House agree to freeze the salaries of the members of cabinet, MLAs, and political staff positions for the entire term of this Legislature; in other words, until after the next election, in four years.

Further, the Premier has asked me to lead a comprehensive review of Alberta's agencies, boards, and commissions. I want to emphasize that many good people have and continue to contribute long hours of excellent public service on these boards, often for very modest compensation. But it is time to take a look at this sector. We are looking to reduce the number of these entities. We will set clear objectives and accountability for results for the entities that remain, and we will rationalize and standardize the compensation of the people appointed to sit on them.

Finally, our government will take a careful, responsible approach to implementing its platform of commitments. Our plans will be phased in as finances permit, just as we said they would be during the election and just as responsible stewards of Alberta's treasury should.

Mr. Speaker, our province is facing yet another downturn in the international price of oil. It's not like Alberta hasn't seen this before, and it's not like we don't know what to do. Alberta needs to reduce our vulnerability to price shocks over which we have no control. We must do this by saving for a rainy day, by diversifying our economy, and by getting the maximum possible value out of the development of our energy resources, resources that belong to the people of Alberta.

That was the right strategy in 1971, and it is the right strategy now. Unfortunately, Premier Lougheed's successors lost their way. For far too many years they squandered our resource revenues instead of saving them. They failed to diversify our economy, and they focused on a model of development for our energy resources that led us, exactly as you would expect, to where we are today.

Norway studied the Alberta way, adopted it, and has built up $1.1 trillion in that country's investment fund. The government of Alberta set up the Alberta way and then threw it away. Our province has the third-largest oil reserves in the world. Between 1971 and 2015 Albertan companies exported $1.3 trillion in oil and gas resources around the world. Our predecessors in office saved only a tiny fraction of this incredible bounty. We must do better.

Mr. Speaker, we won't solve all of the challenges in one budget. Getting back to that original vision will take more than one term of this Legislature. But it is time to begin, and to begin, we need to make better decisions and set better priorities. This is what we are going to do in this budget.

Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta is pursuing three priorities in this budget. First, we will stabilize public services. We will reverse a number of bad decisions made in recent years, and we will continue to implement the commitments we made to the people of Alberta in the recent election.

Second, we will set out a plan to balance the budget, a balanced budget plan that will reflect the values and priorities of the people of Alberta and will strike the right balance between Alberta's fiscal priorities and our economic and social ones.

Third, we will act on jobs and diversification. We will act within our means and as resources permit to be good partners with the private sector as it creates jobs. We will do what we reasonably can to help diversify our economy.

Let me begin with the cleanup work we have had to address and the commitments we are getting to work on to stabilize key public services. For a generation now Alberta has been conducting a unique and failed experiment with regressive, flat income taxes. Rich, middle income, or poor, in Alberta under Conservative government you paid a 10 per cent income tax rate. No jurisdiction in Canada at any level and under any party, including the recently defeated Conservative government in Ottawa, followed this income tax model because it is wrong-headed, grossly regressive, and unfair. As we detailed in Bill 2 in the spring sitting of this Legislature and we confirm today, we're abolishing this flat income tax model. We're replacing flat taxes with a normal, fair, progressive income tax system.

Alberta has also been conducting a failed experiment in undercharging our largest and most profitable corporations. Our predecessors believed that ordinary Alberta families should pay ever-increasing fees, levies as well as regressive income taxes while the largest, most profitable corporations needed tax breaks even in their best years. In this budget we confirm that we will do our part to end the race to the bottom on corporate taxes in Canada.

As detailed in Bill 2, we are implementing a 12 per cent corporate tax rate, in the mid-range of rates across Canada. A great deal of nonsense has been said about this measure. Corporate income taxes are only paid when companies are profitable. In tough years corporate taxes go down, not up, including at this new rate. In the years to come, as profits recover, our largest companies will make a normal, fair contribution to balancing the budget and to building our province. Mr. Speaker, we're not faulting the companies. They were only paying the taxes the government required them to pay. What we are doing is making better decisions by asking those who can afford to contribute a little more to do so.

Then with the benefit of these tax reforms we will act to restore stability to our schools and hospitals. Proposals were put before this House by the previous government to cut funding to Alberta's elementary, secondary, and postsecondary school systems even though education is the single most important investment our province can make in the welfare of our children and the success of our future economy. In this budget we confirm we are restoring funding to the Education and Advanced Education budgets that were cut by the former government. This reinvestment means a great deal to the education system at every level. It means that school boards right across this province do not have to make significant cuts to services this year, next year, or the one after that. It means that the new students who showed up for class this fall have teachers in their classrooms, and it means that university and college students are able to resume their studies benefiting from a two-year tuition freeze, a big relief from the planned increases that would have made postsecondary education even harder for ordinary families to afford.

Mr. Speaker, last March proposals were also put before this House to deeply cut Alberta's health care system. These cuts were proposed without any plan to implement them. They were simply targets, in truth a formula for chaos and the layoff of thousands of health care workers. In this budget we are restoring Health funding so we won't have chaos in our health care system and we won't be losing thousands of front-line health care providers. Instead, we will continue to build a universal public health care system that is one of this country's rights of citizenship and one of this country's great contributions to the world.

Mr. Speaker, for far too long those who needed the most help have been last in line for the support they need. That is also going to change under this government. Let me highlight some of the initiatives that will set better priorities for the most vulnerable among us. First, as I know all too well, the call for increased family and community support services funding, FCSS, was ignored by previous governments. We will invest $101 million in FCSS this year, a $25 million increase. These funds give a helping hand to children and families most in need of help.

Our government will also act on its commitment to address the issue of family violence. Those seeking escape from violence must have a safe place to go. Therefore, as we committed to do in the election, we will enhance supports available to women and children affected by family violence. This year we will invest $15 million in new annual funding to support women's shelters.

Mr. Speaker, with these repairs and reforms done, we need to address the fiscal consequences of the current drop in oil prices. This year we are projecting a $6.1 billion deficit. As Albertans know, this is primarily the consequence of lower royalty, corporate, and other tax revenues caused by the drop in the price of oil. Last year the government of Alberta collected $8.9 billion from resource royalties. This year we are expecting to collect $2.8 billion, a $6.1 billion drop in resource revenues in one year.

To make matters worse, we had a hot and dry summer. We will not leave our farmers and rural communities without support. We therefore funded an additional $525 million beyond what was budgeted to provide $725 million to manage drought and wildfires. This was an early warning to all of us of the direct price we'll end up paying if we and our trading partners around the world don't get our collective act together on environmental issues.

Albertans expect a prudent, careful plan to get this budget back into balance. The plan that we are presenting today will do exactly that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are those who believe that when the price of oil comes down, it's time to fire teachers and nurses. They believe that the answer to job losses in the private sector is to make things even worse for our economy by firing thousands more in communities right across this province. They would respond to the market behaviour of other major oil producers by targeting people in our communities whose calling it is to teach our children, look after the sick, and care for our elderly. Proposals for reckless cutbacks to front-line public services to balance the budget immediately are out of touch with the people of Alberta. Those are the priorities that the people of Alberta have rejected. Albertans told us during our budget consultations that they fundamentally disagree with this talk about multibillion-dollar cuts to their health care and their children's education. You don't answer an economic challenge by making it worse.

Albertans also told us that they want to see a plan to steadily phase out the deficit and they want us to stick to that plan until it's done. That is what we are going to do, Mr. Speaker. In this budget we set out a plan to return to a balanced budget within the term of this Legislature. We are projecting a $6.1 billion deficit in 2015-16. The deficit projection is $5.4 billion in 2016-17. This will drop to $4.4 billion in 2017-18, to $2.1 billion in 2018-19, and we will balance the budget in 2019-2020.

Mr. Speaker, a number of tough decisions are required to get there. To begin, we will get Alberta's budget back into balance by getting the rate of increase in our Health budget under control. Over the past 10 years the Health budget has increased by an average of 6 per cent each and every year. We need to manage that rate of growth. In 2016-17 we plan to manage the Health budget within a 4 per cent increase and in 2017-18 within a 3 per cent increase. Thereafter, we aim to hold the Health budget to 2 per cent growth. In other words, we intend to stabilize the Health budget and then bend the curve of its growth in steps over three years.

Some will argue that these are modest goals, and they will try to persuade Albertans that we can save billions of dollars overnight by cutting the salaries of a handful of administrators. The reality is that we need to manage a far more complex challenge. We need to better manage significant annual spending pressures from the cost of compensating our province's world-class and dedicated doctors, from the rising costs of pharmaceuticals, from the rising costs of operating a very large network of hospitals and other facilities, and from the rising costs of having gotten it so tragically wrong on long-term care and mental health care, driving people into our hospitals who would be better helped in more appropriate facilities or through community services.

In the face of these issues abruptly cutting these budgets would simply cause chaos and run up costs we'd have to pay later. We need to phase in reform with a steady hand, system-wide, in a way that preserves a universal public health care system funded through a sustainable Health budget. That's what we're going to do. My colleague the Minister of Health will be working in close cooperation with all of the dedicated Albertans involved in our health system to plan and manage it more effectively and to get better health outcomes within what will remain the second-largest per capita investment in health care of any province in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, there is more we need to do to get to a balanced budget during the term of this Legislature. We need to manage the rate of growth in this budget overall with the same creative, determined approach we will bring to health care. The plan we are tabling today holds overall spending growth in government to an average of 2 per cent per year.

Finally, we'll be raising some levies, which will benefit the health and well-being of Albertans. In this budget we'll increase provincial taxes on tobacco by $5 per carton, and we'll increase the alcohol markup by 5 per cent. These measures will contribute $122 million to the revenue.

Mr. Speaker, this plan is based on the best private-sector estimates of commodity prices, but as every Albertan knows, oil prices are hard to predict even two months in advance. If oil prices recover more quickly, we will use the additional revenues to get to a balanced budget more quickly. If oil prices recover more slowly, then we will have to revisit all these issues in future budgets. One way or another, once the budget is in balance, we will present a debt repayment plan as part of an overall reassessment of our fiscal priorities.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has an economic shock to manage. The provincial government plays an important role as a shock absorber, but we need to ensure we don't overplay that role. On average, Canadian governments are managing debt equivalent to 30 per cent of their GDP in pursuit of their objectives. Today our government introduced a new Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act that will set the tightest limits on borrowing anywhere in Canada. This act will limit Alberta government borrowing to 15 per cent of GDP, half the average of other provinces. That will provide enough room to allow our government to play its economic role without tipping into overdependence on debt. As I said a moment ago, debt reduction will be one of our province's fiscal priorities once we are back in balance.

Let me now outline some important first steps we will take to promote jobs and economic recovery. A Canadian provincial government does not directly create jobs in the private sector. That is the work of our entrepreneurs, visionaries, and job creators. What we can do is time our work as government to be as helpful as possible. We can be good partners. We can create the right conditions, and we can open the right doors. Throughout the summer I travelled across Alberta listening to Albertans and consulting with industry and businesses of all sizes. I met amazing, creative individuals with bright ideas who, if given the right tools and the right opportunities to connect and collaborate, will create successful new enterprises. They told me about the challenges of working with government, about limited capital availability and the lack of trade support. There is so much opportunity in Alberta, but diversification and business development has been on the back burner for too long.

We have incredible value-added petrochemical industries, agriculture and agrifood, tourism, software and technology, light and heavy manufacturing, creative industries, and small business. They are all important latent strengths of our province and should be pillars of the much more diversified, shock-resistant, and prosperous economy we need to build.

To this end, we will take the following first steps. First, we will increase access to capital for small and medium-sized businesses in every community in Alberta. We will increase the capital available to ATB Financial by $1.5 billion, with the goal of steadily increasing capital available to loan on commercial terms but with a clear commitment to building Alberta to help our province's entrepreneurs and job creators across the province. ATB is an important institution that our province equipped itself with to build prosperity and to help handle economic challenges. It is and will remain independently and professionally governed and operated. Lending decisions will be made and administered on the basis of sound banking practice by professionals, not by politicians. We are equipping ATB Financial with more resources to renew and reinvigorate its mission, helping to support and capitalize small and medium-sized businesses in every community in this province.

Second, we'll take steps to promote greater access to venture capital. Supporting small and medium-sized businesses isn't just about making it easier for them to borrow. Entrepreneurs and job creators need access to equity capital on reasonable commercial terms to get start-ups launched, to become bankable, and to finance growth and innovation. As a first step to address this gap, the government of Alberta is today announcing that we will invest $50 million over the next two years into the Alberta Enterprise Corporation. This will help support the development of a vibrant venture capital market as well as innovation and entrepreneurship across our province.

Mr. Speaker, our heritage fund is unique and special to Albertans. It was created to support future generations and to invest in our future. While continuing the mandate of the fund to maximize returns for future generations of Albertans, we are announcing today that we have mandated the Alberta Investment Management Corporation to focus a prudent but significant portion of our province's heritage fund to directly invest in Alberta's growth.

Three per cent of the heritage fund, $540 million, will be targeted to growth-oriented companies in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, these measures, mobilizing almost $2.1 billion through ATB, AEC, and AIMCo to support job creation and diversification in this province, are important steps to help make Alberta Canada's best place to launch and grow a business. Professionals with expertise in business development and investment, not politicians, will make decisions in the best interest of Albertans, with a focus on growth, diversification, and jobs. By taking these steps, we can be Canada's best jurisdiction for entrepreneurs, job creators, innovators, and new ideas in every part of the economy.

With our world-class universities, manufacturing base, smart, young population, and an obvious need to diversify our economy, we have what it takes. With access to a little more capital there are remarkable opportunities for growth and diversification right across this province. There are opportunities in the towers in Calgary and Edmonton and in our great universities and colleges and in mid-size and rural communities, north and south, and among the rising generation of bright, eager, and entrepreneurial young aboriginal people on and off reserve right across Alberta. If you are a young person or just a plain energetic person with good ideas, you want to be in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, as we committed to do in the spring election campaign, we will invest $178 million to introduce a new job creation incentive, that will reward eligible job creators with grants of up to $5,000 for each new job created. This is a measure specifically designed to encourage job creators to lean on the side of hiring when planning their businesses during the current downturn. This grant will be available to eligible Alberta employers, nonprofits, and charities. It will support up to 27,000 new jobs each year through 2017.

Next, acting on the advice of former Bank of Canada governor David Dodge, we will accelerate the province of Alberta's capital construction plan. Overall, we will increase investment in capital spending by 15 per cent compared to the previous plan, an additional $4.5 billion in new investments over five years. We will increase capital investment by $500 million in the current fiscal year, by $1.3 billion in 2016-17, by $1.7 billion in 2017-18, by $600 million in 2018-19, and $400 million in 2019-20. Over the next three years this supplementary capital spending will increase employment by 8,000 to 10,000 jobs and real GDP by about .5 per cent.

Our capital plan provides for construction of a new cancer hospital in Calgary, a flood control solution in Calgary, significant improvements to health facilities in Edmonton, significant improvements to public transit in both Calgary and Edmonton, expansion of Red Deer's obstetric facilities, replacing the High River government building damaged by the 2013 flood, expanding the Lethbridge College trades and technology renewal and innovation project, and a major increase in water and roads projects in communities across Alberta, detailed in Alberta's new capital plan.

Mr. Speaker, earlier this fall my colleague the Minister of Education was obliged to report to the public that half of the schools slated to open across Alberta would miss their announced completion dates because of poor planning and rushed announcements by the previous government. That is a serious mistake that we are not going to repeat. We will therefore carefully review proposals and plans for additional infrastructure projects on the basis of more transparent and accountable criteria before we issue any press releases. We will have a number of important additional announcements to make in the coming months addressing roads and transit, water projects, long-term care facilities, educational institutions, and a number of other priority areas when plans for these investments are ready.

Last week the Premier announced the creation of the new Alberta Ministry of Economic Development and Trade, to focus our business and trade support programs and services. Always with the goal of being a better partner for entrepreneurs and job creators, we have reorganized several departments to create this one-stop shop for all job creation and promotion work in the government of Alberta. Services that were scattered among four departments have been put under the leadership of this new department, with the aim to be a world-class economic development agency: lean, smart, user-friendly, and fast.

The Minister of Economic Development and Trade will focus on enhancing Alberta's trade development and promotion in markets all around the world. As a trading province we need to aggressively build and diversify our markets. Through this department we will reinforce and build our network of trade missions, and we will enhance our promotion and marketing efforts to help Albertan exporters expand their markets overseas, with a particular emphasis on the Asia Pacific. Next we will partner with economic development agencies, business improvement zones, revitalization districts, and local associations to enhance opportunities for businesses throughout Alberta. We will invest $10 million in community economic development initiatives to support local economic development associations and help them make their full contribution to job creation and economic renewal in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, we will make some important strategic decisions about the foundation of our economy, our energy industry. Our government will soon present a set of reforms to Alberta's energy royalty structure. We are pursuing three aims in this review.

First, this package of reforms will modernize and update our royalty regime to stay up to date with the developments in the industry and to provide the necessary certainty about our royalty system for investors and all Albertans until it is next appropriate to review it.

Second, we are considering whether the royalty system can be rebalanced to encourage and reward value-added processing and diversification.

Third, Alberta's royalty system will provide that as prices for our energy resources recover, the people of Alberta will share appropriately in better times.

Last but far from least, Mr. Speaker, we are going to work to recover our good name among our key energy markets by doing our part to address climate change. Our government will soon present a set of reforms to Alberta's environmental policies. Getting control of pollution is good for the health of every Albertan. Reducing carbon emissions is the right thing to do as our contribution to one of the world's biggest problems. Systematically modernizing our electricity supply to phase out coal will create a significant opportunity for new investment. Promoting energy efficiency will pay off in lower costs and greater competitiveness in our energy sector and throughout our economy. Promoting the use of renewable energy will diversify our supply and cut down on our carbon emissions, and acting on these issues will restore our international reputation, the necessary prerequisite to getting access to more markets for our energy products.

Getting our environmental policies right will create jobs and promote economic efficiency, competitiveness, and growth, which, as you can see, Mr. Speaker, is what this government will be working on, on many fronts.

Mr. Speaker, with this budget we are achieving three important things. First, we are getting it right on health care, education, and human services. Stabilizing public services by providing long-term, sustainable, and predictable funding is what Albertans asked of us and what we will deliver to them. To do this, we are repairing some serious mistakes and misjudgments in our province's tax system and in its investments in key public services. Second, we are setting out a balanced-budget plan. Our plan balances our budget in a reasonable time frame without radical cuts or front-line service layoffs. Third, we are getting to work on a plan to diversify our economy and to create jobs.

We have set out some important steps to ensure the government of Alberta is a good partner in our province with our province's entrepreneurs and job creators, the keys to diversifying our economy, and we have given the Legislature notice that our government will shortly be tabling the results of its royalty and climate change reviews, further adding to the building blocks of a modern, diversified, energy-efficient, and growing Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, with this budget we will support jobs and we will support families the Alberta way.

The Speaker: The House leader for Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll move that we adjourn for the day.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us reflect. As we begin this sitting, let us reflect on our good fortune as a province and as a nation, our good fortune of having such a well and diverse world, rich with people of different faiths and different cultures, people who make us stronger by sharing their celebrations with all of us, celebrations such as the Hindu Diwali, the festival of lights. For it is light that allows us to see more clearly, and it is light that allows us to make decisions that bind us together, not divide us.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, it's my delight today to introduce to you and through you a wonderful group of students from St. Theresa school, a grade 6 class. They are sitting up there in the members' gallery with their teachers Ms Stefanie Kaiser and Mr. Sam Marino. I just wanted to point out that I'm so delighted that St. Theresa school is here because this school had forums for both the provincial and the federal elections, and grade 7 students took some of the lead in asking questions and moderating. I'm glad that the students here in grade 6 have a chance to observe the Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I will not ask the students how the vote turned out.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three groups to introduce quickly here today. First of all, 21 students from NorQuest College with their teachers Armando Bavaro and Ellen Robb.

I also have some students here from the Cultural Connections Institute – the Learning Exchange with their teacher, Ellen Joanne Campbell. We have Nina Voloshyn, Daniela Lopes, Pablo Lizzarago Lamas, Olivier Tanguy, and Enjuli Zemerak.

I also have four representatives here today from the Central McDougall parents' group and the heroes of 107th project: Kristina de Guzman, Mohamed Wali, Daryn Baddour, and Jermaine Curtis.

I would ask all those that I've named to stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.
Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly two groups of guests today. The first is a young family who lives in my riding of Edmonton-McClung. Mr. Eric August, Mrs. Dagmar Skamlova, and their daughter Madeleine are here today. They recently moved into the riding. This family is keenly interested in social justice, in being involved with their community, and they are deeply interested in how the Alberta government is working for families like their own.

Mr. Speaker, I'm further honoured to introduce to you and through you Mr. Elmer Brattberg, owner of the Academy of Learning; Mr. Charles Jarvis, general manager of the Academy of Learning; and Mrs. Coryne Yacucha, operations manager of the Academy of Learning, whom I have met and connected with through their fantastic work at the Academy of Learning institute in my constituency. I would ask all of them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you today a wonderful group of community leaders from the Ethno-Cultural Council of Calgary and the United Ethnic Leaders Council. I had the pleasure of meeting with many of these along with the Member for Calgary-Cross to discuss their concerns and dreams for their communities. These people work on a myriad of issues, from family violence to addressing class size, and they're all doing just a wonderful job. I am going to read all of their names. I will do it as quickly as possible and strive not to mispronounce them. They are Linh Bui, Lovella Penaranda, Mandy Zhu, Qiao Lin, Fobete Dingha, Ernestine Bissou, Feruza Abajobir, Ameera Abbo, Khor Top, Basem Snjar, Amir Ahmed, Ekhlis Elibaid, Biftu Mohammed, Amartii Warri, Urga Adunga, Makana Dug, Amtul Khan, Arzouma Kalsongui, Zaheer Chaudhri, Patricia Chaudhri, Lieu Nguyen, Jenny Vu, Aliya Shahzad, Sukhwant Parmar, Tazim Esmail, Nizar Bhaloo, Connie Genilo, Essie Roxas, Allyn Abanes, Tabitha David, Yasmin Pradhan, Yvonne Thai, Olufemi Ojo, Shahid Parvez, and Asjad Bukhari. I would like to thank all of them for the work they do as community leaders. They make such a difference to our communities. I would ask that they rise and all receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Miller: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you my friend Jennifer Vanderschaeghe. Jennifer is the executive director of the Central Alberta AIDS Network Society. CAANS is a central Alberta community-based organization which works to prevent sexually transmitted infections and hepatitis C as well as support a range of people, including people living with HIV; gay, bisexual, transgendered people; sex workers; people who use drugs; and people who are street involved. Jennifer has worked in HIV and harm reduction work for 23 years in Alberta. Jennifer, would you rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of the Alberta bioenergy producers group. The group met with members of the government caucus today to discuss opportunities for economic development and innovation in the bioenergy sector. They are seated today in the public gallery. I ask them to rise as I call their names and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly: Bridgette Duniece, Doug Hooper, Brent Rabik, and Len Sanche.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and introduce you to two heroes from St. Albert. Steve Murdoch is a firefighter, paramedic, and a son of St. Albert. He's been working with St. Albert fire and EMS since 2011. Adam Colameco is now with the St. Albert fire department and is also an EMS worker and previously worked in Fort McMurray with the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. Please rise, Steven and Adam, and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and Minister Responsible for the Status of Women.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two guests. Lisa Lambert is one of my constituency managers, and she is also a sessional instructor at the University of Lethbridge as she completes her PhD in political science at the University of Calgary. It is not easy to be a member 500 kilometres away from the capital with two small children, and it requires good staff to make sure that all the wheels stay on all the buses at all the right times. That is what Lisa Lambert does for me, and I thank her for it every day. I would not be here without her.

With Lisa is a key volunteer from my campaign, Gabe Cassie. Gabe is a third-year student at the University of Lethbridge, and while we have tried to persuade him that political science is the best degree, he seems to have been convinced to study philosophy instead. He also contributes to his students' union council and is an active member of the community, Mr. Speaker.

I'd ask them both to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Rob Boulet. Mr. Boulet contacted my office because he wanted to be here to witness question period the day after the budget was tabled, which he characterized as a historic event. I was pleased to be able to facilitate his visit, and I ask Mr. Boulet to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my good friend Mr. Dave Kirschner, a truly great Albertan. Mr. Kirschner has done tremendous work advancing the interests of northern Alberta both as a past member of the Northern Alberta Development Council and as a now retired member of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo council. Mr. Kirschner has made a huge impact both within this region and across the province, and his hard work on a long list of boards, advocacy groups, and committees goes to show it. I ask that we please show the warm welcome of this Assembly to my friend Dave Kirschner.

The Speaker: Does any other member have any more guests to present? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms McLean: Thank you, sir. I would like to introduce to you and through you a somewhat unexpected guest who is prone to dropping in on me without notice, my mother, Margaret McGinn. Accordingly, her introduction will be short as there is far too much to say about my fantastic mother. I ask her to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Provincial Budget

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Everyone in Alberta is now poorer as a result of this budget. Families sitting around the kitchen table watching their bottom line are seeing the government raise taxes. Bringing in record deficits will put the province $47 billion in debt. There is no doubt about it: higher debt will mean less money in the pockets of all Albertans, who will be forced to pay for escalating interest payments.

And what about Albertans hoping to hold on to their jobs in the energy sector, who are worried about the dangerous economic policies of the NDP? They received no good news from this budget, that is jam-packed with risky economic ideas. Yesterday's budget speech all but predetermined the work of the royalty panel. There's no doubt about it: the NDP want royalties up and soon. There seems to be zero consideration about the damage being done to the economy or the massive job losses for those who are relying on the energy sector for their livelihood.

Despite Alberta having one of the best environmental regimes in the world, the NDP signal clearly more taxes, more regulations, more damage to the viability of our businesses. The NDP seems completely clueless about what life is like for Albertans in the private sector right now. For every high-paid consultant, bloated bureaucrat salary they want to protect, there are thousands of Albertans who are looking for work.

Jobs don't just create themselves. Our energy producers need a market that's competitive, but the NDP continues to cut them off at the knees. The Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers recently estimated that 42 per cent of the provincial economy is tied to the energy sector. Yes, let's diversify the economy. Let's have more good jobs that can withstand the pressure of low-priced oil. But let's stop knocking the industry that has created such prosperity in our province, and let's stand as proud Albertans.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Spanning three Edmonton communities, 107th Avenue from 95th to 116th Street is known as the Avenue of Nations. Offering low rents and easy access to government, community, and transit services in neighbourhoods around this avenue has provided a new start for thousands of refugees and immigrants from Italy, China, Cambodia, Vietnam, and, more recently, Somalia, Somaliland, Ethiopia, and Eritrea as well as indigenous Albertans from rural areas or reserves. These men and women have invested in this community, opening businesses and cultural centres where they celebrate and share the rich cultures of their homelands and offer each other a taste of the familiar in an unfamiliar place.

Yet some miss 107th Avenue's rich culture and community, the residents' hard work and courage and see only preconceptions of poverty, danger, and crime. Heroes of 107th Avenue project was founded to combat this prejudice by sharing stories from the lives of the residents of our community. Through story circles, photo sessions, and one-on-one interviews Kristina de Guzman, Daryn Baddour, Jermaine Curtis, Suraj Khatiwada, and Kristy Lee are working to create a graphic novel that celebrates the lives and experiences of the men, women, and families who call 107th Avenue home. This collaborative work will give voice to new Canadians, allowing them to share their stories of hope, struggle, and the journeys that brought them here. Its visual format will transcend language and literacy barriers and make the stories more accessible to youth.

I thank these community leaders for their work and the timely reminder that Alberta draws strength from the richness and diversity of our cultural communities, communities that will greatly benefit from the proposals put forward in yesterday's budget.

Thank you.

Progressive Conservative Opposition

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to stand today in support of the thousands of Albertans who continue to believe that the Progressive Conservative Party best represents their values. It is a myth that the PC Party is down and out. We are alive and kicking.

We were the government for 44 years because we worked with Albertans to build this great province. Although we may look a little different today, that is what we continue to do. It is not by chance that we were elected for decades. One loss in 44 years does not mean that we are done. People thought the federal Liberals were done after the last election, and they just formed a majority government. We are still standing. We are rebuilding. We have three years to rebuild, and we'll be back stronger than ever. We have the strongest constituency associations, stronger than any other party. We will take direction from the constituencies across Alberta made up of all kinds of people, not just the unions of Alberta.

We do not wish to see a failing government because that's not what's best for Albertans. We will work with this government to make Alberta stronger, and we will hold them accountable for their policies and their budgets. We will advocate for the future of this province, for our children and our grandchildren. We will continue to criticize government spending that we can't afford and that our children will have to pay for because this government did not spend Albertans' money responsibly. Our caucus has the best experience in this House. We will use our knowledge to critique government policies and help develop policies that are best for Alberta.

The opposition pundits and media say that we are dead. This is not true. They don't speak for Albertans. I have spoken with Albertans, and we have great support for this party and what it stands for. It is far from over. You don't have to believe me, Mr. Speaker. Ask the people of Alberta.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Government Revenue Forecasts

Mr. Jean: My first-ever question to this Premier was about a provincial sales tax. I was trying to be helpful and let her kill that rumour right off the bat. She said the right thing, but when I look at this budget and its fantasy revenue projections for fiscal 2018-2019, I cannot figure out where all the government revenue is going to come from. The dean of Alberta's political journalists says that a sales tax is in our future. Does the Premier still commit that she won't introduce a PST, an HST, or a sales tax of any kind whatsoever on Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member opposite for the opportunity to talk about yesterday's fabulous budget. We introduced a budget which has three pillars. The budget will protect the public services that Albertans rely on for their families and their communities. The budget will map out and does map out a plan to balance. The budget will focus on the very job creation that members opposite were talking about.

Also, that budget or any other budget in the term of this government does not and will not include a PST.

Mr. Jean: I notice there was no reference to any other type of sales tax, so not quite helpful.

But it leads to a much, much harder question. You see, no one that I can find has a credible explanation for how this government is going to bring in $55 billion in revenue in fiscal 2019. In our best-ever boom years we never got anywhere near that number. It would take a boom of outrageous proportions to bring in that much revenue for Alberta. Is the Premier banking on another boom, and if not, where is all this money going to come from?

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin, of course, because I did run out of time: PST, HST, or any other sales tax will not be happening.

In terms of the revenue projections in this budget we took a very cautious and conservative approach. National Bank Financial has noted that our government's energy price projection is more conservative than the consensus forecast. They've also noted that our projections for the difference between the different kinds of oil are higher than the consensus forecast and, therefore, are much more conservative. Overall we are using conservative revenue forecasts. That's what Albertans count on us to do.

Mr. Jean: No conservative budget I've ever seen looks like that.

Mr. Speaker, when you look at the budget, it appears that this Premier is clearly planning for a superboom starting in 2018 and carrying through the election year. Revenues are projected to be at all-time records, but so will spending. Even with the Premier's projected superboom, she will just barely balance the books and she will still be borrowing for infrastructure. To the Premier, through you, Mr. Speaker: does she ever plan on paying down any debt?

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed we do, and that plan is included very clearly in the budget, a plan that includes capital spending and operational spending that was endorsed by a former governor of the Bank of Canada, who identified something that these folks over there seem to have missed. We have had a massive drop in revenue in this province, and what we need and what Albertans have told us they want is a government who will act as a shock absorber. We have a boom-and-bust economy. We do not need a boom-and-bust government.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Well, she dodged that question.

Provincial Debt

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, this may come as a shock to the NDP, but paying back your debt is very important. Albertans have to do it. When you borrow to pay back debts, creditors start to actually charge you more interest; they lower your credit rating. That makes everything the government does far more expensive. That leaves less money for Albertans and the Alberta services that we need. This budget has too much debt and no plan at all to pay it back. That puts our triple-A credit rating at risk. Why is the Premier risking the future well-being of Albertans with this budget?

Ms Notley: Well, very much contrary to what the member opposite is saying, this budget is investing in the future well-being of Albertans. The drop in the price of a barrel of oil should not be something that every teacher looks at every morning to find out if they have a job that day. Our kids, our seniors, our young people need to know that they have universities and schools and hospitals there for them when they need them. We need a government that will ensure that those important services are kept in place and will walk a stable path through tough times and won't get hysterical and react in here. [some applause]

Mr. Jean: Thank you for the applause.

This morning Moody's rating agency warned on Alberta's big-spending, big-borrowing budget. They call it "credit negative". They note that the projected debt burden surpasses Moody's previous expectations. They've said that if Alberta's debt exceeds 60 per cent of revenues, our credit rating may drop. This budget has debt exceeding 80 per cent of revenues. Does the Premier worry that our credit will be downgraded just as the NDP is taking us towards $50 billion in debt?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, these guys are always looking for an angle to find something to criticize. Fair enough; that's their job. Two days ago they said: you know, what we need is to make sure that we maintain and protect our 15 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio. So yesterday my government introduced a bill which legislated a 15 per cent debt-to-GDP cap. That, Mr. Speaker, puts us at one-half the average debt level of all the provinces in the rest of the country, so that is an exceptionally responsible, careful way forward. It's what these guys asked for a mere two days ago, but apparently it's not good enough.

Mr. Jean: Three years from now, your own projections suggest, you're going to blow that cap and violate your own legislation. This budget is a shamble. We are borrowing money to pay for government salaries for the first time in a generation. Think about that. If the NDP killed every dollar of infrastructure spending, they would still need to borrow to balance the books. The budget's energy revenue projections are even crazier. Moody's says that the government may be overprojecting oil prices by as much as $20 a barrel. Is the Premier not worried that the credit rating agency thinks she got the spending, the revenue, and the borrowing in this budget all wrong?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we did responsibly in putting together this budget is that we went to the experts on energy price projections. Those experts gave us a conservative estimate, and that's what we adopted.

Let me talk about something else, Mr. Speaker. You know, these guys are all about cut, cut, cut, and critique, critique, critique. The solution that they would propose would be to slash teachers, slash nurses, and the cancer centre that I announced the construction of today would not be happening.

The Speaker: Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, please proceed.

Infrastructure Project Funding

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, let's go to the Dodge report. This NDP government paid him $64,000 for a report on infrastructure spending. Not surprisingly, he said: go for it; spend on infrastructure. He laid out various scenarios for spending. This NDP government decided to spend even more than his upgraded capital plan. Why is the Premier spending even more on infrastructure than is recommended in the Dodge report?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, in fact, Mr. Dodge actually proposed that we increase what was previously planned by 15 per cent, which is what this government did. One of the things that was very exciting about that was that I was then able to go to Calgary today and meet with patients and their families and talk about a hospital that they have been begging this government for in Calgary and southern Alberta for 15 years. This government was the first government to actually say: we will build it. That's because of the capital budget that we have introduced and will move forward on. I think Albertans are in favour of that.

Mr. Jean: The Dodge report says that the capital plan should be pulled back a little in a low-priced environment because there's too much debt but then increased if oil bounces back, yet the NDP's plan is for record spending over the next three years and then pulling back on capital in 2019, when they project things will pick up again, exactly contrary to his report. Why is the Premier ignoring this high-priced advice? Is it because waiting on the lower priority projects until we can afford them means she won't get to cut enough ribbons before the next election?

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to respond to the hon. member's question about the Dodge report. Now, we had a lot of discussions with Mr. Dodge during the development of his report and subsequently, and if the member is not aware, Mr. Dodge did support and endorse the approach we're taking. Overall, over the five-year period we're actually spending less on capital than Mr. Dodge recommended, a little more at the front end and a little less at the back end, but that was something that was discussed with Mr. Dodge and something that he supported just yesterday.

Mr. Jean: When you pay $64,000 for a report that's an edited report from another province, I'm not surprised he would endorse your position.

This budget was delayed for political reasons, but even with the delay, the government isn't giving Albertans a detailed list of the projects we are going into debt for. It would be helpful for Albertans to know what infrastructure projects this NDP government is taking on debt for; $4 billion worth of projects are just listed as other projects. Wildrose has always called for a public list of infrastructure priorities. That's not in this budget. To the Premier: why is her government borrowing billions for projects . . .

The Speaker: I would acknowledge the leader of the third party. Excuse me. The Premier. Sorry.

Ms Notley: That's okay. If he would like to answer it. I don't know.

Well, you know, that's certainly a very good question. In the election we talked about the fact that – because we actually had some similar points as the opposition across the way on the issue of clarity of infrastructure priorities and infrastructure criteria. So there was a tremendous amount of backed up infrastructure projects that we needed to go forward with right away, but we also knew that we had the time to do the good due diligence, to do our homework, to consult with Albertans, and to come up with those clear criteria, that we collectively have called for in the past, and to share those with Albertans before we announced the remaining . . .

The Speaker: Now the leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, in the tax, spend, and borrow budget introduced yesterday, Albertans heard that the deficit is projected to be $6.1 billion and that for the first time since 1993 the province will borrow for operating expenses. This NDP government cannot even pay for the groceries or keep the lights on without imposing a mortgage on Alberta's children, and the NDP has no plan to pay it back either. The minister spoke about supporting families in this budget and then in the next breath saddled those families and children with a burden of debt. To the Premier: how will creating $50 billion worth of debt with no plan to repay it support Alberta families?

Ms Notley: Well, I have to say that I am very proud that our budget is not the budget those folks over there introduced in March. Let me be very clear. Not only did that budget take a billion dollars out of health care this year with no single idea about how to do it, but then in following years the way they were going to balance the budget was by taking extra billions and billions of dollars out of health, out of education with no plan for how to make it happen. What that would have done is that it would've created absolute chaos, and the fundamental health and security and safety of Albertans would have been jeopardized. So I'm very glad that our budget does what it does.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the NDP say that they'll limit borrowing to 15 per cent of GDP. It sounds okay except that the current rules limit it to about 4 per cent of GDP – 4 per cent – and this government will increase it to 15. This is a tax, spend, and borrow government at a time when Albertans need their government to provide solutions for the many Albertans that have lost their jobs since May 5. For the thousands of Albertans who have lost their jobs and others at risk due to this government's policies, tax increases, and minimum wage changes, how will making Alberta less competitive help them get jobs and create new jobs?

Ms Notley: Well, I'm not quite sure what the question was there. Nonetheless, here's the thing. For years this government thought capital investment meant cutting ribbons and putting out press releases. For instance, at the Baker centre, where I was today, we were on about the 10th announcement without a single shovel hitting the ground over about 12 or 13 years. That kind of approach to capital investment is what creates the kind of infrastructure debt that Albertans are struggling with today, which in itself is impeding and interfering with investment. So that's what we're trying to change, and that's what we will change.

Mr. McIver: Still the Premier avoids the question. I'll try it again. The NDP government yesterday put in black and white, their words, that it would not even develop a plan to pay back the nearly $50 billion of debt until it has a surplus. In black and white they said that they wouldn't have a surplus till 2020 and that it would only be $1 billion. Again to the Premier. Give Albertans a break here. What kind of magic do you have to fill a $50 billion hole with a $1 billion surplus five years from now? Please tell Albertans.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I said before, what our plan outlines is that we will remain below 15 per cent of a debt-to-GDP ratio, which is half the national average, and that's what it will be five years from now as the economy is recovering. That is in contrast to what this party over there, the former government, had planned, which was to take billions and billions and billions of dollars out of the budget without giving Albertans any idea of how they were going to have to pay for that. That's not what we're going to do. Our plan allows for a plan back to balance, and that's what we'll have.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Infrastructure Capital Planning

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's budget left us with more questions than answers. Now, fortunately,

I have some answers for you here in the Alberta Party alternative budget, which balances in three years' time. This government announced tens of billions in new infrastructure spending but is still not clear exactly where these dollars will be spent. To the Premier. In the past you've called for transparency, and in your own campaign platform you promised an infrastructure sunshine list. Where is the list, and don't you think you should have created one before you committed to spending billions in infrastructure?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think I've already answered this question once, but I'm certainly happy to do it again. When we talked about infrastructure spending and clarity and transparency in the election, we were talking exactly about coming up with clear, accountable criteria that Albertans could evaluate and see and weigh, and that's what we're in the process of doing. So it was not necessary to go through all of that in the space of three and a half months because we had so much pent-up infrastructure that needed to start getting approved and moving ahead in this year that it gives us time to do exactly what the member opposite has asked about, and that is what we will do.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: will you release a detailed analysis of the economic impact and exactly how many jobs will be created by each project so Albertans know they're getting good value for their money?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think that the budget did in fact include an estimate of the overall number of jobs that would be created through the infrastructure investment, so that's what we'll go on. I think that information is already there. I think the other thing, of course, to remember is the benefit to Albertans that comes from that infrastructure being built. I can tell you today again, as I was saying earlier, that the patients and their families who I met with today are very pleased that after over a decade someone is finally moving forward on building the cancer centre for Calgary and southern Alberta.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I'm certainly pleased that the Calgary cancer centre is moving ahead, I can't help but note it will be nearly a decade before it's completed.

To the Premier: will you commit here and now that any of the construction jobs created directly by Alberta tax dollars will not be eligible for the ill-conceived $5,000 job-creation grant program so that companies cannot double-dip with Albertans' money?

Ms Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, I'd be happy to speak about that as it has to do with my ministry. Certainly, we are supporting Albertan entrepreneurs, innovators, and job creators to have an environment where they can create jobs here in Alberta. We're very proud to bring that forward. Up to 27,000 jobs will be created by this project.

Human Services

Ms Sweet: Mr. Speaker, as a social worker I know first-hand how important it is to ensure good social programs, especially during these economic times. These programs support the well-being and success of individuals, families, and communities. To the Minister of Human Services: what is the government doing to support and maintain prevention and early intervention programs across the province?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It makes sense that government should invest in key social programs during tough economic times. What we have done in terms of prevention is that we have increased FCSS, family and community supports, program money by $25 million, which has never increased since 2009. We have increased funding by $15 million for women's shelters. We have restored the cuts made to family and community supports programs. All these prevention efforts together will help make Alberta a better place.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is the government doing to ensure the funding for critical social programs keeps up with the population increase in communities across Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member. As I said, for instance, the family and community support services program, FCSS, money has never increased since 2009. Due to that increase and in response to the population growth, Airdrie received $1 million more in this budget just to meet the needs of the growing population.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many of Alberta's hard-working front-line staff are already overwhelmed due to declining budgets in the past, again to the Minister of Human Services: what is your ministry doing to ensure that front-line workers are getting the supports that they need?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Let me begin by saying that at the heart of the success of Human Services lies the hard work and professionalism of our front-line staff. We are absolutely committed to providing all needed supports to our front line so that Albertans can get the quality services that they need and they deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It appears that there's quite a bit of concern about a certain list that was to be passed out here at some point, and with no apology I intend to ask about it, too. During the campaign the NDP promised to take the politics out of infrastructure and finally do what the Wildrose has been asking for for years: end the backroom deals and publish a prioritized infrastructure sunshine list. But an Infrastructure budget with $34 billion of debt financing over five years has come and gone with no indication. To the minister: where is the prioritized sunshine list that we were promised?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. The member is absolutely correct that this was a commitment of our government. The work is almost complete, and we expect that this infrastructure list will be introduced during this session of our Legislature.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, this government is planning on spending a record amount of money on infrastructure. The question is: will we actually get the infrastructure value for all the money we are going to spend, all of it borrowed money, money future generations will have to pay back with interest? Alberta Infrastructure has a poor track record overseeing capital projects. Just look at the school builds we've had to delay. Does the Premier really believe that her government has the capacity to manage more capital spending than B.C. and Saskatchewan combined?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for the question, hon. member. The difficulty that we've seen in terms of the management of capital projects stems largely from the habit of the previous government of making political announcements, including price tags, before any work in terms of analysis and design had been done; for example, not asking the question: can we build all those schools at once? This is a critical question. Announcing hospitals without assessing what the need is and actually planning it carefully before making a political announcement, forcing the department to then design to the political announcement, resulting in projects that are either too big or . . .

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, the minister is going to spend $34 billion of borrowed money over the next five years, but can taxpayers trust that he's making decisions free from political influence? We have no list, we have no timelines, we have no priorities, and the minister clearly doesn't feel any need to be accountable for the spending. To the minister. We've heard all the rhetoric. Now Alberta wants to know. Was there ever any intention to publicize the prioritized sunshine list that was promised?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that question, Mr. Speaker, but I believe I answered it in the first response to the hon. member. There is going to be a sunshine list. The work has been under way for several months. The work is almost complete, and we'll be introducing this sunshine list in this session of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Public Service Compensation

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For the first time in about 22 years the government is going to be borrowing for operating expenses, and at the same time public-sector wages are going up by approximately $1 billion, as noted on page 22 of the budget. To the Premier or the Minister of Finance: do you not see how increasing total operational expenses when you don't have the money to pay for it will push Alberta further into a structural deficit?

Mr. Ceci: The situation with salaries: we did not negotiate those contracts; those contracts were negotiated by the previous government. When they come open, we will negotiate fairly with our unions across the government of Alberta, and we will make sure that we are achieving our targets in this budget.

Mr. Bhullar: Well, then, Mr. Speaker, I will ask this. There was a contract that was negotiated in September where folks at the University of Calgary were getting 2.25 per cent increases followed by 2 per cent increases. It's a three-year contract. How, sir, do you account for that? I asked questions in this Assembly in the spring about your strategy for negotiations. How do account for that raise that was just given? How do you plan on paying for all of this?

Mr. Ceci: Postsecondary education has a budget. We give that envelope to those universities. They negotiate their own salaries.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, they do have budgets, but the budgets are set by you, sir.

My question, quite frankly, is this. You have an allocated amount of nearly $25 billion for salaries. Is that going for new wages, for new employees, or is that going to pay for the wage increases for existing employees?

Mr. Ceci: There are a number of things in that question. What I will say is that the labour costs in this budget are the most significant, largest cost, of course. We have a number of contracts that are coming open for negotiation. We have to meet our 2 per cent growth overall, year over year over year, and we have to look at our wages as being a part of that. We have to hit the 2 per cent to achieve our targets.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, this government's budget saddles Albertans and Alberta businesses with $2.7 billion in new taxes. The budget tabled yesterday proposes to increase the cost of the pay and benefits to the government sector by $2.2 billion. That means that 80 per cent of every new tax dollar will go straight into higher government salaries and benefits. In a time when private-sector workers and taxpayers are losing their jobs, does the minister feel that this is reasonable?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I must confess. I got lost in the Fildemath. When contracts are open for negotiation, we will be very much looking at making sure that those contracts fit our budget. We have a plan, we'll stick to the plan, and that's what we'll do.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, it's our platform that wasn't off by $6 billion.

We believe that it is unreasonable that 80 per cent of this budget's tax hikes will go directly to higher government pay and benefits when the private sector is bleeding jobs and wages. Will the government commit to freezing government-sector pay and benefits across the board until we finally get back to a balanced budget?

Mr. Ceci: You know, contracts are there to be respected. We're not going to break contracts because the member opposite wants us to break them. We will stabilize important services, front-line services for citizens in this province. We will get back to balance in 2019-2020, and if the economy picks up, we'll get there sooner.

Mr. Fildebrandt: So 2017, 2018, 2019, 2029: they don't know.

Given that we have already run eight consecutive consolidated deficits as a province, wasted the sustainability fund, and are on track for $50 billion of debt, will the minister commit, without laying off any front-line workers, to showing solidarity with hurting Albertans and freeze government-sector compensation?

Mr. Ceci: No. I will not break contracts, and I will not do illegal things with labour in this province.

The Speaker: I've been reminded and I would advise the House that as you desire, all of you collectively, to use this time efficiently so that many questions can be asked, I want to remind you again to be cautious about the preambles that are consuming time.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday was a historic day or, as the members across the House like to call it, an Orange Crush day. And they are absolutely right. The day was absolutely crushing for millions of concerned Albertans. Where there was once pensive hope, there is only the stark reality of what we must face for the next three and a half years under an NDP government. To the jobs minister. Australia tried a massive minimum wage hike and, as a direct result, has a 14 per cent unemployment rate amongst the young. Is a 14 per cent unemployment rate amongst our young acceptable to you?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our government in our platform made a commitment to raise the minimum wage to make work for low-income Albertans more fair, and that's what we've done. It was a modest increase this year, just a little bit less than 10 per cent. We're moving forward on that, and that will help everyone because low-income folks will put money back into the economy and support stimulus.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, given that minimum wage was never intended to be a living wage but instead was supposed to be a starting or a training wage and that a large percentage of young people will not get a chance to receive this necessary training due to these massive minimum wage hikes, where do you suppose they will get this training in life from?

The Speaker: Madam minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, and thank you again to the member for the question. Of course, we're moving ahead with evidence-based research regarding this, looking at indicators as we make prudent steps forward. This is going to help many vulnerable people in Alberta, and we're very pleased to be able to support them.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Monday the Minister of Infrastructure stood in this House and told us not to light our hair on fire due to some covert socialist agenda. Well, Mr. Minister, if yesterday's expanded government, expanded taxes, and expanded debt is not a socialist agenda, then I don't know what is. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. Now that the covertness has been put aside – in this budget you've given us basically the full Monty, as it were – do you still maintain that there is no socialist agenda?

Mr. Mason: I don't even know how to respond, Mr. Speaker. I think sometimes people opposite think that public education is a socialist option. I just don't know.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Addiction and Mental Health Capital Funding

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was encouraged to read in Budget 2015 that one of the priority initiatives in Human Services was to partner with Health to improve mental health and addictions supports for children and youth. In a province where one drug alone, fentanyl, has claimed the lives of close to 170 Albertans, it is a crucial priority for this government. That's why I was shocked to see in the government's capital plan that they intend to reduce funding for addiction and detox centres by $13 million over the next five years. This seems counterintuitive to me. To the Minister of Infrastructure: can you tell me what that thought process is?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that question, hon. member. Yes, Mr. Speaker, there is a view in our government that we need to evaluate the projects carefully and make sure that they are justified, first of all; secondly, that they are meeting the needs precisely that are out there, that they're in the right place, that they're at the right prices, all of those things, which the previous government didn't do very well in many instances. So there's a view to take a look at capital projects, a bit longer view, and make sure that we're getting it right the first time so that we don't have problems like the school delays that we've seen . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, getting it right is building the beds. We don't have enough addiction and detox beds in Alberta. Families are forced to send their kids out of the province for treatment. Can the Minister of Human Services now tell me why we seem to be offering supports to families with one hand and taking them away with the other?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is doing what Albertans asked us to do. We are stabilizing the services, and the example I will give is the FCSS program, which helps Albertans to focus on prevention efforts, which were never increased by the members opposite when they were in government. We increased those dollars. Women's shelters, which provide emergency shelter for women fleeing from violence, were never increased since 2004. We increased that by $15 million. Family and community . . .

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We actually did increase that in our government.

But on to the question at hand, which is addiction and detox beds. We need the facilities in order to help families in this province. Again to the Infrastructure minister: will you commit to providing the capital funding so that we can get those addiction and detox beds now, when we need them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for the question. As I indicated earlier, we want to make sure that we get it right. Simply because some projects no longer appear in the capital plan does not mean that there will not be similar projects coming forward. Once we've had a chance to evaluate it and based on what we hear from the public and what I hear from the ministers, we will develop a very strong capital plan that we can justify and will meet the needs of Albertans in all areas.

2:30 Queen Elizabeth II Highway Congestion

Mrs. Schreiner: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's economic diversification needs infrastructure. The QE II artery of transport between Calgary and Edmonton continues to experience a huge increase in traffic. Congestion is an issue. This is a concern for many of us. Many Albertans constantly have to drive the QE II for work from their homes in Calgary, Edmonton, and Red Deer. It can be a scary experience, driving the QE II. To the Minister of Transportation: what are you doing to address the future need for improvement on the QE II highway?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for the question, hon. member. Mr. Speaker, we have issued a request for proposal to undertake the planning and implementation of a study to determine the future needs of the QE II. Given that the current volumes on the corridor far exceed average annual daily traffic guidelines, this is an important step to take, and we're undertaking this study to determine cost estimates for upgrades now so that we can begin to address congestion on this economically vital corridor.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the update. Given that the thousands of people who use this highway will be pleased that the government is moving forward with studying improvements, can the minister please inform the Chamber on how the future needs of the QE II will be determined?

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much for that question. There have been a number of various planning and design studies on different portions of the highway over the last 10 years. The latest study will consolidate that data and will provide an implementation plan that will include cost estimates for various projects to improve the flow and capacity of that highway. It will also consider municipal development plans and future growth projections for our province, and that will enable us to consider sustainable traffic solutions as we go forward.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Aside from six-laning and eight-laning the highway, can the minister please inform the Chamber what other methods of congestion management this study will be considering?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, one of the things that we need to do is to consider it as a transportation corridor rather than merely a highway. The objective of that corridor is to move people and goods, not necessarily vehicles, so we have to look at different alternatives. The high-speed train between Edmonton and Calgary is something that we're beginning to ask about. There's potential for public transit, additional lanes around congested areas. A variety of things will be considered in order to make sure that we have the best answer, not necessarily just perpetually widening the highway.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Job Creation Grant Program

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is inviting Alberta's employers to apply for a grant that awards up to $5,000 for each full-time job they create. However, even David Dodge, this government's own expert, says that it sounds great on paper, and it's a great idea in theory, but it's very hard to manage to be sure you're getting much incremental employment. To the jobs minister. The Peace Country is losing jobs because your government keeps experimenting with these risky ideas. What evidence do you have to suggest that this new experiment will work when even your own expert has his doubts?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much to the member for the question. Mr. Speaker, we appreciate the advice given to us by Mr. Dodge, but we made a commitment to Albertans to ensure that we would create a jobs plan to create jobs for Albertans. We are up to the challenge, we have that plan, and we'll be rolling it out shortly. Thank you.

Mr. Loewen: Small business is the lifeblood of the Peace region, but entrepreneurs in the Peace region are being forced to raise prices, cut hours, and trim staff because of this government's risky economic ideas. The minister is trying to offset her government's bad economic policies by creating a new bureaucratic job-creation scheme that will only serve to create new jobs in government. To the minister again. The Peace Country is losing jobs because of your government's risky ideas. Why do you think another dubious idea is the solution?

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the member for the question. Really, the people who make jobs happen in Alberta are the entrepreneurs, the innovators, and the job creators. We as a government are working with them to create an environment that's conducive to that. We're happy to do that, and that's what we're going to do.

Mr. Loewen: It's evident all through the Peace region that businesses are finding ways to cut costs. Unemployment is on the rise, and our population is shrinking. To the minister: why do you think fantasy job-creation schemes that will only create more bloat and more bureaucracy are the answer?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the member for the question. This job-creation package is about supporting businesses, small businesses from Peace River to southern Alberta, all across the province, and we're very happy to roll it out. It's about supporting people in the communities to create those jobs, those good, mortgage-paying jobs, for Albertans.

Affordable Supportive Living Initiative

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, as of today 2,600 Alberta seniors continue to be at risk due to continued NDP funding delays. Given that yesterday proponents of previously approved ASLI projects found out through the media that their projects have now been put on hold indefinitely after having been left hanging for months pending a review by this government and that funding is conspicuously absent from yesterday's budget, a full construction season is now lost. This morning the Seniors minister told reporters that an announcement would be made in the near future. To the minister: when will you tell Alberta seniors, not the media . . .

The Speaker: Madam Minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. I can't give you an update today about each individual project, not because I don't want to but because we think the right thing to do is to have due diligence, connect with the actual proponents, and I want to make sure that we have an opportunity to do that outreach. But we have wrapped up the review. Our staff worked diligently through the summer, and I'm really grateful for that and also to the proponents for being patient with us. What they want is to make sure that there are 2,000 beds built, long-term care beds. That's what we committed to, and we are moving forward with that commitment.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister has continually said that her department needs to do a review and given the fact that the same staff who advised us when we were in government that these spaces were needed are advising the current minister, I hope this delay in the review is not politically or ideologically motivated because it doesn't seem to be in the best interests of Alberta seniors, whom government is supposed to represent. To the Minister of Seniors: what do you still need to do to move these projects ahead?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Seniors helped build this province, and they will get long-term care beds, like we committed to in our platform. In terms of the ASLI promises that were made in the months leading up to the election by the government that was thrown out, it did exactly what the Minister of Infrastructure referred to, at least I suspect it did, which was to make many announcements, cut many ribbons, and pretend that it was going to be moving projects forward. We need to make sure that they're evidence-based, that we know there's actually demand in the various communities, and that these are the right proponents before we throw money at these individual contractors.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, we believe in shovels in the ground. This government seems to pride itself on the consultation process, yet we are hearing that the review process is a monologue, not a dialogue. To the minister again: when are you going to release the review criteria and actually start talking with these people, who are desperately trying to provide much-needed care spaces to Alberta seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our staff have been meeting with the different proponents throughout the summer months and leading into the fall, and I'm really grateful that they've taken the time to have that conversation, because what's important is that seniors get the right care when they need it. The other thing that's important is that we're able to fulfill the 2,000 bed commitment that we made. We were elected to do that. Other parties maybe campaigned on cuts and delays. The Official Opposition wants to cut billions of dollars, which would create chaos and refuse to allow seniors to live with respect and dignity. Our party is fulfilling our campaign commitments, and I look forward to updating this House very soon.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

2:40 UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2007 the United Nations introduced the declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples to protect the collective rights of indigenous peoples that may not be addressed in other human rights charters around the world. This summer my constituency of Stony Plain was home to one of the largest celebrations taking place on National Aboriginal Day, and I heard from countless constituents that day and in meetings since how important adopting UNDRIP was. To the Minister of Aboriginal Relations: how has the government been working on that priority?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. I was very excited recently to engage in introductory meetings between treaty leaders and the Premier. We've also had some focus meetings in terms of working on implementing the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. We'll be working with First Nations and Métis groups going forward to fulfill that commitment that was in our platform.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that ministers have been meeting with First Nations and Métis to find direction and set priorities on implementing UNDRIP, to the Minister of Aboriginal Relations again: how will the government take their input into account as it moves forward?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. We will be working with First Nations, moving forward as true partners. We are working on setting up some relationship agreements so that we can set some common goals together so that we both have input into the process, and in that process we will be working with them and listening to them.

Ms Babcock: Thank you. I'm so glad to hear that.

Given that the Premier has asked all ministers to consider the articles of UNDRIP and how they impact their own ministries, to the Minister of Aboriginal Relations again: how will you ensure that ministers continually work on implementing UNDRIP?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Well, as outlined in the Premier's letter, all ministers are currently working on this project. We have been receiving initial submissions from ministries already, and we have been working through Aboriginal Relations with them. We do intend to move forward in February with that cabinet report to identify some key areas. We think it's critical that we work with First Nations as true partners, so we will be working with them to set some common goals.

The Speaker: Hon. members, as we end Oral Question Period today, the hon. Minister of Health would like to supplement an answer given in Oral Question Period yesterday in response to a question posed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. To the members of the House, this is, as I understand it, a process that may occasionally happen in the future. The hon. minister will get an opportunity to make that point, and then the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat may respond if he chooses.

Ms Hoffman: Just to clarify, Mr. Speaker, he asks a question that I can also address: is that correct? I correct the record, a question can be asked, and then I respond to the question?

The Speaker: Yes.

Alberta Health Services Performance Measures

Ms Hoffman: Okay. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for this opportunity to correct the record regarding AHS performance measures, as asked by the member yesterday. I misspoke when I said that AHS is seeing growth in every single one of the performance measures. The outcome is that AHS is seeing positive trends in the majority of the performance measures, which is good news, but we know that there's still more work to do. Our government is committed to working with AHS and investing in our health care system to make the much-needed improvements in terms of the other outcomes as well.*

Thank you.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'd like to thank the Health minister for her service to Albertans and her clarification of this question. Just briefly, I'd like to ask what personal oversight she is going to put on ensuring that these matrixes move forward in a positive way so hard-earned tax dollars get full value?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I did meet this morning with the CEO and official administrator for Alberta Health Services to touch on this as well as with department officials. The member yesterday talked about a desire to have more than 17 measures. One of the areas that may not need to be in a quarterly report but that I think is better actually as a more timely measure on the website for the capital region for Edmonton and zone: you can check on current emergency room wait times immediately rather than having to wait several months down the road. I think that's something that's serving Edmontonians very well. I know that I've checked the website before I've gone to a hospital to find out where I'd have the shortest wait time. We might be able to expand that to other areas of the province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

First Responders

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First responders are the men and women who run towards dangerous situations that we would flee from. As a part of their job they frequently witness traumatic events well beyond our normal experience. They are everyday heroes.

On August 11 I was able to join a St. Albert EMS crew for their shift. St. Albert emergency services are unique in that all of the EMS crew members are also firefighters. I joined the crew of Adam Colameco and Steve Murdoch, who are here today. There was no easing into the day. Minutes after starting their shift, they were called out to administer life-saving medical intervention to a St. Albert resident. The next call was picked up immediately following the first, and the shift continued that way. As I rode along with them, I was overwhelmed by the compassion, skills, professionalism, and camaraderie that they shared with each other and every single person they encountered.

The last call of the day was one that demonstrated to me the enormity of the skills that these first responders have. When we arrived on scene, we found a person who had died by suicide. Adam and Steve immediately began securing the site for the RCMP while supporting family members of the deceased person. There are no words to describe the compassion and the support Adam and Steve shared with the people they encountered on that call. During the worst moment of someone's life they were present and present in every way a person can be.

All of the firefighters and the EMS workers I spoke to on that day expressed their gratitude for being able to serve their communities. That spoke volumes to me. I would like to express my gratitude for all of the men and women who every day give so much of themselves to keep us safe and well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Academy of Learning College Edmonton West Campus

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today and especially note that all members are sporting their poppies once again on this day, when you, sir, presided over the first poppy presentation ceremony earlier today to begin our week of remembrance here at the Legislature and throughout the province and the country. It's nice to see us in common remembering our fallen soldiers.

I rise also today, Mr. Speaker, to say that on September 29 I had the pleasure of cutting the ribbon for the grand opening of the Academy of Learning College Edmonton west campus in Callingwood in my riding of Edmonton-McClung. It was an exciting day for the Academy of Learning. Their new campus, serving students in west Edmonton, expands their scope and accessibility as community leaders in postsecondary education. With this, their eighth campus location in Alberta, Academy of Learning has certainly grown from its days in Thornhill, Ontario, in 1987. Now reaching tens of thousands of adult learners across Canada, the Academy of Learning offers more than 35 diploma programs for prosperous new careers in health care, office administration, hospitality management, business, technology, and much more.

With consistently high rates of graduation and programs that run for less than a year, it's no wonder the Academy of Learning has prospered. The quality of their services has been recognized by the consumer choice awards for northern Alberta for over 15 consecutive years.

Beyond being a popular choice for postsecondary studies, the Academy of Learning is also very active in the community. Their efforts include fundraising for the juvenile diabetes research foundation, taking donations for Edmonton's Food Bank, and hosting various drives to help those experiencing homelessness.

It is with great honour that I was able to share in the grand opening of this new local institution. In today's business world, where quality training is essential to career success, the Academy of Learning stands out as an affordable, convenient, and well-established option for Edmontonians to get their postsecondary education.

A warm congratulations to Elmer Brattberg, the owner of the west Edmonton Academy of Learning, to Charles Jarvis, general manager, and to Coryne Yacucha, operations manager.

Elizabeth Fry Society

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to be speaking once again in this Chamber. I am proud to represent the riding of Calgary-Currie, home to parents and their children, retired couples, single people, immigrants in the process of setting up roots in Alberta, and to organizations that serve the ever-growing population of Calgary. One such organization is the Elizabeth Fry Society, where I recently visited to mark their 50th anniversary.

The Elizabeth Fry Society provides a number of programs for women, including aboriginal cultural supports, court programs, community awareness programs for immigrants as well as legal and prison community outreach.

I was most impressed with their work helping women transitioning out of prison, working to get them integrated into the communities upon their release, as these women often come from our most vulnerable populations.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Elizabeth Fry Society of Calgary on their 50 years of compassionate service to women and the community, helping people navigate the justice system, improving their communities, and for improving the social conditions through dedicated advocacy in the interest of promoting a higher standard of citizenship.

It is a privilege to have dedicated organizations like the Elizabeth Fry Society blazing a trail towards a fairer Alberta for all. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

Ms McPherson: Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 99 the Standing Committee on Private Bills has reviewed the petitions that were presented on Tuesday, October 27, 2015. As chair of the committee I can advise the House that the petitions comply with standing orders 90 to 94.

Mr. Speaker, this is my report.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, please proceed.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice pursuant to section 15(2) of the standing orders that at the appropriate time I will be rising on a point of privilege regarding the obstruction of the work of this Assembly and also the independent Members' Services Committee by actions of the Minister of Finance and members of his department. I have the appropriate number of copies of the letter that was provided to your office by the required time this morning.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Bill 203

Election (Restrictions on Government Advertising) Amendment Act, 2015

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 203, the Election (Restrictions on Government Advertising) Amendment Act, 2015.

During my campaign I made a promise to my constituents that I would do my best to improve the quality of debate and restore ethical conduct back into this Legislature. I am humbled to have the opportunity to sponsor this private member's bill, which I believe holds true to my promise. This bill will ensure that the government does not use its resources to aid in partisan campaigning in an election period. The bill is modelled almost word for word on Manitoban legislation passed nearly a decade ago. It prohibits the government from publishing announcements during a writ period.

The impetus for this bill was the inappropriate use of government resources we saw during the by-elections held last fall. The need for this bill has been recognized by both opposition and government, and it is high time we acted. While this bill isn't trying to split the atom, I believe it is critically important if we wish to lay the groundwork for meaningful change in the culture surrounding politics in this province.

I look forward to fulsome debate on this critically important bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Mason: I would like to table, please, the regular required number of copies of the fall 2015 budget main estimates schedule.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of the Alberta Party Caucus 2015-2016 Alternative Budget. It contains detailed calculations of how we would arrive at a balanced budget within three years, and I would sincerely hope my colleagues in the other opposition parties would table the same in the coming days.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

The Speaker: I'm advised, hon. minister, that that's after Orders of the Day. There are some other matters that we need to address first.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

The Speaker: Hon. members, yesterday I only briefly spoke to one of the points of order raised by the Official Opposition House Leader. I concluded that there was no point of order. I want to be clear that both points of order raised yesterday afternoon were raised in response to very similar statements; therefore, consistent with yesterday's ruling neither of these statements constitutes a point of order. Members routinely comment on the policies of other caucuses. Sometimes you may even do that more often than once in this House. Undoubtedly, there is no disagreement on the interpretation of these policies. This is a matter of debate, not a point of order.

I would also recognize the House leader for the Official Opposition concerning a point of order from this afternoon. Please proceed.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on a point of order arising out of question period. Section 23(j) states, "language of a nature likely to create disorder." Mr. Speaker, while I appreciate your ruling, some have said that if you repeat something untrue enough times, people will begin to think it's the truth. We have set the record straight on a number of issues that the government likes to continue to raise, making statements like we heard today, that we would be cutting billions of dollars in infrastructure, when, in fact, it is just not true. The continued use of that language, language of a nature likely to create disorder: we saw today that that's exactly what happened. The Minister of Health continues to choose to make statements that do not accurately reflect the truth and, in fact, are the opposite of many things that the Official Opposition campaigned on.

Yesterday we also heard the Government House Leader talk about the fact that they're not picking one member on which to make accusations about, but in fact they make accusations about all members on this side of the House when it comes to Wildrose cutting front-line services or massive cuts to infrastructure spending, both of which are categorically untrue.

Now, while I appreciate the fact you have said that you believe that yesterday that was a matter of debate, we continue to see the government make statements that are not true, that do not reflect the truth and, as such, will continue to create disorder in this House should they do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would argue, consistent with my argument yesterday and consistent with your ruling yesterday and today on this matter, that this is a question of debate; this is a disagreement as to the facts between members.

We know that the Wildrose has urged significant budget cuts in order to balance the budget. We know that they're against all tax increases. We know they're against royalty increases. We know that they're against borrowing. We also know that we're down $6 billion this year in revenue due to the international price of oil. So the Wildrose can't have it both ways. They can't say, "We're absolutely going to do nothing to increase revenues, and we're not going to borrow money" and at the same time argue that they're not going to support very large cuts in expenditures.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is our view that these large decreases in expenditures that the Wildrose is proposing or at least willing to accept mean substantial cuts to programs and probably substantial reductions in investment in infrastructure. It is our view that the Wildrose is either mistaken in how it sees its policies affecting the economy of the province and the government of Alberta or they're being somewhat disingenuous. So I'll be generous and suggest that they're just simply mistaken about the impact of $6 billion worth of expenditure reductions and that they don't think that that's going to affect front-line workers, don't think that that's going to affect the capital budget but, of course, obviously, will have a very large impact on those things.

I know that the hon. Opposition House Leader is convinced that the repetition of those views on the part of our government and our members will create disorder, but I would urge them, Mr. Speaker, just to control themselves a little bit and not get so disordered with the normal cut and thrust of debate. You know, I will note that the Wildrose opposition has hurled many allegations at our government and our government's budget, blaming us for everything from the increase of unemployment in the oil and gas sector or, you know, the collapse of western civilization as we know it, but we don't stand up here and make points of order over and over again because of the normal cut and thrust of debate in this House.

I'm finding these particular points of order to be a little bit repetitive and not a good use of the House's time, and I would strongly submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is no point of order. There is just a disagreement as to the impact of the Wildrose's policies, economic policies and financial policies, on the operation of the government of Alberta and on the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, to ensure that I understand the point that you were making, essentially, as I understand it, it's that the repetition of the comment and that it applied to the whole party was seen from your perspective as disharmony to the House. Have I understood that correctly?

Mr. Cooper: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That's exactly correct. I don't think that it's a matter of debate because the record has been corrected. We have stated clearly the position, and we have never said any of those things. So to continue to say that we would make those cuts and lay off front-line workers is in fact not the truth and, as a result, is not only misleading this House but misleading the general public as well.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I have determined that, in fact, again, I haven't heard substantially different from the point that I ruled upon and the comments made yesterday, so I would rule at this point, unless there's something that I've missed in your comments, that this, in fact, is not a point of order.

I'm seeking guidance again from the table. Apparently, I was maybe not as clear as I intended. I would rule that this is not a point of order. Thus, my ruling on your second point of order today.

Now, hon. members, let me go to points of privilege.

I believe, hon. member, that you have another matter that you would like to speak to. I'd recognize the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Privilege Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today pursuant to Standing Order 15 to raise a point of privilege due to the action of the government interfering with the independence of the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services to set pay for cabinet and MLAs.

I'd like to start, first, with preliminary matters. Points of privilege must be raised at the earliest opportunity. The relevant remarks were made yesterday afternoon, and our notice went to the Speaker's office this morning. As such, it is our view that the point of privilege was raised in a timely manner and is in accordance with Standing Order 15(2).

With that settled, Mr. Speaker, the facts of this case are quite straightforward. Yesterday afternoon, while the Minister of Finance was delivering his budget, his department officials issued a press release wherein they claimed that Budget 2015 will be responsible for freezing the pay for cabinet ministers, MLAs, and political staff "for the entire term of this Legislature." I stress the use of the words "entire term of this Legislature."

Now, even in the remarks the minister said, "Our government will propose that Members of this House agree to freeze the salaries of the members of Cabinet, MLAs and political . . . positions for the entire term of this Legislature – in other words, until after the next election in four years."

"Our government," not our caucus, not our members on the Members' Services Committee but "our government."

Now, members may not be aware, but only members of Executive Council are considered to be part of the government. Speaker Kowalski stated on May 1, 1997, that "in the province of Alberta the executive is composed of the members of the Executive Council, all of whom have taken and subscribed to the oath for cabinet ministers." So here yesterday we had a member of Executive Council, who is not on the Members' Services Committee, anticipating a decision of that committee. He did such both in his speech to the Assembly and in a press release to the public. Not only is he making an assumption that one of the members of the Standing Committee on Members' Services will likely introduce a motion to that committee that would include such an action to freeze MLA pay, but he, in fact, is assuming that you, Mr. Speaker, as the chair of that committee will be calling a meeting of the Standing Committee on Members' Services.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would never want to assume that you are going to be doing something that you have not yet said or decided that you would do. That would be wildly unfair and totally inappropriate and, in fact, a breach of privilege. It would in fact go against every tradition of this House and our entire Westminster system, which brings me to Beauchesne, sixth edition, page 25, where it has this to say about privilege. "It is generally accepted that any threat, or attempt to influence the vote of, or actions of a Member, is breach of privilege." This can be found on page 25 of the sixth edition in section 93. I encourage all members to brush up on their Beauchesne.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it would be careless in discussing this point of privilege if I didn't go back to November 27, 2013, when a very similar point of privilege was successfully argued in this very Chamber by none other than the member for Edmonton-Strathcona, our current Premier. On that day the now Premier, the then House leader of the third or fourth party – I can't remember which one it was – said these things.

Erskine May describes privilege as "the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively . . . and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions.

You can find that, if you're so inclined, in Erskine May, 24th edition, on page 203, for those of you who are following along in your program.

I'll proceed with the comments from that day of the then House leader of the NDP caucus.

As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, at the commencement of the First Session of each Legislature a number of committees are established, including the Members' Services Committee, as per Standing Order 52(2). This committee is empowered under the Legislative Assembly Act to make on its own important decisions on issues such as the amount MLAs are paid. I would refer you in particular to sections 33(1), 36, and 39 of the act.

. . . the precedent in this House has been to recognize a so-called tradition of this Legislature . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I note that the Minister of Finance is not present. Many of the comments you're making are with respect to the statements that he made.

To the Government House Leader: do you wish to proceed without the Minister of Finance present?

Mr. Mason: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Please proceed.

Mr. Cooper: Just for clarification purposes, I'm currently quoting from Hansard: the Premier, the leader of the . . .

An Hon. Member: Former. Start the quote again.

Mr. Cooper: Yes. Perhaps I could start again from the beginning if you'd like. [interjections] I won't start again.

. . . which is to assume that committees are to be treated as though they are populated by private members who toil on these committees on behalf of the Legislature as a whole. Accordingly, the Members' Services Committee is often described as an "independent committee of the Legislative Assembly." I would refer you to the Speaker's ruling on April 17, 2007. As such, it is understood that members are free to consult with anyone, including their fellow caucus members, but are also free from partisanship or influence from Executive Council. The principle and general understanding that these committees are independent has been established by numerous rulings made by the Speaker of the Alberta Legislature as well, quite frankly, as statements to this effect by various Premiers and cabinet ministers.

Now, perhaps the government of the day is going to stand up and claim that it said that Budget 2015 is freezing salaries for MLAs and cabinet ministers because of a previous Members' Services Committee vote in 2013. At that committee meeting they voted to freeze the pay until March 2017. What they did not vote on, sir, is to freeze the pay for the entire term of the Legislature, which is exactly the comments that we heard and read yesterday on the government's website.

This is where the minister and his department, a department that he is ultimately responsible for, have breached the privilege of every member on the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services. They are presupposing a decision of the committee, a decision that is not currently on the committee's agenda, a decision that is not for the government or Executive Council itself to make but a decision of that committee.

Now, as a member of that committee, I may and do in fact believe that freezing the pay for all members of the Assembly is a noble goal, and at an appropriate time, when the committee has the opportunity to, hopefully, address this issue, I as a member of that committee hope to offer some additional suggestions that can provide some leadership on this file. But what we had yesterday was the Executive Council presupposing that I would want to make that decision, and in fact, sir, that is a clear breach of my privilege as a member of that committee.

I refer you to the successful point of privilege from November 27 by the current Premier, when she stated:

However, the fact of the matter is that the committee has so far only deliberated upon a one-year wage freeze. So by talking about a multiyear wage freeze, it is clear that this brochure is anticipating a decision of the Members' Services Committee which has not yet been made, and that, Mr. Speaker, is a clear breach of privilege.

I couldn't agree with the member more today. We have seen this exact same thing yesterday in the House, and we have significant – significant – precedent to indicate that this is wildly inappropriate.

It is clear that the press release and the comments made by the minister from yesterday anticipate the decision of the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services, which not only has yet to make a decision but doesn't even have its first meeting scheduled. I go back again, Mr. Speaker, to my earlier point that as the chair of the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services you have yet to call a meeting of the committee, and it is not the responsibility or the realm of the Minister of Finance, it is not the realm or responsibility of the government to determine what the decision of the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services will be or even if that should be an item for discussion at the next meeting. That privilege, if you will, belongs solely to you and the members of that committee.

I mentioned that the point of privilege that the Premier brought forward on November 27 was successful. What I mean is that on December 2, 2013, former Speaker Zwozdesky found a prima facie breach of privilege, and he said:

It is clear to your chair that the advertising in the brochure I referenced earlier did presume that a decision had been made by the Members' Services Committee, to which the Assembly has delegated the ability to make decisions about members' pay and benefits. That decision had not been made, in fact. That decision had not been made until the following Friday. Let me make sure I said that correctly: I am of the opinion that the advertising in the brochure presumed a decision that had not yet been made by the Members' Services Committee.

I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that that is the same thing that has occurred here – the government has presumed a decision that as of today has not yet been made – and that this, in fact, has been found to be a prima facie breach of privilege. I believe that I have outlined numerous reasons why the minister's actions yesterday, including his speech and the press release from his department, were a breach of privilege for all members of the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services, including myself.

In terms of other precedents there are numerous examples whereby the Speaker has ruled that the proceedings of the committee cannot be directed or represented by the government. One example of this is from May 14, 1992, when the Speaker ruled out of order a question proposed by Ray Martin pertaining to whether or not the Premier would agree to direct the proceedings of the Members' Services Committee in a certain decision. In his ruling the Speaker at that time stated, "the government cannot answer on behalf of the whole committee . . . the government certainly cannot direct what happens to all the committee." That's Hansard, May 14, 1992.

Interestingly, Mr. Speaker, members of Executive Council in this House have relied heavily on this principle. On October 23, 2012, the then Premier described in detail how she understands that it is not her place to direct the proceedings of the Members' Services Committee. With reference to that issue she stated in Hansard on October 23, 2012:

My understanding is that the work of that committee was to review the recommendations of the Major report. I understand that that's what they did, and I don't understand that it's my role to direct the members of the committee to do anything.

She went on to say:

Mr. Speaker, as you have so rightly said . . . this is not a committee of the government. This is a committee of the Legislature that at some point will make a decision that we as MLAs will consider . . . That's why we have a Members' Services Committee. It is the job of MLAs, not the government.

Interestingly, on October 31, 2012, the then Minister of Human Services, speaking on the issue of MLA pay, said, "There is not a government policy with respect to MLA pay. That's the purview of the members, and that's a debate that's held at the Members' Services Committee."

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that we once again have a government who doesn't understand the importance of the role of individual MLAs and seems to show those individual MLAs the same contempt that has been the trademark of parliamentary democracies in Alberta for some years, as we have laid out. Once again we seem to have a government who feels the need to dictate to members of the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services what they should be doing and how they should be doing it.

Now, I know that when the Premier was on this side of the House, she believed strongly that all MLAs, including those that belong to the government caucus, should have the independence granted to them in our great parliamentary tradition. I have no doubt in my mind that the Government House Leader also believes that all government backbenchers that are on the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services should have the independence to make decisions on important issues of the day, and I trust that, just like when he was in the opposition, he will recognize this as a prima facie case of a breach of privilege that has occurred.

Mr. Speaker, since I believe there is a breach of privilege – and we have laid out that here for you today – and since we have seen a systematic abuse of the Members' Services Committee by Executive Council year over year over year, one can only begin to question whether, in fact, this is actually an issue of the mechanisms of government and the bureaucracies of the days, that also don't have the respect for the independent members and all MLAs that are not part of Executive Council makeup.

So it's with that in mind that I would be prepared to move this matter to be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing for study, to allow the opportunity to report back to the Assembly. It is important because the committee should explore why there appears to be this systematic issue within the government, presupposing decisions of the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services. That's exactly what seems to be happening time and time again.

It's my hope that it was a mere oversight by the Minister of Finance, perhaps the Premier, the House leader while they were reviewing the documents or the brochure of the day. But the challenge is that we have seen a very consistent behaviour brought forward into this Assembly that breaches the privilege of all members that don't make up Executive Council. When we see Executive Council trying to run roughshod over the committee, it creates a lack of respect in the House for all members that have been duly elected. It's certainly a breach of privilege, as we've seen in the past in very similar cases for the members of the Members' Services Committee. So I hope that we can ensure that this sort of thing doesn't happen again.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I trust that you will find this a breach of privilege for exactly what it is and that this will be the last time that something of this nature happens. I trust that the government will take notice of this, learn from their mistakes, and that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing will study this issue with the due diligence that it deserves. We saw the previous Speaker find a breach of privilege on December 2, 2013, and unfortunately the issue was not referred to the committee. Merely an apology was asked for and granted and then subsequently given by the minister.

But, good sir, we need to set the course for this Assembly in the future, one that doesn't merely look back at past mistakes and say: well, this is exactly how we did it in the past. We've begun to see some of those things from the government. But I digress, and I will stay with the matter. Sir, this is exactly why we need to ensure that this issue is referred to the standing committee: so that it can debate this issue, report back to the House, and so that appropriate actions be taken.

The Speaker: Before I recognize other hon. members who may wish to speak to this matter, I want to ensure, if I might, hon. member – and I'll just clarify – that I understood some of the points that you had raised. As I understand it, one of the first points that you were saying was that the statements made by the Finance minister yesterday were, in fact, a direction to the committee. Did I understand that correctly? That would be my first one.

Mr. Cooper: Well, Mr. Speaker, the statements that were made by the Finance minister certainly presuppose the decision that the committee would or might make. I would be more than happy to provide my speaking notes today or suggest that there is a discussion with Parliamentary Counsel. I encourage you to take some significant time to rule on this important matter.

The Speaker: Hon. member, that I will do.

Are there other members that would like to speak to the matter of privilege raised by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, the Official Opposition House Leader, for his rather exhaustive point of privilege.

I want to begin by recognizing that the rights of committees are a very serious matter, something that we have raised on a number of occasions with varying degrees of success in the past. Privilege is a very important matter, a very serious thing that can be brought before the House. As the Opposition House Leader has said, Erskine May's Treatise on The Law, Privileges, Proceedings and Usage of Parliament defines parliamentary privilege as "the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively . . . and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions."

House of Commons Procedure and Practice, the 2009 edition, edited by O'Brien and Bosc, goes further to lay out categories of rights and immunities enjoyed individually by members. It lists:

- freedom of speech;
- freedom from arrest in civil actions;
- exemption from jury duty;
- exemption from being subpoenaed to attend court as a witness; and
- freedom from obstruction, interference, intimidation and molestation.

Mr. Speaker, the principle and general understanding that our committees, in particular this committee, are independent is something that we take seriously. It's a principle that's been established and reconfirmed by numerous rulings made by Speakers throughout the years. However, in this particular case it's very clear that the independence of the committee and the rights of its members are not in question.

The hon. Official Opposition House Leader has quoted an interesting case, indeed. We received the ruling of the Speaker on December 2, 2013, and it was, as he indicated, a response on a question of privilege raised by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, at that time the NDP caucus House leader. The House leader opposite has talked quite a bit about the role of the Finance minister and his speech with respect to this. What the Speaker at that time talked about was that the government had issued advertising, in this case a brochure, that had "created the impression that legislation was in effect concerning public service salaries, when, in fact, the bills had not been introduced." He also said that advertising the brochure that he referenced earlier did presume that the decision had been made by the Members' Services Committee. The word that the Speaker used was not "anticipation" or anything; it was that the government had presumed that a decision had been made when, in fact, it had not.

I will submit, Mr. Speaker – and I'll keep this very short and to the point – that what has occurred is that the Finance minister has signalled an intent to request a decision from the committee, not presuming that the committee has already made such a decision or that it must make that decision but that it will be requested.

If we look, for example, Mr. Speaker, at the excerpt from the release that the hon. House leader referred to in his letter to you, it says:

Budget 2015 takes a careful and responsible approach to managing government finances, steadily phasing out the deficit without reckless cuts to the frontline services Albertans rely on. This includes:

- Prudent management of expense . . .
- A salary freeze for Cabinet ministers, MLAs and political staff for the entire term of this Legislature.
- A comprehensive review of Alberta's Agencies, Boards and Commissions.
- Hiring restraint . . .

and so on. Now, does that presume that this committee is going to follow the government direction? Does it presume that the decision has already been made? I would submit that it does not.

I will go now to the excerpt from the speech by the Finance minister yesterday, his budget speech. This is a very key quote, and I notice that it was passed over a little bit in the presentation from the Opposition House Leader. It says:

Mr. Speaker, this Legislature is going to lead by example. Our government will propose that members of this House agree to freeze the salaries of the members of cabinet, MLAs, and political staff positions for the entire term of this Legislature; in other words, until after the next election, in four years.

That's very critical, Mr. Speaker, in my view. The government intends to propose to members of this House, represented in this case on this committee, that we agree to freeze the salaries. That is entirely, in my view, within the purview of the government, but it is up to the committee to determine the actual decision with respect to that. I would submit that there has been no intent to interfere with the rights of members of that committee or of this House to make that decision freely.

But it is also an important matter of policy with respect to the government that restraint needs to be shown and that we should lead by example. We are hopeful, I am sure, that members opposite will see the wisdom of that approach when the committee meets. However, in my view, this does not in any way constitute a question of privilege. It does not interfere with the rights of members to do their duty, and I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is, in fact, no breach of the privileges of members by the Finance minister in suggesting that they will propose this to the committee.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you. I'm going to perhaps fail to come up with the bravado of my colleague to the right here and replace it with some brevity. While his comments and his research are certainly all correct and were certainly in terms of the definition of privilege and the requirements in terms of the timing of the submission of this particular motion for consideration of a point of privilege all correct, the comments by my colleague the hon. Government House Leader are absolutely correct. This is a proposal. In fact, the entirety of the budget is a proposal.

Now, we could say and we can certainly presuppose that because of the majority situation that the government finds itself in not only in this Assembly but also in the committees as a whole, this is perhaps a foregone conclusion. Nonetheless, the Assembly committees are indeed independent. They must remain so, and that is a critical element and one that I certainly agree with the hon. Opposition House Leader on.

Nonetheless, in this particular case, it is clear from the Finance minister's remarks in the House that this is a proposal and not a foregone conclusion, which was, in fact, the case in 2013 and was, in fact, the reason why Speaker Zwodzesky ruled, and I believe correctly, that there was a breach of privilege. That was a different situation, and it was a situation whereby there was, in fact, a statement and, in fact, not just a statement but a release in a pamphlet that was mailed out in large numbers across the province.

What I do certainly agree on, though, with the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills is that it is absolutely critical that our Assembly committees remain resolutely independent. I have had some experience with what it feels like when there is some feeling that those committees are not as independent as they should be, and I will tell you that that is problematic. If the Assembly should decide, perhaps not specifically on this issue, that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing should meet in order to discuss the perceived decrease in privilege that the hon. member describes, I would as a member of that committee certainly welcome that discussion.

As I've stated in this Chamber before, I've been somewhat of a student of parliament in the past and find these questions actually rather interesting rather than somewhat boring, and I do think that it's critically important for the maintenance of our parliamentary tradition that we do that. But from my standpoint and from the arguments that I've heard and from my examination of the question here, the point that is raised by the hon. Government House Leader is a critical point, and that is that this is indeed a proposal and not a foregone conclusion. Therefore, I do not believe that the decision of the committee has been presupposed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Are there any other members who would like to speak to the point of privilege raised by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills? I understand from standing orders that a particular member does not get an opportunity again.

Are there other members who would like to speak to this? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. Please proceed.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am rising as a member of the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services, which the Premier is not a member of, and I'm pleased to speak in support of my colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on this point of privilege. Let me be clear. There is no question that we need to take action on entitlements for politicians. This is not at all what the issue that we are debating here today is about. What's happening here is a continuation of the disrespect for this Assembly that started with the previous government, now the third party. I had great hope that things would be done differently under our new Premier, but clearly this is not the case.

Mr. Speaker, it's only been six months since the last election, and this government has fallen into the same disturbing habits as its predecessor. This, in my view, is arrogant and is certainly disrespectful, and it directly interferes with our work as private members. It is shocking to me that it has taken only six months for the Premier to epitomize everything she once said that she despised while she was in opposition. What type of message does this send to Albertans, who were looking forward to a Legislature that would work differently, that actually respected democracy? All of the new Albertans who engaged in the democratic process for the first time wanted to see what an actually functioning Legislature might look like not gripped with the same skeptical politics of power.

Alberta committees are already in an embarrassing state of disrepair, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure the NDP knows, based on all of the important staffers they've taken from Ottawa, that this is not how real democracy functions. Committees should be independent. They should contribute to legislation. They should allow for open consultation with the Alberta public.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, when speaking in this Assembly and then later in a press release, the Minister of Finance indicated very clearly that Executive Council would freeze salaries for all cabinet ministers and MLAs. Now, I assure you that I would love to vote for such a motion as a member of the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services. My party has long been fighting for measures such as these. However, the government is attempting to predetermine the outcome of this decision and completely undermine the very purpose of this independent committee of the Legislature.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the reason I'm so shocked and why I had so much hope that things would be different under our new Premier is that when she was a member of the opposition caucus in the previous Legislature, the hon. Premier raised a very similar point of privilege to the one that is being raised today by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. She clearly indicated in her speech at the time, just a couple of years ago, that she did not think it was appropriate for the government to order a wage freeze ahead of a Members' Services Committee even having a chance to consider the proposition. Now, that leads me to question: is this government doing the very same thing that our Premier once spoke so strongly against?

In this scenario the former Speaker ruled, and I might say rightly so, that by issuing such statements, the rights of members of the committee had in fact been infringed upon, and the Speaker at the time ruled that there was indeed a valid point of privilege. Mr. Speaker, I ask that you please review the previous point of privilege, that the now Premier passionately argued in favour of, and protect the integrity of the Legislature from the Premier's office. We want to help the Premier take action on overly generous entitlements for politicians, but we simply must insist that we follow the proper procedures of this Assembly and ensure that our independent committees of this Legislature remain truly independent and not disturbed by the heavy-handedness of the Premier's office.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would be prepared to bring new points with respect to – hon. member, while I'm speaking, if you wouldn't mind . . .

Mr. Fildebrandt: Pardon me?

The Speaker: Wait until I'm finished speaking, hon. member.

Is there new information that would assist me in ruling on this matter that has not yet been heard?

I will give the hon. member an opportunity. I wish to underline to him, though, that you have not been in the House, so you may not have heard all of the points that have been raised. I want to underline to you that I'm looking for new evidence or information that would assist me in making this decision.

Please proceed, hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was certainly listening to this debate. I, too, am rising as a member of the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services, and I am pleased to speak in support of my colleague's point of privilege. Let me be clear that there is no question that we do need to take action on entitlements for politicians. This is not at all what is at issue here today, though. What's happening here is a continuation of the disrespect for this Assembly that has been long standing. I had great hope that things would be different under a new government, a new Premier, but this is not the case.

Mr. Speaker, it has only been six months since the election, and the government has fallen into the same disturbing habits as the last one. This is arrogant, this is disrespectful, and it directly interferes with the work of private members. It's shocking that it has taken only six months for the Premier to become what she once would attack in opposition.

What kind of message does this send to Albertans, who were looking forward to a Legislature that worked differently, that actually respected democracy? All new Albertans who are engaged in the democratic process for the first time are wanting to see what an actually functioning Legislature might look like not gripped with the same skeptical politics of power.

Alberta committees are already in an embarrassing state of disrepair. I'm sure that the NDP knows, based on all of their imported staffers from Ottawa and Winnipeg, that this is not how a real democracy should function.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, please.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Point of Order Repetition

Mr. Mason: The hon. member is giving almost verbatim the same rhetorical speech that was just given. He's not speaking to the points contained in the point of privilege. He's not quoting any citations. It's just a rhetorical smear job, and it's not appropriate.

The Speaker: The hon. member raises a point in which I would ask, as I indicated in recognizing you before, hon. member: is there new evidence or factual information? Could you please address that more quickly than you have rather than a generic statement? I'm prepared to listen; however, I want to hear some additional evidence that will assist in the decision-making.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Very well, Mr. Speaker. As the chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts I have a particular appreciation for the independence of committees in this Legislature. As the Standing Committee on Public Accounts is the only committee of this Legislature that is chaired by a member of the Official Opposition, I consider this a special matter of importance. It is critical to our job as parliamentarians, as members respecting our constituencies. Inasmuch as we were eager to see the government's budget, we know that it is presumptive for them to assume that we would do exactly what they expect us to do.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other members that would like to speak to this matter? Again I underline. The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. Please proceed.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are debating and considering a very important matter. I feel that this is a very important matter for this House to recognize, for the Assembly to recognize. All independent members of this Assembly need to recognize their role in holding government, Executive Council, to account.

Mr. Speaker, I witnessed a little over a month ago in committee how things can just continue to be pushed through and appear to be pushed through by people being dictated to, of not recognizing the role of individual members in their committees. I truly do believe that we need to be careful that we are not abusing the powers and the responsibility of each and every committee.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I urge again. I think I've heard that several times, as the House has. Could you assist me in terms of making that with any new evidence that you would suggest is a major influence on the decision that needs to be made?

Mr. van Dijken: I think it's very important, Mr. Speaker, that we recognize and that the whole House recognizes and that the Speaker also recognizes that we have to be careful in how we proceed.

The Speaker: Hon. member, let me say to the entire House that as far as I'm concerned in this capacity as Speaker, there can be no other more important aspect that we may rule upon than with respect to privilege. It's that principle that the members of the House have the privilege of representing their constituency.

I do not hear anything else with respect to comments than that I've heard with respect to the last two speakers and, therefore, would rule, at least for the time being, that I would like to take the comments under advisement. I will return to the House in due course.

Orders of the Day
Government Motions

Amendments to Standing Orders

19. Mr. Mason moved:
- A. Be it resolved that the standing orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta effective November 18, 2014, be amended as follows:
1. Standing Order 3(1) is struck out and the following is substituted:
Sitting times and sessional calendar

 9. Standing Order 59.01 is amended
 - (a) by adding the following after suborder (3):
(3.1) During consultation with the Government House Leader under suborder (3), the Official Opposition may designate 4 ministries for which estimates shall be considered for a maximum of 6 hours per ministry provided that the Official Opposition also designates 3 ministries, not including the Executive Council, for which estimates consideration shall be set at 2 hours.
 - (b) in suborder (5)
 - (i) in clause (a)(ii), (iii) and (iv) by striking out “noon” and substituting “12:15 p.m.”;
 - (ii) in clause (d) by adding “subject to suborder (3.1),” before “the estimates”;
 - (c) in suborder (6) by striking out clause (d);
 - (d) by striking out suborder (7) and substituting the following:
 - (7) If a ministry’s estimates are scheduled to be considered for 2 hours, the speaking times shall be as follows:
 - (a) the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister’s behalf, may make opening comments not to exceed 10 minutes,
 - (b) for the next 50 minutes, members of the Official Opposition and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister’s behalf, may speak,
 - (c) for the next 20 minutes, the members of the third party, if any, and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister’s behalf, may speak,
 - (d) for the next 20 minutes, the members of any other party represented in the Assembly or any independent Members and the Minister, or the

- member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (e) for the next 20 minutes, private members of the Government caucus and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak, and
 - (f) if there is any time remaining, to the extent possible, the rotation outlined in clauses (b) to (e) shall apply with the speaking times set at 5 minutes as provided in Standing Order 59.02(1)(c).

10. Standing Order 59.02(1)(b) is amended by adding "and 59.01(7)(a) to (e)" after "59.01(6)(a) to (e)".

- B. And be it further resolved that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing shall meet to review and assess the operation of the morning sittings of the Assembly brought into force by part A of this motion and report to the Assembly with its recommendations by October 27, 2016, and the committee may without leave of the Assembly meet during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued.
- C. And be it further resolved that the amendments to Standing Order 3 in section 1 of part A of this motion shall take effect on November 24, 2015, and the remaining amendments in this motion shall come into force on passage.

The Speaker: I am clarifying with the Clerk that all members have been provided with the verbatim details of this motion. They have.

Speaking to the motion, are there any members who would like to speak? The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Mason: I moved it, Mr. Speaker, so I may as well go first. I just want to . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I am calling upon the Official Opposition House Leader to speak. I need clarification from the table.

I am advised that we would not require the Government House Leader to read it verbatim, that all of the members have been provided it, too. Unless the minister has some details that he'd like to add to the motion. We have time to speak to that.

Did I misunderstand? Hon. minister, do you wish to use your time? You, in fact, have 20 minutes to speak. I understood when you sat down that you didn't need any. Were there no additional comments that you wished to make?

Mr. Mason: No. I moved the motion, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Good.

The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Just let me be clear, Mr. Speaker. As the mover of the motion, I move the motion. I wait to be recognized to speak to the motion. I speak to the motion. Then the opposition speaks.

The Speaker: That's my understanding. Go ahead. I understand you wish to speak.

Mr. Mason: I do. The amendments to the standing orders that we are proposing do a number of things. First of all, they institute morning sittings of the Assembly. This is something we've had quite a bit of discussion on. It was originally proposed to us by the Official Opposition, and we have undertaken to try and reduce the number of sittings that take place in the evenings in order to be more friendly towards people with families, with children, and so on.

That's been a direction that we've been pursuing, and we've had conversations with the House leaders of the opposition caucuses. At the request of the PC caucus we have dispensed with sittings on Monday mornings because members travel often on Monday mornings, so we want to be able to accommodate that. We've extended the proposed morning sittings, from 9 a.m. to noon. Routine, including question period, will take place at the same time it does now, that is at 1:30. It is our hope that on most days we can dispense with evening sittings.

There are some other changes, I think, that are very important here, that have to do with the bells. As members know, opposition members and a significant number of government caucus members are now housed in the federal building instead of the Annex. Recommendations we've received from the Speaker's staff in terms of time needed to travel indicate that more time between the ringing of the bells until the calling of a vote will be required for members to actually get to the Assembly. What we're proposing is to extend the time for the bells from 10 minutes to 15 minutes.

In order that we don't use too much time in committee, where there are often multiple amendments and debates, motions, and so on, we're proposing that the first bell in a given afternoon or given morning or given evening, if that occurs, will be 15 minutes, but once the members are here, the subsequent bells, for that afternoon only or that morning only, will be one minute.

We've also indicated that the Official Opposition has the ability to designate four ministries for additional time during estimates, not the usual three hours but six hours, and we've also agreed that there will be three ministries designated for two hours instead of three. We have received the suggestions from the Opposition House Leader as to what those ministries will be.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that those are the main pieces. We are proposing that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing meet to review and assess the operation of morning sittings of the Assembly and report to the Assembly on October 27, 2016, and that the committee can meet in between sessions in order to accomplish that review.

Those are the main aspects of the standing orders, Mr. Speaker, that we are proposing. I'm happy to have any debate that there might be.

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the chance to debate this motion today. We all come here to work hard on behalf of our constituents and all Albertans, and we don't take that responsibility lightly. However, the Government House Leader knows quite well that a lot of the work that takes place to make all of this happen actually takes place outside of this Chamber. There's no doubt that the Official Opposition certainly opened the door, if you will, or the avenue to having morning sittings. I'll table a document tomorrow at the appropriate time because I'll refer to it a little bit today. We think that in conjunction with a number of other proposals that we made, it could do many things to make the House work much better.

The Government House Leader specifically referred to some discussion amongst the House leaders, be it the third party or himself or myself. In fact, we had come to an arrangement to have a start time of 10 a.m. We agreed to this, and we were marching forward in the name of co-operation and joint agreement. Then much to my surprise, we received notification, after agreeing that we would sit at 10 a.m., of a notice on the Order Paper for 9 a.m. We had never, certainly to the best of my recollection, and I think the third-party House leader will concur – the agreement that was struck was for us to meet at 10.

Now we see meeting at 9 o'clock, and obviously that presents some significant challenges to smaller caucuses and to the members on this side of the House but not, importantly, just to members. We have many people who are committed to this Assembly. Many of their waking hours are for making this all happen, for democracy to happen. When we begin to move time into the early morning, we wind up downloading the additional hours onto our staff, who make it happen. So I was quite shocked, dismayed – disappointed perhaps would be an understatement – when I received word that the agreement that the House leaders had come to wasn't going to be honoured.

You know, the Government House Leader, who I have a great deal of admiration for – and some day, when I grow up, I hope to be as learned in this Assembly as he is – is the longest serving member of the Assembly. It's my hope that it was an oversight on behalf of the Government House Leader because we certainly didn't have an agreement. There's a long-standing tradition in the Alberta Assembly that we move forward based upon these agreements, so I'm hoping that this isn't the new way of doing things on behalf of the government.

I recognize – and he alluded to it – that he made some adjustments in the schedule for members of the third party because they had some concerns about meeting on Monday mornings and wanted that ability to spend extra time with their families. I fully recognize why he made the change, but it doesn't change the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the agreement that we had made was for 10 a.m., and now we are looking at a motion that says 9 a.m.

Our staff do a tremendous amount of work to make this happen. When I talk about staff, I don't just mean our colleagues in the Official Opposition caucus, but I'm talking about the staff that do work for the government, for the third party, for the three independent members of the Assembly, the staff that work for the Legislative Assembly Office, whether they're in Hansard or communications, HR, the Clerk's office, committee departments. The list goes on and on. They all work hard for us each and every day to ensure that this functions properly.

Beginning the proceedings of this Assembly at 9 a.m. would be unfair to many of these staff. I have no doubt that they would likely be able to complete their jobs as they are highly competent, but it would mean more time away from their families, certainly in our situation, because the requirement to be at work would likely be in the neighbourhood of 6:30 a.m. I think of the parents that would like to drop their children off at school or daycare on their way to the office. You see, Mr. Speaker, proceedings starting at 9 a.m. mean many more hours of preparation before we even set foot in this Chamber. Now, we were willing to make those adjustments based upon a 10 a.m. start time so that we could allow at least two and a half hours prior to arrival for our team to be prepared for us to come into the Assembly.

I believe in the importance of the work that we do here in the Assembly, and in order for us to do meaningful work with meaningful outcomes, there are countless hours that both we and our staff put together to make sure that we are as prepared as possible. I think my colleagues can agree with me that the research that goes into speeches, members' statements, even questions of privilege, sir, is extensive. We're here to represent our constituents and to be at our best to do that. I have serious concerns that this ability will be diminished or that the strain on our staff on all sides will be extreme if we move to 9 a.m. sittings. For a government that keeps talking about the Assembly working better for families and for all members and staff, I think that this is a step in the wrong direction, particularly when it comes to working together.

It was my understanding that we had an agreement in place, and now we have a very different statement of facts based upon that agreement. The fact is, sir, that no other Legislature in Canada sits at 9 a.m. every day. When they do meet in the morning, the proceedings begin at 10 a.m. It's funny and interesting to me that it's 10 a.m., the time that we agreed to. Unfortunately, others chose to not keep this agreement. I am concerned that the government actually isn't interested in making the Assembly work better but, instead, in making things better for the government caucus.

Immediately after the election my Wildrose Official Opposition colleagues and I put together a proposal, which we shared with the Government House Leader. For his colleagues' sake, it was entitled Restoring Trust, restoring trust and strengthening democracy. What we have here today is not a restoration in trust but a breakdown in that trust. After 44 years of rule by the now third party Albertans expect the Legislature to be cleaned up, to work better in the interests of all Albertans. We shouldn't be rushing through legislation. We shouldn't allow the government to play games with things like the introduction of the budget and MLAs being back and forth to the constituency. We need to ensure that we are taking steps to strengthen our democracy. The recommendations that we made were intended in that exact spirit, strengthening democracy.

We made a recommendation for 10 a.m. sittings, but the reason why that recommendation was made was in conjunction with a large group of recommendations. Often the government will criticize the opposition for not proposing ideas, but we proposed ideas, and one of them was a 10 a.m. sitting. The reason why, sir, was so that we could expand the role of committees, so that we could be utilizing committees to receive expert testimony. When a difficult Justice bill came across the table, we would be able to bring witnesses from the department and legal experts to provide guidance and advice to committees. We didn't recommend opening the House at 9 a.m. so that the government could just spend more time ramming through legislation, just like we've seen over the last number of years.

A perfect example of that, sir, is in the estimates process. The third party would have never only offered seven days to debate estimates, but that's exactly what we saw earlier today. When the House leader introduced the estimates schedule, it was a schedule of seven days of debate of estimates. We are debating significant amounts of debt and spending, and we're going to do that in seven days.

The point, Mr. Speaker, is that one of the proposals when it comes to restoring trust is that we would have this opportunity to expand the role of committees, not shrink the role of committees by having the House sit every waking moment of the day and night, because we have done nothing to actually prevent the ability of government to have night sittings. In fact, we have opened all sorts of potential risks. I know that my hon. colleague from Strathmore-Brooks will speak about the fact that the PAC will be sitting, if this continues, at the exact same time that the House is also sitting, the point being that we had a real opportunity to make significant reforms to the Assembly, and what we have here is, unfortunately, a broken deal and a broken agreement that we had agreed to, which was 10 a.m.

So, Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to move an amendment to the motion. I will do that, but I will wait while it is distributed.

The Speaker: The amendment has been distributed?

Mr. Cooper: I think they're working on it. I can proceed if you wish, sir.

The Speaker: Yes. Let's proceed in the interests of time, which is so valuable.

Mr. Cooper: I move that Government Motion 19 be amended in part A, section 1, in Standing Order 3 as follows: in the proposed suborder (1) by striking out "9:00 a.m." wherever it appears and substituting "10:00 a.m." and in the proposed suborder (1.1) by striking out "9:00 a.m." and substituting "10:00 a.m."

Mr. Speaker, we have opportunity today to honour the agreement that was arrived at. We have the opportunity to go down that road of restoring trust, the trust that, unfortunately, is being taxed. I don't want to say that the trust is totally broken between the Government House Leader and me because that certainly wouldn't be an accurate reflection of where things are at, but of course that will be up to the Government House Leader. I am more than happy to continue to try and work with the Government House Leader, and I think a great opportunity to do that would be to accept our amendment, pass the amendment, and move forward with the original agreed-to time.

The Speaker: Clarification: you're now voting on an amendment to Government Motion 19. We're dealing with the amendment now, correct? I won't read it. I believe everybody has been provided a copy of that.

I would recognize the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, who would like to speak to the amendment.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise to speak to this amendment on changing the hours proposed from 9 a.m. to 10 a.m. It has always been the case that the government has recognized that the daily routine of members, depending on which side of the House they sit, is different and that opposition members are incredibly busy and incredibly committed in the mornings before Orders of the Day or question rotation begin.

That's just the way it is. That is the rotation of the day. They fully understand what it looks like for us. They fully understand our availability in the mornings . . . it can't be interpreted as anything but a very intentional decision to try and constrain the ability of the opposition to do its job, Mr. Speaker. That's all it can be seen as.

Those words are not mine. Those are the very words spoken by the Premier on March 5, 2013, when she was a member of the opposition.

I find it interesting and concerning, even alarming that the Premier has so quickly allowed herself to change her views on democracy in this institution. In opposition she fought vehemently for respect for opposition from the government, and she fought for the ability of her caucus and her staff and her team to be able to do the work that they had been hired by Albertans to do. How quickly things can change, or perhaps how much they can stay the same.

On May 5 the Premier stated: "Friends, I believe that change has finally come to Alberta." Mr. Speaker, clearly, some things don't seem to ever change. This is a reasoned and a reasonable amendment that will ensure that all Albertans in every constituency are served, regardless of which side of the House their MLA happens to sit on. This amendment will enable the opposition to fulfill its mandate and work effectively, which is something that several members, including the Premier and House leader, fought for every day. In the interest of Albertans and in the interest of a fair, accountable, and effective government I urge members to support this amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a useful exercise to go through the start times of other jurisdictions in our country. In British Columbia, to our west, the time for ordinary meetings: the House shall have two distinct sittings per day with the exception of Wednesdays. On Mondays they sit from 10 till noon and then from 1:30 to 6:30. On Tuesdays they sit from 10 a.m. till noon and then from 1:30 to 6:30. On Wednesdays they sit from 1:30 to 7 p.m. On Thursdays they sit from 10 a.m. until noon and then from 1:30 to 6 p.m.

Our neighbours to the east in Saskatchewan have ordinary sitting times as follows. On Mondays they sit from 1:30 p.m. to 10:30 p.m. with a recess between 5 and 7. On Tuesday they sit from 1:30 to 10:30 with a recess between 5 and 7. On Wednesdays they sit from 1:30 to 5. On Thursdays Saskatchewan's Legislature sits from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. On designated holidays the Assembly meets between 10 a.m. and 1 p.m. Mr. Speaker, I hope that this insight into our two neighbours' sitting times will help us to contribute to our discussion on this topic.

Closer to here at home I serve as the new chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. That committee meets weekly on Tuesday mornings. This is a vital committee of this Legislature, that meets regularly to go through the Auditor General's reports, Measuring Up reports, and other documents that are vital to ensuring that Albertans get value for their hard-earned tax dollars. It is an all-party committee chaired by the Official Opposition, that has one of the most important tasks that we have here – and I enjoy it greatly – working collaboratively with members of all sides. So far we have worked as a team that as much as possible does not recognize party: the opposition, the government, and the third party, working the way Albertans want them to work, together.

But also I happen to moonlight as the shadow minister of Finance for the Wildrose Party and caucus. That job requires me to be in the Legislature for all critical Finance debates. For me to do that job properly, I must be free in the mornings. I must not be called before the Public Accounts Committee to do the important work that they are doing there when I have equally important work to be done here.

Nobody is recommending that MLAs should not be working at 9 a.m. Most of us start long before then. Instead, we are asking that this amendment recognize that the important work of committees, private members on the government side, and opposition members on this side requires time beforehand. Ten a.m. is a reasonable compromise that will make this place more family-friendly for men and women and especially for parents but does not unduly harm the functioning of our standing committees and of opposition members. I am of the firm belief that 10 a.m. is the best time for our esteemed Legislature to begin the proceedings of the day as it will allow us to balance the many facets of our jobs as Members of the Legislative Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Does anyone wish to speak for five minutes? I recognize the leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm interested in the amendment that the House leader of the party with the third-most votes in the last election brought forward here, and I will say that it seems reasonable. I'm entertained by some of the previous commentary, particularly the comments around being available. I think people in this House from all sides work pretty hard and probably put in 12, 14 hours a day. So, for me, we're always available, and we have to plan our lives around the work. If there's any consideration, I think that what we need to remember is – and I'm in this category, so you can . . .

The Acting Speaker: My apologies. I just need to clarify with you whether you're responding to the previous speaker or you're speaking on your own terms.

Mr. McIver: Speaking on my own.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. McIver: May I continue?

The Acting Speaker: Yes, please.

Mr. McIver: All right. As I was saying, I think the big consideration – you know, I'm one of those people that does travel, and there are people from all sides of the House that do. But I would think that even those members that live in Edmonton would agree that a major consideration schedulewise is accommodating our colleagues from out of town. While I appreciate the concern for the local members to be home with their family or their kids or whatever, I find myself more concerned with those of us that are completely away from our family and our kids for three, four days at a time while we're here. No disrespect to those of us from Edmonton. I just think that that's a bigger consideration because many members of the House don't have that choice. The local members: bless your hearts. When you can get home to be with your family, good for you.

Having said that, whether we're in the House in the morning and preparing at the end of the day for the next day or, for me, in the House in the afternoon and preparing that morning for the House work that afternoon is kind of potayto, potahito. I'm going to be working all day, every day anyway, and I think most if not all members of this House are in the same position. At least, that's what I believe. I think we all work hard. We don't all agree, but I believe we all work hard.

I think this is reasonable, the change in start time from 9 to 10, so I may well support that. But I must also say that I don't intend to support the overall changes to the Standing Orders because I think they're actually pretty good the way they are, and they were developed over a number of years.

Having said that, I think this fairly minor amendment is a reasonable one. I heard the member that made the amendment, his explanation, and for the most part it sounded reasonable to me, so I'll support this. Again, not to give false hope to my colleagues over here, I think the current standing orders are pretty darn good.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Under Section 29(2)(a) does anyone wish to respond to the speaker? Five minutes.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened with great interest to what the Member for Calgary-Hays had to say about the proposed amendment before the House, and I had a few questions for him. I was just wondering if he could go into rather lengthy detail about the impacts that the changes to the standing orders, the amendment that has been proposed by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, would have on his morning routine.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. McIver: Extensive detail. Okay. Well, I'm not sure I can go into extensive detail. There are some things that we don't need to know about each other's morning routine. I think, hon. member, we can all agree on that.

You know what? It's a matter of, again, either getting up and preparing for the day's proceedings in the House or preparing the night before. That's not extensive. I apologize for that. That's what you asked for, but I don't think there's an extensive explanation needed. I just think that we all have to adjust our schedules. I think we all work hard, and that's my extensive explanation.

The Speaker: I believe we're still on the amendment, which we will refer to as A1. I'm trying to catch up.

The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka. Excuse me. The Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: It's okay. You're a great person.

The Speaker: You, too.

Mr. Cooper: You can call me whatever you want.

I'm just wondering if the member would be willing to comment. Given that there's no ability to limit a night sitting and given that it's possible that we might now sit at 9 a.m., then at 1:30, and then the House could still sit till 2, 3 a.m. – you know, you've experienced times in the House where you've basically been here all night. How would that affect your morning routine given that now you have to be at the Assembly by, say, 7 a.m. so you can prepare for a 9 a.m. start?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Mr. Speaker, well, you know, it's a good question. It's a great question, hon. member, and I think at the heart of it, it comes down to democracy. It's inconvenient for me and our party, and I would suggest that it's probably inconvenient for your party because neither one of us is in government.

Those with the most seats in here get to make the decisions at the end of the day. I recognize that. I've been on that side. I'm on this side. I do support democracy. One of the tools, weapons, if you will, mechanisms that you have in opposition to hold the government to account is to make it inconvenient for them when they're doing things you don't like. One of those methods, of course, is to keep them up all night. We have the ability to do that, and that ability will be there whether we start at 9 in the morning or 10 in the morning.

Actually, I recognize both sides of it. If the government actually believe they have important work to do, they need to get it done, and if the opposition takes a run at them and keeps them up all night, then I guess the government can respond in a number of different ways. They can fold to the opposition pressure, or they can stay up all night and get their agenda done.

You know, at the end of the day, if push comes to shove – one thing about it is that it's a little bit self-regulating, only because the human body is designed to sleep about a third of the time. So when those all-night events happen, of course, it will be inconvenient, perhaps, to get up at 7 to be ready for House sittings at 9. If we're up all night, getting up at 8 for 10 might not be all that dissimilar, at least for me, if I haven't had any sleep. For those that think I'm grumpy when I've had sleep, it doesn't get better when I haven't.

That's the best I can do for you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a) are there any further comments, questions?

Then I believe we proceed back to the discussion on the amendment, which I will refer to . . .

Ms Payne: Sorry. Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Ms Payne: My question would be particularly around: if the amendment is successful and we move to a 10 a.m., how would the member expect that we would get through all of the business of the day? I think it's important to recognize that the business of the House in this Assembly does take a certain amount of time and that by allowing ourselves to begin at 9 a.m., that provides time for this important business.

The Speaker: It's my understanding, hon. member, that, in fact, under 29(2)(a) it's a total of five minutes, thus the reason I was moving to further debate on the amendment.

Mr. Orr: I really do support the intent, the goal of limiting the night sittings. I think it will contribute to the effectiveness of the House. But I suppose I would also like to speak on behalf of all of us on both sides of the House that our newbies – the planning and preparation before we come into this House truly is equally as important as what actually happens in this House. We do, all of us, I believe, need time. At least I know I do.

While I recognize the value of trying to move away from some of the night sittings, sometimes we swing the pendulum from one extreme to the other; therefore, I would speak in favour of the motion that 10 o'clock is probably the right solution; 9 o'clock might be a little bit too much of a swing.

I do want to see the House work productively, and we will not do our best work if we don't have adequate time to prepare for it. Of course, as has already been said, none of us arrive here just at 10 o'clock when we start now, and we won't arrive just at 9 when we start then or 10 if that's what it is. But I do fear that we might overreact and then find ourselves meeting for preparations and ending up, alternatively, having to shove committee meetings into the night, which would be totally counterproductive. We'd be right back where we were.

I really do think that 10 o'clock is probably the better median solution. If we need to meet on Mondays as well in order to get to that point between us, then personally I think that would be the right solution for us. We all have work to do, and part of our day is doing that other work, communicating, meeting with other people. Giving ourselves at least an hour in the morning to do a lot more of that work I think will make us much more effective as MLAs.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I know it doesn't show, but I, too, am a newbie here.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On a couple of, I would say, practical . . .

The Speaker: My apologies again. Under 29(2)(a) are there questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I noticed that the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka had referred to possibly working through Mondays to get the business of the House through. I notice that we don't have any amendments to the times that we are sitting on Mondays in the amendment that's been presented to the House. I was just wondering if the member agrees with the times that have been proposed in the amendment or if he's suggesting a further amendment to additional time that the House would be sitting on Mondays. I would appreciate some clarification on that point.

Mr. Orr: Good question. I think we should do one motion at a time, so I will retract that aspect of it, rather than muddy the waters, and leave it as it is for now.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other questions? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, I'd like to address the hon. member. Why is it that you think that every other province meets at 10 a.m.? Short of Nova Scotia, I think they meet on Fridays at 9 a.m. Why do you think that – I mean, in all the other provinces that seems to work. It's a good function of those other Legislatures. Perhaps you could expand on why you think that that would be a good time. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I wish I had been in some of those Assemblies, but I have not been, so it might be a bit of a stretch, but I suspect it's for some of the reasons I've already said. I believe there is other important work to be done, and being well prepared for when we actually get there is probably one of the primary reasons.

The Speaker: Any other questions under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Connolly: I would actually just like to clarify for the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View that Ontario sits at 9 a.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, and on Mondays they meet at 10:30 a.m.

The Speaker: Any more questions under 29(2)(a)?

I would now again recognize the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In regard to this timing of 9 a.m. or 10 a.m. I would like to bring up a purely technical issue here, one that I've experienced myself, that might help us in the decision-making here. I have had a number of technical problems with the computer, phone, and printer early in the morning during preparation for the work that we do here. If we are going to move our time to start to 9 in the morning, I'm going to be here at about 6 to 6:30 to start my day. If I have a technical problem, you all know IT isn't going to be there to give me a hand, and I am technologically illiterate. I'm not going to be able to fix my computer, my printer, or whatever else in the world has managed to collapse on me in time for me to get my work done to scoot on over here and be ready for 9 o'clock. So from a purely and, I'll say, selfish motive, since I'm not 12 years old and I don't know how to run much of this stuff, I need time. I have had three technological failures in the morning so far, and we've only been here just a few months. I would be very concerned if we had to start at 9 o'clock and I have a problem and IT isn't really ready to get going until 8:30 in the morning. They are extremely good at what they do, but they are not superman and superwoman either.

The second technical issue is that every single one of us in this Assembly have things going on in our constituencies, and the things that happen in our constituencies don't stop just because we are here in session. Morning time is our time to talk to our constituency staff and catch up on whatever fires may be burning out of control, whatever major issues may have arisen in the night. We have had some major issues that have happened in the night: serious accidents, fires, things that we need to be prepared for, that the media is after us for a comment for their morning news show. There is much more that each and every one of us in this House does than just sit here and listen to great, long oratories and vote on things. We have stuff going on back home in our constituencies. Oftentimes that one hour or hour and a half in the morning is when I talk to my constituency assistant so that I am brought up to speed on what's going on back home.

If we're going to be starting at 9 o'clock now, that just shoves everything back earlier in the day, giving us less time to do our job. I do not believe it is in our best interest as legislators nor as representatives of the people that we start any earlier than 10 o'clock. We need time to prepare, we need time to recover from technological failures – and they're going to happen to me – and we are going to need time to talk to our constituency assistants and get things sorted out down there that need sorting out. So please take these things into consideration before we start moving things to a 9 o'clock start time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments with respect to 29(2)(a)? Please proceed.

Mr. Cyr: To my colleague: when are you going to be able to get back to your constituents when you're in the House all day?

Mr. MacIntyre: Heaven only knows, Mr. Speaker, but it isn't going to be in a timely fashion. We have had in my constituency, in just the short time that we have been elected, three emergencies, two of which were in the morning, one of which concerned my own family, and I would not have liked to have been in this House when those things occurred. We dealt with them in a timely, quick fashion in the morning. I don't know about the rest of you, but I shut my phone off when I'm in this Chamber. I need that time in the morning – and I'm sure all the rest of you do, too – to take care of things back home. I hope I answered your question.

The Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, did you wish to speak to the amendment? Please proceed.

Mr. Cyr: For myself, I guess one of my concerns in all of this is the fact that we're going to be putting more of a load on our staff. The fact is that we've got contracts with all the staff. I'm wondering: with these changes that we're going to be doing as well as going to 9 o'clock in the morning and possibly to regular evening sittings, what are we doing to compensate these staff? Has it been worked into the budgets? This is something that we need to be addressing. As a father I know that I miss my family. These staff need to be recognized for the time that they're giving up.

Now, time in lieu of, obviously, is a wonderful avenue that many staff use, and this is something that has to be used within three months. So during the wonderful time right now, if they are doing time in lieu of, our staff need to use this time probably around January. For me, I would say that taking extra time off in January may not be the best thing for me and my family as my daughters are in school. What we need to be looking at is: exactly what are the impacts going to be to our staff, what are the impacts going to be to my colleagues, and what impacts are we looking at for the rest of Alberta? The question here that we need to be asking is: have the contracts been looked into to make sure that we are not going to be creating a whole lot more cost on the government? Are we looking at how we can mitigate some of these costs without impacting the family life of our wonderful staff and the MLAs? What we need to be working towards is limiting the night sittings and bringing up a consistent schedule that our staff can expect to go through.

Now, I would like to also mention on these changes we are making that we haven't consulted the stakeholders here, which would be the staff. Have we gone to the staff and asked them if this is something that they're going to be willing to take? The fact is that these contracts are now written. The government stated earlier that they weren't willing to breach contracts. Well, that's fine. So now we've got contracts that we're going to need to alter. Has the government considered the fact that we may need to alter contracts that are coming up?

Now, I don't know about you, but whenever somebody starts telling me to alter contracts, I always get a little nervous.

An Hon. Member: What about public-sector workers?

Mr. Cyr: Public-sector workers, absolutely. The fact is that our legislative staff are public-sector workers, and they need to be thought of in this process. The fact is that when we're looking at who and what we need to do, we need to be looking at how it will impact them. What is it that's going to change?

When the Wildrose brought this forward, we were asking for two extra hours, and now we're looking at night sittings and three extra hours. This is significant. This is very significant. If we haven't gone to the legislative staff and gotten their opinions on exactly what they feel is appropriate, then this could end up having a lot of consequences that we are not actually looking into. Instead of being proactive, we're being reactive in all of this. In summary here, I would like to just ask: in the end, have we done the work that is needed to see if we are going to be impacting our staff?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Questions to the hon. member under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. The member seems to be suggesting that for the hours during which he is on the Legislature Grounds, his staff is here whenever he is. That seems to suggest that perhaps their current contracts have them here along with him until the early morning hours. Perhaps he can speak to whether or not this is something he already requires of his staff and provide further clarification as to whether or not this is going to be as onerous as he is potentially suggesting?

Mr. Cyr: Well, again, when we're looking at staff contracts, we all have to look into our own contracts as well as the government. The fact is that when we're sitting, we want to limit the impact to our staff. That is just a fact. We do have a few staff that are here with us, but most evenings we don't have staff. The fact is that when we are going through this, they're going to need to spend more hours, taken away from the hours that they've lost in the morning and the evening, and spend them working on our specific portfolios or questions.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to suggest to the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake to contact the IT department. They have a very strong training program, and you can avail yourself of the training there.

Also, to the Member for Drumheller-Stettler: the average age is well above 12. It is around 45 within our caucus.

Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: The point of order is noted. I agree with the member. When you are under 29(2)(a), you can only speak to, in this case, the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, and you included another member's question. I would rule that your question is out of order.

We're still dealing with the member. Under 29(2)(a) are there any other comments with respect to that member's presentation? The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. I understand the desires around when we might want to be at work, but there are realities around when we do need to be at work. I know from my experience in public education that all of our elementary schools start between 8 and 8:40, and families found it very feasible to be there. Teachers were often there hours before that preparing. These are some of the realities that we face as working people in Alberta. I'm proud for us to have the reputation of being working people in this Legislature, and I think 9 o'clock is not an unrealistic work time to start. I guess my question to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake is: what time does the member think is most appropriate for us to be emulating to members of the public? Most of them are at work far before the beginning time. The question to the member is around: what exactly is it that he thinks is unrealistic around a 9 a.m. start time for the formal beginning?

Mr. Cyr: Thank you for the question. We're always at work – it's just a fact – and expecting our staff to always be at work is a problem. Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other questions to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake under 29(2)(a)? Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you. Something that I hadn't thought of before, when I was talking about my constituency assistant, is that I have an employment contract with that person to start at a particular time of the day. If we're going to start at 9 o'clock, I can't alter that contract now, and I'm toast. What time does your constituency assistant's contract start?

Mr. Cyr: My constituency staff starts at 8:30. I'm fortunate.

An Hon. Member: Perfect.

Mr. Cyr: It is a wonderful situation. But the fact is that it's not my constituency staff or myself that I'm looking out for. There are other MLAs out there with satellite offices, and we need to be concerned about being able to get to those as well. Thank you for the question. That is a concern.

The Speaker: I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will rise to speak in favour of this amendment, and I do so to highlight some of the challenges those of us in smaller parties face.

