Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, June 11, 2015

[The Mace was on a cushion below the table]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

[The Clerk read the Royal Proclamation dated June 3, 2015, summoning the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to convene on this date]

The Clerk: Please be seated.

Entrance of the Administrator

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Administrator]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: All rise, please.

Her Honour Chief Justice Catherine Fraser, the Administrator for Alberta.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Administrator of Alberta, the Hon. Chief Justice Catherine Fraser, the Premier, and the Clerk entered the Chamber. Her Honour took her place upon the throne]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Please be seated.

Ms Ganley (Provincial Secretary): Hon. members, I am commanded by Her Honour the Administrator to inform you that she does not see fit to declare the causes of her summoning of the present Legislature of this province until the Speaker of the Assembly shall have been chosen according to law. She is therefore pleased to retire from this Assembly, to return at a subsequent hour on the next sitting day to declare the causes of her calling of this Legislature.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: All rise, please.

The Clerk: Please be seated.

The Clerk: Hon. members, pursuant to the Administrator's direction and section 16(1) of the Legislative Assembly Act nominations are invited for the Office of Speaker of this Assembly for the 29th Legislature. Pursuant to Standing Order 11(1) the Speaker shall be elected according to the procedures set out in schedule A of the standing orders.

Mr. Hinkley: Mr. Clerk, today I rise before the Assembly to nominate the Member for Medicine Hat, Robert Wanner, as our new Speaker. Mr. Wanner has a long-standing history as a dedicated public servant, from the work as commissioner for the city of Medicine Hat to his dedicated leadership in social policy and mediation. Mr. Wanner has shown time and time again to uphold fairness, balance, and co-operation in the name of the greater good. His mantra is the duty and responsibility to serve and use what we have to help others.

Mr. Wanner was a member of the University of Calgary senate for three years and has been a member of numerous boards and community groups. He is an experienced mediator and small-business owner and has gained a reputation in both provincial and international communities as a fair, impartial public servant. Mr. Wanner will be a dedicated ambassador for Alberta and a fair, guiding voice for this Assembly.

The Clerk: Mr. Wanner, do you wish to accept the nomination?

Mr. Wanner: I do so, Mr. Clerk, with humility and a huge sense of responsibility.

Mrs. Pitt: Good afternoon, hon. members. It is a pleasure speaking for the first time in this Chamber. I rise as a private member from Airdrie, as the person selected by my caucus to shadow the minister responsible for the status of women, to nominate a candidate for Speaker.

Now, we have gathered here from all over Alberta to elect our Speaker – our Speaker – not the government's Speaker, not the cabinet's Speaker, not the people's Speaker but our Speaker, the individual elected by MLAs individually by secret ballot for all of us. The Speaker is more than a referee in this place; the Speaker is the protector of our collective and individual privileges. We can't do our jobs unless we have those privileges protected. It is an important role, and historically Speakers have been arrested and threatened with death for protecting the privileges of elected members.

I am hoping that this will be a historic election. We have the opportunity to do something that has never happened in Alberta and to have a circumstance that has never happened anywhere in Canada or even the world. Alberta has never had a female Speaker. If we elect one today, it will be a first for Alberta. If we elect a female Speaker today, we will also create a first for the world. Tomorrow we will install a female Lieutenant Governor to represent Her Majesty the Queen. A few days ago we installed a female Premier. Alberta's Chief Justice and the Administrator of the province is also female, as is the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada. This afternoon, if we elect a female Speaker, the Crown's representative in all three levels of government, the executive, the judiciary, and the legislative branches, will be presided over by women. This is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity – truly, this is – and I have to do my small part to try to make it a reality.

With that in mind, I would like to nominate the most experienced female member of this Legislature who is eligible for the job, the Member for Calgary-North West. The Member for Calgary-North West has served a term in this Legislature. She has been a member of cabinet, and she has been a forceful proponent of human rights. She is eloquent and forceful and brave. I think she would be an excellent candidate for Speaker, and I think that she would do brilliantly as Alberta's first female Speaker. I hope she will accept the nomination and that you all will vote for her so that Alberta will be the first place in the world where all the senior roles in government are held by women.

Thank you.

The Clerk: Ms Jansen, do you wish to accept the nomination?

Ms Jansen: Mr. Clerk, I thank the member for her kind words and for her wonderful endorsement. I respectfully decline the nomination.

The Clerk: Dr. Starke.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Clerk. Fellow members of the 29th Legislature, today we as a group make the first in a long line of decisions entrusted to us by Albertans, and they are watching. They want to see how this group of individuals, duly elected 37 days ago, makes the first crucial set of decisions.

Now, while some may view the role of Speaker as being largely ceremonial or symbolic, make no mistake: the Speaker's role is critical, and the first decision is critical. The Speaker has a huge influence on the tone, on the demeanour, and, ultimately, on the smooth functioning and effectiveness of the House of the people.

It is with this in mind that I'm honoured to nominate the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, Mr. Dave Rodney, to be Speaker. Prior to entering the political spectrum, Mr. Rodney was a nationally and internationally recognized educator, author, speaker, and businessman. He holds bachelor's and master's degrees in education, has taught on three continents, and is the only Canadian to have successfully summited Mount Everest twice.

Mr. Rodney was first elected to this Legislature in 2004 as Member for Calgary-Lougheed. He is commencing his fourth term, tying him for the second-longest length of service among current members. During his career Dave has co-operated effectively with members on both sides of the House. He has always placed the interests of Albertans ahead of partisan objectives, and that ability has allowed him to successfully sponsor several pieces of legislation, legislation which has always placed the health and wellness of Albertans at the forefront, including the Smoke-free Places Act and the physical activity credit act.

Dave has a deep and abiding respect for and knowledge of the role of the Speaker. Now, what, exactly, is that role? Well, it means looking after the PRs: our privileges as members, which he must guard; our protocols, that they are adhered to; our procedures, that they are followed correctly; and our precedents, those decisions made by past Speakers that will guide future rulings. The final PR is public relations. The Speaker presides over public functions and observances here in our Legislature. With his experience as a public speaker before 2004 and working with Speakers since 2004, Dave Rodney is eminently well qualified to take on these difficult and diverse roles.

That brings us to the decision we have today. As I've said before, Albertans are watching. It's our job to elect the person best qualified to take on the role of Speaker, and that's what Albertans expect. They expect us to set aside partisan politics. If there's one message that should be clear to all of us from this election, it is that Albertans expect us to do things differently. Doing things differently means setting aside political partisanship for the benefit of all Albertans. Voting in lockstep along party lines, adhering to decisions made behind closed doors, especially on nonpartisan issues like this one: well, that's the old way of doing things. Albertans rejected that, and that's why many of you are here.

So, colleagues, today we have a choice. We can choose a member with a long and distinguished record of service, with a reputation for nonpartisanship and fairness, with a clear understanding of the roles and responsibilities of Speaker, or we can keep doing things the old way. It's our choice. Albertans are watching. This is our chance to show them that we've heard their message, that we have listened, and that we have the wisdom and the courage to act on it by electing Dave Rodney as Speaker of the 29th Legislature.

The Clerk: Mr. Rodney, do you wish to accept the nomination?

Mr. Rodney: I do, Mr. Clerk, with great respect and appreciation. Thank you.

The Clerk: Are there further nominations?

Mrs. Pitt: Hello again, hon. members. Thank you for letting me speak again. The Speaker here is more than a referee in this place. The Speaker here is to protect our individual privileges. I am hoping that this will be a historic election because we have the opportunity here right now to do something that has never happened. I say again: we have a circumstance that has never happened anywhere in Canada or even the world. We have the opportunity to elect a female Speaker. If we elect a female Speaker today, we will also create, again, a first for the world.

Tomorrow, again, we install a female Lieutenant Governor to represent Her Majesty the Queen to stand beside our female Premier. Alberta's Chief Justice and Administrator of the province is also female as is the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada. This afternoon if we elect a female Speaker, the Crown's representative in all three levels of government – the executive, the judiciary, and the legislative branch – would be presided over by women. This is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity. Please. I am so honoured to be able to do my small part to make this happen. With that in mind and with all due respect for the Member for Calgary-North West, I would like to nominate a female member of the governing party for the job of the Speaker, the Member for Calgary-Varsity.

The Member for Calgary-Varsity, like the Member for Medicine Hat, is also a rookie in this Legislature, but she is a lawyer who has demonstrated a love for the law. She's served as clerk for the Provincial Court. She understands precedent and the importance of procedure and the value of decorum. She has been active in politics, and, as I understand, she did her share in recruiting to politics some of the members of the Legislature, including some members in the cabinet. She is an active community volunteer, having served on the board of directors for both Alberta Theatre Projects and Friends of Medicare. She has also offered her legal expertise to Calgary Legal Guidance, the Student Legal Assistance Society, and the Elizabeth Fry Society.

I think she would make an excellent candidate for Alberta's first female Speaker. I hope the Member for Calgary-Varsity will accept the nomination and that you will vote for her so that Alberta will be the first place in the world where all the senior roles in government are women.

The Clerk: Ms McLean, do you wish to accept the nomination?

Ms McLean: Thank you. I thank the hon. member; however, in my role as deputy whip, which I am very much appreciating – unfortunately, I cannot serve in both roles at the same time. I thank you for your kind words, but I'll have to respectfully decline.

Thank you.

The Clerk: Are there further nominations? Mrs. Aheer.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Good afternoon. Hon. members, it is also my pleasure to speak for the first time in this Chamber. I rise as a private Member for Chestermere-Rocky View to nominate a candidate for Speaker.

Now, we have come here today from all over Alberta to elect a Speaker, and I truly hope we will have an election, a competitive election. In April 1997 Speaker Kowalski became Speaker on the second ballot in the second Speaker's election in Alberta to happen by secret ballot. He was not Premier Klein's choice, but he was the choice of members of the Legislature as the person that they wanted to have protect their privileges.

Protecting our privileges and protecting your privileges is important. Some of the most famous rulings made by Canadian Speakers in recent years have not been about disputes between the opposition and the government; rather, they have been disputes between the government backbenchers and the ever more centralizing role of the Prime Minister's or Premier's office.

I agree with everything my friend from Airdrie has said about selecting a female Speaker. This is an amazing opportunity, a historic opportunity. However, my choice, again, is amongst the government caucus. I would like to nominate a female member of the governing party for the job of Speaker, the Member for St. Albert.

The Member for St. Albert, like the Member for Medicine Hat, is also a rookie in this Legislature, but she was for 14 years the executive director of the St. Albert nonprofit Lo-Se-Ca Foundation, a community-based organization that employs 150 people, many of them with developmental disabilities. Two years ago the Member for St. Albert and Lo-Se-Ca, which stands for love, service, care, were recognized nationally, receiving the Prime Minister's volunteer award for social innovation for the prairie region. Last year she was named one of the top 100 women in business by the Wanderer, the University of Alberta's online journal.

The Wildrose has worked with the Member for St. Albert, standing up for the rights of persons with developmental disabilities. We always found her thoughtful, fair, and deliberate. Her management experience, her caring, and – dare I say it? – her patience make her ideally suited to be Alberta's first female Speaker.

I hope the Member for St. Albert will accept the nomination and that you will vote for her so that – I reiterate – as my friend from Airdrie has said, this will be the first place in the world where all senior roles in government will be held by women.

Thank you.

The Clerk: Ms Renaud, do you wish to accept the nomination?

Ms Renaud: Thank you very much for your incredibly kind words, but I respectfully decline the nomination.

Thank you.

The Clerk: Are there further nominations?

I declare the nominations closed. The nominees for the position of Speaker are Mr. Robert Wanner and Mr. Dave Rodney.

Voting will commence after the list of nominees is posted in each voting booth.

[The lists of candidates were posted]

The Clerk: The voting will now begin. Members will vote by printing the first and last name of their preferred candidate on the ballot paper and placing their completed ballots in the ballot box on the Sergeant-at-Arms' desk. Please proceed from here and from here.

[Members voted from 1:57 p.m. to 2:07 p.m.]

The Clerk: Have all voted who wish to do so? There are no negatives there, so I guess that's a yes. We will retire to count the ballots, and we'll ring the bells for one minute when we return.

[Ballots were counted from 2:08 p.m. to 2:20 p.m.]

The Clerk: Hon. members, the number of ballots cast for the election of Speaker, 86; the number of spoiled ballots, one; the number of votes required to achieve the 50 per cent plus one majority, 44. The member having received the majority of votes cast, Mr. Robert Wanner. Mr. Robert Wanner is hereby declared the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for the 29th Legislature. [Standing ovation]

[The Speaker, with apparent reluctance, was escorted to the chair by Ms Notley and Mr. Jean]

The Speaker: Before I begin the prayer, I would like to express to each and every one of you my thoughts and hopes and aspirations, that I know many of you share with each other.

I would first of all like to acknowledge the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed for putting his name forward. That process is one of the institutions that we must all value as we move forward.

Fellow members of the 29th Alberta Legislative Assembly, I think it's appropriate as we sit together in this meeting place that we all join together in a moment of silent reflection in memory of Constable Daniel Woodall, who, like many more before him, gave his life in support of the very principles upon which this Assembly exists. Please stand and bow your heads.

Thank you, hon. members. Please be seated.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms placed the Mace on the table]

Prayers

The Speaker: I would invite everyone to stand for the prayer. Patience will be something that I ask of all of you.

Let us pray and let us reflect together. On this day of a new beginning we ask for guidance in the responsibility we have undertaken and help in fulfilling our duties. As Members of this Legislative Assembly may we faithfully serve all Albertans and, in serving them, serve You. Amen.

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Working Together

The Speaker: With your permission, I would like to make some additional comments. This building has tradition, heritage, and history buried in the very oak and marble that surround us. It is important to remember that this Assembly started in a school, with wooden floors and wooden desks and chalkboards. The building that we are in now in all its splendour, however, is simply a symbol, a symbol of what well-intentioned people can do when they choose to decide to work together to make a better world.

Hard work, co-operation, persistence, and a dedication to a freedom of thought and life, a freedom that sees diversity as a strength and compassion and public good as the critical veins of our democracy: it is, my fellow Assembly members, these values that give us all hope and confidence in our future, hope that our children will build upon what we may have made and, more importantly, that the long term will build investments for our grandchildren. It is hope and confidence that binds us all together.

Our belief in the Westminster model of parliamentary democracy is what brings us all together in this room as representatives of our citizens. It is not a perfect institution. It has had its failings. It has, however, a tradition that has passed the test of time. As an Assembly of representatives we must together find the balance between preserving that tradition while at the same time judiciously managing the change that is necessary. Change sometimes requires courage.

Our freedom of rights brings with it a humbling sense of responsibility, the responsibility to use our collective good judgment to make decisions, to respect this institution, the people we serve, and each other. People have died for our freedom. Our words and our actions and our engagement with each other must always represent our respect for those who have paid the ultimate price. That is the reason that we are here.

It is these essential interests and values that I believe all 86 of us share together. We must find new ways to set aside our positions and focus on our collective interests. I feel privileged beyond any words that I might be able to find to say that I feel truly honoured to be one of you. I would humbly ask for your patience, your support, and your advice as we move through the next four years together. We must find a way of working together and making this great province and its great people a better place than when we found it.

Thank you.

With your permission I would like to introduce my wife, my daughter, my two grandsons, and my son-in-law, who are seated in the first row. I hope you give me some licence in terms of the protocol, the sequence of events. If they would stand, I'd appreciate it.

Election of a Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to section 17(1) of the Legislative Assembly Act and Standing Order 58(1)(a) nominations are invited for the office of Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees of this Assembly for the 29th Legislature.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to my colleagues for this opportunity to rise in the House and to address you today.

I would like to thank the members, our colleagues across the floor, who today have spoken so eloquently about the amazing honour we have as a province in having the representation of a female Premier, a female Lieutenant Governor, and a female Chief Justice. Indeed, we are incredibly proud to serve as a government that is focused on elevating the status of women in our province. We are also incredibly proud to represent Albertans with the first gender-balanced cabinet and nearly gender-balanced caucus in the history of our province and our nation. As noted by our colleagues across the floor, we are also proud to be the first provincial government in Alberta to appoint a minister for the status of women.

All of this being the case, it is my honour and pleasure today to have the opportunity to nominate the Member for Peace River, Ms Debbie Jabbour, for the position of Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees for this House. Ms Jabbour brings six years of experience working for the Legislative Assembly with Hansard. In this role she gained a deep and thorough understanding and training in House procedures. She has spent hours reading, transcribing Hansard and observing the workings of this House. As such, she brings a rich depth of experience and knowledge that would serve her well in the role of Deputy Speaker. This experience along with her work as a provisional psychologist positions her to be a fair and impartial voice in this House in service of us all.

Ms Jabbour has a deep passion for public service, as reflected in her commitment to her constituents and her time as a board member of the Canadian Mental Health Association and the Chinchaga Adult Learning Council. It is important to note that in that work with the Chinchaga Adult Learning Council she has also developed strong relationships with First Nations in our province. Ms Jabbour has had the privilege and honour of working with them on many issues.

It's worth noting that a large portion of her constituents are, in fact, from Alberta's First Peoples, the peoples of Treaty 8. Alberta is, in fact, home to three treaties: 6, 7, and 8. Today we have the honour to stand and meet in this House on Treaty 6 land, which we honour and respect. We have had the honour now of electing a Speaker that comes from Treaty 7 lands. If we choose to elect Ms Jabbour, she would then be a Deputy Speaker with strong ties to the First Peoples of Treaty 8.

Ms Jabbour has a deep respect for our parliamentary process and the historic traditions of this House. It is my hope that our colleagues across the floor, having shown their enthusiasm for the election of a woman with experience and knowledge, will support and vote for Ms Jabbour. I'm truly confident that given her experience and dedication she would fulfill the role of Deputy Speaker with dignity, confidence, and respect for all members.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you wish to accept the nomination?

Ms Jabbour: I'm humbled and honoured to accept. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other nominations?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me begin by congratulating you on your election as Speaker, and I do want to sincerely thank you that as your first act you called on this Assembly to pay tribute to the police constable that passed away. That was truly a class act, and if that's a harbinger of things to come, you're off to a great start.

Mr. Speaker, I should also say that in my role as third-party House leader I received some advice from the most seasoned member of our Assembly, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood – the Minister of Transportation, the Minister of Infrastructure, and the Government House Leader – who advised me that in this role in the third party, one which we are somewhat unaccustomed to, we can often be in a position where we can be so darn sure we're right and still lose and who in his position in many years developed a losing streak that will probably never be equalled and one that, certainly, we have no intention of challenging in any way.

That being said, it is my privilege and honour to nominate for the position of Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees the hon. Dave Rodney, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed. As I said in my past nomination speech, which I will choose not to repeat verbatim, the hon. member has an outstanding record of co-operation on both sides of the House. Mr. Speaker, as you just said, if ever there was a time when the parties need to work together and when there is help required from all sides of the Legislature, this is perhaps that time. Well, the good news for you is that help is available should the Chamber decide to make that decision and provide you with the hon. member's considerable experience as a legislator, as a mover and sponsor of legislation which in most cases, I will point out, passed unanimously because of his ability to work with members on both sides of the House.

Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to nominate the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, Mr. Dave Rodney.

The Speaker: Thank you. Hon. member, do you wish to accept the nomination?

Mr. Rodney: Mr. Speaker, I would like to sincerely, from my heart, congratulate you on your appointment. It would indeed be an honour to work with you, so the answer is yes.

The Speaker: Are there any further nominations? I therefore declare, seeing none, that nominations are closed.

The nominees for the position of Deputy Speaker are the hon. Member for Peace River, Debbie Jabbour, and the Member for Calgary-Lougheed. Voting will commence after the lists of nominees are posted in each voting booth.

[The lists of candidates were posted]

The Speaker: We have the ballots. The voting will now begin, please.

[Members voted from 2:43 p.m. to 2:55 p.m.]

The Clerk: The number of ballots cast for the position of Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees, 84; the number of spoiled ballots, two; the number of votes required to achieve the 50 per cent plus one majority, 43. The member having received the majority of votes cast, Ms Debbie Jabbour. Ms Debbie Jabbour is hereby declared Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for the 29th Legislature.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I wondered if you'd like to make a few comments.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To my colleagues and the hon. members of this House I want to say thank you for entrusting me with this incredible responsibility. I feel privileged to take on the role. It's a great honour, and I'm going to do my utmost to show respect for the traditions of this House and be a very good Deputy Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Election of a Deputy Chair of Committees

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to section 17(1) of the Legislative Assembly Act and Standing Order 58(1)(b) nominations are now invited for the office of Deputy Chair of Committees for the 29th Legislature.

The hon. member.

Ms Gray: Thank you. It is my pleasure to rise and speak in the House for the first time. I'd like my first words to be those of congratulations to you, Mr. Speaker. I am so excited and looking forward to working with you and the hon. members here in this House over the next four years. Secondly, let me also offer my congratulations to Ms Debbie Jabbour, our new Deputy Speaker and hon. Member for Peace River. Congratulations on your election as well.

It is my privilege to rise and to nominate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, Mr. Richard Feehan, for the position of Deputy Chair of Committees. The hon. member has over 33 years' experience as a social worker, administrator, instructor, and small-business owner. As an instructor at the University of Calgary in the Faculty of Social Work for the past 11 years he has been committed to creating a just society here in Alberta. Through his dedicated service to his community, membership on numerous boards and organizations, he has gained skills and experience that I know he will be able to use with great success in the role of Deputy Chair of Committees.

I encourage the hon. members of this Assembly to support Richard Feehan, who I know, without reservation, will uphold the respect, impartiality, and wisdom that this role requires. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, are you prepared to accept the nomination?

Mr. Feehan: It is with respect and appreciation that I accept the nomination.

The Speaker: Are there any further nominations?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, we're pitching a shutout so far, so we thought we'd try it a little bit differently this time. We might have to get used to that, from what I understand.

I, too, would like to take the time, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate you, well chosen by this House. I look forward to working with you for the next four years, and I know that you will do an exemplary job. Congratulations.

Also to our Deputy Speaker congratulations. We will look forward to benefiting from your guidance when you are in the chair. I also know that we look forward to nothing but the best, and I know you will deliver.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to nominate the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, Mr. Dave Rodney. There's been a great deal said about the hon. member earlier, so I won't repeat that other than to say that you know him, you love him, and you trust him. You know he can do the job. This is an opportunity to have the second most experienced person in the House available to work with the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker, and I recommend that members of this Assembly support the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

I think that's enough from me right now, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you wish to accept the nomination?

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With a great deal of humility and just a little bit of trepidation, I must say, I happily accept the nomination.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any further nominations?

I would declare the nominations closed. The nominees for the position of Deputy Chair of Committees are Member Richard Feehan and Member Dave Rodney. Voting will commence after the list of nominees is posted in each voting booth.

If I might, as I am learning the protocol – and that's the patience part of this process – I would remind the members that out of respect for the chair as you leave the House, you acknowledge the Speaker's chair, both entering and exiting the House. That's a symbol of respect to the House and to our peers.

[The lists of candidates were posted]

The Speaker: Fellow members, if I might, before I call for the vote process, I would like to acknowledge, as we all learn the new procedures and processes, the young people who are our pages in here. As you've noticed, a few times during the day I have stood and sat. Every time that I stand, they stand, and I will be more conscious of that into the future.

Mr. Clerk, the vote will begin.

[Members voted from 3:18 p.m. to 3:27 p.m.]

The Speaker: Have all members voted?

Hon. members, as we all learn the protocols and processes of the House, in addition, there were several members, for example, that needed to leave for meetings today. When votes take place, the doors are secured, so as you are planning ahead in any future kinds of instances, keep that in mind.

Again, today's events are much more informal, but when we are in the House, if you cross from one side to the other of the House, I would respectfully ask that you pass behind the dais. Those kinds of traditions are what preserve this House, and I'd ask that we all practise them.

Thank you.

[Ballots were counted from 3:28 p.m. to 3:38 p.m.]

The Clerk: The number of ballots cast for the position of Deputy Chair of Committees, 84; number of spoiled ballots, one; number of votes required to achieve the 50 per cent plus one majority, 43. The member having received the majority of votes cast, Mr. Richard Feehan. Mr. Richard Feehan is hereby the Deputy Chair of Committees of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for the 29th Legislature.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, on a point of clarification. It's my understanding that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford also is the caucus chair for the NDP caucus. Earlier today we saw the Member for Calgary-Varsity turn down her opportunity to make history by declining a nomination for the Speaker's chair, and I'm curious to know if the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford will be stepping down from his role, that we believe would be in conflict with him being the Deputy Chair of Committees.

Mr. Mason: We'll get you an answer in due course.

The Speaker: We'll take that under advisement, and we will get back to the House.

Would the hon. member please say a few words to the Assembly.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, of course, would like to begin by offering my congratulations to yourself and to Debbie Jabbour for your election as Speaker and Deputy Speaker. In addition, I would like to express my happiness at sitting in the luckiest row in the Chamber and assure the House that I do intend to honour the traditions of this Chamber with my work cooperatively with everyone on both sides of the House.

The Speaker: Members of the Assembly, I'm going to check with the Clerk. Are there other events that need to be business today?

I would take this brief opportunity – as several in the Assembly have already said, there is a series of very significant events, that have happened in sequence in our province, that seldom happen in the manner in which they have. I remind you that tomorrow our new Lieutenant Governor will be in this Legislative Assembly, and I would urge as many of our Assembly members as possible to be a part of that historic event.

The House stands adjourned until Monday, June 15, at 3 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 3:42 p.m. to Monday at 3 p.m.]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Order! Mr. Speaker.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker, accompanied by the officers of the Assembly, entered the Chamber and took the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Your blessings on all here present. We ask Your guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments for the benefit of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

Ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite Mr. Robert Clark, accompanied by the Royal Canadian Artillery Band, to lead us in the singing of our national anthem.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Please rise.

Hon. Members and Guests:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: Ladies and gentlemen, prior to the arrival of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor the Royal Canadian Artillery Band will play music called Festmusik, festive music, by Richard Strauss. I'm proud to say that our RCA Band was originally founded in Quebec City in 1879. The RCA Band is Canada's first permanent military band. The RCA Band was active in both world wars and in the Korean conflict and has been in service in many parts of the world as well as throughout Canada. On December 4, 1997, St. Barbara's Day, the patron saint of the Royal Canadian Artillery Band, the band officially moved from Montreal and today is stationed under the direction of Captain Patrice Arseneault, who is in the Speaker's gallery.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, and Mr. Mitchell, their party, the Premier, and the Clerk entered the Chamber. Her Honour took her place upon the throne]

Her Honour: Please be seated.

The Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the Legislative Assembly has elected me their Speaker, though I am but little able to fulfill the important duties thus assigned to me. If in the performance of these duties I should at any time fall into error, I pray that the fault may be imputed to me and not to the Assembly, whose servant I am and who through me, the better to enable them to discharge their duty to their Queen and province, humbly claim all their undoubted rights and privileges, especially that they may have freedom of speech in their debates, access to Your Honour's person at all seasonable times, and that their proceedings may receive from Your Honour the most favourable construction.

Ms Ganley (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I am commanded by Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to declare to you that she freely confides in the duty and attachment of this Assembly to Her Majesty's person and government, and not doubting that their proceedings will be conducted with wisdom, temper, and prudence, she grants and upon all occasions will recognize and allow their constitutional privileges.

I am commanded also to assure you that the Assembly shall have ready access to Her Honour upon all seasonable occasions and that their proceedings as well as your words and actions will constantly receive from her the most favourable construction.

Speech from the Throne

Her Honour: Friends, Alberta is a province of indigenous peoples whose roots in this land go back thousands of years and who will be stewards of this land for thousands of years to come. Together we are learning to respect that.

We are also a province built by wave after wave of pioneers and settlers, farmers and oil workers, researchers and students, job seekers and job creators. We are people from around the world who share a dream of a better life and who have found it here in Alberta. We are optimistic, hopeful, entrepreneurial, remarkably diverse, and community-minded people. We are people who dream no little dreams and live them. We are people who get things done.

In this province what we wish for ourselves, we desire for all, like freedom from poverty, freedom from violence, and freedom from discrimination because of whom you love. We believe in looking after our children and making sure they are safe, healthy, and have access to excellent education. We believe in looking after our seniors and making sure they are safe, healthy, and have a dignified place to live. We believe in respecting women, including our sisters who have disappeared or who have been murdered and whose families are looking for answers and for justice.

Albertans are working together to build a prosperous, entrepreneurial, diversified economy full of opportunity for us all, we are working together to build a lifelong learning system that brings out the potential in us all, and we are working together to build a health system that is there when it is needed, for us all.

We haven't always got it right. As I speak, we face another oil price challenge, that is having a more profound effect on our families and on our public finances than it might have had because we have not always made the right choices in this Legislature. But as has been proven, the Legislature can change.

There are 70 new MLAs in this House as a result of the recent election. The people of Alberta decided it was time for a change, and they didn't get there through half measures. And so we can begin again.

We can work together. We can disagree without being disagreeable. We can talk about what unites us as well as what divides us. We can listen to each other and build on each other's best ideas, just as Albertans have been doing with their neighbours since the founding of this province.

It is in this spirit that this government begins its new mandate and takes up the tasks given to it by the people of Alberta. The government begins its work mindful that it is building on the achievements of governments who have come before.

Alberta's first government was led by the Liberal Party. As is remembered in a small but important memorial just outside of this building, that was when democracy and responsible government were brought to Alberta.

Today our political and party system cries out for renewal, so we will take a first important step towards renewing our democracy as the first piece of business our new government puts before you.

Alberta's next government was led by the United Farmers of Alberta. The UFA was an alliance of farmers and workers determined to put the interests of Alberta families at the heart of the work of this House.

Alberta's new government will reintroduce a fair and progressive tax system and restore stable support for health and education in order to do exactly that. We will put the interests of Alberta families at the heart of the work of this Legislature.

Elected in the depths of the Depression, our province's next government was led by Social Credit. The Socreds were men and women who believed that Alberta could overcome adversity and return to prosperity by working together in the common interest. The Social Credit government was a strong supporter of job creators and entrepreneurs. It also equipped our province with important tools to build prosperity such as Alberta Treasury Branches, which still contribute to prosperity in Alberta's communities, large and small, today.

Alberta's new government will also be a good partner with job creators, with entrepreneurs, with small business, with credit unions and co-ops, and with the great enterprises we have built together.

Finally, the Progressive Conservative government elected in 1971 fought a ferocious battle with Ottawa to ensure, beyond debate, that our energy resources were owned and controlled by the people of Alberta. The PCs then set out a plan for a successful and sustainable energy industry, managed in both our people's short- and long-term interests. Their plan recognized that our resources are a trust. Those are principles to which Alberta's new government will now return.

And so, to the work of this session. As its first act our new government will introduce Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta. At long last this act, if passed, will ban corporate and union donations to political parties in this province.

There is much more that needs to be done to renew our democracy. Alberta's new government will work closely with all members in this House and will take careful account of your views and those of all Albertans before taking the necessary additional steps.

As its second act our new government will introduce Bill 2, An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue. This bill will ask those who have benefited the most from the boom times in Alberta to now contribute a little more so that our schools and health care can be spared from chaos and reckless cutbacks. Corporate taxes on the largest and most profitable corporations in Alberta will be increased from 10 per cent to 12 per cent; small-business taxes will remain at the current rate, 3 per cent; and progressive income taxes will be reintroduced in Alberta for those earning more than $125,000 a year. When these changes are implemented, each and every citizen of Alberta will still be contributing by far the lowest provincial taxes in Canada.

As its third act Alberta's new government will propose Bill 3 to restore stability to Alberta's education, health care, and human services. This is an interim supply bill which will maintain stability in essential public services while Alberta's new government reviews our province's economic situation, its finances, and its budget priorities.

We will invest in stable and predictable funding for our schools and postsecondary institutions because our children are worth it, because our communities are worth it, and because investing in skills and education is the single best investment our province can make to ensure our future prosperity. We will invest in stable and predictable funding for our health system because universal, accessible, high-quality health care must be there when Alberta families need it and because the time has come to meet our society's growing need for community services like long-term care and home care. And we will invest in stable and predictable funding for human services because the people who have suffered the most in the recent economic downturn should not be the first in line to be cut.

With this agreed, our new government will then work on a new budget and a new legislative program and will present these to you in the fall.

Alberta's new government knows well that these are only a few first steps. There is a great deal that needs to be done. This province needs to work with steady determination to create the conditions for a sustainable, diversified, and prosperous economy, an economy that will provide Albertans with good jobs. Alberta needs a stable, long-term plan for health care and education. This province needs to demonstrate real leadership on the environment and on climate change.

Concurrently, we must forge a much stronger partnership with our fellow provinces and with the federal government in order to build a Canadian energy strategy that ensures that a sustainable, responsible Canadian energy industry can reach markets all around the world. We need to review how the people of Alberta, including our grandchildren and our great-grandchildren many years from now, will be rewarded for the development of their own energy resources.

We need to return to a respectful relationship with this land's indigenous peoples.

We need to make sure all Albertans are paid fairly at work, including those on the minimum wage.

We need to ensure this province's rural and resource communities have the tools they need to keep contributing to the prosperity of Alberta.

There are parks to tend, public transit and roads to build, hospitals to build and renovate, schools to plan and open, people living on our streets to help. It won't all happen at once, but we will start. We will start today with these first steps, and we will do more in the fall, when my new government presents its first budget and its first full legislative program.

Thank you, friends.

God bless Alberta.

God bless Canada.

God save the Queen.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

The Speaker: Ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite Mr. Robert Clark, accompanied by the Royal Canadian Artillery Band, to lead us in the singing of God Save The Queen. Please remain standing at the conclusion.

Hon. Members and Guests:

God save our gracious Queen,
Long live our noble Queen,
God save The Queen!
Send her victorious,
Happy and glorious,
Long to reign over us;
God save The Queen!

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Their Honours, their party, and the Premier left the Chamber as a fanfare of trumpets sounded]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

The Speaker: Ladies and gentlemen, as an add-on, today I was told as I came into this room that we are at, truly, a historic moment. Today, by the very date and time, is the 800th anniversary of the signing of the Magna Carta in 1215.

I wanted to share some information about the members of this House, which the public and our electorate in Alberta may well be pleased to hear about. On May 5, 2015, over 1,488,000 votes were cast in 87 constituencies throughout our province of Alberta. Eighty-seven individuals were elected with a shared hope for a more constructive culture in this Assembly. In addition, a number of new individuals have commenced this service as members of this Assembly. Including myself, 70 new members have joined the ranks of those before us who have served Albertans as members of this Assembly. This is not the greatest percentage of new members as that distinction belongs to the eighth Legislature in 1935, with 92 per cent of the members being new.

I'd like to take a few minutes to introduce the members of this 29th Legislature collectively to Albertans. As mentioned, 70 members are in their first term of office; nine members are in their second term of office; four members are in their third term of office; two members are in their fourth term of office; and one member is in his sixth term of office.

While generally we may be new to the Legislature, we bring a variety of education and experience from other realms to our work on behalf of Albertans. Based on the information received to date from members themselves, 20 members have had direct involvement in education, including eight postsecondary instructors, two professors, two principals, nine teachers, and five students. Fifteen members have experience in business, two in finance, and eight have acted as consultants. Nine members have worked in labour relations. Twelve members have worked in the civil service and eight in nonprofits. Nine members come from the health care fields, and four have experience as first responders. Six members are registered as social workers, and I'm proud to say that I am one of those six.

We have seven members who are farmers or ranchers. Six have worked in transportation and six in the sciences. There are five lawyers. Ten members have worked in media, communications, or in information technology. Eleven members have worked as researchers, managers, analysts, or support staff. Three members have worked in real estate, and three are musicians. Members have also held the following occupations: sports and fitness instructor, sales representative, psychologist, carpenter, clergy, insurance agent, mediator, and veterinarian.

We have one member who has served as a Member of Parliament, who is now the Leader of the Official Opposition. Eight members have served as councillors or aldermen, and two members have been school trustees.

Among us we have 62 bachelor's degrees, 22 master's degrees, six law degrees, two doctors of medicine, one doctor of veterinary medicine, and over 40 other diplomas, certificates, and professional designations.

Members are reflecting the changing characteristics of the Albertans we serve. While the majority of members were born in Alberta, we have a number who were born in other Canadian provinces as well as in Brazil, Chile, Colombia, France, Nicaragua, and Pakistan. In addition to English, members can communicate in French, German, Spanish, Punjabi, Cantonese, Chinese or Mandarin, Dutch, Italian, Korean, Pahari, Thai, and Urdu.

Twenty-nine members are women. To date this is the largest number of women ever elected in Alberta. As a father of four daughters, with five granddaughters, I am particularly proud of this accomplishment.

Based on the information available, our average age at the time of our election on May 5 was almost 46 years old. This is five years younger than the 28th Legislature. The youngest average age of a Legislature was back from 1909 to 1913, during the Second Legislature, when the average age of the 41 members was 42 years of age.

We are proud to have two of the youngest members ever elected to the Alberta Legislative Assembly in our midst. At the ages of 20 and 21 these members will reflect the views and perspectives of the young people of this province as we conduct our business. Additionally, we have members whose life experience will guide our debates and inform our decision-making. At the time of the election we had nine members in their 20s, 22 members in their 30s, 16 in their 40s, 24 in their 50s, and 15 members in their 60s.

Members go into this 29th Legislature pledging to listen and act on behalf of all Albertans in a meaningful and respectful way. As elected representatives we will strive to make the best decisions for the short- and long-term future of this wonderful province.

From my discussions with all members there is a shared optimism for the 29th Legislature, a desire and a commitment to work better together, to recognize our differences of opinion as a strength and not a weakness. There is a desire to make this place not a theatre but a forum for democracy.

Thank you.

[The Premier returned to the Chamber]

Tablings

The Speaker: I have the honour to table a copy of the speech graciously given by Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 1

An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to rise today to request leave to introduce this government's first bill, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta.

During the election we promised to reform the electoral process in this province. Bill 1 is the first step in our efforts to help ensure that Albertans have the strongest voice in our democracy. Mr. Speaker, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta will amend the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act so that, effective today, corporations and unions will be banned from making political contributions in this province. From now on only residents of Alberta will be allowed to do so. This includes political donations to political parties, constituency associations, candidates for election in senatorial elections, and leadership contestants.

The Chief Electoral Officer has been consulted, and his advice has been taken into account in the development of the amendments. These amendments will bring equity and fairness to election financing and represent just the beginning of our efforts to renew democracy in our province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a first time]

Certificates of Election

The Clerk: Mr. Speaker, I have received from the Chief Electoral Officer of Alberta pursuant to the Election Act a report containing the results of the general election conducted on the 5th day of May, 2015, which states that an election was conducted in the following electoral divisions, and the said report further shows that the following members were duly elected.

[The Clerk read the election returns]

Motions

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I move that the speech of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to this Assembly be taken into consideration on June 16, 2015.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to all. I move that the House do now adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:44 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, June 16, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray and contemplate in our own minds. Give to each member of this Legislature a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibilities laid upon us. Give us a deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people that we all serve. We'll take a moment. Amen.

Hon. members, as is our custom and way, we pay tribute on our first day to members and former members of this Assembly who have passed away since we last met. I will duly be mentioning the members in the Speaker's gallery today, but the families are with us.

Mr. John Albert Gogo
February 15, 1932, to April 4, 2015

The Speaker: Mr. Gogo was first elected to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta as the Member for Lethbridge West on March 26, 1975. He was re-elected in the next four provincial elections, serving for a total of 18 years, two months, and 20 days, until his retirement on June 14, 1993. During that tenure, in addition to serving on numerous legislative committees, Mr. Gogo served as Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees from 1986 to 1989 and minister of advanced education from 1989 until 1992. Mr. Gogo was a veteran of the Korean War. Mr. Gogo was a vocal proponent for his home city of Lethbridge, and as a result in 2007 he was awarded an honorary doctorate of laws from the University of Lethbridge.

Mr. Frank Pierpoint Appleby
December 23, 1913, to May 18, 2015

The Speaker: Mr. Frank Pierpoint Appleby served as the Member for Athabasca from August 30, 1971, until his retirement on May 7, 1986. Mr. Appleby had a varied career. During his tenure as a Member of the Legislative Assembly he served on many committees, including as chair of the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. Mr. Appleby served as Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees from 1979 until 1986. In 1985 he introduced the Forestry Profession Act and was subsequently recognized by the College of Alberta Professional Foresters, which now bestows an annual award bearing his name. For his dedication to lifelong learning and his efforts to establish Athabasca University, he was awarded an honorary doctorate degree from Athabasca University in 2005.

Mr. Norman Allen Weiss
December 23, 1935, to June 2, 2015

The Speaker: Mr. Weiss was first elected on March 14, 1979, as the Member for Lac La Biche-McMurray. He served a total of four terms, the last for the electoral division of Fort McMurray. During his tenure he served as minister of recreation and parks from 1986 to 1989, associate minister of family and social services in 1989, and minister of career development and employment from 1989 to 1992. Upon his retirement from the Assembly Mr. Weiss, who was born in Edmonton, noted his love for northern Alberta and his gratitude for having the opportunity to contribute to the development of programs and services for his northern constituency.

In a moment of silent reflection and prayer I ask each of you to remember Mr. Gogo, Mr. Appleby, and Mr. Weiss as you have known them. May we each take a moment of silence in recognition of our three members.

You may be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, with our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of the families who shared the burdens of public office and public service, and I know that each of you over the next years will appreciate that much more than you do today. We have with us today members of the Gogo, Appleby, and Weiss families. I would ask them to rise and remain standing as I call their names, and then we can welcome them all at the end with our applause and appreciation.

Representing the Gogo family are Joyce Gogo, wife of Mr. John Gogo; Susan Gogo-Quinn, daughter of John Gogo; Sharon Gillett, daughter of John Gogo; Shannon Donkersgoed, daughter of John Gogo; Sandra Hegland, daughter of John Gogo; and Doug Hegland, son-in-law of John Gogo.

Representing the Appleby family are Dorothy Appleby, wife of Frank Appleby; Brian Appleby, son of Frank Appleby; Liz Appleby, daughter-in-law of Frank Appleby; Kevin Appleby, grandson of Frank Appleby; Erin Echeverria, granddaughter of Frank Appleby; and Dawn Minns, niece of Frank Appleby.

Representing the Weiss family are Jill Weiss, daughter of Norm Weiss; Louise Stewart; and Graham Stewart, grandson of Norm Weiss.

Could I ask the members to please stand and show your appreciation. [Standing ovation]

Greetings of the House to each of you, and thank you for being with us.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Are there any school groups with us today?

Mr. Piquette: Mr. Speaker, it's my privilege to introduce visitors from my riding. Actually, I'm quite fortunate today. The Applebys are mostly from my riding – I'm glad you introduced them – but I also have with us today councillors from Thorhild county. If they could please rise, we have here Reeve Wayne Crosswell, Deputy Reeve Dan Bury, and Councillor Larry Sisson. Could we please give the customary warm welcome of the House?

I'm also fortunate to be able to introduce to you and through you the Martin family from Athabasca. They are prominent local business persons as well as active community members. If I could please have Fred, Elsie, and Trevor Martin rise. Could you please extend the warm greetings of the House?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs and Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a remarkable example of political engagement, dedication, and volunteerism. Sonia Varela has been a tireless volunteer for the New Democratic candidates, MLAs, and MPs in our great province for decades. Our recent success in the election does not solely belong to those who sit in the Assembly but also to those Albertans like Sonia who have dedicated their time, energy, and money to making our province a better place. I'd ask Sonia to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of Education and Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to you and through you to all members of the Assembly. I have 20 visitors from Alberta Education, who have come to check up on me and the rest of us here as well today. If they can rise as I read their names, please. I have Mrs. Robyn Hodge, Miss Shirley Han, Ms Amy Johnson, Tara Sliwkanich, Michael Skoreyko, and Aretha Greatrix. If they could rise and please receive the warm welcome of all the members of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a great Albertan. He was orphaned at 14, worked in the coal mines and forestry. He truly helped build this province. Along the way he had three children, 11 grandchildren, of which I am proud to be one, and 22 great-grandchildren. I would ask that my grandfather Ulric Lamontagne rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, it's my great pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two school groups. They are home-schoolers, one from the great constituency of Airdrie and the other from the great, the fabulous, I might say, constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and two of the world's best teachers, I think you'll find they would tell you. We have Gunther, Linnea, and Martin Laubenstein, and the world's best teacher, Heather Laubenstein. We have Porter, Paxton, and Peyton Cooper – some resemblance – and my beautiful wife, Tanya, is also there.

The Speaker: I would particularly remind and thank the speakers that when we have children with us in this Assembly, we ought to look to them as our future. Thank you, hon. member.
Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The single best preventative health measure known is to reduce tobacco use. On May 31, shortly after our election, the Minister of Health announced that menthol-flavoured cigarettes would be banned. This will markedly reduce youth smoking and will save lives. The Campaign for a Smoke-free Alberta has been working on this project for many years, and the representatives of that group are in the gallery today. They've strongly supported our government's decision to ban menthol and other flavoured tobacco products.

Mr. Speaker, through you and to the members of the Assembly I would like to introduce the following, and if they could stand: Angeline Webb from the Canadian Cancer Society, Leigh Allard from the Lung Association of Alberta, Kayla Atkey of the Alberta Policy Coalition for Chronic Disease Prevention, and Les Hagen of Action on Smoking and Health. If you'll give them the usual warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to introduce to you and to the Legislature Eric Musekamp and Darlene Dunlop, no strangers to the Alberta Legislature.

They've been here every session for 11 years, first introduced in the House in 2005 by the current Education minister, from Edmonton-Calder. These human rights advocates have sacrificed in an extraordinary way to put farm workers on the agenda of this government after years and years of neglect. This year, in fact, they received supportive letters not only from the Queen but from the Pope.

They're here again today with a new sense of hope in their hearts to remind this House that 25 people died last year on farms. Hundreds of people were injured, many of them children, and they are in urgent need of protection. They're here to meet with ministers and work with this new government to redress past government negligence of both worker safety and fundamental human rights. I'll ask Eric and Darlene to rise and receive the usual warm welcome from the Legislature.

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Questions and Members' Statements

The Speaker: I would like to make a few comments first. This part is particularly to the guests. I do hope that you appreciate that the Speaker, including many of these members – we are learning, and I hope you will stick with us and have patience for that.

Hon. members, before we proceed with Members' Statements, I want to outline the rotation that will apply for Oral Question Period and Members' Statements. As noted in the procedural memo that I sent out to all members yesterday, the Speaker's office received a document on June 15, 2015, signed by the three House leaders, confirming their agreement on the rotation of oral questions and of members' statements. Copies of the Oral Question Period rotation are on members' desks along with the projected sitting days calendar, that outlines the members' statements rotation. With respect to Oral Question Period the agreement is based on 20 questions each day and follows an eight-day rotation.

I want to say at the outset that I take heart that the very first section of Beauchesne's, sixth edition, lists as the first principle of parliamentary law "to protect a minority and restrain the improvidence or tyranny of a majority." I have reviewed the agreement amongst House leaders of the three largest caucuses and find that the allotment of questions to the single-member parties and the independent member is reasonable. By having three questions every eight days, the single-member party leaders have more questions than was the case when this situation arose before, such as on February 8, 2012, in the Fifth Session of the 27th Legislature. If there are concerns, I would encourage House leaders to meet and see me if further refinements are necessary or possible.

With respect to the agreements reached by House leaders, I want to articulate the sequence so that it is clear in the record of the proceedings and to let people who are following the proceedings know what to expect. Flowing from the agreement, the Official Opposition is entitled to the first three main questions each day, and the PC caucus is entitled to the fourth question each day. Question 5 is allocated to the Liberal caucus on days 1, 3, and 6; to the Alberta Party caucus on days 2, 5, and 7; and to the independent member on days 4 and 8. Private members of the government caucus are entitled to the sixth question each day. In addition to the first three questions each day, the Official Opposition is entitled to ask the seventh, ninth, 10th, 13th, 16th, 18th, and 20th questions. In addition to the fourth question each day, the PC caucus is allocated the eighth, 11th, 14th, and 17th questions. Apart from question 6 each day, private members of the government caucus may ask the 12th, 15th, and 19th questions.

I want to remind members that questions and responses should be 35 seconds in length and that preambles to supplementary questions are only allowed for the first five rounds of questions each day.

With respect to members' statements the House leaders' agreement is based on a three-week rotation. According to Standing Order 7(4) each day up to six private members may make a statement of no more than two minutes in duration. Private members of the government caucus are entitled to three statements on Monday and Tuesday each week and on Wednesday of weeks 1 and 2 and four statements on Thursday each week and on Wednesday of week 3. The Official Opposition is entitled to two statements on Monday and Tuesday each week and on Wednesday of weeks 1 and 2 and one statement on Thursday each week and on Wednesday of week 3. The PC caucus is allocated one statement on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday each week.

Under the House leaders' agreement the Liberal, Alberta Party, and independent members will each have an opportunity to make a member's statement once in the three-week rotation. The leader of the Liberal caucus is allocated a statement on Thursday of week 1, the leader of the Alberta caucus on Thursday of week 2, and the independent member on Thursday of week 3.

Thank you, hon. members. I will table a copy of the House leaders' agreement at the appropriate time in the daily Routine today.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: I will make a brief comment. As I've said several times and will be no doubt saying again as we move forward, my first statement was that we have patience with each other and, particularly, patience with the Speaker. I wish, however, to remind members that once we have all learned together, the application of tradition and practice may begin to evolve. So as I acknowledge to the Leader of the Official Opposition that I may provide some licence today in terms of a request he has made for an allocation of additional time, I do not wish any member of this House to understand that to be a precedent for the future. It may well change.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I ask my first question here, let me congratulate all the newly elected MLAs, the returning MLAs, and, of course, you, Mr. Speaker, on your recent election and the Premier for a historic election. Amazing.

I also want to indicate to the House, Mr. Speaker, that I knew both Mr. Appleby and Mr. Weiss – without Mr. Weiss I would not be here today – and indeed both gentlemen I awarded Queen's medals to, and they were great individuals. My condolences.

Provincial Tax Policy

Mr. Jean: Albertans have high hopes for this new government, as we do. As the Official Opposition we want Albertans to know that we're here to work hard, to be honest and stand accountable for them, and to help this government make Alberta better for everyone. My first question is simple. I'm hoping it will also allow the Premier to get off on a good foot. Will the Premier today assure Albertans that her government will not bring in a provincial sales tax while she is Premier?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin, of course, by offering to my colleague across the way, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, our caucus's congratulations on his election and his new position as Leader of the Official Opposition.

I think that leaves me about five seconds, Mr. Speaker, so the answer to his question is yes. He can be assured that we have no intention of bringing in a sales tax.

Mr. Jean: Well, that is great news, and Alberta's families, Alberta businesses will be very happy with that.

Wildrose believes that municipalities need stable, long-term, predictable funding to provide better infrastructure for Alberta families. Our 10-10 plan proposes that municipalities be allocated 10 per cent of the provincial taxes with absolutely no strings attached. Our municipalities expressed strong support for this infrastructure plan. Will the Premier commit today to implement the popular Wildrose 10-10 municipal infrastructure plan?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, we understand that municipal government in Alberta is the level of government that is closest to Alberta communities and provides important services to all Albertans, and we understand the value of the work that they do. We're very much looking forward to continuing the conversation with them with respect to the Municipal Government Act, and within that we will have conversations that include issues around predictable funding, around infrastructure as well as MSI as well as a number of other issues which are important to municipalities. I look forward to having those discussions and negotiations with municipal leaders, and I look forward to updating this Assembly with respect to the outcome of those discussions.

The Speaker: Second supplemental. The Leader of the Queen's Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, such great news. What a great answer.

I can see that help is on its way. I do think Albertans will be very pleased, and I'm certainly pleased. I know that all Albertans are very excited because we know that we pay the most income tax and the most tax dollars per capita of any province in Canada. We also know that Albertans are looking for additional good news, and I'm looking for an answer. Will the Premier today assure Albertans that during her time as Premier she will not give new taxing powers to our biggest cities?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I just outlined to the hon. leader, I respect municipal leadership, and I respect the work that they do in our communities. In order to do that, then, what we need to do is engage in fulsome, substantive negotiations with those leaders about a number of different options that they have to ensure that they enjoy the benefit of predictable, sustainable funding. The details of those discussions and those negotiations need to begin between this government and those municipal leaders, and as I've said before, once we reach those conclusions, we will happily inform the members opposite of the outcomes.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Budget

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, we'd like to help provide Albertans with clarity on another important issue after that strong "maybe." We certainly recognize that the Premier isn't ready to table a budget just yet, and that's sort of understandable, but it would be helpful for Alberta businesses and Alberta families to actually know what direction the province is going and, certainly, to know what the financial plan is for the years ahead. Will the Premier commit to Alberta families and Alberta businesses that she will reconvene the Legislature on September 7 to consider a budget?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The commitment that I have already made to Albertans and that I will make now to members of this Assembly is that this fall we will reconvene in this Assembly to have a thorough and fulsome discussion about the details of our budget. We will put forward a new budget, and I'm looking forward to working closely with the members of our caucus putting together that budget, and then I'm looking forward to hearing the input and the discussions from members throughout the Assembly when we debate that budget in the fall. It won't be on September 7; I can tell you that. It will be relatively soon after, and we will all have a fulsome opportunity to discuss . . .

The Speaker: Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That answer just wasn't very helpful.

May I remind all members in this House that the last time the Legislature passed a budget here was over a year ago under Premier Redford, and in fact that was three Premiers ago. [some applause]

Mr. Mason: We're more stable now.

Mr. Jean: We're hoping.

Now, a few months' delay is certainly understandable, but the government can craft a budget in four months. It's been done before; it can be done again. Then we could introduce the budget in September. That would still mean the budget would not be passed until the end of this year. Albertans would like to know why – Mr. Speaker, I just noticed the thunderous applause on the other side might have taken some of my time.

The Speaker: The hon. member, I'm sure, will be hopeful that that applause will continue long into the future, and I must tell all of you that we must as a group retain that exchange that is happening amongst us in a very positive and constructive way.

I will recognize the hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My hon. colleague across the way, in fact, opined that one could probably put together a budget in roughly four months. That would mean that we'd be coming back roughly at the end of September, and I suspect that within more or less that range of time you will see us returning. But don't worry; we are going to have a very detailed discussion about a budget. Let me just say that that budget will be based on the principles that this government laid out to the people of Alberta in the last election. That's what the budget will include. It will reflect those opinions, reflect those principles, and reflect what the people of this province voted for.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to clarify that even with the thunderous applause I have no aspirations whatsoever of ever leading the NDP Party.

Mr. Speaker, it looks like the Premier won't even have us considering a budget until November, and we may not pass it until December. That means, frankly, that it's unfair to Albertans. It's unfair to Alberta businesses. We all know the Premier isn't planning on any cuts whatsoever, so really the only budget questions are which taxes are going to go up and how much new debt Albertans are going to have to pay off in the future. Why won't the Premier be ready to give us these two answers in September?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you. Well, as I think I've outlined and as I think the member opposite suggested before, we're looking at roughly about four months. This is a time consideration that's been passed on to us by the previous government. What we have said is that we will move forward to ensure that we put in place the fundamental principles that we talked about in this election, so Albertans have a general sense about where we are going and should have a general sense about where we are going. But we're going to make sure that we do it in a considered, detailed fashion. We don't want to introduce Prentice 2.0. We want to introduce NDP 1.0 because that's what the people of this province just voted for, and that's what we owe to them.

The Speaker: As we create a sense of constructive dialogue with each other, I think we all share in this room – and I realize that the time I take is very valuable in this question period. I would, however, extend thanks on behalf of all of us for the support that the legislative staff have provided to each of us as we find our way through these first sessions.

I would recognize the Leader of the Official Opposition with his third main question.

Government Accountability

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the election all parties did make promises. Indeed, one of the most popular promises the Wildrose made was to conduct audits of key decisions made by the past PC government, speaking of which. A few weeks ago the Premier made news when she suggested that the PCs had deceived us all and expenditures and revenues were different than what they'd said. No real surprise there. Does the Premier think it would be helpful to call for a full-scale audit of the government and the ministers' offices, and if so, will she do it?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As members of this Assembly would know, this government has been sworn in for I believe it's 22 days now, and we're getting ourselves up to speed with the issues that are going on within our ministries and within government. As we go through that process, we will evaluate the strength of the projections that were provided to Albertans in the past and the accuracy of our budgeting at that time. Once we've done that, we will in fact . . .

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader recently talked about finding skeletons in the closet. I'm sure there are many. The Premier suggested that she was deceived about the true state of our province's finances and spending. I know for a fact that some very large and unusual spending decisions were made after the election but before the Premier was sworn in. There is no doubt that multiple audits are required. No doubt whatsoever. Albertans want audits of the past government behaviour. Is the Premier going to call in the Auditor General to look at the PC government books? Albertans want to know.

Ms Notley: Well, I want to say that I think in many ways the hon. member across the floor and I have some common cause on this issue. We certainly want to make sure that Albertans have been and will be getting the most accurate information they can. But what we first need to do is to do a bit of an environmental scan with respect to how things are at this point and then consider what the best way is to proceed going forward. So I understand the issues that the member is raising, but we're not quite ready to make that kind of decision quite yet. I want to be clear as well. I do not believe that I was ever deceived . . .

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. And to be clear, if you need help, there are 21 people on this side that would help you with the environmental cleanup situation.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans did vote for change in the last election. They wanted a new broom to sweep clean, and they wanted all the rocks turned upside down and the sun to shine into the dark corners of the PC universe. No question. Can the Premier tell us what she will do to ensure that Albertans actually get the transparency and accountability that they voted for in the last election?

Ms Notley: There are a number of different mechanisms, Mr. Speaker, that we can engage in in order to increase transparency and accountability, many of which were talked about by both sides of this House during the election and many of which we'll move forward on. I was very pleased that the Leader of the Official Opposition agreed with our government's initiative, in response in part to his initial proposition, that we put together a select special committee that will consider issues around election financing, around conflict of interest, and around whistle-blower legislation. I think that's an incredibly good first start. I look forward to working with all members of this Assembly to ensure that Alberta truly has a first-class . . .

The Speaker: I would hope that the hon. Premier acknowledges and appreciates the patience with respect to the opposition leader for time, as a couple of occasions apply today as well.

I'd like to recognize the leader of the third party, the Progressive Conservative Party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take a few seconds to congratulate the Premier, her cabinet, and all of the government caucus for their success in the election. Well done. I and all members of our caucus look forward to working with you and all members of this House for the betterment of Alberta.

Mr. McIver: My first question is to the Premier with regard to the 2 per cent tax increase planned for corporations. How much revenue does this government expect to raise by adding this corporate tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, we're going ahead with respect to implementing this corporate tax because this was a critical issue that was discussed during the election. As we address the fact that our province has to deal with the fiscal crunch generated in part by our overreliance on royalty revenues after many, many years of the previous government's management decisions, we went to Albertans and asked them: how should we deal with this? And Albertans said resoundingly that those profitable corporations, who have profited during the boom times, need to pay their . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. It's a little disturbing that the government is putting a tax in place and they don't have any idea how much revenue they're going to get. However, we'll move on.

Mr. Speaker, my next question, also to the Premier, with regard to the so-called progressive tax increases to be subtracted from the incomes of hard-working Albertans making over $125,000 per year: how much revenue does this government expect to raise by adding this personal tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think that one of the things that first needs to be understood with respect to this government's progressive income tax change is that under our plan, versus the plan that that party ran on and introduced when it was in government, those Albertans who earn less than $125,000 a year will pay less. The first thing to understand is that our approach to bringing in a progressive income tax was most focused on bringing in fairness and . . .

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. So we're flying blind on two taxes. We have no idea how much revenue we're going to raise, but we're doing it anyway. That's what I heard.

Mr. Speaker, I have friends that earn over $125,000 a year. Some are in one-income homes with children and are currently just making ends meet after paying for the normal expenses. Some of them intentionally live on a tight budget in hopes that their wages and benefits will increase due to the Alberta advantage that at least did exist. How much less will they take home each month?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to learn that some of the hon. leader's best friends are people that earn over $125,000 a year. I'm sure that community will feel represented.

That being said, what will happen here in Alberta is that Albertans will continue to pay less tax than people in any other province in the country. That's the first thing that needs to be remembered. What we heard on the doorsteps and on the campaign trail was that many people in Alberta who earned a bit more understood that it was perhaps time for them to contribute a little bit more.

The Speaker: The Speaker recognizes the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me take this opportunity to congratulate all the elected officials today, new and old and older. It's a real honour to be with you, and I look forward to the session.

Flood Damage Mitigation on the Bow and Elbow Rivers

Dr. Swann: My constituents are concerned about the inaction on upstream flood mitigation in Calgary two years after the worst flooding disaster to hit the province. The previous regime hastily announced the Springbank dry reservoir just a few days ahead of the 2014 fall election. The announcement preceded the receipt of an important engineering report that was to provide analysis of the cost benefit of the project. My question to the environment minister: what is your position on the Springbank dry reservoir project, and what should Albertans expect in mitigation efforts upstream of Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View for this important question, which I know is near and dear to his constituents' hearts and to many of our Calgary members as well. You know, Albertans were devastated by the 2013 floods. That event caused tremendous economic and social costs to our province, and many of the devastating effects on public services and to our businesses are still being felt to this day. Our government will make sure Alberta is better prepared for future adverse effects through world-class flood mitigation and better planning to reduce the costs and damages caused by flooding.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll give the minister some leeway on that non answer.

Again to the minister: given the ambiguity over who controls reservoir flows upstream of Calgary, currently in the hands of TransAlta, and given the secret negotiations that went on with the previous government and TransAlta in pursuing a long-term agreement in the public interest, will this minister make public the negotiations and establish a long-term agreement in the public interest for upstream flows on the Bow and the Elbow rivers?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the former PC government did not adequately prepare for the 2013 floods. They waited for the catastrophe to start work on flood mitigation. That is just plain backwards. We have a situation where the previous government did not have up-to-date flood maps. Without up-to-date information the government left communities ill prepared. We will be moving forward on a proactive approach to flood mitigation and planning to keep Albertans' homes and businesses safe.

Dr. Swann: I am going to try it again, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister commit to making public the negotiations with TransAlta, including financial compensation, relating to upstream flows in the Bow River?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question because it's quite clear to us and quite clear to me after 22 days that the situation that we inherited from the previous PC government on flood mitigation can only be described as a gong show. Therefore, our government will achieve adequate flood mitigation and planning. We will work with municipal and community partners to meet their specific needs.

The Speaker: I would remind the members that as we move on to the next questions – not that you may have noticed any particular preamble speeches in the first five questions, but as we move forward, it is definitive that there won't be any of these. Thank you for your support on that.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Elder Abuse

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, June 15, was World Elder Abuse Awareness Day. All of my questions are for the Minister of Seniors. Can the minister tell us how extensive the problem of elder abuse is in Alberta?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you to the hon. member for the question. This is something that my ministry staff brought to my attention early in my tenure, and I'm sure members opposite are well aware of the extensiveness of the problem as well. In Alberta it's speculated that 1 in 10 elders, 1 in 10 people over the age of 65, is suffering the harmful effects of elder abuse, and I thank the members, the vast majority of whom are wearing their purple ribbon, for helping us address that issue as we move together as a province in service of all Albertans, including our seniors.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the 10 per cent figure that the minister has given us is only specifically reported cases and given that in rural areas there is less support for elder abuse, how do these grants support local initiatives?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you again to the member for the question, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. One in 10 elders, as has been noted, is at risk of facing abuse, and it's primarily at the hands of either somebody that they're related to or somebody that's in a position of power in relation to them. In terms of local autonomy and decision-making we've proudly announced grants in the million-dollar range for this year, $3 million over three years so that local decision-making can be put forward. In the hon. member's riding $50,000 was awarded for a local group, that's already doing advocacy in this area, to hire a part-time staff member.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this issue has been a concern for so long, why have these local supports not been given out before?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks again to the hon. member. What I can assure you of is that there are tremendous resources that have been created centrally through the Ministry of Seniors so that those who are in positions to be able to have opportunities to relay that information now will actually be able to give resources to the local communities so that they can actually staff their offices and make sure that information is actually shared more broadly. So I'm really proud of the fact that we're taking something that already was an initiative under way and actually making sure that it can have the legs, through this million dollars' worth of grants, to make life better for Alberta's seniors and their families.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I want to remind the members that there are no preambles.

I recognize the member for the great constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Health Care System Decision-making

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Health recently announced that she would be eliminating the move towards decentralized decision-making in health care, this after the province has seen its health budget inflate further and further beyond the national average while producing consistently mediocre outcomes for all patients and declining services in rural communities. To the minister. Albertans clearly want to see changes made in health care. Do you really think that more of the same centralized decision-making in health care is the way forward?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. What Albertans told us loud and clear in the election is that they were sick of the risk of mass cuts all across the province, centralization, decentralization, recentralization, disorganization. Albertans elected this government to make sure that we provide stability. The Premier made it very clear during the election campaign that that was our number one priority for health care, and I'm proud to be able to deliver on that.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, during the election we all heard from people who said that the current health care system is broken, unresponsive, wasteful, and unaccountable to the needs of Albertans. Albertans sent a clear signal that they expect us to work towards changing and improving these failing services. Can the minister explain why she wants to stabilize a broken health care system that doesn't work for Albertans instead of making positive changes for Alberta patients and families?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know we heard a lot about health care on the doorsteps, and that's because of over 40 years of having a government in place that doesn't live by and promote the Canada Health Act. You don't have a government like that today. We have a government that is committed to following through on the requests of Albertans, which is to have a strong health care system in place. When they talked on the doorsteps about their issues on health care, it was around wait times. We're working on a plan to address that. It was around making sure that we have long-term care. We're working on addressing that. I didn't hear anyone say: we want to have more decision-making bodies distract us from what actually is happening. Disorganization is not the answer; focusing on front-line services is. This government is committed to that.

The Speaker: I wish to remind yet again that in this set of questions – if the preambles could be abbreviated considerably. Proceed to your second supplemental.

Mr. Barnes: We heard too often that important health decisions are set far away from local residents. The last government missed the mark on ambulance response times, access to physicians, hospital infrastructure, and a host of other issues that hit rural Alberta particularly hard. Minister, in our shared interest of creating a more responsive system, will you recognize the concerns of rural Alberta and commit to empowering communities by putting local decisions back in the hands of local decision-makers?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. Mr. Speaker, of course, a local voice in guiding decision-making is a priority for this government, and I'm sure it's a priority for all of us. That's why we have local constituencies. We're going to ensure that when we do this review, we're providing stability, not another set of letterhead but actual stability, and making sure that local decisions have a voice to make their way forward. I will be very proud when we have the details around that consultation, how we're going to roll it out, to share it with all members of this House and all members of Alberta. Local voice will be a priority moving forward.

The Speaker: The next question is from the hon. Member for Calgary-West. I wish to again underline and ask for the patience of the House. In practice the preamble does not exist in this part of the questions.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Police Officer Fatality

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As a police officer for more than 10 years I can speak to the many dangers police face every day keeping our communities safe. I think everyone can join me in offering sincere condolences to the family of Constable Daniel Woodall, who was killed in the line of duty last week.

To the Minister of Justice. I have a two-part question I believe Albertans have a sincere interest in knowing the answer to. A fatality review is automatic. Will you make that review public, and will you commit to immediately adopting its recommendations so that we can protect our officers and victims ahead of the rights of offenders?

Ms Ganley: I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question. To begin with, I'd like to express the sincerest condolences to the family of Constable Woodall. We stand with you.

I would like to say that this government is absolutely committed to ensuring the safety of our front-line police officers and of our communities. The investigation is still ongoing at this point.

The Speaker: First supplemental. The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Justice minister. Given that I have been on the front lines and I have personally dealt with officers' families who have faced tragedy and given that this tragedy has terrible repercussions for the officer's family, what is the Justice minister doing to assist the family of Constable Woodall, his widow, Claire, and their two young children?

Ms Ganley: Thank you again to the member for the question. This government stands behind the families of officers, particularly in these tragic circumstances. I have been in contact with the widow, and we do plan to attend the funeral tomorrow. At this point she has not indicated that there is anything that is not being provided, but we are committed to providing any assistance they require going forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental. The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Great. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for contacting her and the family.

Again to the Justice minister: given that the so-called, quote, unquote, freemen on the land are listed by other jurisdictions as a domestic terrorist group and locally continue to cause issues and costs for police, courts, and law-abiding citizens, what is this government doing or planning to do to address these extremists in Alberta?

Ms Ganley: Thank you again for the question. Again, I say that this government is committed to supporting our front-line workers and to ensuring that they have the resources necessary. At this point we're still in the process of review, but certainly that is an issue that has come up.

Thank you.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, we want to help Albertans understand this minibudget. The NDP want to pass a minibudget that encompasses approximately 50 per cent of the government's operating costs. Added to the interim supply passed before the PCs made a very fateful decision to call an election, this province will have run on interim supply for eight months. That's eight months without details, eight months without any real fiscal plan. Will the hon. Minister of Finance work with the opposition and commit to giving us a budget within six months, not eight?

Mr. Ceci: I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question. Mr. Speaker, I think the Premier has already made the answer to that clear. We'll be working closely with ministers and their ministries as we move into the early fall to bring forward a budget that will be before this House in the fall. I can commit to working hard through the summer, giving up my vacation, and bringing that report back to all of the members here in the fall. That's what I'll commit to.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I would gladly give up my vacation if I got to write the budget.

Mr. Speaker, to the Finance minister again. Crafting a budget so that Albertans know how their government is spending their money is the most important part of the minister's job. Albertans want to give this government a chance, but they don't want to give it a blank cheque. Given that the minibudget to be tabled is approximately 50 per cent of the size of a normal budget, will the minister not agree that Albertans deserve at least 50 per cent of the debate time given to a normal budget in this House?

Mr. Ceci: I thank the hon. member for the question. He and his members on that side will get a hundred per cent of the time to debate this budget when we get to the budget.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, we were referring to the mini-budget.

To the Minister of Finance. Once the full budget is passed, this fiscal year will nearly be over. This minibudget is likely to encompass 50 per cent of the government's operational costs, yet this minibudget is likely to provide very little in the way of details. Given that the minibudget being tabled is approximately 50 per cent of the full budget, will the minister not agree that Albertans deserve at least 50 per cent of the details?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member keeps asking about something that is not before this House. We're going to have an interim supply bill that's before this House in a few short days. That is known. In terms of the process what we will be able to look at are a number of revenue lines, a number of capital lines, a number of expenditure lines, so if he wants to talk about that, he can talk about that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Pipeline Development

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We heard the throne speech talk about the importance of market access for Alberta's resources. This sounds like welcome news, and we want to help the government make this happen, but we have some questions. We all know the Energy minister's chief of staff lobbied against Energy East and what Leadnow calls an illegitimate pipeline. We also know the NDP are against the pipeline to the west coast, and they're disinterested in going south. So can the Energy minister then explain how exactly we'll achieve market access without actually building pipelines?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, first of all, Alberta is an energy province, and our government cares deeply about what energy brings to the prosperity of our province. We are committed to assisting the energy sector in getting product to market. We're pretty isolated here in Alberta. We lack ports. So we've begun that already, those discussions in our royalty review. Last week we were in Calgary three times talking to over 50 energy senior advisers and over six groups that represent the sector . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Yesterday in a press conference the Premier went on at length talking about our market access and shipping our oil and gas to market without once using the word "pipelines" or the word "rail." Now, we're pretty sure there isn't a third alternative way of shipping oil and gas out of Alberta. So is this government actually committed to building any pipelines or expanding rail use?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just to be clear, I'm very committed to ensuring that our energy industry is supported, and we understand that part of that means ensuring that they can get their product to market. When I say "ship," it's a verb. But let me be very clear. I understand that pipelines are, in fact, the safest way to get product to market, and I have every intention of working, along with my Minister of Energy and my minister of environment, with our industry to ensure that we establish a reputation and a process that will ensure that other parts of this country will welcome their partnership with us and industry.

Mrs. Aheer: Wonderful to hear.

Albertans need some clarity about where the NDP stands on these issues. In the opposition the NDP called pipelines job killers. The Energy minister's chief of staff, her top adviser, was the executive director for a group that said that pipelines and rail put "our communities, livelihoods and environment in harm's way." Will the Energy minister be crystal clear and commit today to advocate to expand market access through environmentally responsible pipelines?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to make two things perfectly clear. First of all, our position on the Keystone was that if we ship unprocessed bitumen to Texas, according to this government and to the American government we will give tens of thousands of Alberta jobs to Texas, not to Albertans, and that's not what Albertans want to see. The second thing that I want to make very clear – I want to make this very clear. For too long Albertans have been trapped in a discussion where when you stand up for our air and our land and our water, you are accused of being a job killer. What that does is that it contributes to the very record which is actually inhibiting our ability . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Education Funding

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by thanking our new government for putting more than $100 million into our education system, including $6 million for private, charter, and independent schools. As a parent of a child in a charter school I could not be happier. But given that your party has formerly stated that funding private and charter schools was draining money from the public system, it's a little bit confusing. To the Education minister: do you support the public-private model?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks very much for that question. I think it's very important for everyone to understand that our government was voted in to make sure that we have stable funding for education here in the province of Alberta, and to that end we put in $103 million to meet the needs of 12,000 new students moving into the school system here in the fall. It was a major contribution, and we included in that contribution money to charter schools, to home-schooling, and to private schools as well. It's important to use our capacity, and that's what we chose to do.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Education minister once again. You said yourself, and you just said that Albertans want stability in the education system. Yes, we do. Can you assure us, the parents, that you have no plans to change this model in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that question. It's very important for us to use the capacity that we have at our disposal here in the province of Alberta. We know with 12,000 moving into the schools in the fall and many more young children just waiting to go to school that we use the capacity we have available to us. That's why in interim supply I put money into the public schools. We put it for charter schools, private, and home-schooling as well to meet the needs of all Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I still haven't heard a yes. It was a pretty simple question.

Given that our independent schools save Albertans more than $145 million every year and given that NDP governments in other provinces have attempted to bring in changes, we would just like the Education minister's word. Will he fix what isn't broken by cutting funding to charter, private, and independent schools? Tell the truth.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, actions speak as loudly as words or even louder. We put the money into this interim budget to ensure that everything was funded, from private to charter to home schools and so forth. We need to use the capacity in our system and to make sure that the stability is there so that people know, moving forward, that we've made that commitment for all students in the province of Alberta. It's as simple as that. You can't just be putting words into other people's mouths. Sorry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Donations to Political Parties

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the last election some candidates and political parties received tens and even hundreds of thousands of dollars in contributions from corporations. The question is to the Minister of Justice. What is this government going to do to stop the flow of campaign financing from corporations and from unions?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member. Our policy is to stop donations from corporations and unions going to political parties and to put the voice back to the people of Alberta to choose who it is that they want to lead them, and we are committed to putting that through.

The Speaker: Hon. member, first supplemental.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that limiting contributions to political parties will mean that candidates and parties have less money to spend during elections, to the Minister of Justice: what impact do you anticipate this change will have on elections in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you again, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is our intention to give the voice back to the people of Alberta because we think that they are the people to whom we should be accountable, and by taking away union and corporate donations, we give that voice back to the people to choose. So, yes, it will have an effect on elections going forward, and I think it is an effect that the people will support.

The Speaker: Hon. member, second supplemental.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that voters in Alberta want to ensure that it is their voices that are being heard and given that most Albertans cannot spend $30,000 in donations to political campaigns, unlike some corporations, to the Minister of Justice: what is this government's plan to address this and ensure that Albertans' voices are being heard?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you again, and thank you for the question. This government is committed to ensuring that union and corporate donations are banned. There are other moves that we want to make going forward, and together with the Official Opposition we have agreed to form a committee that will go forward. We are committed to studying other ways that we can improve our democracy to ensure that it is Albertans who have the primary voice going forward in our elections.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds I will call for the first of several members' statements.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Constable Daniel Woodall

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak for the first time in this Assembly, with the greatest of respect and humility, to deliver a message of solidarity and hope from the people of the constituency of Edmonton-McClung. Hon. members and all Albertans will mark the death and celebrate the life of Edmonton Police Service Constable Daniel Woodall as his funeral service is held tomorrow. Constable Woodall gave his life in dedicated service to all of us one week ago today. His wife, two young children, and extended family all suffered a terrible loss. Our thoughts are also with Sergeant Harley, who is recovering from wounds sustained in the same incident.

There was another, unrelated shooting in the same neighbourhood about a week earlier in the parking lot of Our Savior Lutheran church. In response to both these violent acts one local pastor, Philip Penrod of Our Savior Lutheran church, organized a community prayer walk to allow the local community to express their sorrow over the shootings and make clear their determination that these violent acts would not define their neighbourhoods. Clerical leaders and members of all faith communities in the riding accepted Pastor Penrod's invitation to encircle the neighbourhood's pain with their resolve to re-establish the normally peaceful nature of our home territory. Over 100 residents marched together to pay respect to Constable Woodall and bear witness to his sacrifice.

My own home, sir, is only about three blocks away from where Constable Woodall died. I personally appreciated the opportunity to come together with my neighbours to mourn Constable Woodall's death, celebrate his life, and resolve to look out for each other more than we ever have before. This week that message is one that all Albertans can take to heart as we lay to rest one of this province's best.

I'm confident, sir, that the government of Alberta understands the value of safe communities. It will be working with determination to ensure that safety and security to live our lives is assured to all.

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Jaydon Sommerfeld

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with a heavy heart to honour the life and spirit of Jaydon Sommerfeld. In many ways Jaydon was not unlike a lot of 17-year-old boys. He was an amazing athlete – a lacrosse star – he was an excellent student, and he was supposed to graduate from Chestermere high school next year along with my youngest son, Sehran, and the class of 2016.

Tragically, Jaydon won't get to celebrate this milestone, and our community won't get to watch him grow up, graduate from university, start a career, or marry someone he loves. What made Jaydon truly special was the way that he touched and left an everlasting, positive impression on those around him. The absolute outpouring of grief and sadness since Jaydon's death is a testament to the beautiful life he led and the priceless memories he shared in just 17 short years.

Jaydon was taken from us at the intersection of highways 1 and 791. This intersection is notoriously dangerous, and the questions that we need to have addressed are: why has nothing been done, and why are we still losing people at this intersection? The intersection forces drivers to turn out in front of two lanes of highway traffic and then attempt the dangerous merge. I've driven this road since 1986, and I assure you that it's just as gut-wrenching as it sounds.

As legislators we owe Jaydon and his family more than words. While devastating and tragic, Jaydon's death is a call to action. Chestermere needs a new overpass at this highway intersection, and I will be fighting for this project in my capacity as an MLA.

Even in death Jaydon's kind spirit is bringing light and life to the world. His organs have been donated to eight needy recipients, that will get a second chance at life because of this. In fact, his beautiful heart has already found a home.

Jaydon and his family have given so much to this province, and I urge this House to help me give them something back.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Police Officer Safety

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with great humility, respect, and sadness that I rise in the House today to offer, again, condolences to the family and colleagues of Constable Daniel Woodall, who died in the line of duty on June 8. It was only three months ago that I rose in this very same House to remind Albertans that front-line emergency workers risk their lives every time they go to work. There are lessons to learn from last week's tragedy, and as the PC opposition critic for Justice I will do my best to ensure police have everything they need to perform their job safely.

As a former police officer and incident commander I can tell you that having all the tools is critical to any operation, especially when dealing with the unknown. The threat of the unknown is something that an officer experiences every time they have contact with the public. Officers perform these acts and the public perceives them as routine, but I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there is no such thing as a routine contact. The threat of the unknown is always present in the mind of every police officer during every interaction, and the officer is prepared to give their life for you without hesitation.

Many citizens never know what the police do to keep them safe, and they shouldn't as that is the privilege of living in a free, democratic society. We as police know that most interactions with an officer usually result in a warning or a ticket, and we shoulder that abuse from the public, which we accept. But we are still prepared to run towards gunfire because that is our duty; that is our job.

Countless officers like Constable Woodall perform acts of heroism each day. For many, they do not even receive a simple thank you, and they don't ask for it, because it's what we do. It's who we are. It's what any hero would do. That is why I said on June 8, after the tragedy, that if you have an opportunity, please go out and say thank you to a police officer when you see one, not because they have asked but because they deserve it.

Mr. Speaker, we must always put the rights of victims of crime ahead of the rights of offenders. God bless you, Daniel. Thank you for your service.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for St. Albert.

Speech from the Throne

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to speak for the first time in this House. Yesterday was another historic day for Albertans, and I'm pleased to rise and share my thoughts about the throne speech. As we heard, this Assembly welcomed 70 new MLAs with a wide range of backgrounds. I, too, feel and share Albertans' enthusiasm and hope for change in this great province that we call home.

I've spent the majority of my adult life working to create inclusive communities for people with disabilities. Yesterday I was moved by the language chosen related to persons with disabilities. People with disabilities need not be labelled as our most vulnerable but as people first, people who require and deserve our support and the opportunity to be fully contributing and participating members of our communities. I am confident that is the commitment of this government.

I along with all Albertans am keenly aware of the challenges before us. I know we are resolute in our commitment to the people of Alberta that we will meet these challenges head-on by offering unprecedented co-operation, by listening to each other and taking the best ideas from all Albertans to create solutions that pave the way for all of us.

Yesterday we heard so many inspiring commitments for an inclusive future, a future in which there is freedom from poverty, violence, and exclusion. I'm so proud to be a member of this Assembly under the leadership of this Premier, a visionary woman who has inspired people throughout this province and beyond. I am confident in her leadership, and I look forward to working towards an inclusive Alberta for all of us.

Every morning when I wake up, I look and I see a quote that I have on the wall of my home. It's a quote from a hero of mine, Mahatma Gandhi, and it says that you must be the change you wish to see in the world. We in this Legislature can be that change.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I believe that we require unanimous consent of the House to continue with Orders of the Day past 3 o'clock. If it's your wish, I would make such a motion.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Thank you very much.
The Member for Calgary-Klein.

Workplace Fatalities

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, there's been a recent and tragic workplace death in Calgary, the death of 35-year-old Maryam Rashidi. She was killed attempting to stop a gas-and-dash where she worked.

Ms Rashidi was a chemical engineer from Iran who studied at the prestigious Sharif University of Technology. Ms Rashidi, her husband, Ahmed, and her six-year-old son were recent immigrants to Canada, first settling in Montreal, then both finding jobs at oil and gas companies in Calgary, eager to contribute to their new home. Her dream of making a new and better life for her family is a dream that all in this House can relate to as many of us are immigrants or our families are immigrants.

Ms Rashidi was recently laid off from a job at a Calgary oil and gas company. In trying to support her family, Ms Rashidi swallowed her pride to ensure income for her family and took the first job that was offered to her, working as a gas station attendant on the busy thoroughfare of 16th Avenue in Calgary.

Tragic events like this remind us of our duty to ensure that every single employee has a safe workplace and is trained on the hazards of their job. To me, a workplace death is the most tragic of all. Merely providing for your family should not be a game of chance that you won't return home after your shift.

Safety on the job is an issue that is close to my heart. As a business representative for the United Utility Workers' Association my priority was always to ensure that safety was at the top of the agenda. Still, injuries and death continue to occur to the women and men of our province earning a living to provide for their families.

I had the honour of speaking at Ms Rashidi's funeral. This was a brilliant and popular woman who will be greatly missed by her family, Calgary's Iranian community, and all those whom she touched. In addition, she has donated her organs, and six more people will be impacted by her life.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be a member of a party and a government that cares about the safety of workers. Every Albertan deserves to go home safely to their family. This government will act effectively to make this a reality for working people.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Flood Recovery

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Saturday, June 20, will mark the two-year anniversary of the southern Alberta floods. Although several communities, including Calgary, were directly affected by this event, this once-in-a-generation flood had a severe and devastating effect on the town of High River, a wonderful place in the southern end of my constituency, and they're still recovering from that. Thousands of residents were displaced, a large number of homes and businesses were destroyed, and the recovery has been arduous and painful for many.

This anniversary will be a time to reflect on the incredible acts of courage and bravery we witnessed in 2013, acts of bravery from first responders, local officials, volunteers, charitable groups, and everyday Albertans who just showed up and said: what can I do to help? However, it will be a time to reflect on the incredible losses we suffered and to pay tribute to the five Albertans who lost their lives.

I'm pleased to hear that the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs will be taking time from his busy schedule this Saturday to visit High River, and I'm hopeful he'll meet with some important people, Mayor Craig Snodgrass and Jim Ross, chair of the DRP advocacy group, just a few of the individuals in our community who have been directly involved in the recovery process. I look forward to meeting with the minister and providing him and his team with an update on several key DRP and flood mitigation issues. I also look forward to working collaboratively with the minister to resolve ongoing issues quickly and effectively.

The 2013 floods challenged Albertans in a way we've never been challenged before, and we answered the call and showed the world our true resilient spirit. But there is more work to be done, more businesses to be built up and built back, more homes to be made whole, and more hearts to be mended. By working together, we can finish this recovery and make sure that every flood-affected Albertan is back on his or her feet and that they feel strong and they feel better sooner rather than later.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm pleased to table today the requisite number of copies of the House leaders' agreement respecting Oral Question Period and Members' Statements.

Statements by the Speaker

Election of Deputy Chair of Committees

The Speaker: Hon. members, there is one outstanding item of business carried over from the election of presiding officers on June 11, 2015. The Official Opposition House Leader raised what he termed a point of clarification concerning the Deputy Chair of Committees and whether that member could continue in a caucus position. His intervention and that of the Government House Leader are found at pages 5 and 6 of Alberta Hansard for June 11, 2015.

Let me address a few preliminary matters. First, it is inappropriate for the Speaker to address any points of order or questions of privilege on the day the presiding officers are elected as the causes for summoning the Assembly have not yet been given. That is the purpose of the Speech from the Throne.

Secondly, there is no item known as a point of clarification, but I appreciate the expression, that has been used in connection with a request under Standing Order 13(2), to explain a Speaker's decision. Having said that, I undertook to address this matter.

As members know, on June 11 they elected the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford as Deputy Chair of Committees for the 29th Legislature. He was duly nominated and elected, and he is not a member of the Executive Council. There is no impediment to his nomination or subsequent election. It is my view that the Speaker has no jurisdiction over this matter. There is nothing in the Legislative Assembly Act or the standing orders that addresses this matter, and the authorities are silent on this specific point. Accordingly, the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford is the Assembly's choice for Deputy Chair of Committees, and there is no reason for the Speaker to intervene in that decision.

15th Anniversary of Elected Member

The Speaker: Hon. members, I understand that the Minister of Transportation and Minister of Infrastructure, our longest serving member in this Assembly, celebrated his 15-year anniversary as a Member of this Legislative Assembly last Friday, June 12, 2015. As this is the first opportunity after the previous days' events to extend our collective best wishes, I would ask now that the hon. member step forward to receive his 15-year Mace pin and congratulate him on his outstanding service not only to his constituents but, in fact, to all Albertans.

I understand that there may be a point of order raised by the House leader for the Official Opposition.

Point of Order Anticipation

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure sort of to rise on the first day while we talk about points of order. I might just add, before we get to the meat of the matter here this afternoon, that while I know that I may be ruled out of order because you've made a ruling, it would have been delightful to be able to add some of our perspective prior to your making that ruling.

But specifically for today I will cite Standing Order 23(e) with respect to the question from the member opposite about a bill, particularly Bill 1, that will be a matter of debate later today in the House, and 23(e) reads that a member will be called to order when it "anticipates, contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper" – we are all very clear; Bill 1 is on the Order Paper – or notice has been given for that day. Clearly, I want to be able to try and use this as an opportunity for us all to get better together, but it is my opinion that the question was certainly out of order.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I don't have a copy of the Blues in front of me, so I don't know precisely what was said. But my recollection of the question was that it was not specifically on the bill but on the points of policy contained in the bill. Nevertheless, the rules require that a point of order be raised at the time. The hon. member has not raised it at his first opportunity. Perhaps he was unfamiliar with that rule. Nevertheless, you have to make your point of order at the time of the transgression, and then it's dealt with at the end. I don't know if the hon. member made that point during the question or just now.

Mr. Cooper: We sent a note.

Mr. Mason: You sent a note at the time. You need to rise, but that's fine.

The Speaker: Could I seek the guidance of the Clerk?

Hon. members, the point being raised, I'm taking it under advisement. We'll make best efforts to consider the points raised.

However, hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 7(7) the daily Routine is now concluded.

 - (6) Special Standing Committee on Members' Services: Mr. Wanner, chair; Mr. Schmidt, deputy chair; Mr. Cooper; Mr. Fildebrandt; Ms Goehring; Ms Luff; Mr. McIver; Ms McLean; Mr. Nielsen; Mr. Nixon; and Mr. Piquette.

B. Be it resolved that the following members be appointed to the Assembly's three legislative policy committees:

- (1) Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future: Mr. Coolahan, chair; Mr. Schneider, deputy chair; Mr. S. Anderson; Mr. Carson; Ms Fitzpatrick; Mr. Gotfried; Mr. Hanson; Mr. Horne; Mr. Hunter; Ms Jansen; Ms Larivee; Ms McKittrick; Mrs. Schreiner; Mr. Sucha; and Mr. Taylor.
- (2) Standing Committee on Families and Communities: Ms Sweet, chair; Mr. Smith, deputy chair; Ms Goehring; Mr. Hinkley; Ms Jansen; Mrs. Littlewood; Ms Luff; Mr. Orr; Ms Payne; Mrs. Pitt; Mr. Rodney; Mr. Shepherd; Dr. Swann; Mr. Westhead; and Mr. Yao.
- (3) Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship: Ms Kazim, chair; Mr. Loewen, deputy chair; Mrs. Aheer; Mr. S. Anderson; Ms Babcock; Mr. Clark; Mr. Drysdale; Mr. Horne; Mr. Kleinstuber; Mr. MacIntyre; Mr. Rosendahl; Mrs. Schreiner; Mr. Stier; Mr. Sucha; and Ms Woollard.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 18(1)(h) I rise to speak against Government Motion 3. It is a long-standing parliamentary tradition that parties are given first choice of membership on committees, and in light of the new spirit of co-operation, which I sincerely hope is sweeping through this House, I would hope that the government would consider this request.

I'm going to table three documents. A letter that I wrote on May 11, 2015, to former Speaker Mr. Zwozdesky expressing my interest in the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. I will table the second document, a print of an e-mail dated Wednesday, June 10, 2015, to all House leaders, forwarding the letter to Speaker Zwozdesky and expressing my interest in the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. Finally, an e-mail printout sent to all House leaders, including the Government House Leader, dated Friday, June 12, expressing my regret at not being included on the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and noting that of the 74 – I said in my e-mail 74; in fact, there are 73 – private members 52 sit on multiple committees, and of those three sit on three committees.

I believe it is in the interest of all Albertans for all parties to be represented on the Standing Committee on Public Accounts because it deals with all ministries and all departments. I note also that my friend the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View also did not receive his first choice of committee. So I ask that the members of the Assembly vote against this motion to give the House leaders and, in particular, the Government House Leader the opportunity to reconsider the makeup of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other members that wish to speak? I invite the hon. Government House Leader.

3:20

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We tried to accommodate everyone. I recognize that this committee is the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow's second choice. I did believe that we had accommodated the request which we heard verbally from the leader of the Liberal opposition to the committee that he was appointed to. Unfortunately, it's not always possible for the House to accommodate the specific wishes of members, particularly members who are independents, but I believe that there are some very positive opportunities for both members to participate in the work of the House, and we'll be prepared to review this in due course.

Thank you.

[Government Motion 3 carried]

4. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly resolve into Committee of the Whole, when called, to consider certain bills on the Order Paper.

[Government Motion 4 carried]

5. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly resolve itself into Committee of Supply, when called, to consider supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

[Government Motion 5 carried]

Evening Sitings

6. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1) commencing Tuesday, June 16, 2015, the Assembly shall meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings for consideration of government business for the duration of the first session of the 29th Legislature 2015 spring sitting unless on motion by the Government House Leader made before 6 p.m., which may be made orally and without notice, the Assembly is adjourned to the following sitting day.

[Government Motion 6 carried]

Transmittal of Estimates

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I received a certain message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: The Lieutenant Governor transmits interim supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province and of certain sums required from the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2016, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now wish to table the 2015-16 interim supply estimates (no. 2). This interim funding authority will ensure continuity in the business of the province while our government takes the time necessary to study, deliberate, and prepare its plans for the entire 2015-16 fiscal year and then the further time needed for this Assembly to discuss, debate, and enact 2015-16 funding in full. When passed, these estimates will authorize the approximate spending of $56 million for the Legislative Assembly, $15.4 billion in expense funding, $2 billion in capital investment funding, $765 million in financial transaction funding for the government, and $387 million for the transfer from the lottery fund to the general revenue fund. These interim supply amounts include government commitments to provide additional funding to school boards, postsecondary institutions, and Alberta

Health Services over and above the funding planned by the previous government.

Thank you.

Government Motions

7. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that the message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2015-16 interim supply estimates (no. 2), and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

Mr. Mason: Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to briefly put some comments on the record with respect to Motion 7 and the process moving forward. My real concern today is around our inability to support Motion 7 in sending the supply to committee with respect, actually, to Motion 8 in the time that's been allotted for that debate.

It appears that the new government has a very similar sort of tone to the old government when it comes to the amount of debate that they're willing to allow in this place. I must say that I was very hopeful in the early, early days of this government, when we had begun to discuss some of the processes moving forward. As many of you will know, the Wildrose and myself have introduced or shared a document that we believe would make the House work substantially better. But so far today we've seen the government introduce a motion for evening sittings on the first day of this Assembly, something that I personally have witnessed the Premier speak against when they were in opposition. We've seen in newspaper reports the minister for the status of women speak specifically to night sittings. This is not the sort of tone that we were hoping for when it comes to the debate in the Assembly, and particularly now we see that we're going to be sending this absolutely massive supply bill into committee.

Standing Order 61(1) states that "interim and supplementary estimates shall be considered for not less than 3 hours," and that is a minimum amount. Today we've seen the order on the Order Paper that it will be debated for 3 hours, being the maximum amount of debate. It's very difficult for the opposition to support a motion to send something this sizable to committee when debate is already going to be stifled by this government.

I understand that we just did some preliminary number crunching here. It looks like there's going to be $18 billion that we debate in a three-hour period. I did some early calculations, guessing that it might be around $15 billion, and we're going to be talking about spending $83 million a minute during that three-hour period.

The Speaker: Hon. member, if I might, would you clarify for the Speaker and the House. Are you speaking to Motion 7 or to Motion 8?

Mr. Cooper: I'm speaking to Motion 7 and our inability to support Motion 7 as it relates directly to the rest of our proceedings. We're unable to support Motion 7 – and that's specifically what I'm speaking to – as a result of our concern with the direction of the Assembly.

Shall I continue, sir, or do you feel like you need to rule?

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. We're looking at spending $83 million a minute during that debate period. We have had some discussion with the government about changing the tone, and in fact the former government in the last set of estimates, supply estimates, allowed for six hours' debate, and here we're going to be into a situation . . .

An Hon. Member: Thank God. Great debates, they were.

Mr. Cooper: Yeah. In fact, not only six hours of debate for interim supply but also six hours of debate for supplementary supply.

This government is working on the bare minimum that is permitted by the rules, so it sounds like there's been no change from the previous government to the new government. In fact, I was hoping that we would be under new management, but as it turns out, we're not under new management. This government is requiring us to support a motion that ultimately will end in three hours of debate, and it's totally unacceptable. It seems to me that orange, in fact, is the new blue.

It seems to me that there has been little commitment from the new government, and I recognize that we're in early days, but let me assure you that today is the best day for change. September, October, November, wherever we're heading: once we finally get around to talking about making the House work better, I can assure you that we will see more and more of this and less of change. It's for these reasons that I am unable and I would suggest that the vast majority of our caucus will be unable to support Motion 7.

However, I'm here to try and provide a strong, working Assembly for all members. Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that I would be in the subsequent moments in this House more than willing to accept an amendment from the Government House Leader to Motion 7 that would see six hours of debate in committee tomorrow, on June 17. That would allow for a spirit of cooperation, a change in the culture to this place, that in fact, sir, you so eloquently wrote about in your procedural memo of yesterday.

In closing, I would like to emphasize that with so many new members elected to the 29th Legislature, it represents a unique opportunity to create a new and constructive culture in the Assembly. As an aside, limiting debate to three hours on an $18 billion supply budget is certainly not creating that constructive culture. I ask you all to be leaders in ensuring a culture of respect and cooperation, where the differences of opinions never undermine the credibility or public confidence in this cherished institution. Unless we can see a potential change from the government, we are unable to support Motion 7.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank my hon. colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills for articulating the position of the Wildrose Official Opposition with regard to Motion 7 and the interim supply bill. I will not repeat too much of what my colleague has said but will expand upon several of our concerns as the Official Opposition. Normally an interim supply bill is for a few hundred thousand dollars or a few million dollars. I would chance to say that it is extraordinarily rare that an interim supply bill would be for several billion dollars, let alone up to 18 and a half billion dollars, that we see added up in the motion and interim supply bill before us today. This is an extraordinarily large sum of money. One of the things that Albertans were concerned about – one of the reasons they voted for change was because they believed that the previous government was frivolous with their money, that they spent first and asked questions later if they would even accept questions.

We need to get off to a better start here. This is a new government and a new Legislature with nearly entirely new members. We need to start with an atmosphere of respect for this Legislature and the period given to debate and also being serious with taxpayers' money. My colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills has said that we will be debating for the maximum of three hours how to spend $83 million every minute. That works out to more than $6 billion an hour. I don't know about you, but that scares me, and I think it would scare taxpayers if they knew that we were that frivolous with their money.

Mr. Speaker, we understand that the government is unable to prepare a full budget at this time, but more details would otherwise be needed. This is not a budget; this is a brochure. This is intended merely to give the government a blank cheque to spend money. Traditionally it is the constitutional obligation of the Legislature and of the Official Opposition in particular to scrutinize money bills before the House, to do due diligence in ensuring that when the executive comes before this Assembly and asks for funds, we are not giving them a blank cheque and we are doing our due diligence. The Wildrose will not be voting to give this government a blank cheque.

We are trying to be helpful, and we are trying to be co-operative in this new Legislature, so I will repeat the words of the Official Opposition House Leader, that if the Government House Leader would be open to an amendment to extend debate to six hours, which would mean we're only debating $3 billion an hour, we would be willing, then, to accept the motion before the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. House leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I want to thank the hon. members from the Wildrose Official Opposition for their comments with respect to this motion, and I have a few comments to make. I don't think that the context that they're placing this motion in is actually fair or correct.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, as they have correctly pointed out, the previous government brought forward an interim supply bill, which was passed before the calling of the election. That was given six hours of debate, but we didn't have enough speakers from the party opposite to continue that for the full six hours. [interjection] Well, yeah, and you had to deal with it. Yeah.

So it didn't receive the full six hours that it was allocated by the previous government in the first place.

The point that I would really like to make is that this interim supply bill is in almost all ways the same as the interim supply bill that was debated before the election. We have made four changes. Only approximately 10 per cent of the allocation in this interim supply bill is new. The other 90 per cent has been discussed to the full extent of the opposition's desire to do so.

The second point I'd like to make, Mr. Speaker, is that the hon. Opposition House Leader did raise this question in our House leaders' meeting. The suggestion that I made at that time is that we could consider extending the three hours based upon estimates of each opposition party and how much time they wish to spend on that debate. We did not hear from any of the opposition parties with respect to that and made a decision to go forward with the three hours as originally proposed.

Mr. Speaker, the timing of this is unfortunate, and it is awkward. The previous government chose to introduce a budget, not pass the budget, and then take it to the people in an election. They did not expect that the people would not like their budget and that they would actually be defeated in the election based largely on an unpopular budget. That has left the new government in a position of creating a new budget. The hon. members have acknowledged that you cannot just pull a brand new budget out of thin air, that it takes some time, and we're going to take that time because this is, in case people have forgotten, the first change of government in 43 years. It will take us some time to get it right, but we want to get it right, and we will bring forward a budget for full debate in the fall session of this Legislature. This is not what we chose. This is not how we wanted to do it, but it is the only way we can do it.

I think hon. members opposite should know this. We had an option of proceeding by special warrants, which means simply not meeting the House, not debating it, and simply borrowing the money to continue. We chose instead, despite being a brand new government, to face the House very quickly, to bring forward our interim supply bill, and to bring forward our bill with respect to changes to the tax structure so that Albertans would know where we stood.

So, Mr. Speaker, we are going to bring forward a complete budget in the fall, and I assure all hon. members that they'll have a full chance to debate that, but this particular interim supply bill is 90 per cent the same as the bill that was discussed before the election for five hours, I understand from the hon. member. There are only four departments in which changes have been made to the previous government's interim supply bill, and I would respectfully suggest to hon. members that they may wish to focus there.

But, Mr. Speaker, we need to get on with governing. We need to be able to pay the bills, pay our employees, meet the obligations of the government, and that is what the interim supply bill is for. It does not represent the final budget of this government. It is not a minibudget; it is an interim supply bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member for the PC Party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thought it was important that I rise after listening to the previous debate and point out that two members of the Official Opposition actually tried to adopt the previous government's time allotment for supply, I guess endorsing what the previous government used to do.

Mr. Speaker, I point out that the government of the day's House leader took some time to say that . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member and the House, I'm advised that a standing order indicates that once the mover of the motion stands, in fact, it is intended as a closure on the debate and, thus, the reason why I called for the vote and will now call.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, if I may.

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Mason: I would ask the House for unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to finish his remarks.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, colleagues and Mr. Speaker, and I will reward you by being brief. I just thought it was important to point out that two members of the Official Opposition tried to adopt the previous government's time allotment for supply, and the government of today didn't use the word "generous," but I think suggested, if not outright said, that the previous government provided more than enough time, because it wasn't filled.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that members of our party might be the only ones left in the House that realize that we made mistakes in the last government. While the rest of our colleagues might not acknowledge that, we are determined to learn the lessons of the past and go forward and look forward to debating the supply estimates.

The Speaker: Are there any other questions?

The hon. House leader to close debate.

Mr. Mason: I have closed.

[Government Motion 7 carried]

8. Mr. Mason moved:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(2) the Committee of Supply shall be called to consider the 2015-16 interim supply estimates (No. 2) for three hours on Wednesday, June 17, 2015.

[Government Motion 8 carried]

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Connolly moved, seconded by Ms Kazim, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Connolly: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to open debate on the Speech from the Throne, and I wish to thank Her Honour for the remarks that she brought to this Chamber yesterday.

I would also like to thank and congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on your election both to this Assembly and to the chair. I trust that you will be a good and fair arbiter of the proceedings here. Further, I would like to congratulate all of my hon. colleagues in this Assembly on their election to this Chamber and thank the countless volunteers, regardless of which party they toiled for in the most recent election, for their commitment to our democracy and to their communities. Finally, of course, I would like to thank the hon. Premier for honouring me and the residents of Calgary-Hawkwood with the opportunity to open debate on Her Honour's speech.

The speech represents the plan that the voters of my riding chose on May 5. They chose fairer taxes, safeguarding vital education, health, and human services, and a renewed democracy. The opportunity to represent the citizens of my riding, which is located in northwest Calgary and includes the communities of Arbour Lake, Citadel, Hawkwood, Ranchlands, and Silver Springs, is truly humbling. I'm excited to get to work with the Premier to implement the fresh start so many residents of these communities hoped for when they cast their ballots.

Calgary-Hawkwood is a riding that represents so much of what Alberta is and why people from all over the world flock to our province to join our communities and pursue their dreams with relentless optimism. The communities in my riding are relatively new – the oldest was only developed in 1972 – but they have come to be remarkable, vibrant places where a diverse range of people from all walks of life make their homes. Much like our incredible province, my riding has grown quickly, and its residents work in a wide range of industries. With the Bow River forming the southern border and the scenic nature of the foothills in which it is nestled, it is no surprise that people are drawn to the natural beauty of this place and the wonderful green spaces and parks that have grown alongside its communities.

Despite the hopeful, optimistic, and entrepreneurial spirit of the people of Calgary-Hawkwood, the residents of my riding understand that our communities and our province face real challenges that our government is tackling in a straightforward and steadfast way. So many in my riding understand that the priorities laid out in Her Honour's speech are vital to the health and vitality of our province. They hope for better health care for all of us, for a society that takes care of its most vulnerable citizens, and for a diversified and stable economy that benefits all of us. They also know and believe that you should be safe from discrimination and violence regardless of who you are and who you love.

It is an honour, Mr. Speaker, to rise today as one of the first openly LGBTQ-plus MLAs. The LGBTQ-plus community in Alberta has long fought for equal human rights, for recognition that despite who we love, we are Albertans just the same. As recently as last December this Assembly struggled with ensuring that our LGBTQ-plus students are treated fairly and equally. The debates around Bill 10 and Bill 202 were one of the many reasons that spurred me to run as MLA for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Since May 5 I have met with many individuals in the LGBTQ-plus community, and almost everyone has made me promise that I will help represent them because they feel like they have never had a voice in this Legislature. We have never had someone who truly understands what it's like to keep a secret from their friends and family for years, we've never had someone who knows what it's like to be afraid to hold their partner's hand in public, and we've never had someone who felt the fear every day of being kicked out of your home or fired just for being who you are, until now.

The Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, the Member for Calgary-Cross, and I are proud to be members of the LGBTQ-plus community and to represent our community in this Legislature. The three of us have different life experiences, different educations, and different upbringings, but we are united to fight for both our constituents and our LGBTQ-plus community. It was truly overwhelming to march alongside them with our incredible caucus of LGBTQ-plus allies in Edmonton's Pride parade earlier this month. The diversity of this caucus is one that I am incredibly proud to see in this Assembly.

Another key priority for the voters in Calgary-Hawkwood and for me is a strong education system that brings the best out of all Albertans. This is particularly important for me. My mom is a teacher. My sister is training to be a teacher, and her partner is also a teacher. I see every day through those that I love and respect the impact that passionate educators can have on the lives of their students, especially when they are given the tools that they need from their government. When I hear Her Honour speak of our new government's commitment to stable and predictable funding for our schools, I know that the Premier has the same priorities as my family as well as those of so many other families in Calgary-Hawkwood.

I understand that education does not end when we leave high school either, Mr. Speaker. Why, it wasn't so very long ago that I myself was a university student, as some of my colleagues in this Assembly will undoubtedly know and continuously remind me of. I know that postsecondary education fuels our dreams, expands our worlds, and helps us grow our economy and compete globally. When I see the Premier acknowledge that there is no better investment our province can make than to ensure prosperity, I know that Albertans can face the challenges ahead and come through stronger and better than ever before.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on about all of the exciting, positive new starts we are seeing in our amazing and resilient province – real action on mental health, making life a little easier for those of us who earn the minimum wage, a renewal of our democracy, and a new relationship of respect with our indigenous brothers and sisters – but I will simply conclude by thanking the people of Calgary-Hawkwood for the trust they have placed in me and in the Premier. This is truly a humbling experience, and I am looking forward to the challenges and opportunities that face our province of farmers and feminists, workers and entrepreneurs, settlers and indigenous peoples, students and teachers. We are truly an amazing province, and I am so very proud to be part of this new chapter in our history.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today and speak for the first time to this Assembly. To be a part of such a small group of individuals who have sat as elected members of this House is truly a privilege. I'm truly humbled that the people of Calgary-Glenmore chose to put their trust in the Premier, the NDP, and myself. I promise to work every day in this House to represent the people of Calgary-Glenmore and bring about the change they voted for in May.