Now, I concur with the opposition House leaders and other members who have raised the concern for their staff. I signed up for this. We all signed up for this. As we were reminded on the very first day, being an MLA in this Assembly and being an MLA is a 24-hour-a-day, 365-day job – we know that – and I say, in all sincerity, that my observation of every single member that I've interacted with in this Assembly, on both sides of the House, shows that to be true. We all work tremendously hard. This is not about what time we come to work because, as my hon. colleague has said, we're always at work.

However, I have an objection to the 9 a.m. sitting for the sake of my staff. I do believe that it actually impairs our ability to adequately represent Albertans and to do our job. It is already a challenge to come to this House adequately prepared. There is a tremendous volume of information to read through, and there is simply a minimum amount of time required to do research, to be briefed, and to digest this information as we do that important work on behalf of Albertans here in this House. While I recognize the tremendous work that every member of this House does, it is especially true for those of us at this end of the House, who perhaps do not have colleagues that we can rely on to trade off work.

As it stands, owing to the late start of this session, the schedule for estimates has been compressed. What is usually undertaken in four weeks has been compressed to two, which is a direct result of the choice the government made to delay the sitting of this House and the presentation of the budget. Now, I don't know why they did that, but it is a fact that we are here starting later.

An Hon. Member: The election.

Mr. Clark: There is some suggestion that it may have had something to do with the federal election. But be that as it may, we are now required to have that compressed schedule.

Now, as a result, there are times when members will be in committee in the evening, have to sit at 9 a.m., attend Orders of the Day at 1:30, and then attend another committee meeting again later that afternoon or that evening. Again, I can handle that. That's what I signed up for. I think it's what we all signed up for. But for our staff, who need to be briefing us for estimates and briefing us for question period and bill debates, that's a tremendous burden. The extra hour from 9 to 10 will make a significant difference. In the end, it's about our ability to do the job that we've been elected to do, to represent Albertans properly, which is why I will vote in favour of this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any questions of the member under 29(2)(a)? I would recognize the Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my turn. Thank you. I'm pleased to speak to the proposed amendment. I know that in the past the third party was pretty loose and fast with the rules, but it would be nice to see some accountability in this system. We have a real opportunity here today. We had hoped that this new government would bring a new perspective, having previously served in the opposition role – you know very well – the difference being, you know, that “new” and “blue” is getting a little bit murky these days.

The Government House Leader previously told us that we would be sitting at 10 a.m., not 9 a.m. Now, I know it seems like an hour is not really a lot, but an extra hour can go a long way for our staff in preparing the day's activities. Meetings are often booked in the morning, before the start of the afternoon sitting, and now that we're sitting all morning, afternoon, and all evening, we have very little time to meet with stakeholders or concerned constituents.

Another concern that I have with the morning sitting as it is proposed is the committee meetings. Session is the ideal time to meet as the out-of-town MLAs are all present in Edmonton. By moving to all-morning sittings, this essentially eliminates any time to meet. Important committee work will be crammed into what limited time is available in this busy schedule. What? When – 6 a.m., 5 a.m. – are we going to do this important work?

Mr. Speaker, committees are meant to be a vital part of our democratic system. I did have sincere hopes that under this new government we would have seen a change, as did the rest of Alberta, and a move to more respect for the independence and importance of committees.

I touched on it earlier, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to return to the matter of staffing. An extra hour in the morning of sitting would give us in the opposition as well as the hard-working staffers on all sides of the Legislature just a little more time to prepare for the day, including whatever other morning routines we don't need to hear about.

The Premier said as an opposition MLA, "It is particularly necessary to respect the rights of the minority . . . when you have a small opposition, and they cannot simply be here for 18 hours a day." Mr. Speaker, we all know that burnout is a real thing. We want the best and the brightest to be coming to this Legislature to debate matters of vital importance in our province. As the Premier herself once suggested, 18 hours a day is not the way to do that.

A move to 9 a.m. start times could have the potential to be the start of a slippery slope. Votes in this Chamber are something that I take very seriously. I have a responsibility to the people of Airdrie to be the best representative possible. That includes making informed votes on legislation that appears before this House. With morning, noon, and night sittings it would greatly diminish the time to prepare and to make informed votes for all Members of this Legislative Assembly.

If there is one thing I know we need in this Legislature, it is to work on ways to improve our democratic system, not diminish it. I know we have a larger caucus than the NDP had when you were in opposition. However, the workload is still the same. Staff will have virtually no time to prepare for the upcoming session – as I hope you know, this is what they do in the morning – especially if we still have an evening sitting. With this proposal we will still be sitting 12-plus hours a day. There is no way our staff will be able to keep up with the crushing workload.

It's all well and good for the government to sit for 12-plus hours. You drive the agenda. You have the ability to plan ahead. Plus, you have an army of bureaucrats to call on for help. We in opposition: we're often reacting. Our staff help research bills and help draft speaking notes. With this constant sitting they will burn out.

An amendment like this was not even passed by the most malicious third-party government. As I had previously stated, I really had hoped that this session would be the start of a new way of looking at legislating and a collaborative approach, where we can all come together as Members of this Legislative Assembly regardless of our political stripe and make our system work better.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I hope you will consider my proposal.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I would urge you to think about using words like "malicious" based on other examples of that discussion in this room.

The hon. Member for Calgary-North West under 29(2)(a).

Ms Jansen: Absolutely. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the Member for Airdrie for referring to us as "loose and fast." It's not that I get called that very often, and I hope it improves my street cred.

I want to bring up a couple of things. First of all, the member stated that we shouldn't be here 18 hours a day, yet I think I remember back three years that filibustering by this party kept us here till 5 or 6 in the morning, so perhaps you ought not be mudslinging.

Then to the comment about the crushing workload of your staff: you know, having your bum in a seat for an extra hour a day does not constitute any workload for your staff. It means you've got your bum in a seat for an extra hour. So I will say this. It is a far worse use of our time to be frittering away the afternoon when we could be doing responsible government business. This is the kind of behaviour that will ensure that you're never the government.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a) are there any other questions with respect to the Member for Airdrie?

I would recognize the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's been a lot said about the time, whether we go at 9 o'clock or 10 o'clock, and I think that it's been an excellent debate. I guess the point that I want to make is that in this House we have gentlemen's agreements between House leaders. Three different caucuses are represented, from what I understand – and I am new here, so I'm not sure if there are other people involved. But an agreement has been made, a gentlemen's agreement, and it was broken. I think that that's important to state. Because it was broken, it's caused problems with the House.

We have people throughout Alberta that are looking to us for leadership, and one of the things that they look to us for is being honourable. One of the honourable points is being able to make sure that when we make an agreement, we keep it. That's how things work in business, that's how things work in families, and that's how things should work here in the House. I think that it's important for us to remember that the problem started because this agreement was broken. I don't think that that should be downplayed. We need to be able to set a high standard for the people whom we represent. They expect it of us, and they expect us to be able to act in a way that is honourable.

That's all I had to say about this. Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a) are there any questions for the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner?

I believe I would be now calling upon the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I managed to be elected to this Assembly, somehow, I knew that there would be a lot of learning that would be entailed in coming to this establishment, in trying to figure out how government actually works, and I knew that I would get opportunities to come before this Legislature and to speak and to debate and to try to convince and to listen to each other and then to respond to each other, so I find it a privilege to be here and to be able to be involved in this discussion that we're having today.

I believe that it's important that as MLAs we have the time to work into the issues that we face every day. I know that as a teacher that didn't happen while I was actively trying to teach in front of the kids, that there was a necessary period of time – I was very interested when the hon. Minister of Health talked about the profession of teaching. You were absolutely correct when you were saying, you know, that there is an element of time that's necessary for teachers to build in to be able to be effective in the classroom. I know that as a teacher I always appreciated and I respected those administrations and those superintendents that built in days for teachers to be able to meet with other teachers, to be able to engage in discussion, to be able to plan together, to be able to work together, to be able to help engage the students in my classroom.

Every institution has its own rhythms. In teaching, there's absolutely a rhythm to the teaching profession, to the classroom. For those of you that have ever been in there, you know that much of the work that we do as teachers happens outside of that classroom. I know that when, five years ago, I made the commitment to coach a basketball team and at the same time would have new courses in my class, it meant that I had to take the time in my summer holidays to come into the school. They trusted me with a key; sometimes I wondered why. They allowed me into that school, where I could then sit down and plan my curriculum for that coming year. I know that I came in every day for three or four hours during the summer just to ensure that I had my 20-2 curriculum under control so that when I was in front of my kids and I was also trying to coach basketball, I would have the ability to do my job.

I guess the concern that I've got when it comes to the 9 o'clock start is this. I know it's been said by many people, probably far more eloquently than myself. It's just that as new Members of the Legislative Assembly we all have a learning curve that goes straight up. That's fair. That's honest. That goes on both sides. We need to consider just what the pressures are that we face as MLAs that will allow us to enhance democracy. That's what this is really supposed to be all about. This conversation is supposed to be about enhancing the ability of this House to be democratic.

I would speak to this amendment and to a 10 o'clock start because I believe that it will help me, personally, be a better MLA, and as I become a better MLA, I then can be a better democratic politician. I know that for many of you there are going to be times when you're coming into this Legislature having travelled long distances to get here. That 9 o'clock start is going to be an issue. That's just a reality. You all have talked about the fact that you've got kids, that you've got a life outside of this Legislature and this Legislative Assembly, so a 10 o'clock sitting: yeah, I think it's reasonable. I don't think that we're stretching the boundaries by saying: oh, you know, this Legislature is going to be significantly better if we start at 9 o'clock. As a matter of fact, I would argue that it's probably going to be just a little bit better if we're starting at 10.

So I would speak to this amendment. When I look at the committee workload that I have, the constituency work that I have to do, the travel distance at times coming from Drayton Valley-Devon, the fact that I've got to have time to study the issues and to consider the bills that are being brought before this House, that I have to be able to work with the LAO and my outreach officer, I believe that a 10 o'clock time would allow this Legislature to function a little more efficiently and effectively.

I know that we often had the discussion in my real life, when I was a teacher, about whether or not we should change the school year, whether we should change the semester system. I wish the Minister of Education was here because I really, honestly believe, after 30 years of teaching, that if we changed our semester system so that it ended before Christmas, it would be better for the students. I use that as an analogy to suggest that maybe a 10 o'clock start would be better for this House. It would make it run a little more efficiently and a little more effectively.

I believe that in a democracy we have to look for those things in this House that will allow for both a strong government and a strong opposition. Democracy works best when the government of the day and the opposition are both doing their roles, doing them effectively, and doing them efficiently. So if a 10 a.m. start allows us to do that – and I would argue that it does allow us just a little bit better to do our jobs both as a government and as an opposition – then that's good for democracy, and I would speak in support of this amendment.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, is your question with respect to the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon? Or you'll speak to the amendment?

Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) with respect to the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon?

Then I will recognize the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate on this amendment.

The Speaker: So as I understand it, you're asking for an adjournment of the debate on the amendment. Is that correct?

[The voice vote indicated that the motion to adjourn debate on amendment A1 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:19 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

The Speaker: I'd like to remind the members that if they leave or enter the room, they must do so prior to the bell terminating.

The Speaker: I would recognize the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the adjournment.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate on the main motion.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Constituency Week

- Mr. Mason moved:
Be it resolved that, notwithstanding Standing Order 3(6), the only constituency week for the 2015 fall sitting shall be held the week of November 9, 2015, with the Assembly reconvening on Monday, November 16, 2015.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Did you wish to speak to the motion?

Mr. Mason: Well, Madam Speaker, this simply moves the week to the week that includes Remembrance Day, and this is with a view to the fact that I'm sure all of us have important events to attend to on that Wednesday in our constituencies, so we feel that it is a more appropriate week to take the constituency break. I hope that members will support that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wish to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's been quite the afternoon here in the House, and I'm sure folks have had a fair fill of hearing from me this afternoon.

An Hon. Member: It's never enough.

Mr. Cooper: Never enough.

I will be relatively brief. In fact, if we can make this very similar to the budget speech, where every time I stop they clap, that'd be great. Let's try.

Madam Speaker, I rise this evening just because I want to quickly highlight a couple of things. Members on this side of the House will certainly be supporting this motion as we fully agree with the importance of being in the constituency during that critical period of time for Remembrance Day. The first poppy ceremony was a great reminder this morning of the important sacrifice that's been made by so many before us. In some respects, you know, what we do here in the House, hopefully, will honour those who have gone before us in defending some of those freedoms and our ability to have such robust debate and discussion.

I do just want to raise a quick point with you, something that I know the table officers and other staff of this place have identified as one of the things that could be very helpful to them. I'm sure that the Government House Leader will be aware of this as he has also received, I would guess, notifications from the Speaker's office in the past around producing a sessional calendar immediately following an election. One of the big reasons why we're here and needing to move stuff around is because the government of today chose not to or was unable to or, whatever the case may be, didn't do that.

There are a number of things – and we spent a lot of time today talking about making the House work better – and I think that this is one of them, producing a sessional calendar. One of the recommendations that we made, that I spoke about earlier today, in the Restoring Trust document, that I will be happy to table tomorrow at the appropriate time, is just that, producing a sessional calendar so that all members of this Assembly, both on the government and the opposition side, all members of your staff in the Speaker's office, all of the table officers can schedule the efficiencies of this House right around that calendar. Not only producing the calendar: we've seen in years past times where there has been very little desire on behalf of the government to stay committed to that schedule.

I just wanted to highlight that very briefly today. This sessional calendar would have been very helpful. We even could have fixed this challenge in the previous session so that all of the members of the Assembly could have already been planning as if they would be in the constituency. I just wanted to highlight that for you tonight, and we will be supporting this move.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wish to speak to the motion?

Seeing none, the Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Mason: No.

The Deputy Speaker: No? Then I will call the question on that.

[Government Motion 15 carried]

Evening Sittings

16. Mr. Mason moved:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1) commencing November 23, 2015, the Assembly shall meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings for consideration of government business for the duration of the 2015 fall sitting unless on motion by the Government House Leader made before 6 p.m., which may be made orally and without notice, the Assembly is adjourned to the following sitting day.

[Government Motion 16 carried]

Address in Reply to Speech from the Throne

17. Mr. Mason moved:
Be it resolved that Standing Order 19(1)(c) be waived and that the Speaker put every question necessary to dispose of the motion for an address in reply to the Lieutenant Governor's speech of June 15, 2015, on December 2, 2015, at 5:45 p.m. unless the debate on the motion is previously concluded.

[Government Motion 17 carried]

Provincial Fiscal Policies

13. Mr. Ceci moved:
Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate October 27: Mr. Cooper]

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak?

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Cooper: I think we've made some good progress today.

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, with that in view and in view of the limited progress on a number of items that we've made today, I move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:46 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, October 29, 2015

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Let us reflect. As we conclude for the week our work in this Assembly, we renew our energies with thanks so that we may continue our work with the people in our constituencies, that we represent.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: I understand we have some school groups today. Welcome.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the grade 6 class of Neerlandia public Christian school. I'm proud to say that Neerlandia public Christian school was the school I attended for the first nine years of my education. As well, all five of my children attended there. With them today is their teacher, whom I consider a personal friend, Mr. Jim Bosma, and chaperones Dr. Egbert de Waal, Mrs. Mistie Renfert, Mr. Keith Wiart, Mr. Wesley Vold, and my niece-in-law Mrs. Sherri Hiemstra. I would invite the class, their teacher, and the chaperones to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you a distinct group of students who are leaders in our community today and will continue to be leaders in our community tomorrow. I had the pleasure of visiting this class from George P. Nicholson school a few weeks ago. Their teacher, Lorelei Campbell, joins them today with parents Coral Haggett, Darina Alyward, Tracey Kalke, Lisa Ladd, and Lingyun Huang, who are no small part of helping them become leaders of tomorrow. If they would please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 46 students from the Centre for Learning@Home, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Meadowlark. They are a fully accredited, publicly funded Christian school offering distance learning, summer programs, and home-schooling services. With the students is their recreational co-ordinator, Samantha Quantz, and some of their parents. I would like to invite them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other school groups today?

I'd like to, then, call on the Minister of Advanced Education and Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a valued group of employees from apprenticeship and industry training within the Ministry of Advanced Education. They are here today as part of a team building and recognition day. These fine people are to be commended for their hard work and dedication. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. I ask that they rise as I call their names: Terry Grunsell, who organized the visit today, Elaine Cope, Kevin Martin, Jenna Sarty, Richelle Waters, Ashley Brightnose, Anne Rothery, Emily Nhan, Digna Ferrer, and Julia Nhan. Please join me in giving them all the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Minister of Transportation and Minister of Infrastructure, you have a guest today?

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a wonderful opportunity for me and a great honour to introduce to you first of all my lovely wife, Karin Olson, who is here with her sister Denise Nord and her husband, Larry Nord, who are visiting us from Duluth, Minnesota, where my wife is originally from. It's wonderful to have a great visit with them. I would ask that they please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks and Minister Responsible for the Status of Women.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my delight today to introduce to you and through you staff from across five ministries who join us here today. These dedicated staff are participating in the government of Alberta leadership program and are here on a team building exercise. They will be touring our Legislature, seeing the House in session, and later meeting with me. I'd like to read their names now as they stand: Kata Jhukoutaiy, professional services and health benefits, Department of Health; Emily Sambhudyal, project manager, Service Alberta; Ryan Eberhardt, unit supervisor, Justice and Solicitor General, young offender centre; Alexandra Bykowski, policy analyst in my own Department of Environment and Parks; and Adele Powell, contract administration engineer, Transportation.

I am proud of the incredible work of our public servants across Alberta. It is my honour to have them here today. I ask that they receive the warm welcome from our Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you two employees of Edmonton Meals on Wheels. Caitlin Fleming serves as their engagement and fund development manager, and Ashleigh Pardy serves as their fund development and communications co-ordinator. I'm sure that all members are familiar with the good work that Meals on Wheels does, providing healthy, nutritious food to those who are mobility impaired. I'd like to ask Caitlin and Ashleigh to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you Mr. Don Crisall. I have known Don for about eight years, and I'm proud to call him a friend. Don is a strong activist and very socially conscious. Don is well known to many in this House, and they can attest to his dedication to the cause. He is also my mentor. He has supported and encouraged me to accept the opportunities that have come my way and has always believed that I can accomplish anything I put my mind to even when I have doubts. Don, could you please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Well, every day it looks better and better for Liberals in Alberta, and it's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you three members of the Alberta Liberal Party, stalwarts, in fact, in Edmonton: Dr. Donna Wilson, Mrs. Irene Hunter, and Harpreet Gill. All three individuals are driven by the cause of making this province a better place to live through their public service. This past spring Harpreet and Donna both stood for election in the ridings of Edmonton-Mill Creek and Edmonton-Riverview, with Irene serving brilliantly as Donna's campaign manager. All were concerned that the budget leaves Edmonton on hold with respect to its hospital infrastructure and are here to remind this government particularly that Edmonton and infrastructure for hospitals and health care has to be a priority. We're all sitting in this place because of the diligent work of volunteers like Donna, Irene, and Harpreet, and I'll ask them to rise and receive the warm greetings of the Legislature.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is my honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly a constituent and leader in Alberta's postsecondary community, Dr. David Docherty. He is the president of Mount Royal University, and Mount Royal University adds a tremendous amount of vitality to the already vital constituency of Calgary-Elbow. No stranger to Legislatures, as a political science professor Dr. Docherty wrote a comprehensive but very accessible book outlining the role of Canadian Legislatures and our role as legislators. I encourage everyone to pick up a copy if you haven't already. David, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly three people who work tirelessly both inside and outside my constituency. Pathways Community Services Association is an aboriginal not-for-profit which engages with communities with a focus on meeting the needs of children, youth, and families. I'd like to introduce Ronni Abraham, associate director; Michelle Jones, communications and advocacy lead; Jennifer Fox, team leader of the mentor home program. I welcome them, and I ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Affordable Housing in Calgary

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am a strong proponent of affordable housing in this province and for my constituency. In fact, the people of Calgary's greatest constituency, Calgary-Klein, are also strong advocates for affordable housing. The work of the Thorncliffe Greenview and the Highland Park community associations comes to mind. While we share this common goal, we also share the knowledge that ending homelessness must be done using a housing first model rather than a readiness first approach.

Madam Speaker, the people of Calgary-Klein have endured several years of uncertainty in regard to what type of housing will be built in a hotel located at Edmonton Trail and McKnight Boulevard that was purchased by the Calgary drop-in centre. Without going into detail, the consultation process between the proponents of the impacted communities regarding the use of this building was neither robust nor clear on direction. As a result, the Calgary city Planning Commission recently rejected the application that would allow the plans to move forward. Again, without going into detail, this building was purchased in part using a provincial government grant issued by the previous government. The previous government then attempted to retract the money due to the fact that what was proposed in the grant and the reality of the project did not align.

Madam Speaker, I'm asking our government today to consider the alternate possibilities for affordable housing that this project presents. This land may prove to be a worthwhile site for affordable housing, including seniors' housing, particularly if a project can be developed in partnership between the Calgary drop-in centre and a proven expert in the housing first model such as the Calgary Homeless Foundation. I would ask the government to encourage such a partnership, with the community's full support. Doing this is in the best interests of everyone, including the communities, the drop-in centre as well as those struggling to attain affordable housing.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Diwali

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Right now Indo-Canadians across the country are getting ready to celebrate Diwali, the festival of lights. This five-day celebration celebrates victory over defeat, good over evil, and triumph over despair. For Hindus everywhere the act of lighting the diya reminds us that no matter how dark the night may be, light will always prevail.

Diwali is a reminder that in order to reach a brighter future for all of us, we must first dedicate ourselves to service and kindness to others. This message and this meaning reach beyond the Hindu community and into the hearts of all well-meaning people. Diwali is now celebrated all over the world and in important institutions like the Canadian House of Commons and the White House. Indeed, at the end of the day, we all want peace and prosperity for our families and for our communities, and Diwali is a time to reflect on how best we can achieve those goals.

This year is a very special Diwali for me because I'm here among all of you, celebrating the cultural diversity and embracing the pluralism, in the temple of democracy, freedom, and peace. By celebrating Diwali in the Alberta Legislature, we embrace Alberta's rich cultural diversity and pluralism.

I want to close by wishing good health, wealth, peace, and prosperity upon all of you, my new peers, and all Albertans. Though we may disagree, at the end of the day we are working towards the same goals for Alberta, our great province, which is down but not out. Let us use this Diwali to reflect on the privileges we enjoy as Albertans and how we can best use those gifts to help others. Saal Mubarak. Namaste.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ashura

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today I would like to talk about the day of Ashura, meaning the day of remembrance, which was on October 24 this year. Ashura is on the 10th day of Muharram, and Muharram is the first month in the Islamic lunar calendar. According to Muslims Ashura is the most tragic, painful, and mournful day in the history of Islam and in this world. On the day of Ashura Muslims, particularly Shiites, also known as Shias, commemorate the martyrdom of Prophet Muhammad's grandson Hussain. Shiites mourn this melancholy occasion by wearing black clothes, reciting poems and prose, slapping their chests, and parading through the streets to remember the struggles Hussain, his family, and companions shouldered to save the religion of Islam and spread the message of peace in the world.

It was the day when the army of Yazid, consisting of approximately 30,000 people, killed 72 companions of Hussain, even his six-month-old son. Not only that, but they blocked water for Hussain's family and comrades on the 4th of Muharram, massacred Hussain, and ruthlessly imprisoned the mothers, sisters, daughters, wives, and children who accompanied Hussain, in 680 AD, on the plains of Karbala in Iraq. The defence of Hussain against Yazid's attack in Karbala was the fight against injustice, oppression, and tyranny. It was the fight where Hussain was victorious not because he killed Yazid but because he sacrificed his family and his life for the sake of freedom, justice, and peace. Thereafter, the religion of Islam was preserved as a true example of freedom, honour, dignity, justice, and peace for his successors.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

STARS Air Ambulance

Miranda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Last month I had the opportunity to visit the Shock Trauma Air Rescue Society for their 30th anniversary celebrations.

In 1985 a young mother died en route from her rural home to a faraway hospital. Dr. Gregory Powell became deeply moved and touched by what happened. He had a vision to change this reality for all Albertans, and he based his experience on having worked in a MASH hospital during the Vietnam War. He saw how helicopters could actually make an impact on reducing the time to get patients needing immediate care to the hospitals that could provide that care.

Madam Speaker, yesterday's vision is today's reality. STARS is an integral partner in Alberta's health care system. While most of us are aware of STARS' red helicopters, one of the other things that I learned in my visit was that they have 24 dedicated staff and actually cover workers working in Alberta's north in the oil industry, providing 24/7 care. As we all know here, we can all feel very safe about the fact that they are there to provide the service. I, of course, wish that none of us will ever have to rely on that service, but I think all of us can breathe a little easier knowing that they are there and provide that service for all of us and for all Albertans. So today I want them to know how much this Chamber, this government appreciates the work that they do.

Thank you very much.

Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Job Creation and Protection

Mr. Jean: At job sites and offices across Alberta human resources staff are making the rounds, delivering the news: you don't have a job anymore. Families across Alberta wake up to the awful anxiety of not knowing if today is the day mom or dad loses their job. Yesterday Devon Energy had to cut 200 good-paying Alberta jobs. Gone. Vanished. This NDP budget does nothing to help them: higher taxes and more uncertainty. How will this Premier's budget do anything to stop the job losses in Alberta?

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, which is a lovely thing to say, by the way. Let me just say at the outset that our government is and has been, right from the very beginning, very concerned about the strain and the stress and the anxiety that job losses mean for families, for their neighbours, and for the communities in which those people live. That's, of course, why we put so much focus on that in our budget this time. But I wanted to say as well – the member opposite is talking about insecurity and instability – that, quite frankly, if we had moved forward on a fraction of the cuts that those folks over there had proposed in the last election, we would be blinded by the level of instability and insecurity faced by Albertans.

Mr. Jean: You're right. It is a fraction; 2 per cent of the total budget was our proposal in the last election.

This NDP government seems determined to make Alberta's industries less competitive. While businesses are being hammered, the NDP is plowing ahead with risky economic experiments, and their so-called $5,000 jobs grant is a laughingstock among the business community in Alberta. No one believes it will create one single job. To the Premier: how will her $5,000 jobs grant help any of the people who lost their jobs at Devon or elsewhere in Alberta or any other company that is laying off workers?

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The idea with the jobs incentive program is that it will incent roughly 25,000 jobs in Alberta, some of whom may be the folks that the member opposite talks about. I find it very fascinating that this is his approach because this is actually a plan that was modelled on one that was adopted by the former Conservative government that this member was a part of, that he voted for.

Mr. Jean: Madam Speaker, the town of Peace River is reeling today after 1,400 jobs were lost with the cancellation of the Carmon Creek project. The Alberta branch of the Canadian manufacturers' association said today that this budget does little to, and I quote, improve industry's competitiveness and to help stem the loss of jobs in the manufacturing sector, end quote. How can the Premier be so oblivious to the impact her policies are having on jobs all across Alberta?

Ms Notley: Well, Madam Speaker, I would suggest that one thing that doesn't help the state of the economy in Alberta is groundless fearmongering. To suggest for one moment that the announcement of the Shell project cancellation had anything to do with our budget or our policies is ridiculous, and the member over there knows that. I have here a letter and a memo from Shell apologizing for the fact that it happened to happen on that day, because there was no connection.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition for your second question.

Legislative Procedures

Mr. Jean: Madam Speaker, when the Premier won the last election, I was very concerned for our economy, but there was one reason for me to be pleased. I took the Premier at her word that she would make positive changes to improve democracy in this Legislature. As a result, in May Wildrose sent the Premier 12 legitimate proposals to improve this Assembly. Six months later: zero progress. Why did the Premier change her mind on democratic reform once she got elected to the Premier's office?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. We've haven't changed our mind. We have a committee that is chaired by the very, very capable Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, and that committee is doing its work right now. There are a number of complicated issues that have to be addressed. It is an all-party committee that we created for the sole purpose of addressing the kinds of recommendations that that member opposite put forth, and we look forward to working together with you on them because I think we actually have a lot in common that we can work on to improve.

Mr. Jean: Madam Speaker, I was privileged to work under Stephen Harper in Ottawa. Now, left-wingers call him controlling and all sorts of names, but while he was Prime Minister, the opposition had powers and privileges that we could only dream of here in Alberta. In Ottawa committees do real, meaningful work. In Ottawa opposition parties have opposition days. Here we have none of that whatsoever. Is the Premier proud that democracy in this Assembly under her rule is a joke compared to what the NDP opposition has and had in Ottawa?

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, we know what the Official Opposition is interested in when they actually have a chance to debate changes. We want to have morning sittings of this Assembly so that we're family-friendly and people don't have to work late at night. But they don't want to work at 9 o'clock in the morning, so they're filibustering. Most Albertans go to work before 9 o'clock in the morning, but the Wildrose can't be bothered.

Mr. Jean: Madam Speaker, you may have noticed yesterday that the opposition was very deliberate in its actions. Under a majority government the opposition can be steamrolled by the government. The only tools we have available to us are parliamentary debate, parliamentary privileges, and, of course, the protection of the standing order that this government wants to change. We will use all of these tools for the benefit of Albertans. But the Premier could change her mind. She could allow democracy and keep her promise to do things differently. To the Premier: will she live up to her seven years of promises?

Ms Notley: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. Third main set of questions.

Budget Debate Process

Mr. Jean: We have now learned that the government wants to push this budget through estimates in just seven days. The NDP's schedule will have as many as five different ministries having their detailed budget analysis done on the very same day. In opposition this Premier called over and over again for one ministry to be examined per day so that Albertans could follow what we did here, but now as Premier she gives us just parts of seven days to analyze 17 ministries and over $50 billion of Albertans' money. Does the Premier think this is democratic or appropriate given her promises?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for the question, hon. member. The schedule for the estimates was negotiated with opposition House leaders, including the Opposition House Leader just sitting to your right, hon. member. We actually offered to the opposition additional time for selected ministries. This was a government suggestion, not an opposition suggestion. We actually suggested that you take more time on the larger ministries and the larger budgets, and that's been accepted. If we can pass the standing order today, we will put that into force, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Jean: Breaking promises to Albertans and to the opposition has consequences. Madam Speaker, I don't think it's appropriate, what they're doing, and I'm not the only one. Let me quote a former MLA from this place.

When you consider the vast operations of the Alberta government today, I frankly don't think that it is out of line at all for us to spend more time in legislative session rather than less, and I just don't follow the argument for the need to reduce the time [for estimates].

That was the former MLA from Fairview in this Assembly. To the Premier: why is she breaking her promise and pushing through over $50 billion in Alberta taxpayer spending money . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for the question. Madam Speaker, you know, the member opposite is attempting to suggest that we actually restricted the amount of time. We actually suggested that it be expanded so that additional ministries and additional questions – so I don't know what the hon. leader is talking about. He's so vague about broken promises and so on, but his own record, I think, in the House of Commons is something that he is breaking.

Mr. Jean: Let me stick with the former member from Fairview.

We should take whatever time is required. If that means we have to sit an extra two or three weeks or a month . . . so be it. Let us do that rather than attempt to save time and in the process possibly limit debate, possibly limit the full discussion of the departmental estimates.

To the Premier: why are we going to do multiple estimates at once? Why are you being so undemocratic on this after so many years of promises to do things differently?

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, a question to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition: why are you now saying that . . . [interjections] I'd like some silence so I can resume.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has the floor, please.

Mr. Mason: Why is the Leader of the Official Opposition now attacking an agreement about the handling of estimates that his own House leader agreed to? Why?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Provincial Budget

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This tax, spend, and borrow budget takes away the Alberta advantage with a massive increase on railroad diesel fuel, and it was done without the minister consulting the railways. Railways are the Alberta pathway to the ports of the world. It is now more expensive to send forestry, energy, and agricultural products to world markets. Jobs will be lost, and consumer goods will cost more. To the Premier: after you're finished making almost every industry in Alberta less competitive and taking away even more jobs from hard-working families, who will be left to pay taxes for your unrestrained spending and out-of-control debt?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It is true that some taxes did go up in this budget – there's no question – but here's the thing. We continue to be the lowest taxed jurisdiction in the country. There's no question that every time you raise a tax on someone, they may well complain. It's lovely that those folks over there are going to raise that, but at the same time the fact of the matter is that we are dealing with the results of having an unnecessarily strong reliance on one particular price because one government in the past . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. McIver: Well, it's good to hear the Premier backing the previous government again.

The NDP government has widely criticized almost everything previously done. They have promised full-scale change, and they were elected promising full-scale change. Since then the government has publicly promised to hang on to every public-sector job in place at the time of the election, which is in the neighbourhood of 215,000 publicly funded positions. That's a lot of nonchange, Madam Speaker. It can't be both; either the government wants change or they liked how it was. To the Premier: is this change of heart a result of the so-called budget consultations, and if so, why aren't the details on the website?

The Deputy Speaker: Madam Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. What this government proposed to do, on the basis of the conversations that we had with Albertans during the election, both during the consultations on the previous government's budget as well as consultations on ours, was that we were not going to move ahead with the billions of dollars of unallocated, undefined cuts that the former government over there planned to impose on Albertans. That was not what we were going to do. We're going to take a measured approach to restraining spending. We're going to do it carefully so we understand the consequences of the changes that are made. That's what's laid out in our budget over the course of the next four years, and I know it's a change, but . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. They haven't restrained any spending. At $5,000 per job in the new job creation program, this actually only supports 17,800 jobs and not the 27,000 advertised. At 27,000 jobs the annual grant available is only $3,300 and not $5,000. Madam Speaker, the government is only supporting these jobs, and at $3,300 per grant at 10 per cent it supports jobs worth $33,000, which according to Action To End Poverty in Alberta is below the poverty line for a family of four.

Ms Notley: Well, Madam Speaker, I do find it incredibly rich that this member over there thinks that a job that pays $33,000 a year is not good enough when they insisted on having the lowest minimum wage in the country for year after year after year. It's outrageous. That being said, those estimates are based on a maximum of $50,000.

Some salaries will be lower than that, and some salaries will be part-time. That's the way that number was reached.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Well, at the risk of being redundant, Alberta has lost 35,000 to 40,000 jobs this year, with each loss affecting a family and sending shock waves throughout our economy. Albertans are looking for real leadership to create an environment of job creation rather than a convoluted tax scheme that Edmonton Economic Development and the Calgary Chamber of Commerce have said won't work. I'll table some documents today to that. My question to the Premier: why subsidize companies to create low-wage jobs when you can more effectively reduce or eliminate small-business tax and sustain the job incentive?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, as the member rightly points out, you know, we are concerned about the fact that people are losing their jobs in Alberta. That is absolutely a critical issue, and that is why we've appointed a minister in charge of economic development and job creation. That is why we introduced a multifaceted plan to attempt to incent job growth: capital spending, access to capital, and the job incentive program. It's a large package. The difficulty that we have right now is that what we need to do is diversify the economy away from a single price, and we haven't done that yet because . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The government prides itself on its extensive consultations and deservedly so. Well, when you have Jack Mintz, David Dodge, Calgary Chamber of Commerce, Edmonton Economic Development, Canadian Federation of Independent Business all questioning the value of the tax credit scheme, the government would do well to listen. To the Premier: whose advice did you follow in adopting this scheme?

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, you know, overall, I think we've gotten a fair amount of positive feedback. The president and CEO of the Alberta Chambers of Commerce says, and I quote: most importantly, this budget signals we have a government willing to listen and capable of taking a measured approach to managing the province's finances; this is what Albertans and businesses need right now.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Small-business confidence in Alberta is at its lowest level since the great recession of 2008. Surveys by CFIB indicate that as many as 1 in 5 small businesses are considering cutting staff. The report also noted that tax and regulatory costs are a major concern for small-business owners. Again to the Premier: rather than adopting a complicated tax credit scheme that will create more work for accountants, would you consider eliminating or at least reducing small-business tax and let small business do what it does best, create jobs and diversify the economy?

Ms Notley: You know, as I've said, one of the things we did hear from small and medium enterprises is that they were struggling to get access to capital in order to grow their businesses and to capitalize on the good ideas and the hard work that they want to contribute to our economy. That is why we worked with ATB and AIMCo and AEC to come up with a plan to allow for more access to capital for those good, hard-working small businesses. I've heard good, positive feedback from that, and we'll look to see how well that works, and if it doesn't, then we'll look at other strategies.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Cancer Services

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. For more than 38 years I've been an oncologist in one of Canada's strongest provincial cancer programs. I can speak first-hand to the burdens that cancer places on Albertans. I can also relate to the pressures on treatment centres as well as their staff across this province. Albertans know just how important it is that we preserve and strengthen these vital cancer services. To the Health minister: what is your department doing to ensure that all Albertans have access to the best possible cancer care?

Ms Hoffman: I'd like to thank the hon. member for his question and for the fact that he and many others served both of my parents, actually, through treatments at the Cross Cancer Institute, so as a family member of someone who's gone through that and as an Edmontonian, I want to say thank you. As the Minister of Health I also want to say how proud I am that we're investing in the Calgary cancer centre. The Grande Prairie cancer centre, when it's complete, will complete the Alberta north-south radiation corridor. We're also investing in Lethbridge and Red Deer as well.

Thank you.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that Calgarians were subjected to years of delay in the construction of a cancer centre at the Foothills medical centre by the previous government, to the same minister: what assurance can you give that this vital piece of infrastructure will be built as soon as possible?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I hear some heckling from members of the third party, who announced many projects without budgets and timelines that were at all accurate or even cautioned in any way. I know that the people of Calgary deserve a cancer centre. It's been 12 years since they initially received the first announcement. We have a plan that's going to be building the cancer centre on the Foothills site, where Calgarians have said they need it. We also are going to be working towards that being open by 2024, and I'm really excited about . . .

An Hon. Member: Four years after we promised.

Ms Hoffman: Yeah, it is four years after the other party promised, which was not realistic at all.

Dr. Turner: Madam Speaker, given that Alberta is facing some very tough economic times, can the same minister assure Albertans that our public health care system, including critical projects like the Calgary cancer centre, won't be subject to the reckless cutbacks that we saw under the previous government?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to assure the member and all Albertans that this government is committed to providing stable health care funding and bending the cost curve. That's why we're doing our due diligence in building a comprehensive cancer centre on the Foothills campus but also why we're talking about, instead of what the previous government proposed around having a 6 per cent cut in the very first year, phasing the reduction in a very gradual way, making sure that we have 4 and a half per cent this year, 4 per cent the next year, 3 per cent the year after, and 2 in the out-years after that, as opposed to what the Official Opposition is proposing, which is cutting billions of dollars from essential front-line services.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: A point of order has been noted.
The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Capital Plan

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yesterday the Infrastructure minister assured me that the prioritized sunshine list he promised during the election is still coming, but he also released a budget with $4.4 billion in new projects and program spending with no details. This money leaves the back door open to the same kinds of dirty, backroom politics we saw with the previous government. To the minister. You've committed to spend this money. When exactly will Albertans know what projects will benefit from this mystery spending and what projects won't?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I take exception to the hon. member's assertion that we are willing to do dirty political spending like the previous government. It's our intention to look carefully at the projects that might be needed across the board, to make sure that we use due diligence to do business cases, to run economic models to make sure that all of the work is done before we announce the projects. We've seen the example of the schools, where political announcements were made before an election about a whole bunch of extra schools, and there wasn't the capacity . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Someone somewhere must have the list of projects that was used in order to come up with the 4.4 billion dollar number for the new projects and programs line item. Minister, surely you're not committing to spending billions of dollars of taxpayer money with no real plan. Are you shooting in the dark, or will you commit to tabling the list you used to create the capital plan today?

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, if we had the list of projects, we would have included it in the capital budget. What I've told the member over and over again is that we want to do an appropriate assessment of what the needs are. We want to make sure that when we announce something, it's the right facility in the right place, that it's going to be on time and on budget. When we have those facts, we will share them with the Assembly and with Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I've relied on the website projects.alberta.ca, which is meant to help Albertans stay up to date on school projects. Unfortunately, in the last week this website was pulled and replaced with a link to a list of delayed schools. Again to the minister. This doesn't help anybody. If you're not going to release a prioritized sunshine list for all to see and soon, why are you standing in the way of Albertans getting up-to-date information from your department?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Our government is committed to an open and transparent approach with respect to all of the capital projects that we will consider, and when we have made decisions based on good evidence, we'll make that information available. It's unfortunate that the opposition won't support that approach. Their plan is to cut $9.4 billion out of investments in schools and hospitals and roads in this province, and that's not something Albertans support.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Alberta has a rich history of developing its natural resources: Turner Valley, Leduc, and all the way to the oil sands in Fort McMurray. From day one Albertans have been leaders through innovation and technology. Our natural resource industry has been the leader in environmental stewardship, monitoring, and reporting. In addition, we're the only jurisdiction that produces heavy oil that voluntarily agreed to put a price on our carbon. To the environment minister: if we're already number one in industry-led environmental policies and initiatives, what announcements are you planning to make in Paris that would improve our status on the world stage, what's the cost, and what will be the impact on Albertans?

Ms Phillips: I'm pleased, Madam Speaker, to rise to update the House on these matters of climate change. I note that we're in the last day of session before Halloween, so we all wore our black and orange, I think, in homage to the fairly scary Wildrose policies on the environment. You know, the hon. member from the third party is quite right that Albertans want to get serious about climate change. So does industry. We know that it is a serious challenge. We need to work together to come up with a made-in-Alberta solution.

Point of order noted at 2:20.

Mr. Fraser: Well, that's interesting, Madam Speaker. Given that the minister is using all the Progressive Conservative environmental policies but simply elevating the timelines in those policies, that has put industry and investment at risk because you can't control your spending, Minister, do you have any environmental policies of your own, and can you admit right here, right now that hard-working Albertans in industry have been leading in environmental stewardship since day one?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, one of the reasons why we've had to undertake this work is because the previous government failed so miserably, Madam Speaker, at ensuring that we could get our product to market, at ensuring that we could go with our heads held high to international conferences. That's why we have appointed this panel of experts to provide us with advice on transitioning to renewables, an appropriate way to price carbon, an appropriate efficiency strategy, and that investment in technology that he talks about so that we can take the previous government's approach, which was to tilt at windmills after a technology unicorn, and make it into real intellectual horsepower.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Premier recently said: I have to go to Paris in the fall, and it won't be any fun if no one's talking to me. Respectfully, Premier, I'm guessing that the thousands of Albertans that have lost their jobs are not worried about whether you'll have fun or not. But, Premier, instead of focusing on fun, shouldn't you be sharing with this House and all Albertans what your strategy and agenda will be for Paris, how it will protect our jobs, and how it will protect our economy?

Ms Phillips: Madam Speaker, I'm pleased to report that the panel is examining exactly these matters, how we can grow our economy on the backbone of the energy economy that we already have and build that economy for tomorrow, ensuring that our green economy, that we are building and diversifying on top of our energy resources now, includes everyone. That's why we've done so much work with indigenous communities and others to make sure that we are sharing the benefits of a new economy, that we'll build for all Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Long-term Care Facility Survey

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Health Quality Council of Alberta has released its annual report on long-term care facilities within our province. It's disappointing that little has improved in the province over the last five years, since the last study was conducted. We all know that seniors within our province deserve the utmost respect and the highest quality service in their later years. To the Minister of Seniors: what will this government do to immediately improve on the serious concerns raised by the Health Quality Council and families at our long-term care facilities?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Seniors.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Of course, making sure that our seniors are well cared for is a priority for us. They helped build this province, and we need to make sure that we continue to help support them.

I'll tell you that one thing that's really important is making sure that we fulfill our campaign commitment of building 2,000 beds, long-term care beds, for this province. I know that not everybody thinks that keeping your promise is the best thing to do. Members of the Official Opposition have actually criticized us for doing that, but that's what we were voted in to do, and that's what we're going to do in this term. Also, I want to say that investing and making sure that we continue . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, your first supplemental.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In the Health Quality Council survey the results show staffing levels as the most highly recommended area for improvement. The simple fact is that the bureaucratic ranks of AHS are swelling when front-line workers are clearly needed. Will the minister acknowledge that while the AHS bureaucracy is bloating to record levels, they continue to bungle providing basic care for our seniors?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. What family members did say is that they really do value the care that is being provided by the workers in these facilities, and that's why they've elected a government that's going to continue to invest in those front-line service providers. Members of the Official Opposition campaigned on cutting billions of dollars from operations, which would impact those front-line service workers, which would impact significantly the staffing ratios. We're going to make sure that we continue to move forward in fulfilling our campaign commitments and investing in long-term care.

The Deputy Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. One instance of elder abuse at our long-term health care facilities is one too many. In the Health Quality Council survey Carewest Garrison Green scored last for Calgary's facilities. As the minister is aware, just last week three care workers from the facility were sentenced to jail after assaulting a 92-year-old patient. It is of the utmost importance that we learn from this terrible incident and make sure that it never happens again. What is the minister doing to ensure that our caregivers are trained properly to give our seniors the respect and protection that they deserve?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. The facility that was lowest ranked in the survey: the department immediately was working in consultation with them, and we've made significant strides there.

In terms of the incident that the hon. member mentioned, absolutely, I couldn't agree with him more about how that was absolutely wrong. I'm glad that the officials have acted swiftly to make sure that the individuals are held to account, and we're going to make sure that through awareness campaigns, including elder abuse, which we've invested a million dollars in, there continues to be more awareness so that we can act to ensure that all of our seniors are safe.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Energy Industry

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On page 18 of his budget speech the Minister of Finance suggested that we need to phase out coal, promote energy-efficient technology, and promote the use of renewables to cut down on carbon and that these are a "necessary prerequisite" for getting our energy products to market. Are we to understand from this statement that unless these three necessary prerequisites are met, this government will not push our energy products to market?

Mr. Ceci: Madam Speaker, oil and gas are going to be the keystone of our province for many decades to come. No, I'm not suggesting that if those things don't happen, we can't get energy to markets, but we need to be a better partner with the rest of the world. We need to cut our carbon. We need to ensure that we're a good neighbour to all of Canada so that we can get our pipelines across this country.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Finance minister did use the word "prerequisite."

However, along with being embarrassed about Alberta, our Premier recently made comments giving another province a near veto over our energy industry's access to markets. Well, we over here are proud to be Albertans, and the Wildrose doesn't think Alberta needs to be taking environmental lessons from a province that right now is dumping 8 billion litres of raw sewage into major waterways. So why does the NDP insist on giving this environmentally irresponsible province a veto over our most important job sector?

Ms Notley: Well, if the introduction was correct, I guess there would be a problem, but in fact I've never, ever suggested that we give a veto to any province with respect to our pipelines. I think there's a difference between – anyway, I think you can torque something beyond a point at which it is credible, and I think that may be what's going on over there. What I have said, though, is that along with another Premier, that I met with today, from New Brunswick, who also very much wants the Energy East pipeline. . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Wildrose knows Albertans can work towards lowering emissions, but we don't need to give environmental vetoes to provinces that prefer raw sewage over pipelines. Let's be clear on that.

Given that we know that in the least populous state in the United States, Wyoming, electricity generation alone emits about as much CO₂ as our oil sands production, is this government planning to tell the Americans to clean up their environmental act before we import any of their energy products?

Ms Notley: You know, here's the actual record, Madam Speaker. Under this Official Opposition's federal cousins' approach to the environment not one single pipeline has been built, and it is because the rest of . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier has the floor. [interjections]
Hon. members, the hon. Premier has the floor.

Ms Notley: Not one single pipeline has been built while there have been people in charge who have taken the head-in-the-ground approach to whether or not markets internationally are concerned about greenhouse gas emissions, and we're going to change that.

The Deputy Speaker: I just wanted to acknowledge the point of order in the previous set of questions by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Moving on, the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We can all see that the energy sector is struggling. However, with a budget that has increased spending to just about every other department of government, this ought to be good news: more money for resource development and management, more money for innovative projects that would make a real difference in the function of the industry. However, you thought wrong. To the minister of environment: why have you not increased funding above what was planned in March for resource development and management, and why are you reducing the funding for carbon capture and storage by $24 million despite your promise in the summer to follow through on the carbon trunk line and the Quest project?

Ms Phillips: Well, Madam Speaker, Alberta has made its fair share of investments in CCS, and as those investments wind down, we'll see that reflected in the budget papers. The other piece of this is, of course, on the overall Environment budget, and the fact of the matter is that outside of the large departments most of us are taking zero or 2 per cent, and that's because we need to ensure that we are working within the existing budgets, that we have right now, in a fair way and a balanced way.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, your first supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that about 30,000 jobs and counting have been lost in the energy sector alone this year, which does not even begin to include contract workers, who do not show up on the job-loss radar, and given that Devon Canada just announced yesterday the layoff of another 200 staff, which represents about 15 per cent of their workforce, and Cenovus is cutting another 700 positions in the second half of this year, to the minister of economic development: what is being put forward in this budget that is going to boost jobs and investment in the energy industry, and if it's there, why is it hidden so deeply in the numbers?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I don't think it's hidden deeply in the budget. The Finance minister outlined the various initiatives that our government is taking on: first of all, the job creation grant that we're rolling out, and more details will be coming in the following days. As well, our government is working with ATB, with AIMCo, and with AEC in order to provide capital to small and medium-sized enterprises so that they can grow and expand their business, which will, in turn, create jobs. The key point is that we are working with the private sector, who are the job creators.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, your second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that Royal Dutch Shell has just quit its Carmon Creek oil sands project, citing "the lack of infrastructure to move Canadian crude . . . to global commodity markets," and given that pipelines are statistically the safest method to transport raw crude, to the minister of environment: do you share the enthusiasm for immediate pipeline development, as stated by the Energy minister in Beijing, or would you prefer that these goods be shipped by rail, which has recently incurred a massive increase in fuel taxes?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, Madam Speaker, a large part of this pipeline debate centres around us getting it right on climate change. The previous government's efforts in this regard were not satisfactory for our trading partners and, in fact, not satisfactory to the majority of Albertans and Canadians. That's why we've appointed the panel that we have, so that we can get it right on that conversation about pipelines, so we can be proud and hold our heads high and ensure that the energy development is proceeding in a way that is environmentally responsible, that involves indigenous peoples appropriately, and that all of the benefits are shared by all Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

School Infrastructure Funding

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We know that our existing schools were neglected by the previous government. We needed repairs, and we needed equipment upgrades. Unfortunately, those did not happen. We are experiencing phenomenal growth in this province. I see that every day in my riding of Edmonton-South West, and our riding continues to grow every day. We hear about crises arising every day due to the absence of adequate school infrastructure. Now, in hopes of not repeating the mistakes of the past, to the Minister of Education: what is the government doing to ensure that important public services are preserved by providing the best for our schools?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the question. Certainly, it's important that all Alberta students have a place where they can learn and that we're building the schools to meet the increased enrolment across this province. We see rapid growth in all areas of the province, and we intend to build the schools that we need. To that end, we moved $350 million forward to ensure that we start the infrastructure projects that we need, and we also brought in the Auditor General to look for a way to increase efficiencies in the systems so that we'd get the schools built where we need them.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again to the Minister of Education: given that the ministry is planning this significant infrastructure revamp, what additional funding is being provided for infrastructure maintenance in Budget 2015?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Certainly, this is an important addition to the budget for Education this year, an increase to the infrastructure maintenance and renewal program. I met with all 61 school boards over the last few weeks, and I heard it time and time again, that we not just build the schools but that we make sure that we invest in the maintenance so that the schools last the full length that they should. To that end, we have put $180 million into this program, an increase of 50 per cent over last year. Of course, we're also providing $483 million through plant operations and maintenance to ensure that we not just build the schools we need but that we actually look after our investments.

Mr. Dang: Madam Speaker, to the same minister: just how many modernization projects are in progress in this province, and can you provide some details on this important work?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. It's very important to know that we're not just building new schools, but we have 93 modernization and replacement projects across the province. A couple of examples: in High Level we're building the existing space for career and technology studies; an example in Calgary is a replacement facility for special-needs students at Christine Meikle school as well. It's important that these sorts of projects are done as well. Just as a little help to the Member for Little Bow, check infrastructure.alberta.ca and click on the PDF, and there are those schools and when they're going to be built.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Affordable Supportive Living Project Approval

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In our June session I asked the Minister of Health about the status of the ASLI grant for the Bassano project in my constituency. I'm pleased to hear that this project was approved just a few hours ago. However, there are dozens of other communities that are still waiting for word of their projects. Will the minister help Albertans who are waiting for answers understand which have been approved and which have not?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to address this question. I really enjoy having an opportunity to talk about the great news of what this government is doing. Of course, if we had elected a different government, one that was campaigning on significant cuts, that would have been very difficult.

In terms of the projects that aren't going forward, there are only six projects that we've decided don't meet the criteria. I've reached out to each of the individual MLAs who are impacted and the ridings that are impacted, and the proponents have been contacted directly. The other 25: good news. So if you didn't hear from me, the project met the criteria. We're confident that it's going to be financially viable and that it's going to meet the needs of the community.

Mr. Fildebrandt: The secrecy behind this announcement is concerning. The minister announced that of the 31 projects on the list, 25 were approved, meaning that six were not. If they're following the Fildemath, maybe they can know what's going on. The minister seems unwilling to tell us what the criteria were. Maybe she has good reason for cutting these projects; maybe she doesn't. Would she tell us why these projects were not approved?

Ms Hoffman: Absolutely, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the question. You might notice that a lot of us are wearing orange today. It's because it's our last sitting day before Halloween, and Halloween can be a scary time of year. There are some scary things, and one of them is the proposal for significant cuts from the members opposite.

In terms of the criteria that were used, we wanted to make sure that there were evidence-based decisions, that they were actually going to meet the needs of the community, that there were actually citizens who needed to be in long-term care that were either in hospital or at home. We want to make sure that we're investing capital dollars and fulfilling those highest level needs first.

Mr. Fildebrandt: We've seen no evidence given today, Madam Speaker.

The Newell Foundation has told me just this morning that even with the ASLI grant the Bassano project cannot go forward until they have confirmation from the minister that it will be integrated with the local hospital. Will the minister commit to my constituents to integrate that Bassano project with the hospital so that we can get this critical project started now?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We did actually call each of the individual proponents. The ministry staff called yesterday the ones that weren't moving forward and today the ones that were moving forward, and they're going to be having follow-up conversations. We want to invest that capital money in the highest levels of care, so long-term care and dementia beds. They're absolutely having follow-up meetings with each of those proponents. Individual questions asked about individual sites can be raised at that time. Within the next couple of weeks I'd be happy to table the numbers of each of the individual sites if you'd like that.

Health Link 811 Phone Line Dementia Support

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and speak today regarding this government's commitment to supporting the health of all Albertans, including rural Albertans. This summer our Health minister implemented the new Health Link 811 phone number, that gives every Albertan easy access to the advice of a registered nurse. This service was made even more valuable as of October, when specialized dementia support services were added. Now Albertans living with dementia and their caregivers have 24/7 access to a specialized dementia nurse with extensive training and experience in seniors' health. This specialized dementia nurse can perform an in-depth assessment to gain an understanding of each individual's situation. This project was started in rural Alberta, with expansion to Edmonton and Calgary coming later in the spring, because rural Alberta is where the greatest need for these supports is.

I have seen how rural and remote areas do not always have access to the same level of services as urban centres. Alberta Health Services identified a gap, and our government has invested $1.1 million to help 40,000 Albertans living with dementia. These numbers are expected to double. By 2038 it is estimated that about 1 out of every 10 Albertans over the age of 65 and nearly half of those over 90 will be living with dementia.

My family has been touched by dementia, and I know that many if not all families here have been affected as well. I know how overwhelming it can be when you start asking yourself: "Is this happening to my family? Worse, is this happening to me?" This gives Albertans the ability to privately take that next step and make a simple phone call.

I applaud this government's continued commitment to the mental health of all Albertans and look forward along with the rest of the House to the steps we will take as we move forward with the mental health review.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Pathways Community Services Association

Ms Drever: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would like to start off by recognizing that we are currently on Treaty 6 territory and that my riding falls on Treaty 7 territory. I'm honoured today to rise and speak to an invaluable organization that operates in my riding and works with families in need from all over Alberta. Pathways Community Services Association works on the pillars of community dignity, unity, and wellness, drawing on the intersections of traditional aboriginal culture and Western evidence-based practices. Tapisahotiwin is the act of connecting, which lies at the heart of Pathways as it engages with communities.

With the focus on meeting the needs of aboriginal children, youth, and families through a continuum of resources and support services, one of the programs they are proud to offer is their mentor homes program, where they work with aboriginal youth in care and match them with a sensitive and culturally aware family as an alternative to group care. In this program the focus is put on family building and cultural supports and cultivating a respect for oneself and one's community.

Pathways also offers nehiyaw kihokewin, aboriginal families visiting with the spirit of the grandmothers, a healthy families program for aboriginal families with newborns up to the age of three that builds off family strengths and fosters parenting skills.

Pathways builds stronger communities both inside and outside my constituency, and to them I say hai hai, thank you, for all the hard work that you do to strengthen families and communities.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation and Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm rising to table an alternative budget estimates schedule to take effect if the standing orders have not been approved by the end of today.

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry. Hon. member, did you have a tabling?

Mr. McIver: Two, Madam Speaker, with your permission. The first one is the correct number of copies of a printout from the Action to End Poverty in Alberta website, showing that the government's job plan is, actually, to support jobs below the poverty line.

The second one is the Alberta short-term employment forecast 2014-2016. I hope it is a gentle reminder to the labour minister that this year's report is about three months late in being released to this House.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other tablings? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, I just rise to table the appropriate number of copies of a document I referred to at length yesterday in the House, Restoring Trust: Wildrose Proposals to Strengthen Alberta's Legislature and Democracy.

I have an additional one as well, a document that I referenced at length yesterday during a point of privilege. It's an Alberta government press release that clearly states that the budget says, when speaking about reducing costs, that this includes "a salary freeze for Cabinet ministers, MLAs and political staff for the entire term of this Legislature," as we talked about yesterday, presupposing a decision of Members' Services Committee.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further tablings?

Hon. members, that brings us to the points of order. We had three today. The first point of order, I believe, was from the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, if I may. At least two of those points of order are very similar, and they're also similar to the ones that the Speaker has ruled upon in the last couple of days. I wonder if we could take them together instead of dealing with them separately.

Mr. Hanson: That's acceptable.

The Deputy Speaker: That's acceptable?

Mr. Hanson: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: All right. Go ahead, hon. member.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I called a point of order today under section 23(h) and (i), actually two of them, and if it pleases the House, I will deal with both of them at the same time. I realize that this point of order has been raised and defeated a couple of times this week already; however, I take personal offence to the suggestions made by the hon. Health minister at approximately 2:10 and 2:25 this afternoon.

I personally campaigned very strongly in defence and protection of front-line health workers and the promise to take care of their jobs. I realize that the general stabs have been made directly to this side of the House as a whole. I sat quietly listening to these misrepresentations in the past but will no longer do so. I have a daughter working as a permanent RN, and my son will be graduating from med school in the spring of 2016. The accusation that I would be anti front-line health care workers is absurd, and I do take it personally.

I would appreciate that these comments be retracted, and in the interests of keeping the flow of business going in the future in the House, I would ask that members cease and desist from this particular line of derogatory comment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Well, this is now the fourth and fifth times that we are dealing with exactly the same point of order, which has been dealt with by the chair on three previous occasions. In each case the chair ruled that there was no point of order, yet the Wildrose opposition persists in making these points of order and pretends to be personally offended by the arguments that are being made on this side of the House that the program of the Wildrose of cutting substantially into the budget $2 billion a year is in fact going to produce a loss of front-line jobs. Whether the hon. member is personally offended by that or not, the fact is that it will impact front-line services in this province, and it will result in the layoff of front-line workers. There's not enough bureaucracy in the entire province to pay for the depth of cuts that this opposition party wants.

Madam Speaker, I would ask that we rule again in the same manner with respect to this question. These are legitimate comments from government members in response to questions. It is, at best, a difference of opinion between members over the facts and not a point of order. Quite frankly, I think this is part of the ongoing campaign of the Wildrose opposition during this session to waste the Assembly's time.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Hesitant though I am to wade into the debate, as the hon. Government House Leader said, I have to say that based on some of the exchanges we had earlier this afternoon, the Official Opposition rather reminds me of the chippy hockey player that hacks and slashes in the corner and then, as soon as something similar happens back to them, goes running to the referee.

Earlier this afternoon we heard the Member for Little Bow talk about past practices within the government that I was part of as being dirty. Now, I didn't raise a point of order at the time, but as the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills has appealed for a greater degree of respect for all members of the House, that has to flow both ways, sir. I would strongly suggest – and I think that we've reached Thursday of this first week, and there's always a little bit of a rising of the temperature – that it'll be good for us to go home and just relax a little bit and, you know, maybe put our feet up and enjoy a cool beverage, beer, that is now cheaper thanks to the Minister of Finance.

Madam Speaker, Mr. Speaker has ruled on this before. The argument really is no different. These are questions of fact. They are disagreements. I know that they are strongly held, but they are not points of order, and I would ask that you rule accordingly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to speak on this point of order?

Seeing none, I would like to acknowledge that, as the Government House Leader has pointed out, this has been raised a number of times now, and a previous ruling was that it's kind of part of that essential disagreement that has been going on. However, I would like to remind the members that in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 634, it says:

A Member may not direct remarks to the House or engage in debate by raising a matter under the guise of a point of order.

It's just something to be aware of as we go forward here, to perhaps be a little more cautious of the type of language that we are using and to not use points of order as a way to continually disrupt the business of this House.

So I will rule that this was not a point of order.

Let's move on, then, to the next one, which was raised by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, in light of your gentle reminder, I'll withdraw the point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: That concludes the Routine.

Second Reading

Bill 4

An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To all members of the House: I'm pleased to present Bill 4 to you today, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act.

Bill 4 proposes two important streams of legislation changes. The first relates to fiscal rules and budget format. The second relates to tax changes. I'll focus my comments first on the new fiscal planning and transparency act. This act is the foundation of our responsible fiscal planning. It formalizes a commitment to transparent reporting using nationally accepted public accounting standards. Finally, it sets firm limits on borrowing and spending growth. This is a key part of our overall fiscal plan and, coupled with the budget and strategic plan presented earlier this week, represents the principles upon which our government will operate.

The Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. The changes in the proposed bill that relate to the fiscal rules and budget format reflect our government's desire to present Alberta's finances in a clear format that follows generally accepted public-sector accounting standards. The changes also reflect our government's commitment to ensure that Alberta remains in a strong financial position as we work to implement our platform. Bill 4 will repeal and replace the Fiscal Management Act of former Finance Minister Horner.

While this act will reflect many changes, some parts are already familiar to you. Alberta's finances will be presented in a three-year fiscal plan. The budget will be presented on the same scope and basis as the consolidated financial statements in the annual report. This means that the financial impact of the SUCH sector, which includes school boards, universities, colleges, and health entities, will be reflected in the budget on a line-by-line basis. Other entities included fully are the Alberta Innovates corporations and the Alberta Environmental Monitoring, Evaluation and Reporting Agency. The fiscal plan will also include annual noncash changes in pension liabilities.

Moving on to the next item. Bill 4 requires the government to introduce a strategic plan and ministry business plans as well as the requirement for government ministry annual reports to be released by June 30. Quarterly fiscal updates will provide Albertans with regular updates on the state of the province's finances. Unlike the previous government, that introduced amendments to move to semiannual reporting, our government will provide open and transparent reports four times each year. The contingency account will also remain open, with its defined purpose to provide funding for those years in which actual expenses of the government exceed actual revenue.

So what's new in this? Madam Speaker, our government takes seriously our role as stewards of Alberta's treasury. That means managing debt in a prudent manner. To that end, Bill 4 proposes a legislative debt cap based on a nominal debt-to-GDP ratio of 15 per cent. For the purposes of this bill debt means borrowing for the capital plan, P3s, the pre-1992 teachers' pension plan, and operating deficits when required. It does not include borrowing for the purpose of on-lending to provincial corporations and agencies where we have offsetting financial assets.

The debt cap provides sufficient flexibility to the government as it implements its financial plan while maintaining a manageable limit on the amount of debt government can take on. Comparatively speaking, the proposed limit of 15 per cent is one-half of the average debt-to-GDP levels weighted by each province's nominal GDP. For your information, Madam Speaker, two out of three credit-rating agencies that rate the province report net debt to GDP as a measure of their credit reports. Dominion Bond Rating Service states that a triple-A rated province should have debt-to-GDP ratio of less than 15 per cent.

I should point out that each credit-rating agency includes different items when calculating a province's net debt. Although agencies use debt to GDP as a measure of credit worthiness, they have other criteria as well such as debt to revenue. The bottom line, Madam Speaker, is that a 15 per cent debt to GDP is a prudent benchmark for limiting government debt. With this cap in place, Albertans can be assured that the government's borrowing will not get out of hand.

The next item I wish to draw your attention to is related to savings. Under the proposed act we will continue to inflation-proof the heritage fund through the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act. We still think that it's important to set aside a larger portion of Alberta's resource revenue for future generations. Right now, however, our focus is on the extraordinary economic and fiscal challenges we face as a result of oil prices. Our government will take another look at growing our savings once we are back in balance. In the meantime we will protect the value of the heritage fund against inflation so that it can continue supporting the priorities of Albertans now and in the future.

Moving on to the next item. There are times, Madam Speaker, when government might have to adjust its spending plan partway through the fiscal year due to emerging cost pressures that cannot be ignored. At the same time Albertans expect the government to stick to their budget as close as it can. The proposed legislation will retain what is known as the 1 per cent rule. The rule limits in-year increases in operating expenses to no more than 1 per cent of the budgeted total. The 1 per cent rule balances the need to control spending with the need to maintain some built-in flexibility to address emerging issues.

For your information the 1 per cent rule will not apply to an increase in spending to respond to disasters, an increase in the amount authorized under a supply vote or an increase in any other expense offset by additional revenue received for a specific purpose of that expense, commitments made in collective bargaining or other negotiated settlements or remuneration, commitments made in the fiscal year for the cost of settlement with a First Nation, and in the case of a SUCH sector entity an increase in operating expense from an unbudgeted drawdown of reserves or accumulated surpluses from unbudgeted revenue. In that last scenario I mentioned, the SUCH sector would need to obtain the approval of the Treasury Board before any spending happens beyond the current exemptions. Future budgets will include the use of reserves within a total approved budget for the SUCH sector.

There are some tax changes in Bill 4. With respect to tax changes Bill 4 does three things: it implements Budget 2015 initiatives, it gives legislative authority to the fuel and tobacco tax changes made on March 27, 2015, and it proposes a number of other technical and administrative changes to the provincial tax statutes. To do so, the proposed legislation will amend our personal and corporate income tax acts as well as the Fuel Tax Act, the Tobacco Tax Act, and the Tourism Levy Act. These changes are separate from those that were made to the personal and corporate income tax acts in June 2015 with Bill 2. I'll briefly provide some details now on the most significant proposed changes, starting with the personal and corporate income tax acts.

Alberta Corporate Tax Act. This legislation will implement the Budget 2015 decision to increase the current insurance premium tax rates by 1 percentage point. It will also move Alberta's tax on qualifying environmental trusts, or QETs, from the Alberta Corporate Tax Act to the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. This change is required so that the Canada Revenue Agency can administer our QET tax under the Alberta federal tax collection agreement.

This bill also proposes a monetary penalty for taxpayers who manufacture, distribute, possess, or use software devices to suppress sales data to avoid paying taxes, often called zappers. This change parallels federal legislation and is another measure to help combat tax avoidance.

With respect to Alberta's Personal Income Tax Act, Bill 4 will implement Budget 2015's plan to introduce a new Alberta child benefit program and increase the benefit under the Alberta family employment tax credit program.

The proposed bill will also update the dividend tax credit rates for dividends paid by small businesses to individual shareholders. This amendment is necessary to ensure Alberta's current policy is maintained and to avoid an inadvertent tax increase on these shareholders.

With regard to the Fuel Tax Act, moving on to that, the legislation will implement the Budget 2015 decision to increase the tax rate for locomotive fuel by 4 cents. This is effective November 1, 2015. In addition, the act will give legislative authority to the fuel tax increase that took effect on March 27, 2015. It will also cap the benefits under the tax-exempt fuel user and the Alberta farm fuel benefit programs to 9 cents per litre, another change that took effect on March 27, 2015.

Bill 4 also proposes to protect officers from prosecution when they contravene the Fuel Tax Act as part of their duty; for example, during undercover operations or investigations to sting people breaking the law. This amendment parallels protection provisions under the Tobacco Tax Act.

Further, the bill proposes to give the minister authority to garnishee tax debtors' portion of a joint payment between a debtor and another person by a third party. This is consistent with other Alberta tax acts.

With regard to the Tobacco Tax Act this act will give legislative authority to the tobacco tax rate increase that took effect March 27, 2015. It will also implement the Budget 2015 decision to further increase the tobacco tax rate by $5 per carton of cigarettes. Comparable changes will also be made to the tax rates applicable to other tobacco products to maintain parity. This tobacco tax increase came into effect on October 28, 2015.

Technical and administrative changes. Lastly, the act proposes technical and administrative changes to a number of Alberta's tax statutes. These are changes that ensure continued consistency between Alberta and the federal tax regimes, clarify or correct technical deficiencies in the legislation, repeal expired provisions, and standardize administrative policies across Alberta's tax statutes.

In conclusion, to summarize, Bill 4 will allow government to produce a fiscal plan that aligns with the audited year-end consolidated financial statements and the annual report on a line-by-line basis. The Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, which Bill 4 will enact, strikes a balance between maintaining legislative fiscal controls while providing the necessary flexibility to respond to the current fiscal and economic challenges we are facing. Further, Bill 4 proposes important legislative changes required to implement or give authority to several tax changes that have already been made and are proposed in Budget 2015.

Bill 4 will implement the Budget 2015 decisions to introduce a new Alberta child benefit program, enhance the Alberta family employment tax credit program, and raise taxes on tobacco, locomotive fuel, and insurance premiums. Bill 4 will also give legislative authority to the tobacco and fuel tax rates, changes that came into effect on March 27, 2015; enable the Canada Revenue Agency to administer Alberta's QET tax under the Alberta federal tax collection agreement; implement the technical and administrative changes that clarify our tax statutes; correct technical errors in the legislation; repeal expired provisions; and standardize administrative policies across Alberta's tax statutes.

Together these changes will help enable government to manage current economic challenges and provide a path to balance as we work to create jobs, diversify our economy, and support programs that are important to Albertans and their families. I ask that all members of the Assembly support this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. I now move to adjourn debate on Bill 4.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

13. Mr. Ceci moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate October 28: Mr. Schmidt]

Mr. Schmidt: I yield my time, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to speak? We are on Government Motions, Motion 13. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to the first budget of our first new government in 44 years. Congratulations. I would like to say that it's a pleasure to be here and to speak to this, but in many ways it's not a pleasure to rise to speak to this budget.

Alberta is in economic crisis. Albertans are looking for leadership, but they are not finding it in either the previous government or in this one. Albertans voted for change in the last election, and in many ways they voted for hope. Albertans remain hopeful, and I would suggest, after six months of travelling this great province, that everywhere they remain hopeful, but they are getting concerned. I truly believe they were hopeful with this government, as I was hopeful for this government. As I mentioned in question period, I was hopeful especially for the ability for democracy and accountability and transparency to return or to come for the first time ever to this place in real, meaningful ways. I saw it in Ottawa, where there was democracy. There was good debate. There were opposition parties that had the opportunity to keep me in my seat for a full 24 hours to vote.

There were opportunities for committees to study bills, for you all in this place, Madam Speaker, to have an opportunity to speak about particular bills that may interest their constituents. I truly believe that that opportunity remains with us, that we, each and every one of us, can have the ability to represent the constituents who put us here. We are not here for ourselves; we are here for the people of Alberta. That means Albertans, whether they come from Fort McMurray or Medicine Hat or Calgary or Edmonton, should have the opportunity to speak through their elected officials. Their elected officials should have the opportunity to debate motions and to examine budgets, $50 billion in budgets, the most ever spent by the government of Alberta, and we are going to have the least amount of time ever given to an opposition party to study it.

This NDP government claims, Madam Speaker, to represent democracy and that it's the same as it's always been. Well, I myself would not ever lay claim to fame to be like the previous government, especially not when it comes to democracy and the ability for opposition parties to have their say.

I think Albertans wanted a balanced and measured budget. Certainly, I have said openly outside of this House that I respect and approve of some of this budget, especially in the realm of mental health and in the elimination of mandatory school fees. Of course, the elimination of mandatory school fees: during the campaign the Wildrose actually asked for a complete elimination, and this government has only come forward with 50 per cent of that elimination. But I know Albertans want a balanced and measured budget. I know that Albertans wanted a budget that would reassure the job creators. We heard it from the minister of economic development that the private sector are the job creators, yet the only jobs this government is intending to create with this budget are jobs for the public service. I'll get into that later in my speech.

I was hoping to reassure the private sector with my communications. In particular, I was hopeful that I would be able to say: business community, this budget will bring economic confidence. We spoke about confidence. We spoke about how important confidence was during the campaign and later on, yet we saw three particular announcements that brought a tremendous amount of uncertainty into our economy. I truly believe that the NDP, the government, the 13 people that control $50 billion of taxpayers' money, don't get it. They certainly don't get it because they haven't changed anything. They continue with business as usual. Business as usual: sending shock tremors through our economy to the private sector, to the oil and gas industry, that employs hundreds of thousands of Albertans directly or indirectly. What do we see? Almost daily announcements of layoffs.

What Albertans received is what they did not expect, what I did not expect given some past governments across this country. We've seen other examples of NDP governments that were not ideological in every single thing they did, but here we have an ideological budget, a budget that is not based on common sense or what the business community is saying, a budget based on NDP ideology that has failed and consistently failed right across the country. This is a budget without any focused efficiencies whatsoever, a budget completely out of step with what Albertans expect. It's completely out of step with Alberta's values.

This budget has record spending and a plan for even more record spending than ever before in our province's history. This is, right here in Alberta, the most expensive government in Canada by far. Before the NDP took power just six months ago, it was already the most expensive government in Canada by far. Yet what do we have in this budget? Seven hundred more spaces, more employees, at Alberta Health Services, the fourth-largest employer in the country, and the government is adding more employees.

This budget has record borrowing, and for the first time in a generation we are borrowing for government operations. We're borrowing money to keep the lights on. We're borrowing monies to employ Albertans, to give services to Albertans. This is not acceptable. This is not what a good government does, what a government does when it is accountable to the people. We are borrowing money for employees' salaries, and we are borrowing money for programs. Borrowing is not an answer. In fact, if you look at the status currently of borrowing in North America, it is at record highs.

I saw this before. Many of you in this place are much younger than me, but I was in Fort McMurray during the '80s, and I saw what bad policy can do to a town, where I saw every single business go bankrupt except for two. One was a government lottery, an outlet to sell tickets. The other was my parents' business, which had no debt, and they barely survived the national energy program of the Liberals. It was a terrible policy, and there were tens of thousands of Albertans out of work. It is troubling, but be clear: your policies will have a tremendous effect on Albertans' lives, not just on the social sphere but on the economic one, which will affect everything.

If the NDP were to cancel every single dollar of infrastructure spending – and I'm a big fan of infrastructure spending, I can promise you, being in Fort McMurray. We have the best infrastructure in Fort McMurray for 5,000 people. Unfortunately, we have about 85,000 to 90,000 people living there. It's been atrocious. So I like infrastructure. But let's say, for example here, that if the NDP government were to cancel every single dollar of infrastructure spending – every hospital cancelled, every school, every road cancelled, every building cancelled, every single infrastructure project – if this government were to cancel it and not spend that money, we would still need to borrow to pay for it, to pay for the operations.

This budget also has wildly out of whack revenue projections, and that's what troubles me the most. How do you increase revenues by that much with what we've had in the past few years with record oil prices? We know for sure, based upon expert evidence, including CAPP and other industry organizations, that we are not going to see those types of prices. If it all, we will probably see them in five or six years, but we are not going to see those prices at all during this term. In fact, they suggest that these prices will remain where they are or slightly above where they are for the next three years. Even industry organizations, even Moody's has said that your price projections on revenue of oil is $20 off per barrel. Twenty dollars off per barrel.

How do you get revenue projections at $20 off a barrel when you're only at $40 a barrel right now? I see the Minister of Finance say $45. Well, I say $33 because you have to take into consideration the differential. You have take into consideration that this government is not going to build pipelines for a long time, which means we will not get access to tidewater, which means that we will not during your entire mandate ever have the opportunity to receive fair market value for our products.

Why do we not receive fair market value? Because we do not have access. We do not have access to tidewater. We have a customer, one customer, who holds us ransom, who decides when they take our product and when they don't, how much they're going to pay for our product based on what they need. That is not a good relationship to encourage. That's a relationship to build pipelines to the west coast, to the east coast, to the north, and to the south, wherever we can get capacity. That's what that relationship should tell us. We need pipeline capacity, yet this government says: Energy East maybe.

Of course, the NDP in Manitoba have sought intervenor status to stop that pipeline. Yes. That's right. The NDP, your cousins, the same party, in Manitoba have sought intervenor status to stop that pipeline. I don't believe Albertans are fooled by your suggestions that Energy East is a go. How can it go past Manitoba when there's a court action to stop it by your cousins?

The NDP government says that they're not in favour of Keystone – what kind of signals does that send to the Americans? – and not in favour of pipelines to the west coast. So we will never receive our fair market value for the work that Albertans do, the hard work that they do, the 12-hour shifts they do. Seven in a row, 10 in a row 12-hour shifts: try doing that. I am very proud of the Albertans that work in the oil and gas sector, and I encourage you all to come to Fort McMurray and watch while they wait an hour and a half to two hours every day to get to the plant site on a 30-kilometre stretch of road because there's too much traffic and the previous government did very little about it. See what it's like to wait two hours to get home.

The question is: what are you going to do about it that's better? How do you encourage our men and women that work in the oil sands industry to feel they are providing value not just to their families with the great wages and great opportunities but also to the people of Alberta when you restrict their opportunity to sell their product to market, when you say that their worth is less than the worth that they should have because they do not get full market value for their product?

Now, I mentioned the wildly out of whack revenue projections. Do you have any idea, Madam Speaker? I know you must because you're very wise. It's up to $50 million, the differential between what we get and what we should get. It's up to $50 million a day – a day – that we lose. It's not $50 million a year. It's up to $50 million a day we lose because we don't have access to tidewater. Does that not trouble anyone in this room?

Yet we have this government that is suggesting and counting on about a 25 per cent – 25 per cent – increase in government revenues between now and the next election. I think what somebody did was grabbed it out of the air and pulled it down and threw it on the book because that's what you wanted to spend. How can you justify a 25 per cent increase in revenues when the revenues are the highest they've ever been already? I will talk about that in just a second. A 25 per cent increase in government revenues between now and the next election is a fantasy. Yesterday I called that a superboom, and I've lived through every boom in Alberta. A superboom? I really don't believe there's a superboom on the horizon. There is no superboom on the horizon. We've been through booms. It is not going to happen, and these revenue projections are simply a fantasy.

The record spending, the record borrowing, and the make-believe, fantasy revenue numbers will lead us to staggering debt. Let's be clear. At the end of the NDP government's mandate we will be at the highest debt levels this province has ever seen, yet only last year we had the highest oil prices we've ever seen. This government is projecting a $47 billion debt by 2020. I think that's the lowest possible number that we'll see. I truly believe, based upon my analysis of the budget on a very preliminary basis, that number will be much, much higher. I believe the number will be more like $55 billion or $60 billion. I truly believe that Albertans will see in three and a half years that these revenue numbers were nothing but fantasy. I truly believe that the number will be far worse, which means that our quality of life will be much worse.

You cannot borrow your way into prosperity. You cannot borrow your way into paying off debt. You will not leave Albertans in a better position, which I think is ultimately what all of us want to do in this place. I do not think there is any nefarious theme to your decision to do this. I just think, frankly, you're not giving accurate numbers and providing an accurate picture of what will take place.

When people may have had, for instance, in some cases, as CNRL did, some wage decreases, those people that suffered the wage decrease obviously weren't happy, but that decision was made, and they kept their job. They went home after that, and they talked to their spouse. They sat down at the kitchen table, very likely, and they had a conversation. They said: "Last year we made this much, but in order to keep my job, in order to keep all our jobs, because the oil prices are low, the revenues are low, we've agreed to take a cut. So now we have to cut our spending.” You might want to hear this. “Now we have to cut our spending.”

So the husband, the wife, the spouses, the partners decide that they have to cut some of their entertainment or other expenses. That’s what the government should do. If Albertans have to react as a result of this budget and as a result of low oil prices, why would our government be any different? Why is the government increasing salaries of the public sector, increasing the numbers of the public sector? Why? I think Albertans will be asking that question for the next three and a half years as thousands and thousands and thousands of Albertans continue to lose their jobs because of this government’s actions.

Even if we take the most optimistic number that you have brought us, that debt will lead to a lowering of our credit rating. There is no question; it will. When you have a great credit rating, it means that you can walk into a bank and they actually want to see you. It means that they give you the best rate possible to be able to borrow on your house or your car. It means that you save money on interest payments.

Interest payments are significant, especially with this government, because interest payments alone – alone – will be $1.3 billion in four years. That’s right: $1.3 billion in four years. Now, I don’t know if anybody knows what a billion is, but I’m going to tell you what I’ve learned a billion is. In 2005, representing my constituents of Fort McMurray-Athabasca, I collected in six weeks 7,000 signatures from Fort McMurray, out of three offices, to twin highway 63, the highway of death, where many of my constituents died.

In 2006, when I had the pleasure of announcing in February as the parliamentary secretary of transport with Minister Lawrence Cannon $150 million to twin part of that highway, most of that highway, a decision by Stephen Harper and the Conservative government of Canada, the Alberta government came to the table. The PC government came to the table, and they invested $170 million on that, and of course it was their responsibility to get that job done. Now, that was $320 million to twin most of highway 63. Three hundred and twenty million. That’s not even close to the $1.3 billion that this government is going to spend on interest payments as a result of nothing short of negligence.

Do you know what? I want to tell you another story about highway 63 and my 7,000 signatures that went to the federal government and went to the provincial government that I was able to petition and, I believe, forced the government of the day in Ottawa and the government of the day here to do something about it. Because they waited so long to get that twinned, it cost more than a billion dollars. That’s what timing means. That’s how important timing is in a government’s mandate, the timing to decide when to invest, when to save, and when to spend.

I truly believe, with respect, Madam Speaker, that this NDP government has it backwards. This debt will lead to a lowering of our credit rating. It will mean more expensive money for not just the government of Alberta but for all of those other organizations such as schools and other organizations that use this credit level and this incredible credit rating to borrow. It’s not just the Alberta government. There are scores and scores of organizations across this province that rely on that great interest rate. Guess how many provinces have that great credit rating? Too many answers. One, one province, has that credit rating. That’s this province, and this province will lose that.

Now, I have complimented this government on some parts of its budget. I have to admit it’s about that much of a that much budget, but I did, the same as I complimented the previous government for some work that they got right. They did agree to twin highway 63. It was their responsibility. Unfortunately, it took them more than 10 years to do it. But they did some good work, and they gave us part of that great credit rating. They didn’t spend it all, almost. They didn’t spend it all, and we had a great credit rating. We are going to lose that, and the significance of that, folks, Madam Speaker, is very high indeed, and it will be a high price to pay for all Alberta families.

It will increase the cost of borrowing, leaving much less money for programs. That means we’ll have to borrow more money and more money just to pay the interest on the debt. Now, we’ve all seen the budget and the line items, but what’s the third-biggest number that’s going to be on the budget in three years no matter what happens? It’s going to be interest payments, interest payments for debt borrowed by this government. One point three billion dollars means fewer hospitals, fewer schools, fewer roads and bridges, and, most importantly, fewer front-line services.

We need to protect our front-line services. We need to protect our nurses, our teachers, our doctors, and all those people that are front-line workers providing services to Albertans. Yet this government, with its reckless spending and budget process, is threatening that, is threatening our front-line workers. No matter how you suggest that you can do otherwise with numbers, the truth is that you cannot, because sooner or later if I don’t have to pay it and if you don’t have to pay it, my children will have to pay it and my grandchildren will have to pay it.

I have two grandchildren that live in this city. Now, I don’t want to see those grandchildren have to pay for debt as a result of bad performance by the NDP government – I truly don’t – and I am concerned for my grandchildren, as I wish that all of you were, because I want my grandchildren to walk into a hospital and speak to somebody and get in there. If they’re sick, I want them healed and I want the nurses to be there ready for them. I want the doctors to be there ready for them. I want the teachers to give my grandchildren what they deserve, which is the number one education in the world. Right now our education system is rated about fifth in Canada.

An Hon. Member: In the world.

Mr. Jean: That’s fifth in Canada. I appreciate the help. Yeah, I really do. Thanks. If you could maybe stand over here a bit.

Truly, truly, folks, it’s not a laughing matter. You think you’re doing the right thing by borrowing so much money and by spending so much money, but who has looked at any possible efficiencies in the government, the most expensive government in Canada? Not one person has said: we can save some money here; we can look at some efficiencies. There are a lot of opportunities. All Albertans know that.

As you can tell, I’m fairly passionate about this because people work hard for their money. Albertans work extremely hard for their money. The people in the oil and gas sector work so hard for their money and usually away from their families, from their loved ones for long periods of time. This debt spiral: you will see it in the future because you are not doing anything to correct it. There has been no attempt and there is no suggestion in this budget whatsoever of any interest to find savings.

I am a businessperson. I ran many businesses successfully, and I know for sure that the only thing that you can control in businesses is your expenses when you have government interference. Sure, you can try to grow sales, but the truth is that the only thing you can really control is the expenses. That’s why when revenues are down – and the revenues in my businesses are down, and the revenues in all businesses in Alberta are significantly down – that is the time to adjust your expenses, not to lay off people. I've heard that it's a joke. I was clear during the campaign; I've been clear since the campaign. I rely on front-line services. I will protect front-line workers, and I will stop this NDP government from firing and eliminating front-line positions.

Now, it does worry me. It doesn't seem to worry anybody on the other side, but I will tell you, more importantly, that whether it worries me or not is not really an issue. Worry in the capital markets is the issue. Five billion, 10 billion, 15 billion are just numbers, but they're numbers that nobody in Alberta can afford to invest in oil sands plants. If you want a plant, if you want a refinery, if you want an upgrader, you need to find someone, a business, a corporation with $15 billion. Fifteen billion dollars: that's what it costs to set up an organization, a business like that. Who sets up those businesses? Shareholders. Albertans own shares in oil sands companies. They own shares in all of our companies, as all Canadians do. So when you penalize oil sands companies and oil and gas companies, you penalize Albertans because it's they that have their pensions invested. Teachers' pensions, nurses' pensions: they have them invested in our companies in Alberta. So when you penalize our companies, you hurt Albertans and you especially hurt the most vulnerable Albertans, retirees on fixed incomes.

I am worried about capital markets. I have talked to many people in the industry. No one is investing in Alberta right now. You can pull this and that and the occasional $50 million or $1 million of investments that may come into Alberta. I have talked to a lot of investors, and no one is bringing money into Alberta right now. The NDP government has put far too much unpredictability, uncertainty, and bad monetary policy into this budget, terrible monetary policy, especially during a time like this.

It should worry the government, but nobody on the other side is worried. I see smiles. I see smiles and smirks. That's not helpful. We're trying to be helpful. We have always tried to be helpful since we started here because we clearly saw the importance of working together.

Madam Speaker, let me point out that no one expected the government to balance the budget this year. Did you hear? No one expected the government to balance the budget this year or even next year. No one did because, frankly, in my opinion, it would be very hard to do and the cuts would be too draconian and would not be satisfactory. Wildrose wasn't going to balance the budget in these two years. We were not. In fact, during the campaign we said that we would not balance the budget for two years, but in the third year we would. The difference between the Wildrose and the NDP policies is that we were going to start. We were going to start to head down that path because when you start out on a journey, if you want to change the direction, you have to change the path. I would suggest that this government needs to seriously think about heading in the right direction and find fiscal prudence with some of the areas that are necessary.

All of us use Alberta's services, so we know when you enter into an office and when you have an opportunity to look at all of the assets this government owns, whether it be the 14,000 cellphones currently utilized by Alberta Health Services employees – the famous story I love is where one of the senior managers in Alberta Health Services wanted to go shopping at Christmas and had his staff go and save a parking spot at one of the malls in Calgary. And you're putting more money and more people into Alberta Health Services when we hear this kind of thing, when we have 5 employees for every 1 manager. Five employees for every 1 manager.

But let's not stop there. Let's talk about the Alberta government, that has 3.7 employees for every manager. Now, WestJet, who takes my life in its hands every time we fly, has 12 for every manager. Twelve employees for every manager, and they fly in the sky. Don't you think we can do better? Why can we not find efficiencies in the Alberta government? Why can you not find efficiencies in Alberta Health Services, the third- or fourth-largest employer in Canada? Every other province has the same constitutional obligations that we do.

We did want to start in the right direction, and we knew that the right direction was savings because we had a government that had been in power for 44 years and was the most expensive government in Canada. That's right. The Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta, when they were in government, was the most expensive government in Canada's history. But good news. Good news. They don't have it anymore, folks. The NDP government of Alberta is the most expensive government in Canada's history. So congratulations. You even beat the PCs on that.

Now, let me tell the most expensive government in Alberta's history that there is an opportunity to change that because you haven't spent the money yet. So I encourage you to do so. You have an opportunity to actually do things differently. I mentioned today in question period how you could do things differently and restore democracy here. Even Stephen Harper gave more democracy to the NDP than the NDP is giving to the opposition parties here in Alberta, even Stephen Harper, whom I hear fearmongerers all the time talk about how bad he was. I believe he was the greatest prime minister we've ever seen in Canada. [interjections] Those people on the other side have so much knowledge on the issue because, of course, you were there. No, you weren't. [interjections] I was there, and I was very proud to be there.

You know, the one thing I did see that Stephen Harper did was that he allowed us to actually have an opportunity at committees to study legislation. Now, I know you don't know that because you're backbenchers and all of you are new except a couple. All of you are. [interjections] I appreciate the banter. What I'd appreciate from you is the opportunity to talk about that because democracy is the most important thing that we can possibly have. Democracy means that we get better decisions because we all have input into those decisions, but we can't start unless we change the path and the direction that we go in.

Now, I did mention earlier that under my leadership Wildrose is always committed to protecting Albertans and protecting the jobs of front-line workers, who are important to all of us. These are workers such as teachers and nurses, that deal with all of us every day, that serve Albertans and are there to serve Albertans, but Albertans are not there to serve them. They are hired to serve Albertans, and every single one of our proposals in the last election – every single one of them – and since has had a clear commitment to not lay off any front-line workers. In fact, I have suggested several times in several interviews that the NDP should bring in a moratorium to protect those workers. You heard it here first. I believe that we should protect our front-line workers. You can start down the path to a balanced budget without impacting services and front-line workers who support Albertans. You can. It is possible. It has been done before, and it will be done again.

Wildrose has also expressed its support for this mandated freeze many times. That would be for all government managers and nonbargaining union employees. Now, I sometimes hear the House leader say: "We can't do that. They've bargained in good faith, and it's covered by union contract." No, no, no. They're not covered by union contract. They're not. We have about 6,000 government managers that are not unionized that just got a big raise. In fact, we were very concerned when the new NDP government removed the wage freeze for managers instituted by the previous Prentice government. We were very concerned because that would be the wrong signal to send to our energy industry and, in fact, to all corporations and all businesses and Albertans as a whole.

We noted that when the Premier brought in a political staff from British Columbia to become a senior deputy minister, this B.C. politico, she actually immediately – immediately – used an order in council to increase wages, to reinstate the wage increase to the top levels of the civil service, to the managers. Immediately. Tens of thousands of lay-offs in Alberta, and what's the first thing someone from British Columbia comes in to do in Alberta? Charge Albertans more by reinstating a way to take away a wage freeze and to reinstate these high wages of already high-paid employees. I heard today that somewhere in the neighbourhood of $77,000 was the average wage, which means that there are a lot of people that make a lot more than that.

Now, I'm not suggesting cuts. I don't want cuts. This is not the time to cut, just like it's not the time to give wage increases. This summer managers in the civil service got a big, big wage boost. This government, when they undid the freeze to management salaries that the Prentice government put in, propped them right up. Now, what kind of signal does that send to the unemployed in Alberta, the people who have been laid off? People say that 40,000 people have been laid off in Alberta. That's just Albertans. That's just Albertans that have been laid off in Alberta. That does not include the people from across Canada that worked in Alberta. That's just Albertans. Forty thousand people have been laid off, and immediately the 6,000 managers in the civil service get a wage boost, a wage increase.

Well, what are the private-sector unions doing? What are they doing? Well, we recently noted that the private-sector unions have been negotiating wage freezes. Yes, that's right, and some of you know that. They have been negotiating wage freezes out of respect and for the reality of the current economic conditions. Now, there are some members of the government who are actually building trades unionists. They know this, and they know that it makes sense.

It is an example, in my opinion and Wildrose's opinion, of a responsible trade union in their behaviour because they recognize that it's not all about them. It is an example. It is an example of what great things private unions can do. It is an example of free collective bargaining working well. Very important to our province and to our country. I represent more union members per capita, I think, than anybody in the country except for maybe the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo now.

Wildrose does think the government would do well to begin discussions with its public-sector unions. Yes, begin discussions now with the public-sector unions because now is the right time to start down that path and to talk to them about getting a temporary freeze on public-sector salaries. They are Albertans. They understand what's going on. I've worked with them for many years, and they are logical, smart people, and they get it. They want what's best for Alberta, just like Wildrose wants what's best for Alberta. We certainly are in this together, all Albertans, whether they work in the public sector or the private sector. All of us want Alberta to succeed. I honestly believe that a sincere effort on the part of this government might find some success. I truly, truly believe that. Take the time to pick up the phone. Have an informal conversation. I think you will be surprised at what you find, and I would encourage you to do this.

Wildrose has always been clear – during the election campaign, today, yesterday – and will always be clear about front-line workers. We would not lay off front-line workers like teachers or nurses or government employees, that provide absolutely essential services to Albertans. These services make us the best country in the world and the best province within this country, but we do need to shrink the size of the civil service. We do. We can do that in a number of ways that don't include any firings, any layoffs.

There is a thing called attrition. People actually leave the civil service. I believe the leader of the third party or one of his members mentioned today that there were about 212,000 civil servants. Well, that means a lot of people decide to move around, move to different provinces, and – guess what? – people do retire. And there's the other option of early retirement. I know many people in the civil service would be happy to have that opportunity. They would. But the subject is not broached by this government. We have not talked about it. They are not interested in it. They, in fact, ignore it.

So let me take some time talking about how we got to this stage, a little history lesson. I love history because it has a way of repeating itself. But this history will set the context for why, in my mind and Wildrose's mind, this budget is so disappointing. First of all, how we got to this place and how we got here. I'm going to go way back in time in the distant past, that is starting to look like the near future. That's right. I'm going to go way back to a time in the distant past, that is starting to look like the near future. In the late '80s oil and gas prices were sluggish, and things were slow, and Alberta's government had not adjusted and was spending far more than most provinces. The heritage fund had stopped for years despite the fact that we were still getting royalty payments at that time that every province in the country envied, that every Premier in the country envied, that everybody in the country envied, and we were having problems with sluggish gas and oil prices.

Not only at that time were we not saving our resource wealth; we were taking on significant debt, just like today. But like today the relatively low oil prices were not the reason for our fiscal hole because nobody else really had that at that time. There weren't any more oil and gas revenues across the country except for in Alberta that were of any significance. Now, we've had some expansion since. We've seen Newfoundland and Labrador. We've seen Saskatchewan. We've seen northern British Columbia. They envied our position because they saw our position as being one they wanted to emulate, so they expanded their oil and gas sectors.

Like I said, like today the relatively low oil prices were not the reason for our fiscal hole. It was sloppy spending habits. Sloppy, sloppy, spending habits. Alberta's government was spending too much on just about everything, and they weren't getting the results. How do we know that? Because, as I mentioned earlier, we're under the same fiscal framework, under the same constitutional obligations, under the same demands as every other province in this country, and we were doing it without getting better results than anyone in the country.

Our politicians at that time had got in the business of being in business, much similar to some of the things I see in the NDP budget, and at that time they were doing that without recognizing that when the government picks winners and when the government picks losers by giving handouts, everyone loses – everyone loses – especially taxpayers. They tried to chase a government-sponsored diversification dream, and it was a dismal failure. Now we have the North West upgrader and other boondoggles that are going to cost our taxpayers, hard-working Albertans, billions and billions of dollars.

They tried to chase that sponsored diversification dream, and it was a failure. They tried to put off making any hard decisions, hoping an oil spike would come. Sound familiar? That government hoped an oil spike would come and that they wouldn't have to worry about looking for efficiencies. But all that did was make debt worse, squeezing out program spending with ballooning interest payments that bankrupted many, many Albertans. After the '80s I had a chance to be a lawyer, and I saw the foreclosures in Fort McMurray. I saw people committing very sad actions as a result of their financial position.

For us in this place, we have a great job. We have a guaranteed job with a guaranteed income for four years, but Albertans don't have that. We have a great pension plan. Well, not anymore, but we have a great plan. I know that because I used health care the other day. We have a great plan. We get all these benefits. Albertans don't get those benefits. So when you manage their money, please, I would implore, through you, Madam Speaker, that you recognize that people spend a lot of hours away from their family, working hard to pay their taxes to allow this government to spend that money. All I would ask, through you, is that risky social experiments are not the way to go forward and to use tried and true methods that other jurisdictions have done and succeeded with.

But, as I said, all that did was make debt worse, squeezing out program spending with ballooning interest payments, and as a result all Albertans suffered. Then in 1993, as federal politics were shaken up by Bob Rae's NDP government because they were running the biggest provincial economy in Canada into the ditch, it finally became clear to both the Liberal and PC leaders in Alberta that we had reached a point where some tough medicine needed to be administered. That's what happens when you spend too much and you don't do it efficiently. People pay the price. And Albertans will have to pay the price of the NDP government's failure just like they paid the price with the NDP government's failure in Ontario.

Now, over that next four years the Klein government reduced bloated government spending by a whopping 20 per cent. We suggested 2 per cent. Our fiscal plan in the election was 2 per cent; Ralph Klein, 20 per cent. Now, that got Alberta to a balanced budget and was an ambitious plan to eliminate debt that was just a little bit above $22 billion. In this case we're going to be looking at more than $50 billion.

Now, nobody disputes that these initial years were tough for Albertans. Let me be clear. In the '90s they were tough, but they weren't nearly as tough as the '80s. I am not saying, nor have I ever said, that that kind of reduction in spending is what the Wildrose would pursue. In fact, 2 per cent is a lot different than 20 per cent. All our proposals in our election platform were about attrition, about early retirement if they wanted it, not forced draconian measures. It was about finding ways to move forward down a different path of efficiencies.

Now, NDP Premier Roy Romanow was balancing Saskatchewan's books by reducing program spending by 10 per cent. Ten per cent. I have to be truthful, as I always am. I was very interested and hopeful to see the opportunity where you brought in 10 chiefs of staff from every province in the country other than Alberta. I see that's your employment plan, to employ people from other provinces by hiring NDP personalities from every province but Alberta. So I was kind of hoping that, you know, we would see a Romanow government, an opportunity to see some efficiencies, some opportunities for savings because Albertans do pay that price, but no. We actually see more money being spent, more civil servants being hired.

What is often misunderstood is that by the end of the '90s, as our royalties went through the roof, the Klein government started spending recklessly again, such that by 2005 Alberta was a middle-of-the-road operational spender amongst provinces and above average in capital spending, infrastructure spending. Now, had Klein's successors been able to keep us in the position of average spending or from that point kept spending increases to the rate of inflation and population growth, which is very reasonable during good times, we would not have run any deficits and would even be balanced by this year. Let me repeat that. Had Klein's successors been able to keep us in the position of average spending or from that point kept spending increases to the rate of inflation and population growth, we would not have run any deficits and would even be balanced this year. Does anybody care over here? Does anybody care over there? No, they don't.

But Klein's successors could not restrain spending increases. In particular, Premier Stelmach's government opened up the taps in his first few years both on operating and capital. As Mark Milke noted in the Calgary Herald earlier this year, in 2005 program spending in Alberta was $8,965 per person in inflation-adjusted dollars. That actually matched the high in 1993, when Getty had retired, before Ralph Klein brought in changes. That's right. It actually matched it. Put another way: if Klein had come full circle. And the notion that there was still some inherent deficit in our spending levels is false.

The government oversaw major spending increases between Premier Klein's last budget and the 2009 recession. While there were a few years of relative restraint following that, after Premier Redford's first two budgets Milke noted that the provincial government spent $10,967 per person on government programs. That was $2,000 more per person than in 2004-2005. Two thousand dollars more than 2004-2005. That's 17 per cent more with the cost of inflation. It's ridiculous if you compare it to other provinces. Truly ridiculous.

This problem was actually recognized by Premier Jim Prentice, whose budget had a section showing that the extra $2,000 per person, beyond inflation, is exactly how much more we spend than our neighbours in British Columbia on government programs. Two thousand dollars per person. In fact, I spent some time right across the country with infrastructure and transportation issues in 20 Crown corporations, so I had a chance to travel the country and to see how different provinces spent money. Well, $2,000 per Albertan translates into $8 billion extra that gets spent in Alberta on government, $8 billion more than British Columbia. Adjusted for population, that's $8 billion more here than they spend in British Columbia. Somehow British Columbia manages to deliver its services without that extra $2,000 per person.

Now, I call these extra dollars because I have yet to hear one defender of the status quo explain how we are getting 20 per cent better services than British Columbians are. How? We aren't. It's certainly not in health care, where we have in Alberta among the worst wait times in the country. Saskatchewan, next door, puts us to shame on wait times: three months for just about anything.

Here in Alberta we have the third- or fourth-largest employer in the country, Alberta Health Services, and we have one of the worst wait times. It's unbelievable the social cost let alone the economic cost of these people waiting for those operations. They impact on their families and their friends and their jobs. It doesn't cost any more to get an operation for a knee today than it does in eight months. Why are we having Albertans wait eight months for a knee operation? Why can every province in Canada do it better than we can with less money?

Now, I can't explain it, and I've not heard anybody be able to explain it, not in any rational terms. In fact, everybody on the other side seems to ignore that, seems to ignore the very issue. Nor can it be explained away by a cost-of-living argument. Now, sure, Alberta has seen some inflationary pressures. I would say that my community of Fort McMurray, where I've lived for 50 years, has had some interesting inflationary things happen to it, but it cannot be explained with inflationary pressures, certainly not in the last decade.

British Columbia has always been expensive relative to the rest of the country, but I dare the government to prove that it costs more to build something in Alberta than it does in Vancouver. I dare the government to say that or to prove it, because it's not provable. I know from my time in Ottawa working on infrastructure files that paving or twinning roads costs significantly more in mountainous British Columbia than it does in Alberta.

The difference I see between Alberta and B.C. is that Alberta has had a 44-year dynasty holding the purse strings through a series of massive royalty booms. After the late '90s instances of fiscal irresponsibility became far more common than any interest in restraint. The result is that, like in the '80s, a relatively low period of oil prices puts us into a situation where we turn to massive borrowing.

I saw earlier our coalition between the PCs and the NDP. You seem to have the same mantra in government, the same spending habits, the same lack of interest to find any efficiencies, the same interest to put this burden onto Albertans unfairly during times of being laid off. Maybe that's going to be the situation in the future. That would be, of course, up to the third party. But just as then, Premiers and Finance ministers act as though it is simply a revenue problem.

Now, a revenue problem means increased taxes, and if we are not going to address it with a massive tax hike, then we will have to do massive borrowing. I see this government doing both. But it is dishonest and unfair to look at our deficit and simply say that it's the fault of low oil revenues or low revenues.

Now, I will prove my point. For one, I wonder how many of my colleagues in this House could guess where this year's supposedly horrific revenues rank in our 110-year history? Well, you'd probably be shocked given all the dire talk about revenues, revenues, revenues. But you should find out and know that this year it's going to be $44 billion according to your own numbers. That's the third-highest revenues this province has ever seen. That's right. The third-highest revenues. If I was in business, this would be a banner year of revenues. This would be a great year of revenues. So in 110 years 107 of those years or 108 of those years have seen worse revenues than this year for Albertans and for the government. [interjection] That's right. The third-highest revenues ever.

So that is not a good argument, that revenues are down, because they are not down; they're up. They're up. The last two years of $100 oil have put revenues through the roof. It has gotten close to $50 billion when you include the SUCH sector, but that's no measuring stick, in reality.

What's more illustrative is that even at $100 a barrel, this government was still taking out billions of dollars in debt. That government, by the way, not this government. That government. But why? Because Alberta's government is too expensive: $8 billion more than our neighbours in British Columbia. Again, to repeat, just because we are spending $8 billion more than what we need to does not mean it is an easy matter to stop doing it, and we in the Wildrose understand that. Wildrose recognizes this, and that's why, despite all the fearmongering about drastic cuts and all of that, which is balderdash, we have never claimed we would eliminate that 20 per cent and get spending in line with British Columbia. We have a great quality of life, and we have a gift with our oil and gas sector and our natural resources. We should live better, but we should live within our means and make sure that Albertans don't lose their jobs because of this government's failure to manage properly.

Instead, we have proposed a very modest $1 billion per year reduction in spending for three or four years to get us to a place where, thanks to our strong revenue streams, we can plausibly say that we have eliminated the structural deficit and then be in a place, a responsible place, where we can keep taxes low even in leaner times but save for the future when royalties are down. Save for the future when royalties are down for my grandchildren, for your grandchildren, for Alberta's future, for the competitive advantage so that we don't have to pay $1.3 billion in interest payments and forgo all of those wonderful things we expect in front-line services and capital spending and infrastructure. This is my vision of responsible government, the kind of government Albertans do deserve, a kind of government that I think Albertans truly want. That to me is the real Alberta way.

Now, that vision is nowhere to be seen in this budget. Nowhere. This budget takes our already bloated spending and inflates it further, 2.8 per cent per year, far beyond inflation and far beyond population growth, 2.8 per cent per year without any justification based on the actual numbers of population or inflation. Why? There is no logical explanation. Zero. This budget takes our already bloated spending and inflates it to a place where it's going to be even more difficult to recover. This budget puts off those tough decisions indefinitely, saying that we never have to worry about paying it back because there's no plan to pay it back: zero, zip, nada, not even a single plan to pay off the money.

Simply put, this government is banking on a boom to balance the budget and racking up an absolutely reckless $47 billion in debt in the meantime, $47 billion of debt that we have to pay back sometime in the future, which will affect our ability to borrow, that will hurt our quality of life because when you pay for debt and interest payments, something else has to go.

Now, I'm going to put an asterisk beside that $47 billion because that's the optimistic number, and we're going to owe a lot more than that under the NDP government's rule. A lot more. That number is counting on oil prices getting to an average of $50 for this year – fantasy – but rising to $61 next year and $68 the year after that. Two more years of fantasy. Don't believe me; look at the experts. Even Moody's has suggested those numbers are off $20 a barrel. Off $20 a barrel. That's 33 per cent. I'm concerned. I wish there was more concern over there, but there seem to be smirks and laughter and, you know, some comments. Those things are not helpful.

We have tried to be helpful, and we will continue to be helpful because that's what Albertans elected us to be, and that's why we want to have the opportunity – the opportunity – to get democracy right, to have the opportunity to participate in those choices so that the voices that elected us are heard. Right now they have to be silent because you're not allowing us to participate in committees, where we decide on legislative issues, where we have an opportunity for input.

These projections are far higher than what groups like Moody's or the American government are forecasting. These groups do this for a living. The Americans are usually right about this stuff for a reason.

On page 4 of the budget we see, without knowing what kind of assumptions they are, that this government is banking on huge revenue growth in years 4 and 5 to get us to a so-called balanced budget. You're not even going to be in power then. Overall this government is projecting 26 per cent growth in revenues over those five years. That's laughable.

Recall that this year isn't some trough that we can expect a massive rebound from. This year is our third-highest revenue year ever – third highest – yet you think it's going to grow by 26 per cent over the next five years? Let me repeat that. This year isn't some weird, low-level revenue year. It's not. Don't believe your own press releases. This is not something that we can expect a massive rebound from. This year is our third-highest revenue year ever – ever – but somehow the government thinks 2020 will be way better.

With few prospects for pipelines because the NDP, including the Manitoba NDP and the federal NDP, are against all pipelines . . .

Some Hon. Members: That's not true.

Mr. Jean: It's true. With little prospect of pipelines getting us to tidewater any time soon and with no reputable agency projecting that oil gets anywhere above $80 anywhere in the near or foreseeable future, keeping our debt to only $47 billion relies on a lot of fantasy, wishful thinking.

Now, I'd never say that anything is impossible in Alberta because this is the greatest place in the world. No question.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) this Assembly stands adjourned until Monday at 1:30 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 1st Session (2015)

Activity to October 29, 2015

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter numbers until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us reflect. As we begin this week's deliberations, let us commit ourselves with renewed resolve to work together with determination but also with compassion and understanding as we carry out our duties to serve Albertans and those who visit us in this great province that we proudly call home.

Hon. members, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark. I would invite all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
 True patriot love in all thy sons command.
 Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
 Il sait porter la croix!
 Ton histoire est une épopée
 Des plus brillants exploits.
 God keep our land glorious and free!
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my absolute pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly students and teachers from the Two Hills Mennonite school, a total of 53 students and including six parents and teachers. These students are the reason that I have stood up in this House on several occasions to bring to your attention issues regarding their new school. Their parents are frustrated, and these are some of the faces of the Two Hills students, who badly need a solution that works best for their community. May I ask the students and their chaperones to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my absolute honour today to rise before you for the first time in this House to introduce to you and through you 65 members from Edmonton-Castle Downs school, Dunluce elementary. They are here today with their teachers, Mrs. Hines, Mr. Kostiuk, and Mr. Thorne; and their parent volunteers, Mr. Yamac, Mrs. Menard, Mrs. Abdille, Ms Thomas, Mrs. Anderson, and Mr. Lee. I would ask that you rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Are there any other school groups for acknowledgement today?

To the students – and I don't say this often enough on behalf of this House – it's particularly pleasing when students and young people come here. You are very important.

The Minister of Advanced Education and Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Ms Judy Carter and Ms Margaret Hodgson. Judy Carter is a family friend from my childhood. We both grew up in a small town in northwestern Alberta, in Valleyview. She spent her career teaching in postsecondary programs at Grant MacEwan University and NorQuest College, including English as a second language and English in the workplace. She also taught adult literacy to Canadian-born students and newcomers, and before retiring, Judy's last teaching assignment at NorQuest College was teaching in the language instruction for newcomers to Canada program.

Margaret Hodgson is currently semiretired. She worked for many years as an adult educator in English as a second language at NorQuest College, and she now does occasional work as an examiner at both Grant MacEwan University and NorQuest College. In the 1980s Margaret and her class from Grant MacEwan were guests of the Premier's father, Grant Notley.

I'm pleased that Judy and Margaret were able to join us here today. They're both seated in the members' gallery, and this afternoon I'd ask that you give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a large contingency of forestry stakeholders. Today we have 24 mayors and Reeves from various towns, counties, and municipal districts that have forestry as a major industry that supports the livelihood of thousands of Albertans and their respective local economies. With them are 17 board members and officials of the Alberta Forest Products Association, an industry that's been providing jobs to thousands of our citizens. Alberta's forest sector represents a great story for our province. The industry is a major contributor to the economy, provides excellent opportunities, a sustainable steward of our forests, and a great place to build a career. I would ask them to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly six special guests today. As you may know, November is Family Violence Prevention Month in Alberta, and I would like to take this opportunity to acknowledge a group of Albertans who have helped individual families and others get the help they need so they can live their lives feeling safe and supported in their communities.

First, Dr. Allen Benson. Dr. Benson is chair of the Alberta Family Violence Death Review Committee and chief executive officer of Native Counselling Services. Dr. Benson has led many groundbreaking programs for Alberta's aboriginal people. Dr. Benson is joined by his wife, Dr. Patti Laboucane-Benson, who also works for Native Counselling Services of Alberta as their director of research, training, and communication.

Also with us are Pat Garrett, the executive director of Wings of Providence, a second-stage women's shelter dedicated to supporting women and children impacted by family violence; Deborah Miller, who established a family law office to help low-income Albertans who experience family law problems, including family violence; and Jackie Foord, CEO of YWCA Edmonton, whose agency offers programs and services that support girls and women and their families in the Edmonton area.

I would like to finish by introducing a very special guest. Gerry Kilgannon, mother of Bill Moore-Kilgannon, my chief of staff, is one of Alberta's early family violence prevention pioneers. Ms Kilgannon started the office for the prevention of family violence well over 30 years ago.

Your presence here today is a reminder to all Albertans that everyone can do something to prevent family violence at any time or in any place. It's my honour to ask my distinguished guests to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure today to introduce to you two close friends of ours that are visiting us from Hollywood beach, Florida. First is Sergeant First Class U.S. Army (Retired) Jim Mahon and his wife, Rosemary Chelick-Mahon, formerly of Fairview. She grew up with my husband, and for more years than I can count now they've been close family friends. We're enjoying them visiting here this week. I'm happy to have them attend my first day back in session. If they would please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Minister of Seniors.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House visitors from the Edmonton Down Syndrome Society. Today, November 2, marks the beginning of Down Syndrome Awareness Week across Canada, and our guests are very active in advocating for and motivating members of this community as well as raising awareness of the important contributions that people with Down syndrome make in all of our communities.

I'm pleased to introduce Tanya Ponich and her mother, Rosalind Mosychuk, who also happen to be constituents of mine in Edmonton-Glenora, as well as Adam Faulkner, Gail Faulkner, Matthew Smith, Brandon Smith, Alana Gersky, Diane Gersky, and Marie Nichols. To use Tanya's words: "Use your gifts. Take a risk and create a life that is happy and healthy. By doing so, you and your family and your friends, our community, will become well." What a wonderful message. I now ask that our guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly three individuals that are part of the Rotary youth exchange program. Melissa Gosewinkel is from Minden, Germany. She is 16 and is spending this year in Westlock as the current in-bound Rotary youth exchange student with the Westlock Rotary Club. She is here with no preconceived ideas of Canada and wants to learn the geography, history, and culture of our country first-hand. She is very enthusiastic about all this, has already learned our national anthem, will be experiencing many new ideas and challenges for her, including ice-skating. During her year here she will spend time with host families and has already experienced farm life and riding along in a combine during harvest.

Kathryn Anderson from Rochester, Alberta, is the returning Westlock Rotary Club out-bound exchange student. Kathryn spent time in Curitiba, Brazil, and has learned how to speak Portuguese through this program. She is a grade 12 student at R.F. Staples high school in Westlock.

Les Dunford has been a member of the Westlock Rotary Club for 30 years and is involved in various aspects of the club. He's a lifelong member of the community. Les lives on a family farm near Dapp, near where I live. Les still does a little farming with cattle and has been a writer/photographer with the town and country section of four local newspapers for the past 25 years.

I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome, particularly the international guests from both the United States and Europe who are with us.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three women who are also here to celebrate National Down Syndrome Awareness Week. Cheri Lefebvre is the older, perhaps wiser sister of my good friend Jules. She's an accomplished Special Olympian, having competed on the national stage. She's worked in a variety of capacities in a variety of St. Albert businesses for years. Krysten Pysyk is without a doubt one of the most determined, strong-willed, and supportive women I've ever met. They are both here supported by their staff from the Lo-Se-Ca Foundation in St. Albert, Jasmine Baker. If they're not already standing, I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the other members of the Assembly a wonderful group from the St. Michael's Health Group. St. Michael's Health Group is a health care organization that provides long-term care, supportive housing, and numerous programs and services for the seniors of our community. I have visited St. Michael's Long Term Care Centre as well as the Millennium Pavilion Seniors' Lodge, and I'm proud of the work that they are doing in my riding of Edmonton-Decore. Today I am pleased to introduce Stan Fisher, president and CEO; Kay Willekes, director; Geraldine Journeau, controller; and Charmon Balcom, executive assistant. I would like to ask them to rise, please, of course, and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A busy day today in the Assembly. I'll be brief. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Elena Ryland. Elena is a second-year law student at the University of Alberta, and I wonder if one day she'll be joining us here in a seat on the floor of the Chamber as opposed to up there in the gallery. I'd ask that Elena please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome, one and all.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Suicide and Mental Health

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to talk about an issue that affects all of us as Albertans but too often is unheard. If the House would indulge me, I'll tell them a little bit of a story, a story about someone I knew and I wish I had known better, a story about Evan Tran, a student who was well known on the University of Alberta campus, known for his ear-to-ear grin, involved in numerous student groups, and known as a jokester who was always bubbly and happy, helping others whenever they needed it. A week and a half ago I attended a memorial service to commemorate his life. On Tuesday, October 13, Evan took his own life after having struggled with mental health issues since the age of 15. He was only 21 years old.

Mr. Speaker, mental health isn't an issue that only exists in postsecondary institutions, but it is there that it is painfully prevalent. That is why I am proud to support a government which is leading a mental health review, a government which understands the importance of quality mental health services.

Evan was described as someone who put his heart into making things better for other people and was a real giver, and Albertans can learn from him. Albertans deserve better. Albertans deserve a mental health initiative that leaves no one behind. Evan would want us to learn from his tragedy. Whether it's through student or peer support services or providing easy access to counsellors when it's needed, we need to be able to reach out to students and Albertans in a proactive way to bring services to them. We need to build on the work already being done on our campuses and recognize the importance of the work our mental health professionals do every day.

Mr. Speaker, I know Evan would have wanted us to celebrate his life. He would have wanted us to celebrate his life by achieving more, and I'm proud that our government is doing just that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, this last week we were back into the new routine, and I deliberately made the decision to allow preambles to continue, but in our shared desire of the floor, to get as many questions as possible, I want to remind you that there are no preambles to supplemental questions after the first five sets of questions. I wish to inform you with some authority based on previous precedents, I will be more diligent in rising should members have preambles on their first and second supplementaries.

I would recognize Her Majesty's Official Opposition leader.

Job Creation

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, today the government told everybody it would be releasing some more details on their $5,000 job subsidy program. What we got were precious few details and promises of more information to come. We know that business groups and economists have serious reservations about the program. They smell a boondoggle in the making. Can the Premier tell Albertans how this program will actually create new jobs and that it won't just waste another $200 million of taxpayers' money?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said a number of times before, our government believes in supporting Alberta's entrepreneurs, visionaries, and job creators to ensure the right conditions for growth, and this is one of the pieces in that platform that's designed to encourage job growth in the face of an economic downturn. This is a plan that, as I've said before, is modelled a little bit on a plan that the member opposite voted for previously. We know that in the past he's been in favour of supporting government-funded job creation plans, and apparently it's just a question of who proposes it in order to determine whether he'll support it that time.

Mr. Jean: You cannot compare a program for registered apprentices that is linked to accredited training with this potential boondoggle that you're proposing.

Mr. Speaker, there are still so many questions about this program. In question period last week we heard some disturbing things. Some of these subsidies are going to go to part-time jobs. There are so many details we don't know yet. To the Premier: will this program apply to jobs for temporary foreign workers? Will it apply to companies that contract with the government?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I believe the Minister of Advanced Education and Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour clarified last week, this program will be rolled out in a way to ensure that double-dipping is not allowed because we want to be able to spread out the many, many programs that we're putting into place to create jobs and encourage job creation in Alberta. This is a plan that we hope will create up to 27,000 jobs for Albertans. We are taking this problem seriously as opposed to talking about cutting and slashing the jobs that already exist.

Mr. Jean: So apparently temporary foreign workers are eligible.

Mr. Speaker, there are just so many questions about this program. So far we haven't had any real answers. We know business groups are suspicious. We know that the expert the Premier hired to advise her on this budget doesn't think it will be feasible.

Let me give the Premier another potential problem. Will this program only apply to existing companies, or can companies create spinoffs and then move jobs to rake in half a million dollars in subsidies?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the member says that the minister hasn't provided details, but it appears as though he hasn't actually listened to the details that the minister has provided, because what we've talked about already is a program that would ensure that that kind of thing doesn't happen. You know, I'll tell you this as well. Albertans are concerned about their jobs. They're concerned about the economy. That's why over 70 per cent of Albertans polled about our budget are in favour of this plan.

The Speaker: Second major question.

Mr. Jean: The jobs minister held a press conference on the $5,000 jobs subsidy program but did not provide any specifics, and I quote your minister: further details on the program, application requirements, and procedures will be made available at a later date. Jobs are being lost right now in Alberta. It's absurd that the government is spending time and resources on photo ops for a program that won't be available until far after the next budget that you bring forward. Can the Premier tell Albertans: when exactly will this program start? Will any part of this program begin in this fiscal year?

Ms Notley: Again, Mr. Speaker, I really wish that the member opposite would listen to the details that have been rolled out so far. He'd probably be able to use his question period a bit more effectively. What we've talked about is comparing the 2015 EI and tax returns with the 2016 EI and tax returns. So what will happen is that the grant will be rolled out. After the fact there will be a rebate that's delivered at the end of next year and for jobs that are created beginning on January 1, 2016. It's been fairly clearly laid out, and I'm not quite sure why it is that member opposite hasn't . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, it looks like the only extra employment this program will generate for quite a while is when media photographers show up to take pictures of the government's announcements about the program itself.

When you look at all the unanswered questions – and there are many – and all the opportunities for waste and fraud and abuse, frankly, it's scary. Can the Premier assure Albertans that the only good jobs this program will create won't be new bureaucratic jobs needed to police the program?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, just to be clear, I think those media photographers already have jobs. They're photographers. I would suggest that maybe a job they might want to consider creating is researcher or somebody that listens to the press conferences that the minister is delivering, where she gives the details of the plan over and over and over again. That being said, our government is committed to doing a number of different things to create jobs, to incent jobs, to work with our partners in the business community to kick-start this economy, to be the shock absorbers when the economy slows down, unlike the plan that those folks have over there to simply . . .

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Jean: I would agree. Albertans are shocked by your budget.

Speaking of jobs and bad policy, we have been warning about this government's plan to radically raise the minimum wage. We have been told that the government contractors who employ low-wage workers are raising their price because of the minimum wage increases. We hear that the government is actually renegotiating some of these contracts to reduce work requirements and, thus, staff levels. Can the Premier assure us that no Albertans will lose their job because of radical minimum wage increases?

Ms Notley: Well, again, going back to my previous comment about maybe creating some more research jobs, I suggest that the member opposite provide a little bit of paper and perhaps some evidence for the rumours he's hearing because none of that makes any sense, so it's very difficult to even answer the question. To be clear, the issue is very clear that when you raise the amount of money in the pockets of the lowest income people in the society, generally speaking, that creates more jobs, and we know that that's what the evidence will show over time.

The Speaker: Third major question.

Provincial Budget

Mr. Jean: This NDP government seems oblivious to what is happening in Alberta's private sector. Last week we heard about Devon Energy and 200 layoffs; Husky energy and 1,400 jobs lost; Cenovus, 700 more jobs lost on top of the 800 lost earlier this year, and on and on it goes. Bloomberg describes it as: "Money is flooding out of Canada at the fastest pace in the developed world." To the Premier: what, if anything, is her government doing to give any hope at all to our energy industry and to our energy workers?

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I mean, the member opposite is correct in that with the massive drop in the price of oil, over which this government has no control, the energy industry is suffering and people are losing jobs, and families and communities are suffering as a result as well. We are very, very aware of that. That is why we have come up with a multipronged plan to create jobs and to incent economic activity. Whether it's venture capital, whether it's freeing up access to capital for small- and medium-enterprise businesses, whether it's for a job-creation program, whether it's through our capital plan we are trying on many fronts to deal with this . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Jean: All over Alberta companies and families are making hard decisions, and this is the third-highest revenue year for this government in our history. Across boardroom tables senior managers are trying to adjust to the economic conditions and minimize the impact of layoffs. Across kitchen tables Alberta families are working hard to make do, maybe keep a vehicle a little longer or choose a stay-cation instead of a vacation. Everywhere Albertans are trying to adjust, but so far we've seen no adjustments whatsoever from this government. Can the Premier point to any tangible efforts to economize on the part of her government?

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we outlined in our budget, what we plan to do is to carefully and cautiously engage in restraint across a number of government departments throughout the province. For instance, many ministries received no funding increase in this year. With Health we've reduced, slowly, the rate at which they can increase their budget, carefully because we don't want to create chaos but at the same time slowly reducing how much they can increase and getting to 2 per cent. So we are carefully reducing expenditures because, at the same time, we don't want to add to chaos with chaos.

Mr. Jean: This NDP government talks about fairness, but in reality they do play favourites. While private-sector workers across Alberta are taking pay cuts or having their work hours reduced or being laid off, times have never been better for public-sector managers. One of this government's first actions was to lift the wage freeze for managers and non-union workers. They got back a 2.25 per cent pay increase, and next year they get another raise. To the Premier: how does she justify this to a private-sector worker who is actually hurting so badly today in Alberta?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to wage freezes, it was this government that introduced a budget wherein we talked about taking to the Members' Services Committee a proposal to freeze MLA salaries, and this Official Opposition raised a point of privilege over it because they didn't want us to do it. You know, they've got to pick a side and stick on it for just – I don't know – half a day. Half a day.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the labour minister this morning reannounced her below-the-poverty-line job grant. On Thursday the Premier had to admit that a $3,300 grant translates to a $33,000-a-year job, which is below the poverty line. The jobs minister now wants to raise the minimum wage to $15 an hour and cut off entry-level jobs where Albertans can get the jobs, skills, training, and labour to qualify for a higher paying job. To the labour minister:

what programs are you planning to actually help Albertans get good jobs so that they can support themselves and their families?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our job creation incentive grant is there to support business, to support the nonprofit sector, the charitable sector. These are the job creators in Alberta that we're working with to create jobs for Albertans. We're very proud to do that with them.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, in Alberta people start paying taxes at around $50,000 a year. That means that jobs over that contribute to the provincial coffers more than jobs under and create a good living for Alberta families, yet this minister wants to create $33,000-a-year jobs, which are below the poverty line. Please. To the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour: for Albertans that have lost good jobs in the energy sector due to your government's policies, what can you do to help them stay in Alberta? What are your plans, actually, to help those workers get jobs so that they can continue to support their families in their homes like they have been?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We are investing $178 million into this program. We are supporting employers to create jobs, and they are determining what salaries there are. We're not saying how much to do. It's up to the creativity of the marketplace. So we're very happy to support them. They can have jobs that are high end if they like. It's really up to the employers.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the jobs minister doesn't know her own programs. She's making it up as she goes along, and it doesn't look good.

Before May 5 the towers in Calgary and Edmonton were a lot fuller, before you were laughing at the job losses, folks. Before then, through down cycles and up cycles, they knew there was a government that would support the energy industry, and they stuck around knowing that support was there. Since this government has come in, they've gone to war with the industry, talking about royalty reviews, corporate tax increases, regulatory changes. When will this minister actually start to reverse those policies and do things that will bring jobs and economic development into this province instead of driving it out?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Of course, the energy industry is at the heart of Alberta's economy, and we care very much about the energy industry. We've created a whole ministry, Economic Development and Trade, because we want to make it easier for business to work with us as a government, a one-stop shop. We're committed. Our job creation plan is another initiative. Other things we're doing. We're very committed to supporting business in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Gas Station Leak Site Remediation

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of the members may be aware that the Gas Plus spill occurred in my constituency. About 7,000 litres leaked into the ground. The spill occurred in 2010, five years ago. This is affecting families and businesses in my constituency. Given that the previous government did very little to address this, to the minister of environment: what steps are you taking to ensure that this is being cleaned up in a prompt manner?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member for the question. You know, this has gone on for way too long, and that's why there has been a significant amount of money expended already by Environment and Parks to mitigate this site. We began injections of oxidizing chemicals on the week of October 12. Of course, I've also directed the ministry to have a look through the legislation to ensure that we can at least prevent future Gas Plus incidents. We have contaminated sites across the province, and it's time to get serious on polluter pay.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: given that spills such as these greatly affect Alberta's businesses and Albertan families, what is the government doing to ensure that spills of this nature will be dealt with quickly in the future?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, unlike the previous government, our government is committed to polluter pay and working to strengthen our government's ability to enforce those laws, which is why I've directed our department to review legislation and regulations and come back with a suite of options to regulate contaminated sites, bring us options with some teeth.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there is some belief that the previous government did not act quickly enough in their response to the spill in Bowness, again to the minister: what sorts of changes with regard to early warnings or incident analysis is the government undertaking?

Ms Phillips: Thank you to the member for the question. As I mentioned, I directed our department to review legislation and regulations. We are going to ensure that we are enacting the polluter-pay principle, that we are working with the city of Calgary and other municipalities across the province, Mr. Speaker, who are left with these legacy contaminated sites. We're going to make sure that we put the right pieces in place to ensure that municipalities and communities and homeowners don't have to live with these going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Forest Industry Issues

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's forest industry is key to economic growth and diversification in this province. Many families in my constituency rely heavily on the forestry sector for the good jobs it provides and to support their families. Many of these folks would tell you that the mountain pine beetle is one of the biggest issues concerning Alberta's forestry sector. My question to the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry is: what is your department doing to combat this serious problem?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Mountain pine beetle remains a very serious threat to the health of Alberta forests. Infestations threaten social, economic, and environmental values. This year our department is investing $35 million to combat mountain pine beetle. Through single tree removals of pine infested with beetles and industry harvests of susceptible stands, Alberta is making gains against a serious threat in co-operation with the forestry industry.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Minister, for the answer.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the mountain pine beetle can produce so much damage to Alberta's forests, my question to the same minister: what are you doing to protect jobs and support growth in our logging industry?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, forestry is a critical sector of our economy. Over 15,000 hard-working Albertans work in forestry, and the industry is a key economic driver in at least 70 Alberta communities, including Whitecourt in my own constituency. As we move to diversify our economy, this sustainable industry, based on a renewable resource, becomes even more important. Our government is committed to working closely with industry to improve efficiencies and to support innovation. We are working to expand markets for Alberta's wood products, particularly in Asia. I'm proud to be a champion for Alberta forestry products, and I'm going to work hard every day to support this industry and the hard-working families that depend on it.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Minister, for your answer.

Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta's forests are one of the best renewable resources and given that Albertans want us to move away from reliance on a single resource, to the same minister: what is your department doing to ensure the sustainability of this resource for generations to come?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, the high amount of value-added processing activity in Alberta's forestry sector is a success story that we need to maintain and support. When done right, forestry is one of the most sustainable industries in our province. We will continue to ensure a thoughtful and sustainable approach to forest management that balances the economic, social, and environmental needs of Albertans.

The Speaker: As I speak to the balance of the questions, I was trying to sort out if there was a preamble in your second supplemental. I'm sure there wasn't. I'm sure I'll hear no more of that in the future.

Resource Revenue Projections

Mr. Fildebrandt: Let's try something a little more difficult, Mr. Speaker. Oil prices are a critical number in crafting Alberta budgets, but this government's numbers are a little bit fuzzy. There are two different sets of numbers presented for the price of oil in the budget, one that is estimated, on page 70, and the other, which is the government's assumptions, on page 52. Will the Minister of Finance tell us which set of numbers he is using for revenue?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The numbers we're using for revenue are WTI. They are $50 for this fiscal year, $61 for the next, and $68 for the next.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, let's try again, Mr. Speaker. Given that in previous years there was a number to the penny that showed a weighted average between the department's calendar estimates and the fiscal year – let's look at page 70 of the budget – it appears that they just switched from the lower government estimate for this year to higher numbers for years 2 and 3. Is this a typo, a printing error, or is the minister inflating his numbers?

Mr. Ceci: I think I've just told this House what those numbers are. I'll stick with those.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, the number is different between the two pages.

Given that every $3 swing in the price of oil means a half a billion dollars shift in revenues, this discrepancy means the better part of a billion dollars. This is the equivalent of misplacing the entire Department of Seniors. These are serious issues that have serious consequences, that deserve a serious answer from the minister. Will the minister commit to coming back to the Assembly and showing us his math?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, preparing the budget took months and months and months. We were serious throughout. I commit to producing Budget 2016 with the same rigour. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Tobacco Use Reduction Strategy

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was an honour to help launch Alberta's new tobacco reduction strategy just under a couple of years ago, and it was hailed at that time as a leading approach to reducing smoking and preventing tobacco use in the first place. The path towards a tobacco-free future has also been laid out in previous private members' bills such as the Smoke-free Places Act and government bills such as the Tobacco Reduction Act. Meanwhile, the NDP's Budget 2015 is hiking taxes for tobacco for the second time in a year. To the Minister of Health: what specific plans does the minister have to ensure that tobacco taxes are channelled towards tobacco prevention and cessation programs?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker, and to the hon. member for asking it. Definitely, we have a number of different people in the department who are working on initiatives around wellness, and one of them, of course, is around reducing tobacco consumption. That's one of the reasons why they're using evidence to help drive recommendations, that they bring forward to me, like removing menthol products from the marketplace. It's really clear that of students and minors who are smoking, a large number were smoking menthol products, and that's one of the reasons why we've removed that product from the market.

Mr. Rodney: Again to the Minister of Health. I know Albertans are looking for more specifics than just that. Hopefully, they are still forthcoming.

She did mention wellness, and I really appreciate that. Given that the path to wellness has already been laid out in North America's first robust wellness strategy and given that Alberta enjoys a rich history of leading the way with wellness programs for Alberta students and those in the workplace and our seniors, can the minister please tell us: what specific wellness programs will the minister invest in, utilizing the tax increases, that is, for both tobacco and alcohol?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are absolutely committed to making sure that we have a sustainable health care system. That includes having access to cessation supports like calling 811 and being able to talk to somebody around how you can access different supports in your own community. That's obviously a really valued investment, and I find a relation because members opposite proposed cutting significantly from the budget . . .

An Hon. Member: Chaos.

Ms Hoffman: . . . and did want to pursue a situation that would result in a great deal of chaos. We're committed to providing stability, and this revenue will help us do that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Rodney: Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I didn't hear any specific wellness programs she'll invest in.

Let's try this for the final question to the Health minister. Given that the ministry is charged with an obligation to help create a healthy environment for Albertans and given the proliferation of e-cigarettes and related products, which are both condemned as public health risks and praised as smoking cessation aids, and given that Albertans, you know, could become subject to a patchwork of e-cigarette legislation, can the minister please tell us: what specific products, locations, and strategies is the minister proposing regarding the restriction of the use of e-cigarettes and products in Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the specific line item on wellness and how that'll be used in the upcoming budget, I'd be happy to discuss that and will discuss it with the hon. member when we debate the budget estimates in the coming weeks. In terms specifically of e-cigarettes I'd be really happy to hear recommendations from the hon. member and any members of this House on ways that we can ensure safety and well-being for all Albertans, including youth.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While Albertans in the private sector are losing tens of thousands of jobs, life in the bureaucracy has never been better: secure employment, comfortable pensions, and fresh off an 8 per cent, three-year pay raise. The spending tap is wide open. The fact is that Alberta has the most expensive bureaucracy in Canada. This is a slap in the face to all hard-working Albertans when bureaucrats and managers get extra perks. To the jobs minister: is that fair to all Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. This government is absolutely committed to working with job creators in Alberta, to supporting vulnerable workers' getting a fair wage. We're absolutely committed to making sure that everyone in Alberta is doing well.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that NDP policies are putting jobs at risk. Given that across the province business owners are struggling to hold their heads above water and that bad policies like a dramatic minimum-wage hike, higher taxes, and more red tape are literally handcuffing our job creators and given that the NDP solution is record debt and higher spending to maintain the most bloated bureaucracy in Canada, Minister, why do you insist on continuing to tax and hurt jobs in the private sector while expanding the size of government?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In our campaign, that we were elected on, we said that we were going to increase the minimum wage, and we increased it moderately. We listened to businesses, and they told us to go gradually, so we've increased it by just under 10 per cent. We know that when we put more money with low-income Albertans, they spend it in the local economy, which, again, stimulates and helps businesses. So we're going ahead with our promises, and we're fulfilling them.

Mr. Hunter: Ten per cent might be palatable, but 50 per cent is going to kill businesses.

Given that Albertans in the real world are facing wage cuts and job losses and are waking up wondering if they're going to be the next person to receive a pink slip, Minister, will you commit to the Wildrose suggestion to begin thinning out the ranks of upper government managers through retirement and attrition so that we can protect jobs and keep money in the pockets of hard-working Albertans?

Ms Sigurdson: Well, as I said earlier, we're happy to work with business, to support the nonprofit sector and the charitable sector with this job creation incentive grant. This is putting $178 million into the hands of businesses to support them, to create good jobs for Albertans. We're happy to do this, and we're excited to work with business.

The Speaker: I must tell the House that I am being challenged to clarify when preambles exist and when they don't.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Public Service Senior Appointments

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans sent a message loud and clear in the last election. They want a government that ends special favours for friends and plays by the rules, but since the election we've seen the NDP fall into the same old bad habits. There's no better example than the appointment of a notorious B.C. NDP staffer and strategist to be in charge of policy co-ordination for the entire nonpartisan civil service. How can the premier justify using these same bad habits barely six months into her first term?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to say from the outset that I take exception to the torque that the opposition is applying to a very talented and skilled individual. "Notorious" is a very unfair characterization. I think the hon. member should withdraw it. Having said that, the person he's referring to is highly qualified, originally from Alberta, and served with the NDP caucus staff back when we formed the Official Opposition. So he's no stranger to Alberta, and he's highly qualified.

Mr. Nixon: Recently we saw another former NDP communications strategist and senior manager for the AUPE get appointed to head the supposedly nonpartisan Public Affairs Bureau . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think I heard a preamble in that first supplemental. Could you reframe your question?

Mr. Nixon: Well, given that it's just another sad step in the history of the government's communications branch and given that it's become nothing more than a partisan political wing of the Premier's office, can the Premier explain to Albertans if there was even a competitive job posting, or was this just another purely partisan patronage post?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, in fact, I think the first thing that is important for Albertans to know is that in this budget the Public Affairs Bureau has shrunk significantly in size. The second thing to know is that the person that is leading it now is someone that comes with many, many years of experience working with and around the public sector and somebody with a proven track record of communications: communication skills and corporate communications. Presumably, the idea is to hire people that are good at the job, and that's what we did.

Mr. Nixon: So no competitive posting. Thank you.

Given that I would have liked to believe that the NDP government could have made changes to make their hiring process more open and accountable and given that after 44 years of this previous government you'd think they would change it, why is it that all across this government they are just plopping NDP activists, many from out of province, into supposedly nonpartisan positions . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry. Hon. member, could you reframe the question? What was your question?

Mr. Nixon: Why are you doing it?

Mr. Mason: Well, I did wonder if there was a question there, Mr. Speaker, so I want to thank you very much for prompting it. It's preambles you're not supposed to do, not questions.

Mr. Speaker, this government is choosing competent professionals to fill senior political positions and nonpolitical positions alike, and we're going to continue to do just that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Drug Treatment for Retinal Conditions

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the Health minister announced the retina antivascular endothelial growth factor program for intraocular disease, mercifully shortened to RAPID, for the expanded use of bevacizumab in the treatment of a number of retinal conditions, including wet macular degeneration and diabetic retinopathy. While seeking lower cost drug alternatives is a noble objective, there's a problem. Bevacizumab is not approved for intraocular use and carries a Health Canada warning for a higher incidence of infection. To the Health minister: why are you promoting the off-label use of an unapproved drug on Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The drug that we have approved will have no copay. It will make costs much more affordable for the patients as well as for the government, and the member opposite knows that. It's been used for many years by the retinal specialists, who propose that we continue to use it and actually provide coverage for it rather than paying $1,500 a dose, as we were previously. This one is available, and the government will pick up the cost for less than $50, and that's good economic sense. In terms of the safety: it is absolutely safe; the retinal specialists say that it's safe. In terms of off-label: it's because the pharmaceutical companies need to apply to put it on the label.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, given that I trust these specialists as well because I've received treatment for bilateral retinal detachments at the very same office that the Health minister made her announcement and given that I don't trust this government to interfere with the doctor-patient relationship by mandating an 80-20 prescription ratio of unapproved bevacizumab to approved ranibizumab, Minister, why is the government telling retinal specialists what to prescribe?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we're not. Retinal specialists have the ability to prescribe either. They're required to present the options to their patients. The retinal specialists themselves told us that they believe this is the best ratio to ensure that they have a good sample and that they continue to move forward in maximizing savings and providing safe patient care.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, despite the minister's protestations, off-label drug use is a very big deal. Given that veterinary practitioners make every attempt to avoid off-label drug use in production animals to maintain food quality assurance and in pets to assure patient safety, Minister, if off-label drug use isn't good enough for the pets we keep or the animals we eat, why is it good enough for Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we are considering case-by-case situations. As the member opposite knows, the way Health Canada regulates what's on label and off label is that the actual drug manufacturers need to apply to have something put on the label. Is it in their best interest economically to push for a $50 drug when they've got a $1,500 drug on label? No. We're going to put people first. We're going to put this province first and increase access to safe, effective treatments, and this pilot project is a way to do that.

Tourism Industry

Mr. Carson: Mr. Speaker, from musical festivals and dude ranches to Segway rentals and fly-fishing, tourism has a key role in helping to diversify the economy. Many of these are small businesses looking for the tools and leadership that they need to grow and create good jobs here in Alberta. To the Minister of Culture and Tourism: what is the current impact of the industry on Alberta?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, there's lots of opportunity for our tourism sector to expand during this economic time, especially with a lower Canadian dollar and more people spending time on holidays here in the province of Alberta. We expect to see a lot of growth, and we're willing to make investments to ensure that this service industry will be leading our diversification process here in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that word about the great culture and tourist attractions in the province continues to spread throughout the country and around the world, to the same minister: what is the potential for growth in this industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, a lot of people across the regions, not just in the traditional tourism areas here in the province but in many corners of the province, are seeing lots of investment in the tourist industry. We've set up an entrepreneurial tourist program, which is training and helping new businesses to get started, and we're expecting robust growth in the next couple of years to exceed $10 billion in business for the tourism industry.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that growing the economy is how we are supporting jobs that support families, again to the same minister: what is the minister doing to get our tourism industry to the targeted number?

Mr. Eggen: Well, certainly, we have concrete measures by which we will grow this industry to help with diversification. We know that at this juncture this is what Albertans want. Certainly, we are making investments, as I say, not just in the mountain parks but in many centres across the province, and we've seen a lot of success. In this last year I suspect, Mr. Speaker, that we've seen a record year for tourism in many corners of the province, and we will continue to do so for families and for regular people to get the job done right.

Youth Employment

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, one of the demographics hardest hit in this tightening job market is Alberta's young people. Youth unemployment is now at 12 per cent. Typical sources of youth employment are retail, food, and accommodation. For youth this job market is being further tightened by the government's dramatic 50 per cent minimum-wage hike. To the minister: why does this government insist on destroying the job market for Alberta's youth by hiking the minimum wage to unsustainable levels?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We believe as a government that there needs to be fair wages and that people making the lower wages should have a fair minimum wage, so we're moderately raising it this year, just a little under 10 per cent. We know that the majority of people, 64 per cent of adults, are making minimum wage, so they're making minimum wage to be able to put food on the tables of their families, to pay for their education.

Thank you.

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, for the minister. Employers from Lacombe-Ponoka have begged me to ask this government to rethink the minimum wage. They have said that it will lead to fewer hours for their staff and fewer jobs and they will have to increase their prices for consumers. Will the NDP continue to make it harder for Lacombe-Ponoka employers and job seekers, or will they reconsider their decision on the increase to the minimum wage?

Ms Sigurdson: I know, like many Albertans, that I am willing to pay a little bit more to support people to get fair wages so that they can care for their families. We have also created the job creation incentive grant, which absolutely is helping employers hire people that they need to run their businesses. We're absolutely, very seriously listening to businesses, making sure that they can still be viable here in Alberta. We know we still have the lowest business taxes in the west.

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, for the same minister: whereas the energy sector has traditionally provided thousands of high-paying jobs for youth, especially in rural Alberta, which is my concern, why does this government persist in hammering the energy industry with taxes and a royalty review, which will effectively hike unemployment, especially for youth, when thousands of energy jobs have already been lost?

Ms Sigurdson: Absolutely, the energy industry is at the heart of our economy. We care very much about the energy industry, and we're prudently moving forward. We've made no changes. We're just reviewing things at this point. We made a commitment not to change anything until 2017. We've had a strong economic shock. We are working with industry, working with employers, working with business to make sure that business is supported in Alberta, and we're absolutely pleased to be working with them to make it better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Fentanyl Use Prevention

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Fentanyl is a killer. This terrible drug killed 145 Albertans between January and June of this year, and the numbers keep rising. Alberta Health Services and the Calgary Police Service are both calling fentanyl a public health crisis, and CPS is attributing a rise in crime to the drug's presence on their streets. To the Justice minister: given that police, Alberta Health Services, and communities are all concerned about fentanyl and given that addressing any kind of an emergency needs to include three components – education, prevention, and intervention – why is your ministry doing nothing to address this crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We know how devastating addictions can be to families and to the individuals who are addicted as well, and that's one of the reasons why we've moved forward with the mental health review that's under way right now. Obviously, addressing the root causes is one of the best ways to make sure that we can move forward safely in support of one another.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. We'll try this to the Justice minister again. Given that young Albertans take this drug for a recreational high, never knowing that each tablet could contain a deadly poison that will ultimately end their lives, and given that AHS's specialized triage units deal with the after-effects of fentanyl, overdoses, but do nothing to prevent deaths – you have not even spoken to the chiefs of police about this issue. How long are you going to wait to gather the chiefs together to determine an immediate action plan to create a proactive approach to addressing this crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the hon. member for the question. It is true that addiction issues are absolutely devastating. Certainly, police and my ministry have been working hard in conjunction with the Ministry of Health to come up with solutions to address this problem. You know, in terms of the question, "How long?", well, we're already working to address this problem. We're already working to support families so that we can avoid the underlying drivers of addiction.

Thank you.

Mr. Ellis: Okay. To the same minister, then: given that Albertans, particularly innocent young people, are playing Russian roulette with their lives every time they pop a pill and given that Albertans are looking for leadership from your government to put a halt to the tragic and unnecessary fatalities occurring in every corner of this province, why are you not offering any additional resources to police, who are trying to combat drug dealers distributing fentanyl?

How many more Albertans need to die before you show true leadership in this crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the hon. member for the question. Well, I think that the hon. member is being very unfair to the police services in this province. I think that they're working very hard to address this problem. In addition, as the hon. member is aware since he has seen the budget, in fact, the municipal police grants were increased in accordance with population. I have been in contact with the chiefs of police, and they are quite happy with that situation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Syrian Refugees

Mr. Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, I myself came to Canada from Chile with my family, fleeing violence. Along with many Albertans I've been watching with a heavy heart the tragic affairs occurring in Syria and surrounding countries. This question is directed to the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour. Can the minister please update the House on what supports our Alberta government is providing for these refugees fleeing their war-torn countries?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Certainly, we're very saddened as a government to see the human tragedy that's unfolding before us. We stepped up quickly and contributed $75,000 to support the Red Cross in their efforts to support them, and that was quickly matched, within days, by Albertans who also were concerned. We've put in an additional $75,000, so it was $150,000 plus the $75,000 Albertans matched. In addition to that, we have contributed a hundred thousand dollars to settlement agencies so that when the refugees come to Canada, we will have supports for them available.

Thank you.

2:40

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: with the possibility that the federal government will bring thousands more refugees to Canada, will Alberta's settlement services have the resources necessary to serve these newcomers?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we do have a new government federally, and we will work with our federal counterparts to be able to support those who do come to Alberta. We had said at the outset that we wanted right away to step forward, but we can revise and work with our federal counterparts to make sure that the refugees who come to Alberta will be supported.

Mr. Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: is our government planning on taking any additional action to support refugees' resettlement to Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely, we're going to be working with the federal government, and we already are developing a plan on how we can help these vulnerable people. I know Albertans like myself and our government are very concerned about this human tragedy that's unfolding, so we're happy to work with the new federal government to develop a plan here for Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The people of Drayton Valley-Devon are hurting. They're frustrated about the NDP's risky economic policies, higher taxes, and record debt.

About two months ago a constituent congratulated me on my election victory, and as we began to talk, I asked her how her family was doing. Her response was so sad. Her husband was without work, and she said: I never thought that my little income from babysitting out of my house would be my family's main source of income. It nearly broke my heart, and I walked away frustrated knowing that this would not be the last time I would hear a similar tale from one of my constituents.

Just the other day another constituent made an appointment to see me in my office. He explained to me that his business was doing about 20 per cent of the business it had done the year before. He had laid off all of his workers except his two sons. His frustration was written all over his face.

These are the people Wildrose is fighting for. They are clearly frustrated when they listen to the Minister of Finance deliver a budget that will create a $50 billion debt, increase taxes, and make every Albertan poorer. These constituents are hard-working, creative, entrepreneurial individuals. They have built businesses in communities and created jobs.

Municipal officials in my constituency are also working hard under the dire economic circumstances. The town of Devon is undergoing a visioning process. Drayton Valley, through the Clean Energy Technology Centre, is planning for job training and creation to meet future needs.

My constituents deserve a provincial government that will help them where it can and will not pass the economic burdens of today onto their children. As a Wildrose MLA I get this. Maybe it's time for the NDP to start listening, talk to Albertans, and then get to work. Just a suggestion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Violence against Sikhs in India

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about an event which still haunts all Indians who love peace, justice, and the rule of law as well as Sikhs around the globe. On October 31, 1984, waves of anti-Sikh genocidal violence lasted for days throughout India. Official reports claimed 3,000 Sikhs were murdered while unofficial reports cite the number as being as high as 8,000.

I want to speak of the story of 45-year-old Gurdip Kaur. Gurdip Kaur, a 45-year-old mother, witnessed her three sons and husband being dragged out of their home, beaten, and then set ablaze. However, Gurdip Kaur's agony did not end there, Mr. Speaker, and I quote: they tore my clothes and stripped me naked in front of my son. My son cried: elder brothers, do not do this; she is your mother just as she is my mother. She continues: but they raped me right there in front of my son in my own house; they were young boys, maybe eight of them. After her rape they took her youngest child, and I quote: they took him to the street corner, hit him with lathis, sprinkled kerosene over him, and burned him alive.

Thirty-one years later, Mr. Speaker, there has been no justice. For those that were paid 500 rupees to kill a Sikh: no one has been brought to justice. It wasn't the first time that there was a price on a Sikh's head, and if you speak to our brothers and sisters in Afghanistan, it won't be the last.

It was Rajiv Gandhi, Mr. Speaker, who said that when a mighty tree falls, it is only natural that the earth around it does shake a little. Well, Mr. Gandhi, thousands of mighty trees have fallen, and 31 years later the entire world shakes. The difference is that we shake for justice; you shook for vengeance.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Springbank Reservoir Flood Mitigation Plan

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In June of this year I used my first opportunity for a member's statement in this Assembly to address the urgent need for a flood mitigation strategy for southern Alberta. I'm proud now to rise again to express my gratitude that this government has taken swift, decisive action on this important issue. The plan recently announced by the Minister of Environment and Parks will protect communities sooner and with more certainty than any other course of action. By moving forward in this way, our government has taken concrete steps towards protecting Bragg Creek, Redwood Meadows, and the city of Calgary.

I'm proud, Mr. Speaker, that this decision was taken after the government carefully examined the evidence provided by the expert firm Deltars. That evidence clearly points to the Springbank option. It is the quickest and most cost-effective option and includes $33 million for local mitigation in Bragg Creek. Springbank will have less impact on the environment and is less susceptible to catastrophic failure during construction. The minister's plan will fully fund local mitigation projects identified for Bragg Creek by Rocky View county.

Mr. Speaker, with this funding announcement this beautiful, vibrant community at the doorstep of Kananaskis Country has a much brighter future in store. Bragg Creek already has an outstanding four-season trail network, restaurants, retail stores, and festivals throughout the year. Area residents are working with the county on a revitalization plan that will make Bragg Creek an even better place to visit and to live. I urge you all to pay us a visit sometime soon.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Down Syndrome

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Labels. They have the power to segregate, to restrict, and to damage. Thankfully, our society has begun to let go of the many hurtful labels and expressions that divide and exclude. People with Down syndrome have a long, dark history of segregation due to the labels assigned them. Down syndrome is not a disorder, not a defect or a medical condition. Contrary to popular belief, not all people who have this syndrome share the same characteristics. They're as unique and as different as you and I.

I'm proud to be part of a government that understands that inclusion is not simply a trendy policy word, but it's an action that requires vigilance and determination. I'm proud to be part of a government that isn't simply waiting on the powerful but is doing the work that we were sent here to do, which is working towards including all Albertans.

To the national and local Down syndrome associations: thank you for your dedication, your advocacy, and your awareness. When Canadians with disabilities such as Down syndrome are supported to be fully contributing participants in their communities, we all win.

Join with the Down syndrome associations. Work with your schools, your communities, your businesses to open up Alberta so that all of us can share our talents and make this province the best that it can be.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Hope Christian School

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to rise today to speak about an independent school in my riding. Hope Christian School is located in the village of Champion, Alberta, and offers a variety of different options for learning. Education is offered through online courses, through a home-schooling program, and through their classroom program. While the school is owned and operated by the Evangelical Free church of Champion, it is a nondenominational school in operation, and they accept students from all backgrounds. They are a grade 1 through grade 12 school that is committed to ensuring that their students' academic and spiritual needs are met. Their belief is that they offer a value-based education, which, in turn, tends to empower families. They achieve this by using the accelerated Christian education program and teacher-developed materials that are directly aligned with Alberta Education outcomes as well as facilitated Alberta distance learning courses.

The ACE materials are also supplemented with locally developed materials that are necessary to meet the Alberta Education curriculum requirements. Their home education program supports a large population of home-educated students and their parents. With the home education program the clients may use the resources of their choosing but are required to fulfill the outcomes laid out by the Alberta Education home education regulations.

This program is facilitated by Alberta-certified teachers. Their students participate in regular field trips, and some of the students had an opportunity to be involved in a trip to Costa Rica, where they did volunteer work within a community there. They also compete in sports activities with other schools in the area and belong to the Alberta Schools' Athletics Association.

Mr. Speaker, this school works hard at giving their students a well-rounded education, well supported by parents and teachers alike as many schools across this great province do.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the required number of copies of the Alberta Securities Commission 2015 annual report. As you know, the commission has a mandate to protect and educate investors, foster a fair and efficient capital market in Alberta, and contribute to the success of Canada's securities regulatory system. As the report entitled Transparent. Unbiased. Accessible. explains, the commission works to ensure strong capital markets through three important streams of activity: regulation; investigation, which includes enforcement; and education. In tabling this report, I wish to thank the commission for the important work that it does on behalf of government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings related to last week's questions to the Premier on the tax-deductible contribution to small business. The first article, from Metro news, is entitled Alberta Tax Credit for Adding New Employees Simply Not Needed. That's according to the Edmonton Economic Development Corporation.

The second one, from the Calgary Herald: Small Business Confidence in Alberta Nearing Historic Low.

The third is from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, indicating that the current level of business optimism is the lowest seen since 2008.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

The Speaker: I would like to address the issue purporting to be a question of privilege raised by the Official Opposition House Leader concerning obstructing a member in performance of his or her duty.

Hon. members, I would like to issue a ruling concerning the purported question of privilege raised by the Official Opposition House Leader last Wednesday, October 28, 2015, the discussion of which can be found on pages 351 to 355 of the Hansard of that day. In a nutshell, the essence of the member's purported question of privilege was that the news release issued by the Minister of Finance's department prior to the delivery of the budget prejudiced a decision by the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services by stating that the ministers and members would take a pay freeze not only until 2017 but until the end of this Legislature.

I would point out to the House that this is the first question of privilege that I have had to address in this Legislature, and it may well be the first one that most members will have witnessed as well. While I do not wish to take more time than is necessary in delivering this ruling, I think it is important to outline some essential elements of privilege for the benefit of new members. I personally did considerable research on this matter and on all the precedents of this Assembly.

Members should be advised that there are some formalities to be followed in raising a purported question of privilege. Under Standing Order 15(2) notice of a question of privilege must be provided to the Speaker's office at least two hours before the opening of the sitting. In this case notice was received in my office at 11:18 a.m. on Wednesday, October 28, so the precondition has been met.

To expand upon the allegations in this case, the Minister of Finance's department issued, according to the Official Opposition House Leader at page 353 of Hansard for October 28, 2015, a news release stating as follows:

Budget 2015 takes a careful and responsible approach to managing government finances, steadily phasing out the deficit without reckless cuts to the frontline services Albertans rely on.

This includes:

- A salary freeze for Cabinet ministers, MLAs and political staff for the entire term of this Legislature.

The member further states that this news release was presented while the Minister of Finance was delivering his budget speech in this Assembly on Tuesday, October 27. As the Government House Leader pointed out in speaking to this issue, what was in the news release differed from what the Minister of Finance actually said in this Assembly. At page 333 of Alberta Hansard for October 27 the Minister of Finance said:

Our government will propose that members of this House agree to freeze the salaries of the members of cabinet, MLAs, and political staff positions for the entire term of this Legislature; in other words, until after the next election, in four years.

I draw members' attention to the use of the word "propose" in this statement rather than "implement" or "put into place" or some other phrase that would imply that the government was taking action without respecting the Assembly's jurisdiction.

The question arises as to what law or rule of this Assembly or parliament in general this action allegedly violates. First, while this matter is raised as a question of privilege, it may actually be known as a contempt of the Assembly. The distinction is discussed in the following quotation from the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, page 82, where it is said:

It is important to distinguish between a "breach of privilege" and "contempt of Parliament". Any disregard of or attack on the rights, powers and immunities of the House and its Members, either by an outside person or body, or by a Member of the House, is referred to as a "breach of privilege" and is punishable by the House. There are, however, other affronts against the dignity and authority of Parliament which may not fall within one of the specifically defined privileges. Thus, the House also claims the right to punish, as a contempt, any action which, though not a breach of a specific privilege, tends to obstruct or impede the House in the performance of its functions; obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of the House in the discharge of their duties; or is an offence against the authority or dignity of the House, such as disobedience of its legitimate commands or libels upon itself, its Members, or its officers.

This was the definition of contempt used by Speaker Zwodzesky in his October 31, 2013, ruling, which can be found at pages 2655 to 2657 of Alberta Hansard for that day.

On a somewhat related matter, about which I will say more later, the issue of contempt was relevant to the question of privilege raised in late 2013. The December 2, 2013, ruling by Speaker Zwodzesky, where he found a prima facie question of privilege, was referred to several times during discussion of this matter. In the 2013 case the government of the day had published brochures that went to every home in Alberta which, amongst other things, stated that MLAs' salaries were going to be frozen until 2017 when, in fact, the motion to do so in the appropriate committee was not moved until the brochures had been distributed. I would invite members to review Speaker Zwodzesky's comments in finding a prima facie question of privilege at pages 3231 to 3234 of Alberta Hansard for December 2, 2013.

In the case before the Assembly today there was a news release issued at the same time that the minister was presenting his Budget Address in this Assembly. The address gives appropriate respect and deference to the decision-making bodies while the news release arguably does not. In this case there is ambiguity between the minister's statement in the Assembly and the news release. When they are occurring at the same time, can the news release be said to prejudice the actions of a committee of the Assembly when the Budget Address does not? In my view, this possible misstatement in a news release does not give rise to a prima facie question of privilege.

Since being elected Speaker in June this year, I have come to appreciate how context is so very important in understanding what occurs in this Assembly. It is clear from the research I have conducted that the government of the day had been warned about not showing adequate respect for the Assembly in an October 31, 2013, ruling by Speaker Zwodzesky about the release of the contents of the bill involving the then Minister of Transportation. A prima facie question of privilege was not found, but the Speaker warned the government about advertising bills as if they had passed and about early release of bills on notice. There seems to be a wide gulf of difference between those events and the one under review today. The government of the day appears not to have heeded the warnings and advertised province-wide about wage freezes that were not within the government's jurisdiction and were not before the appropriate committee. I would like to thank the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for making this point and for adding context to the discussion.

One other point that I reflected upon is that the nonincrease in pay for members and ministers is already in place and will be so until March 31, 2017. What the government is proposing would extend the time period, but technically it has nothing to do with the estimates of this year's fiscal budget or for the next fiscal year. Could this be a relevant question of privilege when the decisions would not take place for 18 months from now? While this is not a prima facie question of privilege, I would caution the government not to prejudge the actions of this Assembly or its committees into the future. It's my hope that this would not arise again, and I would stress to members that this Speaker, on behalf of this Assembly, does not take these matters lightly.

This matter is now concluded for all purposes. In conclusion, I want to remind members that true questions of privilege should arise infrequently. As Joseph Maingot says in his book Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, second edition, page 217, "A genuine question of privilege is therefore a serious matter not to be reckoned with lightly and accordingly ought to be rare, and thus rarely raised in the House of Commons."

Bill 202 Alberta Local Food Act

[Debate adjourned October 26: Mr. Barnes speaking]

Mr. Barnes: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was done voicing my opposition to Bill 202.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to this motion? Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 202, and I thank the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park for bringing forward this bill to the House. There is no doubt that Albertan farmers are producing world-class crops and that the supply is there for Albertans. I don't think any member of this House will disagree that Albertan farmers want to get their produce, crops, and livestock to local markets. It has already been mentioned that 95 per cent of Albertans want to be able to buy and eat locally grown food, and in Alberta the resources are here to support that.

One great example of this is community gardens, a way for a community to come together to grow and harvest local food. Food advocates say that locally grown food decreases a community's reliance on fossil fuels. Community gardens are effective to help relieve some of the effects of climate change and the issue of making fresh produce increasingly unaffordable. Community gardens also encourage an urban community's food security, allowing citizens to grow their own food or for those to donate what they have grown.

In the riding of Calgary-Bow there are constituents who grow their own produce on an 11-acre parcel of land just west of Canada Olympic Park. Their mission is that all Calgarians should have access to local fresh food. A team of volunteers comes together to grow the produce for the Calgary Inter-faith Food Bank and also develops programs that inspire people to make healthy food choices. My constituency has many community gardens available to the residents. In Calgary-Bow there are four beautiful community gardens that are offered to people of all ages, including two in Bowness, one in West Springs, and one in Valley Ridge. Community gardens are vital as they create community spirit and provide a connection to the environment, and they are also educational.

Albertans recognize that farmers here in Alberta play a key role in our economy and that investing locally creates stronger communities. The reality of the situation, however, is that local grocery stores, the most successful way for Albertans to buy their groceries, lack in locally harvested and produced Albertan food. Farmers' markets are a fantastic way to get the product from farm to table, but we need to find creative and alternative ways to promote and facilitate eating local to a wider audience.

The reason I support this piece of legislation is because I believe it is up to the government to work in partnership with farmers to close that gap and find solutions, and to that point we need to lead by example. We should be investing in Albertans when choosing where our public-sector organizations procure food. That, to me, sounds like common sense.

While I sat here listening to the thoughts and concerns of members on both sides of the House, it seems as though this bill has been painted as black and white. The bill, as I read it, is another tool for farmers to use to promote their products and their way of life. The number of nonindustrial farmers in this province has been declining steadily, and I certainly see that this bill will help empower those farmers to be more engaged in the current system. This bill seeks to show those in the agricultural industry here in Alberta that we support them and we want to invest in them. I urge all of my colleagues to vote in favour of Bill 202.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise on Bill 202, the Alberta Local Food Act. The bill proposes to establish an advisory committee on food and agriculture to review the current state of local food systems, develop a local food and agriculture strategy, improve and maximize economic return and food security, encourage the purchase of local foods by public-sector organizations, and establish a local food awareness week. It mirrors certain aspects and goals of the Ontario Liberals' food act, 2013, the first legislation of its kind in Canada.

I stand in strong support of this initiative. I think it's long overdue that we encourage the community coming together around something fundamental like food, food production, and food security. There's no question that food and food security are going to be key issues in the coming decades, especially if water is a problem in our province, especially if agricultural land and food production become an increasing challenge, which is a very real possibility with climate warming and water shortages, especially in southern Alberta.

Anything we can do to bring communities together, to learn from each other, to support each other, and to understand the complexities and the opportunities of food and community security is good. We are a divided culture, many divisions for many reasons, including technology that separates us and that limits our capacity to work together as communities to solve local problems. This is an important initiative to do something very fundamental, which is to bring people together to talk about common values.

The second thing, of course, is jobs. Who doesn't want to stimulate jobs? There are local people within the bounds of the municipality or even outside with rental land and potentially community-shared agriculture, a tremendous opportunity to stimulate jobs, a new understanding and new inspiration for young people and others in the community to branch out. Perhaps it could be a secondary job for them, an employment opportunity. It will develop new skills. It will develop a new appreciation for where our food comes from and an understanding of nature and the importance of how we care for our environment.

It, of course, will contribute to food security. If people know how and develop more of their own capacity to grow food, especially if it's organic and less dependent on pesticides and fertilizers and presumably more committed to local provision, so less transportation and less environmental impact, then this is a win-win-win situation for the kind of values that most of us, I think, in Alberta want to see happen.

So I applaud this private member's bill and will support it completely from the Alberta Liberal caucus side. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I also rise today to voice my support for this bill. I do represent an urban riding; however, I do have some close connections with the farming industry. My in-laws run a large dairy farm in Saskatchewan, just northeast of Regina, and I've spent plenty of time in my life milking cows and wrestling bull calves and shovelling all manner of things.

An Hon. Member: Did you say "wrestling"?

Ms Luff: Wrestling. Yeah, that's correct. Sometimes they don't do what you want them to. Bull calves are stubborn. My family is a group of folks who make food. They also grow canola, and they grow wheat. I do want to just take this opportunity to applaud anyone who chooses to become a farmer, because they are responsible for the food that we eat. Quite frankly, it's hard work, the rewards aren't huge, and it's such, such important work, so I really do just want to applaud the people who choose to be farmers in Alberta.

I see this bill as having two main benefits. In the way that I read this bill, sort of the first goal of it is really just data collection. No good policy comes without good data. This bill really seeks to identify amounts, actual amounts of local food production, local food processing, and local food purchased both by individuals and by public entities. I know many of us in this House are fans of good data. I like my charts and graphs, much like anybody else. Really, seeking to collect good data on local food production I think is really, really valuable. Knowing more is always a good thing.

Then the second point that I think is really key with this bill is that it seeks to eliminate barriers to purchasing local food, to increase ease of access. I'm very lucky. I have the privilege that I can shop locally at one of Calgary's three year-round farmers' markets: the Kingsland market, the Calgary farmers' market, and Crossroads farmers' market. I am a big fan of my Spragg farm pork and my Sylvan "Star" cheese and my Made by Marcus ice cream in all of its forms: bars, sandwiches, and just ice cream in the tub. It's delicious.

I have that privilege. I have that privilege to go to the farmers' market and to talk to the producers and to learn where my food comes from. You know, the lady that I buy my eggs from notices when my children have gotten bigger. I have that privilege. Most Albertans, actually, unfortunately, despite their desire to buy local food, don't necessarily have the privilege to get out and buy it because the local food is concentrated in places like farmers' markets. Our three farmers' markets in Calgary, while wonderful, are not particularly easily accessible by transit and are only open certain days a week, so that limits the access by people who want to be able to access local food.

The way that I see it is that access to local food shouldn't be a matter of privilege in Alberta. For anyone who wants to be able to access local food, those 95 per cent of people – the statistic is that 95 per cent of people either already do or would like to purchase local food – I think you'll find that if you increase the options, more and more people will make those choices. Currently, unfortunately, it's not available to all people. I think that local food and the privilege of that fresh food, that we all love, should be available to everybody.

This bill, I think, could really help working Albertans. Shift workers who are short on time and don't have time to get to the farmers' market could buy more local food in their supermarkets. I think this could really help postsecondary students. I have a friend who has been working for years to make it more accessible to postsecondary students to be able to access local food both because of cost and, again, because often they have to go off campus, have to take transit to get there. To make that local food available to them on their postsecondary campuses would, again, ease that access for more people.

I can envision seniors having access to local food at assisted living facilities. I know that my grandmother, for one, would have very much appreciated some fresh, local salads in her assisted living facility as food was always her main complaint. She was such a fantastic cook herself, so when someone else had to cook it, it didn't always live up to snuff. But I think that having local food at those facilities could really have facilitated that a lot. Because local food is currently limited to people who have time, money, and transportation to access it, it's just not available to everybody. So the second point there is that I really see this as being a way to increase access for people who don't have the access to it.

Like the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, I also see this as a win-win-win situation. We end up with better data, so we know more about our local food, which is hugely important. We are going to have better access for people who don't necessarily have the access now and would like it, and at the same time we're providing better markets for farmers, those folks who are working so hard every day to provide products for us to enjoy at our tables and who really do provide the basics of life for us. It really is a win-win-win situation, and I believe this is something that everyone in this House should support.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for . . .

Mr. S. Anderson: Leduc-Beaumont. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You'll get it. You'll get it. No problem.

Thank you for allowing me to rise and speak today about the Alberta Local Food Act, brought forward by the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park. Local, sustainable food systems are a hot topic these days all around the world, and Alberta is certainly no stranger to them. As a father with a young family I want to ensure that I'm able to put the best quality food possible on our table. I know that by supporting local food, I'm supporting a great product. That being said, mostly I make Kraft Dinner for my kids because I'm a terrible cook, but that's beside the point.

In my constituency of Leduc-Beaumont we're lucky not only to have great farmers' markets, but we're also home to numerous farms that provide the Edmonton area local, sustainable, delicious products. One such farm is Green Eggs and Ham, whose products you've likely seen in local farmers' markets and tasted in your favourite local restaurants. This bill will help local producers like Green Eggs and Ham expand their market and get their products into the hands and mouths of more Albertans. From farm markets to local grocers to farmers in general, many producers are seeking direct access to markets so consumers can enjoy homegrown products.

There is a huge market opportunity for connecting local food producers with local consumers in Alberta, and this bill will help facilitate access to that market. We all choose homegrown local products for a variety of reasons, be it freshness, quality, taste, or to support our neighbours. But it's also important to remember that by choosing to support our local producers, we're also working to create local food security and improving maximized return on local food infrastructure. This will help attract new generations to farming, hopefully, and will also help local farmers grow, produce, process, and distribute to more buyers than ever before.

As local producers grow the local market, channels continue to grow in value and are a significant source of farm receipts. There are many intricacies involved on this subject, and I am all for having a thorough discussion about local food and its growth in our markets, and I'm glad we've had this opportunity to do that so far in this House. I'm certain this bill will not only help the local producers in my constituency, but it will help all Albertans get better access to local food and the benefits that local food brings to their families.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all members of this House to vote in support of this bill, and I thank the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park for bringing this important bill to the floor for us. Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's a pleasure to have the opportunity to rise and speak in support of Bill 202, the Alberta Local Food Act, which was brought forward by the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park and that I'm happy to support. This act would allow our local producers to seek direct access to markets and consumers like my constituents in Edmonton-Decore to enjoy more of those homegrown products.

I've been asked countless numbers of times about when consumers will have the choices that they're looking for when it comes to accessing more local producers. Now, some say that they already have that access, and in part that is true, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, the residents of Edmonton-Decore currently need to travel outside of the constituency to purchase these types of products from farmers' markets.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but the 115 minutes of debate have elapsed, and under Standing Order 8(7)(a)(i), which provides up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate, I would invite the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park to in fact close debate on Bill 202.

Cortes-Vargas: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today to close debate on second reading of the Alberta Local Food Act. My thanks to the members of my constituency of Strathcona-Sherwood Park, who I am privileged to represent in this Assembly, and thanks to my colleagues for the interesting debate that has unfolded here. It's been an honour to bring forward conversations about our stable, sustainable local food system in Alberta. The local food movement has seen incredible growth in the past decade, and the agrifood sector is supporting our farmers, connecting rural and urban communities, and is part of our diversified economy. It's incumbent upon us as consumers to ask ourselves where our food comes from. On this Albertans have led the way; 25 per cent of households choose restaurants because of the Alberta-based ingredients.

In the last 12 months 95 per cent of Alberta households have purchased food grown in Alberta. The distinguishing traits of our local food are the freshness, the quality, the taste, the safety, and the support that it provides for Albertan families. As legislators we need to go further and ask ourselves how the public sector is taking positive steps in their operations, just like Albertans.

As with many of my colleagues, this debate has made me reflect on my own personal experiences with local foods. This past Thanksgiving my family was able to share a turkey dinner, like many other Albertans. I'm proud to say that this turkey was locally grown. Through the implementation of direct marketing on the farmer's end I was able to connect to a product she was delivering. Mr. Speaker, the Alberta-grown turkey we had: it was outstanding. I want to see more locally grown food on our tables, whether those tables are in our homes or in schools.

I'm not done speaking about this turkey yet, Mr. Speaker. See, we noticed that unlike many of the other turkeys we had cooked in previous years, this turkey did not cover the bottom of the pan with oil. I was able to text the farmer and ask her how she raised a turkey that made this difference. Now, this points to a key point about local food. By being connected to the farmer, I was able to develop a greater understanding about where my food comes from and how it was prepared. Engaging with our food providers shapes the way we think about Alberta food. It brings awareness to the level of detail and work that it took for this farmer to raise this turkey differently than the other producers, which is what the Alberta Local Food Act speaks to, developing pathways to raise consumer awareness of our local food market. There is a huge opportunity for market expansion by raising consumers' familiarity with the production chain.

Mr. Speaker, the Strathcona-Sherwood Park constituency is home to farmers and consumers that make conscious decisions when it comes to their food. Farmers are innovative and hard-working when it comes to connecting to markets. They use social media platforms, farmers' markets, and many open up their farms to families. The Berry Farm is a good example. It's a small family farm in the constituency that produces a variety of berries. They are one of the farms open to U-pick. These farmers open up their gates on the weekends for families to experience the fun of being part of the food process. Jackie, one of the owners, translates her expertise into children's books that uniquely relate to Alberta's farms. This puts regional identity in a trusting face and engages with our younger generation.

Innovation can be found in many of the fields in my constituency, Mr. Speaker. I was recently able to tour a farming technology centre that connected vertical farming with aquaculture. By joining fish and farming, they have been able to create sustainable food systems that would create produce year-round. Yet the farmers from my constituency, like several others, face huge challenges in connecting with the wider market. We need to highlight and support the work that farmers do as they provide products that are vital to our everyday lives, which is why the Alberta Local Food Act would also celebrate the agrifood sector by proclaiming a local food week.

To close, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to acknowledge and thank the members opposite for the issues and concerns they have raised. I am currently exploring amendments to the act to guarantee its viability and to live up to its intended purpose, to ensure that Albertan families are able to access local, healthy food, that the government institutions are doing their part to support Alberta's local food whenever they can, and that Alberta producers are able to grow their market access.

I implore all the members of this Assembly to support this bill, and I'm happy to receive any of the feedback that you have and to continue these conversations. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Election (Restrictions on Government Advertising) Amendment Act, 2015

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to the tabled Bill 203, the Election (Restrictions on Government Advertising) Amendment Act, 2015. For me and for many of my colleagues, particularly on this side of the aisle, democracy is seen as the bedrock foundation of our society. It is what this nation and our province were founded on.

Allow me for a brief moment to take this House back in time to 1905. It was during that year that Alberta, the province that we know and have come to love today, came into existence as a province within the united Confederation of Canada. Without delving into the details of provincehood for fear of boring my colleagues in this House, it is important to revisit the spirit that motivated Albertans to be in the act of pursuing provincehood. Mr. Speaker, these individuals wanted one thing, democratic representation. With a booming population in centres of the then North-West Territories, these pioneer Albertans believed in having the right to greater representation via population. They wanted democracy to prevail in their livelihood, one free from a large power that would influence decisions for the people. Like these pioneer Albertans who fought for freedom and democracy, I stand here today in this House to fight for the preservation of democracy to ensure that we have an open, responsible, and accountable democratic government.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that no government should have the power to influence the outcome of an election. This type of corrupt practice has been used in nations around the world and has been a practice frowned upon by the international community, including Canada. Yet in our very own country and in our very own province the government has in the past, unfortunately, misused their office and the influence that comes along with it. In the past we have seen the government making announcements in grandiose press conferences while a by-election is happening. The worst of these pertain to funding during the middle of an election, funding for new infrastructure projects, funding for cities and towns. You name it, they fund it.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, government announcements are by their very nature a tool that can be used only by those currently in office. This creates an imbalance during what should be a fair fight. You see, unlike the parties and the candidates running against the party in power, the governing party has the power of the purse. They can choose when, where, and how much money a particular project or place can receive. With a power like this the public purse has the potential to become a bribe machine during elections or by-elections and can be especially abused by the governing party when they are in fear of losing power.

With this current framework, during the middle of an election writ period the government of the day has the power to allocate public funds to a politically sensitive object or make some other policy announcement to the riding or ridings where by-elections may be happening. This not only makes all politicians look bad but puts public servants, who help to organize these press conferences, in a very uncomfortable spot, where their bosses are telling them to use government resources for electoral gain.

Mr. Speaker, when I had the idea of bringing forward this private member's bill, I thought of two situations in my constituency. The first one was tow truck operators. Tow truck operators have not the safety benefits of highway traffic workers or officers of the law, who have special markings on their vehicles. Tow truck operators have the great danger and fear of being struck and injured in the performance of their duty of retrieving vehicles on the side of the road. That type of legislation can be changed through regulation.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I had the unfortunate circumstance to sit across the table in one of my constituency offices from the mother of a son who was killed on the evening prior to his graduation driving into the back of improperly lighted farm machinery. It was extremely moving for me that the mother of this child did not want to seek any vengeance or revenge upon the operator of that farm machinery. She simply wanted to get the regulation changed.

Mr. Speaker, when I was thinking of this legislation coming forward in this Chamber, I thought of something that we can all do. We can all change what we do and manage this Chamber in a better fashion.

With that, Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 attempts to change the way of running government, not to change the way in which government can conduct its normal business but to prohibit the malpractice of siphoning money to areas of political interest; in other words, attempting to buy votes. It prohibits the government from publishing announcements during a writ period. The impetus for this bill was the inappropriate use of government resources that we saw during the by-elections last fall.

The idea of prohibiting the publishing of government announcements during a writ period is not a new one. In fact, our prairie neighbours to the east, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, have already adopted similar legislation and have since passed it into law because they recognize how tempting it is to misuse government powers for electoral gain. Not only has it been viewed as an effective measure in these provinces, but it has been proven to provide a greater sense of democracy by providing an equal playing field for all political parties during an election, including the party in power. The governing party is not allowed to use its power to persuade voters to vote for them based on cynically timed announcements.

Not only is Bill 203 an already existing law in neighbouring jurisdictions; it is also a bill that the current governing party happens to agree with. Manitoba Premier Gary Doer passed a bill almost identical to this one almost a decade ago in a successful attempt to restore democratic practice during election periods in his province. In both his legislation, which we based this idea on, and in Saskatchewan there are exemptions for all kinds of emergencies and employment, health, and safety issues so that the government is by no means at a standstill. Government can still act fully; it just cannot publicize present and future decisions while a writ is dropped.

Mr. Speaker, it is about respect for voters. In the Wildrose we like to champion ideas that are in the best interests of our constituents regardless of what political party they may come from. Furthermore, the current Premier of this province, who sits daily in this House, once publicly voiced her support for a bill like this. In a press release dated December 9, 2014, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona called for “a series of changes that would effectively protect Albertans from several forms of inappropriate behavior demonstrated by the PCs over the last several years.” This series of changes included a clause that called for “fixing the Elections Act to prohibit MLAs from using government resources during elections or by-elections.” The idea was good then, and I believe it is a good idea now.

We all know that there are a lot of transparency and accountability issues that need to be addressed. There is even a special select committee whose mandate is to start on this monumental task, but as the chair already admitted, they won't be able to get to everything over the next year. So I'd like to take this item off their plate and get this straightened out before there are any by-elections, Mr. Speaker. Let's show the people that this House can work together to get things done.

Bill 203 does exactly what the opposition parties were calling for last fall and is what both Wildrose and the NDP pledged to do in our campaign platforms. Mr. Speaker, I believe that's the beauty of this bill. It is a bill that attempts to be as bipartisan as possible, and it attempts to remove politics and partisanship from legislation in the hope that this piece of legislation can successfully be passed in the interests of all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take a moment to remind this House why this bill matters and why it is in the interests of their MLAs and, most importantly, Albertans to support this bill. It is Remembrance Day, a day in our national history that marks the ultimate sacrifice that tens of thousands of Canadians have made or are currently making to keep our true north strong and free. These brave men and women have fought or are currently fighting day in and day out to defend our rights and freedoms, that we take for granted. One of these freedoms includes the ultimate freedom, democracy, the right to choose your government without influence, interference, or manipulation from government. It is this pure democracy that Albertans have come to expect from their government. Sadly, that is not the case.

The Speaker: I recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Acadia.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the member opposite for bringing this issue to the forefront. I agree with the principle behind what the member has brought forward in this bill, and I think that legislation to this effect is absolutely needed. In Alberta in years past we've seen the impact of the government of the day announcing infrastructure spending during elections, and we know that the previous government did play a little fast and loose with their ability to advertise. That's why we're committed to doing something on this. During the recent by-election in Calgary-Foothills our government held off on all funding announcements until after the ballots were counted.

Democratic reform is important. That's why our government's first bill was An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta, and that's why we launched the all-party Ethics and Accountability Committee, of which I am deputy chair, a committee which is meant to further ensure fairness and equality in election financing. Voters deserve to know that dollars are not a significant influence in an election, whether those dollars come from corporations or unions or from the government itself.

The Ethics and Accountability Committee is moving forward with our mandate, and I look forward to presenting this committee's report to this Assembly in due time. The committee is reviewing all aspects of the electoral system, including improvements to further ensure fairness and equality in election financing. Given that this work is currently being undertaken by an all-party committee, it seems hasty and premature to pass a bill limiting the work of this committee, and I will not be supporting this bill at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. House leader for the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to rise and speak to Bill 203, Election (Restrictions on Government Advertising) Amendment Act, 2015, brought forward by my good friend and colleague from Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Speaker, we have seen over the last number of years a government which hasn't had as much respect for the by-election and the election process as I think Albertans have come to demand and certainly deserve. Members on this side of the House, and not only members on this side of the House but members on the government side of the House, have shown great concern in the past when, perhaps, government resources were used to benefit a particular candidate in a by-election or during a general election. In fact, sir, some of the leg. officers, that function at arm's length from government and, certainly, from this Assembly, have also expressed some concern about the government making funding announcements during elections or by-elections.

Let me be clear, sir. Today is the day to act. We've just heard the deputy chair of a committee express some significant amount of support for such an important piece of legislation, and it's my guess that there are a number of members on the government side that, too, are sympathetic to this great piece of legislation, that has been crafted to support this important initiative, going forward. I think that Albertans expect us to act. They expect us to act in the best interest of Albertans.

What we have before us is a slam dunk, if you will, when it comes to legislation. I know that all sides of the House have worked together in the past when a piece of legislation has come before the Assembly that is so clearly the right thing to do for Albertans. In fact, I think you'll find that just prior to the last election, sir, a piece of legislation was provided unanimous consent in this Assembly to pass through the Assembly in one day. Now, while, typically speaking, members of the opposition wouldn't support such activities, there are times when agreement can be found to expedite that process. In my opinion, Bill 203 is exactly that.

We have seen members of the government support this in the past. I know that my hon. colleague referred to it earlier, but in a joint press release from the NDP caucus of the day, specifically speaking about making funding announcements during a by-election, they used these words: "to prohibit MLAs from using government resources during elections or by-elections." They were referring, sir, to the fact that the government ought not to be doing that. They've supported this in the past. It's very, very similar to the type of legislation that exists in the other prairie provinces, in the form of Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

If we can expedite this process and act quickly, should there ever be the need for a by-election in the next year – Mr. Speaker, as you know, the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee has been tasked to return to this House in a year with recommendations. While I do recognize that this is in the Election Act, the committee is in that process should there be a by-election.

Let me commend the government, Mr. Speaker. During the by-election in Calgary-Foothills, where my hon. colleague was elected and the people sent a very strong message, I will commend the government of the day because they did show restraint. But governments have a habit, if you will, that the longer they are in power, the less restraint they seem to be able to show. So if we can expedite this process, we can rest assured that they won't be tempted, should there be circumstances that would require a by-election.

I know that my colleague has referred to the places that have similar legislation. In fact, some would make a case that the legislation in other provinces is even more expanded in that it puts timelines pre-writ as well that would prevent a real slew of announcements immediately prior to a writ period. But in this case the hon. member has reviewed the options and decided that the legislation that was passed almost a decade ago by then NDP Premier Gary Doer is the piece of legislation that we ought to model our legislation on here in the province of Alberta.

You know, oftentimes the opposition gets criticized, Mr. Speaker, about not wanting to accept NDP ideas, if you will. Here we have a piece of legislation that, a case could be made, is an NDP idea, and here we are supporting it, reaching our hand out across the aisle to say: some of your colleagues or comrades in Manitoba have passed a piece of legislation and perhaps you might consider that here in the province.

The bill is quite clear in a number of areas, including allowing the government some flexibility to ensure the business of government can continue to take place during a by-election. I think that it is a very reasonable concession. There are times in case of emergencies where the government may need to act, and this bill would continue to allow that to happen.

I think what's important to reiterate is that this is creating a standard that will ensure fairness for all candidates in a by-election. From time to time we have seen the government act in such a way that that fairness isn't respected and, as a result, is not respecting Albertans. We've been sent here to do our best to ensure that their voices are heard, and I can tell you that the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills have spoken to me at length about the fact that the government shouldn't be making announcements during by-elections. That's exactly what this bill fixes.

I encourage all members of the government not to delay. The Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee is so very busy. There is so much work to do. Here is an opportunity for us to take it off their plate and move forward in an expedient fashion. I encourage the members of the government to consider doing just that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member opposite for bringing this matter forward. We've seen the perceived abuse of government powers in this province before under the previous government. One might argue that repeated instances of questionable ethical behaviour were a precursor to the recent election results, that put us all here in our current arrangements. When past government failed to self-regulate, the voters did their job for them. That's why today Albertans have the privilege of having so many legislators in this House who are committed to ensuring ethical governing practices.

Renewing democracy is important to this government. That's why our first bill was Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta, which banned corporate and union donations to political parties. This legislation gave voters back their voices and will ensure elected officials are accountable to the citizens of Alberta, not those with the deepest pockets. This was just the start of our efforts to restore honesty and ethics to government. A special all-party committee was created, the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, to review all aspects of the electoral system, including future improvements to further ensure fairness and equality in election financing.

We welcome any suggestions for accountability in government from the members opposite. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to support this bill and to thank very much my hon. colleague for bringing it forward. Now, I'm sure you would expect that given that I represent the fine constituents of Calgary-Elbow, where the former Minister of Education promised school portables during the by-election just over a year ago. Now, this may be an uncomfortable topic for my friends or, I see, friend in the PC caucus, but, look: the simple fact is that the former government abused their position for political gain. There's absolutely no doubt about that, and, yes, the people of Calgary-Elbow and the people of Alberta ultimately passed judgment on that.

The Ethics Commissioner when asked about it referred to the actions of the former Education minister as "blatant political opportunism." She went on to say: "This issue was not one of general policy or ongoing work. It was a specific political issue that he used his office to resolve in his favour." So why didn't she find that he broke any rules? Because it wasn't against the rules, my friends. It was not against the strict letter of the law.

Those of us in this House, I would expect all of us, would agree that it ought to be against the rules. It is against the rules in at least two other provinces in the Confederation of Canada. We in this House have the opportunity to right that wrong and make it against the rules. The Ethics Commissioner herself continued to express her frustration about the current state of the rules, saying that the current Conflicts of Interest Act “does not deal with moral integrity.” I’ll repeat that again. Imagine. The Conflicts of Interest Act does not deal with moral integrity.

What exactly is the point of a Conflicts of Interest Act, of ethics legislation that doesn’t deal with moral integrity? I would hope – and I know Albertans expect all of us to act in the highest ethical standard. That is our job. That is what we ought to do. Unfortunately, sometimes we need rules to tell us what to do and what not to do. Now, I think each of us would agree that that is not right. In other words, the Ethics Commissioner felt that it was wrong but didn’t have the legislative tools to hold the former Minister of Education to account.

So what does wrong look like? What’s the impact? Well, those of you will know that William Reid school, which was promised those portables just a little over a year ago, is, in fact, in Calgary-Elbow. What you don’t know is that my younger daughter goes to William Reid school. So this not only was a blatant political move designed cynically by the former government to win a by-election; this was targeted directly at me personally. What choice do I have in that case? They dragged my daughter’s school into the middle of a political fight, so I have a choice to make. I can make it worse, I can continue to exacerbate the problem, I can drag my family in, or I can sit quietly by and say: I’m not going there. They might go there, but I’m not going to go there. And I didn’t.

We know the outcome of that by-election. Who knows what would’ve happened had they not done this? We all know in this House that it was wrong. We in this House have an opportunity to make it right.

So this issue is doubly personal for me, and the personalization of the political process is but one of many, many reasons why we must end the practice of government using their position to further their own political and personal interests.

Now, I realize this bill is within the scope of the ongoing review of the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee. I will take this opportunity to note that the ND members of that committee do seem hesitant to actually consult Albertans, having adjourned twice my motion to consult Albertans about topics just like this. That is probably the most comprehensive review of Alberta’s democracy that we’ve undergone in the 110-year history of this fine province, so I would encourage them, please, to stop adjourning debate on that motion and to actively consult Albertans on this issue. If we do, we’re going to find that they want us to address this and they want us to address it quickly.

Now, given this bill is based on legislation that exists in other provinces and given that I think most, if not all, members of this House agree that government shouldn’t be able to use their position to unduly influence the political process and shouldn’t make the political personal and given, especially, that we never know when another by-election may be coming, let’s take this opportunity to put these controls in place now.

I want to remind all of my friends in the House, certainly those of us who are private members, that it is within your right as private members to support this legislation. I look specifically at my friends in the ND caucus, and I ask you that if you were to go back to your constituencies, if you were to ask each of your constituents to read the very brief Bill 203 and ask them: would you like me on your behalf to vote in favour of this bill – ask yourself that question before you have the opportunity to vote on this bill, and I think you will know what to do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other individuals who would like to speak to the bill? The Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 203, the Election (Restrictions on Government Advertising) Amendment Act, 2015. I want to thank very, very much the Member for Drumheller-Stettler for bringing this important bill to our discussion. The underlying premise of this bill is something that our government caucus and the Official Opposition both agree on. It is wholly inappropriate for any governing party to use its position as an advantage by making spending announcements during a campaign period. Any such announcements can be perceived as the government abusing the powers entrusted to it in order to further its own electoral prospects. This Premier and her government, as mentioned, have already demonstrated their strong commitment to proper ethical behaviour when we adhered to a self-imposed spending announcement hiatus during the Calgary-Foothills by-election.

This bill attempts to fill one small part of the rather large ethics and democratic reform gap Albertans have inherited from their previous governments. That is why our hon. Premier made it one of her first priorities to strike an all-party committee on ethics and accountability with a specific mandate to work on democratic reforms. What this bill attempts to achieve is very much in line with the work that this select special committee is undertaking. As I have the distinct pleasure to be the chair of that committee at this point in time, I can assure all members that this is the sort of issue that our committee has been briefed on by the officers of the Legislature and that will be reviewed under our mandate of ethics and accountability.

The members across the aisle have spoken at length and passionately about the value that committee work can bring to potential legislation, and in this case I fully agree. As part of the work of the Ethics and Accountability Committee and with the support of the research and other resources afforded to that committee it makes sense to take a closer look at what other jurisdictions are doing in this area. As well, it would be valuable to discuss the proposed changes with the Chief Electoral Officer, who oversees the implementation of the Election Act, as well as the Ethics Commissioner, who has, as mentioned, been involved in investigations in the past around announcements during an election period. We need to ensure that our made-in-Alberta solution to this problem is one that meets all the ethical criteria while ensuring adequate flexibility to allow any future government to meet its needs with regard to communication with the residents of this great province.

Albertans can take heart and know that our government is fully committed to implementing many long-overdue democratic reforms. That is why our first bill was An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta, which banned corporate and union donations to political parties. Bill 1 was this government’s first step in renewing democracy in Alberta.

This government will enact many important democratic reforms, but we need to examine them, and we need to examine them under one collective umbrella first, with all parties represented in this Legislature present and providing input, with the guidance and support of committee resources, and having received meaningful feedback from Albertans themselves. I encourage all members to thank the Member for Drumheller-Stettler for his work on this issue, but let us now refer this bill to the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, where it can be part of the larger body of work that the committee has undertaken.

To that end, I would like to present an amendment to Bill 203, and I can pause while the House distributes copies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has proposed an amendment to Bill 203. We will refer to this amendment as A1.

Ms Gray: I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 203, Election (Restrictions on Government Advertising) Amendment Act, 2015, be amended by deleting all of the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 203, Election (Restrictions on Government Advertising) Amendment Act, 2015, be not now read a second time but that the order be discharged, the bill withdrawn, and the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee as part of its current review.

My intention with this amendment is for the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee to thoroughly discuss and implement the information that has been presented in Bill 203, to include it in our work, and to bring that back to the Legislature with our report. I hope that all members will support my amendment and send this important work to an all-party committee that is set up to handle the discussion and to take us to a conclusion on this.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there any members who wish to speak to amendment A1? The Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to discuss amendment A1. I’m hoping that perhaps you might be able to provide some clarification, just the exact purpose of the amendment.

The heart of my concern, if you will, Mr. Speaker, is around the words, “the bill withdrawn, and the subject matter of the bill be referred.” The way that I read that is that the bill itself won’t be sent to committee but just a general discussion around the topics in the bill, particularly, as we’ve heard this evening, around funding or the government making announcements during a by-election, that topic being covered by the special committee. If, in fact, that is what the amendment does, then I would suggest that many members of the opposition would have grave concern with an amendment such as this.

Having said that, if, in fact, the bill remains in its entirety and is then discussed and a robust conversation – and many people in this House have heard me speak about the need for committees to be used more and to allow Albertans input, allow expert testimony, and allow a much more robust debate, not one where we plow through legislation like we’ve seen the current government allow, changing some of the rules to allow that to happen. Now, I understand that they’ve committed to that not happening, but they’ve certainly set the rules in place or are working on setting the rules in place that would allow that to happen.

So I’m not entirely sure if you’re able to provide clarification on exactly whether or not the bill, in fact, would be fully withdrawn, no longer on the Order Paper and, as a result, the general topics discussed at committee. But I’m certain that perhaps that could help provide some clarification, and I’ll rest at that.

The Speaker: Hon. member, let me just clarify that the clarity around the amendment and, in fact, all motions rests with the Assembly as a whole, and I think it would be inappropriate for the Speaker, in my capacity, to provide interpretation.

Are there other members who would like to speak to the proposed amendment? Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Loyola: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From my understanding, this does not kill the bill; it’s how the amendment needed to be worded so that it could be referred to our committee, the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee.

I want to remind all members of the House that we were given the special task of reviewing four acts: the Election Act, the election financing act, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, and then the Conflicts of Interest Act. In this committee we are receiving special presentations by the Ethics Commissioner, the office of public disclosure, and the office of the Chief Electoral Officer, as well, of which we’ve received more than 80 recommendations that we need to review. So I think it would be appropriate that we then discuss what is brought up in this bill, presented by the Member for Drumheller-Stettler, in relation to all the other acts that are under review by the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee.

I’d like to suggest to all members present here to please support this amendment and stand in favour of it. Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other members who would like to speak to amendment A1? The member for Sylvan Lake . . .

Mr. MacIntyre: Almost. Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. MacIntyre: I understand what the previous member just said that, in that hon. member’s opinion, this amendment doesn’t kill the bill. However, it specifically says that the order be discharged, the bill withdrawn, and the only thing that’s being referred to the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee is the subject matter of the bill but not the bill itself. To me, that clearly states that the bill is killed by this amendment, and the only thing going to the special committee is the subject matter of the bill. In my opinion, that is not what we should be using committees for.

Bills that come to this House, regardless of the source of the bill, should be referred to committee as a bill so that the bill can be debated in the committee, so that the subject matter of the bill and the bill itself can be discussed, witnesses can be brought in, expert testimony can be brought in in the context of the bill that is before the committee. That is the purpose of the structure of these committees in a parliamentary system, and that’s not being utilized here. What this amendment simply does is that it kills the bill and says, if I may paraphrase: we’ll talk about what the bill’s intent was in the committee, but the bill itself will not survive this amendment. It is clearly killed by this, and I believe that is wrong, and it is the wrong thing to do to any bill that is brought to this House, that we intend to have discussed at committee.

There is no reason I can think of why this bill shouldn’t be worthy of travelling as a bill to this committee to be discussed within the context of it being a bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This almost seems like a little bit of déjà vu because, from what I remember about the first session that we sat here, we had Bill 1 before us, and the government said specifically that this isn’t a perfect bill. The amendments that we brought forward were to be able to, we thought, make it better. They said: this isn’t a perfect bill; let’s bring it forward, let’s start the process, and let’s make sure that it’s something that we can show the people of Alberta that we're doing the right thing.

We are now many weeks past, and the roles have been reversed. It's almost hypocritical – I won't use that word to describe it, but it's almost – to say that we can't bring forward a good bill that should be bipartisan, that should be something that all of the House can support. Just because it came from the opposition side shouldn't be the reason we're defeating this bill.

It is a good bill. It is something that Albertans want, and it's something that I think would represent us well in this House if we pass it. I hope that the members opposite us will see it as maybe not the perfect bill, as you stated first about Bill 1, but as a good start, the right start, and that you would support this. I support it for that reason.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any others? Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak specifically to the member's amendment here, not closing debate on the bill. I think it's important that I read out the amendment word for word or at least the part that I find . . .

The Speaker: Clarification if I might, hon. member, from the Clerk.

Can the member speak to the amendment? Thank you. Please proceed.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Mr. Clerk. I take particular exception to the part of the amendment that says, "be not now read a second time but that the order be discharged, the bill withdrawn, and the subject matter of the bill referred to the Special Ethics and Accountability Committee as part of its current review."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I've had an opportunity to speak to the mover of this amendment, and I was given assurances that this bill was going to committee. If we specifically are going to move it to committee, I would be in favour of that, but I am not, and I cannot speak to the withdrawal or the discharge of my bill.

Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity in my constituency a number of years ago, when I was challenged for the particular nomination of my position in the party as a Wildrose representative, and there were several stalwart community members from one prominent community who told me that I would have volunteer challengers to my position. To those members at that time I said: are you afraid of democracy? In this Chamber I see that with the idea of withdrawing this bill that is modelled primarily after legislation that's been passed in two provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on. I find this wording not what the mover has – I believed it to be understood that we had an agreement. I accept with full face value – I did – that we would go. But the wording of this is not what I believe we had agreed to, so I find this somewhat unacceptable in this Chamber here. I think that we need to move ahead.

The Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the hon. member who is supporting and who moved this bill. I just want to clarify for the member in speaking to the amendment the reason and logic behind the amendment of referring this to the committee.

First and foremost, the committee was struck in order to look at election financing. I agree with the contents of this bill and what it's intending to do to remove politics from elections or before elections are called, but I think that there's a role for the committee to play in drafting this type of legislation. I do want to clarify for the member that the only way to send this bill to the committee is, essentially, through this amendment, but it does in fact take this Bill 203 off the Order Paper. However, I can assure the member that the contents of this bill will go to the committee, who will debate it – and all parties are present on that committee – and then bring it back.

At this point in time, you know, my point of this is: if we are truly looking to bring forward the best possible legislation for all Albertans, then it shouldn't matter whose name is on a bill or who put the bill forward. The point is that we're trying to pass legislation that is going to protect Albertans and going to remove politics from elections to ensure that, as we saw – and members in this House have spoken about this. Prior to the four by-elections that occurred earlier, there were announcements made leading up to and during the by-elections. Our government is committed to removing that and ensuring that elections are not a way for the government to make announcements to try to win votes. However, again, the only way that we can bring the contents of this bill to the committee is via this amendment. I appreciate the bill and what this bill is saying; however, this is the course of action that we can ensure that all parties will debate this.

The Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee is already tasked with reviewing this legislation, so it would not make sense to send this to another committee so you have two different committees essentially working on the same piece of legislation. You know, I just want to echo the fact that our government does agree with the contents of this bill, and I do want to thank the hon. member for bringing it forward, but I think that the most prudent thing to do is to send this to the very committee that is looking at reforming our Election Act as one whole and to do it all simultaneously. I will urge all members of this House to vote in favour of this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It shouldn't matter, as the hon. minister says, who came up with a good idea. Good ideas can genuinely and truly come from anywhere. This is a good idea. Bill 1 was also a good idea. Bill 1 took a very small step in a much longer journey to improving Alberta's campaign finances. That is precisely within the scope of the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee. This bill takes one small but very important step to addressing the gap in ethics in this province, and I would sincerely hope that our new government is not simply looking at where the bill came from as reason for not voting in favour of it, which is why I'm rising to speak against the amendment.

You know, these sorts of things, when you – now, many Albertans may not pay as close attention to this Legislative Assembly as I wish they might, but it is exactly these kinds of procedural machinations that really turn Albertans off the democratic process. It allows the government and government members to vote against this bill without actually being on the record of voting against this bill. So, again, that's why I'm speaking against the amendment.

I will just say one thing, Mr. Speaker, as evidence to why I believe this amendment should fail, why we should get back to debate on the main bill, and why ultimately we should pass this bill for second reading. Who else thinks it's a good idea to address this? None other than our Premier, when she was leader of the third party in the last House. "It is not acceptable that this PC government uses the public purse as its own personal campaign fund. This doesn't pass the smell test and Albertans deserve better.” I urge this House to vote against the amendment because, in fact, Albertans do deserve better.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I remind the House that we are dealing with the amendment on second reading of Bill 203. I’ve identified it as A1.

Are there other hon. members who would wish to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I have to agree with my colleague for Calgary-Elbow that this is not inconsistent with Bill 1, which this House passed even though they knew they were going to set up an ethics and accountability committee. There’s nothing inherently damaging about passing this bill now and then the ethics and accountability committee, with which I am associated, reviewing every aspect of the electoral system.

I would thank the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, and I think it’s important for all of us to recognize that it doesn’t matter where good ideas come from. It would be a good opportunity to strengthen a sense of collegiality and fly in the face of the previous government, that would never pass anything that came out across the floor, by recognizing this as a good recommendation that can do no harm to what the committee will actually be doing in the next six months or however long it takes to actually go through the whole electoral process review. This could happen within a few months. It could actually enhance the credibility of this government if they vote against this amendment, which would take it out of here and put it into some kind of a longer term process, that may or may not be timely with respect to a by-election. For example, if we have to call a by-election in the next six months, this would be very applicable and give people a sense of confidence that this is a good idea. It should be acted upon. Nothing lost by passing this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any other hon. members wish to speak to the amendment?

Hearing none, I call the question on the amendment to second reading of Bill 203, Election (Restrictions on Government Advertising) Amendment Act, 2015, as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Student Participation on School Boards

503. Mr. Dang moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to consult with school boards and youth to encourage senior high school student participation on boards with a view to increasing dialogue, increasing student engagement in board policy and planning, and educating students about democratic governance.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to rise and speak about the importance of student participation in democratic governance at the school board level. It is my privilege today to encourage our government to recognize the important contribution that students make to enhancing their educational experiences and to affirm its commitment to consult with school boards about how student participation can best be encouraged at a local level.

The 2014-15 school year saw over 670,000 students enrolled in Alberta’s education system. Of those, over 160,000 were enrolled between grades 10 and 12. The potential that these students have to make a positive impact in their schools and their communities is tremendous. We are now faced with an opportunity to reach out to students and engage them in meaningful dialogue about their educational experiences.

Students are our province’s next generation of leaders. The experiences that they have while in school help chart the course for both their futures and the future of this province. What better way to ensure our long-term success than by investing in our young people? Students are our future small-business owners, health care professionals, teachers, and entrepreneurs. Providing them with the tools they need to grow and diversify our economy and create good jobs for Albertans in the future will ensure our province’s prosperity.

As future community leaders students are also learning the Alberta way of doing things, how to take care of each other and foster welcoming, caring, respectful, and safe learning environments. Students, if given the chance, could play an even greater role in building a safe and caring society. When students become leaders in their schools and communities, it can have a positive impact on the province as a whole, both now and in the future.

Students should be encouraged to work with leadership at their schools and with local school boards to provide input on local policies and practices. I've met with former EPSB student trustees, I've met with representatives from Student Voice Initiative, and the value of student leadership is clear, Mr. Speaker. I attended a consultation on the proposed Education Act last week and was pleased to see that students were invited to share with their participation and their perspective.

I believe that the government in collaboration with local school boards has an opportunity to build on that gesture and more fully engage students in democratic governance at the local level. This motion will affirm our commitment to giving students a say in their education and will support students who want to make a difference in Alberta and in their futures.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there other members who wish to speak to Motion 503? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to speak to Motion 503 this afternoon. As a high school social studies teacher introducing students to and engaging them in the democratic process has been a part of my life for 30 years. I think it is critically important to provide real opportunities for students to participate in local politics and to become engaged citizens. Indeed, this is part of the vision of Inspiring Education and one of the pieces that I wholeheartedly support. I often had my students participate in the political process by working for the political parties of their choice.

Schools have debate clubs, student unions, mentorship programs, and other ways of encouraging students to become participatory citizens. This is a key outcome of education and one of the major roles that education must play in society. However, do students have a legitimate role on school boards? Should they participate in budgetary evaluations and contract negotiations? Are teenagers, who may not be old enough to vote in governmental elections or legally purchase cigarettes, equipped to make long-term decisions about education in their school board catchment areas?

These are issues that policy-makers have battled for decades. It seems that there is a growing recognition that students can and should have a voice on school boards in an advisory role, and we are seeing this begin to happen. For instance, in 2014 high schools in Edmonton public ran a nomination process to select one candidate per school, and the district's Student Advisory Council cast their ballots for the student trustee. This pilot project, aimed to support dialogue between the student body and the board, increases students' engagement in board policy and planning and educates students about democratic governance. It has become a formal part of the board as part of the district legacy course. The student trustee is an elected, nonvoting representative providing student voice to the board.

Alberta is not alone in supporting the notion of students participating on school boards. The first school board in Ontario to enact legislation allowing a nonvoting student member was the former Kenora board of education in 1989. In 1997 the Progressive Conservative government of former Premier Mike Harris introduced the Education Quality Improvement Act as Bill 160. Although this act instigated a labour dispute, within the legislation was the creation of the position of pupil representative. The act allowed individual school boards to draft their own policies, to allow for flexibility within guidelines. In 1998 every school board had at least one pupil representative.

The key to making this work is to encourage school boards to set up processes that will allow students to participate meaningfully and to ensure that they feel valued as part of the team. I know as a schoolteacher that if I wanted to get my kids engaged in their school work, they needed to see it as being meaningful to their lives. If we want these kids to be engaged in the political process, it must be seen as being meaningful in their lives. I know that I would talk with all of my kids, especially the ones in grade 12, as we looked at the political process, encouraging them to be a part of that process, to be involved in that process, to be engaged in that process. One of the lowest voting groups has been young people, and if we want to engage them in the political process, then this may be a way of starting to encourage that.

A central issue would be to determine how the student trustee would be elected, I think, or even if the student trustee would be elected. You know, a survey was undertaken across the United States in 2009 to summarize this issue. The findings indicate that 25 states do have student trustees while 14 do not. The method of selection for these trustees varied. Some were appointed from local school councils, some states held elections, and some school boards simply appointed a student rep.

One strength, I believe, of this motion is that there is no prescribed implementation process. School boards would be able to determine how best to use this practice to meet their local goals. This practice would provide a vehicle for collaboration between students, school administration, and the board on the issue of civic participation and the rights to participation. Given the range of options in the model of participation school boards that wish to have student representatives may find different ways of meeting that goal that allow for recognition of local concerns. Because of that, this is a motion that I will fully support.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to speak on this motion and to the Member for Edmonton-South West for coming up with this idea. It's entirely appropriate that the Member for Edmonton-South West originated this motion. I think that he's a living example of youth engagement who transformed from an activist to, in fact, a Member of the Legislative Assembly and is certainly a perfect example of how one should not judge based on the age of a person, being young, middle aged, or old, for that matter.

I appreciate the comments from the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon. His comments were well positioned, I believe, as well, and curiously I think the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon and myself actually had sort of parallel courses, to some extent, in that we both taught for more than two decades in high school social studies as well and both, I think, engaged in this sense of engagement and the value of engagement for students. Certainly, I'm sure the member experiences the same phenomenon that I do in running into my students years later and still to this day who have taken a certain path of activism and/or leadership in their chosen fields. I could see the kernel or the beginnings of that when they were 15, 16, 17 years old. So certainly on an anecdotal level we know that engagement of students in the political process is extremely valuable.

Mr. Speaker, I just completed a tour over the last few weeks of all 61 school boards and had a specific discussion with all of them in regard to having student membership on their boards. I used the model, actually, that I first saw Edmonton public schools using a couple of years ago and to this day, and they went through a very interesting process by which they had a student on the board. They took a nomination from each high school and went through the process. I heard it described that each of the candidates then set up sort of what's the equivalent of a science fair poster board. I'm not sure if maybe this is part of our democratic renewal process that we could use here in the Legislature, where you set up your display and have people voting on whether your volcano explodes sufficiently or not and so forth. But, seriously, this is what they did do in regard to their political campaigns to take this historic spot in Edmonton public.

Also, the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta has similarly engaged students on their advisory board. When you go to their zone meetings or their provincial meetings, these students are there from all across the province and provide, I think, sometimes the most insightful comments, that really do contribute to the meetings.

Certainly, our government is very interested in expanding this, and this motion is very welcome. We know that the future of our democracy depends on our engagement of young people to pick up the voting habit. Once they do so at a young age, then they're very likely to continue through the rest of their lives. Democracy depends on participation, Mr. Speaker, and certainly I think this motion goes far to reaffirm this Chamber's and our government's commitment to ensure that we have democracy that is strong and alive here in the province of Alberta.

Thanks very much.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I note that maybe there were some storyboards in the rotunda last week after the budget. I think I saw some.

Are there other members who would like to speak to Motion 503 today?

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing me to rise and speak about the importance of student participation in democratic governance at the school board level. It is my privilege today to support the motion by the Member for Edmonton-South West and encourage our government to recognize the important contribution that students can make to enhance their own educational experience.

I have seen first-hand how young people and students can impact school boards and municipal decision-making. I was privileged to serve as a school trustee for three terms. For two of these terms I served alongside two elected school trustees who were in university and had just graduated from our own school system. They brought to the board a practical approach and an intimate knowledge of what students wanted and needed. They were instrumental in engaging with the student leadership in our schools and making sure that the impact of our decision-making on these issues came to the board's attention. One of these young people is now the executive director of the Aga Khan Foundation in Canada, and I think that his experience as an elected school trustee has really helped him a lot in this role. I also helped to set up a youth council for a municipality in which youth councillors would debate and discuss matters brought to them by the municipal council and then have to report back publicly at a council meeting their decisions and recommendations.

I think that the 29th Legislative Assembly demonstrates the role and importance of involving youth in elected office and how an elected body can be enriched by having MLAs from all age groups. School trustees play a crucial role in ensuring that our schools provide the best education to all students and that schools meet local needs and concerns. Having youth and student voices on decision-making bodies will enhance this.

Student councils already play a crucial role in schools, and many school boards already have a leadership program that empowers students to be involved in decision-making. The motion clearly urges that consultation with school boards and youth themselves is required as there may be different ways of involvement and participation.

Students and youth already make a huge, positive impact in their schools and in their communities. During both the last provincial and federal elections in my riding a number of schools had election forums organized and led by students. Other students worked as election workers during the last federal election. Students are already engaged in determining their futures. We are now faced with an opportunity to reach out to students and engage them in meaningful dialogue about their educational experience. Students and youth already have demonstrated their interest and engagement in their future. This motion will affirm our commitment to give students a say in their education and will support students who want to make a difference in Alberta.

The Speaker: Any other members to speak to Motion 503? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today in support of Motion 503, Student Participation on School Boards, as presented by the Member for Edmonton-South West. I'm pleased to lend my voice to encourage consultation between school boards and youth to encourage senior high school student participation on boards. I understand that local school boards are indeed in the best position to recognize what steps need to be taken in order to best engage with students at the local level. I think we can all agree that real student engagement is essential to student-centred learning. What better way to enhance student learning than to consult with students and find out from them how best to enhance their own educational experiences?

As you may know, many school divisions already make space for students to engage with decision-makers through student advisory councils. The Edmonton public school board took a historic step toward student leadership and inclusion by including a student trustee on their board in 2014-15. The Speak Out initiative has since 2008 provided a forum for thousands of Alberta student ideas and experiences.

Perhaps one of the best recent examples of the importance and value of student input and leadership is the role that students played and continue to play in the creation and support of gay-straight alliances. Brave students stood up and spoke out, telling adults in leadership roles that they wanted and needed respectful, safe learning environments. Our youth are our future. They're our next generation of leaders, and they should be included in the most important work of guiding their education. What better way to ensure our long-term success as a province than by investing in our young people and giving students a say in their education. It's my pleasure to support this motion, Motion 503.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The House leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will keep my comments very brief this evening. [interjections] I know that can be hard to believe.

I think my hon. colleague laid out a very clear conversation around some of the really great things about Motion 503, and certainly I, too, will be rising in support of the motion, and I thank the hon. member for bringing it forward. A good idea in this place is a good idea no matter who brings it forward.

The fact of the matter is that I often go around the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and from time to time I'll hear people talking about: young people this or young people that; they don't work hard like they used to, or they're not as respectful as they used to be. But I go to a number of events that honour students in the form of awards banquets. I go to leadership classes to have conversations about the future of our province and converse with students, and one thing that I am certain of, Mr. Speaker, is that with the young people in Alberta today the future of our province is very bright.

So I would be remiss if I missed the opportunity – you know, there are some young people in the gallery this evening who, in fact, are also part of the future of our province. They are politically engaged, and they are very keen on the process, not only in the school boards but right here in the Assembly as well. I happen to know them by name. Porter and Paxton and Peyton happen to be my children, but I know that they also would support a motion like this in the name of being active and engaged citizens of the future of our province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you. Thank you for giving me the opportunity to rise and speak in support of Motion 503, Mr. Speaker. There are many examples of the success of including student representation on school boards such as the Calgary Board of Education Chief Superintendent's Student Advisory Council, which was established in 2010. The purpose was to meet regularly with the chief superintendent, discuss the issues in the system, and propose solutions.

Nationally there is the Student Voice Initiative, that gives students a voice in their education. It operates with the support of policy-makers, school administrators, academics, and students from across North America and the world and gives students a greater voice in their own education. It was based on the student trustee positions within the Ontario school system.

All of these models foster a student leadership framework that encourages students to encourage more welcoming learning environments that are respectful and enhance the education of both those students who participate directly and the students that attend schools with this kind of framework.

For the more than 160,000 high school students currently in Alberta's schools it's a tremendous opportunity to participate in their school communities and to make a positive contribution, both of which are skills that are invaluable in the wider community. These young people are our future, and this is a chance to give them even more skills to take forward with them throughout their lives, which is a benefit for all of us.

I encourage all members of the Assembly to support this motion. Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other members who would like to speak to Motion 503? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'll be brief also. This is a motion that will stimulate all people in Alberta to get more engaged with their democracy. Whether you're a parent or youth, you want to see more opportunity for engagement in the political process. I don't see any downside to including young people on the boards of education. It's obviously more interaction, more understanding, more learning mutually between board members and students. I see this as a principled and rather visionary step that perhaps could go across the country.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other members to speak to Motion 503? The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks. I, too, will be brief. I just wanted to say that if I passed up this opportunity to say that it's a dang good idea, I'd never forgive myself.

I also just wanted to acknowledge that Ontario has had student trustees in place for over two decades. They've been a tremendous asset. It was actually somebody that I met in my school board days who brought this idea forward to me, somebody who had just graduated, I think, two months earlier and had met student trustees from Ontario and, when it came to Edmonton public, was really active in bringing it forward. Her name is Claire Edwards, and I know that she's been a big champion for Student Voice Initiative. As one of the trustees who had the honour of serving with a student trustee in the past, I want to say that, like members of both sides of this House have said, the questions were incredibly thoughtful and the connection to the number one stakeholder that we're there to serve, the kids, was evident at every board meeting, not just from the one individual. It also, I think, reminded everyone at the table of the role we play in making good decisions for the kids we serve.

Thank you to the hon. member for bringing this motion forward. I'm proud to support it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West to close debate.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am glad to see support from both sides of the House on this issue. I think it's a clearly nonpartisan issue. It's clearly something that we are doing to increase the education and increase the dialogue we have between our students and elected officials. We know that our local school boards are the ones that are capable of making these decisions to include their students and to include their peers in the decision-making process.

I would also like to mention that I think the Minister of Health has probably been waiting months to make that pun in the House, and I'm very glad that I've been able to give her that opportunity.

As we know, the students play these key roles in fostering welcoming, caring, and respectful learning environments. Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I urge every single member of this Assembly to support the motion, and I just want to say again how excited I am that we are going to be able to make that change in the lives of these students, that change that will allow them to become the future leaders and the current leaders that they already are.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 503 carried unanimously]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Seeing that we made very good progress today, I move that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:24 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 3, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us contemplate and reflect. Fellow members, let us contemplate and give thanks for the good fortune of being in a province with such a divergence of different faiths and beliefs. Tonight in our rotunda we will celebrate the Eid event, which our fellow Islamic Albertans celebrated in September. Let us give thanks for the significant contribution and strength that the Islamic community has provided to our great province.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and to the Assembly some of the smartest and hardest working students in Alberta, the grade 6 class from Headway School, with their teachers Sandra Nicholson and Jackie Small. I visited the grade 4 class at Headway recently, and they told me that education was so important to them that they thought this House should make it illegal for students to not do their homework. I disappointed them when I told them that with oil at $45 a barrel, Alberta can't possibly afford to incarcerate that many children. I know that these dedicated students will be our next leaders, maybe future MLAs, or, if they're particularly talented and hard working, perhaps future directors or assistant deputy ministers in Alberta's top-notch civil service. I ask that the Headway School group rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly another grade 6 class from St. Theresa school, and I would ask them to rise. As I mentioned another time, St. Theresa school is a school that organizes political forums in our riding every single election, and I'm delighted that these students are learning about the work that we're doing in the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly grade 6 students from Afton school of the arts in my constituency of Edmonton-Meadowlark. Accompanying the students are their teachers Scott Slatter and Bailee Cochrane. These students are taking part in the School at the Legislature program, and they'll be spending the whole week here learning about the exciting world of the provincial legislative process. I wish them a great week, and I would invite them all to stand to receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: I'm sure the hon. member would acknowledge that they have much to teach this group of hon. members.

Are there any other school groups today?

Hearing none, the hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of citizens and staff seated in the members' gallery from the Ashbourne assisted living facility in the constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona. The Ashbourne was funded by members of the Garneau United church who identified a need for an assisted living facility in the community. It is owned and operated by Garneau United Assisted Living Place, a charitable, not-for-profit corporation. Residents of the Ashbourne live independently in a safe, private, and friendly community. I would ask them now to stand, if possible, and remain standing as I read their names: their executive director, Laurie Winder; recreational therapist Danielle Mathias; and residents Gitte Lindsay, Jason Dickson, Hazel Magnussen, and Robert Mill. Please stand and enjoy the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and Minister Responsible for the Status of Women.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you representatives of the Canadian Wind Energy Association and the Canadian Solar Industries Association, including the organization's presidents, Mr. Robert Hornung and Mr. John Gorman. Robert, John, and other representatives from these important industries will be meeting with members over the coming days. Alberta is home to one of the finest solar and wind resources in Canada. Our work with these industries will help us diversify our economy and build the economy of tomorrow. Our conversations and work with the renewable energy industry are also important as we continue to talk to Albertans about a made-in-Alberta climate change plan. I ask Robert, John, and their fellow colleagues to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the people's Assembly.

The Speaker: If the House would allow the Speaker to make a personal comment. I'm sure that all of this House knows and certainly our guests know that I have the good privilege of coming from the sunniest city in Canada.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: We'll have an argument about the sunniest city.

Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Ms Patti Johnsen and her son Kevin McGarvey. Ms Johnsen is the president of the Lethbridge and district Canadian Federation of University Women group and has been for the last four years. Patti has encouraged the members of the group to pursue many initiatives for the betterment of women in Lethbridge and the surrounding areas such as the university scholarship program, providing feminine supplies for Harbour House and ARCHES, the Persons Day breakfast event, weekly bridge group, monthly book club, and the school readers, to name a few. Patti doesn't just encourage people to pursue these initiatives; she participates. I have been so fortunate to be a member of this group and to participate in the work that they do. I ask Patti and Kevin to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly three special guests. Today I have Doug Bertsch, who is vice-president of regulatory and stakeholder affairs for the North West Redwater Partnership. I have Alyssa Haunholter, who is vice-president of government relations for North West Redwater Partnership. As well, I have Jacqueline Andersen, who is the employee services manager with Women Building Futures. If Doug, Alyssa, and Jacqueline could please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any other guests or visitors today?

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

North West Redwater Partnership

Mr. Piquette: Oh, Mr. Speaker, it's my lucky day. Today I rise to talk about the North West Redwater Partnership, whose Sturgeon refinery, I am proud to say, is in my constituency of Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater. It is of utmost importance for this province to find innovative ways to encourage high-value jobs for Albertans. By working with our private-enterprise partners to build a diverse and robust economy, we are guaranteeing a strong, sustainable, and prosperous future.

The Sturgeon refinery is an example of a project that contributes to the diversification of the Alberta economy while also creating value-added jobs right here at home. Every day, Mr. Speaker, I meet someone new in my constituency who is involved in one way or another with this site, and they tell me that they're glad to have a government that supports value-added jobs. Presently there are 3,500 people working on-site, with that number expected to grow to 5,000 by next year. These jobs are an economic gain for the province, not to mention for my constituents, and through the North West Redwater Partnership and Women Building Futures there are social gains as well.

Women Building Futures offers women pretrades training in a number of fields and holds the engagement of aboriginal women as a priority. This partnership will work to address the need for skilled trades at the refinery through proactive recruitment, training, and apprenticeship of women.

I am very disappointed that our friends across the aisle would disparage such a valuable project. I would suggest that they see for themselves and meet the dedicated people who have worked so tirelessly to make this thing a reality.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Family Violence Prevention Month

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. November is Family Violence Prevention Month. As a mother and, most recently, as the shadow minister for the status of women I know how important the work that is being done by awareness campaigns such as Family Violence Prevention Month is.

Members of the Legislature may know that Family Violence Prevention Month is a uniquely Albertan campaign, which was started in 1986 as a local initiative in Hinton. This grassroots campaign has spread across Alberta, and today I am heartened to say that hundreds of communities across our province now work each November to shed light on these issues and how to end the cycles of violence. The fact of the matter is that violence against women and children affects all of us. It weakens the very fabric of our society and takes a heavy toll on individuals, families, and communities.

In my community the volunteers of the Airdrie women's shelter campaign, also called Airdrie POWER, have come together to help create thousands of purple ribbons to wear and display to help raise awareness of this important issue. All members of the Wildrose caucus are wearing the same ribbons here today to show our support for raising awareness about this very serious issue. Mr. Speaker, it takes all members of society working together to end the cycle of violence. Events like Family Violence Prevention Month provide much-needed support to victims of domestic violence and show survivors that they are not alone.

In addition to the purple ribbon campaign, in Airdrie we will raise awareness with a candlelight vigil walk to honour those affected by family violence. If you're interested, the event takes place this Thursday, November 5, in the south office from 7 to 9 p.m., and it's called Light the Night. I encourage all members of this Assembly to discover what their communities are doing to raise awareness during Family Violence Prevention Month and join in and help raise awareness about this issue.

Thank you.

Energy Policies

Mr. Gotfried: Leveraging export markets for Alberta businesses is a key factor in successful economic diversification. The Asia Pacific market continues to be underrepresented in terms of export opportunities as this market continues to rapidly expand. It would be prudent to build relationships and support infrastructure to allow Alberta business to take advantage of opportunities. To the minister of economic development: what specific initiatives are you undertaking to ensure Alberta businesses have the cultural competencies . . . [interjection] My apologies. I'm going fast.

The Speaker: The hon. minister may want to listen. She just sent a signal.

Mr. Gotfried: I'm going fast now.

Mr. Speaker, the key topic of conversation amongst all Albertans today is jobs, jobs, and jobs. With today's announcement of a further 220 job losses in Grande Cache on top of 40,000 jobs already lost in the economy, many arguably due to the economic picture painted by this government, Albertans are increasingly concerned about the policies that attack the rapidly disappearing Alberta advantage.

Today coal mining and coal-fired electricity generation industries and their employees, investors, and stakeholders deserve our attention. With over 5,600 jobs directly engaged in coal extraction and related electricity generation, Alberta stands to be a big loser in a dogmatic approach to coal-fired generation plants. Job losses, loss of mining and industrial capacity, and handicapping of not only the low-grade but metallurgical coal industry need to be looked at along with the unintended consequences of misguided policy driven by hard-line, often externally funded environmental interests.

Alberta needs stable and reliable electricity generation, and we need to be cognizant of unstable or inadequate supply in the price of electricity and the impact on both consumers and industrial customers. Recent studies indicate staggering job losses are the likely result of poorly planned shutdown policies associated with this issue. Another consideration which speaks to investor confidence in Alberta and the re-establishment of the Alberta advantage is the cost associated with shutdown versus a more prudent and logical dial up, dial down approach to coal-fired electricity.

Mr. Speaker, this is a key issue . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

ARCHES Society in Lethbridge

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, I'm very happy to stand here today to share another piece of the puzzle that is Lethbridge. AIDS Outreach Community Harm Reduction Education Support Society is the long name for the program called ARCHES. ARCHES is a critical entity in Lethbridge. It provides needed services to a great number of our most marginalized citizens. Formerly known as Lethbridge HIV connection society, ARCHES helps anyone who is in need of their services, and they provide it in a nonjudgmental atmosphere. ARCHES has been pivotal in saving lives in our community through harm reduction as the drug fentanyl has reared its ugly and often fatal head in southern Alberta.

ARCHES provides support for individuals living with HIV/AIDS and hepatitis C: outreach; harm reduction; take-home naloxone; the Alberta Addicts Who Educate and Advocate Responsibly, AAWEAR; and the southern Alberta growth empowerment centre for women. ARCHES has their own facility nestled in a safe and sober neighbourhood close to the downtown area.

Fundraising sustains the services they provide. Their largest fundraiser is coming up on November 27, the condom couture fashion show. This incredible and innovative way to raise funds is a wonderful and life-saving service in our community, and all the fashions are made totally of condoms.

Again, with this member's statement I hope to shed a little light on this critical entity, and I hope that I've piqued your interest.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Royalty Review

Mr. Jean: Our energy sector is being crushed by low oil prices, higher taxes, and a government that won't advocate for increased market access. Now the NDP are interfering in a royalty review which the Premier promised would be independent. The Finance minister recently told reporters – and I quote – that as oil companies produce, we will take that profit. End quote. To the Premier: how does it help encourage job creation when your Finance minister is telling potential investors that in Alberta the profit goes to the government?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, it may surprise the member opposite to know that royalties do actually come out of the profits that are paid by oil and gas companies, so that is true. Should there be royalties paid after the royalty review, that's where they'll come from, but we are still waiting to see the outcome of the good work that is being undertaken by the royalty review panel. They're working very hard. They are consulting widely. They are talking with a large number of producers and other advocates within Alberta. I expect that we will get some very innovative and helpful . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Madam Premier.

Mr. Jean: Energy companies are craving stability in Alberta and have been forced to put investment on hold as they watch this royalty review play out. Albertans are worried about affording their mortgage payments and paying their bills. It's clear that for the NDP this is all about taking the profits from Alberta business to pay for risky experiments. To the Premier: your budget is banking on increased royalty rates, so why even bother with a review that creates so much uncertainty for Alberta's energy sector?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me clarify a couple of things. First of all, in the last campaign we ran on a plan to do a royalty review. Much to the chagrin, I'm sure, of the folks over there, who find it unique to actually move forward on your platform positions, that's what we decided to do. Now, we have put in place an independent panel, and one of the things that very early on they came back to us with – they said: "You know what? Industry would find it very helpful if they were given until the end of 2016 before any changes came into place." We responded to that and to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: We can't tax our main industry into oblivion and expect positive results for Albertans. The Finance minister said in June that the review will help, quote, boost government revenues. End quote. In the budget the NDP said clearly that they're banking on higher oil prices and higher royalty rates. It's clear. Any energy workers hoping for a fair hearing are out of luck. Why isn't the Premier worried that a drastic hike in royalty rates will kill Alberta's oil and gas sector and, as a result, kill the quality of life of Alberta families?

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question because it allows me to correct a misapprehension. One of the things that we were also very clear on in our campaign and that I've been very clear on since is that should there be any incremental increases as a result of the royalty review, it is not our intention to have those injected into our operating but, rather, to go to the heritage trust fund. To be very clear, our budget does not bank on any kind of increase to the royalty rates. Our budget banks on a slow increase in the price of oil, so please – please – be clear on that.

The Speaker: Second official question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Well, right now, Madam Premier, we are paying for the lights with borrowed money in this place.

Job Creation and Retention

Mr. Jean: Today we also found out that 200 union coal miners in Grande Cache will be out of a job just before Christmas. If this is part of the NDP plan to reduce our environmental footprint, Albertans should be worried. It's the same story every morning across every corner of Alberta. Investors are fleeing, businesses are closing, and Albertans are losing their jobs. Temporary employment plans and $5,000 job grants after the fact just aren't going to cut it. What is the Premier doing to get ahead of this to prevent further job losses and to keep Albertans working?

Ms Notley: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, let me begin by challenging the premise of the question. First of all, we are very concerned about what impact the job losses at the Grande Cache coal mine will have on the community of Grande Cache, and we will be working with community leaders to talk about things that we may be able to do to ameliorate those problems. But let me be very clear. The Grande Cache coal mine is closing or at least temporarily closing because the underground mine is no longer particularly productive and because the other mine has not yet been approved. It has nothing to do with any of these other issues . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Tax hikes, royalty reviews, massive debt, credit downgrades, profit grabs, and mixed messages to the market: no, the government doesn't control world oil prices, but it's those actions that this Premier does control, and her actions are not helpful for Alberta families. Businesses create jobs when there's work to be done and profits to be made. They don't create jobs because 18 months later they might get a few thousand bucks back from the government. Why doesn't the Premier understand that?

Ms Notley: What doesn't help the health of the economy is groundless fearmongering. Albertans understand that the price of oil has dropped significantly, and as a result jobs are being lost. We understand that. The question, then, is: how do they want to navigate those tough times over which we have no control? They were given two options: cut billions of dollars and lay off teachers and nurses and hurt communities or work with a government that has a multipronged plan to work through economic diversification, job creation.

Mr. Jean: I wouldn't call 40,000 Alberta families losing their jobs groundless.

Albertans have never been more worried about our economy. You don't have to take my word for it. According to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business confidence in Alberta businesses has never been lower than it is now. They are suffocating under bad NDP policies that result in higher costs, fewer work hours, and less opportunity to grow their businesses. Instead of treating profit like it's a dirty word, why won't the Premier follow the Wildrose suggestion to cut small business taxes so that businesses can create jobs for Albertans that desperately need them?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, what our plan has done – we've thought this through in great detail. We are ensuring increased access to capital for small and medium enterprises, we are increasing access to venture capital for innovators, we are offering up the job incentive program for long-term job creation opportunities, and we've just today, of course, announced that we've brought back the STEP program. So there are a number of things that we are doing through this government to promote job creation. You know, I need to – well, I'll wait until the next question.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Promotion of Alberta's Energy Industry

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, yesterday we learned that TransCanada will suspend its application on the Keystone XL, and we can't help but see where they're coming from. This project faces obstacles from Washington and false allegations that Alberta oil is the dirtiest oil on the continent, and right here in Alberta this project faces an NDP caucus, some of whom are bigger fans of Chávez than Chevron. When Keystone comes back online, will the Premier instruct her new Washington envoy to fight for it, or is she hoping Keystone, along with all those Alberta jobs, will just go away?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we know that getting our product to tidewater is very important to the object of diversifying the market for a product. We know that's very critical. Over the last eight or nine years of a Conservative government in Ottawa and a Conservative government here and an überconservative opposition over there, there has been no success in getting these pipelines built. [interjections] Part of the reason for that is that there is no social . . .

The Speaker: I remind the House that I was having some difficulty hearing both parties.

First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, failing to be an open advocate for Keystone XL is just another example of how this NDP government has pushed investment out of Alberta. The Premier has filled her senior advisors with antipipeline activists. She has publicly opposed Northern Gateway, with zero consultation, interfering in Kinder Morgan. She's even implied an environmental veto on Energy East to a province that, to quote my colleague, prefers raw sewage over all pipelines. What, if anything, is she actually going to do to get pipelines built?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm not quite sure. It seems like the premise of that question may have been slightly flawed from the hon. member.

2:00

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I had a meeting last week with the Premier of New Brunswick to talk about mutual strategies that we could adopt to promote the Energy East pipeline. We also have been talking with our colleagues out west about promoting that particular pipeline. We understand that it's important to get our pipelines to tidewater, and we also, of course, understand that it's important to upgrade as much as possible here.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Energy investment is fleeing our province because we don't have access to tidewater, and while the Premier sometimes says the right words, her government's actions are drowning them out. In these tough economic times other Premiers are finding ways to boost their provinces; ours seems busy trying to drive away private investment. It's time for the Premier to stop thinking of Alberta as an embarrassing cousin and to wave Alberta's flag proudly. When the Premier goes to Paris, will she stand up for Alberta and tell the world that no one produces oil and gas more responsibly than Alberta?

Ms Notley: What I'm going to do, Mr. Speaker, is that when I go to Paris, I'm going to start by telling the truth. What that will be is that this government is committed for the first time to developing a climate change strategy, a renewable energy plan, an energy efficiency plan, and moving forward in terms of an appropriate greenhouse gas emissions reduction strategy. This is what we will do, and this is how we will earn the credibility . . .

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You have to know the truth to tell the truth.

Mr. McIver: Yesterday in this House the NDP caucus laughed when I talked about Albertans losing their jobs. Let's see what they say today. Albertans have heard that this government wants to make the province less reliant on resource revenues and create a knowledge-based, lower carbon economy. Their quote. But we have yet to see any evidence of that. To the Premier: can you tell this House and the thousands of Albertans who have lost their jobs when they can work in this new knowledge-based, lower carbon economy, what their jobs will be, and when they can start?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the member opposite knows, the government is not in the business of job creation; we are in the business of working with job creators. By working with job creators, we then get economic diversification, which is what we are working on. I mean, it would be lovely to wave a magic wand and create 40,000 jobs out of nowhere, but God knows that group of folks never did it. To suggest that somehow we can deal with the drop in the price of oil overnight and replace each and every job is ridiculous. We are working on economic diversification very hard because we care about the Albertans who have . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the Premier says that they don't create jobs, but it's her own government and their promise that said that they're going to create this new economy. The new economy seems like a fantasy today based on the answers that we just received in this House, so can the Premier enlighten Albertans on this? Until you unveil your plans for a brave new world, will you start supporting Albertans in the ways they've chosen to make their living by putting your efforts into being a friend of the current economy, at least until you can describe your new fantasy economy?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin, I guess, by correcting a couple of prefaces to various and sundry questions. In terms of small business confidence, in fact, it appears that according to the CFIB in October, for the first time in several months, small business confidence is up. That is because they understand that this government is committed to working with business to give them the tools they need to promote their good ideas, their plans for diversification: access to capital, access to venture capital, access to innovation support, and access to incentive programs.

Mr. McIver: There you heard it, Mr. Speaker. The Premier just admitted that the fantasy economy isn't coming.

You know what? In one breath they talk about the fantasy economy; in the next breath they talk about building our economy on the backbone of the energy industry. The Environment minister's words, very recently. To the Premier. Let's forget for a minute about the future. Let's talk about the now. Now that we've established that there's no fantasy economy, will you stop damaging the current economy? Will you roll back the corporate tax increases? Will you cancel the royalty review? Will you actually tell the people in Paris that we have a great way of dealing with the energy industry? Will you actually . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, in the spring it was very clear that this province was going into very tough times as a result of our inability to diversify our economy, so different parties laid out different plans to Albertans. We laid out a plan, and Albertans – I hate to break it to you – chose that plan, so we are moving forward on that plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Provincial Debt

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, earlier today I asked the Minister of Finance if he had calculated the impact of a credit-rating downgrade. It is troubling to learn that his department hasn't even done this most basic financial risk management. Today my single budget researcher calculated that a 1 per cent increase to Alberta's borrowing costs starting in 2017 will result in over $700 million in additional debt-servicing costs just two years later. To the Minister of Finance. It seems incredible to me that your department hasn't done these calculations. If you haven't done them, will you? If you have, will you table the results?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. No one wants to see a credit-rating downgrade, of course, and I can tell you that our plan is to build the economy so that that won't happen. That kind of a view is negative and not optimistic. We have a different view, and we're going to follow through with it.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, how do they know it's not a risk if they haven't done the work?

Let's try another finance question, Mr. Speaker. Last week I tabled the Alberta Party's alternative budget, which balances in three years while still investing in infrastructure and protecting front-line services. As of today no other opposition party has tabled theirs. [interjections] As we prepared this document, we discovered that there's a big gap in the ND's plan, which makes it nearly impossible to balance without significant new revenues or spending cuts. To the Premier: where does the money come from?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me begin – I do appreciate that coming up with a shadow budget is a lot of work, and one certainly does need to get up pretty early in the morning to find the time to put together a shadow budget. [interjections]

But that being said, all other things being equal, it's very important to understand that this government is in the position of having the lowest debt to GDP of any province in the country now and also five years from now, and the best way to make sure we stay that way is to pass our legislation that this minister will be introducing.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier doesn't seem to know where the budget gap comes from, but I do. It comes from overly optimistic revenue forecasts, and there is a huge risk to our province if they're wrong. Now, I've thought about it, and I think I know where the government plans to get the money. They have repeatedly said that they plan to increase royalties. [interjections] Again to the Premier. You seem to assume that higher royalties will fill this budget gap. If you already know the outcomes of the royalty panel, what's the point of the panel in the first place?

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I believe I've already answered this question earlier, let me be very clear. The panel will make the recommendations to the government that they make, but what we have been very clear on is that any incremental increase that arises as a result of any changes will go into the heritage trust fund and is not part of our budgeting process. That's one of the things we committed to in the election campaign, and that is one of the things that we will stick to.

We also have introduced a budget with the lowest debt-to-GDP ratio of the rest of the country now and five years from now. This member over there should know that, and he should be proud that we are building Alberta at the same time.

The Speaker: This place is quite robust today.

I want to remind members again about the preambles on questions from here forward.

2:10

Family Violence

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, I worked with child and family services for quite some time. I am sad to say that research shows that two Alberta cities, Calgary and Edmonton, rank lowest as safe Canadian cities for women. A few weeks back we saw a mother of five die at the hands of her former partner. The previous government did little to improve services for women. Discrepancies exist in wages, child care affordability is a big issue, and the opposition voted no to affordable child care in government buildings just last week. My question to the Minister of Human Services: in light of recent family violence tragedies in Alberta . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, your time has elapsed. Would the minister mind answering the question?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Although I didn't hear the full question, [interjections] the question was going to family violence, which is a very important issue, nothing really to laugh about. Our government has allocated $95 million in this budget to come up with a co-ordinated system of support to provide women fleeing from violence the needed supports. We are absolutely committed that in Alberta there should be no violence, no place . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental, hon. member.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta has some of the highest rates of family violence and intimate partner violence, to the same minister: what is your department doing to ensure that those in vulnerable positions of domestic violence are being taken care of?

Mr. Sabir: Mr. Speaker, our government believes that no one should suffer from or live in fear of violence. Supports to survivors of domestic violence are crucial, and that's why we have invested in such supports. We have invested $15 million going towards women's shelters to provide a safe place for women to turn to when that unfortunate incident happens. We have invested in FCSS programs. We have invested $15 million in family and community support programs. All these programs are geared towards preventing family violence.

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, given that women's shelters are important in providing support while fleeing violence, again to the same minister: how is your ministry planning to stabilize the lives of women fleeing domestic violence.

Mr. Sabir: Mr. Speaker, a 2015 survey of front-line agencies found that for people affected by family violence, meeting their basic needs is very critical to keeping them safe. Our Budget 2015 includes $49 million for the women's shelters across the province. That investment will help us deal with women fleeing from violent situations. We are also creating a new child tax benefit that will also help women to meet the basic needs of their children.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, I understand that I am to . . .

The Speaker: Proceed.

Spray Lake Sawmills

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Timber harvesting is a well-established activity in the Castle special management area, and throughout Alberta timber harvesting is guided by modern rules and practices. Forestry adds key diversification to Alberta's economy, and with the cancellation of that forestry management agreement, Spray Lake has another move that will hurt our economy. This government appears to have a policy of going ahead without consultation of those affected. Mr. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry, why is this government hurting Alberta's third-largest industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member for the question. The fact is that it wasn't necessarily an FMA that was cancelled; it was another forestry agreement. Forestry remains a critical sector of our economy. Over 15,000 hard-working Albertans work in the industry, and personally I'm very proud to support this industry and to be their champion as forestry minister. We're working closely with Spray Lake Sawmills in Cochrane, as they employ, you know, 300 with jobs in Cochrane and southern Alberta, and are working closely with them as we move forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the abrupt announcement by this government regarding the Castle area is having negative economic impacts and given that Spray Lake Sawmills is deeply concerned because of potential job losses that would be acutely felt in the area, Mr. Minister, what will the government do to address serious shortfalls in our province's GDP and diversification with the cancellation of these types of contracts?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member. Our government made a commitment in our platform to protect the Castle area, and we have fulfilled that promise. There has been, you know, a slight cutback in their harvesting plants, for sure, but they remain a viable industry in Cochrane and area and continue to do so. Going forward, we will continue our discussions with the sawmill in Cochrane to ensure we can continue to protect those important industry jobs.

Thank you.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Forests Act states that compensation is available for cancelled quotas at the minister's discretion to the amount that the Minister considers just and given that last night the minister said that he will not be providing any compensation to Spray Lake Sawmills, how can this minister consider no compensation at all to be just?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the member: thank you for the question and for the opportunity to correct you once again. I did not say that there would be no compensation. What I was saying is that we are continuing our discussions with Spray Lake Sawmills, including the opportunity for them to present any plans they might have, to ensure that we protect those very important jobs in Cochrane and southern Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

School Construction

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question today, first off, is to the Premier. The Premier and her government have said that the 197 school projects currently under way in this province are of the utmost importance to them. However, in this year's budget they are spending $301 million less on these school projects. If these projects are such a priority, why have you allocated $301 million less to build these schools when that could account for the construction costs of up to 20 schools? Where is that $300 million?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that question. You know, Alberta families have been waiting a long time for these new and upgraded schools. We have 200 school projects, either new ones or upgrades, on the books to be built over these next few years. We've forwarded the money to ensure that those schools are being built. So we have a $1.3 billion capital project expenditure for these schools. It's in the books. It's there, and we're building those schools for Albertans.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Actually, sir, page 44 of your budget document says that you are spending $959 million in '15-16. First of all, the total sum of money allocated for the school projects is $301 million less. Secondly, if the school projects are so behind, why are you spending $120 million more in '15-16?

Mr. Eggen: Well again, Mr. Speaker, certainly, we have looked to make sure that we are building these schools over a three- and four-year period. We've made sure that every one of these schools is required to ensure that we meet enrolment and increasing enrolment in all of our areas. Certainly, one of the first things we did was to make sure that we put the money in place, that the former government failed to do, to ensure that we build these schools in a reasonable time. Now, we have adjusted the timelines, but we certainly have the money to do it. Albertans know that we are building these schools to meet the needs of our students.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. So we've established a couple of things. One, they are doing a review to see which schools are needed. Hmm. Secondly, given that they are spending $120 million more this year and given that they are spending $220 million more in the next fiscal year while they've reduced the pot by $301 million, was the minister misleading the public by saying these schools are behind schedule, or does the minister plan on . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member. Hon. member.

Members of the Assembly, I want to use our hon. member as an outstanding example. I think I might have heard a preamble.

The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All Albertans should know, in each community, that the 200 schools that we have on the books are being built by this government. We have put plans in place to do so. We have more realistic timelines after having to make adjustments from the previous government making outrageous promises to build schools in order to try to win the election. They were unfortunate. Certainly, we are building these schools. The money is in place, and Albertan communities are very excited about the prospect of getting new schools.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The tuition freeze instated by the NDP government is reducing opportunity for Alberta students. While government argues that it will help the students in this province, they have failed to realize the unintended consequences associated with their action. Since the tuition freeze does not apply to international students, postsecondary institutions are admitting more and more students from outside of Canada. To the Minister of Advanced Education: are you aware that your government is reducing opportunity for Alberta's students?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We are very proud to be working with students, and I know first-hand from students that they are so pleased that the government has gone ahead with the tuition freeze for two years plus invested $133 million this year into stabilizing the postsecondary system. People are speaking very positively.

Mr. Taylor: Given that the tuition freeze may have been instated with the best of intention, this policy has simply disrupted long-term planning for postsecondary institutions as they do not know how long this freeze will last. Since Wildrose believes in capping tuition-rate increases to inflation, this is a predictable, reasonable, and sustainable framework. Minister, how long does your government intend on freezing tuition rates?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We've been clear from the beginning. We have put a two-year freeze on tuition, and during that time we're doing an adult-learning review to hear from postsecondary students, to hear from boards across the province to absolutely be working with them to look at how we can make the system better. We're very proud of moving forward on this commitment that we made in our platform.

Mr. Taylor: Given that some universities are facing financial issues, including the threat of insolvency, and given that without institutions like Athabasca University thousands of young Albertans will be faced with even less opportunity to develop and advance their skills and education since thousands of high-paying jobs will be lost should an institution like AU go under, Minister, what is this government's plan to preserve these institutions, that are important to Alberta?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Well, over the summer I had the opportunity to travel across Alberta and speak with many of the presidents, the chairs, the faculty associations, the students of postsecondaries across the province, and I want you to know that they said: thank you. They said: thank you for reinvesting money back into postsecondary; thank you for stabilizing the sector; we're very grateful. I think we're pretty healthy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Calgary Cancer Centre

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am invested in ensuring that Calgarians and all Albertans have access to timely health care with no financial surprises. The Calgary cancer centre has only been costed to the 2019-20 fiscal year. That leaves a three-year funding gap that hasn't been included in the $830 million price tag. To the Minister of Health: will this government commit to the completion of the centre with a firm timeline and fully disclosed financials?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. We are of course thrilled to be moving forward on a promise that had been made over 12 years ago, and this government is going to deliver. It's a lot easier to deliver on essential health care services like the Calgary cancer centre when you have a government that believes in having stable front-line health care as opposed to proposing more cuts than a bad slasher film. I have to say that I'm really proud of that.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, Calgarians are telling me they want action from this government, not fearmongering about the opposition. Given the Calgary cancer centre has been announced and reannounced multiple times yet very little progress has been made, again to the Health minister: can you explain why such an essential project has been delayed a further three years?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Our government is committed to being open and transparent with information. That means when we have updates around timelines that were proposed by the former government, that were not realistic at all, we share that information with the public. We are doing that in an ongoing way, and we will continue to have announcements around the Calgary cancer facility and other facilities when there is new information to announce, including after the updates come in on the original estimates, that are coming through right now. We're moving forward for the next four years. That's the appropriate way to do planning, and when there are further updates, we will share those as well.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I lost my mother to cancer and have seen first-hand the devastation that this disease causes. Given the fact that measures must be put in place to ensure this project is completed on time and it isn't just an empty promise to Albertans and Calgarians, will this government commit to ensuring that the centre does not become collateral damage of inefficient infrastructure spending?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My sympathies to the hon. member. I know that all of us in this House have been touched by somebody very personally, and that's one of the reasons why we're moving forward on this commitment. Yes, we will continue to invest in the essential infrastructure that's needed in Calgary, including the Calgary cancer hospital.

Economic Diversification

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, I'll try this question again. Given that leveraging export markets for Alberta business is a key factor in successful economic diversification, the Asia Pacific market continues to be underrepresented in terms of export market opportunities. As this market continues to rapidly expand, it would be prudent to build relationships and support infrastructure to allow Alberta businesses to take advantage of growth opportunities. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what specific initiatives are you undertaking to ensure Alberta businesses have the cultural competencies, business knowledge, and market access to successfully penetrate these markets?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for his question, a very prudent question. First of all, I want to say that our Premier decided to create this ministry with the expressed intention of having a one-stop shop for business, to ensure that we can work with the private sector to create jobs within our province. But equally important is increasing Alberta's ability to trade, our export market. Through the international offices that we have, we will be looking at expanding our opportunities to increase our exports, reduce trade barriers, and support Alberta businesses.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister, who seems to have created at least one job: given that the creation of your ministry seems to have potentially cut our international outreach off at the knees and given that fuel costs for rail companies were significantly increased in Budget 2015, making commodity exports more expensive, what do you say to Alberta businesses that feel international economic diversification is no longer a priority of this government?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, the premise of that question is absurd. The fact is that this ministry was created by our government, not the previous government, that for years neglected diversifying the Alberta economy. This is a priority of our government. Working with small and medium-sized enterprises, working with the Alberta Enterprise Corporation, the minister on my left announced a job incentive grant. Our government has concrete steps and initiatives to increase employment and increase trade for our province.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, congratulations on the one job already created, but given that Edmonton and Calgary already have economic development corporations, which aggressively engage in trade missions and effective lobbying for businesses in their respective cities and around the world, what specifically are you doing to ensure that your ministry works alongside these organizations instead of competing against them, noting that your party was conspicuously absent from Calgary's recent economic outlook event, with over 1,600 local businesses represented?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, first and foremost, our government is listening to business and industry because for years they were asking for a ministry that would focus specifically on partnering with business and industry as a one-stop shop, and our government has demonstrated that this is a priority for us.

Mr. Speaker, it's also worth noting that part of the reason that thousands of Albertans, unfortunately, have lost their jobs is because of an overreliance on one energy sector and a previous government that refused to diversify the economy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Acadia.

Fentanyl Use Prevention

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As noted yesterday, communities across our province have witnessed the horrible effects of fentanyl overdoses and deaths. In these tough economic times we know that taking care of each other is the Alberta way of doing things. My constituents want to know that all Albertans are being taken care of and that our streets are safe. To the Minister of Health: what is your ministry doing in order to protect and support Albertans from fentanyl overdoses and addiction?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Addictions, of course, are devastating not just to the individual who is addicted but to the family and community members that are involved as well. So our sympathies, of course, to the families that have been impacted.