The riding of Calgary-Glenmore is one of only two Calgary ridings that have not been divided since the electoral boundaries changed substantially in 1959, a riding that encompasses important landmarks such as the Glenmore reservoir; important tourist sites like Heritage Park; a huge diversity of people, including a strong Jewish community; people who speak many different languages like Cantonese, Mandarin, Urdu, Hindi, Punjabi, German, Spanish, and more; people who were born in Alberta, in other provinces, and across the world; people who have decided to make Calgary-Glenmore their home. While campaigning, I met some of these people, and I heard their incredible stories. These are the people and the riding that I'm honoured and humbled to represent and the people I will do my best for every day in this House and in the community.

Like many of my colleagues in this House, I have not been in politics long. In fact, it feels like I even have a bit of catching up to do, even to some of my newest colleagues. This election has taught me a lot, not just about the democratic process but about patience, perseverance, and dedication. Truly, in Calgary-Glenmore every vote counted. This historic election has proven that every vote, that every voice, that every constituent matters. Calgary-Glenmore has a long history of electing high-ranking politicians, including Premiers Aberhart and Klein, Speakers Arthur Dixon and David Carter, and Lieutenant Governors John Bowlen and Grant MacEwan. I hope one day in the future my name is added to that list of notable Calgary-Glenmore politicians.

I have long worked to make our province and my community a better place. Before my election as an MLA I spent many years working in the field of engineering. I completed my undergraduate degree in chemical engineering and then pursued a master's in environmental engineering at Western University in London, Ontario. Since then I have spent years in oil and gas and in research and development. I have developed knowledge of one of Alberta's most important industries. I did this work and completed these degrees because I wanted to find ways to make chemical engineering processes more environmentally friendly. I wanted to ensure that we were protecting our air, our land, and our water and that the work I was doing was not jeopardizing the health of our environment. These are goals I will continue to work towards in my new role. I believe this experience will serve me well as an MLA, and I'm looking forward to the new challenges that lay ahead.

I got into politics because I wanted to make a difference. I always believed that victory not necessarily lies in the winning but in making a difference. I wanted to make sure that Albertans' voices were heard and their wishes were respected. That is why I'm so excited to get to work on the issues that are important for the people of Calgary-Glenmore. Being the voice of my constituents in this Assembly is my number one priority.

During the campaign and since I have been elected, I have heard people tell me that they are worried about their parents who need a long-term care bed but cannot get one because the wait-lists are so long. They have told me that they just can't afford the huge costs associated with caring for their elderly parents. I understand the importance of good seniors' care, and I'm so excited for our government to ensure that seniors have a safe, healthy, and dignified place to live.

Parents have told me how important their children's schools and teachers are. They told me how their children's classes already had 30 students and that their children were already struggling to get the support they need. They told me about the importance of programs for English language learners, for First Nations and Métis students, for exceptional needs students. In short, they told me how important our education system was to them and their children, and I have to say that I feel the same way. That is why I feel so strongly about ensuring that our schools, teachers, and students get the stable funding that they need.

I have heard concerns about balancing our growing infrastructure needs while ensuring we are good stewards of our environment. The people of Calgary-Glenmore told me that they were worried about the province's roads, hospitals, and schools. They want to make sure that when they bring their children to the Rockyview hospital, the hospital is a safe and healthy environment and that they are able to access the health care that they need when they need it. Our government understands the importance of public infrastructure, of roads and schools and hospitals. While all of these important projects may not be completed right away, we are making a step in the right direction.

The people of Calgary-Glenmore told me that care for seniors, education, and the infrastructure that they rely on are important, and the Speech from the Throne clearly shows that these are important to the government as well. This is the new start that we are all looking forward to. Albertans wanted change, so they voted in a government with new ideas and new people who are ready to get down to work for Albertans.

While the challenges associated with our health care system, our education system, and our infrastructure will not all be resolved in the next few weeks, it is clear to me that this is a huge first step. I look forward to working to ensure that the priorities of my constituents and of Albertans are met. I believe that we are moving in the right direction, and we will make a difference.

I'm hopeful that we can build a relationship of trust and respect with Alberta's indigenous peoples, especially our neighbours in the Tsuut'ina Nation.

I'm honoured and humbled to have been a part of this monumental change in Alberta's government. Albertans and the people of Calgary-Glenmore put their trust in me and in our new Premier. I got into politics because I wanted to make a difference, and by investing in health care, education, and human services as was outlined in the Speech from the Throne, we can truly make the lives of Albertans a little easier.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak and for the opportunity to serve as the MLA for Calgary-Glenmore.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, hon. members, and, indeed, the first two that have stood up and done their maiden speeches. It has been very interesting to hear your points of view. Thank you.

I'm honoured today to be able to rise and address this House in response to the Speech from the Throne. I would like to extend my congratulations to Mr. Wanner on being elected as the Speaker of the House, and I'm sure that we've chosen very well. You'll do a good job. I would also like to extend my congratulations to the rest of the elected members of this Legislature on their well-earned victories in this most historic of elections. Good job.

No candidate is successful without the support of their family. To my wife, Lisa, and to my children, Joshua, Luke, and Sarah: your love has sustained me, and it underlies everything that I do. To my mother and my father, Marlyn and Wayne Smith: you've invested your lives and your love into my life, and I'm so very grateful, and I want to say thank you.

I would be remiss if I did not thank the constituents of Drayton Valley-Devon for the support and the trust that they have placed in me. They placed their trust in me to represent them in this, the greatest of all democratic models, the Westminster parliamentary system of democracy, and I pledge to the best of my ability to represent their concerns in this Legislature, to uphold the rule of law, and to be a loyal servant of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II.

Elections are not won by a single individual, and I want to thank the many volunteers who worked so hard to ensure that a strong Wildrose voice would be heard in the Legislature from the Drayton Valley-Devon constituency.

The Drayton Valley-Devon constituency is a reflection of the broader Alberta that I serve today. It has a proud First Nations foundation as it encompasses the Maskwacis and Louis Bull reserves. The area was explored by David Thompson and was part of the great fur-trading empires of the North West Company and the Hudson's Bay Company. The descendants of Gabriel Dumont and Louis Riel reside in the area, reminding us that diversity and blending of cultures can and has made us stronger as Albertans.

We are a proud and we are a diverse constituency made up of veterans and farmers, oil workers and entrepreneurs. We are tied to the history of this province, and we are tied to the people who have helped make this one of the greatest places in the world to live.

In my 30 years of teaching in the Drayton Valley-Devon community, I've taught the descendants of Sir John A. Macdonald, I have visited with World War II veterans who flew over 50 bomber missions over Germany, and I have heard the descendants of John McCrae recite In Flanders Fields. This amazing constituency is a reflection of the great events in Alberta, in Alberta history. It has communities that can trace their beginnings to the families of freed black slaves that immigrated to Alberta and to the waves of immigrants from Britain and eastern Europe.

As you drive across this constituency from Lodgepole in the west to Winfield, Alder Flats, and Pigeon Lake in the south and to Devon on the north and eastern edge of the constituency, you see places of worship that represent a wide variety of religious faiths and doctrines. Eastern Orthodox onion-domed steeples blend with faiths as new as the Muslim and the Sikh communities that live within this constituency.

We are a constituency of ever-increasing ethnic diversity that has welcomed people from around the world to live in our communities, to use their talents and abilities to raise strong families and to create strong and vibrant communities where people through hard work, creativity, and an entrepreneurial spirit are creating a prosperous and vibrant Alberta.

We are a constituency whose economic foundation is built upon the triad of industries that have made this province the economic engine of Canada. We are, first and foremost, a constituency based upon agriculture. Our cattle, grain, and dairy industries are a reflection of our history and a continuing legacy of the importance of agriculture to the fabric of this province.

We are a constituency where oil is of vital importance. Indeed, it was in this constituency where Leduc No. 1 was first brought online and where men and women have for several generations placed their energies and ingenuity into developing the companies that allow us to harvest this important resource.

We are also a constituency where timber plays a large role in our prosperity, and as your MLA I will do my best, to the best of my ability, to work towards ensuring the wise stewardship of these resources while also looking forward to diversifying our economic base as we move on into the 21st century.

In addition to this abundance, our constituency also is blessed with beautiful scenery and landscapes that attract people to fishing, hunting, camping, and all kinds of outdoor activities.

Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to rise today and respond to this first-ever Speech from the Throne by a New Democratic government. Being a social studies teacher, I cannot help but reflect on the many historic events that have shaped this province, this Legislature, and this nation. As we consider the Speech from the Throne and the direction that our new government would take Alberta, I believe it is important to place this new path in the context of the political events of the past that have impacted this province.

Alberta's motto is Strong and Free, and I know that this motto is a very appropriate description of the values and beliefs of all Albertans. This fall the physical representation of our motto, one of the most historic of all democratic documents, will be coming to this Legislature. The Magna Carta, the Great Charter, that was signed by King John in 1215, which is the foundation of all democratic liberty in this nation and in this province, speaks clearly to Albertans' desire for freedom, liberty, and a monarchy that governs at the behest and the will of the people. Indeed, the ceremonies surrounding the Speech from the Throne speak to our heritage of good governance and freedom.

As your MLA I will uphold and defend the freedoms that this Legislature and all Albertans hold so dear. As an educator I remember that this Legislature first met in a school just a few blocks from where we now meet, that our first Premier, Alexander Rutherford, was a Laurier Liberal and that the second leader of the opposition was R.B. Bennett, a future Prime Minister of this country.

Alberta has always had a strong political influence on the direction of this country. I am so humbled to sit in a Legislature where great Alberta statesmen like Ernest Manning, Peter Lougheed, and Ralph Klein have served the people of Alberta so ably.

The rise of new political movements that have swept the nation have been born in Alberta. Indeed, the descendants of Irene Parlby, one of the Famous Five suffragists, live within the Drayton Valley-Devon constituency. Social Credit, the Progressive Conservatives, the Reform Party, and the Wildrose Party all speak to the willingness of Albertans to think outside the box politically. It is this same forward-looking attitude that will enable Albertans to diversify and look confidently towards the future, a future that will, like Devon in my constituency, prepare an environmentally responsible, diversified economy.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to working with all the members of this House, and I am encouraged that the new government believed it was important to address the democratic deficit in this province. Albertans believe in democracy, and this government would be wise to pursue a path that would consider and implement the ideas of recall and free votes. Albertans believe in fiscal accountability, and I would encourage this government to remember that they must be wise stewards of our economy and not leave a legacy of high taxes and debt. Should they choose the latter path, the people of Alberta will look for an alternative government, and the Wildrose Party will be ready to serve in a fiscally responsible manner as the next government of Alberta.

That the people of Drayton Valley-Devon chose me to represent them in this 29th Legislature is truly humbling, but it also speaks to one of the real strengths of our democracy in Alberta. In this Legislature there are people who come from all walks of life. We are greatly blessed with a democracy where you do not have to be wealthy to get elected, for I am definitely not, and you do not have to come from a famous political family with generations of political influence. Otherwise, I would not have been chosen. Rather, it is the ideas of the political party that you represent and the character of the individual candidates in this Legislature that play the greatest role in determining election night victory, and we should all be very grateful for and proud of that fact.

We have been elected to do a job. We are called to listen to our constituents and, to the best of our ability, make wise choices to ensure that prosperity and the freedom of the people of this province are the result. We are called to provide good governance, reflective of the wishes and the aspirations and the beliefs of our constituents. We are called to find ways to balance differences of opinion and conflicting ideas. We are called mostly to represent what is good and true in our society. With God's help and by His grace, the Members of this Legislative Assembly will do just that. God bless Alberta. God save the Queen.

The Speaker: Members of the House, I am reminded that under Standing Order 29(2)(a) there is the opportunity to ask questions of the previous speaker.

Hearing no requests, I would propose to move to the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm truly honoured and sincerely humbled to rise before you on behalf of the constituents of Chestermere-Rocky View and to address the Assembly in response to the Speech from the Throne. It is time for all members of this Assembly to roll up our sleeves and get to work representing each of our constituents and indeed all Albertans. I invite you as my esteemed colleagues to collaborate on many levels so that we can make Alberta a better place for all Albertans. Our new government needs to demonstrate and respect that we work on behalf of the people of this fine province and that we are here to help.

Albertans voted for change, and it is time to proceed with that change. Where things were hidden, they can now come forward. Where things were clouded, we have an opportunity for transparency. Where government has been disingenuous, it can act instead with integrity. We can work together and move forward in creating stability where there has been instability. We can create accessibility where there has been inaccessibility. We can create savings where we have been overspending, and we can earn trust where there has been mistrust. We can use this opportunity to get back to grassroots politics.

Over the past five months Albertans spoke, and this is what they asked for: honest government, transparency, a government that is willing to collaborate with its opposition, insight, thoughtfulness, to do more than what's expected, and to stabilize the energy sector and get the product to market, showing Albertans that we work for them and that the money we spend in this government is theirs and not ours.

How do we accomplish these common-sense goals and aspirations of our constituents? It begins with outreach. We need to know our constituents. They are the experts about the issues facing them. Some of these issues for the constituents of Chestermere-Rocky View are local health care, flood mitigation, property rights, education, seniors' care, and safe roads. Our constituency is very different from many other ridings because we have urban and rural issues to address. We have hamlets, villages, towns, cities, acreages, ranches, farms, and homesteads. All have specific needs that are close to their hearts. The diversity within this constituency is what makes it both beautiful and complex. The only way to accomplish our goals is to make sure that all people have a voice. This is what I plan to do for my constituents in Chestermere, Langdon, Conrich, Indus, Kathryn, Keoma, Delacour, Dalroy, Dalemead, Balzac, Springbank, Bearspaw, Elbow Valley, Redwood Meadows, Cochrane Lake, the Tsuut'ina First Nation, and numerous farms and ranches in between.

Being trusted as the shadow cabinet minister with the portfolio of Energy in this energy-rich province of ours is an honour and a challenge that I will tackle head-on. Working together, we can move Alberta forward by creating solid public policy that benefits all Albertans. Our energy sector needs the support of a government that listens to all stakeholders because strong economies are created through the intelligence of leaders who understand the different sides to each of the stories. What we do not yet understand, we need to learn by reaching out and truly connecting with the leaders and experts in Alberta's energy marketplace. This same outreach approach to listening and learning can and should be used in all sectors of our economy as we strive to diversify and meet the cyclical challenges head-on. There is an educated and intelligent workforce in all of our industries which needs the support and less bureaucracy to continue to grow and thrive.

To me, successful leadership means drawing the best out of each person in order to achieve results for the greater good. Leadership does not mean making unilateral decisions that best suit the leader. As elected leaders in this province we will be successful if we first seek the input and the expertise of Albertans when they work towards common-sense policy decisions. We need clarity and commitment from the government and its intentions in the energy sector. To create the desired stability, this requires our government to show leadership and to promote a climate for investment and growth. This sector, like all sectors, employs us to make sound decisions in our future. It is this sector that will also allow us to diversify, and it received little attention in the speech.

I have to say that being part of the tradition of the House, sitting here amongst my colleagues, participating in creating the future of our province, is just phenomenal, and I take to heart many of the positive attributes in the throne speech such as, "We believe in looking after our children and making sure they are safe, healthy, and have access to excellent education." Being a mother, I applaud this statement and look forward to seeing how our government will follow through with this and with life-saving infrastructure in Chestermere-Rocky View. Jaydon Sommerfeld's tragic death on Wednesday, June 10, must not be forgotten, and this tragedy must serve as a reminder for all of us in this House that we have a responsibility to create safe roads for our citizens. On this we must agree.

The constituency of Chestermere-Rocky View requires a strong stance on flood mitigation that will benefit both the city of Calgary and the affected municipalities surrounding the city. This, again, requires good public policy. We have families in Chestermere-Rocky View who lost their cabins and second homes in the flood of 2013 and who to this day are not able to seek compensation for their losses and continue to pay mortgages on properties that no longer exist.

A friend of mine often says to me that there are no limitations on good ideas, and I firmly believe in this philosophy. It takes humility and the ability to listen to information, to take it in, and to truly collaborate. Alberta's prosperity was built collaboratively. Albertans work collaboratively to create an advantage that at one time attracted investment, thereby creating jobs, low taxes, and a strong economy through the investment in the people of Alberta.

Small businesses make up 90 per cent of all businesses and are responsible for 35 per cent of all private-sector employment in this province. Small businesses and the entrepreneurial spirit are alive and well in this province. These businesses need to be nurtured and encouraged to generate wealth, respected, and not punished for their hard work.

Again I refer to the throne speech. "Alberta's new government will work closely with all members in this House and will take careful account of your views and those of all Albertans." I hope to hear in the future of our government's plans to balance the budget. Remember that we are here to help. This is something that all Albertans need and deserve for the future. This will create the stability the government has spoken about, and Albertans spoke about it so passionately at the doors. We do not have a revenue problem. We need proper management of Albertans' money. Let me state this again: Albertans' money. We need not throw more money into the pot when we are not privy to the state of our finances.

We are an Assembly of many new faces, and we have much to learn and even more to accomplish moving forward. Let's understand the privilege we hold, the responsibility we bear by sitting in these seats. Let's build a better future and leave a legacy stronger than it was for our children and beyond. Let's learn from the triumphs and the challenges of those who have been here before us and those who are returning to sit here with us. I would love to thank my friends, both old and new, my family, and my constituents for placing their faith in me. Remember that we are here to help.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have enjoyed listening to the speeches on both sides in the response to the Speech from the Throne. I would now move that we adjourn debate on the Speech from the Throne.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 1

An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta

Ms Ganley: I'd like to move second reading of Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta.

This bill will amend the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act so that corporations, unions, and employee organizations will be banned from making political contributions in this province. Once the bill is enacted, it will come into force on the day it was first introduced; that is, June 15, 2015.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Only residents of Alberta will be allowed to provide political donations to political parties, constituency associations, candidates for election and senatorial selection, and leadership contestants. Candidates will need to talk and listen to Albertans to gain their support instead of relying on donations from organizations. It will help to ensure that Albertans' voices are heard in the Legislative Assembly and assure voters that political contributions from organizations weren't a deciding factor in the candidate's success.

Madam Speaker, we've had a lot of support for these legislative changes. Albertans have told us time and again that equity and fairness in election financing is important. Albertans value democracy. We've consulted with the Chief Electoral Officer about these amendments.

Madam Speaker, June 15, the effective date, will have implications for candidates who ran in the May 5 general election. It means that those candidates will no longer be able to accept union and corporate donations to eliminate any deficits remaining from the past election. It also prevents political parties from rushing to fund raise before a deadline. These are implications that will affect everyone, no matter which political party they represent. It will ensure that under this Legislature only Albertans can contribute to political entities. Our political system has been far, far too dependent on funds from a narrow range of donors with deep pockets and too far removed from the interests of ordinary people.

This bill, Madam Speaker, will reform election financing and give voters back their voice. It is a needed evolution in our electoral process and of our democratic rights. Together with a new special legislative committee which will be looking into Alberta's elections, whistle-blowers, and conflict-of-interest legislation, it represents just the beginning of our efforts to renew democracy in our province and to ensure that all parties are accountable to Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the privilege of rising this afternoon and joining the debate on Bill 1, An Act To Renew Democracy in Alberta. We are commencing this spring sitting on an important note. Accountability and fairness in the democratic process are fundamental cornerstones of a healthy political system and responsible campaigning. In fact, my colleagues and I are championing the need to introduce more robust accountability measures that would keep undue corporate and union influence out of the electoral process. To this end, I regard the amendments proposed in Bill 1 as positive steps in the right direction, and I applaud the intent behind the bill. As such, I want to help the government to achieve our shared goal of making sure politics are conducted in the best interest of Albertans, with Albertans as the focus.

Madam Speaker, if passed, Bill 1 will ban corporate and union donations to political parties, which would be effective on June 15. This would mean that only Albertan residents could make private contributions to parties, candidates, constituency associations of their choosing. The intent here is to bring an end to the enormous influence organized entities can have when they choose to invest large sums of money into the political process. More specifically, this will bring an end to the ability of corporations and unions to steamroll the will of individual Albertans, who are the real voters. I reiterate: this is where political influence should be coming from, Albertans.

Currently, Madam Speaker, the federal government along with the governments in Manitoba, Nova Scotia, and Quebec have legislation banning corporate and union donations. If Bill 1 is successful, Alberta would join that list. The principle underlying this bill is sound. It reflects what we in this caucus have been advocating for a long time. For years we have campaigned on the principle of banning corporate and union donations, and it is a pleasure to see that one of our policies is being adopted.

As such, I find it encouraging that democratic accountability is starting to get some acknowledgement for its importance. Indeed, it is a necessity for the effective representation of all Albertans regardless of the size of their bank accounts. It became regrettably commonplace for the previous governing party to receive untold millions in corporate donations, and while the new governing party has enjoyed the benefits of union donations, it is pleasing to see that they're taking the initiative in forsaking some of those donations going forward.

I certainly support the principle at hand, one we have long advocated for. In fact, if anything, I would suggest that Bill 1 doesn't go far enough, Madam Speaker. On this note, I have a few questions I would hope to get some clarity on. In the interest of helping government to achieve this goal and renewing democracy for Albertans, I would like to outline a few of these concerns for the House this afternoon.

When I say that this bill is not going far enough I mean that it still leaves open loopholes that weaken the overall effectiveness of this bill. Essentially, the bill in its present form is still allowing third-party advertisers to exercise their influence in elections. These third-party groups have actually been considered to be more influential in many of the elections that they've been presiding in. This includes Ontario and the United States. In those jurisdictions we have been told of the amount of power that they are able to wield by throwing large amounts of money into third-party advertising campaigns.

Let's look at Ontario, for instance. During the province's 2014 election third-party advertisers spent $8.4 million.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Cyr: Eight point four million dollars. It's a stunning amount of money.

We need to consider if we really want to leave this door open to a wave of third-party advertisers wielding undue influence in Alberta's elections. Albertans certainly deserve better, I'm sure we can all agree.

Another concern I have relates to the retroactivity of this bill. Generally speaking, I oppose the notion of retroactive legislation. The problem in this particular case is that we are currently in an election period. Madam Speaker, this means that this bill, if passed, would change rules governing the current election period while it's still ongoing. So I have to wonder whether this leaves the bill liable to certain court challenges. What are the legalities here? Is the integrity of the bill jeopardized by the retroactivity of the bill? Would it not be more prudent to wait for an effective date in early July, when the writ period is officially closed? This is something that needs to be cleared up, and perhaps the government can help to provide some clarity on the issue. Officially the writ period still has three weeks remaining, as it runs for 60 days after the election.

Madam Speaker, there are also some, frankly, bizarre provisions in the bill that specifically allow unions and corporations to backstop loans. According to the bill as it's currently written, corporations and unions would be allowed not only to backstop loans but to make payments on the loans as well. These payments would only be considered illegal donations if they were not reimbursed by the party taking out the loans. Does this not conflict with the principle behind the bill? The intent is to keep unions and corporate influence out of the electoral process. How do these strange provisions move us in this direction of keeping the unions and corporate influence out of the electoral process?

In the interest of helping the government to attain its goal on this bill, I would ask for an explanation on the matter. As it presently stands, these unusual aspects of the bill are cause for concern in an otherwise praiseworthy piece of legislation. The integrity of democratic accountability is at stake, so we want to make sure this bill is as strong as we can make it and as comprehensive as possible. We want to assist the government in making sure this is the case.

Madam Speaker, I believe the fundamental question at hand is this: how do we prevent third-party interests from influencing our elections while also protecting their freedom of speech? What we need is to strike a balance, and this is ultimately what we need to bear in mind while we move forward in considering Bill 1.

These things aside, Madam Speaker, this bill would accomplish something worth while, keeping political influence at the hands of individual Albertans, where it belongs. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand today in support of this important bill to renew democracy in Alberta. The bill at its core is the brainchild of the Wildrose Party. So first of all, on behalf of the Wildrose Party's grassroots I say: you're welcome. I hope this government keeps it up. We have a few other ideas, too, if you'd like to check out our policy book.

An Hon. Member: No good ones.

Mr. Nixon: Well, you sure liked this one.

As mentioned, the Wildrose has a long history of campaigning to end corporate and union donations, and it's a policy we are happy to see being brought in with Bill 1. We believe that the only influence in politics should be the influence of the voter, and this bill sets the stage for that. In the past we have seen former government parties rake in millions in corporate donations tied directly to government contracts. In fact, in the closing days of the 2012 election the former government received a $400,000 donation from a big corporate donor. This practice is not just wrong; it's dead wrong. And thanks to the Wildrose, this bill will finally make actions like that a thing of the past. It is no secret that this current government has received massive donations from unions and other special-interest groups, and I'm encouraged that they are willing to adopt a bill founded on Wildrose policy that will close these donations off.

While the bill is largely Wildrose, there are aspects that even I have trouble understanding. For instance, why is this government enacting legislation retroactive to June 15 in the middle of an election period? This is akin to changing the rules of a hockey game in the middle of the game. While I'm sure there is an argument to be made for increasing the size of the net, you simply don't do it in the middle of the second period. We have questions about enacting this bill retroactively. Does it leave the law vulnerable to court challenges from other parties?

If we truly want voters to have the only influence in politics – and the Wildrose does – then we must ban corporate and union donations and commit to adopting legislation that does more than simply lip service to reform. This means banning corporations and unions from making payments on party loans at all except in the case of default. This means empowering the Chief Electoral Officer with tools to penalize any party any amount, not less than the amount of the loan they have not repaid in the manner of the act.

While I am excited to see this government moving in the right direction, there is much more that can be done. But we'll be clear. The Wildrose supports this bill because it will serve to organize and measure the best of our energies and skills and because it's the right thing to do, and when it comes to democracy, nothing less is acceptable.

We look forward to further debate, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes now of questions and answers should anyone wish to avail themselves of that.

Seeing none, any other hon. members wish to speak? The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Sorry, Madam Speaker. This is my first go at debating a bill. Actually, I'd rather enter into debate than questions. Have I missed my opportunity for such?

The Deputy Speaker: No. If no one takes advantage of 29(2)(a), then we go back into the debate. You wanted to speak to the main bill?

Ms Hoffman: To the main bill, yeah.

Just for clarity, how do we put our names forward to be on the list?

The Deputy Speaker: Send me a note.

Did you wish to speak now? I believe I can recognize you now, hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Sure. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

To my friends at Hansard, I hope this doesn't count as my maiden speech. It is my intent, though, to speak in strong support of Bill 1 at this point and to thank my colleague the Minister of Justice for bringing it forward. Actually, she brought it forward yesterday, on her birthday, so what a nice present, that she might see support both from the governing party and the Official Opposition on her first bill. I think that would be a great tone to set for our House.

In 2008, when I was working here as a researcher, this was something that we put in our platform and something that we were really proud to make sure was moving forward because we had seen evidence of how some of the wealthiest corporations and unions were having undue influence on our democratic system here in Alberta and also in other jurisdictions. We might recall concerns over wealthy business owners who could benefit from a downtown arena donating the max as well as their friends and neighbours, and I think there was even maybe a pet on the list donating the max as well as the business. So this is definitely something that we need to address.

I think that the voters of Alberta spoke loud and clear with the big shift in this election by sending both parties here in the capacity of government and Official Opposition who had this as a pillar in their platforms, not just in this election but in past elections. That, I think, is to be commended for all of us and for Albertans, for speaking so strongly on that.

I want to address the point that was raised around closing loopholes, and I agree that that's our intention, to make sure that we do close loopholes. In terms of the retroactivity, that's one of the reasons why at this point I'm leaning towards supporting it. I think it would be disingenuous of us to pass legislation and allow some of the richest corporations and unions to continue donating the max for the period from which we gave notice that we won't allow them to donate until a point several weeks down the road. I think that it would actually create a bit of a gravy train effect should we not pass this legislation retroactively. That's my logic on it.

I think it's fair for us to say to our corporate and union friends: no, thank you. No, thank you, effective the date immediate that the bill was tabled. No, thank you, effective the moment that we first have the power as legislators to bring this legislation into effect. I think that if we were to delay that, as has been mentioned, by a few weeks, it would actually be counter to the intent of the actual legislation. I, too, wonder about retroactive bills, but this is retroactive to the date it was tabled. It's not retroactive to five years ago, making all of those donations illegal.

The other point I just want to raise is around guaranteeing a loan, being allowed to make interim payments as long as during the period that money is paid back. I think that that's the point. We want to make sure that there aren't any donations. In terms of guaranteeing a loan, I might be a small-business owner who needs to access a line of credit during my election period and have no intention of actually donating to that campaign but need to make sure that I have a guarantor for that loan. There may be a need to maintain my small-business reputation and my financial standing to make payments on a loan if the donations aren't coming in in a timely manner but, of course, not actually to make donations. So I think that that little cushion, allowing individual candidates to be able to have somebody to lean on in their time of need to make sure that that loan is being guaranteed, creates that opportunity. Of course, there would be a penalty to both the candidate as well as the donor if that was not paid back to the guarantor of that loan.

I appreciate the questions that have been raised. In terms of the loophole piece I worry that if we don't act to make this retroactive to the date on which it was tabled, we're actually indeed creating a larger loophole. That's some of my logic around it.

I am so excited for us to be moving forward in this direction. I think it really speaks to the democratic principles upon which every good democracy is founded, and that is around individuals having the right to set and determine the best government for themselves, for their jurisdiction.

I agree that we need to look at third-party advertising, and I know that there will be greater legislation, that we'll need to examine for that, around freedom of speech and other items. As an individual member of this caucus I want to say that I'm excited at having an opportunity to pursue that down the road, but I don't personally think that it fits into this bill that we're here to debate today.

I think there are other pieces of legislation we might want to visit as well. As a former public school board trustee I know that some of those campaigns can get into the multizero budgets as well. I think that the way the legislation stands right now, there's room for corporate and union donations for other orders of government, obviously not for federal, but we're looking at other orders of government here in Alberta.

In terms of municipal governments and elected school board governments I think that's something that we will want to examine as well. I know that there have been a few editorials speaking in that regard, and I personally as one member see opportunity and hope and that, moving forward, we've got a little window before the next municipal election comes around. I hope that that's something we can tackle together as a House in ensuring democracy not just at this level but in other orders of government as well for Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to my colleagues for the opportunity to share my remarks on Bill 1.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the provisions of Standing Order 29(2)(a) would allow for questions and answers, five minutes, should anyone choose to take advantage of that. The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you. Well done, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to be recognized.

Thank you for what you've contributed to the debate. The question I want to ask you, though, centres around parts that are unclear to me. If a corporation or a union ends up making the payment for a candidate or a party because of the loan guarantee and because of that nature, it's not clear that that money has to be paid back by the candidate or the political party, leading to tremendous unintended consequences of a big corporation, a union, whatever, having their fingers in a lot of pies and having a lot of influence over a situation where, you know, they have a lot more influence than what this bill is intending. What this bill, of course, is intending, as my colleagues from the Wildrose have pointed out, is an opportunity to make individuals, those of us that actually vote, have a real say in our democratic system.

Could you please touch on the fact that if a union or corporation has to step in and make a payment, should the candidate or the party ultimately have to pay that back to the union or the corporation?

Ms Hoffman: I raised it, but I think the mover is actually in a better position to be able to respond to that question. So if I might ask the mover of the bill, my colleague the Minister of Justice, to please respond. [interjection] I can speak to this question in the close of debate if you like, say my colleagues. I personally don't feel like I'm in a position to be able to answer the specifics around that. It's a valid question, and we will ensure that you have a valid answer in response to that.

Thank you very much, hon. member.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other member wishing to take advantage of 29(2)(a)?

If not, then I will recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak in support of Bill 1. I think it is a very important act, and I offer my praise to the government for their quick action in making this the first order of legislative business here in the 29th Legislature. I'm particularly pleased to see them take this early action, because I understand, based on the previous history of some other parties, that on that side of the House it gets intoxicating after a while. So I praise you for doing it early before you get too used to some of the perks of power.

I would say, though, that there are some opportunities for improvements and some specific amendments that I look forward to discussing in committee. In particular, I wonder why the government hasn't taken the opportunity now to in fact reduce the amount that individuals can donate. I suspect that that's something they would find broad support for in this House. Although I recognize that there has been a committee struck, an all-party committee – and being a member of a party in this House, I sincerely look forward to being a part of that committee. I'm also finding that at this end it's actually a nice view of the entire Legislature. Much as I desire to move towards the middle of the House over time, it's quite a nice view at this point. As I say, I believe this House would agree to reduce the total amount that individuals would be able to donate, and that's something I look forward to discussing in committee.

The other thing I think that we probably would find some agreement on is eliminating public spending announcements during elections. This became a particular issue during the recent by-elections last fall, where we had sod-turning upon sod-turning. In fact, the way I think the foundations for some of those schools are going to be built is simply with golden shovels digging the entire foundation.

So that's one, public spending announcements, and the other, of course, is using the office of a minister to make public policy announcements during a by-election and making those announcements clearly for political gain, something I refer to as the Gordon Dirks rule, something that had something of an impact on the by-elections in October of 2014. I think, again, that's something that we would likely find some wide support for in this Assembly. I look to the province of Manitoba and what they have done with their legislation, and I would encourage the House to consider that.

I also agree with the hon. Minister of Health, the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, in her comments that perhaps we should look at municipal campaign finance reform. That's something that likely would come up under the auspices of that committee as well, probably something that would be a little too deep for Bill 1. Again, I come back to the principles of the bill and agree absolutely that it is an admirable bill. As leader of the Alberta Party opposition I will be voting in favour of Bill 1. Thank you again to the government for bringing it up.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) comes into effect should anyone have questions.

Mr. Barnes: I'd like to ask the hon. member what he thinks of the June 15 deadline and changing the rules in the middle of the contest and how he thinks this may affect some of the candidates who, say, weren't as big, as high a fundraiser, maybe weren't successful. Do you foresee that changing the rules in the middle of the game is a problem, maybe its even being court challenged?

Mr. Clark: Thank you, hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, for that question. It is a challenge. There's absolutely no question. At the same time, I understand completely the rationale behind that change, that there would then be a mad rush to get as much corporate and union money into the coffers of political parties as possible in whatever time frame would remain. I recognize that that may leave it open to court challenges. I'm not a lawyer, so I can't speak to that personally. I understand absolutely the rationale for the June 15 deadline. It is a challenging issue, but my position at this point is to support that aspect of the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you. I just wanted to respond to the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, who asked about other aspects of it. All of those things that you mentioned, hon. member, are things which are certainly on our minds and under consideration here and, I'm sure, on other sides of the House as well. This is not our last kick at the can in terms of this, and you've mentioned the committee as well. So I think you should look forward to a good discussion amongst all parties about where we go with regard to these matters. Certainly, spending limits was one of the things that you mentioned, that I think deserves careful consideration. It was matter of preparing a bill that would be ready for an early session and a short session, so many things were left out.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers on 29(2)(a)? Go ahead.

Mr. Clark: I believe that was phrased in the form of a question, so I will. . .

Mr. Mason: It's questions or comments.

Mr. Clark: Questions or comments? All right.

The Deputy Speaker: On 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you. I thank the hon. House leader for pointing out that, indeed, it's not just questions or comments. In the spirit of all-party co-operation as requested by the Speaker in the past, it's practice, as we know, not to refer to each other by names because we're representing our constituents. It's about them, not about us. If we said some of the things that occur here, some would claim that it would be defamatory and otherwise. Again, to make a positive suggestion, just a thought of encouragement for the member and others, it's not practice to bring up the names of those who are not in this House and cannot defend themselves. A reference was made in a rather unflattering way of a person who was the former Education minister, and I just wonder if we could respect the good work that people have tried to do in previous administrations dating back to 1905.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.
Any others?

Mr. Nixon: I was just wondering if the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow would agree, in regard to the retroactiveness of the bill, if it would be appropriate that the government would disclose what they have received, since they formed government during the same writ period, from unions and corporations before they went ahead and retroactively changed the rules in the middle of the game.

Thank you.

Mr. Clark: I would agree with the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre that that is a good idea. Of course, I'm sure the government would respond that that will be done in accordance with Elections Alberta rules, and I would anticipate that that would absolutely be the case. But, yes, I would love to see that as quickly as possible.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions on 29(2)(a)?
If not, we'll go with the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and speak to Bill 1. The province has indeed seen a tremendous change in its government, and I'm glad that now we are discussing making some much needed changes to our province's election financing laws.

Albertans made it clear when they chose to change the government that they needed trust restored to our political system. Albertans deserve accountability, integrity, and ethics in our political system. I find it appropriate that this legislation follows on the heels of a campaign in which we all heard again and again from constituents and all Albertans about trust. Albertans clearly have significant concerns about the trust that they can place in the system to fairly represent them. I heard many times from many people that their government no longer seemed accountable to them as citizens. They struggled to see how the system could serve them while being improperly influenced by long-standing, entrenched special interests.

This bill aims to ban corporate and union contributions, but in a larger sense we're discussing the issue of restoring trust and accountability in our political system and our institutions. The importance of this as the foundation of our democracy cannot be overstated. I'm proud to stand and say that the Wildrose has long believed in the elimination of corporate and union donations. We have previously attempted to make these changes, but the government of the day was not receptive. I'm glad that we'll be able to work with the new administration, that shares our belief on these important issues and is committed to adopting our policy proposal. I'm also encouraged to see that the governing party is bringing in these changes despite having benefited in the past from large union and special-interest contributions.

Eliminating these types of contributions is even-handed and fair, and I am supportive of this limitation. The reason we in the Wildrose stand so firmly for the elimination of corporate and union donations is because we have a fundamental belief that Alberta's political system should not be influenced by special interests but only by Albertans. Furthermore, the integrity of our political system demands that political parties not be seen to be influenced by special interests who can exert this influence with their money. This legislation is long overdue and badly needed, but we must also be sure to use this opportunity to create meaningful, lasting, and effective change.

I am supportive of this bill, but I do think that it could be further strengthened to better meet its objectives of removing financial influence from parties. We are certainly in agreement in regard to the principles that underpin the bill, but I do have some questions and concerns that I hope will be addressed by this House in future debate and in Committee of the Whole. I'm concerned that the government has made the legislation retroactive to the date before the end of the election period. This piece of the bill may jeopardize the entire legislation as a whole by exposing it to legal challenges, legal challenges from candidates and parties who operated under the existing rules of the previous campaign. It would be very unfortunate if this legislation were put into doubt because of this one thing. For the overall health of the bill I think it would be wiser to make the effective date in early July, after this election period has come to a close.

My second concern is that the ability of corporations and unions to make loan payments on behalf of its parties is still available. This still constitutes fairly significant monetary assistance, which I believe is contrary to the spirit of this legislation. Every legislation has unintended consequences. It's important to keep it consistent with the spirit. If it is our goal to remove special-interest financial influence over parties and over the political system, then we ought to do it fully and comprehensively. That would involve banning corporations and unions from making these loan payments for parties in all cases except for the extreme case of default.

In the event that these special interests, like corporations or unions, do make loan payments for parties, I would like to see that we have concrete, absolute assurances that parties cannot profit based on this mechanism. Any attempt by a corporation or union to improperly pay off debts on behalf of a party or a candidate would violate the spirit of the law and the goals that this law sets forth. We must ensure that the Chief Electoral Officer penalizes any party that does not repay debts paid on its behalf. This penalty should strongly discourage any party or candidate from acting inappropriately to subvert the rules by accepting improper contributions in the form of debt payments.

My final concern is with the role of special interests in conducting third-party advertising. My goodness, we've seen elections in Ontario and the United States completely influenced by third-party advertising. Let's not do the same in Alberta. I think we can all agree that we do not want to see special interests with vast financial resources unduly controlling our democratic system. As I said earlier, we must let and we must have individual Albertans have the ultimate influence over their government and their political institutions.

In the coming debate on Bill 1 I hope that all these concerns can be discussed and addressed. The changes that this bill aims to make are admirable and much needed for the overall health of democracy in Alberta. For this reason I am happy to support the intent of this bill, and I'm happy to support it on second reading, and I look forward to all the constructive discussion ahead.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? If not, I'll recognize the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to sincerely thank the government for placing before the House Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta. When I campaigned in the recent election, one of the concerns of my constituents revolved around how we could make our democracy better. My message to my constituents was that democracy is never a static system. We can do democracy differently, and we can do it better. So I'm very pleased that the first order of business that this Legislature will craft revolves around attempting to make our electoral process more representative of the will of the people by changing some of the rules around who can make donations to political parties.

In a democracy we place few restrictions on the free expression of ideas during an election. Elections are nothing if not about determining the wishes of the people. That can only happen when the people are allowed a full and free range of expression. Indeed, Bill 1 is all about trying to ensure that the people – not corporations, not unions – are heard in a general election. Money should not be able to determine the outcome of an election but, rather, ideas and candidates and the wishes of the electorate. For this reason there is much to support in Bill 1.

While Bill 1 takes positive steps towards ending corporate and union donations to political parties, I would caution that I believe that for many of my constituents Bill 1 will need to be expanded. It will need to deal with some issues that it does not address. I believe that democracies must always balance rights, and that there needs to be further discussion by the members of this House on how this bill will address the issue of third-party advertising. The Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act establishes rules for third parties that raise funds and incur expenses for election advertising related to provincial elections. Individual corporations and groups engaged in such activities must register with Elections Alberta if they place or plan to place election advertisements in any media if expenses or contributions exceed $1,000.

I would encourage the members of this Legislature to consider the damage that can occur to the democratic process when union dues are used to fund third-party advertising or when corporations use their deep pockets to influence the results of an election through third-party advertising. Discussion needs to take place and this bill amended to ensure that the money that was a problem when given as a straightforward political donation is not, in turn, recycled into as big a problem with third-party advertising. Bill 1 takes positive steps, but we must keep in mind that sometimes our actions have unintended consequences, and rushing forward with legislation sometimes opens the door to results we hadn't planned for.

I look forward to further discussion on this bill and about democratic reform in Alberta in the future. But to return to the main point, ending corporate and union donations in Alberta is a major step in the right direction. Even though I would ask for clarification around third-party advertising, I'm proud to speak in support of this bill. This is a long overdue change in Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? If not, then I'll call on the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll start by saying that Bill 1 is a good document with a couple of flaws. We as Wildrose campaigned on the principles in this bill, but I believe Albertans would be very disappointed if we did not address the issues of the loans being able to be paid off by corporations and unions.

We do support the legislation in principle, but we are unsure why the NDP have left those so-called transitional provisions in place, that allow companies and unions to pay off loans for the rest of this year. We don't see why corporations or unions would be allowed to make loan payments at all, even if they are later reimbursed, since this is still considered monetary assistance. We want reassurance that no party can profit from letting corporations or unions pay off its debts as this would be a violation of the spirit of the law.

Again, I'll reiterate that it would be very disappointing legislation for Albertans to witness.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Any further speakers who wish to speak on the bill? You wish to speak on the bill, hon. member?

Mr. Cooper: Please.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, it's an absolute pleasure to rise today to speak to something we can agree on and not a point of order or a motion that the opposition disagrees with, with the direction of the House, but around some common ground, and that is specifically with respect to banning union and corporate donations.

For a number of years the opposition has been adamant about the need to put democracy back into the hands of the people. The Wildrose is a grassroots organization that believes that Albertans are primarily responsible for making Alberta a great place and that while business and corporations play a vital role in everyone's success, it's Albertans that are the ones that are responsible. So it's important that we take all the steps that we can to ensure that our democracy is continually held in the hands of just that, of Albertans.

I commend the government for taking this important first step of banning corporate and union donations. I spoke a number of times during the campaign and particularly on election night that, certainly, there's going to be a lot to oppose. We view the world through a very different set of glasses, so where it is required for us to do that strong opposing, I can assure you that the Wildrose will be here to defend the interests of all Albertans. However, today is not necessarily that day because we have found some common ground, so we look forward to the steps forward around that.

Now, while there is a significant amount of common ground, a number of my colleagues have quite eloquently laid out some of the real concerns that we have. The role of opposition is not just to oppose but to highlight areas where we can all be better together. So that's what our goal is here at second reading, to really highlight some of those concerns, particularly around this concept of corporations and, particularly in the case of the present government, unions being able to backstop loans. There is one party in this House who has a long track record of utilizing other people's money to backstop and run their campaigns, particularly when it comes to debt-financing campaigns. It's certainly not the party of the Official Opposition. So it creates a little bit of uncertainty in the opposition when we see what appears to be a clause in a piece of legislation that is specific to a past problem that one political party or another may have had, and that comes in the form of fundraising, and it comes in the form of debt-financing campaigns and requiring loans in order to manage their financial affairs.

We've seen a significant period of time in Alberta where the government had a track record of introducing legislation that was of net benefit to one political party over another. While I cannot reiterate enough how supportive I am of banning corporation and union donations and the heart of what I believe the current government is trying to do, it does bring great pause to see this little wiggle room that's being provided in the form of this, which, traditionally speaking, has certainly been used by the party of the government that is in place today.

So we look forward to some real clarification around that. I would expect that there is a very high likelihood that we can see some amendments from the Official Opposition when we get to Committee of the Whole to try and better this piece of legislation because at the heart of it is ensuring that at the end of the day the best idea wins, not the government's idea, not our idea, but the best idea. While we're, you know, probably two-thirds of the way there, to the best idea, why not go ahead and make it as fair as possible, something that I know the party of the left is certainly hoping to do for everyone on every file, making it as fair as possible? We might as well move in that direction and go all the way when it comes to getting corporations and unions out of election financing. We're just about there, but we have one more giant step for Alberta political parties to go.

I'll move briefly to this issue of being in the middle of a writ period, of an election period. One of my big concerns is the mechanisms which will be put into place that would potentially prevent a candidate from reporting appropriately or not. You know, under the previous rules any candidate could and does report their financing over an election period. Nobody submits their bank statement that says, "This corporate donation came in on the 8th," or "This union donation came in on the 16th." We report an election period.

So I'm curious to know from the hon. Minister of Justice just what the mechanisms are and will be, during committee or perhaps at the close of debate today, should we get there. What will those mechanisms will be? It's critically important that we set out a set of rules and that we all follow them. Changing them, which would potentially encourage a candidate to be, like, "Hey, I received this on the 14th, not the 15th," I think puts candidates in an awkward position. As a number of my colleagues have said, clearly, it creates the potential for a court challenge. The rules were set out, you changed the rules halfway through, and now we can be in a situation where a candidate would want to challenge that in court. Additionally, it could encourage them to be more prone to bending the rules.

Certainly, no one in this Assembly would partake in such an activity, but let's keep in mind that there were, you know, approximately 220 other individuals in this great province who did their portion of public service by putting their name on a ballot and defending the ideals that are important to them. Not only are we debating this bill for us, but we're debating it for them, so I think it's important that we consider that. It's a very small change in the legislation to move it to the 4th or 5th of July. Keep the rules as is. To create this sense that there's going to be this mad rush of corporations trying to spend their last possible dime on a political party I just don't think is exactly what's going to happen. I think we had a set of rules, and we ought to stick to those rules.

In closing, again let me thank – now there's a day I didn't think would come – the NDP government for this area of common interest and common benefit for all Albertans when it comes to banning corporate and union donations. We want to help, so in the spirit of co-operation I encourage you to reflect strongly upon a number of the issues that the opposition have brought forward today and consider them as we move through the stages of debate so that we can be together for a better Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Ms Hoffman: Yes. To the member who spoke last, I actually have a comment.

The Deputy Speaker: Yes. Go ahead.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would like to just say: please don't rule out other opportunities to commend this government. We are absolutely committed to bringing forward the best ideas possible. Of course, the committee structure that we have in place will enable us to do that as well as members on both sides of this House. I'm looking forward to the opportunity to continue to have you commend and to say even those letters, NDP, in the House. It's music to my ears, hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Yeah. We have lots of policies if you want to see many more good ideas. We're more than happy to send them over.

Conversely, I look forward to a very fulsome discussion with the House leaders about ways that we can make committees work better in this place. You know, traditionally speaking, committees very rarely see a bill before them. They've traditionally spent a lot of time on things like high-speed rail and run-of-river power, and very little legislation heads in that direction. The pace at which I believe even this government is going to pass legislation is certainly concerning.

So I hope that, in fact, we can just do that, utilize the committee system to ensure that the best idea can win and remove things from what at times can be a highly partisan environment here in the House by referring a number of important pieces of legislation so that Albertans can have their feedback, so that we can have expert witnesses.

I think you'll see that in the next couple of days a number of pieces of legislation that are significant will be ushered through, rammed through. Maybe that's a little strong for today. Hopefully, we can do just that and make sure that we utilize the committees in a way that is respectful of the process.

Ms Hoffman: I'm glad to hear the member opposite talk about wanting to ensure that there's time to bring our best work forward, wanting to make sure there's time for us to make sure that good ideas are what drives government and not working to some temporary timeline or false timeline. I hope that the hon. member and all of the colleagues in that party have the same confidence in our ability to work as individuals in ensuring we bring the best budget forward to Albertans, not just the fastest budget.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, May, June, July, August, September: five months from the election. I think that is a very ample amount of time to provide a budget.

Ms Hoffman: I just want to make sure that all members of this House are assured that every dollar that this government allocates will be treated with the same due diligence as any dollar that any individual has in their pocket. When you're talking about, for example, the status of the Health budget, when you're talking about $18 billion, I don't think you want me rushing those decisions, and I don't think you want this government working in a way that won't ensure a fair process and consultation with our stakeholders as well. I just want to say that we will bring forward a fantastic budget, and we look forward to seeing your support and to you commending the work that we do in that regard as well. You may have to wait a few weeks longer than you'd like.

The Deputy Speaker: Just a comment, hon. members, on the use of 29(2)(a), questions and comments. Please try to restrict it to the bill or the matter at hand as opposed to going off on some other topic.

Any other comments on 29(2)(a)? We still have a few seconds, I guess.

If not, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow on the bill.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We are all here as elected members because we are elected by Albertans. This was something I heard on the doorsteps in my riding. This bill will keep us, as elected officials, accountable to Albertans. I've heard from my constituents. I support this bill, and they support this bill. Individuals should be the only stakeholders allowed to donate.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Go ahead, hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In response to this bill perhaps we should make it retroactive to election day, May 5.

The Deputy Speaker: Excuse me, hon. member. Are you speaking on 29(2)(a), questions or comments, for the Member for Calgary-Bow?

Mrs. Pitt: Yes. Sorry. My apologies. First time.

My suggestion in response to your speech is that to make it fair for everybody, would you agree that we make this bill retroactive to the date of election?

Ms Drever: As is. To June 15.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments?

Any further speakers to the bill?

If not, then I'll call on the hon. Minister of Justice to close debate.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to thank all the members for their supportive comments and for their other comments as well. Just to close debate here, I'd like to begin by saying that this was an election promise that this party campaigned on. We are bringing it forward as Bill 1 to fulfill that promise. We think that this will have incredible benefits for the people of Alberta and that it will make all of us accountable to the people of Alberta, and that is one of our primary goals.

I will speak to many of the comments that were made in order. I will begin by dealing with the issue with respect to contributions to third-party advertisers. We absolutely agree that that is something that needs to be considered. However, before passing legislation which affects the rights of individuals, in particular the Charter of Rights, in this case freedom of speech, careful study and consideration of what those impacts will be is required. We were unable to compete that study fully before now, so we are looking into getting an opinion on that. I mean, as so many courts have said, our Charter rights are our most fundamental rights as individuals, so before we pass any legislation that affects the freedom of speech of any persons in Alberta, we wanted to be sure that we had clearly gone over the implications and didn't rush into judgment.

I would also hasten to point out that in addition to being a promise in this election, this has been an NDP policy for a considerable length of time and, I believe, since before my friends were a party.

To speak to the issue of loan payments and loan guarantees, which are two separate pieces, the preamendment legislation, the legislation as it existed before this bill was introduced, already allowed both those payments and guarantees, so we're not actually creating an exception. The reason why we needed amendments to deal specifically with those issues is because it is possible, given that we are currently in the middle of an election period, that there was already a guarantee existing. It's possible that a corporation or a union had presented a guarantee already. Now, if the political entity, so the candidate or whatever it is, fails to make a payment on that loan, that union or corporation would then become legally required to make a payment on that loan.

The concern is that these organizations put forward these guarantees in good faith when it was legal for them to do so, so it would be unfair to then turn around and punish them for doing that which they are legally required to do; i.e., make a payment in terms of the guarantee. That's why those provisions have been brought in. It's to ensure, essentially, that we aren't punishing corporations and organizations for doing what they are legally required to do.

In addition, I'd like to clarify that these sorts of interim payments or guarantees can't become donations. They can't become donations under the legislation now. If a payment is made and it is not repaid by the time the political entity, whether it be a candidate or a party, is required to clear its debt, then those payments automatically become a contribution to the party, and those contributions would be unlawful under the new amendments. So that's just to clarify that piece there.

Since this essentially raises the issue of retroactivity, I will speak to that as well. The present bill has been carefully considered, and we're confident that it meets the needs of Albertans. If someone wishes to challenge it in court, that is, of course, their right in a free and democratic society. One of the crucial purposes behind the presumption against retroactivity is the idea of notice. In the present case on June 15 everyone was put on notice that this legislation was being introduced, so it's not possible at this point for someone, a corporation or a union, to make a donation to a political entity and then turn around and say: well, we didn't know. The reason for that is because we introduced the bill as written on June 15, the same date that the legislation comes into effect. So the result is that everyone was made aware that the rule existed before the rule would be enforced.

Hon. members have also raised the issue of unintended consequences. What we didn't want was an unintended consequence in the sense that we would cause a run on donations, as it were. We think that this best protects the interests of Albertans.

Finally, I'd like to address many of the comments made that this bill doesn't go far enough. To that I would simply say that we agree with you on that. It is our intention to bring forward further amendments to the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. However, this was a clear campaign promise. It was something that Albertans clearly supported us on. So we are moving right away, while we have the support of other parties, to put this into law. As we go forward, the committee that we have set up will consider future amendments, and the Chief Electoral Officer has made recommendations as well. All of that will be considered in due course.

All right. The issue of making it retroactive to the beginning of the election period was also raised. I think the difficulty there is exactly the piece which I've just raised; that is, notice. So it would seem unfair for us to say, you know, that a corporation or a union who has made a donation in good faith while that was lawful is now going to be punished for having made that donation. I don't think that is what Albertans support, so I would not support that amendment.

In conclusion, I'd like to say that I appreciate the support from both sides of the House, that this bill has received. We are incredibly excited to take these first steps to renewing democracy in Alberta and to ensuring that individual Albertans have the strongest voice in this Legislature, in who it is that is sent to this Legislature. We are excited to work with you to take future steps going forward.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I think we have made some excellent progress for the first regular day of our sitting, passing Bill 1 at second reading with full participation.

An Hon. Member: We knew you'd like our policy, Brian.

Mr. Mason: Yes. And I know how you came by that policy, all right, because I had something to do with it.

Nevertheless, it's great progress today, Madam Speaker. I think that all members deserve to be congratulated on an auspicious start to this term in the Legislature and to this Legislative Assembly and for all of the members. So with that in mind, I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:37 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us reflect. Life and health are precious. When they are lost, all of us are impacted. Let us remember those who are no longer among us, and let us reach out with compassion and understanding to those who suffer. Today we remember and thank Constable Daniel Woodall for his bravery, his patriotism, and service to our province.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: I believe the Member for Calgary-Mountain View has a guest. Is that correct?

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to the Assembly two former members of this House, both former leaders of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Kevin Taft is the former Member for Edmonton-Riverview and the leader of the Alberta Liberals from 2004 to 2008. Dr. Taft is the author of several books on the need for accountability and political change. His latest book, Follow the Money, is an excellent analysis of the waste and mismanagement of our resource wealth, and it should be required reading for everyone in the new cabinet.

Dr. Don Massey, former Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, served 11 years in this House, including serving as the Leader of the Official Opposition in 2004. Public education has always been the passion of Dr. Massey, having served on the Edmonton public school board before entering provincial politics. He was recently honoured in Edmonton by having a public school named after him, a fitting tribute for a life of service.

They're already standing. Let's welcome them to the Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other guests or visitors that members would like to introduce?

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The member who represents the constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Medical Laboratory Services in Medicine Hat

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is always a privilege to speak in this House about the fine work being done in my constituency. Today I'd like to acknowledge the Medicine Hat Diagnostic Lab and the tremendous service they have provided the city and surrounding area. For years the staff there have provided an exceptionally high quality of service diligently and efficiently. The residents of southeastern Alberta know first-hand what a valuable asset the lab has been to their communities.

That's why we are so perplexed and disappointed to see Alberta Health Services remove important services from this facility. This is not the first time we have dealt with a loss of services. Over time it seems that the gradual removal of core health services from smaller cities and towns has been an unstoppable trend. This is an issue that all Albertans find deeply troubling.

The plan announced by AHS will take diagnostic services from the Medicine Hat Diagnostic Lab and move them to the hospital, supposedly at a savings of $5 million over five years. However, this decision has not been made transparently and in consultation with local residents. We continue to wait for specifics on the calculation of those savings. We still have not seen the business case for this decision, yet we all see the efficiency and the diligence of the Medicine Hat Diagnostic Lab first-hand. Local residents cannot support the decision without having all the details made clear.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say that we both agreed on the importance of the lab during this past election and the need for them to continue doing their good work, and we have an opportunity now to work towards changing a flawed decision of the past and committing to the restoration of local services in the communities where they're so desperately needed and valued.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Aboriginal Peoples

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to recognize the cultural diversity and heritage of Alberta. Here in Edmonton we are presently in Treaty 6 territory, as is my constituency of Spruce Grove-St. Albert. My constituency also includes one of the communities of the Alexander First Nation, and this province also includes parts of treaties 4, 7, 8, and 10, each being comprised of multiple nations and cultures. The nations that comprise these treaties are not the only indigenous peoples in this province.

I myself am a proud member of the Métis Nation of Alberta, but I cannot claim the honour of coming from any indigenous culture, nor have I ever had a mother, sister, daughter, or aunt disappear. Yet I am proud to come from a family that was among the earliest to work in a western business here in Canada and in Alberta, my family having a long history with the Hudson's Bay Company.

We all have much to learn from the culture of the First Peoples, who have lived in Alberta for thousands of years, their respect for the environment, their understanding of home and community, and we need to recognize more fully the implications of all of us being treaty people. The treaties are agreements with mutual commitments, and together we need to learn more about how they can be a source of all of us enjoying better lives together in our communities.

With that in mind, I urge all civil servants, members, Albertans, and this government to observe aboriginal awareness day on June 21 and to recognize the past Aboriginal Awareness Week that occurred on May 19 to 22. Indeed, it is my hope that all Albertans will follow the advice of the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples as well as the report on truth and reconciliation and strive to increase awareness of aboriginal peoples within a larger cultural mosaic and to build good relationships and respect the inherent rights of all indigenous peoples, not just now but at all times.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Constable Daniel Woodall

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was moved today by the outpouring of support from across Alberta and internationally for the regimental funeral of Constable Woodall. All Albertans depend on men and women in uniform to maintain and enforce the peace and order which we all depend upon to live our lives in safety. This city and indeed the province stopped today to recognize a hero. I will say that I was proud to have our Premier in the front row for the event, and I thank her for attending. I would always hesitate to speak for all members of this House, but in this case I think we can all be thankful to all men and women in uniform and join together in thanking Constable Woodall and his family, his friends, his colleagues for the safety and security that we take for granted every day.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Mason: If I may briefly interrupt, I would move that we ask for unanimous consent to revert to Ministerial Statements at this time.

1:40 Ministerial Statements Constable Daniel Woodall

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to my colleagues for allowing me to rise today to make some comments. As has already been noted, I've just returned from attending the funeral of Constable Woodall, and I was joined at the funeral by thousands and thousands of Albertans and many of my colleagues from all sides of this House today. I think that while most of us may be new to this House, I believe this may be one of the most heartbreaking issues that we will face throughout our career.

On our way to the Legislature today many of us saw the blue ribbons that were tied to trees that line Edmonton streets. Those ribbons are an expression of Edmontonians' support for the Edmonton Police Service following last week's devastating murder of EPS veteran Constable Daniel Woodall. This morning that outpouring of support grew exponentially as thousands of police officers and other first responders came together to bid farewell to Constable Woodall. They were joined by many Albertans, who came together with them to show support for his family, including his wife and their two young children and his EPS colleagues. They came together to remind us all of the great dangers that our men and our women in uniform face every day as they serve and as they protect others.

Mr. Speaker, Constable Woodall was the first EPS officer to be killed in the line of duty in 25 years. He served on the EPS hate crimes unit, which, along with members from other parts of the force, was attempting to arrest a suspect for criminal harassment. Sergeant Jason Harley was also shot during the attack, and we all pray for his full recovery and a speedy recovery.

As many may know already, Constable Woodall was recruited from Great Britain, where he served with the Greater Manchester Police for several years. Those who worked closely with him, both here in Edmonton and the U.K., remember a passionate, dedicated, funny, and caring officer.

Mr. Speaker, this was a senseless and devastating crime against the very people who work every day, day in and day out, to keep our communities safe. Constable Woodall's death, like those of all police and peace officers and other first responders who perish in the line of duty, is a national tragedy. Police officers and all law enforcement personnel put themselves on the line every day for us, our families, and for our communities. It is the very least that we can do to ensure that they are aware of and feel the warmth and the depth and the sincerity of our gratitude and our remembrance of their sacrifice.

I encourage all Albertans to think about what those blue ribbons represent. I encourage them to think about law enforcement staff and emergency services personnel right across our province as well as their families, who stand behind them each and every day. And I encourage us all to be grateful for all that they do to protect us day in and day out.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to request that we now take a moment of silence to remember Constable Woodall.

The Speaker: Please be seated. Thank you, hon. Premier.

I would remind the House that past precedent is that the hon. Leader of the Opposition may also speak to ministerial statements. I would also take the opportunity to remind the House that unanimous consent is required by the Assembly for any other additional speakers who may choose to speak.

I would recognize the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Premier, for those remarks. I would like to offer sincere condolences on behalf of all members of the Wildrose caucus to the family of Constable Woodall and especially to his wife and his two young children. They have been unfairly robbed of their father.

On Monday night of last week I received word that an officer-involved shooting had happened in southwest Edmonton. My heart sank. My immediate thoughts and my prayers went out to the first responders at the scene. I prayed for their safety and that they could all return home to the families that they love. When I received word that an Edmonton police officer had been killed in the line of duty, my heart broke. Constable Woodall, a very young man, only 35 years old, was callously gunned down while trying to protect the public from someone who cared very little for the sanctity of life. Unfortunately, Constable Woodall died in the line of duty while serving Canada, while serving all of us. There is no greater sacrifice, and not only must he be remembered, but he must be honoured.

Every morning police officers right across this country, right across this province put on their uniforms to serve and protect us and our public. They all recognize that that day may be the day they don't make it home to their family. That's what Constable Woodall did last Monday morning.

Constable Woodall was clearly a hero, as are the thousands of men and women that put those uniforms on every single day throughout this country. They live to serve the public of Alberta. They're the police officers, the RCMP, the firefighters, EMS, the sheriffs, and many other first responders that put their lives on the line for us and our priorities. Each of them, every one of them, puts their life on the line every single day to keep the public safe. We must honour and remember all of those people and remember the living as we do those who have passed. It's people like Constable Woodall who personify the term "public servant." I think a better term would be "hero."

Once again, my heartfelt condolences to his family, the loved ones, and also to the grieving members of the Edmonton Police Service, his family, his friends, our province, and our country.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member of the loyal opposition.

I acknowledge the Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to make two motions: one, that we extend Orders of the Day to complete the responses to the ministerial statement; secondly, that the House provide unanimous consent for any independent members who may wish to make a response to the Premier's remarks.

The Speaker: Thank you. You've heard the motion.

The Speaker: Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier, thank you so much for being there today in the front row. It means a lot to me. It means a lot to my brothers and sisters in law enforcement. I am a sergeant with the Calgary Police Service. That is who I am. It's who I always will be.

To be here for six to eight months or however long it's been, and Constable Woodall and Constable Wynn – what you folks saw today was remarkable from a sense that you saw brotherhood; you saw sisterhood. You saw a family come together from throughout North America. They came here for a man who gave his life to Canada and to the United Kingdom because he was a police officer there as well. I think you all need to understand that this is a calling. It is not something that everybody can do, and that's fine. To see people who have died, to talk to people who have lost loved ones due to drunk drivers, to see people who have lost loved ones due to homicides is very difficult. It is very challenging.

I have chosen to come here to this realm to help my brothers and sisters. I had talked to them before I decided to go into politics, and I told them as I tell you: my heart is always with the Calgary Police Service; my heart is always with my brothers and sisters in law enforcement.

Mr. Speaker, 2829 is a number that will go down in Alberta history, if not infamy. That is the regimental number of Constable Woodall. You have to understand that those numbers may not mean much to a lot of people, but they mean something that is a sense of belonging. People will tattoo them on their bodies. They do it not out of any form of ego; they do it out of pride, pride for serving you and for serving Alberta.

I want to say that I was honoured and I was humbled to be there today with my colleagues. I offer whatever assistance I can, with my expertise in judicial administrative law, in incident command, to the Minister of Justice, whatever I can do to help out. I only got involved in politics to make this a better province.

Thank you, Constable Woodall.
God bless you all.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I believe I would speak for all of your peers in this House in expressing that you, probably more than any of us, appreciate the significance and the tragedy that has taken place. Thank you.

I'd like to recognize the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to say thank you to the Premier and to the Leader of the Official Opposition, but a special word of thanks to the Member for Calgary-West for everything you do and for everything that first responders around this province do.

No one should have to experience what Constable Daniel Woodall, his family, and his law enforcement partners have gone through. This is indeed, as Police Chief Knecht described, a tragedy of unspeakable proportions. We must honour the courage and the hard work of first responders and never forget the risks they take. These are the people who run toward danger while the rest of us seek safety. We owe a debt of gratitude to each and every one of Alberta's first responders and to our military, who put their lives on the line to protect our values and our way of life. Edmonton has lost one of its best and bravest, and his sacrifice will be remembered by this community for all time.

As I stood to watch the procession today, I thought of Constable Woodall's family and his young children, who are close to the age of my kids. I want Constable Woodall's family to know that this community is there for them in their time of great need. I am profoundly moved by the police forces from around Alberta who joined the procession and especially the 180 officers from Calgary, many of whom took up posts around Edmonton so EPS officers could participate in the memorial. This is the same Alberta spirit of co-operation we saw when Edmonton Police Service officers and Edmonton firefighters came streaming down highway 2 to help us in Calgary and southern Alberta during the flood of 2013. I hope this is one small way we can begin to repay EPS and the people of Edmonton, by helping them during their own time of need.

My thoughts and the thoughts of my family and all of those in Calgary and all around the province of Alberta are with Constable Woodall's family and with those who serve with the Edmonton Police Service and first responders all around this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the House for the opportunity to speak briefly on the memory of Constable Dan Woodall.

Today the thoughts of all Albertans are with the brave men and women of the Edmonton Police Service and with the young family that lost a husband and a dad. Like all police officers, Constable Woodall worked every day to protect all of us, serving with distinction in the hate crimes unit at the Edmonton Police Service. Like too many before him, he paid the ultimate sacrifice in the line of duty. As each of us tries in our small way to pay tribute to this sacrifice and as the province says goodbye, we carry a debt that we can never repay. All we can do is honour the sacrifice and promise that we will not forget.

To all the heroes, who run towards danger and keep us safe, our deepest thanks always.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Pipeline Development

Mr. Jean: Yesterday, in response to a question from the Wildrose energy shadow minister, we heard the Premier's lengthy, surprising point of view on Alberta exporting bitumen for refining and sale to overseas markets. It was clear that she was not in favour of pipelines going south. Her opinions, I worry, might even give President Obama more excuses to block the Keystone pipeline. Will the Premier please clarify her position and assure Albertans that it is not the policy of her government to oppose the Northern Gateway pipeline, the Keystone pipeline, or any other pipeline?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you know, Albertans elected us to focus on creating jobs and building the economy, and that's, of course, exactly what we will do. The comments that I made yesterday are actually no different than the comments that I made throughout the election. I understand that we need to work together with industry to promote access. We also need to do it within the context of understanding what's best for Alberta and ensuring that we retain the capacity to invest upgrading where possible. Those things are not separated. Talking about capacity is not something that should be negated or criticized. It's part of the overall process.

Mr. Jean: This Premier has publicly expressed doubts about the Northern Gateway pipeline. Her fellow party members object to the Kinder Morgan pipeline. Her Energy minister's top adviser was employed by a group that worked against the Keystone pipeline, Northern Gateway pipeline, Energy East pipeline, and worked against using rail to move oil. Yesterday the Premier confirmed what we all know, that "pipelines are, in fact, the safest way to get product to market." Will the Premier confirm that her government will support all pipelines that get Alberta's energy to market safely?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday what I did when I talked about Northern Gateway – I'm not sure if I did that yesterday; whichever, it doesn't really matter – was that I identified what most people in the industry already understand and have in fact confirmed to me, that the likelihood of the Northern Gateway pipeline being approved in the near future is not great. Many industry leaders have acknowledged that. Now, I have said, however, that I'm quite open to the prospects of working with governments across this country with respect to Kinder Morgan, and I'm also quite interested in pursuing Energy East and working with industry in both cases to ensure that we get the best . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition leader.

Mr. Jean: I would remind the Premier through you, Mr. Speaker, that a car never starts unless you turn the key.

The Wildrose certainly wants this government to succeed as we want Alberta to succeed. Alberta's energy industry, through its investment, taxes, and royalties, is the key driver of Alberta's economy. It creates the jobs. It creates the opportunities that drive Alberta's prosperity. It allows us to have an incredibly generous society that looks after the vulnerable. It allows all of us to have a standard of living that is second to none in the world and the envy of Canada and the world. Yet there are people in the Premier's caucus who have actively and continue to actively oppose pipeline . . .

Ms Notley: Well, on the issue of Northern Gateway, Mr. Speaker, I would just say that the key has been turned, the car has been on, it's been idling, and it's been idling for a really long time because there's no road for it to be on. I will say this. When you talk about developing market access and also developing a willingness for people to accept our pipelines, the other thing that we need to do is that we need to establish credibility on the environmental file. Now, those folks' cousins in Ottawa have not been successful in that regard and neither has the previous government. If we're going to make progress, we're going to do it by finally creating a record that we can be proud of.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition. Second question.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd suggest that it had the wrong driver and it continues to have the wrong driver.

Provincial Budget Timeline

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I tried to get Albertans some helpful answers on when they could expect the budget. Of course, Albertans need to know the government's fiscal plans as soon as possible, at the latest in September. The Premier and the Finance minister were coy and suggested all sorts of timelines. Well, by September 7 this government will be four months out from the election. That is more than enough time to build a budget. Will the Premier introduce a budget in early September?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've answered this question already. Albertans expect us to do a good, thorough job of reviewing the budget; they expect us to do a good, thorough job of reviewing the revenue; and they expect us to do a good, thorough job of reviewing spending and making sure that we don't make reckless, draconian across-the-board cuts but that if we do roll back certain programs, we do it thoughtfully and in an informed way. That's why they're going to see a budget in October.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, fall starts at the end of September. The Premier is hinting and telling us now that we won't get to see a budget until the end of October. According to the rules of our Legislature it takes more than 20 days of debate to pass a budget. That means we will not pass a budget until December. That is unacceptable to Albertans. Our businesses and our families deserve better, and they need to know this government's fiscal plan far before then. Why won't the Premier change her mind and bring in a budget in early September?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, it is true that if I were to operate the way the members opposite suggested that they were going to in their platform, we could just arbitrarily say: "You know what? Let's just close our eyes, cross our fingers, and take $5 billion out and see what happens. You know what? It'll be great. We'll just wait until the teachers wander in and tell us that, yeah, there are a hundred kids in that class now because we've just laid off a whole bunch of them." [interjections] That's not a thoughtful way forward. That's exactly what Albertans voted against. We're going to bring in a budget in October, and if it takes longer to pass, it's because we're giving these guys a thorough opportunity to evaluate it once we've introduced it.

The Speaker: Might I advise the House that I have a hearing aid on one side, so I have difficulty hearing. It's very important that the Speaker hear both sides of the House while the party is speaking. I hope you'll respect that in the House and allow me to hear the speakers.

Second supplemental, hon. member.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would remind the Premier that our platform budget wasn't off by billions of dollars.

November and December are when a government should be consulting for next year's budget; it is not when this Legislature should be working on this year's budget. The Premier seems strangely reluctant to come back in September. I can't help but note that we will have a federal election on October 19. Will the Premier confirm and assure Albertans that federal politics has nothing to do with her delaying the budget?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can't help that the things that happened here in Alberta happened to work in favour of certain federal political parties and against others. You know, there's nothing we can do about that.

What this is about is ensuring that Albertans get a well-thought-out, well-researched, considered budget and that all members of the House get full opportunity to debate that budget. It's absolutely to be expected. If they're worried about the timeline, I would suggest that perhaps if their colleagues over there had not en masse crossed over to those guys, we wouldn't have had an election.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Health Care Review

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All Albertans deserve a world-class health care system, and we want to help the government get there. But many remember that the last time Alberta centralized health services, all we got was ballooning wait times and packed emergency rooms. In response to this, the Health minister announced a plan to shrink wait times and provide more long-term spaces. Can the minister tell Albertans what this plan will actually involve besides throwing billions more at top-heavy Alberta Health Services bureaucrats?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question. We made it very clear during the provincial election that we weren't going to be slashing billions of dollars from the front lines of health care and education, and Albertans made it very clear that that's what they stood by. So I'm sorry if some people don't like the results of May 5, but this government is here to deliver.

Mr. Barnes: Yesterday in question period the Health minister said that a review of the health system is already in the works. In fact, there was one just wrapped up a few short months ago. Quite frankly, there have been so many reviews and bureaucratic head-scratching on health care that we're beginning to lose count, and, oddly, none of the doctors, nurses, paramedics, front-line professionals, or any local experts that I've talked to know anything at all about this. I wonder exactly how the minister plans to hold a review without keeping any of our front-line experts in the loop.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Obviously, any time anyone begins a new job, they have a responsibility to review the decisions of the people who had that job for the 44 years before they took that job, and that's exactly what I'm doing. I've been tasked with making sure that we have good, strong decisions moving forward, and I'm doing a review. I'm reviewing the decisions that we've been making for 44 years to make sure that they align, moving forward, with our platform and the mandate Albertans have delivered to us.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Barnes: Minister, communities right across this province have told us that local decision-making is critical. A superboard in Edmonton is completely unresponsive to the need for 24-hour health care in Airdrie or Sylvan Lake, to the complete lack of dialysis treatment in Lac La Biche, or to proper diagnostic lab services in Medicine Hat. We know what the solution is: put local decisions back in the hands of local decision-makers. Minister, why announce a so-called review when you've already publicly committed to the failed centralized health policies of the past?

Ms Hoffman: Perhaps the member didn't hear what I was talking about. I was talking about our government taking time to do a review and make decisions moving forward. I wasn't talking about what past ministers, the one before or the one before that, did in the last six months or two years. I'm talking about decisions that we're making, ensuring that they're aligned with our values moving forward. I made it very clear, Mr. Speaker, that local voices will be considered moving forward. I think that what the members opposite would like to pretend is that you can cut billions of dollars out of public health care, wave a magic wand, and magically have everything resolved because you just shuffled the decks at the cabinet table. That's not true. Albertans told us to focus on front-line . . .

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Government Policies

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The current downturn in Alberta's economy is being made worse by the climate of uncertainty coming from some of the policy statements of this government. In particular, the lack of concrete statements or clarity around the timing or outcome of a pending royalty review and the implementation of corporate taxes is clearly causing the business community to hold off on some investments. Holding off until sometime this fall is too long. To the Minister of Finance: what are you going to do to concretely assure Albertans and the business community that your government is not going to drive away the investment that provides the jobs that Albertans are depending upon?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member from the third party: in our platform we talked about diversification of the economy, and we will be doing that as we go forward. We'll be consulting with the broad-based business community to make sure that they're onside. Just with respect to the corporate taxes there's a range of opinion, and most recently lots of opinion says that that's not such a bad thing: as long as you give us notice, we can plan for it, and we can put it in our budgets. That's what we're doing. It was in our plan. It's in their budgets. We're doing it.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, on Monday, the same day the throne speech was delivered in this Assembly, the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors sent out an updated forecast for drilling operating days that shows an estimated job loss of more than 25,000, 50 per cent, this year due to "potential policy changes in Alberta with respect to royalties." To the Energy minister: what are you doing to stem this massive employment loss that is happening as a direct result of your government's policies?

The Speaker: The hon. Energy minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Those numbers that came out yesterday were for the first quarter, and they are a result of world and global oil prices. What we're doing is meeting with industry to understand their concerns and asking for their advice as we move forward in a royalty review. We've agreed to work together as partners for the betterment of a vibrant energy industry in Alberta.

Mr. McIver: Well, that's twice we've heard the government say that set of answers about working with industry.

On May 14th, a whole month ago, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers agreed to form an industry group to work with the new Premier "to explore and embrace the best change possible." To the Premier: have you or your ministers met with CAPP in the full month since they extended the olive branch to you, and what progress have you made on working together with important stakeholder groups? Albertans want and need to know.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's an excellent question. Yes, we've met with representatives of CAPP. In fact, they were invited to attend a full cabinet meeting, and we had a fabulous opportunity to meet with them there. We've had a multiplicity of conversations: the Energy minister and myself as well as the environment minister. They've asked at this point for certain things. They've asked that when we proceed with respect to climate change and royalty review, we deal with those issues together, that they be linked. They also asked that they be consulted in a meaningful way as we develop our plans going forward, and they've asked that in the interests of certainty we do it without undue delay. All three of those . . .

The Speaker: With your indulgence I'm going to give a little leeway, as I already have on a couple of occasions today.

I would welcome the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Value-added Energy Industries

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, I get my turn. Before I begin, I do want to congratulate the Premier on her historic victory and congratulate the Leader of the Official Opposition and all members of the House. It is truly a new day in the Alberta Legislative Assembly, or at least I sincerely hope it is.

Mr. Speaker, this government speaks frequently of their fondness for value-added, and who wouldn't? The words "value-add" do sound very appealing. But saying those words and actually adding value are two very different things with very different implications for Alberta taxpayers. When making these decisions, it's important to know the government understands the integrated nature of North American and global energy markets. To the Minister of Energy: what specifically are the government's plans to force a value-added model onto the marketplace?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for that question. As was mentioned earlier, we were elected by Albertans to work with energy on the royalty review and other parts to understand the industry. To date I have been in Calgary six, seven, eight times since the election started, meeting with over a hundred people in industry. We're discussing – all of us have the same interests, putting Alberta jobs first and the possibility of job creation. We've all agreed to work as partners, to go forward and promote all those projects that will create and preserve Alberta jobs.

Mr. Clark: You sound pretty locked in on your definition of value-added, as if Alberta's current production doesn't add any value to Alberta's economy.

To the Minister of Energy again: how many billions of dollars is value-add going to cost Albertans?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for that question. At this point we're still meeting with industry to discuss all the stresses for them right now, the current global prices, and what it will take for capital investments in this industry to create those jobs and move forward. We're talking about pipelines. We're talking about value-added and the millions and billions that it will take to invest. We're creating a climate that will encourage that investment as we move forward.

Mr. Clark: Sounds a lot more like magical thinking than a concrete plan, Mr. Speaker.

We were told the North West upgrader, which is now called the Sturgeon refinery, was a low-cost, low-risk project that would add value by upgrading domestic bitumen. Again to the Minister of Energy: will your government continue the North West upgrader boondoggle, a project which will cost Alberta taxpayers $26 billion?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for that question. As with all the projects, we are consulting with industry as we move forward and looking at the pros and cons of all of that. Again, we're in constant consultation with industry to look at those projects that will bring value and jobs to Alberta.

The Speaker: I wish to underline again as we move past speaker 5: no preambles in the supplementary portions of your question.

I will recognize the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Energy Industry Consultation

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government was elected to show leadership in both growing the economy and protecting the environment. Can the Minister of Energy tell me what she's doing to ensure that industry perspectives are included in this process?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for that question. Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned previously, I've been doing numerous visits to Calgary, engaging energy sector leaders. In fact, I got back about an hour ago from Calgary. We met with CAPP this morning; 40 CEOs and presidents were in the room. We discussed in a very frank manner how we're going to move forward together as energy partners and Alberta partners and create jobs and an industry that is going to be strong for Albertans.

Ms McPherson: Mr. Speaker, as the minister has been holding meetings, what has she been hearing from these discussions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our energy partners have been very pleased, first of all, that we have met with them. Some of them have never been consulted before. Nobody has asked for their ideas. They advised us to look at the last resources review and not create a them versus us. They're pleased that we're working as partners, they're pleased that we're being collaborative, and they're very pleased to have input for all Albertans.

2:20

Ms McPherson: Mr. Speaker, since Alberta is an energy-producing province and many jobs rely on this important sector, what will the minister do to ensure that their ideas are addressed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've said, we have been listening and learning from the industry. They're encouraging us to create a royalty review, an energy review, an industry review that includes all the parts and all the sectors for all of Alberta. We are listening, and by all means we will create a plan moving forward that will encourage investment in Alberta, and in the end everything will be better for Albertans.

The Speaker: I recognize the Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Municipal Sustainability Initiative Funding

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week a major concern was raised at a joint meeting of the mayors and reeves of southern Alberta regarding sustainable, continued support for communities through MSI funding. The members are worried because they've received no updated information from this new government regarding any funding promises since those proposed by the former PC government. To the minister: considering that the amount of MSI funding given to the communities has traditionally been communicated prior to the fall, when they prepare their budgets for the following year, will you commit now to maintaining the MSI funds promised by the last government for '15-16?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the hon. member for the question. You know, this government was elected on wanting to support our cities, our municipalities to ensure that they have the tools and resources available to deliver the services that Albertans rely on. I appreciate that the municipalities in question have been patient. I ask them to be a little bit more patient. This government will be ensuring that grants get to them.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate the applause. I really do.

You know, our local decision-makers really deserve a better answer than that, Minister. The Municipal Government Amendment Act, which has now been given royal assent, that we passed in March, requires municipalities to prepare three-year financial plans and five-year capital plans. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs again, then: how can municipalities possibly prepare financial plans and capital plans when they don't know how much MSI funding the government intends to give them before the fall?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. Yesterday the Finance minister tabled the interim supply bill, which today we will be debating, so the member and municipalities will be able to see what this government is proposing as far as the dollars for MSI and for many of the other important grants that municipalities get.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. The mayors and Reeves of southern Alberta as well as municipal leaders from across the province, frankly, have sent the minister a letter demanding that at the time of the release of the '15-16 budget this fall MSI funding intentions for the next year also be fully disclosed. To the minister: local decision-makers need to know how much MSI funding they'll be getting in order to plan for the future, not what is in the interim supply. Will you communicate this vital information to them today?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, I think it would be irresponsible to make promises before this government has actually deliberated on a budget and decided exactly how we're going to go moving forward. I appreciate that municipalities are very eager to get answers. I can tell you that the Premier, this government, and myself are committed to ensuring that municipalities have the resources and the tools available to ensure that they can provide services to their constituents. So I ask the member and municipalities to be patient, and the answer will be forthcoming.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Speaker will ask to be given some more indulgence. I'm looking for Calgary-Greenway and can't find him in the pictures.

An Hon. Member: There he is.

The Speaker: My apologies. The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Bhullar: Hard to miss.

The Speaker: He is hard to miss.

Mr. Bhullar: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That is a first. I don't think I've ever been missed. This is the first time in many years that I get up to ask a question in this Assembly, so congratulations.

Provincial Tax Policy

Mr. Bhullar: I know the new government is eager to move forward with their platform. However, Mr. Speaker, there are many unintended consequences. My first question is to the Minister of Finance. One-third of Alberta's total tax revenue comes from a very small percentage of tax filers. If you drive just half of these individuals outside of Alberta with your proposed changes, how much money will we lose?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll maybe use a quote from Peter Lougheed, and I'll take the advice of former Premier Lougheed. He said in 2011 that it is time for us to consider an increase in corporate and personal income tax. We are doing that. In our platform we talked about both of those things. We'll take steps in the next day or two to bring those before this House and have a vote on them. We'll have an opportunity to vote on them or not. But we don't feel like anybody is going to leave this beautiful province of Alberta because there's everything here people want.

The Speaker: First supplemental from Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much. We're not saying: don't raise them. What we are saying is: don't be the highest in the country. [interjections] Mr. Speaker, if I may, Alberta has a large proportion of individuals that file their taxes here that don't actually live here because this has been the cheapest jurisdiction to file taxes. If those people move, the burden shifts to the middle class. How much are you going to have to raise taxes on the middle class in three years or four years from now to make up for those $3 billion?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that federally we can see that the PCs have raised taxes on the middle class. We're not going to be doing that. Ninety-three per cent of tax filers will not see an increase to their taxes as a result of the proposals we're bringing forward in a few days.

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, the question is quite simple. Minister, you yourself have said that 93 per cent will not see a change. That other 7 per cent, however, produces about 30 per cent of our personal income tax revenue. If those tax filers move to British Columbia or move to Ontario, who is going to make up the difference? Is it hard-working Alberta families that have to make up the difference because of your short-sightedness to live up to . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Members on the government side of the House, I need to remind you that I couldn't always hear his question, so I hope you'll appreciate that.

The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. The tax changes that we are bringing forward are fair for Albertans. They voted for us. We told them clearly what we were going to be doing. To the hon. member: I don't want to see one person leave this province. They get good value from all the programs and services here, and they'll continue to stay here not only because of the beautiful mountains but because this is an NDP government, and it's a great place to be.

Education System

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It seems that the world of education is a very confusing place these days. I have three questions for the minister so he can help Albertans get some clarity. The Wildrose has always stood up for parental choice in school models. Will the Minister of Education commit this government to provide predictable and equitable funding for education and options that fall outside the public and separate systems for the next four years?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question from the Official Opposition Education critic, his first time, and we'll have a long and productive relationship, I'm sure. It's very important to understand first and foremost that this government chose to make a predictable and significant re-establishment of funding for 12,000 new students who just entered our education system. That's going to pay for teachers, it's going to pay for the upkeep of places, and it's for all forms of delivery of education: for our home-schools, for private schools, for public schools as well.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans also need clarity on Inspiring Education. Redesigning the curriculum is one of the initiatives intended to bring the vision of Inspiring Education to life. Does the Minister of Education intend to rewrite the Alberta curricula to meet the vague goals of Inspiring Education, which many parents and experts think is totally uninspiring?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. And thank you very much for this question. We recognize that some people have concerns around the curriculum, around the math curriculum as well. The very first thing I can do and say is that by re-establishing funding, we can make sure that there are lower class sizes, that we can have inclusion with supports. We can have adequate money to pay for public education, the education that we want right across the province, and we will work with our partners to make sure that the curriculum teaches the basics of language and mathematics.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans also need clarity on this government's education commitments. Yesterday the minister said, "We put in $103 million to meet the needs of 12,000 new students moving into the school system here in the fall." The minister's own numbers disagree. They show that the real cost of this announcement was over $200 million, and there will only be 7,500 new students. Could the minister help Albertans understand the discrepancy between these figures? Was this discovery math or just . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, our numbers are sound, and the hon. member can have perhaps a little lesson between the financial year of the province and the budgeting for a school year. That's where the difference lies. Certainly, we made a commitment by showing our good intentions for the interim funding. We know that we will put in place stable funding so that we can bring up our averages, make sure that students are learning the basics and that we can provide education for all people to be proud of in this province.

The Speaker: The chair will recognize the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Seniors' Care in Fort McMurray

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first letter that the Wildrose sent to the Premier was about seniors' care in Fort McMurray. Seniors' care is an issue everywhere, but nowhere is it more prevalent than in Fort McMurray. No other community our size has gone this long without a long-term health care facility. We wrote the Premier, asking her to delay the tender for an ill-conceived seniors' project in Fort McMurray and to listen to the community. Is the Premier prepared to give the residents of Fort McMurray the facility that they need and deserve?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. We agree that this is a long overdue facility. We have been disappointed, as I'm sure the residents of Fort McMurray have been, that the seniors living there and in the surrounding neighbourhoods haven't had an option to age in place. In terms of moving forward, we want to make sure that we follow contracts, that we're not breaking contracts willy-nilly, unlike what some people might be proposing, and that, of course, long-term care is an option as well as other types of supportive living for the seniors of Fort McMurray.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, the Parsons Creek project is the wrong project in the wrong location. The community needs an aging-in-place facility built at Willow Square. The Wildrose campaigned for Willow Square. The NDP candidates up in Fort McMurray campaigned for Willow Square. The only people that campaigned for Parsons Creek were the PCs. Willow Square is a model for every other community. Instead, an ill-conceived multimillion-dollar project is proceeding. Can the Premier tell us why such a controversial multimillion-dollar decision was made in between the election and her getting sworn in?

Ms Hoffman: It's always a great day, Mr. Speaker, when you can find opportunities to agree with members of the opposition. They agree with this government that the decisions made by the past government were out of touch, out of whack, and didn't actually help any of the Albertans in terms of making sure that we deliver the long-term care facility for Fort McMurray.

Of course, we are providing some stability as we move forward. In every decision that we are making, we're taking due consideration. One of the considerations that needs to be taken into consideration is the fact that something has been signed. The Minister of Infrastructure is reviewing the contracts as we continue to move forward and making sure that we've got the right facility for the people of . . .

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, like I said, seniors' care is an issue everywhere in Alberta. The Wildrose is here to help this new government. The government mentioned that they would meet our society's needs for home and long-term care. This is an opportunity to correct the errors of previous governments. Will the minister give us any details now on this government and how it will meet the needs of the . . .

Ms Hoffman: Thank you again to the hon. member. Of course, we want to make sure that any future decisions are made with the confidence of this government, and we are very happy to work with our partners on all sides of this House to make sure that local needs are being addressed as we continue to move forward. One of the things that needs to also be acknowledged is that there are financial implications for any infrastructure decision, especially once contracts have been signed. So we have to take financial responsibility as well as the evidence based on the needs of seniors and the local community as we move forward together with members opposite as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a sad and sombre day here in the Chamber. I think one thing that we can all agree on is that the best way to honour Constable Woodall's memory is to do exactly what we're doing, and that is to actively participate in democracy, that he fought to preserve and protect.

Health Care System Decision-making

Dr. Starke: On that note, yesterday the Health minister told us that she had cancelled plans for decentralizing control of AHS in order to bring stability to the system, but the rural health services review and basically all of rural Alberta told her that, in fact, that's exactly what had to happen. To the Health minister: why have you decided to listen to your own opinions rather than to the opinions of rural Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Health minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Past decisions may have been driven specifically in isolation and without consultation, but we've been very clear on the fact that we are communicating with front-line service providers. Members may have paid attention to the articles that have been published in the Journal and the support from the nurses as well as lead physicians across Alberta that what Alberta needs right now is stability, not another set of letterhead. They need to make sure that we can support front-line service delivery, and stability is needed for that.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, trust me, we in the third-party caucus understand the benefits that can accrue to Alberta from stability and consistency, but we also recognize that Alberta sometimes can be ready for change. In fact, though, the rural health review is based on input from over 100 Alberta communities, including countless front-line workers, and most of the 55 other recommendations also involve making changes. So what other recommendations does the Health minister plan to reverse or ignore in the name of stability?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you to the hon. member for the question. Stability is important to front-line workers. I've had lots of opportunities to speak to them, and one of the key messages that resonated is that health care providers should be able to wake up in the morning knowing who they're going to be reporting to when they show up to work. This government is going to make that happen.

Now, in terms of making sure that we acknowledge the recommendations in the rural health review, that's absolutely been one of the items that we've been paying attention to and that I'll continue to update this House on when we have opportunities to do so, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the rural health review came about as a result of hundreds of hours of co-operative effort from people all across Alberta, including, I might point out, a member of your own caucus, a registered nurse, who came and spoke with us, is the minister willing to sit down with me to review and to discuss that work for the benefit of all Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member. I've actually put in a request to both the second and the third parties to have one-on-ones with the critics that shadow my portfolios, so the critics for Health and for Seniors. I believe that there has been a bit of a lag in terms of finding a time that aligns, but I would be very happy to have that be one of the items on the agenda when we do meet.

The Speaker: I'd like to recognize the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Infrastructure Project Prioritization

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Infrastructure. During the recent election we told Albertans that we would end the old practice of politicizing infrastructure projects. I know that the transparent prioritization and allocation of infrastructure resources are very important to the people of Alberta. Could the minister please update the House on the status of the infrastructure sunshine list?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for the question, hon. member. Mr. Speaker, this government certainly wants to let the sunshine in, and I want to indicate that we were elected to provide open, honest, and transparent government, particularly in the capital investment process. We've seen in the past the manipulation of the capital process in order to secure electoral advantage for ministers and candidates, and that's not something that we're prepared to accept. So we are going ahead on our promise to establish a sunshine list so everyone will know which capital projects are . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the immense growth that has occurred in our province in the last decade, can the minister please shed any light on how the government will address the growing need for hospitals and schools in Alberta?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for the question. Mr. Speaker, it's our job to make sure that we provide the capital structures necessary to deliver the services that Albertans want with respect to education, health care, and other services. So I'll be working with my colleagues, particularly in Health and Education, to review the capital projects that have been planned. We will be doing our very best to make sure that the necessary projects that Albertans need and want are brought forward in a timely fashion and done on budget.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to hear that our government is working hard to deliver on the commitments we made to Albertans. We promised Albertans not only to build new infrastructure but also to repair existing hospitals and schools, high concerns for my constituents in Edmonton-Mill Woods. Can the minister please update the House on how this government will improve Alberta's crumbling health and education facilities?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that question, hon. member. Mr. Speaker, members on both sides of the House know that we have to meet the needs of Albertans. They have important things that need to be delivered to them in terms of hospitals and health care and educational facilities, and we are committed to ending the practice of broken promises, where a government promises one thing in the election and then does something completely opposite after the election. So we will deliver on our promise to provide world-class services to Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I'd like to acknowledge the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to helping this government focus on jobs, growth, and prosperity in the coming years, but I do have some questions for them on the minimum wage hike. The NDP have said that low-income workers will benefit from a dramatic increase to the minimum wage. No doubt it will help some, but it will also cause job losses for others. What is the minister going to do to help those people who are going to lose their jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you also to the member for the question. Certainly, it was a clear campaign promise of ours to increase the minimum wage to $15 an hour by 2018. We know that when some Alberta families are doing better, all Alberta families are doing better. We know from our consultations that the Premier and I were a part of last week with industry and also with advocacy groups and labour that many people are in support of increasing the minimum wage, and we're going ahead on this.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wildrose and Albertans alike want to see as many Albertans in the workforce as possible. Minister, over a dozen Canadian studies have shown that just a 10 per cent increase in the minimum wage causes youth unemployment to rise by 3 to 6 per cent. You are wanting to raise it by 50 per cent in just three short years, so I will ask again. In the interests of helping all Albertans, what's the minister's plan to protect those who will lose their jobs with this upcoming proposed policy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I said, the Premier and I consulted with business and labour and advocacy groups, and we're hearing what we can do to support them in making the changes. We know that 62 per cent of low-wage workers are women. We know that this will support them. It will help many, many people. We are absolutely moving forward on this.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hunter: There is no doubt that small businesses, those who create jobs in this province, are worried about paying their bills and keeping the doors open. These are uncertain times. Employment costs can account for 50 to 70 per cent of total expenses. These job creators have a deep understanding of this issue, and they believe there is a much more moderate approach to this. Will the minister commit to listen to the province's job creators rather than just big labour interests before bulldozing this policy through?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have been listening to industry and labour and advocacy groups on this issue, and we've heard also from the community that actually paying a higher wage, a $15 wage, helps them because people have more retention. There is less need for recruitment, so they actually save money and create stability. Again, we're moving ahead on this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The three remaining members' statements.

2:50

Calgary Dream Centre

Ms Payne: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honour the work of the Calgary Dream Centre, a pillar in the community of Calgary-Acadia, which is celebrating its 10th year of service.

The Dream Centre is a faith-based recovery centre that also offers life management skills, career development, and healthy living to the men in its programs. The Dream Centre also gives the space to heal emotional wounds by providing a compassionate ear, a shoulder to cry on, and spiritual support.

I recently visited the Dream Centre and met with some of their exceptional staff and residents. It was an honour to meet the people working so hard day in and day out to support members of our community and to ensure that all Albertans have the opportunity to meet their full potential.

The Calgary Dream Centre invests in people, and that is one of the most important investments we can make. The Dream Centre asks for compassion so that everyone feels cared for. It respects all human beings without reservation. It champions integrity and is always looking for ways to improve the lives of many. It is this kind of compassion and respect that makes Alberta such an amazing place to live.

I know that our government, under the leadership of Premier Notley, will be looking at avenues to improve life for all Albertans. [interjections]

An Hon. Member: Point of order.

Ms Payne: Organizations like the Dream Centre are models of how we can . . .

The Speaker: There are no points of order allowed in Members' Statements.

I would caution the members that you avoid using personal names in the Legislature.

Ms Payne: Thank you.

Hard work and dedication have been invested into the Dream Centre over the past 10 years, and I know this will continue. The Dream Centre will be expanding its services to women soon, and I had the honour of meeting people who will be establishing those programs. My thanks to the staff and the supporters of the Calgary Dream Centre for their work and their kind hearts and gentle souls, that work to make Calgary a better place to live.

County Clothes-Line Foundation

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, in the throne speech the Lieutenant Governor stated: “We are optimistic, hopeful, entrepreneurial, remarkably diverse, and community-minded people. We are people who dream no little dreams and live them. We are people who get things done.”

It is with pride today that I highlight how one organization in Strathcona county has been modelling this spirit. At the pride of Strathcona county awards on Monday night the County Clothes-Line Foundation received the mayor’s award for their contribution of over $1.6 million in the past 30 years to approximately 950 local organizations, groups, and individuals. The foundation also works through Alberta apprenticeship and industry training and Alberta Innovation and Advanced Education to ensure that students receive annual scholarships.

The County Clothes-Line is a true social enterprise. It operates a nonprofit second-hand clothing store to provide county residents a place to shop and donate their gently-used goods. This organization also provides free clothing to job seekers and essential goods to families in need.

Like many community organizations, volunteers started the County Clothes-Line. The County Clothes-Line store opened in April 1984. They hoped that the money raised would only cover operational costs, and instead they were surprised by the instant popularity and money generated.

I personally spent five years at the University of Victoria researching the contribution of nonprofits, social enterprises, and co-operatives to the economy, capacity, and well-being of communities. It gives me great pleasure that an organization in my constituency demonstrates this contribution so well. My congratulations to the current and past volunteers and staff of County Clothes-Line for their work in building capacity and using community strengths to fund much-needed projects.

The Speaker: Before I recognize the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, Member for Calgary-Hays, I want to confirm that you did speak earlier on Members’ Statements.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, yes, I did. Thank you for asking.

The Speaker: The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Official Opposition Policies

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, we the members of the 29th Legislature were elected by our constituents to stand up for their beliefs and their values. They sent us here to defend their rights. The vast majority of people in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills were clear about their wishes. They expect me to fight for small and effective government, low taxes, and personal responsibility as well as personal choice. This is the Alberta way, and that is exactly what I intend to do. The good citizens of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills oppose unnecessary, bureaucratic central planning. We see no value in overtaxing the hard-working Alberta families who drive our economy. We don’t believe in pitting one region of Alberta against another.

We do believe that parents are the best people to make decisions about their children’s education. We believe that local community leaders are best positioned to make decisions that impact our homes and our communities. We believe that low taxes are the key to economic prosperity, that we must always keep our province competitive and we must always pursue policies intended to make Alberta the best place to live, work, and raise a family. Let me be clear. Albertans make Alberta great, not the government.

The freedoms we enjoy – the freedom of speech, the freedom of assembly, the freedom of religion – are our society’s foundation. These freedoms are worth defending, not just on election day but each and every day, and I can assure you that’s what I and my colleagues intend to do.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I have two tablings. I made reference in my questions today to website statements from the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors and from CAPP. I have five copies of each, which I think is the requisite number, and I’d like to table them now.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure to rise today to table the requisite five copies of three documents I referred to yesterday during the debate on Government Motion 3 on member appointments to committees. There are five copies of my letter to the hon. Speaker and two e-mails that I sent to House leaders and members from Calgary-Mountain View and Calgary-Bow on committee assignments. I’d like to table those now.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seeing as the clock is about to approach 3 p.m., I’d like to request unanimous consent of the House to complete the Routine past 3 p.m., Standing Order 7(7).

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: I thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m humbled and honoured to table five copies of the program for the regimental funeral of Constable Daniel Woodall. Constable Woodall was a son, husband, father, friend, law enforcement specialist, and a hero. Dan, we salute you, we celebrate your life, we honour your sacrifice, we mourn your loss, we send our love to your family, and we will remember you.

Statement by the Speaker

Anticipation

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have a statement with respect to a point of order concerning anticipation raised by the Official Opposition House Leader in our last sitting. Hon. members, the Official Opposition House Leader raised a point of order yesterday concerning anticipation. The exchange between that member and the Government House Leader can be found at page 22 of Alberta Hansard for June 16, 2015. I indicated that I would take it under advisement, which I have, and I’m prepared to rule on it today.

First, I would like to make a point about practice when points of order are raised. Members should indicate in the Assembly by rising and catching my attention that they wish to raise a point of order. This procedure ensures that notice is provided to the members, to myself, and to the people who assist on those matters such as the table officers and Hansard staff.

With respect to the point of order, it related to a question by the Member for Calgary-Cross to the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General about donations to political parties, which is the subject of Bill 1, which can be found on page 19 of the Alberta Hansard for yesterday, June 16.

For the benefit of all members I will read Standing Order 23(e), which states:

A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member

- (e) anticipates, contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper or on notice for consideration on that day.

Basically, the rule is what it says, that a part of the proceedings should not be on the same subject as something that is scheduled for later in the day. My investigation into the matter demonstrates that the rule is not necessarily strictly observed in relation to Oral Question Period. Speaker Kowalski stated on March 3, 1998, page 649 of Alberta Hansard that questions that were framed so as to ask if something was a matter of government policy "took it out of the realm of debate on a particular bill." I note that in a May 8, 2013, ruling on the same issue, page 2194 of Alberta Hansard for that day, Speaker Zwodzesky reaffirmed Speaker Kowalski's ruling on the rule against anticipation not being violated by a question about the government policy in relation to a bill which was up for consideration that day.

Members may be interested to know that the Canadian House of Commons no longer applies the rule against anticipation during question period, as is discussed on page 561 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition. In this instance, the question asked what the government was doing about campaign financing, which is, of course, the subject of Bill 1. I think the Official Opposition House Leader had a valid point and a legitimate point of order although it could have been maybe brought forward to the Assembly's attention at the appropriate time.

As we move forward together during this session, I am sure that we will now be more aware of the rule against anticipation.

Orders of the Day Committee of Supply

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Interim Supply Estimates 2015-16 (No. 2) General Revenue Fund and Lottery Fund

The Chair: Hon. members, before we commence this afternoon's consideration of interim supply, I'd like to review briefly the standing orders governing the speaking rotation. As provided for in Standing Order 59.02, the rotation in Standing Order 59.01(6) is deemed to apply, which is as follows:

- (a) the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may make opening comments not to exceed 10 minutes,
- (b) for the hour that follows, members of the Official Opposition and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,

- (c) for the next 20 minutes, the members of the third party . . . and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak . . .
- (d.1) for the next 20 minutes, the members of any other party represented in the Assembly or any independent Members and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (e) for the next 20 minutes, private members of the Government caucus and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak.

During the above rotation speaking times are limited to 10 minutes. For the time remaining, to the extent possible the rotation outlined above shall apply with the speaking times reduced to five minutes, as provided in Standing Order 59.02(1)(c). Provided that the chair has been notified, a minister and a private member may combine their speaking times with both taking and yielding the floor during the combined period. Finally, as provided for in Government Motion 8, approved by the Assembly yesterday, the time allotted for consideration is three hours.

The Committee of Supply has under consideration the 2015-16 interim supply estimates (No. 2).

I will now recognize the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to move the estimates.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to move the 2015-16 interim supply estimates (No. 2) for the Legislative Assembly and the government. When passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize approximate spending of $56 million for the Legislative Assembly, $15.4 billion in expense funding, $2 billion in capital investment funding, $765 million in financial transactions funding for the government, and $387 million for the transfer from the lottery fund to the general revenue fund.

These interim supply estimates provide funding authorization that will allow the normal business of the province to continue until the full 2015-16 estimates are approved in the fall. These estimates also follow through on specific commitments this government has made to the people of Alberta.

Approval of interim supply estimates, pending the release and approval of the budget, will allow the government the time it needs to prepare its plans and the Assembly the time it needs to review and debate those plans here before us. Those budget documents will include comprehensive budget information in the form of the government's fiscal and business plans, the ministry business plans, and the government estimates. These estimates will be fully debated when the budget documents are tabled.

Just with regard to the budget itself, obviously, we're not doing this fast because we're going to do it right. The budget, as I said, will be presented in the fall. In the meantime we're investing in health care, education, postsecondary education, health services, just like Albertans asked us to do by virtue of the election. This supply bill is all about keeping the lights on, the trains running, and government functioning. At the same time we're restoring stability to Alberta's education, health care, and human services. The bill will maintain stability in essential public services while the government reviews the economic situation, finances, and budgeting priorities.

Just a note about what we're investing in. We're investing in stable and predictable funding for our schools and postsecondary institutions. We're doing that because investing in skills and education is the single best investment our province can make to ensure the future prosperity of all. We're investing in stable and predictable funding for our health care system because the time has come to meet our society's growing need for community services that are more in the community, like long-term care and home care, and we're investing in stable and predictable funding for human services because people who have suffered in the recent economic downturn need our support. The new money will be, as I said, put into the areas of education, health, human services, and innovation and education.

I was looking over the previous Finance minister's interim supply bill, that he brought forward to this House on March 16, 2015, the hon. Robin Campbell. Everyone knows that that was for a three-month period of time. The estimate when added up was about $12 billion for three months. As members opposite have identified, this is for five months, from July 1 until November 30, and it's about $18 billion.

This interim supply, as I said, Madam Chair, will allow us to keep functioning and will allow us to invest in the things that Albertans told us they wanted invested in by virtue of the recent election.

Thank you very much for the introduction of this bill.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. Minister.

For the next segment the Official Opposition has the opportunity. Do you want to share back and forth, or how would you prefer to proceed?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yes, Madam Chair, we would like to invite the minister to debate back and forth.

The Chair: All right. I recognize the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. Today I rise to speak to Bill 3 in a manner which I did not expect I would have to do with the election of the first new government in 44 years. I falsely assumed that with the election of a new government we would see a new way of doing things in this place. While in opposition both the Premier and the Government House Leader consistently spoke out against the undemocratic time allocation for bills as a general principle, let alone for such a hugely important piece of legislation such as the pending bill before us today. This bill has been allocated a mere three hours of debate, the minimum time legally allowed under the standing orders of this House for interim supply. That is three hours of debate for $18.6 billion of spending, of which $1.8 billion is new and entirely unbudgeted.