In terms of some of the initiatives, we moved immediately, once we took office, on a mental health review, and I think members from both sides of this House are working collaboratively on that. This is too important. We're talking about saving lives and helping people see hope in the future rather than falling victim to addiction and far too often overdose.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many social service agencies are now struggling to keep up with fentanyl addiction and overdose cases, what is the department doing to support these agencies in this time of need?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, actually, was just talking earlier today about ARCHES and some of the work that's happening there. I had the honour of visiting them this summer as well as the Sheldon Chumir in Calgary. They are doing amazing work in trying to make sure that they increase access to harm reduction initiatives in the community. We have to say a big thank you to them as well as to Alberta Health Services for their education campaign around the dangers of fentanyl. Alberta Health Services has formed a fentanyl emergency command centre. One of their first tasks is to find a way that we can distribute naloxone kits throughout our communities more widely.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that some Albertans with addictions may be reluctant to access services for fear of reprisal, to the same minister: what are you doing to ensure that harm reduction policies are put into place where appropriate?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We are of course doing the mental health review, but also additional actions are being taken immediately by Alberta Health Services, as I just mentioned. These include prevention awareness, harm reduction, and improving access to treatment for people who are struggling with addictions. I'm really proud of the board that we announced recently for Alberta Health Services. One of the board members is actually Marliss Taylor, who has a very strong international reputation for doing work around harm reduction here in Edmonton with Streetworks and internationally as well. I'm excited to see what type of initiative she proposes as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Urgent Health Care Services in Airdrie

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The city of Airdrie is a booming city. We have a population of over 60,000 people within the riding, and with a population as large as ours you would think that the city would be serviced properly, but it is not. Airdrie is severely lacking a 24-hour health care facility. Currently residents are forced to drive over an hour and a half into Calgary to receive urgent care in the evening and late-night hours. To the Minister of Health: can you tell the people of Airdrie where their urgent care facility lies on the minister's priority list?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, hon. member, for the question and, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to answer it. When I hit Airdrie, I'm pretty excited about being close to Calgary, so I'm sorry that there sometimes could be an hour and a half commute. That, of course, is something that my hon. colleague down the way will have to help us address, I guess, if it's traffic that you're talking about.

In terms of emergency after-hours care I have met with a number of different stakeholders from Airdrie, including the mayor and some individuals from the hospital. I'm aware of the desire to have an expanded health care facility. [interjections] That requires expanded investment, and I find it ironic that members opposite are criticizing . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, the minister's answer is, unfortunately, unsatisfactory. Airdrie does not have an adequate health care facility.

Given that health issues do not follow routinely scheduled business hours and do not hold off to strike a patient between the hours of 9 and 5, Minister, since you find more money to hire additional bureaucrats in AHS, why can't you find the time to tell the people of Airdrie where they are on the priority list?

Ms Hoffman: I find the reference to additional bureaucrats very bewildering. We've brought forward a very focused budget. We've got a tremendous team, and we'll be happy to talk through those details in estimates.

In terms of investing in infrastructure, members opposite have proposed cutting $9.8 billion from infrastructure investment but then want to say that, of course, one individual facility is more important than every other. I think it's important that we have a thoughtful, outcomes-based plan and that we move forward on making sure Albertans get the health care they need where they need it.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that land has been donated for an emergency health care facility in Airdrie and that the city and local businesses are ready to partner to see the citizens of Airdrie protected, will the minister commit to protect the people of Airdrie and partner with us to break ground on this urgently needed health care facility?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you to the member for the question. It's great when local entrepreneurs step up and want to contribute assets, including land. It's very much appreciated. With the land comes the need for construction and then ongoing operations. What we've done is worked with Alberta Health Services to have evidence-based decision-making so that we can make sure that we've got assurances for all Albertans, not just individuals who can afford to donate land, that they will have health care when and where they need it, Mr. Speaker.

Light Up Your Life Society in Stony Plain

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to share the good work that the Light Up Your Life Tri-Community Palliative/Hospice Care Society is doing in my communities. The Light Up Your Life society was established in 1992 in Stony Plain. These dedicated and compassionate volunteers work all year to raise funds to support palliative, hospice, and continuing care. In 2014 the Light Up Your Life society provided close to $60,000 to WestView health centre. This donation helped ensure equipment, training, and care kits as well as furnish four private rooms and a communal family centre. The society's efforts raised the number of hospice beds in the Edmonton area to 68, and they are badly needed.

As I know from working in health care, sometimes the best gift you can give someone is to hold their hand and help them pass with grace or to be there to hold a family member after their loved one has passed.

This year's Light Up Your Life fundraising campaign began on November 1 and continues until December 31. Each $10 donation lights a clear bulb on one of the five community symbols of hope throughout the tri-municipal area. These symbols of hope glow in memory of our loved ones, and the names of those remembered are published in local newspapers after the Christmas season. As of 2014 the society's total fundraising surpassed $1 million. On average, each year 97 per cent of all funds raised are used directly to support people in our own communities.

On October 6 the society was presented with a 2015 minister's seniors service award, which recognizes Albertans whose volunteerism has made a meaningful difference in the lives of seniors. This award was presented by Minister Hoffman and myself. The society was nominated by Mayor Rod Shaigec and the council of Parkland county. I would like to recognize the society for the important work that they do in our communities and the difference that they make.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Interparty Co-operation

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning I looked in a dictionary and looked up the word "co-operate." The word refers to individuals or groups of individuals who work together to ensure a benefit that will be of value to all. Members of this government will be especially interested in the notion of co-operation. Before their party was known as the New Democratic Party, it was called the co-operative federation. Their party was founded as a group of individuals who were supposed to co-operate. That party's first leader called for co-operation within elected bodies, not unlike this Assembly. Their party's second leader said that people should work together in the public interest.

This week, Mr. Speaker, I put forward a nonpartisan initiative that called for co-operation, Bill 203, a measure that would allow all members to lock arms in order to prevent certain kinds of government spending from occurring during election campaigns. It's a measure that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, the Premier, called for on November 19 just last year, yet this week, when given the chance to show goodwill and a spirit of co-operation on this issue, this government's members chose to behave like members of the previous PC government.

Mr. Speaker, the members of this House who are new may want to remember why Albertans sent them here. It wasn't their political experience. They're here because the past members of the government, who sat in this same Chamber, lost sight of whom they represented. They put partisan politics, optics ahead of the public interest. They weren't interested in co-operating with others. New members would do well to learn from their mistakes because if they don't do their job well, they'll soon be out of a job.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the requisite number of copies of a transcript of an interview given by the Leader of the Official Opposition to Rosemary Barton on Power & Politics in which he makes the outrageous claim that the government was, by moving to morning sittings, "eliminating 50% of our question periods as a result of [the] extension of hours." He went on to say, "They're trying to eliminate the opportunity for us to ask questions." I'd like to table this for the record.

The Speaker: Members of the Assembly, pursuant to Standing Order 7(7) the daily Routine is now concluded. Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5) the House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30.

The legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon for consideration of the main estimates. Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour in the Foothills room, and Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for Municipal Affairs in the Grassland room.

[The Assembly adjourned at 2:46 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b)]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 4, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Today I have a reflection that I was provided with from the Church of England, and I thought it might resonate with you and with us here in this Assembly.

Spirit of wisdom and grace, the power of truth and judgment, we pray for all those who are working for peace in the tangled conflict of Syria today. For international leaders holding a thread of control, for the politicians holding a thread of power, for the religious leaders holding a thread of authority, for the fighters holding a thread of influence and the citizens who are clinging to a thread of hope, bring unity through the untangled order of justice, bring reconciliation through truthful dialogue, and bring new life through patient diplomacy, determined mediation, and courageous peacemaking.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly His Excellency Daeshik Jo, ambassador of the Republic of Korea. The ambassador is accompanied by Mrs. Eunyoung Park, his spouse; Mr. Shin, third secretary and consul; Dr. Chung, senior researcher at the embassy. The ambassador joins us today to represent the valuable and productive relationship Alberta and Korea share.

Korea is one of Alberta's key international partners, our sixth-largest export market in 2014, with over $530 million, and a significant source of goods and investment in both Alberta and Canada. Alberta has a long history of productive relations with Korea, having established a trade office in Seoul in 1988 and a sister province with the Korean province of Gangwon in 1974.

I had the opportunity to meet with His Excellency this morning. The ambassador and his delegation are seated in your gallery, and I'd ask that our honoured guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome, Your Excellency. I had the privilege of meeting His Excellency earlier this morning.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Minister of Education and Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some students from the radio and television program at NAIT. In their commitment to student success NAIT continues to be a shining example of how we provide job-ready skills to the next generation of leaders. Of course, NAIT happens to be in my own constituency of Edmonton-Calder. I would ask all 32 of them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any school groups that members would wish to acknowledge today?

Hearing none, the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, it's my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly this year's inductees into Alberta's 4-H Hall of Fame. Dorothy Carlson is a dedicated 4-H leader, enthusiastic community volunteer, and member of an active farm family in the community of Cherhill in my own constituency.

Sherry Howey of Valleyview is known as the 4-H voice of the Peace region. Sherry initially joined 4-H as a member and then later reconnected as a 4-H leader when her children became involved. I would like to personally thank both Dorothy and Sherry for their outstanding service to their communities.

Accompanying them are some of their family members as well as an employee of Agriculture and Forestry's 4-H branch, Stacy Murray. Mr. Speaker, I would ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three directors from the Mosaic Centre in my riding of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Since 2009 the Mosaic Centre has positively impacted the lives of Albertans challenged by poverty, hunger, and homelessness who reside in northeast Edmonton. Through compassion, love, and acceptance the staff and volunteers work tirelessly to help those who are at risk. In the past six months the Mosaic Centre assisted more than 200 unique individuals to access housing and follow-up supports. I'd ask Megan Schuring, Kelly Hennig, and Linda Deveau to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Having been, for 30 years, a real estate agent prior to being elected and also a member of the Alberta Real Estate Association, I'm especially honoured today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of the Alberta Real Estate Association, also known as AREA. AREA members are gathering today here in Edmonton for their government liaison days and are represented in the members' gallery by Brad Mitchell, director of government relations for AREA; Kerri Romanetz, government relations analyst for AREA; and 23 of their industry colleagues in the Alberta real estate business. I'd ask them all to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a friend of both of us from Medicine Hat, a very, very successful radio and media personality, a strong family person and a great mom, a great community person and a hard-working Wildrose candidate in the 2015 election, Val Olson. I would ask Val to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 21 professors from Shanghai, China. They are here today participating in a program through the English language school at the University of Alberta's Faculty of Extension through funding from the China Scholarship Council. Through a program called the advanced professional program in English, these instructors, whose native language is not English, have the opportunity to teach courses in their subject areas and to come here, then, to enhance their English skills and interact with counterparts here in Alberta. I'd like to welcome them today and ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to welcome three special, distinguished guests today. First, may I introduce Mr. Randy Cook, president of Permolex. Mr. Cook has 37 years' experience within agriculture with a strong focus on risk management, sales, and marketing. His tenure has supported the development of marketing plans for Alberta Wheat Pool, and he has spent considerable expertise advancing agriculture into various national, international, and global markets. Randy has occupied the position of president of Permolex for 12 years and has been successful at accomplishing corporate objectives.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to introduce Bridgette Duniece, VP of Permolex. With an extensive background in engineering, human resources, and safety, her contributions support Permolex's vision of remaining an innovative and forward-thinking organization. Currently focused on working with the provincial and federal governments, the Alberta Bioenergy Producers Group, and other stakeholders, Ms Duniece continues to focus on community relations, the environment, and market-based commodity modelling.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to welcome Mikyla Mifsud. Mikyla is a grade 7 student with a strong focus on her academics. Currently learning provincial government structure, Mikyla feels privileged to witness the history that is being made within this Chamber today.

Would the House please welcome my distinguished guests. If you could please rise. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three very special guests today. My incredible constituency assistant is Kerri Johnston. Kerri supports me gracefully in my work every day and spends much of her time and energy ensuring that the people of the Stony Plain constituency know we are listening and that we will do our best to help. Her patience is also phenomenal, considering it is take your kid to work day in Parkland school division and Kerri brought two young people to observe our work today.

With her today is her son, Nick Johnston, who attends Blueberry school, and my daughter, Amina Babcock, who attends Meridian Heights school. Both are grade 9 students and exceptional people that I am incredibly proud of. I also have to mention that my daughter was chosen this week to be on her school council. She may not be the youngest guest in our House to be politically engaged recently; nevertheless, I am very proud of her engagement. I'd ask all three of them to stand and receive the warm greeting of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A great honour and pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to the House a friend and colleague, Shelley Wark-Martyn – Shelley, stand up so that people can get a good look at you – a 4-H'er and junior farmer in Ontario who went on from there to become a city councillor and then a cabinet minister under Bob Rae and then a past president of the Alberta Liberal Party and candidate in the last election and now a consultant in cybersecurity internationally. Shelley Wark-Martyn has been a tireless volunteer and a great leader in our Liberal Party in Alberta, and I want her to receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly members of the Alberta Canola Producers Commission. I met with them this morning and learned a lot about canola. For those of you from urban areas it's that crop with the yellow flowers that we see on the roadside. It's my pleasure to introduce Lee Markert, chairman of the Alberta Canola Producers Commission; Renn Breitzkreuz, director; Greg Sears, council director; David Dzisiak, council director; Karla Bergstrom; and Marlene Caskey. Would you please rise to receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly quite a number of workers from the Culture and Tourism ministry. They've come here today to see what a fine, fine job we all do here in the Assembly, and I trust everyone will live up to their expectations. If they could rise, please, and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any other guests? The Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to our Assembly three realtors who are here from my home, Lethbridge. Cathy Maxwell is CEO of the Lethbridge Real Estate Board, and prior to that, she was a realtor for 11 years. She loves Lethbridge, and she's also a lover of organized real estate. Brad Cook is an honorary life member of the Lethbridge and District Association of Realtors. Stan Mills, with 35 years as a realtor in Lethbridge, area director, now joins the Real Estate Council of Alberta as a board member. If they would please rise for the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Provincial Long-term Fiscal Plan

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in estimates I had the opportunity to question the Minister of Finance about his budget plan. Unlike in question period, I had the opportunity to really follow up with the minister, but the minister and I ran into a few bumps on the road. You see, the minister gave us virtually no details for years 4 and 5 of his fiscal plan projections. There are no details, just one single number for expenditures and just one single number for revenues to conveniently project a barely balanced budget in 2020. The minister somehow projects a whopping 26 per cent increase in revenues over four years, and it is weighted towards the last two years of the plan, where no data is presented. Either the minister is planning on a second round of massive tax hikes, or he is just counting on the royalty roller coaster alone to bail out his big spending plan.

Here is the problem, Mr. Speaker. We have no idea because they won't show their work. The linchpin of the NDP's plan is to get us somewhere close to a balanced budget in 2019 without looking for any spending reductions. That means the revenues must soar over $55 billion, far beyond what Alberta saw even at $100-a-barrel oil. Now, I'm not saying that this is impossible. After all, it's Alberta, and oil could be at $100 this time next year. But what I will say is that in looking at the economic situation that our province is in today, the Minister of Finance cannot base his plan on record revenues and not show Albertans how we will actually get there.

The Minister of Finance's budget is asking Albertans to just take the NDP's word for it that the old revenue roller coaster will bail them out and that the debt they are racking up in the meantime will only run to $47 billion. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker, but Albertans deserve to see the math. The minister should do the right thing and produce the data underpinning his plan if Albertans are to have any faith in it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Show Your 4-H Colours Day

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first Wednesday in November is Canada's national 4-H day, better known as Show Your 4-H Colours Day, and the kickoff of 4-H's monthlong national celebration. 4-H Canada invites you to break out your green clothing in November to support the show your colours celebration. Join the 32,000 volunteers and members across Canada this November and show your 4-H colours, which is green, by the way.

Set to celebrate its centennial in 2017, Alberta 4-H strengthens our communities' connection to agriculture and passes important life skills on to our youth. Members are offered opportunities to become leaders and to develop and thrive in a safe and fun learning environment. They are taught how to make a difference, one positive change at a time. 4-H'ers are working together as catalysts for change in their clubs, their community, and their country. Let's celebrate this by wearing green in November. 4-H Alberta is encouraging all clubs, members, families, and partners to show support by sharing their green photos via social media channels using the hash tag #showyour4Hcolours.

Agriculture doesn't look the same as it did back in the early 1900s, and neither does 4-H. However, the original goal of 4-H, to build strong rural communities and youth leaders, remains unchanged. 4-H clubs are evolving to remain relevant to the interests of today's youth and will always continue to do what they do best, inspiring and shaping young lives to positively impact their communities.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: I'll take that, Mr. Speaker.

Energy Policies

Mr. Jean: If the NDP don't think their policies are doing real damage to our economy, they just aren't listening. Crushing new taxes, regulatory uncertainty, economic experiments: it's all adding up to mean fewer jobs and lower wages. The Petroleum Services Association of Canada actually said that there will be 3,700 fewer wells in Alberta next year than in 2014, but the Premier insists that her government is not at fault. To the Premier: does she actually believe that a royalty review, higher taxes, and increased uncertainty aren't punishing our energy sector?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I believe is that it's really important to keep your promises to the people of Alberta when they elect you, and what we talked about was that we would do a royalty review. You know what, Mr. Speaker? A lot of people in industry have actually said: "You know what? It's overdue. There's a lot of modernization which will help the industry." That's what responsible government does when they are representing the people of the province, who elected them.

Mr. Jean: Here's a direct quote from those people of the Petroleum Services Association: "Ongoing market access issues, and an environment of regulatory and policy uncertainty . . . hasn't been able to make anything better out of a bad situation." Translation: NDP policies are kicking Albertans when they're down. The worst part is that the Premier seems completely unapologetic for the damage her risky agenda is doing to Alberta. To the Premier: will she today admit that her campaign against our most important job sector is hurting ordinary Alberta people?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition: I think he needs a new translator because I didn't get what he said from what they said.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that the international price of oil has taken a walk off a very high cliff, and that's created a great deal of difficulty for the energy industry. But simply working with industry to look at our royalty structure does not in itself create the kind of problems that this party would like Albertans to think it does.

Mr. Jean: Sixty-five thousand jobs lost is a good translation.

When the oil services sector is down and investment is drying up, it impacts all of Alberta. Engineering companies in Calgary are closing shop – they're losing workers – gravel companies across Alberta are seeing layoffs, and manufacturing is slowing down dramatically. With higher taxes and fewer jobs, Albertans have less money to spend on their families and their priorities. Albertans are not asking for a miracle. They just want a government to stop kicking them when they're down. To the Premier: will she put ideology aside and start focusing on doing what's best for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our Premier and government are taking direct action through the creation of my ministry. Now, you know, sadly, the opposition believes that the way to make the price of oil go up is to fire thousands of teachers and nurses. Well, that's not what we believe. We're not about to make problems worse, so we are working with the private sector with incentives and programs that we have to increase jobs and diversify our economy.

The Speaker: Second question.

Mr. Jean: Here's why fighting for our jobs, the economy, and our energy sector is important. Between September and October Alberta's unemployment rate went up. That's 14,000 more Albertans who are out of work. Fourteen thousand. So far this year Alberta has shed 65,000 jobs. That's close to matching the record set during the Great Depression. Investment will not start coming back to Alberta until we have leaders who are serious about defending our industries. Why won't the Premier start sticking up for and standing up for Alberta instead of putting us down?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, our government does stick up for and stand up for Albertans. We stick up for and stand up for all Albertans. We have been working very collaboratively and very effectively with industry to talk about how we can improve our record on the environment with respect to climate change so that we can ensure greater access to markets for our product. That's what good government does.

Mr. Jean: The Premier has made it clear that Keystone is a threat to her agenda. In opposition she campaigned against it. She's interfering in the review process for the Kinder Morgan pipeline, and Energy East will only be viable if this Premier can convince the NDP Premier in Manitoba to stop trying to shut it down. We know these pipelines mean jobs for the 65,000 Albertans who have lost them under this government. To the Premier: when is she going to stop fighting against Alberta jobs and start fighting for pipelines?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, this summer I went to the first ministers' conference, and I took an approach of working collaboratively and respectfully with our colleagues across the country. In so doing, we got them to agree to the Canadian energy strategy. Temper tantrums were not a way to get our colleagues across the country to agree to the Canadian energy strategy. A collaborative effort was required, and that's what we did. That's the first thing that we did, and that kind of work continues each and every day in this government. We know that we need to build support by improving our record on the environment. We're also going to do that, and we're going to do that hand in hand with industry.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans do expect their leaders to be proud and to fight for our industries, not go on apology tours. They understand we need market access. Instead, our Premier has consistently campaigned against our pipelines and our oil sands. Albertans want stability. Instead, our Premier is increasing royalties and isn't done raising even more taxes. To the Premier: how are these economic experiments going to help any of the 65,000 Albertans who are without a paycheque at the end of this month?

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My colleague across the way may have missed it, but our government created a new ministry to focus on economic diversification and trade. In case you've missed it, I'm the minister of this ministry. We are looking at creating new opportunities to get our product to market that will create jobs to support families, which is our government's focus even if the opposition opposes it.

The Speaker: Third question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Small-business Tax

Mr. Jean: Wildrose has spent a lot of time trying to be helpful and provide the NDP with practical solutions. We've put forward policies that we know won't be supported by all of the NDP MLAs, but our moderate approach is best for all Albertans. Albertans are worried. They are seriously worried. They want solutions that work, not more untested NDP experiments. Wildrose has proposed a tax cut for small businesses. It's a step that would benefit every single Alberta small business today. To the Premier: why not for once try reducing taxes to help get our businesses moving again today, not in two years?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, our government, as we have outlined several times already today, has put forward a responsible plan to get Alberta back to work and also to protect our education and our health care. Now, the opposition loves to talk about restraint and about cutting, but let's look at this leader's record. In 2009 that opposition leader voted for the biggest deficit in Canadian history, $55 billion. [interjections] That same year he spent more taxpayer dollars than any other Member of Parliament at that time, $116,000 on partisan mailing. [interjections] That doesn't . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, you seem to have gained some more energy. The robustness has increased from yesterday to today.

The first supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It's a little rowdy over on that side.

The reality is that the NDP's so-called jobs subsidy program is a boondoggle in the making. Businesses are very confused, timelines are simply all over the place, and it will do little for businesses fighting on the margins. Instead, reducing small-business taxes costs just as much as the NDP's subsidy program but will actually work today. It's permanent and benefits every business right now. Why won't the Premier scrap her risky job subsidy program and replace it with an actual small-business tax cut that will help Alberta businesses?

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to remind the members of the House that there was only one party during the election that had a job creation plan, and that was us. The second difference is that instead of just talking about it, our government is taking action to create jobs, so myself and . . . [interjections] I'd love to continue.

Myself and my colleague announced our government's job creation plan, which I, hopefully, will have an opportunity to explain . . .

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP plan lost 65,000 jobs so far and doesn't start giving any money back for two years. Here's the reality of the NDP plan for businesses in Alberta. They bulldozed ahead with a radical 50 per cent increase to the minimum wage, they've raised every single person's taxes, they've sent signals to the marketplace that are causing investments to flee, and now they're pushing forward with a risky job subsidy program when they have a much better solution right in front of them, right here today. To the Premier: why won't she just reduce the small-business tax instead of ramming ahead with more unproven economic experiments?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, everyone but the opposition knows that the government of Alberta cannot control the price of oil. But there are things that we can do, and our government is taking action. In the budget that the Finance minister tabled, we've got a robust capital plan to invest in infrastructure that's much needed in our province, which will create jobs. We've created this ministry, which is looking at enhancing our access to markets and diversifying our economy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The leader of the Progressive Conservative opposition.

Government Policies

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier said, “It would be lovely to wave a magic wand and create 40,000 jobs,” when she admitted she has no plan to actually create a knowledge-based and lower carbon economy. Knowing that truth, let’s go back to the basics. My question is for the Premier: if you hope to see Albertans with good-paying jobs two years from now – and I hope you do – under your leadership and your governance, which industries will you support to provide these jobs? Which industries, Premier?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, government is not in the business of picking winners and losers. It’s in the business of creating an environment to ensure that we have a good investment climate and that Alberta is a good place for innovators and new business owners and people that want to grow their business to invest. So that is the climate that we are creating by offering up exactly what businesses talked to us about in terms of access to different types of capital that previously had been unavailable to them. That’s what we’re going to do, and that’s one of the parts of the work that the new minister of economic development will be doing over the course of the next few years.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier said in this House that when she goes “to Paris, [she’s] going to start by telling the truth.” Well, here’s some truth. Alberta has developed some world-class tailings pond technology, pipeline leak detection, carbon capture and storage, and a whole raft of world-best technologies and practices. When the Premier goes to Paris, is this the truth she’s going to tell, or is she going to trash our industry, that Albertans depend upon to make a living?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, when we go to Paris, we are going to talk about the meaningful action that the government of Alberta after 44 years is finally going to begin in order to ensure that we work as a partner with industry to enhance our environmental record and to ensure that we perform better. We’re going to tell them that there is a new sheriff in town. And you know what? We’re going to make sure that the government does its role, something it didn’t do for the last four decades, to ensure that we do our part on climate change and greenhouse gas emissions reduction.

Mr. McIver: Here’s another truth that I think the government might agree with, Mr. Speaker. The men and women of our Canadian military have sacrificed to provide the freedom, democracy, and quality of life that we all cherish so much. The truth is that the Legislature has inadvertently, I believe, scheduled budget estimates at the same time as the Speaker’s Remembrance Day ceremony tomorrow. To the Government House Leader and with my apologies for not bringing this to your attention sooner: is there any way that we can reschedule estimates away from Mr. Speaker’s Remembrance Day ceremony?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much, hon. member, for bringing that to our attention. Unfortunately, it’s pretty late in the day, but I will take it under advisement and see what changes we can make. I’m assuming that the House would prefer to adjust the estimates schedule in order to be able to attend that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Farm Worker Labour Protection and Safety

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government has been in power for 163 days after being elected on a platform of change, especially for vulnerable Albertans. Sadly, nothing has changed for paid farm workers in Alberta, who remain the most vulnerable group in Canada. After 163 days of government, paid farm workers, including children, lack basic occupational health and safety standards, any compensation for injury, and even the right to organize or refuse unsafe work conditions. Today, people who feed us are going to work without protection that . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, we must stay within the 35 seconds.

Is there someone who would like to answer? The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker. As you are aware, our minister has been talking about this issue, and we’ve been working on this issue. I believe the member will be pleased to know that this is an issue that this Assembly as a whole will be dealing with very seriously within this session. I thank the member for his advocacy on this issue over the last few years. I believe that he will feel a tremendous level of personal success by the time we’ve adjourned this session before Christmas.

Dr. Swann: I haven’t seen any indication of this on the Order Paper, Mr. Speaker, but last night in estimates the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour refused to answer any straightforward questions about the plan to protect farm workers because, apparently, she didn’t want to spoil a future government announcement. Albertans expect their government to put the health and safety of people ahead of political timing. The Alberta Federation of Agriculture is fully supportive of workers’ compensation for all paid farm workers. What is so difficult about providing basic compensation for injured workers today in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, our government believes that every worker in Alberta deserves to have a safe, fair, and healthy workplace, and that is something that we’re going forward on. Myself and my colleague the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry have been meeting with stakeholders in this industry and are putting together a plan for this. We are very excited to create safety for all workers here in Alberta.

2:10

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, I guess many of us are puzzled about why it needs to be so secretive. If there is a plan, why not start talking about a plan? The minister last night said that there was never a commitment to workers’ compensation for paid farm workers, but in April of this year the Premier herself in a statement on the Day of Mourning said that it’s time for compensation for injury. The current Environment minister said, quote: there’s no excuse anymore. End of quote. So will the Premier or the minister or anybody on the front bench stand on the courage of their convictions and tell us when and how we’re going to get compensation for people with injury?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I just want to assure the member that we are absolutely moving forward as a government. We're meeting with stakeholders, making sure that we're hearing their concerns about the specifics of their industry. We're going to be moving forward in a very prudent manner, and I think the outcome will please him very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

School Nutrition Programs

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that students need to be active and have a healthy diet in order to be able to focus and learn in class. We also know that there are many schools offering breakfast and lunch programs to students. The previous government's lack of action on this issue led to a concerted effort by groups of hard-working parents and volunteers that were supported through donations to ensure that our kids have a full stomach to help them learn every day. To the Minister of Education: what are you doing to build on this good work and support our school nutrition programs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks very much for the question. Certainly, we've seen lots of good work in the community and from parent groups and volunteer organizations to provide school nutrition in our schools across the province, and my department is currently evaluating where those programs are so that we can bolster them and build a more coherent program for right across the province. What better job can we be employed in, all of us here, than looking after the health and good education of our K to 12 students?

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the member has met with all 61 school boards in the province, can he provide details on some specific nutrition programs already in place? Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we found lots of innovative programs across the province already. For example, E4C in Edmonton has an excellent nutrition program. They are active in 10 Catholic schools right here in Edmonton and provide about 2,000 hot lunches every single day. Northland school division offers hot lunches on request, free of charge, for every student in their school board. That's a high bar that we could perhaps emulate. These are the kinds of programs that we're looking at to build a coherent school lunch program across the province.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Mr. Speaker, given that the best way to ensure we get this right is to collaborate with the right partners across the spectrum, to the same minister: is the minister looking to other ministries to help in improving student nutrition?

Mr. Eggen: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker and hon. member. Certainly, we're looking for partnerships with the Ministry of Health and with Human Services as well to ensure that we are working on the widest possible range by which we can provide targeted school lunch programs across the province and build a strategy that is coherent, that is long term, and that students and school boards can count on to have something in place for students that are most in need. Again, what better job can we employ all of our resources in than to help the unfortunate students in our province and to provide a school lunch program?

The Speaker: Now the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Grande Prairie Hospital

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Grande Prairie hospital was announced many times, including in 2012 prior to the election, when they actually started moving dirt around even though there was not even a plan for the hospital. Now that it's finally under construction, the Minister of Health announced yesterday that the Grande Prairie hospital will have its services cut, it will be delayed, and it is over budget. To the Minister of Health: can you explain to the people of Grande Prairie and the Peace Country, that will rely on the Grande Prairie hospital for their health care needs, why these changes have taken place?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. We all know that this is a problem that we've inherited from the past government. Of course, part of that has to do with the fact that those announcements were made without doing due planning. Our government is really committed to making sure that we get it right moving forward. In terms of what the Official Opposition proposed during the election, let's just remind ourselves that they wanted to cut over 3,000 civil service jobs, and their leader said: we will cut lower priority infrastructure projects. I want to know: are those Lloydminster continuing care, Medicine Hat regional hospital, Taber health care, Grande Prairie health care? I don't think so. Our government is investing in infrastructure.

Mr. Loewen: I'm getting really tired of the fearmongering from that side and the mistruths.

Given that in a meeting with myself, the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, and . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, preamble, and be careful of the choice of your words.

Mr. Loewen: Given that in a meeting with myself, the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, and the mayor of Grande Prairie on September 9 the minister clearly stated that, rumours aside, the hospital was on time, on budget, and definitely not going to be scaled back and given that the minister suggested that it would be a good question for question period so that she could proudly proclaim in the House those same statements, Minister – here we are – as per your suggestion, can you explain why you made those promises that you have now renege on?

Ms Hoffman: I was really proud to tour the province this summer. The hon. member did not bring staff to that meeting, but I did, and we have very detailed minutes of what I said in that meeting. I'd be happy to share them with the hon. member. What I did ask was: what rumours are in the community, and how can we set them straight? The rumours that were in place included that the whole hospital was going to be shelved. We are not doing that. We've got a plan. I announced it very publicly yesterday. I reached out directly to the hon. member yesterday and to the mayor and to the Grande Prairie College and health advisory council. We're being very open about what we're able to do and how we're moving forward, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Loewen: Given that during that meeting the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti supported your statements, Minister, showing that there is little or no difference between the previous government and this government in their commitments to infrastructure, how can the people in the Peace Country and, in fact, all Albertans have any confidence in anything this government promises, when rumours and coffee-shop talk have more credence than the minister's own promises?

Ms Hoffman: When I've been touring the province, I've been inviting local MLAs to join in the meetings I'm having with other local leaders, and if the hon. member doesn't want to be in those meetings and wants to make up untruths, I am very willing to take that into consideration. What the hon. member is saying . . .

Speaker's Ruling Intemperate Language

The Speaker: I simply want to advise both the hon. member with the question as well as the responding minister on my read of the discussion in the House. The use of the words by both of you on untruths is somewhat inappropriate, and I would ask that you reframe your statements not using the tone of those allegations.

Hon. minister, are you finished?

Ms Hoffman: Just to add to the response, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much for the opportunity. I am happy to have meetings with local MLAs, and I will be very happy to share the information from those meetings with the MLAs. I'm glad to set the record straight, and I'm happy to update the House and to be open and transparent moving forward.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Member for Calgary-North West.

2:20 Youth Addiction Treatment Services

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's crucial that government provides the supports necessary to address problems caused by drug addiction. One of the supports that was introduced to help support young people was the protection of children abusing drugs program created in 2006 by our government. PCHAD allows for youth to be mandated into a court-ordered 10-day detox and stabilization. It was a huge achievement. To the Minister of Health. After that initial 10-day period families are often left with little choice about ongoing addiction treatment. With the rising fentanyl crisis and increased cases of relapse, will you commit today to a meeting with stakeholders and affected parents on this issue?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the initiative she's shown in the past and continues to show today. We know how devastating addiction issues can be for families. I have met with a number of different stakeholders, and if the hon. member would like to propose a meeting with an additional group of stakeholders, I am certainly welcome to receive that invitation.

Ms Jansen: I would, and thank you for that.

Mr. Speaker, after an initial 10-day detox many young people still don't have the ability to make sound decisions about their recovery path. To the Justice minister: would you be willing to re-evaluate PCHAD and examine whether a mandated longer term solution might be needed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. This is of course a critical issue. Youth who are suffering from addictions are a tragedy in our province, and the number of young people we're losing is an absolute tragedy. I'm happy to review our programs to see what's necessary and to hear from people and make the best evidence-based decisions we can on what's best to support our young people.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, to the Minister of Infrastructure. We know now that you've taken away $13 million in funding for addiction and detox beds, putting it into a $4.4 billion slush fund. When will you decide if Alberta's addicted kids are important enough to put it back?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question, hon. member. I don't think you've quite framed the question accurately. In fact, all of the detox centres that were specifically contained in the capital budget are still in the capital budget. There was uncommitted money for that purpose that we have now moved into the uncommitted fund that you're talking about. We'll make decisions in due course about the priorities, and that includes addictions, that includes making sure that the health of all Albertans is safe, among all other priorities that we have to deal with.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Job Creation

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's talk about the numbers. Sixty-five thousand: that's how many jobs have been lost so far this year, and that number will unfortunately only climb from here. Now let's talk about government numbers. Twenty-seven thousand: that's the absolute cap for the job subsidies program created by this government, and it won't even pay until 2017. This program is not helping Albertans and businesses when they need it most, which is right now. To the minister of jobs: when will this government realize that their program is misguided and focus instead on creating the right business environment for our province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the opposition uses the number 65,000 jobs that have been lost. The opposition would like government to cut thousands of more jobs from the public service: nurses, doctors, teachers. You know, quite frankly, our government has a plan and is putting that plan into action through initiatives that we rolled out throughout the week. There are more announcements coming. But, quite frankly, we're partnering with the private sector and those job creators to get Albertans back to work.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, once again, we have never, ever said what the member is saying that we've said. We've never said that, and we will continue to say that we will not cut those jobs. Front-line jobs will not be cut.

Now, given that this job subsidy program is like putting a Band-Aid on gaping wounds and that we need to address the root causes of the problems here in Alberta, not issue stopgaps, it is clear that this subsidy program is fundamentally flawed. Will the minister acknowledge that this subsidy program is the wrong way to restore the Alberta advantage?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, first of all, there are a few things that need to be clarified. First of all, under our government 93 per cent of Albertans will see no change to their personal income taxes and the majority of Albertans are actually paying fewer taxes than what the previous government proposed. Our government believes in supporting entrepreneurs, in providing initiatives, partnering with the private sector to diversify our economy and to strengthen our economy. Our solution is not to lay off thousands of more workers.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The more they say it doesn't make it right.

Given that you insist on going forward with this program, which incredibly is a key pillar of your budget, there must be some accountability to this program. One of the fatal flaws of the program is the lack of information surrounding disclosure of who exactly will receive the subsidies. To the minister of jobs: will you commit right here and right now to start your program properly and ensure that a monthly sunshine list is disclosed so we know where exactly these subsidies are going?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, first of all, the sectors that can apply for this grant are all sectors. When we talk about providing supports, this job-creation plan is available whether it's the energy sector, small businesses, and at the same time not-for-profits. We're working with the private sector and not-for-profits to provide incentives for them to hire Albertans and get more Albertans back to work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Royal Alexandra Hospital Renovation

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month it was revealed that AHS was planning a massive renovation project for the Royal Alexandra hospital. Now, we in opposition have long called on the government to carry out the necessary and sensible maintenance, upgrade, and repair work on this facility, but we were floored to see the price tag under the NDP government come in at a whopping $4.5 billion. To the Health minister: is this yet another case of incredibly poor value for Alberta taxpayers?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. The document that ended up being leaked by somebody to the media was a document that was given from Alberta Health Services to my ministry staff. What it said was what they would like to see on the Royal Alex hospital site 15 years from now and the different projects that they would like to see invested in. So it was a planning document that was prepared by the service delivery operator, Alberta Health Services, for our consideration.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that our province's hospital costs have been spiralling out of control for years and seeing as the average cost for hospitalization in Alberta is a shocking 35 per cent higher than the national average, is pouring billions of Albertans' dollars into just one facility really the best plan that AHS can come up with?

Ms Hoffman: Alberta Health Services is looking at a lot of different sites and has a lot of desires that they'd like for sites throughout Alberta. Our government is focused on making sure that we have an evidence-based decision-making process. I just want to remind people. I know there has been a lot of discussion around what's actually been said. Here's what was actually said. The Leader of the Official Opposition in April said that he would be cutting at least 2,300 civil service positions and that lower priority infrastructure projects would be put on hold. So, hon. member, I think that $9 billion worth of infrastructure cuts would only make it worse. We are going to be investing in infrastructure to provide stable health care.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We understand there are concerns with the state of the Royal Alex, and we have always been clear about the need for any deferred maintenance and upgrades to be completed in a timely and efficient manner, contrary to this government's fearmongering.

But given that the Royal Alex is far from the only facility needing renovation, how can the bureaucracy suggest that it's prudent to throw the lion's share of funding at just one facility?

Ms Hoffman: Just to remind ourselves, Mr. Speaker, that was a planning document that was submitted by Alberta Health Services for our consideration. We have not made any decisions about how we'll be investing in health care throughout Alberta. But I think it's important for us to know where the deferred maintenance is and what needs to be done in terms of moving forward. That is the long-term plan. What we have submitted is a four-year capital plan, which I will be very happy to go through with the hon. members. You can't talk out of both sides of your mouth. You can't say that you're going to cut $9 billion and that you're going to invest at the same time. It just doesn't work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Justices and Crown Prosecutors

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Chief Justice Neil Wittman has repeatedly said that we are 11 Queen's Bench justices short in Alberta. If we don't have enough justices in Alberta, victims of crime suffer anguish as does anyone trying to utilize the court system. To the Justice minister: given that the number of Queen's Bench justices is set by provincial regulation with federal authority and given that due to our high rate of population growth Alberta needs an appropriate number of justices just to keep our court systems functioning properly, will the Minister of Justice commit to passing a regulation to expand the number of Court of Queen's Bench justices by 11.

Thank you.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Well, just to clarify a few things, Alberta does create the positions, but it is the federal government that appoints Queen's Bench justices. Currently there are five positions that Alberta has created that haven't been appointed by the federal government. We're hoping to work with our federal partners – and I will be speaking to my newly appointed counterpart – to get appointments made to those. We are looking at creating additional spaces once there's need because the other positions have been filled.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. I did say that.

Again to the Justice minister. I appreciate your wanting to speak to the new federal Minister of Justice. Given that Alberta has the lowest number of Court of Queen's Bench justices per capita of any province, will the Minister of Justice commit today to demanding that the new federal government appoint the justices needed to bring Alberta up to par with all provinces?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. The former federal government felt that population wasn't a driver that should determine how many Queen's Bench justices a province got. I feel quite differently, and I'm hoping that my federal counterpart will feel quite differently, too. I will be speaking to them at our earliest opportunity to advocate on this issue.

Thank you.

Mr. Ellis: To the same minister: given that Budget 2015 cuts 4.2 per cent from the Alberta Crown prosecutor service and given that reducing the number of already overworked Crown prosecutors slows down the justice system, will the Minister of Justice tell us how a $4 million budget reduction for Crown prosecutors does anything but delay justice for victims and result in dropping charges against accused criminals due to long delays? What would the minister say to those victims?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. We're certainly aware that our Crown prosecutors in this province are working incredibly hard to keep things moving along. The government is moving forward on a number of initiatives to ensure that they're better able to move things forward and to ensure that we have an innovative justice system that takes into account new ideas so that we can stream some things out of the court systems. Currently we are committed to working with them to ensure that they can fulfill their function, and we're very proud of the job that they're doing.

Highway 63 Twinning

Mrs. Littlewood: Mr. Speaker, my proud constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville is home to Alberta's Industrial Heartland. The businesses and workers involved in this industry know how important highway 63 is to move people and goods throughout our province. It is a vital link in our eastern transportation corridor, supports and drives economic growth and diversification in Alberta. To the minister of Alberta: could the minister please update the House . . .

An Hon. Member: Minister of Alberta?

Mrs. Littlewood: Oh, sorry. To the Minister of Transportation: could the minister please update the House on the government's progress on improving the safety of Alberta workers on highway 63?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for the question. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to start by thanking the hon. member and other members of our caucus for their advocacy on behalf of this highway. I'm pleased to announce that we've just opened another 16-kilometre section of highway 63. We've made great progress on improving safety this year, with 185 kilometres of twinned highway open to this vital economic corridor of this province. I'm very pleased with the progress so far.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the update. I'm pleased to hear that our government is making important and long-overdue progress on highway development. To the same minister: could you please update the Chamber on when we will see the twinning of highway 63 completed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm pleased to tell the House that the twinning of highway 63 is now 99 per cent complete. There is only one three-kilometre section, where there's pipeline construction at the present time, that we were unable to get done this year, but it will be fully twinned and opened early in the spring construction season. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, do we want to have constructive dialogue? I can't hear either side of the House. Would you please tone it down?

Second supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am definitely interested in a constructive dialogue.

Given the history of that highway I'm sure many Albertans will be relieved to hear that this project is near completion. I would ask the minister if he could please provide an update on other transportation infrastructure projects taking place in the Fort McMurray area.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm pleased to tell the hon. member that Alberta Transportation is also working to open phase 1 of the Parsons Creek interchange in Fort McMurray to traffic this year, and we hope to have the project completed by 2016. I know that many residents of the Wood Buffalo municipality are looking forward to the completion of both of these projects.

Emergency Medical Services in Eastern Alberta

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, AHS staffs the Wainwright ambulance station 24 hours a day, ensuring fast response and quality service. On December 14 AHS will be downgrading this service by eliminating staff at the station from 8 p.m. to 8 a.m. Staff will have to respond from their homes to the station before heading out. To the Minister of Health: are you aware that AHS is using this cost-cutting measure to reduce front-line workers' hours in Wainwright and that response times will be dangerously increased?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's really important to us that Albertans can count on having the right care at the right time and the right place by the right health professional. If the hon. member has any questions about that specific situation in Wainwright, I would be very happy to follow up afterwards and make sure that I liaise an appropriate response to the hon. member and all constituents who rely on the EMS services in the community.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Minister. Given that the town of Wainwright is very concerned that this will create longer response times during a time frame that commonly generates more severe accidents and given that there is only what is known as the golden hour, which is the time from when the accident occurred to the time that the patient needs to be on the operating table – that’s what you need for the best outcome. Minister, if this is in fact going to be implemented, can you ensure patient’s safety and that no lives will be at risk?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, hon. member, for the question and, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to answer it. I’d be very happy to sit down with the hon. member and go through the detailed concerns that he has and make sure that AHS has an opportunity to provide me with that confidence before I provide it to the members of the community. But, of course, their safety is our number one concern.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Minister. Given that AHS has a list for major cities and towns of EMS response times listed on their site yet there are no response times listed for the Battle River-Wainwright area in general, will the minister commit to tracking response times in the communities in eastern Alberta such as Killam, Wainwright, and Lloydminster so that we can see the effect that these changes are having on our rural ambulance service?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We are, of course, really committed to making sure that we have prompt, timely responses, and I know that Alberta Health Services is doing active monitoring by minute right now. They can look up and find out exactly what the response times are so they can deploy other EMS to the areas where they’re most needed in the province. I’d be happy to discuss this and other opportunities that the hon. member suggests. This is one of the reasons why, before session started, I asked for meetings with the critics from both of the official parties in the House, so that I could have an opportunity to work through some of these challenges. I’m happy to do so when the House isn’t sitting as well. So please be in touch with my office, and we’ll be happy to co-ordinate some increased information so we can have confidence and your citizens can have confidence as well.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

2:40 Northern Alberta Development Council

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, the Northern Alberta Development Council was created more than 50 years ago to support development and growth for Northern Alberta and all Albertans. NADC has contributed greatly to the development of programs and policy to ensure the viability of northern municipalities. With the recent dissolution of the Alberta Economic Development Authority there are concerns that NADC may be next. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: can you assure northern Albertans that NADC will continue to be a vital component . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for the question, a very good question. I have met with a couple of the members from that council, and I do intend to work collaboratively with them. I know that they do a lot of great work representing and advocating on behalf of Albertans that live in northern Alberta and looking for ways to continue to diversify our economy, our energy sector, and working with our job creators.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that NADC is made up of nine public members and the chair, who is a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, and given that NADC has been without a chair since the provincial election, can you advise when the NDP government will be appointing a northern MLA to the position of chair of the Northern Alberta Development Council?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. That board is currently housed in Aboriginal Relations. Our government, in attempting to make sure that we are making effective use of taxpayers’ dollars, is reviewing all of the agencies, boards, and commissions. Once that review is completed, we will be moving forward on a number of appointments that have been sort of waiting to happen. We just want to ensure that we’re making the best decisions in the best interests of all Albertans at prices they can afford.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Maybe now that we have a new ministry is the time to move it, but I’ll stay out of that one.

Given that Alberta is still suffering from a downward spiral in oil prices and oil and gas development and given that northern Alberta needs a strong NADC to help address the rural economic challenges that our northern communities are all facing, can you advise northern Albertans what areas of economic development will be priorities for the NADC in the coming years?

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question, you know, very, very pertinent question, especially at this time. Again, I’ll reiterate that one of the largest reasons that the Premier decided to create this ministry is to look at working with the private sector and the job creators to provide them with the tools that they need to continue to develop our economy but also looking at ways to diversify. So to the hon. member’s question, I plan to work very closely with my colleagues here on the front bench, with Agriculture and Forestry, with Energy, with Advanced Education . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Job Creation Grant Program

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I had the opportunity to question the minister on her portfolio and on the new job subsidy program. In a perfect world this subsidy program would be a good kick at the can, but this is not a perfect world, and our province is bleeding jobs. We have lost 65,000 jobs this year; 65,000 hard-working Albertans have come face to face with our economic troubles. That's like giving a pink slip to the entire city of Medicine Hat.

The government somehow believes that a handout will mitigate this problem, but let's face the facts. The subsidy program can't even be used to hire back those people who have lost their jobs like the hard-working hostesses and dishwashers from the restaurants that I have talked to. It can only be used for net new jobs. Unfortunately, this means that the hard-working Albertans that were laid off can't get their jobs back using this subsidy. This program is categorically flawed.

There's more. The money associated with this subsidy can't be accessed until 2017. That's correct. There will be no money until sometime in 2017. That means that when people are losing their jobs right now, there is no hope for them. There are at least 14 more months to go before one penny of this subsidy will reach the hands of employers. How many jobs need to be lost before the NDP stops their risky economic experiments and helps Albertans when they need it most?

This program sounds like an IOU rather than: I'll help you. Albertans are worried. I'm worried. Albertans need help now, not in 2017. We need to get back to the Alberta advantage, that made Alberta great. This new job subsidy program, their so-called Alberta way, is the wrong way.

The Speaker: Hon. members and the House leaders particularly, as members are exiting the Chamber, if you would please not intervene in the line of sight between the Speaker and the party speaking, I'd appreciate it very much.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Permolex International Zero-waste Facility

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you. Mr. Speaker and my friends here today, I am privileged to introduce Permolex, a producer of ethanol and other biofuel products from Red Deer. Permolex has established itself as a unique, forward-thinking, and diverse organization. Permolex's exceptionally innovative and green operations utilize the waste products from one process as the raw materials for the next, resulting in a zero-waste facility. This is the only process of its kind in North America. Permolex's research and development team works with Alberta's higher learning facilities to support these state-of-the-art operations. This helps provide a structural basis for a clean-tech industry that is competitive and stable within the market.

Permolex strengthens the local agricultural community by using commodities from over 1,400 farmers within a 150-kilometre radius to manufacture high-value energy products. Its plant creates over 50 direct jobs and contributes to the steady economic development and sustainability of Alberta. The fuels produced at Permolex, the only ethanol-producing plant in Alberta, are 71 per cent less carbon intensive. As a result, this sustainable product advances Alberta's reputation as a responsible producer of energy.

As an environmental steward Permolex uses its zero-waste process and its greenhouse gas reduction targets to preserve the health and quality of life for all Albertans. Permolex is an exceptional example of how innovation, motivation, and diversification can positively impact the Alberta economy.

I am grateful for the opportunity to introduce this organization to the Assembly. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Alberta Real Estate Association

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Having previously worked as a realtor for nearly 30 years, I'm pleased to hereby give a member's statement celebrating the work of AREA, the Alberta Real Estate Association. AREA represents more than 10,000 realtors throughout the province and 10 real estate boards province-wide. AREA's vision is to provide world-class leadership that positively changes the Alberta real estate profession and shapes it to serve the population well. It enhances members' professionalism and reinforces the critical value realtors deliver to both buyers and sellers.

Today Alberta realtors from across the province are in Edmonton for government liaison days. Many of us members have met with our local real estate representatives today.

As a professional real estate association for Alberta realtors AREA is in a unique position to advocate with a singular voice on matters which have the potential to impact realtors' careers, their daily work lives, and their ability to effectively serve their clients. AREA provides a provincial perspective on real estate matters directly to the public, when appropriate, to help the public understand a realtor's expertise and the valuable role they play in the success of the industry. Having been a realtor myself, I know the incredible contribution of real estate to Alberta's economy and realtors to their communities. Realtors support Albertans in making the largest financial decision of many people's lives, that of buying a home. AREA also advocates for ideas to help make industry better in Alberta and to help ensure that consumers are protected.

I look forward to a continued dialogue with my former colleagues in AREA to help bring forward their ideas and concerns to the government and to ensure that all Albertans benefit from the best practices advocated by AREA.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Charitable Donations

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I draw the Assembly's attention to the generosity of the Lacombe and area residents. Culture and Tourism, the ministry that oversees the voluntary and nonprofit sector, is responsible for reporting on donations made by Albertans. In its most recent annual report the ministry outlines the tremendous generosity of our province. Albertans donated well above the national average. Just over one-fifth of Albertans made donations to charities and not-for-profits, with the highest average amount donated. Truly this speaks to the spirit of generosity found across our great province. It is with great pride that I commend the people of Lacombe and area, who best demonstrate compassion and the willingness to lend a helping hand. The area had both the highest percentage of donors in Alberta, at 26.3 per cent, and had the highest median donation in Canada, at $780 each.

Such generosity greatly enhances the richness and quality of life for all Albertans, and the ripples are felt around the world through the work of NGOs and charities. Contributions go to local food banks, housing initiatives, youth centres, rehab centres, palliative care, hospital equipment, arts and culture, sports, education, historical and heritage preservation, and a host of other things.

People can and will care for each other without the central and cumbersome control of big government. Albertans donate out of the goodness of their hearts, and it is important that we protect incentives for charitable contributions. The previous government proposed decreasing this incentive, and the reaction was swift and strong. It is also important, Mr. Speaker, that we provide responsible stewardship of our economy so that Albertans have the disposable income needed for these valuable and life-enhancing contributions.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I get going, I'm going to ask, first of all, for unanimous consent of the House to waive Standing Order 7(7) in case our orders go past 3 o'clock.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Bilous: Once again thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first notice of motion I have – I have three today, and with your indulgence I will go through them one at a time – on behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure:

Be it resolved that Standing Order 52.01(1) is amended as follows:

1. in clause (a)
 - (i) by striking out “and Service Alberta” and substituting “, Service Alberta and Status of Women”;
2. in clause (b)
 - (i) by striking out “Agriculture and Rural Development” and substituting “Agriculture and Forestry”;
 - (ii) by striking out “International and Intergovernmental Relations, Innovation and”;
 - (iii) by striking out “and Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour” and substituting “Economic Development and Trade and Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour”;
3. in clause (c) by striking out “Environment and Sustainable Resource Development” and substituting “Environment and Parks.”

That is the first one.

With your indulgence I'll continue through all three, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation:

- A. Be it resolved that the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta effective November 18, 2014, be amended as follows:
 1. The heading preceding Standing Order 78.1 is amended by striking out “Legislative Policy.”
 2. The heading preceding Standing Order 78.3 and Standing Order 78.3(1) are struck out and the following is substituted:
Report of committee on a Bill
78.3(1) A standing or special committee to which a Bill has been referred by the Assembly after second reading shall be empowered to report the same with or without amendments or to report that the Bill not proceed.
 3. The heading preceding Standing Order 78.4 is amended by striking out “Legislative Policy.”

4. The following Standing Orders are amended by striking out “Legislative Policy Committee” wherever it occurs and substituting “standing or special committee”:
 - (a) 8(7)(c);
 - (b) 52.02;
 - (c) 74.1(1);
 - (d) 74.2(1);
 - (e) 78.1(1);
 - (f) 78.2(1).

- B. And be it further resolved that these amendments come into force on passage.

My third motion, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Government House Leader:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly rescind its approval of amendment A1 to the motion for second reading of Bill 203, Election (Restrictions on Government Advertising) Amendment Act, 2015, so that the bill retains its place at second reading on the Order Paper with 62 minutes of time for debate remaining.

Those are the three motions, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you. I'm quite pleased to rise. Earlier today, the Member for Calgary-Hays asked the Government House Leader about a Remembrance Day celebration that will be held, that you'll be hosting, Mr. Speaker, in the Legislature's rotunda. Here in front of me is the estimates schedule, where we have cleared the morning of November 5 of estimates so that all Members of the Legislative Assembly may attend that ceremony.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings relating to messages from the Premier regarding her commitment to protecting farm workers' occupational health and safety and compensation, as reported in the Journal, that I attach, and another statement from the Western Producer indicating that farm labour laws are going to be included in the Legislature.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 7(7) the daily Routine is now concluded. Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01 the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 1:30 p.m.

Legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon for consideration of the main estimates. Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Education in the Foothills Room, and Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for Infrastructure in the Grassland Room.

[The Assembly adjourned at 2:58 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b)]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 5, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Welcome.

Let us collectively reflect. As we in this Chamber constructively engage with each other in the practice of free speech, let us not forget those who defended our rights and freedoms to do so. Let us remember those who died and also those who continue to suffer the physical and emotional pain caused by the horrific experiences of war. It is our collective responsibility to nurture, protect, and cherish those who may have returned scarred. Particularly, we in this Chamber must never forget.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and deputy chair.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured today to rise and introduce to the Assembly on your behalf a group of 16 former MLAs, who are part of the Alberta Association of Former MLAs and are here today for their annual general meeting. It is without reservation that I, on behalf of all members of this Assembly, sincerely thank you all for the significant contributions that you have made to our province and to all Albertans. I would ask that you please rise as I call your names and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly: Ken Allred, St. Albert, and his wife, Marge; Dennis Anderson, Calgary-Currie; Fred Bradley, Pincher Creek-Crowsnest; Denis Ducharme, Bonnyville-Cold Lake; Ed Gibbons, Edmonton-Manning; Wayne Jacques, Grande Prairie-Wapiti; Terry Kirkland, Leduc; Mel Knight, Grande Prairie-Smoky, and his wife, Diana; Juliette Langevin, spouse of former MLA Paul Langevin, Lac La Biche-St. Paul; Karen Leibovici, Edmonton-Meadowlark; Mary O'Neill, St. Albert; Leo Piquette, Athabasca-Lac La Biche; Bill Purdy, Stony Plain; Janice Sarich, Edmonton-Decore; George VanderBurg, Whitecourt-St. Anne; Julius Yankowsky, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview; Les Young, Edmonton-Jasper Place.

Could we all provide them the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: By the sound of that, I would interpret that to mean: welcome back.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: I think Edmonton-Rutherford may have a guest.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very thrilled today to have the opportunity to introduce to you and through you my daughter, Kate, who has recently graduated from the University of Alberta with a degree in fine arts and is now working as a stage manager here in the city of Edmonton. If we could all provide her with the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: With a degree in fine arts you might be considering this House at some future engagement.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a delegation from the Canadian Forces. Joining us here today from the 3rd Canadian Division Support Base Edmonton are delegation lead, Major Sophie Drolet, Warrant Officer Michael Ranson, Corporal Gabrielle Longpré, and Corporal Colin Ward. We thank them for their service, and I'd ask that everyone in the House give them the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: I think that would be an indication of how proud we are of the service you provide, and I must tell the Assembly that I'm proud of all of you that you showed that kind of respect.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly three Michelles. The first is my younger and beautiful daughter, Michelle Carter, and with her is my favourite granddaughter, Michelle Carter-Snipes. I'd like to thank you both for coming and supporting me the way you do. I love you. The third is Michel Béchar, executive director of advancement and external relations at Lethbridge College. I'd ask the three Michelles to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of guests to introduce today if you'll indulge me. First, I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Liam Jolly. Liam is 12 years old and currently attends St. Kevin junior high. Liam is a student who is very passionate about politics and plans on becoming a page here when he turns 15. Liam also aspires to be a leader for the autistic community and one day sit in this very House as an MLA. I hear that he already has a dress shirt and tie picked out for the day that he becomes an MLA. Liam is joined today by his mother, Jacqueline Fabian, and I'd ask both of them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce to you and through you several members of the Gurdwara Siri Guru Singh Sabha. After first starting services in the homes of community members, the gurdwara was built in the present location in 1985 and is a major hub of the Sikh community and an integral part of my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. Representing the gurdwara today is a large contingency of guests. I'll quickly read out their names and ask them to stand as I read them: Gulzar Singh Nirman, Mohinder Singh Nirman, Sukhjit Singh Bachhal, Lakhbir Singh Bhambra, Charanjit Singh Dakha, Karnail Singh Deol, Gurmail Singh Deol, Jagroop Singh Gill, Gurcharn Singh Sangha, and Ram Singh. Members, please give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hope you didn't unduly influence the future MLA with the colour of what that shirt will be. Did you?

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first introduction today is some guests from the Pakistan Canada Association of Edmonton, an organization dedicated to world-wide humanitarian causes and the welfare of new immigrants to Edmonton. Over the years they have held fundraisers for the victims of natural disasters, and at this time their fundraiser is related to the victims of recent earthquakes striking Pakistan, Afghanistan, and India. The Pakistan Canada Association of Edmonton will be holding a fundraiser at Maharaja Banquet Hall in Edmonton tomorrow at 6 p.m. Tickets are only $15, and I encourage all of us who can to attend. Please stand as I give your name: Tariq

Chaudhry, president, Pakistan Canada; Arshad Malhi; Iqbal Kahn; Zafar Kahn; Akmal Randhawa; accompanied by Harpreet Gill, the Alberta Liberal stalwart of Edmonton-Mill Creek. Let's give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for indulging me a second introduction. It's my pleasure to introduce a passionate young man and his grandfather. The young man, I dare say, may also be a future member of this Legislature. Quintin Nguyen is in grade 7 at St. Mark junior high school, a goalie with his community soccer league. He's 11 years old and interested in politics through social studies and current events classes and is here to see his legislators in action. Ron Brochu – please stand – boldly carried the banner for Alberta Liberals in the riding of Edmonton-Gold Bar this past election. Let's give them the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was going to introduce, also, the future MLA, Liam, but that has been done, so I will just acknowledge that Jackie Fabian is a caseworker with Edmonton child and family services region 6. I will ask Jackie to rise one more time and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce three very special people. I've had the opportunity to work with some very wonderful people throughout my life, and these three are another great addition. Carol Vogler and Andrew Traynor are the two people I work with in the St. Albert constituency, and Alicia Clarke is a first-year social work student at MacEwan University and has chosen our office to do a practicum. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is truly my honour today to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the House Natasha Bergeron and her family: her father, Alain; her mother, Jacinthe; her brother Mathieu; and friend Kallum McDonald, who is related to past Grande Prairie-Smoky MLA Everett McDonald. Natasha is the Grande Prairie resident that won the poem contest and was, therefore, the poem reader at the Remembrance Day ceremony this morning in the rotunda and presented it en français and very eloquently, I might add. If they could rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any other guests that we have today? The Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two entrepreneurs from Sherwood Park, Phillip and Joy Jacobsen. Their company, Greenmunch, was recently nominated for a Sherwood Park & District Chamber of Commerce award. As an MLA I have pledged to make my office as sustainable as possible, and I was pleased to discover in my own riding a business that made this possible. I would ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am humbled and honoured to introduce the three most important people in my life. That, of course, is my wife, Jennifer, and our two sons, Dawson and Evan. I sometimes refer to Jennifer as TMBWITW, the most beautiful woman in the world, not just for the obvious reasons but also because before we had our children together, we ran our business together – we took trekkers to places like the Himalayas and back – and we established our Top of the World Society for Children. She has supported me through no fewer than four successful elections and, of course, all of the peaks and valleys in between. In recent years, as I've attended to my duties as an MLA, Jen has kept the home fires burning as the best mom ever, which is more than a full-time job. As if that's not enough, she's an accomplished artist and recently started playing hockey.

Meanwhile, Dawson and Evan are absolutely passionate about trying new things, including hockey, skiing, swimming, surfing, skin diving, piano, dance, bull riding, and just about anything else that we will allow a seven-and-a-half- and a five-and-a-half-year-old to do. They definitely wear helmets.

Dawson is very inquisitive. He's a French immersion grade 2 student and a very focused little goalie who aspires to play for the Calgary Flames and Team Canada and hopes one day to quarterback the current Grey Cup champions, the Calgary Stampeders. Evan is a passionate kindergarten student, and he's also a very witty little man who loves to make people laugh. Evan regularly blows us away with his talents as a budding artist and musician and linguist.

Both Dawson and Evan are very kind and caring young men who are enthralled with First Nations cultures and who demonstrate a profound respect for all those who protect our safety and our freedom, so having them attend this morning's Remembrance Day ceremony, during which I was deeply honoured to lay a wreath on behalf of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, was one of the most memorable moments in all of my years of service as an MLA.

Along those lines, I would like to express my deepest appreciation to you, Mr. Speaker, for the events of the day and also to our intrepid Sergeant-at-Arms, not only for his service here today but his dedication to all Albertans, indeed, all Canadians in the past and in the future.

Mr. Speaker, Jen and the boys inspire me every day to be a better man, and I ask them to stand now to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. I love you all.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member, and thank you on behalf of the House for laying the wreath today.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Remembrance Day

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every November 11 we take time to reflect upon the professionalism and courage and sacrifice shown by our brave men and women in uniform, those who serve now and those who have served in the past and those who have fallen. It is fitting that the day that we chose to honour our brave men and women in uniform is the anniversary of the day that the guns finally fell silent to end the First World War. It was not, as was thought at the time, the war to end all wars, and tragically we have had cause time and time again to call upon our brave men and women to sacrifice even more to ensure our collective peace, prosperity, and freedom. We chose the day that peace was declared to honour them in the hopes that one day the peace will last and future generations need not share in the burden of sacrifice that our brave soldiers carry today.

Moments of reflection are commonly observed on Remembrance Day. These moments allow us to remember how fortunate we are to live in a free society, that this very Assembly is emblematic of. We remind ourselves that this freedom is ensured by our military community's unwavering commitment to protect our society. Across the province Albertans are passionate about their pride and respect towards our veterans and military community. I have seen it first-hand in the village of Griesbach in the past few months, where streets have been renamed after former military pilots and monuments erected to commemorate the RCAF and the iconic poem written by Lieutenant Colonel John McCrae.

To the men and women that are here today representing the military: we sincerely thank you and your families for the sacrifices that you make. To those who have paid the unfortunate sacrifice: you will not be forgotten. This November 11 and every day of the year, let us remember.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

UN Climate Summit

Mr. Jean: For 65,000 Albertans who lost their jobs this year, their number one priority is getting back to work. For the Premier her number one priority, with the federal government, is travelling to Paris, not pipelines, not protecting Alberta's energy sector, but how to make Alberta look the most fashionable when cabinet steps out of their 747 in Paris. Albertans losing their jobs are looking at the priorities of this government, and they're shaking and scratching their heads. To the Premier: why is she more worried about Paris than fighting for jobs right here at home in Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course we sympathize with anyone who is looking for work right now, and we're working hard to make sure that our products are attractive to markets internationally. We will open market access by making Alberta an attractive partner with a responsive and responsible energy sector and a plan to handle climate change. That's a big part of it. Of course, going to Paris with a responsible plan will help us increase markets and therefore increase jobs.

Mr. Jean: The Premier told Albertans that she wants to go to Paris to tell the truth. Well, the truth is that eastern politicians get more of the oil from dictatorships than from Alberta. Canada has the best environmental performance and human rights record of the world's top ten oil reserve countries. Here in Alberta we have achieved a remarkable 30 per cent reduction in per-barrel emissions since 1990. To the Premier: why won't she go tell the world this story, the truth, instead of treating us like embarrassing cousins?

Ms Hoffman: The Premier and our government are working very hard to make sure that we have a government that makes us all proud in Alberta. Part of that is acknowledging that climate change is a reality and that we have a role to play in it. I am very proud. I know the Energy minister has been working diligently to make sure that we are ready to move on a number of initiatives that will make all of us proud and therefore make our product even more marketable around the world.

Mr. Jean: It's very clear that the Premier feels she needs to apologize for Alberta. The NDP have already taken $800 million in new taxes from industry. The NDP's own climate panel is pushing for a carbon tax to be paid by every single Albertan. That will raise the price of everything. But leadership starts from the top. Surely, the Premier understands the optics of ministers travelling in large gas-guzzling entourages. What steps is the Premier personally taking to show that she is willing to share in the pain that Albertans now feel?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to actually answer a question about climate change from the Official Opposition for the first time in 17 days. I have to assume that the silence coming from the Official Opposition on the topic of climate change can only be because they either don't understand the science of climate change or don't care about the science of climate change.

The Speaker: Second question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Public Access to Executive Council Members

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every single day I hear from stakeholders who can't get meetings with ministers. Businesses, charities, community groups, agencies of government: they're all scrambling to get the attention of cabinet, but on the NDP website we can find out that for $250 a person they can join the Premier and cabinet and "discuss issues facing the province that are important." Using cabinet for political fundraising is unacceptable, to say the least. Will the Premier today commit to changing the law to make this action completely illegal?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I know that it's not unlikely for any party to have events and, of course, advise people about who will be attending these events. I think it makes good sense. I'm sure the member opposite, when he was part of the federal government, also was at events and that that was part of the conversation. I think this question has nothing to do with government policy and, instead, is intended to try to talk about something that actually doesn't have anything to do with a responsive government. We've been working really hard to make sure that we increase access to the actual people of Alberta, not just lobbyists.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you. The answer would be no. I did not do that.

Mr. Speaker, when the Premier was a member of the opposition, she understood that it was wrong for governing parties to use the Premier's office and access to ministers as a fundraising tool. It borders on influence peddling and selling access. Everyone knows it's wrong. Under federal law it would be a clear violation. The laws in Alberta are not as strong as they should be. Will the Premier call the Ethics Commissioner to investigate this matter, or will she leave it up to us?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to take the member's encouragement under advisement. As well, we have a committee that we've established around renewing democracy. It's an all-party committee. These are the types of issues that are certainly more than appropriate to be discussed at the committee level and that we can all move collaboratively on should the committee make those recommendations in the future.

Thank you.

Mr. Jean: When the Government House Leader was the leader of the NDP, he rose in his place and called out the Stelmach government for selling access to pay off campaign debts. In 2007 the current Government House Leader actually wrote to the Ethics Commissioner demanding and getting – it’s so hard, Mr. Speaker, because I can’t believe this is happening – an investigation into a case that is just about exactly the same as this one. Tonight we will find out if the NDP is joining the PCs in having campaign debts. Maybe that’s why they’re skirting the law. Will the Government House Leader once again write . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to categorically reject the assertion that the fundraiser is selling access to government ministers. It’s an opportunity to meet all members of the NDP caucus, including the Premier and all members of Executive Council. It is nothing more than that. It’s not an attempt to sell access in any way, so it’s entirely different in this case.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2007 the now Government House Leader got the Ethics Commissioner to investigate the Stelmach government for selling access to cabinet. Let me quote from a January 2007 news story. “The Premier is actually offering to listen to people’s concerns for money. And he’s paid by the taxpayers to do that, and so to charge on top of it is unacceptable.” The Ethics Commissioner agreed with him. Private access to decision-makers is wrong. Why is this cabinet asking Albertans to pay for the chance to discuss provincial issues?

Mr. Mason: The answer, Mr. Speaker, is clear. It is not.

Mr. Nixon: In 2007 the government cancelled a fundraiser, that was sold out, for the Premier and cabinet. That allowed the Ethics Commissioner to say that the ethics rules hadn’t been violated because the event was cancelled and all money was refunded. The Ethics Commissioner, though, was clear that the event violated provincial law, and as a result, the PCs stopped calling their events Premier’s dinners. What the NDP is doing with this fundraiser is wrong. Will the Premier cancel this event and commit to never doing it again?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much to the hon. member for the question. I understand that there was an error made by the party in describing the fundraising event that the member has raised. That error is being fixed. The allegations made by the member suggest that there was an untoward intention. That is simply not the case. I believe our party’s Provincial Secretary will have more to say about this. But on behalf of our party I sincerely apologize for a mistake that was made and the impression that it has created. Our government is committed to being open and accountable. As we’ve said to Albertans, when a mistake is made, we’ll . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, more recently the issue of selling access and trading on a government role came up again. In 2012 Gary Mar tried to hold a fundraiser using his government job as a sweetener. The NDP were livid.

Speaker’s Ruling Referring to a Nonmember

The Speaker: I would seek the guidance of the table; however, I’ve heard an individual’s, a previous member’s, name mentioned who’s not in the House to defend it. I trust that you would avoid using the names of individuals who are not in the House.

Mr. Nixon: It wasn’t a member.

The Speaker: It’s my understanding that, in fact, it does not just apply to members. It may also apply to other individuals. With respect, I would appreciate your avoiding that. Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Sounds good, Mr. Speaker.

2:00 Public Access to Executive Council Members (continued)

Mr. Nixon: Let me once again quote the Government House Leader: I think the important principle here is that you don’t trade on government jobs to raise money for political parties. Mr. Speaker, I couldn’t agree more, but I guess principles go out the window when you form government. Will the Premier cancel this event and apologize to Albertans?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for pointing out the misrepresentation. I believe our party’s provincial secretary will have more to say about this on behalf of our party, but I sincerely want to apologize for any mistaken impression that has been created. Our government is committed to being open and accountable, and as we’ve said to Albertans, when a mistake is made, we’ll be up front about it, and that’s what we’re doing today. Thank you for drawing attention, and we will clarify the actual event.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Progressive Conservative opposition.

Job Creation and Retention

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When asked yesterday in the House which industries the Premier would support, she said her “government is not in the business of picking winners and losers.” Alberta’s biggest industries include agriculture, forestry, tourism, and energy. We are not asking to pick winners; we just want the Premier to start picking Alberta. Will you, Premier, create policy that picks Alberta industries and Albertans as winners rather than other places in the world, please?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. We’re absolutely committed to building jobs. That’s one of the reasons why in the actual election we ran on a job-creation strategy that would build Alberta jobs right here, and that’s what people voted for. We are very committed to making sure that we continue to diversify the economy. Industry leaders from Alberta asked us to create a one-stop shop. That’s why we created a ministry for economic diversification, and we’re committed to moving forward with that direction and supporting Albertans.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, yesterday at a media conference the Premier barely used the word “pipeline” and only then in reference to concern for Canada. Now, as elected members we're all proud Canadians, but we are elected to work for Alberta. Premier, will you please start to remember Alberta and Albertans in your plans to get a pipeline for this province? Please, Premier.

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We are absolutely committed to working to make sure that we have a well-respected industry. That's why we're moving on making sure that we can go to Paris with our heads held high. We are making sure that there are no excuses that can be made around why people don't want to be able to transport Alberta products, and that's definitely a big part of that. I'm really proud of the fact that during the summer the Premier met with all of the Premiers, and they committed to making sure that we can continue to move our product to open waters without undue drama. We're making a number of efforts along that way and will continue to do so.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, next week the Premier is going to Toronto. Next month the Premier is going to Paris and is now busy, I presume, preparing climate change policy to impress people everywhere in the world except Alberta. To the Premier: when are you going to make Albertans your focus? When are you going to try to impress Albertans with your policies and keep businesses and jobs right here? Thousands of livelihoods depend upon it.

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the hon. member for his question. I do find it interesting that for many years when his party was in power they did nothing as far as having a one-stop shop for business and industry and continued to ignore them. Our government, on the other hand, has created a ministry and is looking at supporting Alberta small and medium-sized enterprises through the Alberta Enterprise Corporation, injecting $50 million to fund funds that will support businesses. We're also looking at improving our trade and making more markets available for export. Our government is . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Addiction Treatment Services for Women in Calgary

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Recovery Acres Society operates the very successful 1835 House addiction treatment facility in my constituency of Calgary-Elbow. This group has ambitious plans to open a new, badly needed facility in Calgary's northeast then repurpose 1835 House as an in-patient facility to help women overcome addiction. To the Minister of Health. I know you met with Recovery Acres this summer to discuss their project. Is this an approved project in this year's capital plan?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I do, too, need to commend the work that's happening at Recovery Acres. We know how devastating addictions can be for families, and they're definitely creating new opportunities for a new life in the community. In terms of previous commitments that were made by the former government, I understand why Recovery Acres is very hopeful that they'll be in the capital plan. I want to make sure that we're proceeding with due diligence in making those decisions, and I will be happy to update the House and Recovery Acres at a time that is most appropriate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, it is a good project. It shouldn't matter who came up with it in the first place. It's an important project and should move ahead. Now, there is some urgency here. Recovery Acres has raised over $2 million in private donations and has commitments for an additional $5 million and has secured a development permit and land based on commitments made by the previous government to provide the matching $7 million they need to complete this important project. These permits expire on November 28 this year. Will you commit to making a decision before that date?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I did meet personally with representatives from Recovery Acres. We are continuing to discuss with them the perceived urgency. I do want to say that permits can be renewed if necessary. I understand why their desire would be to have a decision before the end of the month, but I think it's important that we do our due diligence and make sure that projects aren't decided as one-offs but that the system is going to best meet the needs of all Albertans around addictions and mental health.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, with respect, it's not perceived urgency; it's actual urgency. We badly need these treatment spaces in Calgary.

Now, I know your government takes women's issues very seriously, and for that you are genuinely to be commended. To the Minister Responsible for the Status of Women: in light of the fentanyl crisis and also to address the overall shortage of women's treatment spaces in Calgary, what is your ministry doing to support this important project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We are committed to addressing addictions and mental health issues and doing that throughout Alberta, and of course Calgary is an area in need, as are many other communities. Capital funding is one piece. We also want to make sure that before we say yes to capital funding, which is a one-time investment, we're able to provide ongoing operational funding. I understand the desire to move very quickly, but I want to make sure that I'm doing so with the financial realities in mind.

In terms of this year's budget we have $10 million for implementing the first recommendations of the mental health review, which are coming through at the end of this calendar year. Hopefully, we'll be able to do a number there, and then we'll continue to discuss additional initiatives after, in the next budget.

The Speaker: Thank you, Madam Minister.

Economic Development

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, my office and I hear from constituents on a frequent basis about the tough economic times in Alberta. They want our government to take action to stimulate economic growth and diversification to support job creation. They know that growing our economy is how we support the jobs that support all Albertan families. My question to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what action are you taking with Budget 2015 in order to support these much-needed jobs and growth?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the hon. member for her question. The Premier asked me to take on this role because our government knows, especially in challenging times like these, that we need to show leadership on diversifying our economy and partnering with businesses to create jobs to support families right across this province. I'm quite proud of the budget that the Finance minister tabled with all the different initiatives that our government is taking on in order to support the Alberta economy and further diversify.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that you announced in Calgary last week that your department is investing $50 million for the Alberta Enterprise Corporation to inject capital into the Alberta economy, to the same minister: will this mean picking winners and losers at the expense of letting the business community decide what is best?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government of Alberta is not in the business of picking winners and losers. We are providing the leadership and tools that businesses need to grow and create good jobs for all Albertans. That announcement of injecting $50 million into the Alberta Enterprise Corporation: it's a fund-to-fund model, meaning that the Alberta Enterprise Corporation funds funders that then decide which venture capital companies to invest in in the province of Alberta. This is a great way to stimulate the economy and as well to ensure that businesses have the supports they . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the AEC works to invest in venture capital funds and not directly in companies themselves, my question is to the same minister: what are you doing to ensure that all Albertan families benefit from this program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every dollar AEC invests in venture capital funds has resulted in more than $4 in investments in Alberta businesses, which creates good, mortgage-paying jobs for Albertans. I'm also quite happy that more than a thousand jobs have already been created in the province of Alberta. Our government is committed to providing leadership and the tools that businesses need to create jobs and grow our economy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Public School Boards' Association of Alberta

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Members of the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta unanimously passed a motion to raise an estimated $1.2 million to take Lakeland Catholic school board to court to stop them from opening a Catholic school in Lac La Biche. They will raise these funds by charging 90 cents per student. Imagine that: charging parents to take away badly needed schools in northern Alberta. Does this minister believe that school boards should be using government funds to go to court instead of the intended purpose of educating students?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. This is an issue that came up last night in estimates of supply, and certainly it's clear that – I had a call into the public school association, and they did not create a fund, and they are emphatically not saying that they would do so. That being said, it's very important that we do use public funds in the best way possible. I did acknowledge that I would pursue this issue further with the same MLA last night during supply.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have some motions passed by the PSBAA that do indeed substantiate what we're saying.

Considering the Northern Lights school division and the Public School Boards' Association are hiring lawyers and preparing a legal challenge and given that a school board trustee has said, "We are in the business of education and not in the business of suing," does this minister believe that taxpayer dollars should be used to challenge the right of Alberta families to choose a Catholic education?

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, one of the things we have as a responsibility in this House is to ensure that we have due process and to ensure that the public education system here in this province is defended in its broadest possible way. I would suggest that this member, by entering into this particular thing, is inflaming a situation that is sensitive already, and I would probably tell him that he is doing the wrong thing.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this association stated that they would send out special levy invoices to member school boards on October 31, 2015, to fund the estimated costs for a possible court case, will the minister intervene to ensure that education grants to school boards by his ministry for the education of students are used for that purpose?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, this member knows that we made the call during supply last night to make sure that, in fact, this fund was not created at all. We spoke to them at length. Certainly, as I said before, when we are in the process of good governance, it's very important – and this is a good teaching moment for this opposition member – that you don't inflame the situation. You don't make it worse by getting involved here in this public place. [interjections] It's a big mistake.

The Speaker: Hon. members.

A question from the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Ride-sharing Services

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, imagine, if you will, two airlines. One must be licensed, insured, and inspected on a regular basis; the other is free to operate outside of these protection measures, avoiding the costs associated with them. The second airline would seem to have a significant competitive advantage. Well, the introduction of ride-sharing in the market may create this scenario for Alberta taxi drivers. To the Minister of Finance: are you committed to looking at ride-sharing services and making sure that the drivers follow the same or similar rules as taxi drivers, at least getting insurance, inspections, criminal checks, regulatory standards?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to take the hon. member's question. One of the things that we're looking at is ensuring that the public is safe. That's the first thing that we need to do. So we need to make sure that anyone offering a car for hire, whether they're a taxi driver or part of a ride-sharing service, has the same level of insurance, training, and so on. There are a number of issues that we're working on. We're certainly in contact and having discussions with the major municipalities that have their own taxi commissions or some sort of regulated taxi system.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. I know that you are or were a professional driver, as I understand it, at some point in your life. Have you talked to taxi drivers and other professional drivers, and what can you share with the House about the advice that you have received from them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, yes, you do want to hang on to your licence, you know, just in case, in politics. But I can tell the hon. member that I have met with taxi drivers and taxi companies on a number of occasions and that we have an interdepartmental committee that is studying the issue and coming up with recommendations. As I said, the primary and most important thing is to protect the public's safety.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. Albertans want ride-sharing services, and we think that they should have choice, too. But they also want to be safe and know that they'll be protected when they're using the services. Will you commit to working with Alberta municipalities to help develop a set of rules and regulations that will ensure a safe experience for users and a level playing field for everybody in the business?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for the question. That is exactly what we plan to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Grande Prairie Hospital

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we talked about the Grande Prairie hospital. When it was announced, nearly a decade ago, it was planned around the Peace Country's needs in 2025. Now we've learned from the Health minister that the construction date has been pushed back to 2019. This project is having core services cut to compensate for the massive cost overruns. To the Health minister: is it fair that the people of the Peace Country should be paying the price for this government's mismanagement?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. What we've spelled out, when talking to local members of Grande Prairie and the media, is that rather than opening 10 ORs, we're going to be opening eight. That's still an increase of two from where the hospital is operating at currently. We're going to be making sure that everyone has an opportunity to access quality health care as opposed to what members opposite propose, which is cutting nurses and teachers, which they think will magically make front-line services better.

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, people in Grande Prairie are well aware of the many problems that plague the construction of this facility. Given that the rumour of reduced services at this hospital has indeed been confirmed, can the minister explain why, despite campaigning against cuts to front-line services, her government is now breaking its promises?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've mentioned in this House and publicly, there is going to be an expansion of services. They're opening a state-of-the-art education and health facility for Grande Prairie, which we're very proud of. In terms of maintaining good investment in health care and education, we ran on that. Members opposite ran on significant cuts to capital and to operating, and Albertans didn't vote for that. They voted for us.

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, we've heard too many times, with examples like Wainwright and now Grande Prairie, that the government has no problem cutting service in rural Alberta to find the money . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, again I need to remind you about the preambles. That was a preamble. I didn't hear "given that."

Please proceed. Thank you.

Mr. Loewen: Given that we've heard too many times, with examples like Wainwright and now Grande Prairie, that the government has no problem cutting service in rural Alberta to find the money to pay for bureaucrats and their mistakes, to the Health minister: how many more essential services in rural Alberta will be cut before Alberta Health Services figures out how to build a hospital on time and on budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the reasons why we're moving forward with such thoughtful planning is to make sure that when we make an announcement, Albertans can count on that. We're not going to be going and making announcements without knowing what's realistic. I want to remind all members that we are expanding the level of services to people in the Grande Prairie area. We are going to be having access to more quality health centres in Grande Prairie as opposed to proposing mass cuts, $9 billion of cuts, to infrastructure.

The Speaker: I think we're at Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Royalty Framework

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 2 of this year a ministerial order doubled the royalties for gravel. This one hundred per cent increase in royalties was disclosed to the Alberta Sand and Gravel Association but not to all industry clients. To many businesses' surprise they got a letter telling them to pay up in October on this substantial increase. To the Minister of Environment: why did the department fail to clearly communicate to the entire gravel industry back in April?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, there were a number of fees that were raised by the previous government, and there were a number of ways in which that was communicated. I'll certainly work with the hon. member to discuss with the stakeholders in his riding about what exactly happened there. I'm happy to follow up with him afterwards outside the House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry. The minister of environment had the chance to get rid of these increases. You need to own these charges. Given that Alberta businesses are hurting, they don't need these kind of surprises. Some businesses may have to lay off staff, go bankrupt as a result of these demands. This NDP government appears to be dead set on making business conditions in Alberta worse. Will the minister of environment rescind retroactive charges to those who were not given proper notice in April?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, there were a number of fee increases that came with the previous government's budget and a number of different initiatives that they undertook as part of their March budget. You know, the fact of the matter is that I am perfectly willing to work with this industry and perfectly willing to meet with them and try to undo some of the damage that was done by the previous government.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government seems to bungle any attempt to change royalty rates, I have serious concerns about the upcoming royalty review in the energy sector. The Finance minister is basing his budget off assumptions about royalties. This leads me to believe that the independent panel is playing into the government's pocket. Will this government admit that they are only happy with one answer from the royalty review – get higher rates – and that they are doing everything in their power to get that response?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. member that we are not factoring in any changes to royalties in this budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Aboriginal Relations

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like other areas of Alberta, many aboriginal communities are struggling with the explosion of fentanyl abuse. Just one example: the situation became dire in the Blood Tribe when it registered a 20th fatal overdose in just a 12-month period. The band declared a state of emergency, and AHS assisted by making the antidote available to its band and training 50 members to administer it. The band also launched an addiction crisis line. To the Minister of Aboriginal Relations: with respect, when are you going to implement this experience as a model to help other reserves who are looking for ways to deal with this very serious crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As we all know, fentanyl is a true tragedy currently in our society. A number of young people have died from this, and, you know, we are working with our partners in AHS and with police services. In fact, I just had meetings with the police chiefs yesterday to make sure that we're doing everything that we can about this. I had committed to the member in estimates to look into making naloxone more widely available on-reserve, and we will get back to him on that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier has directed her Aboriginal Relations minister to develop a comprehensive plan to implement UNDRIP and TRC, one would expect that Budget 2015 would reflect the government's emphasis on these monumental initiatives, and given that your ministry's budget is increasing by only 1.6 per cent in Budget 2015, can the minister please tell all of Alberta what specific aspects of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission report and the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples will you actually attend to during this budget year?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, of course, this government is committed to the implementation of the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. We have secured some funding to flow through to First Nations so that they are able to talk to us in those conversations as we develop strategies in terms of how best to go forward in consultation with our aboriginal partners. Those programs will flow through to the various departments in which they find themselves situated. In addition, one of the fundamental principles of the UN declaration is respect, and that we can implement for free.

Thank you.

Mr. Rodney: Given that in budget estimates for Aboriginal Relations yesterday I asked a series of questions truly in the spirit of collaborating and assisting with First Nations, Métis, and Inuit communities and individuals and given that I requested the minister to supply written answers for every member in this House so that they can share the information with all Albertans because it is the right thing to do and given that this is not just a file – as you know, this is serious set of issues affecting real-life people of all ages – please tell us, Minister: when will you table written answers to the questions that I asked in this week's estimates?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, as you know, we're all in the process of estimates, and the member did ask a number of questions. In fact, it was probably, well, a five-minute diatribe on the wonders of the previous government, and then he moved on to questions about this budget. We will be responding to those questions, as we are required to do, and we will be tabling those answers in the House, as we are required to do. Given that the UN declaration has, as a fundamental principle, respect, I think that the member's behaviour in the committee the other day demonstrates why his government was not able to implement his response. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Young Offender Centre in Calgary

Ms Luff: Mr. Speaker, the previous government was shutting the doors on the Calgary Young Offender Centre, with plans to ship youth to Edmonton instead. This government cancelled those plans and committed to keeping the centre open. Many of my Calgary colleagues in this House can likely attest to the number of calls that we received in our offices about this concern, and our constituents were very happy that real action was taken on this important issue. Will the Minister of Justice detail for us in this House why the . . .

The Speaker: A little faster, hon. Member, a little faster.
The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for this critical question. As we know, the Young Offender Centre involves a lot of rehabilitation and education, and we think that it is absolutely critical to keep young people, particularly vulnerable young people who have come into conflict with the law, near their families and communities, where they can have the support to make better decisions going forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. minister for the answer. Given that the previous government claimed it was closing the Calgary Young Offender Centre to save costs and given that this government has decided to keep it open, to the same minister: what are the implications of this decision on our budget?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The cost of keeping the Calgary Young Offender Centre open was approximately $3 million. We think that that is an extremely small price to pay to ensure that these young people can stay close to their communities and have the support they need from their families to make better choices going forward so that they can become productive members of our society.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the minister. Given that the Calgary Young Offender Centre has unused space, to the same minister: how are we looking at using that space?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. member for the question. Right now the space is being used for training of Calgary Young Offender Centre personnel, but, of course, in this time of economic shortage we are examining every option on how we can use that facility going forward.

Thank you.

Rural Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, ever since being elected in 2012, I have fought for the changes necessary to eliminate the risk to the lives of Albertans caused by the government's inadequate and faulty system in rural ambulance service. The service change in 2007 to central dispatch, flexing of units from region to region, and a total lack of non-emergency transfer units all have led to years of unreliable service. Is the Minister of Health aware of these recognized long-term problems with rural ambulances and AHS, and what is she prepared to do about it this fall?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I do know that the member has been a long-time advocate for making sure that Albertans in rural communities have access to quality health care, and that is certainly a priority of ours. That's one of the reasons we have committed to providing stable health care funding: for our citizens, no matter where they live, to be able to access front-line health care services. One of the reasons why we're doing this is because we were elected to make sure we have a supported health and education system. Members opposite ran on significant cuts, and they were not.

Mr. Stier: Well, while the minister may not necessarily have noticed these particular problems with this faulty system, now front-line EMS workers are paying the price. Given that recently we've learned about EMS workers having their EMS licences revoked because of PTSD and other health issues directly related to problems in this system, does the minister understand that after years of push towards centralization, absolutely nothing has changed? We still have high wait times, risk to public lives, high levels of stress for front-line workers. What is she going to do about it?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We are of course committed to making sure we have a strong, vibrant front-line service for Albertans, and one of the ways we're doing that is by ensuring that we have a stable commitment in health funding as opposed to cutting billions of dollars as has been proposed from members opposite. We're working really hard to make sure that they can have stability and confidence in the government investing in their industry and their access.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's obvious that the minister is a big fan of leaving things as they are and centralization, but given that years of pushing towards centralization has only really resulted in high wait times and even areas of the province frequently going without ambulance coverage, will the minister recognize this system is faulty and return the system to the proven, reliable, local, regional control system of the past?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There were two plans laid out for the public during the election. One was about creating more chaos and decentralizing Alberta Health Services, that would rely on a bunch of people . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: I can't hear the question that's been asked by the opposition. As the Speaker of this Assembly, I would appreciate the opportunity to hear the answer and the question.

Thank you.

Please proceed.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two plans were laid out during the election. One was to decentralize after many years of organizing, reorganizing, disorganizing, and one was about creating stability in the system. One of the reasons why we moved forward with the plan we did is because Albertans elected us, not the members opposite.

Economic Diversification

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, in question period on Tuesday the Minister of Economic Development and Trade said: "the previous government, that for years neglected diversifying the Alberta economy." Wow. That stung, but as a veterinarian I've been kicked, bitten, scratched, trampled, urinated, defecated, and vomited upon by various creatures. So, Minister, do your worst. In 1985 36 per cent of Alberta's economy was based on oil and gas. By 2012 that number stood at 28 per cent. Minister, if what you said on Tuesday had even a passing and platonic relationship with veracity . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again I'll remind the member that it was this government that created a ministry solely focused on diversifying our economy and enhancing our trade. Part of the reason why, unfortunately, right now we're hearing of so many layoffs in the province is because of our overreliance on one single sector. It is our intention to work within the sector to look at value-added opportunities but also to diversify our province and strengthen our other sectors.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, another statement that has a passing and platonic relationship with veracity. You, sir, are the 10th Minister of Economic Development and Trade, and in fact there were 27 years of the past government that had a Ministry of Economic Development and Trade. During that time biotechnology grew to a $1 billion-a-year industry, employing over 4,600 Albertans; canola production went from 20,000 tonnes to 20 million tonnes and the . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, is there a question in there somewhere? Hon. member, could I hear the question?

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, indeed. The question was: with all of those industries growing during that period of time, how do you explain the increases, Minister?

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd love to ask the member why they mothballed this ministry back in 2006. Businesses and industry have been asking for a one-stop shop. They've been asking for a government that is truly listening to them and willing to put the resources in to provide that one-stop shop and focus as an entryway into government. Quite frankly, what I've heard from the business community already was that the PCs' approach to the economy lacked focus, it lacked strategy, and essentially was willy-nilly. Our government is focused on working with job creators.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, the sad truth is that this minister occupies the one and only job that has been created by his ministry.

Given that he's so fixated on trashing the past government that he fails to recognize the great strides that have been made in the Alberta diversification story and insults the efforts of the thousands of Albertans who have worked hard to write that story, Minister, when will you apologize to biotechnology, apologize . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, I am still very much a novice at this; however, I know that this House is far more capable of lowering the tone and the volume that is in the room, and I trust it will change back to what I know you're each capable of. So, please – please – out of respect for this House, for what you all believe in, and for our guests, tone it down a bit. Please.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, please proceed.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's great to see the hon. member almost as excited as I am about this new ministry.

The Speaker: You've had your time, hon. minister. We're moving on.

The Speaker: The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Commodity Producers

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to salute the men and women who have just completed a provincial megaproject, men and women who have toiled many long hours and at times were concerned whether or not they would be able to finish the project in time. Thankfully, most are now able to proclaim that they have successfully completed the harvest of 2015.

Alberta farmers faced many challenges this growing season, but I'm proud to say that once again they've done a magnificent job growing many diverse crops and doing their part to feed the world. Although the focus is so often on the harvest activity on farms, many peripheral industries and individuals are required to get the harvest done and to market: equipment manufacturing and maintenance; the energy industry providing fuel and fertilizer; businesses necessary to process and market the crop; transportation, providing the roads and rail necessary to deliver the product; and many more. In all of this it is important to recognize that it will be that bushel of wheat, barley, or canola paying the bills, paying for the jobs in all of these industries.

We as legislators need to recognize the role we play in maintaining a globally competitive and viable agricultural sector. Any extra cost that public policy adds is paid for by the products we produce and sell. Mr. Speaker, the jobs Albertans need will be paid for by that bushel of wheat or canola, by that calf, by that pig, by that chicken, by that tree, by that barrel of oil. While this current government doesn't seem to understand that, on this side of the House we stand with Alberta producers and the important work they do. We know that the commodities we harvest, renewables and nonrenewables, create the jobs and services Albertans need. We have a huge responsibility to get it right so that our children and grandchildren can enjoy the same quality of life we have.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Physician-assisted Dying

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In February this year the Supreme Court of Canada handed down the landmark ruling which struck down the Criminal Code's prohibition on physician-assisted dying. Most Canadians, when suffering from a debilitating and incurable or even terminal disease, are looking for regulations and control around their last days. In order to give Parliament time to craft new rules and regulations to govern this practice, the Supreme Court delayed enforcement of the ruling until February next year. Sadly, a lack of political will in the federal campaign has left only a few months to work on new regulations. It's going to be up to the provinces to come up with guidelines for physician-assisted dying. Other jurisdictions and organizations have pushed ahead. In Quebec, for example, they've passed an assisted dying law and are poised to bring it into force in the new year. The College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta has surveyed its members, and a draft advice document is available. What is still needed in Alberta is public engagement in these sensitive, ethical, legal, and medical issues.

What checks and balances are needed? How will we ensure that individuals are properly informed, of sound mind, and free to make the decision, their last decision in life? How will we ensure the right of physicians who choose not to be part of assisted dying, that they have that right? The Supreme Court has made it clear Canadians can have more control over their dying, but the rest is up to us. Assisted dying is no light subject. Behind every case is a unique, personal decision, the most difficult decision that many will face. We must learn from the experiences of other jurisdictions and respect the rights of all as we create this new policy.

I would urge our Minister of Health and this Legislature to take hold and lead on this issue, and I urge all Albertans to write . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Violence against Sikhs in India

Mr. Loyola: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to stand in solidarity with the members of the Sikh community here in Alberta and across the world as we mark the 31st anniversary of the 1984 Sikh genocide, in which Sikh children, women, and men were targeted and killed in an organized campaign across India. According to former Indian Supreme Court Justice G.T. Nanavati, “The systemic manner in which the Sikhs were thus killed indicate that the attacks on them were organized.”

Let us also take a moment to recognize those who at serious risk to themselves and their families provided refuge and assistance to their Sikh neighbours during these horrific events.

The Alberta NDP and I stand against all extrajudicial killings and in solidarity with the Sikh community and independent human rights organizations, who have waited far too long for answers, and in solidarity as well with the victims and the survivors of 1984, who have waited too long for recognition of their plight and frustration. The truth must be brought to light, and those guilty must be brought to justice.

This is particularly important in light of the increasing tensions in Punjab today following the deaths of two peaceful protestors, allegedly at the hands of security forces. Rehabilitation and support for the affected families must be prioritized while the actions of the police and allegations regarding the role of Congress members and the use of state resources in the attacks must be examined.

The struggle to recognize the dignity of the human person is the ultimate objective of observing the human rights of all. This government recognizes this fact both here at home and abroad. Justice and accountability are the obligations of a democratic state to its citizens. Let us be conscious that remembrance is the tie that binds us to our past as it guides us for the challenge of the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Greenmunch Ecostore

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Finance minister in the budget speech of October 27 stated: “We are a hopeful and optimistic people. We are entrepreneurial and enterprising. We are community-minded. We care about our neighbours. What we desire for ourselves, we wish for all. That is the Alberta way.”

Strathcona county has a very successful green routine program, with weekly pickup of recyclable materials including Styrofoam, plastics, metals, and all paper goods. The composting bins allow residents to put all food materials and compostable items for weekly pickup. The compost is then sold every spring by nonprofit organizations for fundraising.

A business called Greenmunch, located in my riding of Sherwood Park, was started by Phillip Jacobsen and his wife, Joy, in June of 2011. They started with a home office and have since moved to three different warehouse locations as sales have grown. Prior to starting Greenmunch, Phillip was the vice-president of research and development for an Edmonton-based business, designing high-tech consumer electronic products. But Phillip also desperately wanted to work on some projects that had more social value. For several years his family had a large urban organic garden. This required generating large amounts of compost as the main source of fertilizer. After some research he realized that there were few companies offering compostable disposable products.

Greenmunch.ca is an online ecostore offering earth-friendly and sustainable products. They specialize in compostable dinnerware, food packaging, and special event supplies, including weddings. They are also the only online retailer for many of the products they offer. They distribute to wholesale customers as well as to individuals, and they have a strong consumer base throughout Canada, the U.S., Europe, and Australia. Their goal is to promote the increased awareness and use of compostable and reusable products.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

In Flanders Fields Poem Centennial

Mr. Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On November 11 we take time to recognize the contribution all of our veterans have made and honour those who made the ultimate sacrifice on behalf of Canada. This year’s Remembrance Day is especially significant as it marks the 100th anniversary of In Flanders Fields, written in 1915 by Lieutenant Colonel John McCrae, a soldier and surgeon during the First World War. It is believed that McCrae’s inspiration for the poem came from the death of his friend Lieutenant Alexis Helmer, who served in the same unit. McCrae was asked to conduct the burial service for Alexis because the chaplain had been called away on duty that evening. It is believed that later that evening, after the burial, John began to draft In Flanders Fields.

When I was in high school, I had the great fortune of travelling to Europe with my public school to visit various sites that were significant to Canada throughout our history, including Vimy Ridge, the St. Julien Canadian war memorial, several Canadian war cemeteries across the continent as well as Flanders and the fortification where McCrae wrote his poem.

Reading and learning In Flanders Fields is a proud tradition for Canada’s youth. This November I will be joining the students of Robert Thirsk high school for their Remembrance Day service. So many young women and men gave the ultimate sacrifice so that today’s youth can live in peace, and I will no doubt hear In Flanders Fields read proudly by the students of Robert Thirsk high school.

Lest we forget. Je me souviens.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Bill 5Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to introduce Bill 5, the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act.

Bill 5 significantly expands Alberta's existing public-sector compensation disclosure. It also follows through on our promise to increase transparency in our public sector. Agencies, boards, and commissions, including postsecondary institutions and Alberta Health Services, will be required to disclose the annual salaries of their employees at a threshold greater than $125,000, which includes overtime. Compensation will be disclosed for the board members of those agencies, boards, and commissions with no threshold limit.

This bill also requires disclosure from entities like Covenant Health and the independent offices of the Legislature. Further, it allows for regulation on the disclosure of physician compensation by government and other health entities. In addition, Mr. Speaker, this bill enables municipalities and school boards to disclose the names and salaries of paid employees if they wish to do so.

The bill takes the existing Treasury Board directive regarding disclosure for government of Alberta employees and moves that role into the act, maintaining the pre-existing threshold. Mr. Speaker, all thresholds will be annually adjusted for inflation.

Pending passage of the bill, my ministry will consult with those groups affected by the legislation to decide how best to implement the act through regulations. This government is committed to helping ensure that Albertans know how public money is spent. This is another important step towards a more open government in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Bill 204Residential Tenancies (Safer Spaces for Victims of Domestic Violence) Amendment Act, 2015

Ms Drever: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request leave, in this month that marks Family Violence Prevention Month, to introduce my private member's bill, the Residential Tenancies (Safer Spaces for Victims of Domestic Violence) Amendment Act, 2015.

This bill seeks to empower and support survivors of violence by removing some of the barriers to leaving an unsafe home environment. This bill will give survivors a choice in breaking the cycle of violence inside and outside the home. We have a problem here in Alberta when it comes to the rates of domestic violence, reported and unreported. Alberta cities rank as some of the most challenging places for women to live, and the rates of domestic violence in Alberta are rising in some places and remain stagnant in others. Instead of moving forward, we as a province are moving backwards. Too often victims of violence stay silent. They don't speak out because they don't feel safe.

The intention of my private member's bill is to give them a tool, a way to support those who need to leave an unsafe environment because of violence or the threat of violence. All across Alberta organizations and agencies are tirelessly working to support survivors and provide ways to leave violence safely. We can support these efforts through this amendment. We know that it often takes someone five to seven attempts to leave a violent environment before they can break the cycle. When that step is taken, there are supports available, but so often fear takes over. That fear forces people into silence.

I know that we could do better . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think what I have heard would normally take place within the confines of debate. I would urge the member to introduce the motion and allow the House to vote on it. I would ask members on a go-forward basis that we practise that in the future.

[Motion carried; Bill 204 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I referred to a tabling of a document earlier in question period. I believe I needed five copies of it, so I am tabling this document.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling the appropriate amount of copies of a document from Rick Massini, who is the first vice-president of the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta. He is quoted in here as saying: "The [PSBAA] is committed to providing quality Public Education to Alberta's students. The Association is not engaged in any litigation to stop Catholic Education. The PSBAA is not engaged in any litigation at all!"

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Larivee, Minister of Municipal Affairs and Minister of Service Alberta, the Capital Region Board 2014-15 annual report; pursuant to the Vital Statistics Act the Alberta vital statistics annual review 2013; pursuant to the Safety Codes Act the Safety Codes Council annual report 2014; pursuant to the Special Areas Act the special areas trust account financial statements dated December 31, 2014; pursuant to the Government Organization Act the Alberta Boilers Safety Association annual report 2014 dated October 31, 2014; Alberta Elevating Devices and Amusement Rides Safety Association 2014-2015 annual report; the authorized accredited agency summary 2013-2014.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Ceci, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, pursuant to the Results-based Budgeting Act the results-based budgeting report to Albertans dated November 2015.

Orders of the DayGovernment Motions*Amendments to Standing Orders

23. Ms Phillips moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
- A. Be it resolved that the standing orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta effective November 18, 2014, be amended as follows:
1. The heading preceding Standing Order 78.1 is amended by striking out "Legislative Policy".
 2. The heading preceding Standing Order 78.3 and Standing Order 78.3(1) are struck out and the following is substituted:
Report of committee on a Bill

78.3(1) A standing or special committee to which a Bill has been referred by the Assembly after second reading shall be empowered to report the same with or without amendments or to report that the Bill not proceed.

3. The heading preceding Standing Order 78.4 is amended by striking out "Legislative Policy".
4. The following Standing Orders are amended by striking out "Legislative Policy Committee" wherever it occurs and substituting "standing or special committee":
 - (a) 8(7)(c);
 - (b) 52.02;
 - (c) 74.1(1);
 - (d) 74.2(1);
 - (e) 78.1(1);
 - (f) 78.2(1).

B. And be it further resolved that these amendments come into force on passage.

The Speaker: My apologies to the House. Is there anyone who would like to speak to Motion 23? Is that where the House is at? Yes. Okay.

The House leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise. We get to do a number of government motions this afternoon, which, as you know, makes government House leaders and deputy House leaders and opposition House leaders very excited about the nuances of procedure in this House. I will spend just a little bit of time today talking briefly about a couple of motions.

Motion 23. Essentially, Mr. Speaker, the motion allows any bill to be referred to any committee of the Assembly. I just wanted to make sure for the record's sake that the Wildrose Official Opposition has at length talked about the need for us to be referring legislation to policy committees and doing it more regularly. So I'm pleased to see the government take the steps that will allow that to happen. You know, in an absolutely perfect world the motion would read that all legislation would be referred to a legislative committee, but we haven't quite gotten there yet.

In the name of co-operation, that we've seen, perhaps, not during question period but outside of question period, around some of these issues, I just wanted to commend the government briefly on taking this step and encourage them to continue to consider some of our proposals. That would include sending even more legislation through to committee so that the House can work better so that Albertans can have the opportunity to provide more input and feedback to those committees and so that we can receive expert testimony about some very difficult and technical pieces of legislation, that I look forward to seeing from the government later in the session.

The Speaker: The hon. House leader makes a remark. I do not have the privilege of sitting through committees, so I have yet to experience that harmonious process that you address. I hope you might share it in the Assembly, all of you, with me, as well, so I could enjoy that.

Is there an hon. member to speak? The hon. member, please.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Is there any member other than the sponsor of the legislation who would like to speak? You get an opportunity to close debate.

There are no other members?

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll rise to close debate. I'm grateful for the co-operation on this matter. We did not know that we could not send it to the special committee for consideration. We had no intention of killing this bill. So that's what we're going to do is to send it to that committee for its consideration.

I thank the hon. members for their co-operation in this matter. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Government Motion 23 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and Status of Women.

Bill 203

24. Ms Phillips moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly rescind its approval of amendment A1 to the motion for second reading of Bill 203, Election (Restrictions on Government Advertising) Amendment Act, 2015, so that the bill retains its place at second reading on the Order Paper with 68 minutes of time for debate remaining.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, Government Motion 24 is rescinding approval of the decision made on Bill 203, to which I just spoke, so that we can take Bill 203 and ensure that it retains its place at second reading on the Order Paper, with 68 minutes of time for debate remaining, and that that bill might be given its due at the special committee.

The Speaker: Does anyone wish to speak to Government Motion 24? The hon. House leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Government Motion 24 to rescind the amendment to Bill 203, that at the time effectively killed the bill of my hon. colleague from Drumheller-Stettler in his attempt and the many members in the House that supported his attempt to restore ethical practices to the government of Alberta. The Wildrose caucus was happy to hear that the NDP had put together a plan to bring back Bill 203 for further discussion and had hoped that that discussion could take place in this Assembly, not only at committee, and that we could move forward quickly on this important legislation.

Now, having said that, this side of the House is committed to taking due process when it comes to reviewing legislation and can sympathize as to why they would want to send this bill to committee as well. We were disappointed with the actions taken by the government last week that essentially stifled the continuation of debate specifically on the legislation. While we recognized at that time that they wanted to take the general topic to committee, it was disappointing to see the bill killed on the Order Paper.

While we're pleased to see the government is now choosing to try and err on the side of caution when it comes to their intent, we are a bit concerned about the pattern that we see being created when it comes to the Assembly making a decision and then backtracking, or reversing, that decision. I think that you have to do a significant amount of research to find situations where the government has made a decision and then totally reversed that decision, particularly when we speak about private members' business and the business of the Assembly and the members of the Assembly. We are concerned about reversing a decision because of the precedent that it sets. Perhaps the opposition passes an amendment while many government members weren't in the House, and then the next day the government comes back to the House and says: oh, by the way, we rescind the decision of the Assembly.

So there is some reservation around some of the precedent that it sets, and we did ask a number of questions as to whether or not this motion would, in fact, even be in order. I say that as a word of caution, but we do appreciate the decision of the government to try and make right this situation that, you know, was mishandled in terms of the process that had been communicated to us.

I'd just like to take a moment to remind the members of the government that this is the type of thing that we saw back in September after the NDP members of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices voted to give all senior independent officers of the Legislature a raise of 7.25 per cent and then went back on it. While we appreciate that sentiment to try and do what's right, I'd just like to take a moment to remind the government that not all suggestions that come from this side of the House are not positive ones.

I seem to recall being on the phone during that committee meeting, imploring the government not to go down the road of the 7.25 per cent pay raises, but at that time the government was not listening just like we saw on Monday night with the government having a knee-jerk reaction to the position of the opposition and then winding up here again. Let me be clear that we are pleased that we're back at this spot, but we hope that in the future we can have a House that works a little bit more effectively and efficiently in terms of being respectful of some of the things that the opposition says. It's not our desire solely to divert the government down the wrong path but, in fact, for Albertans to see our House and our Assembly work even better.

You know, this side of the House comes to work every day, just like that side of the House does, to ensure that Albertans are being well represented. All of us have a very similar goal for Alberta when it comes to hoping that the best happens for our province. Our visions may be different for the province, but good governance is the goal of both sides of this House, and we hope that we can see good governance, the acceptance of some opposition ideas so that we can all move forward quickly and that Albertans can get the governance that they expect.

In closing, I want to reiterate that while we have some concerns about how we got here, we're pleased that the government has done the right thing, introduced the motion, and we look forward to further debate on Monday evening, when the House returns, on Bill 203.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would like to speak to Government Motion 24?

I will then allow the minister to bring closure to the discussion.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to underline, it was never the government's intention to extinguish this piece of private members' business by referring it to the Ethics and Accountability Committee because, indeed, that is where this sort of business is being studied in a very rigorous fashion.

Now, there's no need to go over the top in order to hear ourselves speak, but when we talk about backtracking, there's really no nefarious plot here, Mr. Speaker. We're going to make sure that this piece of private members' legislation gets its due. At least we're not having to backtrack because we're having a public conversation about what time we go to work in the morning.

I would like to close debate on this matter and move forward within the spirit of co-operation.

[Government Motion 24 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Amendments to Standing Orders

19. Mr. Mason moved:
 - A. Be it resolved that the standing orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta effective November 18, 2014, be amended as follows:

 - (e) for the next 20 minutes, private members of the Government caucus and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister’s behalf, may speak, and
 - (f) if there is any time remaining, to the extent possible, the rotation outlined in clauses (b) to (e) shall apply with the speaking times set at 5 minutes as provided in Standing Order 59.02(1)(c).
 10. Standing Order 59.02(1)(b) is amended by adding “and 59.01(7)(a) to (e)” after “59.01(6)(a) to (e)”.
 - B. And be it further resolved that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing shall meet to review and assess the operation of the morning sittings of the Assembly brought into force by part A of this motion and report to the Assembly with its recommendations by October 27, 2016, and the committee may without leave of the Assembly meet during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued.
 - C. And be it further resolved that the amendments to Standing Order 3 in section 1 of part A of this motion shall take effect on November 24, 2015, and the remaining amendments in this motion shall come into force on passage.
 - A1. Mr. Cooper moved that Government Motion 19 be amended in part A, section 1, in Standing Order 3 as follows:
 - (a) in the proposed suborder (1) by striking out “9:00 a.m.” wherever it appears and substituting “10:00 a.m.”;
 - (b) in the proposed suborder (1.1) by striking out “9:00 a.m.” and substituting “10:00 a.m.”

[Adjourned debate October 28: Mr. Schmidt]

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure to rise on the amendment to Government Motion 19, that was brought forward by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I have to express my sincere disappointment with the member across the way today because he seems intent on restoring civility and order to this House and really took the wind out of my sails in unleashing a tongue-lashing on these guys for the unreasonable amendment that they proposed last week. So in that spirit of co-operation and civility I will temper my remarks, you know, with the thought that anything that I could say in this House wouldn’t be nearly as unkind as what has already been said in public about the motion’s amendment. I’m sure that the members across the way have felt the slings and arrows of public disapproval of their unwillingness to show up for work at 9 o’clock in the morning, and I encourage them to see where they’ve gone wrong and vote against their own amendment.

That’s all I have to say, and I’ll sit down.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to amendment A1?

Ms Phillips: Okay. Well, Mr. Speaker, I rise, then, to table a subamendment related to Tuesday mornings, that in the proposed suborder we would strike out “Tuesday: 9:00 a.m. – noon” and substitute “Tuesday: 10:00 a.m. – noon.”

The Speaker: I understand that a subamendment is being proposed. Could you make sure that the members have a copy of that?

I want to make sure that I’m in the appropriate order. There has been a subamendment introduced to A1, and we are in the throes of having discussion on the subamendment as per what has been distributed. We are calling this SA1.

Is there anybody who would like to speak to the subamendment?
The hon. minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is simply such that we might begin the business of this House at 1:30 on Mondays, that we might begin on Tuesdays at 10 a.m., as I understand the matter, in order to accommodate Public Accounts and their activities, and on Wednesday and Thursday at 9 a.m.

We believe that this is the responsible way to move forward the business of this House and ensure that we get through the business in a timely fashion and that this House begin to reflect in its business the new kinds of families and responsibilities that many members have outside this House, reducing the number of night sittings that we may have to engage in by going to work a little earlier in the morning.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a), hon. member?

Mr. Cooper: This is on the subamendment if that's what you're asking for.

The Speaker: Do you have any questions of the member?

Mr. Cooper: No; 29(2)(a) is not available.

An Hon. Member: It is available.

Mr. Cooper: Oh, it is available.

The Speaker: You have an opportunity, hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: My apologies. Yeah. Sure, I'll do it on this so that we can get to the voting aspect of it. Given that it is a time for questions or comments, I might just say that I appreciate the government's movement to make the change to 10 a.m. to accommodate PAC. I know that we weren't here a couple of days ago, so we support this decision to move the House to sit at 10 so that we can accommodate other committees of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Now are there any other members of the House who would like to speak to the subamendment itself?

Hearing none, I would ask to call the vote.

[Motion on subamendment SA1 carried]

The Speaker: I believe we are now back to amendment A1. On the amendment, would anyone like to speak? No.

I'll call the question, then, on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Speaker: We are now back to the actual motion as amended. An informative journey.

Are there any members who would wish to speak to the motion as amended? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to speak about the fundamental rules that govern this Legislature, the standing orders. We are in a unique position right now to set the proper foundation for our Legislature, and as members all across this Chamber know, there's been much back and forth about what is best when it comes to our Legislature and when it sits.

Should the amendment that I'm introducing today pass, any time our Legislature sits in the morning, unlimited all-night sittings cannot happen. This is important for two reasons. First, we'll make our Legislature more accountable to the people that we represent; second, it will make our Legislature more agreeable to being both a legislator and a parent.

Let me deal with the first point. Careful consideration of legislation in this Chamber is something that we all take very seriously. I have a responsibility to the people of Airdrie to be the best representative that I possibly can be, and that includes making informed votes on legislation that appears before the House. Part of making an informed vote is having the time to check back with constituents for feedback.

I am alarmed to see that this government will be ramming through six bills in just seven days during this sitting on topics that we don't know anything about yet. Think about that. After we finish estimates, we could on any day debate any of bills 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. We have yet to see any of these in detail. We have no idea whatsoever what will be in bills 6, 7, 8, or 9, but starting on November 24, we will have to debate, consider, and amend these bills. Six bills will be dealt with on November 24, 25, and 26 and then on December 1, 2, and 3. The speed with which this government wants to deal with these laws is risky.

If we don't pass my amendment, we could debate solidly and continuously from 10 a.m. on Tuesday the 24th to 4:30 p.m. on Thursday the 26th and then repeat the process the following week. This cycle will continue on and on through the next three and a half years should the government not concede that when we sit in the mornings, we should not have all-night sittings, that serve as an opportunity to ram through legislation. If there is one thing I know we need in this Legislature, it is to work on ways to improve our democratic system, not to diminish it.

On the second point, as a mom of two young kids I know that people all across Alberta need to make difficult choices on how best to find a work-life balance. Mr. Speaker, I am in no way saying that MLAs have it any more difficult than any other Albertan, but there are certain choices that we can make right here, right now that will create conditions to make our Legislature more representative of Alberta society. I never want being a mom or being a dad to be the reason some of Alberta's best minds don't run for office. In fact, I had long discussions with my family before I chose to run.

Mr. Speaker, we want the best and the brightest coming to this Legislature to debate matters of vital importance to our province, and adopting this amendment will put us on that path. Making a family-friendly atmosphere in the Legislature is something that this government has supported. The amendment that I am introducing will do just that.

It is at this time, Mr. Speaker, that I wish to move the following amendment to the motion.

The Speaker: We'll pause while the proposed amendment is distributed to the members.

Have all members received a copy of the amendment that we will identify as A2? We're prepared to proceed.

The hon. member.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Government Motion 19 be amended in part A, section 1, in Standing Order 3 by adding the following after the proposed suborder 1.1.: "(1.2) Notwithstanding Standing Order 4(1), on any day that the Assembly meets in the morning, the Assembly shall not meet for an evening sitting."

Mr. Speaker, here are the facts. This amendment will serve to set our Legislature on the right track, to do away with the ability to ram through legislation, to make our Legislature more family friendly, and to ensure that democracy is well served here in Alberta. I sincerely hope that all members of this Legislature will adopt this common-sense amendment.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), questions or observations for the Member for Airdrie. The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to this amendment and to . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, as you're speaking again, I might clarify: are there questions or observations?

3:30

Ms Phillips: Okay. I shall provide some comments on this amendment, Mr. Speaker. You know, from our point of view this is just the latest excuse for an opposition caucus that does not want to sit in the morning. We have a lot of young caucus members with kids, who want to reduce our need for evenings. That's why we moved to the mornings. We do occasionally need evenings, particularly because we seem to have an appetite for filibustering almost anything in this House. They even filibuster getting up and getting to work at 9 a.m. So we do have a number of pieces of work that we need to get very serious about. You know, the fact of the matter is that we may need evenings periodically.

The Speaker: Are there any other questions under 29(2)(a) for the Member for Airdrie?

Hearing none, is there anyone who wishes to speak to the proposed amendment, identified as A2? Her Majesty's Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise just to speak briefly to the amendment this afternoon. Let's be clear that it's the members of this Assembly that set the standing orders for our path forward, and we are setting the rules, if you will, of engagement today for an extended period of time.

The government of the day has spent some significant time talking about how they endeavour to make the Assembly more family friendly. I know that a number of you had the opportunity just last week to meet my three little ones. One of them was a little more excited to be in the gallery than the others. As a young dad – in fact, with the members of our caucus there are nine children under the age of 10 amongst just 22 members, so we, too, have a number of young families. If the goal that the government endeavours to accomplish is to limit night sittings and create an environment where young parents can spend time in the evenings with their kids, then we're providing an opportunity for that.

As the government knows, the opposition is the group that opened the door to sitting in the morning because we believe that in conjunction with a number of other factors we can provide a House that works much better in hours that are better for you, Mr. Speaker, our table officers, our pages, and the entire entity of the precinct area.

What the amendment does is that it provides some assurances that these changes in the standing orders aren't actually about the government's desire to expediate legislation as quickly as possible, giving them the opportunity to sit morning, afternoon, and all evening. I know that in the first session we had a couple of occasions where we were able to spend time together well into the evening, but what the government is proposing is total access to evenings. While many of you may have received assurances from members of your caucus that there is the desire to not sit evenings, the challenge is that there is nothing that prevents that from happening if we are taking the three sessions a day.

All that we're proposing is an opportunity to limit evening sittings on days where we have two other sessions, and if in fact this is about making the Assembly family friendly, I urge all members of the Assembly – and I spoke earlier this afternoon about ideas coming from the opposition, and we've seen now two or three times that not everything we suggest is a horrible, horrible idea. [interjections] I didn't say that most things we said are good; I didn't say that most things we said are bad. I said that not everything is a horrible idea even for the government, just like how the government will say things and not all of your ideas are good. I know it's hard to believe.

But the point is that we have this chance to set up the rules that will be respectful of all parents on both sides of the House, put in some parameters that will ensure that democracy is respected, that the government of the day won't be rushing through legislation and not allowing adequate time for consultation with our constituents, just like in the end of this session, when we're going to see a number of important bills passed in just a couple of days.

So I urge all members of the Assembly, before we have to backtrack on another decision, to accept the amendment to limit. It doesn't prevent the government from having access to evening sittings if there is a time when the opposition feels there is more need for robust debate, and it still provides that valve for the government to use. But what it does do is give an indication that the government is actually serious about making a family-friendly environment for all members of the House, not one that has a desire to expediate legislation in a way that we've never seen in the past.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) for the hon. Opposition House Leader? No questions or observations?

I'll recognize the Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. We've had the opportunity to discuss this amendment between House leaders on a couple of occasions, and we had agreed to give it consideration. But in the event that this were passed, it would be possible for the opposition, you know, then, to force an all-night sitting, and that's fine. That's a legitimate thing for the opposition to do if it feels very strongly with respect to something. Delay is one of the things that the opposition has at its disposal when they feel that something is fundamentally wrong about what the government is trying to do.

But let's consider this, Mr. Speaker. We've said – and we've been very clear all along – that we have no intention of going to night sittings unless we are forced to. If we extend the sitting hours in the morning, it should be more than enough to deal with government business, but if the opposition does decide to delay things, if it is deliberately holding up government business, then the government has no alternative but to extend the sitting hours to deal with these matters.

You know, we certainly in opposition did do that. We certainly did. When we felt that the government was very wrong and that the public needed to learn more about what they were trying to do, we would speak, and the government would continue to hold the session into the evening, and sometimes we went all night and into the next day. That was very rare, thank goodness. I used to prefer it more when I was a bit younger than I do now.

I just want to indicate that the government has always had the power to have unlimited extended sittings if it wanted. It could always go late at night if it didn't want to adjourn. But the fact of the matter is that unless the opposition is deliberately trying to delay the government's agenda, there's no need and the government doesn't do that, and we're not going to do that. We're not going to force night sittings unless the opposition is filibustering some bill. There may be some rare occasions, some rare exceptions to that, Mr. Speaker, but in general the only reason we would go at night is if we're faced with deliberate attempts.

This legislation is important, Mr. Speaker. There's important legislation that needs to be discussed, and there's a budget, and there are people that have to get paid in the government: our nurses, our teachers, all of the public employees. If we don't pass the budget by a certain day – we've only extended the funding to November 30, so the lights go off if we don't pass the budget in a timely fashion. The government must always retain that.

I want to just indicate that it's a little disingenuous on the part of the Official Opposition, the Wildrose opposition, to say that they're doing this on a family-friendly basis. I don't think that's the case at all, Mr. Speaker. What they want to do is restrict the ability of the government to get its agenda through and to enhance their ability to use delaying tactics.

There's nothing wrong with that, Mr. Speaker. That's a legitimate position for an opposition party to take, but it would be irresponsible of the government to accept that. It would be absolutely irresponsible. We need to have that safety valve in the event that the opposition plays games or in the event the opposition behaves irresponsibly, in order to make sure that the critical business, the legislation of the government, is fully debated and passed and that the budget of the province is passed so that we can continue to operate this government as the people of this province expect.

Mr. Speaker, I think the public's had more than enough of this debate about our working hours. All I can offer the opposition is the assurance that we are not routinely going to call night sittings in addition to mornings and afternoons. We are not going to do it. That is not our intention. They're going to have to accept that. They're going to have to live with it.

That's, I think, very important. We cannot give up the opportunity to deal with this under any pretense that this is something about being family friendly. We do want to be family friendly on this side, Mr. Speaker. We voted for the child care motion. Wildrose did not. We voted for morning sittings. It was originally a Wildrose idea, but then they filibustered it.

Mr. Speaker, there's no question here, in my view, who's family friendly and what side of the House those members are located on. We have a young, dynamic, gender-balanced, diverse caucus that is representative of the population of the province of Alberta. There are some archaic rules that go with this institution that were developed hundreds of years ago in the British Parliament and have not changed to keep up with modern society, and some of our members are providing good, good reasons why we should think about those things and modernize the institution so that it is family friendly and that it's not just a bunch of old men sitting in their rocking chairs making the rules. I can say that as one of them.

Mr. Speaker, I do encourage all members to defeat this motion. We want to have morning sittings. We want to have afternoon sittings. We do not want to have evening sittings unless – unless – the opposition puts us in a position where we have no choice. That's the bottom line. I urge all hon. members to vote against this amendment, and let's get onto the serious business that the people of Alberta elected us to this place to do.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) for the Government House Leader? The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The standing orders – and I am new to the House, so I'm trying to understand these proceedings better – from what I understand, create the policies that we govern ourselves by. The government has been in opposition for many, many years, so they understand what it means to be here, and I appreciate the members' comments on this. I guess my question is: if you were here now, would you be willing to allow this to go forward? Would you allow this extended sitting to go forward, knowing that you empower the government to be able to ram through as many bills as they want?

A smart man once said: do unto others as you would have them do unto you. I think that's good advice. I think that's something we need to think about in this debate because there's a possibility that you may not be there in three and a half years. If that is the case, would you want to empower whoever it is sitting in the government seat to have that power in the future?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. It's a good question: if the shoe was on the other foot, would we be taking the same position as the Wildrose? Well, I don't think so. If we were in opposition and the makeup of our caucus was as it is now that we're in government just a little smaller, then I think, you know, that there would be this imperative that we want to make this a place that's open and accessible. In fact, I think we've always had that view and have always fought for that.

But I think the hon. member is under a misapprehension, and that is that the government under the current rules doesn't have that power. But it does. That's what I tried to say in my remarks. The government, should it desire to do so, can trigger evening sittings, and it doesn't have to adjourn. The government can go all night if it wants to. If it really just wants to have more hours of sitting every day, every week, it already has the power to do that. It's a simple matter of not adjourning debate in the evening. You can go until 6 in the morning if you want, but the government doesn't do that. The previous government didn't do that. When we provoked them by a filibuster, they did it, and then they brought in another shift at 7 in the morning and kept on going, and we were ready to die.

An Hon. Member: I thought you were tougher than that.

Mr. Mason: Yeah, we were tougher than that. But, boy, it was pretty gruelling when they kept going until 11 o'clock in the morning.

But my point is simply this. The previous government did not abuse that unless the opposition was filibustering and trying to hold up the debate, and then they did it, okay? That is not going to change with this government. We are not going to hold night sittings on a regular basis. There may be a rare exception where we have to do it, but otherwise the only time we will do it is if the opposition is holding up the government's business.

That's a commitment. There's no change with respect to that capacity on the part of government, hon. member. That's my point.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. McIver: Oh, no.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), any member?

To the amendment itself, Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on this at the risk of being taunted, so get ready for it. I am going to try to provide what I believe is a little bit of clarity. We're arguing about when we work. Respectfully, all this talk about family friendly is hogwash. You know, this is a tough place to work, folks. There's really not much family friendly around here. You can try to pretend there is, but there isn't. We all signed up for the tour of duty, so we've got no one to blame but ourselves, right? No one to blame but ourselves. This is my second tour, so you might say: well, I really should know better.

But the fact is that most of the people in this House live in another place. For me, when I'm here, there's nothing family friendly about it. What is family friendly is going home to my wife. That's family friendly. So I'd just as soon work like a rented mule while I'm here, so I can get as much done as I can so that when I get home, if I get the odd hour off, I can spend it with my good wife, whom I love, and so far, the last time I checked, she said that she still loves me. Sorry, folks at home and folks here, but trying to pretend there's anything family friendly about this place: we're fooling ourselves. It's not how it is. Sorry.

I'll just repeat it because I think that's the main point. When I'm away from home, it's not family friendly. I don't know how many other people agree with that, but that's how I feel about it. The fact is that we're here to work, and I believe that most if not all of our caucus think we might as well be working all the time while we're here, to get as much done as possible so that we can get back home.

Honestly, on the suggestion that somebody made that we can finally get this Legislature to do business, well, Mr. Speaker, this Legislature has been doing business for a hundred years. People talk about how long our government was here, for 44 years, but this Legislature has been doing business a heck of a lot longer than that and doing it just fine, thank you very much. Not perfect but just fine. Any suggestion that somehow we're going to have this miraculous new ability to provide democracy in the purest, finest, best form is, once again, hogwash.

I'm prepared to work the shifts that are provided. To be clear, we have a set of standing orders, and they're working fine. I know the new government wants to change them. Great. You don't need to. I probably won't support it because I think the ones we've got are working fine.

But here's what I do know, Mr. Speaker. The ones that get the most votes get to make the decisions. That's how it works, you know. It was pretty convenient when we were on that side. It's less convenient on this side. That's the way it is. But that doesn't change the fact that the government of the day gets to set those working conditions. They always will because that is the very nature and I daresay definition of democracy. So we can ask, we can negotiate, we can beg skilfully, whatever we can do. But at the end of the day the government gets to decide when the House meets, when it starts and when it stops.

For me, if I'm going to be away from home and up here, I'd just as soon meet morning, noon, and night. My preference is actually what we're doing now. It's not that we don't work in the morning. For anybody who says that people don't work in the morning, that's hogwash, too, because that's when you get ready for your meetings in the afternoon. If the House starts meeting at 9 or 8 or 7 or 6 in the morning, the fact is that then you've got to get ready for those meetings the night before. It's just a matter of adjusting the schedule. Six of one, really, half a dozen of the other.

So I won't be supporting this. Whether anybody likes it or not, that's my version of what I think is true around here. While I don't like where the government is going, they won the election.

The Speaker: Hon. member, for both yourself and myself, your comments were directed to the amendment introduced and known as A2?

Mr. McIver: That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the leader of the third party?

Hearing none, are there any other members who would like to speak to amendment A2?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Speaker: Now we go back to the amended Motion 19, correct? Are there any other individuals who would like to speak to the amended Motion 19?

Mr. Mason: We have another amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of this motion but also to move an amendment. As we all know, in addition to moving to morning sittings, Government Motion 19 also made some changes to the standing orders to allow the Official Opposition the opportunity for some additional time during estimates for ministries of their choosing. Of course, with Government Motion 19 not yet passed and we're already into estimates and committee considerations have already begun, clearly we can't put these new provisions into place for this current set of departmental estimates.

Therefore, I have an amendment here that would push the coming into force provision for these changes to January 1. Mr. Speaker, I would like to move that Government Motion 19 be amended by striking out part C and substituting the following:

And be it further resolved that the amendments to Standing Order 3 in section 1 of part A shall take effect on November 24, 2015, the amendments to Standing Orders 59.01 and 59.02 in sections 9 and 10 of part A shall take effect on January 1, 2016, and the remaining amendments in this motion shall come into force on passage.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I understand I will identify this as amendment A3.

Could we pause while the pages distribute the amendment.

To the mover from Edmonton-Centre, I understand that you're moving this on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Mr. Shepherd: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That's correct.

The Speaker: I understand that we have an amendment known as A3 introduced by Edmonton-Centre. Are there any members who wish to speak to amendment A3?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, I'll be very brief. This is something that I think all members of the House can agree is needed and overdue. I greatly enjoyed the estimates process. I thought it was probably one of the most productive things we do, our ability to follow through with ministers, and I would encourage all members of the House to support the amendment.

The Speaker: First of all, any questions under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Strathmore-Brooks?

Hearing none, are there any other members who would wish to speak to the amendment to the motion identified as A3?

[Motion on amendment A3 carried]

The Speaker: I believe we are back to the amended Motion 19. Am I correct? I'm hearing that we are. Are there any other members who would wish to speak to the amended Motion 19?

Hearing none, who is the original mover of this motion? Government House Leader, do you have any additional comments you would like to make?

Mr. Mason: I'd just like to thank all members for their contribution to these changes, and I believe that while some have some difficulty with parts of them, they will advance the work of the Assembly. I thank all hon. members for their contribution to the debate.

[Government Motion 19 as amended carried]

Amendment to Standing Order

22. Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that Standing Order 52.01(1) be amended as follows:
1. in clause (a)
 - (i) by striking out "and Service Alberta" and substituting ", Service Alberta and Status of Women";
 2. in clause (b)
 - (i) by striking out "Agriculture and Rural Development" and substituting "Agriculture and Forestry";
 - (ii) by striking out "International and Intergovernmental Relations, Innovation and";
 - (iii) by striking out "and Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour" and substituting "Economic Development and Trade and Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour";
 3. in clause (c) by striking out "Environment and Sustainable Resource Development" and substituting "Environment and Parks".

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, that motion was in the event that we were unable to pass Government Motion 19 today, so I will not be moving that motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

13. Mr. Ceci moved:
Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Debate adjourned October 29: Mr. Jean speaking]

Mr. Cooper: He is done.

The Speaker: Is there anybody who would like to speak to Motion 13? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to begin debate on the first budget of the first new government in 44 years. It is an honour to respond today for the Wildrose Official Opposition. This budget continues in the same direction as the last several budgets that this province has seen.

In 2004 former Premier Klein pronounced Alberta's debt to be paid in full. This stood as the crowning achievement of the Alberta advantage. This was something for Albertans from High Level to Sweetgrass to be proud of. Alberta's spending was under control. Alberta's taxes were the lowest in Canada. Private-sector investment fuelled our economy, and we were the first jurisdiction in our country to be free of debt.

In 2008 the Alberta advantage began to show the first chinks in its armour. Spending spiralled out of control, and soon the province ran its first deficit in 15 years, of $1 billion. First, the province began by drawing down our sustainability fund, which stood at $17 billion that year. We were promised that this deficit would be temporary, but as the sustainability fund continued to dwindle, the government of the day began to turn to the millstone that weighs down too many governments, debt.

But there was hope for Albertans. Former Premier Redford stated in 2011 that "debt has proven the death of countless dreams." Just one year later that very same government repealed the Government Accountability Act and the Fiscal Responsibility Act, acts that former Treasurer Jim Dinning said would give Albertans, quote, subpar government if they were ever repealed or even watered down, but repealed these bills were. This allowed the government of the day to run false surpluses as it borrowed year after year, drawing the sustainability fund down to $2.6 billion and raising our debt up to $12 billion, all the while telling Albertans that their government was somehow running a surplus.

I said at that time that the Alberta advantage had four pillars. The first was honest and straightforward accounting. The second was a reasonable level of government spending. The third was our low debt and triple-A credit rating. The fourth was our low-tax environment and a private-sector investment that fuelled our economic growth. These four pillars reinforced each other in an economic phalanx.

Wildrose has long warned that unsustainable levels of spending would lead the government to fudge its accounting to hide some of that spending. Wildrose warned that poor accounting would lead the government's debt to run out of control as politicians no longer had to account for all of it. Wildrose warned that with these three pillars of the Alberta advantage gone, the fourth, our low-tax, business-friendly environment, was bound to follow. That final pillar fell when the budget introduced on March 25 came forward, when the government attempted to raise taxes on Albertans by $2,400 per household without any serious attempt to get our spending or our debt under control.

In March 2015 the Alberta advantage finally died. In June Alberta's new government buried it with a minibudget which authorized 15 and a half billion dollars of unbudgeted spending without any notice paid to its effect on the deficit. A new tax bill, which increased taxes on the businesses and job creators that fuel our economy, went up by 20 per cent. A further erosion of our once proud, single-rate flat tax took place, with a 50 per cent increase on some earners. Taken together with an ill-advised royalty review, increased carbon taxes, and other ill-advised ideological experiments, the Alberta advantage is already beginning to dim in our rear-view mirror. While members of the government might laugh at the prospect of taxes going up for some Albertans, this party believes that it's a serious and nonlaughing matter.

This budget attempts to make us forget that place of prosperity that made Alberta great. Ronald Reagan once said that socialism only works in two places: heaven, where they don't need it, and hell, where they already have it. The NDP are entitled to their own views and ideology, but they're not entitled to their own facts, and the facts are clear. When you want less of something, you tax it. This budget will mean less business. It will mean less employment. It will mean less investment in our economy. It will mean less savings as our already dilapidated sustainability fund finally runs out this year.

It will mean more of some things. It will mean more debt, an incredible $35 billion of additional debt on top of the $12 billion that we already owe. By 2019 Alberta's debt will reach $47 billion. By that year Saskatchewan's debt is projected to be down to just $3.5 billion. As the people of Saskatchewan used to flee the NDP of that province to Alberta, we are beginning to see a reversal of our roles in Confederation. Despite already being one of the highest spending provinces in the country, spending $2,503 more per capita than British Columbia, our government is going full steam ahead with plans to make our government even larger. This budget will see our spending increase by an average of 2 per cent a year for five years until it surpasses $54 billion. That means that by 2020 every Albertan will have $12,089 worth of debt to their name. That record spending will be paid for by higher taxes and higher debt.

Mr. Speaker, this is why it matters. Low taxes, low debt, and balanced budgets have been the time-tested formula for prosperous societies around the world. It made Alberta the most attractive place for families to invest and to build a life together. It ensured that Alberta was the place where families could have more of their money in their pockets instead of in the pockets of bureaucrats and politicians. It would send the message to Albertans that the benefits that they rely on today such as health care, education, and infrastructure will be protected for years to come and not come under attack from creditors or higher taxes yet.

For families worried about their jobs and their futures right now, a budget that showed a hint of constraint and put forward economic policies that encourage growth would say that there is a reason for hope in our future. Instead, we are doing nothing more than putting a Band-Aid on a broken budget that will kick the problem down the road for the next government to solve after the 2019 election.

This higher debt comes with higher debt-servicing costs, which will equal $1.3 billion a year. That is enough to cover the combined ministries of Culture and Tourism; Aboriginal Relations; Economic Development and Trade; Executive Council; Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour; and the Status of Women.

We made it out of debt once before in this province. The solution was a painful round of spending cuts that every person in Alberta never wants to repeat. Mr. Speaker, if we do not want to repeat 1993, then we must not repeat the 1980s.

Now, I have to take stock of where we are today. We have a new Star Wars movie coming to the theatres, Marty McFly, and a Prime Minister Trudeau. I've got to say it: welcome to the 1980s. If Doc Brown and Marty McFly left 1985 and got out of the DeLorean in November 2015 here at the Legislature, they probably wouldn't notice much of a difference.

Mr. Mason: Better hair.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Better hair and a new federal building.

They would be disappointed to see high taxes, high debt, government intervention in the economy, corporate welfare abounding but still no hoverboards. Perhaps the Premier's plan to pay off the debt is to put a little money on the Cubbies.

This budget will have serious consequences, though, for generations to come. It will have serious consequences on families, on workers, on seniors, and on seniors paying taxes. Some of the responsibility for what we are doing today: children and students will end up paying for it and a lot more when today's bill comes due.

Beyond the ideological drive and punitive tax hikes in June, the government is now going further. Mr. Speaker, this is not a plan to return to prosperity. This is a plan to blindly follow the ideology of the governments of Ontario, Manitoba, and Quebec, where the state punishes private-sector job creators and entrepreneurs and bribes them back with their own money in the form of corporate welfare subsidies. This is a plan to do what governments across Canada have done when they never intend to actually balance the budget.

I'd like to read a little history for you. "Our 1987 budget is part of a medium-term fiscal plan which will see the annual deficit shrink by 40 per cent . . . in '87-88 and move to a balanced budget by 1990-91". Those words were spoken by former Provincial Treasurer Dick Johnston in his 1987 budget speech. Again: "In 1986 the dramatic drop in world oil prices reduced our total resource revenues by over 60 per cent and resulted in a large deficit." That was Mr. Johnston in 1990, still running a deficit.

Another Finance minister had this to say: "Based on our revenue predictions and our spending commitments, we target a surplus of $1.6 billion this year." That was Finance Minister Evans in 2008, the same year she boasted a deficit. One more Finance minister to quote: "We think it's a responsible budget [that will] put us on a path to balance." Just a little bit later that Finance minister said, "It's going to take a little longer to reach balance than outlined earlier." That Finance minister is the current Finance minister.

Our government has already run eight consecutive deficits, even during years with $100-a-barrel oil, and I fear that we are following that track that led governments to make unrealistic budget plans between 1985 and 1993 and again between 2008 and today.

Our government has already taken on $12 billion of new debt. What's another $35 billion? Years 1, 2, and 3 of the budget have relatively clear numbers, but years 4 and 5 have virtually no details. Revenues in those years rely on a 15 per cent increase in revenues. It's possible but unlikely that the government will meet those targets. During our estimates process I repeatedly asked the Minister of Finance to table the economic assumptions that went into building his revenue projections. Repeatedly the minister refused. I repeatedly asked the minister to table his projected spending breakdown that he based his expenses on. Repeatedly he refused. Either the minister has the data and for some reason refuses to share it with the members of this House or he just pulled it out of thin air.

Without publicly releasing this data Albertans have no reason to believe that this budget is a credible plan to return to balance. We know that the Premier and the Minister of Finance will fearmonger and say that cutting a single penny of waste in this government will result in mass layoffs. We know that the Premier and Finance minister are continuing to cling to voodoo economic theories that tell them that they can tax people for working more without causing them to work, produce, and earn less than they otherwise would. Instead of fearmongering, I believe that we need a reasoned, measured, and practical approach to get our budget under control and kick-start this economy.

People did not cross the prairie in wagons and trains to come here for the weather. They came here for a better life than they could have anywhere else in the world. They came here because their station in life was not determined by their birth, their caste, their race, or their religion. They came here because they could build a new, prosperous life with their own bare hands. In 1988 Belinda Derraugh, in my constituency, founded the Roadhouse restaurant in Strathmore. She came here from England not because of government programs but because of the legendary opportunity that is available to anyone who comes here and is willing to work hard and take risks. And whenever I'm eating at the Roadhouse, I hear worry from those employees and from Belinda. They are worried about the cumulative effects that the minimum wage hike and business tax hike will have on Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) for the Member for Strathmore-Brooks? The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Yeah. I'd like to hear a little bit more about the ideas that you're explaining there. If you could expand on that, that would be great.

Thanks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People working at the Strathmore Roadhouse are worried about the cumulative effects that the minimum wage tax hike, business tax hikes, personal tax hikes, and other taxes will have on the viability of their businesses. I spoke to her about the budget, and she had a message for the Premier. She said: don't hurt the entrepreneurial spirit that brought me to Alberta and that keeps my small business employing people. The Wildrose Official Opposition is here today standing up for people like Belinda and her employees at the Strathmore Roadhouse: people who want to succeed; people who want to start that small business; people who want to take that extra shift and not see their earnings clawed back; people who pay their taxes and don't want to see their money wasted by politicians; people who want to see their money spent on roads, bridges, and hospitals and not on interest; people who want the same opportunity for their children that they themselves had. That is why we are here. That is why we will not support this budget. This is why we will fight for a brighter, more prosperous future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I can't help but ask the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky if he got the additional information that he was looking for, exactly.

Mr. Loewen: Yes. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there any others to speak to the motion itself? The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I congratulate the government for getting elected and all that comes with that and on producing a budget that is great for, probably, Houston, not quite so great for Alberta. I say that, Mr. Speaker, because over the last decades a lot of jobs moved from Houston to Alberta largely because of an environment that was business friendly: low corporate taxes, entrepreneurial, government policies that were pro business. One of my biggest fears is that – although there are many with the current government and the policies that they're putting forward – we're going to lose a lot of those positions back to Houston, where they came from, and a lot of really good, high-paying jobs, high-tax paying jobs as well will go with them. This probably is the best government and Premier that Houston ever had. Congratulations. I would congratulate you on that.

Mr. Speaker, the last budget before this one was balanced. At the end of this government's reign their own numbers – their own numbers – say that they will have a $47.4 billion debt in five years. Their own numbers say that the annual servicing costs on that will be about $1.3 billion. Their own documents say that they will begin to make a plan to pay it back when they're in surplus. Well, when they're in surplus – again, their numbers – they'll have a $1 billion surplus. So somehow Albertans are expected to feel comfortable and good about the fact that they're going to try to pay back $47.4 billion with $1.3 billion a year debt-servicing costs with a mighty $1 billion surplus. No one believes that. Well, if there is a small pocket of people that believe that, I think I'm looking them all right in the eye right now. They might be the only ones. Albertans should be concerned about it, and they are. I'm hearing that all of the time.

You know, even what they are trying to do right with this budget they haven't got right, Mr. Speaker. Listen: congratulations on continuing to build the schools that we started. Great. Congratulations on continuing to build the hospitals and Highway 63 that our government started. Thank you. Here's where it falls apart, though. We had a plan to borrow money and pay it back in a reasonable amount of time. Now there is no plan to pay anything back. There is a promise to create a plan five years from now after the people of Alberta are $47 billion in the soup with debt. It's just not plausible. It's just not credible.

But there is hope, Mr. Speaker. The new government has a fantasy low-carbon, information-based economy to save the day except that we heard from the Premier's own words this week that there is no such economy coming. There is no such plan. Those are just empty words, and the hope doesn't actually exist. Well, that's a problem for Albertans. I think it's going to be a big problem for the people across the way from me here three and a half years from now because at that point Albertans who have lost their jobs and been laughed at will be very unhappy.

You know what, Mr. Speaker? That's probably the most important thing. One of the biggest dignities and best social programs that exists in this world is a job, a meaningful job where you can support yourself and your family. I hate to say it, but this government is attacking that possibility as well with what's in this budget. They have created one job, the minister of economic something. We'll give them credit for one. There's one in the bank, kids. Congratulations. Let's hope that it's not the last one. So far it is. And depending upon whom you listen to, it's somewhere between 40,000 and 64,000 jobs backwards against the one to the positive.

So, Mr. Speaker, a minimum wage that will kill jobs, and as it gets closer to $15, it will kill more jobs. And – I'm sorry – the promise that it will help people of low income, particularly women, get out of poverty isn't going to do it because even $15 an hour is below the level of poverty. The best-case scenario of the government doesn't hold water. The fact is that it will actually kill jobs for people that start at the minimum wage, get job skills, and then work their way up the economic ladder. They've actually raised the bottom rung of the economic ladder that those people that have the lowest ability to earn money can reach, work hard, be honest, like Albertans are, and work their way up to make a better living.

An Hon. Member: But stay in poverty.

Mr. McIver: They've just raised the rung beyond the reach of thousands if not hundreds of thousands of Albertans.

You know, I agree with the hon. member that's taunting there. Minimum wage jobs aren't the be-all and end-all, but I'll tell you what they are. They're a starting spot for young people to learn good work habits and good skills. Mr. Speaker, I don't know if there's anybody here that never worked at a minimum wage job. I know I did. I'm going to presume – you're here. You're somewhat successful. You managed to get off that bottom rung of the economic ladder, actually work your way up. Congratulations. Let's just give other people the opportunity to do what we've done. Let's do that. Let's provide that for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, with the job plan, again, the government is – well, it's not a great plan in the first place. But they're playing fast and loose with the numbers. They love to talk about $5,000 per job, which would be for a $50,000 job, and they say 27,000 jobs a year. But if that were so, then they would have had $135 million in the budget to fund those 27,000 positions. But what did they put in the budget? Eighty-nine million dollars at an average of $3,300 per job. And at a rate of 10 per cent of the wage that's $33,000-a-year jobs. All work is good, but this is below the poverty level, at least in the cities. Again, they haven't really solved a thing, and this is where Albertans are being let down very badly. Very badly.

Now, there is some glimmer of hope. There's potentially 3,000 jobs for university students in the STEP program. Well, we can't really say that it's good yet because we haven't seen ... [interjections] Okay. You have to hope on that one. You know what? We live in hope, Mr. Speaker. I'm being as optimistic as I can because I know that people have got to be feeling bad about themselves because they're making it harder for their constituents to make a living and harder for their constituents to keep a job. So we'll give them that little ray of sunshine, which is that they might help 3,000 university students get that first job. Again, there's that bottom rung on the economic ladder. You know, by doing this program, they've actually admitted that it's important to get somebody on the bottom rung. On the other end, with the minimum wage they raised that rung out of the reach of ordinary Albertans, but at least in this one area they've actually admitted that it's good to have a starting spot. While we can't really compliment it because we don't have the details, we're hopeful that the details will be such that it could be a good program. So we'll give them that much hope.

Mr. Speaker, what we have here is, frankly, a mess. What we have here is a corporate tax program. The extra 20 per cent corporate taxes has been the difference between profit and loss for CNRL this year.

An Hon. Member: That's not true.

Mr. McIver: Those are their words. [interjections] No, that's according to CNRL. That's according to them. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon, member, I would appreciate the comments from the hon. member speaking to the truth of the matter.

With respect to the speaker that's speaking and noticing the juncture we are at in the day – I believe we are at 4:30 – and pursuant to Motion 15, agreed to by the Assembly on October 28, 2015, and Standing Order 4(2), the Assembly stands adjourned until November 16 at 1:30 p.m.

Hon. members, drive safely, go back and serve your community, and spend some of that family time.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m. pursuant to Government Motion 15]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us reflect. On this memorial day of remembrance for Métis leader Louis Riel let us try and learn from our history. We often speak in this place about a global economy and a global environment. We may also want to think more about our global humanity. Let us think about how the families who lost loved ones in Nairobi, in Beirut, and in Paris might feel today. How and what might we do in this Chamber to create threads of strength for our global humanity? Threads of leadership when bound together may become a rope of strength that reaches over the paper lines we call national boundaries.

Hon. members, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark, and I would invite all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly His Excellency Beat Walter Nobs, ambassador of Switzerland. His Excellency is accompanied today by Mr. Fabian Grass, attaché at the embassy in Ottawa, and Mr. Andreas Bayer, honorary consul of Switzerland in Calgary.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta takes great pride in our international relations, and this rings true in our dynamic, strong, and productive relationship with Switzerland. In 2010 and 2014 Alberta's exports to Switzerland averaged approximately $82 million per year, with our imports averaging approximately $114 million per year during the same period. And while it's clear that we have strong ties in trade and investment, it is equally important to highlight the fact that our ties with Switzerland extend far beyond this, with many cultural and educational links as well. This visit is a great opportunity to exchange information and identify new areas of mutual interest between Alberta and Switzerland.

The ambassador, the attaché, and honorary consul are seated in the Speaker's gallery. I would now ask our esteemed guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any school groups here today?

Hearing none, I would recognize the hon. Minister of Health and Minister of Seniors.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Dr. Joseph Abraham, vice-president, leadership and education, of the Professional Association of Resident Physicians. Dr. Abraham is here with a group of resident physicians, who've joined us for resident physician day at the Legislature. Dr. Abraham and all of these physician residents have come to this Legislature to meet with elected officials and share their perspectives on health care delivery in Alberta, with a particular focus this year on seniors' care. Please join me in sharing the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly, and I ask our guests to rise and receive it.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation and Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on behalf of the hon. minister of economic development, the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three guests from the Beverly Towne Community Development Society: Colleen Fidler, Kelly Verhegge, and Terry Verhegge. Since 1997 the Beverly Towne Community Development Society has worked with residents and organizations in the neighbourhood of Beverly in Edmonton, and I'm very proud to say that I was around at that time and assisted in that. The Beverly Towne Community Development Society facilitates ongoing programs for local children and youth aged five to 25, and they work jointly with local community leagues and business associations to produce a quarterly community paper that's delivered to all residents in the area. I would ask these guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly four representatives of the Terra Child and Family Support Centre, located in Braemar school in the Ottewell neighbourhood of my constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. Joining us today are Rochelle Bartier and Sarah Hendricks, two moms who have children in the centre; Laura Fulmer, Terra's director of knowledge, learning, and evaluation; and Laura Barry-Johansen, a youth leadership facilitator. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Ms Miller: Mr. Speaker, it's my absolute pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly several members of our caucus legislative services team, led by director Tara Ward and joined here by Poushali Mitra, Ben Lemphers, Brent Kelly, and Chris Fulmer. The leg. services team works hard to support the caucus in the daily business of this House and in our committees. They're totally awesome. I'd like to ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly five hard-working constituents of southeast Edmonton working towards a fair, safe, and reliable vehicle-for-hire industry. In the gallery we have with us today Dawinder Deo, Balraj Manhas, Abouzar Aslam, Manjinder Punia, and Husni Al-Khateeb. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly one of my constituents, Ildiko Spisak. Her parents originally immigrated here from Hungary, and of course she was then born here, right in Edmonton, and has lived here ever since. She's been in the riding of Edmonton-Decore for four years and is an avid gardener. I'm very proud to have her as one of my constituents, and she's here today to see the fine work that this Legislature can accomplish. I'd ask her to now please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my amazing wife of 15 years, Tiffany, and our two youngest children, Austin and Chyanne. Tiffany is my high school sweetheart. In about grade 10 I met her at laser tag, of all things . . .

An Hon. Member: Big target.

Mr. Nixon: . . . when a short girl caught my attention mainly because she spent the whole time shooting me over and over with the laser. She, like you guys, said that it was because I was a big target. I like to think she was trying to catch me. As you will see shortly, when she stands up in the gallery, Mr. Speaker, there's a slight height difference. She's about five foot two, and I'm about five foot 20. Maybe she was really targeting me because I was big, but in the end I caught her. I have to say that Tiffany is the perfect partner to go through life with and an incredible mother to our three children.

As for Austin and Chyanne they both are a few weeks shy of their ninth birthday, and as twins they have a unique relationship. Austin is the oldest by about two and a half minutes and rarely misses a chance to tell his sister that fact. He also has an incredible sense of humour and an amazing heart. His sister Chyanne is currently slightly taller, and she rarely misses an opportunity to tell Austin that. She is her daddy's girl and has inherited many of my traits, but thankfully she inherited her mother's beauty.

I thank Tiffany, Austin, and Chyanne for teaching me each day to be loved and to love, and I ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. member, is there any truth to the rumour that, in fact, you made your wife wear an orange suit as you were shooting in the game?

Mr. Nixon: Nice try, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to introduce to you and through you one of Medicine Hat's fine teachers, Sterling Hamilton. I'd like to take this opportunity to commend him for recently receiving the Edwin Parr award for teaching excellence. This award is given to first-year teachers who demonstrate excellent skills in the classroom and who go above and beyond – above and beyond – with involvement in extracurricular activities and professional development. In fact, he's volunteered his time for many years coaching basketball, including my two sons. Sterling has done his family, his community, and Medicine Hat's Crescent Heights high school proud. I'd like to ask that Sterling rise and accept the traditional warm welcome and congratulations of this House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other guests to be introduced today?

Welcome to all of you.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: I would remind the House that past precedent is that the hon. Leader of the Opposition may also speak to a ministerial statement, and I would also remind the House that unanimous consent is required by the Assembly for additional speakers.

The hon. Premier.

Global Violence and Syrian Refugees

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to address the House today to speak to two matters, the attacks in Paris and Lebanon and proposals from our new federal government for Canada to accept Syrian refugees. I know that I speak for every member of this House today and for all Albertans when I express our sincere condolences to the innocent victims of these evil attacks and to their families. I want to express Alberta's solidarity with the people of France and Lebanon as they navigate the difficult road to recovery from these deeply shocking events. Mr. Speaker, these events remind us that we must all stand together against violence and against terror.

I also know that I speak for all Albertans when I say that we condemn these despicable, shameful, and evil acts. These are the acts of people who have lost touch with all humanity, including their own. Our deepest sympathies and our solidarity are with the victims. Together as Albertans we say: je suis Paris and I am Beirut. We stand behind you and all victims of terror and violence.

Mr. Speaker, the hundreds of thousands of children, women, and men who are fleeing Syria are fleeing from acts like these. They, too, are innocents, and these children, these families need our help. All people deserve to live in peace and security. These things, which we are so fortunate to enjoy in Alberta, are what we wish for all people, no matter where they live, all over the world.

Mr. Speaker, the history of countries in conflict around the world is very long. Refugees from Syria are only the latest victims of violence who are desperately seeking a safe home for their families. For decades Alberta has provided such safe communities. We have welcomed people from around the world fleeing violence and oppression and seeking a new start. Families have come here from Ukraine, from postwar Europe, from Vietnam, from the Sudan, and from many other parts of the world, and when they arrive in Alberta, they find a place where they can begin a new life, a safe life, a life of promise and opportunity. In return, these families have contributed to our communities, our culture, and our shared prosperity.

For many of us in this House, perhaps most of us, the chance to make a life is what our own families were seeking when they came to Alberta, whether it was months ago or years ago or generations ago. These are qualities of life that each of us holds dear and wishes for our own children. These are qualities of life we wish for others around the world.

Mr. Speaker, bringing refugees to Canada must be done in a safe and secure way that protects Alberta families as well as those fleeing violence abroad. We look to the federal government to assure Canadians that this will be done, and we will then do our part to ensure that these families find sanctuary here.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Liberty, equality, fraternity: those are the sentiments of the people of Paris. We stand with the people of France, the people of Lebanon. Those were the sentiments of the people whose lives were forever changed Friday evening. Those were the sentiments of the people who lost their lives in a fight brought to the streets of the city, long home to liberty. I rise today to stand with those people, to stand in solidarity, especially with our French brothers and sisters, in the wake of what can only be described as a savage and cowardly attack on the great city of Paris and other places around the world, an attack especially on our great ally and an attack on western values. We as Albertans, as Canadians stand in solidarity with those victims and the families of those victims and with our ally and great friends. We partake in their national day of mourning in France, and we reflect upon the lives of those lost in an attack so cowardly and barbaric, an attack driven by ideological evil and hatred.

Words fail to describe the heartbreak that we feel in the wake of this tragic situation, but words must be used to denounce this deplorable atrocity. Western civilization is under attack. It is under attack by a radical and evil ideology. Make no mistake. As the French President, François Hollande, frankly put it, the attacks on the city of Paris are an act of war. These attacks echo the very fact that our former Prime Minister Stephen Harper pointed out in the wake of an attack on Paris earlier this year, that this international movement of evil has declared war. They have declared war on the western world. They have declared war on nations that are free, democratic, and tolerant. They have declared war on the notion of tolerance and peace. They have declared war on each and every single one of us in Canada. They have declared war on us. With each such declaration of war and the reinforcement of such made this past Friday, now is the time to fight back. Now is the time to stand strong. Now is the time to unite as one. We must be resolute. We must fight to defeat terrorists that would do such deplorable things to our allies.

Canada has a long and proud history, a history of standing side by side with our allies. We have always acted in times of need. From fighting evil in the two world wars to defeating terrorists in the wake of the September 11 attacks, Canada has defended freedom and democracy time and time again. We have assisted our allies in these times of need because we know how important the collective values that we share are. Our moral compass has always guided us to do what is right. In the wake of this tragedy Canada must continue to be an ally in this fight. We must avoid any temptation to retreat for we know that as a country dedicated to freedom and the rights of all peoples, we too, here, remain a target. We saw it last year with the cowardly attack on Parliament Hill. Now is not the time to back down.

As a province and as a country, yes, let's remain committed to welcoming the true victims fleeing this evil in Syria and Iraq, but let's remember to be vigilant. As Saskatchewan Premier Brad Wall said earlier today, let's not be rushed. Let's not be guided by rushed quotas and deadlines but by ensuring the safety of Canadians as our paramount consideration. Our job as politicians in Canada is the safety and security of the people we represent. We must stand tall with our French allies and must defend the common values that we share. These values are weapons we must use for they are the thing our enemy most despises. Today we are all in mourning, we are all France, and we are all defiant of terrorism. To that I say this. Long live liberty, equality, and fraternity. Long live the free world, bound by no enemy and by no evil.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Was there any wish to ask consent for other members to speak? Is there a request to speak? Would you introduce the request for unanimous consent, hon. member.

Mr. McIver: So moved, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hearing a request to have unanimous consent for speakers to speak, is it for the leader of the third party or just for yourself?

Mr. McIver: For additional party leaders.

The Speaker: For the party leaders. Thank you.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, colleagues. On behalf of the PC caucus I extend our heartfelt condolences to everyone who has lost friends and family in the attacks that occurred in Paris and indeed in Beirut and Baghdad. The news is devastating. As the world grieves these losses of life, we pray for comfort and peace for the global community. The basis of Canada is freedom, freedom to move about and carry on our daily lives without fear of attack. Canadians are encouraged to stand together, with open hearts and minds for all people.

Mr. Speaker, at a time like this it can be natural to strike out with angry words and actions, but it's also time for love and compassion towards the victims. I believe it is the intent of the terrorists to divide our society against itself and make us afraid. Because of this, it is important that we stand together as Canadians and as Albertans to reconfirm our belief in equality for all regardless of race, creed, colour, religion, or gender. In this way, we send the message that we reject acts of fear and embrace the freedoms protected in Canada, in France, and in every country who cares about her people.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View and leader of the Liberal Party.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Canadians from across the country stand in solidarity with the people of Paris, Kenya, and Lebanon, victims of the terrible and cowardly acts of terrorism over the weekend. The perpetrators of these heinous acts seek to shake us. They seek to undermine our commitment to human rights, to tolerance, freedom, and humanity. They will fail.

In the face of such violence and hate, Mr. Speaker, the people of the world have responded with love and solidarity, with moments of silence, prayer, messages of support, the bright colours of the French flag on bridges, towers, Facebook profiles, and this very building. We know there will be much discussion and debate and division in the aftermath of these attacks. Heartbreakingly, we know that all too well from previous experiences of such violence.

I here state that I reject the rhetoric of a declaration of war. The west has contributed to the violence in the Middle East at least since 2003, when the U.S. illegally invaded Iraq, and the carnage continues in that country. There will be debates about the hundreds of thousands of children, women, and men fleeing the Middle East. We will be reminded that they are fleeing from acts of these types and that they, too, are innocents.

We know that violence begets violence and that the world will be left, as the Bible says, with an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, with everyone toothless and blind. We know that they must be helped in a way that is safe and secure and protects Alberta families as well as those fleeing the violence abroad.

For today, Mr. Speaker, the House stands united. Nous sommes Paris. Nous sommes tous Paris.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow and leader of the Alberta Party.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all of my colleagues. The atrocities in Paris and Lebanon and indeed elsewhere have no place in any society. I stand with you, my Legislature colleagues, and with all Albertans in condemning these vile and cowardly attacks.

I spent a lot of time this weekend talking with my family. We talked first about the victims – those who died in Paris, those who were injured – and the families and friends of those victims. We talked about the first responders, who ran toward danger while others found safety, and we reflected on how truly fortunate we are to live in Canada and how proud we are to be Canadian.

Now, it was difficult to talk with our young daughters, who are only eight and 11, about such a horrible and tragic event, but it allowed us to reflect on the importance of our freedom, how that freedom was won, and how it is maintained. We talked about how important it is to not live in fear in the face of terror and how our society must remain open and accepting.

At times Canada can seem very far away from violence, but we must remain ever vigilant, as the attacks on Parliament Hill just over a year ago show us. But we must not take this to the point of losing our fundamental Canadian values. The moment we close our doors, the moment we close our hearts and our minds, that's when the tyrants win. Like the people of Paris, who welcomed strangers on the night of the attacks – they opened their doors, portes ouvertes – we must keep our doors open and our society open.

Openness can be abused by determined evil people, but it is this very openness that makes our society great. It allows us to chose our own destiny. It makes us strong. Canada has always welcomed immigrants and refugees, and this is a source of strength for our country and a source of great pride, and it must remain so. I support the Premier's commitment to work with the federal government to settle Syrian refugees in Alberta, and in doing so, we must remain vigilant and consider our own security. We can and we must do both. We stand with our Parisian brothers and sisters. Je suis Paris. Nous sommes Paris.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

Job Creation and Retention

Mr. Jean: Albertans are worried. Jobs are vanishing, and investment is disappearing. Sixty-five thousand Albertans have lost their job since the election, and NDP policies are making it much worse. On Friday EnCana announced it's putting a major natural gas project on hold specifically because of this government's royalty and climate reviews. That's hundreds of new jobs no longer available to Albertans. Does the Premier understand that her policies are chasing investment and jobs out of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I understand is that our government is working very hard to inject the kind of stability into our oil and gas sector which has not existed for many years as a result of the previous government's failure to take responsibility for our need to have a better environmental regime in order to sell our products in new markets. Therefore, hard work has to be done. It hasn't been done for a long time. It does have to be done now. It's being welcomed by many people in the industry, and in the long term it will be better for the industry and for Albertans, whom we are here to represent.

Mr. Jean: Investors have hit the pause button, but if the Premier is not careful, they will be hitting the stop button. Some analysts are predicting that oil could go down to $20 a barrel. Companies are trying to stay here, but they're not being encouraged by this NDP government's risky economic policy: higher taxes, more regulations, job-killing royalty reviews, and now a carbon tax. To the Premier: how does her ideological agenda do anything to help Albertans being handed pink slips at the end of every week?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting. We continue to learn new things about the Official Opposition every day. First, they tell us that the way for us to control the price of oil and to increase the price of oil is to fire teachers and nurses. Then they spend weeks telling us that they would rather not get out of bed to work before 10 o'clock in the morning. Last week they said that Alberta should ignore its environmental record and reputation because somehow that had nothing to do with the problems that we've had getting pipeline to markets, and this weekend they voted at their convention in favour of allowing for more private health care. So which is it? None of that is going to help Albertans.

Mr. Jean: Two jokes in one answer: that's pretty good.

The NDP could not be more out of touch with basic economics. When times are tough, they raise people's taxes. When pipeline projects are put forward, the NDP campaign against them. When jobs are bleeding, the Premier talks about shutting down our coal industry. In Hanna local officials are warning that if the NDP don't slow down, the NDP would, and I quote, basically be shutting down our community. Unquote. What does the Premier have to say to Albertans who are worried that their jobs are the next ones on the chopping block?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as we have discussed a number of times in this House and, of course, in the seven or eight months preceding being here in this House, Alberta is going through tough economic times. That's why our government introduced a budget that will stabilize public services which Albertans rely on, put us on a careful, reasonable path to balancing the budget, and stimulate economic growth and job creation. This is the kind of leadership Albertans are looking for, not the panicked, slash-and-burn response that the Official Opposition ran on and then was rejected by the people of this province.

The Speaker: Second question.

Carbon Tax

Mr. Jean: Higher business taxes, higher personal taxes, higher gas taxes, higher insurance taxes, and now this government is proposing a new tax on everything. While the Premier was campaigning for the hearts and minds of people in downtown Toronto, she announced that a new carbon tax is on its way. It would have been nice if she'd told Albertans first. Why is the Premier more determined to create another new tax on Albertans rather than working to protect Albertans' jobs?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that will help protect Albertans' jobs is getting a pipeline, that neither the previous provincial government was able to get built or this Official Opposition leader's previous federal government was able to get built. One of the reasons it never got done was because they refused to address the issue of environmental change and the need for our province to act responsibly on that issue and be a responsible energy producer on the national stage. That's what we're going to do, and that's how we're going to make the case for us to be able to get our product to market and ensure that people in markets across this world want our product.

Mr. Jean: Well, you can't get oil anywhere without pipelines.

Quote: we will do what needs to be done. Unquote. No, that wasn't the Premier describing a plan to protect Alberta jobs; it was the Premier defending her promise to implement a carbon tax on all Albertans. The damage of this tax is very obvious. It's a tax on everything and will be the latest blow to Albertans who are already losing their jobs or seeing their take-home pay cut. What does the Premier have to say to the Albertans that are losing work and will now have a lot less money because of her brand new tax on everything?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've said, it is really important for this government to move forward on a good, reasonable climate change strategy. That's what we've been talking about. That's what we talked about in our budget speech, and that's what I talked about in my speech in Toronto because that ties into our ability to get our product to market, to build pipelines, and to ensure that people want to buy our product. So this is what we are going to do. This is not new; there are no surprises here. I'm pleased to be able to move forward on the very agenda that we presented to Albertans, that they voted for, that they see as being important for their kids' and the province's future.

Mr. Jean: Let me be clear. Albertans aren't going to receive any new pipelines if the Premier keeps campaigning against them. If the Premier cared about the damage her policies are doing, she would actually listen to the people pleading with her to stop hitting them with even more taxes that they can't afford. She would pick up the phone with the people in Hanna and hear the fear and anxiety those people feel. That's what Wildrose MLAs have been doing. We're here to fight for jobs, fight for a stronger economy, and fight for a strong Alberta. When will the Premier join with the Wildrose and start fighting for Albertans' jobs?

Ms Notley: Let me be clear, Mr. Speaker. I will never join with the Wildrose to fight for the kind of slashing, burning, layoffs, rollbacks that they want to bring to this province because that will not help jobs in Alberta one bit. It will undercut the future of children, it will undercut the future of people in postsecondary education, and it will make our seniors more at risk. That is what this government will not do. We will grow Alberta, we'll stabilize our public services, we'll get to balance, we'll stimulate the economy, and we'll do it without ripping everything apart in the process.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Public Access to Executive Council Members Premier's Calgary Office Appointment

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. When Albertans are worried about jobs, this government is distracted by its own selfish interests. The last time we met, we raised the issue of selling access with a fundraiser. The Government House Leader blustered, and then someone got a note, and abject apologies followed. Selling access to cabinet for political fundraisers is wrong. We've heard the apologies, but the event still goes on. Isn't the Premier concerned about the integrity of her government? Will she follow the precedent of Premier Stelmach and cancel this event?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as has already been indicated, we have consulted with the Ethics Commissioner. We have done exactly what the Ethics Commissioner has told us that we should do, so we are very comfortable that going forward we are handling this very well. I might ask the members opposite if those extra special, more expensive tables for sitting with Wildrose MLAs are still more expensive or if maybe they changed that plan, too.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I've never made a constituent of mine ever pay for access to me.

So far this year an average of 1,500 Albertans have lost their jobs, but this government continues to be distracted by partisan politics. When the Premier was on this side of the aisle, she understood that it was wrong for the governing parties to use the Premier's office as a fundraising tool. Her party has apologized and renamed the event, but everyone knows now that you can get a meeting with the minister if you give $250 to the NDP. You will get access. This event sullies the integrity of the government. Will the Premier commit ...

The Speaker: Do you have a question, hon. member? Your question.

Mr. Nixon: This event sullies the integrity of this government. Will the Premier commit that neither she nor her cabinet will attend?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I did was that I had my office immediately consult with the Ethics Commissioner to ensure that we were doing the right thing both in terms of the letter of the law as well as in terms of her overall advice about what she thought would be good just in general. That's what we did, and we are moving forward based on that advice. I feel perfectly confident that Albertans are getting a tremendous amount of access to this whole caucus as well as the cabinet and as well as myself, and I'm very proud of that. I look forward to continuing that in the future.

Mr. Nixon: Last week Finning announced 1,100 layoffs, most of them in Alberta, but this government is distracted trying to find jobs for their friends. A few days ago the Premier put out a very rare Saturday morning press release. It announced that even after voters rejected him, the Premier was determined to create at least one job, and the failed NDP candidate from Calgary-Foothills is now landing a $150,000 patronage appointment. The Premier used to rail against this stuff. Now she puts out stealthy Saturday morning press releases. What does the Premier have to say for herself?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, let me just say that that position at McDougall Centre is a political position, first of all. It's in my office. Secondly, the person who's gotten that position is earning less than the person who was in that position under the previous government and about 30 per cent less than two predecessors ago. So he's earning less. But, most importantly, the person that got that position has sat on city council off and on for about 25 years, has tremendous roots in the city of Calgary, and, I believe, will be very helpful in ensuring that people can interact with the government in an effective way.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Progressive Conservatives.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, in the House on June 25 the jobs minister stated that minimum wage increases were not killing jobs. In fact, she said that Telus was investing money to create 1,500 jobs. Earlier this month Telus announced that they would reduce their workforce by 1,500 positions in the fourth quarter. Alberta employment has dropped by 10,800 in October alone. My question to the minister: given that your government was wrong in the spring about job investment in Alberta, wrong about the minimum wage, when will the government put a plan in place where Albertans can actually get good jobs to support their families?

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I completely reject the premise of that question. I still believe, as do many economists, that putting more money into the pockets of low-income Albertans will ultimately generate more economic activity. As the members across were concerned when we heard about the Telus recent announcement of job cuts, I too was concerned. Now, those job cuts are spread across Canada; they are certainly not all in Edmonton or in Alberta. So that should be clarified. But what we are doing is moving forward on our jobs plan, which is a heck of a lot more than the previous government ever suggested doing.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, what I hear the Premier rejecting are the facts. The facts are that minimum wages are causing job layoffs, and the fact is that the increases in taxes and the other policies are killing jobs for Albertans and Alberta families. What Alberta families want to know is: when will the Premier stop rejecting the facts and start accepting the facts that her policies are actually taking jobs and work away from Albertans and scratch things and start putting into place a real policy, a real job-creation plan that will actually help Albertans have jobs that will support their families, not poverty-level jobs but good-paying jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said, I mean, through our job incentive program we will be creating up to 27,000 jobs. Through our addition to the capital plan above and beyond what was previously planned, we will be creating between 8,000 and 10,000 new jobs. We will be creating an unnamed amount of jobs through our making available to entrepreneurs and business owners $2.1 billion extra in capital that had previously not been available. So actually our government is doing quite a bit to focus on jobs because we understand that that's critical to all Albertans.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the government admitted to putting into place a job policy that will have poverty-level jobs. We've established that in the House. We've established it in estimates. The government has admitted that the minimum wage of $15 an hour is not a living wage, so there are no good jobs. If they are creating 3,000 jobs for students, good for you; that's a good thing. The question Albertans want to know – thousands of Albertans are losing good-paying jobs, and you're not doing a blessed thing for them. When will you begin?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I continue to find it ironic that the member across, who not only was a minister in the previous government but was the minister of labour in the previous government and so was directly responsible for maintaining the lowest minimum wage in the country, now is complaining that a $35,000-a-year job is not good enough. I will grant you, you know, that that's not a lot to live on, but it's sure a lot more than what they were living on with $9.25 an hour, which was what this guy was overseeing. So I find this quite rich. Ultimately, as I've said a number of times, we have a multipronged plan for job creation, and we will continue to work on it on behalf of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Support for Low-income Albertans

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my riding, as I'm sure is the case for every other riding, my staff and I frequently help some of our constituents who come in to get on programs such as AISH. This is a necessary lifeline for some of our more vulnerable Albertans who are permanently and greatly limited in their ability to earn a living. After reviewing the budget, it appears that AISH recipients did not see an increase in their benefits despite the rising costs of living. To the Minister of Human Services: does this government plan on increasing AISH benefits to some of Alberta's ...

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Our government is committed to providing supports to Albertans in need, and we have not only restored, actually, cuts proposed to Human Services, but we have increased funding for AISH and income support. At this time that funding is not enough to increase the payment, but it will help us address the casework growth and the need of AISH recipients.

Thank you.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: given that AISH recipients receive $1,588 a month and that some of my constituents have expressed that this isn't enough to make ends meet, what sort of investments is this budget making to help our more vulnerable Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Member, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. When looking at AISH benefits, what we need to do is to look at benefits in the context of other benefits available to AISH recipients. For instance, AISH recipients have health benefits available to their partners and their kids. We also announced an Alberta child benefit last week. That's also available to AISH recipients without any clawbacks. Our government will listen to Albertans and will remain responsive to their needs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: could he go into detail on the programming investments that will help Albertans get through this tough economic time?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Member, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Taking care of each other during tough economic times is the Alberta way of doing things, and our government will continue to stabilize the social services under the purview of Human Services. We have restored cuts that were proposed by the previous government to be made to Human Services. We have restored the proposed cuts to health care. We have restored the proposed cuts to education. All of these investments along with our new child tax benefit and job creation plans are there in place to help Albertans during tough economic times.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Strategic Transportation Infrastructure Program

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents in Wetaskiwin-Camrose are eager to see investments in local roads and regional bridges. These are transport lifelines for several smaller communities in rural and semirural suburban areas. There has been a neglect of spending dollars on needed rural infrastructure for many years. Our municipalities are wanting to know more about the restored strategic transportation infrastructure program, known as STIP. To the Minister of Transportation: what municipalities and projects will be eligible for STIP funding, and how can they access these funds?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I was very pleased to announce last week that we are restoring $100 million to the strategic transportation infrastructure program, or STIP. This program had remained unfunded for several years. It provides cost-sharing projects to rural and small urban municipalities related to local and regional roads – rural road, bridge, and culvert construction and reconstruction, resource road improvements – and community airports. It's an application-based program, and I urge all municipalities that are interested to apply as soon as possible.

Thank you.

2:20

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that transportation networks are essential to build a successful economy, how will restored STIP funding drive economic growth in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, hon. member, for the question. We need to make sure that municipalities have the infrastructure they need to grow economically. This will help create jobs for construction and engineering firms and workers involved in capital projects, but it allows municipalities to lock in prices on resources and materials at lower prices and low interest rates, maximizing value for their taxpayers. Providing the infrastructure that enables economic growth and good paying jobs is an important part of helping communities to grow and prosper and to create jobs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the STIP promises to fund lifeline transport connections for smaller communities, how will STIP support the entire province's industrial growth? Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. It helps improve local infrastructure and safety, but it also creates a robust, modern transportation network throughout the province of Alberta. It'll go a long way towards improving resource roads, that face heavy demands as a result of large vehicles and wear and tear from industry traffic, and it will also support community airports, which are a vital economic asset of communities that are looking to bolster their tourism and are also eligible for the STIP program.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Government Advertising

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, while Albertans all over the province are deeply concerned about jobs, this government is more concerned about spin. You can't watch the evening news without being subjected to meaningless and vapid advertisements for this government's unpopular budget. We have now learned that the better part of a million dollars is being spent on this useless, partisan propaganda. With 1,500 Albertans losing their jobs every week this year, is this government proud that the government is wasting tax dollars on patting itself on the back?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Advertising budgets and what's in the budget are a typical, normal part of government action. And it's not the better part of a million dollars; it's $750,000, which is going to TV and online ads.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Albertans might tolerate this advertising if it explained government programs or provided any factual information. Given that the Premier used to rail against this kind of taxpayer-funded propaganda when they were in opposition and, like so many of the democratic ideals they once held, it seems to be inconvenient now that they hold the perks of power, we're willing to give the Premier a mulligan on this one if she'll now do the right thing. Will the government commit to this Assembly that, moving forward, taxpayers will never again have to pay for advertisements that only serve their narrow, partisan interests?

Mr. Ceci: This is a government of Alberta budget, Mr. Speaker, and we're acting on jobs and diversification. We're acting on a responsible pathway to balance, and we're acting on stabilizing front-line services. We're providing information to Albertans, and I think that's a useful thing.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Meet the new boss, Mr. Speaker: same as the old boss.

Until recently the government of Ontario's advertising had to be approved by the Auditor General to ensure that it was nonpartisan, and the NDP is advertising a government union slogan, likely written by politically connected communications officers from those very government unions. Will the government commit to challenging the law to ensure that taxpayers are not paying for their partisan propaganda?

Mr. Ceci: What we're actually doing, Mr. Speaker, is investing in roads, bridges, and flood protection. We're talking about job creation. We're talking about a pathway to balance. All of that is information Albertans want to know, and we're providing it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Child Care Supports

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two weeks ago I was very proud to vote for Motion 502, presented by the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park. I was happy to vote for this motion because I believed it would begin a very important conversation about child care in Alberta and the need for affordable child care for parents, but there have been no announcements or details yet. To the Minister of Human Services: has the government done anything at all to act on the member's motion, and when can Albertans expect to see some details?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. Our government ran on a campaign that we will move with a $25-a-day daycare plan when our finances permit. In our budget in the out-years we have allocated funds, and we are exploring our options, how we can best move on that promise.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, one interesting idea proposed in Motion 502 was opening spaces in new government buildings. However, there is space in a number of our older schools and infrastructure that could be repurposed. To our Minister of Infrastructure: has the government done any work so far in identifying potential child care spaces in either old or new infrastructure, as was called for in Motion 502?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, hon. member, for the question. One of the first things I did upon taking office was to ask my department to take a look at the federal building to see if in fact it was possible to find a child care space there. Apparently, the building is not suitable; hence the importance of the motion that you referenced. It's much easier to do when you're building a building new. I've asked the department to review potential spaces in government buildings that may be suitable for child care, so that's ongoing, hon. member.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, given that this work is ongoing, it's also important to know that the program is accessible for all Alberta parents that need it. As a mother who worked shift work her entire career, I know the struggle of trying to find child care that works for a career outside of the 9-to-5 workday. To the Minister of Human Services: what specifically will your government do to ensure that these programs fit Alberta parents who need them around the clock?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Member. Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, we understand that child care is expensive in this province, and for that reason we ran on a promise that we will make sure that it's quality care and that it's affordable to all Albertans. At this time we do provide child care subsidies. We do provide accreditation, like wage top-ups, to the service providers to make sure that child care is available and affordable to all Albertans, and we have also committed funds in the out-years, and we are exploring options to better address this need.

Thank you.

School Board Associations' Spending

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the chair of the Edmonton public school board has expressed grave concerns over spending by the Alberta School Boards Association, to the point where he believes his board should leave the association. Instead of hiring schoolteachers and classroom assistants, member school boards are using taxpayers' dollars to fund extravagant perks like adult Easter-egg hunts and pricey conferences. Will the minister direct member school boards and the ASBA to stop this improper spending at a time when Alberta simply can't afford it?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. Certainly, it's critical at every juncture that education monies be spent in the classroom for our children. Further to that, I have certainly been speaking to all 61 school boards over the last few weeks, and specifically now, with the ASBA revelations, once again I've offered them a level of transparency that we use in the public service, that hopefully they might consider using because certainly their reputation is on the line.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Black Gold school division has decided to withdraw from the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta over a special levy directing educational tax dollars towards a court case to limit Catholic education and since the association unanimously agreed to collect 90 cents per student to fight Lakeland Catholic school board's attempt to open a school in Lac La Biche, does the Minister of Education consider this levy a good use of public education funds?

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, from the base principle that we operate from, our government is clearly recognizing the value of Catholic education in this province. Further to that, we certainly do not want to see people using money in an inappropriate way to somehow interfere with that commitment. Further to that, certainly, we will make sure that the process is followed properly. PSBAA is also an independent organization. The bottom line is that the buck stops here. If they're spending money inappropriately, then so be it. We will stop it.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since these two provincial associations are causing division within the educational community and pitting Albertans against each other, we need the Education minister to step up and start making things right. Given that schools are facing overcrowding and funds clearly are being mismanaged, will the minister put an end to out-of-control spending and make sure that educational dollars are providing appropriate resources in the classroom to support our students?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, that is the intention. Each of these organizations are advocacy groups that the school boards make an investment in, and that's the way they operate. That being said, certainly, like I said before, the buck stops here. I make sure that the money is being spent in schools. The message has been clearly sent to each of the 61 school boards that that's what I expect them to do. In regard to divisions it's very important when you're in opposition not to just try to jam those divisions even wider, to cause even more turmoil than is necessary in this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

PDD Residential Safety Standards

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year the former government made it a priority to change the health and safety regulations for all living spaces assigned to persons with developmental disabilities, or PDD. This action was in order to protect Alberta's most vulnerable people, something the Wildrose supports. This new government has put a stop to such changes thus far. To the Minister of Human Services: does your government actually plan on making changes to health and safety regulations for PDD spaces anytime soon?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. We have heard concerns from care providers, service providers, and PDD individuals that these regulations were brought in without proper consultation. What we have done is extended the compliance deadline for another six months. We are in the process of putting together a consultation plan, which I will have more to say about fairly soon.

Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government does plan on making changes to health and safety regulations for PDD spaces in the coming months, stakeholders are desperate for more details. Considering that the NDP ran on a platform of transparency, I would assume this government would have no problem sharing these details. To the minister: will you please inform this House about some of the planned changes coming for PDD spaces?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member.

An Hon. Member: It's a good question.

Mr. Sabir: It's a good question. The safety of those individuals is of paramount importance. As I said, we have heard from stakeholders. In fact, in putting together the consultation plan, we have done a preconsultation with stakeholders across the province. We will be launching our consultation plan fairly soon. It's in the final process, so we will have more to say fairly soon.

The Speaker: Might you have another good question?

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government plans on making changes to health and safety regulations for PDD spaces, stakeholders involved in PDD care have been coming to me with grave concerns. They tell me that they have yet to be contacted by this government to discuss upcoming changes. These stakeholders would like to be a part of the conversation. To the minister: will you commit today to inviting all stakeholders to one table in order to find a unified solution to this problem?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Member and Mr. Speaker. I just want to reiterate that the safety of these individuals is of paramount importance. We are committed to consulting extensively. If there is anybody who was left out who approached you, I would invite you to bring forward the names of those stakeholders, and I will pass it on to the consultation team so that they can consult more inclusively and more broadly to get it right.

Thank you again to the member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Promotion of Alberta's Energy Industry

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the Premier protesting at anti oil sands and antipipeline rallies, the environment minister writing for environmental radicals, and the NDP government implementing policies that have shaken the confidence of our oil industry partners, to the minister of environment: how can Albertans take you at your word that you support your statement that the oil industry is now the backbone of Alberta's economy? Frankly, Minister, your government's actions are speaking louder than your words.

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, leaving aside the irrelevant personal attacks for a moment, the fact of the matter is that our actions have spoken loudly across all of the country and across to our international trading partners as well. We have struck a gold-standard panel to examine the matters of the environmental legacy that was left to us by the previous government. They are providing us advice on renewables, on how to phase out coal appropriately, on how to price carbon, and on how to take leadership on energy efficiency. Those are the actions that we have taken in six short months.

Mr. Fraser: To the same minister. Minister, your government has expressed a desire to support innovation and diversification in our energy economy, and given that many oil sands companies are already exploring new and alternative procedures to lower greenhouse gas emissions per barrel, I'm sure you want to encourage companies to accelerate these investments for emissions reduction. If this is the case, will you commit right now to strengthening the climate change and emissions management fund by allowing more direct withdrawal by contributing companies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to hon. member for the question. This matter of technology and innovation is foremost in the panel's minds as they formulate their advice to government. We have consulted widely with industry on this matter as well, and we will have more to say about it in the coming days as we receive the panel's advice and as we make our announcements before Paris.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Paris climate change summit is weeks away, Minister, and you and your government have committed to spending over a million dollars on advertising your plan and attendance to European press, when will Albertans actually get to know your climate change plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the question. We've been clear that we are going to be making some announcements prior to Paris. Stay tuned on that. We will be putting forward a very fulsome plan that will secure us market access, that will refurbish our international reputation, that will make the appropriate investments in technology and innovation so that we can be global leaders on climate in a carbon-constrained world and so that we can take leadership on carbon competitiveness, hold our heads high, secure market access, and create green jobs for the entire economy.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Bullying Prevention

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday marked the kickoff of Bullying Awareness Week, a grassroots initiative that originated right here in Alberta. This week raises awareness and increases our understanding of the impacts of bullying, promotes prevention of bullying, and informs Albertans about supports available to them. To the Minister of Human Services: what is our government doing to honour this week?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. We know that bullying in any form anywhere is unacceptable, and we know that everyone has a role to play in promoting healthy relationships and in preventing bullying. Over the next six days we are hosting a cyberbullying webcast, promoting a Post-It Forward campaign, and highlighting events across the province, including the 10th annual GSA Conference, which focuses on inclusion and prevention of bullying. I call on all colleagues in the House to commit to a culture of inclusion and respect in honour of Bullying Awareness Week.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you. Given that bullying has serious and real effects on individuals, families, and communities – and as a father of three young children I am concerned about the effects of bullying – and it can lead to anxiety, depression, impact student achievement, and impact employee production at work, what is our government doing to promote the prevention of bullying and to support victims of bullying generally?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Member. Promoting inclusion and ensuring welcoming, caring, and respectful environments is a priority for Albertans and for our government. Human Services has invested over $2 million in Budget 2015 in promoting healthy relationships and the prevention of bullying. This much-needed funding will support initiatives like the school-based program roots of empathy and many more which focus on the prevention of bullying and the promotion of healthy relationships.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our schools need to be safe and caring places, to the Minister of Education: how is this government going to work to support students, specifically those in the LGBTQ community?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government wants to make it clear to all students looking for safe and caring schools that we stand with them. Recently I have sent letters to public, Catholic, francophone, and private schools directing them to develop coherent policies that ensure that students are free from discrimination. These policies must specifically address the boards' responsibilities as they relate to the School Act. All of our schools need to be welcoming and caring, and we will do whatever is necessary to ensure that that happens.

The Speaker: The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Highway Safety

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two years ago in my constituency office I sat across from a grieving mother whose son, returning from his high school graduation rehearsal, had been killed in a preventable accident. He had driven into the back of an improperly marked piece of farm machinery at night. To the Minister of Transportation: is your department considering any regulatory reviews?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the hon. member for the question. That's a good question. I would be very interested in learning more about the situation that you have described, and perhaps we can sit down. I will take the question under advisement.

Thank you.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that each year 60 to 80 tow truck operators are killed on North American roads and that tow operators are almost as likely as law enforcement officers to be killed on the job, giving this industry the second-highest occupational death rate per capita, Minister, is your department considering any regulatory review to deal with this life-threatening oversight?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will take that question under advisement as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member. Second supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker. Given that tow trucks are not designated under the Traffic Safety Act as emergency vehicles, their drivers are at serious risk recovering vehicles on busy highways. To the Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation: is your department considering a review, as we've discussed, and what might the timeline be for that review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for the question, hon. member. Mr. Speaker, safety is the first priority of our department. Far too many people are killed on our roads in a variety of ways. The hon. member has quite rightly brought forward some serious aspects to that, that deserve careful attention, and I want to assure the hon. member that it will get the attention that it deserves.

We want to make sure that our roads are as safe as possible. The people that work on the roads, whether they're first responders or people operating tow trucks or whether they're driving a truck or driving their family for a long weekend, deserve to have safe roads, and that's our . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

School Construction Schedule

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During the Infrastructure estimates when I asked the minister if it takes three years to build an elementary school and a bit longer for a middle school and high school, the minister said, "I think that's fairly accurate." However, the Minister of Education calls these timelines fictitious and unrealistic. My questions are to the Minister of Education. Minister, given that the Minister of Infrastructure is saying one thing and you are saying another, who are we to believe?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we've been waiting a long time for these new and upgraded schools, and I took some concrete steps to try to get more realistic timelines into place.

We know that there are different circumstances that do take place when you're building on such a large scale, you know, anything from artesian wells to methane gas to land being available and not being available. Taking those vagaries into account is what we're trying to do to ensure that we're getting a fair representation of when the schools will actually get built.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I think that the minister is saying that the other minister is incorrect.

Mr. Speaker, given that school construction funding is allocated over a five-year window, the government wants to spend more of that money now and in the first two years of this five-year plan. To the Minister of Education: Minister, would that not indicate that these schools are moving forward relatively on time because money is being moved forward on the five . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I want to correct the record here because the hon. member has been quoting very selectively from the discussion that we had during my estimates. All things being equal, three years is not unreasonable for an elementary school, but in many cases these projects were announced before land had even been identified. In some cases they still don't. The school boards weren't ready. The municipalities hadn't identified the land. There were multiple problems. What the previous government did was to advance these, whether or not they could be built in the time frame that they were suggesting, for political purposes.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It takes three years from beginning to end to build a school. These schools were announced in 2014; ready by 2017. My question again to the Minister of Education: given that we can't get the timelines straight between the two ministers, how, Minister, do you plan on building these schools with $315.9 million less?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, all of the schools, the modernizations, the new school projects that we have: we are going to build those schools, and we can only do so when we actually move the money up so that we can pay for the schools to start to be built properly. I mean, unfortunately – I've been staying away from it – but we were left with a lot of empty promises by this previous government. I had to take the hit to say what timelines were realistic. I did so, and now we can move forward with the schools that we need for our children here in the province of Alberta.

Castle Special Management Area

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is home to spectacular natural wonders, with the Castle area being one among many. Albertans know the significance of protecting and conserving our natural heritage, and we're eager to see our government take action to protect the Castle special management area. To the minister of the environment: what is the current status of protection and conservation in the Castle area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I want to underline that we are bringing the entire Castle area under legislated protection. We are now moving into the development of the parks management plan to encourage Albertans in what they want to see for land use. Of course, we took this action – it was a historic action – because we wanted to protect the headwaters for southern Alberta, for the entire South Saskatchewan regional area, including the drinking water for my own city of Lethbridge.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this protection will increase tourism to the area, to the same minister: what are you doing to ensure that the Castle will be protected and its beautiful natural heritage will be enjoyed by future generations?

Ms Phillips: Well, the first thing that we did, Mr. Speaker, was that we eliminated commercial logging from the area because this was an incompatible use with the legislative protection that we are bringing in. The legislative protection was something that had been asked for by ranching groups, by landowners, by municipalities, and others for more than a generation, almost 50 years. We finally made good on that promise. It took us only four months. It took the previous government 40 years, and they still didn't do it.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that logging and mining in the Castle will be stopped, again to the minister: what are you doing to ensure that the protection in this special area does not hurt economic interests, especially of families living in the area?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the things we did was that we are not allowing surface drilling, but there is still directional drilling in the area. We are engaging grazing leaseholders to encourage the lowest impact on the parks and working with those who own the forestry leases or grazing leases in that area. We're incorporating appropriate rules around off-highway vehicle use, and we're engaging on a broad tourism plan for the area. This is something that I'm pleased to work on with the municipalities and with my colleague in Culture and Tourism.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Palliative Care

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Palliative care provides comfort and medical assistance to those facing the final stages of a terminal illness. It's an incredibly important line of work within our health care system. Alberta has some of the finest palliative care doctors, nurses, and caregivers in the world, people who've developed new tools, new systems to assist patients burdened with final-stage illnesses.

Many Albertans when faced with a terminal diagnosis prefer to stay in their own homes for as long as possible. Expert teams like the palliative care community consult team at St. Marguerite health services centre in Mill Woods help Albertans to fulfill that wish. They provide critical support to physicians, and they facilitate the patients' staying in their homes while continuing to receive world-class palliative care.

For those patients who can no longer stay at home, facilities such as the tertiary palliative care unit at the Grey Nuns community hospital exist. This past week I was able to tour unit 43, the tertiary palliative care unit, and meet with a few of the staff. I had heard from constituents about the heroes employed there, a team that believes that each patient is special, sacred, and deserves to be treated with dignity. On unit 43 they are dedicated to providing compassionate care and making patients as comfortable as possible. They welcome families, friends, and pets, with 24/7 visiting hours. I found their holistic and multidisciplinary approach to palliative care comforting, and I'd like to thank unit 43 for allowing me to come and see the important work that they do.

We must ensure that our government continues to fund and train the next wave of palliative care providers and that we continue to invest in the facilities that allow for this critical end-of-life care through stable health care funding. Albertans deserve nothing less.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Pipeline Construction

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This NDP government's lack of support for the Northern Gateway and the Keystone means thousands of jobs lost in ridings like my own. Many businesses in Bonnyville-Cold Lake had a major stake in these pipelines, and if we don't secure a major pipeline soon, these businesses and the jobs they provide will soon be gone. Not only were thousands of energy jobs directly affected by the Keystone decision, but a host of other industries and businesses were hurt, too. For every energy job this pipeline would have created, there would have been two nonenergy jobs created. Jobs like grocery providers, hotel clerks, restaurant workers, daycare providers are just a few that either won't be sustained or created.

It is disheartening that the members opposite are not supporting jobs or our provincial economy at a time when we need them the most. While Wildrose is busy fighting for pipelines, they're busy protesting them. While Wildrose is busy spreading a story of success of our environment, they're busy calling our oil industry dirty and labelling Albertans as embarrassing cousins. They don't get it. There will soon be no jobs to sustain the economies in rural ridings like Bonnyville-Cold Lake. Ridings that were once vibrant and alive are now struggling under the weight of this government.

We know that moving energy product via pipeline is a safe and efficient manner and that construction of the new pipeline will create jobs, jobs that Albertans will use to reinvest economically and socially in our great province. We know governments don't build pipelines, but they do influence the opinions of other provinces and federal governments. The NDP government should stand proud for our energy sector and fight for market access in every direction. The future of Alberta depends on it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Seniors' Charter

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I pass my one-year anniversary as a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, I am tremendously proud of an initiative that I will soon bring before the House. This initiative honours some of our most treasured citizens, Alberta seniors. I began working on this initiative, which you will come to know as Motion 514, soon after I was elected. The motion asks the House to support the development of a seniors' charter. What is the intention of this charter? Well, it will provide the following guarantees for our seniors: the highest level of dignity, respect, and treatment; access to safe, affordable seniors' housing; providing seniors with a healthy environment; access to programs to help them remain physically active and participate in their communities; and access to high-quality mental health programs.

Mr. Speaker, it is my view and the view of the PC caucus that we cannot do enough for the seniors who have helped build our communities and made Alberta the proud province it is today. Our former government created a broad foundation of supports for seniors, and we are proud of that base. I am championing the concept of a seniors' charter now to ensure that these programs and services are always available to them. While my motion proposes that the Legislative Assembly adopt the concept and provide the guidelines I outlined above, I also propose that we leave the development of the charter in the very capable hands of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta.

I am hoping that each member of this Assembly will find the concept of a seniors' charter as inspiring as I do. I look forward to speaking in more detail on this motion in the coming weeks, but for now I urge all members to take a few moments to consider the value of this proposal. When reflecting on the creation of a seniors' charter, please think about the seniors you know – your parents, your neighbours, your friends – and the expectations you have for them from Alberta's government and what it would mean for them to have these kinds of guarantees from their province as they age.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would request unanimous consent of the House to extend our time in order to complete the Routine.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Please proceed. The Member for Calgary-East.

Cornerstone Youth Centre

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This last Friday I had the utmost pleasure of being present at the opening of Mayland Heights' first outdoor community basketball court, at the Cornerstone Youth Centre. Despite how cold and windy it was, as soon as the ribbon was cut, the court was filled with young people dribbling, shooting baskets, and making bad dunk attempts.

Cornerstone Youth Centre is an organization in my riding, Calgary-East, that is doing amazing work. They are a free, after school drop-in centre that serves 160 registered youth. They provide a safe and caring place for kids in grades 6 to 9 to go after school. With a small board of directors and a staff of just three Cornerstone is a really amazing place to visit.

Cornerstone's mission is investing in youth to encourage the discovery of their passion and potential. You can clearly see that mission in their work as soon as you walk in the doors. On my first trip there, upon entering, I heard guitar and drums coming from the music studio and saw groups of kids sitting around tables eating healthy snacks and playing board games. It was really remarkably wholesome considering, you know, our opinions of youth these days.

Cornerstone makes sure that vulnerable youth have what they need to be successful. They have help with homework. They have hot, nutritious food. They have outlets and training opportunities for creativity and opportunities for sport and physical activity. All of these things were absolutely free of charge. One of the ways that you can tell how successful Cornerstone is is by how many of the students come back as volunteers once they've outgrown the program.

I look forward to many more visits to Cornerstone and to its hopeful expansion into Forest Lawn, where programs such as this could be of utmost use and would be a really fantastic asset, and I'm also looking forward to more basketball games in the springtime.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Terra Centre

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to celebrate the achievement of the Terra Child and Family Support Centre in receiving the child development professional award of excellence for 2015 in the program category, awarded by our Human Services ministry this past Monday, the 9th of November.

Terra supports teen moms attending classes at Braemar school by giving their young children a high-quality learning experience delivered by professional, qualified early childhood educators. The centre accommodates up to 67 children between the ages three weeks to three years old. The program is designed to provide a safe environment that stimulates a child's natural curiosity and to enhance a child's development in all areas.

Terra also supports the relationship between moms and children by giving the moms the opportunity to complete their high school diplomas while maintaining their bond with their kids. When you tour the Terra Centre, you will immediately feel the safe and supportive environment they create for both the children and the moms. The toys, some of which are made out of common household items, are designed to enhance children's development. On-site food preparation ensures that the kids get the nutritious food they need through the day to grow up strong and healthy. When it's nap time, the rooms at Terra become dark, quiet places for the kids to rest and restore their energy for the next part of the day.

Our government understands that quality early childhood development helps ensure children have the best opportunities for success. Interactions with these skilled professionals significantly impact children's development and well-being. That's why I'm pleased to congratulate Terra Centre on receiving the child professional development award of excellence. Alberta is a better place with Terra Centre helping hundreds of moms complete high school and hundreds of children get off to a good start in life.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Energy Policies

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been over six months since the May election. Since then the economy in the Peace Country and, in fact, in most of Alberta has been in decline. The province is feeling the serious effects of the NDP and their risky agenda. The energy sector has been hurting due in part to low commodity prices. However, there is no need for it to be hurting as much as it is.

The Premier seemed relieved when Keystone XL was cancelled, a pipeline she never truly supported. When the President of the United States cancelled it and told the world that Alberta's oil was dirty, how did our Premier react? She was understanding. On top of that the NDP government is hiring anti-oil activists. People who have been campaigning against Alberta's best interests are being paid hundreds of thousands of Albertan's tax dollars, and to do what? To represent our best interests? Sorry; that doesn't stand to reason. Picking and choosing which pipelines are supported and then only half-heartedly is wrong.

Not one policy this government has introduced has been helpful, and many have just plain hurt the economy. It is high time that this government realized that every job loss is not just a number; each one represents a person that has lost the ability to provide for themselves and their family. My heart goes out to those who are sitting around their kitchen tables trying to figure out how to make ends meet.

We are blessed in this province with a wealth of natural resources. Other jurisdictions would love to have this goose that lays the golden egg. Intelligent people would take these golden eggs and use them to benefit our province. If you want to see increased diversity, take the golden eggs and make them work for you. Don't kill the goose. The NDP government must wake up from their poor policies and listen to the people in the Peace Country who have lost their jobs. Listen to those in the industry who know what it takes to create jobs, people who know how to get investment dollars back into our economy. It doesn't have to be this bad. It really doesn't.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Notices of Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Transportation and Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour I would like to give oral notice of a bill to be introduced tomorrow, that bill being Bill 6, The Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Hoffman, Minister of Health and Minister of Seniors, pursuant to the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta Act the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta annual report 2014-2015.

On behalf of the hon. Ms Ganley, Minister of Justice and Solicitor General and Minister of Aboriginal Relations, the Alberta Human Rights Commission annual report 2014-15, April 1, 2014 to March 31, 2015; Alberta Law Enforcement Review Board 2014 annual report; pursuant to the Northern Alberta Development Council Act the Northern Alberta Development Council annual report 2014-15; pursuant to the Legal Profession Act the Law Society of Alberta 2014 annual report; pursuant to the Legal Profession Act financial statements of the Alberta Law Foundation, year ended March 31, 2015.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Eggen, Minister of Education and Minister of Culture and Tourism, Travel Alberta annual report 2014-2015; pursuant to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts Act the Alberta Foundation for the Arts 2014-15 annual report; pursuant to the Alberta Sport Connection Act the Alberta Sport Connection annual report 2014-15; pursuant to the Historical Resources Act the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation 2014-15 annual report; pursuant to the Wild Rose Foundation Act the Wild Rose Foundation annual report 2014-15; pursuant to the Teaching Profession Act Alberta Teachers' Association 2014 annual report.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 7(7) the daily routine is now concluded.

Second Reading

Bill 203
Election (Restrictions on Government Advertising)
Amendment Act, 2015

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 203. This is a good bill. This legislation would be a monumental step towards making elections in this province fairer. This legislation would ban government from using the money and power of government to try and buy votes during or just before the writ period. This piece of legislation alone would bring more credibility and accountability and transparency to government than any other bill that has been introduced yet.

Albertans are tired of the same old politics that only serve to hurt and diminish our democratic system. How many times in election cycles gone by have we seen the government of the day promise a school or a hospital or a major transportation project in a specific riding for the sole purpose of acquiring votes for the government candidate, in some cases not to be delivered on either? It is a total abuse of government power. The government of this province that I love has to be held to a higher standard of scrutiny. The NDP have previously joined the call for amendments to the Election Act, and we welcome them to join with Wildrose today in a show of support for a more open and accountable government.

In the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba governments are banned from making announcements during an election campaign or a by-election. Our provincial neighbours have had the foresight to recognize that interfering in an election by allowing the government of the day to use money and their power to swing votes their way is completely unacceptable. In Manitoba, as it turns out, the legislation banning announcements during an election campaign or a by-election came in under NDP Premier Gary Doer. This particular legislation stems primarily from controversial practices made by its government during last October's by-elections. We needn't get into the specifics of the history, but, suffice it to say, this province's government absolutely needs to see that the practices of the past that have been used to solicit votes come to an end.

This piece of legislation is expected to be sent to committee to be researched and commented on by professionals and Albertans. Now, without wasting this room's time about how and why this piece of legislation is heading to committee, I would like to say categorically that the Wildrose Party campaigned on a more open and transparent government, that would consistently send legislation to committee for expert opinion and opinions from Albertans all over this province. Rather than ram legislation through the House, as has happened in the past in this room and what appears is going to happen this fall before this legislative session is over, the Wildrose would send all important legislation to committee for comment. Using that strategy is a tremendous step in making government transparent and improving overall government accountability in this province.

I urge all members of the House to support this very important bill. By doing so, we'll be letting the taxpayers of this province, the folks that pay the freight in this province, know that the people that they have sent to this building to create legislation and to run their government on their behalf are listening.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of Bill 203. Bill 203 adds a section to the Election Act that ensures that the government does not use its resources to aid in partisan campaigning during a writ or election period. There are many issues that all members of this House can positively subscribe to, and one of them is strengthening the democratic processes and practices of this House. It is appropriate that we take some time.

Madam Speaker, the Speaker earlier today referred to the threads that tie us together, and I would have us dwell for a few moments on the threads of democracy that tie us to all free liberal democracies, especially in France. We remember that it was the great enlightenment philosophers like Voltaire and Rousseau and Montesquieu that encouraged and enhanced the democracy of France in their day. We remember and we pay tribute to these great men of democracy as we support and as we vote in favour of Bill 203.

It was Montesquieu that championed the separation of powers and the creation of a set of checks and balances, ensuring that the legislative, judicial, and executive powers of government would always be controlled by different groups of people and that a system of checks on each group's power would ensure that good and honest and transparent government would reflect the interests of the people and not simply of those that governed. Never is this idea of transparent and responsible government more important than during the exercise of choosing a government or in choosing a representative that the people support during a by-election.

In this bill we have the chance as a Legislature to ensure that elections and by-elections are fair for all candidates. This bill will ensure that the governing party regardless of political creed, regardless of political stripe, will not be able to use the financial resources of the state to try and sway voters.

This bill will ensure that ministers and other officials are still free to talk to the media about issues but that they will not be able to make partisan, unethical announcements designed to win votes. This bill recognizes that there are times during an emergency or a public health issue or a safety issue or for a pre-existing public awareness campaign for provincial authorities to make announcements.

I see here a bill that has balance and that moves forward the cause of democracy, so I believe that all members of this House should be able to stand and vote in favour of this bill and in the process strengthen the democratic rights and processes that ensure that it is truly the people that will rule this great province of Alberta. The NDP and indeed all parties of this Legislature should be able to support this legislative change. We have in the past co-operated, setting aside partisan politics to pass good legislation. This is such a bill, and it deserves the support of all in this House. It is therefore my pleasure, remembering past and present sacrifices around the world in all of the democratic nations, to say that I on behalf of my constituents wholeheartedly support this bill, and I will proudly vote in favour of this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand and speak to this bill. This bill talks about limiting government's ability to make announcements during election periods. It's a good bill. I congratulate the member for bringing it forward. It's an issue that needs to be addressed. I think it will help build confidence in Albertans.

One has to be concerned that one doesn't handcuff government's ability to look after emergencies, events that arise, things like that that happen during an election period, but I don't believe this bill in any way does that. I believe it does leave the room for government to act in cases of emergency or emergent events that have to be addressed right now while still protecting the reputation of the province and the government long term.

As I said earlier, I intend to support it. I thank the member for bringing it forward.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak very briefly to Bill 203. Bill 203 conforms very much to the values that drive our government with respect to fairness and transparency in terms of the electoral process. It conforms very much to commitments that we made during the election.

And I'll just note that it's not just a matter of words. Recently we were faced with a fairly tough by-election in Calgary-Foothills, and there were some major announcements that we wished to make with respect to projects and programs relative to the city of Calgary, and we refrained from making those announcements until after the by-election. The Premier's leadership on that, in my view, was principled and consistent. So it is something that we agree on, and I commend the hon. member opposite for this bill because I think it's a very good one.

Now, Madam Speaker, we are wanting to deal with this as part of a broader package of changes. The Assembly has created an all-party committee to deal with these matters, and it's my wish and it's our wish that this bill should be included in that committee's discussions because it's an important aspect of the work of that committee.

I can just indicate to you, Madam Speaker, that we support this bill and urge all members to support the bill. Subsequent to its adoption by the House, which I hope will occur at second reading, which is the approval of the bill in principle, it is our intention to move a referral motion to the special committee dealing with these matters in order that it can be incorporated into the broader package of reform that we hope this committee will bring forward to the House.

Thank you.

3:20

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very proud to stand and speak in support of Bill 203. Albertans I've talked to in the recent past have spoken out in support of Bill 203 as put forward by my colleague. They want transparency in government. They want democracy. Using taxpayers' own money during a writ for a general election or during a by-election serves neither democracy nor transparency. Albertans are tired of being bought off with their own money. They want fair, clear election processes. This bill, if we can get it right, will serve to restore democracy in Alberta.

Important bills such as this one demand open discussion in this House. Indeed all legislation worthy of being brought forth in this House deserves the fair debate from all sides and the input of the Albertans that we represent. Therefore, a lot of these bills should be going to committee such as was suggested by the hon. minister.

I will be supporting Bill 203 and look forward to more discussion on it. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm rising today to speak in favour of Bill 203, put forward by the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler. This is a bill whose principles I've fought for for several years now to restrict the ability of governments to use their resources to directly influence the outcomes of elections and by-elections in particular. Many of us recall, without very much delight, the last series of by-elections from the last Legislature, in which it was quite clear that government used government resources to influence the outcomes of those by-elections. But that is in the past.

This bill is about moving forward with a new set of rules that we can be proud of. The Ethics Commissioner spoke about the actions of the last case I just referred to and said that while it certainly violates the spirit of our ethics rules, there were no rules in place to prevent it. That's what this bill seeks to do.

Mr. Cooper: We should strengthen those rules.

Mr. Fildebrandt: We should be strengthening both our ethics rules and our electoral rules around us.

I'm pleased to see this go to committee because I believe that all bills of this Legislature should be going before committees, not just the odd select private member's bill. This is an opportunity for us to work together across party lines, between the government and the Official Opposition and the smaller parties, to put forward policies that benefit all Albertans. Albertans at their core want a fair electoral system that cannot be gamed by the government in power. While there might be other examples in contradiction of this, I will commend the government for doing the right thing and working across the aisle on this issue despite earlier confusion around the issue.

Madam Speaker, I'll keep my comments brief. On behalf of the members of Strathmore-Brooks I'm honoured to support this bill, and I hope that every member of every party in this Legislature does so as well. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Many years ago I had the opportunity of being a teacher in a small three-room school that taught native kids that were from the Blood reserve. When I came in, the principal told me: there are two things you need to know; you need to make sure that you love them and that you treat them fairly. As I applied those principles, I found that I was able to work with the kids, and it was a fantastic experience.

Now, many years later, I find myself in this House and faced with a similar experience. We had an opportunity at the beginning of the sitting to discuss Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta. In that time we made amendments; we talked about being able to send it to committee. The government's response to that was specifically that this wasn't a perfect bill but that it was a bill that was a good start and that it was something that we could move forward on and that they would vote for it in its present condition. I guess the question that I have is: is that a double standard? Yes, we do want all of our bills to go to committee. We think that that's the best approach and the most prudent approach for Albertans. We will get the best results. We'll have good direction from outside witnesses, and that is the best approach.

However, in this situation I can't help but see the double standard here. We are bringing forward a good bill. This is obviously something that has been accepted by the minister, as he said earlier, and he believes that the rest of the House should vote for it. I'm glad to see that there's a change. However, my question still remains. As I asked before, why is it that we are having to take this to committee when it could be voted for and passed in this House? It's a good bill, it's a good start, and if we use the same reasoning that was used before, there should be no double standard in this. This is why I believe it's the right approach and the thing that we can teach our children and throughout Alberta, that we'll be fair here and that we will do things the right way. That's why I'll be voting for this.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Do any other hon. members wish to speak on Bill 203? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I had a rough time during the election with many people at the door who had truly just lost faith in their government. They didn't think that we were the voice of the people that we were elected to represent, and as sort of that grade 6 government nerd in school it broke my heart, truly and honestly. So one of the reasons that I ran was to bring that faith back to the people, that we truly could make a difference here in this House. I think that Bill 203 is a good step in the right direction to allow fairness in election times.

Airdrie was actually promised a really great health care facility during the election. You know, half of us believed it was going to happen, and half knew it was an election promise. So it be told, we're back to zero, and the people of Airdrie are no longer protected with any sort of 24-hour health care facility. That wasn't fair, and I believe this is a really good step.

I am worried that this bill will get lost in committee. One of the hon. members from the government side actually was quoted:

When it comes to the other three acts included in our mandate, we have the ability to determine where we would like to focus our efforts, and I would suggest that this is critical. Given the size of each of these acts and how much opportunity there is, we will need to focus our time.

So will this bill be seriously considered in committee? It's a grave concern that I have.

But, you know, I encourage the members to vote yes on this bill as is. I think it's a great bill. I think it's a great step towards strengthening our system and democracy in the future. I will be supporting Bill 203, and I urge all members of this House to do the same.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler to close debate.

3:30

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It truly is an interesting day in the Chamber, and we always have these adventures in the Chamber here.

When members of the government earlier this session refused to co-operate with the Wildrose opposition at the time on Bill 203, an initiative to restrict inappropriate spending by governments during the 28-day election cycle, I was reminded of the history of the party and the patriarchs of that party. I was reminded of the traditions that members of the government – of this government – ostensibly claim to represent and defend. I'm referring to the traditions that were set down by the pillars of their party. J.S. Woodsworth, M.J. Coldwell, and Stanley Knowles are names that come to mind.

Woodsworth, the founding president of what is now the New Democratic Party, spoke of the need for co-operation within the Legislative Assembly. What are we to say when his descendants, the children of Woodsworth, refuse to co-operate? Major Coldwell, who followed in Woodsworth's path as president of their party, spoke repeatedly about the need for co-operation, the idea of co-operating with other people. It was even in the name of their party, Madam Speaker. They called it a co-operative federation. MP Stanley Knowles served for almost 40 years as an MP. He was the CCF and NDP House leader. In Parliament he set a standard for co-operation and professional parliamentary decorum that many in the Ottawa region and throughout the country speak about to this day. Do the members of this New Democratic Party across the way follow in the traditions of those men? Do they emulate Woodsworth, Coldwell, and Knowles?

It is interesting to note, Madam Speaker, that by rejecting the clear, nonpartisan provisions of Bill 203, members of this government do not spurn me, nor do they spurn the opposition Wildrose nor even the members of this Assembly. No. It reaches beyond that. They spurn the very traditions they claim in this Chamber to represent. By refusing to co-operate initially, these government members cast aspersions on the patriarchs of their own party. They show themselves as practitioners of high-handedness and procedural manipulation . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

Mr. Strankman: . . . that characterized the PC government of the past eight or 10 years.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, a point of order has been raised.

Mr. Strankman: Absolutely, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member in his closing with a point of order. However, I feel I'm forced to do that, especially in particular under Standing Order 23(i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member," and (j), "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder."

Madam Speaker, the facts of the history of this bill are well known. The government initially wished to refer it to the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, and at that time an error was made with respect to how that was to be done. It was an error. The government has stood up and admitted the error, corrected it, took corrective action to change the standing orders to allow a referral to the committee without attacking the integrity or the very existence of the bill, and has proceeded to do that. The government has also now stood in this place and indicated that it is prepared to support the bill at second reading.

The hon. member is attacking our party, comparing us unfavourably with the founders of our party and leading parliamentarians on the basis of something that happened some time ago, not what is happening now, not what is the intent of the government. We've corrected the mistake, and he needs to deal with the government's position as it is now and not pretend that it is still the same position that it was at that earlier time. In continuing to pursue his negative comparison of this government's actions with the founders of our party, he is imputing false and unavowed motives. He is casting aspersions on the party and on our actions, which, in my view, are entirely honourable. The hon. member should know better.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, you wish to respond?

Mr. Strankman: Yes, Madam Speaker, to the point of order. I wish to retract any aspersions that I may have presented awkwardly, and I would like to continue with my member's statement to follow up the end of the debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Continue.

Debate Continued

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I put forward Bill 203 as a measure that would allow all members in this Assembly to lock arms to prevent certain kinds of government spending from occurring during election campaigns. As I have pointed out previously in this Assembly, it is a measure that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, now Premier, called for on November 19 of last year. I have to confess that there was awkwardness and there was misunderstanding in the Chamber, but I still ask: is this government co-operators, or is it not? If the hon. House leader would bear with me as I wrap up my final paragraphs, do the members across the way know how to co-operate? If so, they need to show this to the members and the Speaker.

Madam Speaker, there was a famous newspaper headline that was shown in a movie about Nelson Mandela, where in the morning after his winning the election in South Africa a newspaper headline boldly said: he can win an election, but can he run a country? Rather than being offended by the brash headline, Mr. Mandela responded by saying to a couple of his colleagues: it's a fair question.

I, too, have a fair question, Madam Speaker, and a question in this same fair-minded view. These members across the way won an election, but now can they show the members of this Assembly and the people of Alberta that they can do more than that? Can they show the members of this Assembly that they know how to put down partisanship and co-operate when it is clearly in the public interest to do so? This motion could have been passed in this Assembly easily, and I wish to rest my case.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 203 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I move that Bill 203, Election (Restrictions on Government Advertising) Amendment Act, 2015, be referred to the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee.

[Motion carried]

Bill 204

Residential Tenancies (Safer Spaces for Victims of Domestic Violence) Amendment Act, 2015

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am honoured to rise today to commence the second reading of the Residential Tenancies (Safer Spaces for Victims of Domestic Violence) Amendment Act, 2015.

This bill will help bring down some of the barriers for survivors of domestic violence who are fleeing unsafe homes. This small change to the Residential Tenancies Act will have a huge impact on those who feel that they are unable to leave an abusive partner for fear of the financial implications of breaking a lease.

The month of November marks Family Violence Prevention Month. For us here in the Legislature, we should be reflecting on the barriers facing survivors of domestic violence. How can we remove these barriers to ensure that survivors and their families can live their lives free of fear and uncertainty?

Across Canada over the last few weeks provincial governments have been examining how to better protect survivors of domestic violence. How can we remove these barriers so that they can feel believed when breaking the cycle of domestic violence? I applaud the legislation introduced by the Ontario government amending their Residential Tenancies Act as well as the government of Manitoba, who today during their throne speech promised paid leave for victims of domestic violence, a first in Canada and a much-needed step forward.

Bill 204 was drafted over the last few months after many consultations with stakeholders such as police services, women's shelters, market and nonmarket landlords, housing organizations, and advocacy groups. The stakeholders I worked with all told me that in our province women don't feel safe because it is no longer safe for them to leave their homes.

It happens all the time, Madam Speaker. When women are in situations of family violence, it's messy and complicated, and the logistical challenges can create unneeded barriers. We need a strong structure to empower women by creating safer spaces and dismantling barriers. These women are already victimized and already distrustful thanks to a culture that tells them that no one will believe them.

There is no mention of domestic violence in the Residential Tenancies Act. In order to end domestic violence, we need to take a collaborative approach. In a letter I received from a landlord, the landlord highlighted the need for this legislation, that survivors of domestic violence need to have the freedom and security to seek help, that survivors' interaction with their landlords can be one that promotes change and facilitates a safer dialogue, and as the landlord put it, "It is a no-brainer." Victims of domestic violence should not fear repercussions when leaving a violent situation.

Again, I want to repeat that in our current Residential Tenancies Act there are no mentions of domestic violence, and there are no protections for survivors of domestic violence. These survivors trying to break the cycle of violence face numerous social and financial barriers.

I would now like to read you verbatim some quotes from women currently staying in women's shelters in Calgary. These women had to flee for their safety and understand all too well the challenges that survivors of domestic violence face when trying to change their situation. Quote: my husband didn't want his name on the lease; if the bills were under my name, they were my responsibility. End quote. Quote: I had to leave because my name was not on the lease, and my landlord sided with my partner. End quote. As you can see here, Madam Speaker, these experiences are quite diverse. Quote: I remember a woman who needed an emergency protection order for the police to remove her partner from the apartment; her worry was that he would damage the unit and leave her to pay for it because his name was not on the lease. End quote. Quote: I never wanted my name on the lease; it makes me nervous; what if I have to leave?

End quote.

We must do better. To put this into perspective, Madam Speaker, in Calgary alone 4 out of 10 people are or have been in relationships that are abusive or showing signs of abuse. If I were to go out with my friends, it might be one of them or one of their friends. This is an issue that affects us all. It crosses all socioeconomic levels in this province. Approximately 200,000 adults in Alberta live with family violence across all ages, income levels, and ethnicities. It has been stated by Andrea Silverstone, co-chair of the Calgary domestic violence committee, that even one incident of family violence is too much. I think we can all agree on that statement.

These survivors have to make a tough decision not only for themselves but also for the safety of their families. We need to support their ability to break the cycle of domestic violence by working with them to break that silence.

According to a 2012 Leger survey 1 in 10 men in Alberta said that it was okay to hit a woman if she made him feel really angry. Madam Speaker, we have a problem in this province when it comes to violence. It is well known that 1 in 3 women will experience violence, but only 1 in 10 of them will actually report it. The Canadian coalition for policy alternatives' annual study on women's equality in Canada remarked that 70 per cent of incidents of domestic violence go unreported. Over the last five years 7.6 per cent of Albertans have reported having experienced domestic violence. Our province can't even begin to support survivors through traditional measures when those who have experienced violence don't even have a way to support themselves to get out.

Women make up 85 per cent of survivors of domestic violence, but let me be clear that this legislation will help all Albertans who are survivors of domestic violence. Since introducing this bill, I have heard from Albertans all across the province. They are hopeful that we as legislators are having this discourse. They are hopeful that this bill will begin an open dialogue as we work towards breaking that stigma around domestic violence. Survivors of domestic violence are hopeful that this bill will help those in similar circumstances. Organizations and advocacy groups who work with survivors of domestic violence on a daily basis are hopeful that this will support options for escaping violence and helping families move towards a healthy life.

We must put partisan politics aside to find solutions. I ask you to take that step with me as we move forward towards an Alberta free of violence. Albertans are ready to bring their voices to the discussion on ending domestic violence, violence against women, and violence against indigenous women. By having this discussion here and acknowledging the barriers in place, we will be sending the message that survivors can step out of the shadows. That is what Albertans want, and we must strive towards it. This bill is a first step. This bill will remove barriers that currently face survivors trying to flee their abusers and will help break that cycle of violence.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. I look forward to this important dialogue.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. First of all, I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Bow for bringing forward this bill. I really truly applaud her efforts to help protect women fleeing violence and domestic abuse. Especially in the month of November, that's really fitting. Good timing. The spirit of this legislation is actually really important, and it deserves really thoughtful consideration. I've spoken with many interested parties since the bill was first introduced and have had really meaningful conversations with many of those. I hope to hear more feedback from Albertans after second reading.

I know this bill will take an important step in removing a barrier to families that are escaping domestic violence. When an individual is trying to escape a terrible situation of violence and domestic abuse, the last thing that should be stopping them is a rental agreement. Sadly, for some victims of domestic violence this situation could literally be life or death. According to Stats Canada in 2013 there were more than 10,000 reported cases of domestic violence in Alberta, a rate of 623 per 100,000 people and more than twice the national rate. Domestic violence is a large problem in Alberta's society, and sadly, as our economy worsens, so too does the domestic violence in our communities. I know that my community is seeing an increase in domestic violence as our economy slows down.

When women escape a violent situation, they can face difficulties in finding the resources that they need. According to the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters' recent annual report 10,205 women and children found haven at provincial shelters. Sadly, nearly twice that number, 19,251, were turned away for lack of space. A victim is most vulnerable immediately after leaving an abusive relationship and trying to find somewhere new to live. The first 24 hours are crucial. Shelters and social housing must be available to meet the needs of victims of domestic violence and their children that may be fleeing a volatile situation.

In my community of Airdrie a dedicated group of volunteers is working hard to open a women's shelter so that women can stay in our community with their children instead of relocating all the way to Calgary, often away from family and community support, and very often there's no room there either.

I want to take a quick second to applaud this government on its plan to increase space in women's shelters across this province. There is no more important role by a government than to ensure that vulnerable Albertans are protected.

As I said previously, Alberta ranks dead last of all the provinces in Canada when it comes to domestic violence. There is much in Alberta we can be proud of, but we certainly need to improve in this area. The road is long, and the work is hard. However, just because the task is difficult, it doesn't mean we don't start.

Bill 204 would allow a victim of domestic abuse to get a certificate, and after providing notice to their landlord along with their certificate, they must be released from their lease agreement. This change could remove one large financial barrier for someone living in fear and help make the decision to leave easier. I certainly believe in the spirit of this legislation and the work that it is aiming to do to make Alberta safer for victims of domestic violence. Ending the stigma that surrounds domestic violence is so important, and legislation like Bill 204 could be a big part of doing just that.

There are some concerns that I do have surrounding the logistics of the legislation such as from whom a victim of domestic violence can receive a certificate or, perhaps, the unintended consequences that victims may face moving forward and securing housing. However, these questions and clarifications that I have about the legislation will be best served through discussion in Committee of the Whole.

I know that this one bill, Bill 204, will not stop domestic violence; it won't fix the problem overnight. No one bill could hope to achieve that goal. The journey away from domestic violence starts with a step, one brave step, when you finally say: no more. This one bill, Bill 204, will take a step in helping to improve the situation for just one individual. My hope is this, that Bill 204 will remove a barrier from someone, which will enable them to take that first step away from a violent situation and not be stopped for financial reasons and kept in a cycle of violence. Nobody wants that, Madam Speaker. Domestic violence is the very pitfall in our society, one that we must fight every day to overcome. As I said earlier, no one bill or sweeping proclamation will accomplish just that. However, small steps will make up to a whole, and possibly someday bills such as 204 will not be needed.

I commend the Member for Calgary-Bow for taking the initiative to introduce this legislation. We need to break the silence that surrounds domestic violence in our province and find tangible ways to end the cycle of violence. I believe that Bill 204 is on the right track to do just that.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise this afternoon to speak in favour of Bill 204 and commend the Member for Calgary-Bow for bringing it forward. In brief, anything we can do in this House to prevent domestic violence and protect victims of domestic violence is a good thing. The Alberta Council of Women's Shelters' most recent annual report showed that just over 10,000 women and children found haven at provincial shelters between April 2014 and March 2015. More disturbingly, nearly twice that number, 19,251, were turned away due to lack of space.

Now, I do want to praise this government for their recent investment in women's shelters. It is an important step. I also think it's important that we acknowledge the work that has gone on in Alberta. In many ways Alberta is a leading jurisdiction not just in this country but around the world in dealing with domestic violence through our court system, through organizations like HomeFront in Calgary, and other similar organizations around the province where domestic violence cases are seen in a specialized court. That's very important. It has greatly reduced the recidivism rate. It's a focus on counselling for those who are victims of domestic violence, for their children, and often for the perpetrators as well to learn that this is not an appropriate way to have a relationship, and it prevents future domestic violence, which is equally important.

A major issue, of course, that this bill deals with in domestic violence is the inability to leave the relationship. Being able to break a lease on reasonable notice would remove the financial and social hurdles to ending that relationship and preventing further abuse.

It's also important to note, Madam Speaker, that this bill is gender neutral, allowing for victims of domestic violence, both male and female, to ensure that they have options, but it is very important to note that the vast – vast – majority of victims of domestic violence are women.

This legislation also is based on other provinces' legislation. Quebec, Manitoba, and Nova Scotia all have similar legislation. Alberta would be the fourth province to have this legislation. It is an opportunity, then, for Alberta to take somewhat of a leadership role. The fact that other provinces beyond those three have not taken this up is certainly not a reason for this Assembly not to act.

I encourage all members to support this bill, and I once again thank the Member for Calgary-Bow for bringing forward this important issue. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very pleased to stand in support of Bill 204, the residential tenancies amendment act, and again I thank the member for bringing this forward. I recently attended a walk for a women's shelter in Lac La Biche. At that time, the previous day, we had just been introduced to Bill 204. I asked the front-line workers and management of that facility to have a look at Bill 204 and provide their input, which I think is very important. They're the ones dealing with these issues on a daily basis, and it is imperative that we have their input to ensure that we get this very important piece of legislation right the first time.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise in support of Bill 204 and say: it is about time. Thank you very much, hon. member, for putting it forward.

Did you read Insight: Domestic Silence in the Edmonton Journal on Saturday?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, there is a tradition in this House that we don't allow props.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Okay. Sorry.

On September 5, 1972, five days after I was married, I realized that there was a problem but could not put my finger on it. Words were spoken, and I felt a shiver on my back and a knot in my stomach. I didn't know it then, but the trap was being set, and I was the game.

The trap was released to some degree on Sunday, July 19, 1981, almost nine years later, when my daughters and I got on a Greyhound bus for a very difficult 62-hour journey across the country, ending in Yellowknife. The trap was finally broken in May of 1992 when I learned that my ex-husband was dead, and I could stop looking over my shoulder.

My support for this bill comes from the middle of this experience in this trap, a trap that was, intentionally or unintentionally, supported by society. Silence, blame, guilt, and little to no support grew this injustice for decades if not centuries.

Three times I left with my kids, twice I went to shelters, and twice I was forced to return or live on the street. Both times I returned, and the violence got worse, and the threats, which he could have carried out at any time, became more frequent and more intimidating. Broken bones, black eyes, sexual assault, and two miscarriages as a result of this abuse were only some of the physical atrocities I had to endure.

I did not have this kind of experience in my life before I was married, so I was not prepared for it nor for how I could protect my children and myself. I prayed. I asked God: "Why is this happening to me? I'm a good person. I've never intentionally hurt anybody or anything in my life." Someone said to me: God helps those who help themselves. I figured I needed to do something, and I did. I finally got away to a women's shelter and tried to figure out what to do and where to go. Suffice to say, this attempt was unsuccessful as the limit at the shelter was two weeks, and I had nowhere to go. At the end of the two weeks I was forced to return.

The next time I left I was a little more prepared. I had contacted a lawyer before I left. I saved some money and then left again when I saw the chance to run. I met with the lawyer, but I couldn't get a court date for a month. The time in the shelter was only three weeks. Again I had to go back. There were no supports left after the shelter. This time the abuse was so bad that I thought I would be killed, especially when I awoke from a very tentative sleep with a gun to the back of my head and the clicking sound of the hammer as the trigger was pulled. There were no bullets in the gun, and he laughed hysterically. He beat me, he raped me, and then he threatened that the next time there would be bullets and that he would kill our daughters first to hurt me and then kill me. I knew it would be just a matter of time before he followed through on these threats. I called the police as soon as I could, and he was arrested and then released on his own recognizance, and a restraining order was put in place.

I gathered whatever I could, I begged some friends and family for some money to get out of there, and I called the police 16 times in two weeks before he was arrested again, not so much for assaulting me but because he broke the restraining order. This time he was held in remand until the issue was settled in court. In court he was found guilty and sentenced to a year in jail, but this sentence was suspended, all but the days he'd spent in remand. He turned, and as he was leaving the courtroom, he said that he would kill me. I asked the judge how he could let him go. The judge said to me: it's a marital issue; get a divorce, and leave. He proceeded then to give me a lecture on how much it was going to cost to keep him in jail.

When I returned to my house, he was there, holding my children and my mother-in-law at the point of a gun. At the end of a four-hour ordeal his mother rose and asked God to help us, and he ran from the house. We spent a few more days barricaded in the house before we finally had the opportunity to get out and get on that bus and run for our lives.

This should never have happened to me or these situations to anybody else. My children have been scarred for their lives, and I will be horrified if anybody in this Chamber votes against this bill.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member, for sharing that very painful experience with us.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for sharing your story with us today. I rise in support of this bill, and I'm honoured to rise in support of this bill. Statistically the most dangerous time in an abusive relationship is the time after the victim leaves the abuser. Leaving an abusive relationship is a difficult process, and we can make it easier by passing legislation that helps remove these barriers to leaving.

The RCMP in Leduc estimate they will respond to around 427 domestic violence calls this year, representing approximately only 20 per cent of those actually affected in our community by family violence. If the reporting rates reflected the rate of incidents, the number would actually be around 2,135 cases. As was said before, one is too many. Families in Leduc-Beaumont can go to the closest women's shelter, which is the Camrose Women's Shelter, but they need the ability to break a lease without penalty in order to move on.

Families leave abusive homes with few possessions and resources, and they need to be able to make this clean break with as little connection to the abuser as possible. Some of the barriers to leaving an abuser are the costs of starting over, legal proceedings, and the fear a victim may have of being around their abuser another time. If this legislation is passed, a victim can break a lease without needing their abuser's consent, so it removes a potential block from them for leaving or another opportunity for violence. This pertains to women and men equally.

In many cases the decision to leave or stay hinges on challenges the victim may face after leaving, which includes providing for themselves or their children, not wanting to raise their children in poverty and fear and escalating violence, and the complexity of their relationship with their abuser. These citizens, already victimized and already distrustful thanks to a culture that tells them that no one will believe them, don't want to break a lease and run from a landlord. They just want to keep themselves and their children safe. This bill is another step forward following the I Believe You campaign. We as a government need to show survivors of domestic violence and sexual assault that we do believe them and that this government is committed to giving them back their voice. We need to empower people to take that first step in breaking the cycle of violence.

Madam Speaker, it is almost 2016. We as men need to do better, we as a Legislature need to do better, and we as a society need to do better. I urge everyone to support this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. An honour to stand in support of Bill 204, Residential Tenancies (Safer Spaces for Victims of Domestic Violence) Amendment Act, 2015. I want to commend the member for her courageous statement. There's nothing like putting a human face on some of the issues that we're talking about. Having spent the last three months on the mental health and addictions review, I can tell you that there are a lot of stories that are important for us to hear that have to do with people with both mental health issues and addictions not getting the support they need, whether it's in the form of housing or if it's in the form of addictions treatment and mental health treatment, that end up in situations that put partners, spouses, others, children at risk.

This bill proposes to amend the act to make it easier for victims of domestic violence to leave an abusive partner or spouse and to establish a process for them to terminate tenancy early and without a penalty. Clearly, everything we can do to make it easier for women and children and partners of any gender relationship to be freed from danger is good.

Alberta has historically had one of the highest rates of domestic violence in the country. It has to do, I think, with not only the culture that we've grown out of. To some extent, I guess, we all recognize the unique features of Alberta's history and how it's created sometimes the conditions for abusive relationships. It hasn't challenged the environment of abusive relationships. Bullying, mental illness, and addictions, that contribute to that, have not been addressed as aggressively as one would hope. Also, particularly now with the economic downturn in our province and the shortage of women's shelters in this province, it's my understanding that we turned away 14,000 visits last year. I and others, I think, are grateful that this government has stepped up with more support for women's shelters this year, definitely an important step in reducing this appalling rate of domestic violence.

Many of you may know the former Liberal MLA for Edmonton-Highlands-Beverly, Alice Hanson, famous in these areas for her private member's bill, Bill 214, the Victims of Domestic Violence Act, from 1996. That was a groundbreaking piece of legislation that made it possible for a victim to obtain an emergency protection order – in 1996 – granting exclusive occupation of his or her residence for a specified period. Importantly, Hanson's private member's bill acknowledged that perhaps the greatest barrier victims face to escaping an abusive spouse or partner is not wanting to be on the street, such a basic, basic protection and disincentive. This is particularly true in situations with children, of course.

The bill sought at that time to rectify this decades-old injustice by establishing a simplified mechanism whereby a judge could order the abuser to leave and impose additional restrictions. Despite the fact that Hanson's Bill 214 enjoyed widespread support on both sides of the House, the PC government actually hoisted the bill, effectively killing it. Two years later, in what many viewed as a fairly cynical and petty move, the Klein government introduced and passed Bill 19, the Protection Against Family Violence Act, which was essentially a repackaging of Alice Hanson's legislation as a government bill.

We enthusiastically support this bill on this side of the House in the Alberta Liberal caucus and proudly reference Alice Hanson's legacy in encouraging a new way of addressing domestic violence in the province. Any measures that we can consider that would make it easier for victims of violence to be identified and protected should be considered, and I applaud the proponent of this amendment.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Lethbridge-East for her impassioned speech. It is my pleasure to support the Member for Calgary-Bow's Bill 204. The Member for Calgary-Bow has worked with stakeholders to put together a bill that will have immediate impact for survivors of domestic violence if passed. While this bill is a small change, it's a big step forward to make it easier for survivors of domestic violence to find new housing if needed. This bill would allow survivors to flee an abusive environment without the fear of repercussions for breaking a lease. We have an opportunity to empower people to leave potentially life-threatening situations, to break the cycle of violence. Everything should be done to give power back to the survivors of domestic violence and their families. Anyone leaving a violent situation should not have to pay a financial penalty.

Even today some still ask why people being abused don't leave. If it's a life-or-death choice, why stay? The truth is that it's not as simple as picking up and leaving. For some it's a choice between one volatile situation and another, which is not a choice at all. When survivors leave abusers, the risk that that violence will escalate increases. The abusive partner may control the finances or be the sole source of finances for the family. The abusive partner may have destroyed the survivor's credit or forced joint accounts, so starting over financially is not feasible.

In research done by Statistics Canada it was found that after separation a woman's standard of living decreases by 23 to 29 per cent. The act of leaving an abusive partner or family member is already a difficult decision, with potential legal battles ahead. Survivors may need to file for divorce, divide assets, and fight for custody. The last thing anyone in that position needs is possible legal action from a disgruntled landlord.

A recent Alberta survey showed that 90 per cent of Albertans polled believe that family violence prevention should be an urgent priority for the government of Alberta. As a government we have a responsibility to help and protect people when they are in greatest need. Any small change we can make to help survivors of domestic violence should be made, and our government wants to do just that. We ran on a platform of improving gender equality here in Alberta.

According to a study from the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives Calgary ranks as the third-worst Canadian city for women. This needs to change, and that change must come from us. That's why I support the Member for Calgary-Bow's bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today in support of Bill 204. You know, I've had the privilege of being around the precinct area for the last number of years in one capacity or another, and I can look to a few times in the House that I will never forget. Today is one of those days. The bravery and the courage that were shown today by the Member for Lethbridge-East are hard to even comprehend, not only in the horrific, horrific situation, but the bravery that she displayed again today is absolutely incredible, and I am privileged and honoured to be here and to support in whatever capacity I can moving this bill forward and just being so thankful for your comments and your bravery, both then as well as today. So for that I say thank you.

I'd also like to say thank you to the Member for Calgary-Bow for bringing this important piece of legislation forward. As my hon. colleague from Airdrie mentioned, the road to ending domestic abuse is a long, long, horrific road, and it is so disheartening, in a time that we live in today, that we still have to go down that road. It's disheartening to know that even this evening there will be people in their very homes who fear for their lives and for their children's lives. I can't begin to comprehend what that must be like, to walk up to the doorstep of the place that's supposed to be the safest only to find the horrors that wait beyond that door.

It's so, so disappointing that we have to, in a time like today, put into place preventive measures for this. It's my hope that we will get to a place right across this country and in this province where this sort of legislation isn't needed, because we can all treat each other in a manner that we are worthy of being treated in, but unfortunately we're not there, so we need to take the steps that are necessary to do the things that we can do. It's my belief that one of the very most important things that we can do as legislators is to protect the most vulnerable, and that's exactly what I believe the intent of this piece of legislation is, with the goal of ensuring that the most vulnerable Albertans are protected.

I know that as the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills I will be pleased to support this piece of legislation, as I believe all of my colleagues will support this piece of legislation, that is critically important to taking a first step down that long and painful journey to ending domestic abuse and violence.

Having said that, I look forward to hearing more of the debate. I also look forward to reaching out to some stakeholders. We play a critical role: to make sure that we get the legislation right, just like the hon. member who proposed it, just like the private members on the government side and the private members here, to ensure that we're doing everything that we can to strengthen the legislation, to make sure we're getting it right, to consulting with stakeholders – I know that I've heard from one stakeholder, and I look forward to hearing from others – just to make sure that we continue to do our due diligence. That's not to say that we shouldn't expedite the process but to make sure that we're hearing back and that we do get it right because it's so critically important that we get it right. If this piece of legislation only helps one Albertan fleeing from a horrible, horrible situation, it will have been worth it.

For that I say thank you to the Member for Calgary-Bow and to the members of this House, and I look forward to seeing this important piece of legislation moved through the stages of debate, and hopefully one day we can point back to this day, when the bravery and courage that we saw today and the willingness of the member to propose it will in fact have helped, hopefully, more than just one, but even if it's just one, it's enough.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you, Member for Calgary-Bow, for bringing this bill forward, and thank you, Member for Lethbridge-East, for having the courage this afternoon to rise and speak your story. As a social worker and as an individual I have worked in women's shelters and with women and children and families in the community fleeing domestic violence. Statistically a woman is abused an average of 35 times before she finds the courage to come forward and tell someone. Edmonton-based women's shelter WIN House has stated that 267 women and 365 children reported family violence in 2014-15. A total of 2,022 crisis calls were made during this time. As I have stated before in this Assembly, Edmonton and Calgary rank second- and third-worst respectively as safe Canadian cities for women according to a July 2015 Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives study. This needs to change.

Shelters, police services, advocacy organizations: all have suggested that in our province women don't feel safe because there is no safe way for them to leave their home. These women, already victimized and already distrustful thanks to a culture that tells them that no one will believe them, do not want to break a lease and run from a landlord. They just want to keep themselves and their children safe. This bill will allow survivors of domestic violence to flee from an unsafe environment without the fear of repercussions of breaking a lease. While we are only making a small change with this bill to the Residential Tenancies Act, it can save lives. It can ensure that those who are in unsafe homes can leave without financial penalty. We must put partisan politics aside to act in the greater good of all Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you, Member.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In all honesty, there's not that much I can add to the debate that hasn't been said already today, certainly most so with the powerful words we heard from the Member for Lethbridge-East, for which I thank her very much. I do just want to take a moment to say thank you to the Member for Calgary-Bow for introducing this bill. It was only a few short weeks ago that I received an e-mail from my constituency assistant, my caseworker, bringing to my attention a recent case that we had dealt with in our office, where a 64-year-old woman, a senior citizen, had been forced to flee her home to a shelter operated by SAGE here in Edmonton. My caseworker at that point raised this to my attention and indicated her concern with the difficulties with the Residential Tenancies Act. So it was with great pleasure that I saw the introduction of Bill 204 last week and had the opportunity to share that with my caseworker, who was very pleased to see it as well.

I did just want to take a moment today to recognize that this is legislation that's badly needed. I thank the member for bringing it forward, and I look forward to showing my support.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am proud to stand today in support of Bill 204, introduced by the Member for Calgary-Bow, whom I've had the privilege of working alongside with on this bill, because it's necessary. Ending the cycle of poverty is something that we need to take action on, and I think it's been made clear with situations such as casework, with experiences shared here. It takes a co-operative approach to do it. It takes landlords, it takes government, and it takes a system that makes people feel like they are supported when they take that brave step, because it's hard.

It's hard to decide that they are going to leave their home even if they are in that situation. So the solutions that are proposed by this amendment are commendable. They're a fresh perspective, and that's what I hope the young members of this Legislature continue to bring forward.

I've worked continuously throughout my life as an advocate for vulnerable people, and with this amendment we'll see us building a broad scope of skills and tools that are available to the social workers, to the police force, to everyone that helps aid and support the people in this situation. To us it's frustrating. It's frustrating to know that it can be a piece of paper that keeps them there, that keeps the cycle of poverty continuing. It's something as simple as this that starts creating a system that actually supports the empowerment of our people, starts ending the cycle of poverty.

I commend the Member for Calgary-Bow for coming up with this idea, for putting in the work with consultation, and I'm proud to be supporting it today. I know that in Strathcona county there are multiple initiatives, and there is constant talk of how we're going to address the issue of family violence. There are initiatives such as men as allies, where we talk about the role of every single individual, from men to women, addressing that everyone needs to be involved in ending this. Having those conversations that educate men and women on how to create healthy relationships is also part of that conversation because healthy relationships and talking about that are critical to actually developing the end of this goal, because that's when we'll see the end of the cycle.

I know that in moving forward with this, we'll have to debate the details of this bill, and it is with that that I'm looking forward to the Committee of the Whole discussion. I'm looking forward to supporting this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you, MLA for Lethbridge-East, for sharing your story. It's very near and dear to my heart. I'm rising today in support of Bill 204. This bill is a step towards change. We need to help people take that first step to break the cycle of domestic violence. Domestic violence affects males, females, young, old, wealthy, and poor. We as a government need to show victims that we believe them and support them and that we are committed to giving them back their voice. This is a much-needed step to ending the cycle of violence.

Thank you to the Member for Calgary-Bow for bringing it forward.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm rising in support of Bill 204. I wanted to discuss it because it's a step towards a larger discourse in this province that needs to happen. Intimate partner violence flourishes in an environment where the misuse of power against the vulnerable or less powerful is tolerated. That environment may be behind closed doors or in the larger community, and we see it with bullying all the time. That's why we need to work to prevent violence and build a society where this is not tolerated anymore.

We've heard from the member herself that one of the most common reasons for a survivor of domestic violence to stay is because they feel they can't leave their home or they haven't been successful getting the abuser to leave. All forms of violence and abuse are serious criminal matters, with a huge impact on society.

Personally, I wanted to talk a little bit about the impact this has on our children and the cycle and the future of what this means. Generally speaking, people aren't abusive unless they've been abused. If we can stop the cycle now, we can stop the next generation of children from growing up in this and stop the next generation of adults from abusing other people. That's so, so important. There are estimates that in 30 to 40 per cent of reported cases where the partner is abused, so are the children. However, there's a growing understanding that simply witnessing intimate partner violence in their home can affect these children the same way that abuse directed at them would affect them. The first step for anyone in or close to an abusive relationship is to get help, and this bill can help with that.

About a year and a half ago in the city of Spruce Grove there was a woman who was killed by her partner. She had five children, and the lives of those children are forever impacted by that. Forever impacted. There is no positive that comes out of intimate partner violence.

We talk about domestic violence survivors; they're all victims first. Things like this bill, tools, can help them become survivors, not just victims.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I hesitate to rise to speak to this bill, but I've been on a journey for the last six, seven years trying to help victimization in families. My wife is a social worker, and she saw the need for providing an opportunity for victims of family violence to escape their situation. For a period of three years we had a facility that we allowed a foundation to operate in our community as a shelter. We learned a lot through that, the committee that was involved, and it's a very complex issue. This is one piece of a very complex puzzle. We can start today by fixing some of the hurdles that are faced by victims of violence. I commend the Member for Calgary-Bow for bringing it forward, and I thank her for that.

I also recognize that we have a duty and a responsibility to also work towards being able to more easily provide services to those victims beyond the two weeks, beyond the three weeks to allow the system to operate more freely and efficiently to get these shelters approved and actually operating. I am currently working with a group in Morinville, the Jessica Martel Memorial Foundation, and look forward to trying to help them move forward with a facility that can bring relief in this area and that some of the learnings that my wife and I have been able to experience previously will be able to help them to set up housing that can be more sustainable long term.

I speak in favour, and I find it very refreshing that we can as legislators come together around this issue and recognize the need to try and help as much as possible. This is one piece of the very complicated puzzle of starting to stem and break that cycle of violence in our homes.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any others wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just want to add a few more elements to this debate. We have already done a number of things because it is a very complex issue. We have formed the Status of Women ministry. It's one of the pieces. We have put $15 million to annually increase supports as well. We are in the I Believe You campaign. So we are taking all of these steps, and this is just one more part of that picture. I do want to support this particular motion.

The aspect or perspective that I want to bring is First Nations victims and victims in rural areas, where a women's shelter may not even exist. They do need an option of some place to go. That would mean leaving the community, and leaving it for two weeks or three weeks and coming back is not the solution. So as important as women's shelters are, if there are none there, there does need to be a more permanent option, and this safe place, safe tenancy may offer that option for those people.

Again, I would just like to close very quickly by mentioning that in my constituency Camrose does have a women's shelter. There were many hundreds of women and children in particular who were helped there, but there were more who were not able to even receive that assistance. So it's very important that we continue to support women's shelters and provide the second one. In Camrose they did receive 107 ladies self-identified as aboriginals. I applaud the Camrose Women's Shelter for accepting those ladies, but it points out to me that we need to provide support everywhere throughout Alberta. This may be a motion that would help make that available and possible.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. I'd like to start, of course, by thanking the members for Calgary-Bow and Lethbridge-East for the strength and power that they have contributed to this House today. I also want to say that in many ways, after a 33-year career in the area of social work, particularly in the area of family violence, I feel that this is a profound moment for me to be a part of. So thank you both for doing that.

One thing I also want to remind the House is that this is merely a step in a much longer and more profound journey. What we've identified today is simply one structural barrier that women are facing as they flee family violence, and I would like us to continue to recognize that there are multiple other structural problems and barriers that make family violence possible and make resolving family violence difficult. If we're truly against family violence, then we need to ask ourselves about all of those other structural barriers as well. Every time that we see a lack of child care spaces, we should see a structural barrier. Every time that we see a lack of women's voices in our schools or in our hospitals or in our Legislature, we should see a structural barrier. Every time we diminish public services that overwhelmingly support women to achieve success, we create structural barriers.

I want us to continue to have this conversation and continue to identify these structural barriers and stand proud again and again and again to reduce and eliminate each of these structural barriers. Let us not forget that this is one step amongst many.

Thank you.

4:40

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I thank the Member for Calgary-Bow for bringing this bill forward. Having worked in the area of criminal law and criminal defence, also having worked with the Elizabeth Fry Society in Edmonton, in the domestic violence courtroom particularly, one of the issues that I saw come forward regularly would be that the police would charge the abuser, and the victim and abuser would attend court. The victim, being the leaseholder in many situations, however maybe not the income earner, would find themselves in a situation where they would be wanting to undo their having called the police, not by reason of not having been assaulted, which they typically were, but by reason of concern for their financial well-being and future. Their goal in trying to persuade the police and court services workers that we didn't need to proceed with charges against the abuser was that they were concerned about being able to pay the rent.

I think that this piece of legislation provides an out for women who find themselves in that situation. While it may seem like that is a specific circumstance, it's not unique by any means. This was something that occurred regularly, that we would have women, in particular, coming forward and saying that they were concerned about their ability to pay the rent, so they wanted to be able to undo the process that had begun with respect to charging the abuser and the order of protection that had then been placed and prevented them from returning.

This piece of legislation does some good work with respect to giving power to victims to not have to concern themselves so greatly with the financial repercussions of having taken the bold steps of making a complaint to the police in the first place. I commend the Member for Calgary-Bow. I think that this is an excellent step forward when discussing victims of domestic violence and the peripheral circumstances that affect them.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any others? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'd like to indicate as well my support for this bill, Bill 204, Residential Tenancies (Safer Spaces for Victims of Domestic Violence) Amendment Act, 2015. I think this act by no means deals with all of the issues relative to intimate partner violence and tendencies, but it deals with some very core pieces in a very, very significant way and is a major step forward, as far as I'm concerned, in the objective of all members of the House of making life safer for families and for children.