The last time that this province passed a budget was the spring of 2014, under the old Redford government. Since then we have had three new Premiers, which will cost us God knows how much for their portraits in the lobby. Our province has been operating in the dark without any real fiscal plan since that time.

Now, the Official Opposition understands that the current government is unprepared to meet this House with a full and costed budget at this time. We have made clear from the start that we understand this and that we will work co-operatively with the new government to pass a reasonable interim supply bill. Unfortunately, this government has not seen fit to live up to its own principles, that it campaigned on during the election, and has seen fit to invoke a time allocation of just three hours. That means that in this three hours we are debating $6.209 billion per hour and $103 million a minute.

Madam Chair, this would be unreasonable in and of itself even for a bill authorizing just $1 billion. It is even more concerning when we are asked to pass not a budget but a brochure. We have been given three pages with virtually no details with regard to where the government actually intends to spend this money. Now, I'm going to read a quote.

It looks to me like about four months' worth of spending. It's an awful lot of money, though, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is absolutely correct. This is a very, very minuscule amount of information that is provided to the House, to the Assembly, in order to make the decision that is required. We certainly have no objection, you know, to voting interim supply for the government provided that a budget is brought forward relatively quickly.

You know who said that, Madam Chair? The Government House Leader. You know when he said it? March 18, 2015. That was for four months of spending. The government is now asking us to run on interim supply for eight months.

We have been given no details with regard to how this money within the departments will be allocated, and, most concerning, we have been given no details on what this means for the budget's bottom line. This bill contains not a hint of what the total expenditures will be for this fiscal year. This budget contains no details with regard to what the revenues will be for this fiscal year. This document contains no details with respect to what the deficit will be for this fiscal year, no details about what the debt will be for this year, and no details about what the net financial assets for this financial year will be.

In short, this is a document asking for a blank cheque. This is a document asking permission for the government to spend without accountability or scrutiny and without any guidance from this Legislature whatsoever. It is a document that spends first and asks questions later. It is a document that spends frivolously. This is a document that treats money as if it grows on trees. It is a document that is irresponsibly allocating a massive sum of taxpayers' money. This government is merely asking this Assembly for its rubber stamp and asking Albertans to just trust the government.

As some of you know, I've been in the business of not trusting governments. I've never believed in just taking the government's word for it, especially these guys over here. We, the Wildrose, would not be doing our job as the Official Opposition if we just let this pass through this House without any details, without any details on what the effect will be on Alberta's economic future, without a larger fiscal outlook for the province, without any fiscal framework whatsoever. Some of my colleagues will be asking specific questions of ministries in this government with regard to what they will be spending taxpayers' money on in their respective departments.

In the meantime I have five simple questions for the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board. One, how much money will the government spend this fiscal year; two, how much revenue will the government collect this fiscal year; three, what will the deficit be this fiscal year; four, what will the debt be at the end of this fiscal year; and five, what will be the province's net financial assets at the end of this fiscal year?

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Chair. I can begin at the beginning, I guess. The portraits for the Premiers will cost about $12,000 each, and I can't wait to see them. I do want to say that I need to correct one thing that my hon. friend across the floor said. He might have misspoken, but he said that the original interim supply was a four-month interim supply. It was actually a three-month interim supply from April 1 to June 30. The one we're bringing forward here is a five-month interim supply.

But this is not a budget. This is the ability to keep government operating, the ability to keep, as I said, the trains running and the lights on and spending happening. The government estimates of 2015-16 are where you'll find more comprehensive information with regard to the actual ministries and what they're spending on.

That's not the intent of interim supply, and actually our interim supply looks the very same as the hon. Robin Campbell's interim supply. [interjections] Well, I've got these right here, and they look the same to me. They are the same in terms of content except for the number of months and the dollar amount.

So we're not here to present a budget, as I've said. That will be presented in the fall. We're here to extend the spending through the ministries. They have accountabilities. They have benchmarks. They have measures that they have to address. That is all within their ministries, and it's not expected to be in interim supply.

So, Madam Chair, the work that we're doing is what is necessary to bring forward, and when we do a budget, we'll be working on a budget. We have the time to come up with all of the answers that our hon. member is looking for, but those are not before us today, because that is not what we're presenting.

Thank you.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Chair, if I had misspoken, then it was the Government House Leader who had misspoken. I was quoting him with regard to three or four months. But the principle of the Government House Leader I still agree with, that when a government is asking for a large amount of money in interim supply, they should provide more detail. Now, the hon. Minister of Finance talks about the number of pages in this. I've never been a particularly big fan of the details that the PCs have ever brought forward in their financial documents, but if I'm not mistaken, their interim supply was closer to 75 pages not three.

Mr. McIver: Looking pretty good now, eh?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Don't get excited.

Madam Chair, I asked the minister five simple questions. How much money is the government spending? How much money will it collect? What will the deficit be? What will the debt be? What will the province's finances be? Now, I'm going to live in a pleasant dream world for a minute and pretend that I was the Finance minister.

Mr. McIver: That is a dream world.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Four years.

If I had taken over as the Finance minister, the very first thing I would do when I got to the office, after turning off the shredders, would have been to ask to see the books. I would see a bunch of numbers in black ink, and they would all add up to an expenditure figure at the bottom, and then there would be another ledger, and they would add up to a revenue figure at the bottom. Then there would be a nice little line drawn, and there'd be another number there, probably in red ink, and I would really be concerned about that number. Then I would ask the deputy minister of my department to tell me how much my new spending measures are going to cost in addition to that and what that is going to mean for the province's deficit.

Madam Chair, I believe that if the minister cannot answer one of these simple questions, then he is unprepared to meet this House. If the minister cannot answer one of these questions, then he is asking taxpayers to trust him with $18.6 billion in the form of a blank cheque. Current projections for revenue under the previous budget were at $44.8 billion and account for the second-highest revenue in the history of this province. This is despite the drop in oil prices and due to record personal and business tax revenues. In the year before this Alberta recorded the second-highest revenue in its history and also set record revenue levels the year before that. This government does not have a revenue problem. It has a spending problem. Before the government comes before this House and asks for one dime in new spending, it should first present a commitment to get its current expenditures under control.

One of the reasons that Albertans lost trust in the previous PC government was their frivolous treatment of taxpayers' dollars. The previous government regularly misspent, misappropriated, wasted, and at times came perilously close to the legal definition of stealing. Albertans knew that the government treated their money as their own private piggy bank. Albertans knew that far too often the previous government was willing to cut a blank cheque to any special-interest group in any department to make political concerns go away without any regard to the bottom line of Alberta's budget. They ran eight consecutive deficits and planned to run three more. They ran up $12 billion of debt and planned to run $6 billion more this year alone. In the last 10 years they ran up $49 billion of annual spending increases, far beyond the rates of inflation and population growth. We have in this province one of the biggest, most expensive governments in the country. It is time to get spending under control. This is not a time to give the government a preloaded gift card and send them to the West Edmonton Mall.

Now, we know that the government has a majority of NDP MLAs. But does the government have a majority in this House of MLAs willing to act irresponsibly, or will they do their duty as private members and require the proper scrutiny of the executive branch of the government? Let me remind the members opposite that if they are not in cabinet, they are still responsible for holding the cabinet accountable even if they are in the same party. They have a duty to ask questions and to hold the cabinet accountable in this Legislature and not with prewritten questions from the minister's office. If they abdicate that duty, they'll be little better than the government that came before them, who allowed the government to spend, to tax, and to borrow frivolously. I'm asking the minister my five basic and easy questions. I'm asking the private members opposite to do their duty and hold the executive branch of the government accountable with regard to how it intends to spend taxpayers' money.

We are on the mere second day of the actual proceedings of this Legislature, so let's start anew. Let's show Albertans that this is a new Legislature that they voted for and not a different shade of the last Legislature just run by another party. Let's all do our duty as custodians of the public purse and taxpayers' money.

I want to know: will the minister table a document detailing the information that we have requested very reasonably in this House before asking the House to pass it? If he will not table an answer to one of these questions, then I believe he is unprepared to meet the House. So let me ask them another way. I asked if he was able to answer every one of them. Can I ask the minister: can he answer even one of them?

Mr. Ceci: The answer is that the Fiscal Management Act requires that on June 30 we present the consolidated financials for this province. We'll be releasing that information prior to June 30 as is requested in the act. That document is before Treasury Board tonight, and then it is going to our Auditor General. I can tell you that from the perspective of the Ministry of Finance we are very, very satisfied with all of the financials in those documents, and I think the member and the previous government needs to be congratulated to a degree because there's some good news in those documents that you will find out on June 30.

The Chair: The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. The minister stated that their supply bill is based off the previous government's supply bill. Not that I am a particularly big fan of the previous government, but why don't you just introduce their budget?

Mr. Ceci: That's not our plan. Our plan is to move forward with our platform, that we campaigned on, and we are using the unpassed budget of March to build our interim supply bill on. So we're using that budget, that's not passed, and coming up with the numbers, extending through the first supply bill to ours. As I said, in the fall we will have our own budget before this House, and we will ask for support of that from all in this House.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Chair, if we concede that this government has absolutely no idea about the big financial picture for this fiscal year, then perhaps they can answer some questions on the government's interim supply bill on an interim basis. Will the Minister of Finance tell us what his interim finance policy is?

Mr. Ceci: I think that would be fairly clear. The policy that we have built this supply bill on is to look at the previous government's budget and to carry that through to this supply bill, with the addition of four areas that we campaigned on, that we said we were going to restore. So we're restoring the cuts that were proposed by the previous government and building on the previous budget to do that.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Chair, how much time do we have left?

The Chair: Thirty seconds.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Oh, I'd better make it good, then.

Madam Chair, it's been one of my great concerns, before being elected to this Legislature, with regard to the government's accounting policies. Two and a half years ago the former government repealed the Fiscal Responsibility Act and Government Accountability Act, that drastically weakened the reporting standards for budgets and quarterly updates for the government of Alberta. Can we expect the minister to improve upon this in the budget following interim supply?

The Chair: One moment, hon. Minister.

I didn't perhaps explain this at the beginning. You do get a full hour for the Official Opposition, but it's divided into 20-minute segments. So you can continue for the next 20 minutes if you choose, or another hon. member in your caucus can take the next 20-minute segment.

Mr. Ceci: Do you want me to answer that question?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yes, sir. You can if you want.

Mr. Ceci: I just need to remember what the question was, again. [interjections] Oh, the improve-on-process one. Yes. We are in discussions now at the ministry with regard to how we're going to bring forward reporting. I can tell you that there are some discussions amongst officials in my ministry and the Auditor General with respect to refining the reporting process. What was done quarterly may not be done quarterly in the future. We haven't landed on an actual process that we're happy with or that we're going forward with, but I can tell you that the way things were done in the past isn't necessarily the way we're going to do them going forward.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. Minister.

We'll continue with the next segment. Cypress-Medicine Hat, you're taking over the next segment?

Mr. Barnes: Yes, please, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Do you want to go back and forth again?

Mr. Barnes: I would like to go back and forth, please.

The Chair: All right. Continue. Go ahead.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to focus my questions in interim supply more on health care and infrastructure, but thanks to the hon. member for helping to set the stage as to where the government is at and what, you know, the state of Alberta is. My first two questions in question period focused around local decision-making, focused around the value that the taxpayer deserves for his hard-earned tax dollars.

Some points that I want to put on the floor right away are that since this experiment in centralization began in 2008 – health spending then was approximately $12 billion. Last year the previous government's estimates had our health spending, Alberta Health Services and Alberta Health combined, at over $18 billion. When I look at the numbers that are presented in your interim supply and what was in the three-month interim bill from before, $7.75 billion plus the $5.25 billion in the earlier one show $13 billion for eight months. An incredible $19.5 billion we're now at for health care in a province of 4.3 million people.

It's also scary because it doesn't include the infrastructure part of health care. If my recollection is right, how the government used to do it was that infrastructure spending for health care was in the Infrastructure budget, while infrastructure spending for education was in the Education budget. So we have some areas there that I would like to go over. Again, we're looking at what in Canada now is the second-highest per capita spending of all provinces, behind only Newfoundland and Labrador: many, many instances where the outcomes don't match the amount of money going in.

In the three years that I've been the MLA for Cypress-Medicine Hat, the stories I've heard, you know, make you shake your head. Easily the number one complaint in my constituency association office is people that have just been to Great Falls or Kalispell, just spent $15,000 or $17,000 to get a shoulder fixed, just spent $23,000 to $29,000 to get a knee or a hip done because they didn't have access to our system. Also, the centralization, not being able to see somebody in our area, has contributed to that problem.

I remember good work by the opposition a year or so ago, discovering a warehouse of computers, $30 million, that sat there for a year and a half unused, unallocated because of centralization. I heard stories of local hard-working front-line workers. When they need a little thing of glue, a whole case comes out of Edmonton; the rest gets thrown away. In Medicine Hat when you can't get out of the parkade because the parking arm is broken, six hours later someone comes from Red Deer and fixes it. Or how about the $800,000 piece of equipment that arrives unexpected – no one's trained for it – and sits in the corner? These are the things that local decision-making can improve, and doing so would improve the morale of our hard-working front-line staff, our professionals and give the quality of service that smaller urban municipalities and our rural municipalities so deserve and so need.

My first question to the government is: of this 7 and three-quarter billion dollars that's allocated for the next few months, is any of it to make our system more responsive? Is any of it to give our system more local decision-making?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Thank you to the hon. member for raising a number of points in his introduction to what I hope is our 20-minute banter. It's an honour and a privilege to rise on the interim supply estimates currently before the House and to have an opportunity to ensure that Albertans will continue to access the health care services they need and deserve.

In the weeks and months ahead our government is committed to fulfilling what Albertans told us during the election was important to them. This includes restoring stability in the health system, focusing on patients, opening new long-term care beds, using hospital space that sits empty to serve patients better, and reducing wait times. Interim supply estimates that are currently before the House will help us accomplish this and more, with these additional dollars reversing the previous government's cuts to front-line health services. I think the hon. member will be happy to hear that. This additional money will ensure stable, predictable funding for acute care in our hospitals. It also puts in place the necessary resources to meet Alberta's growing population.

Interim supply estimates include, as the hon. member mentioned, $7.8 billion for Health to cover expenditures from July 1 to November 30 if need be. This adds an extra $500 million over what the previous government allocated for Health in its proposed budget and subsequent interim supply bill. This additional money will restore $160 million in previous government cuts to the health care system. The remaining money will ensure that the health system can meet the demand of the population growth. Just like we have 12,000 new Alberta students who need teachers, we'll have close to 70,000 new Albertans who need front-line health care workers like physicians, nurses, and health care aides.

Madam Chair, there is no doubt that Albertans would have been negatively impacted by the cuts proposed by the previous government's budget. Staff would have been laid off, and much-needed front-line care would have suffered. With these additional dollars our government has taken the steps necessary to ensure that money is there to cover things like volume increases for the increasing number of people moving to Alberta, who need health services, more babies being born in our province, more seniors, those with chronic disease needing care, and the escalating costs of drugs that are so very needed by Albertans. The bottom line is that our government is taking action to ensure that Albertans receive the timely care that they need and that they deserve.

Our Premier has been very clear that stability and protecting public health care are our highest priorities. We're meeting that commitment. We're committed to ensuring that the services families depend on are protected, including those affecting seniors and the health care system. In other words, our government is putting Alberta's health care as our first priority through this bill. Universal, accessible, high-quality health care must be there for Albertans when they need it. We know that this is only a first step, that more does need to be done, and more will be done.

Madam Chair, this doesn't mean that our efforts to find efficiencies and savings will stop. Alberta Health Services will continue to look for ways to deliver health services more efficiently and will continue to do analysis of all health spending, including past experiments in privatization, as we put together a new budget for the fall. In the coming months we'll be developing a new health budget that, line by line, will be centred on the health needs of Albertans and Alberta families, and it will include much-needed investments in home care and long-term care, which will include stable and predictable funding for our overall health care system.

Madam Chair, each and every one of us needs the health system at some point in our lives. When we have family or a friend or a loved one who is in need of medical attention, we want assurance that the health system will be there for them, and it's clearly not acceptable to put their lives at risk through reckless spending cuts. We need to make sure our hospitals, clinics, and health programs have the resources they need to meet the demands of a growing population. Albertans know there's nothing more important than the care of their loved ones, and on May 5 Albertans elected a government that's committed to ensuring that public health care is protected and strengthened.

I look forward to working with all members of this House to find ways that we can be more efficient, but in terms of the expediency of this bill we need to make sure that we can move forward and continue to plan for the growth that we have, to ensure that Alberta's health care is stable and available in the time to come. So I urge all hon. members to vote in support of stable health care for Albertans. Vote in support of Bill 2.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Minister. Thank you, Madam Chair. I've talked to several stakeholders that tell me that one of the quick ways to make our health system more responsive, better for the patient, more efficient for cost is if we can do something to improve our electronic health records and the interface between the physician, the patient, and the specialist. I'm also told that one great big system, more centralization wouldn't be the best compared to smaller systems. Is any of this $7.75 billion headed in that direction?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question. These are the types of conversations I hope that we have an opportunity to explore in the months ahead and work collaboratively on. This, as I mentioned, is really about restoring the $160 million, that was proposed cuts, as well as making sure that there is money for the 70,000 new patients. It isn't really about investing in new technology or systems in that way. There might be opportunities to explore that as we move forward, but this is making sure that there is an allocation so we can continue to plan for growth.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you again.

One of the freedom of information requests that our great staff got for us a short time ago was: 110,000 employees at Alberta Health Services; 9,600 of them are making over $100,000. Is this $160 million – was that the number? – going back into the system? Is any of that $7.75 billion going to hire more high-level bureaucrats?

Ms Hoffman: Thanks for the question. Of course, the focus is on making sure that we have front-level service providers. Just like in education the money's intended focus is around making sure that there are teachers, education assistants, and custodians, in health care our intention is to make sure that we have front-line service providers, so physicians, EMTs. We know that there are a number of different initiatives. The wait times that we've had for ambulances are something that needs to be addressed. This is about adding front-line capacity to meet the proposed 70,000 Albertans who will be coming here. I think that's roughly the size of Red Deer. We want to make sure that there are front-line service providers to meet their needs.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you.

Again, in the last Legislature it was discovered time and time again, the neglect that some of our important infrastructure is in. Is any of this money going to fix the Misericordia hospital, which is long overdue?

Ms Hoffman: Of course, capital projects are something that the Minister of Infrastructure – I was looking to see if maybe he wanted to jump up – and then, in my case, the Minister of Health work on together, collaboratively. In terms of this plan we haven't got massive financial commitments in terms of infrastructure. This is about making sure that we continue on with the interim supply that was passed previously, with the additions to Health. Health isn't the budget line item that houses the big infrastructure projects. We do have some money for some essential supplies and those types of things, maybe equipment, but the money for brand new construction and major modernizations will be something that will be well debated in the fall budget should there be an increase to fund some of those initiatives. So this is operational.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Thank you.

I talked to a number of stakeholders, and absolutely we have one of the most fantastic acute-health systems in the whole world. Thanks to all our hard workers for that. But the amount of money around prevention, mental health, managing chronic conditions: has your government pinpointed more of this important, hard-earned taxpayers' money towards prevention, towards managing chronic conditions and mental health issues?

Ms Hoffman: Thanks for the question. In the platform mental health was definitely one of the key pillars. In terms of being able to do something under the current financial structure that we have, we've reached across the aisle and asked the Member for Calgary-Mountain View to help evaluate and work with us in terms of large-scale recommendations moving forward in terms of systems.

In terms of immediate action there are the naloxone kits that are being distributed throughout the province. Really, when I think of naloxone – and it relates to mental health because it's addictions related – it's basically for somebody who's in a situation where they might be overdosing. It's the equivalent of an EpiPen for somebody who is having a chronic attack, an allergic reaction. So it's really about having those life-saving resources on the front lines.

Then, of course, once we save countless lives – well, not countless; we'll count them – with those resources, we'll be able to make sure that the mental health patients, for the most part, who are suffering from addictions have resources down the way through the review so that we can continue to expand service for them.

Mental health and home care – I think it was mentioned – are definitely pillars in our platform and components where we look forward to bringing about more robust change as we move to having a real budget, a whole budget. This is about day-to-day operations. I wish it could meet the desired outcomes for everyone in a very immediate fashion, but this is really about making sure that we can continue to provide the services we have today with the ability to expand for growth in the fall.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you.

I believe you announced $30 million for home care this year and $60 million in years going forward. Very commendable, a very, very good idea. Of course, our party, the Wildrose, had $50 million in our campaign promises for home care, that we thought was important. Is $30 million going into home care from these interim supply estimates? One of the concerns I hear about: although Albertans think it's a very good idea, they want to know that the proper level of service is met for the recipients. Is that part of this issue? Is $30 million from here going to home care?

Ms Hoffman: Thanks for the opportunity to provide a little clarity around my remarks. What I was asked about is whether we're committed to fulfilling that platform piece. In the platform we talked about how those were steps that we were planning on rolling out. These will definitely be components that we'll be able to hold onto in the fall budget, when we actually have an opportunity to look at it more fulsomely. There will be components for growth in home care, just like the allocation for 70,000 new patients is being worked into the budget. That's how we're going to get some of that home-care money out immediately and, hopefully, to a variety of regions throughout the province so that we can support the people in need of supports in their home, where they live, rather than having them relocate. The component around the growth is where the timely home-care piece will come from, and then in the fall we'll be able to talk specifically about line items as they relate to home care.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you. A wonderful idea.

The last government was going to put the Calgary cancer centre at the south campus. The Premier said the Foothills and apparently has changed her mind. Is any of this money, is any of this interim supply that we're voting on looking at the value, the cost-benefit analysis, as to exactly where this should go for the citizens of Calgary, who have been waiting too long for this?

Ms Hoffman: A reporter asked me earlier today when we should expect an announcement on the Calgary cancer facility, and I said: 10 years ago. I think we'd agree on that. The Premier did say during the election campaign that the Foothills was the desired location. For the most part, we think that's probably still the best location, but I think we owe it to Calgarians and to all Alberta taxpayers to make sure that we review the evidence and that it aligns with our goals for Calgary and consulting with Calgarians.

The number of cancer patient advocates as well as cancer physicians who've reached out to help us make sure we have the best evidence to make this decision as we move forward has been amazing. I've had the opportunity to visit the current Tom Baker and see first-hand what they're doing with a less than ideal space that they're operating under. They don't just serve Calgarians. They serve Albertans and a number of people from other neighbouring provinces and territories as well. This, of course, will be a priority, and I look forward to working with my colleague the hon. Minister of Infrastructure to be able to bring something forth in the fall budget. Again, this is operational focus, so we don't have money in this budget around capital announcements. This is about making sure that we can continue to plan for the growth that we have going forward.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you.

In addition to the needs in Calgary and the needs in the Misericordia hospital here in Edmonton, the Wainwright hospital is in serious concern of having a problem and maybe patients having to be relocated. Fort McMurray, Northern Lights, and Boyle were other communities that I remember off the top that had similar issues. You've already said that none of this is for capital. Is part of this money in the interim supply for maintenance, and is any of this for an allowance in case, heaven forbid, something very, very serious happens and temporary places have to be looked at? Are there any contingency plans for that kind of thing for our rural communities, which have just as great a need but maybe are not as well known?

Ms Hoffman: I really appreciate the question. In terms of capital investment there's $32.5 million for capital investment and $27.7 million for financial transactions. That's actually capital investment going towards equipment specifically to treat cancer, so it doesn't look to me like it's specifically around additional deferred maintenance. Whatever the deferred maintenance allocation would have been in the proposed budget back in the spring, this $500 million is a top-up to basically grow those line items in the interim by their relative percentage.

It wouldn't likely be sufficient to address all deferred maintenance throughout the province. This is a problem that's been building for decades and that we're not going to be able to solve overnight, but there will be additional resources going out to facilities to be able to do minor upgrades and some basic operational infrastructure maintenance in the next four to five months. Hopefully, we'll be able to work collaboratively on bringing forward a capital plan that will, through the sunshine list, meet the needs of all communities throughout the province. It's not going to be easy.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you again. I appreciate all your answers and your willingness to answer.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

We now enter into the final 20-minute segment for the Official Opposition. The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Do you wish to continue back and forth?

Mr. Strankman: Yes. If I could, I'd like to continue with the back and forth.

The Chair: All right.

Mr. Strankman: I have several ministers that I'd like to question. Primarily, it relates to my Agriculture and Forestry shadow portfolio. It's somewhat of a situation, Madam Chair, like déjà vu for myself and, I'm sure, the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to be debating the interim supply estimates here because we did that in the spring thanks to the management skills of the now third party. We're going to do the best we can.

I'd like to direct some of my first questions to the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry. I see that under the previous interim supply estimates bill, Bill 18, which I'll refer to as interim supply version 1.0, the amount was approximately $180 million. That was for what I understand to be an approximately three-month period. Going forward, version 2.0 has the indication from several of the ministers to be a five-month period, but the amount of the funding in 2.0 for Agriculture and Forestry, to my understanding, is $340 million. Could the minister please correct me on that if my math is inaccurate?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you for the comments as well. The approved operating expense, interim supply, for April to June was $221.899 million. The July to November submission is for an additional $336.121 million, which brings the total 2015-2016 interim supply to $558.020 million. This reflects almost 77 per cent of the published operating budget.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you for that going forward.

In the old interim budget $586 million was the budget allocation totally for 2012-13, but $707 million was the amount for '13-14, and $704 million was the amount for '14-15. I was just wondering if you could tell me: are you expecting these levels to stay the same as we reach the total budget going forward?

Mr. Carlier: Madam Chair, interim supply amounts were calculated using historical spending patterns, scheduled major grant payments, and cash spending profiles of capital budgets. All the listed amounts include spending associated.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Minister. It's well appreciated.

Madam Chair, I want to go through it somewhat line by line going forward here because I'm trying to get a sense for how the portfolio is going to be managed. It was not even mentioned in the budget. I believe from our conversations that we would both agree that agriculture is an important portfolio for the province. I'd like to talk about section 2 there, and this is from the previous Bill 18, interim supply, and the supply estimates previous to that, where we talk about economics and competitiveness, international marketing, and market attraction. Could you give me some information in regard to proper funding for that? We've had our discussions in regard to, for example, Mr. Minister, the Rahr malt plant at Alix. Will there be any funding to allow for those types of developments to go forward?

Mr. Carlier: Madam Chair, a lot of those details I think have yet to be worked out. I haven't been briefed on a lot of the questions you have, but I will endeavour to find those answers to your questions as soon as I can.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again.

A similar question to that. Under agriculture and innovation it has a line item there: budget funding for agriculture environment and water. I understand that to be the issue with the Rahr malt plant. Have you had any chance to learn about that and what funding might be available for them for that situation?

Mr. Carlier: I have not. I haven't that in front of me, but I've been briefed on that. Again, I can come up with those numbers, you know, at a later date and give you a better, a more fulsome answer to that.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks again.

Madam Chair, I'd like to continue on to item 4, food safety, animal health and welfare. Food chain traceability is an important thing, and the amount that I saw in the recent supply estimates was actually down from $6.5 million to $5.2 million. I understand that to be an important concern. You see some of the marketing things going forward with food suppliers in the province. Can the minister give us some understanding of whether that funding will be continued or increased or decreased? I mean, we're debating an $18 billion budget here, and it's significant to try and understand what sort of a trend might be coming forth.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you. There is a lot of, you know, consideration on the different aspects of your question. Again, I do apologize; I have none of those figures in front of me. I haven't had the opportunity to consult with my colleagues in cabinet, but I will endeavour to get those for you.

Mr. Strankman: Well, I too, sir, am looking forward to that. I understand, Mr. Minister, you have a stakeholders' meeting coming forward in the very near future, that I think is extremely important for industry.

Going forward, industry development, $2.61 million in '14 and '15: can we expect that trend to continue for rural development? After we spoke recently about our mutual desire to diversify agriculture, at least in my opinion, can you give us sort of an indication of what that trend may be?

Mr. Carlier: Madam Chair, rural development continues to be, you know, an important aspect of the Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry. We're looking at not decreasing any funding for rural development, whether it be agricultural societies to 4-H or whatever that might be. Again, no solid numbers, but I'm looking to get that for you.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks again. I'm just trying to, as I keep saying, get a trend because as you well know, Mr. Minister, this is recorded in Hansard.

Mr. Minister, with the potential of a 50-year drought coming up in the province, have you given any consideration to the funding available under agriculture insurance and lending assistance? Even going forward, several of us have had in our constituencies issues with wildlife damage and the management of that. That, too, is interrelated to ESRD, but there's a certain component that does relate to agriculturalists.

Mr. Carlier: A couple of issues there. I think one was on the drought. You know, it's continuing to be dry conditions in the province. There has been and still continues to be the crop insurance program with Agriculture Financial Services Corporation. There are systems in place, that have existed in the past, for helping farmers and producers with issues when there is going to be drought. We all pray for rain. Hopefully, that will alleviate a lot of our issues.

The other on the wildlife. My understanding is that there are currently programs in place for compensation when, for instance, people lose livestock when there's predation happening and that kind of thing. That will most certainly continue.

Mr. Strankman: That's not what I was driving for, Mr. Minister. AFSC has crop insurance policies that relate to crop damage, et cetera, et cetera, from wildlife. In some areas it's becoming very onerous, the influx of animals, the ungulates like elk and such. I was wondering if you have given any consideration to that going forward in your portfolio.

Mr. Carlier: The AFSC does have insurance programs that are available to farmers. I understand that the seed producers, the people that plant, you know, wheat, canola, et cetera, are close to about 75 per cent insured. So I believe the program is robust and continues. My understanding just as of today is that there are some producers that are not going to qualify for some of this insurance because of their small size. As well, for instance, farmers in the Hutterite colonies don't take part in the insurance programs. Otherwise, my understanding is that the program is robust and operating as it should.

Mr. Strankman: I'd have to disagree with the minister on that, and we'll discuss that at a later date.

The other thing I have here is the livestock and meat strategy, sometimes known as ALMA. Can you give me any idea of the direction of the mandate of that part of your portfolio? There's a significant number of dollars that are spent in that. I was just wondering, with our time of somewhat fiscal restraint, if that might be reduced or managed differently.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you for that. ALMA's total 2015-2016 budget has been reduced by $4.8 million, to $32.3 million. This year's ALMA budget has more than $32 million to help support projects focused on research and innovation, industry development, and enhancing food safety. Since January 2009 ALMA has provided more than $190 million for projects that enhance and support our livestock industry, with a total projected value of nearly $781 million.

Mr. Strankman: The point I was trying to make, Mr. Minister, was that that fund, in some people's eyes, is controversial. I was wondering if you've given that any consideration or will be reviewing the direction of the funds that are allocated to that organization.

Mr. Carlier: You know, I have talked to some stakeholders as well as some producers. This is the first opportunity I've heard any criticism of the project, but I think it's worth pursuing. As the Speaker himself alluded to, there is an opportunity to speak to stakeholders even later this month. So I think that dialogue will continue, but for now the ALMA program has had their budget reduced.

Mr. Strankman: To a somewhat unfamiliar field but somewhat relating to agriculture. In our old budgets and estimates I see where there is approximately some $42 million allocated for the expenditures relating to forestry. I was wondering if the minister has any new and innovative ideas going forward there. I have some questions that I'll be bringing forward at a later date in that regard, but I was wondering if he has any ideas about whether that's sufficient or needs to be adjudicated, too. There are issues with such a thing as pine beetle and those sorts of things going forward. Or do you feel that that sort of an influx would fall under the purview of, potentially, Environment?

Mr. Carlier: Madam Chair, I suppose there is a lot of overlap with Environment and with Forestry, but the Forestry operating budget includes, for instance, the fight back against mountain pine beetle. The operating budget of Forestry is a set amount. Anticipating perhaps another question, then we're asking for emergency funds to fight the actual forest fires, the wildfires, which we've had an abundance of this year.

Mr. Strankman: That's what some of my questions will lead to later on.

My next question is to the Minister of Finance. It may possibly be more of a statement. I know, being a Calgary resident, where I'm a rural resident, having lived my whole life six miles from what some people describe as a social experiment called Saskatchewan . . .

Mr. Mason: It is now.

Mr. Strankman: It's, well, better than it has been for the last 60-plus years, Minister of Infrastructure.

The question I wanted to ask was that they made comment in regard to keeping the trains running. I was wondering if that would pertain to something that might be in the jurisdiction of Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Ceci: No. It was a metaphor that I was using to say that government needs this appropriation to keep providing the services that it is providing now to the citizens of Alberta, which they rely on and which need to keep happening.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the clarification.

My next comment is to the Minister of Health. She made a comment, and I'd just like to ask for clarification. She talked at some point in her answer there about acute-care beds, and that has been a gigantic issue for my constituents in the village of Consort, where the previous Minister of Health in 2011 actually promised the reinstatement of those acute-care beds. I was wondering if some of your comments would relate to rural health care issues like the situation in Consort.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, hon. member, for the question. For those who are curious at all, I actually spent three years of my life living in the same small community just six kilometres from the border as well, so it's nice to have a neighbour in the House. I was about one to three, I think, during that time, so I don't remember a lot of the details around access to the Consort hospital.

Part of what we're doing, of course, is looking at where there's existing space, where there are needs, in particular, for long-term care patients to have access to long-term care spaces and a way that might create opportunities for us to move forward in an efficient way with our commitment to the 2,000 new long-term care beds as well as freeing up some acute-care space down the road. I look forward to learning more, and when we discuss the rural health review, I am sure that'll be one of the pieces that we mention.

Since I've got the opportunity, I just wanted to add one thing. When I spoke earlier about the $32.5 million for capital investment, I'd talked about the cancer treatment. It also includes some funding for information technology as well as medical equipment replacement. My apologies for not adding that to the record. Glad to have the opportunity to do it now.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks. I certainly appreciate it.

My next comment is to the Minister of Education. We've spent some time in the Chamber, too. I haven't heard a specific comment – certainly, to these estimates I know we're using broad strokes – but I'd just like to make confirmation with the minister that he's aware of remote, rural school funding and the difficulty that they have with the fuel costs, the disparity in those areas.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you so much for the opportunity to speak on this issue. We know that there are extraordinary costs associated with small-centre schools and, truly, rural schools as well. We would like to address that more fully as we move through the fall. I have had discussions already, though, with people, school board trustees from the PSBAA, describing to me the fuel concerns that they have and troubles getting the leases for people to take the contracts for busing. I am going to continue meeting with them this summer to look for a way to make sure that subsidy is in place so that the rural bus contracts can be met.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you to the minister for that. His experience here does tend to lead to that, but because of the short time that we have for this vast amount of money, it's important to get some of these comments, in my opinion, at least on the record.

My next comment is to the Minister of Transportation. I know that he's fully aware of some of the issues in the rural areas. I was just wondering if you could give us any idea of what funding allocations, if any, might be available for rural bridge construction and maintenance going forward.

Mr. Mason: I'll get the hon. member the answer to that question.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

That concludes the first hour of our discussion, and we now move into the next 20 minutes, where the members of the third party can engage in a dialogue with the minister.

Do you wish to do a back and forth as well?

Mr. McIver: Madam Chair, can I share my time with some of my colleagues in the caucus?

The Chair: You can do it that way.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Then we'll go back and forth if that suits you.

The Chair: All right. Sure.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I have a number of questions here. A lot of questions have been asked, and not that many have been answered, but we'll carry on. Some of the questions that I would like to know in the estimates – and I've got quite a shopping list, so I'll try not to say it too fast. How much in the estimates is to go toward flood mitigation, the Calgary cancer centre, the Calgary southwest portion of the ring road, the completion of highway 63, road repairs and maintenance, the twinning of highway 2, the schools committed to? How much is coming in and out the heritage fund, different than what was previously budgeted? As well, any changes to seniors' facilities? That's quite a shopping list, but the bad news is that I'm not done.

While I was listening to the previous questions and answers – and I'll try not to repeat them because if you didn't answer before, I'm guessing you're not going to answer now. Just a wild guess. But I did hear in several of the answers from the ministers, Madam Chair, references to the NDP platform. So I looked it up, and I have it on my screen. One of the promises in the NDP platform is to create a women's ministry. I don't see a separate ministerial line item here, and there's very limited information for that. So if you could explain where that is because that's one of the promises. I'm wondering where the funding for it is.

Again, trying to be sensitive to the time of the House and, most particularly, to my colleagues and caucus that have a lot more questions, at some point, preferably today, but I've got a pretty strong – I will read you 5.3. “We will create a Women's Ministry to lead initiatives for greater gender equality in Alberta.” I certainly don't see that ministry listed here. So I think that's a fair question. I would say that if you go through your platform, which I hope you have memorized – I apologize. I haven't got it quite memorized. You have line items. That one I just gave you is 5.3. All of the itemized numbers – 1.1, 1.2, all the way up to the end – if you could cost those out for us here in the Legislative Assembly, I think that would be appropriate, particularly since a lot of the answers that I heard from your ministers were: we're focusing on the stuff in the platform. So because you're focusing on that, I'm guessing you have those numbers at your fingertips.

Ms Hoffman: I'm going to start with responding to the last couple of questions and then pass the response to my colleagues on the first ones. We'll start with the last. In the terms of the ministry responsible for the status of women we absolutely have created that area. There is not a deputy minister for it. The amazing minister who has that under her responsibilities is the minister responsible for environment, and that's something that's she's taken under her responsibilities now and will for who knows how long. That's something that she continues to do, but there isn't a separately funded line item for it because it's work that's happening through her office currently. There isn't an additional cost right now.

In terms of the platform this is the four-year road map, and there are a number of immediate steps that we're taking. When the fall budget comes up, you'll be able to see a direct reference to a number of the commitments and how the progress is on the road map that we're taking in the first year. Reversing the cuts was how I referenced the platform, and definitely it was something that we heard loud and clear through stakeholder engagement and through the voting process. It's around reversing the cuts that were impending in the past budget. These are the four areas that we're doing that in through interim supply.

Mr. Ceci: Regrettably, I can't provide answers to all the questions on spending lines that you asked previously. We really just did take these government estimates, divide by 12, and multiply by five. We have five months of spending in here that were estimated back in March, and we've added four things into it. That's how we came up with the continuation that's in all of these line ministries that are here before you.

Mr. Mason: I want to respond as well, if I can.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Well, I just wanted to supplement what the Minister of Health and the Minister of Finance have said and just indicate that this interim supply with four specific exceptions is based on the interim supply and the budget that was prepared by the outgoing government. I would think that the hon. leader of the third party would have an intimate understanding of what is in this budget. However, having said that, I will endeavour to get him specific answers to the list of line items that he has requested. But, hon. member, to be really clear, this is still your budget.

Mr. McIver: I thank you for that. If I wasn't paying attention, I apologize, but to me, that is the clearest way that's been said, that this is the previous budget divided by 12 and multiplied by five.

Mr. Mason: Plus four items.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Plus four items.

I'm not sure, Madam Chair, that that's been said out loud before, so I thank the minister for sharing that with the House. Sometimes when you pry at the edge, the top pops off eventually, and that was one of those moments, so I'm grateful for that. I have a lot more questions, but my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway has some, and I would like to yield some time to him.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I, too, would like to go back and forth with just very brief, quick questions. First of all, I will point out the fact that this is a rather slim document. The last interim supply document was 72 pages, and that's a heck of a lot more than what we have here today.

An Hon. Member: That's efficiency.

Mr. Bhullar: Yeah. In terms of efficiencies, sir, I don't think so. We had line-by-line items with prices attached.

Secondly, I do remember members opposite, that now occupy the front bench, complaining constantly about the lack of time that we had to debate some things. You know, some things change, Madam Chair, but they don't really change. I just find that rather amusing.

Ms Hoffman: Would you like us to respond to that?

Mr. Bhullar: No, I wouldn't like you to respond because we have many other questions, the first of which is that you say that this is the previous budget, essentially taking us until the end of November. However, you have added money back into specific departments. That money was taken out of some departments to make sure that we bend the curve on spending. You are adding that money back. The largest cost pressures on government are salary negotiations. Are you then telling departments and telling unions that all bets are off and that they can come to the table looking for 4, 5, 6 per cent raises once again because the government is open to spend more and more and more?

Mr. Ceci: To the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway: no, we're not telling any labour groups anything like that. What we are doing is sticking to negotiated agreements, and we're sticking to them where the previous government didn't stick to them with regard to opted-out employees. So we are supporting the agreements that were made with opted-out employees. As far as the other negotiations coming forward in due course, when they come forward, we'll negotiate with them. But for the time being there's nothing that's in this interim supply that is any different except the agreement to address the opted-out employees' contracts, and that money is being found within the CHR department, the human resource department. So we're good on that basis, and we're not changing things, and we don't have to because we're not negotiating right now.

Mr. Bhullar: Madam Chair, I'd like to point out to the minister that in any given year about 20 per cent of the government and the government's partners' contracts come up for renewal. So by reinstating a whole heck of a lot of money, what you're essentially doing for 20 per cent of contracts, that are coming up for renewal this year and next year, is that you're saying that the government is in the money again. The government is in the money again. We've got money to spend, and we're not going to hold the line on spending as we have been.

But moving forward to other questions. I am going to start with some specifics if we can get short, quick answers back and forth, starting with the Minister of Agriculture. The capital project for water projects was reduced by $2 million in the last budget. Is that still being reduced by $2 million, or has that been beefed up here?

Mr. Carlier: Madam Chair, again, I don't have those exact figures in front of me, you know, in terms of the supply plan going forward. I don't have those details. Sorry.

Mr. Bhullar: I hope the minister will be able to provide us with the details.

Next, moving on to the Ministry of Education. There are $671 million in capital investments. How many schools does the minister have under construction today? What stage are they at? What are the completion dates? Will the phase 3 schools that were being expedited to be open at the end of 2016 be funded in this interim supply?

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you for the question. Certainly, as we've distilled a more elegant way of describing the budget, the hon. member can certainly see that we are using the same schedule for building schools. The three phases, as I've kind of divided them up in a working way to my department: the Stelmach phase, the Redford phase, and then the Prentice phase; one, two, and three. We have not seen any deferments towards the schools up to this point, and certainly we are moving ahead aggressively on the same timetable as the previous government.

Thank you.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much. Minister, if you could just provide me with specifics. If you don't have it at your fingertips, that's fine.

Mr. Eggen: It's on the website as well.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you.

Next, to the Minister of Energy. In the last estimates there was $33 million in financial transactions. I'd like to know what happened to those.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Could you be more specific? I'm not sure which ones you're referring to.

Mr. Bhullar: There's expenses, there's capital investments, and then there's financial transactions. These are essentially payments that come out, payments that go out, collected in a variety of different ways. You had $33 million worth of these in the previous estimates. You don't have those now. So I would ask you to provide us with the details of that at your next available opportunity.

I'm going to move on here to Environment and Parks. Is there money for the Springbank flood mitigation project? I've recently learned that perhaps your party is reconsidering this compared to what you said in the election.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you for the question. On the subject of flood mitigation we continue to review our options. I'm pleased to share with the member, as Minister Bilous has, that we are reviewing all of our options. We are also reviewing our election commitment to the McLean Creek project because we want to make sure that we have all of the information before we proceed with this very large piece of public infrastructure and public investment.

Madam Chair, these are decisions on the order of hundreds of millions of dollars, as the member well knows, so that's why we're taking the time to review our options with respect to McLean Creek, Springbank, and other flood mitigation options. As I understand it, for interim supply these allocations are for ongoing operations in the department.

The Chair: Just as a reminder, hon. members, we don't refer to others by their name.

The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much. Minister, they're there for the operations of the department as well as capital and expenditures. But I guess I'll take that as: there is no new money for it, so the money that we had committed for it is still in the budget. That's great to know because it's a good project.

To the Minister of Health: how much is currently allocated in your capital investments budget for the cancer clinic, and where do you suspect you'll be able to find potentially anywhere from 800 million to 1.2 billion additional dollars to locate the project at the Foothills site?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you to the member for the question. I wanted to add that I think I misspoke. There is some allocation for the ministry responsible for the status of women, I believe, housed in Human Services. Back to that.

The work around the capital projects, I'm really thrilled to say, is not actually in the Health ministry budget, I don't believe. I believe that the major capital announcements, the line item, is in the Infrastructure budget. So right now Infrastructure hasn't had any additional funding allocated to it. This is, like I said, the interim supply just to get us through until the fall, so there isn't an additional allocation in this budget around where that cancer facility would be located. My understanding is that major infrastructure announcements like that – maybe you can help me understand this process – are in the Infrastructure minister's budget, actually, not the Health minister's budget.

Mr. Bhullar: Major project funding, Minister, through the chair, can be in the Infrastructure budget; however, the policy rests with the Ministry of Health.

There were dollars allocated to emergency room expansion. These are much-needed projects. I believe there were five of them across the province. These projects really cannot wait four to five months. They need to get started immediately. I can speak of the Peter Lougheed alone. It is bursting at the seams, a very important project. Will this project have to wait until the end of November to see progress, or is the money in here so we can continue to make this happen?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my understanding that it is in here. If I'm wrong on that, I will get back to you in writing in short order. My understanding is that those are the types of projects, doing the divided by 12 times five, that are allocated in this current budget. If I'm wrong, I will respond in writing.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much.

Through the chair, to the Minister of Human Services. Given that the economy is slowing down and perhaps some of the economic policies of your government could cause the economy to slow even further, which means greater case demand on your department and Alberta Works, how many additional resources – I mean, for these next four or five months, if you're saying that you've kept the budget the same, how do you plan on meeting additional caseloads if you have not allocated any more dollars in the budget?

I think this is the first time you're going to be standing up in the House, so congratulations as well.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you, Member for Calgary-Greenway, for providing me with this opportunity. Finally, somebody asked a question toward a very important ministry.

The budget allocation. There will be an increase, and that increase will be around $39 million. That will be used to provide and maintain and enhance the services which are already existing.

The other thing I want to clarify. The Member for Calgary-Hays asked about the women's ministry. There is an allocation within that increase that Human Services is getting, and we will be allocating $1 million, as promised in our campaign, to that ministry. The minister responsible for the status of women will be rolling out the priorities, how that will be used, but I can tell the House that money in that ministry will be used to enhance gender equality, to promote that research, and programs directed at the betterment of women.

Thank you.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Minister.

I would like to know: of that $39 million increase, how much is to address, quote, unquote, the cutback, and how much of it is for caseload? If you could provide that information for me.

The last question is to the Minister of Seniors. The ASLI program, a very important announcement: seniors need these beds. We can't wait four months. Is the money going to be forwarded to ensure that seniors' homes are constructed in Alberta before the end of November? We need to start these projects immediately.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Our time has expired for the questions by the third party. We now enter the next 20 minutes, where members of any other party represented in the Assembly or independent members may speak.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. Based on mutual agreement amongst the three of us, I understand that we have 20 minutes, and I will take nine of those minutes. I will cede some time to the Member for Calgary-Bow and also the Member for Calgary-Varsity to follow on.

I understand that the government needs to get it right when tabling their first budget. I also understand that the objective of interim supply is to keep the lights on. Of course, I would appreciate, as other members have said previously, that we would get a more detailed breakdown of where the money is being spent. Accountability, of course, and transparency we would hope would be hallmarks of this government.

I will adopt a particular focus in the first part of my comments and questions and appreciate some back and forth with the ministers and then will ask some more general questions, and I will focus on flood in particular. There is a $7.2 million allocation, I understand, from the previous budget, in Aboriginal Relations related to flood in particular. Through the chair, to the minister responsible for Aboriginal Relations: is this a cost-sharing program with the federal government? Do you know what specifically those dollars will be spent on and what the outcome of those will be?

Ms Ganley: Thank you for the question. I don't seem to have those exact figures in the numbers before me, particularly in terms of what the federal government contributed because those didn't go into interim supply, but I will get back to you with those.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Minister.

Through the chair, then, to the Minister of Education. I'm curious. There's, again, another similar amount of money, in fact, $7.2 million in funding, which I assume and believe would be related to the repair or rebuild of schools, in particular Elbow Park school in the fantastic constituency of Calgary-Elbow. Can you confirm that that funding is, in fact, in place for the rebuild of Elbow Park school?

Mr. Eggen: Yes. I appreciate the question, and it's very nice to see the member up and running. We certainly will do so. There's a listing on the website already, the different phases of both renovations and construction, where you can look at those as well. We've not changed any of the timelines by which we would undergo either renovations or, in this case, restoration, but if there is an exception to that, I will endeavour to get you that information immediately.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Minister.

Moving on, then, to obviously a significant one, the Minister of Environment and Parks. There is a significant budget allocation for flood mitigation. My question will be similar but perhaps a different take than the Member for Calgary-Greenway. I understand that you are still reviewing, and I just want to state for the record and before the House how much I appreciate your spending time with me this morning to bring me up to speed on where you are with that project, with the Springbank project, with McLean Creek, with flood mitigation in general, and also to ask for my input. I very much appreciate your taking that very open and collaborative approach. My question is: how much of that money do you anticipate spending this year? Do you anticipate moving forward with a project of some kind in this budget year?

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you for the question. It was indeed a pleasure to have a meeting this morning to discuss our mutual interest in ensuring that we move forward in accordance with public interest and with an eye to all Albertans and safeguarding our financial interests as well. These are very, very large decisions that we will not make hastily. We will make them with, you know, full consultation with all affected parties.

Now, on the capital investments in the interim supply, those are, as I understand it, commitments that have already been made. I think that once we land on a series of projects in order to appropriately protect against a 2013-like flood for the citizens of Calgary and the rest of southern Alberta, you'll see that plan going forward.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Minister.

Madam Chair, a question for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. In terms of the money you expect to be spending and your government expects to be spending this year, how much of that will be spent on the disaster recovery program? Does it represent an increase, a decrease, and can we anticipate the significant expenditure related to the 2013 floods wrapping up this year?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and I'll thank the hon. member for his questions. Again, some of the complexity when it comes to disaster recovery, when it comes to flood mitigation, is shared between several ministries, so rest assured that we will be working with the joint ministries and across ministries to ensure, obviously, that we're doing the best to protect Albertans.

To your question, I can tell you that for this interim supply, $173.7 million is for the cash-flow needs of the disaster recovery program for the 2013 Alberta floods. I think that answers your question. Feel free to comment further if you have anything.

Thank you.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much.

I'll ask now some more general questions. To the Minister of Education. We've talked a lot about the funding for growth and for student growth, which I think is absolutely warranted and very badly needed. I just want to get some more detail on what contingencies or plans you may have made for – perhaps we don't have 12,000 students; perhaps we have 7,000 students; perhaps we have 16,000 students. It's a bit of a moving target where things are going. Is that funding committed on a per-student basis, and if there is a smaller number of students, in fact, do you spend less money?

Mr. Eggen: Yes, hon. member. That's a very insightful comment, and indeed that's how the ministry, the department, always does fund. In fact, that's why you see some potential for variation, but their estimates are based on population. There's actually a great way to find statistical information on your city or any place in Alberta. Go to the school boards. They have very good estimates on population. So we can expect that $103 million within range to cover the expected increase in enrolment. It was a necessary thing we had to do with interim supply. We exist as a government to pay for students' education, and we did so.

Thank you.

The Chair: I'd remind hon. members to always speak through the chair.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the reminder.

This will be my final question before I hand off to the Member for Calgary-Bow. To the Minister of Health. Mental health primary care is very important, and there's a program under way called PCN evolution, primary care network evolution, the second iteration of primary care. Of course, we know that primary care and prevention is really the one thing that has been shown over time to bend to the cost curve of health care. I'm very interested if you are committed to primary care networks going forward and if, in fact, the interim supply reflects same.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Chair, for the question. Last week I actually had an opportunity to have a face to face with the president of the AMA and also with two of the leaders with regard to the primary care network initiatives that are happening throughout Alberta. So we definitely talked to them about some of the challenges and opportunities. Eighty per cent of Albertans are actually registered through a primary care network right now, so obviously this is something that patients are choosing to register with. We need to make sure that we're looking at ways that we can share a number of reserves. We need to be responsible with taxpayer money and make sure that when money is being allocated in a budget year, it's being spent in that budget year to meet the outcomes of that budget year. There have been some problems with that, so we're definitely going to have to work with the primary care networks to make sure that we have an appropriate reporting process and that the funding that is being allocated is being spent responsibly. But I'm excited to work with them and with other health care providers throughout Alberta.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Madam Chair. The government needs time to table a budget that works for Alberta. However, in the meantime we need to ensure that key services such as education, health care, and social programs continue to be accessible to Albertans. We need a thorough and carefully thought-out budget which reflects what Albertans voted for in the May 5 election. As an Albertan and as an MLA I support the interim supply passing in a reasonable time to ensure that those priority services remain rather than leaving Albertans without those services while we debate over ideology.

Now to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Madam Chair. A pleasure to rise and speak to the supply bill. I would have to be a little bit repetitious, having been here a while and seen the same story repeated several times with huge critique from the current hon. House leader on the other side complaining about the absolute lack of time to debate massive budgets. So a simple request to the House leader to review the standing orders and see if there is a way that we might expand the time for debate on this and, in the interests of building cross-party solidarity around the important decisions that they're going to be making, extend an olive branch to all parties to allow the research necessary, the options out on the table, the opportunity to have meaningful discussion on what is a pretty major decision we're being asked to make.

I could make a motion. I haven't written it out, and we'd have to think about how to word that. But it seems to me that it is in the power of the Legislature to expand the amount of time dedicated to a particular debate. I'll leave that to the House leader to think about.

There are already signs, let me say, that this new government is hedging its bets on some of its commitments in its campaign promises, whether it's on education or the cancer centre or flood mitigation. I guess many Albertans would like to know what you're going to deliver on, and at some point I think it's important for you to come clean about what you're going to deliver and what you're not going to be able to deliver because of the realities of the current situation. That's a preamble that I wanted to say.

I also appreciated the Finance minister's clarity about where the budget comes from. It's simply the old PC budget, and it's continuing on the same. One would hope that some of the bad decisions that were made in the last budget would be corrected in this interim budget.

Several questions for the Health minister. The last budget cut $75 million from PCNs. I hope that's something the minister – and I may have missed it because I wasn't here earlier in the discussions. Clearly, that is funding that was targeted at essential management change in the PCNs. The PCNs have been told to change. They've been working towards more efficient and measured outcomes. They cannot continue with the effective, efficient changes that were in process if that $75 million is cut. They're already at $62 per patient, which has not been changed for several years. They're on a very tight budget. We want primary care networks to thrive. If you can comment on that.

Also, the 42 PCNs seem to be managed independently. Are we going to try and see some more consistency in how those financial decisions for each of the 42 PCNs are going to be made? I hope we can move to that quickly so that there is a sense of fairness and capacity building.

Also, what is your thinking about shifting some of the massive acute-care funding that we see into home care, community care, prevention? Is there not some low-hanging fruit there that we could at least be beginning discussions on? I hesitate to talk about some of the rural hospitals that are no longer functioning as hospitals but redesignating them for what they are doing, which are in some cases community health centres, in some cases seniors' centres, and ensuring that some of that funding, then, could be available for other support programs, including mental health and prevention supports. Perhaps the minister would like to comment on those few.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for raising a number of points that give us an opportunity to begin some of the dialogue on these issues.

Primary care networks are doing a lot of good work. There are also a number of challenges that they're facing. I believe that it was $50, and it was adjusted to $62. We actually need to do a fulsome review and see what is actually adequate because I think that these have been targets that have been chosen without actually doing a lot of analysis around what it actually costs to operate these facilities. So where a typical physician might see a thousand patients, they would have $62 times a thousand to provide some additional supports. There might be 200 physicians in a primary care network. We're not talking about small budgets here. The physician allocation I believe is still primarily fee-for-service. Anyway, we definitely have some work to do. The primary care networks have come to the table very willingly. I think they were the ones who initiated the first meeting, wanting to make sure we can work on that.

I also can't help but think about similarities between some of the ways that budgets have been allocated to them and the ways we've allocated financing to schools districts in the past. For example, under my past hat we would have 200 individual schools in Edmonton public schools, and our collective responsibility is to meet the needs of all those students, just like the PCNs' collective responsibility is to meet the needs of all their patients. I think we need to have a bit of a dialogue around how we use those allocations to equitably meet the needs based on geography and other types of challenges that might be in place.

In terms of mental health I am really glad that the hon. member will be part of the advisory committee that reports to me. We will have details specifically around mandate and terms of reference in the days to come, as we will around additional information relating to the primary care networks.

I always cringed when I'd hear ministers say, "Stay tuned" in the past, but I find other words difficult for me to find. I look forward to discussing this and revealing more details in the days to come.

Dr. Swann: And the $75 million that has been cut from PCNs: I didn't hear you comment on that.

Ms Hoffman: I will but not today. I'm sorry. I can't today.

Dr. Swann: You can't cut, or you can't comment?

Ms Hoffman: I can't comment on that today. We're talking about the whole line items. I'll be able to provide more details in the days to come. [interjections] I can say whatever I want; I'm choosing not to comment on this today. I will be very happy to provide additional detail in the days to come.

Dr. Swann: I appreciate that. I look forward, when you can, to hear word of that.

I'd also like to hear what in the budget, if anything, infrastructurewise is allocated to the Calgary cancer centre. I may have missed it. Has there been anything?

Mr. Mason: Madam Chair, I wanted to respond to that question. We are in the process of reviewing in detail options for the Calgary cancer centre so that we can as soon as possible inform members of the House and of the public what the best option is to go forward. Given the amount of money that's involved and the importance of this issue to the people of Calgary and southern Alberta, we decided that we would take a very close look at this. I've been doing that in conjunction with my colleague the Minister of Health in order to provide the best possible option and to be able to justify that option. That will be forthcoming, I hope, very soon.

Dr. Swann: Finally, with respect to the flood mitigation infrastructure is there anything in the budget that relates to the major projects that have been raised upstream?

Mr. Mason: Well, as a matter of fact, there are two items, Madam Chair, with respect to this in terms of the flooding. One on the operational side is $23 million to support flood recovery and rebuilding efforts in southern Alberta. Work continues in 2015-16 on key initiatives such as the floodway relocation program, cleanup and remediation of the flood-related damages at the Hidden Valley Golf Resort site, and the construction of the High River community resource centre. There is $6 million included in these interim supply estimates in capital investment allocated to the flooding program as well. So $23 million on the operating side and $6 million on the capital side.

Dr. Swann: Does that include the rehabilitation fund for some of the in-city commitments that the government has made?

Mr. Mason: I can get back to you, hon. member, with that information. I will provide that to you and all members of the House.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much.
That's all, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

We only have three seconds left, so we're moving into the next segment. For the next 20 minutes we have the opportunity for private members of the government caucus to question the minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Connolly: Thank you, Madam Chair. I know you're all anticipating it. This government was left with an enormous problem in regard to the number of students there are per teacher in our public schools. In Calgary many public high school teachers have between 40 and 50 students per class. Many of these students require one-on-one time with their teacher. However, with so many students per classroom it is nearly impossible for teachers to give students the time they need and the time they deserve.

When I was in high school, Madam Chair, which many of my colleagues are no doubt aware wasn't too long ago, I had 44 other students in my English class. If everyone showed up, there weren't enough chairs for everyone to sit in. After recently consulting with teachers who work in schools all over Calgary, I have learned that things have changed for the worse thanks to the previous government, who now sits on the other side. Classes are now exploding with students, and we neither have the infrastructure nor the number of teachers to cope with this exorbitant number of students. Additional cuts from the previous government would have only worsened the situation for many teachers and students in our public school system.

My question for the Minister of Education is as follows, and all my questions will be to the Minister of Education. What in this government's interim supply bill will help to alleviate overcrowding in our public schools?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for his question. Again, it's very important for us to differentiate between our interim supply budget, which is our interim funding, I should say, and then the overall budget on which we are overlaying that other document.

We certainly knew full well before the election was even called that there was a serious shortfall of funds to meet the needs of more than 12,000 or thereabouts students entering into the school systems this next year. So we knew that one of our first acts of government had to be to restore that funding to ensure that there were teachers in front of these young people and that there was a support system available to provide that education.

But Albertans must understand – and I think the school boards, teachers, parents, and students ultimately do understand – that this is a restoration of funding that more or less put us back to where we were last year in regard to class size and inclusion of students with special needs, with varying degrees of supports, and the maintenance of buildings and so forth. So we still have lots of work to do. Certainly, by including this $103 million or so into interim supply, we have the opportunity to at least stop the trend of much larger class sizes and so forth.

I also want to say, Madam Chair, that as a teacher – for 20 years I taught, and of course many of my colleagues are still teaching – I am just absolutely astounded at the increase in class size over the last decade or so, especially in high school. We know that if you want to look at improving learning outcomes, if we want to improve math skills, language skills, and so forth – my colleague opposite is a teacher of long standing as well – there's nothing better that you can do than to have a lower ratio between students and teachers in a classroom. I mean, there's a certain point, but certainly that's the first step that you would take in a triage, so to speak, of trying to improve our outcomes to equip our young people for the essential math and language skills that they require and to send them on their way for a bright and prosperous future.

So the short version of it is that, yes, we did provide some mitigation in regard to a larger process that I think was heading in the wrong direction. Certainly, we ran strongly and received a very strong mandate to fix education here in the province, to invest in the next generation. As I said previously this afternoon, that's really the cornerstone of why we exist as this legislative body, to provide that education, health care, and infrastructure for the people of Alberta to live and prosper.

Mr. Connolly: I'd like to thank the hon. minister for his answer. I have a couple more things. Can the minister please detail for me the actual impacts an Alberta family will see as a result of the money that is supplied in the interim supply bill?

Mr. Eggen: Well, again, just very quickly, we know that there are certain students at more risk, that are more likely to be affected by the negative effects of not having that $103 million in there to provide the education for an additional 12,000 or so students. I think one of the critical areas that we reinvested in was the restoration of grants for English-language learners. We have unprecedented immigration into the province of Alberta, not just from other parts of Canada but from all over the world. Again, often language learners are the most vulnerable if they don't find their feet and have that extra help to be successful in a regular classroom, so that restoration, I think, is absolutely important.

The second area where I know that we can find tangible and immediate benefit from the restoration of funding is around First Nations, Métis, and Inuit students in our schools. These are the areas where we are having the least success in terms of completion rates in regard to the acquisition and retention of essential math and language skills, so the restoration of funding will definitely have an immediate and significant impact on First Nations, Métis, and Inuit student programs that we will be further working on over these next weeks and months.

Mr. Connolly: Thank you once again. This is my last question before I'll be giving the rest of my time to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. What is the plan moving forward to continue addressing the funding needs of school boards in the province?

Mr. Eggen: Well, it's very important that we, Madam Chair, recognize the integrity of these democratically elected bodies to make decisions that can most directly and effectively impact the education of the students to which they are charged here in the province of Alberta. So it's very important that we take that feedback. The very first groups that I've been meeting with are school boards from around the province, and as we empower them, both with decision-making but also on a consultative basis, I think that we will get a better return for our allocation to the boards.

Again, this does extend to all the ways by which we deliver education here in the province of Alberta. I know there's been some sound and fury around home-schooling and with charter schools and private schools, but, I mean, we are responsible to all students in this province, and to ensure that there was adequate funding was one of the first things that I did when we did build this funding, to make sure that it's going right across in equal measure to fund all students here in the province. I think that as we move along, that is a solid way to look at how we should exercise our responsibility in the future. I know that we'll have many discussions around this, but certainly I wanted to provide security and the surety to know that all students in this province would be funded and the school boards would have some sense of long-term stability that they could make better plans with.

The Chair: I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Loyola: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's an honour and a privilege to be here in the Legislature, as it was an honour and a privilege for me to serve and work at the University of Alberta for the past seven years before being elected to this House. My questions are going to focus on postsecondary education.

While at the University of Alberta I was also elected president of the Non-Academic Staff Association, and it was a pleasure to serve as a support staff there. But while there serving on the NASA executive, we experienced a number of challenges due to the past government and their cutting to postsecondary education. It was an incredible shame. There was so much pressure put on the administration of the University of Alberta that they even felt the need to come to us and ask us to open our collective agreement just because of the financial pressures that the past government put on them. So the question that I have for the hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education is: how are we going to help the institutions address their financial challenges as we move forward?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much. Thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, it's a significant concern of this government that postsecondary education has been underfunded for many, many years, and we are going to address that this year. We're moving to restore funding, the 1.4 per cent cut that the previous government had put in; to freeze tuition and support educational institutions to have funding for the shortfall from that so that the institutions aren't, you know, as they have been in the past, underfunded regarding that; and also to support them to make sure that they have the funding for market modifiers and noninstructional fees because we're freezing all of those also. We certainly see the concerns that postsecondaries faced and absolutely are moving on this and will restore funding.

The Chair: Just a reminder, hon. members, to please speak through the chair because it also helps with the microphone for Hansard. If you're turning a different direction, they can't hear you.

Mr. Loyola: Thank you for that reminder, Madam Chair, and thank you also to the minister. Because of past cuts the institutions announced program and staff cuts due to unpredictable government funding, so with the new funding that this government will provide, can students expect those programs and staff to be restored, hon. minister?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you. Thank you, Madam Chair. Regularly institutions review the programs that they offer to students, and, you know, on a regular basis some may be cut, some may be expanded. Those are going on, and some of that has already been done, so there may be some programs that will be restored, and some may not. It will depend on what the reasons are for the closure or the suspension. We expect that institutions will revisit their budgets and make appropriate decisions after this new injection of funding.

I want to reiterate, too, that the ministry reviews all proposals for suspensions and closures from institutions to ensure the system-wide Campus Alberta continues to meet students' needs. So some will; some won't.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Loyola: Thank you. You previously mentioned market modifiers, hon. minister, and at the time the previous government claimed that market modifiers were necessary to maintain the quality of the programs. But what will be the impact of this new funding on programs and enrolment, hon. minister?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much. Institutions are going to receive funding to compensate for the market modifier rollback, to a total of $22 million. Our government would also amend the regulation, which will freeze tuition at 2014-15 levels for two years. The compensation is on top of the restored funding of the 1.4 per cent cuts and an increase in base grant funding for cost of living. Due to the increased funding government is providing, there should be no need for institutions to adjust enrolment levels. Additionally, with increased funding we expect that institutions will maintain their plans to improve and increase program quality as they would have under the market modifiers.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Loyola: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the minister for that answer. We know that there is continued and increasing demand for skilled trades and a lack of spaces for students. Hon. minister, through the chair, what are you planning to do about apprenticeship seats?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much. Madam Chair, you know, we have a commitment to ensure that all apprentices have seats in Alberta. We know that the demand for apprentices has gone up 70 per cent in the last decade in Alberta, and we know that we want to have enough trained tradespeople to work here in Alberta, because there is a lot of demand. We're absolutely investing in that and ensuring there are seats.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Loyola: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have no more questions at this time.

The Chair: Is there any other member to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll be asking questions to the Minister of Human Services. As many will know, I was a social worker that worked for Human Services for the last 10 years as a child protection worker, and I've seen the demand that's happened within the Ministry of Human Services in a variety of different areas and how those are impacting Albertans. To the Minister of Human Services. You indicated prior that there will be increases to the budget for Human Services. Can you indicate in what areas those increases will occur?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Chair, and thank you, Member, for asking the question. The first thing: I can assure that a portion of that increase will go to the area our member was working in, to improve the outcomes in that area. Secondly, the funds will be going toward the women's emergency shelters. Thirdly, the funds will be going to FCSS programs, which is a partnership between the municipality and the government to provide services to the municipalities. So those are the three main areas that we campaigned on, and those are the areas we will be focusing on to improve and to allocate these funds.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Chair. Can the minister please clarify in regard to child intervention how these funds will improve the outcomes for the child intervention stream?

Mr. Sabir: I think these new funds will be allocated to improve the children's services. We believe that kids are better served when they are raised in the community, so funds will be allocated for outcomes which are measurable so that kids are spending time in the community. Then these funds will be allocated toward the outcome that kids who are in temporary care are able to go back to their family and be reunited with their family. Wherever that's not possible, we will allocate funds to make sure that they get a permanent home and stability as soon as possible. These funds will also be allocated to improve services directed at the transition of youth into adulthood. These funds will also be directed at the services for indigenous communities, to make sure that services are provided to them in a culturally and traditionally appropriate manner.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Chair. As we know, within Alberta, although we are a province that has benefited greatly from our resources, we also have seen that many Albertans do not have stable housing. Can the minister tell the House how these funds will be used to strengthen the shelter networks within Alberta?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Member. These funds will be used to fund the second-stage housing of the women's shelters. In fact, I attended the AGM of the shelters' network two or three days ago, and the idea is that the absence of these houses, the absence of these places for women to turn to, reinforces and compounds the problem of family violence, because they don't have a place to turn to. These funds will be directed towards creating more spaces like second-stage shelter spaces so that they have the needed spot.

Thank you.

Ms Sweet: Thank you.

The Chair: That concludes the 20 minutes for that piece. We are now entering the final segment, where the rotation repeats the cycle. Speaking times are reduced to five minutes each, but that means you can combine your time with the minister for a total of 10 minutes of back and forth. We'll start with the Official Opposition. If they chose to share that time, that's all right, but you'll only get 10 minutes.

That being said, I will first recognize the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. First of all, I just want to get some clarity. The Minister of Finance said that the way they were able to drive their numbers was to take the past budget, divide it by 12, and times that by five so that you get the five months you're looking at. Then there are four items also that you added into that.

The question I have for you. I'm not sure whether you or the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour wants to answer this. In 2012-13 the operational budget for Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour, the amount for that, was $143 million. In 2014 it was $166 million, and this year it's $74 million. With the projected or possible increases in unemployment with the low oil and with some of the policies that we deem not as advantageous for our economy as maybe your side would, are there any provisions that you're taking into consideration to be able to make up for this possible increase in unemployment?

Mr. Ceci: We know the unemployment numbers are going to be rising. There's been a lag behind the decisions by major energy companies and their layoffs, so those kinds of EI numbers will be in our interim supply and addressed through the budgets that we have there. Yes, we're going to be addressing those.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you. I appreciate the comments.

How does it work with EI being a federal program and your role in that?

Mr. Ceci: Our role in that is to be conscious of all the numbers and the number of people who are leaving employment, going to EI, and subsequent to EI, if they need additional supports for Human Services to support them, we take that up. Social assistance numbers may be going up as a result, and we would be addressing those through this interim supply bill, that will give the money to the Human Services budget.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I don't want to be a stickler on this, but is that not just passing on the cost of that program to the federal government?

Mr. Ceci: Well, if you're talking about Human Services, no, we're not passing that on at all. We're addressing that through our service provision at the ministry. If people come to us and need help of last resort, this province delivers that through their many programs throughout Alberta. We have those dollars addressed in the Human Services budget.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. Maybe I need to address this to Human Services. Is there money allocated for these provisions in order to be able to address this issue of rising unemployment?

Mr. Sabir: Madam Speaker, as the Minister of Finance indicated, there is a lag behind those layoffs and the timing of the pressure that will be felt from them. At this point there is an increase in the allocation, and that will help us sustain those services. When we come to the fall budget, we will have a better idea of what those pressures are so that we can build that into our budget and can provide for those pressures.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think I'll have to move on from this one, then, and hope that we get some more clarity there in the future.

One of my questions. I live right next to the largest reserve in Canada, the Blood reserve, and there's a lot of need for educational programs to help them out of poverty and the struggles that they're in. The previous government committed $600,000 to aboriginal development programs and partnerships. Will this government be increasing that amount, or will they be decreasing that amount?

Ms Ganley: Thank you for the question. At present I have numbers in front of me that deal only with interim supply, and in terms of interim supply they've moved forward with the previously allocated budget.

In terms of developing the budget in the fall, as my colleagues have said on so many occasions, we are going to do a fulsome review of what's needed and what's available in order to move forward.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you for that.

Madam Chair, labour relations was previously budgeted at just under $2 million. Are you expecting to raise this amount?

Mr. Ceci: Sorry, I didn't catch the last bit of your question. What was it?

Mr. Hunter: I apologize. Labour relations was previously budgeted at just under $2 million. Are you expecting to raise this amount?

Mr. Ceci: Are we expected to raise this amount?

Mr. Hunter: Yes.

Mr. Ceci: I don't know. I don't think so. I can get back to you.

Mr. Hunter: Madam Chair, one of the concerns that will be coming up in the near future is the issue of workers' compensation and OH and S with farmers. Obviously, this is something that's going to be debated in the future, but given that your government is proposing increasing the number of people that will be going into workers' compensation with that increase in farmers and their workers, are you planning on increasing funding to that? What is your approach to this workers' compensation funding?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. We're looking at interim supply right now. For this period the budget is not changing. It is going ahead as it was. There is going to be no new funding right now. In the new budget, that's coming out in the fall, we'll be looking at where we need to go from here. But at this point, for this interim supply, there is no new funding.

The Chair: Hon. member, you've concluded? You still have two minutes left in the 10 minutes. You're fine? Okay.

We will then move on to the next segment of the rotation, to the third party.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you for the opportunity to speak on interim supply. I will preface my comments also by saying that I find it disappointing that the new government has elected to reduce the amount of debate to three hours. It's certainly a complete about-face. It may just have something to do with the chairs over on that side; I'm not just sure. But I will say that certainly it is a complete and total change from what you were preaching not six months ago, and it's a little disappointing to me that you've decided to take that approach.

Furthermore, I do want to reiterate what my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway stated, and that is that the total lack of any detail in this is very frustrating. Quite frankly, in the limited three hours that we have, we're wasting a lot of it just asking, trying to get that detail that should be in the documentation that we're provided. Once again, I look back at the documentation that was provided back last spring, and it was considerable. It went department by department, what the changes were. If there are, in fact, only four adjustments, I think, you know, that certainly could have been provided to the members on both sides of the House so that we could dig into that a lot more clearly.

But I would like to investigate into that. We have $1.8 billion in additional spending. So far I've heard of $103 million in Education and $500 million in Health. Can the Minister of Finance detail to the House where the other portions of the $1.8 billion are? In what departments? In what programs? What amounts are being spent?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question. I can say that the new money I think they're focusing specifically on. We have Education, Health, Human Services, and Innovation and Advanced Education as those target areas. The adjustments are in the range of $45 million for Education. Health is half a billion. Human Services is $39 million. Innovation and Advanced Education is $40 million. Those are the ones that are the biggest buckets before us that we're investing in.

Dr. Starke: Well, Madam Chair, I must confess that it's a little bit unclear to me how that, then, arrives at $1.8 billion, but I want to move on to some other specific questions.

With the Minister of Health we just got cut off, but I really do want to hear and have it on the record with regard to the ASLI grants. These were important grants that were announced, you know, just before the election, but quite frankly in the service and the needs of housing for our seniors across the province I think they were very well received. I just would like your confirmation that the ASLI grants that were announced are still going to go ahead under your government's program.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question. Madam Chair, one of the first meetings we had was with the Continuing Care Association. I think that they understand, given some of the language that was in our platform, which your hon. colleague has referenced, around our desires around making sure that we're providing publicly funded and publicly delivered supports in the long term, that we're in a process right now where we're looking at some of those grants. I have communicated to get word out to them in a timely fashion. Right now I can't say definitively yes or definitively no, to be completely honest, but know that this is something that 22 days in I've made a priority to make sure that I familiarize myself with and can provide some clarity to the people who heard announcements made by the past government around what we can do moving forward. I don't want to say: stay tuned.

Dr. Starke: Well, Madam Chair, the subtext to that that I'm hearing, though, is that if there is a proposal that was approved for ASLI funding that is not publicly delivered – i.e., if it's being done by a private operator – those projects will be given a lower priority. Can the Minister of Seniors confirm that that is the case?

Ms Hoffman: Madam Chair, that is not the case. What we're doing right now is trying to make sure that we review all of the grants that have been announced previously, align them with our priorities moving forward, and work with the delivery providers to make sure that we're meeting the long-term needs. I want to make sure that every decision we make going forward we can hang our hat on and be proud of the science and the facts that went into making those decisions moving forward. Maybe "science" isn't the right word.

I want to make sure we're doing evidence-based decision-making, that there isn't political interference, and part of my responsibility to Albertans is to make sure that I take the opportunity right now to ensure that any decisions we make moving forward we will stand by. When we make announcements, you can count on that they'll be funded. Right now I just need to make sure that I have a little personal time to review those. Twenty-two days hasn't been quite long enough, but I'm working quickly to try to make sure that I can provide some direction. So I can't do that today.

Dr. Starke: Well, Madam Chair, I can appreciate the time constraints that the minister is working under, but I can assure you that the ASLI grant that was announced for Vermilion-Lloydminster I'd be happy to provide you with all kinds of background information on and assure you of the merit of that particular application.

I'd like to move on to the minister of parks and recreation. One of the things that we heard during the course of the election campaign was that certain revenue enhancements would be rolled back, and one of the areas where revenue was actually changed was in, believe it or not, camping fees and cottage lease fees. These have lagged behind the market rates and what is being charged in the private sector, and as a result of that, it becomes difficult for the parks area to retain its overall ability to be viable. What I'd like to know is: are the camping fees going to be rolled back as you have rolled back other fee increases, and if so, what effect does that have on the overall parks budget?

Mr. Ceci: I think I'll take that by saying that, yes, we're rolling back a number of fees. I can tell the hon. member that the breadth of those fees, the actual fees that we're rolling back, will be the subject of some information shared in the very next few days. It's not here before us right now, but there are several buckets, several things that we are rolling back. You know about the health care levy. That one we're rolling back as well as . . . [interjections] Keep going? You want me to keep going on fees?

I will tell you that a number are being rolled back. We're going to have an announcement about those things in the next few days, and they amount to several hundred million dollars.

Dr. Starke: Well, Madam Chair, if I could offer a little bit of input, although it sounds like the decisions have already been made behind closed doors. One of the fee increases, for example, was the maximum fines for speeding through construction zones, the maximum fines for speeding past ambulances or police stopped on the side of the road. I mean, I'd like to know that those are not being considered for rollbacks. I do think that those were justified.

A question for whoever is answering on behalf of the Minister of Transportation, and it has to do with the water for life program. That's important in terms of delivering critical water infrastructure to rural communities. Some of these projects have been ongoing and require the ongoing funding from the Transportation department. I'd like someone to answer, if possible, what the status of water for life is. Has their funding been changed as a result of these interim supply estimates?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much. I'll do my best to attempt to answer on behalf of the Minister of Transportation. It's my understanding that, again, the dollars that were allocated in the previous government's budget for water for life have not been changed, but I will make a note of it and ensure that the Minister of Transportation notifies you and members of the House.

Dr. Starke: Madam Chair, just as a final comment, I will mention that I'm hearing from a lot of stakeholders in my constituency that there is a great deal of uncertainty from this government. They're saying on the one hand that nothing has changed and in fact the budget will be going ahead with the allocations that have been listed, yet a number of projects and a number of issues have been told: "You're on hold. Don't go anywhere. There's nothing certain. We have some decisions to make." I'm just going to encourage the government to make the decisions as quickly as possible because this level of uncertainty is not helpful to anybody. It's not helpful to you and your reputation as a new government, and it's not helpful to the constituencies.

I'd like to cede the rest of my time to the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Bilous: Madam Chair, can I respond, please, on behalf of the government?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: I'd like to respond to that. I appreciate the member's remarks, but I do want to remind the House that this is an interim supply. This is not a budget. This is designed to ensure that government keeps running and not just government but programs and services that Albertans rely upon. We will very much so be bringing out a budget with much detail this fall, that will go through exactly how our government plans to spend and the programs that we plan to deliver for Albertans.

Again, this is an interim supply bill that, obviously, as members can appreciate, needs to go through this House, through this process in order to continue our services and programs past June 30. Therefore, you know, we ask that members in the House be patient with their responses.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

That brings that segment to an end. We'll move once more through the rotation.

I can recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow if you're in agreement. Do you want to share the 10 minutes? You can do that as well.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will be brief. I just have a question for whoever is answering on behalf of the Minister of Transportation. Perhaps the Minister of Environment and Parks may want to answer this question. Previously it was noted that there's $23 million in interim supply to continue the floodway buyout program. This is one of the most odious and ill-considered policies that I've perhaps ever seen. We haven't achieved any clear public policy objective that I can see, yet we've wasted over $100 million.

I will take some time here to speak slowly, as I see the minister returning to his seat. I'll reiterate my point here. As I talk about the floodway buyout program and as I look through the communities in High River and the communities in Calgary that have been hollowed out by this ill-considered policy, where people were given a full market value buyout on their homes, barely a hundred people of the 254 homeowners eligible for this program chose to take the buyout. But those that did cost the taxpayers and the people of Alberta over $100 million. At the same time, we have not cleared the floodway. The purpose of that program is to move those impediments out of the fast-flowing waters in the time of flood.

Well, whether we like it or not, over the last hundred-plus years we've built in places we probably shouldn't have built. However, that has left our communities hollowed out, and it has not made us at any less risk because now there are still two-thirds of those houses in the way. It's going to hit the next one, and it's going to take a sharp left-hand turn, and it's still going to devastate those communities. My question, then, through the chair, is: will the minister consider reversing that buyout, not spending that $23 million that have been allocated, and instead dedicate those resources to upstream flood mitigation to ensure that all people, not just in those communities but the business owners and residents in other areas that are at risk of flooding, are protected?

Thank you.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you for the question. What the interim supply is meant to do is keep the business of government moving so that we can conduct a more full review of flood mitigation as we are going forward. I am not inclined to give a hundred per cent stamp of approval to the previous government's policy initiatives with respect to flood mitigation. As I have said previously, I'm loath to claim that all of their decisions were terrible. I'm equally loath to give them all the stamp of having acted in the public interest. So, Madam Chair, as we review our flood mitigation options, this program will be part of that, but in this interim supply period what we are debating here are the ongoing operations of the government. But those programs are certainly under review.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm glad to hear that those programs are under review. This one, in particular, I think offers us an opportunity, as we review those programs, to identify an area where we can really make some change by reversing it. So I'll ask the same question of the minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Will you in fact reverse that and not spend those dollars on the buyout program and find a better use for them?

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much for that question. I think it's a very good question, a reasonable question, and a thoughtful question. I am obviously not going to give you an answer right now because I would like to provide you with a reasonable and thoughtful answer, which requires some time to look at these things we have. As you could no doubt guess, there are a hundred or more issues in each of our departments – and many of us have two departments – that we need to become familiar with. But I will take the point that the member is suggesting. I will discuss it with my colleagues and in due course will provide you with a specific, detailed, and reasonable answer.

Dr. Swann: Just a couple of questions with respect to perhaps Human Services, specifically. I didn't see anything related to either early childhood development enhancements or affordable child care, which were pretty strong commitments of this new government. Can the minister elaborate a little bit on what their vision is? If not in this budget, where are they going with early childhood development enrichment and affordable child care?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you, Member, for raising this question. As indicated earlier, the numbers in this budget are based on the previous budget, so what we have done is added $39 million. That amount will be used to sustain and improve services. Insofar as child care is related, we understand that it's a very important issue. I even heard my caucus colleagues talking these days about how they're looking for child care spaces. We have committed to providing $25 a day child care. In the coming days we will be looking at that in a more fulsome manner, and we will be able to provide more clarity and more information on that.

Thank you.

Dr. Swann: The last Minister of Education funded $5 million research called the early childhood mapping project. Very impressive results: almost 50 per cent of children under the age of six delayed in one parameter out of the five major parameters for milestones in the preschool years. I hope the minister will take that under advisement, that this is an urgent priority. Many of these organizations across the province that did the baseline research are ready and willing and able to provide some of the early childhood resources if they have support from government. It would be a great loss to this province if we were not able to provide some of those resources to sustain the great work that's been done for five years in early childhood development mapping, that now has identified the problems, and there are no resources to deal with up to 50 per cent of children who are not meeting the milestones.

I want to put that on the record. I want to put it on your agenda and make sure that we find some shift of resources, perhaps. Whether it's from your department or Health, we need to ensure that. This is a primary prevention opportunity that again we're missing.

To shift gears just a little bit, the other area I wanted to raise was the early intervention in cancer identification. With respect to the health system there are tremendous opportunities if we were to be more systematic about screening programs, if primary care networks were given those resources that appear to have been cut. I've heard from the primary care networks that they are told to cut the $75 million from their budgets this year. Prevention efforts, early intervention, health promotion, wellness: all these things are being sidelined again because of the priority of acute problems, so we are again missing a tremendous prevention opportunity if we cut this $75 million from primary care networks and a tremendous opportunity in early childhood development if we don't identify high-risk families and get the resources to the community that could potentially deal with this.

One final comment more than a question has to do with the corporate survey in Human Services that year after year after year shows low morale, shows lack of confidence in management, shows real challenges within the department. Somehow resources need to be found to address some of the staff needs. It needs to be part and parcel of any budgeting to ensure that we start to address some of the demoralization of Human Services staff for whatever reasons, many different reasons. I do not want that to be lost in discussions about money, that people in the department have tremendous potential for improving their productivity if their concerns and frustrations and disappointments and overtaxed resources, in some cases, are not being addressed.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

We now will go to this side of the House for the segment of 10 minutes if we have speakers.

The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. As many in the House may know, I've been a registered nurse for over 17 years, so I'd like to direct my questions to the Minister of Health. During the campaign I heard many questions from my constituents and even from people from other constituencies with concerns regarding health care. Will the interim funding help make sure that people in rural communities are able to access primary care?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you, colleagues, for your attention as I engage in responding to this important question raised by my colleague.

In terms of the $500 million that's being injected back into this budget, obviously we know that Albertans resoundingly rejected the past budget that was being proposed, which would have seen $1.1 billion in cuts in the budget moving forward, and that's why we have this reinjection of the $500 million. That will be provided throughout the province to ensure, like I said, the patient growth and to reverse that $136 million, I believe it was, in cuts. So this is money for growth, and in rural areas where there's growth, there will of course be funds to follow those patients.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. I also would like to ask the Minister of Health how the interim supply funding for Health will deal with wait times as certainly wait times for procedures have been a concern. So how will the interim supply funding ensure that wait times do not get worse?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, hon. member, for the question. [interjections] I know you guys don't want me to waste time, but I'm having a really hard time being able to respond when I hear your questions louder than my own voice. Thank you.

I want to make sure that – see, now I'm off track about the question. Wait times. In terms of the past budget that was proposed in the spring, there were, like I said, these $1.1 billion in cuts, which we know would have impacted our ability to deliver on the front lines in terms of physicians, nurses, EMTs, other front-line service providers. By this House today reinjecting this $500 million to make sure that we can continue to fund growth moving forward, we will have the resources necessary to be able to serve the needs of these 70,000-plus new Alberta patients that we're expecting to come into our system, because not only are babies being born, but people continue to move here from other places, around Canada and internationally. So we need to make sure that we continue to offer the type of public health care that they so rightly deserve, moving here to Alberta.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. As many of you may know, my role was as a public health nurse, and working with fellow home-care nurses, there was much frustration about access to home care. So I would like to know: will the additional funding make sure that people are able to access home care?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, a big piece in the platform related to health care – we talked about mental health, we talked about long-term care, we talked about wait times, and another big piece of that is around home care. As was laid out in the platform and as we're so proudly moving forward on, these additional allocations today will have some room for us to grow in that area. In the fall and in subsequent NDP budgets we'll have an opportunity to look specifically at those line items and to be very proud of the investment we're making as legislators here to meet the needs of Albertans, especially those who are in a variety of different situations and want to be able to age in place.

Thank you.

The Chair: Is there another hon. member wishing to speak on this side?

If not, then we will continue on with the rotation, and we'll return to the Wildrose caucus. I have next on my list the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Sorry; he's not here. Oops. The hon. Member for Highwood. I get myself in trouble.

Mr. W. Anderson: Oh, great. Put me up just before dinner. Here we go. I'm holding you up.

Anyway, thank you, Madam Chair. Interestingly enough, I've been sitting here patiently listening for the last two hours and 50 minutes to talk about spending money, allocating funds, interim budgets. These are great words – I love them all – but I never heard the word “savings.” Nowhere has anybody talked about saving money.

Now, for those who don't know me, I come from the private sector. I've managed to go through a few mergers and acquisitions in my past and been able to grow a couple of businesses with my esteemed colleagues in the private sector. But typically when there's a change of management, a change in an organization such as this – and congratulations, my esteemed friends on the opposite side of the House, but you can obviously see that my friends on the left, no pun intended, have been downsized a little bit. Downsizing is something that we don't look negatively at in the private sector, but when it does happen, typically there's duality of process, there's systems change, intellectual capital changes, people change, bricks and mortar change. These changes are often good.

I have to commend my esteemed colleagues on the other side of the House. A lot of you have taken on dual portfolios. Congratulations. That's a heavy workload. In doing so, what you've done is that you've reduced the size of your ministry obligations, i.e. the cost of those. But typically when that happens, there are usually some savings involved. Duality of process, intellectual capital, bricks and mortar: these are things that cost money. If you're collapsing the size of your ministries, where are the savings? I haven't heard anything about savings. Can the Minister of Finance tell me: what are you doing with that money?

Mr. Ceci: I appreciate the hon. member's question. This is an interim supply bill, so we are supplying money to the programs and services of the different ministries that require it. We are already hard at work on a budget, and that will put Alberta's families' priorities first. But I can tell you that we expect all departments to look at all options through this budget process that we're engaged in and to address the savings that the hon. member is asking for.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I look forward to those dollar amounts. Thank you very much.

I want to just put this on the record. I know that my esteemed colleague to the left of me managed to talk about the water for life program. The town of Okotoks is in my constituency. This town has approximately 30,000 people. For the last two years they have been looking at being provided with what we call potable water, or drinking water. They've applied through the water for life program for a pipeline from the city of Calgary. It was denied and turned down. The water for life program I think has been decreased by about – I forget – $30 million in the last budget. I just want to put on the record that I want to know from this government that they will be providing additional funds to the water for life program. Keep it on the record for the town of Okotoks.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: We'll certainly be making that decision in the fall budget. I appreciate that the hon. member, in theory, is looking for savings, but in the end, like all the others, he's asking us to spend money.

Mr. W. Anderson: Well, you've got to get the money from somewhere. Hopefully, it's not just tax and spend again.

One last question. I want to put this to the minister of services. In your interim budget you've got allocated budget for capital of $12 million. I'm just asking the question: is that for newly announced projects or for existing projects? Can you clarify that for me, sir?

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much to the hon. member. I'm just looking to see if I can quickly see what the capital investment is, and I think, unfortunately, that you're either going to have to give me a couple of minutes, or I will get back to you in writing exactly with some details as far as the capital investment. You're talking about Service Alberta, just to clarify. I will get back to you shortly here, and I appreciate your patience. Sorry; through the chair.

Mr. W. Anderson: I'd like to turn the rest of my time over to my esteemed colleague.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you so much. It's a pleasure to rise.

An Hon. Member: Time is a-ticking.

Mr. Cooper: We've got all the time in the world. Unfortunately, for this evening we have five minutes before we get to have dinner, and I'm so pleased that we get to come back to conclude this whopping amount of time that the government has so graciously allotted for us to debate this significant piece of supply, that we'll be able to do after the dinner break.

I just wanted to quickly double-check here. I know that I'm new, generally speaking, around these halls. I am particularly new to the Chamber. I was a little perplexed yesterday, but the Government House Leader implied that we should be familiar with this supply bill because 90 per cent of it is the same. I just wanted to remind him that, well, 90 per cent of the bill may be the same; 70 per cent, whatever it is, of the House has never seen this. So, you know, to imply that we don't really need to debate it because 90 per cent of it's the same as the last guy's is a little bit untoward. It would have been great for all of those who wanted to speak – and I can tell you that there are number of others in our caucus who didn't have the chance – to have allowed them that opportunity.

But I wanted to quickly just clarify two things, particularly with respect to the interim financial policy that the government seems to be working from. I'm just curious if the Finance minister or whoever would like to speak to it would clarify for us why the interim financial policy that you're working off is directly attributed to a budget that was never passed in this place and not to a budget that had been passed and introduced, three Premiers ago, by the former Premier Redford.

Mr. Ceci: I'd liked to respond through the hon. chair. It's really the only thing we had to work from. The previous work that had been done by the previous government is what we looked at. We didn't have time to produce our own budget, so we needed to work with the best estimates before us, and those are here save for the additions that we have put in and talked about, save for the additional expenditures, the elimination of fees and levies that we're not going to bring in. So that's the best work that we had to work from, and we've put it before you.

Mr. Cooper: I will add that I think it's a little unfortunate, working from a document that in many respects doesn't really exist because it never was passed. While it was presented, it certainly never became law and never became the direction of this government.

Mr. McIver: It's on the Internet.

Mr. Cooper: It is on the Internet. I've seen it there.

I'm seeking a little bit of clarification. We understand that 90 per cent of this is exactly the same and that 10 per cent is a change. I understand that we've talked about 12 divided by five plus four new items, and the four new items make up the 10 per cent. I'm just curious to know if the Finance minister would be willing to try and provide some clarification, perhaps even be willing to provide a line-by-line for this House, certainly before we vote on what very likely will become the appropriations bill, on exactly what that 10 per cent is and perhaps in the moments remaining provide some clarification around exactly what that spending is going to be for.

Mr. Ceci: Madam Chair, through you to the hon. member: I think I identified the focus for those . . .

The Chair: Hon. members, I hesitate to interrupt, but the clock is now 6 p.m., and this committee is recessed until 7:30 tonight.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Committee of Supply

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'll call the Committee of Supply to order.

Interim Supply Estimates 2015-16 (No. 2) General Revenue Fund and Lottery Fund

The Chair: As per our rotation earlier this afternoon we're just going to finish up. We have eight minutes left. This next segment will be for the third party if someone wishes to speak. The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Madam Chair. I've got a few questions here. One deals with the government's platform. I'm referring this time to item 6.1, which reads:

Large profitable corporations will contribute a little more. We will cut the PCs' wasteful corporate tax breaks, by increasing Alberta corporate tax to 12% (from 10%), retaining the current small business tax rate and no sales tax.

My question is: how does the government delineate between large profitable corporations and medium profitable corporations and small profitable corporations?

Mr. Ceci: To the hon. member: the same way I think the third party did when they were in government. We're not changing any of that. The tax rates will stay the same for small businesses up to $500,000, and then for those over that it'll change. We're bringing that bill before this House tomorrow.

Mr. McIver: So is that small corporations under $500,000 that will still pay the 12 per cent? Is that correct, Minister?

Mr. Ceci: I think businesses.

Mr. McIver: I'm asking about corporations, Minister, quite specifically.

Mr. Ceci: Sure. Sure. I'm getting lots of nods of agreement on this side.

Mr. McIver: So corporations under $500,000 won't pay the 12 per cent. Is that what I'm hearing?

Mr. Ceci: On the first $500,000 they pay 3 per cent. [interjection] For small businesses 3 per cent.

The Chair: Hon. members, for the sake of order we need one person speaking at a time and only one standing.

Mr. McIver: I'm going to defend the government right now. I think we agreed to go back and forth, so I'm not offended by what happened there. I don't mean to be out of line, Madam Chair, but we did agree to go back and forth. So I'm going to defend them. If you want to give me heck, that's okay. Well, that is important to me.

Now, the other question I have is that I heard that Treasury Board is meeting later tonight. Madam Chair, I'm going to be less kind to the government now. Could it be that the government, who is in control of the whole schedule, including when Treasury Board is meeting and including when estimates happens – did they intentionally put Treasury Board after this so they'd have fewer answers for us now? I'm going to ask the question.

Mr. Ceci: No. Treasury Board, as you know, hon. member, for us usually happens on Thursdays every other week. We have some caucus business that we need to attend to tomorrow at the time that Treasury Board usually meets. Unbeknownst to the chair, it was moved to 6 today so that we would get it in and deal with important business that had nothing to do with the kinds of things that you're concerned about.

Mr. McIver: Then, Madam Chair, you'll have to forgive me if I remain suspicious.

It was mentioned by the Minister of Human Services that there would be additional funding for FCSS. What percentage of additional funding do you anticipate, or are you going to increase, based on these estimates?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you for the question. We will be increasing the existing funding, which is at roughly around 76. We will be adding $10 million more to it, and it will be based on the same 80-20 split formula; 80 per cent will be funded by the government, and municipalities will be required to come up with their 20 per cent.

Mr. McIver: So that's a $30 million increase?

An Hon. Member: No, that's $10 million.

Mr. McIver: A $10 million increase. And on a percentage of what's currently funded it's . . .

Mr. Sabir: Currently it's an 80-20 split. The government provides 80 per cent, and the municipalities are required to put in 20 per cent. So that will remain the same.

Mr. McIver: I think I'll have to ask the question another time. How much time do I have left?

The Chair: Three minutes.

Mr. McIver: Three minutes. Then I will say that we have more questions and we'll continue, but before we're finished, I will say that I know there were a lot of complaints, quite a few complaints, about not having enough time. But I will say that the Official Opposition didn't use all the time they were allotted earlier on. They passed some on to us, so we will use it because we actually have enough questions to fill all the time.

Madam Chair, my question is . . . [interjection] I think it is my time now, Madam Chair. I will say that there is a remark in the platform of the government that says that they will get rid of private business that the government has. I think they used the word "experiment." Which things are you going to make public that the government now does business with privately, please?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question. In terms of the platform it talks about experiments in privatization of health care. What we're referring to is a lot of the experiments of the caucus that the hon. member is a member of over the last several years. What we're talking about is making sure that we don't continue around bringing us toward an American, corporatized health care system. We are really proud of what we have here in Alberta, and we want to make sure that it continues to serve Albertans through not just public funding but public delivery.

Mr. McIver: Madam Chair, I'm quite pleased that the Health minister is very proud of what our government had going before they took over. I thank you for the compliment. It means a lot to me; it means a lot to our caucus. That was a wonderful endorsement that you just gave.

But it does lead to my next question. Are you going to privatize the PCNs? Because that's what it sounds like. I think the PCNs deserve to have an answer to that based on what I just heard here in the House.

Ms Hoffman: No.

Mr. McIver: Well, Madam Chair, that might be the first full answer we've received all night, and I would be remiss if I did not thank the Health minister for such a forthright answer without delay.

Now, Madam Chair, one of the other questions that I had – and there were comments about what is and what isn't – was about forest fires. To the minister of ESRD or the President of Treasury Board, either way: is there money allocated in the additional estimates for forest fires? We know from our time in government that that can be unpredictable. There have been a large number of forest fires now. Are any of those forest fires represented in these supplementary estimates?

Vote on Interim Supply Estimates 2015-16 (No. 2) General Revenue Fund and Lottery Fund

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but pursuant to Government Motion 8, agreed to on June 16, 2015, the allotted time of three hours has lapsed, so I must now put the following question. After considering the 2015-16 interim supply estimates No. 2 for the Legislative Assembly for the fiscal period ending March 31, 2016, support to the Legislative Assembly, $33 million, are you agreed?

[The voice vote did not indicate agreement]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 7:38 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

I would like to alert hon. members that Standing Order 61(3) provides that upon the Assembly concurring in the report by the Committee of Supply, the Assembly immediately reverts to Introduction of Bills for introduction of the appropriation bill.

Introduction of Bills

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015 (No. 2)

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Deputy Speaker. I'm rising to introduce Bill 3, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015 (No. 2). This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to this Assembly.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a first time]

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Connolly moved, seconded by Ms Kazim, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate June 16: Mr. Mason]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes?

The Deputy Speaker: You still have 15 minutes left to speak.

Mr. Mason: No. I'll cede my time. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Then the next member is the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am truly honoured to have been chosen as the Member for Airdrie. I grew up in Airdrie, and now I raise my family there. Airdrie is a city of over 60,000 people, a very rapidly growing city, and it's full of lots of young families. Small businesses are the beating heart of my community, and they're responsible for so much of our volunteerism and our charity support and kids' sports programs.

We are a community that comes together when there is a need. When southern Alberta suffered devastating floods, the people of Airdrie came in droves with supplies, strong working hands, and loving arms. When teenagers are bullied, they are welcomed with kind notes in the form of positive Post-its. The campaign against bullying: that started in Airdrie. When families suffer hardships, fundraisers are quickly arranged and local food bank shelves are stocked greatly. When a mother's child dies because an adequate health facility was not close enough, Airdrie takes its own action and forms a health foundation so this will never happen again. That is with the government's help, of course.

I am very proud of my city, but I also represent rural parts of Alberta, too: Bottrel, Helmsdale, Madden, and Nier, all vibrant, beautiful communities and with much concern over property rights. Airdrie has a beautiful walking and biking pathway system that treks through many wonderful parks, playground areas, and ponds. We have really neat regular wildlife. There's a blue heron family that actually lives in the pond behind my house and really cute muskrats. We've named one Henry. There are plenty of family-run restaurants, ice cream and gelato parlours, delightful coffee shops where a lot of local business owners meet and some – most – call it their second office. A lot call it their first.

Airdrie has recently hosted the Alberta Summer Games as well as other great events such as the Airdrie air show, Airdrie Pro Rodeo, the bikes and bulls event, empty bowls festival, and Artember.

Now, when I say adequate health facility, Airdrie has seen tremendous growth over the last 10 years. The infrastructure has never caught up. As I already said, our population is over 60,000, and if you get sick after 10 p.m., your option is to drive to Calgary to an extremely overcrowded hospital or to the hospital in Didsbury, which is much farther away. This is unacceptable, not for a town, for a city of 60,000 people and the affected communities like Crossfield, Beiseker, Bottrel, Madden, Helmsdale, and Nier. Residents from north Calgary frequent the Airdrie facility as well for their health care needs.

In response to the Speech from the Throne I have grave concerns for the vibrant business community in Airdrie as many of our small businesses will be forced to lay off employees, take on more hours themselves, and raise the price of goods and services to comply with the minimum wage increase. These are businesses that are vital to Airdrie's community as they're generous and they give so much. They support our charities, our children's sports programs, and so much more. Sadly, this will cease to exist to comply with the probable wage increase. I've been told over and over again by our business community, and some will even have to shut their doors.

Also in response to the Speech from the Throne I agree with and applaud your recognition for Alberta to have a long-term plan for health care and education, and both need predictable, sustainable funding. The problem we face is the allocation of funding. With a centralized system of big government we are not addressing the concerns of wait times or patient care. Bureaucrats really just get larger and richer, front-line service remains the same while the number of patients increases, and patient care fails. This large system leaves smaller cities like Airdrie in the dust, forgotten and hopeless. As a mom this scares me to my core. As a daughter I see no proper future for my aging parents in this too large of a system. In time my hope is for a better working system of communication, co-operation, and achievement for the people of Alberta that elected us to be here.

To restore Albertans' faith in government and increased voter turnout rates. I was very saddened while talking to the people at the door who just gave up voting altogether. They just didn't care. They gave up on democracy, and that, folks, is the biggest fear that we all should have, the demise of democracy because people just don't care, and that's our fault.

Now, none of this would have ever been possible without the support of my wonderful husband, my two children, and my loving parents, who always thought that government as an institution was important. My parents, both coming from immigrant families and whose parents strived to become proud Canadians, know the dangers of trampled democracy, centralized government, and the need to defend the rights and freedoms of all individuals. They taught me everything I know, the importance of being humble, never forgetting to thank the people who helped me to get to where I am today. They taught me to love unconditionally towards others, and they taught me to stay true to my principles, my word, and my beliefs. Through their actions they have shown me how to give back to our community and be a good wife, a good daughter, a good sister, a great mother, and a friend. It is these values that I hope I can stay true to as MLA for Airdrie over the next four years.

There is no shortage of work to do. We all know that. Alberta, indeed, is facing unprecedented challenges. The size of government has grown too big, too fast, and now Albertans will have plenty of tough choices to face over the next several years.

I will speak passionately on the need to protect the future of our children by bringing down our rapidly expanding provincial debt. I will always argue for the need for eliminating waste and inefficiency without asking our vulnerable and core government services to do the heavy lifting. I will fight every day for a truly patient-centred health care system that focuses not just on dollars spent but on patients cured.

As a mother I will fight to protect the choice on the best way to educate my children and ensure that they have enough space in our schools, without bursting outside of the classrooms.

To close, I want to say thank you to my beautiful family, who has supported me. I will rely on you in the tough times, share in the good, and I will always do my best to make you proud.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for a five-minute question/comment should any hon. members wish to take advantage. The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Yeah, Madam Speaker, I would. I really would. I'd really enjoy speaking and asking the member, being a lifetime Albertan and born and raised in Airdrie: I'd like to get her to expound on the idea of small business and how wages may affect that.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you for that great question. I've had a lot of people coming into my office recently, a lot of small-business owners and representatives of local networking groups and business organizations, very, very concerned over the minimum wage increase and how it's going to directly affect their businesses and their lives, from taking away or having to pull back on employee benefits, laying off their employees and taking over for themselves full time – these are 12-, 16-hour days for these guys – having to raise the price of their goods and services, which will put them out of business because we can't afford to shop there.

Airdrie programs rely on Airdrie businesses for their donations to keep their programs going. It is our food banks. It is our community links, which provide so many services. These are children, right? This is really important; $15 an hour minimum wage is going to destroy us. I just urge you guys to take a second look because this is a big deal. You're going to see these small guys go out.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other member wish to speak on 29(2)(a)?

If not, I will invite the hon. Member for Calgary-East with her statement.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to be able to rise in this House for the first time today as the Member for Calgary-East to respond to the Speech from the Throne. I'd like to thank Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor for the remarks brought to this Chamber. I'd also like to congratulate you, Madam Speaker, on your election to this Assembly. I believe the Assembly will benefit from your wisdom and experience, and you've been doing a great job so far.

I also congratulate my colleagues on both sides of the Chamber for your election to this House. We've been entrusted, through democratic elections, with the great privilege of representing our constituents, the people of Alberta. If the calibre of debate today and yesterday was an indication, I think we're really off to a fabulous start.

I also want to thank the Premier for the opportunity to rise in this House to speak to the people and the priorities of Calgary-East. I'm so thrilled to be able to represent the communities of Calgary-East. These include Marlborough, Marlborough Park, Penbrooke, Radisson Heights, Albert Park, Mayland Heights, Forest Heights, and my neighbourhood, Southview.

I chose to move to Southview six years ago because of its close proximity to downtown, great parks, mature trees, access to transit, and walkability. There's a plethora of fabulous restaurants, and let's face it, as a young family, there were affordable houses there. The people of Calgary-East are diverse and largely working class. Many work in the trades, transport, and in sales and service. Nearly a third are recent immigrants to Canada. They speak English, Cantonese, Mandarin, Vietnamese, Punjabi, Spanish, Kamai, Tagalog, French, and many others. Many are small-business owners.

On the doorsteps during the election they told me that they were concerned about making ends meet and about everybody having a fair shot at success. They were concerned about access to quality education for their children and quality care for seniors. The people in my riding are excited about a $15 an hour minimum wage. This will do so much to ease the burden on new Canadians and single mothers, who disproportionately fill low-wage jobs in our communities.

The priorities laid out in the throne speech are the priorities of the people of Calgary-East: stable, predictable funding for schools so parents know their kids will have the supports they need and a fair progressive tax system. We can all benefit from the wealth in this province. People I met at the door spoke of the need to ensure a prosperous future for their children and for a government that would work to reduce the growing inequality that we face. They voted for a government that would provide these things. They voted NDP.