I want to commend the hon. member for this piece of legislation. This, in my view, is an exemplary piece of legislation as a private member's bill. The hon. member has worked very hard in terms of reaching out and doing the kinds of outreach that is necessary, talking to a wide range of groups – police agencies, people who deal with women and families who are facing domestic violence, including shelters – and a whole range of organizations. I want to commend the hon. member for her work. This is the kind of work as a private member that I think sets a high standard for all of us, and I just want to pay tribute to the hon. member and her hard work in putting this particular piece of legislation forward. I think it's wonderful.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any others wishing to speak to the bill?
Seeing none, the hon. member to close debate.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is an honour to close the debate on the second reading of the Residential Tenancies (Safer Spaces for Victims of Domestic Violence) Amendment Act, 2015. I would like to thank the constituents of Calgary-Bow, the stakeholders who helped shape this bill, and my fellow MLAs here for continuing the discourse on ending violence here in this province.

I would also like to specifically thank the Member for Lethbridge-East for sharing her very personal and moving experience with domestic violence. Thank you for showing Albertans that this issue affects us all. You are a role model, and I commend you for your strength and courage. I believe your story highlights the struggles that women face still to leave an abusive situation.

We all have a role to play when finding solutions to ending violence. Domestic violence does not discriminate and affects all Albertans across all demographics. This bill will help Albertans who are survivors of domestic violence by removing some of the barriers and allowing survivors to be heard. Let me be clear, Madam Speaker. The Residential Tenancies Act makes no mention of domestic violence. This bill proposes a small amendment which will have a great effect on the lives of survivors fleeing domestic violence and on their families. We are talking about everyday Albertans. These are our neighbours, our co-workers, our families, and our seniors. We need to enable them to be able to break the cycle of violence. This bill is a first step. We must take further action as a Legislature to work with stakeholders to come up with solutions to end violence in Alberta.

I have heard from many front-line organizations that deal with domestic violence on a daily basis – and I applaud them for the tireless work that they do; thank you – organizations such as Carya who are devoted to making stronger families and communities, who have shared with me their support.

I think it is admirable that the government is taking steps to increase the level of safety for those citizens experiencing domestic violence. Security of housing is a critical first step for those seeking to rebuild their lives in a violence free environment. This need for safety is . . . more pronounced when children are involved.

Organizations such as HomeFront who work with families in their homes to provide risk assessment, safety planning, and support have expressed their support, stating that Bill 204 will support options for escaping violence and helping families move towards healthier lives. I have received support from organizations such as the Calgary Housing Company who provide safe and affordable housing solutions to the citizens of Calgary. In their letter of support they state that this bill will essentially codify their current practices.

I want to thank the members of this Assembly for their support and their effort to continue the discourse on domestic violence here today. We must ensure that this dialogue acts as a first step as we move forward.

Thank you very much. [Standing ovation]

[Motion carried; Bill 204 read a second time]

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, having concluded debate on second reading of Bill 204 and with a view to dealing with the motion that is before us next, being Motion 504, I would request consent of the House to call it 5 o'clock.

4:50

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader has moved that we call it 5 o'clock.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: We will continue, then.

Motions Other than Government Motions

Regional Public Transit Service

504. Mr. Kleinsteuber moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to explore the feasibility of regional transit services in the province.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Madam Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to rise today and bring forward this important motion. The topic of transportation and regional transit is something that I have campaigned on in the past and a topic that I have discussed at the doors. It's my sincere hope that you'll join me today in supporting this motion, and hopefully this will be one step in the direction of better transit options for Albertans.

In a previous life, before becoming an MLA, I was employed in the transportation industry at Calgary airport. Prior to that, I was based in other Canadian cities, including Ottawa, Montreal, and Toronto. I've always supported public transit in cities where I've lived and places where I have travelled. I've witnessed some excellent examples of transportation networks within our own country and in other parts of the world, networks that could be applied to this province. I know my hon. colleague the Minister of Transportation appreciates public transit given his earlier career experience, and I don't think he's alone in the House here. There may be other members as well. I think he also has a true understanding of the value of public transit and the service it provides Albertans in both small and large communities.

When discussing highway congestion on the QE II, the minister suggested that we need to take a look at this as more than just a highway but as a transportation corridor. The objective of that corridor should be to move people and goods and not necessarily just vehicles. I think that visionary perspective is an excellent point for the discussion of this motion today. It is this understanding that has us leading the charge to expand our support for this useful opportunity across Alberta. I also think it would send a strong message to all Albertans that we can apply some of the successful initiatives in other jurisdictions in the world right here in the province of Alberta.

The feasibility of regional transit can come in many forms and areas. First, there are inner-city initiatives, and there's a precedent in Canada for provincially supported regional rail networks. In Montreal the AMT, the Agence métropolitaine de transport, operates from the island of Montreal, with an approximate population of 4 million, providing six lines of train service to cities such as Hudson, Saint-Eustache, and Saint-Philippe. In the city of Toronto, with an approximate population of 6 million, GO Transit provides about seven lines of service to surrounding areas such as Hamilton, Oshawa, and Whitby. Finally, Vancouver, with a population of about 2.3 million, has the West Coast Express service, with regional service to Waterfront Station in Mission, B.C. The service is said to recover about three-quarters of its revenue from its ridership. It should be noted that these regional train services are not high-speed rail, and in many cases they share the same rail lines with freight trains.

Could a similar transit service operate on the Calgary-Edmonton corridor with several stops in between? The city of Calgary has a population of 1.2 million, and Edmonton has about 870,000. That is a combined population of about 2 million people, which would be unique in Canada due to the proximity of these two cities and the amount of people that travel between them.

A regional transportation initiative must encourage development of a robust transportation network throughout Alberta communities large and small. In this spirit, a successful transit support initiative has been the Calgary Regional Partnership. This organization is currently working with communities on a regional bus service from Calgary to Nanton, High River, Okotoks, Black Diamond, and Turner Valley. Service has also been launched in other areas such as Airdrie and Calgary centre, with an Intercity Express, or ICE, bus service between these points. This organization helps municipalities take advantage of the GreenTRIP funding to support surrounding communities that connect to Calgary.

Certainly, there has been funding available for municipalities to develop their own transit initiatives as well. GreenTRIP funding has also been a successful tool in launching the Roam bus service within Banff and, further, helping Canmore get connected to that network. The intercity service there has been so successful that service frequency improvements have been added.

One of the problems with the GreenTRIP funding initiative is that it creates a patchwork of service throughout these communities that choose to be involved in the funding program rather than benefiting all communities that should be part of a regional transportation network. Clearly, we must do more to better connect Albertans who live in smaller communities to those centres within their region and beyond. Rural Alberta is part of the lifeblood that adds strength to this province. Many companies also consider access to transit as an important criterion when deciding where to locate their business for investment opportunities. Regional and local transit being in place provides labour force mobility for these businesses.

The final piece of the transit puzzle is also lending support to municipalities to improve their transportation networks. A transportation strategy should connect existing infrastructure within cities. In the case of Calgary the C-Train network has been linked up to connection hubs at C-Train stations. A good example of this has been, again, the Airdrie Intercity Express Service, that connects to the McKnight LRT station. Through this connection method extensive light rail transit networks within the cities of Calgary and Edmonton provide necessary connection hubs to regional transit services.

As we do this, by supporting new municipal transit initiatives that bring Albertans together, we will be doing more than providing a much-needed public service for Alberta families who need it. Through the various initiatives discussed here in this motion, the goals are consistent. We are hoping to mitigate traffic congestion and the need to perpetually widen highway corridors. Any time highways are widened, a cost is associated with that construction, and those costs should be compared to alternative transportation methods. In addition to cost comparisons, we will be supporting a cleaner environment by providing more people with access to public transportation, so they can choose public transit to help reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

Our government's budget signals a clear commitment to supporting transit in communities throughout Alberta. My colleagues in the Legislature have the opportunity to signal their own support. I hope that the members from all parties in the Legislature agree that we can serve all Alberta families by voting in favour of this motion, which supports investigating the feasibility of regional public transit services.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today in support of this motion. We are fortunate in Red Deer and area to have this much-needed service. Lacombe and Blackfalds are able to utilize the BOLT regional transit service. Red Deer Transit services the towns of Penhold and Springbrook. This is a good start. We must encourage the development of larger regional transportation networks. There are so many towns, large and small, which would benefit from service. We must do more to better connect Albertans who live in smaller communities to those larger centres within their region.

I urge my colleagues from all parties in the Legislature to vote in favour of this motion so we can better serve all Alberta families.

Mrs. Schreiner: Madam Speaker and fellow colleagues, I support this motion brought forward to us today by the Member for Calgary-Northern Hills. I believe the recent funding on behalf of hon. Mason's green transit initiative in Red Deer underpins the importance of regional transit.

Red Deer is the third-largest city in Alberta and imparts considerable impact on the communities surrounding it. Currently we have municipal transportation that bridges the distance between Red Deer, Blackfalds, and Lacombe. The announcement to support further funding of our transportation system is geared to encompass Red Deer county. This includes accessibility to Gasoline Alley as well as our regional airport, which is also undergoing expansion.

This transportation initiative will directly impact an additional 20,000 rural Albertans within the surrounding Red Deer county who can easily access Red Deer as the central Alberta hub. To central Albertans this means that they will have better access to available services in Red Deer. It supports rural and urban connectivity and provides opportunities to foster healthy, sustainable communities.

Additionally, we can support environmental sustainability through the utilization of compressed natural gas, thus reducing greenhouse gas emissions. When we invest in transportation, we bridge geographic gaps. For Red Deer this means that we have contributed to the mobility of the lives of fellow Albertans while decreasing traffic congestion. As a result, these enhancements will improve access to jobs, schools, and services not only for those who do not drive but also for those who share our vision of a healthier Alberta.

Our decision to support the enhancement of a robust transportation system from Red Deer to surrounding municipalities has exemplified the commitment that we have promised Albertan families. The importance of this motion today is that it not only eases burdens on our Albertan families but supports a synergy amongst our municipal partners. By investigating the feasibility of regional public transit systems, we are letting Albertans know that we recognize the importance of affordable, reliable, environmentally sustainable transportation. Red Deer has been fortunate to witness first-hand the feasibility of this plan, and I encourage my colleagues from all parties to serve well our Alberta families and vote in favour of this motion.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Motion 504, urging the government to explore the feasibility of regional transit services in the province, and I place the emphasis on the word "explore." It is very good to scope out, examine, study, determine the benefits and the costs, and evaluate the merits of allocating taxpayer dollars to running regional transit services in the province.

In that fashion exploring the feasibility rather than going ahead with an ideological platform is commendable, but the NDP government has allocated $330 million over the next three years in the capital plan for transit initiatives, so it already looks like the cart is being placed before the horse. Under questioning in estimates the Minister of Transportation indicated this $330 million was for multiple municipalities to come together to develop regional transit systems. So we have a motion that wants to explore services, and we have a minister set to lay out capital on systems.

We know there are several regional transit services in existence already in the province. More often than not they are owned and/or operated by the private sector. That in and of itself is an indication that some regional transit services are feasible or at least they are feasible until government decides to start crowding them out with its own tax-funded services. In the constituency of Highwood privately owned and operated Southland operates a commuter motorcoach service for the residents of High River and Okotoks to get into Calgary, and as the member has identified, over in Airdrie the city of Airdrie's own Intercity Express, operated by FirstCanada ULC, runs into Calgary.

But I am also aware of services that were not feasible. In my constituency of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock St. Albert Transit, owned by the city of St. Albert and operated by Pacific Western, began running a transit bus from St. Albert to Morinville. The low ridership and lack of use was indicative that the route was not feasible, and it was discontinued. Down in Cochrane someone had a bright idea to run snazzy double-decker buses along highway 1A into Calgary, and that service also fizzled.

As you can see, Madam Speaker, the market determines the feasibility and viability of the service. Perpetual subsidies would be just throwing good money after bad. No one wants to see an empty bus on the road at great taxpayer expense spewing diesel exhaust. But then we have a minister who gets talking about regional transit systems and laying out capital dollars for it. When I hear the word "system," I hear more than one regional transit service bus interlining and providing connections. Buses are relatively inexpensive, but at $330 million in the capital plan and the minister talking systems, I cannot help but think that the minister is talking about something far more ambitious.

Now, I'm not talking high-speed rail; I'm talking commuter rail is possible with that. For some time, Madam Speaker, many residents in the Calgary region have talked of running commuter trains to free congestion along highways 1 and 2, from Banff to Cochrane and on into Calgary; from Olds, Crossfield, and Airdrie on into downtown Calgary; even from High River and Okotoks to downtown; maybe even in the Edmonton region from Wabamun to Stony Plain, Spruce Grove, Acheson, and on in.

Madam Speaker, we know for a fact that the government of Alberta bought land in downtown Calgary for a train station at 9th Avenue and 4th Street S.E. We also know that the new Royal Alberta Museum in Edmonton was designed to have a train station added on. After all, the old remand centre across the street is no longer needed, giving up much land that can be repurposed for such a venture.

A $330 million capital outlay seems to be in line with double and triple tracking, signalling stations and sidings, and park and ride lots. But will commuters ride the rails? On this question I turn to the Canadian Urban Transit Association, who indicated that, yes, people will take transit if it is rapid, limited in stops, and meets the right schedule.

So when the member opposite talks service, we know there is already service and where it is feasible. But when the minister talks systems and has a large capital outlay in his budget, I am unsure what he intends. I do not believe that all of the minister's $330 million is for buses. At $500,000 a bus, that's 660 buses. There has to be more going on in this fund than just buying buses.

We also have transit services for the elderly and disabled. They are not transit services per se, as they pick up and drop off at point to point, but they do provide public transportation services. People like the Rocky View handibus cannot replace their buses without charitable assistance or subsidies from the municipality or the province. As the province's population ages, services like the Rocky View handibus will be more important than ever before. Perhaps some of the minister's $330 million will find its way to Rocky View handibus.

Madam Speaker, there are so many options to explore and consider, and the minister is putting money on the table to invest. We know that there are several regional services in existence already in the province. More often than not they are owned and/or operated by the private sector. That in and of itself is an indication that some regional transit services are feasible. I would hope that this government would be sure that they are providing services that are feasible and that they are careful not to start crowding out the private services with its own tax-funded services.

I will support this motion calling for feasibility studies, hoping that this government completes a thorough review and does not waste a lot of taxpayer dollars investing in transit schemes that are either not viable or that simply push out private operators providing a good service to Albertans already. I want to see the results of the government's feasibility study of regional transit services in the province before the minister starts investing.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to support Motion 504. I had the great privilege to carpool several times with the Member for Calgary-Northern Hills, where he discussed the motion and the need for regional transit. I certainly hope that it wasn't my driving that provoked him to create this motion.

Some of the things that we talked about on our drives were connecting people in Alberta. One of the best things about Alberta is our wide-open spaces. That's something that we really hold dear as a value for Albertans, but that also presents some challenges, Madam Speaker. It presents some challenges of moving people from place to place for visiting, seniors to medical appointments.

You know, in my riding the member also mentioned the Roam Public Transit regional service between Banff and Canmore. That's something that I'm very proud of, that exists within my riding. It's been extraordinarily successful. It really represents a good model that we can look toward as a success story and something that we can build upon.

I also represent a rural riding, and I think that we can do a better job of connecting Albertans who live in small communities, get them connected to larger centres within their region and beyond. Rural Alberta is part of the lifeblood of what makes this province so special.

I've also managed to speak with some stakeholders in the hospitality sector in my riding, and they've talked about the difficulty of accessing labour. You know, in small centres like Banff and Canmore oftentimes finding enough workers and having a place for them to live represents big challenges for private industry. So providing those opportunities for Albertans to have increased mobility between centres would certainly go toward the labour challenges that are being faced there.

That also goes toward addressing the housing challenges. I know in the Bow Valley, finding housing, especially affordable housing, is a great challenge. So giving Albertans the ability to live in a centre that has more affordable housing but then also giving them access to work in a place like the mountain parks or in Canmore would certainly go toward solving the housing affordability problem as well.

Just in conclusion, I'm proud to stand up and support Motion 504, and I urge this Assembly to support it as well. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to discuss some of the issues around Motion 504. You know, one of the challenges that we face in the House, in my opinion, is around motions. Oftentimes a motion can be so vague that it leaves more questions than answers, and other times there are very positive motions that come before the House.

Traditionally speaking, we haven't seen the government act that readily on motions that are passed in the House. I hope that the new government will see the value of some of those motions and, in fact, act on them. I know that the former Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills passed a motion called 508 that nobody has done anything with yet. I encourage the government to take a look at some of those, as many of them do cover some important issues.

Having said that, they also often are vague and a little bit unclear as to what the entire end goal of the motion is, so I appreciated the comments from the Member for Calgary-Northern Hills when he highlighted some of the things that the motion could accomplish.

In many respects studying things that are going to happen here or in the Legislature can be very positive. One concern that I do have, though, is that we only have a limited amount of time and resources in which to study. So if motions only become an hour of conversation with no follow-through because there aren't the resources, that's a concern.

You know, here we have a motion that perhaps might fall into that category because we have some significant number of studies in this area already. I think of the study by the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future, and I recognize that the Member for Calgary-Northern Hills' comments weren't specific to rail transportation along the highway 2 corridor, but he certainly did mention that that would be one of the things that this motion could encourage some study around.

I'm reminded of or I think back to just last year, in May, when a report was submitted to the House by the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future on the feasibility of establishing a high-speed rail transit system in Alberta, and a number of those recommendations. Even some folks here with us in the House this evening sat on this committee and would be very familiar with a bunch of those recommendations, including first and foremost that "the Government of Alberta should not invest in a high-speed rail transit system in the Edmonton-Calgary corridor at this time because the population of the corridor is not sufficient to support the profitable operation of such a system."

Now, some might say: "Well, that was last year. You know, the population has increased since that particular study was produced." But if one is so inclined to read such a fascinating piece of committee work, the committee went on to say that it would require a population of approximately 10 million Albertans to sustain such a system, and clearly in the last year we haven't seen an influx of nearly that many people.

So I get a little wary or concerned when we talk about doing things that have already been done in this place. While I recognize that the third party takes a lot of blame for things that have happened around here over the last number of years and rightfully so, generally speaking, here's a good study that, in fact, has studied the feasibility of regional transit services in the province. For us to go back down that road and rehash it, you know, I just am not convinced that it's an effective use of our time, of our staff's time, of committee time when we can be doing other things, in particular at a time like this, when the province is struggling to find the resources that it needs for its own operations and when we've seen a need and the government of the day decide that they will borrow for the day-to-day operations of this province.

One of the financial considerations that the committee heard was that high-speed rail would cost between $5 billion and $7 billion.

You know, some people in the government will say: it's only a motion; we're just going to study stuff. I think I've heard the hon. Minister of Transportation and of Infrastructure make remarks like that in the past, specifically around motions. But the fact of the day is that lots of this study has been done, so it would concern me if we went back down that road.

Now, having said all of that, the desire of the private member, Calgary-Northern Hills, is to try and ensure that we are doing what's right for Albertans, and if that means studying regional transportation services, I can accept that some good can come of that.

The challenge, again, is to ensure that we are making the most of our time and that we aren't doing tasks that would in fact be detrimental, similar to what my hon. colleague from Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock spoke about, driving private investment out of these sorts of services. You know, again, the motion isn't specific, but we have seen lots of situations in the past where private service providers do a wonderful job of getting great value for money and we see the government believing that it can do better than people on the front lines, so I am often hesitant when we head down that road.

Even with all of my reservation and hesitation I will support the motion today because I believe that ensuring we get things right is of critical importance.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Motion 504, that the government be asked to "explore the feasibility of regional transit services in the province." I'd like thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills for putting forward this motion. I think it's a worthwhile motion. It is, of necessity, a rather general motion, but I think that it is a useful one nonetheless.

Now, a couple of members opposite have gone to great lengths in terms of speculating what this might mean or what money contained in the budget for new transit services might be put towards, and I would just urge them to restrain their fantasies just a little bit about what it is that we're going to do because there's a great deal of work and consultation and study that has to take place before concrete proposals are brought forward. This kind of speculation is kind of fun, but I'm not sure how useful it is. One hon. member has us building a complete intercity rail system complete with signaling and stations and so on, and the hon. Wildrose House leader thinks we're going down the rabbit hole of building high-speed rail. You know, I think that neither one of them is particularly accurate.

We have allocated $330 million in this capital plan for new transit initiatives, and I just want to talk a little bit about that because I think the reality is a lot more prosaic than the hon. members opposite have talked about. We will not be having flying cars. We will not be having, you know, teleportation, and the previous government finally got around to selling the government air force, so we won't be flying either.

Mr. Schmidt: What about sending Wildrose MLAs to space?

Mr. Mason: I'm not sure that that would be taken kindly by our friends on Mars, Madam Speaker.

But I think there are a number of things. We're in the process in the Transportation department of developing a 50-year transportation plan, and that requires us to look rather broadly and in a far-reaching way. Of course, technology is changing things all the time. You know, we've seen the conflict that has been generated about Uber, but there are other technologies. For example, electric cars are here. Driverless cars are just around the corner, Madam Speaker. There are lots of interesting developments in terms of transportation.

One of the things, I think, to bring things down to earth, is that there are a couple of major urban regional centres in the province, of course, being around Edmonton, being in Calgary, and the municipalities there have done a great deal of work in terms of forming collaborations, forming organizations where they can deal with public business in a collaborative and co-operative way.

This is something that, you know, we want to encourage as a government. Certainly, as Transportation minister I want to encourage more working together and collaboration between municipalities. Rather than, for example, the Edmonton area having maybe eight or 12 independent transit systems, some very large, some very small, it would make more sense to deal with this in a co-operative fashion, and that's one of the things that we want to do. It doesn't have to be rail. It can be buses. It can be all different types of transportation.

I've had an opportunity to have some preliminary conversations with the mayor of Calgary and with the mayor of Edmonton and with public officials from the regional areas. They're very interested in this approach. They're very interested in a collaborative approach, and that's something that the government wants to encourage and participate in. We want to improve the transit of people both within the big cities and within the regional areas first of all, and that is really what the objective is.

It's certainly early days, too early to talk about specific proposals and specific technologies, but there are many, many developments. For example, the city of Edmonton is testing electric buses, and they're going to give them a test of a good, old-fashioned Edmonton winter if we can manage to conjure one up. There are experiments, as has already been mentioned, with respect to natural gas buses and so on as well as developments of LRT technology within the cities. Then, intercity rail has been mentioned. That is not something that I see immediately on the horizon but certainly something that people are very interested in planning for as we go forward.

I also want to mention our proposal with respect to rural bus service because, of course, when the previous government deregulated the intercity bus system operating in our province, much service was lost. The members opposite have indicated that here and there private-sector firms have stepped up to fill some of those gaps, but there are still many rural areas that are not served by intercommunity transportation. I've had the opportunity to meet with a couple of private-sector proponents who are very interested, and they have very different ideas about where we might go in terms of this. But there is money set aside in the budget to deal with that. We certainly don't want people who live in small communities to be isolated, to not be able to make medical appointments, to not be able to visit family and friends in other parts of the province. That is something that is also being considered.

All of this is, of course, encompassed by the motion. A motion like this is never designed to set out a specific plan. A motion like this is designed to set the intent of the Assembly, to give the government a bit of a flavour of where the Assembly thinks it ought to go. These are not binding motions, but they are useful for government. I think that it would be very helpful – and it has been helpful for me – to listen to members on both sides of the House about where they think we ought to go with regard to future intercity transit.

I would urge members to support the motion because I think that it sets a positive direction. It's a general direction, but it is still a direction, and I think that it would be useful for the government to have this motion approved.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Acadia.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll be brief. I rise today to speak in favour of Motion 504. As an MLA for an urban riding I often hear from my constituents about the value of public transit and the impact that it has on their daily lives, connecting them with work, with friends, with their community, and with local businesses and services. Public transit offers a more affordable and environmentally friendly means of transportation, one that reduces greenhouse gas emissions and reduces congestion on Alberta's roads.

We must do more to connect Albertans from smaller communities to the larger centres within their regions. We must encourage the development of a robust public transportation network in Alberta, in communities large and small.

The government's budget contains a clear commitment to supporting transit in communities across Alberta, and I would encourage all of my colleagues in the Legislature to show their own commitment to improving public transit throughout Alberta in communities of all sizes by supporting Motion 504. By supporting public transit and by supporting this motion, we are showing all Albertans that they deserve access to the public transit services that Albertans in our larger urban communities have come to enjoy and that many have come to rely on.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

5:30

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In 2014 I was commissioned by the county of Newell to do a transportation study, and in that study I found out that people who live in rural areas have no access to any kind of public transit system. If you don't have a car, you can't go to medical appointments, and you can't go to court. People in rural areas really, really need to have a kind of public transportation system.

I'm really delighted about this motion because if there's one thing we need to do in terms of keeping people in rural areas – allowing them to have jobs, allowing them to go to Calgary in that case or Lethbridge or Medicine Hat for necessary treatment, to get passports, to go to court – it is some kind of public transit system to meet their needs. I found out, when I did that study, that if you were low income and you couldn't afford to have a car or you had some kind of health problems and you couldn't drive, you were not only isolated, but you couldn't access any of those services that we provide. So I'm delighted that the Member for Calgary-Northern Hills is suggesting that government should be looking at regional transit services.

I also wanted to support what the Minister of Transportation said. The private systems that exist in many parts of the rural areas have not worked. It's really impossible, for example, as I found out, for someone from Brooks to go to a medical appointment in Calgary or Lethbridge in one given day. So if we do anything, I think we really need to work on trying to find access to a transportation system from communities to the major centres.

And because I live in a suburban area, I should also emphasize that it's not only the rural areas that are deficient in terms of an accessible transit system; it's also the suburban areas. Transit in suburban areas is rather limited at times. I'm lucky to live in Strathcona county, where we have quite a well-developed transit system.

I do look forward to work being done to make sure that all of the suburban areas can be connected to the major urban areas but especially that the rural areas have access to public services.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other hon. members wishing to speak to the motion?

If not, then the hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills to close debate.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It was an absolute pleasure for me to present this motion as a topic of discussion today. As mentioned earlier, I have always been a strong supporter of regional transit initiatives. I'm quite encouraged as well to see a similar passion from many other members of this Assembly.

I'd just like to add a detail to the record. I've been advised that the regional population of Edmonton in its current census, with its catchment areas, is 1.33 million. Sorry if I touched a nerve there.

To the hon. members for Red Deer-South and Red Deer-North: I'd like to thank them for explaining the BOLT network to the Legislature today, which connects Red Deer to its surrounding areas, and, as well, for the GreenTRIP funding to get that local network established. I think it's wonderful to hear about other cities' initiatives, that sometimes aren't directly within where some of us are based.

I'd also like to thank the Member for Banff-Cochrane for his comments. Don't worry; your driving is impeccable. I'd like to thank you, also, for your excellent points. And now that's on the record.

By supporting public transit, we are telling Albertans that they deserve the kind of public transit service that until now has only been available to those larger urban municipalities. Furthermore, by supporting new municipal transit initiatives that bring Albertans together, we're doing more than providing a much-needed public service for Albertan families who need it; we will be supporting a cleaner environment by providing more people with access to public transportation so they can choose public transit to help greenhouse gas emissions as well.

In the end, there were some excellent points made here today. I would encourage members to support the motion and urge the government to explore the feasibility of regional transit services in this province.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 504 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Well, we have performed our duties with uncustomary efficiency. I would like to thank members on all sides of the House for their valuable contribution and dispatch in dealing with important private members' business.

I would therefore move that we call it 6 o'clock.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:37 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 17, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us reflect and contemplate. Let us contemplate, each of us in our minds and hearts, about leadership and the examples of leaders around us. Some of us are leaders by position, others because of chance. But the true leaders are those in this Assembly who demonstrate bravery and courage and say words that cause others to change minds so minds can cause change. At least one of our members yesterday served as an example of leadership for all of us.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The embodiment of leadership is in no greater way portrayed than by six people who are in the gallery. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly six public servants seated in the members' gallery who are taking part in the Alberta public service leadership program. If they can stand up, please: their mentor, Mr. Steve Tyson, director of information security, Justice/Sol Gen; Ms Leanne Connell, legislative co-ordinator, Environment and Parks; Ms Andrea Rohlehr, services co-ordinator, ASCC; Mrs. Diane Duplessis, regional soil and contaminated site specialist with Environment and Parks; Mrs. Wendy Mingo, land management specialist, Environment and Parks; and Ms Sally Greenhill, audit manager, corporate internal audit services, Treasury Board and Finance.

Mr. Speaker, it's wonderful to see members of the public service taking part in programs to build leadership capacity. I can share with this House from personal experience, as can my cabinet colleagues, that the public service is fortunate to have such talented women and men among them. I'd like to ask these guests – they've already risen – to please receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, it's been my experience that the public servants are usually ahead of the politicians most of the time.

Mr. Hinkley: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all of our colleagues in the Assembly a grade 6 class from Griffiths-Scott school, which is in the fine community of Millet, which is in the constituency of Wetaskiwin-Camrose. The Millet school has been designated a UNESCO school, which means there's an emphasis on global awareness and inclusion. We also had a great discussion on decorum in the Assembly, so they're watching very diligently. Their teachers are Mrs. Nancy Killen, Ms Teagan DeSousa and the assistant, Mrs. Randi Williams. If you would please rise and accept the warm traditional greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you a group of 37 Malmo elementary school students. They're here today with their teacher, Mrs. Theresa Bonar, and parent helpers Brandon Bosma and Leila Saleh. They're from the beautiful community of Malmo in my riding. Would they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you a group from St. Theresa school. St. Theresa has a special place in my heart as I got to experience first-hand how interested the students and their teachers are in politics. If you could please rise to be introduced to the Assembly. They are here with their teachers, Mike Miskiw, Adriana Porter, Nicole Richard, and Joyce Chronik-Rudiak. Please give them the customary warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other school group introductions today?

It's my privilege that the Deputy Speaker, the hon. Member for Peace River, has an acknowledgement on my behalf.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you. It is truly an honour today to rise and introduce on your behalf, Mr. Speaker, three guests that are seated in your gallery: your cousin Ms Penny Stone; your aunt Ms Margaret Dashney; and, of course, your lovely wife, Mrs. Joan Emard-Wanner. As I understand it, Penny and Margaret are here today to watch you in action in your new role as Speaker. I'm sure they'll be greatly entertained. Ms Stone resides in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar and Ms Dashney in the constituency of Leduc-Beaumont, and I must add that Ms Dashney is an amazingly youthful 101 years old. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. Very much appreciated. I'm going to claim the prize, until corrected, that she's the oldest lady that's ever been in this Assembly.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General and Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Ms Ganley: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of very special employees of the Alberta civil service. Over the summer and this fall nine enthusiastic individuals were hired to work in six different ministries. They are the very first interns in the brand new Alberta aboriginal intern program. In addition to working within their ministries, these bright interns will also spend nine months working with the community organizations that deliver services to indigenous people. Seven of the nine interns are with us today. I'm pleased to introduce Mathew Morgan, Danielle Belland, Adrienne Larocque, Shaleigh Raine, Camina Weasel Moccasin, Sharlene Alook, Brett McKenna, and the two interns who could not be here today, Colleen Chalifoux and Tiana Shea. I would like you to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a wonderful group from the Excel Resources Society. The Excel society is a nonprofit organization servicing people with various disabilities, including developmental, brain injury, and early-onset dementia. I have visited the Balwin Villa in my constituency of Edmonton-Decore, and I'm very impressed with the work that they're capable of doing there. With us today in the gallery are Sharon Read, president and CEO; Colleen Scott, board chair; and Brad Perkins, board member. I would ask all of them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a tremendous honour to introduce to you and through you Rob Laird. Rob is currently with 1835 House, Recovery Acres Society. Rob has long been a dedicated advocate and champion for those struggling with addiction and homelessness. He's here in Edmonton today meeting with representatives from the ministries of Human Services and Health. As you know from my question last week, Recovery Acres' 1835 House is an addiction treatment facility located in the wonderful constituency of Calgary-Elbow. Rob is working very hard to expand the services offered by Recovery Acres to include women's addiction treatment. I'd ask Rob to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Ms Shauna McHarg. Shauna has been a tireless advocate for years for families who believe they've been unfairly barred from Alberta Health Services facilities and currently have no process for appeal. Shauna is here today to request a meeting with the Minister of Health to explain her situation, restore access for her family, and to establish a fair process for citizens barred from certain sites. Shauna is joined by Mr. Dennis Dupuis, also banned from Alberta Health Services facilities, here to support her. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and Status of Women.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you a number of representatives from the Cumulative Environmental Management Association in the lower Athabasca region. There are quite a number of them. I would ask them to rise as I call their names: Bill Loutitt, Fort McMurray Métis local 1935; Arsene Bernaille, Athabasca Chipewyan First Nation; Lena McCallum, Conklin Métis local 193; Alice Martin, Nistawoyou Friendship Centre; Mavis Desjarlais, elected council for Elizabeth Métis settlement; Darrin Bourque, Willow Lake Métis local 780; Diane Scoville, president, Métis Nation of Alberta, region 1; Bryan Fayant, aboriginal liaison, Aboriginal Coordinating Committee for CEMA; Nestor Manalo, program administrator, aboriginal initiatives, CEMA; and Karen Collins, Métis Nation of Alberta, region 2. I ask the Assembly to extend to them the traditional warm welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Gateway Association 40th Anniversary

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to discuss some of the important work taking place within the Edmonton-Meadowlark constituency. This year marks the 40th anniversary of the Gateway Association and their original vision, a gateway to a better life. This organization has produced many success stories, helping those with disabilities find meaningful employment. This is not always an easy task, but the Gateway Association has built relationships with employers who are willing to help and be helped by those with disabilities.

It was my privilege to join the Minister of Human Services recently to announce that the Gateway Association would receive a grant from the employment first innovation fund. I know that this money means a lot to associations like Gateway, and I'm proud to be a part of a government who recognizes the potential in those with disabilities. I look forward to hearing of more Gateway Association success stories that were able to happen because of this funding.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Water Supply in Milk River and Coutts

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to rise and talk about a potential five-alarm fire that could affect two important communities in my riding. As of right now the town of Milk River has two and a half to three months of water supply in their reserve. This water is used to supply both the towns of Milk River and Coutts. Due to low water levels this year residents have been put on rations for months now. To make things worse, if the water freezes or if either of these towns have to fight fires, they will be completely out of water within days. To truck in enough water for these communities, they would need 22 trucks per day. Of course, they would not be able to handle that expense themselves, nor would they be able to find enough water trucks to facilitate such an endeavour.

This issue was brought before the previous government, and a request for funding for an air compressor to assist with the water processing system was requested and granted but never delivered.

The water in the Milk River is shared with the United States. The communities of Milk River developed the storage and canal capacity to capture and divert just 7 per cent of its entitlement, while the U.S. receives well beyond theirs.

To determine ways of how to fix this issue, there have been a plethora of studies performed over the years. It was studied in 1954, '78, '80, '81, '85, '86, '87, 2003, 2006, and 2012. As you can see, we are not lacking information on this issue. These residents need action, not another study. They need immediate solutions to their short-term problems, and they need more than a Band-Aid to the long-term problem.

This government has talked much about diversification. Well, expanding the water storage capacity is a great start. It would allow for the expansion of irrigation in an area that sees some of the best heat units for growing in the province. If you are bound and determined to diversify, then I recommend starting in the agricultural sector, that has been this province's Steady Eddie from the beginning.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Calgary-North West.

Status of Women Ministry Estimates Debate

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Domestic violence and the mistreatment of women and girls for any reason at any time is unacceptable. I was so encouraged yesterday by the courageous speech from the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East recounting her harrowing personal experience of domestic violence. These are hugely important issues that transcend party lines. Thank you.

That's why it was so concerning this morning during estimates for the Status of Women ministry to hear the minister resort to name-calling and finger pointing. During my tenure as associate minister of family and community safety I was the first minister to have women's issues as part of my mandate letter. I took this responsibility very seriously.

I proudly launched our province's first family violence framework, put together with the aid of such notable stakeholders as Sue Tomney, CEO of the Calgary YWCA, and Lana Wells, the Brenda Strafford chair in the prevention of domestic violence at the U of C. We also completed Alberta's first sexual violence framework, again with such notable Alberta experts as Dr. Kristopher Wells of the Institute for Sexual Minorities Studies and Services and Sheldon Kennedy, whose work in this area is internationally recognized. It was a shock to me, Mr. Speaker, to have the minister refer to these framework documents as disgusting and deplorable. The opinions of these stakeholders framed this very important work. Describing their contributions as disgusting and deplorable is disappointing and unprofessional.

Mr. Speaker, many of us who have worked in this area care deeply about these issues and were hopeful that this new government would be a collaborative and willing partner to move forward on some excellent work that's already been done in this province. What we're met with at the table is hostility and scorn, and it does a disservice to every single person who has suffered in the area of family violence or sexual violence in this province. Today's behaviour by the Minister of Status of Women has done nothing to move us forward.

Varsity Community Association

Ms McLean: Mr. Speaker, as you know, I have the distinct pleasure of representing the constituency of Calgary-Varsity. Nestled within my constituency is the Varsity Community Association, of which my husband and I are proud members. This past October marks the 50th anniversary of the Varsity Community Association. The mission of the association is "to enhance and enrich the quality of community for Varsity residents." Over the last 50 years it is clear that this particular community has met that call.

In October we celebrated this golden anniversary with a gala at the Varsity community hall. The gala featured memorabilia from the past 50 years, the sealing of a 2015 time capsule as well as awards and recognition of highly dedicated, long-time volunteers. The event also included a top-notch dinner and bar, which were catered in-house and which, I'll add, is open for rental year-round.

Led by their first president, Ken Brown, the Varsity Community Association began in a bilevel house in 1965, and Varsity represented the edge of the city. Now the neighbourhood is a vibrant and diverse urban community. From seniors' yoga to shinny hockey for ages 6 to 12 the VCA provides essential and innovative programming and space that truly enriches our community.

Today Varsity has a strong, dedicated board of directors, who operate under the capable leadership of long-time Varsity resident president Bob Benson and past and longest serving president Jay Pritchard, who served the community as president from 2001 to 2013.

Congratulations to Varsity residents, volunteers, past and present committee members, and board members for creating one of Calgary's most desirable neighbourhoods. I truly enjoyed being a part of the 50th anniversary celebrations of the VCA and look forward to the 100th.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: A very brief comment. I wish to advise the House that again I am studying and thinking about and experiencing the practice of preambles in questions, and I may or may not be having some additional comments for the House with respect to that matter.

I also wish to advise the House that Her Majesty's Official Opposition leader has asked for some leniency with respect to a question today, one question, which I have agreed to, and we were exchanging some communications about that.

Mr. Jean: I just wanted to take the opportunity to thank the Premier for our collegial question-and-answer period this morning. I really appreciated that.

Job Creation and Retention

Mr. Jean: Yesterday another 250 men and women lost their jobs at Enbridge. That's another 250 added to the more than 65,000 Albertans we know are out of work this year. It's the same story every single day. It's why Wildrose stands up in the Legislature to fight for policies that will benefit all Albertans, to fight for a competitive economy, and to make sure that every single Alberta family that is able has a good, paying job. Is the Premier aware of the damage her policies are doing to Alberta's economy?

The Speaker: Thank you for that, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I am aware of is that families and communities and Albertans across this province are suffering from the inevitable consequences of the dramatic downturn in the price of oil. I'm aware that that means that many, many people have lost their jobs, and I am very concerned about it, and I share the concern that the member opposite outlines. That is why our government has introduced a budget which is focused on stability, securing public services, finding a path to balance, but also using a number of different mechanisms to try and stimulate job growth because we know – we know – that it is not good for families and for Albertans to lose these jobs, and we're working as hard as we can to make it better.

Mr. Jean: I'm glad to see the Premier recognizes that her budget is not good for Albertans.

For weeks I've been asking the Premier to recognize the damage her policies are having on Alberta jobs. She doesn't seem to believe me, so let's have someone else do the talking. Here's a direct quote from the head of Canadian Pacific on the damage of the NDP tax increases: there is no doubt that, compounded with the government's other announced tax increases, this tax will negatively impact future investment and jobs. Will the Premier now recognize that her high-tax agenda is hurting Alberta's economy?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I will recognize is that what will not help our economy is laying off a bunch of public-sector workers, laying off teachers, laying off nurses, pulling back public services that our communities rely on. What we are doing is promoting stability, and we are investing in job creation, and we are investing in economic stimulation, and we are investing in a capital project, all of which will contribute to job creation. We know it's not good times out there. There's not a simple answer. Slashing and burning, laying off teachers to raise the price of oil is not the answer.

Mr. Jean: Wildrose agrees that laying off workers is not the answer, but the question is: what is this Alberta government doing to make sure that they keep their jobs? Sixty-seven thousand men, women, and children in Alberta rely on food banks. This number increased almost 25 per cent in just one year. Times in Alberta have only gotten worse, and Albertans are very, very worried. High taxes, big government, and an antibusiness agenda: this is the NDP record, that is putting everyone's quality of life at risk in Alberta. When will the Premier back down from her risky agenda so that Alberta families can get back to work and have the great quality of life that they deserve?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what we are going to continue to do is the work that we have done, which is that we are going to stabilize those public services, we're going to provide a predictable path forward, and we're going to invest where we can. We are acting as a shock absorber to the significant downturn that is being experienced in the Alberta economy. The billions and billions of dollars that that Official Opposition over there campaigned on cutting would make the situation much, much worse. [interjection] That is not fearmongering. That's just the reality. We are not going down that path because Albertans told us not to.

The Speaker: Second major question.

Refugee Resettlement

Mr. Jean: Yesterday we had a ministerial statement and responses about terrorism and refugees. Everyone in this Assembly wants to protect people whose lives are at risk because of the evil actions of ISIS. In the last few days a mass grave of Yazidi children and women was found. This is horrific. Albertans also worry the proper security checks are not being done. Will the Premier tell this Assembly what assurances she has been given by the Prime Minister that proper security checks on these refugees will be conducted?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I said yesterday in my statement, our deepest sympathies and our solidarity are with the victims of the recent attack. We condemn these evil acts, and we must all stand together, and we also need to understand that all people deserve to live in peace and security. People fleeing Syria are fleeing from acts like these. As an open society that is relatively privileged, we can reach out to them. We need to do it cautiously and carefully. We need to make sure that the security of all Albertans and all Canadians is front and centre, and I am quite sure that that is the approach that our federal government will be taking.

Mr. Jean: Yesterday the Premier told the media we expect to take 2,500 to 3,000 refugees in Alberta. Settling up to 3,000 refugees in the next 45 days is a massive, massive task. We know that there are community- and faith-based groups that will do their best to help. Indications are that these folks might be settled into two or even only one community in Alberta. What steps has the Premier taken to make sure that our health services, social services, education system are all able to handle the arrival of 3,000 new people by the end of next month?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much. Those are all very good questions. First of all, we are still in discussions with the federal government about the number of refugees that would ultimately settle in Alberta as well as the funding scheme around that. I will say, though, that we have set up an interministerial group that is working on that issue, led by the deputy minister for Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour. Those very important questions asked by the member are being considered, as are issues around housing and other social supports. We will be sure that we are well placed to ensure that integration happens in a functional and helpful way that promotes and strengthens all communities.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are a very generous people. They want to help. They know that in Syria and Iraq people are being murdered just because they are Christian or Kurdish or because they follow a different sect of Islam. Albertans have so many important questions. They need to be reassured that the Premier takes their concerns very seriously. Albertans want information on security screening, on where these vulnerable families will go, and on how the government will provide these necessary services. Will the Premier provide any answers to these questions for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think that I already have provided some answers, but truly we're in a situation where we are working very closely with the federal government. The federal government is the lead on this. Final decisions have not yet been made. So going out with information about decisions that haven't been made yet is not helpful. We will absolutely be clear and open and transparent with Albertans about how this will unfold once we understand exactly what it is the federal government's plans are, and I undertake to ensure that this information is provided as quickly as possible to the members of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Infrastructure Priorities and Municipal Funding

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to creating an infrastructure priority list, this government can't seem to help themselves. During the campaign the Premier said, "it's time to end the political games" and create a list. Then in July with a smile on his face the Infrastructure minister told us: the list is coming this fall. Less than two weeks ago I was told the list would be coming sometime before Christmas. Now we're told it may never come at all. To the minister: can you show us some backbone and tell your officials to stop backpedalling and deliver the infrastructure priority lists?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Certainly, making sure that there are not games played with infrastructure during elections, by-elections, and so on is something that motivates us, and I know it's very much of interest on the other side as well. It's important that we get the infrastructure list right. We need to make sure the criteria that are utilized are transparent and available to the public, and we need to avoid as well, I think, setting up competitions between different municipalities over infrastructure. Those are considerations.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry, but that explanation just isn't good enough. Just this fall the Infrastructure minister himself called for an objective criteria to be used to establish an infrastructure priority list that should be made public. Now that the NDP are in power, they seem to be enjoying the comforts and influence a bit too much. Why won't the minister commit to a list that will only serve to bring Albertans more openness and transparency to their government?

The Speaker: I'm not sure if "I'm sorry" fits into the preamble or not.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the fact of the matter is, to the hon. member, that we are going to do that. It is important to us, and we will be bringing forward transparency, transparency in terms of what the criteria is. Of course, they're different between different types. You don't judge a road by the same criteria as a hospital or by a school. All of those things need to be sorted out. It's a little more complex than the opposition would like us to believe, frankly.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, without an infrastructure priority list municipalities in Alberta are going to have to make their own tough decisions about funding key infrastructure projects in their communities. This seems to be something that the Infrastructure minister has completely turned his back on. To the Minister of Infrastructure: are you intending to keep the linear taxation model in place, that municipalities are relying on, or are you going to backtrack on that, too?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm happy to talk about infrastructure. I'm happy to talk about our plans to move forward, the additional commitments that we've made. I spoke to the AAMD and C this morning, and I was very well received in terms of the reintroduction of the STIP program in particular. So there's lots of goodwill out there. But in terms of the linear assessment, he simply asked the wrong minister.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lloydminster-Vermilion.

Energy Industry Environmental Issues

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was recently acknowledged that our province will continue to have for the foreseeable future an energy economy and that this government intends to build on the backbone of that economy, which continues to reel from the combined effects of low prices and policy uncertainty. Now, this government steadfastly refuses to acknowledge its role in making the current situation worse while investment flees to places like B.C., Saskatchewan, and Quebec, where the oil price is the same but government policy is not. To the Minister of Environment and Parks: if we're an energy economy for the foreseeable future, why do you persist in attacking that economy here and now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we have undertaken this work of our climate change review because Albertans want us to get serious about climate change. That's exactly what we're doing. Climate change is a serious challenge, and we intend to take it seriously. We've already taken it much more seriously than the previous government ever did by appointing an excellent panel to provide us with advice on matters related to renewables, energy efficiency, our current carbon pricing system and whether there are some changes we can make to it, and, of course, ensuring that we are phasing out coal in an orderly manner for the health of our children.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, quite frankly it's hard to take this minister seriously when the job losses in the sector have been well documented: Enbridge cutting 500 jobs, 250 in Alberta; Cenovus, 1,500 jobs; Husky, 1,000 jobs; and the list goes on. Now, depending on how calculations are made, we're somewhere in the 40,000 to 65,000 jobs range. Again to the Minister of Environment and Parks. Your caucus did nothing during the course of the federal election campaign to defend our industry against attacks from candidates in the federal election, mostly from your party. Why not, Minister? Whose side are you on?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we could rewind the clock a few months and discuss that, or we can discuss what this government is actually doing to get serious on climate change, to ensure market access, and to ensure that we can have a conversation with our trading partners that is real and substantive on the leadership that we are showing on issues related to carbon price, renewables, efficiency, and how we effectively phase out coal to ensure the right health outcomes for ourselves and for our children.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are waiting with nervous anticipation as to what the Premier and the environment minister will be saying after they board their eco-friendly hovercraft powered by the laughter of children and travel to the Paris climate change conference. Now, I understand that there will be a meeting on Friday with the NDP caucus to share information regarding our climate change strategy. Minister, why are you not sharing this information with Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a good question on timing. Right now we are considering the advice in an ongoing way from the panel, and some of that is continuing to be ongoing. We are having cabinet discussions. We are having caucus discussions, of course, because it is our government's approach that we involve caucus in these matters unlike the previous government, where there was just, you know, a whole bunch of sandbox politics happening between caucus members. We are a government that is going to bring forward a cohesive plan to protect jobs, ensure market access, and ensure we can turn the page on 44 years of lack of leadership on climate change.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Emergency Medical Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish I could get that kind of a rise out of my questions. I'll practise. Now I've only got 30 seconds.

A common-sense solution to reducing the pressure on our emergency rooms is to allow EMS workers to practise to their full scope, treat patients on-site where appropriate, and make alternate arrangements rather than bringing every patient to the ER. To facilitate this, EMS workers need to be brought under the protection of the medical professions act, delayed by the past government. To the minister: when can we expect action on this much-needed change?

The Speaker: I must say that you're so much nicer when you play in the sandbox when you're laughing with each other.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We are certainly working with the College of Paramedics in bringing them under the act, and I thank the hon. member and members of the third party as well for talking about how important that is. In terms of what's happening today, under the current scope I'm really proud of the fact that we have the community paramedic program, which was launched in Calgary in 2013 as well as in Edmonton in 2015. By having that program, we've saved 8,200 patients from having to be transported to emergency rooms by having paramedics using their expertise in making that call.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2:10

Dr. Swann: Thank you. What progress has been made in using alternate transportation for nonemergency patients and reducing the demand on ambulances and trained paramedics?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Last night in estimates we talked a little bit about some of the initiatives under Alberta Health Services. There are transport vans for patients that aren't in as acute situations, rather than transporting somebody from a long-term care facility to an emergency room when they might just need to be transported safely in a safe vehicle like a transport van. That's certainly one of the initiatives. I'd be happy to send more information to the hon. member about that program and others that Alberta Health Services will be launching in the years to come.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When individuals are not able to get into their family doctors in primary care networks, they will inevitably turn to emergency rooms, yet the minister has cut $41 million from PCNs, money they were planning to use for emerging community needs. How does this make sense?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've been in constant dialogue with the primary care networks since prior to the last election. There was an announcement made by the last government that they were going to be rolling back significantly more of their surpluses. What we've done is that when money is in the bank, we've asked PCNs to offset some of their allocations by using some of the money that they have in the bank. That's not what the provincial treasury grants money for, for it to sit in the bank; it's to actually meet patient needs. So we're working with the PCNs in tandem to make sure that that can continue to be the focus, but we do need them to spend some of the money that they're sitting on because that's not in the best use for the taxpayer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Small-business Assistance

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Edmonton-Decore has sometimes been referred to as Edmonton's shopping district. We are home to some of Edmonton's biggest business communities: auto sales shops, three major shopping malls, retail chains, and family-run businesses. Over the last few days during constituency week I met with several of my constituents from the business community. They're curious as to how the government is planning to support them. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what are you doing to support small businesses in Alberta through this economic downturn?

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the hon. member for his very pertinent question. We are definitely facing challenging times, and that's why right now we need to show leadership, which is exactly what our government is doing. There are several initiatives that we've already launched. The job creation incentive plan: $178 million for the next two years. We've increased capital rates or lending available by ATB by $1.5 billion. One initiative that really excites me is the STEP program, the fact that not only have we reintroduced it; we've increased it by $3 million and opened it up to small businesses to access those dollars.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the new job creation incentive program will support employers in creating as many as 27,000 new jobs and given that we want to ensure that we're growing and diversifying our economy, to the same minister: what types of organizations will be eligible for these grants?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the hon. member again for his question and for standing up for small and medium-sized enterprises in his constituency. This program is one of the most extensive of its kind in Canada. It's going to be supporting organizations of all sizes, available to all nonpublic sectors. We're talking about supporting small to medium-sized enterprises, corporations, registered charities, and not-for-profit entities. This program will be available as of January 1, and we are forecasting that this will create up to 27,000 jobs over the next two years.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's businesses also need to be able to be competitive in these tough economic times and given that additional training can greatly benefit all workplaces, again to the same minister: what are you doing to support these businesses with current and new employees who may be looking for this additional training?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, the budget that we tabled a few weeks ago is going to stabilize our public services, which is one of the ways that we are ensuring that there aren't further job losses.

The opposition would cut our public-sector front-line workers by thousands of jobs, and these reckless cuts would further exacerbate the problem and make it even more challenging for Alberta families. That's why our government is taking the initiative, showing leadership through investments in a few different programs, as I've mentioned, the job creation incentive program, increasing ATB's lending rate, which is going to help small to medium-sized enterprises grow and move to the next step.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Carbon Tax

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We continue to hear about pricing carbon from this government as though industry doesn't already pay a steep carbon levy. The NDP never campaigned on it. They have no mandate to bring it in, but they're bulldozing ahead anyway to introduce a massive new carbon tax to be laid on the back of every single Albertan across this province. Does the environment minister understand the inflationary impact on every Alberta family of any increase to the carbon tax we all already pay?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the question. You know, we have a situation where we have an intensity-based calculation on our large final emitters as it stands right now. The panel is considering whether that is the most rational and efficient way to organize carbon pricing for an economy such as ours. We are awaiting the advice of the panel, and we're moving forward with a balanced approach to climate change that will keep our economy moving using the best of advice from economists, from industry, with whom we have consulted widely on this matter, from the hundreds of Albertans who engaged in the climate change process, and from all of the technical engagement sessions we undertook.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. MacIntyre: Albertans who are losing their jobs and seeing their wages cut are justifiably worried about how another tax increase is going to bite into their ever-shrinking family budget, and given that 66 per cent of this province's electrical consumer base is industrial and knowing that a carbon tax will flow through to impact prices on almost everything we buy, will the environment minister admit that this new tax will be downloaded onto every Alberta family from every corner of this province?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, one of the things that we asked the panel to examine, Mr. Speaker, was the current structure of our carbon pricing system as it currently exists because we do have a carbon pricing system. They are going to be providing us advice on this matter. The fact of the matter is that the Official Opposition has offered zero solutions to address climate change. Either they don't believe in the science, or they don't believe it's Alberta's responsibility to do its part.

Mr. MacIntyre: Given that everyone knows that a carbon tax is going to make food, clothes, electricity, running a business, running a farm, owning a house, putting our kids in sports, driving a car, practically everything short of breathing, Mr. Speaker, more expensive, I will ask this minister one more time: does this minister understand that any increases in the price of carbon will be downloaded . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, can I again ask – the preamble is coming in here – what is your question? Please proceed with the question.

Mr. MacIntyre: I was into it.

The Speaker: Please proceed with the question.

Mr. MacIntyre: Does this minister understand that any increases in the price of carbon will be downloaded onto all Albertans and that the ones that will feel it the most are the 1,500 people a week losing their jobs as a result of this government's destabilizing, socialist agenda?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, we have heard from a variety of industry groups and others on this matter of pricing carbon, and they have a number of different pieces of advice for us. What they did tell us was that the climate change review and the royalty review should be linked as they are being implemented, that industry should be consulted meaningfully about our plans, and that we need to proceed without undue delay. We have taken that advice, which is, as it happens, also the advice of the many, many Albertans who have engaged in this process of the climate change review. I will note that the Official Opposition did not bother to provide us a written submission at all. They had no thoughts on this matter.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Fentanyl Use

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The prevalence of fentanyl in our province has created a public health crisis that is on track to kill 300 Albertans this year. According to police, organized crime and drug dealers are the reason this toxic drug is wreaking havoc in Alberta communities. To the Justice minister: given that controlling illegal drugs falls under the purview of your ministry and given that the prevalence of fentanyl is killing Albertans at a shocking rate, what are Alberta's chiefs of police suggesting you do, since you kindly followed my recommendation to meet with them, to help enforcement agencies gain control over this deadly drug?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Of course, this is a critical question at this moment in time. We have been working in concert with the Association of Chiefs of Police. Now, it is our government's view that increasing public awareness and ensuring that naloxone is available in all circumstances are critical pieces of this. We also are working with our partners to reduce supply and trafficking in drugs. In fact, I have been in contact with the federal minister just this morning to discuss some issues that the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police has brought forward to my attention, and we are moving forward on that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Justice minister: as I have previously stated, given that every moment's delay in creating a proactive plan to curb the distribution of fentanyl may mean yet another life lost and given that the nation is looking to Alberta to display leadership on this issue because our province is the hot spot for fentanyl deaths in Canada, what is your proactive plan for addressing the illegal production, importation, and distribution of this drug?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the question. Well, of course, it's critical that we act fast on fentanyl because it is an incredibly dangerous drug. It is having a huge impact on the lives of Albertans. We are moving forward with our plan, which, again, includes three parts, as I've said: to increase public awareness about the unpredictability of this incredibly potent drug; to make sure that the antidote, naloxone, is widely available in all sorts of community agencies; and to reduce the supply and drug trafficking. In fact, school resource officers and schools are working with Alberta Health Services to help educate students to make sure that they are alerted to the dangers of this drug.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that police, addictions specialists, and health professionals are all raising an alarm about fentanyl and given that we cannot rely on drug dealers to adhere to Health Canada's laboratory standards when they are producing the drug that they are supplying to their victims, what measures have you put in place to ensure that police have the tools today – and I mean today, Minister – to combat and eradicate this public health crisis?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the question. Well, of course, in this current budget this government funds policing to the tune of half a billion dollars. We are working with our partners to ensure that we are acting quickly on cutting off this supply, and we have been talking to our federal counterparts on measures that we think we could take in order to cut off this supply. But I think it's critical to recognize that drug addiction is a problem which is best solved through information and through health resources, and that's what we're working to do.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Seniors' Housing for Couples

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Health. Couples entering into long-term care are being torn apart and placed in facilities sometimes hundreds of kilometres away. Divorce by nursing home is something that should not be happening in our province. It's doing damage to loved ones and their families as they pay the emotional toll of separation, the anxiety of wondering when they'll see each other and whether it'll be the last time. Our seniors deserve better. What is your plan to ensure that Alberta seniors can live close by their loved ones, with dignity and respect, in their golden years?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. One of the things I'm really proud of is our party's commitment during the provincial election to build 2,000 new long-term care spaces. We are well on our way to making sure that we have an effective plan to carry that goal out. Of course, having access to the right beds in the right communities so that people can stay together is a big piece of the problem. So we'll be moving forward on that plan, and I'll be updating the House on specific communities in the days to come as well.

Thank you for the question.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, I'm tired of the NDP taking care of the high-paid bureaucrats when they're not taking care of seniors and cutting support grants for long-term care and low-income seniors. Given that the ASLI grants were cut to zero in the budget and new policies are apparently coming soon, how exactly will the minister support an aging-in-place philosophy ensuring that our seniors can live out their final years with the partners they love?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I'm sure it isn't a surprise that we're not keen on carrying on some of the policies that were in place with the last government as we move forward. We are going to be honouring the announcements that we made two weeks ago around the ASLI projects. Whether or not ASLI will be the mechanism to deliver long-term care in the future we haven't landed on yet. We will be building long-term care beds, but it doesn't necessarily need to be according to one specific platform that was there previously.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, there are year-long waits for long-term care space in all Alberta jurisdictions. Not only are we splitting up these couples; we're also driving up the health care costs by taking up bed spaces in the hospitals. Can the minister clarify exactly what infrastructure investments the government will make to alleviate the pressure on our health care system, on our primary care hospitals, and to address the issues of our most vulnerable population?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of our commitment to build 2,000 long-term care beds. These will help people who are currently in the community in unsupportive environments be in the right place as well as those who are in the hospital. While the Official Opposition proposed cutting $9 billion from the infrastructure plan, we know how important it is to invest in infrastructure, including long-term care. I look forward to members opposite supporting that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Springbank Reservoir Flood Mitigation Project

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP is rushing ahead with a plan to build a dam at Springbank even though they campaigned against this project during the last election. If you can believe it, before the Member for Banff-Cochrane sang the Springbank dam's praises, he was one of its loudest critics. To the environment minister: we know your party has no problem breaking election promises, but did you really have to pile on and break this promise, too?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that when we assumed office, we did a careful inventory of the relative merits of the two projects. Our priority as government is moving forward to provide strong protection for the city of Calgary and other communities. We took this decision based on the evidence, the evidence based on the cost to taxpayers, the evidence based on the amount of flood protection it would provide for the city of Calgary and for others, the evidence based on the type of project that it was and the larger catchment area that it would protect. This decision took us three or four months to make, and the reason for that is because we are an evidence-based government.

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, this government is growing far too comfortable with breaking their promises to Albertans, including the ones they campaigned on and were elected on. Given that the land valuation for this project is in excess of $175 million, contrary to the $40 million that the NDP is using as their valuation, can the minister explain why she is committed to rushing ahead on a project that's based on numbers that do not add up for Albertans?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, the decision that we took was to move forward with the environmental impact assessment, and we are not about to litigate these matters in public. What we are going to do is take an evidence-based decision based on three factors for the protection of the city of Calgary, which are cost, effectiveness of the project, and environmental impacts. Now, the fact of the matter is that the Wildrose cannot be trusted to get it right on flood mitigation. They would have cut $9.4 billion for infrastructure. That would have left Calgary with zero flood protection for years.

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, an NDP action a day keeps common sense away.

Given that a dam at Springbank would sacrifice thousands of acres of pristine and historic Alberta ranchland and since the broken cost-benefit analysis of this project isn't even enough to help her to do the right thing, does the minister truly care about the environment, and will she put the brakes on this project, that will destroy thousands of acres of beautiful Alberta ranchland?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, the fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that the project that the hon. member across the way is advocating for would possibly never get built because it is a run-of-the-river hydro project. The competing project, McLean Creek: the fact of the matter is that it would come with significant environmental impacts, and it ran the very real risk of catastrophic failure during the construction phase, leaving Calgary with nothing. Between that approach and the cuts to infrastructure the Official Opposition's approach is to leave Calgary at the mercy of another 2013 event. That is not the approach of this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

2:30 Coal-fired Electric Power Plant Retirement

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is planning to accelerate the phase-out of coal-fired electricity generation. Albertans agree, even those in industry, that coal is carbon intensive and needs to be phased out over time. However, we do not need rash, ideologically driven decisions that lack proper consultation, thorough research, and responsible action. To the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour: given that there are 5,600 jobs directly related to coal extraction and electricity generation, do you, Minister, believe that an accelerated phase-out of coal respects the livelihoods of Albertans, the best interests of thousands of hard-working Albertans, and the communities they live in?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, we've heard loud and clear from many of the folks both in the health care community and within the coal community, and that is advice that we are taking along with the advice of the panel on how we undertake an orderly transition away from coal-fired electricity. This was an undertaking of the previous government as well, but I do note that they had no plan in place for a transition for workers and a just transition for all Albertans.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the environment minister now: given that an accelerated phase-out of coal is likely to limit supply, reduce stability, and compromise the reliability of our electric system and given that this is also likely to drive up the price of electricity as industry struggles to attract investment to build noncoal electricity generation, compromising our competitiveness for industrial users while also reaching further into the wallets of hard-working Albertans, who are already feeling the pinch of the economy you seem so intent on destroying, why, Minister . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, again, could we please have the question? I'm hearing preambles over and over again.

The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, sure, and thank you to the member for the question, Mr. Speaker. As we move forward with these plans, we are going to encourage lower carbon and renewable options in the place of coal-fired electricity right now. We will make sure that this transition occurs in a balanced and measured way, working with the energy industry and Albertans. We will have a clear plan in the coming days and weeks on this matter of coal-fired electricity as we receive the panel's advice.

I might add that there are a number of very carefully thought-out plans contained within the climate leadership consultation piece that are online for any hon. members to read, in which we have a number of companies that have shared with us their thoughts . . .

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that an accelerated phase-out of coal raises the issue of fair compensation for stranded capital assets and given that your rejection of a dial-down, dial-up strategy could put Albertans on the hook in the billions of dollars for any fairly negotiated settlements, what is the estimated value of this fair compensation? Who will be negotiating this settlement, and where will this money come from?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, I thank the hon. member for his observations on what we have and have not rejected. The fact of the matter is that we are considering all of the advice of the panel and the advice that has been given to us by many of the coal-fired power incumbents and other industry players in this space, Mr. Speaker, while we also have conversations with the Electric System Operator and others to ensure an orderly plan that is balanced and measured, that protects the pocketbook, and that takes climate leadership seriously.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Energy Resource Trade with China

Ms McPherson: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, as someone who worked in the oil and gas industry for more than 20 years, I know how many jobs are associated with the industry and how important it is that this government is focused on increasing access to diverse world markets for Alberta's energy products. My office and I also hear from constituents employed in the industry who want the government to diversify the economy and reduce our reliance on a single commodity with limited markets. To the Minister of Energy: why did you . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, could you please state the question.

Ms McPherson: What was accomplished to increase markets for Alberta's energy products?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We went to China, first of all, because, next to the U.S., China is our next important trading partner. So we went, and basically we're going to allow them to get to know us. We wanted to let them know that Alberta certainly is open for business, and we want the world to know it. China represents for us a great opportunity to grow our economy, to diversify both in the energy and the environment fields. Competition, as you know, for markets is fierce, so we need to be active and not stand still.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this trip included not just the minister but also representatives from Alberta energy companies, Minister, can you explain why these companies were there and what they got out of the trip?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, our trip was a mission. We went with representatives from Suncor, EnCana, Enbridge, MEG Energy, and EBW, which is a financial group. It certainly was a great value to go as a team. We were able to have critical discussions with Chinese officials and industry, talk to the Chinese about what their needs are, how we can work as a group and continue the Chinese investment, which currently is $35 billion in Alberta. We want to grow that.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta has a long-standing agreement to work with China on energy projects, can the Minister tell us what the status is of that relationship and what plans, if any, she has to improve or strengthen that relationship?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for that question. Mr. Speaker, certainly, it's a long-standing relationship with China, and we continue to strengthen that. The discussions we had related to strengthening and modernizing. We actually worked to strengthen the China Alberta Petroleum Centre. We looked at enhancing that centre, increasing the number of companies we deal with, placing a heightened emphasis on promoting market access, promoting sustainable development respective of natural resources, and strengthening governance in all those areas.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Minimum Wage Increase

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. I recently sent a survey regarding minimum wage increases to every business in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. Mr. Speaker, the results were shocking. Ninety-two per cent of respondents said that their business would be directly impacted, while 77 per cent said that it would hurt their small business's ability to compete against large corporations. This is just another example of this NDP government basing their policies on ideology, not what is best for Albertans. To the minister of trade: how can you possibly say that this policy will help diversify our economy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our government promised in the election that we were going to make work fair in Alberta, and that's what we're doing. We're raising the minimum wage and making it more fair for Albertans. We're working with small business. We still are a great place for small business to run in Alberta. We have some of the lowest tax rates here in Alberta, and it's a great place to grow a business.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that as part of the survey I asked business owners how they will adapt to the minimum wage increase and 77 per cent said that they're considering limiting hours and 42 per cent are considering layoffs, is that fair?

Given that I've heard from business owners who are reconsidering their participation in the RAP program, how does the minister of jobs think that increasing the minimum wage will in fact create jobs?

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. I'd love to see how many businesses were actually interviewed in his survey, but I will say that we have been speaking with small to medium-sized enterprises throughout the province.

Our government has initiated a few different programs from the job creation incentive program to help businesses. We as well have announced the STEP program and increased it by $3 million, so it's a $10 million program, that small businesses for the first time in our province will have access to. Again, Mr. Speaker, it's important to look at the whole context of the fact that Alberta still has some of the lowest taxes in the country. We are the best place to start and grow a business.

Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that we're doing real consultation with real businesses and we're hearing from all sorts of folks, including the nonprofit sector, and given that a local nursing home in Linden wrote to me and said that the minimum wage increase will kill us; we will have to up our prices on seniors, which would be horrible for pensioners with limited income. To the Minister of Health: will you acknowledge that your government's policies are having unanticipated social consequences?

[Two members rose]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much. We're both very equally excited to answer this question, Mr. Speaker.

I'll thank the member for the question. Again, Mr. Speaker, there's quite a difference between what the opposition would do, which is that they would lay off thousands of nurses, teachers, and front-line service sector jobs. That in and of itself would cause the very closure of the centres that these members ...

The Speaker: Please sit down.

Diabetes Awareness

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize November as Diabetes Awareness Month. Members in this House today are wearing the blue circle pins in recognition, and I thank them for taking the time to bring attention and support to this important issue.

Mr. Speaker, diabetes touches thousands of people. In fact, in 2010 it was estimated that 217,000 people were affected, and that number is expected to rise to 363,000 by 2020. We also know that many Albertans are living with undiagnosed type 2 diabetes, and this can have devastating effects on their personal health. We know that these Albertans are deeply affected by this condition, and we're proud to have a number of programs in place to support them and their families.

A few of the best practices and developments in Alberta are our insulin pump therapy program, a mobile diabetes screening initiative for aboriginal communities, and health promotion programs for youth at risk of developing type 2 diabetes. Individuals needing assistance and coverage for diabetes medication and testing supplies are provided with assistance through the Alberta adult health benefit, Alberta child health benefit, Alberta seniors' benefit program, and some subsidized coverage of Alberta Blue Cross, and the aforementioned insulin pump therapy program.

We're proud to provide so many programs which support Albertans living with diabetes, and we know that strong access to preventative and primary care is necessary to ensure that Albertans are living healthy and productive lifestyles. We will continue to promote wellness to lower the number of Albertans living with diabetes and ensure that the necessary supports are there for those that need them.

To all Albertans living with diabetes, we are proud to say that you have our support, and we hope to enable you to continue to live healthy, productive, fulfilling lives.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Education Concerns

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've been hearing a lot about provincial education organizations using or misusing vast amounts of money on things like school boards suing each other to stop schools from opening and overpriced adult Easter egg hunts and staff perks. I'd like to bring a new perspective to all of this by looking at the conditions that some of our teachers and school administrators are having to deal with.

A constituent of mine is a teacher and brought forward the following concerns. A new school in the area is already overcrowded, and they are in need of portables to ease the pressure on the students and teachers. The recommended class size for division 2 is 23 students, and this school is consistently 30 per cent over that.

Mr. Speaker, while teachers and school administrators are struggling to meet ever-widening student learning needs in overcrowded schools, trustees, school boards, and provincial organizations are using education dollars to bully each other and are using funds for 'egg-citing' events. They may end up with egg on their face. I would like to urge this government to ensure that every penny of every education dollar is used for our students and not for adult power plays and perks.

I would also like to urge this government to work alongside the Wildrose caucus to implement policies that will provide tangible results for students in the classroom. In fact, Mr. Speaker, back in September Wildrose introduced our standing up for students initiative. This initiative includes policies that would focus on real results for students, that would return Alberta to a world-class education system.

I know the hon. Minister of Education agrees with us. I know that he would like to improve the state of our education system. That is why I ask him along with the rest of this NDP government to come together and join Wildrose in working in the interests of all Alberta students.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Bill 6

Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise and introduce Bill 6, the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act.

This omnibus bill proposes to amend workplace legislation so Alberta's farm and ranch workers will enjoy the same basic rights and protections as workers in other industries. Proposed changes would remove the exemption of the farm and ranch industry from occupational health and safety, employment standards, and labour relations legislation. Bill 6 also proposes to make workers' compensation insurance mandatory for all farm and ranch workers. If passed, Alberta would join every other jurisdiction in Canada in applying workplace legislation to Alberta's farms and ranches.

This is a historic day for Alberta. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a first time]

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Carlier, Minister of Agriculture and Forestry, pursuant to the Agriculture Financial Services Act the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation annual report 2014-15; pursuant to the Livestock Identification and Commerce Act the Livestock Identification Services Ltd. report to the minister and summary of activities April 1, 2014, to March 31, 2015; pursuant to the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act the Alberta Agricultural Products Marketing Council annual report 2014-15.

2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Mr. Clerk, I think there was an hon. member who had a tabling of return or report. Is that correct?

Ms Jansen: Yes.

The Speaker: Hon. member, could you proceed?

Ms Jansen: Absolutely. I'm rising, Mr. Speaker, to table five copies, first of all, of the family violence framework and, specifically, five additional copies of the section referring to gender and sexual diversity, to correct the assertion of the Minister of the Status of Women, who claimed that those areas were not covered in the framework. That is categorically false. I have five copies, of course, of the specific area and five copies of the framework.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I have to table the required copies of a letter from some home-schoolers in Calgary-North West concerning the proposed home education regulations, and I have five copies of those for you, as well.

Thank you.

Bill 4

An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act

[Adjourned debate October 29: Mr. Ceci]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to say that this is the first time I've spoken to a bill that will water down the budgetary rules in this province, that will raise the debt ceiling in this province, that will allow for more fiscal irresponsibility, but this is not the first time I've spoken to it. Instead, I've spoken to nearly identical bills from governments past, beginning in 2012, bills that bury the true financial details of our budget into three separate piles, bills that allow the government to hide how much debt it is taking on. It is, unfortunately, something that we've seen before. I'd like to say that this government, despite its significant philosophical differences with our party, would be doing something different on accountability, but it's not.

The primary difference between this bill and the previous government's financial management act is that it is removing nearly all limits to the debt. The government, on a piece of paper, is now allowing our debt to exceed over $50 billion and for it to do so at a moment's notice. It is a proposal to increase our so-called debt ceiling by 15 per cent at the whims of politicians. Now, this is an important debate, and I'm not allowed to refer to the absence of a member here, according to the rules, but I think it would be important for the minister who is responsible for tabling this legislation to be participating in the debate.

This bill has no checks or balances being put into place to ensure that we do not exceed a debt limit of 15 per cent. There are no consequences whatsoever for exceeding the proposed 15 per cent debt ceiling. There is nothing to stop the minister from ordering his staff to exceed that debt ceiling.

Once upon a time this province was debt free, and we can remember the Premier of the day hoisting a sign over his head saying: paid in full. Then we began taking on small, reasonable portions of debt, and then larger and larger unreasonable portions until today, when our debt stands at over $14 billion and is projected to exceed $47.4 billion before the next election under the best-case economic scenario.

This proposes to further increase our debt ceiling. Where have we heard of debt ceilings before? The U.S. Congress increases its so-called debt ceiling nearly twice a year. It is merely an argument for politicians about how deep they should dig the hole that they're standing in.

What is the point of creating any law when there are no punishments for breaking that law? There are punishments in law, that we create as lawmakers, for people who do not wear their seat belts, but there's no punishment when members of this Legislature exceed the debt limits that we place on ourselves. Members of this House can vote for a budget that will exceed our proposed debt limit of 15 per cent, and there will be no legal consequences whatsoever. We've passed laws that make it illegal to not wear a bike helmet, which only hurts the person riding the bike if they don't, but unlike a bicycle helmet, we're passing laws now that hurt everybody but have no consequence on ourselves if we break them. Other jurisdictions with debt ceilings have put in place punishments for politicians that exceed those limits, punishments as mild as cutting salaries for elected officials or also as harsh as shutting down the entire government, as happened in 2013 in the United States. That is not what we're proposing, but what we should consider are reasonable penalties placed on governments and politicians that break their own laws.

Perhaps there is no punishment listed in this bill for politicians breaking their 15 per cent debt ceiling because they intend to break that debt ceiling. What happens if our debt stands at 14 per cent of GDP and we face a recession and we exceed 15 per cent? Are there any consequences whatsoever? What happens if the lofty GDP growths in the NDP's budget plan do not come to bear to the degree to which they projected? What if oil does not bounce back to the high $70, as the Minister of Finance has said that it would? All of these are recipes for our debt to exceed 15 per cent of GDP. What if the NDP have another $4 billion rounding error? What if their revenue projections are unrealistic?

Now, the budget is also before this House at the same time, and in years 4 and 5 of the fiscal plan the government has provided zero details about how they get to their revenue projections, how they get to their expenditure projections. In years 1, 2, and 3 the government shows us their math, but in years 4 and 5 they pull it out of thin air. During the estimates process I repeatedly asked the Minister of Finance, however much I wish he was participating in this debate, to provide the math. What is the price that he expects oil to be at to get to years 4 and 5 revenue projections? What does he expect income taxes to be? What does he expect corporate taxes to be?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I assure you this is not a prop. This is merely a document. I've concluded a friendly wager with a member on the government side for $100 to be payable before the next election if the government does not meet its revenue projections. I think this is the easiest money I've ever made.

An Hon. Member: On paper.

Mr. Fildebrandt: It is, unfortunately, paper money, but fortunately for us the NDP don't control the banks yet.

The likelihood of us exceeding the proposed 15 per cent debt to GDP debt ceiling is very realistic, but there are no consequences whatsoever for exceeding it. This would mean the debt servicing costs would spiral out of control, as they are already projected to hit $1.3 billion, the equivalent of six entire departments of the government. That is money that we will not spend building schools, hospitals, roads, training doctors, nurses, or teachers. It is money that will be sent straight to the bankers. I never thought I'd see the day where the NDP are the party that wants to fund the banks. Debt servicing costs will be burning cash. Debt interest payments are already approaching a billion dollars, and they will climb higher still. We will throw billions away on debt servicing costs instead of providing services.

However much the government across refuses to acknowledge it, we have a spending problem. We should be focusing on spending taxpayers' dollars more efficiently and cutting excessive expenditures rather than simply increasing the size of our line of credit. We should be cutting waste and not cutting more cheques. The bill will not address our spending problem; it will only make it worse. It will merely whet the government's appetite. We cannot spend and borrow our way into prosperity. We need a plan to save Alberta, not spend Alberta. We need a plan to pay back the debt. Rather than put forward a plan to increase our debt limit, this government should put forward a plan to pay down the debt.

British Columbia spends $3,000 per capita less than the government of Alberta, and they receive on almost every measure better services. If B.C., that bastion of right-wing conservatism, can spend $3,000 per capita less and deliver better services, why can't we? We should be spending more efficiently, not just more.

Now, not everything in Bill 4 is bad. There are important measures to crack down on tax evasion. There are measures to restore some of the quarterly reporting, which was gutted in 2012. For these measures the government has my thanks, but these small positive measures are greatly outweighed.

There are measures to improve the lot of small brewers in the province, to do away with the retrogressive taxation of breweries not relevant to their size. This will help brewers in the province grow. But at the same time we have seen an increase of nearly 500 per cent on some small brewers as they import into Alberta. Many small brewers from Ontario, Nova Scotia, and Quebec will simply see their products vanish from our shelves. This is not something that is good for consumers in Alberta. Protectionism is unbecoming of a country with a free economy.

This budget and this bill are a test for us. Are we willing to grant the government another blank cheque? Are we willing to give this government more powers to borrow and to spend? Virtually anyone who looks at the government's budget knows that without a major change in the geopolitical, world economic situation there is virtually no way that they will meet a balanced budget by fiscal year 2019-2020. That means that the NDP plan to borrow or simply borrow to the maximum, and the government will likely be here in four years again asking to borrow more.

Our party will be putting forward amendments to this bill which will require that there be penalties for politicians that break their own laws. This is what is expected of us, Mr. Speaker. When we make laws for other people outside of this place, we put in place penalties for those people if they don't follow them. But what about ourselves? If we cannot keep to our own budget rules in this place, if we continue to exceed our debt ceilings year after year after year, should there be no consequence for our actions? I would think that our children would want better, that future generations would want us to behave more responsibly with the money that we expect them to pay back.

I look forward to continuing this debate. I certainly hope that the Minister of Finance, who introduced the bill, will be available for questions so that we can get to the bottom of some of this bill's details.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there other members that would speak to this item?

Mr. Hanson: Are we not allowed to question the speaker under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

The Speaker: I'm told that 29(2)(a) does not apply in this situation. It will to the next speaker, I'm advised, but not to the second speaker.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 4, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, or, as we like to call it inside Wildrose, the Tax Hike, Debt, and More Taxes Act.

Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta was spending in excess of revenue even when oil was $100 a barrel. Now with oil around $40 a barrel the government's spending situation is even worse in spite of revenues being the third highest in history this year and headed back up. In fact, spending is so out of control that the government wants to borrow debt to spend money on day-to-day operations. These operational deficits have been illegal for decades in Alberta. Eliminating operational deficits was the first step in Alberta eliminating its debt. This was part of our Alberta advantage, that allowed for low taxes and smaller government. The approach has resulted in a far more diversified economy now than when the Alberta advantage policy was first brought out.

The bill proposes to raise the debt limit to 15 per cent of GDP and plans to take us up to 10 per cent in two years. What will happen when our borrowing hits 15 per cent or more of GDP? The international bankers who hold Alberta's debt will declare Alberta to be a riskier place to invest. They will lower our credit rating. When your credit score drops, the interest rates on your debts go up. Try it yourself. Rack up a credit card, and don't pay it for a while. Then ask for another loan. Good luck.

A 1 per cent interest rate on $1 billion of debt is $10 million. Mr. Speaker, that is the equivalent of one brand new elementary school not being built. The NDP plan to rack up the debt to $50 billion in less than five years. If the interest rate is 1 per cent, that is $500 million in interest charges every year. Now we're up to 50 brand new elementary schools not being built, all denied by the NDP. But interest rates won't be 1 per cent. The bond markets want a strong, steady, and stable rate of return. Alberta will likely pay between 3 per cent and 5 per cent for its borrowing. That works out to $1.5 billion and $2.5 billion in annual interest on that $50 billion debt. Now, we are talking about the equivalent of a Calgary cancer centre or a Misericordia hospital replacement not being affordable anymore because the NDP have put Alberta in a position where we have to use that $2 billion every year just to carry our massive debt.

Jurisdictions that rack up huge debts are less likely to attract private-sector investment to diversify the economy. Isn't that what the NDP wants to do to get us off the oil and gas economic dependency and diversify into other industries?

Alberta runs an expensive government. I don't know if it is envy for their private-sector counterparts, national arrogance and hubris, or just poor management that has led the government of Alberta to be so expensive. Alberta already spends $2,000 per capita more than British Columbia just on operations. You would almost think it would be the reverse. British Columbia is a bastion of fiscal stability and prudent spending compared to Alberta. Who would have thought it? When it comes to capital, B.C. is spending $10.7 billion on capital over the next three years while Alberta is spending $24.6 billion over the next three years. That's right. We're spending more than double what a bigger, growing, expensive province is doing. It's also another $1,000 per capita that's going into debt every year. I don't get it, Mr. Speaker. B.C. has all the mountains and needs to do blasting to build highways. Pacific Rim investment and geography have made real estate extremely expensive in Vancouver and the Lower Mainland. Yet here we are with lots of flat and plentiful land, but our capital costs are astronomical.

Now, I'll be the first to admit that our public facilities are in disrepair and need to be fixed and that we had a lot of people move to Alberta over the last decade, who did not bring public infrastructure with them, but the costs have to be driven down. We heard the siren song of innovation to drive the costs down, but when construction companies go to bid on the contracts, they're not allowed to innovate. Picking the shades of paint for a new school is not innovation, Mr. Speaker.

Private-sector employees are experiencing pain in this time of restraint. Why can't the public sector, too? By not even asking the public-sector unions to consider something as simple as forgoing a pay raise while the rest of Alberta is reeling, this government is being irresponsible. It is just kicking the can down the road and delaying the inevitable until a champion of the free market is elected to government again. That inevitable is to trim the bloat and the fat among the management class of the government and its agencies, boards, and commissions. Managers managing managers managing other managers is unacceptable. Managers are not front-line workers. Managers are not unionized front-line workers.

Let me speak for a moment to the myth those on the other side like to tell Albertans. Not once has Wildrose threatened front-line workers. Teachers, doctors, nurses, professors, medical science technicians, psychologists, game wardens, prison guards, social workers: these are all front-line workers, and Wildrose knows we can't afford to lose any of them. The NDP scare tactic that we will eliminate front-line workers will not work.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude by saying that this fiscal regime is heading in the wrong direction and needs to be halted before serious damage is done to Alberta and the economy during this downturn. I oppose this bill because it is enabling legislation for a government that refuses to see it has a spending problem. I encourage everyone in this House to tell the government to stop taxing and to rein in our bloated spending while protecting the front lines. It can be done, but first you have to want to try.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) applies with respect to the last presentation, by the Member for Little Bow. Are there any questions to the member?

Hearing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have several concerns about this bill. I'll start with the discussion on section 7(1), that reinstates the 1 per cent spending cap. That is a result, of course, of having to repeal the original Fiscal Management Act, and we're simply putting back section 7. However, as the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks has noted, there are no teeth here whatsoever. There's nothing that prevents the government from simply repealing this act or amending this act or deciding that they don't like the 1 per cent spending limit in this act.

But more than that, there's a lot that can be done within the bounds of this act should it be passed into law. There are several loopholes, two of which I will point out. Section 7(2)(c), as we know, reads that an exclusion to the 1 per cent spending limit is "commitments made in connection with collective bargaining or other negotiations or settlements relating to remuneration." Now, that doesn't speak about just past commitments; it could in fact apply to future commitments. The government could decide that, in fact, it needs to increase spending far greater than 1 per cent simply by entering into a new agreement with any number of government workers. I won't pass judgment on whether or not that is a wise thing to do in terms of entering into those agreements. I'll simply say that it creates a huge loophole because fully half of Alberta government spending is spent on salaries; $25 billion of $50 billion spent in this government is wages and salaries. So that's a huge and significant loophole. But that was there before. It existed before. It doesn't mean it wasn't a loophole, but it existed before.

What is new in this act from the Fiscal Management Act is section 7(2)(e) with respect to entities referred to in the Financial Administration Act or the Regional Health Authorities Act. They are able to increase "expenses funded from the unbudgeted drawdown of operating reserves or accumulated surpluses or from unbudgeted additional revenue." What is unbudgeted additional revenue? Is that limited only to revenues generated by those entities, or could it in fact include windfall resource revenues from outside those particular entities? That's an important question to answer, and that's a question that this bill does not answer. It creates a significant concern, frankly, about the overall integrity of the bill itself.

I do want to talk for a moment about increased revenues, also known as tax increases. They're raising sin taxes on beer and tobacco. Generally, in fact, that's something I'm in favour of. I actually don't have a huge concern with it. At some point it gets so high that we create a situation where we may have a black market. There is no evidence that I'm aware of yet that that's a problem here in Alberta, but it's certainly something that this government needs to pay attention to.

Having said that, something that came up at a health discussion I had this morning, the Health Coalition, is that perhaps we should think about targeting some of these sin tax revenues to preventative health care, create a tie. The problems that are caused by alcohol and tobacco consumption should be targeted by specific measures within preventative health care.

The other issue I have a real concern about, one that I raised with the minister in estimates and one that I've raised in this House during question period, is whether or not the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board has done a sensitivity analysis on what will happen if, in fact, our credit rating is downgraded. This bill limits debt to GDP to 15 per cent, but it does not guarantee by itself that we will not see a credit rating downgrade in this province. That's a huge concern, and we're taking on hundreds of millions of dollars, billions, in debt in this province. The impact of even a half percent increase in our borrowing costs would be potentially exponential, and that becomes a huge and significant problem. I would encourage the minister again and I would encourage his department again to conduct that work, to do the analysis of what the impact would be of a credit rating downgrade.

We look at fuel taxes as well. The increase to fuel taxes is substantial, makes a big difference to the cost of transporting Alberta goods and services, especially the locomotive tax increase. I note that that will have a significant impact on the cost of transporting Alberta's bitumen by rail at a time when we are having a significant problem getting pipelines approved in this province. I note the government, in my opinion, has not done enough to encourage the development of pipelines in all directions. I'm disappointed with our government's lack of support for Keystone XL. I'm disappointed with our government's lack of support for Northern Gateway. I think there's significant risk in putting all of our eggs in the Energy East basket. Much as I support Energy East and I think it's a tremendous, nation-building project and something this House should all get behind, I worry very much when we focus only on one project.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my comments and welcome any questions my colleagues may have. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions for the Member for Calgary-Elbow?

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member talked about a sensitivity analysis of debt to GDP. I wonder if he could expand on that. That's a term that maybe isn't used enough, that we could stand to understand a little better.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Sure. Thank you very much for the question. Really what it says is that this bill and all actions of the government assume that we will not face a credit rating downgrade. The question is: what if? A sensitivity analysis says: what if? What if our borrowing costs go up .25 per cent, .5 per cent, 1 per cent? What if? What is that going to cost us? As you know, interest compounds itself and becomes exponentially worse. I have a feeling that within the department that work probably has been done. Given the number of capable financial analysts that we have within our Treasury Board and Finance department, I would imagine that if we dig deep enough, we may find a spreadsheet that has that analysis. I think this government, if they don't know the information, should know the information, and I do wonder if, in fact, they do because those numbers are – my budget analyst spent 20 minutes and did his own assessment, and he found that a 1 per cent increase in Alberta's borrowing rate two years out from now will cost us $700 million a year in debt-servicing costs. Those numbers add up from there over time, so it is a significant risk to this province.

I want to say that I am in favour, broadly speaking, of well-managed borrowing to build infrastructure. We're well behind in this province, and it's important that we do that. It's important that we create jobs at a time of economic uncertainty, but we need to do that in a managed way, and we need to make sure that that debt doesn't get out of control, and we need to know what those debt-servicing costs are going to be. If you can't measure it, you can't manage it, so I think it's very important that we understand what those numbers are.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Taylor: I was going to ask, Mr. Speaker: how many infrastructure projects does he think would be lost as a result of $700 million having to be spent on this debt that he was referring to?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Clark: That's a great question. I won't be able to give you a specific answer. It's something that perhaps our Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation may be able to give you a better indication of. Gosh. You know, $700 million: that's two and a half Springbank flood mitigation projects. That's the better part of the Calgary cancer centre. That's significant. Significant. And that's every single year. When we're in a situation where the government is going to borrow for operational spending, borrow for pens and pencils and paper and paper clips, that's a huge amount of money. That's a substantial risk to this province, and you can't overstate that risk.

So while this bill attempts to address that, if the only thing we're doing is limiting our debt to GDP to 15 per cent, that's not enough, I think, to maintain our triple-A credit rating. Different credit rating agencies have different measures. Debt to GDP is but one of those measures. We're already on negative credit watch from all of the rating agencies. Although that one step to limit our debt to GDP is important, it is by no means enough. I have some significant concerns that future infrastructure projects and future operational spending are at risk if we let our debt get out of control.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, sir. To the hon. member: given that Alberta's GDP per person is about double that of Ontario and they have a 30 per cent—correct me if I'm wrong—debt ceiling, in your calculations is it true that a 15 per cent debt ceiling to us is equivalent to the same impact as a 30 per cent debt ceiling to someone with half the GDP per person?

Mr. Clark: I guess by that simple math it probably is. You know, a 15 per cent debt to GDP in Alberta is a substantial amount of money. I don't have the calculations in front of me, but I believe it to be well in excess of $50 billion in debt. That's a significant amount. And at that level debt service costs get to be a significant portion of the budget, your second or third line item in terms of budget, and that money only going to debt service.

Again, I'm okay with well-managed debt. I'm not convinced that allowing our debt ceiling to get up to 15 per cent of debt to GDP is, in fact, a prudent thing to do. It creates trade-offs that I think we do not want to make in this province.

Mr. MacIntyre: Great. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other questions under 29(2)(a)?
The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I truly need to speak to this bill. This government's philosophically and economically flawed fiscal plan bases its justification upon comparisons drawn from the very worst provinces in our Confederation. Who you compare yourself to actually does matter. Comparison to the worst financial managers in the country is, in fact, a very poor standard of measure. Ontario has the dubious and shameful reputation, as reported in the Financial Post and other papers, as being the most indebted subsovereign jurisdiction in the world. Why do we want to compare ourselves to the worst?

Every teenager knows that peer pressure is often bad for you, especially when it comes from those who are failing their grade. Telling me that the worst performing student in the class of provincial economics is the one I should look up to and emulate is just not acceptable. Telling yourself that a 15 per cent debt ceiling is acceptable for resource-rich Alberta is self-delusion or maybe just teenage justification, but the truth is that Albertans really do not want this. Mr. Speaker, Bill 4 reflects the fundamental problem with this government's plan. The NDP refuses to cut fat. They want to increase Alberta's debt load and continue to pay for the most expensive provincial government in the country.

Now, Albertans know that throwing money at a problem is never a solution, and borrowing for bloated operational costs is doing exactly that. Setting a high debt ceiling that this government can arbitrarily change on a whim while they continue to push back the date of a balanced budget does not restore confidence in our marketplace. Instead, it just pushes the province deeper and deeper in debt, making it very hard for investors and business owners to properly plan for the future.

Now, don't get me wrong. I do applaud the effort to increase the financial transparency in this province. That's particularly true with the clarity of 6(1) on revised quarterly projection updates. I'm glad to see that, but I am seriously concerned about the abandonment of offsetting deficit spending with draws from reserve funds. Of course, the problem is that there are no reserve funds or at least very soon won't be. Yes, I admit that those across the floor from us here have been handed a somewhat difficult hand to play because there are no reserves, which is even more reason, actually, to play it well. Beginning to build the Alberta heritage debt fund is not the way to build Alberta.

To make a comparison, condo associations in this province are required by law to plan for, fund, and maintain reserve funds. That's a fiduciary duty of condo association directors. Does the Alberta government consider itself somehow above and beyond the law in this regard? Should the government not lead by example? Is the government creating a double standard where citizens of condo associations must act and invest according to the rule of law but the government does not have to be constrained by it? The condo reserve fund is a prudent requirement for the protection of the people of Alberta. How do the NDP consider that it is not a prudent and protective requirement for the government to also be required to maintain and rely on reserves rather than debt for its operations?

I ask the government to examine the principles that led to legislated condo reserve funds and understand that what is good for condo owners managing millions of dollars is far more important for a government managing billions of dollars. Mr. Speaker, how is it that this government is so comfortable with debt anyway? Who do they think they're borrowing from? I'm speaking about a government that generally views big corporations as the enemy. The NDP believe that corporations are the ones who make their wealth off the backs of the laboring poor, that they control the so-called evil strings of capitalism, and that they are the ones who are the sole cause of income inequality. This government's mantra believes that no one wants to be enslaved to them. [interjection]

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you have a point of order?

Mr. Mason: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Mason: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member with respect to this, but 23(i), “imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member,” applies here, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is sketching what could charitably be called a caricature of the views of members on this side. It’s misrepresenting what the views of members on this side of the House actually are, and I would suggest that he rephrase his comments accordingly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The point of order is noted. I’m looking for procedural direction.

The hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We’ve been through this particular point of order many times. The Government House Leader has made the point that I’m going to make here, that this is a matter of perception and interpretation. We have regularly risen on points of order on mischaracterizations of policies and priorities of the Wildrose. The government accusing the Official Opposition of wanting to lay off mass thousands of workers: that is not true, but you have ruled that that is merely a political interpretation. The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka is speaking with what is a political interpretation of the government’s policies and views, and due to your past rulings on this issue, I think that the Government House Leader’s point of order is not valid.

3:30

The Speaker: My recollection is that the item that you’re referring to, in fact, was a point of privilege. Nonetheless, your point is taken.

Hon. member, would you like in any way to reconsider your comments? If not, I will make a note of the point of order made.

Mr. Orr: Yeah. I don’t intend any offence. I guess I am confused, actually, that this policy comes forward. Maybe I’m a little too strong, but I’m just expressing what I think I’ve heard before. No offence intended, and I’ll move on if I may.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Orr: My question really boils down to – and I get the values of the NDP in terms of corporations and big government. What really, really confuses me in this, then, which is where I’m going, is that it seems to me that the government is betraying its own values and its own people by going hat in hand right back to the very foundations of capitalism, back to the greatest controllers of capitalism, the big banks and the international financiers, to borrow money from them. Why does the NDP government give so much power to those that control so much of our world?

It doesn’t matter who it is: families, businesses, governments. You enslave yourself in the worst possible way by taking on debt, and setting up Albertans and their tax dollars for higher lending rates and higher debt is not going to be benefiting our province. When it’s all said and done, we will have dug ourselves a $50 billion hole, that really betrays the values of most Albertans on this side of the House and, if they really think about it, I truly believe, on that side of the House. Why do we want to give the big international financiers control over our lives? Every dollar we borrow comes with a chain, and you will not be released until every last cent is repaid.

Mr. Speaker, this government continues to demonstrate, I think, a lack of financial knowledge and a contempt for the Alberta marketplace, and I just ask: when will this government admit that the debt ceiling is a Band-Aid solution and that what it really needs to do is to stop bleeding our dollars away?

Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a) are there any questions for the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka?

Mr. Hanson: Yes. I have a question. Hon. member, just if you could, you know, kind of clarify to us: if we go into debt to the tune of spending $1.3 billion to $2 billion a year simply on interest, how is that going to affect your riding and projects that people are putting forward in your riding?

Mr. Orr: Well, one of the most important things in my riding is a major shared infrastructure project between a group of municipalities. That has not been completed yet, and the inability to fund important water for life projects, both freshwater and sewer water, would be a major disaster in my riding. So that would be one very important way.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other questions for the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, are there other parties who wish to speak to Bill 4, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in the House today to address the assembled members with my grave concerns over Bill 4. I fear for the future of this province under the guidance of a government that does not seem to understand the very real and negative consequences of debt. This bill, which allows operational borrowing, will take Alberta in an entirely incorrect direction.

Alberta is an incredibly blessed province. We have immense mineral wealth and an industrious population. The hard work and entrepreneurial spirit of Albertans have generated an incredible amount of wealth, affording the residents of this province a high quality of life. The government has done a lot of work in the last six months to dismantle the remnants of the Alberta advantage. They want Albertans to forget that low tax rates cultivated and encouraged the industrious and entrepreneurial spirit of this province. They want Albertans to forget that these low taxes encouraged our job creators to thrive. They want Albertans to forget that low taxes allowed our economy to grow to a point where we never had to choose between low taxes and a high level of services. I want to implore all of you to not forget what made this province a beautiful place to work and to raise a family.

Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, Albertans and industry have long been taxed at a level that has consistently generated a high level of tax revenue. Even this year our level of revenues is the third highest that it’s ever been, a fact that the current government seems highly motivated to have Albertans forget. Let me be clear. This budget will remain unbalanced under the NDP due to high expenditure, not low revenue.

When I look at Bill 4 and this government’s plans for the next few fiscal years more broadly, I’m deeply concerned, and I’m incredibly dismayed. The government plans to debt finance program spending, and this bill will let them do that. The government is refusing to accept the extremely real and negative repercussions on everyday Albertans from this level of irresponsible spending. Instead of paying these debt-servicing costs, we would be paying for something that we thought was important to this government: schools, roads, hospitals. Soon the government will pay $1.2 billion to debt-servicing costs, and the new government refuses to take steps to move us away from this direction. The $1.2 billion could be used, actually, towards the salaries of numerous teachers, nurses, and doctors, and to add insult to injury, they're doing nothing to change the province's trajectory to end the downward economic debt spiral. This is just bad fiscal management.

As your government debt finances program spending, you are choosing to saddle future generations with the cost of program operations from which they will never derive any benefit. You fearmongered about our policies when actually it's your policy of driving this province's economy into the ground that's seeing us borrowing billions at the expense of my children's money and your children's money and all of your great-grandchildren. This is a terrible legacy for our generation to be burdening the next generation and the next generation and the next generation.

It is this government's inability to manage its swollen bureaucracy which is hurting our children, a bureaucracy that has become so large. It is dysfunctional as a result of our high-priced services that are underperforming. In fact, just last week a former Alberta Finance minister clarified that the NDP could indeed maintain a front-line service and cut spending. This former minister noted that this is not about protecting health care, education, or social services but rather the salaries of public-sector unions that deliver these services.

There is plenty of revenue to maintain front-line services. We are borrowing and raising taxes for the increased salaries and benefits for the bureaucrats. This is about being stewards of our economy and acting on sound fiscal planning rather than raises for the bureaucrats and the public-sector unions. We already spend per capita $2,000 more than B.C. on operations. This government is disinterested in spending money efficiently.

Alberta's population, like the rest of Canada's, is aging rapidly, and we continue to see lower economic growth, a problem that this government seems endlessly continuing to perpetuate. An aging population has profound implications both economically and socially. Interest rates are going to go back up, and with every year it becomes more and more difficult to remove our province from this downward spiral it is currently on. This government's only commitment is pushing us further into a deficit-debt spiral.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions for the member under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other members? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 4. It's a pleasure to speak this afternoon to the House regarding this matter. I certainly have listened with interest to some of the comments made by some of the various members, especially from this side, which I think are very appropriate and to the point. I think I'm going to take the opportunity, as I usually do, to hammer the point home a little further if I may.

Anyway, you know, it's known as the act to implement various tax measures and to enact the fiscal planning and the transparency of this whole situation, Mr. Speaker. Let's be clear, though. This bill is about enabling higher taxes and more debt because this government ideologically rejects any reduction to our bloated spending habits that we've had over the past many decades. It allows the government to run operational deficits, which for decades have been illegal. What this means is that the province is borrowing money to pay for basic services. This is the definition of unsustainable.

Most of my fellow members across the aisle remember the early '90s with loathing, or some of them may not if they were not in politics at that time. Actually, many of my fellow members may not remember the '90s at all, but be that as it may, the challenging years we went through in the early '90s were necessary to eliminate the high debt we had, and it resulted in the Alberta advantage. I'm not sure if anybody remembers the Alberta advantage anymore because it seems as if it's disappeared for years now.

Because of the prudent fiscal management of former Premier Ralph Klein, though, Alberta became the envy of the nation. We experienced massive levels of investment; our services across the board were top of the class, Alberta was debt free, and Albertans were . . . [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, is it the intent of the Speaker to allow heckling during these debates? Just a question for clarification if I may. Just a question, sir, if I may.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Stier: Thank you. Since the late 2000s that has been changing. Continuous governments began to increase spending beyond inflation plus population. We came to rely on our oil and gas revenues to pay for basic services. This resulted in deficits and the taking on of debt.

Instead of changing course and working towards getting our province back on stable financing footing, this government has doubled down on the deficits. "Why should we care?" you ask. "Interest rates are low," you say. "This is a perfect time to borrow," they say. "Get in while the getting's good," they say. Well, along with debt comes debt-servicing costs, ladies and gentlemen. Debt-servicing costs are the money we spend to cover the repayment of interest and principal on our debt. Under this government's leadership we will soon be facing $1 billion in debt-servicing costs, and by 2019 it will balloon to $2 billion just in debt-servicing costs. That is taxpayers' money, ladies and gentleman, that this government is just tossing away without a concern in the world. This is taxpayers' money that this government is simply throwing away because of their bad economic policies. It was wrong under the previous government, and it's still wrong under this government.

Let's take a moment to consider what $2 billion would have got us: 400 water treatment plants, 340 fire halls, 339 full water pump stations for municipal needs, 330 community halls, 300 ambulance facilities – I can tell you that we need more ambulance facilities; I've mentioned this in the House several times in the past three and a half years – 286 police stations, 263 intersection improvements all over Alberta. We're talking about doing that all over Alberta because there is such a deficit on that. I could go on, Mr. Speaker, but I think everyone gets the point. Instead of all these critically needed items we are lining the pockets of big banks.

The legislation calls for a debt ceiling of 15 per cent of GDP, but if the government is willing to change the law and says that operational deficits are now legal, what is stopping them from changing this law once they reach 15 per cent? Are there no provisions for punishment if the government exceeds 15 per cent of GDP? What is the point of having a law without any consequences for breaking it? What would be done to civil servants if they were told by the government to borrow illegally? Why are there no protections in place? GDP could drop with cyclical economic changes and unexpectedly take our debt beyond the 15 per cent GDP mark. What then? Fifteen per cent is approximately $50 billion of debt that future generations would maybe have to pay back if possible. This government is forcing future Albertans to pay for its bad economic policies, and instead of focusing on spending taxpayers' dollars effectively and efficiently, they're hiking dozens of taxes and fees and running up the credit card every minute of every day.

This government has a serious spending problem. There's no question. This bill will just enable this government to put off addressing the problem. With our massive royalty revenues and economic spinoffs there's no excuse to be running billions in debt every year. Instead of changing the legislation to run deficits, we should be creating legislation that determines how we will save our surpluses and secure our financial future instead of risking it with debt.

This government was elected because they promised to be different. I hope that they will be different; I hope that they will be better than the previous government. Instead, we're getting a government that is much worse, a government that is increasing debt, raising taxes, and destroying what was left of our Alberta advantage.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions of the member? Please proceed.

Mr. Hanson: To the member: I'm not questioning your age, sir, but you obviously lived through the downturns of the '80s and the '90s and must recall how the effects of the high interest rates affected homeowners and businesses. We're justifying borrowing right now because the interest rates are low. Can you give us some idea of what even a 2 per cent increase in interest rates, as opposed to the 23 per cent that we saw in the '80s, would do to our economy if we were sitting on this much debt?

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, if I may. Thank you. Thanks to the hon. member for the question. That's interesting. It's kind of hard to calculate a 2 per cent increase in debt. I don't have a calculator in front of me. I can tell you right now that, yes, I have lived for many years through different cycles and different interest rates, and I can remember the difficulties that we all experienced during the late '70s and early '80s, when interest rates were going up to 18 to 20 to 23 per cent. It was amazing to me how many people were in very difficult times in those days. We suddenly had all kinds of very serious problems. We had people that were losing their homes. We had people who were involved in the construction business, whether from the supply side or the building side or whatever, losing their jobs because construction came to a grinding halt. No one could afford to borrow for homes. No one could make the payments. Property values decreased immensely. Assessments went down. As we all know, our very net worth is based on assessments. Yes, this kind of an increase, even at 2 per cent, province-wide will have devastating effects. We're already seeing the effects and the negative impacts of these kinds of policies that are coming out even before the legislation is passed.

Thank you for the question. I think it's a good one to keep in mind, that experience of the past should be able to guide us for the future.

The Speaker: Are there any other questions for the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod?

Are there other members who wish to speak? The Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise to speak on Bill 4. I oppose Bill 4. I'd like to start off by saying that no government has ever taxed its way to prosperity or, put another way, to a surplus. We only have to look across the pond to Greece to see what will happen if we continue down the lines of this way of thinking.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Alberta runs the most expensive government in all of Canada. Raising taxes and asking people to hand over their hard-earned money does not make Alberta more efficient or give us our Alberta advantage. In fact, I believe it does the opposite. Albertans expect their government to be good stewards of their money. That's something I've been told time and time again, so I would just expect the government to be good stewards of the money.

Let's be clear. This bill is about enabling higher taxes and more debt. That's what we're going to see from this. More debt means more debt-servicing costs, so that means fewer schools, fewer hospitals. It's going to be a compounded problem.

You know, by 2020 we'll be somewhere around $50 billion in debt, and it will cost in the neighbourhood of $1 billion to $2 billion anyway to service that debt. The cost of the Wainwright hospital, a hospital I've been advocating for in this House before, is about $241 million. That's the government's number. You're looking at taking four to eight of those hospitals off the market every year, year after year, as long as we have that debt. As long as we have to service that debt, those hospitals will not be able to be built along with all the other aforementioned projects that will not be able to be built. When do you reach the debt ceiling? What provisions do you have in place if you get right to that 15 per cent or exceed that 15 per cent of GDP?

I have another question for you, and I think there's an unintended consequence that comes along with this one. You know, I've never been a smoker, and I appreciate that the sin tax that you're putting on there is a voluntary tax; it's just there for the people that want to do this. But on page 49 of Bill 4, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, it goes on to say:

(a) On every cigarette or tobacco stick purchased by that consumer, $0.25.

That goes from 20 cents to 25 cents.

(b) On every cigar purchased by that consumer, 129% of the taxable price of the cigar, with the tax payable on each cigar being not less than $0.25 per cigar nor more than $7.83 per cigar.

That was 103 per cent before; now it's 129 per cent. That's fairly significant.

(c) On every gram ... of any tobacco, other than cigarettes, tobacco sticks or cigars, purchased by that consumer, $0.375.

It goes from 30 cents to 37 and a half cents.

I guess the point that I'm getting at is that I'm looking at the unintended consequences that could happen, the unintended consequences that cigarettes, tobacco, all these products become so expensive that we end up with a policing problem because of illegal sales on cigarettes or perhaps smuggling in our province. That's something that I certainly don't want to see, more criminal activity, and these I think are the unintended consequences that could happen as a result of these taxes that keep getting piled on.

So I'm opposed to this bill. I don't believe that we need to keep raising the debt ceiling, and I think that we need to get our spending under control and look at other measures to get that spending under control.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yes, Madam Speaker. The Member for Battle River-Wainwright spoke about the unintended consequences of raising tobacco taxes now. I think it's likely that every member of this House recognizes that higher tobacco taxes can discourage tobacco use, which is an important social good, and we can use tobacco taxes to pay for the accompanying health care costs that come with tobacco use. However, that does come to a limit. We can see what's happening in Ontario and Quebec right now, where contraband tobacco makes up between 33 per cent and 50 per cent of all tobacco sales in those provinces largely because high tobacco taxes have gotten to such a level that they incentivize a massive black market. Perhaps the member could elaborate on his points around contraband tobacco and how raising tobacco taxes beyond a particular point could in fact reduce the revenue the government intends to collect from tobacco taxes.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you for that. Thank you, Madam Speaker. Raising the tobacco tax will have unintended consequences, certainly could, and have the opposite effect of what was intended. If it was intended that we're going to just stop people from smoking or slow it down, that would be a fantastic thing. However, I don't believe that's going to happen in all cases. What's going to happen is what happened in Ontario. With the rise in the tax you'll end up with potentially more contraband cigarettes coming across the border and creating more problems. Where the tax becomes quite problematic is that we have to spend more on policing just to be able to have this. So if we spend more money on policing, are we actually gaining any money from this raise in these tobacco taxes? I don't think so. I think that it's going to be counterintuitive to what you're intending. I think that all of these taxes that we've been putting in here have the potential for future problems.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wish to question or comment under 29(2)(a)?

The next member to speak to the bill, then. Please go ahead, Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 4, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. Given the recent warnings that this government has received from bond-rating agencies like Moody's, who already have given this province, you know, almost in writing a warning, "You are on the watch" – they are watching our debt-to-GDP ratio; they are watching the policies of this government because they are considering, you know, lowering our rating – it's a surprise to me that the government would then bring along a bill like this to, well, first of all, increase the cap to 15 per cent and then also change the law which used to make it illegal to borrow for operation. Now it's going to be legal to borrow for operation. These kinds of signals that are sent to the bond-rating agencies are not signals that they particularly like because it means, then, that for the money that we do have to borrow, we are going to be paying more interest.

Now, we're going to be borrowing – well, yeah, we, all Albertans, are going to be on the hook for a few billion dollars more this year. Then a year from now, when another budget cycle comes around and this government still can't rein in its spending, we're going to be borrowing more. Those same bond-rating companies are then going to reassess our bond rating and downgrade us again. Although I have heard a lot of members talking about a $50 billion debt load by the end of the four-year term of this government, no one seems to have touched on the reality that every quarter between now and the end of that four-year term those bond-rating agencies may have been dropping our bond rating and increasing our interest rate quarter by quarter by quarter. Our projection of a $2 billion debt-servicing cost could be substantially low. At the end of the four-year term we could be paying substantially more for the debt that we have simply because we are playing into the hands of the debt cycle. It's like a circus you can't get away from. You cannot borrow your way to prosperity.

Now, as MLA for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake the issues that are outlined in Bill 4 put forward by this NDP government are some of the hottest hot-button issues in my riding. My riding is predominantly agricultural. I do have some urban. There are 14 communities in total. It doesn't matter whether I'm talking to a farmer down in Innisfail or out in Spruce View or whether I'm talking to a young family in Sylvan Lake – we have a lot of laid-off people from the patch in Sylvan Lake, my own hometown – or whether it's a nonprofit group relying on the generous donations from people. Let's be clear; out-of-work people don't have the money to donate to nonprofits. It doesn't matter who I'm talking to. Everyone is concerned about the direction this government is taking. The Alberta advantage is pretty much done, and this blind ideology of tax and spend and tax and spend is putting the last nail in the coffin.

Madam Speaker, they are concerned about bills like Bill 4 and what it means for our current situation, but more importantly they are worried about the consequences to our children and our grandchildren because of this government's push with bills like this that attempt to spend our way out of trouble.

The good people of my riding know without a doubt that you cannot spend your way to prosperity, so as I travel around my riding and I talk to people that are frightened about losing their jobs – and some of them already have – they are troubled. They are confused. They don't understand what has happened to their Alberta. They don't understand an ideology from a government that higher taxes and increased spending during a downturn in the economy are somehow good for this province, a government who continues to push this kind of ideology while over 65,000 of our fellow Albertans have lost their jobs.

Let's be clear about this 65,000 number that we keep hearing. This does not take into account subcontractors and contractors who are self-employed people, who do not show up on the unemployment rolls. These are people who are not getting contracts for work, but they are self-employed, one-owner operators, little mom-and-pop businesses here and there that are not getting the fab jobs, not getting the welding jobs, not getting the supply jobs, and they don't show up in the unemployment statistics. I would venture to suggest to this House that this number of 65,000 Albertans having lost their jobs is only half of the true picture when you take into account how many small businesses and contractors in this province also rely on our resource industry for work. They are not working. Those welding trucks are parked at home.

With that in mind, Madam Speaker, let's be clear. This bill is about one thing only, and that's enabling a government to raise taxes even higher. It's about more debt, more borrowing against our children's future, and it shows that this government is refusing to deal with bloated spending, refusing to take a look at efficiencies within government, refusing to do what every family across this province knows, that you cannot spend more than you make. Instead of getting our fiscal house in order, this government has chosen to go the other direction and put forward a bill that will allow this government to run operational deficits, which for decades have been illegal in this province. It's going to allow for high debt loads, and we're chasing this $50 billion debt load by the next election. Given that there appear to be serious doubts with the rosy revenue projections put forward by the Finance minister, it is, sadly, looking to me at least like it could be a whole lot more.

This Bill 4 pretty much kills the Alberta advantage, destroying the hard work and sacrifice of Albertans when we together in this province eliminated the high debt load of this province that we had back in 1992. In 2004 we watched as former Premier Klein announced Alberta's debt paid in full. It was a crowning achievement that made all of us in this province able to hold our heads high. I was involved in international business at the time, and even countries in the Middle East knew where Alberta was. They had heard about us. They'd heard about our province all the way overseas and in Europe. They knew who we were, and they even knew who Premier Klein was. They thought this was the greatest thing ever, that a country or a place, a jurisdiction, could be debt free. We were the envy of the planet.

All this hard work that paved the way for lower taxes, increased spending on services from the savings from the elimination of the costs of debt servicing, all of this: now a decade later the NDP is throwing it away, and they're choosing higher taxes and high costs that come with debt servicing because they're borrowing tens of millions of dollars instead of looking for ways to save money. It's terrible. Instead of spending money on badly needed schools and roads, Alberta is going to be spending significant amounts of money on nothing more than debt servicing. It is a shame.

Now, Madam Speaker, the government would like us to believe that paper debt ceilings will keep them from going further than 15 per cent of GDP into debt. I submit to this House and to all Albertans that a paper ceiling of 15 per cent is just a piece of paper that can be broken, just like every other law can be broken in this province. Remember the election that we just had? We had a piece of paper that said that the election was going to take place in June 2016, and look what happened. A piece of paper that tells the government, "You cannot exceed 15 per cent of GDP" is, frankly, not worth the paper it's written on if a majority government can come back and just say, "Well, actually, we need to change that to 18 and then next month to 19 and then the next quarter to 20," and on and on it goes, using the 30 per cent example of Ontario as something to achieve instead of something to avoid.

An examination of this makes it clear that these so-called debt ceilings are just paper promises with no credibility whatsoever, Madam Speaker. If there is no provision for a serious consequence in breaking this 15 per cent of GDP, then I repeat: that document isn't worth the paper it's written on.

Let's be clear. There are no provisions for punishment if the government exceeds it, so really this provision is quite useless. What's the point in writing a law where there are no consequences for breaking it? And what about the civil servants? If they're told by the government to borrow and it happens to be illegal at the moment, there's no protection for them either. All these questions this government has not answered, and clearly, Madam Speaker, the government sees no need to ensure that this law is enforced. The debt ceiling is an empty, unenforceable promise, and this government, in reality, can continue to run amok with our future generations' money. It's shameful.

If, of course, the GDP projections happen to be off – not being a betting man, I might just take that bet – I would bet that they are not going to make the GDP projections that they have in this rosy budget. Then, of course, the 15 per cent of GDP mark is blown to smithereens right there. The government has no answer to this question.

Let's be clear on what 15 per cent is. It's somewhere between $50 billion and $60 billion debt that future generations are going to have to pay back, that my children, my grandchildren are going to have to pay back, all of us. It's alarming, especially when you realize that we already spend more per capita than almost anywhere else, $2,000 more than B.C. just on operations.

When you look at capital spending, our neighbour to the west is spending $11.7 billion on capital over the next three years, and Alberta is spending $24.6 billion over that same period of time, more than double our neighbour, which is a bigger and growing, expensive province. That's another $1,000 per capita per year going to debt. I believe that Alberta needs to focus on spending hard-working Albertans taxpayers' dollars much more efficiently than we are, looking for places to save rather than more places to tax us. Let's be very clear about money here. A dollar in the hands of an Albertan is a better-spent dollar than in the hands of the government or in the hands of a bank.

I believe Alberta needs to focus on saving. If I go home and find out that I've had to take out a loan to buy groceries, then I know that I have a spending problem, and Albertans know that if you're borrowing to do things like that, you have a spending problem. This government hasn't figured that part out yet. They're still borrowing for groceries, and they're making it much worse with this bill, that enables them to put off addressing the problem. You know, part of being a grown-up is facing the problems head-on, and this bill does not do it. It just puts the problem out there for another day, for another generation to have to deal with.

Madam Speaker, with our massive royalty revenues and economic spinoffs, we really don't have any excuse to be running these kinds of billion-dollar debts. We have not got a revenue problem; we have a spending problem.

We should be creating legislation, Madam Speaker, that secures our financial future, not jeopardizes it, but sadly this government is creating legislation that risks our future even further with a debt prison that comes along with any kind of debt like this. Our revenues are the third highest in history this year and according to this government are supposed to be going up. I think the projections of increased income are highly suspect, and in recent days we've already seen the indication, both from the World Bank and Moody's, that the government is not going to be recognizing their projections, especially based on the oil price trends.

But given the third-highest-in-history number, why is this government finding it necessary to handcuff us with so much debt? If we cannot pay our bills during our third-best year, how are we ever going to get our fiscal house in order? How is this government going to get Alberta's spending back under control? We don't see a bill doing that. Instead, we want to increase the ceiling? We want to be able to borrow for operational? It just makes it worse, with no effort to address the spending problems we have in this province. Alberta's taxes were the lowest in Canada. We were the first and only jurisdiction in our country to be debt free. This bill, taken together with an ill-advised royalty review, increased carbon taxes, and all these other tax and fee increases mean the Alberta advantage is fading away. [Mr. MacIntyre's speaking time expired] And I am done.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Go ahead, hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I thank the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake for his comments. A lot of that hit home with me. In Brooks we've got a lot of oil patch workers who were laid off. Many of the industries around it are hurting as well. We've got oil service providers who are moving to Saskatchewan. There's been a lot of noise from the government benches. Unfortunately, not a single member on that side has taken the time to speak to a bill which will leave us indebted for generations to come. Members on this side of the House, the Official Opposition, are standing up for Albertans, asking questions, and we can't even get the minister who introduced the bill to stand up and debate it here. We get a lot of static from the members over there, but not one of them is willing to stand up and defend this bill.

I'd like the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake to perhaps elaborate on some of his thoughts. Tell us, in particular, perhaps why we need teeth in this legislation. The politicians over there are willing to quack, make a lot of noise, but they're not willing to actually debate the issue because they intend to come back here in four years to raise our debt ceiling again. We need real teeth in this legislation to prevent us from raising the debt ceiling again.

To the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake: I'd like to hear his thoughts on why we need teeth in this legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As with anything where you're going to put a limit on something, any parent knows that there have to be consequences when the children break the house rules. It doesn't matter what the rules are. There are some things you just don't get away with without consequences. When we have a government, any government – not just this current government but any government – and we're going to say, "All right; we're going to have a debt ceiling, and that debt ceiling is going to be 15 per cent," that has to come with consequences. Otherwise, as time goes by, people are going to try to find ways, when backed into a corner, to break the rules. There is always going to be the temptation on the part of any government – it doesn't matter if it's this one or any other government – when backed against the wall, when things are looking bad and the government wants to spend money and has already borrowed to its limit, to change this debt ceiling and increase it, even incrementally by 1 per cent or 2 per cent.

You know, 1 per cent and 2 per cent, Madam Speaker, may not sound like a lot of money, but 1 per cent of GDP to an economy as big as ours is a significant amount of money. Even an incremental increase of 1 per cent is billions more dollars that a government can borrow, and without any kind of consequence to that government, there's going to be that temptation.

I'm afraid, Madam Speaker, given the lack of restraint that we have seen – I'm talking about the lack of spending restraint that we have seen on the government side of this House – that not having something in there with teeth is going to leave us wide open to more excesses and more debt, more debt-servicing costs. So I would beg the House to consider putting teeth in this bill if it is, you know, the will of this House to pass what I think is this very bad piece of legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, are you still on 29(2)(a), or are you speaking to the bill?

Dr. Swann: No. Speaking to the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Do any other members have questions or comments on 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Yes. I heard the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake talking about these important institutions, the bond agencies,

I should say, like the World Bank and Moody's. Could you explain to me and to the members here how important these bond agencies are globally to our rating here in Alberta?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you. Whether we like it or not, bond-rating agencies carry a significant amount of sway in the world of large finance, and the reason for that is that they do what are called risk assessments. They have a certain metric that they use when they assess risk, whether it be a really large corporation, whether it be a nation, whether it be a provincial government or a state.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. A pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 4, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. The bill proposes to repeal the Fiscal Management Act and, in its place, enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. In the simplest terms this means that operational deficits will no longer be illegal and that government debt will now be capped at a maximum of 15 per cent of the province's GDP.

The bill also amends the Alberta Corporate Tax Act, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, the Fuel Tax Act, the Tobacco Tax Act, the Tourism Levy Act, and the Perpetuities Act to implement budgeted tax measures, in fact, increases, and to make consequential changes. To provide some perspective on this new proposal, I'll start with the plan to cap government debt at a maximum of 15 per cent of the province's GDP. At 15 per cent that roughly equates to $55 billion today.

Budget 2015 estimates that the province's total debt will increase by $36.6 billion, at 10 per cent of the GDP, by fiscal 2017-18 and could grow as high as $47 billion by the end of 2019-20. For the sake of comparison, Alberta's debt under the PCs peaked at $23 billion in 1993. This is potentially twice what the maximum PC debt was in 1993, in the so-called Klein revolution and the massive cuts to government spending that occurred at that time, that we're still recovering from, might I add, in terms of infrastructure, in terms of delayed schools, in terms of delayed important public services.

The Fiscal Management Act, which the NDP is repealing and replacing with the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, does set specific limits on government borrowing by limiting the annual capital debt-servicing costs to a maximum of 3 per cent of actual operational revenue for the fiscal year and the previous two fiscal years. The one glaring deficiency in the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act is the lack of a legislated debt repayment plan. Rather, in the October 27, 2015, budget speech the Finance minister commented: "Once the budget is in balance we will present a debt repayment plan as part of an overall re-assessment of our fiscal priorities." The obvious concern here is that if the price of oil doesn't recover, the NDP does not meet its target of balancing the budget in 2019 or even beyond. The province could potentially go on for years without a debt repayment plan. I don't think most Albertans would manage their finances that way.

Other than continuing to inflation-proof the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, this new act does not commit the government to save any nonrenewable resource revenues. By contrast, the old Fiscal Management Act committed the government to save a portion of nonrenewable resource revenue annually and by 2017-18 to be retaining a hundred per cent of the Alberta heritage savings fund's net income in the fund.

With respect to operational deficits, unlike the Fiscal Management Act again, the new act does not prohibit operational deficits. In fact, the NDP plans to borrow $712 million in 2016-17 and almost $4 billion by 2018-19 to cover operating expenses, resulting in the province's first operational deficit since 1993, again raising questions about repayment.

Bill 4 repeals the Fiscal Management Act and creates a new set of fiscal rules. I would argue that it does suit these challenging economic times, other than the concerns I've expressed, and still maintains our commitment to keep debt under control, subject to the provisions I've indicated.

The legacy of the Fiscal Management Act is really about the PCs deliberately clouding the province's finances for political gain. For that reason alone, Albertans should celebrate its repeal. Had the NDP not been elected, we know that Mr. Prentice was already planning to repeal parts of the Fiscal Management Act due to expected deficits and the unlikelihood that the province would have been able to stay within the rules set out in that act anyway. I give him credit for that intention.

What differentiates the NDP's first budget from those of recent PC governments is that there was consensus about the $6.1 billion deficit figure. As large and concerning as that is, the NDP has to be commended for presenting the province's finances in a clear, consolidated format. The Auditor General has been critical of the province's budget presentation since 2013. It needed to change. However, in today's challenging economic times Alberta Liberals support a flexible government borrowing and boosting infrastructure to repair the schools, hospitals, roads, bridges, and wastewater facilities as well as affordable housing and light rail transit. The infrastructure spending can and should be debt financed at this time, and long-term interest rates that are favourable will be beneficial to our employment and to our children and to our future.

However, we insist that such large-scale borrowing has to be undertaken in accordance with a legislated debt repayment plan, and we will be offering that up in terms of amendments. It's simply not good enough for the NDP to say that a debt repayment plan will be developed after the budget is balanced because, quite frankly, we don't really know if or when that's going to happen.

In his budget address the Finance minister suggested that capping government debt at a maximum of 15 per cent of the province's GDP was sufficient to keep borrowing from getting out of hand. The minister would do well to remember that the maximum we've ever had in this province was in 1993, at $23 billion.

With respect to the heritage fund, as a province we need to decide what we want the heritage fund to be. If it is to be a future fund, we need to stop pilfering from it. It has to be an investment for our future, for our children.

There are opportunities today to develop an alternate economy and be less dependent on oil and gas and coal as resources. There's a war on carbon on the planet. We need to be getting on with it and not dragging our feet. Clean technology, alternate energy, renewables: these are the future. They're not the sole future, and we need to transition through gas and combined heat and power innovation. That will create more jobs than the current oil and gas industry alone, and we need to therefore invest in postsecondary and innovation.

We need to see a graduated, thoughtful carbon levy that incents all of us to change our use and be more conservative, in small "c" terms, of fossil fuels. That graduated carbon levy should be revenue neutral, should be given back to Albertans in terms of a tax benefit, especially at this time. It will soften the important shift that we're making to a lighter carbon future.

With respect to the alcohol and tobacco taxes: all to the good. The question is: where are they going to go? If we're ever going to start shifting this health care system to more prevention, we have to give that money to the health care system in terms of prevention and early intervention programs. Our hospitals are overwhelmed because we're not investing appropriately in injury prevention as well as disease prevention, that we know will make a fantastic difference to long-term morbidity and mortality.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for his contribution to the debate. He might be coming at things from a bit different angle, but he certainly brings a lot of experience and perspective to the House.

I'll focus my comments, especially my questions to him, around changes in accounting. There were improvements made, in my view, to some of the transparency in this bill, and that had to do exclusively with quarterly reporting. Quarterly reporting under the Fiscal Management Act – the previous government repealed the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act – allowed the government to produce quarterly reports really on the back of a napkin, without any requirement about what details would be in those quarterly reports. I remember sharing his righteous anger about some quarterly reports that did not contain sufficient information to hold the government accountable. This bill does address that.

But I'm a bit confused by the member's comments around providing the books in a clear and consolidated fashion. I've looked at a lot of budgets in this province, studied them in a lot of detail, and the way these books are presented for the consolidated fiscal plan is no different than it was for the budget produced in March and the budget produced the year before that. The only difference in the consolidated fiscal plan is for years 4 and 5, where even less detail is provided than the previous government. The previous government may have provided phony-baloney numbers for the consolidated primary deficit or primary surplus numbers, but it at least showed its math for years 4 and 5.

This year's budget is pulling numbers out of thin air. They don't know where they're getting their numbers for revenues. They don't know where they're getting them for expenditures. They can't even tell us what debt servicing will be in the fourth and fifth years. It's very concerning.

I'll just allow the member to perhaps discuss it in a bit more detail, but it is around how we're presenting the primary deficit and debt number in this. This is not changing presentation of that figure at all. It still does not count capital grants towards the primary debt. Even if we believe we should be borrowing for capital, we should probably still be counting it in our deficits. In fact, our real deficit, calculated the way we used to do things in this province, is $9.7 billion. That is our net change in financial assets. That is the real deficit that this province faces. The net change in financial assets is effectively the change in our financial worth as a province, a $9.7 billion shortfall in our financial worth this year. That is by far the largest shortfall in the history of this province. It is twice as large as the shortfall in 1992 under Getty.

I think I share with the Member for Calgary-Mountain View a wish to avoid the pain that came in 1993. No member in this House wants to repeat that. My fear is that we will if we continue down this path. At the end of the day when the banks force you to do something, your politics and your ideology are checked at the door.

I'll ask the Member for Calgary-Mountain View to perhaps elaborate on his comments around clarity of the primary accounting deficit and the way those numbers are presented.

Thank you.

4:30

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Well, thanks for the questions, hon. member. I share with you the concern about debt servicing. I've said a number of times that we need to have a more clear indication from the government where they're going on debt servicing. I dare say that projecting out two and three years is a mug's game by any government, so I don't fault anybody for not knowing exactly what the budget is going to look like in '18 and '19.

With respect to your comments about the consolidated budget I'll take that under advisement and look more carefully at the numbers.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

If not, I'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Oh, I apologize. You have a question under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Hanson: I'll rise next time to speak to the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: We're out of time. That's all right.

We'll continue with Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to speak in support of this bill because, as the Member for Strathmore-Brooks mentioned earlier, we did have a friendly bet as that particular member is on the Public Accounts Committee with me. That bet basically comes down to a difference of opinion on where we're going.

When I go out into my constituency, I listen to my constituents. We talk about things like the importance of health care, schools, the need for capital projects, and the need to protect the services that Albertans hold dear. That, at the end of the day, was what the last election was about. Members often talk about debt and the need to reduce the amount of debt. Well, in times of an economic downturn what cost would not going into debt provide?

Previously, the last time a government tried to cut back a downturn, we were left with a massive infrastructure deficit, which we are trying to fix with this bill by investing in what Albertans care about, things like roads, things like schools, things like the cancer centre in Calgary. That's important to invest in. I think of the tradesmen and -women I worked with on the shop floor not that long ago, and I might give you a quote from Scott Matheson of the Alberta Construction Association. He says: definitely we believe that if 15 per cent is a sustainable and repayable number, we think that it's the right thing to do in our economy right now; it's a great time to buy construction in Alberta.

So if in a downturn we're going to act as a shock absorber, now is the time to do it, as it puts tradesmen and -women back to work and keeps our economy going. At the end of the day that's what Albertans want. They do not want us to make the situation worse by laying off public-sector workers on whom we rely.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the chance to speak again to the bill. You'd almost think I get to be the minister with how much I'm speaking to the bill relative to the minister who actually introduced it. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Currie for his comments. I'm not sure if there's been a day where he's not worn an orange tie to the Legislature, so we can always know exactly where he is.

He said that we have a difference of opinion and not just on our choice of ties. We have a difference of opinion on the economic assumptions here. As I stated earlier, this is not a prop. This is a document. It would be difficult to table. We have a wager before us right now. I have bet the Member for Calgary-Currie $100 that the government will not meet its revenue projections in year 5, before we go to an election. I'll be able to collect $100 from the Member for Calgary-Currie to put towards my re-election in Strathmore-Brooks, hopefully right in time.

It's not just a difference of opinion. It's about a difference of facts. The Parliamentary Budget Officer in Ottawa has come out and said that our revenue projections are nowhere close to realistic. For every $3 difference in the price of oil it costs the treasury of this province nearly half a billion dollars. If the PBO's numbers are right and the government's numbers are wrong, we are talking about a shortfall of not just $9.7 billion that we're facing right now but significantly larger than that in years going forward.

The member said that we should not be cutting spending in tough times, that we should be borrowing in bad times. It is classic Keynesian economic theory. I suppose Keynesianism is an improvement for the NDP's theories. Let's just assume that we'll approve of the assumptions of Keynesian economic theory for a minute and say that we should be borrowing in bad times. That means in theory that we should be paying back debt in good times. But in years 4 and 5 of the NDP's budget they are predicting a massive boom, yet they still borrow $8 billion a year during good times. If we cannot cut spending and stop borrowing in bad times, when are we going to do it?

We have already run eight consecutive deficits in our province. We haven't balanced the budget once in eight years. That is why our sustainability fund is gone. That is why we have $14 billion of debt today before we even pass this budget. We've been borrowing and spending our savings in good times, and now that our rainy-day fund is gone, the rainy day is finally here. I ask the member in all seriousness: if we cannot control expenditures in bad times, if we're going to borrow in bad times, why does his government's budget still propose to borrow $8 billion a year when they project a massive economic boom in years 4 and 5?

The Deputy Speaker: Calgary-Currie, do you wish to comment?

Mr. Malkinson: Sure. Part of the reason why I made the bet with the hon. member is that I believe that our government does have a sound plan going into the future. As the Member for Calgary-Mountain View pointed out earlier, hitting an exact number in five years for what's going on with the economy is a bit of a hit-or-miss proposition.

You also mentioned that in the last eight consecutive budgets that were presented in this province, not a single one of them was balanced. I'd like to point out that those budgets were not from this government and that we have what is a clear plan to get back to balance. That is what we campaigned on, and that is what we intend to do. That's what Albertans voted for, and that is what my constituents want us to do in this House.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Any questions for the member?

Any other individuals who would like to speak? Proceed.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You just about caught me. I almost called you Madam Speaker. I had changed it on my list. Thank you. It's with real concern that I rise today to speak to Bill 4. As an Albertan, as a father and, hopefully, soon a grandfather I am horrified at the implications of this bill and the impact on our society. I find it very interesting that the members opposite appear to find long-term debt almost as amusing as private-sector job losses. This bill endorses massive debt. It includes tax hikes for Albertans in a flawed attempt to manage that debt. It's everything Wildrose stands against.

To put this into an understandable framework, it is as though my wife and I are spending like crazy on all sorts of extravagances and run ourselves into large debt. That isn't wise, but it's not so much of a problem as long as we stay within our means. Borrowing for extravagances is not living within your means. What happens if we lose our income? Well, obviously, we still have to pay off our debts. So what do we do? Well, any responsible person would cut down on spending and live within a reduced budget. A completely bad idea would be to continue increasing spending and just borrow against your equity, with the idea that we may have to pay it all back at some point in the future.

We can borrow against our children's education plans or get payday loans or increase our mortgages beyond any reasonable expectation of paying the loans back, and the rate of debt increases dramatically as the interest that accrues on the debt makes any chance of paying everything off and coming out even, to say nothing coming out ahead, unattainable. In effect, we would be borrowing against the opportunities to help our children and our grandchildren in the future. We are leaving a legacy of debt.

Keep in mind that the Wildrose criticized the last government for borrowing in order to save because it's irresponsible for a resource-rich province to have to take out any debt. But this government isn't even saving, just borrowing. A reminder: we have the third-highest revenue in our province's history, and we still have to borrow in order to cover our promises.

Not only are they burning through nonrenewable resources at a record rate while leaving nothing in our heritage fund for future generations; they are running up a massive debt burden to hand off to future generations. It's outrageous. Well, that's just what this government is doing and what this bill explicitly does. This bill enables more debt and increases taxes to try to meet just the interest payments, with no plan to pay off any of the debts.

Another sign of how bad things are is that this government now has to borrow money and raise taxes just to pay off the daily operations. All of this could be changed if the government simply started to scale back the outrageous level of spending in the public sector. Our government spending is so much higher than other provinces. According to Stats Canada the government spending in Alberta on operations is almost $11,000 per person. Compare that to Ontario, where they are able to manage government with just over $8,500 per person, and B.C., where they spend under $9,000 per person. Add capital spending, and we top B.C. by a whopping $3,000 per person, or $12 billion. That's a lot of money. This government outspends everyone except occasionally Newfoundland, depending on their capital program in a given year.

I would like to know why this government cannot make a move towards balancing the budget by reducing spending. There's never been one instance of reducing spending. This government inherited a bloated bureaucracy and a culture of government entitlement and overspending. However, the NDP government has been in the driver's seat now for more than six months, and what have they done? Instead of showing leadership and strong fiscal management, they have decided instead to maintain or increase spending, thereby increasing the debt and levying more taxes to try to pay for it all. Instead of looking critically at the levels of spending and making decisions about how to cut the outrageous spending on the bureaucracy, part 2 of this bill is all about increasing taxes on already overtaxed Albertans.

Here are some of the new ways that Albertans are going to be using their hard-earned wages to support the overspending of this government. Accident, sickness, and life insurance are going up 2 to 3 per cent. Any other insurance premium is going from a 3 to 4 per cent increase. The PC fuel tax increase is being implemented, with rail now included. That'll add a cost to everything that we ship. Gasoline, diesel, and other prescribed fuels are going from 9 cents to 13 cents. Liquefied petroleum gas is increasing from 6 cents to 9.094 cents. Locomotive fuel tax is increasing from 1 cent to 5 and a half cents.

Cigarette or tobacco sticks tax is going from 20 cents to 25 cents. Cigar tax is increasing by 103 per cent, to 129 per cent, with the minimum of 20 cents per cigar increasing to 25 cents and the maximum raised to $7.83. Every gram or part of a gram of any tobacco other than cigarettes and tobacco sticks is increasing from 30 cents to 30 and a half cents. These are double what the previous government proposed in March. Now, I can tell you that I know people already that are supplementing their trips down into the States by buying tobacco products even if they don't smoke, because they know that a tin of chewing tobacco that sells for $3.60 down in the States sells for over $30 here in Alberta, and there's no control over that. You don't get any tax on that.

That's just one side of the lopsided approach to fiscal management. When you add the first part of Bill 4 to the equation, this becomes a recipe for disaster in line with the NDP approach to economic planning and management. The first part of the bill actually serves to remove some of the constraints that typically would place limits on accumulating debt. Increasing the debt ceiling to 15 per cent of our GDP is not the thing to be doing right now. This bill allows the government to run operational deficits, a practice which has been illegal. Now by increasing the debt ceiling, they are basically writing themselves a blank cheque that each of us taxpayers will have to pay for along with our children and grandchildren.

I really wonder about the use of passing a bill, making a law if there is no consequence for breaking it. There is no provision for accountability in Bill 4. What is to stop the government from increasing it to 18 or 20 per cent when they reach and exceed this limit? The worst part of all is that this is the interest that accrues on debt increases. Interest payments is money gone out the window to pay for uncontrolled spending. The interest owing soon will be over a billion dollars, and borrowing and spending are just increasing. The interest that Alberta taxpayers will pay on this debt could be used instead to build schools and hospitals that are very much needed in every sector of our society.

The really frightening part of this bill is that when we put it all together, we are looking at $50 billion in debt in 2020. In 2008 we had no debt and $17 billion in the bank for a rainy day in the sustainability fund, not the heritage fund but an extra savings fund, now called the contingency account. This government's plan, if you can call it a plan, is to go from a positive $17 billion to a negative $50 billion in 12 short years. It is staggering.

Mr. Speaker, I am joining with every other horrified Albertan to oppose this bill, and we encourage the government instead to address the overspending that is plaguing our economy. We should be looking at ways to use taxpayers' dollars more efficiently and effectively instead of simply going back to the well to support outrageous spending habits. With effective economic policies we should be debating ways to save our surpluses instead of having to spend and borrow ourselves further into debt. I would never consider spending my family into debt that will last for generations, and I urge the government to reconsider doing exactly that through this ill-advised bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions of the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills? The House leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments of my hon. colleague. I wondered if he might just spend a couple of moments on if he's had the opportunity to consult with members in his community of Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills around some of these debt-related issues. I'm particularly interested to hear what the people of that region of the province are saying when it comes to running up large amounts of debt, changing laws to be able to run operational deficits, and the overall direction that the government is taking the province when it comes to no plan on repayment of that debt. If people in that constituency have provided any feedback, it's interesting to hear. I certainly have a sense of what the people in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills are saying, but I just might be curious to know what the good folks in Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills are saying.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Yeah. Thank you for the question. The folks that I've talked to in my constituency understand the government's need to borrow money to build infrastructure and, hopefully, you know, stimulate the economy in that way and based on the low interest rates at the time. Their concern is two years down the road, five years down the road, when we're trying to repay this debt and our interest rates are, instead of 2.3 per cent, maybe 5.6 per cent or higher. At the current rate we're going to be losing about one and a half billion dollars a year by 2019-2020 just to service debt. Now, if our interest rate doubles and we're suddenly paying $3 billion a year or even $6 billion a year into servicing debt, that's a lot of money that can't go into infrastructure. Their feeling is that we should curb our spending, stop our borrowing, get our spending under control, and only build infrastructure as we can afford it with trying not to increase taxes to people that are already burdened by the downturn in our economy.

Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills is very dependent on the oil economy, and a very, very high percentage of our people have lost their jobs already, and there is more to come. As projects become finished and people get laid off, there are no new projects to replace them, so there's a big concern there about job losses. Everybody is looking for work, but they don't think our province should be borrowing money at this time. Rather, they should be looking at ways to save on spending and put that money into infrastructure rather than borrowing against our future.

Thank you.

4:50

The Speaker: Are there any other questions of the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: I'd like to ask the member a few questions. I'm fascinated by your statement that this government has not produced any cost savings. Just today in this Legislature I heard of cutting several tens of millions of dollars from PCN funding. The RAPID program we heard about a couple of days ago is going to save Albertans in the range of $45 million at the same time as producing a better outcome for the most frequent cause of blindness in the elderly, macular degeneration. Our government is also committed to bending the cost curve in medicine, and that means that the rate of increase in the expenditures in the Health department are going to go down from 6 to 7 per cent under the previous government to what the minister called a flat line of 2 per cent in years 4 and 5. So I'd actually like to hear your comments on that.

I'm also concerned about the tenor of the comments coming that the member had as well as his associates, that when we spend on infrastructure, we're not gaining assets. Those schools and roads and dialysis centres . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, time has been allocated.

Are there other members who wish to speak to motion? The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 4. I know that we've had the opportunity to hear from a number of my colleagues on the bill. I know it's hard to believe that I haven't spoken to something in the House, but in fact this is my first opportunity to speak to what really is an important piece of legislation. While there is very little about this important piece of legislation that I or the people in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that I've spoken to about Bill 4 support, that's not to say that it isn't an important piece of legislation. What Bill 4 does in many respects is lay the groundwork and the structure of what's going to take place in our province over the next number of years.

I think that the Albertans should be very concerned about what the future of our province looks like under a new government. That's not because the new government means mal-intent or malice towards any Albertan or this House or generally towards the province but that fundamentally the government is taking some significant steps away from many of the core values that a lot of Albertans hold. Well, the government will say: "Hey. Listen. We consulted with people, and on the 5th of May we were elected to put that mandate forward." Certainly, no one can argue with that. They were elected.

However, there's still an overwhelming majority of Albertans that voted for two parties that some would say share some similar principles, and those principles are the principles of living within their means. I think that the government would be well served to consider the fact that there are a lot of Albertans that still hold to those key, core principles of living within their means, of not spending every dollar possible at all times possible. These are core conservative principles that lots of people in this province share, and certainly many of the members of the Wildrose share these principles of wanting to ensure that the government is getting best value for dollar.

What we've seen, as we see in Bill 4 is this rush towards $50 billion in debt and this commitment on behalf of the government to continue to spend at all costs. What we've seen is this desire to move away from many of those core conservative principles that in many ways have set up our province for success.

We saw through a period of pain in the mid-90s that there was some significant cutting that took place, and while the government of the day would like to liken this organization to the mid-90s and spread fear and make all sorts of allegations about how horrible we are and the things that we would do to the province to be more fiscally responsible, nothing could be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. The Wildrose has laid out some of our core principles that do include finding efficiencies in government, shrinking the size of middle management and the bloated bureaucracy that we saw come out of the last administration of this province. We certainly have made some of those commitments. As I said, the government of the day likes to say and make accusations that we would hack, slash, cut, and burn. Of course, that couldn't be any further from the truth.

The truth is, Mr. Speaker, that the government – I know this is going to be hard to believe – actually spends money on good things. The problem is that the new government of the day believes that every dollar that the government spends is well spent. The challenge that we all face is that in a time when revenue is at a premium, the government continues to be committed to spending every dollar and not looking to efficiencies within that spending envelope. The net result of that, that we see in Bill 4, is this massive increase in debt, up to $50 billion. One of the questions that I hear a lot in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills is: what is the plan when it comes to repayment? They're concerned about the future of the province and for their children or their grandchildren as the province over a period of time will continue to feel that pressure of a $50 billion debt.

If the government of the day doesn't take appropriate steps to first of all stop the overspending and then take steps to repayment, at one point in time or another, Mr. Speaker, that debt will become crippling, and the weight of that debt will be possibly unbearable.

You know, we see in year 3 of the plan that the government has put forward, the spending plan, $1.3 billion in debt-servicing costs. It's a wonder to think of what that $1.3 billion could do, the number of schools that it could build, the number of hospital facilities that it could renovate or build. We run this great risk, Mr. Speaker, of putting the challenges of tomorrow down the road without real thought and consideration for them.

I know that every member in this House came to this place because they wanted to leave the province better than they found it. The question begs to be asked: are we going to leave our children and our grandchildren this debt, where the problems of tomorrow are so great that we create this weight that's so challenging for the legislators of tomorrow that it makes the future unclear? I don't think that that is what we came here to do, and I hope that's not the case on the other side, but these are the types of things, sir, that we need to consider.

When it comes to that repayment plan, we see in years 4 and 5 that there is zero plan. There are no numbers when it comes to what that looks like. It is a major challenge that faces our province, and while we've seen many, many, many politicians just try to kick the can down the road, that is certainly not what this side of the House wants to do because the road to fiscal accountability and responsibility is going to be a long one, and the first step has to be today. That's certainly not what Bill 4 is doing.

What Bill 4 is doing is creating new debt limits. We've seen, all over jurisdictions across North America, when they set a debt limit and say: "Trust us this time. We're not going to raise it ever again." It's a big, big risk as we continue to just raise the debt limit. As we move towards that, it's a big challenge because there's no plan. There's no plan to stop raising the debt limit in the future either.

And now this year, for the first time in recent memory, the government has taken steps to do things that at one point in time were illegal; that is, find ways to borrow for operations. It's a shame to see that that is where we're at, Mr. Speaker, particularly when we're doing so little on the spending side, when, in fact, we've seen ministerial offices' budgets increased, some to the tune of 15 per cent, all at a time when we're raising the debt limit in Bill 4. Obviously, it's concerning, and people in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills are bringing it up to me on a number of occasions: what is the plan, and how are we going to work out of this hole?

Many of those people believe that there will be a different government. You know, that remains to be seen. But whether it's the current government that is rewarded with another term or it's this side of the House – who knows what the political landscape in four years looks like? – one way or another it is a big, big hole to dig our way out of. We encourage the government to start today because it's going to be a long road, and it starts with the first step. I hope that the government will consider some of the amendments that we'll be making later should the bill pass, because we need to find ways to start some of this challenge.

In the time remaining, I'll just briefly mention, Mr. Speaker, that one of the challenges with this piece of legislation is that all of these pieces of legislation are so very complex. You know, you could go to any section of the bill, and there are a lot of questions there. For example, on page 43 of the bill:

(5) An authorization granted under this section in respect of a person must be served on the person by the Minister within 72 hours after it is granted, except

(a) where the judge orders the authorization to be served at some other time . . .

And it continues.

The point is, Mr. Speaker, that these types of bills are extremely complex. It's detailed tax legislation. The Wildrose has been committed to the need to be able to receive input from all sorts of people when it comes to stakeholders, perhaps experts on tax law. I know that my colleague from Strathmore-Brooks has a better grasp on this particular issue than I, but the point is that we really haven't had that chance to hear from experts, which is why I would like to propose an amendment to the bill.

Do you want me to continue with the amendment?

The Speaker: Do you have a copy?

Mr. Cooper: Yes, I do have copies here for everyone in the House. It's a notice of amendment that I'm proposing. Do you mind if I read it and then wait for it to be passed around, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: You may read it while it is being distributed.

Mr. Cooper: Continue while it's being distributed?

I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 4, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, be amended by deleting the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 4, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

The Speaker: The hon. member has proposed an amendment to second reading of Bill 4, to implement various tax measures, which we will refer to as amendment A1. Is there anyone who would like to speak to the amendment? Are there any members? The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise to talk to the House about this amendment and share my acceptance of it and that I will support it. I think the premise behind this motion is that we need to slow down, that we need to take a look at this bill. We need to commit it to committee so that it can be studied and we can make sure that it is the right bill, that will support Albertans and help Albertans.

I guess the concern I have is that in the past, as I've talked to different ministers and asked them if there's been an economic impact study done on certain measures that they're bringing forward, it seems that the preliminary work that should be done on bills to make sure that they are good bills is not being done and that there is a need by this government to pass these bills without proper consultation with expert witnesses, without proper consultation from those people who will be affected by it.

I find this alarming and concerning, and I'm not the only one. As I've talked to different members of my constituency and as I've traveled throughout the province talking to other Albertans, they are concerned at the speed with which these bills are being put forward and passed. They're concerned by the lack of consultation that should be there by this House and by this government for passing these bills. I think that it goes against the understanding of how this House should work. This should be a place where we have proper, sober thought, where we're not rushed on issues, where we're not forced to make rash and quick decisions. I've always found in my life that when we do that, when I've done that, the outcome has not been good, and it is my concern that if we rush forward rather than actually putting it to committee and allowing the committee to properly look at this bill and look at the ramifications, the consequences of this bill, we will be in a situation that we don't want to be in.

We are the voice of Albertans. We represent them. We've stepped forward – each of us has stepped forward – with the intent of being able to represent Albertans to the best of our ability, and I think it's wrong for us to be able to go forward with this, and it's not properly representing fellow Albertans if we move this through the House as quickly as it is being moved.

I strongly urge this House to accept this amendment. I urge the members opposite to consider again the consequences of a rash and a quick decision. We have seen in times past where members opposite have made quick decisions, where they have gone forward and made decisions where maybe they should have taken longer to think about these issues and then been in a situation where they've had to come back and say: "You know what? Oops. We made a mistake. We need to do better."

This is a great opportunity for that. We are bringing forward an amendment that I think is in the best interests of all people in this House, and I would urge, strongly urge all members to consider it. It's a short amendment, but the intent is good. The intent is, again: let's slow down. Let's think this stuff through. Let's make sure that we have the right approach for all Albertans, and let's make sure that Bill 4 is the kind of bill that Albertans will be accepting of.

With that, I would like to thank you for the opportunity to speak on this amendment, and once again I urge the members of the House to consider it. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions or comments to the Member for Strathmore-Brooks? No?

Are there any questions or comments to the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to speak to the amendment to move this bill to committee. The members of this House recently voted to move Bill 203 from the Member for Drumheller-Stettler, an act that would prohibit government announcements and advertising during by-election and election periods. Members across deemed that that bill, however small and modest that bill was – and that bill was crafted nearly word for word from an NDP bill in Manitoba that the NDP here had campaigned on. We had already agreed on that bill, but the members across decided that a bill even of that nature should still be going to a committee. That is a small bill. That is a private member's bill.

This, by contrast, is a monstrosity of a bill, not a monstrosity just for its content but for its size and its effect on the people and finances of Alberta. A bill of this nature and of this importance deserves proper study. It deserves to hear from experts in their fields. It deserves to hear expert testimony from academics, from economists, from accountants, from third-party interest groups. It deserves to hear the kinds of inputs that are necessary for crafting all good legislation. Instead, this government is trying to ram this through the House right now.

Now, members here might want to wax eloquent about the contents of this bill, why we support it or why we don't support it, but it's important for us to consult. The members across felt that it was important to consult on the issue of 203, a bill that every member of this House supports. Well, this is one that not every member of this House supports. In fact, I dare say that every member of the Official Opposition and, quite possibly, some of the smaller parties do not support it as well.

This is a budget that is not just going to change policy, but it's going to change the rules of the game. It is going to allow the government to change the accounting of the province, to present the books in a different way yet again. It is going to allow the government to put forward five-year fiscal plans without a shred of detail for the fourth and fifth years. It allows the government to make things up as it goes along. It allows the government to make projections for balanced budgets into the future without any plan to actually get there. That is changing not just policy, Mr. Speaker, but it is changing the very rules of the game. When you're changing the rules of the game, we should probably take the time to consider it carefully and move it to committee.

It is also changing policy itself, though. It is increasing our debt ceiling from its already high level right now to a whopping 15 per cent of GDP. In a province that has by far the highest GDP per capita in the country, that is not a small sum of money. We deserve the chance to debate this issue around debt financing, about what the appropriate level of debt is, if we should be borrowing for just capital or also for operational expenditures. That is a fundamental debate, and it deserves to have expert testimony hearing it. If the government feels that it is necessary to send a bill consulting about how ethically proper it is to make government announcements and spending announcements during by-elections, then certainly a bill that does not share consensus in the House and that is of this kind of magnitude deserves to go to committee.

This bill will also raise a raft of taxes. We already had a long list of taxes increased by the former government. We then had another long list of taxes increased by the new government in June, that saw income taxes go up, saw business taxes go up, excise taxes go up, taxes on insurance, taxes on birth, taxes on death, taxes on just about everything in between. That bill did not go to committee. This bill proposes to further increase taxes. It proposes to tax insurance. We have sin taxes in the province. For some reason or another we want to tax our sins, our vices like alcohol, tobacco, and gasoline. I understand the point of taxing some things that we want to discourage, but insurance is a social good. This is something we should be trying to encourage as a province, not something we should be trying to discourage. But for some reason we have decided to put a tax on this, for reasons I don't understand.

The government has not consulted anybody in the insurance industry. The Insurance Bureau of Canada has spoken about this. They've said that they were not consulted and that the costs will be passed on to consumers. We should be listening to the Insurance Bureau of Canada. We should be listening to consumers. We should be listening to underwriters. We should be allowing that kind of expert testimony to come before us as this goes to committee.

We're seeing fees go up: fees on courts, on camping, as I said, on birth, on death, fees on a long list of services that Albertans rely on.

It might be justified, or it might not be. But we're not going to get a chance to hear from a single stakeholder. Alberta's Legislature, Alberta's democracy, belongs not just to the politicians that occupy it; it belongs to the people who send us here. That's why it's important that we have a committee that this goes to so that we can listen to Albertans themselves, the people being impacted by this.

The bill will also have an effect on quarterly financial updates for the government, on the kind of data that is to be provided. There's been an improvement on this front. But, again, we're not going to have the chance to listen to a single accountant, a single economist, a single academic or expert who knows about the topic. This is an opportunity for us to invite expert testimony, to listen to people who know what they're talking about and hear what they have to say. If the government believes that small bills, just because they're proposed by the opposition, should go to committees for study, then surely they believe that their own bills that do not enjoy consensus in this House and that are of monumental importance to the governance and future of this province should be going to committee for study.

Mr. Speaker, I'll close by saying that I know members across know that this is right. Their government whip or House leader might tell them to do something different, but they know that this is right. They know that bills should be going to committee. When the four members who make up the governing party sat in opposition, they demanded a committee system for all bills to go through. Those four members know that I'm right. The government's private members know that that I'm right. I beseech them to listen to their own conscience, to listen to their own democratic ideals, to do what they know is right, and to send this bill to committee for proper study.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments for the Member for Strathmore-Brooks under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Hon. member, do you think that Albertans have been well represented in the debate on this bill or this amendment? If no one from the opposite side is willing to stand up and put their name on the record supporting or opposing the bill, are Albertans actually being represented fairly in this House?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you to the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills for his question. I think the answer is obvious to anyone who has watched this rather invigorating and exciting debate on the changes to the accounting rules of our province. Every member of the Official Opposition in this House has risen to speak about Bill 4, to express our concerns for taxpayers, to express our concerns for young Albertans, who will pay for this. By contrast, the Minister of Finance has not risen once today to debate or defend his own bill.

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: A point of order is noted.

Point of Order Speaking Twice in a Debate

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The minister has spoken to the bill. The hon. member ought to know that each member is only allowed to speak once to each bill. So the minister is not eligible to speak again to this bill except to close debate. The hon. member should remember those rules of this House before he,

in a misinformed way, uses them to attack members who aren't here.

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you have any comments?

Mr. Hanson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Just to clarify, the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks did not name the minister absent. He only said that he didn't speak to it today. He didn't say that he hadn't spoken to it at all. I don't think that this constitutes a point of order, sir.

The Speaker: The point of clarification on the point of order has been accepted. I think all members ought to be more clear about those kinds of comments in the future.

Could you proceed.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. I was not referring to the minister's original introductory comments to the bill. I was referring to his lack of participation in the debate today under 29(2)(a) or responding to other members, which the minister has every right to participate in.

Debate Continued

Mr. Fildebrandt: Moving beyond that, the members of the Official Opposition have spoken to this. We've spoken about issues passionate to us, about why this is important for taxpayers, why it's important for Albertans, but we have heard only a single private member from the government side speak to this. I thank him for his comments and contribution to debate. We've heard a member of the Alberta Party speak to this. We have heard a member of the Liberal Party speak to our debate today.

We have not heard anything warranting their numbers from government members, which is one reason I feel passionately that we should be sending this bill to committee for discussion, for consultation from Albertans. This bill has not had proper input from Albertans. It hasn't had consultation. It hasn't listened to a single expert. It was merely produced in the Department of Finance and dropped on our desks. The government members seem intent on not actually debating the contents of it, which is one reason why we should send this bill to committee and listen to Albertans directly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) for the Member for Strathmore-Brooks?

Seeing none, I recognize the Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'd like to address the amendment that's been put forward by the hon. Official Opposition House Leader to refer the subject matter of Bill 4 to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2. Now, in the discussion that has occurred, one might conclude from listening to the Official Opposition that there will be no opportunity for further discussion of the details of this bill or to provide any amendments, and that, of course, is simply not the case.

This bill is essential for the financial supply of the province. This, in addition to the Appropriation Act, forms the cornerstone of the provincial budget. Now, as members in the House know, in the spring session the government passed a supplementary supply bill, which provided funding to continue the operations of the government till the end of this November, which is now, I think, slightly less than two weeks away. As the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship is dealing with estimates, it's clearly unable to do what the Official Opposition is suggesting; to wit, hearings, listening to evidence from experts, and so on.

Mr. Speaker, we know that this bill will be considered in Committee of the Whole. There will be an opportunity for further debate, and members can bring forward and represent through writing or through their speeches comments of any experts that they may wish to engage with respect to this. But, clearly, if this bill was referred, as the Official Opposition wishes, to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, it would be unable to do the things that the opposition wants and have the bill back in the House so that it could be considered for third reading in time to meet the deadline of November 30. So it's really rather irresponsible, in my view, to go down this direction.

What the Official Opposition is suggesting essentially would lead to the government being unable to pass its budget because this bill is necessary for the Appropriation Act. The two go hand in hand. Therefore, what the opposition is essentially proposing is that the government operations would grind to a halt at the end of this month, and government employees would no longer be paid. We could not continue with the services that the government provides. So I would urge all members to oppose this particular amendment.

We will, when second reading is concluded on the bill, of course be moving to the Committee of the Whole, and the opposition will have ample opportunity to introduce any detailed discussion they wish, any expert opinions that they have been able to solicit. They can represent their constituents' concerns very effectively, I have no doubt, and they can introduce any amendments that they wish. That is, in this case, the most appropriate direction to go. In other cases I might agree with the Official Opposition that a bill might be directed to one of the standing policy committees. In this case, Mr. Speaker, it's, frankly, impossible, and I would have expected the Official Opposition to have realized it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a) you have a question for the Government House Leader, Strathmore-Brooks?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Government House Leader well knows that this isn't about games. This is about the need for committee, a need that he spoke about very well and eloquently for over a decade in opposition. He knows very well that the Committee of the Whole does not allow us to bring in outside experts and testimony. It restricts our ability to putting forward amendments, which the government will promptly shut down. It doesn't allow us to bring forward people who might know better than the people in this House, accountants, economists.

The Government House Leader said that they cannot put this to committee now because there's not enough time to pass it before their interim supply runs out. Well, perhaps they shouldn't have waited until after the federal election to give us these bills to begin with, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps they should have called us back in the summer to give us a bill to pass. Perhaps they should have brought this forward in September. Instead, the government has been playing political games, holding back a budget from Albertans to help out their federal NDP cousins. Some good that did. The government has been playing political games with the timing of the budget. That is why they are now saying that they must pass it in the next two weeks.

Well, guess what, Mr. Speaker? It's not our responsibility to pay for what the government has done with its own political games in the timing of the budget. There is enough time to send this to committee, and it is my assurance to the Government House Leader that if this does go to a proper committee, we will not be playing games to hold it up. We will put forward legitimate witnesses to hear from about what we should be doing with this bill. It doesn't even have to be the Resource Stewardship Committee. We could put it forward to any committee. I'm happy to do it. I'm happy to work as long or as late as is necessary to get this done.

Mr. Speaker, it is the government who is afraid of criticism, who is afraid of expert testimony from people who are likely to tell them that this bill is hogwash, that it waters down our accounting rules, that it is dangerous fiscal policy to allow us to go to a 15 per cent debt to GDP. They know this because Albertans are against this budget. The minister knows this, and that is why they are shooting down our recommendation to do what he himself has stood and advocated for for over a decade in this very Chamber, to go to committee. I don't buy the Government House Leader's excuse that they need to get this done because they could have given us this bill three months ago.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, nothing could be further from the truth. While the opposition was making claims that the government was holding back the fall budget, this government was working day and night trying to get the budget ready for the date that we had set. If this party, God forbid, should ever form a government, they will realize – they will realize – just how much work government is and how much work a budget is.

When they were saying in the summer that we should be bringing forward the budget now, that we were deliberately delaying it for the federal election, they were just talking through their hats because we were working very hard to try and meet the deadline that we had set for ourselves. Making a budget, especially for a new government, especially after 44 years of an old government, is a very, very difficult and daunting task, and it is an enormous amount of work. For the people on this side to constantly chirp and repeat that some games were being played relative to the federal election is just the crass political speculation of a desperate opposition party, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't support the amendment, and I rise to speak against it. Bill 4 is a commendable piece of legislation which deserves to be passed.

The Speaker: Excuse me, hon. member. We're still on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Dach: Certainly.

The Speaker: Do you have a question of the Government House Leader?

Mr. Dach: Yes. I could ask the Government House Leader, sir, if he feels it is the intent of the opposition, from his view, to slow down passage of the bill by their amendment or whether it seems to be their intent to grind passage to a halt. [A timer sounded]

The Speaker: We are dealing with the amendment identified as A1. Are there other members of the House? The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to stand and speak to the amendment to Bill 4. My concern with Bill 4, as I stated to the member . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, you're speaking to the amendment. Is that correct?

Mr. Hanson: Sorry. Yes. Yes, I'm speaking to the amendment. My concern is that Albertans have not been consulted on this bill. It's a very important bill, and it needs to go to committee so that Albertans can be consulted. I don't believe that a lot of the members have had the opportunity to go to their constituents and get their opinions because if they did, they'd be standing up in the House and either speaking for the bill or against the bill.

Our members have all risen and spoken to this, to the bill, and now we'll speak to the amendment because we've actually gone out and talked to our constituents. They understand that this is going to affect them, their future, their children's future, and their grandchildren's future: $50 billion of debt, unknown interest rates going forward. It's a bad bill. It needs to be considered by professionals. Albertans need to be consulted, and I would suggest to all of you members opposite that you go and speak to your people in your constituencies and actually get their opinions.

Thank you very much, sir.

The Speaker: Are there any questions of the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

5:40

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just would like to speak a bit about the need for committee. The whole point of having committee is to consult, so I would like to direct my question to the minister.

The Speaker: Excuse me, hon. member, you can only address your questions to the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Sorry.

Regarding the committee and the aspects of committee, the point is to talk about how this is going to impact Albertans and how we feel that they haven't been consulted. As the minister had mentioned previously, this task is daunting. It requires a committee of people to come together to discuss how to take on this daunting task. Over and over again we've heard that they've inherited these issues, that they've inherited what they're dealing with right now. We would love the opportunity to be able to discuss this in a committee situation on behalf of all Albertans, to sit down and make sure that this is actually the direction that the government should be going.

In relation to that, this should be a situation of going across partisan lines to discuss how to move forward, so I would just like to say in regard to this comment that that would be the reason for needing to go to committee. The whole point is to consult. The entire point is to be able to discuss this at length, to make sure that we're making accurate decisions with regard to the budget, with regard to the future. I'm not sure about how the timing would work, but the need for committee is to consult.

Thank you.

Mr. Hanson: Thanks very much for your comments on the question. I don't personally believe that Albertans in Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills are any different from Albertans in southern Alberta, Edmonton, or Calgary. Indeed, I've spent the last couple of weeks in Edmonton. I've been talking to people that actually live in the city here about some of the bills that have gone through and some of the comments and the length of time we get to discuss them, and I can assure you that if you actually go out and speak to people in Edmonton and Calgary in your ridings, you're going to hear the same thing. These bills need to have more time, they need to be put to committee, and Albertans need to have their say. There are experts out there. We're not all experts in economics. Passing a bill like this, that's going to affect future generations of Alberta, needs to be considered in depth and put to committee.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Games are exactly what we're playing here. The opposition is engaging in what they're actually supposed to do as an opposition, I would imagine, but we're rejecting the games they're playing because we believe the intent is not to forward debate in the House. What it is intended to do is to actually halt progress on debate. The Legislative Assembly of Alberta, this body, is the supreme committee to which legislation can be presented and debated. If the Official Opposition, the Wildrose opposition, would have spent the time debating this bill that they have in attempting to amend the bill by sending it to committee, we might have produced something . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I want to clarify. Are you speaking to 29(2)(a), or are you speaking to the amendment itself?

Mr. Dach: To 29(2)(a), I was hoping.

The Speaker: Thank you. Great. Keep going.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Therefore, the bill is necessary for appropriations, and the intent of the government, of course, is to have it debated in this House without sidetracking it and to ensure that it receives the full and complete attention of the Assembly rather than trying to obstruct its progress by sending it to committee. That's what we intend to do.

Mr. Hanson: I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-McClung. I believe . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, you're speaking to his question?

Mr. Hanson: Yes. Thank you.

I thank the Member for Edmonton-McClung for his statements, I guess, and for playing along with us. I really appreciate that. My question would be: could he possibly stand up when he has the opportunity and tell us what his constituents are saying? I don't believe that he's actually talked to his constituents about Bill 4; otherwise, perhaps he would stand up in the House and go on the record and tell us what his constituents think of this preposterous bill, that's going to affect them and their grandchildren and their mortgages in the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I don't believe you will get a second opportunity under 29(2)(a).

Is there anyone wishing to speak to the amendment itself? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just do want to say that I believe it is important that we send this bill to committee. Schedules can be arranged. If we have to stay at night, I guess that's what we have to do. I don't know. I don't really want to do that personally, but this is an extremely important bill, and we do have to address this thing in a way that doesn't just push it through in a hurry.

Maybe I could just try to emphasize the reality of it a little bit for the hon. members across the floor. A little bit of sober self-reflection here would be extremely important because when you go to vote for this bill, each and every one of you will be voting a billion dollars of debt on the Alberta people. Your vote is a personal vote for a billion dollars of debt. I wonder how many of you would be prepared to sign a personal loan guarantee on that. There is a need for sober self-reflection here, which is the whole point of committees. We need to think about that, and therefore I am voting in favour of the motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Just for clarification, the table reminded me that, in fact, contrary to my first opinion, you can speak twice under 29(2)(a), so my apologies to the member.

Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka?

Is there anyone else who would like to speak to amendment A1? The member for Fort Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Livingstone-Macleod, sir, but that's quite fine. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'm getting close.

Mr. Stier: Well, good afternoon. I see that the hour is approaching where we're all looking forward to taking a break, but I have to say that I have some comments to make on this amendment, Mr. Speaker, and it is to the amendment that I am speaking. I'd just like to say that this is one of the most important bills that has come before us in this Legislature for this session. This is one of those bills that talks an awful lot about debt and going into debt, and it is something where we're not only talking about going into debt to finance large capital projects and all that kind of thing, but this bill talks about having us actually go ahead and look at borrowing money to do our operations.

If we look at the simple homeowner, who usually and typically in our society today borrows money for capital expenditures like their home and their car and so on, we're actually with this bill going to exceed that idea and go to borrow on, say, credit cards or any other lending mechanism to buy the groceries, to buy the gas, to pay for the babysitter, to pay all of those normal expenses. That's what this bill includes, ladies and gentlemen.

This amendment is actually, I think, a great idea. This amendment speaks to taking such a serious situation and moving it to a larger group; that is, a committee. The committees in this legislative process are vital, and they're important to us. They provide an opportunity for various parties and participants in this House to look at something in more detail. It also provides, Mr. Speaker, an opportunity for these meetings to include the public and have some great, proper consultation.

When I look at some of the things that we are talking about today and some of the comments we've made earlier, I think it's something we have to be very conscious of. I mean, let's be clear. This bill is about enabling higher taxes and more debt because this government continues to want to spend. It allows the government to run operational deficits for decades, putting debt onto future generations. It's absolutely hard to imagine, having been here for the past three and a half, four years, seeing where we are now and what we're faced with. This is something that needs proper scrutiny, and I think that a committee would be the exact place where this should go, Mr. Speaker.

More debt means more servicing costs. These servicing costs could be used for so many things. In my earlier comments today on this bill I talked about what all these kinds of monies could be used for, vital components to today's society. When we're looking at all of these things now in such a small manner today, why shouldn't we look at going and sending this bill to committee? I cannot find a valid reason yet from all I've heard here this afternoon.

We should focus on spending taxpayers' dollars more efficiently. We should look at how we're running up our credit limits every day. We should look at what some of the lending institutions around the world are saying about us now as compared to the past. We had what was talked about the other day; I think someone coined the term "gold standard." We had the gold standard in our society as far as our credibility in the world today in terms of the world markets. We do not necessarily have that any longer. The policies of this government have now suddenly tainted our reputation around the world. Just think about that: tarnished our reputation from what we had for years and years and years.

I think we should be creating legislation that's beneficial to us, Mr. Speaker, not detrimental, and I'm looking at this opportunity that we have tonight of going to committee with this very important bill and scrutinizing it in detail and looking at it on a page-by-page, section-by-section basis and ensuring it's the right thing to do.

Mr. Speaker, as you can see, I'm very much in favour of this amendment, and I will be voting in support of this amendment. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there any questions for the hon. member under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Just very briefly, Mr. Speaker. I remember that the Member for Livingstone-Macleod was on a committee that travelled the province to study bills that the NDP in particular, roughly two years ago, found controversial. The former government brought forward bills to reform government-sector pensions, and the NDP in particular found it extremely objectionable. I remember that the NDP fought for those bills, which were also considered urgent by the government of the day, to go to a committee and travel the province. I remember that the Member for Livingstone-Macleod was there at that rather excited meeting where I had a chance to testify as, may I say, an expert witness. Perhaps the Member for Livingstone-Macleod could talk about that experience and why the NDP's demand for that bill to go to committee was equally as important.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you for the opportunity, and thanks to the Member for Strathmore-Brooks for the question. Yes, I did commit a lot of time over the past few years to some of these committee meetings. In fact, that one actually took me across the province. I remember spending one day on those ventures where I had to fly from Calgary and then I had to fly up to Fort McMurray, in fact, and later on I had to fly back to Calgary the next day so that I could get a hop up to Grande Prairie because we were offering . . .

Mr. Connolly: Do you have a biography that I can buy?

Mr. Stier: Yeah. I'll give you a biography if you want, sir, any time. I'll send it to you.

Mr. Speaker, sorry. Back to the point on the question that was posed to me. We spent an awful lot of time allowing the public to come to every one of those meetings and raise their concerns on a couple of very, very, very important issues to do with the pensions. I think it is important, in that same example that the Member for Strathmore-Brooks has raised, to understand that that is what this Assembly is about. It's about ensuring that we make the right decisions on behalf of Albertans. During that time many speakers came from the public and, yes, from the Canadian Taxpayers

Federation to ensure that the members of the committee had the most important, crucial, and detailed information they could have before they came back and made recommendations to the House on that matter.

With respect to what we're talking about today, the committee suggestion in this amendment is an important suggestion. It is something that should be seriously considered not only just for ourselves in this House, Mr. Speaker, but for all of the people that we represent in Alberta.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Any other questions or comments to the Member for Livingstone-Macleod under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other hon. members who would wish to speak to the amendment known as A1?

Hearing none, I will call the question on amendment A1 on Bill 4, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 4 lost]

The Speaker: We are back to the original motion. Are there any other speakers to the original motion?

I hear none.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a second time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That being good progress today – the House has done very good work today – I'll move that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:58 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us reflect. Help us to be mindful shepherds of this great province in a manner that protects and preserves it for generations ahead of us, represented by the schoolchildren who are in this Assembly this day, as was done by those generations and the first keepers of this land who preceded us.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you a group of 23 very bright young students, who are joining us here today, from Beacon Heights school. I had the pleasure of reading to the class this fall, about a month ago, and of course I'm always very excited to go back into the classroom, where I once came from. These bright young students are here today with their teacher, Ms Meryl Roberts, as well as three parent helpers, Mr. Karl Hammermeister, Mr. Scott Gudbranson, and Mrs. Catherine Roberts. I ask all of them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly an honoured guest seated in your gallery. Mr. Don Tannas is the former Member for Highwood, and he served in this Assembly from 1989 until his retirement, in 2004. For three of his four consecutive terms Mr. Tannas also served as Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees, so we have a lot in common. Mr. Tannas is heavily involved in the Alberta Association of Former MLAs, being on the board of directors since its inception in 2006. Please give Mr. Tannas the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise on behalf of the hon. Premier to introduce to you and through you 28 students from Garneau elementary school. They are accompanied by their teachers, Ms Jesse Mackay and Miss Kristina Kuchta, along with parent helpers Mr. Bruce New, Ms Tracy Craig, Ms Lisa Lilycrop, and Mrs. Joan Emard-Wanner. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, it seems to be my week for lows and highs. The highs are that yesterday you recognized my aunt; today you see the other end of the generation. I'm pleased to say that my grandson is in that group, so it's a special day for me.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, is there another introduction that you need to make, under visitors?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it's my great honour to introduce, again on behalf of the hon. Premier, the ambassador of the republic of Ecuador, His Excellency Nicolás Fabián Trujillo. I would ask that he please now stand and receive the warm traditional welcome of our Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education and Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a group from Changing Together: A Centre for Immigrant Women. Changing Together operates a place for immigrant women to meet and work together in solving their problems and helping one another fully participate in Canadian life. The centre also assists immigrant women to acquire employment skills and work experience through their volunteer program.

They are accompanied by my mother, Dorothy Sigurdson, who teaches level 4 English as a second language, and my father, Barney Sigurdson. It was certainly in their home where I first learned about social justice, and to them I am very grateful.

Also attending today is the executive director of Changing Together, Sonia Bitar. They are seated in the public gallery this afternoon, and I ask that they all rise as I call their names, and I apologize ahead of time because some of them are hard to say: Dorothy Sigurdson, Barney Sigurdson, Sonia Bitar, Dilara Yegani, Taeko Kawasaki, Semsi Develioglu, Liam Yang, Coultoum Maaz, Noella Iriho, Viviane Rodrigues Mestre Ruiz, Rosalia Iopez Bastos, and Zoila Sifuentes. Please join me in giving them all the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Very good job, hon. Minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Legislature a long-term friend of mine, Joan Cowling. Joan's roots extend deep into this community. She was born, raised, and educated in Edmonton. Her father's family were pioneers in the area in 1880. She's a graduate of the University of Alberta and Queen's University. Joan has served four terms as board chairman and trustee of the Edmonton public school board, the best school board in the world. She was an advocate for the development of French immersion programs and was on the school board during times of significant change.

Joan is here today as chairman of the board of the John Humphrey Centre for Peace and Human Rights. She's joined by Norm McLeod, who is on the board of directors. The John Humphrey Centre is organizing a human rights award on December 13, and it will be awarded to Dr. Izzeldin Abuelaish, a pioneer in human rights globally. I would ask both Joan Cowling and Norm McLeod to rise and receive the usual warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a distinct honour today to introduce to you and through you to the other members of the Assembly a band that is truly a cultural icon in this province, the Emeralds. Many of my constituents in Edmonton-Decore are fans, but one of the biggest fans is sitting right here in this Assembly, right in front of me, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, a fellow accordion player himself and a pretty good one at that, too.

Joining us today in the gallery are Allan Broder, Wallis Petruk, Don Remeika, Terry Kole, Reiner Piehl, and Jason Broder. I would ask that they please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: This House could use an accordion player. Possibly the Opposition House Leader could sing along with him.

Are there any other guests, hon. members? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Ms Sigurdson: Yes. I'm introducing on behalf of the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Service Alberta. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 12 members from the Association of Alberta Registry Agents. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I ask that they rise as I call their names: Dave McNeill, Greg Lemay, Matt Toonders, Steve Cutting, Harry Woo, Robyn Young, Craig Couillard, Pam Wilson, and Michelle Collins. Please join me in giving them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: I have the hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a couple of officials from the Alberta Institute of Agrologists. David Lloyd is the CEO and registrar of the Alberta Institute of Agrologists, and Dr. Ty Faechner is the director of the board. As a group the Alberta Institute of Agrologists is at the forefront of many critical issues such as food production, food safety, bioresource health, and environmental quality, matters that are of great interest to Albertans. This organization strives to assure the public of continued professional competence among agrologists in our province. I now ask our guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know how important safety is on family farms and how the loss of just one life or any injury can be one too many. I know that all farmers and ranchers would agree with me that our livelihood is one that goes beyond 9 to 5. Farming isn't a job; it's a way of life. Farmers and ranchers put the food on the table that Albertans and indeed Canadians eat each and every day. I am proud of that. There is no farmer in Alberta who doesn't want their operation to be as safe as possible. No one cares more about farm safety than the moms and dads who operate those farms.

Where I see the gap between the NDP's proposed farm safety legislation and common-sense Alberta farmers is in this bill's legislating first then consulting with those actually impacted later. Agriculture is a vital part of Alberta's economy. It's shocking that the government decided to introduce legislation this comprehensive without in-depth consultation from ranchers and farmers. Mr. Speaker, this government is also trying to implement this bill, with its wide-reaching impacts, in less than 45 days. This is making up rules on the fly, rules that impact peoples' livelihoods, rules that may have serious unintended consequences. At the very least this bill needs to go to a committee so that we can hear from actual producers and industry members, not just what bureaucrats in Edmonton think should happen. We simply can't afford to put the cart before the horse.

This government needs to recognize the difference between a small family farm at Esther and a large commercial farm or operation in Spruce Grove. Our provincial neighbours have working models that make clear distinctions between large operators and family farms. Were these models even considered?

Mr. Speaker, what we need is time to make sure that we get this legislation right.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

The Emeralds Show and Dance Band

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to actually ask the assistance of all Members of the Legislative Assembly in helping to nominate the Emeralds Show and Dance Band to Canada's Walk of Fame for the 2016 ceremony. In the 45 years that the Emeralds have been entertaining fans world-wide, they have celebrated many achievements but have yet to be inducted into Canada's Walk of Fame. This needs to change.

Mr. Speaker, the Emeralds are truly a Canadian treasure. We're proud of the fact that they call the province of Alberta their home. They have recorded over 30 albums, resulting in six gold, two platinum, and one double platinum award. Their international hit The Bird Dance, also sometimes known as the chicken dance, is widely recognizable and has appeared on several movie soundtracks, one about to come out. In 1997 the Emeralds were inducted into the city of Edmonton's cultural hall of fame. It's astonishing that they have yet to be honoured with the induction into Canada's Walk of Fame based on their numerous accomplishments, successes, contributions to Canadian culture and Canadian music. My office will be e-mailing every member later today, so I would ask each of the hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly to sign that letter, have it sent back to me. We will then forward it to Canada's Walk of Fame with the hope that the Emeralds Show and Dance Band will finally be inducted in 2016.

Thank you for all you have done for Canadian music and Canadian culture. You have made us very, very proud.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Provincial Election Six-month Anniversary

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this month Alberta marked the six-month anniversary of the historic election of the NDP as government. [some applause] Go ahead and pound away because you're not going to like the rest of this. Now, our PC Party caucus was relegated here to the corner, and I'm fine with that too, because, after all, I spent a good chunk of grade school in this same spot. The election result was a surprise to most Albertans. It was hard, in fact, to find people that even admitted to having voted NDP, and those few that eventually did admit to it said: well, we voted NDP only because we wanted the PCs to win a minority government. Now, there's some voting strategy that can only be described as baffling, but let's remember that these folks did vote NDP.

Over the summer Albertans witnessed the spectacle of a Premier campaigning against our environmental record for the federal NDP, who wanted to lock the oil sands in the ground, and telling out-of-work Albertans to settle down because we're just embarrassing cousins and expressing concern that she wouldn't have fun at the climate change conference. Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans aren't settling down, we're not embarrassed, and – I'm sorry – we couldn't care less if you have fun at the climate change conference.

Albertans are finding that while the last 44 years weren't perfect, things were a whole lot better than the last six months. Every day we hear this government complain about how hard it is to fix the last 44 years. Well, maybe you should quit trying to fix stuff that isn't broken. I'm a veterinarian, and I fix things, too, and when I'm done, the things I fix have certain key parts in deficit and are no longer able to pass things of great value on to the next generation. That sounds like the same approach the NDP is taking to our economy.

Mr. Speaker, most Albertans are holding their breath and hoping this government doesn't totally destroy the province in the three and a half years they have left in their mandate. Our party learned many lessons . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Edmonton-Whitemud Community Activities

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now for something more positive. It's an honour to be the representative of Edmonton-Whitemud, elected by a majority of the citizens, who voted NDP in the last election. Edmonton-Whitemud is historically significant and now epitomizes all the best characteristics of modern Alberta. Whitemud Creek, which is in Treaty 6 territory, was depicted over 200 years ago in David Thompson's journals and maps. It was key to the development of the Edmonton region as a trading centre as it provided ready access to the river valley from the south. David Thompson was one of several hundred new and old Canadians moving here from far and wide then. Nowadays it's home to Fort Edmonton, a re-creation of the history of the indigenous and settler activity. It's also home to over 40,000 people from all over the world.

Our residents have been attracted to the natural beauty of the North Saskatchewan and Whitemud Creek areas as well as the excellent public schools, recreational facilities, many fine churches, and the vibrant community league structure, led by the Terwillegar Riverbend Advisory Council. Edmonton-Whitemud has become a megahub of the multicultural fabric of Edmonton.

I want to highlight two initiatives in my riding. Firstly, I'd like to commend the St. Thomas More Catholic parish. Several months ago they fund raised with the goal of resettling 14 Syrian families in Edmonton. They've already welcomed one family and are expecting the rest shortly. They are being helped in the resettlement by Catholic Social Services as well as all of our community.

The other is Brander Gardens ROCKS, a collaborative effort by the public school Brander Gardens and many churches, community leagues, and the city of Edmonton. Brander Gardens ROCKS provides a community hub where new immigrant families and Riverbenders share meals, education, and recreation together. We learn about each other's cultures and support youth empowerment.

Edmonton began as a meeting place, and we continue to flourish as a multicultural dynamic mosaic.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Energy Policies

Mr. Jean: No one blames the NDP for the low price of oil, but people are pointing fingers at NDP policies that are making things worse for Albertans. Today the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors announced that next year's drilling will drop by 58 per cent. Here is why, and I quote: an increase in taxes and an uncertain competitive landscape with respect to royalties and new environmental taxes have left a big question mark on the attractiveness of operating in Alberta. End quote. To the Premier. The evidence is piling up. Why doesn't she see the damage the NDP plan is doing to Alberta's economy?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The job losses in the energy sector are serious and challenging to many Alberta families, and we share their frustrations. That's why we're doing things differently in Alberta. We will continue to improve the reputation by opening up new markets, and part of that means acknowledging that we have work to do on environmental protection.

We've also created a job incentive program which will encourage employers to create up to 27,000 jobs in each of the next two years, Mr. Speaker. That's progress. Albertans are confident that we're going to keep moving forward on this strategy, and we're grateful.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jean: Here's what the president of Oilwell Drilling Contractors . . .

The Speaker: Hon. leader, until I recognize you, please be seated.

Mr. Jean: Sorry, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Please proceed. Thank you.

Mr. Jean: Here's what the president of Oilwell Drilling Contractors said on the depth of the current downturn, and I quote: the oil and gas services industry is facing one of the most difficult economic times in a generation, one of the worst periods in our history. Unquote. And it couldn't be clearer. NDP policies are making everything worse for the blue-collar working families who depend on this work. What does the Premier have to say to these Albertans who are hurting because of risky NDP economics?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite couldn't be more wrong about what's causing this downturn. We all know that the international price of oil is what's causing it. If he wants to pretend that by simply having a Conservative government, that wouldn't be the case, what does he have to say for those in Saskatchewan, who were down 50 per cent from their drilling at this same time last year? They have a Conservative government. What about North Dakota, in a similar situation? They have a Republican government. This has nothing to do with policy; it has to do with fearmongering. The price of oil will one day recover, and we're going to make sure that we're incenting jobs in the meantime.

Mr. Jean: Albertans see what the NDP are doing, and they're very worried. They feel like they can't trust the NDP to look after their best interests, and who can blame them? Companies are leaving the province, drilling is down, investment is fleeing, and everyone is pointing the finger to NDP policies as making a bad situation worse: risky royalty and climate change reviews, higher taxes on everyone and everything in Alberta, campaigning against pipelines. And the NDP are just getting started. How can the 65,000 out-of-work Albertans ever trust this government to look after their interests?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite is so far off the mark that he has no clue.

Mr. Eggen: How far off is he?

Ms Hoffman: He is so far off that when half of the drills in the United States are sitting idle right now, he blames Alberta for that. This is something that's happening across North America. We're working in a thoughtful way with industry to build jobs. The member opposite is doing nothing but fearmongering. When will the opposition stop beating up on Alberta? Albertans want a government that believes in them, and they have that.

Mr. Jean: The NDP can't continue to ignore Albertans. Albertans understand the devastating impact the NDP's high-tax, anti-jobs plan is having on the economy. Albertans are living it right now and are very worried. Today 30 municipalities wrote an open letter to the Premier on shutting down our coal industry saying that it "will have significant consequences for the economy, jobs, communities and all of the citizens of Alberta." I couldn't agree more. Higher power bills, fewer jobs, higher taxes: these municipalities are seeing the impact of risky NDP economics. Why can't the Premier see that?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What the government of Alberta is doing is working to make sure that we have 27,000 jobs in Alberta created over the next two years through our job incentive program. We are the only party that in the last election actually had a job creation strategy. Members opposite want to pretend they can keep doing what was done over the last 44 years and that, magically, there will be different results. We're in this situation because previous governments ignored the realities. We're working to ensure we have a diversified economy, and that means Albertans will have jobs.

Mr. Jean: The Premier seems more interested in impressing eastern elites than doing what's best for Alberta. The NDP plan is to raise a new carbon tax and shut down our coal plants. That will hit Albertans very, very hard. Municipalities get it. Their letter says, "It is inevitable that consumers will be immeasurably impacted through higher electricity rates." When Albertans are losing their jobs or seeing their wages cut, this Premier wants to raise their power bills. To the Premier: why, when so many Albertans are hurting, does she insist on making it worse for all Alberta?

Ms Hoffman: I think all members of this House can agree that one of the ways we're going to have good, long-term jobs is if we have a good, long-term international reputation, and the only way to make that happen is to take meaningful action so that Albertans can actually be earning an income so that they can pay their power bills, Mr. Speaker. We're working to make sure we have a strong international reputation. We're going to be taking a measured approach, working with industry, working with Albertans, to ensure that we can sell our products and that we can actually build the pipelines that the member opposite failed to do when he was in Ottawa.

Mr. Jean: A new report from Canada's Ecofiscal Commission makes it abundantly clear that a new carbon tax will hit Alberta the hardest out of all of Canada. Does the Premier care? No. Despite Canada having the best environmental record of all oil-producing countries, the Premier thinks that Alberta is an embarrassing cousin. For families around the kitchen table, they know the NDP plan means higher power bills. For seniors on a fixed income it means lower quality of life. Premier, why are you determined to ram through these policies that will make every Alberta family poorer?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is committed to making sure that we have a prosperous, sustainable economy that benefits Albertans, and part of that is ensuring that we have a strong environmental record and real results while protecting our economy. I know that some members may not believe that climate change is really a problem, but the world knows it is. They're looking to us for leadership, and we are going to bring it.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation

Mr. Jean: Since the NDP formed government, they have attacked our number one industry, energy. Everything they have done has made the problems of our energy sector much worse. Not happy with that, of course, the NDP have now turned their attention on our number two industry in Alberta, agriculture. Under the guise of safety Bill 6 opens up farms and ranches to all sorts of new regulations. This bill will raise costs and regulations on each and every one of Alberta's farms and ranches. Will the Premier stand up today and tell Alberta farmers what it will cost them to meet the requirement of this new, terrible bill?

2:00

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should know he can't ask about a bill that's before the House.

Ms Hoffman: The point of order has been noted. I'm happy to answer it.

The Speaker: The point of order is noted.
The response?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, 60,000 Albertans have waited far too long to have the rights that they deserve. The Workers' Compensation Board introduced legislation in 1918, nearly a century ago, and labour relations legislation was introduced in 1938, just before the Second World War. Albertans have waited long enough to have the protections that have rightfully been owed to them, and we're going to move on those.

Mr. Jean: This government is politicizing farm safety for ideological reasons. This bill treats small family farms and ranches like any other commercial enterprise. Some of the aims of this bill are laudable, but it has major flaws. Other provinces recognize the uniqueness of family farms and ranches. This government does not. If ever a bill needed consultation and study, this bill does need it. Will the Premier commit to sending this bill to committee so that the government can hear the informed opinions of Alberta's farmers and ranchers?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it is clear . . .

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

Mr. Mason: . . . they may not . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Are you making a point of order?

Mr. Mason: Normally they're dealt with at the end of question period.

The Speaker: That's exactly what I intend to do. I thought you were . . . [interjections] I understood your statement to be a point of order. I was incorrect in that respect, hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Farm and ranch workers should have the right to return home safe each and every day, and that's what this government is working toward. Just to reinforce that, here are some of the comments that we've been hearing about this: "This is encouraging. It proves Alberta can fix a glaring, unfair and probably unconstitutional social inequality in less than a century." Mr. Speaker, 98 years. We won't wait 98 more. [interjections] That's Don Braid in the Calgary Herald, and I'll be happy to table it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jean: The other side seems a little rowdy today, Mr. Speaker.

I can't help but notice that there is no one on the government side who makes their living from farming or ranching, not even the agriculture minister. The NDP don't have a clue. Farming and ranching aren't jobs; they are a way of life. The Premier has told municipalities that the MGA will be sent to committee for consultation and study when it gets introduced. Why won't the Premier show farmers the same courtesy it is showing to cities and towns and send this far-reaching bill to committee for study?

Ms Hoffman: The members opposite are so out of touch with Albertans that they have no idea how important it is for them to have rights to be safe at work and for them to have rights to have confidence that they can move forward. I want to thank some members of the House for saying so. They've said that finally we're bringing Alberta into the 21st century. [interjections] Thank you to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for acknowledging that. I wish members opposite cared as much about farm safety and the safety of workers.

The Speaker: I wonder if the hon. minister would please repeat her answer. I could not hear it. Would you please repeat your answer?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The people of Alberta deserve to come home safe each and every night, and the Member for Calgary-Mountain View acknowledges that. This isn't about one side of the House or the other. This is about working together to ensure the safety of farm workers. They deserve it. This is good for rural Alberta. This is bringing Alberta into the 21st century, said the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, and I thank him for sharing that view. Our government is working to make sure that we protect workers, and this bill is going to be good for Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member of the third party.

Vision Loss Services

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, nearly 53,000 Albertans live with blindness or partial sight. Of the $4 million required by CNIB last year, a million and a half was provided by government. The environment minister is quoted as saying that these services ought to be brought under the umbrella of medicare. The Member for Calgary-Shaw introduced in this House advocate Phil Bobawsky, a friend of both of ours, who is a champion for the blind. To the Premier: will you keep your party's campaign promise to fund vision loss services for Albertans since this is one of the very few positive promises made?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are committed to providing services that Albertans need. I know how important it is for visually impaired Albertans to maintain their independence and quality of life, and that's one of the reasons why we've worked to make sure that medications that can help with that are more readily available. That's why I'm so proud of the RAPID program, which took out the copay as well as having to pay $1,500 for each injection to having a fully funded government program for $50 an injection for people who are suffering from macular degeneration. This is being supported by organizations like the CNIB, and I'm really proud of our record on this.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, CNIB will be not that happy to know that the government's answer is to provide unapproved drugs to the blind.

Given that the rehabilitation coverage for hearing loss is delivered through Alberta Health Services and, by contrast, that Albertans with sight loss say that they are unfairly treated, when will you address this discrepancy in support of the 53,000 Albertans who are blind or sight impaired?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We currently provide the CNIB with, actually, $2.2 million every year. As the Minister of Health I've met with the CNIB to discuss their concerns. I understand that they're proposing a phased approach to introduce new funding for new services, and we are certainly looking at that proposal. But I have to say that it's a lot easier to consider proposals when you're not cutting billions of dollars from the budget, which is what members opposite have been proposing. I'm really confident that we're going to work in collaboration to make life better for those who are visually impaired.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again the government is demonstrating that they're not listening. The CNIB has asked for $4 million.

I will try it again. To the Health minister this time since the Premier won't answer: given that CNIB Alberta has asked this NDP government to take steps towards fully funded rehabilitative care and has even provided a phase-by-phase solution to do it, can you commit today to say yes to this very reasonable request by the CNIB?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I find the irony of the member, who was part of a government that for 44 years failed to act and then all of a sudden expects us within six months to move swiftly, so over the top.

In my last answer I talked about how the CNIB is proposing a phased-in approach, which the member mentions. We are certainly considering that. We're going to do it in a reasonable way, and we're going to make sure that we have evidence to guide those decisions. I thank the CNIB for the services they provide to Albertans, and I'm proud of the fact that we are currently contributing $2.2 million.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Climate Change and Royalty Reviews

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This morning I released the Alberta Party climate change strategy called Alberta's Contribution. We believe our province's contribution to the fight against global climate change comes from creating technologies that will help diversify our economy, reduce emissions, and allow Alberta to continue to grow our energy industry. Now, the Alberta Party believes that our job is not just to oppose but to propose clear alternatives to government policy, and I challenge my opposition colleagues to release their climate change plans as well. To the Premier. Our plan calls for a modest, truly revenue neutral consumer carbon tax. If your government implements a carbon tax, will it be revenue neutral?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question and also for his interventions in this matter. I was very grateful to read his interventions this morning, and I thank him for his contributions to these efforts. Of course, the panel is considering these matters. We are looking at the way that we currently price carbon and ensuring that it's the most effective way that we can. We are looking at how we phase in renewables, how we retire our coal fleet in a way that is fair for workers, for communities, and for the companies. We're also looking at the ways that we can bring in energy efficiency. I think that the hon. member will . . .

2:10

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, our plan taps into Alberta's greatest natural resource, the entrepreneurial spirit of our people. It creates opportunities for Alberta companies to drive innovation and develop technologies that allow Alberta to become a world leader in carbon reduction while continuing to grow energy production. To the Premier: will you continue to fund the Climate Change and Emissions Management Corporation, and will you use some of those funds to create a living lab, using Alberta carbon sources, to test innovative ideas for emissions reduction, and will you use the results of these policies to stand up for Alberta's energy sector to gain badly needed market access for our oil?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for the question. Certainly, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Corporation is a large part of our technology and innovation investments that we make as a province, and those investments will continue. We are continuing to receive advice from the panel on this matter of research and development, technology and innovation and how we move towards a more carbon competitive economy. Those details will be shared with the House in the coming days and weeks.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the minister for that answer.

Now, on Monday evening I asked the Minister of Energy if she would release all of the advice given to her by the royalty review panel. Now, transparency is very important. Albertans deserve to know that the royalty review and climate panels were worth while and not just cover for doing what the government wanted to do all along. To the Premier: will you commit to releasing all advice or recommendations made by the royalty and climate panels so Albertans have confidence you're not just picking and choosing the ideas that you like?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. I think, as I mentioned the other night in estimates when you asked that question, there will be documents released along with the report and the findings in due time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Legal Aid

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a family and criminal lawyer I know just how important legal aid is for all Albertans, and I know from the calls that my office has received just how important subsidized public legal services are for my constituents, especially for those involved in family dispute litigation. Constituents that need it are pleased with the continued responsible funding for legal aid in this year's budget. To the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General: what will this additional legal aid funding be used for?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for this absolutely critical question. Well, of course, we as a government are committed to ensuring that services are available, particularly for the most vulnerable Albertans, and that includes legal aid. This funding was initially put through in the last budget and has been continued in this budget because it will provide an increase in the financial eligibility guidelines. In addition, we will be working with Legal Aid to ensure that going forward they are able to meet the needs of Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Legal Aid's federal funding has not changed since 2005 and that we've had 785,000 more people come into our province, back to the Minister of Justice: with the new federal government in power what actions are being taken to secure adequate federal funding for Legal Aid in this province?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again to the member for the question. I actually have had the opportunity to have a conversation with my federal counterpart on this issue, and we will be discussing it when the Justice ministers for the provinces, territories meet together. The province has significantly increased its contribution to Legal Aid whereas the federal funding has remained stagnant, and we are hoping – I am optimistic – that there will be some more help coming from the federal government so that we can make sure that we're protecting vulnerable Albertans.

Ms McLean: Mr. Speaker, given that thousands of Albertans in need depend upon Legal Aid's subsidized services, to the same minister: how are you ensuring Legal Aid can continue to operate in an effective manner in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again to the member for the question. Well, of course, this is a really important issue because it protects the rights of the most vulnerable Albertans. We've been working with Legal Aid on some short-term solutions, and we hope to have some announcements on that front very shortly. We're also moving forward looking at the overall service delivery of legal aid to ensure that we're able to provide services that protect vulnerable Albertans in a sustainable way going forward.

Government Revenue Forecasts

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, last week the Parliamentary Budget Officer in Ottawa released his economic forecast, projecting oil to be $11.60 lower a year than the NDP's projections. Every $3 drop in the price of oil equals a half a billion dollar shortfall in our revenues. That means an $8 billion difference from the budget by 2018. Does the minister still believe that Albertans can trust his government's revenue projections, or will he revise them with more realistic projections before we vote on the budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The budget that was put before this House is a prudent, realistic budget. We believe that always, going forward, we'll take into account what the private-sector forecasters are saying about WTI and other commodities, and we will revise when necessary at the quarterly and at the annual updates. The annual update for the next budget is going to be coming shortly. That's in the spring of this year, and the next quarterly will be in February.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, right now is the time for realistic numbers. Given the seriousness of this issue, it shouldn't be brushed aside by the government for another day. So I have to reiterate a point, which is these romanticized numbers for oil. The government will have $8 billion more in debt than they were already projecting by 2018. This is a serious issue that deserves more than talking points from the minister. Does the minister have a plan to fill this $8 billion hole with higher taxes or even higher debt?

Mr. Ceci: The plan we've put before this House will bring us back to balance in 2020. So that's realistic. We plan to support jobs and the creation of jobs in this community so that the diversified economy can better take us off the oil and gas roller coaster. We're going to do that. We're going to balance in 2020.

Mr. Fildebrandt: The PBO doesn't believe this is a realistic plan, and Moody's doesn't think this is a realistic plan.

Given that the NDP could put lipstick on a pig or any numbers they like in the budget, it still doesn't change the facts, Mr. Speaker. Since beyond the first three years of the budget plan the minister has provided no data whatsoever to show how he expects to increase revenues by 16 per cent to balance the budget in year 5 and since during the estimates the minister refused to table his economic assumptions for those years, will the minister be honest with Albertans and table the data for years 4 and 5 of the budget now?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. The member opposite can look in the overview section of the budget to see what we have built these budget assumptions on.

Mr. Strankman: Point of order.

Mr. Ceci: They're all there. We'll stick with this one as opposed to the pig.

The Speaker: A point of order is noted by the Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Hon. Minister of Finance, you have 15 seconds left.

Mr. Ceci: Sure. To conclude without holding this up, I will say that we built realistic assumptions into the overview section. It's all there if the member opposite wants to read it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Minister of the Status of Women

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On May 5 of this year only two women were re-elected to the Legislature in this province: myself and the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, the Premier, which I guess makes us the veterans in a group of outstanding, new women legislators. Our opportunity to create change has never been better, and I applaud the government's efforts for making a gender-balanced cabinet. I applaud the introduction of a separate Ministry of the Status of Women and had high hopes for it, but the new minister has already been faced with apologizing to me for an unprofessional outburst yesterday in estimates, where she became aggressive and abusive. To the Premier: does she condone this kind of behaviour?

2:20

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, emotions run high in estimates, and that went both ways. I certainly apologize to the member if she took my comments as impugning her record as associate minister. However, the fact of the matter is that we have a record from the previous government on women's issues, and we know we need to do better.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, the minister didn't apologize for the content of her diatribe, just for the fact that it hurt my feelings. So way to go for the bronze here on the apology.

Yesterday I was shocked to hear, Mr. Speaker, that the work of dedicated civil servants that I served with in women's equality and advancement was described as deplorable, lackadaisical, and disgusting. These hard-working individuals are part of the minister's current staff. To the Premier: will she apologize now for the minister's characterization of their work?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it's very unfortunate that the hon. member cannot accept an apology when it is offered. It seems that she wants her pound of flesh, too.

It's very clear that we have many hard-working officials throughout the public service, working in many departments under the political direction of the government of the day. They are, of course, bound by the policy direction set by the government of the day, and from time to time the people of this province decide that it's important to change that direction. That is what they have done.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister has insulted her peers and denigrated her staff, it's clear that she has lost the moral authority to govern on this file. To the Premier: will you ask her to step down?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that the tone of the question is really unfortunate in this place. It seems to me that this hon. member is attempting to exploit a difficult situation. I read the Hansard transcript of that, and this hon. member contributed as well to, I think, a sense of antagonism that shouldn't necessarily be there.

I believe the question was with respect to the Premier, but I know – I know – that all of us on this side have the utmost confidence in the minister of the environment and women.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Tax Policy

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday in estimates I noted in the business plan created by this government the statement: “Alberta’s government is moving forward with action to cushion the impact of the downturn on Albertans.” Perhaps, instead of our economy taking body blows, they should focus on making everyday life better for Albertans losing their jobs. To the Premier: do you think that increasing taxes on everything Albertans do, from getting married to going camping to enjoying a glass of wine to driving their cars, is a cushion, or is it a steel-toed boot in the rear?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I’ll thank the member for the question. Our government is taking action on the current situation with low prices of oil internationally. We were the only party during the election that had a plan that looked at partnering with the private sector to create jobs as opposed to the opposition parties, that only talked about it. Our party is acting on it. The creation of my ministry focuses on partnering with the private sector to look at ways to enhance our market exports, our access to market, and jobs in this province.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the same document states that the government’s intent is to “develop a fairer, more balanced revenue base that will bring stability to public programs” and since the government’s plan seems to be implementing taxes on everyday Albertans while also proposing to pile on even more through a carbon tax, to the Premier: when will this government realize that their budget is anything but fair and balanced and that Albertans are downright worried?

Mr. Ceci: Actually, the truth of the matter is that 93 per cent of tax filers will not see a change in their taxes as a result of this budget.

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, given that “fairer” is banded about liberally by the government when talking about taxes and that to this government fairer seems to be equated with better conditions for bureaucrats, not the 1,500 Albertans a week that are losing their jobs, how can the Premier say with a straight face that Albertans should trust this government when protecting the bloated bureaucracy is all that they seem to have in mind?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I find it really rich that the Official Opposition’s solution to the fact that thousands of Albertans are losing their jobs is to lay off thousands more teachers and nurses and front-line workers. That alone would just exacerbate the problem. Now, as opposed to the Wildrose opposition, our government plans on working with the private sector to create more jobs, strengthen our public sector, and ensure that Albertans have the teachers in the classrooms and health care professionals when they get sick and also a path forward to a balanced budget.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Public Consultation on Land Use

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On September 4, 2015, the Minister of Environment and Parks made a staggering, sudden announcement to convert the Castle area partially to a wildland park and a provincial park. This announcement. . .

The Speaker: Would you stop the clock for a minute? I could not hear the question.

Could you proceed again, hon. member?

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, assuming they heard the first part, this announcement was purposely done without key stakeholder notification. A long-time logging contractor was not consulted, nor were the officials for the three local municipalities. To the minister: why, prior to this sudden announcement, did you avoid discussing that decision with the company that had faithfully held the forest management agreement for decades plus the key elected officials in three local municipalities?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Consultations with the sawmill that the member is referring to in Cochrane are ongoing. We respect the forestry industry across the province. There are 17 communities in Alberta that are very important to the forestry industry, and we’re committed to protecting that forestry industry, which is important to Alberta.

Mr. Stier: My question is still to the Environment and Parks minister. She made a sudden announcement regarding the Springbank reservoir, where once again key stakeholders, including landowners, were given no prior notification and the affected municipality was only notified the evening before. To the minister: given that your party had a campaign against that decision during the election then flip-flopped and given that you provided no notification, how can Albertans trust you when you’re always leaving them in the dark?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, there’s a simple first piece to the answer, Mr. Speaker, which is: that is not true. There were ongoing consultations with affected municipalities on flood mitigation projects for some time. Now, the fact of the matter is that this Official Opposition would leave the entire city of Calgary with no flood protection and open to a $6 billion flood event as we saw in 2013. We did the hard work of taking the tough decision, and we acted.

Mr. Stier: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, what the minister has just said is not true. She’s clearly not acting in the best interests of Albertans and cannot be trusted.

To the minister again: given that it is obvious that you, Minister, do not wish to notify key stakeholders or local municipalities on extremely sensitive and crucial issues, how can Albertans trust you now to represent their best interests on the international stage when you go to the climate change conference next month when you’ve broken that trust here at home?

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can say that the premise of this question is categorically untrue. As the Minister of Municipal Affairs at the time I did speak with municipal leaders in the region to look at the various options and get their input, which I then shared with the minister of the environment.

Thank you.

2:30 Environment and Parks Ministry Issues

Mr. Fraser: The environment minister has said that decisions around the environment should and will be made on the best evidence, and, Mr. Speaker, our former government and this caucus agree that decisions should always be made on sound evidence. Minister, I don't intend to overwhelm you. I know and I understand that the portfolios of Status of Women and the environment are two very important issues for Alberta's families. These are legacies that we will leave our mothers, daughters, sisters, and the environment is something we'll leave for all future generations. Minister, with the conduct and the evidence you displayed yesterday in estimates, perhaps it's time you asked the Premier to split up these two very important ministries with separate ministers so that they can get the attention they deserve. Wouldn't you agree?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is a decision for the Premier, and I will not presume to speak for her, but I want to assure the hon. member that we have absolutely the greatest confidence in the minister to perform both portfolios.

Mr. Fraser: Now, given the fact that the Springbank dam was based on evidence – the evidence shows that a portion of the Springbank dam will flood to protect Calgary – and given the fact that now there are new mitigation talks to protect a subsection of homes along the Elbow River, Minister, if you mitigate that, the water is going to go somewhere. This was a contentious issue for this community in the last flood. Minister, what portion of Calgary or community downstream are you now going to tell that they will flood because of this decision?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. It's actually a really good question. That is why we have undertaken the flood hazard mapping studies that we have, the studies that the Auditor General prevailed upon the previous government to do and they did not do. We have undertaken that work, and we'll have that conversation this afternoon in estimates because there is a cost associated with it. That was part of the announcement that we made with the mayor of Calgary on how we move forward on mitigation for both the Elbow and Bow rivers.

Mr. Fraser: Well, let's be clear, Minister. The evidence showed that with the previous flood maps, the water went exactly where we predicted it to go.

Minister, you've talked a lot about your own community and how you want to protect your own headwaters, hence why you made the decision to shut down development in the Castle region. To avoid the appearance of your own political benefit, Minister, will you please table the report and evidence to this House pertaining to the headwaters in the Castle region showing the health of the headwaters before and after?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. You know, the Castle area: putting it under some form of legislated protection was a long-standing request of landowners, various people who hold grazing leases, municipalities, and others in southern Alberta. The fact of the matter is that the South Saskatchewan regional plan is a good plan, but in some ways it did not listen to the local communities, and on this Castle decision that was one of them, and we acted.

Agricultural Policies

Cortes-Vargas: Mr. Speaker, dry conditions and hail earlier this year were the grave conditions for many farmers across the province. While the constituents of Strathcona-Sherwood Park weren't completely impacted by these conditions, many Albertans worried that this year's harvest would be far lower than previous years. Many neighbouring areas and surrounding counties issued a state of agricultural disaster. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: how did this government help farmers cope with the challenging early growing season?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, early season conditions resulted in a significant increase in the number of claims for insurance compensation through the province's Agriculture Financial Services Corporation. As a result, this government declared an agricultural disaster, which allowed the AFSC to provide approximately $350 million in support to farmers through premiums and reserves that were already in place to ensure producers with insurance are compensated for their losses in a timely manner. That said, this year's harvest overall was much better than anticipated.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you to the minister for that answer. I know that many farmers were very appreciative of that support.

Given that early season conditions were so challenging and given that the experiences differed in different parts of the province, would the minister inform the Assembly of the status of the 2015 harvest?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, more than 99 per cent of crops are now in the bin, so I'm happy to inform this Assembly of the provincial yields, which are higher than estimated earlier this year. Provincial average yields for spring and durum wheat are reported at 86 and 85 per cent of their five-year averages, with barley at 90 per cent, oats at 86 per cent, canola at 95 per cent, and dry peas at 80 per cent. Overall, this year's crops came in at about 87 per cent of the five-year average. The reason for this is better than expected conditions later in the crop season, improved seed genetics and farming practices, and good ground conditions during harvest.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta farmers will continue to face difficult growing conditions and as the effect of climate change becomes more evident, to the same minister: what are you going to do to promote sustainable agricultural practices across Alberta to help ensure the success of Alberta farmers for generations to come?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, this government takes the threat of climate change seriously. With innovation, diversification, and investments in technology Alberta's farmers can weather the storm. This government has established the Farm Stewardship Centre in Lethbridge to focus on research, development, and the implementation of best practices that will help farmers improve on farm stewardship, protect the environment, address important issues like climate change, while continuing to diversify the Alberta economy. This government will also ensure that the AFSC remains a crucial backstop for farmers and ranchers with a suite of financial and insurance supports available.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Infrastructure Funding

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP government's strategic plan, with significant input from David Dodge, outlines their intentions for funding public infrastructure. It refers to a tool called a special investment vehicle, that would build and manage such infrastructure, borrow to finance it, and charge user fees to generate revenues. That sounds in layman's terms like a toll to me. Will the minister come clean and tell Alberta just exactly what the special investment vehicle means for Albertans? Are you introducing a toll?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. No.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the Dodge report discusses the use of electronic toll systems as an avenue of funding for bridges and given that we know there are bridges all across this province that are in desperate need of more funding, like the one in Fort Saskatchewan, what exactly is your government's plan when it comes to placing tolls on bridges in our province?

Mr. Mason: Nein, non, nyet tolls.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since municipalities in our province, like Edmonton and Calgary, are responsible for key arterial highways inside the ring roads and whereas motorists are frustrated by perpetual congestion and traffic lights stopping and starting traffic along these arteries and in the light of the Dodge report: is the Minister of Transportation planning to give tolling powers to municipalities through a new municipal charter? Yes or no?

Mr. Mason: Three guesses, hon. member. In whatever language the answer is no.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Fentanyl Use on First Nations

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is national addictions week, and I'd like to congratulate two Kainai physicians who've been honoured by the University of Lethbridge with this year's friends of health sciences award. Dr. Susan Christenson and Dr. Esther Tailfeathers launched several successful initiatives to save lives on the Blood reserve, where fentanyl has taken a terrible toll. To the Minister of Aboriginal Relations: given the success, leadership, and persistence of these doctors, what are you doing, specifically, to save the lives of Albertans on other reserves?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the question and to the member for raising it. Certainly, fentanyl is one of the most extreme drugs that we've seen in our time. Doctors are talking about the very extreme consequences of having as much as just two grains of fentanyl. We're working on a four-pronged approach. One piece is making sure that we have education and public awareness campaigns. One piece is working to make sure that we have naloxone kits in the hands of people who are likely to have an overdose and the people who care for them. We're also working to address the manufacturing and trying to create greater barriers between it being brought into Alberta. Lastly, we're working to make sure we have this crisis centre in place as well as investing in detox opportunities.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you to the Health minister for the answer.

Again to the Aboriginal Relations minister: given that you committed last week to outline your department's efforts to ensure that the life-saving antidote naloxone is available on all Alberta reserves and given that any delay in setting up the system means lives lost, what are you doing specifically to ensure that all First Nations reserves have a ready supply of naloxone and that residents are trained to administer it at a moment's notice?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Well, of course, this is a critical issue for all Albertans because fentanyl is a very dangerous drug, and the antidote naloxone is one of our key pieces in addressing this situation. We have been working with policing agencies on reserves, we've also been working with First Nations directly, and we will continue to work with EMS as well as working on information because it's really critical that we work with our partners in Health to ensure that the information on the danger of this drug gets out so that we can prevent people from taking it in the first place.

Thank you.

Mr. Rodney: Again, to the same minister: given that the Blood Tribe Police Service launched an extremely effective on-reserve crime unit dedicated to gaining control of fentanyl distribution, what specific plans – and we are looking for specifics here, Minister – do you have to adapt the Blood reserve's successful state of emergency model on other reserves that are trying to get a handle on fentanyl abuse and distribution in their area?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Well, of course, we have a number of police forces throughout Alberta policing on First Nations. There are a couple of other First Nations that have their own policing forces, but a majority of it is done with the RCMP, so we are working with those partners to ensure that they have access to naloxone and that they have access to all the information necessary going forward to make sure that they can cut off the supply.

Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mosaic Entertainment

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The more I learn about the constituency of Edmonton-Mill Creek, the more aware I am of the rich diversity of businesses there, one of which I was fortunate enough to tour recently. Mosaic Entertainment is a television studio. Unprepossessing in its outward appearance, but much like Dr. Who's TARDIS, it has a much bigger inside than the outside suggests. Mosaic Entertainment is primarily a skit comedy company, and it has produced a variety of shows, among them is Caution: May Contain Nuts. The show currently being filmed, Tiny Plastic Men, is being shown on Super Channel.

Our tour began with us meeting the executive producers, learning how the studio works, then moving on to see how the creative inspirations grow into stories and finally a show, needing only a place to be produced and a cast and crew to bring it to life. After meeting the cast members, all well-known names in the Edmonton theatre scene, it was on to the wardrobe. In the midst of the racks of costumes, some ready to be worn and some needing to be refurbished and altered, there were sewing machines, piles of colourful fabrics, and components everywhere. The costume designer and her assistants have to be creative and innovative to produce the needed costumes on site.

Next was the props area. The props, ranging in size from furniture to small toys, were stored everywhere, even on the walls of the lunchroom, where boxes labelled with made-up toy company logos were stacked. Everywhere we walked, we saw people setting up equipment, rehearsing scenes, or carrying props to the sets.

Finally the moment came. We were provided with director's chairs, placed well behind the cameras, and we watched a scene from the show being filmed.

Touring this studio showed us Albertans creating a successful and creative business, employing many local people, and providing entertainment and new ways of looking at the world. We're very lucky to have them.

Fall of the Berlin Wall 26th Anniversary

Mr. Fildebrandt: On August 13, 1961, the Soviet Union built the Berlin Wall, an iron curtain that cut not just a city or a country but the entire world in two. For three decades the Berlin Wall stood as a global symbol of oppression and tyranny. For the west it stood as a symbol that our Cold War opponents would ruthlessly stamp out any yearning for freedom that loosened their grip on power. For free people around the world it stood as a physical reminder that while free nations welcome people in, slave nations keep them in.

For Germans: [Remarks in German]; a nation half free, half slave. It was a stone in their hearts, keeping families, friends, brothers, sisters, and countrymen apart. Most of my family escaped the east before the wall went up, but many families did not. Millions of families were trapped behind it, and some were even divided by it.

Twenty-six years ago, in November 1989, the people of East Germany overthrew the Socialist Unity Party and began to tear down the wall with their own bare hands. Within two years most of the socialist regimes in eastern Europe and Russia had fallen. As the colonized nations of the Soviet Union declared their independence, so too were the people of East and West Germany brought together again in unity and justice and freedom. [Remarks in German]

Let us remember this anniversary as a new symbol that the human need for freedom can be walled in and suppressed for a time but never extinguished. The world has never had a greater portion of its people freer than today, but there still remains millions oppressed or even enslaved in their own countries. As one of the oldest free nations in the world we have a duty as Canadians to fight for them. Let us pray for those around the world still not free. They will be in time.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Bill 205

Persons with Developmental Disabilities Services (Public Consultation) Amendment Act, 2015

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Services (Public Consultation) Amendment Act, 2015.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 205 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mrs. Littlewood: I would like to table the aforementioned Calgary Herald article written by Don Braid titled Alberta Farm Workers Win the Long Struggle for Basic Rights – I have the appropriate number of copies to table – as well as an article titled Farm Safety Breakthrough: Proposed Rules to Ensure Safe Workplaces, Protect Workers. That is also a Calgary Herald article, and I have the appropriate number of copies.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the requisite five copies of a document called Alberta's Contribution: Alberta Party Caucus Climate Change Plan, a balanced plan reflecting our desire to address climate change and other impacts of energy development with the goal to continue the development and expansion of Alberta's energy industry.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a document that my colleague the Leader of the Official Opposition referred to today, an open letter to Premier Notley from the mayors and reeves of over 30 municipalities in Alberta.

2:50

The Speaker: The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of a letter that was just delivered to the office of the Premier requesting that the Premier relieve the Minister Responsible for the Status of Women from her duties.

The Speaker: Are there any other tablings?

Hon. members, I'm pleased to table five copies of the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner of Alberta 2014-15 annual report pursuant to section 63(1) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and section 95(1) of the Health Information Act and section 44(1) of the Personal Information Protection Act.

It's the appropriate time, I think, for me to deal with points of order. I think there were a total of three.

Government House Leader, on the first one, can you elaborate on the point of order?

Mr. Mason: I had three of them, and I actually have a fourth one.

The Speaker: Okay. This is the appropriate place to deal with them.

Point of Order Tabling Cited Documents

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, maybe I'll just give you the fourth point of order, and that is that during tablings today we expected the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to table the survey of his constituents which he referenced yesterday in question period. It is customary that when a member refers to a document in the House, particularly during question period, they table it at the first opportunity. So I would hope that the hon. member would table that on Monday. That's my fourth point of order.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, thank you so much. I'll have to beg for your forgiveness, good sir, as I did forget to bring that document today to the House. I'll be more than pleased to table it in the House tomorrow given that we will be here.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Government House Leader, the first.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Mason: I will do two together, and they have to do with the decorum in the House when government members are answering questions. It seems to me that the Official Opposition is acting in a way to try and disrupt the proceedings of the House when hon. ministers are trying to respond to their questions. The degree to which the catcalling, heckling, yelling, shouting, quite frankly, attempts to shout down ministers is unacceptable, and I would ask you to impose decorum. Clearly, some heckling has always been permitted in the House, but there seems to be a consistent attempt to drown out or intimidate ministers of the Crown in giving their answers. I think that this should not be acceptable to you, Mr. Speaker, or to the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, the section specifically, if you could point that out.

Mr. Mason: It's 23(j).

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, thank you so much. I rise today to speak to the point of order under 23(j): "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." While I can accept that the opposition was boisterous today and was voicing some concerns, I personally didn't hear much use of abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as you know, if you are uncomfortable with the decorum in this House, you are welcome to rise at any point in time and ask for a little bit of a softer tone or volume in the House. I think that you did have the opportunity to rise today, and it was when the government was doing the exact same thing that they've accused the opposition of today.

The Speaker: On this particular point of order, as I may have indicated on a couple of occasions, particularly this week, I have that issue under advisement myself, and I would prefer to deal with this as part of a bigger picture at a future date.

I would remind the House, though, as I think about that, that you choose to indicate that you want to use time efficiently and constructively. However, I note that on several occasions I've had to actually ask the House to be quiet so that I could hear. So as I look forward to bringing a response on that matter in the future, I also urge all of the members, all of the party whips, those present, that we need – we had children in the Assembly today, as we often do, and they are looking to us as leaders. You are role models. All of us are role models, and I wish to remind each of you to use your best efforts, either as individuals or as caucuses, to make this place a more respectable place. I will defer my ruling until next week.

I think there was a point of order from the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Mason: I had another point of order as well.

The Speaker: I'll deal with this one first if I might.

Mr. Cooper: I rise to speak briefly to the point of order from my colleague from Drumheller-Stettler. There's a tradition in the House of not using props. He felt that there had been one used, but in the name of time I'll withdraw that point of order on his behalf.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Anticipation

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that. During question period I believe the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills – and correct me if I'm not correct on that – attempted to ask a question with respect to Bill 6, which is the bill that deals with the health and safety of farm workers. [interjection] It was the Official Opposition Leader, yes. He attempted to ask a question to the Premier about Bill 6, the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, which stands on the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders. I would note that our standing orders say – and this is clear – on page 16, 23(e): "anticipates, contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper or on notice for consideration on that day."

Mr. Speaker, also, if you review Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms at page 122, section 14, "Questions should not anticipate an Order of the Day although this does not apply to the budget process." Clearly, this bill is not part of the budget process.

Just to go a little further, Mr. Speaker, House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, edited by O'Brien and Bosc, quite rightly points out that this rule has been changed or modified in the Canadian House of Commons. Without going into it at length, the Speaker ruled there that questions in question period dealing with something that is on the Order Paper were henceforward okay except in a couple of instances, and I won't go into the detail of that.

However, that is not the procedure in this House or in our standing orders, Mr. Speaker, as you yourself ruled on June 17. At 3 o'clock in Alberta Hansard, June 17, 2015, you yourself said:

With respect to the point of order, it related to a question by the Member for Calgary-Cross to the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General about donations to political parties, which is the subject of Bill 1, which can be found on page 19 of the Alberta Hansard for yesterday, June 16.

Then you read the standing order, Mr. Speaker.

A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member

- (e) anticipates, contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper or on notice for consideration on that day.

Basically, the rule is what it says, that a part of the proceedings should not be on the same subject as something that is scheduled for later in the day. My investigation into the matter demonstrates that the rule is not necessarily strictly observed in relation to Oral Question Period. Speaker Kowalski stated on March 3, 1998, page 649 of Alberta Hansard that questions that were framed so as to ask if something was a matter of government policy “took it out of the realm of debate on a particular bill.”

3:00

I will note, Mr. Speaker, that that is not the frame used by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition in asking his question as he specifically referenced the bill.

You went on to say:

I note that in a May 8, 2013, ruling on the same issue, page 2194 of Alberta Hansard for that day, Speaker Zwozdesky reaffirmed Speaker Kowalski’s ruling on the rule against anticipation not being violated by a question about the government policy in relation to a bill which was up for consideration that day.

Members may be interested to know that the Canadian House of Commons no longer applies the rule against anticipation during question period, as is discussed on page 561 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition. In this instance, the question asked what the government was doing about campaign financing, which is, of course, the subject of Bill 1. I think the Official Opposition House Leader had a valid point and a legitimate point of order although it could have been maybe brought forward to the Assembly’s attention at the appropriate time.

As we move forward together during this session, I am sure that we will now be more aware of the rule against anticipation.

Mr. Speaker, wise words.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to respond to the point of order in question today, from section 23(e). I think there are some very key points for consideration today when it comes to the question at hand. The standing order states “anticipates, contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper or on notice for consideration on that day.” Mr. Speaker, there is no such bill that will be considered today. In fact, we will be rising here momentarily to go back into the estimates process. The department of agriculture or the Department of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour are not going to be debated today.

Having said that, House of Commons Procedure and Practice states that the rule was changed, that questions are no longer to be ruled out of order on the sole basis that they are anticipating orders of that day. So there is a wide swath of precedent that creates an either/or situation and does not require the question just to be on the Order Paper but to be under consideration that day. It is very clear that we will not be considering it today. I think you’ll find that while the hon. member across the way brought some points when it comes to anticipation, for many of the questions that he raised today, the topic of discussion would be debated later that day.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, briefly on the rule of anticipation: this is one that is long standing, but the application of this rule, at least in Canadian Houses of Parliament, has certainly been significantly relaxed, and there is a very practical reason for that. Items are placed on the Order Paper as soon as they are introduced, and they remain on the Order Paper sometimes for a matter of days or even weeks. If during that entire period of time the members of the opposition are enjoined from asking questions with regard to those pieces of legislation, it certainly limits our ability as members to probe the government as to their intentions with regard to the legislation.

I understand fully the desire to not cause duplication or to waste the time of the House with something that could then be taken up during the course of debate. However, Oral Question Period is the most direct opportunity for members to directly ask the ministers involved what the state of government policy is on that, and the rule of anticipation, as has been previously stated on pages 560 and 561 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, has been appropriately relaxed in order to allow for that to happen. In this particular situation, Mr. Speaker, if we are not allowed to ask questions with regard to any matter on the Order Paper, we are in fact significantly hindered in our ability to fulfill our role as members of the opposition. I would ask that you rule this particular point of order out of order.

The Speaker: Hon. members, thank you for your comments. I choose to read the references identified by the various members and make a decision at a future date.

Having said that, pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) the House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30.

The legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon for consideration of the main estimates. Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Seniors in the Foothills Room, and Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for Environment and Parks in the Grassland Room.

[The Assembly adjourned at 3:06 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b)]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 19, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us reflect. As tomorrow is Universal Children's Day, let us all recognize the importance of teaching young people that their voices matter, and let us encourage them to speak and to be heard. Let us be reminded that these children are our future and that the work we do here today will set out the stepping stones for our future generations. Our reflections may make us all even more mindful of our responsibilities, especially for the children, not just for the children of Alberta but indeed for the children of the world. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I am very happy to introduce to you and through you grade 6 students from Boyle school, which is in not only in my riding; it's actually in my home community. In fact, the school is right across the street from me, and my son goes there, so I know lots of these students and their instructors. They are accompanied today by teachers Michelle Splinter and Jody Ergang, parent supervisor Jody Montague, and bus driver David Hague. If the students of grade 6, teachers, and supervisors could please rise and accept the customary warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very honoured today to rise on your behalf and introduce through you Ms Jody Magill, who is a constituent of Medicine Hat. Jody has been the manager of government and public affairs at Methanex Corporation since 2012. Methanex produces methanol at its plant in the community of Medicine Hat and employs approximately 125 employees. I would invite Jody to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two very special guests. Jan Lukas Buterman is the founding member and current president of the Trans Equality Society of Alberta. The society's mission is to be a voice for matters concerning trans Albertans. Since its inception in 2009 TESA has engaged in advocacy and education in areas of government outreach and community development.

I'd also like to introduce Superintendent Brad Doucette. He's a senior member of the Edmonton Police Service currently serving as a superintendent of the west division. He's also EPS's representative on the Sexual Minorities Liaison Committee in the community of Edmonton.

I would ask them both to rise now and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation and Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly four guests from Eastglen high school, which is an important institution in my constituency: Christina Hamer, a teacher at Eastglen high school; Leann Thompson, the librarian and the GSA lead; Anna Lafleur, a student; and Vanessa Shultz, also a student. I would like to congratulate both Anna and Vanessa for their hard work beyond their school work on Eastglen's gay-straight alliance and for the support of Ms Thompson and Ms Hamer. I think you're clearly living up to your school's mission to work within our community and offer students the opportunity to succeed within a supportive environment. I'd like you all, please, to rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted and proud to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Nancy Miller and Pam Krause, two remarkable Albertans. Nancy spent over four decades advocating for social justice, human rights, and reproductive choice. She has co-ordinated public education and lobbying campaigns to secure protection under Alberta's human rights legislation. A proud feminist, Nancy has served on various boards, most notably on the Calgary and the Alberta Status of Women Action Committee.

Joining her is her spouse, Pam Krause, president and CEO of the Calgary Sexual Health Centre. An active feminist, her work in the LGBTQ community spans a period of 25 years, becoming one of Calgary's strongest voices on issues related to sexual health in the LGBTQ community.

Mr. Speaker, I and at least two other members here owe a debt of gratitude to the work that these two women have done, that has made it possible for us to be here. I would invite them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Cortes-Vargas: Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two very special women. In this Assembly in 2008 Marni Panas was the first person to represent the drag community in full regalia here in the Legislature, and she was introduced by our hon. Premier, the MLA for Edmonton-Strathcona. It is my honour to be here today because of the anniversary that it signifies. To this day it remains history that has not been repeated. Marni is also a transgendered woman who has been very transparent and public throughout her journey in the hopes of fostering acceptance through education and respectful dialogue. She has been acclaimed with many awards for her commitment to creating a community where diversity is not only accepted but celebrated, a community that is safe for others to be their authentic selves, something I'm very honoured to continuously talk with her about. I would ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

I got a little bit ahead of myself. I need to introduce another person. Stephanie Shostak is here. She is a born, raised, and educated Albertan, a parent to two wonderful children and a proud transgendered woman. She is also a Volleyball Canada nationally certified referee and is currently serving as the president of the Volleyball Alberta officials. Stephanie is also a current board member with the Trans Equality Society of Alberta in her job to transition people into new management positions. I'd ask Stephanie to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two very dedicated and committed social justice activists in this province and friends of mine. Angela Reid is a board member of the Trans Equality Society of Alberta, or TESA, and advocates on a number of issues affecting transgendered and gender-diverse people. She's an electronics technologist by trade, coaches junior roller derby in Airdrie, and is co-captain of the Calgary All Stars derby team, which I know that the Minister of Environment is very happy to talk about.

Aria Burrell is a transgender rights activist and also a board member of the Trans Equality Society of Alberta. Aria spearheaded the first-ever raising of the transgender pride flag at Calgary city hall this year, encouraged the Voting while Trans website to support transgendered voters across Canada during the 2015 federal election.

Their combined hard work in the transgender community has gone a long way towards raising awareness and ensuring an inclusive Alberta where we can all feel welcome and proud. I would ask them to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Anna Burn. Anna is a teacher at Lillian Osborne high school, which is in the beautiful constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. She also serves all Albertans as a diversity consultant for sexual orientation and gender identity for the Edmonton public school board. I'd kindly ask Anna to stand and receive the usual warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's a pleasure and an honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly four students from Jasper Place high school in the wonderful constituency of Edmonton-Meadowlark. They are Zoya Plaizier, Grace Villeneuve, Julianna Bourbonnais, and Cassidy Harper. Accompanying the students is Kerry Maguire, who is a teacher and diversity consultant for sexual orientation and gender identity with the Edmonton public school board. They are here today in support of the proposed amendments to the human rights legislation, which will be read later today. I would like to thank them for being here today and invite them to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Seniors.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Richard Harpe. Just last week, at a ceremony in London, England, Richard was presented with a golden award for the best affordable over-50s housing project. This award was given in recognition of the Lakeview project in Clairmont, Alberta. This innovative project contains 150 units, including 78 independent living apartments for both individuals and couples as well as 72 lodge units, which also scale up to supportive living. This is the first not-for-profit project to receive this international recognition. As chair of the Grande Spirit Foundation and as county representative for over 20 years Richard has been part of this team and working on this project since 2008. Now the building is under way – concrete is being poured this Saturday – and Lakeview is scheduled to open in late 2016. I'd now ask that Mr. Harpe please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain . . .

Ms Hoffman: I do have a second introduction, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'm sorry.

Ms Hoffman: No. My apologies. This introduction to you and through you to all members of the Assembly is for the Canadian Diabetes Association. November, as we know, is Diabetes Awareness Month, which focuses attention on advocacy for those living with diabetes, on prevention, and on research for a cure. Our guests today are members of the Canadian Diabetes Association advocacy committee, who are accompanied by several staff from the CDA Edmonton office. This group is led by Emily Johnson, the volunteer chair of the advocacy committee. Over 200,000 people are living with both type 1 and type 2 diabetes in Alberta, and that number is growing. Diabetes advocates are a strong voice for helping to influence positive change in access to care, research, and treatment in Canada. Without the support of committed volunteers like these in the gallery today life would be much more difficult for people with diabetes and those who love them. I'd ask that our honoured guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent of mine from Rocky Mountain House who is in the gallery today. Ms Laura Button is the editor of the Mountaineer, Rocky Mountain House's community weekly newspaper, that has been proudly serving our community since 1923. Ms Button, in addition to her work at the paper, is an active member of the Rocky Mountain House community both, of course, as the editor of the paper but also working to enhance our community through several things. Recently I ran into her working on physician recruitment. I would ask that Ms Button rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure and privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you some friends of mine from southern Alberta. I have Gerald and Kathy Reimer. Gerald is a county councillor for Forty Mile county. He is a mixed farmer who farms both dry and irrigation land. Kathy is a nurse who works with mentally and physically handicapped Albertans.

We also have Steve and Sonja Wikkerink. Steve is a councillor with Forty Mile county as well. Steve and Sonja have four children and one grandchild. Steve and Sonja together operate an irrigation farm, growing sugar beets, wheat, durum, and beans. Sonja also finds time to be a teacher's aide with Prairie Rose school division.

Craig and Cathryn Widmer are here as well. Craig is a councillor for the county of Forty Mile and is also the chairman for our ag service board. Craig farms with Cathryn. He has a dryland mixed farm, growing wheat, canola, peas, and cattle.

They are partly here today, too, to raise awareness of our situation with HALO, our medical air ambulance. We are one of only two areas in the province that STARS can't reach, and we fund this service entirely ourselves to the tune of about a million dollars a year. The economy has changed a bit, and we hope that this message of fairness will reach our new government. Can I please ask my friends to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I know that I share with the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat that we have people from all three parties from Medicine Hat, and it's always very important.

Are there any other guests or visitors?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you representatives from Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, including president and managing director Brad Klak; chief operating officer Merle Jacobson; human resources senior manager Karla Kochan; human resources supervisor Heather Leier-Murray; area manager for central Alberta Barclay Smith; product specialist Michelle Rigney; and area co-ordinator for on-farm, inspector Tom Penner. AFSC was just rewarded as one of Canada's top 100 employers, and they have been an important resource for producers affected by dry conditions this summer. I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Point of Order Anticipation

The Speaker: Hon. members, I am prepared to rule on the point of order raised yesterday by the Government House Leader in response to the Leader of the Official Opposition's second set of questions concerning the subject matter of Bill 6, the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act. The Government House Leader cited Standing Order 23(e), which states that a member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that member "(e) anticipates, contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper or on notice for consideration on that day."

1:50

Members may recall that I gave a ruling on anticipation on June 17, 2015, which can be found on page 50 of the Alberta Hansard for that day, as referred to by the Government House Leader yesterday. As I did in June, I find that there is no point of order here, as noted by the opposition House leaders. As stated in my earlier ruling, the rule is that a part of the proceeding should not be on the same subject as something that is scheduled for later that day. As members know, yesterday the House adjourned immediately following the Routine, so there were no items scheduled for debate. Accordingly, the questions regarding Bill 6 were in fact in order.

I also would point out that the questions posed were not dealing with the specific clauses of the bill, and the practice in this Assembly is that the rule against anticipation is not violated by a question about government policy in relation to a bill that is up for consideration that day.

I would refer members to Speaker Kowalski's ruling on March 3, 1998, at page 649 of Hansard, which was reaffirmed in Speaker Zwodzesky's ruling of May 8, 2013, at page 2194 of Hansard, and in my ruling of June 17, 2015.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: I recognize Her Majesty's Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's great to finally win one in this House.

Job Creation and Retention

Mr. Jean: Group layoff notices are rising across the province. Enbridge: 250 jobs gone. Enmax: 60 jobs gone. TransCanada is laying off people right now. The bleeding of jobs continues all across Alberta. The head of Calgary's Beaver Drilling knows the damage the NDP is doing in an already bad situation. The NDP is, and I quote, talking about changing the rules and increasing costs. They haven't instilled investor confidence. End quote. We're talking about the lives of working men and women across the province, trying to put food on their table. Premier, why . . .

The Speaker: Hon. leader.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We know that when layoffs are announced, we're not talking about a number; we are talking about real Alberta families who are suffering. That is why our government has taken a very careful and thoughtful approach to a number of different strategies for economic stimulation and job creation and also to ensure that we cushion the blow that is going to inevitably happen as a result of this dramatic and historic drop in the price of oil. What Albertans looked at and voted for in spring was a government that would take a stable hand forward and ensure that we could work together to come through this.

Mr. Jean: The jobs ministry received 10 group layoff notices in October. That's 1,400 Albertans without a job just in those 10 layoff notices. Oil well drillers are saying that it's as bad as or worse than the 1980s. Albertans are looking at the NDP government and wondering why the NDP is doing everything they can to hurt Alberta's economy. A new job subsidy program coming into effect in 18 months won't do anything at all if NDP policies are causing investors to flee the province right now. How many group layoff notices has the government received so far this month: 30, 60, 100? Tell us.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said, our government is focused on trying to soften the blow of the drop in the price of oil. So what we have done is we've had a job-creation incentive program that we hope will create 27,000 jobs per year. To be clear, that will start next year, a month and a half from now. In addition, we've reinstated the STEP program, we've opened up over $2 billion of financing for innovators, and we're going to create 8,000 to 10,000 jobs through our increased investment in capital infrastructure.

Mr. Jean: New numbers are in. The number of Albertans collecting unemployment benefits has doubled over the last year. Last month alone saw a 9 per cent increase. There are over a hundred thousand unemployed in Alberta, and raising royalties won't help them, a new carbon tax won't help them, and scaring investors away won't help them. The fact is that every policy the NDP has introduced has made things worse for Albertans. To the Premier: will you recognize the problems you're creating, or do you just not care?

Ms Notley: I would suggest that the biggest threat to investor confidence is the fearmongering that we're getting from over there. That opposition thinks that the way to address corporate layoffs in the energy sector is to lay off thousands of doctors and nurses. They would privatize health care to fix hospitals, and they would deny climate change to open up markets for our energy industry. None of those sanctions will work, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Madam Premier, could I have your last 10 words that you indicated, please? Ten seconds.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not a single one of the Official Opposition's ideas will work at all for Albertans.

Mr. Jean: I hope I can get another 10 seconds on top to throw something else in.

Energy Industry Environmental Issues

Mr. Jean: It's absolutely shocking that at a time of massive job losses, all the NDP can do is talk about a new carbon tax like it's going to do something. Unemployment claims are up, companies are leaving Alberta, investment is significantly down, and jobs are disappearing at a record rate. That's not fearmongering; that's fact. The consequences are showing. TransUnion reports that consumer debt is on the rise in Alberta. By raising the price of everything from groceries to power bills, this carbon tax will only make things much worse for Albertans. Why does the Premier insist on hurting Albertans when they're down?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, the opposition just doesn't get it. Their plan to fire teachers and nurses will not increase the international price of oil, and Alberta's energy products won't see new markets if we continue to follow their denial, dinosaur approach on climate change. Alberta needs a balanced plan to protect services and build support for new market access so that we can actually increase the price of oil received by our manufacturers and producers here in Alberta.

Mr. Jean: Yesterday the new Liberal environment minister came into town. What I heard should make every Albertan very worried. She said that a new national climate change plan will be established 90 days after Paris and, I quote, we'll have a national target and each province is going to contribute its part. End quote. All reports indicate that this new carbon tax will hit Alberta the hardest by far of any province, but the NDP doesn't seem to care or be interested. To the Premier: why should Ottawa be allowed to interfere in how we run our industries?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As it turns out, there is a federal government, and they have certain rights under the Constitution. But one of the things that has made our government so focused on dealing with climate change is because we want a made-in-Alberta solution because under the regime of the federal government, if we do our homework, they'll stay out of it. So that's why we are doing that. We are doing our homework after those folks over there stuck their head in the ground and tried to pretend there was no problem.

Mr. Jean: A Trudeau government interfering with Alberta's oil patch: now, where have I heard that story before?

Here's the irony. At the same time that Albertans are being lectured by this NDP government and by Ottawa, the federal government is bailing out Quebec industry and rubber-stamping 8 billion litres of raw sewage being dumped into our waterways. Albertans are tired of hypocrisy, and they know that we are actually world leaders when it comes to the environment. Why does the Premier continue to stand by and let Alberta be pushed around by Ottawa?

Ms Notley: What our government is going to do is we are going to make plans that make Alberta a world leader on the environment, and then we will open up new markets, Mr. Speaker, and then we will grow our economy, and we will increase the price of oil because we will take responsibility for something that has been ignored for far, far too long.

2:00 Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, this government is politicizing farm safety for ideological reasons. Bill 6, which is not up for debate today, treats small family farms and ranches like factories. Some of the aims of this bill are laudable, but it has major flaws. The government would know that if they had actually, you know, consulted with farmers and ranchers, but of course they didn't. However, the Alberta Federation of Labour was ready to voice its support the moment the bill was introduced. Why did the government consult with labour unions on this particular bill but not ranchers and not farmers?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, (a) our government consulted with stakeholders across the board, and (b) the reason some stakeholders were able to respond on the issue when we finally took action is because Albertans have been waiting for 98 years for these workers to be treated fairly.

Mr. Jean: I found out about the bill two days ago.

Like I said yesterday, farming and ranching aren't jobs; they are ways of life. Farmers and ranchers don't punch a time clock and go home from work. They live there. If anyone on the government side made a living from farming or ranching, they would probably know that, but they don't. They would understand that getting these rules right is complicated and can best be done by listening to the opinions of those it affects, ranchers and farmers. Will the Premier stop the ideological haste on this bill and send it to committee so that the government can get the advice of the farmers and ranchers that it affects?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, the details around the application and the specific rules around employment standards, around health and safety will in fact be developed in consultation with people in the industry. But on the flip side, when a worker goes to work and they are told by their boss to do something that is unsafe, only farm workers in Alberta, just in Alberta, have no right to walk away from that. That is wrong, and we are changing that.

Mr. Jean: You're right, Madam Premier. It is complicated, so you should consult. The Premier and her cabinet know that you should consult on complicated topics. We know that they will release a new MGA Act next year and then spend months consulting before passing it. This is the right thing to do for cities and for towns in Alberta. Our farmers and ranchers in Alberta deserve nothing less. Instead, the government is content on passing this bill and putting it into effect by January 1, with absolutely no consultation with farmers whatsoever. Albertans have to wonder: is the haste related to union organizing efforts that the Premier's friends and backers are planning?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Only in the land of the Wildrose is a 98-year delay hasty. Only there. Only there. It is absolutely ridiculous. Moreover, I was first elected in 2008, and since 2008 there have been at least three or four consultations with industry by the previous government as they came up with excuse after excuse after excuse to remain the only province in the country that does not protect farm workers. Well, that is over. We are going to do the right thing.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Resource Industry Environmental Issues

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, this morning at AAMD and C the environment minister said, and I quote: access to water is the backbone of the economy. Previously she said that we can grow our economy on the backbone of the energy economy. This morning the Premier said at the same conference that public services are the backbone of communities. So far we're all agreeing. What I haven't seen yet is the backbone to stand up for Alberta jobs at the climate conference. My question to either one: will you have the backbone to stand up for Alberta jobs at the climate conference?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, here's the thing about backbone. When you've got a major climate problem that is impacting the ability of your producers to find a market, running away and hiding from the problem and failing to do the right thing is an absence of backbone. Moving forward on something that is long overdue, that is leadership.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, this morning the environment minister also said at AAMD and C that President Obama called Alberta oil dirty, and then she said that the Premier didn't say that. Later on the Premier said, and I quote: Obama called our oil dirty. And she continued with: that is not true. Music to my ears. The question to the Premier or the minister: what has changed for your government to finally see the light?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what we know is that in order to get our product to market, we need to do a better job of improving our reputation, and that was our point. Whether fair or not fair – and it's a mixture of both – the fact of the matter is that our reputation has impinged on our ability to get pipelines built to tidewater. So what we are going to do is that we are going to work in consultation with industry leaders to develop a responsible plan that will earn us a good reputation and, hopefully, access to new markets.

Mr. McIver: Our environment minister again at AAMD and C said this morning that she met beef producers and learned about their sustainable plan to produce beef. She said that it was a good plan, and then she went on to say that we can do more, but did not say what that meant. If the industry has a good plan, can she tell the House what she needs from them, because government regulates them, so that they can protect their industry, keep their jobs, and go ahead? What more are you going to require of the beef industry, after they have a good plan?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the question. I'm pleased to update the House that, of course, our government is committed to sustainability for our grazing leaseholders on our public lands and on our private lands. We are working very closely with a number of industry groups. I was very pleased to hear about the Alberta Beef Producers sustainable beef program. I'm pleased to work with them in the future on that and with all grazing leaseholders and other stock growers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Medical Laboratory Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The medical laboratory is the heart of our medical system, and it's out of sight and appears to have been out of mind with Alberta Health Services in Edmonton for a decade. Quality results on time are essential for diagnosing everything from cancer to infectious disease. The Edmonton lab is now sitting in limbo after a second contract extension with DynaLife until early 2017. Even if construction started tomorrow, a modern lab would not be built before 2019. To the minister: Albertans and lab professionals need to know whether we will be hearing about a third extension of lab services to DynaLife in 2017.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the hon. member for the question. He's absolutely right that Albertans deserve access to high-quality lab services, and that's one of the reasons why very quickly after forming government we were considering what was happening and being proposed by the last government. We felt that their decision to move forward with expanding private delivery was not evidence-based and did not have proper consultation with front-line workers and with health care providers to ensure that we could be confident with the plan. So we stopped that RFP process, and we've taken the time to do a review. I look forward to updating this House, hopefully before the end of the year, and if not, very early in the new year, about what we'll be doing moving forward.

Dr. Swann: Given that the Health Quality Council is doing a review of the laboratory services here and will play an essential role in health care delivery in Alberta for decades, will the minister, in the interests of transparency and accountability, be tabling their final report when it's available to the public, before making decisions on the next laboratory plan?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. The format of the report hasn't yet been finalized. We've got them doing the consultation and doing the groundwork and pulling information together. Certainly, it would be my desire to share information publicly about what I've gleaned, and I'd be happy to do that in a way – I don't want to commit to tabling it prior to announcements, just based on the timelines. But I'd be happy to share information about rationale and next steps before I do make the announcement with members of this House, including the hon. member who just asked the question.

Thank you.

2:10

Dr. Swann: Moving from a private lab to a public lab, which I support, would add very significant new planning, complexity, and time for transitioning from Alberta Health Services and DynaLife to the new entity. Albertans deserve some clarity and an early decision. To the minister: will this be a publicly funded and operated lab? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. These are the types of questions that I've been wanting to make sure I have evidence on to be able to drive the outcomes moving forward. When decisions were made previously, without considering even whether or not a public lab expansion would be possible, decisions were being made about moving forward under a direction to move forward with privatization. I want to make sure that we've got evidence, that I'm grounding decisions on a significant investment for taxpayers as well as trusting in the confidence of their health care lab results. I'm certainly taking the information that's gleaned by the Health Quality Council into consideration before I do make a decision moving forward.

Seniors' Care

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, many seniors in Edmonton-Gold Bar are telling me that they're concerned about being able to afford the appropriate care that they need in their later years. Many of these seniors have worked their entire lives and are now worried that they may not be able to afford the proper care that they deserve. What is my hon. friend the Minister of Health and of Seniors doing to ensure that our seniors can afford the care that they deserve in their later years?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: That's the first time I've been referred to as hon. friend.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to my hon. colleague and friend as well. We believe in looking after our seniors and making sure that they can live healthy lives with dignity and self-respect. Of course, we are proud to invest in the programs and services that matter to Albertans. That's why we've committed to building 2,000 long-term care spaces throughout Alberta, to make sure that seniors can have the care that they need, living as close to home and community as possible. We're proud to be investing as well in the Alberta seniors' benefit, which helps Alberta's low-income seniors to be able to have a little bit of spending money at the end of the month and make ends meet.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many Alberta seniors are faced with the choice of paying exorbitant and unfair prices at private care facilities or being forced to wait ridiculously long times to access public spaces, what is my hon. friend doing to ensure that we are creating more public spaces and beds so that our seniors have access to the care that they deserve?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. We're investing and renewing and renovating seniors' housing throughout Alberta, and these projects will help seniors have safe, stable housing and improved quality of life. Our investments will add nearly 800 newly renovated units of affordable housing throughout the province as well as the commitment of around 2,000 long-term care spaces. The member is right that we have inherited over a billion dollars in deferred maintenance from the previous government. This problem won't be solved overnight. However, we will continue to invest in infrastructure and make sure that we make it as affordable as possible for Albertans throughout the province.

Thank you.

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, given the desire of many Alberta seniors to age in place and to remain in their homes throughout their later years and given that there are currently numerous barriers that are preventing them from doing so, what is my hon. friend doing to support Alberta seniors when it comes to home care?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know that home care is a serious concern for constituents in my riding and, I imagine, other people's in this House, so I'm glad that the question is being asked. Seniors helped build this province. We want to ensure that they can live with the right care, getting the right supports, and that means that it also happens at the right place. Home care is certainly one of the pieces that was a pillar in our platform. Our budget shows an increased contribution that we'll be making to home care through the Ministry of Health. We'll be investing $30 million in the 2016-17 budget as well as an additional $60 million in '17-18 to phase in a new and expanded model for public home care, which, of course, is fundamental to the success and well-being of . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Madam Minister.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Farm and Ranch Safety

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every rural Albertan knows that farms and ranches are sometimes dangerous places and that safety is paramount. Farms and ranches aren't factory floors or office buildings. Farmers don't leave the workplace at the end of the day; they live in the workplace, and the workplace is their lives. Other provinces recognize the uniqueness of family farms and ranches. They have exemptions or special rules for them. Why doesn't this government recognize the importance of Alberta's 45,000 family farms?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Family farms are an essential part of Alberta. At the same time, every employee deserves safe and fair treatment, and we're working with employers to make sure that that's the case. We know that farmers, ranchers, and their workers want to work and come home safe at night. That's why we're meeting with them and discussing the specifics and working collaboratively.