It's a riding that is historically an NDP riding, as much as that's possible in Calgary. Parts of Calgary-East were represented by both Bob Hawkesworth and Barry Pashak, and many folks I ran into when door-knocking referred to the late '80s as the good old days. In his maiden speech Mr. Hawkesworth said that he and Mr. Pashak were only the first of many NDP MLAs to be elected from Calgary. Well, it's been a long time coming, but I'm happy to be here with my colleagues from Calgary to fulfill Bob's bold prediction.

The people I represent are passionate volunteers who are active in their community associations. They're creating safer and more inclusive communities, and they're working to foster relationships across cultural lines. They're building opportunities for youth, creating spaces for arts, forwarding poverty reduction strategies, helping new Canadians, and promoting local businesses. Some of these organizations include Momentum, the 12-community safety initiative, the Calgary Immigrant Educational Society, the Calgary Centre for Newcomers, and the Cornerstone Youth Centre.

At the heart of our riding is 17th Avenue S.E., or International Avenue, and its motto is Around the World in 35 Blocks. I'm not sure there's anywhere else in Calgary that you can eat dinner at an Eritrean restaurant or Vietnamese restaurant or Ethiopian restaurant, then head over for dessert at a German bakery and then finish off your night with some karaoke at a Filipino bar. The 17th Avenue BRZ has worked tirelessly over the years to promote our area and has some amazing plans for improvements in the future. They're working towards the eventual improvement of International Avenue into a multimodal boulevard with dedicated transit lanes, wide, safe sidewalks, and bike lanes. The BRZ and community have worked tirelessly to propel the area into the award-winning vision that was brought forward a number of years ago through the International Avenue design initiative. Improvements are much needed as the street is central to the 50,000 residents that live near the avenue.

Other projects to reduce poverty are under way. A positive step in the right direction is work that the communities have brought forward on limiting payday loan lenders. The interest on these loans can be a huge burden and contributing factor to the incidence of poverty, and this is a piece of work that I will continue to work on at a provincial level.

Now, there is still much work to be done. Reading through the past speeches of Mr. Hawkesworth, Mr. Pashak, and Mr. Amery, I see that my riding's issues have not changed much in 40 years. We still have high numbers of children living in poverty, high numbers of constituents without a high school education, and there are still issues with crime in the area. I have much hope, though, that in co-operation with the community groups that we've mentioned, our new NDP government can make a difference. We can initiate plans that will bring all stakeholders together to create a pathway to success to ensure that these are not still issues 40 years from now. In the past Calgary-East has seemingly been a footnote in the considerations of various levels of government. It is my intention and my passion to change that. It is my passion to change Calgary-East from being a footnote to becoming a headline. Our focus on education, poverty reduction, and fairness, as mentioned in the throne speech, will make my riding a better place for all of its residents.

I got into politics for a few reasons. As a teacher in the Calgary public board I was tired of the lack of care paid to education by the previous government. I was tired of larger class sizes, less education assistance, less prep time, and less support for the 70 per cent of my students with ESL needs. As a scientist and social justice advocate I was tired of a government that always put the priorities of industry over those of the environment and our First Nations brothers and sisters. I was tired of unnecessary tax on our working people. I think Mr. Hawkesworth put it well in his maiden speech when he said: I want a society "where quality education and opportunities are available to all Alberta children, regardless of the economic circumstances in their home environment ... where people are valued for being people, not valued simply by what they produce or [what] they earn. I want a society which recognizes ... the true value of labour [and] its ability to give expression and meaning to the human soul."

The NDP also runs in my blood. My grandfather Alan Bush ran against Grant Notley in 1968. He did lose that race and was subsequently run out of Grande Prairie, which is why I grew up on Vancouver Island and not in Alberta, but his passion for democratic socialism lived on.

I want to take this opportunity to thank my amazing husband and partner, who helped me tirelessly on my campaign, shares my vision for the future of Alberta, and is at home right now with our two small children. I am so lucky to have his unwavering support.

I'm so proud to be a part of this new NDP government, that is breathing life into politics in this province, a government committed to caring for our air and our water, a government committed to investing in the future through education, a government committed to reducing inequality. As a mother of young children, just 10 months and two and a half years old, to have a ministry for the status of women is no small thing, and I'm very hopeful that Leg. daycare is forthcoming.

I'm truly grateful and humbled to have the opportunity to represent the people of Calgary-East. I thank them for the trust that they have placed in me. Calgary-East and Alberta are amazing places to live, and I promise to work tirelessly for you with the NDP government to make them even better.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. member wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? Questions or comments? The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, I grew up in Marlborough Park, and I understand those challenges. My father was a single parent. We grew up in Georgian Village. I went to Dr. Egbert school, and – you know what? – not everything in Calgary-East was bad, as much as sometimes it gets a bad rap. I'm living proof of that. So as we debate bills in this House, as we debate law, know this. Somebody from Calgary-East wants to see the very best of Calgary-East come true.

Talking to my fellow mate here from Calgary-West, him being a police officer, myself being an advanced care paramedic, I spent a lot of my first part of my career at Forest Lawn, 12 station, so I've seen the best and I've seen the worst from that community. What I can tell you, again – and I'll go back – one of the inspirations for me as a kid: half of the guys I grew up with are in prison or worse. Half of the guys I grew up with are either police officers or they're paramedics, they're physicians.

Some of them have been in Legislatures. You know what? Our dear Premier, I think we can all agree, has served us well, whichever side of the House you come from, and that's the hon. Ralph Klein. That gentlemen came to my school, encouraged me. We saw him in that community all the time. So as we move forward, as we talk about past governments, as we talk about possible new governments, governments that just were and new governments like yourself, we should be talking about the very best this province has to offer, collectively how we can make it better.

And just when you think you couldn't imagine it, there's a kid from Marlborough Park, from a single parent, you know, who had paper routes there. My dad had a small business there. You know what? I thank the government. I thank the courage of the people in this House, past and present, to work on behalf of Albertans. I'm a success story because somebody cared. Let's continue that. I'll be happy to work with you in that, so thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I, too, would like to talk to the hon. member about the minimum wage because back in the time when the Member for Drumheller-Stettler had hair, there was a young fellow who went out to work for $2.50 an hour and was pleased to do it simply to get the experience. I did not demand the wage. I took it, and I earned it. I worked long hours, and I got expenses, and I learned experience from that. I'd like the hon. member to explain to me how she feels that demanding a certain wage will create that experience.

Ms Luff: I feel positively about the $15 an hour wage, and people in my riding feel positively about this. My husband teaches ESL for many new Canadian immigrants, and many of them are working 16-hour days just to make ends meet, and they're not demanding that $15 an hour wage. They're working. But they have to work 16 hours a day and then go to an English class so that they can possibly, maybe, make it to go to a university to get an education where then they might be able to get a job that pays them more than $15 an hour so they might be able to spend some time with their family. The fact of the matter is that we're not really talking about the 16-year-old kid here. We're talking about single mothers who don't have an option, who have to work two jobs, who don't have time to go home.

There are plenty of studies, as was mentioned by some of my colleagues earlier, that a $15 an hour wage actually creates retention. My husband, previous to teaching ESL – as I mentioned, he's a stand-up guy – managed a liquor store and wasn't able to retain any staff and was having to train new staff all the time because the owner refused to pay more than $11 an hour. The fact of the matter is that people making $11 an hour are constantly going to be looking for more because in Calgary to make a living you have to make at least – I'm not exactly sure of the number, but I think it's even higher. I think it's 17-something.

The fact of the matter is that it's just not feasible for most people to make that wage. We're not talking about doing it overnight. We're talking about doing it gradually, in consultation with business so that they have time to prepare for it. Many people in my riding, as I mentioned, are small-business owners, and they are with me on this.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to the throne speech. A truly historic time in our province. I'm also proud to be part of this important time in Alberta and a fresh, new possibility for Alberta that hopefully will leave a legacy that we can all in this House be very proud of.

I want to thank the people of Calgary-Mountain View, first of all, who elected me for the fourth time in spite of all my failings. [some applause] Thank you. I remember in the 2012 election a young New Democrat opponent in the campaign said to the people in our debate: friends, are you going to vote for this man when he's been here for eight years and hasn't changed the government yet? I apologized for not achieving a change of government in eight years, but we've now done it, and I'm very proud of that. With all due respect to many of the colleagues in the former government, it was time for change, and Albertans were very clear about that, and I think we will all be better for it.

I want to be a little bit historic here. I'm in my 66th year. I've worked from South Africa in my early years in medical practice to the Canadian north, Inuit, Métis communities, for six months. I've worked in the Philippines for a year and a half with my young family and in Asia for another brief period. What that really opened my eyes to was the profound impact of public policy, the profound impact of good politics and bad politics. For good or ill, politicians create the conditions for health, and they create the conditions for waste, disease, turmoil, and collapse.

We have a really important role, that is hard to measure, and many of us have avoided politics for some of those reasons – we’ve realized how profound it is, or we believe it has no significance to our lives – and many of the young people, including my own children, fail to see what relevance politicians have to their lives. So there’s this interesting dichotomy: profound impact on the one hand, the perception of profound impact, and a sense of trepidation to get into it; on the other, a real sense that it’s a waste of time, that it’s a game, that it’s, quote, politics.

Well, politics has a bad rap because, for me, politics is negotiating the public interest in the long term. Now, there are many different definitions of politics, but for me, whenever I talk to groups about the meaning of politics: we are negotiating here, folks. Everyone has an interest. Everyone has a vision. Everyone has a desired route to get there. We are here to negotiate the common interest for the long term. I think that if we keep that in the forefront, we will make good decisions, and we will be proud when we leave this place, whether we’re carried out or whether we’re kicked out or whether we leave voluntarily. We will be proud of what we’ve done here.

I guess I want to emphasize just how critical these times are in our world: the turmoil in the Middle East; the crisis we’re facing economically, with the oil prices and the job losses and those sorts of issues; the growing concerns about climate and the growing number of extreme weather events; refugees migrating out of their countries in desperate attempts to find a home and a secure place to raise their families; poverty, widespread poverty. I know that something like 20 per cent of the planet, 2 billion people, lives without fresh water and on a dollar a day, that sort of thing.

We have a huge responsibility to work together here as well as we can and to not let partisanship undermine good decisions in the public interest. We have a real opportunity to set aside some of that, think about our children, our grandchildren, our province, the province we love so dearly and want others to come to and have opportunities. We cannot squander this opportunity, particularly now, when there’s so much at stake on the planet. Everyone, I think, realizes how blessed we are in Alberta. Most Canadians realize the great potential of Alberta and of the rest of the country, but I think many of us have been frustrated by the partisanship that has in some ways undermined our best efforts as a team of people that are really looking for the best that we can bring forward for our future.

Really listening, respecting each other, genuinely looking for solutions, not being right but being honest, finding the truth as opposed to winning and losing: I really look forward to that possibility. Many of us felt that the past government had lost a sense of that. They projected a sense that they had the answers, that they weren’t prepared to really listen to changes because things were going pretty nicely the way they were, and they were benefiting from the way they were, so why wasn’t everybody happy with the way they were?

Well, we didn’t have a fair tax regime. We weren’t addressing the growing poverty and inequality in our society. We just weren’t. Access problems to education and health care were growing. We weren’t shifting to a preventive, community focus, that would be a tremendous financial savings. Human suffering would be reduced. And then we weren’t serious about climate change, the biggest crisis to hit our generation. So we needed change, and notwithstanding the fact that Albertans tried to give them a second, a third, and a fourth chance, any government at 44 years is past its best-before date. I dare say that even a Liberal government should be changed at 44 years, and I even said to people in my campaign: every century, you know, you should try a Liberal government.

Conscious Albertans are really aware of our domestic and international threats. They really are hoping that we will put our minds and hearts together and come forward with really thoughtful, wise policies, longer thinking than just these next few years. So when the New Democrats say to me, “We need time to put a budget together,” I say: “Take your time. Do it right. I don’t want a fast budget; I want the right budget.” But do your homework, use the best evidence, call in good experts, and I don’t mean Jack Mintz. There’s a guy that gets hundreds of thousands of dollars from Imperial Oil and runs the Calgary School of Public Policy. I’m sorry. I’ve told Jack that. I think he has to temper his comments in support of the oil industry. Am I getting off track?

We are now, hopefully, in a transient economic downturn. But make no mistake; the growing evidence suggests that our way of living, our way of working, our way of planning is failing. On a global level we are failing the future. We have to do better. We have to start thinking differently and working differently together. The war on carbon grows across the planet, and we must actively plan for a different future before we’re forced to in Alberta, before we have to tell the oil companies: “Sorry to see you go. Are you not going to clean up the mess?” We’ve got to start planning now and put in place a conservation plan, a new technology plan, and really move forward so that when they do finally have to move on, we have a strong economy and a strong energy future.

Our most pressing need, though, is to learn to live and work together respectfully, with genuine appreciation, as if our lives depended on it. They do. Our lives depend on finding some new ways forward together, ways that we don’t necessarily know and haven’t experienced fully yet in our homes, in our communities, in this Legislature. We may have to find some new ways to meet and talk, eat together, talk together, sort out our differences, and get on with what really is needed by Albertans.

Various populations around the world taught me that we must include the planet because, whether or not we’re ready, they’re coming to us, and we cannot turn them away forever. We have to have resilient, broad-thinking, creative ways of including them in our culture that really support them to the point where they can actually be successful and contribute to our society. Many today – I know them in Calgary – are very frustrated. They get six months’ funding, and suddenly they’re expected to function fully, and they cannot. They need more support than that. So one of the areas that I want to see improved is how we treat newcomers and engage them and help them transition, integrate into our society.

More than ever we legislators have to work together for long-term well-being. One hopes that our sophisticated public will not tolerate opposition for pure political advantage and will appreciate and vote for genuine cross-party meetings, consultations, knowledge sharing. Some of my Wildrose colleagues have tremendous things to teach me about small business and economic opportunity. My New Democrat colleagues across the way will teach me about how we can be more inclusive in our communities and support longer thinking and planning around our human potential. We have seen positive steps on this already, and I congratulate the government on some of those steps, that we’ve all talked about; for example, a mental health system, which I’m very privileged to be part of helping to hopefully shape and move forward.

Moving from opinion to facts and values is part of what I think our challenge is. We’ve operated a lot on opinion here in this House. We’ve operated a lot on ideology. We’ve operated a lot, in some cases, on political opportunity. We have not been focused on evidence, science, facts, and values. Let’s make sure we include all of those. Facts, science, and values have to be part of good public policy. I know that many people can say that, but at the end of the day, we have to acknowledge that some of our policies might not look as good for our party, but it will be better for the long term. We have to start biting the bullet, and that's what our job is over here, to hold you accountable when you think you're going to get away with something just because it may serve your short-term political interests.

Parties must show willingness to engage in the difficult questions of where the market, with limited foresight and no conscience, and where short-term profit fit into the larger issues of saving our future and ensuring that environmental limits are respected in development decisions.

Small business does have needs, and I know that, and I caution the New Democrats on how fast they're moving forward on the small-business tax. I, too, have heard from a number of people in my community, especially the Chinese restaurant down the street who says that they will lay off two of their people right away if it jumps to $15. Now, it's not going to $15 right away, but it's a significant increase for them, and they're just scraping by in this Chinese restaurant. So I don't know how you're going to measure that, but we think you should go slowly and measure impacts as you go and decide in the next two years whether to go to the full extent of where you're going.

I don't mind a government that changes its mind if it's got evidence and it comes to us and says: we've changed our mind because we see impacts here and there, and they're not what we thought. I respect a government that does that. Don't feel that you have to follow through just because you have said so without full evidence. All of us create platforms without full evidence. That's why we call in scientists and experts.

Our First Nations have to be included in any of our planning, and I certainly will be including them if I get a choice in this mental health review. They are the fastest growing population here, and they have to be meaningfully engaged. They cannot be tokens. They are tired of this so-called consultation where they come to the table, are told the facts, and then asked to agree or disagree, and then have to end up in court to actually get any resolution because they haven't really felt listened to. They have many challenges that we will never, never, never understand or appreciate fully.

The latter, as I mentioned, are the fastest growing population, and they continue to be at serious and increasing risk of illness, violence, and premature death: a tremendous opportunity for both greater contributions to our society if we help them to make it, and a tremendous opportunity for crisis and cost and chaos if we don't do a better job of integrating them into our culture.

It's equally clear that jobs and the new economic opportunities are there, and the government can provide some incentives without picking winners and losers. You have an opportunity to help small businesses move from the experiment to the full business opportunity and to stop the breakdown between that chain. I've met some people who are really helpful in that.

Thank you for the opportunity to say a few things. I have much more to say.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. My question to the hon. member is with regard to consultation with other experts around preparing for the budget. Obviously, we're going to have him facilitate part of that consultation around mental health, but did he have any other recommendations for health care consultations?

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you for the question. That's a very thoughtful issue to raise. I think we have a lot to learn from countries like Sweden, Scandinavian countries. They have put people, seniors and the poor, very much at the centre of a lot of their planning. They realize that there are billions and billions of dollars to be saved when we put people at the centre of our economic planning, let alone our social supports. As a result, they save billions of dollars on poverty, on homelessness, on seniors who are feeling neglected and isolated and depressed. They put serious investment in high-risk families before they get into the breakdowns and the drug addictions and the suicides.

They don't do everything right, but I have seen evidence in the literature and from talking to people who've lived there and worked there that they have come a long way in providing a culture of well-being, support, a sense of community, a mutual responsibility, that we've lost in this culture, a sense that health and prosperity begin – sometimes it ends – with a sense of community. When you feel supported, when you can lean on people, when you can gather ideas from other people, it opens up a lot of opportunities, economic and social, and even environmental changes that we all know would help create better – an example locally is the whole cosmetic pesticide issue that Calgary and Edmonton are debating. They want to continue spraying these chemicals over dandelions. Well, dandelions don't kill anybody, but chemicals do.

In the 21st century I can't say that I know what Scandinavia is doing about pesticides, but they're making longer term decisions. They're thinking longer term about innovation and wise use of resources, minimizing risk where they can, and putting up with minor inconveniences like dandelions when they realize that the cost benefit is so much in favour, and the long-term future and health are affected by that.

I think we could learn from First Nations about health. They have lived on the land. They have lived together. They have made decisions in a different way than we do. Their organizations tend to be flatter and less hierarchical. There are all kinds of values, spiritual values as well, respect for elders. There are a lot of things that First Nations, I think, could teach us about health and well-being.

Costa Rica has one of the best health – or did have; I haven't looked in the last five or 10 years. They spend a third of their budget on prevention. We spend 3 per cent of our budget on prevention and community. They have close to, maybe not really close – our infant mortality rate is somewhat similar to Costa Rica's, and they spend one one-hundredth per capita on health care that we do because they focus so much on community, mutual supports. They know they have little money, and they put it into water, sanitation, breastfeeding, immunization, kinds of basic home-care services that they can provide. So a third-world country like Costa Rica might have something to teach us about where to find that balance between high-tech medicine and the basics of keeping people in the community supported and well and active.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other comments under 29(2)(a)?

If not, I will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As one of the new members of this Assembly it is both an honour and a pleasure to rise today for the first time on behalf of the residents of Edmonton-Decore to address the Assembly and respond to the Speech from the Throne. I'm happy to begin by offering my sincere congratulations to all of my colleagues in this Assembly on their election victories and the hard work that they put in as well as the volunteers who supported them in those campaigns. With those victories, of course, comes great responsibility to represent each of our constituents and to represent all Albertans. I have no doubt that each of you will make them very proud.

I'd also like to congratulate you, Madam Speaker, on your appointment as well as our Speaker of the House. I have no doubt that your appointments to lead this great House in Alberta will be nothing less than stellar. I'm honoured and excited for the opportunity to work with both of you and all the new chairs of the committees.

I'd also like to thank my partner and soon-to-be wife, Natalya, whose love and support has kept me going since this journey began a little over two years ago. It seems, of course, like just yesterday that it really started, but the calendar actually has expired two years later.

I would also like to thank my friends and campaign team. Without them this maiden speech, of course, would not have been possible.

Madam Speaker, as the new Member for Edmonton-Decore I must say that I feel like the luckiest individual in this Assembly. I have been given the trust to represent an area that is a microcosm in the diversity of Alberta, with mature neighbourhoods in the south of the riding like Killarney or some of the newer neighbourhoods in the north like Crystallina Nera as well as everything in between like neighbourhoods such as Delwood, which will be celebrating their 50th anniversary here right away, and Evansdale, which is where I live.

Edmonton-Decore was of course established back in 2012 and named after Laurence Decore, who served as the member for then Edmonton-Glengarry as well as the Leader of the Official Opposition following a distinguished career in municipal politics. With a population of over 44,000 I have great pleasure interacting with people from all walks of life, all different age ranges, and all kinds of different backgrounds. Knocking on thousands of doors over the past two years, I was able to meet small-business owners, plumbers, accountants, oil patch workers, government employees, retired seniors, teachers, health care workers, lawyers, students, our military personnel, and so many others making a wide range of contributions to life and the economy here in Alberta.

What I found was a common theme among these diverse residents, a theme that was repeated over and over again door after door. They were looking for a government that would ensure that health care is there when they need it, a government that would ensure that quality education is available for all our children, a government that would look after our seniors as they looked after us when we were all younger, a government that treats everyone fairly and equally, including our indigenous and our LGBTQ sisters and brothers, a government that honours the contributions of those who have lived their lives in this province, and a government that ensures new futures for those freshly come from other places.

My pride in the responsibility of being the MLA for the people of this constituency is that these themes are ones that matter deeply to me personally. As I bring the voices of my constituents here, as I take the information about our decisions to them, I know that together we will be building an Alberta that will be a model of justice and success. Madam Speaker, I am so very proud to stand before you and this Assembly today as the representative for Edmonton-Decore because I know that the qualities that my constituents are looking for can and will be provided by the members of this Assembly and by the government that was elected for the people of Alberta by the people of Alberta.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and address the Assembly for the first time. I'd like to beg the patience of all members of the Assembly because I'm winging it here. I'd like to offer my heartfelt congratulations to the Member for Edmonton-Decore on his victory. I know that he's been working hard for a long time on this. You know, if I can share something with you, Member, in this private setting: I didn't think you were going to make it, but I'm very pleased that you did. I'm incredibly pleased that we're surrounded by a number of colleagues to assist us in our work. To watch the Member for Edmonton-Decore work single-mindedly on achieving the goal of being the elected member for his constituency has been inspirational. I know that this perseverance and dedication that he brings to the Legislature will serve the people of Edmonton-Decore and all of the people of Alberta very well indeed.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Any other member wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

If not, then I will recognize the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, here we go again, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to speak as the new Member of this Legislative Assembly for Strathmore-Brooks. It is truly a privilege to be a member of this great Assembly and to be heir to its traditions, its history, and its heritage. I was selected by the people of Strathmore-Brooks to be their representative in this House, and I will do my utmost to serve them well.

Strathmore-Brooks represents what has made Alberta great. The city of Brooks, the town of Strathmore, the county of Newell, and the county of Wheatland are as Albertan as Alberta gets. Its people are enterprising and hard working. They are rooted in the best of our traditions and our heritage, but they also are forward-looking and not afraid of change. They don't care if your great-grandfather came across the prairies in a wagon or if you landed at Calgary International in a WestJet 737. They do care if you work hard, contribute to your community, and do your best. They are ranchers, farmers, small-business people, and oil patch workers. They are the key sectors of our economy in Strathmore-Brooks that I will defend everyday.

I will stand up for keeping taxes competitive on local businesses. No society has ever taxed and borrowed its way to prosperity. It was as true in British Columbia and Ontario during the early 1990s as it has been in Greece over the last decade. It would be ignoring the evidence to believe that it will be any different here in Alberta today.

I was raised in a family where freedom and liberty were the ultimate political values instilled in me. My oma, Charlotte Fildebrandt, and opa, Gerhard Fildebrandt, were both forcefully expelled from their homelands and lived under the brutal oppression of socialism and communism in East Germany. I can remember my oma telling me about working on a farm under Stalin's rule. With the state confiscating most of the wealth produced on the farm, even it was a hungry place to be. They escaped to Munich and then to Canada because they never wished to live with war, with tyranny, or with socialism again.

They lit Wyatt's torch behind them as they left, refusing to be instruments that exist merely for the state's production quotas. They believed that at the root of a free society was the rule of law, where the government is constrained from itself, where the people understood and defended their freedom and were not willing to bargain it away for comfort or political correctness. Those deep beliefs were passed on to my father, Gerald, my sister Samantha, and myself.

My mother's side of the family brought another set of values. My great-grandmother was a Scottish war bride and, most unfortunately, an Old Labour socialist. [some applause] That may be the first and only time I am applauded by the NDP side and not my own members.

It seems the Fildebrandts would live with socialism again after all.

But she did have some redeeming qualities. She was Scottish. [some applause] From the Scots in the back here.

My grandparents on that side, Patricia and Gordon Graham, were typical of the people you'll find in the Ottawa Valley, where I'm from: hard-working, community-minded, and owners of a large stockpile of unregistered firearms. They passed on that deep passion for their community and their family to my mother, Kimberly, and my sister and myself.

Strathmore-Brooks is a place where you know your neighbours, where you know your local policemen and the teachers at your local school, where community matters. One of the most important ingredients to maintaining a strong local connection to communities in Strathmore-Brooks is ensuring that residents have access to proper, quality long-term seniors' care. The people of Strathmore have been promised and denied a quality seniors' care facility since 2008. They are tired of broken promises. They need a long-term seniors' care facility that has access to proper medical services. I want to work with the new government to ensure that this long-lost promise is finally fulfilled.

In Bassano the Newell Foundation has done incredible work to bring together people from the city of Brooks, the county of Newell, the town of Bassano, and many other community organizations. They have contributed hundreds of hours to putting together a plan for a truly visionary aging-in-community facility. They seek to give seniors from the region the independence, the choice, and the support that they need. The Newell Foundation and its volunteers have already done the work. All they need is for the provincial government to follow through with the final agreement. I will be reaching out to the Minister of Seniors and of Health to ensure that this community initiative does not fall through the cracks involved in a transition of power. It truly has the potential to become a model for seniors' care in rural Alberta right across this province.

Fighting for your constituents involves fighting for specific goals like these, but it also involves fighting for your principles more broadly. Too many people are elected to places like this and forget their principles at the door. This is not to say that we cannot make an honourable compromise in the name of getting a proverbial half-loaf of bread, but it is to say that we must never allow re-election to become our only goal. We must stand firm for the reasons that we came to this place. Now, this piece of advice is only meant for my Wildrose colleagues. My NDP friends' principles are most clearly incorrect, and I will spend the next four years trying to convince them of the error of their ways.

I've generally had a healthy distrust of politicians for most of my life. Serving six years with the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, I routinely made a pretty good time out of skewering politicians for wasting this and stealing that and generally being a bunch of weak-kneed careerists who would say or do anything just to keep their jobs. Then I started to get to know a group of folks in the previous Wildrose caucus. I began to trust many of them, believing them to be on the right side of history, perhaps even friends. Boy, I was wrong. I saw every single stereotype of the morally corrupt, self-serving politician confirmed before my eyes. I nearly gave up everything to do with public life and democracy, and I nearly even swore off voting.

Instead, I and my fellow caucus mates made the decision to prove them all wrong. We stuck to our principles when the going was tough. We refused to do the easy thing. We stood up for democracy, and we stood up for conservative values, and I will not check those values at the door. I will fight for limited government, for fiscal responsibility, for property rights, for gun rights, for freedom of speech and freedom of association, for individual liberty, for the right of the minority to be wrong no matter what the majority might think of them.

When my cynicism with politicians was turning towards doing something positive about it and running to represent the people of Strathmore-Brooks, I asked my wife, Emma, to keep me grounded. I asked her to never let me become so accustomed to this place, so entitled to my seat, or so blinded by my office that I would do what some of our predecessors did before us. I asked her to never let me lose sight of why I am here, others. I will do my outmost to do honour to the electors of Strathmore-Brooks, who entrusted me with their representation in our government.

God bless Alberta, and God bless Canada.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Deputy Speaker. It felt so good to speak once, I thought I'd take the opportunity again. I have a question for the Member for Strathmore-Brooks that I hope is taken in the good-natured spirit in which I intend it. I know that the organization that he used to represent, the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, was well known for travelling a debt clock around the country that continued to count how high the debt was going. Given the fact that NDP governments are proven by Statistics Canada to have the best record of fiscal responsibility of any political party across the country, I was wondering if the Member for Strathmore-Brooks knows if that debt clock goes down, because they're going to need it.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, Madam Speaker, in four years, when I've got his chair, it will go down. [interjections] Enough from the peanut gallery.

Madam Speaker, the most fun I've had in my career was travelling to every single corner of this province with the Alberta debt clock, where I got a bunch of people to sign a pledge, which they promptly broke. Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, the Member for Drumheller-Stettler, and the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat were the only three members who were incumbents of the House to sign the pledge who actually made it back here.

Madam Speaker, some NDP governments have balanced the budget from time to time; some have not. I grew up in Ontario under the Bob Rae government. He crossed the floor. In British Columbia, in Ontario, in Nova Scotia we have seen what NDP governments can do to balance the budget. But, you know, I generally hope for the success of this government in doing so. I genuinely do.

Now, I will say this. Some PC governments have not had a particularly good record of balancing the budget. But I'll say that the statistic he is referring to nationally lumps in PC as the word "conservative," which I might take some umbrage with. All Liberals across the country would include the B.C. Liberals. Many Liberals would take issue with that. But I would say that that statistic nationally does not include the Wildrose, and we will be 100 times out of 100.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. I want to make just a comment to the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks in congratulations on your first speech in the House. I want you to know that I have been the recipient of two letters of commendation from the Canadian Taxpayers Federation. I wish I'd saved them.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Speaker, there is something good in everybody.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wish to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Ms McKittrick: I just wanted to let the Member for Strathmore-Brooks know that he has a friend on this side of the House. It has been my pleasure to work in your constituency and to do a lot of the research that you alluded to around seniors and the need for senior housing in your riding. I know that the people of Brooks also need things like affordable housing, and they need employment, so I look forward to working with you from this side of the House to make sure that people in your constituency have the help that they need through some of the policies and the things that we are going to implement as the NDP government.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate.

The Deputy Speaker: With respect, hon. Government House Leader, you have already been recognized on the Speech from the Throne, and you can't adjourn debate. Someone else can, but you can't.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: I now move to adjourn debate on the responses to the Lieutenant Governor's Speech from the Throne.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 1 An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is my honour to rise and speak to Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta, which will amend the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. This bill will ban corporations and unions from making political contributions in this province and give back Albertans their voices in the Legislature.

During second reading I was glad to hear a number of positive comments and some proposed amendments. Albertans want these changes, and it's good to see that my fellow Members of the Legislative Assembly want them, too. I also appreciate the comments and questions raised. That's what good democracy is about, the opportunity to debate and the freedom to express opinions. I responded to many of the comments and questions during second reading, but at this time I'd like to highlight a few key points and expand upon my answers.

With respect to loans some of the hon. members brought up the section in the act that deals with loans. There were questions about the correct reporting consequences of prohibited contributions. There were also concerns expressed about the fact that interim financing was not excluded from this bill. Political parties, constituency associations, candidates, and leadership contestants are allowed to take out loans but only from authorized financial institutions. This is not new. It exists in the current legislation. What is new is that there are consequences if the borrower fails to reimburse corporations and unions who have made payments directly to those loans. If the borrower fails to reimburse the corporation's or union's payments on a loan before the borrower is required to file their financial statements under the act, then the loan payment is deemed to be a contribution. The borrower will have to reimburse whomever made the payment on their loan on their behalf.

The Chief Electoral Officer could also recommend prosecution. If prosecution proceeds, fines up to $10,000 could be imposed. Alternatively, the Chief Electoral Officer can impose administrative penalties.

Regarding the questions about the mechanisms to ensure correct reporting, hon. members will be reassured to know the Chief Electoral Officer requires detailed contribution receipts, including dates. As for loopholes, corporations and unions will not be able to funnel donations through individuals. Individuals are prohibited from donating funds that do not actually belong to them. A breach of these rules can be subject to administrative penalties and fines, similar to the consequences of making other illegal contributions.

As to why loans were not excluded in this bill, the loan provision is part of the existing legislation. This legislation, the new legislation, prohibits corporate and union donations. It does not make any changes to the existing ability of candidates to obtain loans. They will not be able to obtain donations from corporations or unions, but through interim financing they will continue to have access to temporary assistance to get their campaigns off the ground.

With respect to the June 15 effective date, Madam Chair, several hon. members expressed concerns that the effective date of the bill, June 15, 2015, could open the government up to possible court challenges. In a free and democratic society anyone can challenge legislation in court. That is their right. However, we are confident that these changes will stand up in court. Hon. members have suggested that it would make more sense to have the legislation become effective in July, at the end of the writ period. This would probably be easier, but it wouldn't be fair to Albertans. A deadline so far in advance would give political parties plenty of opportunity to fund raise from corporations and unions. This goes against the spirit of the bill, which is to refocus our politicians on Albertans and not on how much money could be collected as quickly as possible before a deadline.

With respect to the other suggested changes, there was also a discussion about other topics such as third-party advertising, campaign contributions, and government announcements during elections. Some said the legislation doesn't go far enough, and this government agrees with that statement. Bill 1 is just the beginning of our efforts to fulfill our campaign promises to reform democracy in Alberta. For this reason we have proposed a special legislative committee to look into all aspects of Alberta's elections. They will be reviewing aspects of the bill that haven't already been covered, including areas like third-party advertising and government announcements during election periods.

There is a lot to review, and it won't be a quick process. We knew this, but we wanted to ensure that this crucial change was included among our first pieces of legislation and fulfill a campaign promise near and dear to our hearts and the hearts of all Albertans. So to those who feel this bill doesn't go far enough, I encourage you to work with us. More changes are coming.

Madam Chair, this is an important piece of legislation that brings much-needed improvements to Alberta's democratic process. Albertans are the ones who brought us here. Our citizens deserve to have their voices heard. That's why I'm pleased to stand in support of Bill 1, and I urge all members to support it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment that I'd like to table. I'll wait until . . .

The Chair: Please do.

This amendment will be called amendment A1.

Go ahead, Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you again. I'm grateful for this opportunity to rise and contribute to the Committee of the Whole on this discussion of Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta. We are certainly moving through this process at a rapid pace, Madam Chair. I hope that we will still be able to give such an important piece of legislation the attention it deserves. The last thing we want to do is rush and do a haphazard job.

With that in mind, Madam Chair, I would like to make a few remarks on some of the particulars at the issue of this bill. Specifically, I would like to take time for a closer look at the retroactivity of this bill's provisions. I believe that there is a potential problem here, one that we have raised but which the minister has not adequately addressed, and that is why our caucus would like to propose an amendment to this bill with respect to the date it comes into effect. We would like to see the effective date of this bill changed from June 15 to July 6, which will be the first day after the election period we presently find ourselves in.

I understand that this government wants to avoid a run on donations, but we also think that it would be a shame for this bill to encounter a hang-up simply because of a rush to pass this in the middle of the election period. In principle, of course, we in this caucus support the intent of the bill, Madam Chair. We do not want to see it derailed on legality.

Perhaps we should take a moment to look at how donations during an election period work. During an election period donations are the sum of money without a date attached to them, unless it is a cheque, but dates on uncashed cheques are not exactly ironclad either.

Now, Bill 1 in its present form cites the date of June 15 as the effective date for corporate and union donations to be banned. An election period runs two months after the polling day. This year, since the polling day occurred on May 5, the last day of the election period will be on July 5. Clearly, June 15 is right in the middle of the current election period. The obvious question at hand is this: how would this ban on corporate and union donations, effective in the middle of the current election period, possibly be enforceable? This is especially concerning when we consider that donations during election periods have no dates attached to them unless they're deposited. How can we possibly expect the Chief Electoral Officer to track when donations were made in order to determine whether they occurred before or after the date of June 15? I can foresee this will be ripe for controversy, Madam Chair.

In addition to the enforceability, there seems to be a legitimate issue in fairness, particularly when it comes to candidates and CAs who have campaign debts. A candidate could very legitimately have planned to spend the next two weeks asking unions or corporations who may have supported him or her or even pledged money to help him or her pay for campaign spending. I assume cheques written before June 15 but not cashed yet are okay. But what about promised donations?

The problem with rules like this is that they can't be enforced. It actually rewards those willing to bend rules by getting donations backdated. It's all a bit messy. It seems a bit unfair and perhaps, worse yet, is potentially subject to court challenge. We want to avoid the eventuality of candidates making a legal issue out of this in the event that they were counting on unions and corporations to pay off deficits run up in the course of an election. If that were the case, the entire bill would be in danger of being tossed out. This would not be good for anyone, Madam Chair, particularly the mover of the bill but, really, for all of us. As this is our first bill that we pass in the Assembly, it will reflect on us.

As is well known, the Wildrose has long been an advocate of restricting donations to Alberta residents. In fact, my colleagues here all campaigned on it. We do not want this bill to be rejected on the basis of a court challenge. Given how ambiguous the legalities are surrounding the effective date of June 15, it seems odd that this date was pinpointed in the first place. Would it not be more effective to select a date after the election period has expired? We have a really hard time believing that the Chief Electoral Officer agrees that this is the best way to go. We've heard from people in his office that this is, in fact, problematic and that July 6 would be a much cleaner date.

We want this bill to be successful, Madam Chair, and this small change could easily contribute to making sure this bill passes without undue controversy and court challenges. It would be a shame to go through all this work for such a worthy cause only to have its sound principles defeated on a mere technicality. We believe that Albertans would be far better served if the date of this bill was pushed back to July 6, after the expiry date of the current election period. Albertans deserve this legislation, and waiting just a few more weeks for it to take effect is worth while. It ensures that confusion of the retroactivity can be avoided.

Confusion aside, Madam Chair, we need to revisit the question of enforceability. By pushing the date back to July 6, we enact legislation during a period in which donations can be tracked and documented far more thoroughly. As I've said, donations during election periods often have no dates attached to them, making the tracking of them much more difficult for the Chief Electoral Officer. From July 6 onward that problem disappears.

It would be embarrassing for us all but particularly the government if the first bill we were to pass in this legislative session ends up getting bogged down in court proceedings. It would be even worse if it was ruled unconstitutional. We want to help this government to get off on the right foot and to make sure of delivering on promises of positive change for the province of Alberta. Clearly, an unconstitutional bill would not be a good way of doing this. So let's stop the potential problem before it becomes a real problem.

Madam Chair, this is really a minor amendment. It does nothing to change the principle of the bill, which, as our caucus has noted repeatedly, is more than sound. Albertans have waited a long time for this, and we want to help to ensure that they get it in a form that is efficient and effective. We want to make sure this principle becomes law. If anything, this amendment should only strengthen the principle of this bill.

At the end of the day we are advocating for transparency and accountability. Does making legislation effective as of June 15 contribute to transparency and accountability? I don't think it does, Madam Chair, not when accurate dates are not attached to donations made, not when it is impossible to even enforce. In order for a piece of legislation to be both transparent and accountable, it must be enforceable and it must be dealing with hard, measurable facts. By having this legislation be effective as of early July, we can achieve both of these goals.

We think that supporting this amendment will help the government to pass a law that reflects democratic principles to the strongest degree possible. Government members who value accountability ought to support this amendment. Also, I certainly hope that the Justice minister will lead the way to help us correct this bill. The minister has a chance to take a good idea from the opposition and use it to improve her bill. One little change can make Alberta politics all the better. We have a chance here to remedy the shortcomings of this bill for the good of Albertans.

The bill is a promising first step, Madam Chair, but we should always be looking to do better. The next step towards improvement is adopting this amendment. Political influence is rightly placed in the hands of Albertans, not in those of unions or corporations. We all know this on both sides of the House, so let's reflect that with this piece of legislation. Let's pass something that can be enforced. Let's make this bill effective July 6, not in the middle of a current election period.

We are in this together, Madam Chair. It is in all of our shared interests to ensure that union and corporate donations are eliminated from the electoral process. At the very least, let's do it right. I will certainly be giving my support to this prudent amendment. I would encourage all of the hon. members from all of the caucuses to do the same.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you for the comments. I remain of the view – and I would encourage everyone to support this – that the effective date of June 15 better serves the purpose of this legislation. Not only does it prevent a run on donations; we remain of the opinion that this would withstand a court challenge. We do have confirmation from the Chief Electoral Officer that donations, when made to political campaigns, are made with dates on them, and those dates are usually reflected in the tax receipt received. So I'm not really sure how I can further address that.

In terms of the constitutionality it's my understanding that the presumption against retroactivity is a principle of statutory interpretation and not a constitutional principle. I'm not really sure what can be meant by saying that it's not constitutional.

I will close by saying that the June 15 date supports Albertans. It supports them in having their voices heard right away and in having this legislation come into place as soon as it was proposed to prevent a sort of rush on donations. Ultimately, we don't believe that it will be subject to successful challenge. Whether or not it's subject to challenge is obviously not in our hands.

I would encourage everyone to vote against the amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise today and speak in support of this amendment. Madam Chair, I fully support

Bill 1. Wildrose believes in putting democracy in the hands of everyday Albertans. We believe that banning corporate and union donations is a critical step towards doing that. Pay-to-play politics is the way that politics have been done here in Alberta for quite awhile, and we want to put the power of democracy back into the hands of Albertans regardless of their financial backing or their ability to donate. This is the Wildrose policy, and we're grateful that the NDP have adopted it, but we believe this bill needs a few changes, and we would like to help fix some of the problems.

I'm a bit worried about the date the bill goes into law. The concern is that the retroactivity could leave . . .

The Chair: Sorry. Hon. member, I need to recognize a point of order.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but under 23(h), (i), and (j), particularly (i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member," I just wanted to remind the member and the House that the New Democratic Party has had this policy for a very long time, and it was recently adopted by the Wildrose Party.

Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Chair, here we are. It's coming up to 10 o'clock on the second night of this great Legislature, that we had the pleasure of being elected to, a position where we were assured we would not be debating legislation well into the evening while my children are sleeping and most of Edmonton is thinking about getting into bed. We have heard all sorts of statements from the government talking about how wonderful the NDP policy is. We've heard statements from the opposition about our policy.

Clearly, this is not a point of order and merely a matter of debate. It's totally ridiculous to rise in this place and say: we had the policy before you had the policy; look how awesome we are. This is a matter of debate. It is not a point of order. It's one thing to rise in this place and say: it's our policy. It's another to rise on a point of order to dispute who had the policy first. It's neither here nor there. It's a wonderful Wildrose policy. We're glad we've found some common ground.

Let's get on with the important matters of the House and not quibble about who had a policy first. This is a matter of debate and not a point of order.

The Chair: Hon. members, this issue seems to be more of a disagreement about facts, and I don't think it's a point of order. However, thank you for clarifying the record.

The hon. Member for Airdrie to continue.

Debate Continued

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just to finish here, I find that this is odd to have the date of this bill take effect immediately, even before the campaign period is over. I urge all members here to join me in voting in favour of this amendment to change the date that the law would take effect from June 15 to July 6.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: I'm informed by the table, Madam Chair, that my motion in committee to shorten the bells to one-minute intervals does not apply to the House. Can I just have some clarification? Because I'm happy to move it again if I need to.

The Chair: Yes. The word is that the motion you made only applied in Committee of Supply, so if you want to do that again, you would have to make another motion.

Mr. Mason: May I do that now?

The Chair: Okay. All right.

Mr. Mason: Then I would seek unanimous approval from the House to shorten the bells to one-minute intervals.

The Chair: For the balance of Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Mason: For the balance of Committee of the Whole.

The Chair: Moving back to debate on the amendment, any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in favour of the amendment. Unfortunately, there are issues with the legislation the NDP has proposed. That is why we have Wildrose. We are here to help the government make legislation stronger and fairer than what has been proposed. It would be wise to make the effective date early July, when the campaign period officially closes.

Madam Chair, sometimes when you make ad hoc announcements and changes in the middle of an established, legislated timeline, you get yourself in trouble. In general we oppose the idea of retroactive legislation. In this case it would change the rules governing the current election period before it even closed, which might get the whole bill thrown out by the courts. This legislation is too important to get sent to the courts so early on. No one wants the government to be liable to court challenges from candidates or other parties who are counting on unions or corporations to pay off election debts. It would be an utter embarrassment for the governing NDP and the Wildrose Official Opposition, but mostly for the government, if this first bill ends up getting challenged in the courts or even ruled unconstitutional. Let's not let that happen, and let's pass the amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other member wishing to speak on the amendment?

Mr. Schneider: Madam Chairman, I rise to speak to Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta. Kudos to the NDP government for adopting a policy long advocated by the Wildrose, the banning of corporate and union donations. Wildrose has tried to make this happen in the past only to be scuttled at every turn by PC majorities. This is a chance to level the political playing field. The big money from business and big labour puts a perception of undue influence in people's minds. We live in an era where perception is reality. As such, we need to curb the influence of these special interests. The PCs neglected the grassroots because they became dependent on big money. I congratulate the NDP for being selfless and willing to forgo the union donations that they are known for.

That being said, Wildrose has identified a risk here with the legislation as proposed, and we wish to prevent embarrassment to the government. It would be an utter embarrassment for the governing NDP and the Wildrose Official Opposition, but mostly the government, if the first bill ends up getting challenged in the courts because someone decided to arbitrarily change a date before the existing legislated date came to pass. This legislation is too important to get sent to the courts so early on. No one wants the government to be liable to court challenges from candidates or other parties who are counting on unions or corporations to pay off election debts.

Let's not make that happen, Madam Chairman, and let's pass the amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other member wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is a great privilege and honour to stand in the House for the first time to join in the debate on Bill 1 and speak to this amendment we have proposed. First of all, I'm very glad to see this legislation brought before the House. I don't think it's possible to overstate just how important it is that we begin to restore trust, ethics, and integrity to our political system. Bill 1 aims to do that in part, and I am very supportive of its goals and measures. I'm proud to be part of a caucus that has long believed in limiting special interests, interests with vast financial resources, from exercising undue influence on political parties and, by extension, our democratic institutions.

Albertans spoke loudly and clearly with their ballots and pencils this past election. We said that we wanted a political system we could trust. We wanted accountability, accountability of our government to the people, and we wanted the assurance that those who represent and serve Albertans act with integrity and honesty. As an everyday Albertan and especially as an elected representative I found it disheartening to hear from so many who lost faith in the system. It is discouraging when those you represent feel that their voices cannot be heard fairly.

As appreciative and excited as I was to be elected on May 5, I know that the voters put us to work that day. They gave us our marching orders and sent us to the Legislature to begin the important task of rebuilding confidence in our political system piece by piece. One such piece in this rebuilding of trust is Bill 1. It goes straight to the fundamental democratic principle of putting the citizen, the Albertan, at the top of the political machinery rather than being caught under its weight.

We certainly expect and deserve accountability from our government, and we are truly committed to that principle. We must ensure that government serves the people and not the other way around. To this end, we must ensure that our political system is influenced by Albertans, free individual citizens, and only Albertans. I am pleased to be here discussing a bill which strives to accomplish just that by removing the potential for undue and improper influence on political parties by corporate and union special interests, and I'm encouraged by the constructive debate which has accompanied it in this House.

In the interest of strengthening the bill, I will be supporting the amendment put forward by my colleague. Make no mistake; my desire to see the bill amended is in no way a reflection of any disapproval of the spirit of the legislation and the principles it represents. My desire is only to see this legislation strengthened, and I implore all members here to do the same by voting in favour of this amendment. I have spoken about this legislation as being a key piece of an overall move to improve the health of democracy in Alberta. Given its importance we ought to double our resolve to get this bill done right.

I am concerned that the good work this House has set in motion may be undone by a court challenge regarding the retroactive provision of the bill. I worry that we will expose the legislation to legal battles over its constitutionality by setting the effective date in the midst of a campaign period, a campaign period that has still not ended. I believe that it would be wiser and more prudent to amend the effective date to the end of the current campaign period in early July. As important as it is to get those corporate and union limitations into law, we should be judicious and fair about applying this new law to those candidates who were operating under the old rules.

I also question how enforceable the retroactive provision would be given that contributions are not required to be reported with dates attached. Again, with the potential for court challenges it would not be wise to expose this legislation to turmoil and uncertainty over a provision that might not even make a practical difference.

Again, I am proud to stand and endorse a piece of sensible legislation that we as a party have been willing to fight for in the past. This is proof that we can work together on common ground to make improvements to our political system and the governance of the province. Let's continue the spirit of co-operation and constructive debate by supporting respectable, measured, and reasonable amendments such as this one. Let's show Albertans, who sent us to work, that we can produce meaningful, lasting, and effective change. Let's strengthen our democratic institutions by voting in favour of this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you for allowing me to rise and speak to this amendment. Bill 1 is a historic piece of legislation in that it is the first government bill to be tabled by a party other than the PCs since 1971. You should be congratulated. It's always easier to read about history than to write it, but today we are debating a piece of history. It's interesting that one of the amendments that the Wildrose is proposing stops the government from trying to in effect rewrite history by introducing retroactive legislation. In general, the Wildrose opposes the idea of retroactive legislation because it changes the rules in mid-game.

Now, I've been a teacher for 30 years. I've been a basketball coach for 30 of those years. As a basketball coach I can imagine what would happen if we changed the rules in mid-stride, if after game 2, say, of the NBA finals with Golden State I was suddenly told that the three-pointer was no longer allowed. This would have serious consequences. While I don't see the political equivalent of a Steph Curry or Golden State in this Assembly today, the point is that changing the rules mid-season is not considered fair, and that's why leagues don't do it.

In the same way, this government proposes to make this bill retroactive to a date that is in the middle of the election period. While I support Bill 1 in principle, in its present form it cites June 15 as the effective date for corporate and union donations to be banned. But, Madam Chair, given that an election period runs for two months after the polling, which this year was May 5, the last day of the election period is July 5. It makes much more sense to have the bill become effective after the current election period comes to a close.

I can see what the intent was, to avoid encouraging more last-second donations from unions and corporations, but this goal is not worth the many problems in terms of a level playing field and legal challenges that arise from making the bill retroactive to June 15. As far as fairness goes, I'm thinking predominantly of candidates who may have campaign debts. That goes beyond party lines. They may have had pledges of support that they were counting on but couldn't or hadn't collected yet or plans to hit up corporate or union supporters in the final push to clear their debts, and this is pretty unfair to them.

Situations like that make me think that a lawsuit is going to challenge this law. It would be a real shame to have the first piece of legislation, a historic piece of legislation by your new government and the first piece of legislation this 29th Legislature will pass, get tied up in the courts or even ruled unconstitutional, just as unfortunate as if the NBA board of governors had changed the rules mid-playoffs to change the historic outcome of the NBA finals this year. I therefore speak to and will support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just have a quick two questions for the minister. While I am certain that the CEO of Elections Alberta told you that technically there is a date on donations, did he tell you that those dates would be accurate, and did he agree or think that your retroactive date would not be problematic? That's not what we're being told.

The Chair: Hon. minister, do you wish to respond?

Ms Ganley: Just to respond very briefly to those questions, political entities are required to report the date on which they receive donations. Whether or not they're doing that or whether or not they choose to break the law, I mean, I can't really speak to that. I can only speak to what the law says, and that is that they are required to report the date on which they receive donations.

In terms of the second question – I'm sorry; I'm going to ask you to repeat it.

Mr. Nixon: The question is simple. When you talked to Elections Alberta, did they think that retroactively putting in this legislation was not going to be problematic? Every indication that we are having from them is that it will be.

Ms Ganley: In terms of the legal opinion on the fact that the challenges to the bill would unlikely be successful on that basis, those were from the department. What we had asked the Chief Electoral Officer was whether or not parties are required to record the dates, and the answer to that question was yes. They are required to record the dates on which donations were received.

Mr. Nixon: Did he say that he supports the retroactive date?

Ms Ganley: I think the point on this front is not whether or not – honestly, I don't have the e-mail in front of me. What I can tell you is that we are confident that this date is supportable and that it will withstand a court challenge.

Mr. Nixon: So it would be fair to say they didn't support the date?

Ms Ganley: No, that wouldn't be fair to say. I said that I don't have the e-mail in front of me in terms of what exactly we canvassed.

Mr. Nixon: Did you discuss the fact that you were going to bring in retroactive legislation to deal with the Election Act with Elections Alberta, and if you did, did they have concerns with bringing in retroactive legislation in the middle of a writ period? It's a very simple question.

Ms Ganley: And I will once again give my very simple answer, which is that we are confident that this bill will withstand a court challenge as presently worded.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak on amendment A1? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Chair, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice on what date she consulted with Elections Alberta.

The Chair: Yeah. This is kind of drifting away from the amendment itself. It's to be a debate on the amendment, and this going back and forth is not really going anywhere.

No other members to speak on the amendment?

We're going to call the question on amendment A1, as proposed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

[The voice vote indicated that amendment A1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:13 p.m.]

[Two minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. Are there any further comments, questions?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: The question has been called. All those in favour of Bill 1?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Chair: My apologies. I forgot that there are three parts to this bill. We'll have to just start again.

Are you ready for the question on Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta? On the clauses . . .

Mr. Cooper: Madam Chair, we have some significant amendments that the Government House Leader has agreed would be heard this evening. I don't think I saw a call for other amendments or speakers, just moving to the question. I would suggest that this is out of order and that we should be able to proceed at Committee of the Whole.

The Chair: Hon. member, I did ask if there were any other members who were wishing to speak or comment on the bill.

Mr. Mason: Madam Chairman . . .

Mr. Cooper: Time allocation now, too, or what's the plan?

Mr. Mason: Do you want me to change it, or do you just want to keep talking?

Madam Chairman, it is true that we knew the Wildrose opposition had more amendments. It was unfortunate they were not in a position to make them when they were called. But since the House leader is now here, I propose that we allow them to move their amendments.

The Chair: All right. Are there any further speakers on the bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm glad to rise again to address another aspect of Bill 1. Along with it an amendment we would like to propose will better enable this bill to fulfill its intent. To reiterate, we appreciate what the government is trying to accomplish by bringing this bill before the House, and that is admirable, but that is not to say that we can't make it better. So directly to the point, our caucus would like to amend Bill 1 to more clearly restrict donations-in-kind so unions and corporations can't indirectly donate to parties by supplying their workers, equipment, or property to political campaigns. I have 95 copies here of an amendment that Parliamentary Counsel has approved, and I'd like to add a definition of contribution to help resolve the ambiguity currently in the act.

I will wait for them to be distributed.

The Chair: This will be amendment A2.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Chair, for the ability to expediate this process, would you mind if the hon. member continued while the amendments were being passed out?

The Chair: Yes, I was just going to ask for him to continue. Please.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. Given that we're prohibiting direct donations from unions and corporations, the matter of indirect donations becomes even more important. The matter is something people at the chief electoral office have confirmed is already too much of a loophole. It is not unusual to hear of unions and corporations giving office materials to political campaigns. It is also not unusual to hear of union staff or corporate staff being sent during work hours to help the candidates campaign. Neither case ought to be acceptable.

Now, it is one thing to ban direct donations to political campaigns, candidates, constituency associations, and so on. That is comparatively easy to monitor and enforce if we get it right. But it is another matter to address the problem of indirect donations. We need to be much more vigilant and explicit when it comes to indirect donations as they are often far more innocuous. There is presently a section elsewhere in the act, section 22, which addresses the topic of giving real property or goods to a campaign or party. However, it contains nothing clear with regard to donating staff or services, nor is the topic addressed anywhere else in this act. It strikes me as odd, Madam Chair. This is because we all know perfectly well that such donations occur now.

Should this bill pass, and union and corporate monetary donations be made illegal, donations of a more indirect nature can be expected to become even more commonplace. We in this caucus do not think it is appropriate, and I'm sure everyone here would agree that it goes against the spirit of the bill. If such donations were to become even more commonplace, this would risk giving the perception of undue influence of unions and corporations in the political process, thereby defeating the entire purpose of this proposed legislation. It is clear that we need to address this adverse consequence of the bill as it's currently written. We are here to help the government, and to that end we encourage the hon. members opposite to support this amendment. Surely we can agree that donations in staff and materials are clear forms of political contributions. In ways this is worse than monetary donations. By donating staff, unions and corporations take valuable work hours and direct them to influence the democratic process. At this point they might just as well be a political party in their own right.

Let us not forget the risk of employee coercion inherent in this practice. Unions and corporations are capable of putting undue pressure on those that they employ, sometimes even without conscious or malicious intent. It is very important that Albertans not feel pressure to engage in political activities not of their choosing. This is fundamental to freedom of speech, the very foundation of our democratic principles. Albertans need to feel unrestrained regarding the policy viewpoints they chose to endorse or oppose. It is not the place of unions and companies to tell their employees or members how to vote let alone who they should actively campaign for or which policies they should advocate for. Our members opposite, for example, might be surprised to find out how many of their unionized colleagues actually support us in the voting booths. This is all in addition to the obvious unfairness of candidates leveraging the resources of entire nonpolitical organizations for political purposes.

Madam Chair, the ability of unions and corporations to make these types of indirect contributions to political causes was already a significant loophole in the existing legislation. It is important to note that indirect contributions are still contributions nevertheless. A contribution can refer to money, real property, goods, or services. Just because we term them "indirect" doesn't make them any less impactful in the real results and consequences. Addressing this issue is long overdue, and this bill is incomplete and ineffective if it does not include provisions that close this gaping loophole. Given that we will be taking away the ability to make direct donations in monetary forms, it will be even more important to tighten the loopholes, allowing indirect donations right away; otherwise, this legislation would not achieve its aim. We have a real chance to make this meaningful piece of legislation here. Let's not waste it. We have a real chance to strengthen the voices of Alberta residents in this election. Let's not pass that up.

I urge the government to accept this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Anyone wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thanks, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise this evening and speak to the amendment, an amendment that I think is sound and reasoned, that has been well thought out when it comes to strengthening a piece of legislation. I spoke yesterday in this House about the best idea winning and not being about partisan politics or our idea or your idea. Where the idea originates is not what's key. What's key here is that we can all agree that getting unions and corporations out of politics is a positive step forward for all Albertans and certainly for those who have elected us. I just think that while we have the opportunity, we might as well go ahead and do everything that is within our power to ensure that that's exactly what happens.

Here we have some situations that I have been informed of where some significant law offices in downtown Calgary had encouraged employees to have the afternoon off work if they would go and campaign on one particular campaign or another. We have a significant gift from a corporation to a political campaign that's taking place, and this gift has the ability to influence the outcome of an election. I have also heard reports of large union organizations strongly encouraging their employees to do the same.

Let me be clear. I have no problem with a union member or an employee of a company that wants to engage in the political process on their own time. In fact, I think we should be doing more to encourage all Albertans to engage in the political process. But when it comes to a corporation, a law office in downtown Calgary, a union, or any large company encouraging employees with, "We'll pay you to take the afternoon off provided that you go work for this campaign," that in anyone's terms is a contribution, and here today in this House we are making the effort to ban those types of contributions.

In fact, I'm quite surprised that it appears that the government doesn't also want to ban these types of contributions. If the government is truly serious about going all the way, about allowing the best idea to win, then they, too, will support this reasoned amendment that is based on ensuring that we get corporations and unions out of the political process and focusing on the things that they do best.

You know, I look at members in this Assembly, and I'm curious to know if there are, in fact, folks who may have received donations in kind from unions or corporations. I don't know the answer to that question. Perhaps some other members are also curious. I think what's fundamental this evening is that we have the opportunity to make a bill even stronger for our province, to get unions and corporations out of politics and focusing on the things that they do best.

I strongly encourage all members of the Assembly to consider the amendment thoroughly, to consider that we have the opportunity to create a culture in this place where ideas come from all sides of the House. I can tell you that in the last three years the Official Opposition caucus, the Wildrose Official Opposition caucus, sat in many of these desks. There were two amendments accepted by the previous government. I believe that it's very possible and, in fact, quite likely that we had many more good ideas than two.

I think we can start off this Legislature with the right foot, the left foot if you prefer, but one foot in front of the other and agree together that this bill can be strengthened, and I encourage you to do that.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. minister and then the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Given the lateness of the hour I will make the comment once and I won't address it further. My friends can continue to raise the point if they like. There are many things that this bill doesn't do. There are many changes that this bill doesn't make. This bill bans corporate and union donations. In addition to this bill, there will be a committee going forward that will propose additional amendments and additional changes.

In the present case, in terms of the definition of services, off the top of my head I can come up with a couple of complications. For instance, I was working a full-time job when I was campaigning. During the course of my campaign I happened to have some times when I was off work when normally I would have been expected to be at work. Potentially, that would put my employer on the wrong side of this legislation; i.e., having made a donation of services in kind to a political candidate, that being me.

The point is that, much like many of the other amendments having to do with third-party advertisers, maybe some of these things are good ideas, and maybe they will come up in committee, but for right now our intention was to put forward a bill which banned corporate and union donations, which fulfilled a very clear election promise that we made and which, I think, has support of the House.

I would urge everyone to vote down this amendment.

Mr. Clark: Madam Chair, I rise to speak against this amendment. I agree with the comments of the hon. Minister of Justice that this bill doesn't do everything, and I know that we didn't intend it to. There is an opportunity to have this conversation, a broader conversation about this in the committee, because I think it is an important conversation.

However, I see several problems with the concept itself. It is very difficult to track and prove what is in-kind donation. The hon. minister has come up with one example. If a postal worker does a literature drop for your campaign, is that something that needs to be counted? If my wife, who is a physician, puts a Band-Aid on the scraped knee of a campaign worker, does that salary for that moment in time count against your campaign? Can an accountant be your CFO? Could a lawyer interact with Elections Alberta, providing guidance and advice to your campaign? These are all things that we've dealt with in our campaigns, and it adds a remarkable complexity.

I understand the rationale behind the amendment, and I understand what we're trying to achieve here, but I really worry that we'd be overly constraining participation in the democratic process in doing this. How do we define what is on one's own time? While we may hear stories of law firms or others granting people time off to work on a campaign, I think that is actually a legitimate democratic expression of what people and organizations choose to do. It is an idea where perhaps when we have the time to discuss in the special committee further changes to campaign financing and democratic renewal, we can discuss it further at length.

With that, I will end my remarks and say that I'm going to vote against the amendment. Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: You know, perhaps the hon. member, the independent member from Calgary-Elbow, didn't like the example that I gave. But let's say that a corporation donated, say, a bus for a political organization to use for their campaign. This is a sizable donation in kind. They haven't asked for any compensation, they're not being paid, but they've donated a significant asset to a political campaign, perhaps a minivan for a leader of a political party to drive around in or, you know, a bus, an aircraft.

An Hon. Member: A Winnebago.

Mr. Cooper: A Winnebago. A Winnebago is a perfect example of a corporate donation that, moving forward, wouldn't be allowed.

So we're not just talking about an employee being asked to take time off work. There are all sorts of assets of gifts in kind that one could give, and they could amount to a significant amount of money. You know, I know that the hon. member from wherever he's from, Drumheller-Stettler, has a very . . .

Mr. Mason: You mean a lot to him.

Mr. Cooper: It's just where he lives that doesn't mean that much.

He has a very sizable riding, and if he needed to, say, get from one side of the riding to the other in some expedient manner for some reason and somebody wanted to donate the use of a helicopter, for example, to perhaps fly a banner – who knows what the gift in kind is that comes from a corporation? This is the challenge, that we are creating a significant loophole – not in the words of the Chief Electoral Officer but the words of people from his office – where corporations and unions can find a way around the legislation that we're passing.

While I fully agree that the purpose of the bill was to ban corporate and union donations, which we've said on numerous occasions we're in support of, we need to seize the day. Today is the best opportunity to make the legislation right. I can assure you that if past practice has anything to do with this House – and it certainly seems that there's that chance given that we're here now – bringing these things forward is not the easiest thing for a government to do. So make it right today; ban donations in kind from corporations and unions. We're not talking about someone who's taking their own time to engage in the process. There are limits on these sorts of things. The rules can be followed. Do the right thing and support the amendment.

Mr. Mason: In perhaps a vain attempt to urge members to deal with this amendment before it gets really, really late, I would just offer the following. I think that the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow was quite right. We are not finished with the reform issues that need to be brought into play in a wide range of areas, including in electoral financing. We've never said that this was the final word. We wanted to provide a bill that was an initial step that could be defended and did not require an extensive amount of work to deal with the complexities. As you get into other areas of electoral reform, you will find that they become more complex and they require more study and they require more time. We wanted to bring in a bill in the very first session to set out the direction of this government with respect to democratic reform and that had a simple goal of eliminating financial contributions by unions and by corporations, and that's what we've brought forward.

The Premier has worked with the Leader of the Official Opposition to work on an all-party committee that will allow the study of a wide range of things in terms of improving democratic reform in this province, greater transparency, and openness. On an all-party basis all of these things can be considered. We have never said that this bill is our last word, but it is the thing that we thought that we could get, a defensible piece of legislation, within a matter of a couple of weeks to bring forward at the First Session of the Legislature.

So we'd urge hon. members to please understand that we are not necessarily finished here, but we believe that this bill as it is should be passed by the House, and then we can get on with the broader task of a deeper and more thoroughgoing reform of our democratic institutions in this province. I'd urge members to please let us move forward in a timely fashion tonight, and we can finish the debate in the committee stage not today but tomorrow, as soon as possible.

Thank you.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Sorry. I just wanted to make one point of clarification because I think we've sort of gotten a little bit confused. Currently in the act section 1(1)(e) reads, “‘contribution’ means . . . money, real property, or goods or the use of real property or goods,” so I believe that the Winnebago would already be a problem.

The Chair: Thank you for that clarification.

Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Make no mistake, Madam Chair. The Wildrose intends on supporting this bill. This is the part where you guys clap. But my parents used to tell me that if you're going to do a job, do the job right. I would also say that I think that my dad, who is a wonderful man – and because of the hour I won't go into how great he is – would have called this a Halfway Harry. We're half, two-thirds of the way there. We just haven't quite got there. You know, I think we have that chance. I think that there is lots of opportunity, but my concern is that – again, I recognize that there is the committee coming, and there's the possibility that we can bring these things back to the House, but I do have some concerns. I ask that hon. members will indulge our discussion just a little bit longer this evening while we work to encourage the government to consider the breadth of the bill.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Chair, I will attempt to be brief. This bill is near and dear to my heart. I think this is critical to getting the influence of undue big money from big corporations, big unions out of politics in this province. It has had a corrupting influence in this province for far too long, where businesses have felt that they can make the right political donations and then get the right sole-source contracts or favours and access to the government. It's wrong, and I commend the government for making this the first bill that they put forward. We in the Wildrose truly believe in the spirit of this bill. We genuinely want to help make this better legislation. It doesn't matter that it came from us. We're not going to hold it against you. Maybe a bit. We want to make this good legislation today.

Now, we can already see from across the aisle that they're not terribly open to accepting the amendment to this bill. The Government House Leader has indicated that the special committee that has been struck between the Leader of the Opposition and the Premier will be travelling the province working on other issues of democratic reform, which appears to leave the window open to the idea of this amendment.

I believe we should make it today and get it right on day one. My question would be, and I would ask the Government House Leader, if he would agree with the spirit of our amendment. I will also ask a second, slightly more loaded question: would the governing party assure the House that they will not be accepting donations in kind during the Calgary-Foothills by-election?

Mr. Mason: With respect to the first question we are open to the public view on what is important to democratic reform. I am not going to commit to you now that we would support this in principle. I think that that would be an overstatement. What we will do is commit to a process whereby these matters can be explored, and we can work together in areas of common agreement to bring forward beneficial changes.

I'm certainly not in any position to make any comment whatsoever about the Calgary by-election, hon. member, and I think you probably know that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to also affirm that I really do believe in the bill, I believe in the spirit of the bill, and I congratulate you for bringing it forward. I am urged to speak to the amendment as well, though, for a couple of reasons because I really believe that without it we do defeat the spirit or the intent of it entirely. Why not take to the public something that is truly enforceable rather than something that's only half there? Furthermore, I feel like we probably will leave the door wide open to corporate and union influence in ways that become untrackable and unmeasurable.

In addition to some of the areas that have been suggested, it concerns me that now we not only leave the door open but probably encourage, by the nature of the bill, that office spaces, for instance, will be donated to campaigns; automobiles by businesses that are willing to offer cars; computers, to set up computer offices. Why would a business or a union not go ahead and buy all of your signs for you and just give them to you in kind? Why not encourage volunteers to show up by offering them coffee and T-shirts and movie passes and anything else that you want? It just opens the door to an endless number of things that I think will be extremely difficult. If we really want to keep corporations and unions out of the election process, we should not allow all of this to happen. It will just corrupt campaigns immensely.

I'm concerned further that we should defer it to a committee. My accountants have always told me for years that the best way to deal with taxes is to defer – defer, defer, defer – and if you defer long enough, you can actually almost defer them forever. Why should we leave till tomorrow the good that we can do today? I would just like to ask the government: in the interest of a co-operative spirit and working together, would it be that hard to add an amendment that actually will make you look better before the public by adding this bit to the bill and actually making it that much cleaner?

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair, thank you so much for recognizing me once again this evening. The Government House Leader has done such a fine job of pointing out that I've been on my feet five times tonight, so it's a pleasure to rise and ask a couple of quick questions as I believe we're wrapping up debate here on the amendment.

I'm thankful that we have this all-party committee to discuss much of these important issues about accountability, ethics, transparency. I look forward to the motion before the House forming that committee in the coming days. I understand that there has been some discussion around that. I look forward to the committee being very active over the summer.

I guess one of my concerns – you know, sometimes governments do some things through self-preservation. Sometimes they do things for the betterment of Alberta, hopefully more often for the betterment of Alberta than the previous. I guess I just have a quick question. I want to ensure that the governing party is not so adamantly opposed to this particular amendment of gifts in kind because they have absolutely zero intentions of receiving gifts in kind from unions or corporations during the anticipated Calgary-Foothills by-election.

The Chair: Any other hon. members?

Mr. Clark: Maybe the point I want to make is that if corporate and union donations of all kind are banned – donations in kind are clearly defined in the act, as the minister has said, and we all know that in many of our campaigns we've taken some donations in kind from corporations, be it a Winnebago or a campaign office or some goods rendered. If that's no longer acceptable as corporate donations – I presume that's not allowed based on the contents of Bill 1. The question to the Minister of Justice is: if cash donations from corporations are not allowed, will donations in kind from corporations and unions also not be allowed under Bill 1?

The Chair: Hon. minister, do you wish to respond to the comment?

Ms Ganley: Yes, I do. I guess in response to that I would say that, again, I mean, it's my understanding that the present definition in the act of contribution includes money, real property, goods, or the use of real property or goods. So I would say that that would include donations in kind.

The Chair: Any further speakers to the amendment?

If not, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Back to the bill. Are there any further questions or comments on this bill?

Mr. Cooper: I move that the committee rise and report.

Mr. Mason: No, we don't want to do that. Do you not have more amendments, hon. member?

Mr. Cooper: No. They're not ready.

Mr. Mason: But you do want to introduce more.

Mr. Cooper: Yes.

Mr. Mason: Do we rise and report? Okay. You're right. [interjection] The correct motion is to move that the committee rise and report progress when we're not done. Otherwise, you would have ended the committee, and, you see, I didn't want to let you do that.

[Motion carried]

11:00

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you. Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 1. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, I want to thank all members of the House for some excellent discussion and debate tonight and the progress that we've made on Bill 1 and on responses to Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech from the Throne.

I think that given the hour and the good progress that we've made, I will move to adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:03 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, June 18, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members of the Assembly, as we reflect today, I would like to make a slight introduction and then the reflection. In Islamic tradition today marks the beginning of the holy month of Ramadan, which runs from June 18 to July 17, 2015. This is the sacred time of fasting, prayer, almsgiving, and family gatherings. We express gratitude for the contribution that the Muslim communities make to the social fabric of our Alberta. Let us take a moment of silence to experience peace, which is the objective of every spiritual practice. May the source of all compassion and mercy teach us the ways of wisdom, care, and love. We join our Muslim sisters and brothers in learning the disciplines that overcome our egotism so that we may live in harmony with every person alive today.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for . . .

Ms Larivee: Lesser Slave Lake.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the gallery today we have visiting with us Heidi Gould, a strong advocate for nursing and for client care within the health care system. She's here partway on behalf of herself but also for the United Nurses of Alberta and as one of the many active health care workers for Alberta Health Services. Welcome to Heidi for coming here to take part.

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the status of women.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today in the Assembly to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly members of the Environment and Parks planning branch. The planning branch leads our ministry's work in developing and implementing the seven regional land-use plans as outlined by the land-use framework. They help usher these important plans from the conceptual stage all the way to realizing them on our landscapes, working collaboratively with other areas of government along the way. They develop the objectives and strategies to manage our environment and resources and ensure a balance between protecting our natural landscapes and responsible development. Their work includes the development of regional management frameworks for air, water, and biodiversity and to issue specific plans to address environmental or resource management issues.

In the House today we have, if I could ask them to rise as I read their names: Chad Willms, Laura Polasek, Nicole Keef, Cassidy van Rensen, Fiona Slessor, Wen Xu, Karen Sundquist, Tracy Price, Sarah Depoe, Aaron Petty, Marika Atkinson, and Samuel Wahab. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to acknowledge the hard work of the planning branch, that they undertake in helping shape the future of our great province, and I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four introductions today with your indulgence. Eric Musekamp and Darlene Dunlop are here for their final day in the Legislature to honour the ninth anniversary of the death of farmworker Kevan Chandler, killed in a silage elevator, who, without workers' compensation, left a young widow and two children in poverty. Lorna spent the next six years in court thanks to a compassionate lawyer and finally received a settlement. They're here again hoping the government will be able to in this legislative session ensure that no more paid farm workers are injured or killed without compensation, by immediately regulating workers' compensation for all agricultural operations with employees.

Next to them is the inimitable Dr. Judy Johnson, an emeritus professor in psychology at Mount Royal University, former chair of Friends of Medicare, on the board of directors of the Canadian Mental Health Association, and president of my constituency association. She's accompanied by Carolyn Campbell, a former schoolteacher and now a much-quoted conservation specialist for the Alberta Wilderness Association, also a past president of my constituency association in Calgary-Mountain View. I'll ask them to rise. Give them the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly three students and their teacher visiting our province from El Salvador as well as their sponsor here from Calgary. The students are Sandra Patricia Cortez Henriquez, Eduardo José Ortiz Cornejo, Maria Odilia Vasquez Gonzalez, and their teacher Jorge Adalberto Barahona Avelar. Thank you, and also special thanks to the Member for Calgary-Cross for his agreeing to meet with students and introduce them to members of Calgary's Salvadoran community.

The students are joined by their sponsor, Doug Frenette. Doug formed a group to assist the students and many more with their education in El Salvador. Doug really is a true example of the generosity of spirit Albertans are known for all around the world. It is my honour to introduce you to my friends and colleagues in the Legislative Assembly. I ask that you please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Health and the Minister of Seniors.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you Michael Janz. He's the chair of the Edmonton public school board. Michael and I have worked together since we were both first elected to public office in October of 2010. We were committed to a shared-leadership model and relied on each other to ensure strong fiscal management of public resources, evidence-based decision-making, fair and respectful negotiation with public-sector employees, and equitable resource allocations to address student needs. One of the reasons I felt empowered to run provincially was because I knew that Michael would make a great board chair and that he would continue to put student needs first and make Edmontonians proud of their public schools, and I want to say that we are. Please join me in giving a traditional warm welcome to the guest.

The Speaker: Do I understand that the Member for Edmonton-McClung has a guest?

Mr. Dach: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. Through you and to you I have the honour of introducing a gentleman who has just arrived in the galleries, Mr. Myles Thrift, a childhood friend who has now recently retired from 35 years of service with Canadian National Railway. Mr. Thrift has always been an outgoing and sports-minded individual. He in the early '70s was on CBC television, having completed his goal of meeting 10,000 people in person. He is also known as the Prince George Cougars superfan, hailing from Prince George. Now he has also been a seniors masters award-winning diver. He's in town to enjoy the FIFA World Cup games. It is my pleasure to have Mr. Thrift stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The Member for Banff-Cochrane.

2013 Southern Alberta Flood

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise for my first time in this Assembly to address an issue that is top of mind to many in southern Alberta and certainly those in Banff-Cochrane, which was ground zero for the tragic flooding event that occurred nearly two years ago.

In 2013 Albertans witnessed the extreme power of Mother Nature. Communities in the river's path experienced damage on an unprecedented scale. Many are still trying to recover and move on with their lives. During this event, in the midst of the chaos, we also witnessed the extreme power of our communities, our families, our friends, our neighbours, and complete strangers. In response centres those in need of assistance found volunteers willing to help them get back on their feet again. Albertans proved, as they have in other disasters, that they were up for any challenge.

Much work remains to be done to recover from the 2013 event as well as to protect homes, businesses, families, and communities from future catastrophes. We must learn from this and other flooding events to make wise and careful decisions about how we can ensure the safety and well-being of all Albertans.

Flood mitigation is a complex issue, which stirs the emotions, which are still raw. Getting this right in the best interests of all Albertans will require us to work together in this government and with our opposition colleagues. We must also work closely with the many stakeholders, including indigenous peoples, landowners, businesses, and homeowners. Together we can work to address the uncertainty and fear of those at risk and put an end to the nightmares that some still experience every time it rains.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not a day goes by that I don't hear from a local constituent from my riding that tells me about the awful commutes that they have between Cold Lake and Edmonton on highway 28. In fact, it has become so unbearable and dangerous that they have stopped using the shortest, most direct route in favour of a longer, slower alternative to avoid the potholes, the missing shoulders, and the general disrepair. It is becoming completely undriveable. Highway 28 is the key artery to the Cold Lake oil sands, which produces over 12 per cent of Canada's daily oil production. East of Bonnyville alone the traffic count is 7,000 vehicles per day.

The Wildrose believes that infrastructure is critically important to the well-being of Alberta. The Wildrose has advocated for a long time for a fully prioritized public infrastructure list. In fact, we campaigned on it. It's great to see that the NDP government has adopted another Wildrose proposal, and I'm very glad that we're on the same page. It is high time that the priorities be made available to all Albertans. At the very least, Albertans need assurances that the highways they regularly use are scheduled for repair.

My constituents want to know when highway 28 will be addressed. They need to know when highway 28 will be addressed. This affects more than just my constituency. The residents of Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills and Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater also have a big stake in seeing this highway addressed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Flood and Drought Damage Mitigation

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On June 20 river communities in Calgary will be getting together to celebrate the spirit that brought so many people together during the 2013 flood. Stories will be shared about recovery, resiliency, and the power of community in Calgary.

But two years on, while some local measures have been taken by the city to reduce risk along the Bow and Elbow rivers, much remains to be done to reduce the risk from the next inevitable flood. Two years on and with many consultations and reports Calgary has yet to see a comprehensive upstream mitigation strategy for the Bow and Elbow rivers.

Excellent work has been done by groups, including WaterSmart solutions, most recently the impressive room for the river process, which provides cost-benefit scenarios. It's time to make decisions. In fact, all Albertans living in the South Saskatchewan River basin deserve to see evidence-based watershed management, beginning in the eastern slopes, from this government.

Part of the solution is the long-awaited land-use plan. This defines priority development and conservation activities in relation to our major waterways. This needs new momentum as well. Clearly, for the Bow a long-term water management agreement is needed between TransAlta, which manages all the dams, and the province that takes into account both flood and drought mitigation, and it must be public. No more backroom deals.

Ironically, drought this year appears to be more likely than flood in southern Alberta and is highlighting the need for all stakeholders, including irrigation districts, to be at the table. The financial and human cost of both floods and droughts can be minimized through a range of evidence-based, upstream, natural and engineered developments, and this will be a defining task for this new government. On behalf of my constituents in Calgary and all Albertans I call on this government to make flood and drought mitigation a priority.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ramadan

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to have the opportunity to rise and wish Ramadan Mubarak to all. Ramadan is the ninth month in the Islamic calendar and depends on the moon sighting. In some parts of the world today is the first day of Ramadan, while in others it's the second day. It is the month when the holy book, the Quran, was revealed to Muslims. It is the month when Muslims were given this holy book, which is the complete code of life for Muslims and thus a benediction for Muslims.

It is the month when fasting is practised by Muslims all over the world by abstaining from food and drink during daylight hours, but more than this, it is the month when followers of Islam learn to abstain from all the deeds, desires, and activities that contribute to illicit human character. Fasting is one of the five pillars of Islam, followed by shahada, which means the faith in the oneness of God; salaah, which means praying five times each day; and zakat, meaning almsgiving; and preceded by a pilgrimage to Mecca. A fast fosters strong will, teaches patience and self-discipline and the ability to bear hardship and tolerate hunger and thirst.

The word "Ramadan" came from the Arabic word "ramad," which means to burn. Therefore, according to Muslims this month is an opportunity for the believers to burn away wishes and unhealthy thoughts and acts and cleanse the human body, heart, and soul. In medical science the advantages of fasting have been proven scientifically. Fasting helps retain the acids in the stomach during hunger and thirst that help kill germs causing different diseases. Each day's fasting ends after sunset with a time of joy and hospitality.

Once again, Ramadan Mubarak to all.

Oral Question Period

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Jean: While the Premier doesn't want to introduce a budget until after the federal election, we are getting some ideas about this government's fiscal plans. Yesterday, for instance, the Government House Leader said that 10 per cent of the $18 billion in interim supply is new spending. That works out to almost $2 billion, a lot of money. The NDP's platform shows that they will actually bring in less in tax revenue this year than Prentice had planned. Where's the money coming from?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As all Albertans know and knew and discussed over the course of the last election, Alberta is facing a fiscal challenge, and they were offered different ways of dealing with it. Some people wanted to slash and burn and take billions and billions out. Other people wanted middle-class and lower class Albertans to pay more while sending 12,000 kids to school without teachers. We ran on a plan to make sure those kids had teachers. We ran on a plan to make sure our health care system worked, and we ran on a plan to pay for it with progressive and fair taxes, and that's what this side will see more of later today.

Mr. Jean: Thank you for the applause, and thank you for that clear non answer.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are going to need some help making sense of these numbers. The most experienced minister told us that this government was taking on $1.8 billion in new spending that has not been debated by this Legislature. Today four cabinet ministers held a press conference and gave us details on less than $700 million of that spending; $700 million does not equal $1.8 billion. Can someone over there please tell us where the other billion dollars in new spending is going?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think that the member opposite may have confused what the hon. House leader may have said in debate yesterday. What I will say is that our interim supply bill is actually on the Order Paper today, so I don't really want to get too involved in it, but in principle it talks about meeting the promises that we made in this election. Where it was debated was over 30 days of a provincial election in this province. The money coming forward you'll see more of this afternoon.

Mr. Jean: Albertans might have been worried that the NDP government would be a tax and spend government. Now we know. They are a tax and spend, spend, spend government. Alberta already spends more per capita than any other province in Canada. When you adjust for population, for instance, we spend $8 billion a year more than British Columbia. Now this government announces almost $2 billion in new spending but much less than that in revenue. How much debt is the Premier going to make future generations pay back?

Ms Notley: Once again I take issue with the hon. member's numbers. What we are planning on putting forward is funding to ensure that those, for example, 12,000 kids who are coming to our schools in September have a teacher. Now, I appreciate that under the platform that the hon. members opposite ran on, those 12,000 kids wouldn't have had a teacher, nor would probably another 12,000 on top of that because you can't take $5 billion out of a system and not have it show up on the front lines. That's not what Albertans voted for. They voted for our plan, and I'm very proud of it.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Pipeline Development

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I wanted the Premier to confirm that her government will not oppose Keystone pipeline. Her answer wasn't clear. I asked her to confirm that her government would support all new pipelines that get energy to markets safely. Her answer wasn't clear again. That's not helpful. Alberta gets most of its wealth from energy. Doesn't the Premier agree that her role as Premier is to champion efforts to get our energy to market?

Ms Notley: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, as I've said all along, we understand that our energy sector contributes a great deal to jobs in Alberta, and that's our fundamental priority. Moreover, what we want to be able to do as the stewards of this resource is make sure that we get as many jobs as we can from our resource before we ship it out. That's our job because we represent Albertans. We represent voters. Sending natural resources away as fast as we possibly can without thinking about ways to incent job creation is not good governance.

Mr. Jean: This Premier has confirmed that pipelines are, in fact, the safest way to get the product to market. She certainly knows that pipelines are the most environmentally friendly way to move energy. Alberta's economy depends upon getting our energy to new markets, not just existing ones, yet the Premier has been saying that upgrading is her top energy priority. Is the Premier suggesting that shovel-ready pipeline projects will get less support from her than hypothetical upgraders?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I'm saying is that we're going to work with industry to ensure that our oil and gas sector is sustainable, effective, and that it creates jobs and that we are also able to grow in an environmentally responsible way. Now, I've talked about working with our colleagues in B.C. and our colleagues across the country to talk about environmentally responsible ways to get our product to market, and I will certainly continue to do that.

Mr. Jean: You know, Wildrose really wants to help this government. [interjection] We do. Can you not tell? But this government is digging itself into a deep hole on energy policy, and it's confusing. I have a very simple question, and I really hope the Premier can answer it thoughtfully. Maybe I'm missing something, but I don't think I am. Some day in the future, when we get these upgraders and refineries that the Premier really wants and wants, won't we still need more pipelines in all directions so that we can get the upgraded product to market?

Ms Notley: There's no question, Mr. Speaker, that going forward we do need to ensure that we have access to pipelines to get our product to market. There's no question about it. However, as the member opposite knows, shipping unprocessed bitumen, that creates the lowest number of jobs per barrel extracted from our province, actually takes 30 per cent more pipeline space. In fact, the more we upgrade, the fewer pipelines we need. It doesn't mean that we're not going to work with industry to get the pipelines that they need going forward, but we're going to do it responsibly and carefully in the interest of those Albertans who want . . .

Mr. Jean: With respect, the Premier is wrong. The more you upgrade, the more pipelines you need.

Market Access for Energy Resources

Mr. Jean: For two days now we've asked the Premier some very important questions about pipelines. For some time market access for our energy products has been the top international and inter-governmental issue for Alberta's government. You're the minister for that. Wildrose has always been helpful and supportive on this file, as we are on all files. Can the Premier confirm that building more pipelines to move Alberta's energy to new markets remains this province's top intergovernmental and international priority?

Ms Notley: Quite honestly, the previous government's record in that regard has gotten us nowhere. I would suggest that when we're talking about our international and intergovernmental priorities, maybe what we really should be doing is developing a record on the environment such that those new markets will actually accept our product, because that's a problem, and that's what's been ignored for a very long time.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm certain that the Premier knows that getting our energy to a coast, any coast, means that we get the higher world Brent oil price rather than the lower western Canada select price. That means more royalties and thus more schools and more hospitals for Albertans. That's helpful. Getting new pipelines built is really important to Albertans. How often has the Premier spoken with the Deputy Minister of IIR to discuss our market access strategy or the Canadian energy strategy? How many times? How often?

Ms Notley: It's a bit of a strange question. I've met with my deputy minister to talk about a number of issues in IIR, including the Canadian energy strategy, including trips outside of the country to talk about other partnerships. I can't actually count how many times, at least five or six at this point. And we'll continue to do that because that's my job. I am here to ensure that the interests of Albertans, when it comes to job creation and economic stability, are represented.

Mr. Jean: Eight questions, eight waffles. I feel like I'm having breakfast.

Alberta has 13 international offices that exist to promote Alberta's interest in other countries and, of course, to help Alberta companies access new markets. In my opinion, no office is more important than the Washington office, which has led our efforts to secure American approval for the Keystone pipeline. Question: has the Premier spoken to Rob Merrifield, our senior representative in Washington, and if so, what instructions has she given him? How about an answer this time? We've had eight up; one good one would be nice.

Thank you.

2:00

Ms Notley: I think the answer to the last question was five or six. So, you know, I think that's fairly answerly. Nonetheless, let me just say that no, I have not yet had a chance to talk to any of our staff in our different international offices. I'm a little bit focused on getting us through the session, but I look forward to doing that. We'll be reviewing all our international offices, and I anticipate them continuing to do the good work that's necessary to promote economic opportunity and growth for all Alberta industry.

The Speaker: Calgary-Lougheed.

Aboriginal Relations

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is Aboriginal Awareness Week. The new government is committed to adopting the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. The Truth and Reconciliation Commission report outlines 94 recommendations for all levels of government across Canada. Both require great co-ordination between numerous Alberta government ministries and beyond. To the new Premier, with respect: why was there not even a single specific commitment in the throne speech to either the UN declaration or the TRC report?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member raises a very, very important issue. We did of course talk about the role of indigenous people in the history of our province within that throne speech, and we've been already meeting with indigenous representatives since we were first elected and indeed had them at a cabinet meeting. So we will be moving forward on a number of very complicated but important files over the next few months, and I look forward to speaking about them in this House after we've had a chance to meet with indigenous representatives.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It would have been nice to see some of that in the throne speech.

My first supplemental question is to the Premier or the new minister who's responsible for the file. All Albertans do deserve to know: what specific timelines will your government commit to here in the House today for evaluating and implementing the TRC report recommendations?

Ms Ganley: Thank you to the hon. member for the question. Currently our focus is on working to build respectful partnerships with indigenous peoples. We're working on a number of memoranda of understanding to engage going forward and to deal with issues that are important to both indigenous Albertans and all Albertans, so right now our timeline is to work to get those under way. They will be coming online very soon, and from there we'll set some goals and move forward.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier or to the minister: can you please tell us, every member of the House and all Albertans, what specific mechanisms you will make available for all Albertans to hold this government accountable for implementing the recommendations?

Ms Notley: As the minister has said, our government will work with First Nations as a true partner in building a relation of respect and engagement. We are in fact very committed to developing a renewed relationship with aboriginal peoples and communities through improved understanding and collaboration. We'll be working with Alberta's indigenous people to build a relationship of trust. We'll be moving forward on that as quickly as possible. As you know, there's a national aboriginal leaders' meeting in mid-July, and I anticipate being able to make some very encouraging announcements before that time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Public Appointment Process

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Revelations that former Ethics Commissioner Neil Wilkinson claimed $450,000 in honoraria while chair of the Capital health region highlights the urgent need to revamp Alberta's discredited public appointment system. While in opposition the Alberta NDP echoed Liberal demands for an end to patronage in government appointments and called for the adoption of the Ontario model, whereby an independent commission manages the recruitment and vetting for prospective appointees. To the Premier: will you do better than simply promise to appoint people strictly on merit, as the previous regime did, and establish an independent public appointments commission in Alberta?

Ms Notley: Thank you very much. That's a good question. Mr. Speaker, like members opposite, I have been very troubled by the information that's come forward about the recent spending excesses with respect to certain former public officials in the previous government. That being said, in fact, we were very concerned about those issues going into the election, and that is one of the reasons why we said that we would do a review of agencies, boards, and commissions, including their compensation packages, and that will be coming soon.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, again to the Premier: when will the review of agencies, boards, and commissions started last year be made public?

Ms Notley: Well, in fact, the review of agencies, boards, and commissions that was started last year by the last Premier, we have since discovered, was never really completed, so there's not actually much to be made public. However, within the next few days or weeks we will be making an announcement about moving forward to do exactly that, to get the job done. We know that we have a problem in this province, and we want to deal with the issue of the sunshine list, we want to deal with the issue of compensation, and we want to deal with the issue of the efficacy of the many, many boards and agencies that we have in this province.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. Again to the Premier: since your party previously demanded that prospective appointees should have to disclose their qualifications, possible conflicts of interest, and remuneration, are you going to bring in rules requiring this of all appointees?

Ms Notley: Well, I think this is one of the issues that will be discussed, I suspect, with the select all-party standing committee on conflict of interest as well as democratic renewal and whistleblower legislation. This is exactly one of the things that I advocated for when I was an opposition member, ensuring that those conflict-of-interest provisions applied to the many staff and appointees at agencies, boards, and commissions. It is absolutely my intention to ensure that we move forward with that and that all those transparency mechanisms are applicable to the many people in agencies, boards, and commissions.

The Speaker: I'll just remind the House that there are no preambles on supplemental questions.

Municipal Greenhouse Gas Emissions Reduction

Ms Payne: Mr. Speaker, the impact of climate change on our environment has not received the attention it deserves. Albertans have been waiting for their government to take action on this critical issue. Can the Minister of Environment and Parks tell the House what investments their ministry has made on this important issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, during Environment Week I was pleased to announce an increase in support for municipalities to undertake energy efficient projects that reduce greenhouse gas emissions at the local level, and that's why our government announced an additional $2 million in funding for the Municipal Climate Change Action Centre. That funding will create good local jobs, reduce energy costs for taxpayers, and in turn it frees up more resources for investments in the priorities of Alberta families.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the same minister elaborate a little bit more on how this program will help municipalities to create jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you for the question, hon. member. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the action centre has already demonstrated encouraging success in this area, and this is why we moved quickly to expand the program. We've had some success stories like the town of Beaumont, which retrofitted their town hall, their fire hall, and their RCMP detachment through this program, which is managed through the climate change and emissions management fund. We've also had success stories like the city of Calgary, which tapped the program to undertake efficiency upgrades to three buildings. Those are the kinds of successful partnerships, with communities big and small, that we need to build on if we are to succeed . . .

2:10

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the same minister tell the House how this program will help municipalities with their energy bills?

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you for the question. You know, this announcement is a sign of things to come, Mr. Speaker. We did make a commitment in the election to take leadership on the issue of climate change, and we are doing precisely that. We have made the commitment to take international and national leadership. We will be leading those conversations moving forward, engaging with Albertans and industry because we understand, unlike other parties in this House, that getting it right on climate change means getting it right for the economy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked the minister what her plan was for helping those who will lose their jobs due to the dramatic increase to minimum wages. The answer was less than fulsome, I might add. But what's really troubling me is that in a meeting with the Canadian federation of small businesses this government told them that they had done no economic impact analysis on the potential effects of this policy. Minister, bluntly put, why are you putting thousands of jobs at risk without even doing the necessary research first?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you to the member for the question. We know that Alberta families are better off when all Alberta families are better off, so that's why we're moving ahead on our platform of $15 an hour by 2018. We also know that we are looking to diversify our economy. I also am the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education, and we're working with stakeholders. I toured NAIT recently, and they're doing amazing work on green energy and technology. We've just invested in postsecondary education today. We're supporting people to have good jobs here in Alberta.

Thank you.

Mr. Hunter: I certainly do applaud this government's intent on this issue. However, their approach is simply an ill-conceived gamble with people's livelihood. This gamble is not going to hurt the corporate bigwigs; instead, it's going to hurt the very men and women who cannot afford to lose their jobs. They need a champion and not a politician looking to score points at their expense. Minister, Albertans want to know – no; they need to know – before you implement this policy: how many Albertans are going to lose their jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the member for the question. Alberta has the lowest minimum wage of any province in Canada, tied with Saskatchewan. We know from small-business owners that it actually reduces their costs in recruitment and training when they pay a higher level because they're more likely to retain those workers, and there are studies that have shown that. We are also helping more vulnerable populations, like women.

Thank you.

Mr. Hunter: Minister, yesterday a big labour group with close ties to the government issued a press release demanding that the minimum wage be increased 25 per cent by October of this year. [interjections] Even in the three . . .

The Speaker: I might have mentioned yesterday that I'd like to hear the question. To all of the House: please.

I would also remind the House about the lack of a preamble in this set of questions.

Mr. Hunter: I appreciate that.

Even in the three cities in the United States that are also trying to implement this experiment, they are slowly increasing the minimum wage over seven years. Knowing that this government has shown no concern for the impact on the economy for the job losses, can the minister assure . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier and I met last week with industry leaders, with labour, and with advocacy groups to hear their input on this, and we're going ahead with those consultations.

We will be speaking shortly about where we're going to go, and we're moving forward to work together on this with all partners.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Flood Damage Mitigation in High River

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend marks the second anniversary of the Alberta floods, and a tremendous amount of work has been done by Albertans, particularly those in Municipal Affairs, ESRD, and the Alberta Emergency Management Agency. Many of those people are heroes who previously served in our military, and once again they acted during the floods. As you can imagine, those folks were extremely disappointed to hear their new minister characterize their efforts as a gong show. In the town of High River much of the mitigation work has been completed in partnership with this province. To the Minister of Environment and Parks: will you commit to completing the mitigation work in High River even though you consider it a gong show?

Ms Phillips: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to talk about the former PC government's record on preparing for the 2013 floods, which is that they did not adequately prepare for those floods, and those floods then devastated Calgary and other communities. They waited for a catastrophe to start work on flood mitigation. Now, when it comes to protecting residents of Calgary and their property from flooding, we have only one chance to get it right, and that is why we are carefully considering all of our options before us as we move forward with an appropriate flood mitigation plan for this province's future.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you. To the same minister: given that you're the minister in charge of the Alberta community resilience program, will you commit to complete and full funding to this program so that communities can help protect themselves and identify their own risks?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Right now we are reviewing our approach to flood mitigation. We need to make these decisions in the public interest. I have said this over and over again. The reason that we need to take that approach is that we need to have an evidence-based approach to all of our decisions going forward. We are asking our officials to fully brief us. We are asking outside officials to fully brief us. We are ensuring that our final decisions will be based on science. They will be based on good public policy. They will be based on careful deliberation of the public interest.

Mr. Fraser: I'm hoping, since they've looked at our record in predicting disasters, that you'll come out with a complete, full list of where the next disaster will happen.

Again to the same minister: given that you now lead the department in charge of mitigation and ACRP, can you assure these hard-working Albertans that, in fact, their efforts were not a gong show and that you will defend their actions and these workers and their departments before the Auditor General?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that Albertans levelled their verdict on May 5 on what they thought of this government's efforts on flood mitigation, and it has very little to do with the workers. It has everything to do with the record of a government that did not adequately take the time to protect the citizens of Calgary or southern Alberta, which is why we are going to ensure that any decisions that we take will be based on science, based on good public policy, based on careful deliberation moving forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Transportation Infrastructure Priorities

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A well-maintained provincial transportation network is essential to ensure the safe movement of Albertans and our commodities. The government's own performance measure clearly indicates a rise in the number of highways and bridges in very poor condition. What is this new Minister of Transportation doing to stop the deterioration of the provincial transportation network?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. Thank you, hon. member, for that question. It's a very good question and, I think, a very pertinent one. I agree with you that there's been a deterioration in the condition of many of our roadways under the previous government. We're taking a very close look at this. We're developing a capital plan that I think will meet the transportation needs of Albertans going forward, and I am certainly willing to discuss with any member on any side of the House any issues relevant to their constituencies and see what we can do to help, bearing in mind that there's a long, long, long list of priorities, and we will not be able to deal with all of them at once.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, in order to get the politics out of the capital investment process, both the Wildrose and the NDP have advocated for a prioritized list of infrastructure and transportation projects. I was happy to hear the minister state yesterday that they are establishing a sunshine list so that everyone will know which projects and what time. When can we expect this list to be published?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that question. We do want to let the sunshine in when it comes to capital projects. We've seen with the previous government manipulation of capital priorities in order to further electoral chances of individual ministers, and that's something that, like our Wildrose colleagues, we deplore, so we will be working to develop a sunshine list at the earliest opportunity. I'm sorry I cannot give you a date, but I am looking forward to bringing that forward, probably sometime in the fall.

Thank you.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you for the answer, hon. member, and I look forward to being able to help with that.

Surely, this new Minister of Transportation is not content to continue downloading onto municipalities the funding responsibility for over 8,000 bridges. Will this Minister of Transportation help rural Alberta and restore funding to the local road bridge program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member: that's something that as a critic I met with the AAMD and C executive on. We discussed rural bridges on a number of occasions. I recognize that there is a very serious problem with respect to that, and I've asked my department to take a look and let me know what things we might be able to do to assist. But I should note for the record that there are very serious problems with the bridges under provincial control that also need to be addressed. There are many, many demands on the capital budget, and I know that with the Wildrose's . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

Need I remind both sides of the House about preambles. On both sides I've noticed it. Please eliminate it in your supplemental questions.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Flood Damage Mitigation

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's hard to believe, but it's already been two years since one of the worst floods in Alberta's history devastated homes and communities right across the province. The Wildrose just wants to help the government get this right. I couldn't help but notice that the NDP candidate in my riding had very little to say during the election campaign. I'm hoping the minister can clear this up. What is your government's plan to address flood mitigation that helps communities right across the province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. These are very, very grave decisions that face us. We have been left with some choices to make, and we will undertake the appropriate time and the appropriate review to make those decisions. These are decisions that require hundreds of millions of dollars of public investment. They are decisions that require environmental assessment. They are decisions that require negotiation with communities and landowners. That is why we will take the time to review all of these matters before us. That is why we are being briefed by experts who are giving us . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the minister should know that in March this year the Auditor General released a report that said that the province doesn't even have up-to-date flood maps. That means communities like Sundre, Medicine Hat, Fort McMurray, Red Deer, Drumheller, High River, Rocky View, and Calgary all remain on the front lines when the next flood strikes. Will the minister commit today to updating these flood maps and making sure that these communities are no longer left exposed?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the question given that the hon. member has been doing an excellent job, as other hon. members in this House have, over the last few days of representing his constituents on this matter. We are committed to reviewing the flood mapping issue along with all of the other issues with respect to flood mitigation that have been pushed onto our plates as we have inherited this situation from the previous government. We are reviewing all of the matters associated with flood mitigation to ensure that we are using the best science and the best public policy moving forward.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, given that my constituency of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has often faced flooding and given that in March the government announced flood projects all over the province but denied funding requests for Sundre, Drumheller, and Medicine Hat, saying that we needed another engineering study even when a number have already been completed, to the minister: will your government reverse the decision to reject Sundre and other impacted communities' flood mitigation applications so that residents will be protected before there is another flood?

Ms Phillips: I'm very pleased for the question, and I thank you for raising this with me. I am happy to discuss this matter and have a meeting with the hon. member afterwards so that we can follow up. I have had other requests to review previous decisions, and I am happy to do so and report back to this House when we have finalized the matter.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Urgent Health Care in Beaverlodge

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As outlined in the rural health review, there was strong feedback that there needs to be better access to health care services in rural areas of Alberta. Beaverlodge is home to one of Alberta's oldest rural hospitals. In the latest budget the government promised $2 million to design a new urgent health care facility in Beaverlodge. The new facility in Beaverlodge was to be used as an example for future facilities in Airdrie and Sylvan Lake. My question to the Minister of Health: will this government commit to funding this much-needed urgent health care facility in Beaverlodge, as was promised to them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. We have heard a lot of discussion around decisions being made by the past government that weren't actually based on evidence, and I think we owe it to the people of Beaverlodge and to the people of Alberta, who are all taxpayers, to make sure that we are considering all options while we move forward. So I won't be able to make that commitment. Unlike other governments, when I make a commitment, you can count on it.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that yesterday in the interim supply debate you said that the plan to adhere to original funding for Beaverlodge, or the capital plan in the original 2015 budget, you would stick to as proposed, can you commit to the funding for the Beaverlodge facility and indicate the specific time, considering there have been seven years of study on this already?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I like the fact that the third party, who was actually the government at the time, is highlighting the fact that they've stalled for seven years on commitments that they wanted done.

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, seven years just proves that we weren't making them for political decisions. This facility replacement is much needed, and I wish this minister would commit to this facility and the design that's going to be used across all rural Alberta.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you to the member for the opportunity to basically supplement what was asked of my hon. colleague the Minister of Infrastructure. He has mentioned that we're working on ensuring there's a sunshine list. The sunshine list will demonstrate that this government is taking evidence and fact in making their decisions moving forward on behalf of all Albertans.

The Speaker: Before I acknowledge the next hon. member, there have been a number of requests about extensions of time. As we all ease into this process, today is the day that we begin not to acknowledge that, and I would therefore ask the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose to stay within his allocated time.

Mr. Hinkley: Excuse me. Stay within the time?

The Speaker: Within your time, please.

Mr. Hinkley: Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief, then. I wanted to start off with a number of compliments to the House for the conduct of members during Committee of Supply yesterday. I was very impressed and wished that the media, the audience, the school students, and our international friends could actually have seen that excellent behaviour.

Aboriginal Entrepreneurship

Mr. Hinkley: I will try to be quick, but I also want to give a compliment to our hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View for his eloquent and insightful comments about First Nations people deserving the right to be recognized and respected. In that light, I ask my question. Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Aboriginal Relations. Some First Nations people . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, could you be very, very brief and ask the question, please. [interjections] Order, please. Order. Thank you.

Could you in five seconds or less address your question.

Mr. Hinkley: My question is to the Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

The Speaker: Five seconds.

Mr. Hinkley: Many First Nations businesses are not able to access capital through the credit of lenders . . .

The Speaker: Does the minister have an answer?

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the member for the question. It's true; many First Nations people do have difficulty starting new businesses because they have difficulty accessing capital. This government is committed to a true partnership with aboriginal peoples, including First Nation people living on reserves. I agree that there's a need for greater participation by aboriginal peoples in the economy, and we are developing several programs and initiatives to address these barriers, including the aboriginal economic partnership program, which works directly with communities to support economic and small-business development.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I want to advise that you have one supplemental question left.

Mr. Hinkley: To the Minister of Aboriginal Relations: that's all fine and good, but does the ministry provide any actual funding to help budding entrepreneurs?

Ms Ganley: Thank you to the member for the question. Mr. Speaker, there's a long-standing program to support aboriginal entrepreneurs. There are grants and loans through the federal government, but still sometimes those businesses need additional supports to help develop plans and access these programs. Aboriginal Relations works with partners in First Nations and the federal government to offer programs on-reserve that are complementary to this funding such as contracted services for workshops to teach small-business skills and the drafting of small-business plans. Our service providers would provide First Nations entrepreneurs with the advice and support that they need to develop business plans and access other sources of funding.

Thank you.

The Speaker: It's been suggested that I gently remind all of you to sit when the Speaker stands.

I would like to acknowledge the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Health Facilities in Wainwright

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents rely on the Wainwright health centre for fulfilling their medical needs, but this facility is falling apart. Reviews were undertaken and updated by Alberta Health Services in 2002, 2008, and 2011. In all cases significant problems were found, and a new hospital was called for. To the Health minister: what will you do to address the serious situation at the Wainwright health centre?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you to the hon. member for the question, and thank you for the opportunity to be able to address it. As has been mentioned by my colleague the Minister of Infrastructure, we're in the process of developing a sunshine list for a number of different capital projects, including hospitals and other health care facilities. I've already set up meetings with the critic from the opposition party to discuss some of their needs, so feel free to communicate them through your critic.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Infrastructure: given that the last government politicized hospital infrastructure all over the province by keeping its infrastructure priorities secret and this caused serious harm to communities – I think we can both agree that this was wrong and unethical – and given that your government promised to do things differently, is a new Wainwright health facility currently on the list of infrastructure priorities, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm going to have to take that question under advisement, and I can get back to the hon. member. I can assure you that when a sunshine list is published, you'll be able to see all of the projects that are potentially funded on the list in the order of priority that they've been ranked.

But with respect to your specific question I will supply you with the answer as soon as I have it.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Speaker, back to the Minister of Health. Given that Alberta Health Services determined that the infrastructure at the Wainwright health centre is falling apart and needing replacement and given that the people of Wainwright know this, they want to know: are there any specific plans to build a new hospital in Wainwright, which your own government says needs to be done? The Wildrose has long petitioned for a priority list. When will this list be released?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. As has already been answered in question period, we're doing our utmost to make sure that we do bring forward a sunshine list in a timely manner. We'll be creating opportunities to have a public dialogue around that once it's published, but we're making sure that they're evidence-based decisions moving forward. I believe my colleague said that we're aiming for the fall, so we'll do our absolute best to do it as quickly as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Affordable and Special-needs Housing

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise for the first time in this House with a question to the Minister of Seniors which has been asked before but which I will seek a straight answer for once again. Will you and your government commit to delivering funding of $180 million to the 2,612 units previously approved under the affordable supportive living initiative?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I have answered this question, and I can answer it again and again and again, but the truth is that we know that there was political interference. I'm not saying specifically with regard to the ASLI projects, but we know that the past government has a proven track record of political interference from the party that just asked the same question. When we make announcements and when we make decisions moving forward, we're going to make sure that we can stand by those. I owe it to the people of Alberta to be confident in the decisions that we're making.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The Speaker: The point of order is acknowledged. I'd like to consult with the Clerk, with the permission of the House.

First supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: given that there was also a commitment of $357 million to the Alberta seniors' benefit announced in support of approximately 150,000 seniors to allow them to live with dignity, will you and this government remain accountable to low-income seniors by committing to maintaining this funding?

Ms Hoffman: Absolutely. Funding for ensuring the dignity and respect of seniors is a priority for this government. We put that in our platform, and we're committed to delivering on that.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that this House had designated $200 million for the Alberta Social Housing Corporation, including $143 million for seniors' housing and rent supplements, what amounts, if any, will your government commit to the Alberta Social Housing Corporation in support of Alberta's low-income seniors, individuals, families, and those with special needs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the question and to the member for raising it. Yesterday we had an opportunity to debate the interim supply bill. That's about making sure that we can continue to operate as a government in the days ahead.

In terms of specific line items we've made it very clear that we'll be presenting a full budget in the fall, and we'll have a thorough opportunity to debate every one of those line items at that time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would advise that we have two members' statements left for this afternoon.

The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

World Refugee Day

Mr. Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to stand today and recognize World Refugee Day, which occurs on June 20 each year. With my father, mother, and older brother I came to Canada, fleeing our homeland due to violence as a result of the September 11, 1973, military coup in Chile. I happened to arrive in Canada on Canada Day in 1976. I often tell people that coming to Canada as a refugee is not the same as coming as an immigrant. Refugees under threat of persecution and violence are fleeing their homes, leaving loved ones, and they long for the opportunity to return home. However, that being said, soon after arriving, my parents decided that we would stay in Canada and apply for citizenship so that we as children could attend postsecondary education, an opportunity we would not have had if we'd stayed in Chile during the dictatorship.

Alberta has good organizations providing assistance to refugees. I couldn't name them all, but I do want to recognize the Edmonton Mennonite Centre for Newcomers, Catholic Social Services, and Edmonton Immigrant Services Association.

According to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees there are more than 50 million refugees around the world. Half of them are children and women. Today I ask that we honour the courage, strength, and determination of people forced to flee their homes. I also ask that we recognize the contribution of these refugees to their new communities. Today let all members of this Legislature and all Albertans reflect on the human right to a secure place that each person can call home.

I am thankful I was received with open arms by fellow Albertans in 1976 and that since then I was able to access education, health care, and other services to become a fully engaged and productive member of society.

Refugees have much to contribute, and I know that this government will respect the dignity of each of them and ensure each of them a full opportunity to contribute and be supported.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Freson Bros. 60th Anniversary

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me take us back to October 20, 1955. On that date Freson Market Ltd. began when Frank Lovsin opened a butcher shop with two partners, Frank Resek and Frank's father, Leo Resek, from Edson. The name Freson was derived from a combination of the letters in the three partners' names. It is now the 60-year anniversary of this strong, committed company.

This started in Hinton, Alberta, with a butcher shop. Throughout the 1950s and the 1960s Freson Bros. expanded to new locations within Alberta, always looking at the horizon. The chain of businesses the grocers became in communities can be attributed to the entrepreneurial spirit Albertans have always enjoyed, as demonstrated by these people, and to a commitment to providing quality products, good value, a clean shopping environment, and outstanding customer service for the people of Alberta.

This Alberta-founded, family-owned business is a shining example of Alberta and the qualities we as Albertans aspire to. Throughout Alberta we never need to look far to find successful businesses of every sort making social and economic contributions to the strength and health of our communities. As stated in the throne speech, "Albertans are working together to build a prosperous, entrepreneurial, diversified economy full of opportunity for us all."

Freson Bros. holds its own in a fight above its weight class. National and multinational conglomerates are the competitors that they and their approximately one thousand workers face every day. These Albertans face this fight with grace. Freson Bros. is an ethical, fair employer, with employees ranging from teenagers with after school jobs to those getting ready to exit the workforce.

I commend Freson Bros. for the determination and grit it takes to not just survive but to flourish in this tough industry, and I also commend and recommend them and their gorgeous and tasty flagship store in Stony Plain.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Bill 2

An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present Bill 2, An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue, for first reading.

This bill is an important step in restoring balance and fairness to our taxation system and allows us to better invest in hard-working families. The proposed bill has two distinct components, one that affects corporate income tax and the other that affects personal income tax. With this bill CIT will be changed from 10 to 12 per cent, a change that will take effect on July 1, 2015. On the PIT side there'll be five new tax brackets that we'll introduce, restoring balance to our system of taxation, with implementation beginning on October 1, 2015.

Mr. Speaker, these tax measures restore progressivity, balance, and fairness to our revenues while maintaining a provincial tax system that is competitive and responsible. These measures will allow the government to invest in services for all Albertans.

I would encourage all members to support the bill on first reading, and I look forward to the coming debate. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Bill 201

Assuring Alberta's Fiscal Future Act

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 201, Assuring Alberta's Fiscal Future Act.

I'm humbled to have the opportunity to sponsor this private member's bill and bring the best representation possible to my constituents and Albertans at large. This bill will charge the government to save a specified percentage of nonrenewable resource revenue. It will charge this government to immediately strengthen the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. Nonrenewable resource revenue should not be treated as a right. It is not a right that was promised to us, and it is not a right that will continue to flow forever. The federal government intends to phase out carbon emissions, which means that saving now has become more important than ever.

The time has come when we must commit more of this wealth to the future of Alberta. This bill asks the government to introduce a bill of their own that gives effect to the contents of Bill 201. Bill 201 outlines the savings of 25 per cent of nonrenewable resource revenue into the heritage trust fund until the fiscal year where operational revenue is projected to exceed operational expenses. For the next fiscal year that percentage increases to 50 per cent for that year and every subsequent fiscal year after that.

I look forward to fulsome debate on the future of Alberta. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Alberta Local Food Act

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request leave to introduce a bill being the Alberta Local Food Act.

This act is designed to ensure a resilient, sustainable, strong local economy and agricultural land base in Alberta. The establishment of the Local Food Act will work towards several important goals for Alberta and our agricultural industry in this province. It will establish an advisory committee on food and agriculture to review the current state of our local food systems, develop a local food and agriculture strategy, improve and maximize economic return and food security here in Alberta, and establish a local food awareness week. Bill 202 will promote the purchase of local foods by public-sector organizations.

I'm proposing this bill for many reasons. Local food and agriculture are important to my community of Strathcona-Sherwood Park. My constituency is home to many farmers that face barriers to connecting with larger markets. It's a common problem throughout the province. The advisory committee proposed in this bill will consult with individuals and organizations with experience and interests applicable to the local food market such as farming and food systems, agricultural associations, organic farming associations, municipalities, First Nations and indigenous organizations.

I am proud to be presenting my first private member's bill on this issue, and I look forward to discussion and deliberation with all colleagues. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a first time]

The Speaker: Points of order.

The hon. member.

Point of Order
Imputing Motives

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I rise on a point of order, specifically the citation of Standing Order 23(i) and (l). I will quote these as soon as I put my glasses on. You'll appreciate that with aging, you need to do this. It reads:

(i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;

and

(l) introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly.

During the course of answering the question from the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek with regard to funding of ASLI projects, the Minister of Health – and I don't have the Blues in front of me – used a phrase, something to the effect of: we know that this party had political interference with the selection process. Mr. Speaker, I think all of us in this Assembly, even after only four days, can appreciate the zeal of the hon. Minister of Health and her desire to make her points very strongly. Nonetheless, there are limitations upon that zeal, and that zeal cannot be expressed in such a way that casts negative aspersions on other members within the Legislature.

With regard specifically to the standing orders that we operate under and to the custom that we all call each other hon. members, she specifically indicated that at least three members of our caucus had been involved in improper practices. We have three former ministers of Infrastructure in our caucus. We have two former ministers of Transportation. When she uses the phraseology, "We know that this party," as opposed to that it is an allegation or a suspicion or something that they just believe to be true, then it is stating that as fact, Mr. Speaker, and I would suggest that those are facts that are not presently in evidence.

Mr. Speaker, you know, like I say, I think that it is just simply a matter of the minister being very zealous in her duties, and that is certainly something that I think we can all appreciate. Nonetheless, there are procedures, precedents, and privileges within our Assembly that need to be honoured, and I would simply ask that the member withdraw the comment and apologize to the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Having had an opportunity to speak to the hon. minister with respect to this, she's indicated to me that in her enthusiasm she went a little too far, and on her behalf I'm happy to indicate that she's willing to withdraw the remark and to apologize to the House.

The Speaker: I would like to acknowledge the comment made by the member as well as the appreciation of the Speaker for the withdrawal of the comment. I would use this as an opportunity. While we've read the details of these standing orders, the issue that you all committed to was one of respect, and we must continuously practise that.

Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Connolly moved, seconded by Ms Kazim, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate June 17: Mr. Bilous]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's a great honour to rise to present my response to Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's speech. I do want to acknowledge the Government House Leader and thank him for the opportunity to do so.

Well, it's been quite a journey getting to this moment, but here I am and here we all are to do the important work of the people of Alberta. It is a new day in the Alberta Legislature, and I again want to congratulate the Premier and her government and all of the members of the House.

When we run for office, our families run with us. I want to thank my wife, who somehow manages to keep things on track for our daughters while also working full-time plus, doing her important work as a palliative care physician, helping those in their time of great need. To my daughters: thank you for putting up with all of this. It might not always seem like it, but I am doing this for you. I know that all members of the Assembly are also spending a lot of time away from their families as we work together in our shared goal of making Alberta even better than it already is.

Now, I'm not the first in my family to seek elected office. My grandmother Alberta Clark – and, yes, her name really was Alberta Clark – was the 35th woman in Alberta history to run in a provincial election, standing in the constituency of Calgary in the 1952 general election. My grandmother taught me that perseverance, service to community, and commitment to family are what really matter. Also, my father sought the seat of Calgary-Elbow in 1989. He lost narrowly to one Ralph Klein. My father tells me that he wants all of you to know that the cuts to health and education in the 1990s were not his fault.

It is indeed an honour and a privilege to represent the people of Calgary-Elbow, the place I was born, where I was raised and I've lived my entire life. Parts of what are now Calgary-Elbow have been home to five Premiers, including Premiers Redford, Klein, Lougheed, Manning, and Aberhart, as well as two Lieutenant Governors, John J. Bowlen and Grant MacEwan. It is a diverse community, home to some of Calgary's oldest and newest neighbourhoods, co-op housing, and homes that are historic landmarks. In all parts of the constituency the people of Calgary-Elbow enjoy a strong sense of community and connectedness to their neighbourhoods.

This was tested two years ago, almost to the day, when we experienced one of the worst natural disasters in our country's history. In the days and weeks after the flood we showed the world what we're made of. Thousands of people pitched in to help total strangers dig out their basements, and neighbours with less damage helped those worse off than themselves. We showed the world, but more importantly we showed each other what it means to be an Albertan. While we should remember the positives that came out of the aftermath of the flood, we must not be complacent. Another flood is coming. We just don't know when.

Let us never forget the five people who lost their lives in the flood and count ourselves lucky that the number was not much higher. Also, think of the first responders who risked their lives running towards danger while the rest of us sought safety. Think about the economic impact. The 2013 flood was the most expensive natural disaster in Canadian history. The flood waters came within inches of entering downtown from the south. If that happens again, the damage could be tens of billions of dollars in lost business, and the impact on the thousands of people living and working downtown would be immeasurable. We can and must build flood mitigation, and we must do it quickly to ensure the continued economic viability of downtown Calgary and ensure that the residents of Calgary-Elbow and other communities never have to live through another devastating flood.

While flood mitigation is important, it certainly is not the only reason I'm here. I stand before you in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta because of my daughters, because I have a deep and abiding desire to ensure that the Alberta they inherit has even greater opportunity and even greater equality than we enjoy today. I worry that this might not be the case. If we do not ensure that our province continues to be an attractive place for entrepreneurs, with a competitive tax regime especially for small business, if we do not pursue purposeful, market-driven economic diversification and we do not ensure that our government delivers well-managed and efficient public services, my daughters and all Albertans will not share in the prosperity that is possible in this great place.

We are truly fortunate to be Albertans, and I am endlessly optimistic about the future of our province. Alberta was built by forward-looking people who were optimists and risk takers at heart. We Albertans believe in ourselves and our families, families of all shapes and sizes. The real Alberta doesn't care whom you love, only that we treat each other with dignity and respect. We want the best for ourselves, but we also want the best for our neighbours, for our children, and for each and every one of the 4.3 million people who call Alberta home. This includes First Nations and Métis peoples, whose culture and heritage help define who and what Alberta is and what it can be. We must work together as partners to truly consult, to listen, and more importantly, to hear.

The people who built this province persevered. They didn't take no for an answer. They didn't let a failed crop or a dry well or a failed business stop them. They dusted themselves off, learned from the past, and moved forward, looking to the possibilities of tomorrow rather than bemoaning the failures of the past.

Albertans have always made the impossible possible. People more than a century ago were told that it was an impossible task to establish farms and homesteads on this bald prairie or even to survive an Alberta winter. Oil sands pioneers were told that it was impossible to overcome the technical challenges to produce bitumen economically. Medical researchers at the University of Alberta were told that nothing could be done to improve the lives of people with type 1 diabetes. Doctors at the University of Calgary were told that every stroke is a death sentence. They didn't give up. They didn't take no for an answer, and our province, our world is a better place for it. That's who we are as Albertans, and that is something to be proud of. Our work in this Assembly must be focused on ensuring that continues to be the case for future generations.

At the same time, we must recognize that many Albertans are going through difficult times and our province is facing an historic deficit. We must find more and more stable sources of revenue, but more spending cannot be the only answer. We must transform Alberta's public service and operate our government more efficiently and effectively. A new government is an opportunity to make our public service more transparent and less expensive.

I have had the privilege of listening to many responses to the Speech from the Throne, and what strikes me is that each and every one of us is here because we believe passionately in making Alberta a better place. I think we would be wise to heed the advice of the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. Let's make this Assembly a place of negotiation, always focusing on the best interests of Albertans.

We have a remarkable opportunity. We have the chance to define ourselves by our ideas, by our vision for Alberta, not by what we oppose, by who we are rather than what we are against. This new Legislature gives us a chance to look at old problems with a fresh perspective. I hope we all take this opportunity to show Albertans that we are ready to govern differently.

I make the same commitment to you that I make to my constituents in Calgary-Elbow, to my family, and to myself. I will be reasonable, rational, and forward looking. Where I believe government policy is good for Albertans, I will support it. I will never oppose for the sake of opposition. Where I disagree, I will say why, and I will propose clear alternatives. My hope is that we as members working together will ensure that the Alberta spirit of looking out for our neighbours and rewarding hard work, of shared prosperity and a focus for the future continues today and for many generations to come.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Clark: I've been asked to remain standing and move adjournment of debate on consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's speech.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 3

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015 (No. 2)

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 3, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015 (No. 2).

The Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015 (No. 2) will provide funding authority to the offices of the Legislative Assembly and to the government for the period from July 1, 2015, to November 30, 2015, inclusive. The approval of this act will provide the funds needed to continue the business of the province while the government and the Assembly take the time necessary to prepare, present, review, debate the government's 2015-16 budget plan. Through the passage of this supply act this government will reinvest in health care, education, advanced education, and human services. I respectfully urge my colleagues in this House to support the bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've completed a mere three hours of debate on this bill. We've been allotted only three hours, the minimum legal time allowed under the standing orders of this House for interim supply. Now, the government appears to have taken its cue from the previous government in forcing debate down to one and a half hours for second reading of this bill under Standing Order 64. They are forcing a vote at a quarter after 4 today, effectively cutting debate in half. All of my colleagues would have liked to have spoken to the bill today. The government is not allowing even the minuscule promised debate.

Yesterday in Committee of Supply I asked the government some very basic questions that I truly believe should have been answered and could have been answered. My colleagues asked questions pertaining to some of their shadow ministerial portfolios. Each and every one of my colleagues representing a shadow ministry should have been allowed to ask their ministers opposite detailed and probing questions with regard to spending in their ministries. Not that it would have done us any good. Again, most of the ministers had a very strange way of providing details on their ministries. The government has been vague about when the budget itself will be released. According to this interim supply it goes until the end of November, even a month after the scheduled federal election. This document, as I have stated before, is a blank cheque. It is asking this House for permission to spend without accountability, without scrutiny, without any guidance from the Legislature. It is asking for us to rubber-stamp it and just trust them.

I asked the Minister of Finance yesterday five very simple questions. I'm going to ask them again today. One, how much money will this government spend during this fiscal year? Two, how much revenue will this government collect during this fiscal year? Three, what will be the deficit for this fiscal year? Four, what will be the debt at the end of this fiscal year? Five, what will be the province's net financial assets at the end of this fiscal year? If the minister is unable to answer these questions, he is asking us to give him an $18.6 billion preloaded gift card.

The former government ran up $12 billion of debt in a few short years, squandered the sustainability fund, and planned to run up another $5.7 billion for just this year alone in the budget that they tabled before calling an election. Now in addition to the $5.7 billion that the previous government had intended to add to the provincial debt during this fiscal year, our best estimate of the government's numbers – and we are estimating because it appears that they haven't even begun to estimate – is that the new government will add an additional $2 billion to that figure either in the form of drawing down the last pennies of the sustainability fund, now called the contingency account, or by adding it to the provincial debt. Draining away the remaining pennies of the rainy-day fund is the same as putting it on the credit card.

The Government House Leader spoke out on March 15, just a few months ago, when the former government tried to pass a similar bill for less money for a shorter period of time and allowed even more debate than the current government is allowing. Now, is it that the government does not see its inconsistency? This government is spending faster than it can tax, and they need to explain where these additional – what is it now? Is it $1.8 billion or $700 million or $682 million? – dollars are going to come from. I'm not sure. It depends on which press release from the government you're checking and at what hour.

This government does not have a plan, and it has not shared the details for the rationale of the spending plan. If the NDP wants to spend $682 million – let's just go with that figure for the sake of argument today – of taxpayers' money, then Albertans deserve to know where it's coming from. The Minister of Finance was clear that the NDP are still reviewing the spending decisions of the previous government. How can they possibly announce new spending and be confident that the money is improving services for Albertans instead of propping up a bloated bureaucracy?

The NDP platform called for $1.8 billion in new spending for the fiscal year. This was confirmed by the Government House Leader just a few days ago. [interjection] Yesterday, even better. That is confusing. I think also yesterday – and the member will correct me if I'm wrong – they also said that figure was $700 million in interim supply. Now it's $682 million. It's quite confusing. It's confusing to us, but it still appears to be confusing to the government itself.

Now, I am looking at a summary of NDP budget changes, taken from their own platform. For the fiscal year ending 2016, they list the following revenue changes, some of which myself and my colleagues wholeheartedly agree with. Removing the PC health care levy: $396 million for this fiscal year is removed from their revenue projections. Removing user fees: $184 million. Restoring the charitable tax credit: $90 million. These are three measures that we fully support, but money must come from somewhere.

Now, this is where the NDP committed to bringing in an extra $1.1 billion in personal income tax revenues this year. This seems to be a rather difficult task to obtain when the Canada Revenue Agency is highly unlikely to allow these changes to come into place retroactively for this fiscal year on July 1. Perhaps the minister will clarify if that figure will be $1.1 billion, zero dollars, or somewhere in between.

Business taxes. The government committed to bringing in another $805 million a year in business taxes by hiking the rates. We've just seen Bill 2 before us now. Now, again, it is highly unlikely that, under tax collection agreements with the Canada Revenue Agency, the government would be able to retroactively increase taxes for this fiscal year to July 1. Let's say for the sake of argument that the government was able to raise taxes for half this fiscal year. That would make it $402.5 million compared to the $805 million they were promising.

Now, they promised another $100 million this fiscal year for delinquent business tax collection. They haven't even begun really writing their budget; I'm not sure if they've gotten around yet to grabbing businessmen by their ankles and shaking them upside down for money they haven't paid yet, a favourite practice of the NDP, I'm sure. That is $100 million. They might eventually be able to collect that, but again it's doubtful that they would be able to collect it this year. But let's be generous and say that they can. They also added a railway fuel tax adjustment, that would collect $10 million under their plan.

So the most likely figure for new taxes and revenue collected this year under the NDP plan, not that I particularly endorse any of it, would be $402 million this fiscal year. At the high end, the highest likely figure they would possibly collect, would be $512 million. The new government has committed to spending $1.8 billion in new spending this fiscal year alone. If they're going to spend $1.8 billion in new spending but are likely to collect at the high end $512 million, that leaves a $1.3 billion black hole in their budget. Mr. Speaker, that scares the hell out of me.

Now, there is quite a differential in many of their numbers. That $1.8 billion in new spending commitments is for the full fiscal year. If they're saying that they're going to collect $512 million at the very high end, but the $682 million that they are referring to is only for this fiscal year and that they were merely confused, then that leaves still a differential of about $170 million.

Mr. Speaker, the point is that the numbers don't add up. Now, that's nothing new to this Legislature, but at least the government had a PR plan before they presented it. This all to say that this government is spending faster than it can tax.

The government does not have a plan, and as much as I and my colleagues have patiently asked, they have not provided details on a rationale for this additional spending, and they have not provided details about where the money is going to come from other than thin air. If the government wants to spend $682 million of taxpayers' money, taxpayers deserve to know where it's going to come from.

Now, the new spending promised by the government amounts to $650 per family. They might particularly like that. Some people might like that. But the money must come from somewhere. Because the government has thus far refused to provide details on its total expenditures, total revenues, its deficit, its debt, and net financial assets, we must assume that this money will come from one of two places, even higher taxes than the government campaigned on during the election or an even higher debt than the government campaigned on during the election. Since Bill 2 is before us today, I think the answer to that is most likely going to be higher debt than they campaigned on and an even deeper draw on the contingency account.

The NDP platform is confused about how much it's going to spend, and the minister has not done anything to clarify this for us yet. Now, I genuinely am looking for some answers. Oppositions like to embarrass governments, but we don't want to do that. We genuinely would like some answers. We've been asking for them for two days now despite the minuscule amount of debate time that has been allowed, despite the fact that my colleagues have not been allowed to ask legitimate, probing questions of the ministries that they shadow.

Mr. Speaker, we face a $2 billion black hole in the NDP budget in addition to the $5.7 billion consolidated cash deficit projected by the PCs. We know from looking at other jurisdictions that spending more does not necessarily equal better outcomes. Their plan is to spend more, tax more, borrow more, and let the budget run wild. They are driving in the dark. These announcements might sound good, but the money must come from somewhere. It does not grow on trees. According to the numbers announced this week, we are likely headed for an entire summer and probably another two months in the fall without a budget.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am going to close by giving the minister another chance to answer questions that have been asked in good faith, that Albertans deserve, that taxpayers need, that businesses deserve. They promised $1.3 billion in new revenue, but clearly the government is not going to meet the number this year. Again, I will ask: how much revenue will the government collect, how much will it spend, how much will it borrow, what will be the net financial assets at the end of the year, and will they commit to a budget before the federal election?

The Speaker: Is there another hon. member who would like to speak? The hon. member is recognized.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 3, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015 (No. 2). I have several questions with respect to this bill but will focus on my shadow cabinet, Aboriginal Relations. It's a wonderful first step to say that with this bill the government is taking steps to ensure Alberta families have access to essential services upon which they rely. But what families are you addressing?

Community members living on reserve and on Métis settlements across the province are concerned about what supports they may see coming out of Bill 3. While we have received information that shows specific supports to education, postsecondary education, health, and human services, we're still in the dark about what our First Nation and Métis communities can expect from this budget. How about education for Métis students and students on reserves? How about supports for First Nation and Métis students as they consider postsecondary education away from their communities or sometimes, if they're lucky, within their communities? How will human services be extended on reserves and into settlements? How about health services on reserve and in settlements? There is a large group of community members who are in the dark about what Bill 3 will mean for them. I would like to make sure that their voice is heard today as we debate Bill 3.

Specifically, Mr. Speaker, the breakdown of the funding going to Aboriginal Relations is almost $85 million in expenses, $10,000 in capital, which seems to be a pretty specific number, which should be easy to zero in on exactly what that is for, and over $32 million in financial transactions for a total of almost $117 million. That's a lot of money. But what are those expenses? What services are included? To whom? Where? Is there any band- or settlement-specific funding targeted in this bill? What are the capital investments? Where are these investments? Who is going to benefit from them? What are financial transactions? We need some clarifications. That's all we're asking for.

Further, Mr. Speaker, what is the intended distribution of these expenditures across the province? How will the government ensure that there is fair use of these funds across the province? How will community members know what may be addressed for their community? There are no specifics. Who will be accountable for the projects and services that come out of these expenditures?

If the NDP wants to spend this much money, the Alberta public, including our First Nations and Métis community members, deserve to know where it is coming from and, just as importantly, where it is going. Mr. Speaker, I need to be able to go back to my community and be able to communicate with my First Nations and Métis communities across the province to assure them that this bill, as problematic as it is, may yet provide some locally determined, carefully planned supports. But first I need some information.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary . . .

Mr. McIver: Hays.

The Speaker: Is this applying with respect to 29(2)(a)?

Mr. McIver: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a), as I understand it, is that you now have an opportunity for up to five minutes to ask questions or clarifications for the last speaker with respect to his comments, and if there are none, then we would move to the next member.

The hon. House leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today, and I just would like to thank the hon. member so much for his thought-out comments. It's very clear to me that he has a passion for the people in his constituency and in particular the people that are affected by the Aboriginal Relations portfolio. I guess I'm just a little bit curious to know if he would be willing to expand just a little bit on – you know, many of us are new in the House – the process of how we arrived here today. Do you feel like we've had a fair amount of time to debate this, or do you feel like it may have been rushed?

3:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Yes, being new here and being a fiscal conservative, it concerns me when we try to rush through a bill of this magnitude that's going to spend so much of Alberta's money, so much of taxpayers' money because that's where it eventually comes from.

Mrs. Pitt: Shame.

Mr. Hanson: Shame.

I would not in my own personal life make an expenditure on, say, buying a house or an apartment from a picture off the Internet, which is pretty much a snapshot of what we got of this budget. We have a lot of issues in my constituency. You know, although I'm against spending uncontrollably, some of these areas do need to be addressed. With our Métis and First Nations peoples there are a lot of people there that have very good ideas about promoting their own self-sufficiency, and I think that this government has a real opportunity to address those issues. Specifics in this budget could have done that, but again we've had no specifics. It's been just a snapshot of a budget.

We're talking about $18 billion of taxpayers' money, my money, my kids' money. They all work for a living. We need to address this, get more specifics on it so that we can go back to our communities and tell them how much money they're going to be getting, where it's coming from, who's going to be watching how it's spent so that we can control this in the respect of all taxpayers of Alberta. No more snapshot budgets. Let's get a full walk-through video. It's all available.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there any other questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to rise and talk about Bill 3. I appreciate my colleagues' comments here in the House. As time goes on, some things stay the same, and some things are different. I think what was pointed out is that the past government provided more time for questions, which is the same, but what is different is that the past government actually gave more detail so that the House had something to question on.

One thing that's the same is that the opposition sometimes has some very good questions, and another thing that's the same is that after complaining about the time, the opposition didn't use all the time available after complaining about not having enough. That hasn't changed.

Mr. Cooper: Two minutes, sir. Two minutes.

Mr. McIver: I thank the hon. member for agreeing with me.

Nonetheless, Mr. Speaker, the opposition has some good questions, and I thank them for asking those good questions.

What is the key question, Mr. Speaker? We asked ministers yesterday a lot of questions, got next to no answers with any meat on them. I think I actually thanked one minister yesterday when I got one straight answer, and I'm grateful for that one straight answer though I asked a lot of questions and my colleagues did. But while I don't expect any answers today because we didn't get any yesterday, the number one question that I think Albertans will be interested in and that I think all members of this House should ponder and talk to our constituents over the weekend about when we get there, because I know I will be, is that the government acknowledged yesterday that they brought forward $1.8 billion in new spending.

We acknowledge that the government has the right to do that. They have the right to take that money from Albertans as a result of the recent election. They have that right. We acknowledge that right. We acknowledge the rights that come with winning an election. But I'm going to take just a second or two to remind the government of the responsibility that is attached to that. The responsibility, Mr. Speaker, that's attached to that very, very directly is to tell Albertans, whose money you're spending, what you are spending it on.

Now, the government says that they're going to give a budget here in the fall. October, I think, is what the Premier said yesterday, and I have no reason to doubt that the Premier is telling the truth on that. But the government took the money yesterday, or today, when this bill passes. Before this session ends, the government will have taken the money, effectively, out of Albertans' pockets without an explanation. They didn't borrow a buck for a coffee. One point one billion dollars unexplained: there's your question. There is your question, Mr. Speaker. Why are you taking $1.1 billion of Albertans' money without explaining?

Well, there are a thousand questions. Members across, whether they're on the front bench, the middle bench, or the backbench, you maybe should be asking your ministers so that you can tell your constituents where the $1.1 billion is going. I'm guessing that some of your constituents will be asking you that, and I can tell you that when my constituents ask me that, I'm going to tell them that we PCs fought for the answer, that we PCs asked for the answer because we care about where $1.1 billion of Albertans' money is going. No answer yet has been offered in this House, Mr. Speaker.

I will close by posing that question one last time: what are you going to do with the $1.1 billion thus far unexplained?

The Speaker: Are there any questions or observations under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Mason: Under 29(2)(a) I just want to respond to the hon. member and leader of the third party. In fact, there are four areas where the government has added additional money to fund things that Albertans voted for in the election. There are four. All have been the subject of public announcements.

First of all, there was more money for health care, and I thought I had the actual numbers. I was going to give the hon. member the actual numbers. I'll get them. I'll get back up. We've got a little bit of time here. There was some for health care, there was some for Education, some for advanced education, and some for Human Services. I will go into more detail when I have that chance.

The interim supply bill provides $500 million in Health to ensure that we can restore front-line funding that was cut in the previous government's budget. That was a cut in the previous government's budget that has been restored. There is $39 million in Human Services in order to ensure that there are additional services to vulnerable families in Alberta. There is $45 million for Education that enables us to make sure that school boards are able to hire the teachers to meet enrolment pressures in the school system. There's $40 million for Innovation and Advanced Education to allow the government to impose a tuition freeze at institutions across the province, a rollback of market modifiers which were introduced back in 2004.

That is the bulk of the additional $1.1 billion. I will just indicate to the House that the situation that we found ourselves in – how's my time, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Two and a half minutes.

Mr. Mason: Two minutes.

We found ourselves in a situation. Normally a budget is presented to the House by a government in March or April. The previous government presented their budget in March and April and, instead of debating it in the House and passing the budget, decided to call an election and run on that budget. Of course, the result of that election is well known.

Then this government took office 24 days ago. The interim supply that the previous government had approved in the Assembly runs out at the end of June, and then the government can't operate because it has no authority from the Assembly to pay its employees, to pay for the programs that it has to operate, to pay bills to keep the lights on and the heat on in the hospitals and schools and all of that. We needed to put together an interim supply bill that would allow the government to continue to operate while the government organized itself and took a look at the books and began the process of developing a budget.

Now, we've had argument from the Wildrose members that we should do it in September. We're going to do it in October. They seem to think that this month is of critical importance. But the fact is that we need some time to put together our own budget. In the meantime we're operating along the lines of the supplementary supply that was passed by the previous Legislature at the request of the previous government, with these additions. There are a few more. I realize that these numbers don't come to $1.1 billion. I'm going to get them and stand up again.

That's the situation we're finding ourselves in. We run out of money to operate the government at the end of the month. The timing of all of this is not our choice. It is not our doing. We have inherited it as a result of decisions of the previous government. But the government must continue to operate, and we are doing a responsible thing by bringing in an interim supply while we can develop a responsible budget as a new government.

You will understand, I'm sure, hon. members from the third party, that creating a budget for a government is a large task that requires a lot of responsible thinking.

The Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. House leader of the opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 3. I just want to take a quick moment to talk about where we are and how we got here. I recognize that this bill is important, and I recognize that the government needs to keep running. As a number of my colleagues have highlighted today, you know, passing a piece of legislation that's $18 billion with such limited debate has created all sorts of challenges, particularly on this side of the House when it comes to being able to ask questions. I know that a number of my colleagues – in fact, in the three hours of allotted debate yesterday, other than the two minutes that we offered up to some of our other colleagues in the House, I believe that the Official Opposition was allotted five speakers to speak to $18 billion in spending.

Then we find ourselves on a beautiful Thursday afternoon in June, and the government has made a choice to introduce second reading of Bill 3 at 3:05 or whatever it was, knowing full well that at 4:15 the guillotine would fall on second reading, again preventing the opportunity for my colleagues in the opposition to speak to the bill and, essentially, limiting debate. I would be hesitant to utilize the words around time allocation. I know that the government when they were in opposition was certainly wildly opposed to such tactics. But here we have a situation where at a critical stage in debate, again, the time is limited for the opposition to raise the valid concerns of our constituents. It's not just about standing up and carrying on. It's about limiting our ability to act accurately and openly, to represent our constituents, that have sent us to this place.

In fact, members of the government regularly took the opportunity when they were in opposition to rise and speak specifically to this type of behaviour in the Assembly. I would just like to point to you one particular day in November last year, when there was a member of this House – and I quote from Hansard for you – that said:

Part of it comes down to the courtesy that the government should be extending to the opposition as far as giving us as much time as possible to work through a bill and its process.

I think, you know, something that's very interesting about this House is the process of how the opposition acquires the bill, obviously after the first reading, but the time seems, at least this week, the speed at which we are blasting through pieces of legislation – I'd like to remind all the members of the Assembly that we're enacting laws that affect this year more than 4 million people. Down the road – I mean, we're expanding very quickly here in the province. We should be taking the time to go through this and have a thorough debate. I don't think rushing legislation does anyone any favours.

And who said that? I was about to refer to someone's presence in the House, so I'll just withdraw that part and say that the Minister of Municipal Affairs is the one who had uttered those words in this House just last year.

You know, when we look at what has happened this week, we've seen supplementary supply introduced on Tuesday, with a massive undertaking for the opposition to be prepared on less than 24 hours' notice to debate that in the House for three hours yesterday, and now some would say the ramming through of second reading of Bill 3 here in the Assembly.

I can go on with some additional quotes when it comes to the now government. This is from December 8, 2014.

Like our friends in the Wildrose, we have a number of amendments that we want to bring forward, but I think it would be better to do this out in the open and involve the opposition and have some real discussion about how we can improve this bill with the people that do that.

That is from the Government House Leader only last year.

One more I'll leave you with, also from a colleague of yours and of ours and, I will say, an all-around good guy.

I just wanted to remind Albertans that with many pieces of legislation, when they are done hastily, when they're done without adequate consultation [or debate], when they're done without input from the opposition, we find ourselves in this situation.

Again, the Minister of Municipal Affairs just last year, in fact in December.

It's a real shame that we arrive here today to debate a critically important piece of legislation with massive ramifications for our province, with massive amounts of increased spending and minimal amounts of debate. For our province I hope for the best, and I hope for the best for all Albertans, that a renewed commitment can be found in the fall Legislature, where this type of behaviour and tactics on behalf of the government will be put aside and fulsome debate on all of the important issues will be able to be heard.

The Speaker: Are there any observations or questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. I just wanted to supplement my earlier comments, Mr. Speaker. In addition to the $624 million that I indicated for additional program spending, there's approximately $400 million due to the cancellation of the health care tax, and there is over $200 million for cancelled increases to various fees and so on that were increased in the previous government's budget. That is approximately $1.2 billion over and above what was in the previous government's budget. So it's not only increased spending on one side, but it's actually giving up tax revenue where we didn't agree with the tax increases on the other side.

Mr. McIver: That must have hurt.

Mr. Mason: We don't agree with all tax, hon. member.

The Speaker: Hon. member, regarding 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Opposition House Leader makes some excellent points about the size and scope of this debate and how it's been limited and about the comments of former members of the opposition, now on the government side, and their consistency with their previous remarks.

Now, speaking of remarks from those on the government side, perhaps they can just nod in agreement when these numbers are read as correct. The Government House Leader had indicated that of the new spending, $500 million was for Health, that $45 million was for Education, that $39 million was for Human Services, and that $40 million was for advanced education. Mr. Speaker, that adds up to $624 million. If I'm not mistaken, that is the fourth figure we've seen in two days on new spending from the government. I believe just a few hours ago the government said that the new spending added up to $682 million. Now, scratching my head here, I think that's a $58 million differential between 10 o'clock this morning and five minutes to 4.

That is the fourth figure we've heard. We have heard $1.8 billion. We have heard $700 million. We have heard $682 million, and now we've heard $624 million. Now, I don't know about you, Mr. Speaker, but I'm starting to get very confused. I think Albertans are starting to get very confused. Perhaps someone from the government side would like to take this time to explain their fourth new spending figure in 24 hours.

The Speaker: Other comments or observations under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to rise and thank the hon. member for the comments, and I think it would be impolite of me if I didn't thank the hon. Government House Leader for answering part of the question. The last time I stood here, I said – and nobody seems to have quibbled with it – that the government owes an explanation to Albertans for $1.1 billion. Due to my badgering, I suppose, the hon. Government House Leader – and let me repeat my thank you to him – stood up and explained $600 million of those dollars and then said that it comes out to $1.2 billion. I had $1.1 billion, so what's a hundred million between friends?

How much time do I have, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: You have about 35 seconds.

Mr. McIver: Thirty-five seconds is enough to reframe the question.

Due to the information that the government just provided a few seconds ago, the same question that I asked earlier is the one for Albertans, for all of us in this House. Where is the other $500 million to $600 million going to be spent? It hasn't been answered by the government. They've taken it from Albertans. They have the right to take it from Albertans. They just haven't fulfilled their obligation to Albertans to explain why they need the money.

The Speaker: Are there any other speakers wishing to speak to Bill 3, appropriations? The hon. member.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 3, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015 (No. 2). I'm disappointed that not all of my colleagues will have the chance to speak as many have a lot of questions and would like to get on record about this spending. There's no need to cut the debate and force this minibudget through, yet it appears that is what we're about to do.

As the shadow minister of Infrastructure it is my job to scrutinize the government spending of Alberta Infrastructure. This minibudget bill allocates $228.5 million for operational expenses for the next five months in addition to $147.5 million in operational expenses that were approved for three months. That works out to 64 per cent of last year's operational expenditures.

Operational expenditures cover such things as the big-ticket items, property management, leases of facilities. Yes, it costs money to manage real estate and to pay the rent when leasing buildings from the private sector. All the nice cleaning staff you see in the Legislature, the guys that change the lights and scrub the windows: these are their salaries. There's even money in here to pay for operations of the one and only Swan Hills Treatment Centre, the only place in Canada to dispose of hazardous materials that are not pathological, radioactive, or explosive. No one can ever say that Alberta is doing nothing for the environment. Alberta takes the worst of the worst materials from across the country to make them safe because Alberta mandates it. Operational expenditures also cover the salaries of the professional, nonpartisan public service.

But, Mr. Speaker, we do not know how much each of these line items is receiving because the government did not treat this mini-budget as a real budget and published those line items as estimates. It is spending without thorough scrutiny. Over in the capital investment vote $440 million is allocated for the next five months on top of $153 million for the past three months. That's about 60 per cent of last year's capital spending for Alberta Infrastructure, but I do not know how much is being allocated to the capital construction program, nor do I know how much is going to health facility support. New hospitals are being built across the province, but because the line items are not here, I do not know if hospitals will be completed this year or new ones started or projects stalled in favour of other projects, nor do I know if more land is being released in Fort McMurray for residential and commercial development. This minibudget does not have the details. I'm looking forward to seeing a full budget in the fall to be able to debate the individual line items with the minister in committee.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any questions under 29(2)(a)?

Are there other members who would like to speak to Bill 3?

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The plan is seemingly to raise taxes, raise spending, and to forget about savings. These announcements sound good. They sound really good, but the money has to come from somewhere, and it doesn't grow on trees. We must not spend too much money without explaining where it came from. This area where investment is being focused on sounds good, but we do have to pay for this. That's why we are here to help you. We are here to help this government.

In layman's terms we can't max out our credit card because we still have to pay for that interest on that credit card. We don't have mom and dad to pay for that credit card anymore.

Leaving our budget until after the federal election also impairs this province. Industry and business will have no confidence in Alberta. Investment will slow. Business will disappear. We cannot impair our province for politics. We must strengthen this province. Again, that is why we are here to help you. We're all on the same team, aren't we? We're all elected officials. You can just ask us to come on over. We're all paid already. [interjections] No, no. Not cross. Not cross. No, no, no. The Wildrose will help you to run a fiscally responsible government that is transparent and accountable. [interjections] Oh, no, no, no. Four years. Four years. We'll be there.

We are talking about billions of dollars in debt, not a thousand bucks, not a hundred bucks. We're talking billions. The interest on this is just phenomenal. We can't sacrifice future generations to pay for some nice-to-have stuff when we know that there is space in our budgets to cut before we spend.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any questions or observations under 29(2)(a)? The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just can't resist. I want to thank the hon. member for his offer to have some Wildrose members cross the floor to the government, but given what happened to the last government as a result, I respectfully decline.

The Speaker: Are there any other questions? The hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for letting me speak to Bill 3. As a . . .

The Speaker: May I interrupt a moment. The chair recognized you, hon. member, believing you were speaking under 29(2)(a).

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

To speak to the bill, the hon. member.

Mr. Smith: As a public school teacher for 30 years and as one that has just had to leave the classroom I speak from my heart here. You don't teach for 30 years without having a great love for kids and for the public education system that I served.

An Hon. Member: The best education in the country.

Mr. Smith: Absolutely.

Now, I guess that's why, with my 30 years of teaching, I stand. I've seen what happens to a public education system when funding is severely affected by government mismanagement. You know, when we aren't wise stewards of the public money, it's not some mythical person that is affected in the public school system. It's the kids, and it's the teachers. I've seen what happens to teachers' wages, and I've seen what happens to teachers' jobs, and I've seen what happens to teachers' pensions when debt is irresponsibly accumulated in this province. I've seen the impact on my classes when you cannot fund public education as it should be funded. I've seen the larger classes, I've seen the fewer resources, I've seen the students with fewer supports, and I've seen the schools with fewer janitors.

We have a responsibility in this Assembly, if we truly care about our publicly funded systems, if we truly care about public education, to ensure that we do not drive this province into deeper and deeper debt. It saddens me and it frustrates me as a new MLA when I'm faced with an interim supply bill here that will obviously sink this province into deeper debt. I don't want to have to go back to my constituents and I don't want to have to go back to the kids that I've been teaching this semester or to their parents and have to explain to them why we're getting increasingly into debt. I don't want to have to have the conversation: where is the money going to come from for public education? So I would ask the hon. members in this institution, if you really care for public education, to stop and think about how deeply in debt we're going to go as a province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, thank you so much for recognizing me. I really appreciate the words and the passion with which the member speaks. Clearly, his care for our children and those being educated in our province is at the fore. I also know that he is a big advocate of parents being able to be in charge of that education, and I wondered if he would just take a moment or two to expand upon how he thinks large amounts of debts that are incurred in the province might have a negative impact around, you know, different types of education as well.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Smith: Thank you for your question. Obviously, one of the joys about living in Alberta is that we understand that there are many types of families and there are many types of kids and there are many types and ways of educating our children, whether that's charter schools, whether that's home-schooling. I chose the public school system. I see a value in the public school system. But I have also taught kids that have come in from home-schooling that have been very well prepared for my classroom. I have had kids that I know in my community that have gone to charter schools and to independent schools and to a wide range of educational facilities and choices.

We live in a province where the parents should be able to make those choices and decisions, and your point is well taken. I mean, I focused on public schools because I was a public school teacher. But the decisions that we make as a government and the decisions that we make in this Legislature will affect all of the students in this province, all of the kids, and all of the choices their parents make. So we have a responsibility to be very careful with the way that we spend our monies.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Further comments or observations under 29(2)(a)? Member, proceed.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Closing off on this portion, I just want to bring back a thought about interim supply. It reminds me of a story about my son when he was in college. Usually on Friday afternoons I'd get a phone call. "Dad, I need some more money for books," and I'd go: "Books? Again?"

The Speaker: Hon. member, I need to clarify, so that you and I are on the same page, are you speaking on 29(2)(a), to the earlier comment?

Mr. W. Anderson: Yes. I am.

The Speaker: Okay. Thank you.

Mr. W. Anderson: Anyway, we're on interim supply. "I'm talking about money for books." "Okay. Fine. Additional money for books. Let me think about this. How much of it is going to go for beer?" "No. I'm not going to buy any beer, Dad. I'm just going to use the money for books." I was always trying to manage what the truth was behind the story, always looking for the details.

The challenge that I have with what I've heard in the last couple of hours is that I am not hearing anything about any cuts or any savings. I am hearing all about spending, where the money is being allocated to, funds being allocated to different areas, but I am not hearing about any areas of cuts or any areas of savings. That troubles me because as a taxpayer I'm not hearing about anywhere where there's any fiscal responsibility in managing the money. It's just about spending the money.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any members who would like to speak on Bill 3, appropriation? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a mom of a special-needs child my son's funding was cut on a regular basis. It's one of the first things to go when there's an issue with any government spending. So I urge our government to take a look at where this spending is going. We have to take a look, line by line, to see where those initiatives need to go and how that money is going to be spent.

We have to take a look at what's important and prioritize from that point of view. Many of you would understand; many of you are parents. You understand how important it is for your children to get the appropriate education, whether that's through home-school, whether that's through a charter school, whether that's through a public school, whether that's through a private school. There are so many, many options, and we're very, very grateful to have those options.

Having said that, in these situations when these things happen, the very first things to go are aides and care workers and all of the other things that happen in schools. We need to understand, from our side, where those dollars are going to come from, and there needs to be a priority and a sensibility in terms of how that money is being spent. It's wonderful that you're allocating money here, there, and everywhere, but we need to understand how that money is being spent. We need specific numbers. We need to be able to go back to our constituencies and say: this is where this education money is coming from, and this is where it's going.

It is a responsibility all of us have taken on as members in this Legislature, to take back to our constituency, so that they understand that the government actually has their best interests. We are actually here to help. I know you keep hearing that; you may not believe it. As a mother and as a person who has lived in her constituency since 1979 I have a responsibility. I have an 18- and a 16-year-old who we have raised to have fiscal responsibility within our own house. Maybe we should take a leaf out of our own books on how we run our own houses. This is the house of Albertans. Our responsibility here is to run it the way we would run our own house. We don't run deficits at our house. We make sure that the money that we have only goes to a certain point. We don't run a deficit.

An Hon. Member: No mortgages? Did you buy your house with cash?

Mrs. Aheer: Mortgages are fine, but I have to pay those mortgages off. Everybody has to. [interjection] That's absolutely right.

Having said that, I'm held accountable for that debt. That's on my shoulders. So if we as a government are going to take responsibility for that debt, let us know what's going on. There's an accountability and a transparency that's not there. My bank knows when I have a mortgage. My bank knows when I have a car payment due. I'm on the hook for that.

I'm also on the hook to make sure that my constituents get what they ask for, and that's what we're asking for. We need to understand what's happening with the money in this government. We need to understand the transparency and accountability. We deserve that. As members in the Legislature, as members of this province we have that responsibility to make sure that the people know and, like I said, as a mother I want to know.

Thank you so much.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you so much. I really appreciate you rising today as we move closer to the time allocation at 4:15, that has been imposed by this government. One thing I think that's very clear that we've seen today . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, are you speaking to 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Cooper: Yes.

The Speaker: Okay.

Mr. Cooper: As we move closer – I think we'll all find that 29(2)(a) is questions and comments, and clearly I'm making a comment.

One thing I think that's clear is that each and every member of the House is passionate about making the province better for Alberta. I'm excited to be a part of a team on both sides of the House that wants to make Alberta better, and . . .

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but in accordance with Standing Order 64(3) the Speaker is required to put the question to the House on the appropriation bill for second reading.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:15 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, yesterday, on June 21, Albertans all across our province celebrated the contributions made by the nearly one-quarter of a million First Nations, Métis, and Inuit people who reside in our wonderful province. I would ask the members to bow their heads and contemplate and give thanks for the rich culture, traditions, and gifts that our first people have contributed to our province. Amen.

Please remain standing for the singing of our national anthem as led by Mr. Robert Clark.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you some very special guests, and I would ask that they rise when I say their names, please. Peacha Atkinson is the mother of the late Nina Courtepatte, a beautiful girl who was lost to us in 2005. Bernice Martial is the grand chief of Treaty 6 and a strong advocate for missing and murdered indigenous women. Charles Weaselhead is the grand chief of Treaty 7 and chief of the Blood Tribe in southern Alberta. Chief Isaac Laboucan-Avirom is the deputy grand chief designate of Treaty 8 and is chief of the Woodland Cree First Nation. Audrey Poitras is the president of the Métis Nation of Alberta and a member of the Métis Women's Economic Security Council. Stan Delorme is the vice-president of the Metis Settlements General Council. Muriel Stanley Venne is the founder and president of the Institute for the Advancement of Aboriginal Women. Wilf Willier is from the Sucker Creek First Nation and is the founder of the Nechi institute and served for three terms as a councillor with the town of High Prairie. Peggy Richardson is an Inuit elder and a member of the First Nations Women's Economic Security Council. Tanya Kappo is the acting grand chief liaison with Treaty 8 First Nations of Alberta and on the national collective as a helper with Walking with Our Sisters, a commemorative art installation to honour the lives of missing and murdered indigenous women. Allan Pard is a member of the Piikani First Nation and a ceremonial elder, and he is also a senior adviser with the Ministry of Aboriginal Relations. Koren Lightning-Earle is the co-chair of the First Nations Women's Economic Security Council and a lawyer from the Samson Cree Nation. Grace Auger is the co-chair of the First Nations Women's Economic Security Council and a lawyer with the Legal Aid Society of Alberta at Siksika Nation.

Mr. Speaker, some of these individuals and many of the other special guests with us in the public gallery today are residential school survivors. All are advocates for missing and murdered women and, quite simply, outstanding members of their communities. I would like to draw your attention to members from treaties 6, 7, and 8 as well as from the Métis Nation of Alberta Association, the Metis Settlements General Council, the First Nations Women's Economic Security Council, and the Métis Women's Economic Security Council. Also in the gallery are Marianne Ryan, deputy commissioner of the RCMP K Division, and Chief Rod Knecht of the Edmonton Police Service.

I am touched that everyone took the time to join us today, and I would ask all members of this Assembly that you give them the warm welcome of this House. [Standing ovation]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Tracy Bear. Could you please stand, Tracy. Tracy is a PhD candidate at the University of Alberta, where she also is an instructor in the Faculty of Native Studies. Tracy is a proud Cree woman from Saskatchewan and has been involved with Walking with Our Sisters since it made its debut here in Edmonton in 2013. She is now on the national collective as a helper. The national collective provides support and assistance to communities as they plan, prepare, install, undertake, and deinstall Walking with Our Sisters. I would ask all members to join me in extending to Tracy the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly Mr. Maitham Salman Nima and Dr. Azhar Ali, husband and wife, constituents of Edmonton-Ellerslie. I ask them to please stand. Mr. Nima arrived in Edmonton in 1998 as a political refugee from Iraq and was later joined by his wife in 2003. Mr. Nima is an accomplished writer and photographer whom I met through the Mill Woods Artists Collective when he was named the Edmonton public library's writer in exile. Dr. Azhar Ali has been practising veterinary medicine since 2010 in different clinics in Edmonton and surrounding area, including the Edmonton humane society. Ever since she was a child, Dr. Ali has been around pets. The passion has led her to set her dream in life to be a veterinarian.

This June both Mr. Nima and Dr. Ali opened their very own veterinary clinic, called the Summerside Veterinary Hospital, equipped with the latest technology to serve residents and their pets in the city of Edmonton and area. Their business is located in the newly opened Summerside Plaza on 66th Street and Ellerslie Road southwest. I ask all members to greet them with the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly my husband, Mr. Jeremy Johnston, and also Mr. Adam Comartin, son of Joe Comartin, MP for Windsor-Tecumseh. Both men have been of great support to me. Adam shares his insight gathered from learning the ropes in politics from his father. Jeremy helps keep my morale up day in and day out, sacrificing his own sleep in solidarity with the lack of mine, both during the campaign and after. Jeremy is one of the many faces of low-wage earners in the restaurant industry, sacrificing time with friends, missing weddings and funerals, all with the hope of making ends meet at the end of the month. Adam moved to our great province to start a family and share in the profession of being a teacher with his wife, bettering the future of our province through our publicly funded education system. These are merely two stories amongst the great number that we have here in Alberta. If they could both stand to receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other guests? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly my very special guests, Ann Zvonkovic and Iva Sarjas. Ann and Iva are both strong community leaders in Edmonton-Manning and have spent many hours volunteering at the Slovenian Canadian Association to ensure that Edmontonians and their families have learned more about the Slovenian culture. Due to their hard work the Slovenian Canadian Association now has a strong presence in north Edmonton. I would ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my friend Mr. Jamie Post. Mr. Post is a long-serving community volunteer. He's a board member for Edmonton's Food Bank, the chair of the Edmonton Naming Committee, and a board member for the Edmonton Federation of Community Leagues. In his free time Mr. Jamie Post is director of communications and membership for the Alberta Council of Disability Services, a nonprofit association that exists to support service provider members, who, in turn, support people with developmental disabilities and brain injury. I ask that Mr. Jamie Post please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Did I see that the Government House Leader would like to do an introduction?

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Due to the large amount of business facing us this afternoon, I'll try and be very brief.

First, I'd like to introduce Susan Petrina, who is my CA. She has been a resident of Highlands for over 10 years, president of the community league, and she is also on the board of the Solar Energy Society of Alberta. Mari Sasano is my caseworker, and she has been active in the community of Parkdale-Cromdale. She is a writer and supporter of arts and theatre communities. I'd especially like to welcome Vera Petrina, who is Susan's 82-year-old mother, visiting from Kelowna, B.C. She has worked for many years as a unionized housekeeper for Kelowna General hospital. She has been retired for many years now but continues to work weekly as a volunteer. I would ask that they rise now, if they were able to be seated – there they are – and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure and privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guest, Mr. Christopher McBain. If you could please stand. Chris is a passionate and vivacious leader who has advocated for marginalized communities in Edmonton, including the LGBTQ-plus community, HIV/AIDS, and various communities surrounding the issues of disabilities. Through his career and community work he has accomplished much, but his numerous accomplishments include having served as a board member for the Alberta positive living society. He was recently nominated by Avenue magazine for Top 40 under 40 for 2015. I would like to ask you all to join me today in giving Mr. McBain the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any other guests for introduction today?
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given the importance of the ministerial announcement and the responses to follow, I'm going to ask now for unanimous consent of the House to permit the leader of the third party and the three independent MLAs to have an opportunity to respond to the ministerial statement made by the Premier. I would also ask for unanimous consent to extend the Routine to complete this item before starting question period.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Truth and Reconciliation

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On June 2 the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada had a special event in our nation's capital. For six years leading up to this, thousands of courageous First Nation, Métis, and Inuit people spoke their truth about the devastating experience of residential schools. We as Canadians were witness to that truth. We were shocked and at times rendered speechless as we learned of the First Nation, Métis, and Inuit children forcibly removed from their homes, placed beyond the protection and the love of their families. We felt deeply for the adults who shared their journey to come to terms with the broken child within. They have given us their truth. Now as Albertans and Canadians it's up to us to become part of this healing journey through acts of reconciliation. As Justice Murray Sinclair so poignantly stated, "We have described for you a mountain. We have shown you the path to the top. We call upon you to do the climbing."

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is ready to follow the path. As our first step we want the First Nation, Métis, and Inuit people of Alberta to know that we deeply regret the profound harm and damage that occurred to generations of children forced to attend residential schools. Although the province of Alberta did not establish this system, members of this Chamber at the time did not take a stand against it, and for this silence we apologize. These schools broke the connection between children and family, between community, between language and culture. These children too often lost the ability to connect again with their families, losing their identity and the confidence to pass on their traditions to their own children. With that, we also deeply regret the intergenerational damage that perpetuates itself in poverty, neglect, drug addiction, mental health issues, and great despair.

Today, Mr. Speaker, we are joined by many proud members of the First Nation, Métis, and Inuit communities of Alberta. Many are residential school survivors. All are advocates for missing and murdered women and, quite simply, outstanding members of their communities. To these honoured guests and to the residential school survivors of Alberta I would like to say: as children you entered these schools alone and frightened; this past is too painful to endure on your own; in the journey of reconciliation you no longer have to walk alone; your truth has woken our conscience and our sense of justice. True reconciliation will only be achieved if we as governments and citizens are willing to make a fundamental shift in our relationship with the First Nations, Métis, and Inuit peoples of Alberta, and we will do that.

Now, yesterday was National Aboriginal Day. On the longest day of the year we shone the light on the distinct cultures, histories, and heritage of First Nation, Métis, and Inuit people in Alberta. Today I want that light to illuminate the hearts of all Albertans. I want the issue of missing and murdered aboriginal women to come out of the shadows and to be viewed with compassion and understanding in the clear light of day.

The Truth and Reconciliation Commission spoke to a devastating link between the large number of missing and murdered aboriginal women and the many harmful factors in their lives such as domestic violence, poverty, and the number of aboriginal children in the child welfare system. Mr. Speaker, the executive summary report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission also stated that this complex interplay of factors is part of the legacy of residential schools, and this must be examined alongside the lack of success that police forces experience in solving these crimes against aboriginal women. In short, too many indigenous women are missing, too many indigenous families have suffered, and too many communities don't have the answers that they need.

When Helen Betty Osborne was murdered in The Pas, Manitoba, it took more than 16 years for charges to be brought forward. During those 16 years there were people who knew who was guilty but said nothing. It was called a conspiracy of silence. That was 43 years ago. Today, out of that long, unsettling silence, a strong and determined voice has emerged, and we hear that voice across our province in the growing movement within the hearts and homes of Albertans, from family members and friends of those who are gone, and in moving art exhibits by those who were touched by the tragedies of our silent sisters.

Mr. Speaker, today our government joins these voices. Today Alberta joins the call for a national inquiry into missing and murdered aboriginal women. Our hearts and a strong sense of justice and humanity compel us to speak loudly and clearly for these young beautiful women, who were mothers, daughters, sisters, who were deeply loved and are now deeply missed. We join the families, national aboriginal organizations, the provinces, the territories to lend our voice to the call for a national inquiry because it is the right thing to do. Together all of us in this House must openly face the root causes that place aboriginal women and girls at such high risk. Harsh realities like poverty, racism, inadequate housing, and lack of educational opportunities are amongst those realities, and until these root causes are addressed, the violence will continue.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government will develop a renewed relationship with aboriginal peoples based on trust and respect and take true action on these root causes because we understand that true reconciliation is a matter of action, not just words. There is good work being done out there. Alberta is working with aboriginal communities and organizations to improve the lives and the safety of aboriginal women through local solutions such as supporting the Moosehide campaign, which is aimed to take a stand against violence towards aboriginal women and girls.

Alberta Justice and Solicitor General is working with our federal, provincial, and territorial counterparts on a justice framework to address violence against aboriginal women and girls and analyzing the data from community engagement to determine the best practices for a culture of safe victim services response. Our government is working with aboriginal communities to address issues with early intervention supports to help keep children safe and to keep families together, to involve the extended family and the community when a child first becomes involved in our system. We also work with the First Nations Women's Economic Security Council and the Métis Women's Economic Security Council on the issue of trafficking of women and girls in Canada as it relates to missing and murdered indigenous women. Mr. Speaker, our government will continue to work with aboriginal communities and organizations until aboriginal women in Alberta can see a future for themselves that is safe and fulfilling.

So in this time of summer solstice we will not let the light dim on the crisis that is taking place across our province and across our country. With full conviction we lend our voice and our conscience to doing right by the women, their families, and their communities. The silence that once was has long since passed, and now is the time for their voices to be heard by all Albertans and all Canadians.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

As per the motion passed earlier, there is unanimous consent, so for a reply to the ministerial statement I would call on the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Premier, for your remarks. Hozu anejá. Hai, hai. In Dene: great job and thank you.

It is a pleasure to rise and speak to National Aboriginal Day. As a lifelong resident of northern Alberta I've grown up around our First Nations communities my entire life. I played ice hockey with the Janvier reserve Falcons for many years and have many family throughout Alberta on many reserves: the Janvier aboriginal band, the Fort McMurray aboriginal band, and the Mikisew band from Fort Chipewyan. I'm the youngest of 11 children in a blended family, and most of my brothers married First Nations women. I'm very proud to have many nieces and nephews who are aboriginal and who grew up on reserves and are both treaty and status aboriginals. They are very proud of their culture, proud of their treaty, as I am proud to have them in my family.

I've watched with pleasure in northern Alberta as I've seen many aboriginal communities make tremendous progress in becoming integrated into the broader economy while still maintaining their culture, their pride, and their sense of community. Just as there is no better social program than a job, there is no better way to preserve a culture than to have its members decide what to preserve, to make sure they're wealthy enough and successful enough to preserve exactly what they want to preserve, without interference from outsiders.

I was present in the House of Commons just a little while ago, over seven years ago, in fact, when the Prime Minister apologized to our aboriginal communities for residential schools. A complete tragedy. It was very heartfelt. Most people in the House did not have dry eyes. I was there that day. I've never been prouder of Prime Minister Stephen Harper than that day. In fact, I would suggest that it took great integrity and humility for him to do that particular apology, which was long overdue and no other Prime Minister had done.

The separation of aboriginal children from their parents caused incredible harm, and our First Nation communities are still suffering the consequences right across our country and province. We broke up families. It is unacceptable. We created a generation whose personal demons meant that they couldn't parent the way they wished to parent, as all of us have the choice to do in our own families. That was unacceptable. An apology is necessary, and an apology is given.

Many of the recommendations of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission provide an opportunity for healing, for forgiveness, and most importantly for how to improve our future as a country and as Canadians. We now fully understand what happened to families and entire communities as a result of the residential school system. There is no road map for how Canadians can begin to heal from the history of residential schools, but I find some comfort in the importance that the commission put on education. Better education is the key for all of us. It is certainly the key for our aboriginal Canadians. It is a place where the government of Alberta can make a real difference because, of course, that is within the Alberta government's jurisdiction. We need to do a better job of educating non-aboriginals about aboriginal culture, and we need to do a much better job to make sure that aboriginal Albertans have access to higher quality education.

My dream for our aboriginal communities, for my family is a future where they are led by a generation of talented, well-educated, and principled leaders from within their own communities, a future where aboriginal communities are very well integrated with the broader economy, based upon their own choice and choices, a future where they preserve their culture and share it with pride with other Albertans and Canadians, and a future where all Albertans and Canadians respect and appreciate the contributions of aboriginal culture to a diverse fabric of our society.

Let me quote from the report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. "In every region of the country, Survivors and others have sent a strong message . . . Canada must move from apology to action." The Premier today called for something which is in the federal jurisdiction. It is not action. What we need is action.

The average judicial inquiry takes many years to complete and many years to issue reports. The Truth and Reconciliation Commission made recommendations that are in the provincial sphere, that the Premier could take action on today, and we would encourage her to do so. We could provide the requested annual reports on the number of aboriginal children in provincial care. We could provide more clarity for the reasons for the apprehension and the continued apprehension of aboriginal children.

Measuring something is the first step to making it better. We have that opportunity. In fact, we could improve the standards of care for those aboriginal children in provincial care. That is action, and we call for that action from the Premier. We could do more to address the special needs of the aboriginal offenders with fetal alcohol spectrum disorder. That is action, and we could start that action today.

If the Premier really wants to take action and make a difference on missing and murdered aboriginal women, she could act within provincial jurisdiction, of which she has complete control at this stage. She could reallocate or dedicate more resources to the RCMP's Kare, which investigates missing and murdered vulnerable persons, the overwhelming number of whom are aboriginal women from across this province. A $2 million investment in Kare would make a big difference.

Let me end with a quote from the end of the truth and reconciliation report. "Reconciliation calls for federal, provincial, and territorial government action." Hopefully, in the future we will see provincial action rather than a speech calling for action from the federal government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays. I would remind hon. members that I believe we are at a three-minute comment.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, thank you, and I want to thank the chief elected official of Alberta, our Premier, for her words and her actions today as well as the Leader of the Official Opposition for his statement. I think it highlights how important this issue is to everyone in this House. The truth and reconciliation report is one that ought to set a future path for our province and our government, and I'd like to hope that today will be the start of that. I would like to hope that today will be a part of us all working together to do what we can do.

I had the opportunity during my time on city council in Calgary, Mr. Speaker, to work with the aboriginal peoples, specifically the Tsuut'ina Nation. Through that relationship over a land negotiation for a road that the city needs, I had the great pleasure to become friends and, subsequently, as a minister of the government of the day to actually successfully negotiate an agreement that was outstanding for 59 years as well as other agreements with the Stoney Nation that were outstanding for about three decades.

I'm proud to carry an Indian name. You may not know that. It is Goes into the Night. I'm sorry to tell the members that it's not Goes Quietly into the Night; it's just Goes into the Night. The elder that bestowed that upon me, Mr. Speaker, said that that's because in the culture sometimes there's fear of the dark, and the elder felt somehow that I had less fear than some people do. I don't know whether that's true, but I'm honoured by the name.

Mr. Speaker, there are so many things that we can do together, positive changes that we can make. We know that aboriginal people are overrepresented in our criminal justice system, particularly in youth justice. We know that aboriginal persons on average have poorer quality of life and poorer health outcomes than non-aboriginal people. In social services we need to keep working to train government officials and social service workers to make sure that they have the cultural competence to work with our First Nations and aboriginal partners, our sisters and brothers.

There is so much work to be done. I could go on, but you gave a time warning before I started. I'm going to try to honour that, Mr. Speaker, but let me say this. Our party believes, as I believe all members of this House believe, that aboriginal people, aboriginal women want, need, and deserve nothing less than the full measure of satisfaction from the judicial system that everybody else gets, from every other way that a government operates. To provide less than a full measure of service, a full measure of investigation, a full measure of the considerations that non-aboriginal people get, is unacceptable and reprehensible, and we stand by providing nothing less than that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Liberal caucus let me begin by complimenting the Premier on her moving words and her commitment in a historic apology today, a good first step to real healing and more successful lives for our First Nations.

Here on Treaty 6 traditional land, Mr. Speaker, we gather to reconcile and begin a process that will address the chilling and shameful history of racism and cultural genocide. Through the actions and inactions of the government of Canada thousands of children were removed from their homes, subjected to neglect and physical, emotional, and sexual abuse at residential schools. These children were told that their lives and their traditions were evil, shameful, and savage. They were beaten or starved for speaking their language. For these and the many other abuses that the Alberta Legislature stood silent on over the years, the Liberal caucus joins in the Premier's apology.

Too many of the scars left by residential schools have never healed and never will, and the damage done at those schools continues to manifest in poverty, mental illness, addictions, and learned violence passed from generation to generation. This dark legacy includes the failure of our health care and education systems to provide culturally appropriate services when needed by our indigenous communities.

Only by working together can we hope to heal these wounds. We must all commit as treaty people to working with our indigenous peoples to implement all the recommendations of the commission, including, importantly, a national public inquiry into missing and murdered indigenous women. They deserve nothing less. If we are unwilling to address directly the reality that more than a thousand indigenous women have been lost with no adequate investigation or understanding, then we will have learned nothing from the years of work of the TRC.

We must now begin the journey to a reconciliation. It is my deepest hope that we have taken another step, perhaps a small step but a critical one, towards healing and reconciliation today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I acknowledge today that we stand in traditional Treaty 6 territory, and I offer my welcome to the distinguished guests of treaties 6, 7, and 8 and to representatives of the Métis nation.

Today is a historic day in the Alberta Legislature, and I want to thank the Premier for taking a strong stand in support of First Nations people in Alberta and in all of Canada. I offer my complete and unequivocal support for the Premier's statement. For too long this Assembly has been silent, and for that I join in this apology to all who have been impacted by injustices of the past and to those who continue to suffer from a cycle of poverty, addiction, abuse, and lack of opportunity that is a direct result of Canada's residential schools.

I am proud to be a member of the Assembly that has taken this important first step. This statement and these words of apology and support are incredibly important and show that we wish to share in this journey of reconciliation, but this is only one step in a long journey, and as important as these words are, they must be backed by action.

This is a statement that should have been made by the federal government. What we heard today should have been the federal government's response to the findings of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. Now is the time for the federal government to commit to an inquiry into missing and murdered indigenous women and girls. The federal government needs to show that they're willing to back words with actions, but if they are not, Alberta should lead. If the federal government chooses not to act, let us come together with our counterparts in B.C., Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and elsewhere to conduct our own provincial inquiry. Alberta can lead and become an example of what we can accomplish when we set out to do more, to be more, and finally do the right thing.

It is time to break the cycle and remember those whom we have left behind or forgotten. Working together as Albertans, as Canadians, and shoulder to shoulder with First Nations peoples, we can take action to start a journey towards healing and reconciliation that will ensure First Nations communities thrive as true equals.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the House for allowing me to speak on this matter, and I would like to thank the Premier for her words of support. I would also like to acknowledge that we are here on Treaty 6 territory.

This past week Canadians celebrated National Aboriginal Day, a day to celebrate the diverse history and cultures of indigenous peoples across Canada. In Alberta we honour and learn from the many different First Nations and Métis communities that make up the rich heritage of this province. My riding of Calgary-Bow is on Treaty 7 territory and borders the Bow River, the river where Treaty 7 was originally signed some hundred kilometres east of the Blackfoot Crossing.

This past week multiple organizations partnered and worked together for Aboriginal Awareness Week Calgary, hosting events throughout the week to share and celebrate. I would like to thank all those who contributed to the many events and thank all those who attended. Working together to share a collective history and learning from the many histories of Calgarians is an important step on the path of reconciliation.

Beyond National Aboriginal Day ongoing projects like Making Treaty 7 are important for better understanding our collective history and the history of First Peoples. On National Aboriginal Day we celebrate the diverse cultures of indigenous peoples, but we must also reflect on and learn of the trauma indigenous peoples have experienced because of colonialism.

The truth and reconciliation report, generated over six years by the federal Truth and Reconciliation Commission, has collected thousands of stories, histories, and experiences from survivors of the residential school system, a system that perpetuated cultural genocide on Canada's indigenous peoples. In Alberta the last residential school closed in 1975, a very recent history for us all. This report lays out the path not only for the Legislatures and present leaders but also for our future generations to repair the deep wound in our relationships. As Justice Sinclair said during the closing events of the TRC in Ottawa: "We are writing for the future, not just for this government."

This report does not mark the end of the struggle for indigenous peoples. Inequalities between communities must be addressed by all levels of government through partnership and listening to indigenous peoples. Indigenous peoples have a strong, proud culture and have a wealth of knowledge to share, and I look forward to working as a House with indigenous communities as equal partners.

Yesterday was a beautiful day of celebration, as was this last week, and I want to thank all indigenous Canadians for sharing their rich cultures, traditions, and history. I want to wish all a happy National Aboriginal Day.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this has taken some time and time well spent, I believe, but it does mean that we will not be able to complete our Routine at 3 o'clock, so I would move and request unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 7(7) to allow the Routine to be completed after 3 o'clock.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Oral Question Period

Provincial Tax Policy

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, last Thursday the Finance minister held a press conference to celebrate his raising of taxes on Alberta's businesses and Alberta families. During the press conference the minister was asked if there were any circumstances under which he might possibly roll back these tax increases in the future. His response was telling. He stopped, he smirked, and he giggled. Will the Premier confirm that it is the official policy of her government to never lower taxes?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've said before, this government was elected during an election campaign where the issue of taxes and, in particular, fair taxation came up. Now, interestingly, as a result of the changes that we are making with respect to tax infrastructure, 90 per cent of Albertans will pay less tax than they would have under the previous government. So, in fact, what we've done is that we've started by increasing fairness and decreasing what most Albertans are paying.

Mr. Jean: That's not very accurate, Mr. Speaker.

At the same press conference the Finance minister was asked about the Alberta advantage, which we're so proud of. His response, and I quote: it's a new orange day. People know we're more than beautiful mountains and trees and things like that. We can do better. It's a new Alberta advantage. End quote. So are higher taxes the new Alberta advantage? Does the Premier really believe that Alberta will have an advantage from having higher business taxes than Ontario, than Quebec, than British Columbia?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, during the election we had a conversation, a very, very robust discussion, with Albertans about what they perceive as an advantage, and let me tell you what they said to me. Those 12,000 kids having a teacher: that's an advantage. Health care for them when they need it: that's an advantage. Making sure that our postsecondary institutions educate Albertans so we can diversify the economy: that's an advantage. Making sure that all Albertans have access to those services: that's an advantage, and that's an advantage that I am very proud to be building here in Alberta.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On economic matters Albertans have become worried with this government. Last week we saw this government prepare to increase spending even faster than they are prepared to increase taxes. That's something. We saw that this government seems keen to increase taxes for the sake of increasing taxes. We were told that being taxed more than our neighbour is an advantage. Why is the Premier pursuing economic policies that are so out of touch with Albertans?

Ms Notley: I think I've kind of answered this question twice. In fact, there are a tremendous number of economic studies out there that say that fairness actually contributes to economic growth, and the farther you get away from fairness, the more you stifle economic growth. Under the previous administration that's what was happening, so what we are doing is ensuring that we promote a strong, stable, predictable system of health care and education. That is the backbone of good, strong economic growth as well as community growth and community well-being, and we'll carry on with that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second major question, hon. member.

Pipeline Development

Mr. Jean: Last week, in effort to be helpful, the Wildrose attempted to get this government to back away from radical policy ideas that will hurt Alberta's economy and threaten Alberta jobs. I tried to get the Premier to stand up for better markets for our oil and gas products overseas. That means jobs for Albertans and revenue for this government. Will the Premier please reassure Alberta's energy industry, whether it is raw bitumen or upgraded or refined oil, that she will be a champion for pipelines as a way to get our energy to new markets? A champion.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that in general we need to have more pipelines, and, as I've said before, I'm talking to my colleagues across the country, both in B.C. as well as eastward, about the potentials with respect to those pipelines. But we also know that at the end of the day the best outcome for Albertans is that more processing happens here. So does that mean that no bitumen gets shipped? No. But does that mean that we do everything we can to increase upgrading here in this province to create long-term, sustainable jobs that are less vulnerable to the ups and downs of bitumen prices? Absolutely, because that's in Albertans' best interests.

Mr. Jean: More pipelines: a great start.

Last week I tried to get the Premier to clarify that there is no greater intergovernmental or international diplomatic priority for Albertans than getting pipelines approved so that we can get our energy to new markets. The NDP elsewhere gets this. In fact, the Saskatchewan NDP is completely in favour of the Keystone pipeline. Will the Premier please reassure Albertans and Alberta's energy industry that getting approval for new pipelines is our and her top diplomatic priority?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I've already stated fairly clearly that we understand the importance of pipelines to our energy industry, and we'll continue to work together with them on the areas where we can have an impact. I will also say, however – you know, folks over there might not want to admit it, but we have a little bit of a PR problem with our environmental record, and it's about time that we start taking action so that we can actually develop credibility internationally and enhance our access to markets.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wildrose is here to help. But this government is committed to radical policy ideas that will simply cost Albertans their jobs. Our shadow minister for labour asked if the government had any plans to help the 118,000 Albertans who might lose their jobs when this government raises the minimum wage by 50 per cent. The answer he got shows that this government does not understand the impact of prices on supply and demand. Does the Premier really believe that increasing the minimum wage will lead to more jobs in Alberta?

Ms Notley: I absolutely believe that increasing the minimum wage will lead to more jobs. There are copious studies out there, Mr. Speaker, that suggest that when you put more money into the pockets of low-income people, they spend it, and they spend it in their local economy faster than anybody else does. In fact, study after study shows that this actually grows jobs and it grows economic activity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays. [interjections] How could I possibly miss the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat? Hon. member, my apologies.

Calgary Cancer Centre

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No worries. Recently the Health minister said that there are no guarantees the NDP government will build the Foothills cancer centre and place this much-needed project under review. But in the last election the Premier herself promised this project, and her party campaigned on it. I want to give the Premier an opportunity to set the record straight. Premier, patients and their families need to know. Will you make good on your promise to build this project on time and on budget, or won't you?

Ms Notley: Well, that's a very good question, and certainly it's one that I know the people of Calgary are very, very concerned about. He's right. There's no question that during the election and even now I've stated that my preference is to move quickly, and indeed my preference is for it to happen in Foothills. However, the fact of the matter is that there are billions of dollars of investment in there, so we as a government and as a cabinet have to do our due diligence, review all the information before us, and then we will be making an announcement in the days to come. We understand that Calgary doesn't want any more delay than they've already had to deal with, so we'll be moving soon.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, circumstances have changed since the last election. The price of oil is a little higher. Taxes are, too. If the government can't build this project today, they definitely couldn't last May, when they pulled this bait and switch on Albertans. To the Premier: why did you make this promise when you knew you couldn't deliver?

Ms Notley: Well, quite honestly, Mr. Speaker, I reject the assumption underlying that question – the price of oil is down, not up – but more to the point, I didn't make any promise that I said that I couldn't deliver or that I at some point have concluded that I can't deliver. That's not what happened. What I said is that we're going to do our due diligence. We're going to review our options, and we'll be making an announcement soon.

Mr. Barnes: Albertans don't want excuses; they want solutions. The due diligence on the Foothills project has been done. The project has been fully studied, reviewed, and costed. If finances are standing in the way, the Premier needs to open the books and work with the opposition to find solutions. Premier, will you share the complete state of Alberta's finances so we can help you build the right project at the right time for Alberta patients and families?

Ms Notley: Well, I appreciate that the members opposite are prepared to give the third party credit for due diligence, notwithstanding that I believe the project has been outstanding for over a decade and it's been promised and changed and changed and promised. There have been a lot of reviews but not one done by a government recently given a majority mandate. What I have done, however, is that I've asked David Dodge to do a review of our overall capital expenditure and our capacity with respect to that, and that's someone whose opinion I think is valuable. We will look at that and other things and get back to you very . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Public Transit

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm almost blushing from all the compliments that are flowing.

Mr. Speaker, the throne speech gave little mention to municipalities in Alberta, but when it did briefly go there, it mentioned that there is transit to build. I'm sure this made several municipalities pay attention in anticipation of announcements yet to come. To the Premier: when can Edmonton look forward to a new announcement of funding for a desired transit line, or what other details can you share?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Certainly. Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we've said, there are a number of very complex issues that have been left to us by the previous government, and we are reviewing and prioritizing all the issues that are important to us. Of course, in the campaign we talked about the fact that transit is a critical issue and one that is a major priority for us. So we look forward to getting the best information we can about how to move forward with respect to our capital spending, and we'll be making announcements going forward. Stay tuned.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the government used to think that running the government was easy when they were over here, and now they think it's complex. That's just an interesting observation.

Mr. Speaker, in Calgary much work has gone into planning their next LRT line, which they have affectionately dubbed the green line. In fact, a community group has formed to educate their neighbours about why it's important, where it will go, and other details. To the Transportation minister: can Calgary look forward to a funding announcement on the much-needed green line as foreshadowed in your throne speech?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for that question. As the Premier has said, transit funding is a priority for this government. It's something that we believe in and something we're going to be looking at very closely. I will be meeting shortly with the mayor of Edmonton, and I hope to meet as well with the mayor of Calgary in the near future to discuss their transportation needs, and when I have a fuller view of the opinions and needs of the city of Calgary, we will be moving forward in due course.

2:30

Mr. McIver: Well, let's try rural Alberta, Mr. Speaker. They also need transit in some cases to get to health care and to visit friends and family in other municipalities. To the Transportation minister. Now, you said a little bit more about this, about doing things in rural Alberta, so can you tell Albertans and this House: what are you going to do for rural Alberta transit as promised in the throne speech, and which municipalities can look forward to which pieces of transit provided by this government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the hon. member for that question. It's certainly clear that when we talked about rural bus service in the election, we talked about the need to improve that and to make sure that we took steps as a government to make sure that people had their transportation needs met. That's going to be a priority for the government, and that will be something that we'll be considering carefully as we discuss and I get to know and meet with the various mayors of the smaller municipalities in our province. I've had that opportunity to meet with several of them, to talk on the phone, and we'll . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Mr. Minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Flood Recovery and Mitigation

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My riding, Calgary-Bow, was one of those tragically affected by the 2013 flood. Many residents suffered devastating losses. Hundreds of homes were either damaged or destroyed. Unfortunately, for some who found comfort in the possibility of relief through the disaster relief programs, it has been two years and they have yet to see any financial aid. My question to the Minister of Municipal Affairs is: how does this government plan to address the need for DRP now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the hon. member for her first question in this Assembly. This weekend marked the two-year anniversary of the largest natural disaster in Alberta's history. I want to assure Albertans or let them know that our government is committed to assisting Albertans who've been impacted throughout this natural disaster. Although 95 per cent of files had been closed or completed, I completely understand the frustration of flood victims with the process of their claims.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Minister, as we all know, the fall budget may not pass until December. When does this government plan on funding DRP?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It'll be earlier than December, I can assure the hon. member. What I do want to make clear is that throughout the 2015 year, actually, the money that flowed through from the DRP has totalled $282 million. I will remind all members of the House that in the interim, which is being debated and before the House right now, there is $173.7 million earmarked for DRP.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been my understanding that the minister visited Calgary over the weekend and met with the Calgary River Communities Action Group. Could the minister elaborate on what's being done in regard to flood mitigation?

Mr. Bilous: I'll thank the member for the question. It is true that this weekend I visited several flood-affected communities, including the town of High River; I met with the mayor and councillors. I was with the mayor of Calgary this weekend as well in several communities in Calgary – Sunnyside, Elbow Park, Mission – and spoke with those that were affected by the 2013 floods. This government is committed to moving in a very reasonable yet diligent fashion to look at the best way to mitigate Alberta's future floods and disasters.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Menthol-flavoured Tobacco Products

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week it was my honour and pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Legislature representatives from Smoke-free Alberta. They were here to welcome and congratulate our Minister of Health on the banning of menthol from cigarettes. To the minister: can you explain what the link is between youth smoking and menthol cigarettes?

The Speaker: I'd remind the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud that when he gets the next supplemental, there's no preamble.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Let me assure my colleagues opposite that I am well aware of the harmful effects of menthol products and the impact they've had on youth smoking rates. In Alberta the last study was in 2012-13, and at that time it was well documented that one-third of youth who were smoking were in fact smoking menthol products. By making this move, we're going to be removing that option for youth and encouraging them to make healthier decisions.

Dr. Turner: To the minister: how will banning menthol cigarettes reduce health costs for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Tobacco use is, of course, a serious problem, related to approximately 3,000 deaths in Alberta every year. This banning of menthol as well as previous announcements that were made around flavoured tobacco products in general will of course reduce the smoking opportunities for youth, we hope. Half of Alberta's youth are using flavoured tobacco products, so we're glad to be able to take that motion a little bit further and make sure that we make it fair and also eliminate menthol.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. How is the government making sure that our small businesses have enough time to address these important changes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Of course, our priority is ensuring the health and well-being of Albertans. To make sure that we don't impact small businesses or any businesses negatively through this decision, we're allowing four months for them to clear their inventory both from their current shelves and from what's in supply. By September we'll be at the point where they are no longer distributing menthol products, but until then they have an opportunity to clear their shelves.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Status of Women

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a mom I know that there's no shortage of issues facing women across the province. Women fleeing the streets need access to resources to be protected from violence and to build new lives. The people in Airdrie are without a women's shelter. We want to help create solutions, but the one thing we don't want is a bigger bureaucracy. How can Albertans be sure that this new department will be more than just funnelling money to a top-heavy bureaucracy?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Of course, everyone will have an opportunity to debate the thorough budget in the fall, when it will be tabled, and I encourage the hon. members to do so at that time.

Mrs. Pitt: I own a small business, and I hope that all women are able to do what they dream of. I saw the new funding announcement last week. What stuck out to me was the million dollars for the status of women department. To me, that sounds like just a million dollars for bureaucrats to shuffle papers, create new letterhead, and pat themselves on the back. I'm here to help Albertans understand this. Can the minister explain how this million dollars will directly help women?

Ms Notley: I'm very excited to do that. It's long overdue for this province to have a ministry in charge of the status of women. Unfortunately, during the absence of such a ministry we've had a number of developments occur in this province like, for instance, the largest wage gap between men and women in the country. That is not the way you move forward. That's not the way you promote equality. So that very small ministry will be focusing on that issue as well as child care as well as violence against women and many other important issues that we need to make progress on.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie – and I mention it across the House as well – I would caution: please don't extend the preambles on the questions.

Proceed.

Mrs. Pitt: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I know that in Airdrie women don't need bureaucrats in Edmonton just writing memos and policy papers, that they need support for local community initiatives that produce results, that they need legislation that puts the hammer down on criminals and protects our . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I thought that was a preamble. Did you have a question?

Mrs. Pitt: My question is: will the minister detail what programs Albertan women can expect from the $1 million status of women department?

Ms Notley: Well, in fact, Mr. Speaker, you know, typically memos precede legislation, so I'm just throwing it out there that if you're going to actually provide leadership and develop a comprehensive plan, both legislative as well as policy-based as well as funding-based, then you need to think it through a little bit. For decades this province has not had a plan, so the result is that for decades women have fallen behind. We've said: that's long enough; no more; we're going to make sure that there's a difference.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to follow up on a question from the Member for Airdrie. In the recent campaign, of course, the new government pledged to Albertans to create this women's ministry. I'd like to point out that I'm the former associate minister of family and community safety. Women's issues were in my portfolio, and I began the women's equality and advancement framework, so the work was being done. My question to the Premier: do you plan to continue the work that I was working on with some wonderful people in Human Services, and will you commit to finishing the women's equality and advancement framework in this new ministry?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've asked the minister who is responsible for this portfolio to do an inventory of the work that was going on within government, which will include the program that the hon. member speaks of. We'll evaluate what's been going on, and then we'll match that up against our priorities and our focus on outcomes. As we move forward and as the plan for that ministry moves forward, information will be shared with all members of this House.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. A million dollars is a specific amount of money. We were talking about a framework that we were working on. I went to a first ministers' meeting a year ago in Yellowknife at which the province was lauded for the work we were doing. Can you tell us what kind of initiatives you're planning on working on going forward that build on the work that's already been done?

Ms Notley: The minister has not been in place yet for even four weeks, so we are going to take the time to make sure that we get it right. When we do, we will be sure that all members of this House and the people of Alberta are aware of the priorities that we identify. In the meantime I want to thank the member for the work that she did before that, and those parts of the work that she did that were contributing towards real outcomes in terms of improvements for the status of women in Alberta will be continued, I'm sure.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A final question to the Premier: is a mandate letter going out? Will we have a good sense of what the deliverables are so that we can keep track as the work goes along?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question, and indeed a mandate letter will be forthcoming to all our ministers over the course of the next few months.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When pressed for spending details on their minibudget, the government provided five different numbers. These five numbers came in a span of just 24 hours. The good news is that every time I ask, the number gets smaller. If I keep asking, maybe we'll have a balanced budget by the end of the session. Will the Minister of Finance tell us: is his new spending $1.8 billion, $1.1 billion, $776 million, $682 million, $624 million, or all of the above?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you for the question. It's not all of the above. We are looking forward to each minister coming forward and detailing the exact spending amount. I know those amounts are in the $600 million area, and that's what we're spending on new programs and services as we go forward.

Mr. Fildebrandt: The $600 million area: I'm glad we have some clarity.

After years of overspending and debt financing the government and the third party both want to raise taxes on Albertans, but the government's taxes cannot keep up with their new spending. Now, I sent the minister this question a few hours ago because I wanted to help, and I'm hoping that he'll be able to give us an answer. Before committing to new spending and new taxes, will the minister tell this House what he expects total revenue and total expenditures to be this fiscal year?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for the question. As he can appreciate, we're not going to do a budget on the back of a napkin and bring it for you today. On the revenue side we're taking steps in Bill 2 to address that by addressing taxes in a progressive way, something that should have been done many years ago. That being said, it's far too early to look at what the overall revenue will be. It'll be more than last year because we're going to have a progressive income tax in place, which is the best thing to do, and we're going to have a competitive fiscal plan before us in the fall.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, stay tuned, Mr. Speaker: answers coming in about six months.

Now, I've asked the Minister of Finance repeatedly over the last week and a half if he can answer some very, very simple questions about the impact of the new tax-and-spend measures. Given that it would be grossly irresponsible for this House to vote for new spending without this kind of information and to continue spending faster than they can tax, it will only lead to one outcome, even more debt. Does the minister actually know or have any idea what under his plan the deficit and debt will be this year?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. I expect all ministries to come forward with clear plans about what they need. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. I expect all ministers to come forward with very clear plans on what they need. The actual budget is going to be in the fall. I'm not going to tell you what that is now because we don't have those numbers before us, but we'll have them very soon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Landowner Property Rights

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The last government passed several bad bills approximately five years ago that decimated the property rights of Alberta landowners. The Wildrose and the NDP, including the Premier and the Government House Leader, spoke many times between 2010 and 2015 about the problems with these draconian pieces of legislation. The new Government House Leader even spoke as recently as December 2014 against Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, where he called this act, among others, "stupid legislation." Will the Government House Leader now commit today to repeal the bad provisions in that bill and protect the rights of landowners?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for that question. Back when some of these bills were passed – Bill 19 and, I think, bills 36 and 50 if my memory serves well – the Wildrose didn't exist. It didn't have any seats in the Legislature, and it was the NDP opposition that led the fight for a balanced and fair approach to property. What that means to me is that people have the right of appeal, they have the right of due process, and there has to be a pressing need. Those things are important.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Energy, then. Bad property rights legislation has blocked landowner rights to fair compensation and due process and in the case of the former Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, access to the courts. Minister, will you commit to reinstating section 26 of the Energy Resources Conservation Act, which guaranteed landowners the right to appeal bad decisions by the Energy Regulator board to the courts, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. I will be looking into those regulations. They are new to me. I'm still learning all the processes. I understand currently, though, that through the AER there are processes for each individual landowner to appeal. Absolutely, I'll be looking over those and get back to you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Energy minister: I hope that is the case because that needs to be reviewed.

To the Government House Leader again, then. The Wildrose opposition is prepared to assist the new government and Alberta landowners in formulating and passing an Alberta property rights preservation bill. Will you, the Government House Leader, and your government commit today to working with us on this very important piece of legislation for all Albertans?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much to the hon. member for the question. We do insist on making sure that people's rights to their property are protected so that fair compensation is provided and there is a due process for people, including a right of appeal. Those will be things that we will be considering in the future.

With respect to the help that the opposition is offering in this particular regard, I think that it is not necessary, but we will make sure property rights are protected.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Impaired Driving

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have consistently shown that they want a common-sense, Conservative approach to crime and justice. The number one cause of criminal death in Canada is drunk driving. These tragedies are a hundred per cent preventable. Sadly, in many drunk-driving deaths the courts give lenient sentences and thus rock the public's confidence in the justice system. Last week the federal Justice minister, Peter MacKay, announced changes to the Criminal Code that provide a six-year, mandatory minimum sentence for drunk drivers. It is about time that that does occur. To the Minister of Justice: will you today commit to supporting this initiative to stop drunk drivers who cause death?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. The government agrees that there are many senseless and needless deaths as a result of drunk driving. These deaths are tragic, and they are preventable. We are absolutely looking into ways that the province can assist in moving forward and making sure that these deaths are prevented in future.

In terms of the federal legislation, obviously, I don't have jurisdiction over that, but we will certainly be watching with interest.

Thank you.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. I am, of course, aware that you don't have jurisdiction, but I hope you support the legislation.

The Speaker: I would remind the member: 35 seconds, please.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Again to the same minister: given that the convicted drunk drivers who cause death have blood alcohol levels three times the legal limit and that some have been found in excess of 200 kilometres an hour and that families have been devastated throughout Alberta by the perceived lack of justice for the victims, what are you prepared to do for the families of drunk-driving victims?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the hon. member for the question. We are aware that a number of families are devastated by these tragedies, and to them we express our deepest sympathies. As I've said, my government is looking into methods to prevent these tragedies going forward. All victims of crime have access to services through the victims of crime funding available. Yes, our intention is to prevent these crimes as much as possible.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much. Those were obviously great initiatives by the PC government at the time. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, finally, to the same minister: given that drivers can be impaired with drugs other than alcohol, will the Minister of Justice commit to lobbying the federal government to amend the Criminal Code to allow approved drug testing devices that can detect drugs in the systems of drivers where reasonable and probable grounds exist to require a sample and keep our roads safe while also supporting additional tools for the police?

Thank you.

Ms Ganley: Thank you to the hon. member. I do want to take this opportunity to deliver the message that no one should be getting behind the wheel if they've been drinking or if they've been doing drugs. We unequivocally condemn that sort of behaviour.

Mothers Against Drunk Driving, MADD Canada, issued a provincial legislative review on June 22, 2015. Alberta led the provinces, with a C plus grade. However, as I have committed to previously, more work is needed, and we are looking into ways to work with police services to increase enforcement and to reduce the problem.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Bail Process Review

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A report into the involvement of the Alberta Crown prosecution service with Shawn Rehn, who shot two RCMP officers in January, recommends a comprehensive review of the bail process in Alberta. The review will look at who should continue to conduct justice of the peace bail hearings and under what circumstances. Albertans deserve to know how this will improve the system. My first question is to the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. What changes do you expect to implement from this review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. The report into the bail process will help us decide how the bail process can be changed to better protect all Albertans and, in particular, our first responders. We are proceeding with this comprehensive review to the bail process to answer the question we've asked, which is: would a different bail process help to make our communities safer and better protect police? We are also committed to ensuring that the appropriate representatives of the people appear at bail hearings to ensure that violent criminals are dealt with appropriately.

Thank you.

Ms Renaud: To the hon. minister: if the review determines that Crown prosecution should attend all bail hearings, what will that cost Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I think the first thing we need to do is figure out what's needed and go forward from there. This is obviously a complicated process given that we must protect both the rights of individual Albertans who are subject to prosecution by the state and the fact that we must protect our Alberta citizens and our first responders. We are committed to going through with the review process and to implementing recommendations that come out of that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why are you doing yet another review when the report into the shooting of Constable Wynn has already been done?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. The scope of this review is different than the scope of that review. This is a review of the entire bail process to see if there is any way that we can make it better, to ensure that we are both protecting rights of individual citizens and that we are protecting our first responders in addition to all of the people in Alberta. I can assure the member that the government is committed to public safety and to the safety of our law enforcement personnel.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

3:00 Forest Fire Fighting Contracting

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently concerns from several different constituencies have been brought to my attention about the fire line equipment contractors list. This list provides the department a master list of contractors supplying equipment for use in firefighting in Alberta. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: have you been made aware of any potential conflicts regarding this secret process?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. There's interim budget supply needed for firefighting. The equipment contracts have all been let. After that, then, there is a budget given for emergency firefighting. As far as I know, everything is in place, and there have been no concerns.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister. It is concerning that any process using taxpayers' dollars is not completely transparent and may be open to widespread suspicion and possible abuses. Given that contractors and taxpayers absolutely need to know these rankings, this could lead to a greater level of preparedness and lead time, crucial for the service these contractors provide. Given this would the minister consider a full review of this secret process?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think I heard a preamble in there. Nonetheless, we are going to let the minister answer.

I want to remind both sides of the House about the preamble portion of the questions after question 5. Thank you.

Mr. Minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our primary concern with forest fires is the protection of people, their homes, and communities. The Department of Agriculture and Forestry is working hard to fight these fires in order to minimize their human, economic, and environmental impact. This fire season has been particularly busy: 887 fires since April 1, which is up an average of 642 over this time last year. We will continue to monitor the situation very closely, and our government will provide any support needed to help our firefighters contain and extinguish these wildfires.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Minister, as acknowledged at our earlier informal meetings, I realize that everyone needs to get up to speed. The Wildrose is happy to provide advice in any positive way we can. Will the minister work with the opposition to revamp and improve the fire line firefighters contract operators list so that it is completely public, fair, and openly transparent?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have a team of dedicated, experienced firefighters, and our experts are working hard to keep Albertans safe. They have our utmost thanks. We'll continue to monitor the situation. Alberta has 84 helicopters and 31 air tankers fighting these fires or pre-positioned around the province ready to fight these fires. Two hundred and thirty-seven firefighters have been brought from out of the province for a total of 1,271. I thank the member for his offer of assistance, but I do think we have the situation in hand.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Corporate Taxes

Mr. Bhullar: That would be me, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. I'm going to talk about the government's least favourite subject, the economy and jobs. Minister and Premier, there are many things you cannot control on the economy, for example Saudi Arabia. They're increasing production, likely to hit 11 million barrels a day. But you can control your policy responses to the economy. Do you really think now is the right time to implement a business tax hike that can result in upwards of 20,000 job losses?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For far too long Alberta has not had a fair tax system. Now, going into the last election, that member's party said repeatedly that we face fiscal challenges; we all have to tighten our belts; we all have to chip in. They came up with loads of plans for families that earn $50,000, $60,000 a year to pay more. But at the same time they were committed to ensuring that corporations, profitable corporations that were doing well, not chip in. You know what? Albertans said, "We don't like that plan," and look where you are.

Mr. Bhullar: I'm quite happy to be where I am. I represent the people of Alberta, and I'll fight to make sure their jobs are looked after, Madam Premier.

Tell me what your plan is to find thousands of Albertans new jobs when employers pick up and move to Saskatchewan or British Columbia because of your new taxes.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's interesting because that was another issue that was discussed in the election, and at the time we were the only party that was actually talking about a job creation plan. We talked about a job creation tax credit, and we talked about ensuring that we take steps to increase the degree to which we upgrade our resources here so that we double the amount of economic activity in this province related to the resource which is ours. We talked about jobs; those guys didn't.

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, we have produced record economic growth in this province year after year after year. Madam Premier, it is your opportunity now to protect the economic interests of hard-working Albertans. How, ma'am, are you going to protect a dry cleaner, how are you going to protect a pizza shop owner, how are you going to protect your neighbourhood florist by raising their taxes by 20 per cent?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, one of the things that does ensure that we create and protect jobs is that we get off the royalty roller coaster, another common refrain that those folks used to talk about. One of the ways you do that is that you start stabilizing the nature . . . [interjections]

Walking with Our Sisters

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A couple of weeks ago I walked alongside our indigenous sisters who have disappeared or have been murdered. Each step I took gave me pause for thought for these women: the mothers, the aunts, the daughters who are gone, who vanished without a trace.

I took this walk in Red Deer, where I was meeting with the Minister of Aboriginal Relations, my colleague the hon. Member for Red Deer-South, and staff from the Red Deer Native Friendship Society. Together we visited the Walking with Our Sisters commemorative art exhibit, which took place until June 21, 2015. The exhibit was set up on the floor of the Red Deer Museum and Art Gallery, and it was massive. More than 1,700 pairs of moccasin vamps, which are the beaded top parts of moccasins, were set up on a winding path, on fabric lined with cedar boughs. As I bent down to remove my shoes and looked at the path I was about to walk on, alongside the exhibit, I saw the many unfinished moccasins, and was reminded of the many unfinished lives of the women who have vanished.

The installation represented all of these women. It paid respect to their lives and their existence on this Earth, and for me it was a humbling and deeply moving experience. Each of the moccasin vamps was created and donated by a caring and concerned individual, to represent a missing or murdered aboriginal woman. Each set of vamps reminded me that these women were cared for, that they were loved, that they are missing, but they are not forgotten.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mobile Dialysis Service

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Lac La Biche has been promised a dialysis centre for years. In 2010 a mobile dialysis unit was provided as some sort of a compromise to provide services on a rotating basis throughout the area. Mechanical problems forced Alberta Health Services to park the bus in the Lac La Biche hospital parking lot, wheels removed, where it has remained ever since.

However, the bus does not provide reliable service, and some patients still need to travel to St. Paul or Edmonton for treatment. This is a long drive over some of the most dangerous highways in the province. This trip is a terrible burden for people who need dialysis treatment.

The bus is not designed nor equipped to provide comfort. This is especially important during our very cold winter months, when people often have a four-hour treatment three times a week. Being connected to machines in a cold bus is simply not acceptable. More importantly, there is no provision for emergency services. In May a patient collapsed on the bus, and the EMT personnel could not get a stretcher onto the bus. The patient had to endure the indignity of being treated on the floor.

This travesty of health services has got to be changed. We have an opportunity now with this government to address local concerns such as these in a collaborative way. On behalf of my constituents I have written a letter to the Minister of Health asking for a meeting to address this concern, and I would like to invite her to come out and see the dialysis unit first-hand. I will be following up and doing my best to ensure that residents of the Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills riding and others across the area will finally receive the health services they've been promised for so long. I promised my constituents that I would act on their behalf, and that is exactly what I will do on this matter and others as they come up.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Sexual Health Education Curriculum

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We speak a lot in this Chamber about the right to a high level of competency in our education system. That's certainly been the goal of Education ministries past and present. I believe those educational competencies extend to our children's right to comprehensive sexual health education as well.

When we arm our children with good information about birth control, sexually transmitted infections, pregnancy options, consent, abstinence, decision-making, sexual orientation, and gender identity, we are giving them the tools they need to be happy, healthy, well-adjusted adults. I hope one day to live in a province where all of those topics are included in our sexual health curriculum. Sadly, right now they are not. Sexual health programs vary from school board to school board. Some programs contain bare mentions of birth control options, many contain no reference to LGBTQ identities, and most don't even touch on consent.

Our kids deserve the best sexual health information as they navigate a changing world. When we give them all the tools they need to make smart choices themselves, we are sending them a powerful message: your body, your knowledge, your rights. Now, wouldn't that be the Alberta advantage?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Slovenian Canadian Association 50th Anniversary

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to congratulate the Slovenian Canadian Association's 50th anniversary. The Slovenian Canadian Association of Edmonton's goal is to bring openness and build bridges to preserve Slovene culture and to create a sense of community for present and future generations. Their focus is to bring members together through community events, music, dance, and language.

I had the pleasure of attending one of three events that was hosted this past weekend at the Slovenian hall in Edmonton-Manning. Over one thousand Slovenian descendants attended the events throughout the weekend, from small children to grandparents. Throughout the evening I had the pleasure of watching young children perform in their traditional language, while their parents performed dances and their grandparents sang in the choir. It truly was a family event, demonstrating all of the diversity of their culture.

I would like to thank the Slovenian Canadian Association for passing on their culture to their children and ensuring their traditions are part of our great community in Edmonton-Manning as well as enriching the cultural diversity of Alberta. You do both Alberta and your Slovenian ancestors a great service by maintaining these proud customs here in Edmonton. Thank you for continuing to share those treasures of Slovenian culture and for continuing to make Alberta a vibrant, exciting, and welcoming place.

Little Free Library in Beddington Heights

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Saturday, June 20, was the second annual Neighbour Day in Calgary, marking two years since the floods of 2013, that galvanized communities in a time of devastation. Neighbour Day was established to honour the resilience and community spirit that pulled Calgarians together. I was fortunate to attend some Neighbour Day events on Saturday, including the opening of a little free library in the community of Beddington Heights. The little free library movement was started in 2009 in Wisconsin by Todd Bol as a tribute to his schoolteacher mother. The mission of the movement is to promote literacy and the love of reading by building free book exchanges worldwide. This mission has been a huge success so far, with over 10,000 little libraries registered in over 40 countries. More than 1,650,000 books have been shared.

What I saw at the opening of this little library was a unique way to engage communities. The simple act of sharing books reaches across generations and provides an easy access for people to get to know one another in a meaningful way that connects them. While there was a lot of excitement at the opening of the library, the genius of this low maintenance project is that there is now a permanent way to bring people together. The library will be there on sunny summer days and rainy afternoons and cold winter nights, taking readers off to a faraway land or inspiring a recipe for Sunday dinner or helping someone learn a language and giving the people of the community a chance to share what they learned, what they did, and what they imagined.

I look forward to seeing more of these little free libraries appearing on the streets of my constituency and across Alberta, and I'm extremely proud and honoured and I am humbled to represent the very community-minded people of Beddington Heights, who take it upon themselves to create such a great place to live.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to talk about the people in Cardston-Taber-Warner that are concerned about the rising minimum wage. A local restaurant owner, Dan Brown, wrote me the other day. Dan has been running his restaurant for five and a half years, and he is a very active member in my community. He is concerned about the impact minimum wage increases will have on youth employment. Dan is also very concerned about the impact the $15 minimum wage will have on his labour costs. He is faced with some tough choices. He can reduce hours for existing employees or not hire new staff. Dan doesn't know how he would be able to afford to hire inexperienced staff. The labour costs are already high with training.

Dan would like to see a phased-in approach, some way that his restaurant can adapt to this drastic measure. The thing is that this issue has already been studied for over 70 years. This isn't new. This government knew that there would be harm to local businesses. Sure, a few would be helped, but many, many more would be out of work. Businesses would be in a crunch, some sort of hiring freeze or laying people off. What are they going to do? No one wants to be put in that position, especially Dan. I am proud to bring Dan's concerns to Alberta.

Thank you very much.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to section 5(3) of the Property Rights Advocate Act the chair is pleased to table with the Assembly the 2014 annual report of the Alberta Property Rights Advocate office.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Ms

Ganley, Minister of Justice and Solicitor General and Minister of Aboriginal Relations, pursuant to the Metis Settlements Act the Metis Settlements Appeal Tribunal annual report 2014.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 201

Assuring Alberta's Fiscal Future Act

Mr. Fraser: It's a great pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 201, Assuring Alberta's Fiscal Future Act. I move the bill for second reading.

The Alberta heritage savings trust fund was established in 1976 after an act of the same name was given royal assent through this Assembly. Few could have predicted the ebbs and flows, the ups and downs, and what challenges it would have, that it would have lasting and dramatic impacts on the heritage trust fund. The challenges we face today mean that immediate action must be taken in order to secure and increase the strength of the fund and create a legacy that can be utilized by generations to come.

As a private member and a private member on this side of the House I can't introduce a bill that is interpreted as a money bill. A money bill is considered in Alberta to be a bill which in itself has the authority to appropriate a sum of public money to carry out its objectives. Alternatively put, the spending of public money out of the general revenue fund or authorizing public money to be spent before it reaches the general revenue fund is also a money bill. While Bill 201 does not speak of the spending but saving, it would still be interpreted as a money bill because of these very points. That is why we must charge the government to create a bill of their own that gives the effects of the contents of Bill 201. For this, we do not require royal recommendation.

The effects of this bill are simple but telling. This bill does not ask for a commitment to cap the spending of net income on the fund, which is the interest it generates as a result of access to a variety of revenue generators, including global equities, bonds, and fixed income money markets, nor does this bill address the contingency account, which is a separate account that is also made up of nonrenewable resource revenue. These are issues for another time, perhaps.

Bill 201 would call on the government to save a specific percentage of nonrenewable resource revenue into the heritage trust fund beginning from the years 2016-17. The figure would be 25 per cent and will remain at 25 per cent until the fiscal year in which operational revenue is projected to exceed operational expense as outlined in the government of the time's budget presented at the time of main estimates in this Assembly. From the following fiscal year 50 per cent of the nonrenewable resource revenue would be saved into the heritage trust fund for every subsequent fiscal year. Hon. members, this is by no means unachievable.

The province has taken a turn, and this turn will result in higher revenue generation through various levels of taxation. The result of this: that Alberta will now have the ability to put aside more of its nonrenewable resource revenue, and the ability will only increase as we return to a budget surplus in the years to come, as the government has promised Albertans. With firm spending principles in place this government could create the environment needed to ensure that growth of this fund is unparalleled. The real difference to the heritage trust fund will be made when its government returns to a budget surplus; however, there will be no reason why the work cannot begin now.

Some members on this side of the House may not share the belief that saving during recession is achievable. However, I would like to remind them and all other members in this Chamber that when these measures lead to a direct and identifiable return, it's not just achievable; it's a duty that we must live up to. This formula leads to a greater economic development and a vastly stronger Alberta. Colleagues, do not think of this as borrowing to save but investing to save. This province has the credit rating and the access to ensure this method of wealth generation is viable. Let's not waste it.

The fund has contributed over $34 billion to fund the priorities of Albertans, particularly in regard to health care and education. Do not forget the important work that has already been undertaken and the need to have a strong heritage trust fund as we go into the future. The effects of the fund must be seen as assets, not just to the province but every person who calls Alberta home. Bill 201 would see the market value of the heritage trust fund increase to well over $20 billion by the end of the 2018-19 fiscal year, and that factors in the government's spending of the majority of the fund's investment income.

The fund has played its part during challenging economic periods, and the results are obvious. We live in one of the wealthiest jurisdictions not just in Canada but in the entire world, and our standards of living are among the highest. However, our focus must shift now to securing the future for future generations to come, and we can only do that by the means and the contents of this bill. The bill would not bind in any way what you can spend from the heritage trust fund, but it sets in motion a framework of saving that would ensure the prosperity of Alberta for decades to come. Bill 201, Assuring Alberta's Fiscal Future Act, tells Albertans that we will not waste the privilege of living in our time.

The right of this revenue will not flow forever, and we must be duly aware of this. The time to make a decision is now. The time to put a system of saving in place is now. I respectfully call on all members of this Assembly to vote in support of Bill 201.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to its own report from 1990 the Alberta heritage trust fund was worth around $12.1 billion at that time. A single dollar from 1990 inflated to 2015 rates should be worth around $1.86 now. Put another way, if the investments in the heritage trust fund had simply kept pace with the rest of the world while being reinvested and no further money was added or removed, the trust fund should be around $22.5 billion. From the trust fund's third quarter report for 2014, the newest documents available online, the fund is now worth just $17.2 billion, so it would seem that we have a gap. The trust fund should be worth at least $22.5 billion, probably much more since the good people at AIMCo consistently outperform the markets, yet the fund is actually only worth $17.2 billion.

That means that since 1990 we are missing almost 5 and a half billion dollars, and those missing funds are easily explained. Rather than allow the heritage trust fund to reinvest its own revenues, the government of the day skimmed those revenues off the top year after year. They did this to make up for significant gaps in their own budgets. The third party ran the government throughout those 25 years. Bill 201's sponsor belongs to that same third party, so I would suggest that this bill starts off with a major credibility problem. From 1990 on the now third party never once took seriously the idea of building up the heritage trust fund until just now, the first moment when their hands weren't on the controls. Now, despite the inherent hypocrisy embedded in this bill due to the third party's past failures on this file, the underlying idea of reinvesting a portion of oil revenues into the heritage trust fund . . .

Dr. Starke: Point of order.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

The Speaker: Point of order has been noted. We'll take it under advisement. My apologies to the member again. Could you state your reason for your point of order?

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, rising on citation Standing Order 23(i) and (l), using terminology that imputes false motives. When the term "inherent hypocrisy" is used to describe the motives of the member within the House, that clearly is a violation of our rules of order. I just would encourage the member to be cautious in her choice of words and perhaps suggest that she apologize and withdraw those comments.

The Speaker: Hon. member, could you cite that section for me again?

Dr. Starke: Standing Order 23(i) and (l).

The Speaker: Hon. member, are you prepared to withdraw your comments?

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the hon. third party House leader, I don't accept that this is a valid point of order. What the hon. member simply said is that given the track record of that party while they were in government, it is very much at odds with the intent of this private member's bill and that while they had the opportunity over many years, decades, in fact, to implement the policy that's enshrined in this bill, they failed to do so. Now, at this hour, they've introduced a bill to do what they could have done but did not. The hon. member indicated that in her view this was inherent hypocrisy, not on the part of the member but on the part of the bill that he's introduced relative to the former government's own record.

So with the greatest of respect, Mr. Speaker, I would argue that there is not a valid point of order.

3:30

The Speaker: There is a disagreement made as to the statements. I don't have the opportunity of having access to the Blues at this point. I would take it under advisement and will report back.

The hon. member.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The underlying idea of reinvesting a portion of oil revenues into the heritage trust fund remains a good idea and one that I would encourage our government to act upon. However, handcuffing this new government to a fixed percentage, one that the previous government never even tried to make good on, strikes me as foolish and an obvious attempt at a poison pill piece of legislation. If we were to pass Bill 201, then we'd jeopardize this new government's ability to work towards a balanced budget, giving the third party something to complain about. Yet if we don't pass this bill, the third party would crow about the new government's lack of commitment to growing the very trust fund they ignored and took advantage of for so many years.

So we see that this private member's bill is designed to be a darned if you do and darned if you don't scenario. I find it distressing that while the new government and the Official Opposition are trying to find ways to work together, we have third party members frittering away their limited opportunities to bring forward legislation on gotcha gimmicks like this Bill 201.

I encourage the members of this Assembly to reject such cynical politics and along with that to reject Bill 201. The core idea is good, and in due time I trust that our new Minister of Finance will find ways to reinvest a portion of our resource revenues into our heritage trust fund, but asking him to do so prior to this government's first budget and at a time when we know the province's expenses are exceeding its revenues would be to court fiscal disaster.

Furthermore, we know that this policy contained within Bill 201 is the exact same one that the third party advocated for during the most recent election. While we can debate how likely the third party was to make good on these commitments, the fact remains that Alberta's voters have roundly rejected these same policies that Bill 201 contains. We are here first and foremost to be representatives, so our vote on Bill 201 should reflect the already expressed will of the voters. Just as Albertans voted against this proposal, so should we.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to rise to speak to a bill that aims to ensure Alberta's future is secure. The principle of the bill is on point. Unfortunately, this bill's aim is a bit off. There is one very important step that needs to be taken before this bill could hit the mark.

There are dozens of similar funds around the world that look to set the wealth from nonrenewable natural resources aside. Alberta's heritage savings trust fund was one of the first, started in 1976. Unfortunately, it is now worth per capita less than when it was created and less than about 20 similar funds around the world. Initially it was created with the intention of putting 30 per cent of nonrenewable natural resource revenues into savings, 5 per cent more than this bill. At the moment there is no legislation stating how much is to be put into the heritage trust fund.

The Wildrose wants to see the heritage fund grow and become a nest egg for our future generations. In our election platform we outlined how much and what percentage of surpluses we would invest into the heritage fund. We want to invest 50 per cent of all budget surpluses into the heritage fund. I believe that we can all agree that investing into the heritage trust fund is in the best interests of all Albertans, but borrowing money to put into savings is not a good idea. I do not know one financial planner worth his stripes who would suggest to his clients that they borrow money in order to put that money into savings, especially if they are already spending more than they make, if their spending is already out of control, even more so if they have a mountain of debt already.

I'm not unlike most Albertans. I have to balance my own chequebook. I have to pay my own bills. I have to pay my mortgage, my car payments, and my credit card bills. There has not been one instance in my life where I have looked at interest rates lenders provide, whether through a line of credit or a credit card or a bank of dad, and thought: I should borrow money and put that borrowed money into savings. And I never would consider that in a year where I was planning to triple my debt already.

Some previous Finance ministers have argued that the rate of return on the heritage fund is a lot higher than borrowing rates, so it makes sense to invest in the fund even if it means borrowing to do so. Well, the Wildrose has argued for a while that while a guy with a good stock tip might raid his personal line of credit to invest in the odd stock, this would be irresponsible gambling for a government with taxpayers' money. If the market takes a downturn, as it did in 2009, the heritage fund could quickly lose its value as it lost $2 billion in that year. The interest paid on the ever-increasing debt caused by the third party and being added to by the current government is growing faster than Albertans can afford.

Again, I support investing into the heritage fund. The Wildrose supports investing into the heritage fund, but we are against borrowing to save. We need to balance the budget first. We need to start paying off our debt first. When Alberta is generating a surplus, then we can invest into the heritage fund. We will support, or at least I personally as a private member will support, the second reading of Bill 201, but we will require amendments that ensure that we are not borrowing to save before we back this bill at later stages. This means the deposit into the heritage fund must be surplus based. This is just common sense. You do not leave bills unpaid just to put money into savings. You do not invest while you are spending far more than you make. Worse is what this bill is suggesting: an equivalent to putting debt on the credit card in order to put that money into RSPs.

A balanced budget is a logical, required first step that is needed to be taken before money can be invested. And let's be clear. As one of the most prosperous jurisdictions in the world Alberta should be running a balanced budget. As the Infrastructure minister said before, Alberta should not be taking on debt. Why are we taking on debt? It's because of out of control spending, Mr. Speaker; $8 billion a year more than B.C. is what we spend annually, and that is inexcusable.

We are proposing that 50 per cent of consolidated cash surpluses be legislated to go into the heritage fund. If this had been in place over the last few decades, the fund would be worth far more than the paltry sum of today. This will require not only amending the deposit formula but amending the definition of a balanced budget.

In order to make the budget appear balanced, the third party, while in government, opted to change the definition of a balanced budget. The result was the repeal of the Government Accountability Act and the Fiscal Responsibility Act and a focus on balancing only the operational portion of the budget. You see that echoed in this bill today. It says that if the operational budget is balanced, 50 per cent must go to the fund. That means that we could be borrowing an extra $4 billion to $5 billion a year on top of capital borrowing just to save.

The third-party changes pushed billions of dollars in capital spending off the bottom line, making it appear that the province's finances were in better shape than they actually were. If I had to guess, this is what the NDP discovered when they were starting to find challenges that are a bit bigger than what may have been featured in the Prentice government's campaign, quote, unquote, from the Premier, namely in respect to what the cash balance is.

While I was at the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, I made it my business to expose what the third party, the then government, was doing to our balance sheets: cooking the books. As I mentioned, they had separated the budget into three individual smaller categories and required only the operational budget to be balanced. The capital plan, which had been over $5 billion for a decade, was at first taken entirely out of the equation, and then only part of it was brought back in last year under a so-called consolidated number, but this consolidated number was always somehow billions closer to balanced than the amount of debt they were taking on.

To ensure that we are not borrowing to save, we will need a balanced, consolidated, all-inclusive budget first, Mr. Speaker. No more additional $6 billion side budgets that don't add up and are quietly paid off with debt. Does anyone here really think that future generations will be proud of us when we tell them that we built the heritage fund by $10 billion but handed them a bill of the debt for an extra $10 billion?

The Wildrose wants to see this government be upfront with Albertans. The Wildrose wants to see a true and consolidated balanced budget. The Wildrose has been proposing to balance the budget for years. With that balanced budget plan comes a plan to reinvest into the heritage fund. The Wildrose surplus allocation strategy would also force deposits just as this bill proposes, but those deposits would only be allocated when we can afford them, when we're running a balanced budget. Surplus-based allocations don't add to the problem in years where we face steep debt and deficits.

With our plan, the Wildrose plan, 50 per cent of surpluses would go to the heritage fund, 25 per cent of surpluses to pay down the $13 billion of debt run up by the previous government, and the remaining 25 per cent of surpluses would go to infrastructure to help municipalities and regions cope with growth during boom times. Of that last 25 per cent, 10 would go to our 10-10 plan for cities, and 15 to our infrastructure fund for things like ring roads. The key point of the Wildrose plan is that we would be investing in our future in a twofold way. Alberta's future is not secured by putting money into savings when the government is not balancing the budget; Alberta's future is secured by balancing the budget first and putting money into savings second. If these amendments are not made, I will be voting against this bill at its later stages.

We agree in principle. We agree that we must invest in our future, and we agree that we need to put money into the savings fund, but we need to agree that this is done after the budget is truly balanced. Without a balanced budget first, I cannot support this bill.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree in principle that it is very good policy to mandate a certain percentage of money going into the heritage savings trust fund. As a province that relies on nonrenewable resource revenues – as we're experiencing now, we know these revenues are unstable. It's very important that Alberta get off the resource revenue roller coaster. What I like about this bill is that it adds structure to what is currently an undefined and ad hoc approach to policy-making as it relates to revenue additions to the heritage trust fund. What I have to say – and this will be the first time, maybe the last, that I am swayed by the arguments by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. I will say: please don't get used to it. It's distinctly uncomfortable.

In all sincerity, I think he makes a valid point. Borrowing simply to save is taking money from one hand and putting it into the other, and we achieve nothing. I do believe it's important that we enforce fiscal discipline along the way, that we find a mechanism to save nonrenewable resource revenues for future generations to ensure that government spending does not outstrip our ability to generate appropriate revenues, that our government follows good, strong fiscal discipline.

To do that, we need all options. We need new revenues, but more money is certainly not the answer to every question. Finding administrative efficiencies and ensuring that dollars are spent wisely in every area of government are the key to ensuring that our nonrenewable resource revenues can be invested, and only do that once we are out of debt. We need to ensure that we are focusing on economic diversification and other means of making sure that as the world changes around Alberta, we are not overreliant on nonrenewable revenues, that we're not crossing our fingers and simply hoping that the price of a barrel of oil goes up to ensure that our kids can go to kindergarten.

What else do I want to say here, Mr. Speaker? I believe that we want to ensure that we get to a point where a minimum of 25 per cent of nonrenewable resource revenue is directed directly into the heritage savings trust fund but the rest of it is spent paying off debt, at which point we ensure that at least 50 per cent of future nonrenewable resource revenues goes towards the heritage fund.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The chair recognizes the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to speak to Bill 201, Assuring Alberta's Fiscal Future Act, brought forward by my hon. colleague the Member for Calgary-South East. Having sat in this House for over a decade now, I've had the opportunity to witness many important debates that have helped form what Alberta is today and the direction for the future. The future is exactly what this bill is addressing. Bill 201 is quite simply proposing to task the government with ensuring that our children have a fund that offers financial security for whatever the future may hold. I'm not naive to the criticisms as to why these savings actions have not been taken in the past. On May 5 Albertans had their say on what they want for the future, and I stand here today with colleagues from across the House looking forward to our future.

What I've heard from my constituents is that the Alberta heritage savings trust fund is a source of great pride dating back to 1976, truly the envy of virtually any other jurisdiction in North America and beyond. This fund has paid for large capital projects that benefit Albertans across the province, including the Alberta Children's hospital in Calgary. Mr. Speaker, I could provide an extremely long list of projects paid for by that fund. It didn't just disappear. But, truly – I timed it – it would take up more than my entire speaking time. Suffice it to say that these projects have benefited Albertans greatly, but I think we all know that we can do more, and we can save more.

Bill 201 simply serves to ensure that this government has a mandate for saving whenever it enjoys a surplus. This bill serves to comfort Albertans that while the government is being attentive to the issues of today, it is also cognizant of the issues of tomorrow. You may know that at the recent G-7 summit there was a commitment made to phase out fossil fuels by the year 2100. This means, of course, for us right here and right now, that this opportunity has a timeline that ends. Mr. Speaker, I know that this government will point the finger back at us – and they have; that's pretty convenient – as to why this wasn't done before.

Great things were done since this fund first began. They might say that Albertans deserve their fair share of resource revenues. I understand that. Well, all Albertans have received the incredible benefit of this resource-rich province, including the lowest taxes in the country. We enjoy world-class public service that receives funding from nonrenewable resource revenue. There's a reason we continually lead the country in economic growth. The government of Alberta just released the population growth report, and once again we're leading the country.

So, Mr. Speaker, there is a reason why people are still flocking to Alberta, and this is why Bill 201 is essential. There must be savings for the future. This government has proposed increased taxes as a source of revenue, which should further strengthen the argument to put away nonrenewable resource . . .

The Speaker: I'm hearing a sound somewhere. Does someone have a phone on?

It seems to have stopped.

My apologies. Please proceed.

3:50

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll just back up half a sentence.

The government has proposed increased taxes as a source of revenue, which should further strengthen the argument to put away nonrenewable resource revenue. My hon. colleague from Calgary-South East has provided flexibility to this government to bring this bill into force in tandem with or shortly after their first budget.

I do hope that members of this House do not dismiss the purpose of this bill. This is not just a request of our caucus; it's a request of Albertans who are proud of this. So I call on all of our members from all sides of the House to join me in supporting Bill 201 as just the first step for us all to work together to secure Alberta's future.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to speak today to Bill 201, the Assuring Alberta's Fiscal Future Act. Certainly, my hon. colleague the Member for Calgary-Lougheed just spoke at some length with regard to the proud heritage of the heritage trust fund, and I would say that people of all political stripes can agree that in 1976, when Premier Lougheed instituted the heritage trust fund, it indeed was a proud moment for all Albertans. Perhaps that was the last point that everybody in Alberta agreed about the heritage trust fund and how it's been managed over the years.

I will say in defence of not only Premier Lougheed but the legacy of the third party that the heritage trust fund has been a legacy that has been extremely valuable to Albertans, and quite frankly the expenditures from the heritage trust fund have assisted and helped this province in many and varied ways and are a big part of the reason why we enjoy what we have in this province today. The heritage trust fund indeed has been used throughout the years to build many different forms of infrastructure throughout the province: airports, seniors' housing, parks, care homes, hospitals, and the list goes on and on.

Specifically, when we're talking hospitals, it includes the Walter C. Mackenzie Health Sciences Centre, here in the city of Edmonton. It includes, as my colleague mentioned, the Alberta Children's hospital. It includes facilities all around our province. There's scarcely an airport that you can walk into in rural Alberta and not see the heritage trust fund bronze plaque – that airport would have been constructed using at least some funding from the heritage trust fund – as well as seniors' housing throughout the province.

In addition to the investments made by the heritage trust fund in capital projects, we also have the heritage trust fund being involved in medical research through the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research. Indeed, here in the province of Alberta, through the funding provided through the Alberta heritage fund for medical research, we have some world-leading medical researchers who have chosen to relocate from all around the world to do their work right here in our hospitals, in our educational institutions. Groundbreaking work is being done in Alberta in research, for example, into multiple sclerosis.

We have one of the finest research teams anywhere in the world, where there is co-operative research between the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, and the University of Lethbridge. I had an opportunity just last year to meet with one of those researchers, who is from the University of Lethbridge. I spoke with her because she had a German-sounding name. As some of you will know, I am of German heritage, and I wished to try to have a few words with her in my mother tongue. She was fascinating, and I asked her the inevitable question: "Why are you here? Why aren't you in Germany doing this research?" She smiled, and she said, "Because the Germans are way behind us." The Germans simply do not have the infrastructure. They simply do not have the research teams for doing this kind of work, that is funded – how? – through the heritage trust fund.

So, ladies and gentlemen, while you can sometimes point to numbers – and I, quite frankly, have to smile when people say, "Well, why don't we have all the money that Norway has?" or "Why don't we have all the money that the Alaska permanent fund has?" Yes, it's true; the Alaska permanent fund has more money in it than the heritage trust fund does. But I had the opportunity to visit Alaska a couple of years ago. It was on a government trip – and the Member for Strathmore-Brooks can check out my expenses if he wishes, but I was sent to Juneau in January, so you can hardly call that an expensive government junket – and we spent two days at the Pacific North West Economic Region meetings, largely meeting with legislators from other jurisdictions. We met a lot of legislators from the state of Alaska.

Now, the state of Alaska is well known as having a considerable amount of nonrenewable resource revenue. In fact, 70 per cent of their operational budget comes from nonrenewable resource revenue. If you can think of a jurisdiction that needs some work with regard to diversification of their economic base, that would be one of them, and that was the question they asked. They said: "In Alberta, how did you do it? You're a resource-rich jurisdiction, but clearly with your infrastructure, with your universities, with the research that you're doing, you are doing better than we are. How are you doing it?" I simply said that we're doing it by strategically investing in initiatives that improve the quality of life in our province.

Now, are those initiatives always right, and do they always result in a positive return? Well, no, they don't, and there are well-publicized instances where those investments did not work out well. If they haven't already been pointed out, I'm sure the members from the party to the right of me, to the far right of me, will point those out. Nonetheless, Mr. Speaker, there are lots of examples where strategic investments by the heritage trust fund have served Albertans extremely well. I will defend those investments, and I will defend, in fact, the legacy of the heritage trust fund.

I therefore am supporting this particular piece of legislation, because it is time that we set aside a specific, given amount annually for the heritage trust fund. Should we have done it sooner? Sure. I'll grant you that. Are there things that in hindsight we can do better? Of course, we can. But we have to always look at things with an eye to the future. We live in the present, and we make decisions for the future. We don't sit here and agonize over mistakes that were done in the past. When mistakes were made – and we saw an example of that earlier this afternoon – we acknowledge them, and we move on. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, that's what this bill is doing. It's saying: let's move on, and let's make sure that we make these strategic investments in the heritage trust fund going forward.

You know, Peter Lougheed was named as the foremost leader at the provincial level, the greatest Premier of all time in Canada, for a reason. He had tremendous vision, and he had tremendous ability to articulate that vision going forward. When he passed away, three years ago, I remember very vividly one commentator saying that the epitaph that was used for Christopher Wren is perhaps the epitaph that should be used for Peter Lougheed, that if ye seek his monument, look around you. Indeed, the province of Alberta, this province that we love, this province that has so much in the way of infrastructure and resources and so many things that we can be proud of, I would say, is largely attributable to the vision of one Peter Lougheed, and a big part of what Peter Lougheed instituted was the heritage trust fund.

This bill strengthens the heritage trust fund. This bill imposes on this government and future governments – it might be these folks; we hope that it's us some day – fiscal discipline to make sure that savings go into the heritage trust fund. Let's make sure that we do that. We have that opportunity with Bill 201. To my fellow members, I would encourage you to vote in favour of this bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to say that I'll be speaking against Bill 201. I agree; there have been some important investments across Alberta from the heritage trust fund. I say this with the greatest of respect to the Member for Calgary-South East. Any discussion that focuses on being more responsible with the revenue received by government is certainly worthy of debate in this House.

However, any legislation binding government to arbitrary targets for setting aside revenue from nonrenewable resources is premature at best. Under this act future governments would be required to set aside 25 per cent of resource revenues into the trust fund. I do question the member of the third party and of the former government for bringing forward this bill at this time in this session. If they thought it was a great idea, Bill 201 could have been enshrined into law during any of the previous 44 years that they were in government.

It's also contrary to the direction that Albertans chose on May 5. On that day they voted for change. They voted for a government that is committed to openness and transparency. They voted for a government that believes in fairness in taxation. They voted for a government that believes that we need to build a more diversified economy that is less prone to the boom-and-bust cycles of the oil industry. They voted for a government that is committed to protecting health care, education, advanced education, and human services because Alberta families need those programs. Our government is delivering on those priorities.

In one short week in our first legislative session our very young government has brought historic, positive change to our province. My colleague the Minister of Justice has introduced legislation that would ban corporate and union donations to political parties. It is a bill that the members opposite in the third party did not support, but it is supported by the Official Opposition. It's great a day when legislation can have broad-based appeal and support from members across this Chamber. It's unfortunate that members of the third party didn't support that democratic reform.

Our government also introduced an interim supply bill that would restore funding to health and other critical services that I outlined earlier. As Minister of Finance I am also committed to bringing fairness to the tax system through legislation that asks the most successful corporations to pay a little bit more while introducing a progressive income tax system for all taxpayers. This legislation will also bring much-needed revenue stability to our treasury. That's a lot of work, and many more governments haven't gotten that much work done over many sessions that they've been in government. Mr. Speaker, we're working hard to honour our commitments to Albertans.

Bill 201 is not part of our agenda and is not what voters asked us to do. We believe in fiscal responsibility. We understand that there is great value in saving during good times so that we have a financial cushion during more challenging times. We also see a great future in our oil sector, one where we will work to keep the energy sector jobs here and not export them abroad or to Texas. Because of the economic policies of the previous government, there is a deficit. Our focus over the next four years will be to return to balance and develop an economic plan that gets us off the boom-and-bust cycle and roller coaster. We can't support legislation that is a distraction to our plan and the hard work Albertans have asked us to do. It's premature until we have completed the royalty review that we committed to during the election. Our government believes in acting responsibly with scarce public resources. When we reverse the slide in this fund that occurred under previous governments, we'll be careful not to make the same mistakes. We'll not squander our resource wealth.

Bill 201 is the wrong legislation at the wrong time, and I would urge people to not support it. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have to confess that I am somewhat confused as to the real objective here in this motion. The PCs did have many years in which to do this. Instead, they spent both the interest and the nest egg, and now they are asking to increase debt in order to create the appearance of saving. The idea of saving from a party that saved nothing just confuses me as to the motive. I believe in saving. I absolutely do believe in saving. I've been a personal saver all my life. But saving, truthfully, is a function of disciplined spending, and without spending discipline there can be no saving. Until this House gets its spending in order, our province will be profligate and continually in a state of crisis and financial dysfunction.

Most reputable family financial counsellors would advise you with regard to your personal finances that if you have a surplus in cash, you should pay down debt first. It's one of the first principles of financial security, to minimize debt and to control debt. Debt is a great destroyer. I've had to counsel those who have struggled with debt and who are facing the prospect of bankruptcy. The pain, the shame, and the dispossession of bankruptcy is always preceded by debt. It happens in families, it happens in countries, as it is in Greece right now, and we just don't want to go down that path. At the risk of sounding scaremongering, even without bankruptcy debt enslaves. Debt robs you of cash flow. Debt today restricts you tomorrow.

As a last thing I just want to say that borrowing to invest is a zero-sum game. It takes risks that it shouldn't and a dose of delusion, hoping somehow to win. A trustee should never take such risks with other people's money. Actual saving is a good thing, and we need that, but posturing to feel good with borrowed money is not saving. We need real savings, and unless we can see that, I personally cannot support this bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today because I will be speaking against Bill 201, and I say this with great respect to the member. I say this because we have to look at this and say that yes, we can have discussion, and yes, it's worthy to have discussion on issues which affect savings and issues which affect the heritage savings trust fund because these are things that matter to Albertans and these are things that we need to focus on. However, right now is simply not the time to do it.

I'm going to echo the statements made by the Minister of Finance and say that now is not the time because right now we need to focus on passing the fall budget. We need to focus on developing these things, and we need to focus on this without having our hands tied by saying that we must invest these arbitrary numbers that seem to have been pulled out of thin air, that we must invest these numbers that haven't been given a lot of thought because we've only been sitting here for a couple of weeks, that we have to invest all this money. We're going to say: let's just tie the government down and not give them any leeway on how they're going to develop their budget, not give them any leeway on how they're going to develop their plans moving forward for the next four fiscal years.

We look at this and say that yes, our government believes in fiscal responsibility. Our government believes in saving when times are good. Right now is not that time. Right now is not the time to be committing to things that the government cannot foresee. Right now is not the time for the budget to be tied down to something that we simply do not know will happen, when we cannot and will not be able to predict the future. So we say that we can't let this Bill 201, this legislation, distract us from what Albertans elected an NDP government to do. What Albertans elected us to do is to focus on the issues that matter to them and to ensure that we can fund those things in a responsible way moving forward, and that right now is this fall's budget. In the future we may have to re-evaluate these things. So we look at this and say that our government believes in acting responsibly with our scarce resources. We have these limited resources, and we do understand that some of these eventually will have to be invested in our savings and invested in furthering this province. We look at this, and again we say that now is not the time.

We ask that you look and say: how is deciding on these and pulling this number out of the air a good idea? How is that a good idea? You've brought this forward and haven't really thought it through. It's been two weeks. We tabled this legislation, and we say that we don't even know what the budget will look like. We simply have interim supply on the table right now, and that's something we're going to have to move forward with before we can even consider to be squandering our resources in ways that we haven't quite looked at yet.

As the Minister of Finance has said, once we reverse the slide and we reverse what the previous government has done, we can start looking at how we can do these savings, how we can reinvest in our heritage savings fund, how we can start doing that. We won't make those mistakes that the previous government has made. We won't go back and do the same things they've been doing and mismanaging for the last 40-odd years.

Now, what we're going to say today is that Bill 201 is wrong. I urge every member of this Assembly to realize that right now is not the right time. Right now is not the opportunity for us to look at something that hasn't been thought through. Right now I urge everybody to vote against Bill 201 so that we can look forward and focus and let our government focus on investing in things that matter to Albertans, let the government focus on things that matter to our constituents instead of forcing them to do things that they simply cannot commit to in this short fiscal period.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:10

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate all the debate that I have heard here in the House today. The hon. member who just finished speaking I think said: why now, and was it pulled out of the air? Well, he was kind of right about that. It was pulled out of the air. There's a draw for these bills. That's why it's right now. You're new here, so you might not have known that, but that's why. We draw for the order of business. That's why. That's when we had an opportunity to bring a bill forward. It's pretty straightforward.

Mr. Speaker, to you and to the hon. House leader from the government who's chirping I will say that this is one of the elements that was in the budget that we brought forward just before the election, to add savings to the heritage savings fund. So it's not out of the air. It's well considered. I guess at the time the government considered that this was the right time to make this change.

There have been a lot of questions asked, you know, about how we got here? I guess I'm always highly entertained when I hear the comment: if we did this differently, there would be more money in the fund; if we did that differently, there would be more money in the fund. To those people who make those comments I would say that they're about half right, simply because if you want to know – people say, well, where's the money that in those people's views should be in the heritage fund? I guess your kids are probably sitting in the schools that that money bought in some cases. You probably drive on the roads that some of that money bought in some cases. Mr. Speaker, Albertans paid lower taxes for decades. These are choices that the government made, to build schools, build roads, have lower taxes. They could have made different choices, to have fewer schools, fewer roads, and more taxes and put more money in there. That also would have been a legitimate policy choice to have made, but the government of the day chose to build schools and roads and hospitals.

It's great, actually, Mr. Speaker, to now hear the other parties chirping because they're all pretty happy when the schools do get built. For the ones who are saying, "You should have built more schools or more hospitals," potentially that would have been less money in the heritage fund, depending on the policy choices that that would lead to. You see where I'm going here? The fact is that – you know what? – they're policy choices that have given Albertans lower taxes, more infrastructure along the way, and Albertans have enjoyed the benefit of those things in the past. In many cases Albertans are still enjoying the benefit of those things today.

I was also entertained by some of the comments from my colleague in the opposition, particularly when he said that no financial adviser would ever advise somebody to borrow money to save. Well, mine did, and that's an interesting fact. I can tell you that . . .

Mr. Fildebrandt: We're not talking about Horner.

Mr. McIver: No, Mr. Speaker. Actually, I'm talking about our adviser from the Investors Group, who advised my wife and I, when we were getting close to paying off our mortgage, to put a couple of hundred thousand on the mortgage at a very low rate and invest more money. I see members of the opposition nodding. They probably got the same advice.

When the hon. member says that no financial adviser in their right mind would say that, I would say that I guess my financial adviser must be out of his mind. The fact is that my wife and I actually made enough money off that investment to pay it back, with tens of thousands of dollars more to secure our future. I will say this in defence of the member who said that. Every time you make an investment, it's a risk. Where I do agree with him, Mr. Speaker, is that if the investment that my wife made or any investment that the heritage fund made had gone down, it wouldn't have turned out so well. I don't take issue with that.

I do think that the hon. member does have faith that investments can turn out well. Otherwise, why would the hon. member say that you need to put a lot more money into the heritage fund? Now, it would be crazy for him to say that, and I don't think he's crazy. For him to say to put a lot more money into the heritage fund if he believed all the investments were going to go down, that wouldn't be a smart thing for him to say. Actually, I think he's a smart person, so I think he considered that.

But it does lay bare, Mr. Speaker, the inconsistency that you can't make money by investing. Clearly, members in this House want to put more money into the heritage fund. I believe that they care enough about Albertans to believe that they think those investments might go up. In fact, if you look at the track record of the heritage fund over the last few years, I think you would find that the results have been investment results that any investor would be proud to have achieved.

When you consider all of that, when you consider that the hon. member is presenting money to go into the heritage fund out of surpluses, it's actually, interestingly enough, kind of consistent with what everybody is arguing for. Yet they're coming to the other conclusion. I will ask you to reconsider what you've said, only the conclusion that you've come to, and to consider, actually, investing in a fund that benefits Albertans, particularly one with a good track record, particularly when it's coming out of surpluses. I think you might have all just talked yourselves into what a good idea Bill 201 is, and I encourage you to support it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak against Bill 201. While the Member for Calgary-South East is to be respected for his current focus on responsibly managing government revenue, legislation that will bind the government – bind the government – to setting aside revenue from our nonrenewable resources is not the best move for Alberta at this time. We certainly understand the value of the heritage trust fund and its potential for our province. While we understand the value of saving during good times for the future of this province, the member presents this legislation at a time when we are in a deficit due to the economic policies of the previous government. It is unfortunate that the member did not bring forward this bill in previous sessions, when the third party actually governed this province, so that Albertans would today have a financial cushion.

As they did not, at this time it is our responsibility and our priority to work hard to restore the balance, to develop an economic plan that moves us away from the boom-bust cycle. At this time it is our responsibility to move in the direction Albertans chose for us on May 5. Albertans voted for a government that believes that we need to support a diversified economy that is less prone to the boom-bust cycles of the oil industry. Albertans voted for a government committed to protecting health care, education, advanced education, human services, the things that matter to your average Albertan.

Mr. Speaker, our government is working hard to do that for Albertans, to stand firm on our commitments that we made. In our very first week of our first legislative session we've already taken a very significant step to move away from the boom-bust cycle by introducing legislation to ask the most successful corporations and individual Albertans to pay a little more to bring more revenue stability to our treasury. As we work to reverse the downward trend that occurred under the previous government, we must act responsibly with the scarce resources that we have and be careful not to repeat those mistakes.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 201, just simply, as previously stated, is the wrong legislation at this time, so I absolutely cannot support it, and I ask that all of you vote against Bill 201. Thank you.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

The Speaker: Hon. members, I do have a ruling on the point of order that was raised earlier in the day. Upon reviewing the Blues, I note that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods stated:

From 1990 on the now third party never once took seriously the idea of building up the heritage trust fund until just now, the first moment when their hands weren't on the controls. Now, despite the inherent hypocrisy embedded in this bill due to the third party's past failures on this file, the underlying idea of reinvesting a portion of oil revenues into the heritage trust fund . . .

I do not see that there is a point of order here based on the language that was used pursuant to the standing orders. However, in the short period of time that we have been in the House, I wish to remind all members of the House that if you wish to be productive, engaged, as you've all said you would like to be, be cautious of the tone that you use. I respect that you will apply that across the House to each other.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I think the next speaker that we have is the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. Proceed.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To start with, I would very much like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-South East for bringing this motion forward. I think it's very important and very beneficial for all Albertans and particularly us in this House, entrusted with this great resource, to have the opportunity to talk and debate about the best way forward for ourselves and for future generations, and I look forward to being able to add to that. To me, the intent of this bill is almost to be split in two ways, the idea behind saving and the idea behind borrowing to save. At this point in time I will support Bill 201 and hope that we can have a fulsome discussion on some of the amendments that are necessary around the idea of borrowing to save.

The heritage trust fund, as other members have mentioned, has done tremendously good things in our province, from providing medical research, agricultural research, to building many properties that many of our citizens use today. But, to me, the debate centres around Alberta and Albertans being blessed with this tremendous asset of oil and gas, whether it's the oil sands, conventional oil, or natural gas, billions and billions of dollars of net worth. How do we commercialize that, honour the intelligent and hard-working Albertans and Canadians that add the value to taking that oil and gas and those oil sands out of the ground, converting it to a usable product for all Albertans and all Canadians, and taking a fair amount of tax and saving a fair amount for the next generation?

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

There are many, many different ideas around it, but part of where I want to start is with the idea of what some other sovereign funds do. There are some sovereign funds that take the interest that their funds earn and do not invest them in their jurisdiction. The idea behind this is not to cause inflation; the idea behind this is to spread the risk. With our past government, of course, I believe it was $33 billion in interest over the last 38 years that this fund has earned that has been put into our economy. Has this been the correct process? Has this caused inflation? What it has done, for sure, is that it has left the fund at the same absolute dollar value that it was at when Peter Lougheed started it in the mid- to late '70s, somewhere between $16 billion and $17 billion. Our calculations in the Wildrose are that if we had just left that $33 billion and let it compound and accumulate over the last 38 years, we would have somewhere between $200 billion and $220 billion today in the fund.

Mr. Smith: That's a lot of money.

Mr. Barnes: A lot of money.

Mr. Cooper: A lost opportunity.

Mr. Barnes: A lost opportunity.

What does that cost us? I look at today's situation. My understanding is that AIMCo historically makes between 7 per cent and 7 and three-quarters per cent per year. So if we had $200 billion in the fund, somewhere around $14 billion, $15 billion would be earned. Oil and gas royalties in most of our better years were $8 billion or $9 billion. In a year like this year, when oil and gas royalties may be as low as $3 billion or 3 and a half billion dollars, what I'm hearing, that interest instead could go into our general revenues and fund the services we need, whether it's health care or education.

Mr. Cooper: That's stability.

Mr. Barnes: That is stability. That kind of stability leads to diversification. That is the lost opportunity of the 44-year PC government.

I want to tell this government, though, that to diversify the economy, you need more than that. You need low, competitive tax rates. It's an international world. Our companies have to compete with American states and jurisdictions around the world. Low, competitive tax rates bring business, attract capital.

We need minimal bureaucracy. Your government is inheriting a government that consistently was given a D or a D minus by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business for not reducing red tape and bureaucracy in Alberta. I ask that you please address that.

We need stable utility rates, another area of PC failure. Property rights: we need strong property rights to bring certainty and to lead to investment. Again, I ask your government to put this high on your list.

How should we handle increasing the fund? Well, a lot of constituents in Cypress-Medicine Hat think that the number should be around $100 billion, $110 billion, the idea being that when the fund can earn 7 or 7 and three-quarters per cent, that generates the $8 billion or $9 billion that we put every year into our budget, from what we earn from royalties now, to provide the stability.

How do we get there? The Wildrose members' policy I think is a good way forward and is based on that principle. Let's build the fund to where the interest earned equals what we would make from oil and gas royalties annually to build the stability that we need for our children, our seniors, our social programs. The idea of the 50 per cent of surplus: let's get back to a situation where spending is under control, where the royalties are a real opportunity, and the idea behind putting 50 per cent into surplus will build that fund accordingly but leave the other 50 per cent for what would obviously be growing and increasing needs. If we're having a surplus, no doubt it's a time of high economic business activity, and that would lead to municipalities in other parts of the province having other needs as well, so the other 50 per cent could be used for that.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Let's talk about the spending. As other members have said, on a per capita basis Alberta spent almost $12,000 per year per person under the last government. The Canadian average for a province is more like $9,600, $9,800. That $2,000 per year per Albertan leads to $8 billion a year in additional spending, more than if we had just spent the Canadian provincial average. To the new government: please look at bureaucracy, look at corporate cronyism, and look everywhere where our hard-earned tax dollars aren't getting citizens the value that we need.

The Fraser Institute put out a report, authored by Mark Milke, showing that our last government over the last 10 years had spent 54 per cent more on operations and programs than population growth and inflation warranted. Over the last 10 years it's $41 billion in additional spending that, again, I'm sure, has gone to high-level bureaucracy and areas that aren't enhancing our front-line services, our education, our health care. Please look there, too.

In summary, I absolutely support the idea of taking some of our valuable resource of undeveloped oil and gas, conventional oil and oil sands, and building up a fund that will shield us against downturns, that may help with diversity and diversification if we do some of the other right things.

At this point in time, though, I absolutely believe that borrowing to invest is not the way forward. Our sister province of Ontario is a prime example. I don't know the exact numbers, but I remember reading a short time ago: $300 billion in debt, interest annually of over $11 billion. I was shocked when I read that that's more than they spend annually on their advanced education and their job training. Can you imagine a government that spends more than all their universities and their job training and they spend that on interest? That's not where I want to leave this province for the next generation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm pleased to rise. I've actually enjoyed and appreciated the comments on both sides of the House with respect to this bill. It's a very important question, and I'm glad that the hon. member has raised it because I think it's certainly worthy of debate.

The question has been raised, though, about the timing. I also am curious about the timing because the previous government had made decisions with respect to the heritage trust fund. It was their idea. It is probably the single most important legacy of the previous government and one of which they should be very proud, in my view. The question, however, is why a bill that would require that a certain fixed amount of royalty revenue, nonrenewable revenue, be put into the fund comes now. This had previously been the policy of that government back in the day of Peter Lougheed, and that was at a time when the heritage trust fund did increase steadily in value. It's true that at that time there were also investments in infrastructure that were made. I don't think that that has been the case for some time. The question, then: why reintroduce that at this point?

Decisions were made to take out the earnings of the fund and put it into general revenues so that the fund didn't grow. There were related decisions that were made as well with respect to royalties. Under the Lougheed government they set a goal for realizing the value for the owners, which are, of course, the people of Alberta, of these resources. The goal was set that 30 per cent of the total value of those resources should come to the people of Alberta, who own the resources. They actually accomplished that goal and, in fact, exceeded it in some years.

But in subsequent governments, notably after the election of Mr. Klein, a decision was made to reduce the take on royalties very substantially, to the point where the take that we now get in terms of the royalties from gas and oil is about 9 per cent of the value. Mr. Speaker, that's actually lower than under Social Credit, which accomplished a level of 10 per cent of the value of the royalty revenue coming to the people of Alberta. So that was a decision also that affected the growth of this fund because it substantially reduced the amount of revenues coming from that source that could be invested in the fund, so the fund atrophied. It failed to grow, and it actually shrunk against inflation.

So why now? I sense that there is a tinge of regret. I think there is a sense that the government has missed an opportunity, and they realize that the time when they could have done the right thing by the fund, followed the course set out by Peter Lougheed, has passed, maybe not anticipating the change in government but a change in values of resources that made it more difficult to grow the fund. I recognize it was part of their platform, but I sense a feeling of a missed opportunity in this bill.

Now, I also recognize that the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat has made an excellent point, that had we retained the earnings of the fund and allowed the compound to grow, we would be now receiving over $30 billion a year in revenue from the fund, which could have easily offset the drop in royalty revenues which we are now experiencing. So the opportunity was lost to turn this into – I'm looking for the right word – a fiscal balance, a fiscal stabilizer, to stabilize the revenues that the province received. Talking about the royalty roller coaster came, I think, far too late on the part of the previous government.

Let me get to the point, though, about the bill and why I can't support it, and that is because the bill requires that 25 per cent of nonrenewable resource revenue be directed unless operational revenue is expected to exceed operational expense – in other words, we're in an operational surplus position – and then 50 per cent. This easily could move the province's finances into a deficit; hence, the argument that it would mandate automatic borrowing on the part of the government. So it's too specific, particularly to deal with our present circumstances. It is tying the hands of the Assembly, not just the government but also of the Assembly, with respect to the budget that we can bring forward.

We certainly accept and believe that we should grow the savings of this province. We need to make sure that we have full value or fair value for the resources that we all own together in order to accomplish that and that the tax structure enables us to spend for our programs that are delivered by the government so that royalty revenue can in fact be invested in savings, as I think all sides of the House agree. But until we accomplish those balances and reach those levels, it will be very difficult to mandate 25 per cent of royalty revenue and in a surplus year 50 per cent of royalty revenue being invested in this fund. I think that that is far too restrictive in terms of what the Assembly can do, particularly given the circumstances that we're in now, with being handed a significant deficit to deal with and low prices for our commodities at the present time.

On that basis, Mr. Speaker, I would urge all members of the House to defeat Bill 201, and perhaps a different, more flexible approach can be considered by the government to be brought forward at a future time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to speak on this. Personally I agree in principle with Bill 201 with a few changes that we must implement before it goes further. Before we can start saving, we have a mess to clean up and we have a budget to balance and debt to pay off. The words "Alberta heritage savings trust fund" – unfortunately, over the last three decades we've lost our savings and we've lost our trust in government, resulting in the changes that we saw on May 5.

In 1995 the government asked Albertans about the future of the heritage trust fund in a survey called Can We Interest You in an $11 billion Decision. Of the over 50,000 responses Albertans said to keep the fund for future generations and focus on generating better returns on long-term investments. The Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act was amended to reflect the changes Albertans asked for in the survey results. Since that point we've frittered away close to $30 billion out of that fund. Following the results from the 1995 survey, the heritage fund was restructured. The fund can no longer be used by government for direct economic development or social investment purposes. That was in 1997.

The state of our fund compared to 25 of the top oil-producing countries in the world: we currently sit at 23 out of 25 countries. Some of the investment savings plans in other countries: number 21, whom we are behind, was started in 2000. It's now worth $18 billion, and that's the Iraq development fund. It's been at war pretty much the whole time since 2000. The U.S. Alaska permanent fund started in 1976, and they have been paying out dividends to their residents. It's sitting at $51.7 billion. I think you can see the pattern here, that we had an opportunity, we squandered it, and now we're asked to commit 25 per cent of all of our revenue from oil and gas without paying down debt first. Just another one that we fall behind: Libya, another country that's been at war on and off for many years. They started their fund in 2006. It's now worth $66 billion.

Many years ago I was advised by a very successful man that the most prudent financial plan – and I agree with my colleague – was to put away any excess money that you got. He said that even if you got $100 at Christmas from grandma, put it against your mortgage rather than putting it into savings or into some other investment that may lose money. It's simple math of reducing principal on a loan rather than carrying the interest. He said that I would have more money to save when my mortgage was paid off, and he was absolutely right. It was a very successful strategy. I would suggest that paying down our debt and reducing our deficit by controlling excessive spending is the most prudent path forward. Once we have spending under control and have a balanced budget, only then can we look at adding to our savings, which I agree is very important for Albertans now and in the future. At that point I'd suggest that we follow the plan that the Wildrose has put forward of paying 50 per cent of all surplus into the heritage savings trust fund and also 10 per cent into the MSI fund to give stability to our municipalities.

More important at this juncture is that we use this bill to protect the existing Alberta heritage trust fund from further exploitation by this or any future government. I think that's we have to do, use this bill to protect the fund from any future stealing of its revenue or interest.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there any other members that wish to speak to the bill? The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, second reading is really about the principle of the bill. I don't think anybody in the House would quibble with the need to save in this wealthy province, that we have inherited with tremendous resource wealth, and a need to move beyond a nonrenewable economy, that once gone is gone forever. It doesn't pass without some irony that four weeks after this Conservative government was unelected, they suddenly are talking about savings. Well, where have they been for the last 30 years, I guess, is the question. Not only the most thoughtful and well-respected economists on the planet have been saying this for years; Albertans have been saying it for years.

Finally, I think we're going to get a government that, I hope, is going to see the merit of saving where we have the opportunity. I can't agree more with the hon. member that we do need savings. At this time of tremendous instability one could argue about the principle of saving and forcing governments to save. It's obviously on a very pragmatic and practical level very difficult at this time to commit to actually borrowing for essential services, at a time when our economy looks like it's going to be in difficult times for at least the foreseeable future, a year maybe or maybe a year and a half. We all hope, I'm sure, that it will come back.

But the previous government was living on a wing and a prayer. Each annual report and each budget said that they were planning to save once things got better, and somehow things never got better enough to save even any of the surpluses that we had. So it's a very difficult thing to deny that we must save our nonrenewable resource wealth. I mean, it's just so basic.

The unfortunate timing of this is not beyond us. We have some critical infrastructure. We have some critical public services: education, health care, supports for families at risk. We cannot compromise that. To force a government to go into debt to honour a piece of legislation that forces them to save at a time like this raises some serious questions, and I guess we'll have to debate those both at this time and in the committee.

But perhaps the hon. member is open to some amendments and some suggestions for modifying the bill in some ways that would make it more palatable, so that we actually place a high priority on saving whenever it's feasible and then start to move toward a commitment, especially when there's surplus, to a percentage saving and lock that in, I guess, in legislation so that we don't give this government, as we did the last, the option to spend it or spend even the interest on this nonrenewable resource wealth, which has been done for years, and leaving it actually depleted – significantly depleted – compared to what it was even at the time of former Premier Peter Lougheed, which is a travesty to our children, to our future, to opportunities to provide that important buffer for the future.

I'm sure others have commented on the not dissimilar decisions that have been made in Norway, where they made a legislated commitment to saving. With the high taxes, of course, there they're able to follow through on that for the most part and draw down only on the savings when they are in a deficit position and require it for public services. There's some real wisdom, real leadership in that. Incidentally, for those of you who may not know, Norway brought in a carbon tax in 1991, and they haven't suffered greatly from providing that kind of incentive for the environment and for a reduced carbon-intensive economy. So they're sending the messages that I think most people on the planet want to send: save when we can; invest in alternative energy; put on a levy on the carbon that is going to increasingly cost us hugely in extreme weather events and health problems and food production and water management. These are really important times to be thinking about the kind of example that Norway has set even if we can't follow it to the letter that they have followed it.

So in principle – I absolutely support the principle of savings. It's difficult at this time to require a government to be forced to save at a time of tremendous economic uncertainty and with critical services that are now recognized, I think, to be about 20 per cent lower than the rest of Canada on a per capita basis, human services about 20 per cent less than the average per capita spending in Canada. We are behind. We are behind, folks. That's according to Kevin Taft's book Follow the Money, and that was completed in 2011 or '12, so certainly there might be some changes since then, but we have some catch-up to do. I know in my community about the number of homeless, the number of people without affordable housing, the number with addictions problems that aren't getting addressed, mental health issues, children at risk. We cannot keep going like this, I don't think, and we certainly could be forcing a government to go into debt to expand services in human services where they're needed.

So while I agree in principle, I doubt that I will be able to support this in practice. Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Would the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View like to speak? Proceed.

Mrs. Aheer: As a private member I would like to say that I support the intent of this bill. I think that the government talks about how there was an ask for change, how Albertans looked and are looking for a change. Change doesn't mean that it has to be the complete opposite. It means that you can embrace an idea that is good at its core and look at it for what it is and make it your own. That's the purpose. It doesn't mean that you have to be opposed to that bill.

For example, in its intent, the borrow-not-to-save idea is a good idea. It's good public policy. It looks like we care about what is happening with Albertans' money, that we care about saving, that we care about a legacy, that we care about our children, that we care about our grandchildren, that we care about seniors, that we care about health care, and that we care about education. These are all things that putting your money into a savings plan mean to people. It means a lot in our own families when we do that, and it means something to Albertans that when their tax dollars come to this government, they are being put somewhere where they can physically see and understand the growth of their money.

Fifty per cent of revenue from nonrenewable sectors is a good idea. It's good public policy. It is money that can only be used with the eyes of Albertans on you, and it puts all of us into a position to be accountable and transparent. Those are words that I, personally, keep hearing over and over again: transparency, accountability, integrity. Well, we need to put some real numbers and some real ideas into that.

Transparency means putting your money into something where everyday Albertans can see it growing, where they have the pride and the knowledge that going forward the government is caring about what happens to their dollars. The heritage fund is the epitome of what that means. It means that we're looking into the future of the province. It means that we're going to stabilize a sector that's unstable and make it so that that money can be there for the future. The intent of the bill is correct. It is good public policy.

I would also like to reiterate what the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat had talked about. That number, $200 billion, is a monster number, and it's a fabulous number if you think about what the future could hold if we actually did that. Wouldn't that be amazing? If you can think about it as you go forward in deciding, this is a private member's bill. You can vote on this; we can all vote on this independently, independently of how we feel we should move forward in Alberta. That means more than anything. It means that conscientiously we're making decisions individually on behalf of our constituents, on their future, to what happens with their dollars. Imagine $200 billion. What could we do with that money?

Now, granted, as the third party members have said, the money had been used and spent on things that we've all benefited from in this province. So if we want to continue benefiting the people in the province, which is what I hear over and over again about services and ideas and things that this government wants to bring to the people, that money has to come from somewhere. If we want Albertans to understand where their dollars are going, they need to go into a fund that has transparency, that has accountability.

It's a nonpartisan idea. It's a decision that can help us create a legacy, something that all of us can participate in. It's just an amazing idea. It's amazing to be part of something that incredible, that we can all put our stamp on.

Significant opportunities have been missed to reinvest, and the resources are limited, but they need to bear fruit in the future. They need to have a future where whatever is available to us right now produces something for later, where it's not just gone on a whim and on an idea, which has happened in the past. We can't make ideas based on whims. We need to invest in the future.

We can talk about the formula. Well, the formula within the heritage trust fund is what actually keeps us accountable. We have to be able to show Albertans what that formula means and how that comes forward. Again, what is the government talking about? Transparency, accountability. That will keep us transparent and accountable to Albertans.

Pride comes from having done a great job. It comes from knowing the legacy, how it grows, and how it will continue. Pride comes from acknowledging that we've learned from our mistakes and that we can learn to pay it forward and not spend with no conscience. Spending isn't the answer; saving is actually the answer. We do not have a revenue problem. We have a management issue. So let's show how we're going to manage. If we're going to spend, let's spend appropriately. Let's show them how we're going to spend. That is our responsibility. The idea is good, and together we can make the plan fabulous.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other speakers who would wish to speak on Bill 201? I recognize the member.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak against Bill 201.

An Hon. Member: Aw.

Ms Babcock: I know.

With respect to the Member for Calgary-South East, a piece of legislation that requires this government and all governments in the future to set aside 25 per cent of resources into the heritage trust fund is not fiscally prudent. It is, with the uncertain fiscal climate we face today, premature and the opposite of forward thinking. Due to the economic policies of the previous government our province is currently in a deficit, and though it is incredibly important to save, there was little to no saving recently when there was extra to put away. The history of the heritage trust fund is important, and it is important to acknowledge the past mistakes with the trusts that have been given to us as elected members as well as some few successes.

But it becomes our duty, then, to act prudently as hindsight is 20/20. Under our current economic environment it would be financially irresponsible of the government to commit such a large sum of its revenue. Per the fiscal operating plan it would be, if it were to be instituted this year, $2.3 billion for 2014-15, $2.5 billion for 2015-16, and $2.675 billion for the 2016-17 year, in which it was proposed to come into effect. Given the state of our infrastructure, hospitals, and schools that the previous government has left in such a state of disarray, a drastic commitment would severely limit the new government's ability to make prudent fiscal decisions.

These are also investments in Alberta's future, and when the government tables their own budget, it will ensure that Albertans get the best value for their tax dollar, and that will mean a balance between present challenges and future investments. This government has brought forth opportunities to invest meaningfully in the future of our province through restoring funding to important services such as education, advanced education, health care, and human services as well as physical infrastructure. These investments in the future of our province are tangible, and this government is committed to return fairness to the tax system by asking the most successful among us to pay a little bit more.

Given the uncertainty in our economy and the fact that this government has yet to table our own budget, it would be financially imprudent and careless of this government to support such a bill before the government can calculate its own financial metrics so that we can understand Alberta's liquidity, debt service obligations, revenues and expenses, and commitments free of the previous bias and rhetoric. This will help provide stability and the ability to stop depending upon the boom-and-bust cycle.

Bill 201 is not what we have been asked to do by Albertans. As a government there must be a complete royalty review so we can act responsibly with the scant public resources at our disposal currently, and when this downturn is turned around by the current government, we must be careful not to repeat the past and be more careful with our . . .

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Stony Plain, but the time for consideration of this item has concluded.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Surface Rights Legislation Review

501. Mr. Hinkley moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to conduct a review of existing legislation related to surface rights and work to ensure landowners' rights to fair compensation and due process are respected.

Mr. Hinkley: Mr. Speaker, thank you for this opportunity to speak to the Assembly. I am excited and delighted to be so fortunate to have the luck of the draw, 1 out of 87. This provides me the opportunity to speak and provide the first private member's motion of this session.

In pondering this issue, to commemorate this historical and personally unprecedented experience, many extremely important and very relevant topics have come to my mind. They have come from my constituents of Wetaskiwin, Camrose, Maskwacis, Millet, Gwynne, and Bittern Lake, but they concern all Albertans. Should I choose a topic and should I recommend that the government take action on Inspiring Education, postsecondary education, an Alberta inquiry into missing and murdered aboriginal women, recognize indigenous rights, initiate renewable green energy alternatives, child poverty in Alberta, electrical transmission and distribution fees, health care issues, the heritage savings trust fund, tackle seniors' issues, or rural economic diversification? So many topics. My list of important and relevant items grew and grew. No wonder the people of Alberta wanted a change of government.

During and since the election I received messages from individuals in Ponoka, Rimbey, Pigeon Lake, Battle Lake, Mulhurst, Westeros, Warburg, Devon, Ferintosh, Forestburg, New Norway, Stettler, Didsbury, Innisfail, and countless rural areas in between those cities and towns, but one recurring issue occurred over and over. Mr. Speaker, this issue forms the basis of my private member's motion.

As a rural property owner and an MLA in a government which is overwhelmingly urban, it is incumbent upon me to bring this issue to the attention of this Assembly, to right the wrongs done by previous legislation to diminish landowners' basic rights and the democratic process. I and my fellow MLAs have listened and heard the concerns of Albertans. It is now time for us to take informed, positive action to rectify past legislative errors. Legislative policy committees review all bills referred to them. I hope they will take just as seriously this motion.

Surface rights and property rights are a complex issue. Sometimes they are interchanged but definitely could be separate topics. Merely reviewing this legislation will not resolve the concerns unless action is taken. It is, however, a significant and mighty step to addressing some long-standing, serious grievances. At stake are issues of democracy. This issue is not only about social democracy but also about responsible environmental stewardship. The feelings and frustrations that property owners have as a result of government legislation allowing private companies to come onto their land, extract the resource, and leave once they have depleted the resource, with no responsibility to return their property to its previous pristine condition, with no recourse to seek compensation for their grievance, leaves rural Albertans feeling disenfranchised, unheard, and very angry about no opportunity to appeal during the process or of legal appeal later.

It is unfortunate that rural Albertans have been pitted against corporate Alberta, especially when corporate Alberta profits from extraction of nonrenewable resources, leaving landowners with the residue of polluted air, contaminated water, and toxic soils. The unconfirmed number of conflicts between landowners and oil companies around compensation, inconvenience payments, hydraulic fracturing, and abandoned and orphaned wells is growing.

Some examples from my constituency and nearby. One involves farmers near the Westrose district raising personal health and safety concerns due to blowouts. Another example pertains to the disposal of dry sorbent injection by-product, which is a toxic substance, into the ground and potentially affecting local aquifers. The company denies that the substance is toxic and will affect the watershed.

Another example from Battle Lake, beautiful Battle Lake, just west of Wetaskiwin, is the headwater to the Battle River that flows into the Saskatchewan River. An oil company is seeking to drill three deep wells around the lake then go horizontally under the lake in order to frac to extract the resource. There has been no consultation process with the local landowners and none with the First Nations of Maskwacis. Petrochemical engineers have done studies and produced papers outlining the dangers of drilling under this lake or any lake, for that matter.

A more famous conflict includes the well water on fire in Rosebud and the subsequent struggles of that landowner. There are countless other conflicts which both the Warburg and the Camrose surface rights associations could provide you, so I'll go on.

Tied into these issues are farmers' concerns about the effectiveness of the Farmers' Advocate and further concerns about the effectiveness of the Property Rights Advocate to adequately represent them. Also, there are issues with the Surface Rights Board over the right of entry; about contracts between landowners and oil companies, which were not respected; about oil companies hydraulically fracturing in a watershed against a landowner's will or the surrounding community's will. There have been debates about third-party mediation: could or should it be done by the Surface Rights Board or by another body? The legislation is unclear.

The legislation I would like reviewed but not exclusive to these three are Bill 2, which has become the energy act of 2013 and which, like all of the acts, is lengthy with multiple clauses that have extinguished a landowner's statutory right to a hearing when the government approves energy projects on private land.

Bill 24 and the surface rights acts from 2007, 2011, and 2014 determined how oil companies could come on farmland. It established the law that transfers ownership of every inch of pore space in the province from the landowners to the government – that's in section 36, dealing with compensation – it made it illegal for a landowner to sue the government in a court, and it limited a landowner's ability to appeal to the Alberta Energy Regulator, which in itself is another major issue. I want to quote that in 2008 there were over 8,000-plus wells fracked in Alberta. In 2013 another 1,500 fracking licences were given out. In 2014 3,395 wells in Alberta were fracked. There are concerns about the nondisclosure agreements for fracked property. The need for more inspections and more enforcement of existing rules is creating further conflicts.

The third bill I would like looked at is called the Alberta Land Stewardship Act of 2010. Now, it also has information about dairy quotas, water licences, and confined feeding operations, which may be good, but more specific to my motion's concern is that that act took away a landowner's right to compensation, giving enormous powers to oil or energy companies, that they could decide if any compensation would be given to the landowners and how much compensation there would be. The Alberta Land Stewardship Act prevails over other acts, including the Expropriation Act and the carbon capture act. This is another reason why we need to review the legislation, because some legislation prevails over other legislation. Should that be the case?

To end this presentation, I just want to reiterate that during the election campaign forums, questions from individuals, letters to editors, e-mails, and property rights group meetings all highlighted the need for full legislation review. I am encouraging all members to support this motion to show that we have listened to our constituents, we are serious about their concerns, and we do indeed support democratic practices and responsible environmentalism.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The chair recognizes the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of this motion as I believe that with expropriation of land it's very important that landowners are treated with a great deal of respect. Whenever we're dealing with private property and government, there's an inherent imbalance in power. As we've seen with recently passed bills in previous Legislatures – Bill 2, Bill 36, Bill 50 – the balance has shifted the wrong way. Landowners must be not only fairly compensated, but a complete review is necessary of the impacts of bills 2, 36, 50. Certainly, I believe we need to revisit significant sections of each. New legislation needs to be brought in that genuinely protects landowners and their rights.

Now, as a significant proportion of Alberta's population lives in urban areas, this has created competition between different land uses. The trend continues, but we must never forget and never lose sight of the fact that Albertans from all around the province, rural or urban, demand fairness.

The Alberta Land Stewardship Act, formerly Bill 36, authorizes cabinet to adopt regional plans that legally bind land-use authority on private land. This may restrict a landowner's rights to use or develop land, and landowners cannot expect compensation if reasonable private use of property is left only to the owner. Bill 36 shifted that control and the emphasis from municipalities into the hands of cabinet in centralizing it. In an information bulletin about the Alberta Land Stewardship Act the provincial government explained the relationship the locally elected governments will have with these planners. The document says that ALSA managers will set out their plan for each region.

Again, the centralization of power and control is something that is of great concern to me and, as we've heard and we know, I think a great concern to many people both in this Chamber and certainly to the people of Alberta. When landowners have their land taken away for public purposes, compensation is normally given, but when the government does not acquire the land but simply uses it, rarely is compensation given, or, if it is, it's not appropriate even where there's drastic loss of value.

There should also be clarification of subsurface ownership rights. The previous government amended several pieces of legislation, but the uncertainty continues over subsurface resource rights, natural gas storage, coal-bed methane, and pore space, as mentioned by the hon. member. The previous government did remove some people's claims to certain subsurface resources.

My concern remains, Mr. Speaker, with the imbalance in power between the government and landowners, and I sincerely hope that by passing this motion, we take the first step towards addressing that imbalance. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to debate Motion 501, a critical piece of the proceedings today. I'd like to thank the MLA for Wetaskiwin-Camrose for his efforts in bringing this important issue to the Assembly's attention. As the Official Opposition's primary individual responsible for property rights as well as a representative of a constituency with a keen interest in reinstating property rights I am pleased for this opportunity to address Motion 501 today.

I also feel that it's very critically important to point out that when we are addressing property rights, we are speaking about much more than just rural landowner rights. We're talking about more than surface rights. Rather, we are speaking about all Albertans' basic right to own and use property. That includes both urban and rural. Property rights are among our most fundamental rights, part of the foundation upon which our entire society is constructed.

Sadly, over the past number of years we have seen the previous government seemingly willing to trample on these rights by taking a ham-fisted approach to major infrastructure and planning initiatives, particularly when it came to power lines in this province. Under the previous government steps were taken to concentrate power in the hands of cabinet and limit Albertans' right to compensation, remove judicial recourse, and generally strip any semblance of fairness within our system.

These devastating changes were most immediately noticed and widely rejected by those rural Albertans who depend on the use of the land for their very livelihood. However, the previous government continued to ignore these citizens, and when they conducted consultations, it seemed that they had predetermined outcomes, and it became clear that the attack on basic property rights and the attack on rural Albertans were in full force.

Let me give you an example. Under Bill 36 the previous government – in fact, this challenge still remains today – provided cabinet the ability to rescind licences, oil leases, development rights, grazing leases, timber agreements, gravel approvals, and even livestock permits, all at the stroke of the cabinet pen.

Now, if you're a farmer and you operate a dairy, as my good friend from Drumheller-Stettler likes to point out from time to time, and the provincial cabinet chooses to revoke the water licence that's so critically important to your property, what good are your property rights if they can single-handedly revoke the licences that have been assigned to that property? By the same measure, if you're an urban entrepreneur who suddenly has a business licence rescinded, what good is the property in which you operate that business if the cabinet has the ability to do that as well?

Concerns about Bill 36 as well as bills 19, 24, 50 were repeatedly brought to the attention of the previous government, only to have many of those concerns rejected out of hand. Now, I will give credit where credit is due. The previous government, prior to its timely demise, did take some necessary steps to repeal some of the legislation that they had put in place, but there is still much more work to be done. The public quickly recognized that the previous government's reviews of much of this legislation were orchestrated public relations events and, in fact, did not complete the full breadth of the review that needed to take place.

Today I rise to fully support the spirit of Motion 501. At the same time, I must point out a number of major concerns. The motion as it's currently worded is far too limited. It calls on this Assembly to urge the government "to conduct a review of existing legislation related to surface rights and work to ensure landowners' rights to fair compensation and due process are respected."

Let's be clear. The wording of this motion is unnecessarily limited and would potentially limit the scope of such review. At the same time, it does not specifically mention who would conduct a review. Simply handing this file off to the bureaucrats, many of whom got us into this mess, is not an option. It would be a short-sighted approach, only to further undermine the confidence of our institutions.

Rather, I would recommend that this Assembly conduct a full and public review of all legislation pertaining to Albertans' property rights. In fact, the public will not accept another property rights review whitewash, only to be done at the hands of the internal government workings. A full public and open review is exactly what is required. To this end, I would suggest that an all-party committee be established specifically to review current legislation, to seek expert testimony, and to provide specific recommendations, including legislative amendments, many of which my hon. colleague from Livingstone-Macleod will be speaking about, I would imagine.

Further, I would recommend that this committee of MLAs be empowered to seek the input of Albertans in both rural and urban communities at a series of public forums that will take place across the province, with a firm deadline to report back to this Legislature.

Finally, I would recommend that this committee be comprised of seven government MLAs and seven opposition MLAs because property rights is much more than a partisan issue. It is an issue that is at the very core of Alberta, and we ought not be scoring political points when it comes to something as important as property rights. I firmly believe that through such a process we can turn the page on the previous government's woeful record on property rights as we begin to rebuild the trust between government and all Albertans.

Well, there are many things that the previous government has done that I don't agree with. It's time that we turn the page. It's time that we move forward and look forward, stop blaming them for the past, and do what we can do to make Alberta better. That is exactly what we have the opportunity to do in the 29th Legislature, to put Albertans first, to make property rights, the very foundation which our province has been built on, a priority for all landowners, urban and rural.

There will be some significant differences between the new government and the Official Opposition, but I believe that much common ground can be found when it comes to reviewing and reinstating property rights for Albertans. We can bring back a sense of fairness to all Albertans and re-establish the trust that's so critically important when it comes to building the foundation of Alberta. Continually we must remind ourselves that it is Albertans, property owners, that make Alberta great, not this government or any government. It is Albertans.

I encourage members of the Assembly to support the motion, a motion that has the opportunity to do a meaningful review, and I thank the member for bringing it forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't have as well prepared a presentation as the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, but I'd just basically like to touch on a few points if I could in relation to this topic. It's one that our party and a lot of our members have been working on for many years.

First of all, I'd like to thank the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose for bringing this forward. We did have a quick little conference the other day just to talk about things in general, and I realized that the wording of the motion was perhaps a little bit misleading in that it was a little bit vague. We talked a little bit about trying to understand where he was coming from. Today he provided great clarification, I think, and suggested many of the things that I suspected were in the motion.

It basically says:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to conduct a review of existing legislation related to surface rights and work to ensure landowners' rights to fair compensation and due process are respected.

To me, I think that leaves one to imagine that the writer of that motion, which the member obviously was, was also thinking about some of the things that were mentioned in the presentation he made and also in the presentations that were made by Calgary-Elbow and also by our Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I'd like to touch on a few of those if I could.

I'm going to be talking a little bit about the previous opinions that have been made over the past few years here in this House regarding some of these bills. I'd like to talk a little bit first of all about surface rights, which have been mentioned here initially in the motion and talked about already so well. I'd like to also talk, as others did, on Bill 36, better known as ALSA, which is the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, and also touch on Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, where there are some issues that we dealt with a couple of years ago that are still a problem today.

As well, I think someone mentioned in the House Bill 24, which has to do with the pore spaces underneath our properties and how the government launched and passed a bill that suddenly took that property away from us.

Lastly, I'd like to talk a little bit about what we think is a great initiative at the end, and that would be to pass an Alberta property rights preservation bill so that from here going forward, property owners could have some guarantee that their property rights are protected.

Let's talk a little bit about property rights in general. We've talked about how property rights are basically the foundation of landowners' financial security and prosperity, but landowners need to know that their investment in their land and their livelihood is protected and that, therefore, there is some sort of sustainable and predictable way of doing business. They cannot afford, nor would anyone want to be involved in, a situation where their land could be devalued or their operations could be put into question by others, including government.

If that is the case and if government is going to come in, there should and has to be proper compensation. Yet the former PC government passed several bills related to surface rights and property rights in general that have compromised that very thing: the property rights of people, the landowners' rights to proper notification, to fair compensation, to appeals, and, finally, to appeal to the court if necessary. These things are fundamental in today's society, yet the previous government took all of that away with the passage of these bills.

We have called for a review of property and surface rights legislation before, since our inception, both prior to us being elected in 2012 and throughout the period from '09 to '11, when some of these bad bills were put through. We believe that this motion is a fairly good place to start, and we're so happy and recognize that the government in power today has made on numerous occasions many statements regarding these bad bills. I referred to this in question period today – and I think we used the word “draconian” in those words that I talked about today – and also that some of the members over there that were here in that time, including the Government House Leader, referred to some of these bills as bad legislation and stupid legislation. I think this is a great idea, to go back in and start looking at this now and look at how we can protect landowners' rights to all of these things and ensure that compensation and an appeal process are there for them if and when necessary.

Let's just talk a little bit about, first of all, then, property rights and surface rights. I think it's important for people to understand that surface rights have a lot to do with the right of an oil and gas exploration and development company to go in and get access to land for the purpose of developing their resources, but at the same time we also have to involve property rights for the landowners. Most of all and most importantly, we have to guarantee that the landowners' rights, when these kinds of disturbances occur, are protected, that compensation is paid to them for the lease of that land, whether it's owned or it is leased by them as part of their major operation, and we have to ensure that reclamation and all the environmental concerns are properly looked after.

The Surface Rights Act now has a problem. Section 36 of that act, which is regarding compensation, has a bit of a loophole. We need to look at that very carefully, and we need to ensure that when a company goes bankrupt, there is some way that these landowners are properly compensated and that they continue to receive their fees and their lease payments no matter what happens. Right now that is not guaranteed in that act. I would urge the government, if you're going to do this review, to look into that matter specifically.

I'd like to mention now, too, with respect to Bill 36, which is the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, which was mentioned earlier, that there are actually several sections of that act that we believe need strong attention as soon as possible. I'll mention a few of these today, and I hope some of you or one of you is taking some notes on this because this is important.

Section 11 in the Alberta Land Stewardship Act talks about the regional plans, where they can rescind existing rights, including development rights, resource extraction rights, mining rights, water licences, grazing leases and dispositions, and approvals and permits. We need to get that thing out of there. It's a bad section.

Similarly, section 19 talks about a restricted right to compensation regarding water licences, grazing leases, and so on being amended or rescinded. Again, we need to get that out of there.

Section 13: no right to the courts unless the cabinet allows it. That's just an insult to democracy.

Section 15: that it is binding on all municipalities and all Albertans without question.

Section 15(3): no right to make claims against the government.

Section 15(4): the role and authority of courts are restricted by this act.

Section 17: that this act trumps all other acts.

5:30

Truly, these sections need to be reviewed. They need to be repealed. I urge the government of today, who has spoken against this bill before, to carry on, to do what they have promised to do, and, now that they're in power, to please look at this in the most urgent manner and effect the changes that are necessary in Bill 36 like I've just outlined. That concludes Bill 36.

I'd like to move quickly, and I don't know how my time is going, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: You have about one minute.

Mr. Stier: Pardon?

The Speaker: About one minute.

Mr. Stier: Okay. Let's just get into Bill 2 very quickly, then, because I realize that I've taken longer than anticipated. Bill 2, the responsible energy act, stripped landowners of the right to independent arbitration and fair compensation. We need to put back into place what we had at the ERCB before they created the energy regulator. We need to put back the landowner rights under statute law so they can appeal the decisions to the court of appeal, to the highest court. We need to get that back, please. It's extremely important.

Bill 24 is when the government came along and said: we need a place to pump carbon, so we think that we should just take all the land underneath all of your properties and give it back to the Crown, and then we have the right to come onto your land and pump this stuff down below your home or your barn or your fields and any other properties you may have. This is a draconian act. This one, too, just like Bill 19, that was rescinded before, must be thrown out.

Lastly, the property rights initiative bill. I think that we would like to suggest to the government that it bring forward a property rights preservation bill. We'll work to assist you on that. We want to ensure that there's no private property being taken from a resident of Alberta by government without fair . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose for bringing this forward. I will make my comments brief. Like the mover of this motion, my constituents have come to me with a great number of concerns, which they hope and in some cases expect will be addressed positively during the next four years and beyond.

For well over a year landowners' rights have been a pretty hot issue in Lethbridge as a piece of our community's action on another related issue. Before, during, and after the election I have been visited, e-mailed, or spoken to by a great number of my constituents, and they all expressed their concerns over this issue. There seemed to be an incredibly high number who spoke specifically of this concern. They have been very direct in demanding that we follow through on the government's platform commitment to strengthen landowners' rights, to fair compensation and due process in surface rights issues. There were concerns expressed, from protecting our environment and water to fair and equitable compensation when one's property is excised. All very legitimate concerns.

The establishment and completion of such a review and the implementation of all of its recommendations are essential to address the concerns of all Albertans. As a previous speaker said, we must explore all options to find the best possible outcome for surface rights within our province in the future. I have listened to my constituents and will continue to do so. Now I am speaking in favour of this motion and will continue to do so until this issue has been thoroughly addressed.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members that would wish to speak to this motion?

Mr. Loewen: I'd like to speak to this motion, too. Property owners deserve fair and equitable compensation and processes to deal with the energy companies and government accessing and acquiring their property. It shouldn't matter whether you own 1,000 acres of land, an acreage, a house on a lot, or an apartment. There is a standard of duty of respect owed to a person who is in control of their property.

Wildrose has long advocated for property owners in Alberta. It's good to see the present government getting on board with this important issue. It's long overdue and shouldn't drag on. We need to move through this stage to the review and on to action as quickly as possible. We need to respect not only the landowners but the governments and energy companies that are affected by these regulations, not create instability or uncertainty in their business plans by dragging this process on.

My constituents have been concerned about this issue for years. Something needs to be done. Property rights are a basis of our democracy. It's alarming to see Bill 36, where cabinet can renege on leases and agreements. That's just not right. There are other sections that need to be removed. We need a full review of these bills, with full and open consultation with Albertans. We need to support this motion to begin this process. Property owners need to be able to appeal and appeal to the courts when they feel they have not been treated fairly. Again, we need to support this motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there other members that wish to speak to this motion?

Hearing none, I would call on the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose to close debate.

Mr. Hinkley: Mr. Speaker, thank you again. Thank you to all of the hon. members for all of your comments and input. I see them as being very positive. It is an issue that goes beyond party politics. I appreciate that so many realized how important this motion is. Taking this first step, to review and understand what previous legislation has set out, is a good start to protecting property owners' surface rights. I know that we need to go further, but we always have to take the first step before we can run a marathon. This is it.

Social democracy requires that all stakeholders have a right to be consulted on topics pertaining to them. They should receive fair compensation when it is due, and they should have open, easy access to all avenues and agencies of appeal. It is our responsibility to ensure democracy for all, and it is extremely important that protection is provided to guarantee all Albertans fair, due process. By passing this motion, we take that giant step in respecting property owners' rights. This motion is very relevant because it gets to the heart of responsible stewardship of the land, which will be here long after many nonrenewable resources have been extracted. Therefore, I encourage all hon. members to vote in favour of this motion.

Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 501 carried]

The Speaker: Thank you, members.

The Assembly stands adjourned until 7:30.

I'm sorry. The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: I was going to make that motion, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:39 p.m.]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'll call the committee to order.

Bill 3 Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015 (No. 2)

The Chair: Are you ready, hon. minister?

Mr. Ceci: I am. Thank you very much, Madam Chair. The Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015 (No. 2): I'd like to ask for the support of my colleagues for this estimate. When passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize approximate spending of $56 million for the Legislative Assembly, $15.4 billion in expense funding, $2 billion in capital investment funding, $765 million for financial transactions funding for the government, and, finally, $387 million for the transfer from the lottery fund to the general revenue fund.

The purpose of this supply bill is to ensure that the government has the spending authority to continue delivering a high level of services and programs to Albertans until the full budget is in place in the fall. That's five months' spending. In this interim supply bill we propose increased funding, to the tune of $624 million, for core services that Albertans elected us to fix like health, education, postsecondary institutions, and protecting vulnerable populations. Reflected in this interim supply bill is funding to reverse cuts to health care and restoring stable, predictable funding for the vital public services that matter most to Albertan communities.

This interim supply bill will help to avoid cutting more than 1,500 nursing and health care positions by increasing funding to the Ministry of Health. This bill also reflects a commitment to the children and young people of Alberta. The increased funding to the Ministry of Education will fund regular operations, including school capital commitments, the teachers' agreement, and the commitment made by this government in May to reverse grant cuts and to fully fund enrolment. An investment in postsecondary education will mean an immediate tuition freeze at institutions across the province. Bill 3 would also roll back market modifier increases that were introduced in December 2014 for 25 programs across the province. Finally, increased funding to the Ministry of Human Services will strengthen services for children in care, ensuring that vulnerable families have the supports they need to lead successful lives in their communities.

Madam Chair, this interim supply bill will meet these commitments as well as allow the normal business of the province to continue until the full 2015-16 estimates are approved by this House in the fall. In the past few days some of my colleagues have expressed concern over the lack of detail in the bill. I can assure you that all of this will be addressed by our government as we will be putting forward a detailed budget this fall, which will include a line-by-line breakdown of where the funding will be allotted. Those budget documents will include comprehensive budget information in the form of the government's fiscal and business plans, the ministry business plans, and the government estimates. These estimates will be debated when the budget documents are tabled in the fall.

Until then our government will ensure that government departments have the spending authority for five months and the funding to continue operating until the budget can be tabled. I urge all my colleagues on all sides of the House to support the bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for . . .

Mr. Smith: Drayton Valley-Devon.

The Chair: Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. We will get this eventually, won't we?

You know, I want to speak to the appropriation interim supply bill tonight. I'm not even sure that I can get my head around how big this bill really is. I mean, does anybody here really understand $18.6 billion and then spending all that money for all of the government ministry areas? I'm told that it's the biggest supply bill in the history of Alberta. I guess congratulations are in order. You just outdid the PCs.

The problem with this bill is that it allows the government to spend huge amounts of money. I mean, as shadow minister of Education – in just my area, my portfolio of Education, it's allocating $2.7 billion. Trust me; on a teacher's wage that's an incredible amount of money, okay? Two billion dollars for expenses, $700 million for capital, and that's the total, sum detail that we've got for this. When I go to my constituents, when I go and talk to my stakeholders in education, they'd like a little more detail, and they'd like to know, have an indication of how that money is going to be spent. Where's that money going to come from? How are we going to be accountable for spending this money?

You've not addressed, even talked about the spending problem that the previous governments have had and, I'm beginning to believe, that you're going to have. You know, again, when I go back to my constituents, when I have to talk to the people that elected me, they're going to be asking me: "Well, you're in the Legislature. You're the one that's expected to hold the government accountable." When I get an interim supply appropriation bill like this, with so little detail in it, I just don't know how I can support it.

We know that the PC interim supply bill set aside $65 million to accelerate 50 new schools and 70 modernizations for 2014-15. Were these completed, or were they part of this interim supply bill? Are you including them in it? I don't know. Forty-one point seven million dollars was budgeted under the PCs for 35 new schools and modernizations that had been delayed. Were these projects completed, or are they part of this interim supply bill? I can't tell you. I'm not even sure that you can tell me. At least, you haven't.

You're asking us in this House, on both sides, to approve a blank cheque, and I don't believe that that's in Alberta's best interests. Where will the money come from? We know that the PCs were going to have and campaigned on a $5.7 billion deficit in their election budget. We know that Albertans didn't support that budget. We know that this government – well, at least, it's our best guess – is going to have a deficit of somewhere around $7 billion this fiscal year. Well, we're not sure. Why do you think that Albertans will support a larger debt? When I campaigned, I didn't hear Albertans saying: let's dig ourselves a deeper hole. We haven't had any of those kinds of discussions, and before I can support this, I need to know where that money is going to come from.

I think that we have a bit of a spending problem. I thought it before the election, I thought it during the election, and I still think that we have a spending problem with this new government. We know that you can't tax your way to prosperity. It's never happened anywhere. Only when tax rates provide a real Alberta advantage will businesses be prosperous, and only when people have jobs and when the taxes are low will people spend and will governments be able to collect the taxes they need to run the government. My kids at high school understood this. I think that we understand this; at least, we should. Using deficits and debts rather than spending cuts to balance budgets is very unwise.

I don't think that too many of us here run our personal finances that way. I was a teacher. My wife stayed at home. We had three kids. We had to spend our money wisely. I've never owned a new car. I can remember having arguments with my two brothers, who make considerably more money than I do, saying: you know, it's not child abuse if my kids don't go to Hawaii. If they never see Mickey in person, they'll live. It's okay. We'll have a good time having vacations in one of the best places in the world. It's called Alberta. We'll do cross-country skiing instead of downhill skiing because we can't afford it, and they'll play basketball because they can't afford to play hockey perhaps.

We made the tough choices, and we made the tough decisions so that we balanced our budget. We don't have a big house. We've got a nice house. It needs a new roof if anybody wants to come and help me shingle it. I've had to learn how to work on my cars and my vehicles. I hate skinned knuckles, but I learned how to do it. YouTube is a wonderful thing. "Dad, figure it out. This is how you change the brakes." We made those decisions and those tough decisions so that my wife could stay home, so that my kids could play basketball, so that they would have the opportunity to go to university, so we could set the money aside. You see, in your personal finances that's what you do when you're responsible citizens.

Just because we got elected, I don't believe that we're not called to be responsible citizens any longer. We're called to be the most responsible citizens. We're charged with carrying out the finances of this province, so we have to be very careful when we decide to rack up deficits and when we decide to rack up debt. Debts and deficits are only a tax on the future and on the future generations. I always told my family: if we can't pay for it now, what makes you think we're going to be able to pay for it in the future?

In the long run debt and deficits take away your choices. I don't think there's anybody over here that's disagreeing with me. If you want freedom, you have to be fiscally responsible. If you want to take care of your children in the education system, you have to take care of the economy and your budget. If you want to have good health care services, you have to take care of the basics. Our motto. It's right there. Liber: freedom. Real freedom comes from when you can control your spending, and in the long run it makes it harder to provide the programs that all Albertans need if we don't do the job right here today.

That's why I was really hoping that when I looked at this interim supply bill, we would see more details. We'd be able to know where that money is going to be spent, where that money is going to come from. I don't think that those are unreasonable expectations being placed on us by the people of Alberta. I realize you're new; we're new. But we've got to get this right.

Thank you.

The Chair: Next on my list I have Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise in this Chamber to discuss this government's rather grandiose spending package bundled together into Bill 3, the interim supply act, or as I like to call it, the NDP's minibudget.

On May 5 I along with my colleagues in the Wildrose caucus were elected to this Legislature to ensure that the government does not receive a blank cheque on spending. I'm sure that the NDP also campaigned on this, yet with this minibudget the NDP is asking for just that. With so many questions and such little time to discuss them, this government is hiding in the shadows. To say, "Stay tuned," isn't good enough when communities need answers now. It is a shame that the NDP is attempting to limit the debate on this bill, a bill that cost a total of 18 billion of Alberta's tax dollars. When the amount of dollars is divided by the amount of time allocated to debate on this bill, only one mere minute is given for every $83 million spent. That, Madam Chair, is beyond distasteful.

That is why I stand here today to demand on behalf of my constituents of Cardston-Taber-Warner and on behalf of all Albertans a full picture on the state of this province's finances. Albertans would like to know why this minibudget is being squeezed through the Legislature without a full debate session, why this bill is hardly being publicized, publicly discussed for all Albertans to hear. Questions of democratic and parliamentary due process surely arise.

Speaking of poor practices by members of the Alberta government, it is important to note that the will of Albertans is being denied. Many elites will tell you that this past election Albertans voted in a new government because they wanted change. Change. I ask you, Madam Chair: where is that change? This minibudget, which the government is set to pass, is the exact same budget that was passed by Premier Alison Redford and the PCs. Now, that was over three Premiers ago. Thankfully, however, Albertans have the Wildrose, the only party to stand up against these poor practices and the ideas of yesterday.

As to the question of fiscal transparency and clarity, why is this government hiding the true details of spending included in this bill? Albertans were first informed that this government intended to spend $1.8 billion in net new spending. That number was then changed to $775 million. Now we're being told that the new spending will only encompass $624 million. Which is it, Madam Chair? Are Albertans not entitled to this information? More importantly, where is the money coming for this new spending?

Lastly, I would like to draw this Chamber's attention to the fact that no definitive timeline has been given yet with regard to a full budget. The implementation of a budget is the government's number one job for it sets the agenda on the government's priorities and the economic state of Alberta. Businesses look to the Legislature for guidance on the province's economic outlook. Families from Carway to Conklin and everywhere in between look to this Legislature for hope and prosperity as the budget details the economic reality that will directly affect their lives and their pocketbooks. Yet to this date the NDP have refused to inform this Chamber of when we can expect a full budget. This refusal to paint a picture as to when and where this government will take this province's economy is simply unacceptable.

I along with my colleagues on this side of the Chamber are willing and ready to help the government with implementing a timeline on the budget. We suggest that a full budget be presented to this Chamber in September. We've suggested this many times. I invite this government to accept our suggestion and provide a budget in September so that families, communities, and businesses across this province can have full confidence in the government's plan going forward. Enough with the hiding. It's time to work on behalf of Albertans for the future of this magnificent province.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: I'd like to call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have questions about education. I would just like to ask if the capital allotments are going to keep school construction in Calgary-Bow on schedule.

The Chair: Thank you for that.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the important question. Not only is Calgary-Bow an area of concern; there are growing parts of our province everywhere. In conversations with two ministers it's my understanding that these projects are going ahead. If I'm wrong on that, we'll be sure to advise the member in writing as soon as possible and all members. But as far as I'm aware, it's absolutely on schedule to continue with the construction as planned out.

7:50

Ms Drever: That's good to hear. Thank you, minister.

Now, these building projects are based on the previous government's promises. My riding is still in desperate need of preschools and elementary schools. Will this government be promising new schools, and, if so, when will that be?

Mr. Mason: Thanks, hon. member, for that question. It is government's objective to continue with the announced schools. There are three tiers of them, which could be named after the Premier's term in which they were announced, if you wanted, but there are three groups, all of which this government intends to proceed with and to keep on time and on budget.

The Chair: Next on my list is the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair, for another opportunity to speak to the minibudget. There has been much said regarding Bill 3, and none of it has changed the government's reluctance to give us more information. All we ask for is the general fundamentals that we need before considering a new spending bill. All we want is for Albertans to know where this money is being spent.

Last week I asked the Minister of Finance five simple questions. One, how much money will the government spend? Two, how much revenue will the government collect? Three, what will be the deficit? Four, what will be the debt? Five, what will be the province's net financial assets at the end of the fiscal year? Stay tuned, Madam Chair. I have seen the previous government dodge questions and provide no answers. I was hoping that it would be different with the new government. I was hoping that this government would help Albertans understand where the NDP is going to be spending their hard-earned tax dollars. I was hoping that this government would not take a page from the third party's handbook and hide important financial details from Alberta taxpayers.

Last week, to my great surprise, I received five answers. When the NDP held a press conference to say where the money was being spent, I was ecstatic. I was so excited that this government was going to be different and give us information. I was excited that this government would give us answers and not leave us grasping in the dark. Alas, the press release did not match the numbers announced by the minister at the press conference. In fact, over the course of the week the NDP released to the public five different answers to the same question.

Let me back up for a minute. These answers, whether they were mistakes, typos, or misplaced decimals, were only half of one of my questions. A spending projection refers to the full expenditures of the entire budget, not just four ministries. That point aside, those five answers to that half of one question did not answer half of the question in any way, shape, or form. In fact, there were so many ways that it didn't answer any of my questions that I don't really know where to begin.

Let me outline to the House what each of these numbers was so that the House can get a glimpse as to why I think the government so desperately needs our help. First, the Government House Leader announced that new spending would total 10 per cent of interim supply.

Mr. Mason: That was a very approximate figure, as you know.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Very approximate, and we are staying tuned, Madam Chair.

Interim supply is $18 billion. Ten per cent of $18 billion is $1.8 billion. That $1.8 billion matched up quite well with their election platform. When a press release was sent out stating that spending would only be $776 million, the idea that the NDP decided overnight to drop $1 billion in spending was almost as welcome as it was unbelievable. But we were wrong, or they were wrong, or maybe the person who typed out the press release was wrong because at the press conference all of the numbers added up to $682 million.

Almost $100 million more was gone from their spending. Now, this was my lucky day, ladies and gentlemen. Maybe by the end of the day there would be a balanced budget. On my walk to one of the local food trucks for some schnitzel I was on the lookout for pigs flying over the sky palace. Hours later the Government House Leader announced that new spending was only $624 million. By this point I was hoping that this day had more hours in it for a night sitting so that I could hear a lower number still. But to my disappointment, later in that same statement from the Government House Leader, he said: "that is the bulk of the additional $1.1 billion." My lucky day had turned into a very confusing day, Madam Chair. Which number is correct? Which number are they actually spending? Do they know what they are actually spending? If the $1.1 billion is the true number, then where is the other $500 million being spent?

So I asked the Minister of Finance today: which is the correct number? Even the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board did not know. He gave us, ladies and gentlemen, a sixth number. The Minister of Finance said: somewhere in the $600 million range. That is literally – and I don't often say literally – a range of $100 million, give or take. Maybe he'll go Dutch with taxpayers' money and cut $500 million from the budget. Does the Minister of Finance still not know where the $100 million is being spent?

When this bill was put forward for discussion, it was allocated a total of six hours of debate for both readings. These six hours happened after weeks of planning by the NDP, and I hope that that planning was done with a functional calculator. This amount of time, six hours, was deemed to be enough time to give Albertans an understanding of where their tax dollars are being spent. If the Minister of Finance, the person in charge of Alberta's finances, does not know where the money is being spent, then how in the world are Albertans supposed to know?

I understand that the NDP isn't quite able to provide us with the full details of an entire budget right at this moment. That is understandable. But they could at least provide us with basic, unchanging details on this bill. Let me rephrase that. They could at least provide themselves with basic, unchanging details on this bill. The point I'm trying to make is that this bill is no better than, to borrow a quote from the Minister of Finance today, a "budget on the back of a napkin." In fact, it seems the napkin was spilt on and the NDP can't read the numbers anymore.

So, in closing, I'm not only disappointed but troubled by the answers the government has been giving us or not giving us. Fiscal competence and responsibility matter to Albertans, and the government has not been showing it. They should realize that one of the biggest reservations that Albertans have about an NDP government is whether or not they care about the books. Madam Chair, this government needs help. I've been trying to help here by giving the government the opportunity to show that it does care and that it has its ducks in a row. I know that there are many capable officials in the Department of Finance that can provide these estimates of the numbers. But for some reason or another the minister is holding back even these rudimentary details.

I don't like the fact that this bill allows unchecked spending until the end of November. I don't like that these spending increases are significant, but this government has said nothing about reductions anywhere, despite inheriting the most bloated government in the country. I don't like that the Premier has simply shrugged off the possibility that she is delaying presenting the budget until after the federal election. She knows that it will be a record deficit and record debt. The Premier perhaps does not want this to reflect badly on her comrades before October 19.

Madam Chair, I was not elected by the people of Strathmore-Brooks to give this government a blank cheque for an unidentified sum of new spending. I did not spend six years with the Canadian Taxpayers Federation fighting for taxpayers and fiscal responsibility just to give the government a blank cheque on new spending. Twenty-one Wildrose MLAs were not elected to rubber-stamp a spending bill that is irresponsibly spending in the dark without any details.

Madam Chair, the Wildrose caucus will be voting against this bill.

8:00

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Good evening. Thank you, Madam Chair. Albertans deserve answers, and we're not getting a lot of answers. We all know that this government is new. We're being patient, but what we want to know is: where is the money coming from, and where is it going?

This budget was a budget that was built three Premiers ago. What I want to know is: do you still have the sky palace renovations in there? Quite a few campaigns ago this budget was created under a former Premier's direction. Some significant events happened since that time: the Oilers won another first-round draft pick, and the NDP formed government.

Three hours to debate a budget that was drafted by a party that both our party and the governing party campaigned against. We're here to hold the government to account, to be the check on their power. We are worried that three hours is not enough time for this and that we are not getting a lot of answers. Our sense of what this government is spending $18 billion on is rough at best. In fact, our strongest sense is that the NDP may not know exactly what they're spending this money on. There are a lot of questions on how much the spending is going up by and what for.

Albertans deserve to know where their money is going. This legislator deserves to know where the tax dollars are being spent. I can't tell if the government isn't telling us where the money is going because they don't know yet or because they don't want us to know. I guess we'll have four years to assess how transparent this government was.

I am concerned about how our small businesses will react, how families will react. They want to know that Alberta is a stable, responsible place to invest, a place to raise a family. We want to reassure our energy sector that this government at hand is going to be responsible, provide stable leadership, and do its part for the promotion of prosperity in this province.

As you all well know, the Wildrose would never dream of raising taxes. I suspect that those who are about to see their taxes raised may want to brace for this, perhaps pass on that vacation they kind of planned for to make other expenses. Like the rest of Alberta, Wildrose wants to know where the tax dollars are going. This isn't much time to debate it. It's an enormous amount of money, and with so many conflicting statements about how much money is being used, we just want some transparency, and we want some accountability. We want to know where our money is going, and we believe that Albertans want the same.

Thank you.

The Chair: Go ahead. You can speak, hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. My questions won't be a surprise to the government because they're questions that I asked the last time we were here, and I didn't get them answered then. In fairness, the government has had a weekend to think about it since we were last here, so I think that based on the fact that they've had a few days to know what the question is, perhaps they've come up with an answer.

When we last met, it was established that the government had $1.8 billion in additional spending in the estimates. The government – I don't know if detailed is the right word because there wasn't a lot of detail. Nonetheless, they identified around $700 million or $600 million in spending that they're adding. I'm sorry I did that, but I think I badgered the House leader, and he identified another $600 million in taxes that the government is going to roll back. So that takes us to $1.2 billion. So there's still $500 million or $600 million unidentified from the original $1.8 billion. With another four or five days to think about it, I will ask the government again: can you tell me what the additional spending is with the $500 million or $600 million that you weren't able to identify last week when we were in here, please?

That was a question.

Mr. Ceci: Sorry. I thought it was rhetorical.

I can share with you, leader of the third party, that we will spend money on things that were planned to be reduced in your platform. Additionally, we will not collect money that was going to be taxes in your platform. Those are the two buckets that are in this interim supply that are new or different. Everything else comes out of this book that was tabled in this Legislature by the hon. Robin Campbell on March 26, 2015. As I said before, we have extended this by five months. So we just followed through with this.

The program spending is identified in the many pages of this book, and that's what we're following for the time being, until we can get our ducks in a row for a budget later this fall. I will just say that if you wanted to know what the new investments are, it's $500 million for Health, $100 million a month for five months; Education, $45 million; Advanced Education, $40 million; and Human Services, $39 million. So those are the expenditures that we are replacing that were planned to be cut. Then there are monies that we're not going to be able to collect, that were proposed as levies and fees that we're not going to be following through with.

Thank you.

Mr. McIver: So, Madam Chair, listening carefully, the Finance minister identified $500 million or $600 million. While the numbers weren't exactly the same and my colleague in the Official Opposition pointed out that the numbers seem to be a little fluid, nonetheless they're in the same ballpark as the original $500 million or $600 million. Then you identified another $600 million you're not taking, so that still gets us to about $1.2 billion or $1.3 billion depending on which set of numbers you use. The Finance minister says that there isn't any more. I guess the new spending has now gone down from $1.8 billion to $1.3 billion. Either there's $500 million that I haven't been told about or the new spending has gone down from $1.8 billion to $1.3 billion. Can I just get that clarification, please?

Mr. Ceci: I don't think I ever indicated that the spending was $1.8 billion. That may have been said in the early parts of the debate here, but the actual numbers are much lower, and they're in the two buckets that I mentioned.

Mr. McIver: That was good clarification, Minister. Thank you.

So, Madam Chair, we solved part of the mystery. We're down from $1.8 billion of new spending to $1.3 billion. I'm not sure if the taxpayers saved $500 million or whether we just got improved information on what we had before. However, I'm grateful for the answers that we are getting.

I guess that with that in mind, since the plan currently is to bring forward a budget in October, presumably right after the federal election, my suggestion to the government is: do you think you could, especially being freshly elected, not take a four-month vacation and maybe bring the budget in sooner? No disrespect to the Official Opposition, but September 7 is a little late, too. Next month would be better. Is there any chance that you might do that?

Mr. Mason: Hon. member, is that how your government put together budgets? That might explain a great deal, Madam Chair. That might explain a great deal about the previous government's budgets.

My understanding, if I may, hon. member, based on my conversations with a number of Finance ministers that I had the honour and pleasure to know and ask questions of is that the process of building a budget takes several months and that, actually, when responsible budgets were produced in your government, there was a long process developing that. I'm beginning to work on a capital plan, which is my contribution to the budget that will be in October, and I know the amount of work that is entailed in that. I'm sure that some of your members who had previously served in the position of Minister of Infrastructure would be aware of the amount of work that goes into developing the capital budget.

This is not a small-potatoes operation, the government of Alberta, as you should well know.

An Hon. Member: It's complex.

Mr. Mason: It's complex.

We will not be taking a four-month vacation in order to postpone the development of the budget. The amount of time that we've selected has nothing to do with the federal election and has everything to do with the amount of time it will take a new government, the first in 43 years, to familiarize itself with the books of the previous government, to take a close look at the accounts, the finances of the province, and to determine exactly what expenditures are justified and what revenues can be depended upon.

I hope that answers your question, hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Madam Chair, it's a pleasure working with this government, too, thus far. Although the information that we're getting is a little thin, it's still a pleasure. I would say that the Finance minister did wave around a document that the previous government had produced, and we hope to have that much detail when the other budget comes.

Mr. Cooper: Are you here to help, too?

Mr. McIver: No, I'm not going to offer to go to the other side and help. That's already been done.

I will say that even when we did estimates, hon. members – I noticed that what you put in front of us had three pages of numbers. Even the least we could find of when we did estimates was 24-plus pages, so hopefully we'll have more details soon.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

Mr. Mason: Madam Chair, I have here the interim estimates produced by the previous government, 2015-16 interim supply estimates, and I have the one that we have provided, 2015-16 interim supply estimates no. 2. They are virtually the same number of pages, same number of figures. The format that was used by the previous government is the format that our government has used.

Mr. McIver: Madam Chair, while I agree that what the hon. member showed is a real document, it's not the only document that was available.

We could do this all night, couldn't we?

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Just following on the notion that the Finance minister put out there last week that the interim supply is essentially the previous budget, based on that, for a period of five months. So you divide it by the number of months, and you multiply it by five. With that in mind, though, I'd like to ask a couple of questions, if I may, where I don't think the math adds up to that model.

For example, in the area of Education if operational expenditures are multiplied by five they should be $1.763 billion, but there's actually $225 million additional to that. I'd like to know where that's going. That's an additional $225 million. I'd love to know where that money is actually being spent.

There are many other examples of this, but perhaps we can start with that Education example. If somebody from the other side would like to answer that question, I'd very much appreciate it.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the question. As we'll all remember, on May 5 Albertans gave this government a mandate to make sure that we fund growth, and funding growth is where the allocation is going. It's my understanding that the additional dollars other than – continuing on with the previous budget, when you fund growth, it's $45 million for those five months. I'd be happy to follow up offline and provide some clarity around that math.

But it's around funding the growth, the 12,000 new students who are coming to Alberta, and ensuring not just that they have the allocation for teachers but also reversing the First Nations, Métis, and Inuit cuts, the English language learner cuts, ensuring that the cuts that were being proposed are reversed and funded through our interim supply bill.

Some of the questions around the math not adding up are actually because announcements had been made around what this would cost for the full year. Of course, we're not going to make a commitment to fund Education in November, change that, because the allocations actually go out in September. So the interim supply amount is $45 million, but of course the full calendar year for the school year is greater than that, and that'll be incorporated into our budget for full debate in the fall.

So the interim supply amount is for the five months, bringing us through until the end of November. But there will be additional educational costs because kids go to school until the end of June.

Mr. Bhullar: Madam Chair, I thank the Minister of Health for that information. However, the math still doesn't add up. I'm looking at $225 million, not $45 million. If this is $225 million over the course of five months, then over the course of 12 months we're looking at an additional over half billion dollars that's going into the Department of Education, and we don't know why. The growth is not over a half billion dollars, and there were no cuts to education that would come anywhere close to a half billion dollars. So I'd love to know where that money is going.

Moving on, because I don't think we'll get further concrete examples of the answers today, well, we'll go to Health. Why not go to Health? Based on, again, that same model a five-month extension should be $7.412 billion, but it's actually $7.746 billion, which is an additional $333 million in expenditures in the Department of Health for five months. I'd love to know where that is going.

I'll also put out a question to the Minister of Human Services. Last week the minister said that the department is getting an extra $39 million in spending over the course of five months. In actuality it's $51.3 million of extra spending over the course of five months. So the numbers don't seem to add up here, sir.

We take the example of Advanced Education. It's $91.2 million over and above the five-month funding envelope that the ministers have told us that they're trying to fund.

Then you go into some departments, and there seem to be some pretty significant cuts. We'll start with Justice. Again, on the same model – you take the expenses over 12 months, you divide it by 12, and then you multiply it five – the Department of Justice's operational expenses for the five months should be $528 million, but it's actually $473 million. That is a cut of $54 million. So I'd love to know where that money is coming from. Are there police officers or sheriffs or peace officers across this province that will not be funded?

I'd love to know the answers to these couple of departments if I may. That's Human Services, that's Health, and that's Justice, and then we'll proceed on from there.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the opportunity to provide some clarity around the Health expenses. In terms of the first interim supply bill, the pre-election interim supply bill, it was $4.7 billion approved by this House to ensure that we could operate health care until the end of June. The additional interim supply being requested is to provide funds until November 30. Schedule 2 would have been $7.3 billion. The amounts for the June and November interim supply originally requested were based on the proposed budget tabled March 26. This has been mentioned.

The pressures being forecast for the remainder of the 2015-16 fiscal year are evolving based on actual 2014-15 expenses and more current program information, allowing more reliable forecasts than the original estimates. There are three areas where significant pressures have been identified: Alberta Health Services' base operating funding pressures of $345 million – that includes components like compensation – and development pressures of $248 million and drugs and supplemental health benefits pressures of $61 million, for a total of $654 million.

To provide the interim supply for April to November, these additional pressures and adjustments amount to $500 million, as mentioned, which has been added, so now rather than asking for $7.3 billion, we're asking for $7.8 billion.

I hope you like my numbers. They'll be on the record.

Mr. Bhullar: Even then, Minister, I don't think our numbers are matching up, but regardless, I do appreciate your providing some information. It seems as if the department and the government have chosen to fund cost pressures for this five-month period, which we believe are based on growth. For the purposes of déjà vu, I'll remind the Government House Leader – I remember him standing up in this Assembly, asking many times: how many dollars are going to go towards bonuses in that 300-plus million dollars?

Mr. Mason: How many were?

Mr. Bhullar: Well, I'm asking you, sir. I'll guess we'll find out in five months.

But I wonder if the Minister of Human Services or the Minister of Justice can provide clarification on their numbers.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you for raising this. I don't have exact numbers before me, but I remember explaining that the additional funding we're getting is going to child intervention; FCSS, family and community services; and there was an additional $1 million that was reserved for the ministry responsible for the status of women. That's where the increase is going, and that's what I explained the other day as well.

Thank you.

Ms Ganley: Thank you to the hon. member. I'm not aware that there are any cuts in my budget. The way our budget document was prepared, the budget document for Justice and Solicitor General, was that costs that are paid equally over the course of the year, based on the previous government's budget, were sort of divided by 12, but there are some costs that occur in Justice and Solicitor General that don't go out evenly. There are municipal policing grants that go out at the end of June. Legal aid funding goes out two times a year, and I believe that one of those falls within but the other doesn't. So in terms of cutbacks there haven't been any cutbacks. The funding was sort of continued forward in exactly the same manner. It's just that some of it is unevenly disbursed. But if you had further questions, I can definitely get back to you with further details.

Mr. Bhullar: Well, thank you very much, Minister. There are many grants that go out at different times throughout the year, so that may be the beginning to the question. I mean, it's a very significant amount of money, so if you could provide us with the specifics of that, I would very much appreciate that.

Moving on to the Department of Seniors, I actually don't see any capital investments for the Department of Seniors, so I wonder where any of the seniors' housing or capital grant funding is going to be coming from, the sprinkler enhancements, the safety enhancements that were under way in many of the seniors' lodges across the province. I don't see any capital investments for the Department of Seniors in the document. In addition to that I see, based on your five-month model, a cut of almost $15 million over the course of five months, so I'd like to know where that is going.

In addition, I'll ask the Minister of Service Alberta. Again, based on this five-month model, you're down about $9 million in your operating expenses and $7 million in your capital expenditures, so I'd love to know where that difference is actually coming up from.

I think that if we start with Seniors and Service Alberta, that would be great.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the opportunity to address a question. What I've submitted to my hon. colleague was not anything around cuts. It was around maintaining the same ratio that had been proposed by the previous government, the three-twelfths of what the overall budget was. This is for the five-twelfths piece. So there aren't any cuts that we're proposing in terms of operating for Seniors. I'd be happy to follow up offline. I am confident that the sprinkler project is moving forward, to give you a little assurance on that one.

Mr. Bhullar: Sure. So, Minister, then just because I don't see the capital investments, does that mean that that infrastructure spending, that capital investment piece, has moved somewhere else? It's not in your interim supply, so does that mean it's now with the Minister of Infrastructure or Health or somebody else?

Ms Hoffman: I know I'm supposed to answer questions, but was it in your interim supply? That would be my question to prepare us for . . .

Mr. Bhullar: We had a capital budget for the Department of Seniors.

Ms Hoffman: I will be very happy to follow up with details afterwards around that specific – I'm not proposing any cuts to capital through the interim supply bill. Obviously, we'll have an opportunity to be able to debate the full capital proposal in the fall, when we bring that forward, but in terms of interim supply our purpose for the Ministry of Seniors was status quo throughout the summer and to bring us into November, so I'll be happy to have a little follow-up offline to get further details on that.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you. It's a very similar situation with Service Alberta, hon. member, that there weren't any cuts proposed. It was using the previous administration's interim supply numbers, obviously divided by 12, extending it for the five months, but there are no proposed cuts in this five-month interim window that we're tabling this bill for.

Mr. Mason: Can I supplement that, please, hon. member? I'm just looking at the interim supply bill that was introduced by the previous government, and the format for Seniors is precisely the same: expense and financial transactions and no capital investment line under that department. So while I don't have a definitive answer for him, I suspect, hon. member, that those items are probably contained in the Infrastructure budget, and I will endeavour to break those out and send them to him. But there's no capital line for Seniors in this interim supply bill or the interim supply bill that your government introduced.

Mr. Bhullar: I thank both ministers, but if we're starting with Service Alberta, according to my calculations and the numbers you're actually down almost $9 million on the operations side, and you're down about $7 million on the capital side, which is a bit surprising because Service Alberta, well, I guess has the IT capital.

Actually, this is a great time for me to ask a follow-up on that. In this year's proposed budget, as a part of our capital planning exercise, one of the things that I proposed to do was to bring down our IT costs across government. This is an area that can have runaway costs, and we proposed to bring that down by 5 per cent this year and 10 per cent the years following, so I'd love to know, maybe, if your officials actually followed the plan that we had put forward and are actually making that cut.

With respect to the Seniors capital investment piece, to the Minister of Infrastructure, I'm looking at a document here that does have $15.5 million in infrastructure spending. Now, perhaps my staff has put in the budgetary number as opposed to the interim supply number, so we can have a chat about that, but if you would endeavour to tell us where the ASLI money is and the money to upgrade the seniors' facilities and the seniors' lodges across the province, that would be very much appreciated. Similar to the question I asked last week as well, whether that's housed in Health now or Infrastructure, I'd love to know where that money is, how much there is. Within this five-month period my assumption is that if the money is in there for the five-month period, you will then begin to fund projects that are coming online. So some clarification around that would be very, very much appreciated.

I don't see the minister of agriculture here, but agriculture . . . [interjections] Oh, my apologies. I forgot about that. No, seriously, I did. I'm not used to being on this side, Madam Chair.

Mr. Bilous: Get used to it.

Mr. Bhullar: You know what? To the hon. minister: there's something about humility, and we always had it, my friend. We always had it. We always had it.

But the minister of agriculture – so I'd put this forward to the government. There seems to be an additional $103 million here based on, again, that take the budget, divide it by 12, and then multiply it by five model. That should be $232 million. It's actually $336 million, so I'd love to know where that extra $103 million is going.

Similarly, in the department of culture we have an extra $54 million. Based on, again, the government's model, they should be at $121 million approximately. They're actually at $174 million, so where's that extra $54 million?

I'll put that forth for the ministers of agriculture and culture. No takers, Madam Chair.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Those are a number of detailed questions, hon. member, all good and valid questions, which deserve a response. However, at least speaking for myself, I'm going to have to have my department provide those numbers, and I will provide those to all members of the House in written form as soon as possible.

Have you completed your questions?

The Chair: Hon. member, there's only about 30 seconds left of this 20-minute segment. You can go back on the list later.

Mr. Bhullar: Oh, 30 seconds. What I've learned from members opposite, Madam Chair, is don't give any one of your seconds up, so I will take my last 25 seconds.

I would ask the Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation and Government House Leader if we can actually expect these answers from today and from last week to be tabled in this House before we vote on this bill in third reading?

Mr. Mason: Madam Chair, I will endeavour for my part to get these numbers for you as soon as possible and provide them as well to all members of the House. So thank you for those questions. They're all good questions.

At this point, Madam Chair, I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 1

An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thanks, Madam Chair. First, before I get started, I just want to note that earlier today my friend the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort noted – and I think he did try to correct it, but I want to clarify that Wildrose is in fact in support of Bill 1 and that this caucus does support Bill 1. The Wildrose Party supports Bill 1, and I support Bill 1.

Wildrose has long campaigned on banning corporate and union donations. We think our democracy works better when only individuals are allowed to make contributions to political parties. We think that doing it any other way either results in a key entrenched interest having too much power over political direction or, worse, it creates a pay-to-play environment such as has happened in Alberta for the last few years.

We are quite pleased to see that big labour and big business both will be curtailed in their ability to wield undue influence. This will also prevent any government from using pay-to-play to shake down industry, and that's a good thing. Wildrose has proposed amendments to ban these political donations before, but the PC majorities of the past have defeated all of them. It is a policy that we're glad the NDP has adopted from the Wildrose.

However, there are still massive loopholes, Madam Chair, that mean that with this bill we are not in fact ending corporate and union donations. Loopholes here allow unions to cover political loans, in some cases without reporting them. We will try to fix that with an amendment, but the governing party obviously has a use for union or corporations backstopping loans. There is this huge loophole about in-kind donations, particularly the in-kind donations of service. Notwithstanding what the minister said in the House last week, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act does not define services in any relevant way. The provision of services is not discussed in the definition of contributions.

It's very clear that the provision of services by a union or corporation, either free or at a discount, remains a loophole in this legislation. This means that corporations or union bosses could donate their employees' time, either in providing services or doing union- or business-paid volunteer work. This happens already, it's legal already, and this law won't change it. We tried to close this loophole, but the government is keen to keep that loophole in law. We have to wonder why. We are hopeful that in the upcoming all-party committee we will see some clarity on what this government had in mind by leaving these loopholes available.

We also tried to fix the coming-into-force provision of this law, which will be largely unenforceable. Notwithstanding, again, what the minister said last week in the House or to the media, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act does not require any party, constituency association, or candidate to give the date of when they received their contribution. The law only requires them to disclose which period the donation arrived in. We should have fixed that. Elections Alberta wanted us to fix that, and I don't know why the government chose not to carefully read the law. I would point out that by not fixing that, this could result in a very embarrassing situation where this government's first bill might end up in the courts or could conceivably be overturned in part or, at very least, held up.

With that aside, let's see if I can't fix one of these other loopholes tonight. One of the key problems in this bill is that it has two strange provisions which still allow indirect influence of unions and corporations on matters that the bill takes away their direct influence on. Specifically, this bill will continue to allow the practice of unions and corporations guaranteeing loans to political parties, constituency associations, and candidates. They can do this by way of signing a guarantee, cosigning, or providing collateral security for any loan, monetary obligation, or indebtedness.

We have serious concerns about unions and corporations being able to put cash on deposit so that a political party can take out a loan to run its activities. If corporations and unions can't contribute, Madam Chair, why should they be allowed to finance a political party, constituency association, or candidate? What conceivable public policy reason is there for this? If you can't give money, why should you be able to curry favour by putting a million dollars on deposit?

I also note that the law has no limit as to the size of the guarantee, so a union or corporation could advance a political party millions or enough money to even run a complete campaign. But, Madam Chair, it gets worse. This current law would allow a union or a corporation to make payments on a loan, and as long as those payments were reimbursed before the end of the year, there would be no need to disclose the payments.

So we have a system whereby a union or corporation could put a million dollars on deposit with a bank on January 1 and guarantee a political party a $1 million loan. This political party could use that million dollars for campaigning in, say, an election, and if the party got in a cash crunch, the company or union could pay the interest payments on that million dollar loan. So long as the company or union was reimbursed by the end of the year, nothing would have been done wrong, no one would have ever known, and there would be no need to report this. This is completely unacceptable. If unions and corporations shouldn't give, they shouldn't guarantee. They certainly shouldn't guarantee without any limits.

To fix this, we prepared an amendment to prevent guarantees by anyone other than individuals and to prevent the paying of loans by anyone other than individuals unless there has been a default. I have the appropriate number of copies of the amendment, Madam Chair, and I will wait for the pages to circulate them before I read the text of the amendment, which will basically delete corporations and unions from the loan section.

The Chair: We'll just pause for a moment while we pass out copies of the amendment. This will be known as amendment A3.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Wildrose thinks this amendment really improves this bill. Wildrose certainly can't see a need for unions or corporations to backstop loans. We have never asked any company or union to backstop any loans or lines of credit. We've never even considered it. We hope the NDP will give Albertans some clarity on why they feel these organizations should still have this ability. Are unions financing the NDP? How much do unions have on deposit to guarantee the government party's loans and lines of credit? We should not pass this law until the government comes clean on this because putting loopholes in to protect government interests isn't what Bill 1 should be about.

Wildrose certainly doesn't see why corporations or unions would be allowed to make loan payments at all, even if they are later reimbursed, as this is still monetary assistance. If we truly want to get rid of corporate and union influence in the political process, Madam Chair, it does not make sense to have this provision continue in this bill. Allowing guarantees and loan payments still gives the impression that a political party could be seen as under the influence of special interests and not working for the direct interest of Albertans. We don't understand why the NDP has left these so-called transitional provisions in place that allow companies and unions to pay off loans for the rest of the year, but in the spirit of compromise and out of a desire to really see this amendment pass, we have left them in place, apart from insisting that payments are only made in the case of default.

We are also reassured by the Chief Electoral Officer that a party that failed to repay any of these payments would be on the hook for them as illegal donations. But we strongly believe that parties should be making their own payments, and we'd like some reassurance from the other party leaders in the House that they are not allowing any company or union to make any payments they might have. I can assure everyone here that we have no such payments. If there is a default on an existing loan, Madam Chair, that's another issue, and we have ensured that those who are on the hook for parties that might be unexpectedly broke are not breaking the law. That provision of this law is effective.

The continued existence of these types of provisions creates the impression that any party could be seen as under the influence of special interests and not working for the direct interest of Albertans. We just do not think that unions and corporations should backstop loans. Albertans will not approve of this. It specifically goes against the spirit of this bill and the arguments that the Premier and the Lieutenant Governor mentioned in the throne speech.

We hope the NDP will give Albertans some clarity on why they feel these organizations should still have this ability. Unless that argument is completely convincing, then every reasonable member of this Chamber should vote for this very reasonable amendment. Voting for this amendment is consistent with the will of Albertans and consistent with the spirit of this bill, Madam Chair, as well as consistent with every argument that the Premier and key government spokespeople have raised in defence of this bill.

If we are getting union and corporate money out of Alberta politics, let us really do it, completely, with no strange loopholes. I ask that all members vote for this very reasonable amendment and take away the ability of unions and corporations to finance political parties through loan guarantees.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise today and speak in support of this amendment. I support Bill 1, and Wildrose supports Bill 1. Wildrose believes in putting democracy back in the hands of Albertans. We believe in banning corporate and union donations, and this is an important step to do that.

Pay-to-play politics is the way that politics has been done in Alberta for quite a while now, and we want to put the power of democracy back in the hands of Albertans regardless of financial backing or ability to donate. We would like to suggest that there be no roundabout ways for unions and corporations to influence the political process by backstopping loans.

You've done a great job by adopting this policy of eliminating corporate and union donations, but you left loopholes. You've done only 50 per cent of the job: half. Half. Can you imagine me as a paramedic providing half my skills and education when I'm treating a patient? What if I were to assess that patient, put on the heart monitor, give him some oxygen, start an intravenous line, you know, stabilize this patient, put him on my stretcher, get him in that ambulance and, once those doors are closed, kick back, relax because – you know what? – I've done half? I put on a good show for those folks out there. I'm not going to ply the pharmaceuticals. I'm not going to give electricity to reset that patient's heart. I'm just going to do half – 50 per cent – like this NDP government.

As a fire officer I was tasked with assessing and dictating a strategy to fight a house fire. I made sure that we positioned our pump in a strategic manner. I made sure that we had all the hose lines set up. We would ladder that building. We got all the boys there set out to attack this fire. We cordoned off the area. We set up rehab and medical stations. But we're not going to turn that hydrant on because we put a good show on for the public. It looks like we're doing something, 50 per cent, half.

Our team has identified several issues that need to be alleviated for this bill to truly protect the democratic process from the undue influence of unions and corporations. We only need to look at Ontario or even the United States to find issues. If you probe deep enough, you might even find that these loopholes are being used at the national level by our national parties. Can you imagine if there was a political party that leveraged things like property?

Mrs. Pitt: Shame.

Mr. Yao: Shame. Will this government recognize that these loopholes have been blatantly left in, or are they trying to match the previous government for suspicious decisions? If this government caucus were to approve such a bill with such blatant loopholes, they will demonstrate, every one of them, that they are not much different than previous governments.

Thank you.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to propose a subamendment, which we'll now have distributed.

The Chair: We'll take a moment while that's distributed, and this will be known as subamendment SA1.

Go ahead, hon. Minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to thank the hon. member for his amendment though it is unfortunate that he remains confused about the requirement that donation receipts state the date on which they were received. I am nonetheless glad to see that the members opposite are working hard to make this legislation and electoral financing better.

In response to his suggestions for an improvement I'm moving a subamendment to his amendment. This subamendment accepts clause (d) of part A, which limits interim loan payments by corporations and unions during the transition period to situations where the borrower is in default on their loan at the time of the payment. The transition provisions allow corporations and unions to make payments on loans that were taken out before June 15, 2015, without triggering penalties for an illegal contribution on the corporation or union. This is because otherwise the corporation or union may be punished for doing what they are legally required to do; i.e., pay back the guarantee. Limiting those loan payments made on or after June 15 to only those loans that are in default accomplishes that intent, and I thank the member for that.

The subamendment would strike out the other clauses in part A and all of part B for a couple of reasons. The legislation currently contains provisions for interim financing. We believe that corporations and unions should still be able to provide this safety net so long as the loan is paid back by the deadline. Second, there's no need to make those amendments to parts of Bill 1 that deal with guarantees. If a guarantee is needed, the political party, constituency association, candidate, or leadership contestant is already in default and needs the assistance; that is, the transitional ability to make good on a guarantee made prior to June 15, 2015, without triggering an illegal contribution does not need to be limited any further.

Madam Chair, I ask all members to support this subamendment, and again thank you to the hon. member for his hard work on this. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. We are trying to be helpful. Wildrose campaigned on ending corporate and union donations, and this bill is important to us as well as to the government. We strongly believe that democracy belongs in the hands of all Albertans, not corporations and unions and, more to the point, their chequebooks. Albertans should feel, when their elected members are in Edmonton, that they will represent their views. We're encouraged to see the NDP propose an end to corporate and union donations. It's a great grassroots policy that the Wildrose believes in.

But for some reason this government did not go all the way to end union and corporate influence. There are massive loopholes that mean that with this bill we are not in fact ending corporate and union donations. Loopholes here allow unions to cover loans, in some cases without reporting them, and the in-kind donations loopholes mean that corporations or union bosses could donate their employees' time either by providing services, even at a phone bank or door-knocking, Madam Chair. We're hopeful that in the upcoming all-party subcommittee we'll see some clarity on what the government had in mind by leaving these loopholes available.

I still can't find a reason why this government would want unions to be able to backstop loans or lines of credit. The government has not provided any explanation as to why they would need such a loophole. What sort of circumstances is the NDP anticipating that they would want this option available to them?

Then there is a transitional provision that allows unions to pay off loans. Why would political parties not be paying off their own loans, Madam Chair?

There is also the issue of timing, which I really feel the government got wrong in making it retroactive to the middle of the election period.

Notwithstanding the arguments that the minister has made in the House and in the media, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, which I encourage her to read, does not require any party, constituency association, or candidate to give the date when they received a contribution. The law only requires them to disclose in which period the donation arrived. Again, we should have fixed that. Elections Alberta wanted us to fix that, and I have no idea why the government chose to avoid the fact of the current law.

If the NDP really wanted to return democracy to the hands of Albertans, these loopholes would be eliminated. We are grateful for the attempt they made, but we are interested in more than appearances, Madam Chair. It's not just the appearances of influence that we're concerned about; it's the likelihood that unions and corporations will continue to play an important role in our politics.

We have tried to help in Committee of the Whole by offering suggestions, pointing out problems, and offering reasonable solutions. As is becoming increasingly clear, this government isn't as interested in listening or working together as they like to claim. In fact, they seem to be a lot like the old government. Well, they have at least acknowledged that this provision allowing unions and corporations to make loan payments sticks out like a sore thumb, and I am at least encouraged that they will work with us when we point out the most obvious problems with legislation. It's an improvement over the previous.

We will support this subamendment because it's better than the status quo, but we will be watching and waiting to make the necessary changes that my amendment would have brought in, either in four months, through the all-party committee, or in four years, when the Wildrose party forms the new government.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you for the opportunity to address the House once more and the Committee of the Whole again on Bill 1. We've worked hard to make this important piece of legislation as strong as it can possibly be, but there hasn't been that much co-operation from the government as well as I could tell.

This subamendment is at least a little better or a little bit of a compromise from the government, and I'll hope that this is a sign of things to come, as we saw with last time's amendments. I hope the government doesn't pat itself on the back too hard for this subamendment, though, because it's pretty odd that they would have gone out of their way in the original version to ensure that corporations and unions can make loan payments for parties given that the bill is supposed to end their influence over parties. To be as clear as possible, Madam Chair, we're supporting the bill in principle. In the spirit of being helpful, we just wish we could have done more to ensure that the first bill we will pass this session serves the interests of Albertans in as robust a manner as possible.

Well, Madam Chair, could more be done? More co-operation would have been needed. Frankly, too many loopholes are remaining. The point here is to ban corporate and union donations during the contribution period. I hope we're all clear on that. We're not here trying to ban just certain types of contributions; we're banning all corporate and union contributions. At least, that's what the principle of this bill ought to have been aiming for. Albertans have made it abundantly clear that this is what they expect as well, and we want to help the government meet Albertans' expectations.

On the face of it the bill is trying to ban union and corporate donations, and the bill certainly takes it a lot of the way there, Madam Chair. Oh, maybe 50 per cent. We're getting close, but as it stands, it's not enough. Sure, we're banning direct donations, but we still leave the door wide open for indirect donations in the form of staffing hours and services rendered. If anything, the frequency of these kinds of donations will only increase once we've succeeded in banning direct donations. It will be the only means of influence open to corporations and union entities at this point.

Madam Chair, I fail to see the reason why the government would want to pass a bill with such gaping loopholes that would undermine the bill's entire purpose. It doesn't make any sense to me. To pass a bill with such shortcomings does not reflect well on the government that is sponsoring it. As I've said, though, we support the broad intent of the bill, and I'll be supporting it even though I wish there was more to be done to strengthen it. Wildrose will continue to press the government to correct these loopholes allowing corporations, unions, and third parties to influence our elections.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. I want to thank the opposition, particularly the Wildrose opposition, for their contributions to the debate on this bill and to re-emphasize what I said earlier, and that is that this bill was brought forward in a very short time frame. We need it to come forward, as hon. members know, in order to get approval to continue to write the cheques to keep the government operating because the previous government's authority to spend runs out at the end of this month. We also wanted to bring forward this bill, and of course the time frames were somewhat compressed. The Wildrose opposition is not acknowledging the fact that these are not complete, final products. There's going to be a budget in October, a full budget, and there will be a committee that will review all of these matters and may make recommendations for future changes.

So it's fine to say that the bill is not complete. That's your opinion, and that's a legitimate opinion. But to say that the government is deliberately leaving loopholes is most unfair, and I think the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre was very unfair to all members on this side of the House when he said that if we voted for this as it is, it was proof that we were no different than the previous government. That's not a fair statement. We have an intention of looking in some depth at democratic reform issues and openness and transparency in our governance in this province, and we look forward to working in partnership with all opposition parties, including the Wildrose, on that.

So I think, hon. members, with respect, that we intend to do more than this. That does not mean that we'll adopt everything that you've proposed. [interjection] It does not mean that. It does mean, however, that we will have time in order to collaborate, which we have not to this point had.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the subamendment?

If not, I will call the question on subamendment A1, as proposed by the hon. Minister of Justice.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on subamendment SA1 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:01 p.m.]

[Motion on amendment SA1 carried unanimously]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Madam Chair, pursuant to Standing Order 32(3) I would ask that the division bells for the remainder of this session be shortened to one minute and ask for unanimous consent therefore.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Chair: All right. Moving back to the amendment A3. Are there any further speakers to this amendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: The question has been called.

[Motion on amendment A3 carried]

The Chair: We are now back on the bill, Bill 1. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to present an amendment to Bill 1. I'll wait to hand that out.

The Chair: We'll pause for a moment, hon. member, while you pass out the copies. It will be known as amendment A4.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I present this amendment to reduce the individual donation amount from $15,000 to $5,000. Bill 1 is a good start to the 29th Legislature sitting, but this amendment A4 offers us an opportunity to make what is, I think, a good bill a great bill. If we plan to ban corporation and union donations with the intent of getting money out of politics, let's do it for real. Fifteen thousand dollars is still a very significant sum of money and grants certain individuals – I will say that a very small percentage of Albertans have the wherewithal to donate $15,000 to political parties and, in doing so, potentially can exert influence over government.

This reduces the risk as well, Madam Chair, of corporations or unions potentially granting large sums of money in the form of bonuses or payment combinations that could come from individuals while the money, in fact, comes from another source. Now, while this is, of course, against the current statute, there is still significant risk that happens when the donation threshold is at $15,000 for individuals. It is still a significantly higher number than on the federal side and a significantly higher number than what we see in many other provinces.

As has been said before in this Chamber, democracy belongs to Albertans, real, actual Albertans, not to unions or corporations, and if we want to reduce the impact and influence that money can buy in politics, this is an opportunity to show Albertans that we are willing in this Chamber to lead.

Again, $5,000 is still a substantial amount of money, and while I recognize and acknowledge that there will be a committee of the Legislature struck to discuss this, I believe that we are not going to unduly impact the operation of political parties currently if we reduce it to $5,000. We have the opportunity here to take out the influence of money while still allowing political parties to function. Perhaps we'll look through the committee at lowering the limits even further. We'll have an opportunity through that to have a more comprehensive discussion about campaign finance reform, but for now this shows Albertans that we are willing to lead and willing to remove the influence of money not just from corporate donors and from unions but from wealthy individuals and reduce the impact and influence that has on our political system. This is a step to show Albertans that we do in fact care about campaign finance reform without providing too great a shock to the system for political parties.

This amendment, I submit, is a big step towards ensuring that democracy is, in fact, in the hands of Albertans, not corporations, unions, or wealthy individuals. Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you very much, hon. member, for the amendment. In terms of saying that this legislation doesn't go far enough, I will tell you that the government absolutely agrees. This legislation was brought forward initially as a first step, as a first bill, to ban union and corporate donations. We absolutely agree that more amendments need to be made to this act, that further study is necessary, and there is a committee that will be doing that work.

At this moment I can tell you that the numbers for donations in different jurisdictions are wildly different. So we think that the best course of action in this case is to send this to the committee and to have the committee review it and to have them think about where the donation limits should be and make a proposal, and then we will move forward. But in terms of the spirit of the amendment we absolutely support you, so thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Madam Chair. I rise to speak against this amendment. First, I would be surprised if my hon. colleagues on the government side of the House were to support this amendment. The reason I say that is that the Wildrose has brought forward three very reasonable amendments to strengthen Bill 1, and all of the Wildrose amendments were in keeping with the spirit of the bill as articulated by the Premier and her ministers. The Premier and every senior government official has made clear that the purpose of this bill is to remove union and corporate donations from political parties, to limit their influence on Alberta politics, and to put political power and influence back in the hands of everyday Albertans, where it belongs.

I completely support the spirit of Bill 1, and Wildrose completely supports the spirit of Bill 1. Each of the very reasonable amendments put forth has been voted down by the government despite being one hundred per cent focused on strengthening the spirit of the bill and removing obvious loopholes that went against the spirit of the bill, and we are all left to wonder why. However, in the case of the amendment now put forward for discussion by the hon. member, it appears that the amendment has very little to do with the actual intent of Bill 1, which is limiting corporation and union influence on our political process. This amendment that has been proposed by the hon. member has to do with the amounts that an individual may donate to a political party and nothing to do with corporate or union donations.

So with due respect to my friend the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, this amendment, while it is certainly something that is reasonable to have a discussion on and something that we support in spirit, is not to the intent of Bill 1, which, of course, is to deal with banning corporate and union donations. An amendment to deal with the limits on an individual donation does not fit with the overall content of this bill. In our view, to adopt such an amendment without broad consultation of stakeholders and in view of the larger picture would be premature and irresponsible.

I'm actually a bit surprised the hon. member is even bringing forward this amendment because even in the context of our amendments, which were directly related to corporate and union donations, the member opposed them, saying that he believes the bill is not designed to do everything. The hon. member's argument at that time, Madam Chair, was that there was an opportunity to have a broader conversation about this in the all-party committee. In this case I would submit the same argument to the Member for Calgary-Elbow, that while I appreciate the issue he is trying to raise, it would be, in our view, more appropriate at the upcoming all-party committee and not as an add-on to this bill.

An amendment such as he proposes requires broader consultation with all stakeholders to ensure that we are getting it right, so I will not be voting in support.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Madam Chair. I rise perplexed because I, too, want to see these same kind of initiatives move quickly. Obviously, the $15,000 limit for donations in a nonelection year and the $30,000 donation limit in an election year are way too high if we care about getting money out of democracy. I've said in many quarters that we have the best democracy money can buy, and I think that's part of why we're doing what we're doing. I would have said that we should harmonize what we're doing here in terms of contribution limits with the federal government, which is a thousand dollars a year from individuals and no corporate or union donations.

I share some of the concerns of my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre that this may not be the correct vehicle to make those changes, but I think all of us are anxious to see movement. If it's possible, it would be nice to see some limits. We all know that we have to reduce the limits. There's no reason why we shouldn't move forward on harmonizing the provincial donation limits with the federal limits, and then everybody knows the rules all across the country. It's so much simpler, so much more in the interests of democracy.

I guess the question is: what's the appropriate venue? Given that this bill is truly about eliminating corporate and union donations, it's a difficult fit. But I do hope and I do encourage this government to move quickly on the donation limits. Otherwise we're faced with the same problem as we had with individuals like Daryl Katz in the last few years, who was able to make big donations through his family members and his board members.

I'll leave it there. I support the spirit, but I can't support the amendment.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment?

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: All right. We're back on Bill 1. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments to Bill 1?

Are you ready for the question?

Mr. Mason: Yes. Call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 1 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Mr. Mason: Madam Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

The Chair: The committee shall now rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Feehan: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 1. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 3. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 1

An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta

Ms Ganley: Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise and move third reading of Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta.

This bill will amend the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act to ban corporations and unions from making political donations in our province. For too long a small segment of the population had undue influence on Alberta's political parties, but with this bill, Madam Speaker, Albertans are given back their rights as citizens in a democratic society, something very important to the Premier and to this government.

An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta will change the election financing rules so that only residents of Alberta, not corporations and unions, will be allowed to make political contributions to political parties, constituency associations, candidates for election and senatorial election, and leadership contestants. If enacted, it will become effective as of June 15, 2015, the day the bill was first introduced in this House. It will level the playing field and inject much-needed equity and fairness into election financing in Alberta. Politicians will need to pay attention to Albertans and their issues instead of focusing on the priorities of those with the deepest pockets.

We have consulted with the Chief Electoral Officer about our proposed amendments. We've also had a lot of positive feedback on these changes, both from Albertans and from a number of the hon. members in this House. We've listened to that feedback. Madam Speaker, this government is willing and eager to work with other political parties represented in this House. We're open to ideas for improvement, and we're willing to accept them when they make sense.

This evening we were pleased to support a portion of the amendment tabled by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, which will adjust an aspect of the bill regarding loans. This change to Bill 1 further limits when corporations and unions can make direct payment on loans during the transition period, made on or after June 15, 2015. Now loan payments on loans taken out prior to June 15, 2015, can only be made without triggering the illegal-contribution rules in cases where the borrower is in default on their loan at the time the payments are made, on or after June 15. This change to Bill 1 places stricter guidelines on when corporations and unions can make direct payments on loans during the transition period but still ensures that unions and corporations are not penalized for complying with pre-existing obligations.

Madam Speaker, this bill is just our first step towards fulfilling our campaign promise to improve democracy, accountability, and transparency. It does not include every possible change that could have been made, but it doesn't mean we're not going to make more improvements in the future. We've proposed a joint special legislative committee to review Alberta's elections and make recommendations that will cover all aspects of the electoral process. That review will take time, especially if we want a vigorous and thorough review, which is why we have proposed these initial changes to electoral financing.

Madam Speaker, I'm proud that this is the first piece of legislation our government has brought before you, legislation that will renew democracy and help to ensure that individuals can be confident that their concerns are being represented in this Legislative Assembly. I ask all the members for their support of me and this bill in moving to third reading.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Throughout the debate on Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta, Wildrose has been abundantly clear. We are in support of eliminating corporate and union donations and getting big money and big labour out of politics. We believe that the power of democracy is best served when it's in the hands of the individual voters. Wildrose has stated for a very long time that there needs to be an end to big business and organized labour bearing undue influence on politics and having an unfair advantage when it comes to funding elections.

Finally we have a government that has taken action. Well, sort of, Madam Speaker. Getting rid of corporate and union donations is long overdue. It's a great first step, but just like the government before them, it is only a half a step forward. Just like the government before them, they take a Wildrose policy straight from our campaign platform, write it into law, and then only take it halfway. I don't know about the hon. members across the way, but I didn't come here to do half a job.

This government has decided that big unions should still be able to fund campaigns in backhanded ways. Wildrose has fought against this through every step of the debate, and we're not going to stop now. When we say that we want to get big money out of politics, we mean it. We don't say it and then use it as a half measure to make it look like we're doing something.

This government has gone halfway, and we support them for that. I'm glad to vote in favour of this, and I do so in recognition that this is a great first step. If it takes four years to finish the job, then I'm proud to do so when Wildrose forms the next government. I just wish it wouldn't take that long.

My colleague and my friend from Bonnyville-Cold Lake brought forward some smart and logical amendments, Madam Speaker. Unfortunately, the government just smacked them down without due thought or process. As my friend from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills pointed out ever so elegantly last week, it seems like orange really is the new blue. This isn't the kind of change that Albertans voted for. Albertans voted for a new way of doing things and an end to politics as usual. Albertans thought that both the Wildrose and the NDP were in favour of eliminating corporate and union donations. I don't think they thought that the NDP's commitment was just an empty campaign promise. When Wildrose makes a commitment, we mean it. Maybe it's just the new politician in me, but I hoped that the new government was going to stand by their commitments, too.

I think that the debate surrounding Bill 1, Madam Speaker, is going to be an indicator of things to come. I think it means that we now have a government that is more concerned with window dressing than with actually seeing results. I want that side of the House to prove me wrong. I hope they will.

With that, Madam Speaker, I will offer this in closing. Let us measure twice and cut once. Often throughout debate the minister said that this was only the start and that more was coming related directly to corporate and union donations. What I don't understand is why she doesn't want to get the entire job done at once. In the future, when we debate legislation and the government brings it forward, I hope we can get it right the first time. If not, that's all right. Wildrose will finish the job in four years.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to speak to Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta, in third reading. This is, of course, a fundamentally important piece of legislation, and I'm so proud that our party has been able to lead the introduction of this absolutely foundational improvement to our system of democracy in this province.

You know, I just want to respond to a couple of points that have been made. I can't go as far back as, well, one member, anyway, in terms of the history lesson, but I can say that I was elected in 2008, and in 2008 one of the fundamental campaign platform promises that we made, our party, the NDP, was to ban corporate and union donations. Now, you know, I don't want to be a stickler about history, but I'm pretty sure the Wildrose didn't exist then. Unless you've entered a whole new space-time continuum, I think you really, truly have to rethink this notion that the idea was yours and we took it because, in fact, that is not the case. It's been a long-standing position of our party for, in fact, years and years and decades that we get corporate and union donations out of our electoral system.

The reason for that, Madam Speaker, is because we know that when you give the power to donate and to support whatever political party people believe in and believe represents their issues, when you give that power to individual human beings, who happen to often be individual voters, then, in fact, you make your democratic system far more accountable and far more representative. So we're very, very pleased to be leading this change here in Alberta.

Now, as for a number of the points that I've already heard made tonight about how this could be improved, be very clear, Madam Speaker, that it is absolutely our intention to move forward on a whole range of issues that have already been raised tonight and previous nights in debate.

One of the things that we thought was really important, though, because this is a piece of legislation that impacts not just folks on this side of the House but also folks on that side of the House and even folks in that corner of the House, because it impacts all of us, was that we should refer the matter to a special all-party standing committee so that everybody could have impact. So rather than, you know, taking potshots about window dressing and all that kind of thing, we actually thought that it would be worthwhile for us to be able to, as a group on an all-party basis, take the time to consider all the issues that arise when you start opening up the Election Act and the election financing act.

You know, we've had a number of issues already raised. We've had issues about: well, what's a donation; what's an in-kind donation; how much should be donated; how much should people be allowed to spend; when should they be allowed to spend; when should the government be allowed to advertise vis-à-vis and in relation to an election; should an election be an election season, or should it be an election day in terms of whether it's fixed? There are so many great ideas that I think we can all bring to the table that will ultimately improve our democratic system not just for folks over here but for folks over there and, most importantly, for folks outside of this building.

So that's why I'm so proud of the fact that we're going to make one of our first acts be an opportunity for that very open conversation in a very open and transparent platform, and I'm sorry that that process disappoints the member from the Official Opposition, but I actually think that it's something that's good for all Albertans. I'm very proud of the process that we put in place. I'm very proud of Bill 1. I'm very proud of the foundational change that it already makes to our democratic system here in Alberta, and as I've said, I'm very proud that that change comes as a result of the work of this NDP government.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers with respect to the bill?

Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

Bill 3
Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015 (No. 2)

The Chair: Hon. members, we have under consideration in committee Bill 3, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015 (No. 2). Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Mrs. Pitt: Eighteen billion dollars is a lot of money. Most of us were sent here with the hopes that things in Edmonton would change, that the old way of doing business in politics would be over. Voters hoped for transparency, a government and opposition that would be accountable to the people. I for one will never forget that. I never thought I would long for the days where budgets were more transparent, longing for a fulsome debate over specifics of a budget, yet here we are. Even a complete document would be nice. Ministers providing three lines on how they intend to spend billions of dollars. “Just wait. Hold on. It’s coming.” I just can’t imagine that that is transparent. That is not accountable. That’s reckless. That is someone else’s money. People work really hard and send money to Edmonton, happy to provide programs and services that help our fellow Albertans out. I know that I wish I had details on the budget. I bet most Albertans do, too.

The thing with this budget is that it doesn’t have much of a mandate. In fact, the past two Premiers that attempted to pass this budget are now former Premiers, looking for a mandate, too. I’m not sure I’d want to be counted amongst those distinguished people.

I’m as keen as the next Albertan to see the financials. I want this taken seriously. It is billions of dollars. I’m all for giving this government enough time to get up to speed on their portfolios. I’m sure it’s a big job. It’s been months. It snowed when this government won, and it’s looking like it will be snowing again by the time this government gets their numbers together. And I think, more importantly to this government, the federal election will be long over by the time we see a budget.

Albertans voted out the last party that played politics with our money. We want to help. I’d be more than happy to help with whatever over there to see where the money is going. What can I do to help? It’s a serious question.

We want this budget brought forward in September. That seems like more than enough time. Does this government even know when the budget will be brought forward? December? October? January? Does it matter as long as the federal NDP are done trolling for votes around here? At the very least fully debating this budget would be helpful. Give the ministers a chance to speak to where the money is going, where the spending is going. Assure Albertans that this government is being open and honest about where their tax dollars are going.

We’re very disappointed that we have no idea about what the true state of Alberta’s finances are a full week after this budget was introduced. Albertans deserve to know how much we are taking in to pay for nearly six months of government spending. They deserve to know how much we are borrowing, how much interest is siphoning funds away from core government services, and they deserve to know how the government plans to fund all their new spending.

10:00

In the election the Wildrose was clear about our financial plan. It was realistic, attainable, and modest. It put forward a reasonable solution to reduce the size of the most expensive government in Canada: make it more about the people served, not the dollars spent. The government’s plan, instead, is to make government grow faster than they can tax Albertans, which just isn’t fair or realistic. We will keep fighting to clear the air on this minibudget and stand up for Albertans demanding better, more transparent government.

The Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Chair. As many of the previous speakers on this bill have mentioned in the past, it’s a shame that we’re debating such a large amount of money, $18 billion – I mean, wow – in such a rushed, short period of time. Last week the government announced some details about the spending in four areas. These areas include education, health, human services, and advanced education. For education there is more funding to meet student growth and to restore reductions planned by the previous government to areas such as English language learners and funding for First Nations, Métis, and Inuit students. Part of the intended money was for Human Services for investments in child intervention, FCSS increases, and increased shelter beds for women. Finally, the government announced funding for postsecondary institutions. This funding will go to colleges and universities across Alberta for an immediate tuition freeze. The other commitment for postsecondary institutions is funding to reverse market modifiers that were approved by the last government in December.

In December the PC government approved 25 market modifiers to allow tuition increases in mostly specialized and professional programs across the province, programs like law and business. It’s my understanding that this bill will add an additional $40 million this year for postsecondary institutions, but the details of the plan for Alberta’s systems are not yet clear. Wildrose policy when it comes to tuition is to limit tuition increases to the rate of inflation every year. We certainly agree that a postsecondary education should be accessible to all students, and this means making sure that tuition increases don’t rise at a rate that makes a good education out of reach.

At the same time, we also need to be sure that our whole system is sustainable. The NDP promise to reverse all the market modifier increases is a bit of a problem because it was a decision that didn’t take each different circumstance into account. Our postsecondary institutions need a plan for sustainability more than they need a quick injection of cash.

Athabasca University is facing a serious issue when it comes to sustainability. It is a university that has 40,000 online and distance education students, many in Alberta but also a large number in Canada and other countries, and is struggling for sustainability. I’d like to know the government’s plan for supporting our whole postsecondary system. Bill 3 adds spending before there has been a chance to discuss details of the money. They are spending even faster than they can tax.

Postsecondary education in Alberta needs good planning. For years the ministry has struggled to streamline and find better ways to direct our public institutions. The Campus Alberta model has been presented as the answer, but confusion and overlap in direction has been an ongoing problem. It's frustrating to see the new government come in and request additional funding right away but be unable to provide concrete details for the spending or to answer the question: where are the additional funds coming from?

It's certainly reasonable to support the spending outlined in Bill 3 on the face of it, but we are being asked here to consider legislation quickly, with a shortage of detail about the spending and knowing that there is so much work to be done evaluating programs, services as they now stand.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd like to take this opportunity to perhaps ask some questions of the Premier. We live in a situation where our single largest cost pressure is that of wages. We have a number of contracts that are in place that require continuous increases, yet about 20 per cent of our contracts are up for renewal every single year. This is a question I posed last week to ministers as well. In this year about 20 per cent of the government's contracts with public-sector unions and other partners are going to be up for renewal. Within this five-month period that you are seeking interim supply for, what is your plan to deal with those specific negotiations? How do you plan on curbing these expenditures? Do you foresee yourselves going to the bargaining table seeking zero per cent increases in this approximately 20 per cent of contract renewals that are coming up during this year, or do you see yourselves going to the negotiating table by presenting raises of whatever magnitude, 2, 3, 4, 5 per cent? We'll start with that.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question, hon. member. I am in charge of that area within my ministry. The officials have briefed me several times, but they've not identified any ongoing bargaining that's taking place right now that I need to be aware of or address. I will be continuing to work with officials, obviously, within the ministry, but they've not identified that as a pressure point that I need to expend time on in these 30 days that I've been here. I will be, of course, here over the summer with regard to budget preparations, and issues that come up in that period of time will be addressed within the full budget, that we'll be bringing back in the fall.

Ms Hoffman: If I might supplement, Madam Chair, I just want to thank the hon. member for the question and to say that, of course, it would be irresponsible for us to talk about negotiation strategies prior to actually being part of the negotiation table. Having been on both sides of the table, we'll be happy to finalize and bring information forward once negotiations are complete, but I think it would not be wise for the employer to be talking about opening offers, potentially, in this venue.

Mr. Bhullar: I want to first of all start by saying that I really appreciate the frankness of the Finance minister last week and this week. Minister, I appreciate, you know, you breaking down the budget in very simple format. I don't think we agree that the numbers all add up, but you've provided us with a basis. Now, I would ask you, though, to go back to your officials because in any given year approximately 20 per cent of negotiations occur with a wide range of our partners. It doesn't mean that the government of Alberta is directly negotiating with these folks. It could be our postsecondary partners that have union negotiations that are ongoing.

To the Minister of Health. Minister, I absolutely agree that you shouldn't be talking about all of your strategy in public, but you need a broad policy objective, and you should have some accounting for that within this budget – a five-month period is a very large period – in which you establish some very clear frameworks. Now, whether you disagree with us is fine, but we did provide a very clear understanding to our public-sector partners and our unions. We said: "Listen. Contracts that are signed we obviously have to live up to, but on a go-forward basis Alberta does not have the money, Alberta does not have the resources to be able to give you 2, 3, 4, or 5 per cent. It's just not in the cards. It's just not feasible."

These are really important pieces. Now, I don't remember the date, but in your department, Minister of Health, you will have a very significant negotiation ongoing with the nurses. I think this is a wonderful opportunity for you to provide us with some insight on the strategy within this next five-month period on how you plan on moving forth in negotiations and preliminary discussions with nurses. If I remember correctly, negotiations were supposed to start later this year – again, I'm going by memory – because the contract is up next year if I remember correctly.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Bhullar: Somebody from the other side yelled no, so perhaps he was a member of that bargaining unit before. I would remind the member that he obviously will need to clear such issues with the Ethics Commissioner.

But there are 20 per cent of our union negotiations that take place in any given year. Madam Premier, if I remember correctly – I'm going by memory – there'll be a number of postsecondaries. If you would ask your ministers to go and take a look, your postsecondary partners will have negotiations ongoing with their unions today, right?

These are all really important pieces, and within a five-month period – you're asking us to vote on billions of dollars here – we'd like to know what the strategy is. We'd like to know how many dollars are going towards that. Or are we just walking around saying: "You know what? We'll deal with all other issues later. Let's make sure we sign some new contracts"? I think that's a very, very important, relevant discussion that we need to be having because the fact is that I don't foresee our revenue pie growing very much.

You know, RBC and the Conference Board of Canada are two of the latest people to step up and say: we think Alberta is going to be in a recession this year. In recessionary periods your resource revenues are already coming down. You have business taxes that are not going to produce the types of results they did before. We have a lot of expenditures, a lot more options, and I don't think we really have a lot of new spending restraints that are coming in.

To the Finance minister or the Premier or the Minister of Health: just as, you know, with some of the other unanswered questions that we have – we have a commitment from the Government House Leader that he'll provide us with written answers – can we get a commitment from you to take a look and see which negotiations, which contracts are coming up for renewal in this year? As I said, they can be your partners, our partners in the public sector. We just want a commitment that you'll tell us which ones are coming up and how you plan on dealing with those within this period of five months. Is that a commitment we can get from you?

Mr. Ceci: I would like to say that compensation for the public sector accounts for about $24 billion of the 48 or so billion dollars that the provincial budget is, so it's pretty substantial. Thank you for raising that.

In June 2014, about a year ago, the government of Alberta ratified an agreement with its unionized employees, as you will probably remember, resulting in a 2 per cent wage increase in 2014, 2.25 in 2015, and 2.5 in 2016. Now, that takes us all the way through '16. The terms of that agreement were also extended to management and opted-out employees. So we've got a big number of employees, both opted-out and unionized, covered through 2016.

The Chair: Hon. minister, I hesitate to interrupt, but under Standing Order 64(4) the chair of the Committee of the Whole shall forthwith "put a single question proposing the approval of every appropriation Bill then standing referred to the committee, which shall be decided without debate or amendment, and the committee shall [forthwith] rise and report."

Pursuant to Standing Order 64(4) I must now put the following question: does the committee approve the following bill, Bill 3, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015 (No. 2)?

[The voice vote indicated that Bill 3 was approved]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:15 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Motion carried]

The Chair: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 64(4) the committee shall now immediately rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Ms Woollard: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 3.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 2

An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue

Mr. Ceci: Madam Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 2, an Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue, 2015. On May 5 Albertans have voted for change, and this government is proud to announce that this bill delivers on key commitments we made during that election campaign. Our plan restores fairness and balance to Alberta's taxation system, it provides the government with stable and secure revenues to protect the quality of life we all enjoy, and it keeps us globally competitive as a great place to live and do business. Over the coming months our government will be putting together a full fiscal plan, a fiscal plan built upon the premise that everyone contributes fairly. Our shift to a progressive income tax system puts us back in line with the rest of the country, all provinces and territories, while still maintaining the most competitive tax system in the country and asks those who do better to help build a fairer and more equitable society for everyone.

As I mentioned at the first reading, the bill has two distinct components that accomplish these ends. The second part of the proposed bill is to introduce greater progressivity to the province's personal income tax system. This will include the creation of five new tax brackets with implementation beginning October 1, 2015.

Madam Speaker, it's important to note that 93 per cent of Alberta taxpayers will not be impacted by these PIT changes and only the top income earners pay a little bit more. It's important to note that even with these changes, Alberta's earning exemptions will still remain the highest in the country, meaning that Albertans will retain the most before they have to start paying provincial income tax. Albertans will continue to pay the lowest overall taxes when compared to other provinces.

Madam Speaker, this revenue is much-needed. It will ensure long-term, stable funding for health care, education, and other important programs and services.

Madam Speaker, I'm also proud that we are making a more affordable Alberta for everyone with the additional changes to the fee structures in the province. I announced last week that we'll be following through on our campaign commitments to eliminate the health care levy; to eliminate user fees on marriage, birth, and death certificates; and to eliminate vehicle and licensing fees. These fees and regressive levies, which would have made it harder for families to make ends meet, are not going to be followed through with. All Albertans will benefit by the rollbacks that would have gone in place and affected families on so many of these basic services.

The first part of the proposed bill is to increase the corporate income tax rate from 10 per cent to 12 per cent effective July 1, 2015. Through our plan small businesses will continue to enjoy a 3 per cent rate. But today we're asking corporations who have long benefited from our exceptionally low tax rates to contribute a little more to support a better quality of life for all Albertans.

Madam Speaker, even with this change businesses, including small businesses, will still enjoy an overall competitive advantage in Alberta when compared with other provinces because there's no sales tax, there's no payroll tax, there are no health premiums, and we have the lowest fuel tax in Canada.

Our government is committed to working with businesses to promote jobs and diversify our economy. Over the coming months we'll be preparing a budget, and I've already begun and my colleagues have already begun productive conversations with business leaders about how best to support growth in our economy. This government is committed to ensuring that Alberta will continue to be globally competitive and an attractive option for investors thanks to its infrastructure, cities, educated population, and investment opportunities.

Madam Speaker, this is much-needed revenue that will ensure long-term, stable funding for health care, education, and other important programs and services. My colleagues who are the ministers of Health, Education, Human Services, and Advanced Education have already spoken clearly about what this means for Albertans. I'm very proud of the excellent work that they have done in reinvesting in the core services that Albertans depend on.

Bill 2 gives all Albertans more opportunities, opportunities that were going to be squandered by the previous government. Bill 2 allows us to reverse cuts to health care and invest in stable, predictable funding for the vital public services that matter most to Albertans. It allows us to invest in schools and ensure that students get the education they deserve. It allows us to immediately freeze tuition at postsecondary institutions across Alberta so that all of our youth have an opportunity to succeed and so that we can build an educated population. Finally, Bill 2 allows us to strengthen services to the most vulnerable in our communities and help them lead more successful lives.

Madam Speaker, these changes will return Alberta to a stable tax system with a steady stream of revenue to support our vital public services while maintaining our province's overall tax advantage. Our province will continue to be a great place to do business. As the Premier has made clear, in the coming budget we will outline new initiatives to build and diversify our economy. In all, we are responsibly ensuring that all families have access to the important services they need like health, education, and social services. This is the fair thing to do, and it's what Albertans elected us to do. I'd encourage all members on both sides of the House to support this bill, and I look forward to discussing it with you further.

Madam Speaker, with this I'd like to adjourn debate for tonight. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister has moved to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, we've had a very productive day. I want to thank all members for their contribution. I think we've had excellent debate on a number of very important issues for the future of the province. I would suggest that we call it a day, so I'll move that we adjourn now until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:29 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us reflect. On this day, National Day of Remembrance for Victims of Terrorism, let each of us remember those who have been taken and those who have suffered as innocent victims of violent tragedy. We resolve to comfort the families, friends, and communities and people everywhere who have felt the pain and loss of loved ones through acts of violence and the disregard for the sanctity of that which is most precious, life.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you Calgary Mayor Naheed Nenshi and his chief of staff Chima Nkemdirim. Mr. Nenshi is no stranger to this building or to the members of this Chamber. He was first elected in 2010 and has spent the intervening years serving his constituents and representing the city on the provincial and the national stages. Municipal governments, including in Calgary, play an important role in providing services and supports that families rely on every day. Over the last month I've had excellent conversations with municipal officials about our shared priorities, from stable funding to infrastructure to flood protection and public transit. I look forward to continuing those discussions with Mayor Nenshi and Mr. Nkemdirim this afternoon and in the weeks and the months ahead. So I'd ask that all members join me in giving these guests our warm welcome.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, I see that they haven't arrived yet, but I am going to take the opportunity as I hope they will arrive momentarily. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some very special guests today in the House. I will ask them to stand when they arrive and allow us the privilege of introducing them. First and foremost is my incredibly supportive and accomplished wife, Cathy: my CVO, or chief volunteer officer, during the recent election; mother of my three beautiful children; long-time tourism professional and creator of Babes in Bali, women's-only tours to Bali, Indonesia. As a legacy of her passion for this incredible destination and its people, she has been volunteering and supporting less fortunate children through adoption of an orphanage on this island for over a decade. Cathy has also been a dedicated volunteer for the CBE, serving in chair and vice-chair roles and other key volunteer positions on parent councils at all of our children's schools over the past decade.

I am also honoured to have three young constituents and future leaders joining us today, all of whom became interested in and learned a bit about politics over the past few months and all of whom demonstrated their volunteer spirit in the process although I have to say that mention of another literature drop might just send them into convulsions. Firstly, my loving daughter Georgia Jayne, looking forward to being a grade 11 student at Bishop O'Byrne high school next year and to hopefully getting her driver's licence next week. Secondly, Ms Grace Hilton, our second daughter, area constituent, grade 11 student at STS, and an accomplished athlete. And last but not least, Mr. Liam Franke, also an area constituent, grade 11 student at Dr. E.P. Scarlett high school and long-time family friend. Maybe they can hear us outside the Chamber, but please join me in the traditional welcome accorded to all honoured guests.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the House four persons who have been active in the fourth national day of action drawing attention to refugee health care. Health care professionals from Victoria to St. John's rallied across the country to call on the federal government to reinstate refugee health services as part of the interim federal health program. The Edmonton rally took place at noon on June 15 at the University of Alberta. Please stand as I call your name.

Sarah Hanafi was one of the organizers for the national day of action for refugee health here in Edmonton. Sarah is a second-year medical student at the University of Alberta, with a long-standing interest in minority issues in health care.

Ruth Wolfe is on the academic staff of the University of Alberta School of Public Health where she serves as practice program director. She has worked on and studied issues associated with the inequities facing minorities for over 40 years and immigrant and refugee health for over 20 years. She's a strong advocate for community health workers as a vital bridge between minority communities and health and social service programs.

Dr. Jessie Breton is an emergency physician working at the Royal Alex hospital in Edmonton. She's a member of the Canadian Doctors for Refugee Care, a group of front-line health care workers from across Canada advocating for refugee health care. She's also the cofounder of the Alberta Refugee Care Coalition, which has strived to fill the gaps left by the cuts here in Alberta.

Bashir Mohamed is a refugee and was involved in organizing the rally on June 15. He's a student in political science at the University of Alberta. I would ask that the House offer the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly several members of the Edmonton cycling community and supporters of the Edmonton cycling community. I'd just ask that they each stand as they are introduced. Tyler Golly is the general supervisor for the city of Edmonton's transportation master plan. In his six years with the city he's worked tirelessly to develop and implement the bicycle transportation plan. My own constituency of Edmonton-Centre will benefit from this work with the construction of a protected bike lane on 102nd Avenue, scheduled to be completed next year, and I thank him for his efforts.

As a nephrologist and critical care physician at Royal Alexandra hospital, Dr. Darren Markland knows well the damage that a lack of regular physical exercise can do. Today I'd like to recognize him for his daily efforts to model a solution by travelling our city almost exclusively by bike.

In his work with the Edmonton Bicycle and Touring Club and Alberta Bicycle Association, Mr. Alan Schietzsch helped found the Tour of Alberta gran fondo, an event that has grown to host over 1,500 riders each year on roads across Alberta, and this is an event that he continues to support today as a volunteer.

As the president and executive director of the Edmonton Bicycle Commuters Society, Chris Chan has been one of our city's most vocal advocates to ensure that cyclists and pedestrians are protected and respected on our streets. I salute both Chris and the EBC for their long-standing and ongoing work.

Through her graduate studies in human ecology, weekly bike report on CJSR 88.5 FM, and work with the online cycling hub Bikeology, Karly Coleman helps inform and support those who already bike and encourages many others to give it a try. She's also a strong supporter and organizer of events during Bike Month.

Eric Jenkins commutes by bike every day year-round to his work as a public servant providing care and support for veterans through Capital Care and making deliveries for Calico bakery. Calico bakery is operated by his partner Laurel Ferster, an entrepreneur and fellow bike commuter who creates delicious baked goods that are available for sale every weekend at Edmonton-Centre's Mother's Market.

Lastly, I'd like to introduce Jay Smith, whose column, Your Ride, in Metro Edmonton offers stories and insights related to getting around Edmonton by transit, foot, and bike.

I'd ask all of you to join me in providing them with the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Seniors.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you some of the staff who've helped me in this office and helped me get where I am today. I'd like to begin by introducing the members of the transition team. Sharron Bursey has worked with government for seven years – please rise, Sharron – in communications offices with various ministries. Currently she is the office manager for the communications staff in the Ministry of Seniors. She helped me through the first two weeks as well as Cindy Dunphy, who has been with government for 34 years in a variety of roles, and currently she is in the Ministry of Seniors, working in the deputy minister's office. Thank you very much.

In terms of permanent staff we have Tonya Malo. Tonya started in my constituency as my constituency assistant yesterday. She has worked for AHS for the past 16 years in a variety of roles and was the chairperson of AUPE local 54 as well.

Claire Puyaoan has worked in government for nine years. I'm honoured to have her as part of my support team. Claire is my go-to for your correspondence, fellow MLAs, and she is one of the big contacts in our office, ensuring that I understand process and co-ordinating correspondence.

We also have Eileen Hofmann – spelled differently; no relation – who has spent more than six years working in a constituency office for a former MLA. Through her casework she's been inspired to become a registered social worker, a journey that she's been completing through night courses, which she will complete this summer. She is also one of our front-office experts, supporting Albertans and finding supports that they require through Health and Seniors.

Camille Hauck is my scheduling co-ordinator, and she is in charge of keeping me on time. She has worked in government since 1985 and continues to enjoy the challenges and excitement of her work. I keep it exciting.

Tim Wilson comes to us from Alberta Health, with seven years of experience in municipal and provincial government and two and a half years as the father of his daughter, Addie Eudora Halton Wilson. He's very proud of her. Also, he is my press secretary. We should mention that.

Bill Moore-Kilgannon is my chief of staff, and he comes to us after many years as an executive director of Public Interest Alberta and was also the first executive director for the Parkland Institute here at the University of Alberta. He is a proud dad to Neil and Ian.

Please join me in the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, thank you so much to you and through you to all members of this fine Assembly today. We all know that politics is about the support of our friends and family, and today I'm so pleased to be joined by just that, some very dear friends of ours who have shared a very similar family journey. It's great to have them here to support me today and to be able to take part in the proceedings. I would like to introduce to you Ashlea, Jaeden, and Ethan along with their mom, Steph Christensen. They are the future leaders of our province, and I'm so proud to have them here with us today. If you'll join me in welcoming them to the Assembly.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, with the indulgence of the House I'd like my guests to rise and actually personally receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: To all our guests and visitors today, welcome.

The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Dana Geall. For the last 10 years Dana has been a nurse at the University hospital, and Dana was one of my dedicated campaign volunteers. I thank her so much for her hard work, both as a nurse and certainly on our campaign. It is certainly an honour to have her here with us today, so I'd ask the Assembly to please give her the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who have introductions today?

I'd like to use this opportunity for just a minute. Welcome to all our guests here. To the hon. members, let's remember that time is a very valuable commodity to this House, and as we make introductions in the future, I hope you'll remember that.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Bike Month

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise in the House today and recognize that across Canada June is celebrated as Bike Month. My own love of cycling goes back to my childhood, when the family bike ride was one of our most frequent and loved activities. That love has continued throughout my life.

Biking, however, is not merely an activity for children or to be pursued solely for recreation. Across Canada governments are recognizing that providing safe, accessible routes to commute by bike is an essential part of building a modern and progressive city. This has already been demonstrated in many other parts of the world.

With the growth of major urban centres comes increasing pressure from traffic congestion. The density of our urban cores does not allow for expanded roads, but we can move more people along existing corridors by investing in alternative means of transportation, including expanded transit and protected bike routes. It is my intention to work closely with our government to fulfill our campaign promise to provide secure, stable funding for municipalities that will allow them to continue this essential work.

Commuting by bike improves physical and mental health, decreasing pressure on our medical system. I've been commuting by bike within my own constituency of Edmonton-Centre for over five years. It allows me to slow down, focus, and connect to my community while providing essential daily physical exercise. It is also my small part to mitigate the effects of climate change and reduce my dependence on fossil fuels.

Bike commuting isn't always possible or convenient for all people in all circumstances, but I encourage all my fellow members here in this House to try biking during the time that you spend here in Edmonton-Centre, whether on our beautiful river valley trails or to visit festivals, markets, and the unique local businesses here in our downtown core or even just coming here to work in this House. It's fast, it's efficient, and most of all it's fun. No matter what time of the year, it's always a good time to bike.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

My apologies, hon. member. I lived there at one time. I should have known this. Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Rural Health Care

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to speak in this House for the fine people of Grande Prairie-Smoky. Grande Prairie-Smoky has many vibrant communities. These communities make up a vital part of the Alberta economy. It is indeed sad to see how the government has treated such an important part of the province.

We have a severe lack of doctors, a problem not exclusive to Grande Prairie-Smoky. Some residents cannot even get a family doctor. If you're lucky enough to have one, it can still take up to six weeks to get an appointment. This forces people to go to emergency for simple things like getting a prescription renewed, which compounds the problems faced in emergency rooms. I recently heard first-hand of a patient that went to emergency, waited five hours, and was then moved to a second waiting room, where the people were sleeping on the floor, the same people that he waited with in the first waiting room.

Stories like this are common. We cannot continue to treat our seniors and other vulnerable citizens in this fashion. It is reprehensible. This is a topic I've heard over and over from the public and from seniors I have talked to. I have visited many seniors' facilities in the last couple of months. A common concern was the lack of seniors' facilities and other options for extended care.

Mr. Speaker, we spend an enormous amount of money on health care in Alberta, one of the highest in Canada, an enormous amount considering the dismal results we get, especially in rural and northern Alberta. Our front-line staff are doing the best they can with the broken system they are forced to work in. It's time to cut the waste in Alberta and put that funding toward front-line staff and hiring doctors for rural Alberta.

I have heard the current government state that there will be a $500 million influx into the health care system. How much will be put into rural health, and how much is earmarked for hiring new doctors? Something needs to be done. I ask the government to seriously consider not only those in the Peace Country but all proud, hard-working Albertans.

Oral Question Period

Government Policies

Mr. Jean: Yesterday I asked the Premier if she really believed that Alberta will have an advantage from having higher business taxes than Ontario, British Columbia, and Quebec. She didn't answer. This Premier's government is taking our business taxes to levels higher than those of the provinces we compete with for our corporate head offices. Our personal taxes are going up for Alberta families, but the real Alberta advantage saw dozens of corporations move their head offices to Alberta originally. So why is the Premier pursuing policies that will drive head offices out of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I said yesterday when I answered this question, what this government is doing is pursuing policies that will get us off the royalty roller coaster. We are also pursuing policies that will ensure stable, predictable funding of those important public services that Albertans rely on, whether it be education, whether it be health care, whether it be postsecondary and many others. In order to do that, we need stable, predictable funding. So it is about time that we develop a tax system that is grown-up, one that reflects people that are committed to ensuring a good, solid economy.

Mr. Jean: The Premier is pursuing policies which will hurt our economy.

Wildrose wants to help the government clarify its fiscal situation. We're helpful. Yesterday the Member for Strathmore-Brooks tried to get the Finance minister to tell us how large the deficit will be this year. Well, he wouldn't answer, but just a few days ago the Premier told a columnist that the deficit would be $5.4 billion. Why can the Premier talk about deficit numbers with the media but the Finance minister won't answer the same questions here in the Legislature?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, first of all, just in terms of the whole issue of driving investment out of Alberta, I did want to just mention an opportunity that I had on Friday to participate in an event where Telus announced that it would be investing a billion dollars in the city of Edmonton in infrastructure to support both our education and our health care systems. That was good news.

What I said in terms of the issue of deficit was that, generally speaking, as we work on a budget – that is not before the House today. [interjections]

The Speaker: I would remind the House that the leader, again, has some difficulty speaking when there's a lot of noise in the House, and time is a valuable commodity.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More questions about pursuing policies which will hurt our economy. There are actually media reports that the Premier is going to dismantle the Alberta Energy Regulator. The AER was set up to reduce the regulatory burden on industry while ensuring that our environment was properly protected for Albertans' future. While Wildrose has heard complaints about the AER's inefficiency, there is no doubt that industry and Albertans have benefited from having a single regulator. Why is the Premier planning to dismantle . . .

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, first of all, "dismantle" is a little bit of a torquing of a quote in the article that the hon. member referred to. That is not the word that I used. What I did say was that our government will be conducting a full review of agencies, boards, and commissions, something that folks over there talked about doing as well. We'll be looking at salaries and salary disclosure as well as the function of each board. When I was asked about whether AER would be part of that review, I replied that it would. This is something the people from both sides of the House have asked for.

The Speaker: Second supplemental, the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Jean: So far this session this government has made statements in the Legislature and in the media that need some clarification, and we're here to help. The Education minister says that Alberta is expecting 12,000 extra students this fall. The Finance minister has used this number. Yesterday the Premier used this number. That number is false. Alberta school boards say that there will be 7,500 new students, not 12,000, a big difference. The actual data you can actually find on the Education ministry's website if you want to look. Can the Premier clarify why her government is using a number that they know is false?

The Speaker: Let me just clarify. That was the Official Opposition's second major question.
The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. We are basing our numbers and basing our projection to make sure that we review the shortfall in funding based on all of the students coming into the education system across the province, in all places. That number is within a range, but it's quite an accurate range.

The Speaker: Now the first supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will remind the minister: it's on your website.

There are more statements, indeed, that need clarification from this government, and we're trying to be helpful. During debate on Bill 1 we asked the government to ban unions from donating the paid time of their employees. The Justice minister said that the law includes services in the definition of the contributions. That is simply not true. It was never an issue when union donations were allowed. Now it is a big problem. Unions can donate their employees' paid time to a political party for political purposes. Can the Premier please clarify?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Notwithstanding that I'm being asked to reflect on a unanimous decision of the House, actually, just to be clear, rather history-making, what I said when that issue was raised was that it's one of several different issues . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: . . . that we are putting to an all-party committee because, quite frankly, it's something that every member of this House should have a chance to weigh in on and that also Albertans should have a chance to weigh in on. That's why we're doing it.

Mr. Jean: So bringing in a law that doesn't actually change the law and allows donations from unions. I understand.

A final but very important statement from this government that needs clarification. The labour minister and the Premier have both said that increasing the minimum wage by 50 per cent will result in more jobs. Every employer of minimum wage employees say exactly the opposite. They point out that they will either have to shut down or they will have to reduce staff or they will have to find labour-saving ways to absorb a 50 per cent increase in labour costs. Can the Premier please clarify: does she know one single employer who will hire more . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me just begin by pointing out that my friend across the way has an interesting idea of what a supplemental question is. We started with education and students, then we went to the Election Act, and then we went to minimum wage. So, you know . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. Premier, would you finish?

Ms Notley: Nonetheless, in answer to your question, yes, I do know many employers who are going to create more jobs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Pipeline Development

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard the Premier say that she understands that we need pipelines. That's brilliant. We want to help, but the government has a lot of trouble supporting pipelines heading west or south and has sent mixed signals about pipelines heading east. Let me be clear. A new report shows that without new pipelines western Canada will lose a hundred billion dollars over the next 15 years. Can the Energy minister explain why her government is dismissing this hundred billion dollar priority for Albertans?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, I think the Premier made it fairly clear in the last few days that we are pursuing market access. Absolutely, that's important to our government. It's important to the industry. We've heard over and over again in our royalty discussions that that's one of the biggest concerns they have, and we are absolutely pursuing those talks.

Mrs. Aheer: We can do more to invite investment for refineries. However, that does not get our product to market. A hundred billion dollars lost in investment means less money to health care, education, to pay down the growing debt, or to save for our future, the future of Alberta. Projects like Keystone XL, the pipelines east and west are ready to be built today to start creating jobs for all Albertans. Can the Energy minister explain this government's growing disinterest in building pipelines?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, the member opposite is truly mischaracterizing what we're saying, and I have to say that I'm not entirely sure how many times we have to say it for them to hear it. What I will say, however, is that, you know, I had a great conversation with the Premier of New Brunswick earlier this week, where we talked about our common interest with respect to Energy East. I'm also very excited to be talking about the Canadian energy strategy at the Council of the Federation in a couple of weeks. We will continue to do exactly what the minister over there has been saying.

Mrs. Aheer: An Action a Day Keeps Global Capitalism Away: that is the name of the book that the environment minister helped to write that calls for shutting down the oil sands and encouraging blockades to moving product to market. We need advocates, and we need people who understand the impacts of losing a hundred billion dollars from Alberta's economy over the next 15 years. We do not need economic experiments. The NDP in Saskatchewan gets it. Why can't the Energy minister here fully support building all environmentally responsible pipelines?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we've made it fairly clear in the last week or two that we're working with all industry to talk about market access and working in an environmentally responsible way to get product to market.

Government Policies

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier gave a heartfelt apology in the House to aboriginal peoples. Our caucus stood in recognition of that apology; the second party did not. Actions are more important than words. To the Premier: what action is your government taking to help aboriginal peoples benefit from Alberta's high quality of life to the full extent that they choose?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That was a very good question. Of course, there are a broad range of actions that we need to take. As you know, we supported the call of many indigenous leaders in our province for a proper, full inquiry into missing and murdered aboriginal women, but we know that that's one of many, many issues.

One of the things that we'll be doing is asking our government to look at the TRC recommendations and look at how we can make those real through a crossministry evaluation of what we can do to improve what we're doing, but we will also do that in consultation with First Nations.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has had low unemployment traditionally, at least until the NDP government was elected. To the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour: what programs will you put in place to assist youth, all Alberta youth, including aboriginal youth, to be included in the economy to the full extent of their abilities and ambitions so that they can become the bright future of Alberta that I believe we all want them to be?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you . . . Oh, sorry.

The Speaker: I have recognized the minister. Would you like it to be the Premier?

Ms Notley: Well, I think it was directed at me.

Mr. McIver: No. It was to the minister.

Ms Notley: It was to the minister? Well, then, I wasn't listening. We have every intention of promoting youth employment issues. Of course, we've got our job creators' tax credit, but also we ran on and will ultimately be introducing for next summer the return of the summer temporary employment program.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, in the throne speech it states, "Investing in skills and education is the single best investment our province can make to ensure our future prosperity." We agree. Today we hear reports of hundreds if not thousands more layoffs in Alberta. To the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour: what are you doing to help Albertans get back to work after they've lost their jobs due to uncertainty created by your government's policies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. The unemployment numbers we are seeing are a reflection of the previous government's lack of diversifying the economy. We are committed to making lives better for all Alberta families, and this means raising the minimum wage to . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, as I was saying, the unemployment numbers that we're experiencing today are because of the previous government's lack of diversification of the economy, and we are investing in other things than the oil and gas sector . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Minister.
The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, we've already heard a lot about minimum wage in this House, so I thought I would try a more nuanced approach. My friends on my right here: they're locked in. They believe a minimum wage should never increase, nor should any taxes in any case ever. My friends on my left: they're locked in, and they think a 50 per cent increase in Alberta's minimum wage is a cure-all. Now, I expect the truth is somewhere in between. To the Premier: what specific evidence can you provide that shows a $15 minimum wage will not have unintended consequences . . .

The Speaker: Hon. Premier, is there a question that you'd like to respond to?

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. This really is a critical, critical issue. As I've said previously, there is a tremendous amount of evidence to show that when low-wage people have more money, it actually generates more economic activity. We also have seen the evidence in the States, where we've . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Any time left? Hon. Premier, 10 seconds, please.

Ms Notley: All right. Okay. Then, of course, we've seen numerous antipoverty reports that identify that a living wage in this province, for instance in Calgary . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Clark: So we haven't heard a study, and I wouldn't count that as evidence, but what I would agree on with the Premier is that I also care about poverty reduction. I care about that very much and helping people who really need it. Minimum wage, however, is a blunt instrument, and having a minimum wage 40 per cent higher than the rest of Canada is a risky social experiment that could backfire on this government and actually make the situation worse. To the Premier: will you commit to a comprehensive poverty reduction strategy that includes minimum wage, and if the evidence shows that a $15 minimum wage hurts more than it helps, will you back down?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We, of course, are very focused on poverty reduction, and I've asked my Minister of Human Services to follow up on where that poverty reduction strategy is and to bring it forward with some real, significant changes, minimum wage being one of them, minimum wage being one of the key recommendations of groups who have been working on the poverty reduction strategy for the last two and three years. So we know that that is part of it. The other thing to remember is that three years from now $15 an hour will not be 40 per cent above the rest of the country.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, we know multinational corporations can spread the impact of minimum wage increases across hundreds of stores, but Alberta's small businesses will face increased costs, causing them to lay off staff or, worse, go out of business entirely. Now, I want to point out to the Premier that Calgary-Elbow and Edmonton-Strathcona are home to an especially high number of excellent Alberta small businesses. To the Premier: if you are locked in on a $15 minimum wage, will you commit here and now to reduce small-business tax to offset the problems you will create for your constituents and mine?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, we will be putting together a job creation package that you will hear more about, Mr. Speaker, in the fall because we know that that is a very important issue. We'll be working together with business on that, and I look forward to that. But, again, we do not want a province where the only businesses that survive are those that require people to be paid at two-thirds of a living wage. We cannot grow our economy on the backs of the poor.

The Speaker: Before we begin the next set of questions, I would remind the House about preamble comments. I know there will be some creative ways found to not turn statements into preambles, so I would ask that you be conscious of that.

The Member for Calgary-East.

Education Concerns

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a teacher in the CBE for the last six years I've regularly had classes that are up to 70 per cent English language learners. This is especially true in classes across my riding of Calgary-East. For years school boards have had to cut valuable supports for these students due to lack of funding. Since the future of our province relies on the success of all of our students, I ask the Minister of Education: what is this government doing to ensure that English language learners are getting the supports that they need?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. We recognize that we've seen a 50 per cent increase in second language learners in our public school system since 2005, and that number is increasing by 5 per cent a year. So the first thing that we did, very importantly as a new government, is that we reinstated the funding around all grants pertaining to second language learners as well as for First Nations, Métis, and Inuit students as part of the ...

Mr. Jean: Time.

Mr. Eggen: ... $103 million injection of funding for 12,000 new students in our schools.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I would remind that the time is being taken care of by the table officers, and that is who I'm listening to.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In addition to English language learners, teachers are working with larger, more complex classes, less prep time, and fewer resources overall. Can the minister tell us what is being done to help these teachers and their students?

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, it's very important to understand the first principles in ensuring that schools are functioning and that kids are learning, and that's to make sure that you have proper funding in place. That's why, once again, we put that money in straight away, to ensure that we at least hold the line. Then I've also been working with parent groups and with trustee associations and with the Alberta Teachers' Association to make sure that we build a sustainable plan for the future.

The Speaker: I would remind the hon. member that the last time I heard your first supplemental, I thought I saw a preamble in there. I know it'll be different this time. Go ahead.

Ms Luff: I really like preambles.

To the Minister of Education again: given that school boards have told us they felt ignored and neglected by the previous government and given that I have spoken with some principals and superintendents and they are very hopeful that this new government will hear their concerns, what are we doing to ensure that school boards are being heard?

The Speaker: Very creative use of the word "given." I'm sure I'm going to hear that a few times today.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Well, given that I've met with school boards across the province – and, you know, we opened up the door straight away. I've had meetings not just with each of those groups separately but with all of those groups together, which is the first time, they've said, in many, many years that that's happened. We're looking for a spirit of collaboration to ensure that we get the long-term funding we need, where we need it, when we need it so that all students in our province are able to succeed and learn to the best of their abilities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Education Funding

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has presented an interim supply bill without information about how the funds will be used. The budget will not be presented until the school year has started. School authorities are holding back their funding for hiring and supports until they have some clarity about the budget. This crisis in educational planning has been brought on by this government. To the Minister of Education: what is the Minister of Education going to do to ensure that educational funds are ... [Mr. Smith's speaking time expired]

Mr. Eggen: I guess, Mr. Speaker, hyperbole is part of the action plan for this opposition over here.

We made it very clear that we would restore the funding that the previous government failed to do to meet the needs of 12,000 new students coming into our schools to learn. That's what we endeavored to do, and that's where the money is going to be so that kids learn on time and learn what they need to learn as well.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I've heard from constituents that resources for teacher aides and other supports for vulnerable students have been rolled back and given that the Wildrose campaigned on a solid plan to ensure that our vulnerable youth would have what they need, again to the Minister of Education: will this government commit to providing clarity for the educational authorities so that they can have their programs and staffing in place by the beginning of this new school year?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, I thank you for that question, too, because everyone needs to know that the money that we put into place – and it's in the range of 12,000 based on the 1.9 per cent population growth from the Treasury Board – is to be in the classroom for teachers, for support staff, and to make sure that kids are learning in our classrooms. After the fall budget is tabled, then the monies for the rest of the school year will be forthcoming as well.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you, again, Mr. Speaker. It's all very well and good to add money to the Education budget, even if you do not have an approved budget to add to. Given that Mr. Ramsankar, president of the Alberta Teachers' Association, believes that the new funding will be of limited value if it does not go to the classroom supports by September, how is this minister going to reassure parents that teachers and educational assistants will be rehired to meet the needs of students in the classroom this September?

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, you can be certain that I will be looking very carefully to make sure that that money, the $103 million or thereabouts, however many students are there, will be spent in the classroom to make sure that the supports are there for kids to help them learn. In fact, the Calgary board of education said, and I quote: for the first time since 2012 the CBE will see their basic funding per student increased. End of quote. So, certainly, they're very pleased about it. I'll make sure that the money gets spent in the classroom, where it belongs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Job Creation and Protection

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another day, yet another report of job losses in the oil and gas sector. In fact, 185 hard-working Albertans at TransCanada are now without jobs. Given that we're hearing that other major oil and gas companies are in the process of cutting their ranks as a result of nearly a billion dollars of lost revenue thanks to pending corporate tax hikes and the uncertainty created by the government's promised royalty review, to the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour: what are you doing to create more jobs and to address these job losses?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. As I've said already in this House this afternoon, unemployment numbers that we're experiencing now are a reflection of the previous government's lack of diversification of the . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: How much time left?

The Clerk: Twenty seconds.

The Speaker: Twenty seconds, Minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The situation that we are in now is because of the lack of diversification in our economy, and certainly we are wanting to invest in diversification and to support business. We're working with our partners in industry and business to do that. As the Premier said, Telus has invested a billion dollars just last week . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Energy: given that the pending royalty review, a new climate change strategy, and reviewing the mandate of the Alberta Energy Regulator are causing so much uncertainty in the energy sector, what do you intend to do, specifically, to work with the energy industry to ease the uncertainty and anxiety caused by your government's policies, to ensure that there are no more job losses for hard-working Albertans?

2:20

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, since day one we've been meeting with energy leaders, mostly in Calgary, but in Edmonton here some have reached out to us. The federal energy minister has reached out to us, and we're in constant talks. They're encouraging us to look at the industry as a whole, look at all the pieces. They feel that when we do all those parts, that will create stability. In fact, it is creating stability just in these talks that we've been doing.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Finance minister: given that so many Alberta businesses are holding off on making new investments or are cancelling existing commitments thanks to the policies of this government and given your own caution on tabling a budget, why can't you wait until next spring to implement higher business taxes, working with the business community to adapt and save jobs? What's the big rush?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you to the hon. member. Mr. Speaker, it's always regrettable when there are job losses in any sector, including the ones that we're experiencing in the oil and gas sector. But we're working closely, as the Energy minister said, with that sector, and we'll be looking at that more as we go forward. The budget, as this hon. member knows, is coming forward in the fall, after looking at all ministries, the efficiencies that we can create through looking at those ministries. We will be working hard to develop that so we're globally competitive as we move forward, as we have . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Mr. Minister.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Rural Transportation Infrastructure

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Between 2013 and 2014 the former government downloaded the funding of bridges to rural municipalities. One of Little Bow's counties has about 200 bridges, of which 11 are within one year of their useful life. In fact, rural Alberta is responsible for 75 per cent of roads and 60 per cent of bridges. Wildrose's 10-10 plan would make sure that municipalities have resources for these projects. To the minister: is this government aware of this quickly growing problem facing our rural communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for that question. Yes, we are aware of this problem. As leader of the NDP opposition in years past I met regularly with the executive of AAMD and C, and they brought these matters to my attention, particularly the question of bridges. I might add, however, that much of the infrastructure in the province's purview is in similar condition. So we have many priorities that are very important, and we have . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that detail is limited in the supply bill as to where dollars for infrastructure are to be spent and given that the resource road program was funded at $31 million and the local road bridge program was funded at $26 million, rural communities need to know what the government's plans are. To the minister: will you confirm or deny that there is money within the supply bill that will see funding returned to the local road bridge program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the hon. member for that question. This is something that I've been discussing with my officials as I am getting up to speed on the many complex details of the ministry, and I can assure you that it's going to be given the most careful consideration when we bring our budget forward in the fall.

Mr. Schneider: Given that in the riding of Little Bow a roundabout has been proposed for the convergence of highway 23 and highway 519, where seven accidents have taken place since January 1 and one fatality, and given that access in and out of Coalhurst is another dangerous situation, complicated by a CP Rail crossing, and given that those important road projects were in the loop for construction – given, given, given – can the minister please confirm that monies in the supply bill will see that these projects are funded?

Mr. Mason: To the hon. member: I am aware of these problems, and I'm becoming increasingly aware of the wide number of similar issues in other constituencies. I want to assure you that we'll take these seriously and that I will be looking for some assistance from individual private members regardless of their party affiliation in addressing the issues facing their constituents.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Urgent Health Care in Airdrie

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm from Airdrie, and given that it is one of the fastest growing cities in Alberta – we're literally bursting at the seams – and given that Health ministers have played politics in Airdrie and now we have a bigger, more centralized Alberta health system that has a long history of neglecting the local needs of local decision-makers, we're desperate for a 24-hour urgent health facility. I'm hoping this government can get it right. Will the minister commit to put politics aside and build this centre in our community?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We know that there has been some lack of confidence in some of the processes among Albertans moving forward from the past government, and we're committed to making sure that we have an infrastructure plan that is publicly released, with lots of opportunity to ensure that the sun shines on that list and we can have a full public conversation. So when this government makes a commitment, you can count on it.

Mrs. Pitt: Minister, lives are in danger, over 60,000 people. Given that there is only a total of 14 beds to treat a population of over 60,000, a 24-hour urgent care network is needed. It's overdue, and study after study has demanded it. We all know that putting off this urgent care centre is dangerous. What sort of timeline will the minister commit to?

Ms Hoffman: I want to thank the hon. member for the question and the opportunity to express the fact that we want to ensure that Albertans no matter where they live, including every corner of this province, have opportunities to ensure that their confidence is instilled in the public health care system. We do have a responsibility to the 60,000 people living in Airdrie as well as the more than 4 million people living in Alberta to make sure that we're planning infrastructure responsibly, and when we do make a commitment, to following through on those commitments. I appreciate the information being provided today.

Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: Given that Airdrie needs a . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I wonder if you'd wait until the Speaker recognizes you. Proceed.

Mrs. Pitt: Given that Airdrie needs a 24-hour health care facility and given that in March the facility was promised but now we're sort of in limbo – when you have a sick child, Calgary is simply too far away, the wait times are just too long, and we're closed after 10 p.m. The plans are in place. Will you just give it the go-ahead? Will the minister commit to helping all Albertans and build this centre?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you to the member for the question and for drawing attention to the fact that there were a number of press releases made by the third party when they were in government in the months leading up to the election. Press releases do not necessarily instill confidence in Albertans moving forward. We as well as members of the Official Opposition were highly critical of the number of promises that were made and the lack of government actually funding those in the past. You don't have that in this government. When we make a commitment, we'll follow through on it, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Job losses across the province are among the most pressing of social and economic issues. For example, in your own home city of Medicine Hat, operations at Sanjel were recently suspended, meaning that these jobs will go to another location, potentially outside of Alberta. To the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour. Oil service companies in rural Alberta are feeling the pinch of a weak product market as well as a government whose policies seem bent on crippling their industry. How will you ensure that those who live in rural Alberta will receive the same focus on . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, the lack of diversification in our economy due to the previous government's decisions is continuing. The numbers we're experiencing now have a lot to do with that. We are interested in investing in diversity. As I said earlier, Telus just invested $1 billion, and we want to have more investment and that kind of thing to diversify so that we're not so dependent on the oil and gas industry.

Thank you.

2:30

Dr. Starke: My next question actually is to the environment minister. Given that other major companies such as Baker Hughes and Schlumberger are also scaling back or shutting down certain locations, how does this government intend to strengthen their greenhouse gas emission techniques when the very companies that look to create this technology are being forced out of Alberta?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: I have to assure folks that both the environment minister and myself have been meeting with industry because we do see the connection between both. Industry is quite heartened by that, and we are assured to look at the industry as a whole, and . . . [interjection] Excuse me?

An Hon. Member: Stay tuned?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: No.

The industry has assured us that they like the fact that we're looking at it together, and they don't feel that's going to impact jobs.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour minister this time. Given that most mid-sized cities in Alberta experienced explosive economic growth since 2005 along with unprecedented job creation and given that the most recent figures from my home city of Lloydminster suggest that up to 3,000 jobs have been lost because of economic and policy uncertainty, how can this government's only strategy in creating new jobs be to simply put money in the hands of those who spend it fastest?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In addition to being the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour, I'm also the Minister of Innovation and Advanced Ed. Innovation is doing a tremendous amount of work. I just recently went to NAIT and saw all of the alternative energy and other initiatives they're doing. We've invested $40 million more in postsecondary and apprenticeships to support people to get good jobs and stay here in Alberta.

Thanks.

Health Coverage for Refugees and Refugee Claimants

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, nearly three years ago the federal government drastically cut its health coverage for refugees and refugee claimants. Many provinces, including Alberta, then stepped up to provide care to refugees and their families. To the Minister of Health and of Seniors: will this government join the calls of doctors, nurses, and other Canadians in other provinces for the federal government to reinstate health care coverage for all refugees?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for this important question. The highest court in Canada has ruled that the federal government must reinstate coverage for refugees. The federal government is appealing that decision, but it has been forced to put an interim program in place to ensure coverage for refugees and refugee claimants. This government's position is that the federal government should end this appeal. We are committed to ensuring that people who are living in Alberta legally have the right to public health care, just like all of us do, including refugee claimants.

Ms McKittrick: What assurances can the hon. minister give us that this government is there for the refugees and all of their families?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I've had an opportunity to ask some questions in my ministry around this issue. As has been directed through the Court of Appeal, the federal government has a responsibility to ensure that refugee claimants are currently getting the services that they require under public health care. As well, I've had an opportunity to clarify that children who are born in Alberta who are the children of refugees will have access to whatever services they need within public health care. This means that we'll continue to provide public health care for refugees seeking legal status in Canada.

Ms McKittrick: To the Minister of Health: will this government stand up for those seeking refuge in our great country by calling on the federal government to abandon its costly appeal of a Supreme Court ruling, which has called these cuts cruel and unusual?

Ms Hoffman: Thanks again to the hon. member and those who are in attendance today to hear this answer. We absolutely agree with the Supreme Court that these cuts were cruel and unusual and that they targeted populations who have already been targeted for far too long in their own countries, and that's why they come to Canada. They come to Canada to ensure that they have opportunities for themselves and for their future, and that includes publicly funded health care. We encourage the federal government, whoever is in government after the fall election, to ensure that this appeal stops and that we continue to fund refugees and refugee claimants.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there's a suggestion that there may be laptops being used. I would remind the House of the procedural letter that was sent earlier about that practice.

The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Registry Services in Blackfalds

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is about the town of Blackfalds, a town of 8,000 people that have no Alberta registry office. It's not because the town doesn't want one. Council has asked for it. And it's not because there are no entrepreneurs willing to invest – there are – but because of the bureaucratic rules that are convoluted and deny an entire town the benefit of a registry. Is the Minister of Service Alberta aware of this problem, and could you please tell us why the bureaucracy is preventing this community from having a registry office?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for his question. I can tell you that I will be looking into this matter. I don't have an answer for you right now, but I think it is a very valid question, and I look forward to getting back to you and to all members of the House with a response. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Orr: I do thank you for that answer because people do have to drive all the way to Lacombe or Red Deer every time they are required by law to renew their driver's licence or a registration or get a death certificate or anything. People with disabilities and transportation problems, busy working people find that extremely difficult. Will the same minister be able to tell the people of Blackfalds how long they will have to wait for such an essential service?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. As I'm looking into getting more details on this, I think it would be irresponsible to give an answer as far as how long. I can assure the member that I will be talking to the ministry and getting some answers as quickly as possible and getting back to the hon. member.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Orr: Thank you. In that review, if necessary, would the minister be prepared to initiate a review of the registry rules with the intent of permitting separate municipalities to service their communities with this essential service of a registry office?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, thanks to the member for the question. I definitely want to look into this. I think, first of all, it's important that Albertans do have access to registries to ensure that they, obviously, can get their licences and not have to travel too far throughout the province to get this done. Again, I think that until I get some answers, it wouldn't be prudent to be making any kinds of promises and commitments other than that I will look into this example in Blackfalds and get back to the member.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Capital Projects in Calgary-Lougheed

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents in Calgary-Lougheed are truly grateful for the building of three schools in the past three terms as well as the internationally awarded Calgary South Health Campus, the reconstruction of south Fish Creek park, a historic agreement for the southwest Calgary ring road with our Tsuut'ina neighbours, and more. However, due to recent changes, my constituents have become greatly concerned about whether formerly planned projects will actually be going ahead. My first question is to the Minister of Education. Considering the incredible growth in our riding, can the minister assure the students and parents in Calgary-Lougheed that the construction of Evergreen middle school will begin in the next two months and be completed the following fall, as scheduled?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the Member for Calgary-Lougheed for the question. We've been working very closely with Infrastructure, with school boards to make sure that we provide stability and predictability for all schools here in the province of Alberta. In regard to his school specifically I'm aware of the growth that's taking place there, and if the hon. member can give me a list – I've done it already for a couple of people – I can find out exactly where that school is at.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. I look forward to a little back and forth on that.

Now, given that our caucus leader was instrumental in reaching a landmark agreement with the Tsuut'ina First Nation – and my constituents truly appreciate that – can the current Minister of Transportation quell any uncertainty and assure our constituents that the tendering of the southwest Calgary ring road will be completed this calendar year with construction to begin in 2016?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for his question. I had the opportunity two weeks ago in Calgary to meet with the chief of the Tsuut'ina Nation, and we had a discussion. I fully understand the components of the agreement that was negotiated by the previous government with the Tsuut'ina Nation, and I understand as well the very significant contributions that the province has made in terms of land and cash and that there's a seven-year guillotine, if you will, on the agreement, after which everything would revert to the Tsuut'ina Nation. So there's a very serious time urgency with . . .

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. I'm sure that Hansard will get the spelling of guillotine correct.

My last question is to the same minister. Given the deadlines, as you've mentioned, in the complex agreement can you assure the constituents in Calgary-Lougheed and all Calgarians and Albertans, who will be extremely well served by this road: will the southwest Calgary ring road indeed be completed by 2019 according to your time schedules?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much to the hon. member for the question. Given what's at stake, Mr. Speaker, it's very important that we proceed as expeditiously as possible with the completion of the southwest ring road.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-South East.

Energy Policies

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, my heart goes out to all the Albertans that have lost jobs, including the 185 from TransCanada that we heard of today. The Premier said today that her intent is to get Albertans off the oil and gas roller coaster, but is it her intent to move them off the roller coaster and right into the unemployment line? With higher business taxes, a royalty review, a new climate change strategy, increasing the minimum wage in a downturn, reviewing the mandate of the Alberta Energy Regulator, it's no wonder businesses are holding off on making new investments or even following through with the existing commitments they have today.

Just yesterday the Financial Post reported that the uncertainty surrounding Alberta's policy on oil and gas royalties has already caused several companies to shift capital to other provinces, and this should come as no surprise. A securities analyst was quoted as saying that land sale activity, which is a key indicator for future drilling and investment intentions, is expected to increase in British Columbia and Saskatchewan in 2016-17 at Alberta's expense.

I find it ironic that we keep hearing the government say that they need four, five, six months or maybe longer to conduct multiple reviews before they can bring down their budget, yet this same government expects Alberta businesses, who create many of the jobs in this province, to only have six days to change their budgets to accommodate the new policies.

Mr. Speaker, we're not just talking about numbers. We're not talking statistics. We're talking about Alberta families. These families want to take care of their children and their aging parents. In order to do that, they need a job. When Albertans lose jobs, that goes far beyond politics. These are life-changing events caused by policies being rushed by this government without enough thought or consultation.

To the government: slow it down; protect Albertan jobs.

The Speaker: The Member for Stony Plain.

Wabamun Dragonfly Festival

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year, as every year, the stunning village of Wabamun held their Dragonfly Festival last weekend. It's a weekend filled with pancakes, parades, playing ball, and the perfect weather in this, the capital region's four-season playground. Young and old alike watched the parade go by, and I heard that there was a rule that if you waved, you got candy.

Upon entering the beautiful village of Wabamun, the first thing your eye is drawn to is the world's largest dragonfly. To celebrate the dragonfly and life on the lake, Wabamun holds its annual Dragonfly Festival.

The village of Wabamun did not always sit on the site it occupies today. The village was moved across the ice of Wabamun Lake during the winter of 1911-1912, one building at a time, to accommodate the arrival of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. The coming of the railway led to many opportunities within the village of Wabamun. Tourists arrived from Edmonton, and coal in the area was developed for shipping.

Today the coal and the tourism are still there along with a marina capable of launching and mooring all manner of boats, including large sailboats, and the village's waterfront park. There are many young families that call this village home and many retirees as well, making for a well-balanced, tightly knit community. Many people volunteer and are willing to give a hand when needed, exemplifying the sense of community and friendliness we find throughout rural Alberta.

The Dragonfly Festival is a time to see people come together not just in a time of need but in a time of joy: firefighters making smoke on the barbecue instead of putting out fires, new ventures in the market, dance classes coming to town for the little ones, and candy in the streets. The symbol of the dragonfly carries the wisdom of transformation and adaptability, of change and light, and when a dragonfly shows up, it reminds you to bring a little more lightness and joy into your life. So when you celebrate the world's largest dragonfly, it can bring nothing but positives.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would remind the House again that as members leave the House, they acknowledge the Speaker's chair.

The Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Sheldon Kennedy

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to acknowledge the work of a local leader and hero who is recognized both here in Alberta and further afield. Whether you know Sheldon Kennedy for his eight years in the NHL or for his cross-Canada in-line skate to raise awareness for child abuse, Sheldon is best known for his courageous decision to report the sexual abuse he suffered while playing junior hockey.

Since then Sheldon has become an inspiration to abuse survivors around the world and has become a committed, outspoken children's advocate. For his tireless work he has received several awards, and in May this year he was awarded our country's highest honour, the Order of Canada. Sheldon also serves on the board of the Sheldon Kennedy Child Advocacy Centre in the constituency of Calgary-Varsity. In this amazing place compassionate and committed experts from all fields, like social workers, health care professionals, police, and Crown prosecutors, work together to support victims of child abuse. The centre's collaborative approach gives children, youth, and families affected by violence hope and helps them heal.

The Alberta government is a proud partner with the Sheldon Kennedy Child Advocacy Centre and its work in support of children as well as prevention and research. Together with other child advocacy centres in the province we are developing Alberta's integrated model of best practice. The integrated model will expand the collaborative services approach beyond the locations of the child advocacy centres themselves.

In addition to his work as a board member, Sheldon continues to bring attention to the work of the centre and the issue of child abuse. Please join me in congratulating Sheldon Kennedy for his appointment to the Order of Canada, for his leadership, and for his compassion and courage.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Strathmore-Brooks Constituency

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to represent my constituency of Strathmore-Brooks. The counties of Newell and Wheatland have a rich history that is significant to both the development of Alberta and Canada, dating back over 100 years. Now, imagine me in a hat for a moment. I'd like to take this Chamber back to 1885, when James Wishart first followed the Gleichen trail towards Montana. During his exploration he came across a river valley covered in wild roses. He shouted to his crew: "Here's the promised land. We go no further." James Wishart knew what we now know, that Strathmore-Brooks is as Albertan as Alberta gets and that this is Wildrose country.

My riding of Strathmore-Brooks has a long and proud history abundant in western heritage, with century-old farms and ranches that are still in operation today. Good old rodeo still plays a large role in tourism in my constituency. Speaking of rodeo, rodeo season has kicked off, beginning in June with the Brooks Kinsmen pro rodeo, and the upcoming annual Bassano Amateur Rodeo is set to take place soon. And how can we forget Tilley Heritage Day, which features a delicious old-fashioned barbecue and barn dance, the Duchess Days festival, and the Siksika summer rodeo? Both the Strathmore Stampede and the Strathmore gay rodeo feature a running with the bulls.

These are just a few of the many events that my community has to offer. This summer all across Strathmore-Brooks you can see bull riding, barrel racing, tie-down roping, steer wrestling, chuck-wagons, stagecoaches, and many other western activities for all to enjoy. I would like to invite everyone to visit Strathmore-Brooks and experience some of these incredible events that run deep with Alberta's history and heritage.

Yee-haw, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I would remind the members that we should be cautious and get clarity from the Speaker's office with respect to items which are props that are brought into the House. I will overlook this instance, but again I would remind the members that we ought to be cautious and respectful of the House's traditions with respect to such matters being brought into the House.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of a Canadian Press article highlighting the comments from the New Democratic government last week on "Punt patronage: Alberta NDP wants end to 'pork-barrel politics.'" I'm looking forward to seeing an end to unfettered appointments without independent merit.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also have an article here with respect to the 185 layoffs at TransCanada corporation announced today. I'd like to table that for the House as well.

The Speaker: I think that pursuant to Standing Order 7(7) the daily Routine is now concluded.

Orders of the Day

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Connolly moved, seconded by Ms Kazim, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate June 18: Mr. Clark]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I had concluded my remarks previously. I thank all members for their rapt attention to my words and, with that, will cede my remaining time.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, questions and comments?

The hon. member.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to deliver today my response to the Speech from the Throne and for the privilege of delivering my maiden speech to this House. It is indeed an honour, which I take very seriously.

First, let me congratulate you and the other officers of this House on your election to lead us in our humble duties. To all members of this House: I salute their commitment to represent the people of Alberta to the best of their ability and my caucus colleagues for their indulgence, patience, and guidance as I become conversant with the legislative practices and procedures.

As a 23-year resident of Calgary-Fish Creek I am more than humbled to represent a constituency which I believe reflects much of what is great about our province. Being the 19th member of the Legislature to serve this geographic area, I am in good company, with Premiers, Speakers, and Leaders of the Official Opposition preceding me. Established in 1979, Calgary-Fish Creek, named after the neighbouring Fish Creek provincial park, has previously had only two other MLAs representing the great communities of Canyon Meadows, Lake Bonavista, Bonavista Downs, Parkland, Deer Run, Deer Ridge, Queensland, and Diamond Cove.

Calgary-Fish Creek is home to just over 38,000 Albertans living in an area with a deep history and key significance to this region, an area of early habitation and gathering by our First Nations people. First settled in 1873 by John and Adelaide Glenn, Fish Creek quickly became an area known for ranching, agriculture, trading, and social activity, and some of those habits still remain today.

After a short period as a Dominion of Canada instructional farm for Treaty 7 the land was purchased by the Hull brothers, when it became a place of innovation in irrigation and agricultural production while also cultivating a much-heralded reputation for regional social life, with the emergence of the Bow Valley Rancho as a required stop for all visiting dignitaries.

The natural brick home built by William Roper Hull still stands proudly, restored today as a showpiece of the Rancho at Fish Creek Restoration Society, a testament to the tenacity, hard work, and dedication of Mitzie and Larry Wasyliw, who along with the Friends of Fish Creek Provincial Park Society and regional park staff continue to act as able stewards of this valuable park, established in 1975 by Premier Lougheed's PC government as a legacy for all Albertans to enjoy for generations to come.

It has indeed lived up to that government's vision. Today Fish Creek is our busiest provincial park, welcoming an estimated 4 million visitors per year to enjoy this gem of nature as Canada's largest urban park. I am proud to represent communities which share this incredible natural resource.

The constituency of Calgary-Fish Creek, which has been home to me and my growing family since 1992, is an amazing example of community spirit at its best. Along with my wife, Cathy, and our three children we have been committed to and deeply involved with the community since making it our home. From years of involvement in the scouting movement to managing soccer, lacrosse, and volleyball teams and an ongoing commitment to area schools, it has been a pleasure to connect with our neighbours and other like-minded Albertans seeking a safe, friendly, welcoming, and nurturing community.

In Calgary-Fish Creek 70 per cent of area homes were built between 1961 and 1980, including, of course, Calgary's first man-made lake, Lake Bonavista, a brainchild of Mr. E. Vee Keith, now a community-run facility that boasts its own mini-ecosystem, including year-round recreation and fishing. Forty-eight per cent of residents were born in Alberta while 18 per cent are immigrants. Over 85 per cent are homeowners, and fully 62 per cent boast postsecondary education, working in every vocation and profession imaginable. While over 15 per cent of residents are between the ages of five and 17, an almost equal number are aged 65 or over. Languages spoken in the area include French, Chinese, German, Punjabi, Vietnamese, Spanish, and Tagalog, to name a few, reflecting the increasing diversity within the constituency over the past several decades.

As a proud born-and-raised Calgarian and Albertan myself I am perhaps a hybrid of what makes our community, Alberta, and Canada great. While my mother was a third-generation Irish-Canadian of humble roots born in Parry Sound, Ontario, her sense of adventure and selflessness led her as an RN to Thailand to establish their first-ever public health program, representing the United Nations World Health Organization. There she met my father, a Polish-born Jew raised in Shanghai and a refugee from the communist regimes of Stalin and Mao, also in a faraway land, representing MGM movies in the most exotic of locales during the era of The King and I. And where did they choose to raise a family? Alberta. I am blessed that their choice back in 1957 has become part of my life story. Yes, my parents were two of those people from all around the world who shared a dream of a better life mentioned in the throne speech, and I and my family indeed believe that all of us here are part of that living legacy.

I have lived in war-torn Nigeria as an impressionable child, travelled extensively around the world during a two-decade-long career in the international airline business, and fed a lifelong appetite for wanderlust, but Alberta remains my haven, my safe place, and the best place in the world to make a living, to build a life, and to call home.

During my humble life I've been honoured with the privilege of serving the community in many ways. With deep involvement in Alberta's Asian communities since the early 1980s I've been blessed to have made many lifelong friends, and I'm humbled to be considered honorary Chinese by my peers in that community. Being part of bringing dragon boat racing to Alberta in 1992 was one of my proudest moments.

While I've been deeply involved in embracing cultural diversity through such organizations and events as the Chinatown Street Festival in Calgary, the Hong Kong-Canada Business Association, which is a national and provincial organization, Hong Kong days, and more recently GlobalFest, I've also had the privilege of deep engagement with community groups and the nonprofit sector, including the Kids Cancer Care Foundation, Trico Centre for Family Wellness, Trico Charitable Foundation, Habitat for Humanity, and many more, too numerous to mention. These opportunities have deeply influenced who I am and the values I uphold and defend every day.

I've also been blessed to have spent a decade in Alberta's housing sector. This has provided me with an opportunity to embrace the importance of affordable and appropriate housing for all Albertans. This key issue will be a personal priority for me in working with this Legislature, collaborating with the public, private, and nonprofit sectors to bring creativity and innovation to reduce barriers faced by many Albertans, both long-time residents and newcomers of all ages, in addressing housing affordability.

But why public service at this stage of my career in life? Not only is it time for me to give back but also for me to follow my passion for people, for our province, and to do all that I can do to ensure that Alberta and Canada can seize our rightful position on the national and global stage. From the distant memories of model parliament at Western Canada high school to studying political science and economics at the University of Calgary, some dreams never fade.

For me the core values and principles of the party and people I now serve and represent remain little changed from the vision I took away as a 13-year-old pounding in lawn signs for Peter Lougheed in 1971. To me Alberta is, rather simplistically, all about three things: entrepreneurial spirit, for which Alberta is renowned as a national leader and where those with a predisposition for risk can bring forth great societal wealth; a prairie work ethic, a true tribute to our pioneers and province builders from all walks of life; and building an inclusive society but, truly, more than that: embracing and celebrating diversity in all its forms.

I'm a passionate proponent for and will remain a fierce defender of the Alberta advantage, recognizing that the legacy of what this means to Albertans varies from city to city, town to town, and hamlet to hamlet but that it does have a powerful and distinct meaning to every Albertan. Whether they were born and raised on the land or whether they came from across our country or from around the world, they have chosen our great province as a place to build a life and to live their dreams, with the benefits of the Alberta advantage as their beacon.

But let us be mindful that we are stewards of this legacy and that ego, dogmatic ideology, and blind ambition have no place in the formula for our future and for our future success as individuals, as a people, or as a province. One of the most admirable traits for any individual or community is indeed a simple characteristic: humility. We must work together collectively as passionate Albertans, but we must listen to and respect the views of others while defending their right to hold differing opinions. That is what our forefathers fought for and what we must respect and honour their sacrifice for. We must ensure our legacy is not one of irresponsible, unsustainable behaviour, sacrificing generations of wealth and resources for our own enrichment, while also ensuring that we do not leave a trail of debt and burden for future Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen, hon. members, guests, and fellow Albertans, we have been entrusted with the power and ability to do great things, but with that power comes great responsibility. Let us honour that as we live, learn, prosper, and grow together as the 29th Legislative Assembly of this great province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions and comments?

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my absolute pleasure to stand today as the elected representative for the people of St. Albert. I'm equally proud to rise today and share some information about this wonderful community. The beautiful city of St. Albert is also known as the Botanical Arts City. It is the second-largest city in the Edmonton capital region and shares its wonderful home with more than 63,000 proud citizens.

Many of you will know that St. Albert was originally settled as a Métis community and was founded in 1861 by Father Albert Lacombe. St. Albert boasts a large, thriving francophone community, which adds to the unique community feel. In fact, it may surprise you to know that roughly 10 per cent of St. Albertans can actually speak French today.

The people of St. Albert are proud of their community, and so they should be. In 2014 St. Albert was named the best place to live in Canada by MoneySense magazine, and just a few weeks ago St. Albert was named the best place in Canada to raise a family by that same magazine. Few in St. Albert were surprised by this recognition because they realize how fortunate they are to call St. Albert home.

St. Albert is home to the world-renowned International Children's Festival, that runs for five days each spring and entertains over 55,000 children of all ages. Albertans come from all over the region to enjoy this event and share in the welcoming community and arts. As well, the St. Albert outdoor farmer's market is the largest of its kind in western Canada, with over 250 local vendors offering homegrown, homemade, and home-baked goods for thousands who shop there.

I can't talk about St. Albert without paying respect to the honourable and extraordinary Lois Hole. I know the entire community of St. Albert was bursting with pride when Lois Hole was named Alberta's 15th Lieutenant Governor in 1999. This successful businesswoman, writer, gifted gardener, and mother of two was a tireless advocate for public education, and she was a tireless community activist. She was the driving force behind the Lois Hole hospital for women, for which thousands of Alberta's women are grateful. Lois Hole once joked that schoolteachers should earn as much as NHL players. Not a bad idea.

She was an inclusive woman, kind, and always ready to lend a hand to anyone who asked and even some who didn't. This kind, practical, and loving woman, affectionately called "everyone's grandmother," was an amazing ambassador for the city of St. Albert. One of my favourite pieces of public art in St. Albert is a statue honouring her. It's a depiction of her kneeling down in front of a small child and both looking at each other lovingly. Knowing what I do of her, I think this statue and this piece of art is very appropriate. The Lois Hole hospital for women houses a banner that bears this now famous quote from its namesake: my hope is that when people come to this new hospital and see my name, they're going to have a little extra hope, that real, uplifting hope that things will turn out okay. She was a breathtaking woman.

As in all communities, the growth and joy that is experienced now is always preceded by opportunities to learn and grow. Five decades ago two residential schools for indigenous children operated in St. Albert. The two physical structures burned down long ago, but the scars remain. St. Albert can be proud of its commitment to forge and nurture relationships with the aboriginal community members by moving beyond just speaking about truth and reconciliation to living reconciliation.

As is the case throughout Alberta, unfortunately, St. Albert is also home to many women, men, and children who struggle daily due to poverty and its results. Poverty was once thought to be contained in the inner core of big cities but is now receiving wider recognition throughout the province.

Two weeks ago I was able to spend some time at the St. Albert food bank. I was astonished to hear from the staff and volunteers at the food bank that over 600 individuals and families regularly use the food bank to feed themselves and their families. Over the last 12 months food bank usage has steadily increased and shows no sign of slowing down. As you might expect, economic uncertainties and related job losses have contributed to increased food bank reliance. But that is not the biggest contributor to the increased reliance on the St. Albert food bank. Domestic violence is the single largest cause of reliance on the food bank, and I want to thank the Premier for her initiative in the creation of the women's issues ministry to help those already taxed agencies addressing these needs.

I, like so many, was thankful to hear our new government's commitment to addressing violence against women in the Speech from the Throne. The people of St. Albert clearly recognize the need for education, action, and prevention related to domestic violence. The SAIF Society, which stands for Stop Abuse in Families Society, is a community-based organization that has, since it began in 1989, offered support to individuals and families that experience domestic violence.

St. Albert is truly a beautiful city, both in appearance and in spirit. It's a fine example of what an inclusive city and government can achieve. Inclusivity is not simply a word sprinkled in local policy but is a way of life there.

For the last 14 years I have worked as the executive director for the Lo-Se-Ca Foundation of St. Albert. This nonprofit organization supports people with disabilities so that they're able to live and work in their communities. During my 14 years there I was able to see first-hand how the community of St. Albert worked with local leaders and activists to promote inclusion. Local government and community leaders sought out assistance from residents with disabilities and advocacy groups in order to create inclusive employment policies and practices and accessible and affordable transportation and housing. What this community got right is that it is imperative to include people in decision-making when those decisions impact their lives.

In 2013 I was fortunate enough to participate in something that forever changed my life. I was part of a group of 19 that travelled to Tanzania. The group was made up of Lo-Se-Ca Foundation staff members, people with disabilities, and some of their family members. For over a year we fund raised and trained together so that we could climb Kilimanjaro in order to raise money for a small charitable group in rural Tanzania that worked with children with disabilities. Only two people who set out to climb the mighty Kilimanjaro had to turn back before reaching the summit. During this gruelling five-day trek I learned that it is the journey that matters most. I learned that anything is possible if you believe it is, and I learned that every person is capable of great things if they are supported, valued, and included.

We left our final camp for the summit just after midnight on the last day. At almost 20,000 feet the air is thin and quite cold. The exhaustion and smell after days of endless trekking is physically and mentally draining. Approximately eight hours after leaving camp, we arrived at the rim of the crater and knew that we only had about an hour of trekking left. At this point I had literally run out of energy and couldn't fathom taking one more step, let alone trek for another hour. At that precise moment a young man, who happens to have a developmental disability, took me by the arm and told me that we would walk the rest of way together. We did walk the rest of the way together, and we did reach the summit together, and I was the one that was most vulnerable that day.

Together all of us have much to do to restore power in decision-making and inclusion for the people of Alberta. I believe that over the last few years we've lost our way and focus by choosing not to really hear and consult with the people of Alberta, not just those who have big voices and powerful voices but all people. Community consultation is not simply a stand-alone exercise but the building of nurturing relationships. We can't create policy without listening, listening to the people whose lives are impacted by the policy.

Through my work and in my personal life I've witnessed the dangers of well-meaning policy created without real community consultation and impact assessment. Recently slight adjustments in budget line items to support people with developmental disabilities literally put thousands of men and women at risk. Current changes to housing safety standards for people with developmental disabilities have inadvertently put people with disabilities who want to live independently in their communities at risk of losing that very housing. The intent was good, and the result is not.

Similarly, the labels we assign to people can innocently chip away at their dignity. The language we use to describe people in our community is important. I am grateful that this new government, on both sides, has chosen not to refer to people with disabilities as our most vulnerable but as people first, people who need and deserve our support.

My brother, like so many others, struggled his entire life with an illness, a disability, schizophrenia. My brother had a great deal to offer his community when he had access to help and the support he needed. However, when necessary mental health care supports were not available, he fell through the cracks, like many people. Even the most loving and supportive families cannot rescue people from cracks that can become deep canyons. My brother was one of the many who believed that ending his life was his only solution. Every time I hear about another family losing a child or a loved one to suicide, I'm physically reminded of the acute pain of loss and the necessity to ensure that mental health supports are available to people whose very lives depend on them.

I'm honoured to sit in this Assembly, with the vast collection of life experiences and individual goals, which are as diverse as the very people we were elected to represent. Now more than ever it is vital that we find a way to work together to meet the collective needs of all Albertans. Hope is a powerful thing. Albertans are hopeful when they look at us assembled here. People are hopeful we will make decisions that will guide them into an inclusive future. People are hopeful that we will set aside party-first mentality and replace it with Alberta first.

Thank you for allowing me to share a little bit about St. Albert and myself.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any questions or comments?

The chair recognizes the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to have the opportunity to address this Assembly in response to the Speech from the Throne as MLA for the people of Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. Congratulations on your election as Speaker of the House. I understand it is a very challenging role, and I look forward to working together with you and the rest of this Assembly to make this, the 29th Alberta Legislative Assembly, an effective and fair government for all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to introduce myself and the many communities I represent and some of the main issues that I will be addressing over the next few years. I was born and raised in the Two Hills area, more specifically, Duvernay, Alberta. My parents are Billie and Joyce Hanson. My wife, Donna, and I now live on a farm that we purchased from my grandparents' estate in and around the hamlet of Owlseye. Both my wife and I have spent most of our lives living within my constituency. Donna, the daughter of Florence and Joseph Labant, was raised in the Cork Hall area west of St. Paul, and we will be celebrating 34 years of marriage this August.

We are a very multicultural family, with English, Swedish, Ukrainian, and Irish heritage. With the marriage of our son Dean to Sara Dargis in 2011 and the marriage of our daughter Nikita to Adrian Pomerleau this September, we will be adding French to our family of united nations. True Canadians, I think you would agree. Our son Dean is entering his last year of medicine at the U of A, and his wife, Sara, is a practising veterinarian. Our daughter Nikita is an RN at the U of A hospital and is marrying Adrian, a carpenter. I should be well taken care of in my old age.

My grandfather Lesley Tennant was the blacksmith in Owlseye for many years and was married to Elsa Bergman. My children are the fourth generation to live on the property at Owlseye, the fifth if you include that my great-grandfather Lancelot Tennant also resided there for a time.

Owlseye was once a thriving community with three grain elevators, two stores, and two gas stations and was a hub for local farmers to get together at the community hall for celebrations. Now, like many small communities in Alberta, after the loss of the railroad branch lines we were reduced to just a few families.

My great-grandfather Swan Hanson was a successful farmer in both the Glendon and Fort Saskatchewan areas and was a true pioneer. Records show him settling here prior to 1905, while Alberta was still considered Rupert's Land. I have very strong ties to this area and am very proud to be here representing the people and communities of the Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills constituency.

I represent a number of very interesting and unique communities. This is one of the larger constituencies in the province and has a very diverse economy, including agriculture, oil and gas, tourism, and innovative technologies. We are also home to four First Nations: Beaver Lake, Heart Lake, Saddle Lake, and Whitefish Lake. We cover two treaty areas, treaties 6 and 8. There are also two Métis settlements, Kikino and Buffalo Lake, within my constituency. These communities add an incredible historic richness to our cultural diversity. I was very proud to have received my very first eagle feather at a recent graduation at Portage College in a ceremony conducted by Elder McGillivray. It was a very moving experience.

Our communities share a very long history in the province of Alberta, a few of them from before we even became a province in 1905. The Lac La Biche Mission was established in 1853, making it one of the oldest established communities in Alberta. Lac La Biche is a very vibrant community with a proud history and a strong base in tourism and agriculture as well as being a major hub for the oil and gas industry of northeastern Alberta.

There are a few small neighbouring communities in that area as well: Plamondon, Venice, and Hylo. I recently visited Venice for their annual Venice days and discovered they were celebrating 101 years of Italians settling in that area. This event is held the first Sunday in June, and I would recommend the fresh pasta dinner to anyone.

The people of Lac La Biche are, obviously, also very patient. Here it goes: they have waited for 10 years to get a proper dialysis unit in the hospital and have been putting up with a broken-down bus in the parking lot as a stopgap for the past four years. That's news to everyone, I bet. In that same hospital they have been patiently waiting for AHS to replace the therapeutic bathtub, that quit four years ago. A new one has not been installed despite the community raising funds for it and purchasing it three years ago. It's been sitting in a crate ever since. You will be hearing a lot about these issues in the upcoming months and years if need be. I will not let up until they're fixed.

Down in the southwest quadrant of my extensive constituency we have many smaller communities, mostly settled by Ukrainian immigrants in the early 1900s. There are a string of them running along highway 45 and the railroad: Willingdon, Hairy Hill, Two Hills, Beauvallon, Musidora, Myrnam, and Derwent. These mostly farming communities still maintain strong ties to their proud Ukrainian heritage.

In recent years the town of Two Hills and the surrounding area have seen an influx of Mennonite families, who have served to revitalize this community. The increase in population also comes with increased infrastructure demands. The Mennonite community has been promised a new school for some years now, and indeed construction was started two years ago. However, the project is fraught with difficulties that have made me conclude that the project should be scrapped and renewed in a safe location. Construction is currently halted due to structural failures, before the walls have even gone up.

The issues with this project include that the site is built on an artesian well, there are methane buildup issues underneath the new school, and there will be no room for a playground or staff parking because the school is being built on the existing schoolyard, with zero room to grow. Finally, the school is designed to house 500 students while current enrolment sits at 650. This community deserves a safe school that will support community growth. The existing plan does not serve the needs of the community. It is unsafe and needs to be halted immediately. You'll be hearing a lot more about this from me as well.

Following east along the North Saskatchewan, we have Heinsburg, Lindbergh, and Elk Point. Lindbergh is home to the Windsor salt plant, that was established in approximately 1948. The Elk Point area was settled around 1908, and in 1955 10,000 people showed up at Elk Point to witness the opening of the bridge over the North Saskatchewan River, huge numbers for 1955. The Elk Point area has experienced significant growth over the past decade due to rich oil and gas resources. Two trading posts, Fort George and Buckingham House, were established along the North Saskatchewan River in that area in 1792.

The town of St. Paul originally was settled as a Métis colony in 1896 and incorporated into the village of Saint-Paul des Métis in 1912. It is home to a very strong francophone community as well as an ever-increasing diversity of cultures as we welcome new immigrants from all countries.

The St. Paul area is well known for its abundance of lakes and wetlands, all of which deserve our stewardship and protection. Water is our future. The St. Paul area also has many smaller hamlets such as Ashmont, Mallaig, Lafond, Vilna, Lottie Lake, St. Vincent, St. Lina, Spedden, Bellis, St. Edouard, and, of course, Owlseye, my hometown. The village of Vilna claims the world's largest mushrooms, beautifully constructed by a welder-craftsman friend of mine, Richard Hawiuk, and it's definitely worth stopping in if you're ever going down highway 28.

The people in my constituency are very hard working, whether in the extensive oil and gas industry, agriculture, or the many other support services that make up a true community. They are very generous people, which can be shown by our many volunteer groups and charities. For instance, the hamlet of Mallaig hosts an event every August long weekend called Haying in the 30's to raise money for a cancer support group of the same name, started by a great man in our area, Edgar Corbiere.

Haying in the 30's is celebrating 16 years this August. The weekend is very entertaining and showcases farming as it was done by early Albertans, by hand and by horse. It's very interesting, and the trip is worth while. What I love about this organization is that it is one hundred per cent volunteer, meaning that 100 cents out of every donated dollar go to support people diagnosed with cancer to help with unexpected costs and to show that the community cares. There are a lot of organizations out there that could take a lesson from Mr. Corbiere's vision.

My constituency is also a valuable resource to all Albertans, with many lakes and recreational areas. Our fishing and hunting opportunities are second to none. The people of this constituency deserve good representation and support from their provincial government. As an area that accesses and holds large natural resources, we deserve reliable, reasonable access to health care and emergency services. The loss of medevac access to the municipal airport in Edmonton was an insult to all northern Alberta people and the industry involved out there. We have had to fight to keep hospitals open in communities that have grown significantly and that support thousands of uncounted workers that support the oil and gas industry and live here temporarily but are not considered when our needs are analyzed from bureaucrats' offices in Edmonton.

We deserve support for our local schools and infrastructure that recognizes the significant contribution this area provides to the provincial economy. Our infrastructure was not designed for the growth we have experienced, and we can no longer be ignored. Schools need to be built. Highways need to be maintained and upgraded. We deserve support for seniors, to whom we owe so much, and I will work toward local seniors' facilities that respect the needs and traditions of our elders in their own communities.

I am very proud to have been chosen to represent the people of Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, and I hope that during my time at the Legislature my work will improve the future for this constituency and all Albertans.

Thank you for this opportunity.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My comment, actually, is to congratulate the member on an excellent presentation. I do want to echo his appreciation for the Haying in the 30's organization. As an oncologist at the Cross Cancer Institute I'm very aware of the excellent work that they do. They are the most selfless and highly motivated individuals in this province, I believe. I really do appreciate it in my work.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

If the House might allow me, we need more of that kind of comment across the hall.

Dr. Turner: If you want me to, I could say some more.

The Speaker: But only when I ask you to stand up. Hon. member, I have you on a list that indicates you would like to speak in addition to the question's answer. Is that correct?

3:30

Dr. Turner: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I'm prepared.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Dr. Turner: Sorry; I misunderstood you. I have trouble understanding English, I guess.

I really appreciate this opportunity to speak in response to the Lieutenant Governor's Speech from the Throne. That speech was one of the highlights of my life, being able to participate in hearing it. I am celebrating my 67th birthday today, and I can say that for about 60 years I have been interested in political life. One of my earliest recollections of my father, who was a strong supporter of another party, was his disappointment in hearing the results of the election that saw Mr. Diefenbaker assume a minority government in, I believe, 1957 or '56. I have remained eager to see the defeat of Conservatives ever since.

I do want to speak in response to the Speech from the Throne because it really invigorated me. It motivated me. It is a pathway for the future of this province. We are going to see change in this province. We're going to see the public services of this province elevated to a level that we Albertans deserve. That's the promise that the Speech from the Throne gave us. I think our job as legislators in this Assembly is to make sure that that vision is fulfilled. To fulfill it, we need to look carefully at the way our tax monies are spent. I'm in complete accord with the members of the opposition in wanting to review boards and commissions and make sure that all of the management of our important public services are administered in the best way. In my opinion the best way is a publicly administered system that is publicly accountable and which gives the best possible service to all of us Albertans.

It is evident that I'm interested in health care. I have spent the last 38 years – and it's almost my anniversary of arriving in Edmonton. I chose to come to Edmonton because Edmonton and Alberta had a cancer program, that was actually started through the foresight of a Social Credit government. Mr. W.W. Cross, after whom the Cross Cancer Institute is named, was the Health minister in the Aberhart government, I believe, and he established the Alberta Cancer Board. The Alberta Cancer Board, until the previous government destroyed it, was a model in the world for a comprehensive cancer service.

In the Alberta Cancer Board I joined with nurses and technicians and hospital cleaners and secretaries as well as advanced nurse practitioners and clinical researchers. I could go on and on. We are a team, and our team is focused on providing the best possible care for all of our patients. Any patient that shows up at the Cross Cancer Institute can count on me advocating for them if they're my patient or that whole team advocating for them.

When I was running in the by-election and in the general election, I would say at the door that I really wanted to see health care in general be modelled on what the cancer program does. I still am of that opinion, and I've been in discussion with the Minister of Health and Seniors as to how we can promote that model: teamwork, accountability, making sure that we provide world-class service. No patient in Alberta needs to go to the Mayo Clinic to get better care. We can provide superb cancer services in this province by Albertans for Albertans.

One of my great privileges has been to do a lot of clinical research over the years. In fact, I was the site leader at the Cross Cancer Institute for clinical research for several years. I enjoyed that work because it allowed me to be able to give my patients access to medicines and other treatments that they might not otherwise have access to, but it also was a way for us oncologists to tell the government, or at least the health service, what the evidence was that would support getting this particular treatment in place in this province.

Now, to do clinical research, you need a big team as well. You need statisticians. You need people that can keep data, basically IT specialists. You need people that are experts in ethics. We have to be able to consent our patients, and those patients have to be able to understand what's going on. Sometimes we have to do it in another language so that they truly understand. We have to be very careful with that. We have to be very conscious of things like confidentiality and privacy, and I think that's something that all of us as legislators need to be paying attention to as well.

You may have heard over the years that I actually went outside the system at times to advocate for my patients. I advocated within the last year and a half for the addition of a medicine called brentuximab, which is a monoclonal antibody treatment that is very, very effective for a form of Hodgkin's lymphoma, and I had a patient who desperately needed this medication. So what I had to do was to marshal all of the evidence that I could get from the medical literature, and then I went through our tumour group in the cancer program and was able to get their support for this. Despite that, the powers that be that were in place at the time decided that we Albertans couldn't afford it. So to get further action on that, I did go to the media and made a public appeal, and that public appeal was successful. I can tell you that that patient as well as several other patients have benefited from the addition of brentuximab to the list. I'm very proud of that sort of achievement, and it's the sort of thing that all health care workers in this province will be doing and can do if they're given the appropriate environment.

As I said, I'm a very proud Albertan. I'm here by choice. I came from the United States and made a conscious choice to come into Alberta. I'm still proud of the fact that I came to Alberta. I'm particularly proud of the fact that we had such a fantastic throne speech, that is going to help all achieve the sort of satisfaction that I have.

I want to turn just for a few moments to what the other members have done, and I really want to compliment the people that have given their responses, their maiden speeches. I've enjoyed every one of them. I'm humbled to stand here and speak because my experience is only one of the 87 that exist in this Legislature, and I'm really looking forward to working with all the legislators in this Assembly.

I was born 67 years ago, actually in the hospital in Brandon. I'm a prototypical baby boom baby. In fact, the boom was on – and I have sympathy with the previous speaker's situation. The Brandon hospital was so busy that my bassinet was a peach basket, so I spent the first few days of my life in a peach basket, apparently. I don't recall that. I think that some of the pressures that we're seeing on the health care system now really reflect what was going on in 1948 or 1950, in that era.

I spent the first nine years of my life on a farm in southwest Manitoba. I still have an ownership interest in that farm, and when agricultural issues come up, I don't want to be excluded from their discussion just because I'm a big-city representative. One of the things I learned from growing up on the farm is that farmers are very capable and they can achieve lots of things, but they do need the government's help from time to time. They do need things like, for instance, something that we had in 1948 that we don't have now, a wheat board to help us sell our wheat, which was very important on that grain farm in southwest Manitoba. We also need water regulations, and we need regulations that control pests in our animals. You cannot farm without some regulations, and I would say that we cannot live as citizens of this province without some degree of help from the government in making sure that health and safety and financial services and pensions and hospitals and schools are run in a collective way to make sure that everything is done well.

I mentioned that I grew up in southwestern Manitoba. I had the great opportunity to go to McGill University. I lived for eight years in Montreal, and then I went to the United States to complete my training in hematology and medical oncology. I still practise, although I would hasten to mention to all members that unless you have a cancer problem, I'm not much use to you. The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo is probably a much more capable person for dealing with medical emergencies than I am, and we have several nurses, at least in our caucus, that, again, would be much more capable of dealing with the colds and flus. I did help one of my colleagues with a nosebleed the other day, which I'm pleased with. I didn't submit a bill either.

I want to turn just because we were talking about collegiality in this Assembly. There was another instance of collegiality today that I participated in that I want to bring to the attention of the whole. The Member for Strathmore-Brooks was expounding on all the rodeos and exhibitions in his area, and he mentioned that there was going to be a running of the bulls. Immediately – I tell you, immediately – I sent him a note saying: what would I have to pay to see him running with the bulls? In fact, I would pay for the Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills member to run with the bulls and maybe the Drumheller member to run with the bulls.

An Hon. Member: We'll all pitch in.

Dr. Turner: That's right. I think some of the repetitive questioning might be diminished.

I am a proud husband, a proud father. I'm actually a grandfather now, since I'm 67. My wife, Joan, is a professor of oncology at the University of Alberta. She is a radiobiologist. She claims that she is the real doctor of the family since she earned her PhD, whereas I'm a glorified tradesman. You can imagine the discussions over the dinner table. One of the things that Joan has accomplished is that she was an active member of the 35-and-over soccer teams that we have a plethora of here in Edmonton. In fact, she played on the Riverbenders team. For those of you that don't know, we have more vintage – i.e., 35-plus – women playing soccer in this city than other place in the world, apparently. You can see the kind of support that this has led to in terms of getting the world-class tournaments that we're enjoying right now.

My children are both doctors. One is a surgeon, like me a glorified tradesman. The other is a genome scientist. They are the products of what I consider to be the best education system in the world, Edmonton public school board, and I say that without any reservation. Edmonton public and, I daresay, the Calgary board of education, the Catholic equivalents, and the school boards in rural Alberta produce some of the best students. When my daughter went to McGill University to follow in her father's footsteps, she was shocked to see that she was about two years ahead of Ontario and Quebec students at the same level.

Like the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, who unfortunately is not here, I have a Scottish grandmother, and I actually listened to my Scottish . . .

Mr. Strankman: Point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of Members

Mr. Strankman: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. It's not proper to refer to a member that's not in the House.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I believe the hon. member is correct.

Dr. Turner: I certainly withdraw the statement and apologize.

Debate Continued

The Speaker: Hon. member, I must tell you that many of the points you were making were, I think, well received by all of the House, but your time is up.

Are there any questions or comments to the hon. member? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. member if he could finish his comments with respect to his Scottish grandmother.

The Speaker: Before the member rises to do that, I think we need a unanimous vote to allow that to happen. Is that agreed? [interjections] That was a . . .

Mr. Mason: Oh, a joke.

The Speaker: My apologies.
Any questions or comments?

Dr. Turner: Sorry; am I allowed to complete this? Thank you. Thank you to the legislators for allowing me to do that.

My grandmother and grandfather emigrated from Glasgow about a hundred years ago. They came to Manitoba and worked hard, and their values were the values that I have, of valuing education as well as hard work and commitment to the community. I am very appreciative of their influence on me, and I thank the members for the indulgence of allowing me to express that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Any questions or comments now? The hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. First, I'd like to congratulate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud on his maiden speech. While I respectfully disagree with many of the things you said, particularly in regard to the wheat board, I would like to just briefly recognize my good friend the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, who fought very hard to see that ridiculousness stop, up to and in fact even being in prison to stop that.

With that said, though, I would like to just acknowledge the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. While we may disagree on many things, I credit him with keeping a very dear friend of mine alive, who I had the privilege of speaking with this morning. The work that he does for patients across Alberta with cancer is amazing, and I thank him for that service.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I hesitate to interrupt because the tone sounds so optimistic.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must confess, though, that I'm a little bit unsure. I was going to thank Ms Notley, et cetera, but she isn't in the House, so is it appropriate? [interjections] I'm sorry. That was wrong altogether.

The Speaker: You withdraw the comment? Thank you.

Mr. Orr: I'll just skip over it. I was going to get through congratulations, but we'll let it go.

Sometimes I'm accused of being a dreamer. I've been often drawn toward a dream for a better world, and I couldn't help but notice that the Speech from the Throne was somewhat like that as well. The difficulty, though, for all of us is that getting from dreamer to doer is a distance. Bridging the difference between the way things are and the way they could or should be is challenging. The great people in this world are the ones who see a better tomorrow and actually help to create it. So I do believe in the good land, the good life, and the good society, except, of course, if somebody is trying to sell it to me. Then I have to admit I'm a bit skeptical. But that's why I've always sought to be both a community and a capacity builder in our world.

During the campaign we heard quite clearly that math is hard, but the painfully obvious thing was that politics, in fact, is much harder. It's never going to be easy, it will always be a challenge, and it wasn't easy for those who came before us. I think of my four grandparents. One each was Irish, Danish, Norwegian, and German. They came here to a new land with incredible challenges. My grandfather arrived by himself, a 15-year-old, in about 1911. My mother's family came to a homestead and built a sod shelter for the winter of 1906 close to Drumheller. So life is a challenge for all of us. I'm not the first in my family to actually serve in a Legislative Assembly. I follow in the footsteps of my great uncle, who spent 20 years as a state senator in the North Dakota Legislature, and after him his daughter Ruth became the first woman Lieutenant Governor of North Dakota.

I've been fairly self-reflective in life, and finally, by 60, I think I've begun to figure myself out just a little bit. One day in a foggy blaze of brilliance six Ws that define my self-understanding began to emerge, and the alliteration, by the way, has helped me not forget who I am, at least not so far, anyway.

Wilderness. My refuge is the wilderness. I prefer to holiday in remote and wild places.

Wood. I love wood: its sturdiness, its diversity, its smell, its feel, its colour. For strength and beauty it's a wonderful artisan material.

Work. I get a great deal of reward from work, actually. It gives me purpose and identity and camaraderie. It draws out of me creativity and learning and growth. I actually get up excited in the morning to go to work.

Words. Words are the bodies of ideas that awaken and speak to me. Words are visions crafted with care. We travel by words into one another's minds and souls.

A woman. A certain woman, Donna Marie, is in many ways the very centre of my life. We've been married 39 years as of Friday. Together we have three wonderful children and now seven grandchildren.

Lastly, worship. I can't pretend to know much about God because He is, after all, the great mystery, but I do know that all worship begins with a sense of incredible wonder and awe. I share some of that because I actually truly believe that many of the people in my riding would embrace similar values and self-understandings, although each would be unique to themselves.

I'm truly delighted to live amongst and represent the 40,000 stable, hardy people of Lacombe-Ponoka, which actually should soon, I hope, become Lacombe-Blackfalds-Ponoka, since Blackfalds has grown larger than Ponoka now. Lacombe-Ponoka is in the central parkland region of Alberta. It is lush, verdant, and fecund, one of the most fertile and amenable zones of the province. West it's too cold, and rocky east is too dry for good farming; the central corridor is just right, but that's made it a place of conflicting visions.

The people of Maskwacis, Bear Hills, where there are now four treaty reserves, found berries and abundant game and wholesome life there. Ponoka is a word from the word for elk. These Cree and Blackfoot peoples have their vision of life. I've met some of their elders. I know some of their people, good people, finding a new vision for life.

Next there came a wave of farm settlers with their vision. They settled in this area early because it was the best, but that has also put it at risk. Prosperity came, and roads and industrial and residential development are paving over the very best agricultural land in the province. Should we not preserve land and protect farming? Food does not originate in grocery stores. Farmers are getting harassed by those who don't like the smell or the noise or the big equipment on the roads. Increased regulation and legislation is not often supportive of farming, yet agriculture is absolutely one of our most sustainable industries. It contributes to our economy independent of the oil and gas treadmill.

Food production and processing in Lacombe county includes cereal grains and oil grains, seeds, and many huge produce greenhouses that have been erected in recent years. The Alix malt plant ships malt to brewers across the globe. Beef, cattle, hogs, chicken, eggs, and milk production are all intensive in my area. Alberta produces 44 per cent of all of the beef in Canada, and the most concentrated production is in central Alberta.

Rural communities contribute something else, generations of strapping young men and resourceful women. The labour shortage for oil and gas and construction workers would be a lot worse without the steady stream of family farm progeny, but rural communities, schools, and health care are often not priorities for or even understood by massive, centralized political bureaucracies.

Just give rural people the power and the resources to manage their own lives, and they will thank you for it. These are some of the concerns of rural Alberta people.

Then there are the needs and the visions of industry and business. Understand that Lacombe-Ponoka is bustling with job- and wealth-generating industriousness. Joffe petrochemicals plant is an example of an $8 billion value-added oil and gas industry in Alberta. It is the largest single enterprise in the riding, and it's currently in the middle of another $1 billion expansion. I have a personal interest in that plant because my father was a site manager for one of the early expansions in the 1980s, but there are other numerous gas and oil plants at Prentiss, Content Bridge, and Haynes. There are a whole number of secondary oil and gas service and manufacturing small businesses, "small" meaning up to 50 employees, and there's yet another group of agricultural manufacturing and service businesses with world-wide sales.

Then there are the urban centres and an ever-increasing demand for acreages. Urban centres of Lacombe, Blackfalds, and Ponoka have been facing tremendous growth. They have worked together to develop regional infrastructure. The north Red Deer River regional water commission now supplies water to all these major communities. There is still the need to complete a regional wastewater treatment facility, which we hope the provincial government will be able to proceed with soon. It's urgent because the amount of untreated water now overflowing into the Red Deer River is unacceptable. There's an especially great need for a reliable and adequate funding model for municipal governments. Blackfalds, as I mentioned earlier in the day, doesn't have a registry office. The whole town struggles with this.

But the areas where the challenges of competing visions will most arise are the areas of land and water use, rights, and management. The previous government enacted what many of my people consider to be terrible land legislation. It's unacceptable, and it needs to be repealed or amended. I've been to surface rights and Synergy land-use meetings. I've sat and listened to the competing visions for water at the Red Deer River watershed annual meeting. These are areas of concern. Our aboriginal peoples of Maskwacis, rural agricultural communities, urbanites, and business communities all have their own visions, and it's only as we listen with respect and learn to work together that we will build that better future.

Of course, there are extremely important concerns regarding health and education that we're all aware of. The culture in these institutions just does not seem to be healthy. Both have become – the word I've heard is "dysfunctional." Both are so frustrating to work in that teachers and nurses whom I know personally are pulling their hair out. These are just simply not best-place-to-work environments. Home care and seniors' care facilities are insufficient and would open up hospital beds.

We are proud of the Centennial centre in Ponoka, Alberta's world-class centre for brain injury and mental health. We're also thankful for private education, specifically the benefits socially and financially from the Canadian University College in Lacombe.

The people in Lacombe and Ponoka are industrious, productive, and innovative. Good leaders have arisen from among them in the past. Part of our heritage there would be Edward Michener, elected in Lacombe as the Leader of the Official Opposition from 1910 to '17. His son the Rt. Hon. Roland Michener, 20th Governor General of Canada, was born in Lacombe. Provincial Premier John Brownlee served in this riding from '21 to '35. Irene Parlby, the first woman in Alberta to be appointed a cabinet minister and one of the Famous Five, was from Alix, again part of this riding. Good leaders will arise from this riding again. We need to give them the resources and the authority to manage their own lives, and they will thrive.

I would be remiss, too, if I did not point out the thriving art and culture of our area. There are bands and fiddle contests and choral groups and comedians. Gord Bamford, a country star, hails from Lacombe, as does Anna Maria Kaufmann, a world-renowned soprano. Oh, and there are the dance studios and the visual artists and arts in every village, from the murals of Lacombe to the encaustic wax painters, pottery studios, a woodworkers' guild, soap makers, you name it. And there's cowboy culture. The Ponoka Stampede is second only to the Calgary Stampede, or if you want something a little different, you could go to Long Ears Days in August in the village of Tees, where mule and donkey owners meet from across the province and hold their own unique rodeo.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for a few moments to brag about the central corridor riding of Lacombe-Ponoka and to outline some of the needs that I hope to address in the coming days in this House. These are the dreams for a better life of my people. Thank you to the people who have honoured me with their trust and trusteeship. Thank you especially to those who helped to get me elected, and thank you to my wife, who has walked with me, knocked on doors, and encouraged me in every way.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I noted the comment that you made about where you vacation in wild and remote places. The Speaker noted that, and we hope that you're not on a vacation now. Questions or comments?

Hearing none, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to move that we adjourn debate on the Speech from the Throne for today.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 3

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015 (No. 2)

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, please.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today to move third reading of Bill 3, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015 (No. 2).

The Speaker: Are there any other members to speak? The hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in this Chamber to discuss this government's spend, spend, spend package. Bundled together in Bill 3, the interim supply act – the NDP is referring to it as a minibudget, which must refer to the details provided. . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish to correct the hon. member. It has been the Wildrose opposition that has repeatedly referred to this as a minibudget. It is not. It is an appropriation bill and not a budget in any form.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, thank you so much. I didn't quite catch the citation that the Government House Leader was rising on. However, I'm guessing that it was a slight misstatement by the hon. member, and I'd be happy to withdraw it on his behalf.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I didn't hear "given" before it. Thank you.

The hon. member may now proceed.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Given.

Mr. Nixon: I don't have to do that. I know the people in my riding want to know what is in this budget. Heck, I'd like to know. This feels like the NDP is writing a blank cheque with no details. I can't help but feel surprised, Mr. Speaker: three hours to debate $18 billion of spending, and the details are so thin. We have three numbers from each ministry to ask questions on. The minister's answers are vague. Frankly, the Finance minister himself doesn't seem to be clear about how much money is being voted on. With so many questions and such little time to discuss them, this government is hiding in the shadows. Why won't this government open up the books and let us know what is in this budget?

Albertans would like to know why this minibudget is being rushed through the Legislature without a full debate session, why this bill is hardly being publicly discussed for all Albertans to hear. My wife and I spent more time debating what truck we were going to buy this past fall than this government is spending talking about this budget. The thing is that this isn't even their budget; it's former Premier Alison Redford's. That's three Premiers ago, Mr. Speaker. Maybe there's another sky palace in there. We don't know. They won't show us the numbers. Frankly, I can't for the life of me understand why anyone, never mind a government that got elected on change and transparency, would want to align themselves with not only a budget of a widely unpopular Premier but of a different party altogether. Is it possible they don't know what is in the budget? I'm starting to think that may be the case. The communications from the Finance minister and his team certainly would allude to that. How much money is being added? Which of the many numbers is it? Shouldn't we know how much taxpayers are on the hook for?

Are the NDP playing politics with taxpayer dollars? How come they can't commit to a day when the budget will be posted? September seems reasonable, Mr. Speaker, tons of time since the NDP became government on the 5th of May, a whole summer with the Legislature not sitting, time to consult with stakeholders. Why do we keep hearing dates like November, October, December? I'm hesitant to suggest this has something to do with maybe a federal election. Do the NDP have to wait until the federal NDP come out with their platform before they can write their own budget? Are we tied to what the NDP activists in Ottawa think? I sure hope not, but a budget after the election sure would lead me to believe it.

I'm here to help. I want the best for Albertans. We all want open, transparent government that is accountable to all Albertans. I'm keen to help to get a budget to take to my riding and explain to the citizens of Alberta, but right now all we have are three numbers and no answers.

Thank you very much, Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to speak to Bill 3. Personally, I'm truly amazed at how quickly this new government has lost all perspective when it comes to the value of a tax dollar. I can appreciate that some of the members across the way have never had to monitor a payroll, overlook expenses, or manage a budget, but it requires transparency, openness, and a dose of reality for what we can and cannot afford. When we're talking about $18 billion, it's easy to lose perspective.

When looking at the interim supply act, even a million dollars suddenly seems to be not a lot of money, but it roughly equates to almost 400,000 person hours for a worker in the $25 per hour range who pays 10 per cent of their wage to income tax. Four hundred thousand hours. So every time we mention a million tax dollars in this Chamber, think about an Albertan making $25 an hour for approximately 200 years to provide that money to the government. Now it appears that a billion dollars is just another number. Maybe if we say it as 18 thousand million dollars, it will put it back into perspective. Eighteen thousand million dollars. You can do the math to figure out how many years it would take a person to do that. You are going to vote on spending 18 thousand million dollars of your constituents' money, when some of you may not even know how to balance your chequebook, on a budget that has provided this House zero details on where the money is coming from or where it is going. Good luck explaining your position to your constituents over the coming months.

Thank you.

4:10

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any others who would like to speak to the bill?

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to reiterate what this is and what this is not because some hon. members opposite are misrepresenting the situation. First of all, this is not a budget. It is not a minibudget. It is a bill of appropriation that allows the government to continue to operate past the end of this month, when the spending authority which was obtained by the previous government runs out. In order to continue to operate the government and to pay the bills and to pay our employees and to maintain the programs that Albertans depend upon, we need to bring forward – clearly, we couldn't prepare a budget in a matter of a few weeks as a brand new government.

So we had two choices. We could have brought forward the appropriation bill, which we did, and have it debated in the House and give the opposition an opportunity to debate the spending of the government over the next five months, or we could have used special warrants, which would have essentially just borrowed the money to keep going without reference to the Assembly. Those were the only two choices we had, Mr. Speaker. We chose, I think, the riskier option, which is to bring forward an appropriation bill to the House and face the opposition in order to get authority to continue operating the government of Alberta while we prepared a budget in the fall.

That's the first thing, Mr. Speaker.

Secondly, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has characterized this as a continuation of Alison Redford's budget. Mr. Speaker, that was three Premiers ago, and it is absolutely a false statement that this is somehow based on any budget that was brought forward by that particular Premier. This is, as we have said, based on the appropriation bill that was brought forward by the previous government. That was not Alison Redford.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make a point. I think that though there is sharp disagreement and, you know, a high level of criticism on the opposition side with respect to this particular piece of legislation, we have maintained a very good tone overall in the Assembly, much different, markedly different, than the previous Assemblies of which I've been a part. But when members start making false statements in order to create propaganda for their side in the House, then that breaks down. I just want to caution hon. members on the other side that if they want to characterize this budget in clearly incorrect terms, if they wish to rewrite history, then the tone of this place will not last the way it has been. I just want to provide that as a caution.

Mr. Speaker, this appropriation bill does a number of things, and we've talked about that. It provides additional money so that we can ensure that there are teachers for expansion in the schools, that we can replace the cuts that were in the previous government's budget for health care and postsecondary education and human services.

It also provides funding in order to cancel certain taxes and charges that the previous government's budget contained. For example, the health care levy is cancelled by this bill, and that's a significant amount of money that would have been brought in. It was a tax on the middle class, a significant tax increase on the middle class which this government is cancelling.

There were also many different charges for different things – birth certificates, death certificates, all of those things – where there were increases in the previous government's budget that are cancelled. That also requires money to compensate for the loss of revenue that would have otherwise been obtained.

So that's what this bill actually does, and it provides the funding for the government to continue with those changes for the next five months. We will prepare a budget, which will be fully discussed and debated in much greater detail than this particular appropriation bill.

I just wanted to leave the members with those thoughts, to put this in context. I know that the opposition needs to create a certain narrative, but I would urge members opposite to make sure that the narrative is based on an honest difference of opinion and not on falsification of the record of the government or of the history that precedes it, Mr. Speaker.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 2

An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue

[Adjourned debate June 22: Mr. Ceci]

The Speaker: Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and address Bill 2. We've heard a great deal about the possible impact of this bill, from deterring foreign investment to being the nail in the coffin of the Alberta advantage, from driving companies away from the province to fears that the wealthy who earn more than $125,000 per year will file their taxes elsewhere or just move.

Mr. Speaker, one thing that we have not heard too much about is the impact on everyday Albertans. I would like to raise some concerns of my constituents as an example of how this bill is going to impact the economy, stability, and the direct effects that this bill will have on hard-working Albertans. I'm from the Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Bonnyville riding – sorry, not the Bonnyville riding; the Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills riding, but I have worked up in the Bonnyville area. We are south of what most people think of as the oil sands area in Fort McMurray. In our part of the province crude oil is extracted by pumping steam downhole by using either cyclic steam stimulation or SAGD to recover the oil product. Projects in my riding are smaller than the mines surrounding Fort McMurray although there are some very large companies active in the area, including Canadian Natural Resources, MEG Energy, Cenovus Energy, and Imperial Oil.

With the low oil prices we have seen this year, several big projects are on hold and much of the drilling has been cancelled and pushed back to the third quarter of 2016. For instance, CNRL deferred the $1.45 billion Kirby north project near Lac La Biche, and MEG Energy has reduced their 2015 budget by three-quarters. Meanwhile, Cenovus is holding off on developing long-term projects elsewhere in northern Alberta.

The area has a sizable population of temporary residents who've come to work in the region and live in hotels and camps. The 2013 Lac La Biche municipal census found that this group made up 26 per cent of the county's population of 12,000 people. There have been fears that the lower price for crude oil may force companies to slow down or even outright halt operations. This action would result in fewer customers for local businesses and lower profits. It would also discourage people from moving into the area. So all related industries in the local economy such as housing, car sales, and even groceries will feel the effect. The economy will stagnate at best or crash at worst.

For example, the operations manager at Lac La Biche Transport was reported as saying in January that with the lower prices and reduced workload he may have to start laying off workers. This is now a reality. Their oil field operation is at a standstill, and the freight division is slowing considerably due to that. Oil sands operators hire his company to haul equipment in northeastern Alberta, and he said in an interview with Global News that the business was down by about a quarter compared with the same time the previous year. That was in January, and it's slowed down considerably since then.

There are so many other examples of how the economic base in northeastern Alberta is suffering. MRC Global supplies pipe and fittings and other materials for the oil industry. They have had to lay off staff, and there are many more layoffs to come as the few projects that are still under way start to wind down. Welding companies in the Bonnyville area that I have talked to are reporting that as the big oil companies are cutting back projects and slashing contractor charge-out rates by 10 to 25 per cent – I've seen those; the requests come from the oil companies: slash your charge-out rates by 10 per cent, 15 per cent, 20 per cent, up to 25 per cent, or we won't be hiring you – they face increasing difficulties maintaining their bottom line. This flows down to the workers. Companies have no choice but to cut back hours, slash salaries, or lay off workers. This, of course, will destroy the local economy. Many of the businesses in our part of the province, as across the entire province, rely in one way or another on the oil and gas industry salaries paid to the workers in that industry. Cars, homes, groceries are based on a strong resource industry. The service and supply companies live by the drill bit and unfortunately also die by the drill bit.

Mr. Speaker, that is just the impact of lower oil prices. Most Albertans are used to that boom-and-bust cycle, but many are about to experience it for the very first time. Though there is a lot of concern over the effects of the price of oil, I believe that there is a general sense that this bust will be followed by a boom, as it usually is, and we'll be on track again in time, hopefully soon.

However, I don't think anyone ever expected that at a time of such economic uncertainty, when the lowest oil prices in years are threatening all aspects of our economy, the government would do exactly the thing guaranteed to hurt us even further. Local businesses have already experienced reduced revenue due to the pullback by the oil companies related to oil price reductions. Their rates have been cut, anywhere from 10 to 25 per cent as I mentioned earlier, but now businesses are expected to pay another 2 per cent on their already lowered revenue. The NDP's focus on tax grabs and job-killing royalty hikes is the wrong way to address economic instability. [interjection] That's funny is it? It may be funny to you.

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Please proceed, member.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sorry about that.

The government needs to curb the unbelievable cost that our public service incurs. We do not have a revenue problem. We have a spending problem. Wildrose put out a very reasonable budget during the campaign that would have cut spending without hurting the front-line service delivery. Our plan was to make reductions in budgets over time, and many of those reductions would be from government travel, consultants, advertising, and conference costs. Most reductions have come from ending corporate welfare and cutting middle management in Alberta Health Services and not from eliminating front-line staff. The Wildrose plan pointed out possible savings of over $2 billion, which is more than the NDP government hopes to realize by raising taxes. What's more, the NDP have not been very sure of the expected revenue to be gained from these new taxes and have gone about making all sorts of irresponsible funding promises based on their faulty math.

Mr. Speaker, businesses and Albertans across the province should not be expected to bear the weight of government mismanagement and overspending. You cannot tax your way out of debt, and in trying to do so, this government and this bill are threatening Alberta's competitive edge both here at home and abroad. The government expects Albertans to shoulder the costs, and that is simply unfair. Small and medium-sized businesses continue to be hit from all sides, from reduction in charge-out rates, reduced activity in the oil and gas sectors, and now from increased taxes. The cost of your ill-advised business tax increase will be job losses, reduced salaries, and reduced hourly rates, business and personal bankruptcies, and stagnant economic growth.

The province has experienced record revenue over the last couple of years, not because of royalties alone, but because of the massive amounts of man-hours that have been put in in our construction in the oil and gas industries and the resulting windfall of personal tax paid in the province. In 2015 and 2016 this will not be the case due to the pullback in oil and gas exploration and exploitation. Many projects have been cancelled or put off indefinitely. Contractors have had to reduce rate sheets in order to maintain what contracts are left, resulting in lower wages and layoffs. An increase of business tax by 20 per cent is only going to make a bad situation worse. If this new government is really interested in increasing revenue at the expense of working Albertans, it will do whatever it can to get our construction, oil, and gas people back to work. That is where the real money is, real prosperity now and in the long run. You can have higher taxes if you like, but it will mean nothing if the bulk of your workforce is sitting at home on pokey.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions or observations?

I would recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recognize that our work here in this House involves a certain level of theatre and performance. We are here in part to act out the parts that are assigned to us as representatives of the people in line with the great traditions that proceed us. At times, that involves some drama, whether genuine or feigned, and at times it leads to hyperbole on both sides of the House. That said, I think it's important to note that this bill we are considering today, Bill 2, is not a radical proposition. The proposals put forward in this bill are not unusual, they are not unreasonable, and they are not unprecedented. These amendments to our tax structure do not represent a radical restructuring of our tax system. They will not cause the sky to fall or Alberta's economy to grind to a halt. These changes simply represent a reasonable correction of our fiscal course.

In regard to income tax this bill will return Alberta to the same form of progressive tax structure found in every other province in Canada. In fact, the small percentage of Albertans who will be affected by this bill, those who, like ourselves, earn more than $125,000 a year, will still pay less income tax than in any other province in Canada with the exceptions of Ontario and Newfoundland.

The introduction of the flat tax in 2003 put us on a road of increasing dependence on resource revenues to fund the services that Albertans depend on by replacing a stable source of revenue with one that we could not predict or control. This flat tax played no small part in creating the fiscal difficulties we're dealing with here today. We simply can't continue to depend on the price of oil to determine whether or not we can provide the services and build the hospitals and schools that Albertans need and deserve. The flat tax was simply poor policy, rooted more in ideology and political strategy than in fiscal prudence or considered choice.

As I said, this bill simply corrects that error by restoring the fair, progressive tax structure that we have in every other province in Canada. This is not unreasonable. This is not an unfair overreach on the part of government. This is the change that hundreds of thousands of Albertans voted for; in fact, far more Albertans voted for parties who supported a return to a progressive tax system, 1 million Albertans, to be exact, 70 per cent of everyone who cast a vote. That's a resounding and decided majority. Albertans support a progressive tax system, and that's what this bill delivers.

In regard to the increase in our corporate tax rate a survey conducted by the previous government showed that 69 per cent of respondents favoured increasing the corporate tax rate in Alberta. For years we've maintained some of the lowest taxes in Canada by far, and it's simply not sustainable. We need higher revenues to ensure that there's adequate funding for our social programs, our services, and the infrastructure that we so badly need and that I've heard so many members on both sides of the House advocating for us to build.

Our corporate tax system continues and will continue to be competitive with other provinces. Alberta will continue to be an attractive option for investors thanks to our infrastructure, our cities, our diverse industries, our growing and skilled population, and the many investment opportunities that remain. The Alberta advantage does not lie solely in having the lowest bargain basement rate across the country. It is not unreasonable, it is not unprecedented to ask those corporations, the large, profitable corporations who have benefited from what we as a province have to offer, to pay a little bit more.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or observations? The hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In your words it may not be unreasonable, unusual, radical, or unprecedented, but it is unwise. It may not be unreasonable, unusual, radical, or unprecedented, but it will hurt the economy.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the advice and the concern from across the aisle. As we're well aware, you are here to help. I appreciate your opinion, but I think we'll see. These are the actions that Albertans voted for. We were clear in our platform. We didn't hide this under a bushel. This was out there. Albertans looked at it. As I said, nearly 70 per cent of Albertans who voted voted for a progressive tax structure.

I look forward to seeing this bill implemented, I look forward to seeing this new tax structure put in place, and I look forward to the increased prosperity that we are going to see in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. We're in the five minutes for questions and clarification.

Mr. Hunter: I just have a question. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments of the hon. member. However, my question to you is: can you show me a precedent where $18 billion has been introduced in an interim supply bill?

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, I would note that that question has nothing to do with my comments or with the bill that is currently under consideration.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you. I think it had everything to do with what you said there. You were asking for a precedent. You said you had precedents, so I wanted to find out what precedent that was.

My other question to you. In business we have a competitive and comparative advantage. This is what the Alberta advantage was. When we are the same, where is our comparative or competitive advantage? This is my question to you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question from the hon. member. Alberta still has many advantages. We do not have a sales tax. We do not have a health levy, which is often required to be paid by the employers. We offer a skilled populace. We offer a fantastic place to do business. We offer great resources here available for use and for extraction. These are advantages that still remain, and I don't believe that this small rise in the corporate tax rate is going to cause those to fail.

Mr. Hunter: I guess the only comment that I want to make on this is: you said that we will wait and see. This is a terrible risk – this is a terrible risk – to wait and see. You need to do your studies. You need to make sure that it is grounded on fundamentals that have worked in the past. This is what's going to be able to help Albertans and make them feel comfortable with what you're doing. This is the concern that we have. Now, when you make an argument and say, "We got the mandate when we were in the election," I will remind you that not a majority of people voted for the NDP government. Not a majority. You do have a majority in the House – you do have a majority in the House – and that does allow you the legal right, but it does not give you the moral right to do what you're doing.

Mr. Shepherd: I thank the hon. member for his comments. In terms of looking at what effects this might have, we can always look to B.C., which raised their corporate tax rate and, in the years following, increased the number of jobs. At this point there is speculation on both sides of this issue. Certainly, we've heard plenty from certain economists in Calgary and other individuals who choose to predict doom and gloom. We will see.

In regard to your comment about moral authority we . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, your five minutes have been allocated.

I recognize the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It would seem that the change that some Albertans were so eagerly anticipating when the New Democratic Party was elected is not the change that perhaps they had expected, but it may be the change that, I would argue, a majority of Albertans are fearing. Hoping to be released from the overspending that marked the 44 years of Progressive Conservative government, we thought that we might see a more responsible, long-term approach to fiscal management from the new government. Instead, many are saying that their worst fears are being confirmed.

I talked to a constituent yesterday who phoned me up. He said that what he was seeing and what he was hearing was, in his words, scary. "Two times as much work," he said; "I've had more work than I can handle." Then the price for oil drops. We see that he's having a hard time finding work for his company. He's afraid of the increase in the minimum wage and what that's going to do to his business. These are his words; they're not mine.

Albertans are worried, and I don't think that's a partisan statement. Instead of tackling the real challenge to economic stability in Alberta, instead of attacking a bloated, expensive, and unmanageable public service, we are seeing that the NDP is going to combine the worst of the previous government with its own brand of personal and business tax hikes. Does this NDP government really want to live up to the stereotypes that are out there of the other NDP governments' fiscal mismanagement?

Albertans hoped, we believed that this NDP government would be a unique Alberta variety, and I say that honestly. You have many of Alberta's peoples – they're giving you a chance. What I hear out there is that people are willing to give the hon. Premier – they have a lot of respect for her, and I've heard over and over at times that they're willing to give you the chance, but they don't want a rehash of Ontario or some of the other failed experiments. So we're hoping, the people of Alberta are hoping that in this New Democratic government ideology will not trump proven practices and policies of fiscal conservatism and restraint.

Those of us who've lived in Alberta for any length of time have become accustomed to a boom-and-bust cycle. It plagues a resource-based economy. We understand that, but we fear that we're going to move from a boom-and-bust to a bust-and-bust cycle, with oil prices as low as they have been. We've seen the effects of that across the entire economy. Last November the Alberta NDP leader said that it will be families who will pay the price for the PC government's failure to responsibly manage the resource revenues, and according to our Premier the governing PC Party claimed that there was a crisis every time oil prices dropped. Our Premier is quoted in a newspaper article, stating, "It's time we finally moved to a more fair, stable, predictable revenue system." I think we've just heard you try to defend that comment. Fair enough.

Albertans were forewarned that an NDP government would focus on the wrong end of the equation when attempting to address the economic instability based on a falling oil price. Instead of addressing overspending, they focused on raising revenues by raising taxes on businesses and families. We're going into an economic slide and we raise taxes, yet the reality of the extent of the new government's misunderstandings of economic principles and potential mismanagement is only just now becoming clear.

We see a perfect storm coming: low oil prices; lower than expected revenues; the most expensive government in all of Canada; the $500 million miscalculation in revenues required to meet spending requirements; business tax hikes, which make Alberta a much less attractive place to invest for both international and national companies; and eventually an increase in debt. While there is very little anyone can do about the price of crude oil, government can and it must develop sound fiscal policies to ensure that the economy stays competitive and strong in the long run.

At the very time that the government needs to be attracting investors, you intend instead to scare them away by hiking business taxes. Alberta currently has the lowest business tax rate in the country; however, under this bill our tax rate will tie with Manitoba, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan and will be 1 per cent higher than Quebec. At the very time that the government needs to be encouraging business start-up, they are putting obstacles in the way by increasing business taxes. At a time when the government needs to be increasing our competitive edge in the international economy, they are putting the final nail in the Alberta advantage. At the very time that the government needs to stimulate investor confidence, they instead are doing the very thing guaranteed to steer investors out of Alberta. At the very time that the government should be addressing a spending problem, instead they throw taxpayer dollars on the fire.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta runs the most expensive government in all of Canada, and Wildrose believes that we need to make government more efficient before we jump to any other serious suggestions for how to deal with the economy. Wildrose put out a very moderate budget during the campaign that would not have impacted front-line services. For instance, with a reduction of 50 per cent of the AHS managers, consultants, travel, advertising, and conference budgets, we projected a savings of approximately $300 million. This is roughly the same size as the damaging business tax being implemented. That is only one approach to addressing a volatile economic climate while preserving a standard of life and the level of service.

It is not too late to back away from this disastrous idea to raise business and personal income tax. Wildrose would be happy to help the government to find a more workable, long-term solution. To paraphrase a famous songwriter, at least in my circles: the NDP are mortgaging Alberta's future to pay for the PC bankrupt past.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, questions and observations? The hon. Government House Leader.

4:50

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the hon. members opposite and their view. They have a very different view, of course, in our view a very ideological view. Of course, to them it just looks like common sense, I suppose, but from over here it looks like dogma.

Now, the hon. members opposite have repeated over and over again that they're here to help. Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to tell them that I'm here to help, too. The hon. members have been raising the issue. They don't want to have any increase in revenues, whether it be taxes or royalties. They don't want to borrow any money, yet there is a huge gap between expenditures and revenues.

They claim that this can all be corrected by eliminating waste and mismanagement, cutting down on the bureaucracy, and so on. I severely doubt that.

At the same time as they're asking us to curtail spending in a major way, billions of dollars actually, they're asking for our help, and I'm happy to try to provide that if I can. They're asking for help with their crumbling hospitals; for example, in Wainwright. They want road improvements in Little Bow, Chestermere. They want a new school in Two Hills, and they want a new registry office in Blackfalds. That's just a very, very short list of the requests that have been made in this House since we began sitting just a bit more than a week ago.

Mr. Speaker, you can't have it both ways. If the hon. members want these things – and they are important things. I'm not diminishing that in any way. Those are things that their constituents need and want and which the government, if it can, will help to provide. But if they insist on heading down the path of a huge, huge cut in government expenditures, which is what they're saying that they want to see, these things will not be possible. I think they have an obligation to be straight with their constituents. If they want the policies that they say that they want fiscally, then many of these things will never be fulfilled. I think they have an obligation to be straight with their voters.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, thank you so much, and thank you to the hon. member for your comments. They are much appreciated.

I'll just take a brief moment here. The Wildrose has been very clear that we would take the steps to release a priority spending list. Never once have we said that we would not spend, just that we would undertake the appropriate steps to ensure that the spending which is done by the oversized bureaucracy here in the province of Alberta is done in a much more responsible manner.

For the hon. member to rise and say, you know, that we've seen them talk about a registry in Blackfalds and an intersection where there have been lives lost in Chestermere-Rocky View as well as lives lost in the last 12 months in Little Bow – clearly, these intersections create a significant safety concern where lives are being lost, and Wildrose has never once advocated to stop government spending wholesale. The things that we're wanting to ensure happen are that we are reducing waste within the government, that we are prioritizing every tax dollar, and this is the path forward that creates an environment where spending isn't so loosely looked at.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first opportunity to speak to Bill 2, An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue. The bill proposes to amend the Corporate Tax Act to increase the general corporate income tax from 10 per cent to 12 per cent effective July 1. However, the bill is not proposing to change Alberta's lower small-business corporate tax rate, which is currently at 3 per cent, something that the Alberta Liberals were suggesting. The bill also proposes to amend the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act to end the province's single-rate personal income tax of 10 per cent and reintroduce a progressive income tax system effective October 1, 2015, which the Alberta Liberals have supported.

In conjunction with Bill 2 the NDP government also announced that it will not proceed with a number of fees imposed on Albertans by the previous government. The government will eliminate the health levy and scrap proposed fee increases on vehicle licences and registration, land title searches, mortgages, marriage licences, birth certificates, and death certificates.

These changes in general were supported by the Alberta Liberal caucus as a recognition that we are slipping further and further behind not only in infrastructure, not only in maintenance but in critical social programs. We spend 20 per cent per capita less on social supports for people than the national average in Canada. It is resulting in serious backlogs in mental health issues, early childhood risk, poverty issues, mental health and addiction resolution. So we are creating a debt, a social debt, for not only this generation but the next.

We have an infrastructure debt not only for ourselves but future generations, and we have an environmental debt. Massive cleanup costs will be facing all of us in the next couple of decades, whether it's the oil sands or whether it's upstream oil and gas wells. We have to be conscious that we are already spending beyond our means. At the same time, we have to start generating from our pockets. Our current generation, we who are the baby boomers, has to start paying more, or we're going to leave huge debts of all three types to our children.

There's no question that last year the government gave back $11.6 billion more – $11.6 billion more – than any other province in the country to corporations and the wealthiest in the province. That is the Alberta advantage, right? And who benefits from the advantage? Well, about 7 per cent of Albertans, in fact, and with the new tax rate moving on a progressive level to individual incomes, the top 7 per cent of tax filers will see an increase in their taxes. The top 7 per cent of income earners. The proposed rates, I think you know, start at $125,000 a year.

I for one want to pay more taxes on my income. I want to see our social programs solved. I want to see our infrastructure solved. I want to see a serious investment in environmental monitoring. I want to see groundwater actually monitored before people frack. I want to see some assessment of what has happened to our groundwater in a hundred years of drilling and fracking. We still don't know in 2015 what is happening to our groundwater.

Of course, corporations only pay taxes on profits. If they don't make profits, they will not be paying extra taxes. The first $500,000 of profit in a smaller corporation: they will not see that 10 per cent or even an increase.

An Hon. Member: Three per cent.

Dr. Swann: It will be 3 per cent, yes.

In our view, we should be reducing small-business tax because that will stimulate new economy, that will stimulate more jobs, but this government has not chosen to do that. I would hope they would consider that in the future as a stimulus for some of the new jobs and new economy that we need desperately in this province, whether it's renewable energy, conservation measures, better building codes, and new businesses that can spring up around alternative technology for reduced carbon emissions. There are some tremendous opportunities for us to not follow the world but lead the world on carbon-reducing technologies.

5:00

Small businesses make up 95 per cent of all businesses in Alberta and 35 per cent of private-sector jobs. In 2013 there were 158,000 small businesses, businesses with fewer than 50 employees that bring in less than $500,000 in profit in a year. I think we could stimulate that part of the economy in a very substantial way and rebuild some tax advantage, ensure that we have that tax advantage in Alberta, with a win-win for jobs and our economy.

Revenue generated by the 10 per cent general corporate tax for 2015-16 is estimated to be $4 billion. Revenue generated by the 3 per cent small-business tax for 2015-16 is estimated to be $500 million.

In 2001 Alberta introduced Canada's first and only single-rate personal income tax of 10 per cent. We are the only province in the country to have bought into, under the Klein government, a flat tax. It has not served us. We have gone further and further behind in social programs, in environmental monitoring and environmental reputation, and now we're having trouble getting our oil to market because of severe challenges.

But I want to make another recommendation to this government. Not only does Alberta currently tax corporations the least; it also has been doing an increasingly poor job in collecting corporate taxes according to our Auditor General in 2014. All provinces except Alberta and Quebec use the Canada Revenue Agency to collect corporate taxes. Alberta does not. Alberta has set up its own administration to collect corporate taxes.

The CRA pays other provinces the amount of provincial taxes assessed, whether or not it collects them. It bears the credit risk. Why should we bear the credit risk of uncollected taxes, penalties, deferrals, and interest when the CRA will pay us the outstanding amount and try to collect it on our behalf? It would save a bureaucracy, and it might even improve our return on corporate tax owing.

In the October 2014 report the Auditor General was critical of our system for collecting corporate taxes given the dramatic increase in overdue taxes, penalties, and interest. Of the $885 million in outstanding corporate taxes at the end of the 2013-14 fiscal year, the Auditor General suggested that the government might not be able to collect $378 million, 43 per cent, in doubtful accounts. The CRA would have paid us that money and tried to collect it for itself. That's an opportunity to not only add to the treasury but to save the administration costs of corporate collections.

This report also showed that the government has written off $108 million in uncollected taxes in the last three years. As of the end of 2013-14, 364 corporations were appealing $557 million in taxes, penalties, and interest. Options for collecting that disputed amount are, quote, limited, according to the Auditor General, while the CRA would be paying us that money and taking the hit themselves.

Corporate profits are significantly higher in Alberta, both per capita and as a share of GDP, according to our former leader Dr. Kevin Taft's book Follow the Money. He and economist McMillan from the U of A analyzed our corporate returns compared to other provinces in the country. According to their research corporations in Alberta have brought in profits three times the rate per capita of any other province in the last decade. That has not always been the case, but in the last decade there has been a big jump in corporate take compared to the public purse. It accelerated through the 2000s and has now reached three times the average of $5,000 per person in nine other provinces.

There is a recent precedent for reversing corporate tax cuts. The B.C. government went too far. They have now returned from a 10 per cent tax for corporations in 2011 back up to 11 per cent in 2014. There's a recognition that there is a fair share, and we don't have it in Alberta. Giving back $11.6 billion more than any other province in the country left us in the position we're in today: over $5 billion in deficit and looking at, according to the previous government, up to a $30 billion deficit if we build all the infrastructure, the maintenance, and the social supports that are needed in the coming three years. That was what was presented by the existing government leading up to this last election, a $30 billion deficit and debt by 2019.

Surely, we have to do something. We have to do something differently. Yes, there is no doubt that there will be waste. We're talking billions here. There's no question that we can't find billions of dollars in human services, in environmental monitoring, in research and development. Just where are we going to find the $5 billion and realistically think we're going to provide Albertans with the infrastructure, the social supports, and the environmental standards that we say we want to be champions of?

I'm in the position of not agreeing with everything this government has done. I believe they're moving in the right direction with this bill. The Liberal caucus will be supporting this bill. [interjections] We'll be pushing them to take . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, would you please be seated? Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I didn't see you.

The Speaker: You have two minutes left. Do you have some additional comments?

Dr. Swann: I do not.

The Speaker: Are there questions and observations for the hon. member?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View says that he doesn't agree with everything the new government has done. I'm wondering if he can cite anything.

Dr. Swann: I think I've already said that I think small-business tax should be reduced. Along with that, there's significant red tape, I'm hearing from small businesses, that we could be reducing without loss of accountability and integrity in business. In fact, most of the tax measures that have been introduced in the House were very consistent with what we were planning to bring in, bringing in roughly $1.4 billion more than the past government would have, which would have meant a slow and incremental base on which to bring harmony to the disparity, the growing inequality in our society.

We have the largest gap between rich and poor in this country, and that has to be examined from the point of view of its social impact but also recognizing that we have to find a way to get off the dependence on an oil market that is inherently volatile. We've had 44 years of not having a stable budget that we could count on for the essential services to children, families, the disabled: infrastructure, schools, health care, and, again, an environmental department that has been gutted, absolutely gutted. It responds only to complaints now. It does not initiate monitoring on any basic level. It still has not produced a cumulative impact assessment to understand how a whole river system is being impacted by all the developments instead of piecemeal environmental assessments. There are tremendous gaps in our knowledge as legislators to make better long-term decisions for this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, thank you so much. I just have one quick question, through you, to the hon. member. If the Liberal caucus does such a great job of recognizing that lowering taxes on small business would stimulate the economy, I'm just a little bit unclear as to why raising the taxes on other businesses wouldn't have the same effect.

5:10

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you for the question. There are two dimensions to this, from my point of view. One is that we are looking at fairness. What does fairness look like? Who benefits most from the public services: the public roads, the public hospitals, the public education system? Surely, it's the largest corporations, who have hired the brightest and the most contributing members of our society, who have benefited most from our public education, health care, and infrastructure. There's no question in my mind that the large corporations, who also earn the largest profits, much of which leaves the province because most of our industry is not housed in Alberta – most of the corporate profits in Alberta leave Alberta. There is no question in my mind that they should be contributing a greater share to the public good because they're benefiting more than, certainly, the smaller corporations or Albertans in general.

I guess the other dimension to that is that small businesses are inherently less stable. They are more vulnerable to short-term changes in revenue and expenses. If we can in some way, especially in the start-ups, especially in the early days, contribute to some stability and to growth and to opportunity to the point where, I would say, that we should be considering eliminating small-business tax till they get to the point where they are making $500,000 and then can begin to propagate the larger opportunities for Albertan jobs and for benefit to society.

Thank you for the question.

The Speaker: Any other questions or observations?

Hearing none, I would recognize the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to start off with a small story. My son is 18 years old, and he bought my van from me, my old, dilapidated van, and we charged him market value for that. A lot of his friends got new vehicles from their parents, and that was great. I'm sure it wasn't fair for him to have to drive my old, dilapidated van, but he paid for it. He earned it, and he acknowledges how important that is to him because he invested himself and his time and his energy into buying that old, dilapidated van, which, I must say, he's very proud to drive because he paid for it, because he was incentivized to do that. That's how we teach our children to function.

On that note, I'd also like to add, just on what everybody else has been saying, that we do not have a revenue problem. Are we not already being taxed? Is something not already coming in? We don't have a revenue problem; we have a management issue. We're already paying taxes, so I don't understand. There is no transparency here. The prudence is gone. We're on the last leg of the Alberta advantage, that we've boasted of in this province. Bring in families, bring in head offices, and have low taxes: this is something that we are proud of. It is an advantage.

The NDP is raising taxes for ideological reasons, increasing taxes for the sake of increasing taxes, without disclosing why. Why are we not speaking to balancing the budget, true fiscal responsibility? There's a lack of a coherent picture from the NDP about Alberta's economic future or budget. Where is the NDP's plan to balance the budget? Did that even make the platform relevant? We have not fully investigated the repercussions of these tax increases in Alberta, and we're not ready to implement policy. What will the net effects of this proposal be? I really think that perhaps it should be referred to a committee for further study.

I need to speak on behalf of my portfolio, too, to understand the effect that Bill 2 will have on the energy industry. The NDP has proposed a plethora of policies that will have a significant and negative impact on the energy sector, one of Alberta's most important job creators. The NDP has proposed an increase to the carbon levy, a royalty review, increases to minimum wage, a recent proposal to split up the Energy Regulator, and now increases on business taxes as well as income taxes. This is a triple-edged sword when you add in that a royalty review will leave the energy sector speculating. The uncertainties discourage new capital investment. The energy sector, which relies on certainty and a regulatory framework to counteract price volatility, is already battling for market clarity because of the royalty review.

At least when Ed Stelmach conducted his royalty review of 2007, we had no way of predicting the financial downturn of 2008. The difference this time is that we know we're in an economic downturn, yet this government is plunging recklessly ahead with all of these things and is embracing instability.

A $15 minimum wage increase will raise labour costs across the board, inflating all prices. The energy sector as a whole will be facing increased labour costs, and it negatively affects their ability to be competitive with other markets. This increase in the price of labour inputs is compounded by the NDP's unwillingness to commit to any of the proposed pipelines, and our lack of access to energy markets already reduces the competitiveness of our product. It already prevents Alberta's energy exports from obtaining their full market value.

The recent proposal to split up Alberta's energy regulator: again, the business in our energy sector has been left to speculate, adding to the instability of the NDP's royalty review. The cost-benefit analysis by the industry for staying in Alberta is changing and not in the favour of Alberta.

The negative impacts of this bill are so broad ranging, even beyond the energy sector. We do not need these tax increases. This year's revenue is projected to be the third highest in Alberta's history. This is in spite of the fact that Albertans are generating less income in this current economic downturn while the government collects more and more taxes. Alberta has a spending problem, not a revenue problem. Are you saying that you can spend dollars that you're collecting in taxes better than a taxpayer? You are taking dollars out of the pockets of individuals and businesses. Government stimulus does not work. We are concerned that this may diminish the incentives for entrepreneurs, which is un-Albertan.

A 50 per cent increase in personal taxes in a year for any Alberta family is radical, to say the least. The NDP gave up rent controls, which is a terrible economic policy. Will it give up this terrible policy as well?

Thank you.

The Speaker: Questions or observations? I would recognize the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 2. It says An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue. I would suggest that possibly it could also read An Attempt to Raise Public Revenue. May I suggest that what we're striving for as trustees of Alberta is taxation balance, a policy that will take into consideration the needs of the most vulnerable in our society and the needs of Alberta families but at the same time provide the necessary balance that will incent investment and reward risk with competitive rates of return. This bill proposes to adjust the rate at which taxes are collected for businesses and individuals. But it does more than just adjust; it attempts to collect more revenue through taxes.

My colleagues opposite are known not to have faith in supply-and-demand economics, but let me discuss with you the trickle-down effect of decisions to raise taxes on businesses. Business tax is simply a cost of doing business to any business. The money has to come from somewhere to pay for the tax increase. At the end of the day, all business tax will be paid by individuals. Individuals will pay this tax increase. Businesses are accountable to shareholders. Shareholders put money at risk with an expectation of a reasonable return. Without a reasonable and competitive return investors move their money. Businesses therefore are forced to address the extra cost of doing business, the extra tax, by either trying to increase revenue or lowering their expenses.

Businesses have products to sell, services to render. They try and increase revenue. They're in a supply-and-demand economy. There's a limit to where they can increase their revenue. It's a competitive economy that we're working in. If they cannot find enough extra revenue to cover off the extra cost of doing business from the extra taxes, they need to take a look at their input costs. They need to take a look at their other expenses. Are they able to adjust their expenses in a way that will still give them a reasonable rate of return? Why would they do it if they were not guaranteed or at least have a sense that they're going to get a reasonable rate of return?

One of the first line items that businesses will look at, because it's usually a fairly large item in their cost of doing business, would be labour costs, and might I suggest that with the business environment that has been established in Alberta, the Alberta advantage, all Albertans have benefited from the ability of businesses to be able to pay very competitive labour rates? When we increase expense on business by raising tax, businesses will be forced to take a look at their input costs for providing services and commodities to the general public. They will be forced to take a look at that line item, labour expense, and possibly need to adjust.

As I was campaigning through the Swan Hills territory in my riding, I learned that if they were not laid off or put out of work, most of that town experienced a 15 per cent wage rollback at Christmastime. That's a reality of working in the oil field. I do not want them to experience more reductions, more wage rollbacks based on the fact that we're trying to get more tax revenue from companies. The companies are going to pass the taxes on. Tax in a business situation is a cost of doing business. If there is no reward to the risk of doing business, there is no need to do business. So they'll look at rolling wages back. They'll look at adjusting salaries, adjusting hours worked, look at restructuring the number of employees they have. If the business is not able to adjust accordingly, shareholders move their investment because they have a lack of a competitive rate of return, or possibly, in the worst-case scenario, the business closes its doors.

Now, we also take a look at taxation balance. This bill is looking at restoring fairness to public revenue. The bill proposes to adjust the methodology used to collect taxes from individuals. Fair enough. Again, we need to focus our attention on taxation balance. Currently in Alberta personal tax exemption is marked at $18,214, adjusted annually according to CPI. Might I suggest that if we're looking for taxation balance, we also take a look at personal tax exemption? Or is this bill really about more tax revenue? Adjusting the exemption of personal tax will protect our most vulnerable, will help protect Alberta families. Is the NDP considering taking a look at adjusting that end of the spectrum?

I truly believe we need to look at all angles. But first and foremost, before any taxes are raised, before the raising of any taxes, in any business it is critical when we're in a downturn, in a recession, in a time of shortage of revenue to examine our spending. In my business as a farmer when times are tough, the first thing we look at is: are we doing it as efficiently as we can?

An Hon. Member: Farmers know.

Mr. van Dijken: Farmers know. Farmers have felt it.

Mr. Speaker, I would leave it at that. I would ask this government to carefully consider all spending before we get into the habit of just raising taxes to try and fix our problems.

The Speaker: Hon. members, any questions or observations? I would recognize the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every dollar earned by Albertans is earned through their sweat and drive to better themselves, their families, and their communities. That money is earned by Albertans because they decided to work hard for their own business or for another company that determined that their skills were worth paying for. Now the government is going to ask for an even larger share of hard-earned money from working Albertans and businesses because this government and the one before it were addicted to spending. This government is spending even faster than they can tax.

No society has ever borrowed or spent its way to prosperity. Most jurisdictions that have abandoned marginal tax structures for a flat-tax structure have increased their total revenues. Alberta actually collects more per capita from personal income tax than any other province in the country barring Saskatchewan, with whom we're tied.

Now for a slightly different and unconventional example. I wouldn't recommend very many things about Russia, but let's look at their experience with a flat tax. One of the most impressive single cases was Russia's 2001 move away from marginal rates towards a single-rate flat tax. Russia's revenues rose by 26 per cent in the first year of its implementation. Even lowering personal income taxes can increase revenues. When the United States dropped the top personal income rate from 70 per cent to 28 per cent in the 1980s, the share of all income taxes paid by the richest 1 per cent of Americans rose from 19.3 per cent in 1980 to 24.7 per cent in 1990 as wealthy Americans stopped hiding money in offshore accounts and became more productive. Nations prosper when taxes are lowered, not raised. Lower taxes encourage people to make more money. Higher taxes discourage people from making more money.

In this bill the proposed marginal tax system discourages people from jumping to the next tax bracket. Every dollar an earner makes in a higher bracket is worth less than the dollar he earned before it. At some point many earners will opt not to take that extra shift, not to upgrade their skills, and would enjoy the time off instead rather than make less per hour than they invested before. In 2010 one country raised its personal income tax rate by the same 5 per cent for their highest income earners. Five years later that country is much worse off than it was before. In fact, that country, Greece, is a millstone around the neck of the entire eurozone.

Now, I'm as tired as you are, Mr. Speaker, of hearing about Greece, and I'm tired of hearing my relatives outside Munich, who have worked their entire lives, continue to complain about bailing out Greek taxpayers. I'm not saying that Alberta is Greece, nor am I saying that Alberta is Russia or Norway or the United States, but it stands as a stark example of a society that traded away its future for the soup kitchen of the welfare state.

5:30

The taxes proposed will not even cover the spending that is planned in the Redford- and Prentice-inspired minibudget that was just passed. Who knows how much extra spending will be allocated in the actual budget? In fact, these taxes will only bring in at most $800 million this fiscal year. This is compared to the new spending announced in the minibudget, which totalled a blank – I have no idea – which means that there will be a blank of more debt that our future generations will have to pay off.

Now, I actually didn't fill in the numbers in my speech, Mr. Speaker. I was going to fill them in last night, but I honestly have no idea what numbers to put in these slots. I can't even craft a speech after almost six hours of debate on the government's mini-budget because we still don't know how much spending is being allocated. Let's take the last number announced by the Government House Leader, $1.1 billion, that area. Subtract that from the highest possible revenue from these tax measures this year, $800 million. That is $300 million worth of extra debt passed in the Redford-Prentice minibudget. Alberta had a big spending problem under the previous government, and now Alberta's spending problem just got a lot bigger.

Businesses don't come to Alberta for the weather; they come to Alberta because of low business taxes. They come to Alberta because of what was once called the Alberta advantage. At 10 per cent we are for the next few days still the lowest in the country. This meant that Alberta had an advantage over every other province in the country. The previous government killed the Alberta advantage; now the NDP are burying it. The Alberta advantage meant that businesses flocked to Alberta, which meant more revenue for the government. If those businesses had not come to Alberta, then there would have been less revenue generated. I'm not sure if the hon. members opposite truly believe that as many businesses would have come to Alberta had their plan been in place over the last 10 years.

With the 20 per cent increase to business taxes Alberta no longer is the first choice for business in Canada. Businesses can choose from B.C., Ontario, or Quebec if they want a lower tax rate than Alberta. Good God, Quebec has a lower tax rate than Alberta. Just let that sink in for a moment now. Then if they want to pay even more taxes, they can go to Manitoba, New Brunswick, and Saskatchewan, which are at 12 percentage points. What incentive do new businesses receive from coming to Alberta? What incentive do businesses who are wanting to expand receive from Alberta? The advantage that Alberta has will be gone with this tax increase. Mr. Speaker, if you want to start a small business in Alberta, buy a big business, and elect the NDP.

Saskatchewan, our neighbour to the east, currently has a 12 per cent business tax. That was not always the case. In 2005 the Saskatchewan NDP authorized and paid for a study on their business tax rates. Do you know what they found, Mr. Speaker? The NDP that governed Saskatchewan discovered that they should lower their business and personal taxes. The NDP government there decided to take their own advice from their own research and lowered Saskatchewan's business tax rate by 5 per cent. But wait; there's more. In that same study they determined that the business tax rate should be lowered to 10 per cent. The Saskatchewan NDP decided that it was in the best interests of their province to lower business tax rates to the exact same rate that Alberta has for the next few days.

Saskatchewan implemented this tax cut in 2005. Since 2005 Saskatchewan has seen extraordinary economic growth. Coincidence? I think not. Lower business taxes encourage new business to enter into the market. Lower business taxes encourage businesses to stay in the province. Lower business taxes generate even more revenue over an extended period.

Mr. Speaker, there is a corporate giveaway taking place in this province, and it's not taxes; it's welfare. If we want to get our fair share from corporations, we should focus on cutting corporate welfare subsidies in this province. The previous government would accept large cash donations, which, thankfully, we have worked with the government to now ban. They would accept large cash donations, political favours from consultants and award them sole-source contracts. Navigator, the North West upgrader, Kananaskis: the list goes on and on and on.

Now, the Alberta advantage was premised upon removing corporate-welfare subsidies that had been in place from the 1980s and early 1990s: Novatel and other examples that live in infamy. Corporate welfare was eliminated in Alberta and sharply curtailed in future use. The business financial assistance limitation act is now toothless and without any point on the paper. Corporate welfare was slowly allowed to set in, which had a corrupting effect not just upon the economy but upon the very government itself. Instead of raising taxes on honest businesses that work hard, that pay their taxes, that contribute to our communities, that donate to charities and give their time, we should focus on rooting out corporate cronyism and ending corporate welfare in this province.

The Saskatchewan NDP authorized their research to be done in their province to determine the effects of altering business tax rates. They did their homework. The Alberta NDP has not done its homework. In 2014 I had this to say about the Alberta advantage in my alternative budget, when I was at the Canadian Taxpayers Federation. I do love to quote myself, Mr. Speaker.

The Alberta Advantage had four pillars ... for its success: responsible spending, transparent budgeting, no debt and competitive tax levels. The first three of these four pillars have fallen on one another like dominos, with the last – competitive tax levels – now threatened.

I said that over a year ago, and I normally love to say that I told you so, but I don't now.

The NDP is pushing for these tax hikes for simplistic, ideological reasons. This bill is being pushed through the Legislature without due diligence, without proper study of the side effects of their bill. The effects of altering Alberta's business tax rate need to be studied before we foist it upon the economy. The fact that this government is pushing legislation through this House that affects the entire province, without a shred of research, is extraordinarily irresponsible.

If the government refuses to do its homework on business taxes, then it should at least consider amendments to the bill. Let's begin. Good God, I'm agreeing with the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. Note it for history. Let's begin by increasing the $500,000 threshold for small businesses. Let's index it to the price of inflation. It has not been increased in years.

Let's even consider phasing in both personal and business tax hikes if they must be raised, just as the government is doing with the minimum wage. Although I don't agree with the increase to the minimum wage, a phase-in approach is better than the shock and awe of a 50 per cent increase overnight, a 50 per cent increase, as they are proposing to do, at the highest marginal tax rate.

Let's also amend the bill in the same manner that the Premier herself suggested in 2012 and that the Municipal Affairs minister suggested in 2014. The Premier suggested while in opposition decreasing the tax limit for small businesses from 3 to 2 per cent. The Premier campaigned on – and I quote – reducing taxes for small businesses by one-third to help them grow. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Premier.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs said on April 22, 2014 – don't you just love Hansard? – "I'd like to remind the House that the Alberta NDP was the only party during the 2012 election that had in our platform a reduction in the small-business tax. We would have reduced it by a third." Well, jeez, in hindsight I may have even voted NDP in 2012 after all events.

I understand that this would mean the very first cut that the NDP would legislate. This cut would help small businesses cope with the increase to taxes and the minimum wage.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions or observations?

Mr. Cooper: I have been so riveted by the hon. member's comments. I wondered if he might just like a couple of moments to continue.

Mr. Fildebrandt: An excellent question from the Opposition House Leader. What is the term we use when we don't have a preamble? Given that, to borrow a quote from the Minister of Municipal Affairs, "small businesses really are what drive the Alberta economy," small business are to be protected. With the increase to the minimum wage small businesses are going to need some help, and we're here to help.

I do not agree with raising taxes, period. But since this government is intent on raising taxes, they could at least consider these reasonable amendments that the Premier and members of her cabinet themselves have already campaigned on. Let's not repeat the mistakes of history. Let's not be blinded by a knee-jerk ideological need to spend other people's money better than they can. Let's rebuild the Alberta advantage, not bury it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks – he gave some allusions to a small bit of a history lesson there in regard to Russia, and I was wondering if he could expand on that, when he talked about the timing and the increase of the tax revenue relating to the tax rate fall.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you to the Member for Drumheller-Stettler for the question. They're supposed to be puffballs from my own side, not asking for statistics. Well, I'm clearly an expert on Russian history and the Russian economy. As I said earlier, I'm not keen on following most things Russian in our government. It's generally ill advised, but there's a little bit of good in everyone.

Well, compared to their tax rates of the 1980s, it was extraordinarily radical. But I don't believe we're going to be going to that extreme in Alberta. Similar to what the government is proposing today, the Russian Federation had high marginal, what they would call progressive, tax rates and went to a single flat-rate tax. In the first full year of implementation they saw a 26 per cent increase in revenue. Now, the people of Russia, more than perhaps any other population on earth, had long endured a stifling economy that did not allow people's impulses and the free market to thrive. This was an excellent test-tube case of what happens when a people is allowed to succeed, when a people is allowed to make their own choices, not government making them for them. Unfortunately, they have since retreated from some of those excellent pieces of progress.

The Speaker: Any other questions or observations? The hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks alluded briefly to the fact that Alberta pays more income taxes per capita than any other area in the country. I wonder if you could elaborate a little bit on that.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'd like to thank the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre for his question. There are many different reasons, and everyone can find their own set of facts to support their reasons, for why Alberta collects more in income tax than any other province except for Saskatchewan, with whom we are tied. Now, Alberta has the highest per capita spending in the country, which is why those of us on this side of the House, at least this side of this side of the House, believe that taxes should not be going up. We understand that we have a spending problem because we have the highest per capita spending in the country. The members opposite talk about us having a lower than national average spending as a percentage of GDP, and that is why they believe there is a revenue problem and that we don't spend enough.

There is a fundamental reason for this difference in what numbers we use to talk about spending problems versus revenue problems. The reason that we collect more in income tax is because we have allowed a greater proportion of our economy to thrive without being inhibited, controlled, and consumed by the government. The members opposite believe that because we spend less as a percentage of GDP, we should therefore just be spending more. Because we're wealthy, we should be spending more. Mr. Speaker, I'd say that the reason we are wealthy is because, at least in decades past, we controlled our spending.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for the opportunity to speak on Bill 2. At this time I'm very pleased to be able to offer some perspective as a member of the past government and as being the first speaker from our caucus to address Bill 2 in second reading and also as a former member of Treasury Board that was involved in some of the decisions that were made leading up to the most recent budget, in fact, the budget that the interim supply estimates are based on, as correctly pointed out by the Government House Leader.

You know, it's been interesting over these past six or seven days that we've been sitting to hear the 44-year record of the Progressive Conservative government over that period of time be repeatedly vilified by members on both sides of the House. Quite frankly, I'm still very proud of that record regardless of what has been said here, and I would hasten to remind members within the House that you only stay in power for that length of time if you win elections throughout that period. Indeed, the Progressive Conservative Party did maintain the confidence of Albertans in 1975, in 1979, in 1982, in 1986, in 1989, in 1993, in 1997, in 2001, 2004, 2008, and 2012.

Mr. Speaker, it's worth while to point out that when members in the House criticize 44 years of Progressive Conservative government, they're indeed criticizing 44 years of electoral decisions made by Albertans. You are so praising the decisions that were made on May 5. I find it very interesting, quite frankly, the various interpretations of what that decision meant. I find it very interesting that the party opposite now in government feels that it is a carte blanche endorsement of all of their policies. I would encourage you not to fall into that trap. Indeed, people vote in an election for a wide variety of reasons, and you should be cautious that the endorsement that you received from the people of Alberta is a carte blanche endorsement of all your policies because it is not.

You know, I found it very interesting as well – I'm going to make a couple of references to the bill at hand because I do have some very specific concerns that nobody has addressed, and we will certainly address these in Committee of the Whole. Most specifically, on the very back page of the bill the coming into force date of the bill is listed as January 1, 2015, retroactively to the beginning of this year. This government wants to have the coming into force of this bill extend to a period five months before they were even elected. Mr. Speaker, I find that to be an incredible statement.

The other thing I find interesting on page 7, in section 6.1(2), is the calculation of the increase in the personal income tax, which is to go up on October 1, that because it extends for an entire year, it will indeed extend over the full year of income for Albertans. In no other way can you achieve the rates that you're asking for, or demanding, I should say. Indeed, what this does is that it means that on income that has been earned by Albertans in the affected tax brackets between January 1 and the date of passage of this bill, they will be assessed additional income tax on that income.

Mr. Speaker, if you happen to be in a position where you retired or lost an election or for some other reason had your flow of income significantly drop from January 1 to the present period and then the subsequent period, you're now going to have the additional surprise from this government of paying additional tax on that amount if you're in the applicable tax brackets. I find these changes to be very, very troubling.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I represent the constituency of Vermilion-Lloydminster. I've made my home in Lloydminster for the past 30-plus years, and I live two miles from the Saskatchewan border. I live there by choice, and unlike a certain former governor of Alaska, I can see Saskatchewan from my front door. In fact, the joke is that I can see all the way into Manitoba. Saskatchewan, our neighbouring province, has indeed had an interesting history, and I will tell you that the border city of Lloydminster is a very interesting case study of differing government policies. In fact, it's a bit of a petri dish.

Let me sort of outline it for you. My hon. colleague next to me from Strathmore-Brooks has already pointed out that in 2005 the NDP government recognized that there needed to be some taxation changes. A couple of years later the good people of Saskatchewan recognized that there needed to be a government change, to turf out the NDP that had been dragging their province down like an anchor for so many years.

What do I mean by that? Well, Saskatchewan at one time was the third largest province in Canada. Behind Quebec and Ontario, Saskatchewan was third going back to the '30s. But thanks to a succession of CCF governments and then a number of NDP governments, Saskatchewan never grew. In fact, the province of Saskatchewan's population has fluctuated around the 1 million mark since the 1930s, and in the last few years of the NDP administration Saskatchewan's population was declining at a regular rate. People were leaving Saskatchewan in droves, especially young people, and there was virtually no growth in Saskatchewan. Businesses would locate preferentially in Lloydminster, at least on the Alberta side, not on the Saskatchewan side. And you're saying: oh, that's because of the sales tax. Well, there is no sales tax anywhere in the city of Lloydminster.

Let me give you some comparative growth rates that illustrate this. From 2001 to 2006 the Alberta side of Lloydminster grew populationwise by 21 per cent. During that same period of time, when the NDP government was in power in Saskatchewan, the growth on the Saskatchewan side of Lloydminster was a meagre 3.5 per cent. From 2006 to 2013 the Alberta side of Lloydminster grew by a further 26 per cent, and from 2006 to 2013, during which time the Saskatchewan province had the benefit of the Saskatchewan Party, a conservative party, the growth on the Saskatchewan side of Lloydminster was a whopping 41 per cent. People chose to locate to the Saskatchewan side of Lloydminster because there was an advantage to doing so.

Let me say a few other things that changed in Saskatchewan. Prior to 2008 Saskatchewan was a province that received equalization payments through the federal equalization program. It was a great source of pride to the residents of Saskatchewan when they no longer were a have-not province in 2008, and that was largely because of government policies that had been brought in to make Saskatchewan a more competitive, more tax-friendly jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, you know, one other thing that I will tell you that is also a source of pride to the residents of Saskatchewan that may or may not have as much direct reference to political parties: the Saskatchewan Roughriders have won the Grey Cup three times. They have never once won the Grey Cup while the NDP was in power. If you want to ask people from Saskatchewan what is important to them, they will tell you that the success of the Riders is perhaps one of the most important factors.

Mr. Speaker, you know, one thing I will say with regard to this, and it's referenced back to my involvement with the past government. We did not bring in corporate tax increases in our budget because we recognized the damage it would create to the Alberta economy, to bring them in at this time and to this degree. To suggest that corporate taxes should never be touched or never be looked at, that's not what I personally felt, and it's not really what we were looking at at that time. At the time that we were talking about this budget, recognizing the fragility our economy, raising corporate taxes was a mistake. It is a mistake to raise corporate taxes now. That's not to say that there may not be a point in time where corporate taxes could be raised without damaging the economy. But I will tell you that right now, under the current economic circumstances, raising corporate taxes would be a terrible, terrible mistake.

Now, my friends to the far right of me will point out that we were going to raise personal income taxes as well, and that is true. We had a proposal to raise personal income taxes marginally and gradually. Our proposal would have increased personal income taxes to a maximum rate of 12 per cent and to a marginal rate of 11.5 per cent for those earning above $100,000 in taxable income. But it was going to be phased in over the 2016 and 2017 taxation years, nothing like the sudden and dramatic increases that are contained within Bill 2.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to debating Bill 2 in committee and also to discussing amendments to Bill 2, which I believe are necessary and would assist with Bill 2 being a better piece of legislation. I do not fundamentally agree with a number of the precepts of Bill 2. I do not want to see Alberta become the Saskatchewan of the '90s. You know, quite frankly, that's not what Albertans want, and if the party opposite suggests that that's what Albertans voted for, I would suggest that you are seriously misreading the mood of the electorate.

I will further say that Bill 2 is certainly mistitled as far as restoring fairness to public revenue. I would say also, Mr. Speaker, that in conducting business within this House it is helpful to look at the experience of other jurisdictions. I'm concerned that this government has elected to not look at the experience of our neighbouring province to the east of us, to see, indeed, a province that is just as old as our province is, that shares many of the historical features of our province, and I think from whom we could learn many valuable lessons.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at 6 o'clock, and pursuant to Standing Order 4 and Government Motion 6 the Assembly stands adjourned until 7:30 this evening.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, June 23, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Connolly moved, seconded by Ms Kazim, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate June 23: Ms Gray]

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods was still in the middle of her response and has a few minutes left.

The Speaker: Sorry. Thank you.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today in reply to our first Speech from the Throne for the 29th Legislative Assembly of this great province of Alberta. I'd like to begin by congratulating Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, who is in the first few weeks of her service as Alberta's 18th Lieutenant Governor. I was delighted to be able to attend Her Honour's installation ceremony on June 12, where she spoke eloquently on a variety of important topics. I know that she will make an excellent representative of the Crown throughout her tenure.

I would also like to take this chance to extend my congratulations to all the hon. members of this Assembly on their recent electoral success. I think Albertans have built a strong Legislative Assembly, and we are now all tasked with doing our utmost to help make life better for every Albertan. As we heard in the Speech from the Throne: "We are optimistic, hopeful, entrepreneurial, remarkably diverse, and community-minded people. We are a people who dream no little dreams and live them."

I was born on the north side of Edmonton in 1978. I'm the elder daughter of Craig and Linda McLennan. My father, Craig, is an accountant and a small-business owner, and my mother, Linda, is a now retired schoolteacher who focused largely on special-needs education throughout her long career with Edmonton public schools.

On July 16 of this year my husband, Neal Gray, and I will be celebrating our 11th wedding anniversary. Last year for our 10th wedding anniversary he surprised me with a trip to Paris. He arranged the time off with my work, and I didn't know. He has his work cut out for him this year.

I owe some of my interest in politics to my husband's family, where political discourse is the appetizer of choice at every meal. In my own family's home we didn't talk as much about politics because my father is a staunch fiscal conservative and my mother is firmly progressive. Discussion was avoided at my house a little bit lest it give way to overly heated debate. So in spite of the many polls that foretold the election results this year, in spite of our Premier's excellent performance, in spite of all of those various signs, I knew for sure that change was finally coming to Alberta when I saw Dr. Bob Turner's sign on my parents' lawn. The planets had to have reached a very special alignment for my father to ever agree to such a thing.

Mr. Speaker, hon. ministers, hon. members, it is with great pride and humility that I stand before you today as the elected representative from my home constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods. I'm excited to take this opportunity to talk a little bit about Edmonton-Mill Woods and the great people who live there, who have sent me here in this incredible new role.

Of the many words we might use to describe Canada and why we love being Canadian, multiculturalism is one of the first to jump to mind. Canada is a nation where people of all backgrounds and faiths have come together under a commitment to mutual peace and prosperity to build a collectively better future. It is my tremendous privilege to represent Edmonton-Mill Woods, one of the most diverse and vibrant examples of Canada's commitment to multiculturalism. In the very short time since my election I've already had the chance to attend numerous wonderful events put on by members of very different organizations in my riding, representing a variety of cultural and community groups.

Almost 15 years ago, when I was looking to buy my first home, I chose Edmonton-Mill Woods because of its amazingly strong network of communities, its beautiful cultural mosaic, and because I saw my own commitments to honesty, hard work, and open friendliness reflected in its citizenry.

Amidst all of its wonderful diversity there are a few things that hold true for everyone in Edmonton-Mill Woods. It's a community of hard-working people looking to build a better future. Ours is a community founded on the bedrock of volunteerism. Our extremely active community leagues, which contribute so much to enriching our lives, are comprised entirely of volunteers. Our schools, our seniors' centres, our local hospital also depend on a network of volunteers to assist in the delivery of their very important services.

Residents in my constituency work towards that better future in other ways as well. Ours is a community rich with entrepreneurial spirit. Edmonton-Mill Woods is home to countless small businesses, many of which are family owned, and these small businesses work to provide a whole host of services to our community and to the city as a whole.

I invite every MLA to take advantage of the opportunities that being in this Legislature provides and come down to Edmonton-Mill Woods on one of your brief breaks from session. If you come to Edmonton-Mill Woods, you will find some of the best ethnic and cultural restaurants that this city and possibly this province have to offer. That is just one of the kinds of treasures that Edmonton-Mill Woods houses. They are an example, these restaurants, of the way in which the entrepreneurs in Edmonton-Mill Woods enrich their fellow citizens' lives while they also provide for their own families in the process.

In Her Honour's speech it was clear that this new government is also working towards that same better future as the people of Edmonton-Mill Woods and all the people of Alberta. The Speech from the Throne revealed that this government intends to do exactly the same things that we told Albertans we would do during the election. It was those commitments that Albertans overwhelmingly endorsed with their votes, and it is because we will keep our promises that Albertans will continue to endorse us going forward.

I'm a believer in the philosophy of servant leadership, and it is my intention to work hard, very hard, every day on behalf of my constituents. I'm here as their humble servant and to give voice to their opinions and concerns as we go forward. The election results in every constituency tell a separate and unique story about a particular part of Alberta, and I go forward knowing that a strong majority of voters in Edmonton-Mill Woods endorsed me, this government, and the choices that we laid before them. So I see my role in this Legislature as one of advocacy, of being a voice that ensures that those commitments continue to be kept. I will push our new hon. ministers and our new hon. Premier to stay on track and to deliver on the wisest and most progressive options available to them at every turn.

Our system of government is at times like a pendulum, and in Alberta that pendulum can swing slower than it does almost anywhere else, so we were long overdue for it to begin swinging back the other way, as it has now begun to do. The time has come to focus on things that matter to all Albertans. The time has come to reinvest in education, in health care, in social services. The time has come to once again build vital infrastructure. The time has come to make Alberta a leader in human rights and to ensure that every minority community in Alberta is afforded the full protection of law and the dignity of their provincial government. I sincerely look forward to being part of this Assembly as we move forward towards those goals.

Thank you to all the members for their time today, and thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. [some applause]

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the extra applause tonight. I do appreciate the opportunity. As time goes, I'll be better at standing up and sitting down, and I'm sure that we'll all get better at our respective jobs.

I have to tell you that it's an absolute pleasure and honour to be here today to respond to the Speech from the Throne, and I appreciate the attendance here. I know sometimes it can be riveting no matter who's speaking. I hope this is a little more riveting than some. It is, actually, my most significant speech in the Legislature so far, and I think it's an important opportunity to talk about some things as well as my plan, the plan of what the Wildrose has and what the government has and how we will have some opportunities to have some commonalities, and of course we will have some differences as time goes on. You know that, Mr. Speaker, as you've seen this go on for some period of time.

But I will tell you one thing that I'm proud of and that I think all members in this House are proud of and that we should remember, that we have some similarities. One is that we've all been elected by the people of Alberta, notwithstanding different ridings and different jurisdictions and, actually, different peoples, in essence. We have all been elected to this place, and we all have the respect and the ability to speak for the people that we represent. All of us should be respected for that belief because if we aren't, we will find ourselves sometimes as a third party if we don't actually represent the people that we were elected by. As I said before, we are not here for ourselves, nor did we get here by ourselves, and we need to make sure that we remember that no matter how important we start to believe we are.

The other thing that we have in common is that we're all very proud to be from Alberta, very proud to be here. We all have families, we all have loved ones, and we all love and are loved. I love Alberta, and I would like to say that when I first came into my political sphere, nobody loved Alberta more than I did. But I know that's not true because we all love Alberta as much as we possibly can, I would suggest. I would recommend, Mr. Speaker, through you, of course, that all of us remember that as we give our speeches and as we comment on other people's performance on those speeches and beliefs.

But the Wildrose and the NDP government have some different political philosophies, and I'm going to try to talk about the different philosophies. Those philosophies, of course, are based on different experiences in the world and different experiences that we have all had, whether it be in Alberta or elsewhere.

I would commend the NDP at this stage, though, for something, and that is that the NDP do believe in something. Now, they believe in something more than just staying in power, which I find refreshing. No disrespect to our third party here, but I found that for many years that party would do anything to stay in power. I don't think that's a good source of options for the people of Alberta, and I think that's something that I'm hoping will change. I hope that the NDP will stick to their policies, primarily because I think Alberta is more associated with our policies.

But whether or not that is true – we will find out in the next election – the truth at this stage is that we must respect those policies and have good policy debates and make sure that we don't fall into the trap of previous parties; that is, to lack principles. Principles and ideas are all that we actually can give to Albertans that they want, truly. I think the NDP will govern from their principles, and I hope that they do. I hope that they will also be honest. No disrespect to the NDP as a party, but that has been a difficulty of some NDP governments in the past in other jurisdictions. I hope that doesn't happen here, and I believe, based on the leadership that I've seen, that it won't.

Many of the things the NDP believes in come from academic theories and works of intellectuals. Almost all of the things that the Wildrose believes in come from, in my opinion, real-world experience, and I say that with respect. From working, from sweating, from succeeding and failing, from trying and achieving, or from trying and failing we all learn something. I'm sure that I will learn in this place from failing and succeeding, as you will.

Wildrose MLAs have real-world experience in productive things. Someone once said that the facts of life are conservative. I truly believe that. I know that free markets lead to prosperity. I've seen examples of that throughout the world. I know that freedom, the freedom that we enjoy, leads to good government. I know that small government leads to innovation, and I know that nothing stifles innovation more than big government. I know and firmly believe that I can spend my money better than the government ever will be able to, and I know that the overwhelming majority of Albertans believe the same thing. They believe in smaller governments. I know that a good government protects the vulnerable, and I think there's no greater measure of a people than seeing how they treat the vulnerable people of that society.

I am conservative in principle. I believe in conservative principles – not those Conservatives, the conservative principles of fiscal responsibility. But I promise you that there is nothing more important than a strong social safety net for the people that can't protect themselves. We as a society cannot let people fall through the cracks, but we must also reject the nanny state, that wants to control every aspect of other people's lives, and I hope that this government will do exactly that.

I know that people working together in charities and not-for-profits can achieve so much more than an overzealous and bureaucratic government. I know this because I live this. I have worked at many charities and nonprofits, as you will soon find out. I know that innovation, creativity, and the human spirit are much better than a bureaucratic government that's large, wasteful, and doesn't get the job done. [some applause]

Good thing I have 90 minutes; we're going to have 30 minutes of applause. I hope you guys start soon, through you, Mr. Speaker, of course.

How did I come to believe these things and know these things? Well, it has a lot to do with who I am, how I've lived my life, and where I come from, so I'm going to tell you a little bit about that today. I'm the youngest in a family of 11 children, and our family made the very smart decision to move to Fort McMurray in 1967. I was only four years old. Fort McMurray was an amazing place to grow up. I had a dog team. I would go down the main street of Franklin Avenue with my rifle slung over my shoulder at the ripe old age of 12 years. I know it sounds a little bit astonishing today, but it was an incredible, incredible upbringing and life, a small-town atmosphere that gave me the opportunity to try so many different things and to see boom and bust, boom and bust but meet an amazing number of people.

The average age in Fort McMurray is much younger than most places in Alberta, but we have the opportunity to meet so many different people. We don't have cliques. We don't have these little groups that form in older communities because we have such a young community. So everyone gets along pretty well, and that's what I like about Fort McMurray. I like the fact that people walk down the street and say hi to everyone, that they go out to a restaurant and stop at a table to talk to everyone. I like the fact that it's a small town. I like the fact that there are five rivers that flow into the city centre. That is probably one of the most beautiful places on the planet. Heard that before? Unlikely. I've lived there for 50 years. I've lived in other countries, including Australia, including the United States, and I find no greater place than Fort McMurray as far as working, playing, and raising a family. It's a beautiful place.

I invite you, like the previous member did, to come to my hometown and see exactly what it's like and why I find it so beautiful. If you get lucky enough, you might even get invited, like your House leader was, on a fishing trip on the Clearwater River with me. It's a beautiful place, and you can actually eat the fish.

I attended the Prairie Bible Institute, which is in Three Hills, Alberta, for high school – I don't know whose riding that's in – and I would say that it was an incredible upbringing because I learned how to milk cows, how to work on a farm, how to talk the talk, how to shoot gophers, and how to be a different kind of Albertan, and I enjoyed it very much. I did get into some trouble there. It was a Bible school, and I went there for high school, but I did get into some trouble. I understand that all good people get into trouble from time to time. I was also the captain of the hockey team. I liked to play a lot of sports, and I still do.

After that I went and got a bachelor of science degree in Portland, Oregon. I then attended and received a master's in business administration and finance and a law degree. During school I had a variety of jobs, some interesting ones. I've worked as a log hand, a printer, a lawyer, a registered trapper, a heavy-equipment operator, and many other jobs, including a politician. I don't tell a lot of people that because they get worried. I had an incredible upbringing out of Fort McMurray, travelling to Australia for my law degree and my MBA, travelling the world and understanding that there is more than just Fort McMurray even though I kind of would have liked it to stay that way because I had such a great upbringing. Before I returned to Fort McMurray in 1991 after my law degree, I was president of the student council at university. I was also the editor of the newspaper. I've been very active in all communities that I've been involved with.

I actually attended the University of Calgary to finish off an equivalency in Canadian law and began practising in Fort McMurray for 10 years. I was a very busy litigator. I had some businesses that I started during that period of time in Fort McMurray, bought some land and did some wonderful things.

You know, the thing about Fort McMurray that is so incredible, besides what I've told you already, is that Fort McMurray is a land of opportunity, just like Alberta is a land of opportunity for so many people in the world and in Canada. You can go to Fort McMurray with nothing, and in 10 years you can leave with as much money as you can possibly carry and more. You can make a lot of money through hard work and determination, which many people go to Fort McMurray for but don't stay. Most people go there for opportunity, and that opportunity usually leads to a good family, an incredible lifestyle, and a great quality of life for years to come.

Now, I did want to tell you and have the opportunity to tell the public a little bit about what I have done for nonprofits. I was the chair of the children's health foundation of northern Alberta. I did that for six years, raising money for hospitals for sick children. I was the director of the Alberta Summer Games, director of the chamber of commerce, president of the downtown business association and other business organizations. I taught, volunteered my time at Keyano College – quantitative methods and statistics and business law – so I had an opportunity to give back to my community, and I continue to do that. That's what I feel I'm here today to do, I think much the same as everyone else feels.

Now, I did talk a little bit about Fort McMurray and opportunity and prosperity, but I will tell you this. When you move to northern Alberta, whether it be in Slave Lake or High Prairie or Athabasca or Lac La Biche or these small rural communities, Fort McMurray, you will find a vibrant community of people that actually love to be there.

Now, you've heard some bad things about Fort McMurray. I have. Those people are usually the people who work at work camps that are from different areas and are unhappy because they fly in and fly out. Anyone would be unhappy flying in to a camp with 3,000 other people, working at the same place 12 hours a day, and then flying out to go home because you miss your family. Everyone wants to be near their family. So when you knock Fort McMurray or have opportunity to hear other people do it, remember that they are not people who actually call it home. I am a person who calls it home, and I am very proud of it.

Now, Fort McMurray is also about energy, and I'll get to that in a little bit.

But I will tell you that further on in my career, after practising for 10 years in Fort McMurray, I ran for the federal Conservative Party of Canada in a nomination. There's sympathy from the other side, I know, but I'm very proud of that. I was very proud to run for Stephen Harper, and I was honoured to be elected with 60 per cent of the vote the first time, 65 per cent the second time, 68 per cent the third time, and 72 per cent the last time. I didn't do quite as well the last election, but the people of northern Alberta liked what I offered and liked what Stephen Harper had to offer and re-elected me with a clear majority each and every time.

I believe that I made a significant difference in Stephen Harper's government, and I believe that Stephen Harper's government made significant positive differences. It was a government that reduced Canadians' tax burden: clearly, 12 days of tax freedom that wasn't there when we got there in 2006. It reprioritized government. It respected provincial jurisdiction, something that hadn't happened before in quite a while. It improved our standing in the world. It kept us safe – and to commemorate that statement, this is the 30th anniversary of the Air India bombing, the largest ever terrorist attack against