Thank you.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, B.C. and Saskatchewan differentiate family farms from large, corporate farms. Given that the issue of farm safety legislation has been examined with real farm groups many times in the past and given that in all those cases the experts, who are the farmers and ranchers, always said that education was much preferred to legislation because of the uniqueness of farms and ranches as workplaces, why is the government insisting on pushing through a bill in this Legislature without consulting Alberta farmers and ranchers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Discussions have been going on for some time with farmers and ranchers, and we're having specific consultations in the next few weeks. We're very much working with industry, moving forward prudently. We know that calving season isn't a nine-to-five job. We know that harvest doesn't happen, you know, when we want it to; it happens when the season is. We're working with them to plan specifics, to make sure industry is considered.

Thank you.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, farmers deserve more than 45 days on this issue. Every farmer and rancher that I talk to tells me that self-regulation . . .

The Speaker: Could you ask your question again, please? I could not hear you.

Mr. Hunter: It would be my pleasure.

Mr. Speaker, every farmer and rancher that I talk to tells me that self-regulation has been successful. None of them tell me that forcing bureaucratic approaches onto farms and ranches will work. Given that the government has no actual farmers or ranchers amongst their 54 MLAs, why is it that this government thinks that they know better or care more about farm safety than the moms and dads, farmers and ranchers on Alberta's 45,000 farms and ranches?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I just want to really emphasize that this is about safety. Twenty-five people died on farms last year, and we are working with the farm industry, the ranchers, the groups, and we're doing education plus legislation. We're working ahead prudently on them. Farmers themselves say that it's going to make safety part of the conversation. That farmer in Gibbons welcomed our movement forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Energy Policies

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Energy. This government has contributed to greater job losses, decreased drilling activity, and decimation of servicing activity in Alberta through their ideological approach to taxes and carbon levies. Many have told me that they feel kicked while they are down, and confidence is at an all-time low, with rig count actually lower than during the NEP in 1983. Given that any increase in royalty rates would result in an additional financial burden at the worst possible time, further decimating the real backbone of our economy, have you instructed the royalty review panel to consider the financial load which has already been placed on the energy industry when determining . . .

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, absolutely, when we struck out talking to industry, we asked questions like: what are the challenges you face, what advice do you have for us for the royalty review, and how can we work best with industry to make that happen? We've been listening to industry. We have been asking them to tell us their costs, and we are considering all those costs.

The Speaker: The hon. member. First supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also to the Minister of Energy: given that the energy industry feels abandoned and given that a March 2015 business plan performance measure noting that Alberta's combined royalty and tax rate will remain in the top quartile of investment opportunities has been removed from your business plan, by omitting this commitment upholding what we used to know as the Alberta advantage, do you seriously believe you're instilling confidence within the energy industry or the investment community?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, when we talk to industry, we ask about the costs. We ask about the challenges. We are consulting and collaborating with them all along the way. We've promised no surprises, and we are in constant communication with them.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Energy: given that the oil field service industry is telling us that they are ready, willing, and able to assist with economic diversification through research and by exporting technology and best practices abroad and given that this would help an ailing industry while simultaneously diversifying the economy, seemingly a win-win, what are you specifically doing, apart from spending some time in China, to assist the industry locally and abroad in advancing such critical initiatives?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, certainly, China was part of that activity. We took industry with us as part of it. We met with government, and we met with industry, and we talked about the technologies we can share because we are the best in the world in our technological knowledge. Alberta can be a leader in that as we move forward.

Urgent Health Care Services in Airdrie

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, I rose in this House two weeks ago to highlight the urgent need within my constituency for a 24-hour health care facility. I learned from my exchange with the Health minister why it's called question period, not answer period. Simply put, the Health minister's explanation was insufficient both to me and to the thousands of residents of Airdrie who have since viewed the exchange on social media. I'd like to try asking the minister again: what is the Health minister doing to ensure that Airdrie receives the 24-hour health care facility it clearly needs?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I have been in consultation with a number of health professionals, including those in Airdrie, as well as the mayor of Airdrie and with the hon. member herself. I understand that there is a desire to have an urgent care facility in her specific community, as there is a desire to have urgent care in many parts throughout Alberta. We certainly have to make sure that we weigh the pros and cons of every situation. I'm not saying that Airdrie doesn't deserve one; we all deserve to ensure that we have quality care in all parts of the province. We need to make sure that we make decisions while at the same time ensuring that we are balancing our resources with the demands in our communities.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, this week one of the strongest advocates for a 24-hour health care facility and a pillar of our community, Dr. Julian Kyne, was informed that his contract with the Airdrie urgent care centre will not be renewed. Given that this surprise announcement shows at least correlation if not causation stemming from my exchange with the minister on the 24-hour health care facility, will the minister put an end to playing politics with a respected doctor's career and rise above petty politics to ensure that the people of Airdrie's health care needs are being met?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I understand that there is concern about this matter, but it is an HR matter. I would expect that all hon. members would treat HR contracts and HR negotiations and individuals' professions on both sides of the situation with the utmost respect and confidence. There is certainly a way to handle this in this House; asking specifics about an individual's reputation is not one of them.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, you must admit that that sounds incredibly fishy, though, right?

As Dr. Kyne was being let go by AHS, he was also being recognized by his peers for outstanding work. Given that Dr. Kyne received the annual physician advocacy award by a Calgary medical organization just this week and given that the bureaucrats who work under this minister appear to be trying to silence any opposition to their vision, will the minister commit to re-evaluating the termination of one of the strongest advocates for a 24-hour health care facility and the expansion of services to my constituents?

Ms Hoffman: I have to say that I am very concerned with the tone that's being taken in this House and assumptions that are being made about the way HR is being managed. I have to say that this is not respectful of any of the parties involved. I have been having conversations with individuals to make sure that due process is being considered. Alberta Health Services has a reputation, as well as does the individual that is being referred to, and they deserve to be treated with respect as the employer and the employee.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Rural Health Care

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, when it comes to success stories in rural health care, the innovative nurse practitioner clinic in Okotoks is a prime example, but in January this vitally important service will be cut, leaving their 1,900 regular patients without access to primary care. The NDP government is allowing cuts to front-line services when there are many nurse practitioners ready and willing to work in rural Alberta. Will the Health minister commit to putting a funding model in place to ensure they can practise where they're needed?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Nurse practitioners are a valuable component within our health care system. There have been many attempts throughout the years to expand their scope of practice, and I understand that there have been a number of barriers. Very recently I was at the nurse practitioner conference. We've been in conversations with CARNA and others because, of course, we want to make sure that they have a way of being supported in the long term. I know the outcomes of the Okotoks clinic, and this was the first I heard about there being terminations there, so I'd be happy to follow up with the clinic itself to see what the root causes are.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you for that.

Mr. Speaker, though this is far from the only challenge facing rural health care, given that we've also seen emergency response services reduced or cut in many smaller communities and given the recent life-threatening instances of code reds, where no ambulance is available to serve an area, I'd like to ask the Health minister: will you commit to providing meaningful performance measures so that we can get accountability for the billions of dollars that you and your bureaucracy spend?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We very recently had a very thorough conversation around our budget. I enjoyed it very much, and we had an opportunity to dig deeper into the Alberta Health components of the budget, which is over $19 billion this year all-in, so it's an important investment for Albertans by Albertans.

In terms of the Alberta Health Services budget and the specific line items, they will be discussing that very soon. The new board will resume its role I believe it's next week, and they will be having their meetings in public as well.

Mr. Barnes: Now, the minister may excuse her department's lack of improvement by saying, "Change is hard," but Albertans deserve better. Given all the talk we've heard about stabilizing health care, we're still seeing lack of access to rural health professionals, no improvement in quality of service, and the same old cost overruns in hospital construction. Why? Why must rural Albertans be subject to declining services while Alberta Health Services continues to swell with more bureaucratic bloat?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. Mr. Speaker, we are absolutely working diligently to make sure that front-line services are maintained and improved, and that's why we actually invested more money in health care as opposed to cutting billions of dollars, as is being proposed by members opposite. They want to cut $9 billion from infrastructure investment. They want to lay off staff that would, of course, impact health care. Instead, what we're doing is working collaboratively with communities and with leaders to ensure that we are continuing to invest in rural health care and urban health care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

2:30 Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation Consultation

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to see that this government has finally started to pay attention to Alberta's farms and ranches, but I am concerned about the method they are using to pass new legislation. As someone who has had a long-standing relationship with the farming community, I support farm safety legislation. However, I am concerned that this government is not adequately consulting with industry on how this may affect them and how quickly. My question is to the minister of labour: can you explain how you consulted with industry to create. . .

The Speaker: Madam Minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We've been having discussions with farmers and ranchers and industry representatives for some time. The ministry staff have been working on this file for a long time, and the time is now that we actually move on farm and ranch safety. We're having specific consultations coming forward in the next few weeks, and we're very looking forward to hearing more details about what will work in the farming and ranch sector.

Thanks.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this legislation is due to come into effect in 42 days and that Alberta's farms and ranches will have to make some major changes and spend a lot of money to comply, can the minister explain why they are rushing to implement this so quickly without vetting it through all the stakeholder groups it applies to?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We have been working for a long time with the farming and ranching sector, and we've had discussions with them all along. We're going to talk about specifics. We're going to move ahead prudently and take into consideration the very unique aspects of farming and ranching. As I've said, calving season doesn't happen from nine to five. So we're absolutely working with farmers and moving forward prudently and slowly.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this legislation was introduced in the House on November 17 and that public consultations that are scheduled will occur around the same time as the bill is debated in the Assembly or even after the legislation is passed, will the minister admit that it doesn't really matter what the stakeholders say and that this government is going to pass the bill anyway? Is that what you call consultation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We are moving ahead prudently on this, and we're making sure that we hear from industry and know the specifics. The specific occupational health and safety code actually doesn't come into effect until 2017. We're very much working collaboratively with them so that we can have the right fit for this industry. We care very much about family farms, and we're working with them now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Film and Television Industry

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's no secret that there are some strong ties between Alberta and Hollywood. In recent years we've seen some major film and television projects that have chosen our province as a backdrop, and in the last few months I've personally had the opportunity to talk with many of the companies and individuals that are involved in that work, tour some of their sets, and hear their interest in lot of the new streaming technologies that are demanding content, which we're providing. To the Minister of Culture and Tourism: what steps are you taking to draw new productions to and develop productions from Alberta?

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for that question. Certainly, our government recognizes that our television and film industry is in a period of rapid growth, and to further stimulate that growth, we have put almost $37 million in this budget into our media fund, which is an increase of almost a third. As I travel around the province, I see lots and lots of growth interest in the television and film industry. It's a great investment for us, and it provides jobs and diversification that we really need at this juncture in our history.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that our government is also committed to working to diversify Alberta's economy, to the minister: could you tell us what the return on investment is that we actually see from these screen-based productions?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the last five years we've seen approximately $400 million worth of investment from the television and film industry, and Treasury Board and other sources have calculated that a dollar of investment in film and television brings out a result of $5 or $6 into the general economy, so by any measure that's a very, very good investment. As I travel around the province, I'm seeing lots of new investment. With where our dollar is right now and where our reputation is right now, we have a chance to grow exponentially our film and television industry.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that these productions that take place here in Alberta sometimes vary in size – certainly, the Hollywood ones can be quite large; some of the local ones are smaller – could you give us a sense, then, of what that return on investment looks like in terms of actual job numbers?

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's interesting. We're almost at capacity in terms of our professionals, technical professionals and so forth working at capacity at more than 3,000 full-time jobs. If you add in the part-time jobs and extras, we have more than 30,000 people employed in the industry right now. So it's a great time to see growth, as I said before, for the reasons I described. Quite frankly, this is a great way by which we can create jobs, diversify our economy, and shine a spotlight on the province of Alberta. There are lots of tourism opportunities that come from people who see movies that are shot in Alberta and then actually come to visit. I was at Heartland the other day and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Rocky Mountain House Hospital

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the 2009 evaluation of the Rocky Mountain House hospital made it clear that the facility was at capacity, at the end of its life, and that it needed to be replaced by 2014. The hospital was built when the community had a population of 3,000. Today there are over 32,000 people living in the town and surrounding area. This hospital is over capacity serving all the residents in the area, let alone the million-plus tourists that visit the region every year. What is the minister's plan to get Rocky Mountain House a proper hospital?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I'll tell you the first step of our plan. We're going to invest in infrastructure, not cut $9 billion. We've increased investment in infrastructure in our budget, over 15 per cent of what was planned by the previous government. We're doing a lot of that in the front end because we want to make sure that we have time to invest in a variety of projects, including health care facilities throughout Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: Given that the Rocky Mountain House hospital faces serious infrastructure issues and given that the 2009 evaluation states that by 2013 components of the hospital's core infrastructure would either be at the end of their life or suffering significant deficiencies and that since the evaluation was published, there has been zero activity towards getting this community a new hospital, what is the minister's plan for Rocky Mountain House and ensuring this community has the health care they deserve?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, making sure that Albertans have access to the right care in the right place at the right time by the right health professional is a priority, of course, as well as making sure that we have the right investment for Alberta taxpayers. I thank the member for the question. We're certainly working through our infrastructure priority list in terms of the $4.4 billion that's still in the capital plan and for pointing out the fact that the third party, when they were in government, ignored their own recommendations for six years.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, given that this government campaigned on the promise to restore transparency and public trust to the prioritization of new schools and hospitals by introducing the infrastructure sunshine list, a Wildrose idea, by the way, and given that it's been over six months since they were elected and we still have not seen this sunshine list, the only thing that has become clear is that this government doesn't keep its promises. When will the sunshine list come to light so that Albertans can know where severely overdue projects like the Rocky Mountain House hospital fall on the priority list?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, our government is taking the time to do thorough consultation, a thorough review of what our health care needs are. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member, the tone and the volume of that last outburst exceeded even my expectations of your capacity. I would appreciate it if, when you're making remarks, you might not make it as loud and dysfunctional to the House.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is taking time to make sure that we've got the right priorities and the right plans moving forward, which means that we base decisions on evidence. While members opposite might draft policy on the back of a napkin and pass motions to privatize health care at their last convention last weekend, we're investing in public health care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Minimum Wage Increase

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government made an ideological campaign promise to raise Alberta's minimum wage to $15 per hour, and I believe this was a well-intended initiative; however, it has unintentional consequences. For instance, businesses are saying that your decision to hike the minimum wage is creating upward pressure on all other wages. To the jobs minister: given that union negotiators have told me that they will use the minimum wage scale to further increase pay for other workers, what consideration have you given to the consequence of your minimum wage increase?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. This government made a promise during the election to make work fair for everyone, and that meant supporting an increase to minimum wage so that low-wage workers could be able to go home each day and be able to provide for their families. We've done that, and we're proud to that, and we know that this is still an amazing place for businesses to operate, here in Alberta.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the standard answer.

Given that upward adjustments in wages throughout Alberta will have an accompanying inflationary aspect that will force up prices for goods and services for all consumers and given that Albertans on fixed incomes will especially suffer because their earnings do not increase proportionately to inflation, have you given consideration to how these vulnerable Albertans will be negatively impacted by this ill-advised plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Unfortunately, Alberta had one of the lowest minimum wages in the country and the highest cost of living. I know that I'm happy to pay a little bit more to support people with low wages. This will help students be able to pay for university, to pay for their tuitions, and be able to care for their families. This is actually helping vulnerable Albertans, and I'm very proud that we're doing this as a government.

Mr. Ellis: After taxes the second highest in Canada.

To the same minister: given that business organizations have been telling you that their members expect to cut jobs in order to pay for all employees' higher wages and given that failing resource prices have already caused Alberta to shed 65,000 jobs in the first eight months of this year and given that introducing a measure that unnecessarily reduces jobs instead of creates them is the opposite of what Alberta needs right now, how many more jobs must disappear before your government at the very least slows down your plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the hon. member for his question. I would like to remind the hon. member that there was only one party in this House that had a plan to create jobs and help stimulate the economy, and that is this party, this government. [interjections] Already we have moved to create the job creation incentive program, which will create up to 27,000 jobs. We've also reinstated the STEP program, increased it by $3 million, and opened it up to small businesses, which is going to give them access to STEP students. [interjections] As well, we've increased ATB's capacity to lend . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: I cannot hear what the speaker is saying.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

We've also increased ATB's capacity to lend so that small to medium-sized enterprises have the access to capital they need to create jobs and to grow our economy. We're also looking at increasing market access.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Transgender Day of Remembrance

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow, November 20, is the annual Transgender Day of Remembrance. It is a day for the transgender community to raise awareness about the almost constant threat of violence faced by gender-variant people. If you do not know much about transgender individuals, today would be a good day to start. I invite you all to learn something about these wonderful Albertans because, by doing so, you will soon arrive at a very simple conclusion. Transgender people are just that: people. And people are more alike than they are different. Transgender individuals are everyday people. They are your co-workers and your friends, and either by choice or by blood they are also your family. They are government employees, health care workers, teachers, pilots, flight attendants, firefighters, and I hope one day even MLAs.

There is one thing that transgender people are not. Transgender individuals are not sick. Neither are they weak. They are strengthened by the courage to be who they are in a world that tells them who they cannot be. Like everyone else, they want to be loved and accepted for who they are. Sadly, around the world many still face bullying, harassment, discrimination, and violence because of their gender identity or gender expression, and this is wrong. But to be clear, their deaths are not always at the hands of violence. Driven to despair by hatred, cruelty, intolerance, and rejection, the greatest number of deaths are of those who take their own lives.

So as we mark Transgender Day of Remembrance and reflect upon the lives that have been lost to violence and injustice, I invite all members of this House and indeed every Albertan to recommit ourselves to ensuring dignity, equality, and justice for all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Energy Policies

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since day one of forming government, the NDP has taken as many steps as possible to damage our energy sector: higher taxes, crippling regulations, and royalty and climate reviews. Now the environment minister is getting ready to take direction on carbon taxes from her friends in Ottawa, who generously told us yesterday that they would help Alberta to come up with a credible plan to add a carbon tax on top of existing provincial carbon pricing. The plan is to impose a national target, with every province having to do its part. Every Albertan's dream: a Trudeau Liberal government telling us how to run our economy.

Now, this would be funny if it weren't so scary. This Liberal federal government has almost no Alberta representation and is now pulling the strings of a provincial minister who has co-authored books on how to protest our oil sands.

While Alberta is becoming a target for Ottawa, things have never been easier for their friends in Quebec: 8 billion litres of raw sewage being dumped into pristine waterways and a federal government entertaining massive bailouts for Quebec's industry.

The NDP like to talk about their admiration for Premier Lougheed. At least he understood when to stand up to Ottawa. Albertans want Alberta-driven environmental solutions that do not compromise prosperity. Instead, the NDP's tenure so far has been like a fairy tale for radical anti-energy activists: 65,000 jobs lost and counting, energy investment fleeing the province, pipeline projects rejected. As one oil and gas organization put it yesterday, there is a big question mark on the attractiveness of operating in Alberta now. This plan imposed by Ottawa will only make things worse. The NDP needs to refuse this plan and stand up for Albertans' interests. This plan will only deepen the recession and further drain investment from our energy sector. This is dangerous and irresponsible.

Albertans want leadership that will stand up and fight for them, not against them. The Wildrose will be there and with them every step of the way.

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Not-for-profit Organizations

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our communities are made stronger by the many not-for-profit agencies that provide services to Albertans every single day. They are the glue that holds our system together and a big part of what makes Alberta such a tremendous place to live. It is an essential Alberta value that we look out for our neighbours, and nowhere is that more obvious than in our not-for-profit service providers. These organizations know what it means to do more with less because they have to. Their funding comes from the generosity of compassionate Albertans and often, although not always, from government. They are run by dedicated staff and thousands upon thousands of volunteers. They quietly go about their work solving problems, filling gaps, and helping vulnerable people. They don't expect praise or publicity; they do it to help their fellow Albertans.

Organizations like the Doorway, that helps teens find a way off the street and into a better life; E4C, working to end poverty in Edmonton; brown bagging it for Calgary's kids and I Can for Kids, helping to feed hungry children in school and throughout the summer; and the Central Alberta Women's Outreach Society, helping women and their children escape domestic violence are only a few of the more than 23,000 not-for-profit agencies helping Albertans every single day.

As the government sets out to address some of the big challenges facing our province, I implore you to look at what we already have in Alberta. Look first to partner with the agencies that are making a difference. Don't think that government always knows best. Don't build expensive and unnecessary bureaucracy, and don't build your own programs where so many communities have programs that already work. Alberta's not-for-profit agencies are a source of tremendous pride for our province. Let's acknowledge their contributions and help keep them strong.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

National Child Day

Mr. Hinkley: Mr. Speaker, thank you for today's reflection. Yes, tomorrow, Friday, November 20, is National Child Day. This year's theme is It's Our Right to Learn. National Child Day is celebrated in Canada in recognition of the United Nations declaration of the rights of the child. We can celebrate this day by learning more about empowering young people to use their voice and to raise awareness. Key messages of National Child Day include that all children have the right to an adequate standard of living, health care, and opportunity to play and that the views of the child are genuinely considered in all economic, social, and political decisions that impact them.

I am proud of our government's commitment to inclusive education and to ensuring that communities, families, and children in Alberta have the necessary resources to be successful. In particular, I want to recognize and congratulate the Boys & Girls Club of Wetaskiwin, in my own constituency. I know there are many other organizations in Alberta; however, here are just some of the services the Boys & Girls Club of Wetaskiwin provides for children: summer day camps, out of school care, an early learning and child care centre, leadership development programs, native friendship clubs, social skills development and educational supports, personalized counselling, family support programs, and in-school mentoring.

On National Child Day and every day let's ensure that our children have the right to learn, play, grow, and thrive. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Grey Cup Western Final

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to congratulate the Calgary Stampeders on their victory in the western semifinal against the B.C. Lions on Sunday. Because of this victory, they now take on the Edmonton Eskimos in the western final. The winners of the western final, of course, will go on to play in the Grey Cup in Winnipeg against the eastern final winner, either the Ottawa Redblacks or the Hamilton Tiger-Cats. But right now this means one thing: the battle of Alberta.

This is a historically fun rivalry in our province and within this Legislature. I'm here today to announce a friendly little wager I have with the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort. Both of us have a park in our respective riding that is either in the process of being built or in development. In my riding of Edmonton-Decore I have the Schonsee park and playground group, who have been working very hard to fund raise and build a park in Schonsee. Calgary-Fort has the Forest Lawn playground, which was opened in October but still has much more work to be done before that project is completed. With that, our wager is that if the Calgary Stampeders win, I will donate $100 to the Forest Lawn park; if the Edmonton Eskimos win, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort will donate $100 to the Schonsee park and playground. You may even see a picture of the defeated MLA in the opposing winner's jersey.

One thing is for certain, Mr. Speaker. One team from Alberta will be going to the Grey Cup this year, and that is something, regardless of whom you cheer for, that this province can be proud of. May the best team win. Go, Esks, go.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Bullying Awareness and Prevention

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As mentioned already in this House, the week of November 15 to 21 is Bullying Awareness Week. It was started right here in Alberta by parent and educator Bill Belsey and is now in its 13th year.

Online bullying is increasingly a problem. Research shows that teens who are subjected to cyberbullying are twice as likely to attempt suicide. However, there are many working to combat bullying, and often they are young people. I think of the students in the Forest Lawn high school GSA, who worked so hard last spring to raise awareness and influence legislators and to provide a safe place at their school for their peers. I think of all the children in my riding who are participating in the roots of empathy program in Marlborough school and Penbrooke Meadows school.

Sadly, adults are not always the best role models. I have heard from constituents who are victims of workplace bullying, and I myself have been subjected to online bullying. The things adults say to each other on the Internet can be appalling, and it bothers me mostly because I think that as Albertans and humans we can do better.

I ask you to talk to people this week: friends, children, peers. Let them know that it's never okay to be hateful, profane, sexually explicit, or threatening in person, on the Internet, or in a letter, not for any reason. No one should be subjected to bullying because of their race, religion, sexuality, or gender. No one should be subjected to bullying because of ideas they have or opinions they hold. We should not have to grow thicker skin. The solution is not to feel less deeply.

This week with the recent attacks in Paris, Beirut, and elsewhere we have seen how the bullying of terrorism can be very destructive. The solution, I think, as it is so often, is education, empathy education. If everyone took a minute to think about where someone else is coming from, to ask a question, to understand a position, I think we'd be much further ahead. We are all far more similar than we are different, and by making this point clear to children early on through empathy education programs such as roots of empathy, we can build a kinder, more loving society. This Bullying Awareness Week is an excellent time to start.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask for unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 7(7) to extend Orders of the Day past 3 o'clock.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there's been a motion for a continuance.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Bills

Bill 7

Alberta Human Rights Amendment Act, 2015

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce first reading of Bill 7, the Alberta Human Rights Amendment Act, 2015.

Bill 7 proposes an amendment to the Alberta Human Rights Act which would add gender identity and gender expression as expressly prohibited grounds of discrimination. Mr. Speaker, this government supports the rights of all Albertans, which include members of the LGBTQ community. We recognize that trans and gender-variant community members continue to be a highly marginalized group within society. This amendment will ensure that the rights of trans and gender-variant community members are specifically reflected in the legislation and that this reflects the views of all Albertans.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a first time]

3:00 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I alluded to this earlier this week, a letter to the Minister of Health from Shauna McHarg, with the appropriate number of copies.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader. You have a report?

Mr. Cooper: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a long-awaited document that I referred to a couple of days ago and that was the subject matter of a point of order yesterday. I just wanted to make sure that I made good on my commitment to table the survey that I sent to businesses in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

The Speaker: Minister of economic development, did you have an introduction that you wish to make?

Mr. Bilous: Not myself, Mr. Speaker, but the hon. Minister of Justice.

The Speaker: Unanimous consent to revert to introductions?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to all members of this Assembly. It was my oversight earlier today, apparently in the excitement of the announcement we were about to make. We have here today in the gallery with us the hon. Bob Philp, who is the chief of the Alberta Human Rights Commission and tribunals. The commission and tribunals have the mandate not only to enforce rights but also to bring education to people in the community, so I thank him very much for his service. I would ask that he rise and receive the welcome of this House.

Orders of the Day Government Motions Provincial Fiscal Policies

13. Mr. Ceci moved:
Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Debate adjourned November 5: Mr. McIver speaking]

The Speaker: The leader of the Progressive Conservatives.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll continue on. I think I've got five minutes left to talk about the budget. I've talked to Albertans. They're starting to understand what's in this budget. I've talked to constituents, talked to family members and friends, businesspeople, neighbours. People who are strangers are stopping me in the grocery store, and they're very concerned about this NDP government budget. They are concerned that there seems to be a complete disconnect in the government between how Albertans make their living, how Albertans live their lives, and the way the government is not but ought to be supporting all of that. Since the budget was actually tabled in this House, there have been more layoffs, well documented, thousands and thousands. No one blames the government for the low price of oil, but almost everybody blames the government for making it worse.

Mr. Speaker, the confidence that the investment community needs to have in Alberta is eroded. We need investment all across Alberta. For example, today at the AAMD and C the Premier was talking about needing to make the economy more diversified, and she gave but one example. It was a good example. She said that she wanted more value-added food production, something that is already here, but it could be expanded dramatically. But I don't see a lot in this budget to support that.

I see the new minister – Mr. Speaker, I'm going to give the government credit. So far they have created one job, and the owner of that job is sitting in the minister's chair across from me. Congratulations. You are the only thing the government can actually point to for job creation, so congratulations. You're as good as it gets. I mean, I know that the new minister will carry out his duties to the best of his ability as he is sworn to do. I have no doubt about that.

This government's budget will actually get in the way of Albertans being able to hang onto the jobs they've got now and get new ones in the future. Mr. Speaker, Alberta is unique in a lot of ways. The biggest industry that we have is the energy industry, and some of the projects that we need to get investment for are in the order of $5 billion, $10 billion, and more. Not everybody walks around with that in their hip pocket. Sometimes that money has to come from outside of Alberta, sometimes from people that love Alberta less than we in the PC caucus do. Sometimes they actually need a reason like profit in order to invest here so that those projects will go ahead.

Now, through the budget and things said, including the Finance minister – I don't think I can quote him exactly, but he said something to the effect of: when profits get better, we'll take that. Now, Mr. Speaker, if you were in New York or Los Angeles or Switzerland or Paris as one of those individuals walking this earth that has billions of dollars that they can invest in things, which I will never be, would you invest it in a place where the Finance minister said, "When profit gets better, we'll take that"? I don't think so. This budget is a symptom of that problem. If you add on to that all the uncertainty that this government has heaped upon business with the royalty review and the rail tax, which will make it harder for energy products to move – today, actually, the Premier said that Alberta's oil isn't dirty, and I thank the Premier for saying that. It just happens to be a lot different than what the Premier has been saying up till now. Nonetheless, being on the positive, let's thank her for doing that today.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the government has done little of anything to get pipelines. The Premier herself said that we need to get pipelines to the east. She forgot about the north, the south, and the west. The shortest route is the west. In other words, if you're going to move energy products out of here, it's going to go by rail. Okay. Even with that, what has the government done? They've added a rail fuel tax. They've actually made that more expensive. They've actually made it more expensive to move our energy industry's products to market. They've made it more expensive to move lumber. They've made every consumer product more expensive.

Mr. Speaker, there's so much more to say, but I know you're cutting me off at my time.

The Speaker: I am. I am. I am.

Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) to the hon. member from Calgary?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the hon. leader of the third party was just in the midst of what was no doubt a compelling argument against the budget, I would certainly appreciate hearing the conclusion of that in the next four minutes and 45 seconds or so.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for his interest. As I was saying, the rail fuel tax will make it more expensive and harder to get the main things that Alberta produces to market: energy, lumber, agricultural products. In fact, to make it worse, the government is going to now introduce a bill that – while keeping farmers and ranchers safe is a tremendous thing, they haven't actually laid out for the House how much more expensive they're going to make it to do business, and that needs to be considered.

Mr. Speaker, the other things that people care about are: how they make a living. Today again the minister of the Crown, the environment minister, actually, after hearing from the beef industry that they have a sustainable beef production plan, on one hand said: that's a good plan. Then, by the sounds of it, from what she said herself this morning at AAMD and C, she hardly took a breath and said: but they can do more. Maybe if government wanted to encourage industry to be more sustainable, more environmentally friendly, they might actually let industry take a breath while they're patted on the back. Maybe before the second pat, if they didn't say, "That's not good enough," that might indicate that the government actually wants that industry to grow and succeed.

The beef industry is one that's very important to Alberta. It's part of our heritage. It's part of our culture. It's part of what's on our breakfast, lunch, and dinner plates all the time. They've had more than their share of problems, Mr. Speaker, getting labour. In fact, getting labour into the plants in both High River and in Brooks – I know from my time being jobs minister that they cannot get the people they need. Most times each plant was short a hundred people. What gets cut short when you are short a hundred people? All the value-added beef products.

Well, I did spend 25 years in the meat business, and I know a little bit about this. I'm not quoting my knowledge on this; I'm quoting the people that run the plants because that's what they told me. They said: all you do is knock down the beef into primal or subprimal cuts, put it in a box, vacuum-pack it, and ship it out the door. You don't further process it down to where you could have cuts that you can cook, for example. That's when you make money. That's actual further value-added processing.

This budget is not going to help to get the people into Alberta to do those things. In fact, the confidence will be eroded. My big fear – it hasn't happened yet – is that people will stop coming. Alberta has always been the land of opportunity. It certainly was in 1981, when I moved here from southern Ontario, and in almost every year since then it's been the land of opportunity. Mr. Speaker, my fear and the fear of my constituents is that that is no longer going to be the case. We hear that people are getting laid off. The price of homes, people's biggest investment, is being eroded. Again, that's about confidence.

This government is not responsible. I'm not going to blame them for the low oil price – nobody does – but they are very responsible for further eroding the confidence that Albertans and people outside of Alberta have in this economy and in this time. I would hope that after today, when they all go back to their constituents, they will rethink what they are doing to Albertans and actually listen to what they're telling them in the aisles of the grocery store when they are shopping with their families or by themselves and actually look into the eyes of people that are losing their jobs. You know that there are thousands of them. You know that you're going to run into people like that. Ask them how they feel about the budget that your government has put on the table. I don't think you're going to like what they have to say. I don't think they're going to like what you have to say.

An Hon. Member: They're happy about the teachers, though.

Mr. McIver: Somebody chirped in from the other side about teachers, and, Mr. Speaker, it just reminded me that they're unhappy. The sunshine list legislation the government has put forward: I'm not sure that teachers are happy with that legislation. I'm not sure doctors are happy with that legislation. That's what they're telling me.

But we'll come back to the budget [Mr. McIver's speaking time expired] . . . next time I get a chance.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I would not in any way think at this point that I understand the procedures of the House nearly as well as the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster; however, my understanding is that 29(2)(a) is in fact a clarification or response to a question, and my sense is that the five minutes you used may not have actually achieved that. I would remind the House that in the future we all try to measure for that objective.

We are finished on 29(2)(a). The time has lapsed on that.

Would anyone else like to speak to Motion 13? The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do sincerely appreciate the opportunity to respond to the budget released only a few weeks ago here in this House. I want to take my time here to express both my desire for the success of our province and my concern about the future based on what we see in this budget. Now, don't get me wrong. While I do certainly have some criticisms of this budget, there are a number of points where I agree with the government because I believe that they're in the best interest of Albertans, and I believe in finding solutions that are in the best interest of everyone in this province no matter what ideology they represent. One thing I want to be very clear about is that I will never cheer against Alberta. I want this government to succeed. I genuinely do. Unfortunately, much of this budget, I believe, misses the mark.

Now, I believe in a strong economy based on prudent fiscal management, and I believe in being proud of and supporting all Alberta industries both in good times and in challenging times. I believe in doing more with less, inspiring innovation, and serving the people of Alberta. This is why I agree with the government's plans to increase infrastructure spending. For far too long our schools, hospitals, and roads have not received the attention they deserve. Our province has grown quickly, putting increased pressure on the public services that we all rely upon. The former PC government saw this growth and chose a path which has left Alberta vulnerable to volatile commodity prices instead of investing in and planning for the future.

I support the government's plan to improve access to capital. Alberta is defined by our entrepreneurial spirit and our determination to succeed. By giving enterprising and risk-taking Albertans the resources they need, government can enable the innovation required for Alberta to remain a leader in many different areas.

However, access to capital is only one of the many things needed to create a culture of innovation. This is why I'm glad to see stability return to Alberta's education system. Whether it's primary, secondary, postsecondary, or trades education, learning is crucial to the future of this province. Alberta's ability to leverage our education into innovation, commercialization, and the encouragement of new ideas must be the pillar on which we base our global competitiveness. Now is the time to invest in Albertans and provide them with that opportunity to succeed.

I am fiercely proud to be an Albertan, and I strive every day to make this province even better. This is why, while I agree with the government's priority to invest in infrastructure while rates are low, I worry that their plans threaten future generations because of a lack of discipline and a lack of balance. Their ideological approach is based on a best-case assumption instead of being pragmatic and basing energy price assumptions on reality. This is a challenging time for our province as the price of commodities has dropped substantially and, unfortunately, continues to do so.

One of our most important industries, oil and gas, is an industry that Alberta relies upon, and we know that people in that industry are suffering. In times such as these the government needs to support, protect, and stand up for that key sector, the key employer for so many Albertans and a key supporter of their families. However, we haven't seen enough support. Instead, we've seen corporate taxes going up. We've seen uncertainty introduced through the royalty review. The Premier has not unapologetically promoted Alberta's products and Alberta's industries to the world. The impact of these actions is felt by every firm that's receiving less investment, every person who's lost their job, and every Albertan who has to dig a little deeper to get by.

I've heard it said repeatedly in this House that the NDs didn't cause the price of oil to go down. That's absolutely true. But what's also true is that the ND government has introduced uncertainty on top of already difficult market conditions. There's no question that the ND tax increases and royalty and climate panels have made the situation worse. That is a simple statement of fact.

Now the ND government is relying on overly optimistic projections for the future. Their plan of spending their way to surplus is risky at best. The budget relies on a 26 per cent increase in revenues by 2019 in order just to balance. This is simply not realistic given the plan proposed by the government. We know that people invest their money in the best possible option available at the time. The government's plan is increased costs and reduced return on investment. These actions have caused investors that normally have contributed so much to our economy to re-evaluate their priorities and choose different investments elsewhere, as any rational, reasonable person would.

In addition to this, the government is relying on a significant rebound in oil prices, with the budget predicting a price per barrel of oil that is 28 per cent higher than the market estimate in the 2017 fiscal year. That's barely 14 months from now. What does this assumption mean for the people of Alberta? Well, it means the government's revenue estimate could be off by more than $2.5 billion. It means that every single person in Alberta may need to cover almost $600 either in taxes or debt by the 2017 fiscal year alone if the government is wrong in its assumptions. That means all of us are at risk.

Now, the future price of oil is unpredictable. What is predictable, though, is the borrowing plans from this government. The 2015 budget outlines a borrowing plan which will see Alberta have a total liability of $36.6 billion by the 2017 fiscal year and $47.4 billion by the 2019 fiscal year. The amount of debt represents approximately 10 per cent of Alberta's GDP in 2017 and will only continue to grow from that point forward.

What's worse is that for the first time in decades this province is borrowing money for operational spending. Starting next year, the government is planning on borrowing over $700 million for operations, and the year after that the figure jumps to a staggering $3.1 billion for operations alone. That is simply not a responsible way to govern the province.

This discussion is not just a difference of opinion between political parties; this approach to governing is being noticed outside of our province as well. Recently Moody's placed Alberta on alert, saying that we are now credit negative. As well, the Dominion Bond Rating Service says that Alberta does not currently meet the triple-A threshold on three of their five quantitative factors used to assess a province's credit rating, with the other two factors at risk of being negative in the near future. Now, if our credit rating is downgraded, the increased amount of debt the ND government plans on assuming will cost even more, raising our debt-servicing cost and leaving less to serve the people of Alberta.

What's the prudent thing to do in the face of uncertainty? Now, I look to the people of Alberta for this answer. Albertans everywhere are being forced to do more with less while the government seems willingly to want to do less with more. While Albertans are losing their jobs, taking pay decreases, and getting by with less, the NDs want to increase expenses systematically year over year without giving a thought to how they can find cost savings or enable the talented and skilled people within our public service to improve processes and increase efficiency in the government. Now, I agree that Alberta's public service needs to be respected and compensated appropriately, and the solution to the problem is certainly not more job cuts and wage rollbacks. However, spending more without a plan to improve capacity and productivity will only lead to wage inflation and cost Albertans more.

Now, the NDs tell us that these spending increases will stimulate the economy. This strategy is not always necessarily based on sound rationale. The Fraser Institute suggests that "efforts to eliminate large deficits by hiking taxes without material spending restraint rarely succeed." They go on to give an example of a government who was faced with an even worse fiscal mess than Alberta faces today. This government increased some taxes, but they also reined in spending immediately upon taking office. The spending discipline eliminated the deficit and placed the government on a stable fiscal footing, creating conditions that soon allowed for substantial tax relief.

Now, obviously, the government in this example followed sound fiscal policy and did the right thing in the face of an uncertain future. It observed the economic reality that it was facing and adapted to make the situation better. Now, this government might suggest they were elected with a mandate from the people to uphold their ideology of increasing taxes and increasing spending. That government may have said that they were given that mandate. Now, the government that I talked about was the 1990 Saskatchewan NDP government, led by Roy Romanow. It was the Romanow NDP that restrained spending and led their province back to prosperity. Now, that's an example this ND government should think about following, focusing on real solutions to our problems instead of dogmatically following ideology and risking our future.

We need to focus on practical solutions that will actually help Albertans. Presenting voters with an alternative plan is one of the primary responsibilities of any opposition party, and I intend to do just that. Our alternative budget would balance by fiscal 2018-19 without borrowing money for operational spending and without cutting badly needed capital spending. We would accomplish this feat through sound fiscal management policies as well as by focusing on capital projects which we know can be effectively deployed. The Alberta Party would constrain operational spending by conducting rolling zero-based audits of all departments to ensure that programs deliver value to Albertans. This will ensure that our public service does more with less, just like Alberta households and Alberta businesses. With this in place we could also mandate that operational spending only increase by no more than population growth plus inflation. This cap should slow the ever-increasing costs of running Alberta's public service.

Constraining Alberta's expenses, while important, is only half the picture. The other side deals with revenues and their effect on Albertans. Current ND tax policy has been a substantial increase to the burden placed on businesses, entrepreneurs, and innovators. To make matters worse, these tax increases had the opposite effect of what they originally intended. Instead of taking a larger piece of corporate profits, the ND policy has forced businesses to re-examine their value chain to deliver better returns to their stakeholders and shareholders. It is a simple calculation for business to make, and it is simply revenue minus cost.

The government's increased taxes have increased costs for business to the point where there is no longer a strong incentive for those firms to be in this province, which is why the Alberta Party would immediately lower corporate taxes by 1 per cent on large and small business and simplify our personal tax regime to make sure that individuals with the capacity to reinvest in Alberta are not penalized for doing so. To further strengthen the incentive for innovators to make this province better, the Alberta Party would introduce an investor tax credit. This tax credit would replace the ineffective ND job creation grant, which has the potential for misuse, double-dipping, and creates new and expensive government bureaucracy.

In challenging economic times businesses need all the help they can get. Some businesses need help improving their capacities; some require land or a building or even another business. Others want to upgrade their technology. Some want to hire more staff. All of these things help a business grow, and growing businesses create economic activity, which creates jobs. Government does not know exactly what each individual business needs; businesses themselves know.

It's very important to note that the Alberta Party budget balances in 2018-19 while still using a more conservative energy price forecast than this government's forecast. While the future price of energy is absolutely unpredictable, as we all know, Alberta relies on these revenues for a significant portion of our government revenue. By estimating future prices using the most conservative projections, Albertans can feel confident that the risks their government is taking are well thought out and not going to jeopardize the future. Should the actual royalties received by the government exceed expectations, the overage would be used to pay off debt sooner and then provide extra funding to the heritage fund.

The funding of capital investment in our collective future is of great importance not only to me but to the rest of the province. Making sure that the government can effectively deploy the funds promised for capital spending is at the heart of this issue. Too many times in the past the people of Alberta have been promised facilities which are vital for the success of their communities just to have those promises broken, delayed, or altered.

Now, this is not the way to build sustainable communities. Instead, the Alberta Party would ensure that the only money being spent on capital projects goes towards those projects which can be deployed effectively and that bring the greatest value to those communities. These projects will bring a great deal of value to the province, so it's important to protect and maintain Alberta's strength. This means having policies which will not jeopardize the purchasing power of Albertans and also do not create artificially high costs by creating too much demand for trades.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the ND government has gotten some things right in this budget but an awful lot wrong. Alberta is not better off with this budget today and in the future, and I'm afraid I cannot support it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Regarding the debate on this very important budget issue, I'm just curious: does the Member for Calgary-Elbow feel that Albertans are being fairly represented by members opposite who refuse to stand up in this House and speak, whether they're for it or against it? They refuse to stand up and speak and tell us that they have consulted with their constituents regarding this very important budget for Albertans present and future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much. Look, what I can say is that our job in this House is to represent the people who have sent us to this place to do the work on their behalf, and I think that it's incumbent on each and every one of us, in particular the private members on the government side, to stand up and say what their constituents have told them. Now, it's important that we're in our communities. We spent a week last week, constituency week, and I talked to literally hundreds of my constituents. This speech I've just given here, I think, is a fair representation of what I heard from my constituents.

I think it's important for me to state that not every single thing in this budget is terrible. Not every single thing this government has done is terrible, but there's a lot of fear. There's a lot of concern. There's a lot of worry. A lot of people in this province either have lost their jobs or know someone who's lost their job, and they're worried. They are genuinely worried about the future. I will say that I think many are willing to give the government a chance, and I think I want to fairly reflect what I'm hearing in my constituency, but many, many are very worried and not just those in the energy sector.

So I agree. I'd like to hear from government private members. What are you hearing from your constituents? I'd like to hear what your perspective is. That's your job. Your number one job is to represent the views of your constituents. We don't know what those are if you don't stand and tell the House.

Thank you for the question.

The Speaker: Any other questions under 29(2)(a)?

Are there other members who would like to speak to Government Motion 13? Calgary-Mountain View.

3:30

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. An honour to reply to the government's first budget. These are difficult times for Albertans, and in these dire economic circumstances, after taking several months to prepare, it was this government's responsibility to bring forward a budget that would not only stimulate new growth in our economy but would also tackle the root of the problem and get us off our perpetual ride on the resource revenue roller coaster. But Albertans didn't vote for ideology. They voted for a thoughtful, evidence-based set of decisions around an uncertain future.

While there is some good and much that I support in this budget, including the infrastructure stimulus, this budget simply does not do enough to stimulate and diversify our economy, especially for small and medium businesses. After decades of PC mismanagement, with $11.6 billion, more than any other province, given back to the richest corporations and individuals just last year, our economy and our budget have become so reliant on a single commodity that is ongoing with low oil price environments and constitutes a full economic crisis.

We've seen more than 40,000 job losses from the energy sector alone. The lack of vision and discipline and a fair tax regime by the PC government has left us in this mess we are seeing first-hand as residents of this province. I dare say that each of us has a friend, family member, or neighbour who has been seeing their job affected in the ongoing crisis. I know I've been hearing a great deal of concern, especially from small business. These job losses are not mere statistics. Each represents families trying to put food on the table, employment opportunities for young people trying to get started and paying off student loans, and these prospects appear to be fading. This is the context in which this new government has brought forward this first budget and asked for the approval of the House.

[Mr. Feehan in the chair]

As a physician, Mr. Speaker, I know the difference between treating symptoms and treating the cause, treatment that cures a disease. I'm afraid that in looking at this budget through this lens, it simply manages our overreliance on oil revenues. It does not cure it. That is crystal clear in this government's plan to get back to surplus. It's based on hope and prayers that the oil prices will rebound. So we shouldn't be surprised that the government has had to change its balanced budget prediction twice. Their prediction depends entirely on their ability to successfully predict the future of the price of oil. I dare say, with the greatest respect to the Finance minister, that his crystal ball is no clearer than mine or our colleagues' in the opposition parties here or our predecessors'. Nor, by the way, is it any clearer for any of the opposition parties. Unless we fix the overreliance on oil, we are just shooting at moving targets in the dark.

To stimulate and diversify our economy, the Liberals called on the government to take action in four key areas: one, a responsible increase in infrastructure spending; two, real help for small business; three, incentives for the private sector to create new green technologies; and four, avoid borrowing for operating costs through a rigorous review of the public sector and all public spending and ensure that we're getting value for money, including collaborating with nonprofit organizations, nongovernment organizations, planning and budgeting with that sector to improve our effectiveness in public services. This government has not properly addressed these key areas while increasing taxes and fees in a way that will add to the burden of our middle class and our lower class.

Our children also deserve the stability of a growing heritage fund rather than the ongoing pilfering, which we have criticized the PCs for over the years, leaving the heritage fund worth even less than it was in 1982, when Peter Lougheed left office.

With respect to infrastructure stimulus and diversification there's absolutely no question that now is the time to build. Interest rates are low. After decades of neglect and years of rapid population growth the need has never been greater. By any estimate, Alberta has tens of billions of dollars in infrastructure needs, including roads, schools, hospitals, housing, and public transit. We need a new hospital in west Edmonton and a new, modern medical laboratory desperately.

We need hundreds of new schools throughout the province and upgrading in many. We are a decade past needing a cancer centre in Calgary. It looks like we'll have to wait another decade for that. Our major cities are waiting to see if the province will pay its share on badly needed public transit projects like the green line in Calgary and the west leg of the valley line here in Edmonton so that we can avoid gridlock.

We also require thousands of new, affordable seniors' housing units, that will offer seniors and those with disabilities a dignified way of life and take pressure off our health care system. As many of you know, I've been hearing from the mental health and addicted caregivers in our society and those suffering from mental health and addictions. Housing is the number one issue that keeps people on the street. There's no question that this has to become a higher priority at all three levels of government: federal, provincial, and municipal. We must start planning and budgeting together at these three levels if we're going to deal with this ongoing sore in our society that is costing us billions of dollars by not addressing it effectively.

In addition, our existing infrastructure continues to crumble and requires an ongoing maintenance budget. These are huge challenges for a new government that has been given no budget to work with. This is why I was prepared to support the government's debt financing with new infrastructure projects to get Alberta companies and Albertans back to work building the projects we know we need. Sadly, the government has presented a plan that's too vague to be considered responsible, and there is no clear debt repayment plan to outline how and when the government would repay the necessary debt we're taking on. In fact, the government rejects such a plan until they hit their ever-moving, resource-reliant balanced budget target. We can't support that, Mr. Speaker. It can make good financial sense to refinance your mortgage to do renovations but not without a plan for repayment.

The government is also refusing to release an infrastructure priority list to demonstrate that spending is really based on need and not on political interest or timing. We look forward to that public sunshine list of priorities. My friend the Minister of Infrastructure has been in this place a long time, I think since the beginning of the Legislature. [interjections] I was just checking to see if anybody was listening. He knows full well that the public interest is not served by political timing and politically prioritized infrastructure projects. That's why he promised an infrastructure priority list.

Right in the middle of the session this government is making new infrastructure announcements every other day. Why no open list of infrastructure? Clearly, the government has prioritized these projects for announcement, so let's see it. Without these additional details, I can't support, in all confidence, an infrastructure spending plan.

With respect to small-business support the government is simply not doing enough to help. With respect, grants of $5,000 per new employee are a business subsidy. They are not sustainable, and they do not create new jobs. A tax break, on the other hand, would be a sustainable stimulus for small businesses and help get a long-term commitment to innovation and jobs and economic growth.

To their credit, this new government has taken some positive steps, directing ATB to provide more loans and providing funds for start-up investments where the risk is low in terms of the public interest. This makes sense, but these steps won't do enough to help small businesses that are struggling today. Over 85 per cent of businesses in Alberta are defined as small, having less than $500,000 profit in a given year. They are the key to diversifying our economy and creating jobs, but they are struggling hard in this economy.

At the same time, the government is pushing their costs up with a higher minimum wage, whose rate of increase surely needs to be tied to our economic reality, not simply dictated on the basis of a number that projects well into the next three years without any basis for assessing the impact of the earlier increases in the minimum wage. We need to take that into consideration.

These businesses also face higher insurance costs. When you're a small entrepreneur whose revenues are going down and whose costs are going up, it's difficult to stay afloat today in Alberta. Fear is a vicious cycle and will add only more burden onto a group that's trying to get a new business off the ground. We have to look at that, listen to that, and make sure ideology doesn't trump evidence. That means monitoring with small businesses what's happening across the province and making decisions annually on the basis of new information.

Albertans are looking for real leadership from the government to create an environment for job creation. Instead, they're getting a convoluted tax credit scheme that David Dodge, the Calgary

Chamber of commerce, the Economic Development Corporation of Edmonton, and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business all are doubtful can work. Surveys by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, in fact, indicate that as many as 1 in 5 small businesses will be forced to lay off staff this year.

The report also noted that tax and regulatory costs are a major area of concern for small-business owners. That could be alleviated without significant harm to our budget. This is why we've asked, argued, and begged to either lower or even eliminate the tax burden on small businesses. Let them do what they do best, create jobs and diversify our economy.

With respect to incentives for new clean, green technology the oil sands sector is among the most innovative, research-oriented, and technologically advanced sectors on the planet. These are companies that have shown time and again that the impossible can be done. We have supported a carbon levy if revenue neutral, and extra money goes to clean technology, with extras going to a predictable base for infrastructure funding across the province. Companies and residents will benefit financially in the longer term from directing funds to new clean technology, energy conservation, and will strengthen Alberta's energy sector for decades to come.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, in the final analysis the budget has much potential to address the needs of Albertans and cure our over-reliance on volatile resource revenues. What's missing is a serious commitment to a debt repayment plan and to a review of existing spending for real opportunities for efficiency. As someone who has worked in the health care system, it's clear to me that in the planning for health care – shifting to early intervention, primary care in the community, home care in the community – there are millions of dollars to be saved by getting people out of the hospital and investing more in community and primary care. Sadly, the opportunity has been missed, and we'll remain on the resource revenue roller coaster for years to come.

I cannot support the budget as it is today. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Would anybody like to respond under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the hon. member for his words. I absolutely agree with what he was saying at the end of his speech, and it's what I'm hearing from my constituents in Cypress-Medicine Hat. They're absolutely amazed. They absolutely feel it's unfair that the government hasn't been looking for efficiencies and cost/spending reductions at a time when so many of them or their neighbours are laid off, taking 30 per cent pay reductions. So I agree with that point.

You mentioned that your other concern was orderly debt reduction. I'd like you to comment for a second on the fact that my constituents are very, very concerned about the accumulation of up to $47 billion in debt over the next three years. That's concerning my constituents a lot more than the payback. They're concerned about what this will do to their level of services and the cost of the interest over the years.

If the hon. member could take a second, a lot of my rural people are very, very concerned with the almost quadrupling of the tax on diesel for locomotives from 1 and a half cents to 5 and a half cents. It is clearly just going to be passed on to suppliers and then consumers. What are your thoughts on what this is going to do to our seniors population, our lower income population, the removal of choice in what they can afford and what they can afford to buy?

You might have some extra insight as the Liberal leader. I was talking to my chartered accountant the other day, and he says that Albertans' marginal tax will now be 48 per cent – 48 per cent – once the new Liberal government puts in their change after our New Democrat government put in their change.

Hon. member, if you could talk about how you think those four things will affect your constituents and Albertans, I would appreciate it.

Dr. Swann: Thank you to the member for the questions. Let me preface my remarks by saying that there are many different kinds of debt. The PCs have left us with a huge social debt, a huge infrastructure debt, a huge environmental debt, and now an economic debt, so I think it's important to say where the debt belongs. After 44 years of government I think we expected better in terms of vision and planning and investment in our future, a longer term investment that would provide some buffering from what we have known for decades is a roller coaster on oil and gas revenues. Yes, this government has inherited this. Let's be clear on who's responsible for getting us into this mess.

With respect to the long-term debt repayment I think your understanding of debt repayment is the same as mine. You have to find the money from somewhere. We have to find it from either increased taxes, increased fines and levies and fees, or we have to find it from new investments that come out of our existing funds. We also have to find it from new resource developments, new technologies that we can market and sell across the world. We have to invest in postsecondary education and ensure that we have the brightest minds coming here and developing the newer technologies that will get us both off the old resource revenue racket and into a more prosperous, independent economy that would leave all of us, including our children, in a more stable situation.

I don't know of any other way to face the future except to acknowledge that we are all in this together. If we don't start working more constructively together across this Legislature, I don't think we're going to get where we want to go. I find it difficult – the partisan shots, the bitterness from this side of the House, and in some cases the retaliation on the other side – when we realize what's at stake here: our children's future, our environment, our social stability, an economy that actually works for everybody. I think it's going to take the best from all of us if we're going to find a better way forward because if this was easy to do, it would have been done by the PCs. They couldn't do it. They wouldn't do it. We have to find a way to work together more constructively. I find it very difficult to hear the bitter, noisy reactions, just like schoolchildren, and I think schoolchildren who come in here are pretty upset with us when they see what's happened. I think we can do better, folks, and I want to see that from all of us.

There's too much at stake, and I'm hearing it in spades from people on the streets who aren't getting the care they need. Their addictions are not being addressed. First Nations are not in a helpful way managing to heal themselves and to build community. The symptoms are all there. If we're not prepared to give everything we've got to this project of working together, then we're not going to get to where we want to go for us and for our children.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Member.

Would anyone else like to speak? The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: I rise, Mr. Speaker, as the Deputy Government House Leader, and I rise to adjourn debate on Government Motion 13.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Connolly moved, seconded by Ms Kazim, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate June 23: Mr. Jean]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition is not here, so we'll be going back and forth, then, in response to the Speech from the Throne.

We'll begin with the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is truly an honour to rise in this Legislature as the representative of Grande Prairie-Smoky. The effectiveness of democracy like ours lies in the ability to bring representation from all areas of the province and come together. Sometimes we come together with competing voices. Yes, sometimes we come as opponents, but most importantly, Alberta representatives gather in this House as solution seekers, people coming together to find answers to the concerns that Albertans have.

Again, I am honoured and humbled by the opportunity to represent the constituency of Grande Prairie-Smoky. Quite simply, I cannot imagine calling any other place my home. I need to thank the constituents in my riding for lending me their trust to be their voice in this Assembly. An election is a one-shot deal, but continuing to earn that trust and respect of the people I represent is a job that does not end. I have to admit that I'm a bit nervous about the job ahead of me because earning that trust is such an important task. I'm also a bit nervous because everything I say now is on the record. That means my wife can track all my mistakes and have written proof of everything I say.

I do hope my background and roots in the area help me qualify enough to speak for the area. As a small child I moved to Grande Prairie with my family in 1967. In 1971 my father fulfilled his dream of homesteading in the Peace Country, and we moved to a homestead in the Valleyview area. At the time of this move we lived in a tent but soon graduated to the luxury of a 12 foot by 12 foot granary. I would say that housing has improved considerably since then, but my parents, Paul and Verna, still reside on that homestead. Upon graduation from Hillside high school in Valleyview I joined the workforce and five years later started my own small business and bought a farm, both of which I operate to this day. But, like almost everyone else in the Peace Country, what's most important to me is family. My wife, Teena, and I have five children and now twin grandchildren. You wouldn't know the true meaning of a hard day's work until you spend a day with the pair of them.

But I don't want to spend any more time talking about me. After all, electing MLAs to this Assembly shouldn't mean electing people or personalities. Instead, it's about representation of principles and values that particular regions hold and making sure that those voices are brought to the provincial table.

I want to take a few moments to talk about what's important in Grande Prairie-Smoky: the people, their families, and the communities that they have built. Grande Prairie-Smoky is a diverse constituency of small hamlets, urban centres, and vast rural tracts that provide jobs in everything from forestry and farming to tourism and oil and gas. There are over 56,000 people across almost 20,000 square kilometres in this constituency. There is a long history of this area that goes back to the trappers referring to the area as the grand prairie as early as 1854. The Hudson's Bay Company established a trading post here in 1881.

Grande Prairie is the hub of the Peace Country. It's one of the largest cities in the north and one of the fastest growing in all of Canada. It is a centre of industry, which has also translated into it being one of the youngest cities in our country, where workers and young families have gathered in droves. To the immediate north of Grande Prairie are the small communities of Clairmont and Sexsmith. Clairmont has almost doubled in size in the last decade and is an excellent place to raise children because of its community projects, recreational facilities, and housing affordability. Meanwhile, Sexsmith, once known as the grain capital of the British Empire, reached town status in 1979. It was named after David Sexsmith, one of the first trappers of the area, and today it still boasts a population made up of outdoorsy, rural people, which has produced a tough high school football team that is regularly among the best in northern Alberta.

Some of the smaller communities in the riding include Teepee Creek, Crooked Creek, DeBolt, Ridgevalley, Little Smoky, and Sunset House. Teepee Creek is best known for the Teepee Creek Stampede, which began in 1916 and now draws several thousand visitors each time. Not bad for a population of about 20 people. Crooked Creek is an unincorporated community that has a post office, a gas station, and a general store that many say has the best donuts in Alberta. Near that are Ridgevalley and DeBolt, the latter of which has been around since 1919, when the DeBolt family from the state of Washington settled in the area and set up a stopping place for weary travellers. Ridgevalley has Mennonite roots and is one of those unique Alberta hamlets that doesn't appear to have many people but draws all sorts of farming families and students to its facilities and school. Sunset House, Sweathouse, and Little Smoky are small, down-to-earth agriculture communities where the residents are industrious and community minded.

Finally, on the east side of the constituency along highway 43 lie the communities of Calais, Valleyview, and Fox Creek. Calais is home to the Sturgeon Lake Cree Nation. It is a vibrant, community-focused population with about 1,500 people living on the band's land and another 1,500 or so living off site. This summer I was able to attend a powwow there, a great opportunity to experience the culture and heritage of these people.

Valleyview, my wonderful home for essentially my whole life, has usually been known as that fork in the road for highways 43 and 49. Now it's still known as that fork in the road but with a Tim Hortons and a Subway and, of course, many other dynamic businesses. Hillside high school also has a strong football team that the past two years has won the Athabasca Bowl. I have to mention that because my oldest son is a teacher and coaches the football team, and my youngest son played on that winning team in his final year.

Finally, Fox Creek sits on the south edge of the constituency. It is another community largely driven forward by the oil and gas industry and is growing in leaps and bounds because of its attractive job prospects and viability as a permanent home for young families.

All these cities, towns, and hamlets, all with different histories and different makeups, are bound together in the values that underpin them. At the heart of the Peace Country communities is a focus on family, faith, and quality of life. Community halls and recreational centres are found everywhere. Churches and charities are numerous and held in great respect by the communities they are a part of. People work hard for their money and take deep pride in the jobs they hold. After all, industriousness and work ethic are values engrained in every Peace Country man and woman.

We do have issues that need to be addressed. We have a severe lack of doctors. Waiting times in the emergency are extreme. We lack seniors' facilities. Our highways and roads are dilapidated, and we have large volumes of commercial traffic travelling on an insufficient road system. It will be my priority to work towards solutions for these problems and others as I represent my constituents.

Again I want to return to the idea that I hope to be a mere servant and messenger for the Grande Prairie-Smoky constituents, and after listening to the throne speech and budget, I am certain that my constituents aren't comfortable with much of what's on the agenda of this government. Peace Country families balance their books and live within their means, so why is it so unreasonable to ask our government to do the same? Already spending has rocketed even higher than the previous government's commitments, and there doesn't seem to be any kind of plan to get the provincial books in order. I don't think I speak for just my constituents when I say that there is something inherently wrong about accruing debt and making our kids and grandkids accountable for our generation's mistakes, waste, and unsustainable wants.

It appears that this NDP government is following in the footsteps of the previous government, which is to raise taxes on Albertans with no regard at all for the slumping and fragile economy. Most alarming is a complete lack of desire to reduce waste and inefficiencies in government. That has to be the first step and first discussion in any budget considerations. I understand some government members are still so young that they haven't finished their university degrees, so I would encourage these members to take a few economics courses while they still can and then pass on what they learn to their cabinet ministers, who don't seem to fully grasp the financial consequences of their decisions.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity to speak to this House about the riding I represent and love and bring forward a few of its residents' present concerns. Now, if you had told me even five years ago that today I'd be an MLA speaking to this Assembly, I would have laughed at you, but here I am, proud and humbled to serve, enjoying every minute of it, and looking forward to representing the constituents of Grande Prairie-Smoky. I look forward to coming together with members in this Assembly to be solution seekers for the sake of our province.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened with great interest to what the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky had to say. Not just today but through all of our time here in the Legislature I know that he and his party have really focused on waste, which is really why I found it so surprising that his maiden speech failed to mention that the Valleyview Shell station was nominated for having Canada's best washroom in 2013. I would just like to give the member the opportunity to correct that omission in his maiden speech.

Thank you.

4:00

Mr. Loewen: Thank you to the member for the question. Yes, we have several businesses in our community that are world class, and of course being known as having the best bathroom in Canada is definitely a source of pride for our community. Of course, there are other things, too, that we have in our community that are world class. Again, I'm proud to represent the members of my constituency.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members who would like to respond under 29(2)(a)?

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky for a very illuminating presentation. I really want to ask him about his comments about economics training, and I wonder what his economics training has been, particularly in, for instance, Keynesian economics, which promotes contracyclical investment and was actually responsible for Franklin Delano Roosevelt slaying the depression of the 1930s. I also wonder what his comments are on the economics of Mr. David Dodge, the ex-governor of the Bank of Canada, who has also strongly recommended the same approach.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the question. Yes, actually, I myself graduated from high school, and of course I worked in the workforce for five years and then started my business, just like I mentioned in here. I've had the chance to operate a business and gain some life experiences about balancing books and living within my means. In my businesses there have been times when the economy has really taken its toll on it because it depends a lot on the U.S. economy and the U.S. dollar, and, yes, I've been able to keep that business going. It's supported my family since that time. I think there's a lot to be said about having real-life experiences and balancing books and keeping the economy in my home in order and my business, too. I thank the member for the question and look forward to more if they so please.

The Acting Speaker: Any other responses under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Nixon: Just wondering if the hon. member could expand a little bit about the role debt played in his business or did not. As well, if he was returning home today – I think he is going home today – if his wife informed him that she was borrowing to keep the lights on, would he be concerned?

Mr. Loewen: Thank you for the question, Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. Yeah, of course I would be alarmed if I was to arrive home and find out that we were actually having to borrow money for the day-to-day operations in our home. That would be alarming. During my lifetime, of course, I have borrowed money, but I've paid the money back, and I carry on with my business and my life appropriately. I've always been able to do it within the means that I have. Of course, like I said, with my business there have been ups and downs, and sometimes the cheques are smaller than in other years. Of course, it's only proper and it only makes sense that you live within your means and that you develop a budget that's reasonable, that will get you to the place you need to be.

Of course, I think most Albertans would love to see a government that lives within its means and has a plan for the future that involves balancing the budget and paying off debt and actually being able to save money. Of course, this Alberta government, even at a $100 barrel of oil, has never been able to balance its budget in the last seven or eight years, and that's actually quite alarming. With a $100 dollar barrel of oil, the highest incomes ever for the province, it's still not balancing a budget. Of course, the new government has taken over and hasn't done any better.

The Acting Speaker: Would anyone else like to address the Speech from the Throne? The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured and it's with great humility that I respond to the Speech from the Throne. To be honest, the first time I was ever in this Chamber, I sat up there, and the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood sat over there, so times have kind of changed a little bit.

Like the Member for Calgary-South East, I too grew up in Marlborough Park, which is a community rich in culture and hard-working individuals. I want to open by thanking the Member for Calgary-East for the great description of her constituency. It is a neighbourhood where we take care of one another, and I am proud to have a person so bright and hard working representing my mother and father's riding.

Seven years ago my wife and I decided to buy a house. We almost ended up settling in the north end of Calgary. However, we fell in love with a house in the south Calgary community of Millrise, in Calgary-Shaw, and I'm glad we did. Calgary-Shaw is a vibrant, strong community with a huge sense of pride, who are willing to stand up for what they believe in. I saw this during the election. Students at Centennial high school took an activist role by leading a save-our-schools campaign. They fought for better funding and reduced classroom sizes. They protested in the right fashion. They asked critical questions without taking a partisan approach. They held us elected officials accountable and will continue to do so. They even protested at city hall during a Flames playoff game. Now, I have to say that that's commitment.

My community encompasses more than a dozen public and private schools, including two high schools, many of which are over capacity and some of which have been overlooked for modular classrooms during the 2014 by-elections in Calgary. At the doorsteps I heard from people in my riding who were tired of MLAs who wouldn't listen to Albertans, whether it was floor crossing or Albertans wanting to get a better tax system that's more fair for all Albertans. However, my constituents were heard loud and clear on May 5, and that is why I stand here with you all today.

My constituency encompasses the communities of Millrise, Shawnessy, Shawnee Slopes, Somerset, Sundance, and the historical community of Midnapore, which was one of Calgary's earliest settlements and was incorporated into the city of Calgary in the 1970s. In the north boundary of my constituency is Fish Creek provincial park, which encompasses a huge amount of reclaimed green space. It is preserved by the hard-working members of the Friends of Fish Creek, who have worked hard to educate people about wilderness in my beautiful community. This park is a prized gem of the people of Calgary-Shaw. The people appreciate it so much that if a shovel even touches the ground, I get a dozen phone calls to my constituency office.

I see an active community in my constituency, whether it's the people in Somerset who upkeep the town square's water park or the people who meet at and maintain the Shawnessy Barn or the volunteers that manage the Zamboni at the community rink in Millrise or those in Midnapore and Sundance who have worked hard for a community centre upgrade, which services people of all of south Calgary.

The people of Calgary-Shaw work hard to take care of one another. I saw this during a devastating condo fire in Millrise in 2010, where many volunteers went to the Southview Alliance church to give their support and donate whatever they could to help out their fellow neighbours. During the 2013 flood the Fish Creek recreational centre became a relief centre for those impacted by the flood and an area where many residents in my constituency sent their support.

I see a sense of community when I visit St. Mary's University, one of the fastest growing postsecondary institutions in Alberta. Its humanities 101 program brings in vulnerable and homeless

Calgarians, provides them with free tuition, meals, and even child care while they attend studies. This program is supported in part by fundraising from students and faculty at the university. Under the previous government they were going to lose 16 per cent of their funding next term; however, our government has reversed those cuts. I am proud to work with the faculty, under the leadership of Gerry Turcotte. They are building bridges with the First Nations community to allow them to create an inclusive space in this university, and they have been doing this for years, Mr. Speaker.

Myself, I was born and raised in Calgary and am a second-generation Calgarian, which is a rare breed, if you will. My grandfather was born in Slovakia and immigrated to Alberta when he was a child to work on a farm. When my father was a child, my grandfather refused to teach him Slovakian because he was discriminated against as a child. Now, Mr. Speaker, I stand here with a caucus of an almost 50-50 ratio of men and women, people from many ethnicities, languages, and sexual orientations, and I'm happy to see us having passed the first reading of Bill 7 as well. I can say to my grandfather that we are even closer than we have ever been to living in an inclusive society in Alberta although there is still some work to be done.

When attending school, I had troubles learning to read and write. The turning point in my challenges, however, was a caring teacher named Mrs. Coxon. She gave me support, taught me confidence, and never gave up on me, even when I felt like giving up on myself. I lost touch with her after I finished school until I was sworn in, when she e-mailed me to congratulate me. I often worry about my children and if they will face the same challenges that I did. I often wonder if they will receive the same level of support. It relieves me to no end, Mr. Speaker, to know that our government is committed to protecting and improving public education.

I stand here a proud former restaurant manager. The people whom I worked with dealt with many issues, including inadequate access to health care, issues with social services, high tuition increases with cuts to programs, and I am happy to see that our government is working hard to improve these issues. The people I work with were full of passion and generosity. In the 2013 flood they mobilized only days after and helped raise close to $10,000 with help from the Calgary Stampeders. I have to say that I'm rooting for the Stampeders this go-around as well.

I have to thank my associates for believing in me even when it seemed like very few people did. They had quite a bit of confidence in me, and I'm grateful for that. As a business operator, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it perfectly clear: if I thought the NDP was bad for business, I would not have run as an MLA for the NDP. In the restaurant industry I've seen increases in costs of wines due to drought, increased food costs by 50 per cent, heavy taxation increases in liquor, increased service charges due to high prices of oil and gas, and heavy increases due to rent due to supply and demand. Any time things like this happen, we adapt our business to make it work, and the same will apply for the increase in minimum wage.

As I stand here, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the members who represented my riding before myself, from Jim Dinning, who, I want to recognize, is receiving the Order of Canada this year, to Jon Havelock to Jeff Wilson to Cindy Ady. They have all made sacrifices to represent their constituents, and I am grateful for their service. After spending over an hour chatting with Cindy Ady after my election, she spoke to me about not losing sight of my family and my constituents in my riding. She wanted to remind me of the importance of balancing one's family life and their work within the constituency.

As I stand here, I want to represent those family members who held political office before myself: my mother, Debbie Dean, who sat on the University of Calgary senate with, actually, the Speaker of the House, not yourself but the other Speaker; my cousin Tracy Douglas-Blowers, who sat on city council for the city of Lloydminster; my mother-in-law, Carol Bazinet, who served as a public trustee in Calgary for over 10 years; my great-great-uncle Thomas John Bentley, who served as a Member of Parliament and served in the Saskatchewan Legislative Assembly as minister of public health under Tommy Douglas's CCF government in 1950.

In his maiden speech, while addressing the opposition, my great-great-uncle said:

I would like to congratulate all those who have spoken before me; however, that would be presumptuous on my part. They all did well. They expressed the opinions they felt. Some expressed opinions that I am going to heartily disagree with before I sit down, but, nevertheless, they were opinions they had a right to express and they were properly done so in this House. The rest of us had a right to hear them to know what the various opinions are.

I think this truly reflects the open dialogue that we are hoping to achieve with our opposition over the next four years, and I look forward to working alongside our counterparts on the other side of the floor. Though we may disagree on something, I hope to maintain the respect with my friends across the floor. May they continue to challenge us properly to ensure that this province is the best one possible.

I think my great-great-uncle would be proud of what our government has committed to in regard to restoring public health care here. He dreamed for all Canadians to have access to public health care, and we as a government must ensure we do what we can to repair and maintain it here in Alberta.

During the election I received a heartfelt endorsement from my Aunt Rae and Uncle Paul Douglas. In a letter they sent me during the campaign they both said: Graham, you will do very well because you have a heart that will guide you through all of your challenges. Sadly, my uncle passed away two weeks before the election after a long battle with cancer. I was told he was watching this campaign with a lot of interest and excitement. My uncle shared a lot with me and my sister. I think the greatest thing that he shared with me was to give back to your family and your community. Funnily enough, the first thing my aunt did when seeing me at my uncle's funeral was to introduce me to the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. It was important for her that I learn to respect your fellow counterparts regardless of our differences.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my mother and father, Don and Debbie, and my sister Melanie for always supporting my dreams. Words cannot convey how you have positively contributed to my life. To my wife, Monique, and my children – Alex, Ben, and Lily – I want to apologize for the burden that this job is going to have on you. I want you to understand that my colleagues and I are here to work to make Alberta a better place, and I want to thank you from the bottom of my heart for the sacrifices you're making for Alberta.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Would anybody like to respond under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw talked of his love for the Stampeders. As another Calgary MLA I am definitely rooting for them as well.

Now, the hon. member spoke of a dedicated teacher helping him when he needed some assistance with his learning while in school, and I know the hon. member also has kids in the current school system. I was wondering if he would be able to, you know, elaborate on the impact that that teacher had on him and sort of contrast it with his children's current experience and how he as an MLA would be supporting that in the House.

Mr. Sucha: Well, thank you, hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. You know, at the time when I went to school it was in the early '90s, and we had a lot of support that was going into the public education system. So my teacher had the time, because the classroom sizes were smaller, to really support me in these efforts. The challenge that my children have had going to school in south Calgary is just the capacity issue.

You know, it's great to see that our government is committed to working towards building new schools in the south end of Calgary. I personally will not see any in my riding, but that's a good thing. All of the students coming in are from out of my riding, and they need a place to go to school. A lot of them are going in there, and it will really help alleviate a lot of the pressures that we see. I think that as we move forward with open transparency, when it comes to building and moving forward with things like modular classrooms, the fair choices will be made for the people of Calgary and for the people of Alberta as well.

The Acting Speaker: Any other comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, would anyone else like to respond to the Speech from the Throne? I will invite the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise today. While certainly not for the first time in this Assembly, it's most definitely the first opportunity that I've had to respond to the throne speech. I am both humbled and privileged to represent my constituents in this Chamber. I am humbled and privileged by the opportunity that my constituents have given me to serve on behalf of the good people of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

To begin, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my family. My wife, Tiffany, is the love of my life, as I mentioned to you when I was introducing her earlier this week in this Chamber. We started dating when I was about 16 years old, and we've now been married happily for 15 years. She is my moral compass, and every day I strive to be the man that she thinks I am. I also want to thank our son Markus, who is 19 years old this year, and our eight-year-old twins, Austin and Chyanne. The lessons I've learned in life are dwarfed by the lessons I have learned in fatherhood. I love being a dad. To me it is my most important job, and it will always be my favourite job. I know that for my family the time I spend working away from them is hard. I thank them for their steadfast support. I want them to know that I am working hard to leave this province a better place for them, and I want them to be proud of me.

I firmly believe, Mr. Speaker, that families build strong communities and that strong communities support families. These are the values that I was raised with. Almost 40 years ago my father, Pat Nixon, arrived in Alberta, a homeless teenager. At the time my father was so deep in the prison of addiction that he would not even have dreamed about seeking the same opportunities that have drawn so many to this province.

However, he did find his opportunity, absolute and life changing, in serving others. In launching what would become the Mustard Seed, one of Canada's most respected not-for-profit homeless organizations, my father not only reaffirmed his faith in the basic goodness of mankind but set about changing lives for the better.

Together with my mom, Lise, they dedicated their lives to living out their faith and helping the homeless population of this province. Along the way they taught me and my five brothers – Jeremy, Daniel, Ryan, Tyler, and Shane; that’s what they’d have to do, say it fast like that to make sure that we were all in the van – the true nature of service, introducing us to a much larger world at a very early age.

Looking back at my father’s journey, Mr. Speaker, for me it really emphasizes how truly amazing Alberta and Canada are. My father went from being an involuntary guest of the Attorney General at times to eventually being a distinguished guest of the Governor General of Canada and the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, receiving the Order of Canada and the Alberta Order of Excellence.

He and my mother’s unwavering dedication to helping their neighbours has always inspired me. To help those in need in our community is something we all should strive to do each day. My over 30 years of involvement working with the Mustard Seed has had a profound effect on my life, whether serving soup as a boy in the meal line or serving as the executive director as a man. For me, growing up at the Mustard Seed meant learning the difference between helping others and helping others help themselves. Both are vital, Mr. Speaker.

I look forward to applying this principle as a member of the 29th Legislature. I also want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I come to this House fully aware of the primary responsibility to which I have been entrusted: representing the good people of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre to the best of my abilities. I pledge to be a strong advocate for a region which includes over 40,000 of the province’s most honest and hardest working citizens, spread across 25,000 square kilometres of the finest country on God’s green Earth.

Our communities are proud communities, with a long history of electing strong, uncompromising leaders. Premier John E. Brownlee represented this region as did the first woman appointed to Alberta’s cabinet, Irene Parlby. Over time our region also elected long-time Official Opposition leader Bob Clark and my good friend Ty Lund, who served this Assembly for over 20 years. And who can forget, Mr. Speaker, democratic reformer and Member of Parliament, my good friend, Myron Thompson, who continues to serve the people of Sundre as a town councillor to this very day, almost 50 years of community service.

We are also home to a proud First Nations people, including the O’Chiese, the Sunchild, and the Stoney.

However, the fact is that our communities, like many across rural Alberta, have gone ignored by successive governments that have turned their backs on the conservative values that make Alberta strong.

The largest urban municipality in our riding is Rocky Mountain House. It serves a regional district of more than 30,000 Albertans, with over a million Albertans visiting a year. Expanding medical service in this region is long overdue. Rocky Mountain House has been promised a hospital for many years and has been told for many years that they are at the top of the priority list. But, sadly, it still has not happened, Mr. Speaker. It needs to happen. Rocky Mountain House needs a new hospital.

Meanwhile in Sundre local citizens have experienced the devastating effects of flooding on several occasions yet remain at the end of the line every time mitigation projects are considered.

When it comes to basic infrastructure, all municipalities in our constituency and across Alberta would greatly benefit from the certainty of long-term, predictable funding. Certainly, nowhere would that be more appreciated than Rimbey, where the community continues to depend on wooden pipes. Mr. Speaker, wooden pipes. Politics needs to be removed from infrastructure funding, and it needs to happen now for the long-term success of our communities.

For the first time in 44 years we have a new government here in Edmonton, and I truly had hoped this government would take a different approach. However, if the recent throne speech and the government policies are any indication, it seems I will have my work cut out for me helping this new government to understand rural issues.

Communities like Rocky Mountain House, Caroline, Nordegg, and Sundre are significantly supported by Alberta’s energy industry for employment and economic activities. The government’s promised royalty review, which is taking place now, is already damaging confidence and killing jobs in my communities. I hear from people daily, both employees and employers, about unemployment and the effects of this government’s policy on our industries. Meanwhile Alberta’s second-largest industry, agriculture, remains vital for communities like Bentley, Rimbey, and Eckville, yet this vital industry was completely ignored in this government’s throne speech.

As a representative for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre I consider it my privilege to provide this government with a robust education on rural concerns. In addition, as both the Official Opposition whip and the critic for democracy and accountability I am dedicated to advocating for the long-overdue changes Albertans deserve. For far too long successive governments have diminished the role of the individual Member of this Legislative Assembly. Over the better part of a decade the previous government tied itself in knots to avoid democratic reform, sometimes going to great lengths to prevent the systematic change necessary to ensure true accountability.

In the case of fixed election dates the previous government implemented a faulty half measure, then broke the spirit of the law at the first possible opportunity. In the case of implementing the public right to recall failed MLAs, several previous administrations rejected the notion outright. All the while MLA compensation increased, citizen frustration increased, and voter engagement dwindled. Rather than truly address the democratic deficit, previous administrations chose to further centralize the power in the executive under the misguided belief that it would somehow increase the government’s capability to operate quality services more efficiently. History has proven this line of thinking to be patently false.

Without accountability to the public, those managing our province led us to a place where our province spent 20 per cent more than the Canadian average while providing below-average service. Deficits have increased, debt is increasing, and bureaucratic red tape is increasing. Rather than a new birth of freedom, Albertans were ignored in favour of a government of the cronies, by the cronies, for the cronies.

If I could offer one piece of advice to my fellow members, it is this. Alberta is a business, and all indications are that our company is in trouble. The time for listening to managers is over, Mr. Speaker. The time for listening to our customers has arrived. It’s time to get back to the representative democracy principles that have made Alberta strong. We as MLAs were elected to represent the people and the interests of our constituencies first.

This means giving voters more opportunity to engage in our democracy and ensuring that governments are held accountable not just on election day but every day. It is not enough to simply call for reform; we need to implement it in a practical sense. We need to show a new generation of Albertans how great debate can be used to bring people together for a common cause. We need to demonstrate for all Canadians that empowering citizens makes our democracy stronger. Like previous generations, we need to verify for the world that democracy and freedom are entwined for all time and that freedom is not a weakness; indeed, it is our greatest strength.

In this regard I commend the government for passing legislation to ban corporate union donations. I was proud to vote for that bill. This is a good first step, but it is only one step. We need to continue to work to preserve our democracy and improve accountability in government. I look forward to working with all members of this House in bringing about change and standing up for all Albertans.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I ask for unanimous consent of the House to revert for a notice of motion.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Notices of Motions

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I rise to give notice of Bill 9, the Appropriation Act, 2015.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

The Acting Speaker: Would anyone like to speak under 29(2)(a) with regard to the last member's address?

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I am really delighted to have learned more about the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, his work with the Mustard Seed, and his dedication to people in need in his communities and throughout Alberta. I really want to thank him. Sometimes we don't see this side of people in this Assembly. Knowing his background and the background of his family and his dedication to, I know, a very, very difficult and challenging work setting and opportunities and raising funds and so on, I'm really honoured that he has shared his story with us.

Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Well, with the small time we have left, Mr. Speaker, I'll just thank the hon. member for her words. The homeless population in Alberta is something that has been near and dear to my family from the day that I first arrived on this planet. I think that we are judged by how we treat the least fortunate amongst us, and I think that's something that both sides of this aisle can agree on.

The Acting Speaker: Noticing the time, the House stands adjourned until Monday at 1:30 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 1st Session (2015)

Activity to November 19, 2015

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter numbers until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us reflect. Each of us reflects in a different manner, some of us with a prayer based on our faith belief, others in a manner of self-contemplation. In whatever manner you choose, please remember the victims of the horrendous events in Mali and the incidents in the vacant streets of Brussels. Please continue to consider how we in this little corner of our globe might make this world a safer place and one not controlled by fear.

Hon. members, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark. I would invite you to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
 True patriot love in all thy sons command.
 Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
 Il sait porter la croix!
 Ton histoire est une épopée
 Des plus brillants exploits.
 God keep our land glorious and free!
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade and Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly His Excellency Pavel Hrnčič, ambassador of the Czech Republic. His Excellency is accompanied today by Mr. Jerry Jelínek, the Czech Republic's honorary consul in Calgary. I'm pleased to say that there is great potential to build on the Czech Republic and Alberta's strong relationship, which includes ties in trade and investment, education and culture. Albertans value our relationship with the Czech Republic, and this visit is a great opportunity to explore new areas of collaboration in energy, renewable energy, agriculture, information and communications technologies, and other innovative industries. We will continue to work together to strengthen our existing ties and foster new ones to ensure continued growth and success for both of our jurisdictions.

His Excellency Mr. Hrnčič and Mr. Jelínek are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. I would now ask our esteemed guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly MLA Jane Shin, who is an ND member visiting us today from the B.C. Legislature to see the great work that we can accomplish here with an ND government in Alberta. I had the pleasure of being introduced by her in beautiful British Columbia, and I'm honoured to return the favour. Jane was first elected as the MLA for Burnaby-Lougheed in May 2013 and currently serves as the opposition spokesperson for small business and deputy spokesperson for trade and multiculturalism. Prior to her election, she was actively involved in community service organizations such as the Canadian Red Cross and the Multicultural Society of B.C. She is the first Canadian of Korean descent elected to the Legislature of B.C. I kindly ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Are there any school groups to mention today? The hon. member.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of home-schoolers and their parents and chaperones from my constituency of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. As I say their names, I would ask them to rise and please stand: Ina Hofstede, Felicia Wierenga, Rianne Viersen, Andrew Viersen, Sharon VanAssen, Kevin Tiemstra, Beatrice Tiemstra, Fettje Viersen, Helena Kruidhof, Eric Kruidhof, Rebecca Hofstede, Esther Hofstede, Mark Wierenga, Leanne Wierenga, Rachel Wierenga, Kelvin Viersen, Thomas Viersen, Daphne VanderZyl, Doug VanderZyl, Wesley VanderZyl, Ian VanAssen, Andrea VanAssen, Esther VanAssen, Saralyn VanAssen, Jayden Tiemstra, and Graham Tiemstra. I would ask that they please receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Good job with the pronunciation, hon. member.

Are there any other school groups? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly three family members of one of our current pages, Erin de Kleer. Joining us today in the Speaker's gallery are her father, Rob de Kleer, and her oma and opa, Tina and Pete Meyer. While Rob and Erin reside in the constituency of Spruce Grove-St. Albert, Tina and Pete reside in my constituency of Airdrie. This year actually marks their 60th wedding anniversary. They're here to observe Erin in her role as a page at the Legislature. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Minister of Seniors.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of delegates from Japan being hosted by Alberta Innovates: Health Solutions. They are here sharing ideas about a variety of subjects related to health research, training, and innovation. They include Dr. Suematsu, president of the Japan Agency for Medical Research and Development; Dr. Saya, professor in the Institute for Advanced Medical Research at Keio University; Mr. Noda, managing director, department of international affairs, AMED; Dr. Michalak, as well as Dr. Valentine, who is the interim CEO of Alberta Innovates: Health Solutions. I ask that my honoured guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very honoured to introduce Jackie Manthorne, president and CEO of the Canadian Cancer Survivor Network. This is a national organization of patients, families, survivors, friends, community partners, and sponsors. Its mission is to promote the very best standard of care, support, follow-up, and quality of life for patients and survivors of cancer. Prior to joining the Canadian Cancer Survivor Network, Ms Manthorne was, for 12 years, the CEO of a national health care charity working in the area of breast cancer. She currently resides in Ottawa with her husband. Good luck to the Redblacks. They have an adult daughter and are foster parents to teenagers.

The Cancer Survivor Network is in Alberta this week to talk about survivorship and the challenges that cancer survivors face after treatment ends. Jackie is in the public gallery. At this time I'd ask her to stand and receive the hearty welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure indeed to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three outstanding members of our incredible caucus operations team led ably by director of operations Kelly Bickford, joined today by Caitlin Pettifor and Saira Wagner. The operations team supports our caucus and staff to ensure the smooth functioning of the day-to-day actions and tasks that are so important to our success here as a team. They do a fantastic job. I'd ask that they stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a second introduction for you today. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly several guests joining us from the Edmonton Korean Canadian Association. I'm pleased to note that we have a large contingent representing the association today who are excited to watch the proceedings this afternoon. I'd ask them to rise as a group and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my distinct pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some of the members of our caucus communications team. Led by Director Murray Langdon and ably supported by Reakash Walters, Eric Rice, and Leah Orr, the communications team works hard to support our caucus in media engagement and overall communications work. It is work that is near and dear to my heart, and I appreciate what they do for us. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the family of the late Rolf Reiner Albert. Mr. Albert first came to Alberta in 1953 with his wife, Elisabeth, and their first child, Sigrid, who join us today in the gallery. For just over 30 years, 1957 to 1987, Mr. Albert served our province as a photographer for the Public Affairs Bureau. Over this long and dedicated career he photographed visiting dignitaries, local culture, important events, and the beautiful landscape of Alberta. Specifically, he was the official photographer for several of the royal visits from England and several of our Premiers and their cabinets during that time. Several thousand of his pictures are actually preserved in the Alberta archives, and some are on the walls of the Legislature buildings. It is my honour and privilege to introduce to you Mr. Albert's wife, Elisabeth Albert – they were happily married 39 years – his son Reverend Fred Albert and his wife, Gina; his daughter Ms Sigrid Albert; and a friend, Bruce Mohacsy. I ask our guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House a home-schooling family from my constituency of Stony Plain. As part of their curriculum focusing on government this year, Gaylene Layden brought her two children to my office. The questions they asked me were thoughtful and provoked good discussion. Gaylene, Kayla, and Adam, please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my incredible constituency staff. Since joining my office shortly after the election in May, Maria Vicente and Denis Sidlin have proven invaluable not only to me but also to my constituents in Edmonton-Decore. Also joining us today are the proud parents of Maria, Cosima and José Vicente. I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. member, aren't you fortunate that you don't have to wear a certain coloured shirt here today in the House?

Are there any other guests for introductions today? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and to the Assembly my constituency assistants, Emily Springer and Colette Fluet-Howrish. Emily joined my office in June and Colette joined in September, and since that time they have become an indispensable part of my life as MLA for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Whether it's preparing for a budget consultation session, accommodating my completely outrageous demands, helping someone with their AISH or WCB files, or patiently explaining why we can't personally pay out of pocket for a constituent's eyeglasses, they provide dedicated service to the constituents that I represent every day. They do it all with smiles on their faces, or if they absolutely can't smile, they at least grit their teeth so it looks like a smile. I ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some friends of mine and absolute leaders in the sector of disability services, Paul Fujishige and Jamie Post. If you would please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of guests to introduce today. First, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly several stakeholders from harm reduction based organizations, who are here to witness the debate in the House later this afternoon. Joining us today are Jennifer Vanderschaeghe, Karen Turner, Tia Smith, Sue Belcourt, Maggie McGinn, and Jessica Daniels. Could you please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd also like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Jackie Loewen and John McDonald. Jackie is a constituent of Red Deer-

South and was born with congenital cataracts and developed glaucoma at the age of 13. She is an active volunteer, dedicating her time recently as a CNIB champion, one of the many advocates throughout the province advocating on behalf of those living with vision loss. John is the executive director and regional vice-president for CNIB, who is launching a new campaign today that encourages Albertans to share their wish for a better future for those living with vision loss. I'd like to ask both of them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Leduc No. 1 Energy Discovery Centre

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is a province rich in history and represents the cultures of many working together to build a prosperous future. My beautiful constituency of Leduc-Beaumont is no different. Currently there are many groups working hard to preserve this history. Today I'd like to just recognize one of those places, the birthplace of the modern-day oil industry, Leduc No. 1 Energy Discovery Centre. It's not over in your riding; it's in mine. It's situated on the corner of highways 19 and 60 among some of the most beautiful farmland in the county.

Leduc No. 1 offers the opportunity to learn about the history of oil and energy exploration in Alberta. This history began in 1947, when Imperial Oil, after many failed attempts, successfully drilled for crude oil in Leduc, and this discovery undoubtedly changed all of our lives. The discovery centre has exhibits, including the world's largest drill bit, displays on the oil sands, pipelines, and the Canadian Petroleum Hall of Fame, and is one of the only sites in the world where visitors and tourists can safely explore an operational oil rig. Visitors will find incredible pictures from the original exploration – I suggest that you guys go because it's quite incredible – and an art exhibit showcasing perspectives on the industry from some of the finest artists in Alberta. There's even a belt buckle display, donated by the hon. Minister of Energy's late uncle Gordon McCuaig, which is quite a thing to see.

It's not just about history there, however. The interpretive centre has become a place to learn about alternative energy sources, including solar arrays, interactive kinetic energy displays, and some exciting, upcoming new green energy projects. The site is a fantastic example of how to honour and showcase our history and still look to the future to learn new ways of doing things.

Not along ago our government announced that it would increase funding support for tourism, heritage, the arts, and nonprofit organizations. This is fantastic news for organizations like Leduc No. 1 and the other hard-working heritage and cultural societies in the constituency.

I encourage you all to visit it because it's an incredible place.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Carbon Tax

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are worried about their jobs. More of them are hurting than ever before, and now this NDP government has broken trust with them. At no time during the election did the NDP tell Albertans that they would introduce a $3 billion-a-year carbon tax on everything made in Alberta. That's on top of the $1.5 billion in tax increases that the NDP did campaign on. To the Premier: why should Albertans trust her government on anything when she is saddling them with billions of dollars in new taxes when they can least afford it?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. During the election our platform said that we will phase out coal-fired electricity generation to reduce smog and air pollution, and this is exactly what we're doing. We're moving forward, and we've done so with workers. We also have a job-creation strategy. When we've been working with workers and employers, they told us that it was really important that we address our international reputation. That's why CNRL, Suncor, Shell, Cenovus, CAPP, TransAlta, and Capital Power are all coming and saying that this is good for Alberta and good for Alberta jobs.

Mr. Jean: Yes, they did, but I don't work for big oil; I work for Albertans.

This new tax on everything will hurt Alberta's economy and put more Albertans out of work. By the way, it won't actually reduce any emissions. Every product that is exported from Alberta requires electricity or fuel. This new tax will make everything we export much more expensive and less competitive. This tax on everything will hurt the export of energy products, forestry products, agricultural products, and manufactured products. Why is this government trying to cripple our export sectors, which create most Alberta jobs?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, just to continue with the list: Grand Chief Alexis, the Calgary Chamber of commerce, the leader of the Alberta Liberal Party. Employers are telling us that they need to have a better international reputation so we can actually get the pipelines built that the member opposite failed to do when he was in Ottawa. This government has got a plan to address the environment, address climate change, and create jobs, and the member opposite knows it.

Mr. Jean: The NDP should stop sticking up for big business. [laughter] This carbon tax will be a job killer. Exporting industries will lose out and employ fewer people. But this tax will also take money out of the pockets of every Albertan, and you should stop laughing about that. Every single one of us will pay more to drive vehicles, heat our homes, turn on the lights. Every Albertan will pay more for products produced in Alberta or goods transported to Alberta. The Premier never campaigned on any of this. What makes the Premier think she has a mandate to kill jobs and raise the prices of everything for normal, everyday Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We did campaign on taking leadership on the climate change strategy, and that's what we're doing. Leadership is bringing forward a variety of different stakeholders, including environmental NGOs as well as job creators, industry, and coming up with a plan that's going to help build Alberta jobs and build pipelines because we need to make sure that we've got an opportunity to invest, to be leaders. The world is looking to us for that, and so are stakeholders from throughout Alberta. They've come forward. They've said that this a strategy they can get fully behind and that it will create jobs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jean: The media release on the carbon tax says that it is "revenue neutral." Not only is the NDP hurting our economy, but now they have decided to change the meaning of words. A new tax which brings in new money and which takes more money out of Alberta's economy is not revenue neutral. Albertans will pay $3 billion in new taxes thanks to this NDP government. The government will spend the new money. No one will have any of their existing taxes go down. Can anyone over there explain how this is revenue neutral?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Our government is working with leaders throughout Alberta to come up with a reasonable way to move forward, and this has been seen as being very moderate. Albertans want to be able to pay their bills, and they will be able to pay their bills if they have jobs, and they will only have jobs if they have a strong international reputation. We're really proud of the fact that we're moving forward with this plan. Albertans are proud, and we're going to move forward, and we're going to have a reputation that can make us all hold our heads high.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, revenue neutral means that the increases in the new taxes are offset by decreases in other taxes. The whole point is that you use people's inclination to avoid taxes as an incentive for them to reduce their emissions. Good idea. That is not happening here. This is a new, added tax. Nothing is getting reduced. The government is taxing more and spending more. Albertans will lose jobs, and they will become poorer. Will the Premier admit that this is nothing more than a tax grab on the backs of Alberta's hard-working people?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our plan is fully focused on making sure that we support Albertans and that we take leadership on the climate. To make that happen, the revenue that we collect will be put to work here in Alberta. We're not going to wait for Ottawa to tell us what to do. We came up with and built an Alberta strategy that will invest money back into Alberta businesses and the economy. People who are emitting at a higher rate will be discouraged from doing so by having a price on that carbon. We're also going to be making adjustments to how families make ends meet and in support of small businesses, First Nations, and people working in the coal industry, and we're really proud of that.

Mr. Jean: British Columbia has a revenue-neutral carbon tax. In B.C. the government is required by law to prove that carbon tax revenues are offset by other tax reductions. When they created their carbon tax, they reduced other taxes to keep government revenues at the same levels. Business taxes went down; personal taxes went down. None of that is happening here in Alberta. In fact, taxes under the Alberta NDP only go one way: way, way up. Why is the government telling Albertans that this new tax on everything is revenue neutral when it is clearly not?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, we're taking the revenue that's being generated from this and investing it back into Alberta's economy. When the member opposite was asked this morning if he was proposing a plan like B.C.'s, he said that he wouldn't introduce a carbon plan. He would wait three and a half years until the next election before he came up with a solution. We're working to protect our environment and protect our jobs today.

The Speaker: Third question.

Mr. Jean: Three billion dollars in new taxes is not the solution Albertans want. Mr. Speaker, the rollout of this new tax on everything was a rushed affair, and it has to lead to questions. Some of what the Premier said yesterday doesn't match what is in the actual climate change report. Yesterday, after telling us the whopper that this tax is revenue neutral, the Premier said that in the future the carbon tax could be used to pay down debt, but the word "debt" does not appear anywhere in the climate change report. How exactly will a revenue-neutral tax ever generate extra money to pay down debt?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, this strategy has been endorsed by a variety of stakeholders, including Brian Ferguson from Cenovus: "We fully support the Government's new climate policy," Lorraine Mitchelmore from Shell: "Today's announcement sets Canadian oil on the path to becoming the most ..." [interjections] – would you like to hear the answer? – "... environmentally and economically ..." [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. minister, could you please finish your statement?

2:00

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "Today's announcement sets Canadian oil on the path to becoming the most environmentally and economically competitive in the world." We need to make sure that we have a strong international reputation. To make that possible, we need to take action in Alberta, and we're doing just that.

Mr. Jean: Standing up for big oil. What a shock.

It isn't a surprise that the Premier's spin doesn't agree with the report. In fact, the report doesn't actually agree with the report. In one place the report says that the carbon tax will cost families $500 a year more for fuel, electricity, and natural gas. Our calculations using the numbers from the report suggest that tax increases just for fuel and natural gas are over $590 a year. Can the Premier tell us exactly how much more the average Alberta family, not corporations, will pay for fuel for heating their homes and for electricity under this new NDP carbon tax?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, we're absolutely open to hearing feedback from Albertans on how we can continue to invest the money that's generated through this fund, but it's important that we have a strong reputation. Part of that is having a realistic price on carbon, and the heads of CNRL, Shell, Cenovus – members opposite say that people endorsing this are extremists. Would he say that those members are extremists? I don't think so. They're employers that create jobs in Alberta, and we're proud to move forward in partnership.

Mr. Jean: I mentioned that the word "debt" isn't in the climate change report. Another important topic that isn't mentioned is oil pipelines and market access. This carbon tax will take at least $45 billion away from Albertans by 2030, not Alberta corporations but Albertans. It will kill jobs and make every product we buy more expensive. Everyone will feel it. But maybe, just maybe there's some good news here somewhere. Can the Premier name any opponents of Alberta's pipelines who will now support our efforts at market access because of this great, new, NDP carbon tax?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. I am really proud of the fact that we had environmental NGOs join industry and say that they're in support of this. For example, the former vice-president of the United States Al Gore came out publicly in support of this, and we know that he was one of the people that . . . [interjections] You asked for an environmentalist. He was absolutely not keen on moving the pipelines forward under the previous model. He thinks this is a balanced, fair model moving forward and . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: I was having some difficulty hearing the minister. Could you please proceed? [interjections] Hon. members. Could you start again, Madam Minister?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's nice to hear people who often refer to climate change denial in a way that acknowledges the environmental role that environmental NGOs play in our nation and in our industry. In Alberta we're really excited to work in partnership with environmental organizations as well as industry to move forward with having the strongest reputation we possibly can because a strong reputation is going to mean good results for the climate and good results for jobs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Climate Change Strategy

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, just yesterday the NDP government unmasked their climate tax policy. If other energy producers in large economies are not subject to the same standards that Alberta is, it will put Alberta workers at a huge disadvantage, and it won't help the climate. You know what? Albertans want to do their fair share. In this light, what assurances can the government give Albertans that China, India, the U.S., and other oil-producing countries will adopt the same standards so we're not at a disadvantage?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We're really proud of having a built-in-Alberta strategy that's going to absolutely help our international reputation. Obviously, today the first ministers are meeting in Ottawa. It's really important that Alberta be a leader instead of being the one that everyone looks to for blame. We're really proud to be moving forward to Ottawa with a made-in-Alberta strategy that will also be brought forward to the international table in France later this month. We're absolutely willing to do our part. I know Albertans are. We do want the rest of the world to do their part as well.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I didn't hear any assurances there.

Given that the Premier has said before that she's not picking winners and losers, this policy shows otherwise. The losers are anyone involved in the coal industry. We've been told that we're transitioning out of coal, but there's no news about what we will transition into. Can you tell those people in Drumheller, Wabamun, Hanna, and Wainwright that you are taking their jobs away? When will you replace them with new jobs, and what will those new jobs be?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. The local MLAs have absolutely wanted to make sure that everyone's understanding what an important industry it is in their communities, but we also know how important our air is. Every single Albertan breathes our air, and we need to make sure that we're doing everything we can to keep it clean. We're working with communities and the businesses that they rely on to develop adjustment plans that make sense for each individual community. Absolutely, it's important to us to make sure that we have new jobs created, and we're working in partnership with those industries to make sure that we can help transition away from coal.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, given that the NDP job losses are now and for sure and the job gains are later and completely uncertain, Albertans deserve to know before this Premier takes away their livelihoods, especially those who are losing jobs where coal plants are shut down: when are the plants shutting, what will the compensation be for the employees, and what liability will the taxpayers have for closing things down that are operating legally today?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There was a plan to phase out coal under the previous government, and as the member opposite just asked the question, I'm sure he's well aware that it's important to have negotiations with the communities, with the employees, and with the employers to make sure that we have a fair system. Here, for example, is what TransAlta said. "The Premier has committed to an orderly transition that ensures system reliability and price stability for our customers, given that it is now certain that coal-fired generation will be phased out by 2030." It's going to be a transition. It's going to be a 15-year strategy, and they want to make sure that they can continue to move forward with a reputation they're all proud of, and so do we.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Seniors' Housing

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During some of my meetings with my constituents many seniors in my community have expressed concerns over housing. Many of these constituents are on fixed incomes and cannot cope with higher housing costs. I have constituents who are well into their 70s who are working full-time, living paycheque to paycheque. Their housing costs equate to 60 per cent of their income. To the Minister of Seniors: what programs are available to seniors to assist them with independent living?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. All Albertans deserve to live in a safe and secure home no matter what their income, and this year our investment will add more than 800 new social housing and seniors' lodge units across Alberta, something we can all be very proud of. We also provide an Alberta seniors' benefit to 150,000 low-income seniors every month, which means that more money is in their pockets to ensure that they can have their finances meet their needs.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: given that your performance measures for the budget state a target of lowering the percentage of housing facilities in poor condition in order to raise the percentage of those in good condition, why has the percentage of housing facilities in fair condition, 62 per cent, remained stagnant?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We are making investments in affordable housing, but we have inherited over a billion dollars in deferred maintenance costs from the previous government's failing to maintain their current stock. This is an important problem, and it's going to require significant investment, but it won't be solved overnight, and it certainly wouldn't be solved by cutting $9 billion in infrastructure spending, as proposed by the Official Opposition.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Drever: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta is forecast to reach 1 million seniors by year 2030, which will represent 20 per cent of our population, what infrastructure investments is this government making in order to meet that forecast? What investments are being made in long-term care?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We are absolutely committed to ensuring that we build 2,000 long-term care beds. This was a commitment we made in the election and that we're thrilled to be moving forward on. It's really important to us that everyone has the right care in the right place at the right time, and that includes long-term care in a variety of communities as close as possible to where seniors currently live. The opposition parties want to allow for cuts in the budget; instead, we're absolutely committed towards moving forward in a reasonable way, increasing investment in infrastructure, and ensuring that seniors can live with dignity and respect.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

2:10 Pipeline Development

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's energy industry supports the government's plan to address climate change, but it knows we need to increase market access, and pipelines are a safer path to achieve this. No new pipelines were created under previous governments here or in Ottawa, leaving the industry without the infrastructure they need. To the Minister of Energy: what are you doing to support new energy market access, creating much-needed new jobs?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, our climate leadership plan is a good first step. We've engaged industry and environmental groups to move forward to get that new market access that we need to tidewater, both east and west.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that pipeline safety continues to be a concern for many Albertans, to the same minister: what are you doing to address concerns around pipeline safety and spills to ensure that these pipelines are safe?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, Alberta enjoys some of the toughest regulations, not just in Canada but in North America, with the AER. We are continually working with them to make sure our pipelines are safe. We also have been looking, when there are spills, at what we can do to make things better and get a great environmental record moving forward.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government has committed to consulting with and learning from indigenous people, again to the Minister of Energy: what are you doing to ensure proper First Nations consultation around pipeline projects?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, in all our departments we are working under the Premier's direction to look at our processes in working with First Nations groups. In my case our department is looking through policies to see where we can strengthen processes, and we're also working with the AER in their part to see how we can strengthen processes in working with our aboriginal partners.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Energy Policies

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Quote: we can't wait for others to act; we can't wait for others to determine Albertans' future. End quote. Does this sound familiar? That was a former Premier. He put a price on industrial emissions. He started the building of government-subsidized carbon storage facilities, but it wasn't enough for radical activists. Greenpeace is still demanding that the oil sands be shut down, and politicians in America still call our oil dirty. How does a new $3 billion tax on everything do anything else besides make every Albertan poorer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. You know, Albertans are not followers. Albertans expect us to lead. This is a made-in-Alberta plan that takes action before plans are imposed on us. That is why this plan led to such historic co-operation between oil sands and environmental groups. It is time for Alberta to lead again.

Mr. Loewen: No answer there.

Given that NDP MLAs themselves have called our oil dirty and given that now the same people who contributed to our image problem are now saying that they're going to fix it and since the NDP strategy is to tax everyone and everything, raise power bills, and keep more of our oil in the ground and since the NDP bragged that this $3 billion tax will help us get our product to market, will the Premier now start advocating for the Northern Gateway pipeline? Will she start advocating for the Keystone XL pipeline? Or does she prefer that the oil stay in the ground?

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, this climate leadership plan will be put to work right here in Alberta, making sure that all revenue builds our economy and creates jobs and reduces pollution, promoting greater energy efficiency. Let's just go through a little tour of the validators on this matter, shall we? Steve Williams of Suncor:

Today we reach a milestone in ensuring Alberta's valuable resource is accompanied by leading carbon policy. It's time that Alberta is seen as a climate, energy and innovation leader. This plan will make one of the world's largest oil-producing regions a leader in addressing the climate change challenge.

This from one of the largest employers in the Leader of the Official Opposition's riding.

The Speaker: I hope the hon. member doesn't take us on too wide a tour next time because time is very valuable.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Loewen: Again no answer. No surprise.

Mr. Speaker, Wildrose cares about the environment and our economy. Given that this new carbon tax will be nothing short of a massive experiment with Alberta's economy, with no guarantees that it will reduce emissions, does the Premier know what the total cost of these climate change initiatives and creating a massive new bureaucracy will be to government, to consumers, and to the industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. You know, the Official Opposition is really the only voice speaking out against the leadership that Alberta is taking on climate. The Official Opposition is out on an island alone, and I would suggest that without action on climate change, the sea levels are going to start to rise around that island.

You know, the chairman of CNRL shared with Alberta his thoughts on this matter: Alberta wins with today's announcement. "The announcement is a significant step forward for Alberta" and for the industry. It was a historic display of co-operation yesterday.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Air Quality in Alberta

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's climate change strategy was announced yesterday, and I want to acknowledge the government's effort to move Alberta forward on this critical file, that touches many ministries. Now, your focus on methane raises concern amongst Alberta farmers. Cattle, sheep, goats, elk, and bison are all ruminants, and they produce methane. Now, the only way to reduce these emissions would be to legislate reduced livestock production or to legislate a change in ruminants' digestive physiology. To the agriculture minister: are either of these measures being contemplated by your government?

Ms Phillips: I would like to thank the hon. member for the question, Mr. Speaker. Of course, this climate change plan does come with a methane reduction program within the oil and gas sector. It is a product of collaboration, again, between environmental groups and industry. The fact of the matter is that, yes, in agriculture we have certain inputs, certain outputs. Moving forward, we will work together with the agriculture sector on this matter, but this plan contains within it a robust approach to methane reduction in the oil and gas sector.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that improved air quality is one of the stated objectives of the climate change strategy and given that the Health minister today trumpeted how the measures announced would improve Alberta's air quality and respiratory health, to the Health minister: is it your position that breathing Alberta air is hazardous to the health of Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Of course, I have jobs to make sure that people who have asthma, which about 10 per cent of Albertans do, have resources available to help them access supports when they need them. There's nothing scarier than not being able to breathe. It's also our responsibility to make sure that we have a plan to make our air cleaner moving forward, and that's why I'm so proud that we're moving to a phase-out of coal within 15 years.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that questions over air quality have been raised by both the environment minister and the Health minister, suggesting that breathing could be a health hazard, and given that Travel Alberta's award winning tourism brand slogan is Remember to Breathe, is the Culture and Tourism minister working with Travel Alberta on a new slogan?

Mr. Eggen: No, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the question as well. In fact, we are using Remember to Breathe. It works very well in places around the world that have serious air pollution issues, and certainly it's one of the most successful advertisement plans that we've had in the history of Travel Alberta. We're expecting another record year for tourism internationally and locally here in the province of Alberta, and they're going to come to see our wonderful new climate change plan, too.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has introduced a $3 billion carbon tax grab under the pretense of reducing carbon and mitigating climate change. There are jurisdictions around the world that are 30 to 40 years ahead of us on carbon reduction and energy efficiency. To the minister of environment: where's the empirical evidence, the statistical evidence, or case studies showing that these kinds of measures introduced this fast and this extensively do indeed demonstrate an effect of reducing carbon emissions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, this climate leadership plan will ensure that all revenue is recycled back into the economy for purposes of adjustment to support small businesses, making sure that families have the supports they need to make ends meet, and to invest in First Nations communities with municipalities and others. We know that these efforts taken together will bend the curve on emissions, which is exactly what our trading partners have been asking for.

Mr. MacIntyre: Mr. Speaker, it should concern us all that they do not have the evidence to back up their plan. This is a $3 billion carbon tax grab and nothing more, being levied against a tiny population of only 4 million people. For this tax to be truly revenue neutral, we should be seeing it coincide with a proportionate decrease in income tax. When is the minister going to admit that the government has no intentions of implementing a truly revenue-neutral tax? This is nothing more than a tax grab.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the hon. member for the question. You know, there are really two ways to deny the science of climate change. One can do it outright as the Official Opposition has done in the past. That didn't work out so well, so the new, more clever way to deny the science is to suggest that we should do nothing at all.

Mr. MacIntyre: Mr. Speaker, I asked for empirical evidence so that the people of Alberta could have confidence in what this government is proposing, and given that we do not have this empirical evidence, I can only assume that this increase is going to hit the price of every good, every service in the same manner as a PST. Will this government admit that this is their way around the referendum required for a PST, a referendum this government hasn't got the political capital to pass?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the message from Alberta's job creators yesterday was loud and clear. It couldn't have been more clear. For example, the Calgary Chamber of commerce: "Pleased to see our provincial government take a strong stance on climate leadership today. Important for business." Is the hon. member of the Official Opposition seriously suggesting that Alberta's job creators got it wrong in their support for our climate leadership plan?

Mr. Fildebrandt: I've been asking the Minister of Finance for weeks now where he is going to get a 16 per cent boom in revenues for years 4 and 5 of their budget. Yesterday we finally got an answer: the equivalent of a 3 per cent PST on Albertans in the form of a carbon tax. If this tax was truly about the environment and not a cash grab, the government wouldn't have announced it during church and Sunday morning football. Is this a carbon tax intended to protect the environment, or is this a backdoor PST intended to fill their budget hole?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. We are absolutely proud of the plan we brought forth. It has support from industry throughout Alberta and environmentalists as well. In terms of the timing of the announcement, we planned on making the announcement today, and then the first ministers were called to Ottawa today. We wanted to go to Ottawa with everyone knowing what our plan was, not with Ottawa telling Alberta what their plan is, so the made-in-Alberta strategy was announced yesterday.

Mr. Fildebrandt: The same mindless talking points over and over. This carbon tax was advertised as revenue neutral, but it is clearly just a backdoor cash grab from a government with an insatiable appetite for more taxes and more spending. This government has already raised dozens of taxes on Albertans, and this carbon tax will raise the price of virtually everything in the province, an ND PST, if you will. Does this government believe that families really have another $900 a year to feed their insatiable spending addiction?

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. Our government is focused on protecting Alberta's economy, creating good jobs, and stabilizing our core services. What the opposition fails to recognize is what the previous government failed to do. If we do not address climate change, if we do not improve our environmental standards in this province, we are hurting ourselves, and we aren't going to gain that market access. So I'll tell you what we are doing. We're taking leadership; we're showing leadership. We've come out with a most strong environmental climate change strategy, and through our initiatives we are going to be enhancing our economy and creating jobs.

Mr. Fildebrandt: They're not taking leadership; they're taking Albertans' money.

Given that B.C.'s carbon tax was revenue neutral because they actually lowered business and personal income taxes to compensate taxpayers, if this was truly about the environment, this carbon tax would be revenue neutral so that taxpayers would break even, but it's not. This is a greedy tax grab in the guise of helping the environment. Will the government scrap its ND PST and come back to this House with a plan for a revenue-neutral reduction in greenhouse gas emissions?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's nice to see the hon. member is allowed up from the Fildebench every now and then.

Now, we know that members opposite don't want to talk about a plan. They don't want to talk about a plan for at least three and half years, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Point of order.

The Speaker: Do you have a point of order? Noted. Keep going, please.

Ms Hoffman: We know members opposite don't want to talk about a climate change plan for at least three and a half years. They said that they wouldn't talk about it until the election because they don't want to get out of bed in the morning, Mr. Speaker. But Albertans want to get out of bed, and they want to go to work, and the way they're going to make that happen is by having a good reputation and making sure that they can afford to pay their bills. That's exactly what this plan will do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Forest Industry Issues

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government says that it's committed to economic diversification. This diversification is supposed to support industries outside of oil and gas; however, this is not seeming to be the case as another forestry company has been negatively affected. Millar Western just announced that they'll be closing the Boyle lumber mill by February 2017 and that another 91 Alberta workers will lose their jobs. My questions are to the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: what is this government doing to protect forest industry jobs in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for his very pertinent question. Obviously, our government takes very seriously any job loss that occurs in any sector in our province. We recognize that forestry is a critical sector, with over 15,000 hard-working Albertans in forestry, and that the industry is a key economic driver in at least 70 communities. This is exactly why we are moving to diversify our economy, to support our forestry sector, looking for opportunities to add value to our existing sector and partnering with industry to do that.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Spray Lake Sawmills and the Boyle Millar Western operations have suffered from this government's decisions and given that this government has not even placed the member from this industry on its economic advisory panel, can the minister explain what they are doing to include forestry in the economic diversification conversations to enable success for the forest industry in Alberta?

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member again for his question. First and foremost, there isn't a greater champion of the agriculture and forestry sectors than the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry. I can tell you right now that he is heading to Japan next week to look at opportunities to increase our exports, to improve our market access and continue to build on our very healthy and robust relationship with Japan. The high amount of value-added processing activity in Alberta's forestry sector is a success that we need to maintain and build on, and that's exactly what we're going to do.

2:30

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government just increased the tax on fuel by 4 cents and will increase that tax by an additional 7 cents with their climate change rollout and given that lumber mills such as the one in Boyle rely on competitive fuel prices to transport their fibre supply, can the minister explain how an 11-cent increase on fuel is helping forest companies like this in Alberta to sustain and diversify their business?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. First and foremost, our climate leadership plan is focused, again, on supporting Albertans and also on being a leader when it comes to climate. All revenue collected will be reinvested to work here in Alberta, building our economy, creating jobs, reducing pollution, and promoting even greater energy efficiency. I can tell the hon. member that we have an adjustment fund that will help families make ends meet, that will support small businesses, First Nations, and people working in the coal industry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Public Transit

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of the opposition's questions today have been enough to turn a cow's stomach into knots. Hopefully, my question will illuminate rather than ruminate the province's climate leadership initiatives.

Alberta has launched exciting plans to reduce our impact on the environment. Public transit in our cities will support these endeavours. Alberta has grown by 785,000 people in the last 10 years, and the mayors of Edmonton and Calgary promote transit's importance in helping our cities address growing populations. To the Minister of Transportation: what funding is currently . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think you're going to have to be a lot quicker or shorter on your preamble, more on the question. Does the minister wish to respond?

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just heard, before the member trailed off, about public transit. Public transit is a major priority for the government. It's going to continue to be so. We've got some money leftover in GreenTRIP, about $415 million – $130 million is left for the Calgary region and $285 million for other municipalities other than the two biggest cities in the province – so we'll be announcing a third call for applications for GreenTRIP shortly.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that my constituents want to know about LRT in our neighbourhoods, to the Minister of Transportation: what updates do you have on LRT funding in Edmonton?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, I had a very productive meeting with the mayor of Edmonton this morning, and LRT was very prominent among the items that we discussed. So far we've allocated $274 million of GreenTRIP funding to the valley line LRT project in Edmonton. This is in addition to a $200 million interest-free loan and $150 million in funds to match the federal government's contribution to the project. We know that moving people in the big cities is critical, and our government is here to support those cities.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we have a new federal government, to the same minister: how is your ministry communicating with your new federal counterparts about the transportation infrastructure needs and priorities of Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as the hon. member may know and some members on the other side of the House may know as well, there's a new federal government, and I'm very much looking forward to continuing my ongoing dialogue with my counterpart, Minister Sohi, the infrastructure minister in the federal government. We know that the Liberal government in Ottawa has promised $60 billion over 10 years for infrastructure, and we're going to look very closely at how we can co-operate to leverage as much of that money as possible to improve the . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents in Bonnyville-Cold Lake are joining thousands of Albertans who are worried about the government's reckless announcement of a carbon tax. One thing is clear. This is a carbon tax that is taxing everything. Prices on goods and services are bound to increase while families in my ridings are losing their jobs. It will hurt seniors on fixed incomes, it will hurt families, and it will hurt our most vulnerable. How is this government going to offset the pain felt by this new carbon tax at a time when they are already hurting?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. As the Premier said yesterday, every penny raised through the carbon price will be put to work here in Alberta to build our economy, create jobs, and reduce pollution through research and technology. We will ensure that we are helping families and others make ends meet through an adjustment fund. We'll support small business, indigenous peoples, municipalities, and others to make this adjustment. We will ensure that families will not have trouble making ends meet as a result of these policies.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, no answers from over there.

The fact remains that the cost of living is bound to skyrocket thanks to the NDP carbon tax. Given that it is a fact that cost of transportation of goods is going to continue increasing because of this NDP policy, through the increase in the carbon tax, which will in turn result in a cost of hundreds of dollars each year for each and every family, to the minister: how will implementing a carbon tax on Albertan families to pay for corporate welfare programs help Albertans who are out of work?

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again I'll remind the member, as we've stated before, that there is an adjustment fund that's intended to help small businesses, First Nations, people working in the coal industry, and families make ends meet. I'll remind the member as well that that's exactly why the Premier created this ministry, and through it we have increased ATB's capacity to lend to help small businesses. We have a job-creation incentive program, which will create up to 27,000 jobs over the next two years, and we've invested $50 million in the Alberta Enterprise Corporation. Our government is taking action and showing leadership.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again the answer is more corporate welfare.

But let's talk about revenue neutral. That's what the government is promising. That is what they're selling as this new carbon tax to the public. Given that we know this isn't true, that this is a new tax on everything that's going to nickel and dime Albertans at every corner and since there is no reduction in taxes, why is this government deceiving Albertans by saying that this tax on everything is revenue neutral while attacking our most vulnerable Albertans?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I'll say it again and hope that the hon. member and his colleagues listen. All revenue collected will be reinvested into the Alberta economy to ensure that we're creating jobs and reducing pollution. Our climate change plan will invest in new technologies and help to diversify the economy, something the previous government failed at doing and something that the Official Opposition would have us do nothing about and instead hope and pray that a pipeline will get built when instead what's needed is action. We are taking action, and through our climate change leadership strategy we will work with . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the election the NDP promised that it would not impose a provincial sales tax. It did refer to developing an energy efficiency strategy and a renewable energy strategy, but it never even hinted at a province-wide carbon tax. To the Premier: 6 out of 10 Albertans did not vote for your government, and those who did believed you when you told them that you would not be introducing a PST, so how can you now blindsides the people of Alberta with a carbon tax that will pick their pockets in the same fashion as a provincial sales tax?

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. Right from the get-go we were the only party during the election to have a climate change strategy, and I applaud the Premier and this government for implementing that strategy within six months. Our climate leadership strategy is actually going to help diversify the economy and gain us access to markets that previous governments failed to do.

Mr. Rodney: Since we didn't get an answer there, let's try the environment minister.

Given that one of the goals of imposing a carbon tax is to encourage Albertans to actually change their lifestyles and become more emission conscious and given that hundreds of thousands of Albertans are already adhering to a green lifestyle by driving fuel-efficient vehicles and retrofitting their homes to increase energy efficiency and using public transportation and more and given that Albertans will suffer under the same tax regime as those whose behaviour you're really targeting, how is it fair to impose a punitive tax measure on Albertans who are already doing their best to address climate change?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the hon. member for the question. With this plan we will ensure that low- and middle-income families and households do not have trouble making ends meet as a result of these policies through the adjustment fund. You know, the fact of the matter is that we will also have approaches to energy efficiency and so on so that families can reduce their own price on carbon expenditures. Over time that is exactly what will happen as we implement the policies right here in Alberta with our made-in-Alberta plan.

Mr. Rodney: Let's try this a different way. Given that Alberta's environmentally responsible citizens will feel the same financial pain as those whose behaviour you want to modify through this carbon tax on fuel and electricity and natural gas and given that these environmentally responsible Albertans deserve credit, not punishment, are these citizens just part of the collateral damage of your new tax, or will you provide them with compensation for the fuel efficiencies that they've incorporated into their daily lives? And, oh, by the way, while you're at it, Minister, where do we find this in your budget, exactly?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, the hon. member read the climate change panel and our response to it and read the whole report. I'm sure the hon. member took the time to do that before asking the questions, so he will know that the price on carbon is to be phased in as of January 1, 2017, and with it will come with an adjustment for families in order to make ends meet.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Climate Change Strategy

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we have a climate action tax plan now, so let me share with you what I taught my students at NAIT in energy management master planning, which I'm sorry the opposite members didn't attend. It's a discipline with over 30 years of proven strategy, and the single most important pillar of success in energy management requires a plan that reduces energy consumption, reduces energy cost, increases productivity, and increases product quality. Any plan that fails on any three of these is actually a threat, and this plan is a threat to our quality of life and does not achieve our shared goal of encouraging sustainable energy development. Let me be clear. That pillar is not achieved in their plan.

Punishing every Albertan for turning the heat on in the winter is not an acceptable solution to climate change. The NDP carbon tax compromises our competitiveness as a jurisdiction, it threatens jobs, it undermines the financial security of every Albertan, and by their own admission the plan is going to cost Alberta families $900 a year by 2030, and that does not include the added cost to every single good and service consumed by our citizens from this flow-through carbon tax.

This plan strives to replace, apparently, two thirds of our province's 44,000 gigawatt hours of coal generation with renewables. Let me give you a visual. Think nine times our existing wind capacity to be built within the short span of 15 years, or with solar we're talking about tens of millions of solar panels installed in just 15 years. Now, what happens when the wind doesn't blow and the sun doesn't shine, Mr. Speaker? There is no energy storage plan in this entire strategy. We will have to overbuild with natural gas to compensate for the inevitable off-times of renewable energy sources or face even more costly and pervasive power outages. Let's be clear. I'm a renewables guy. This is my field, and I love renewables, but I also know their limitations. The secret to success for any energy strategy is to go slow, but instead this government has a plan that is massive, disruptive, and costly, and it hits Albertans the hardest.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Climate Change Strategy

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the NDP government announced its climate tax policy. We're looking forward to reviewing the entire plan in detail and talking with people, industry, and communities before we make our final comment. At first glance there are a couple of positive aspects. However, there are some things we are concerned about. Number one, we know the government only received the climate change panel's report in the past few days. The government's policy seems to have been developed well in advance of that report, so we're concerned that the panel's work is only window dressing for the changes the government wanted to make anyway.

Number two, we disagree with the economy-wide carbon tax. Alberta was the only and first jurisdiction in North America to put a price on carbon and then only paid by high emitters. We are concerned that this carbon tax is going to hit low-income Albertans at a time when many are already losing their jobs and struggling to make ends meet. This tax is estimated to take more than $3 billion a year out of Alberta's pockets and into an expensive government economic intervention. Alberta households will pay over $500 per year for their heating, electrical, and gasoline bills.

Number three, goodbye Alberta advantage. We believe the Premier broke her promise to Albertans before the budget that there would be no provincial sales tax. A tax this broad by any other name is still a tax. This carbon tax will affect every Albertan, not just higher income earners.
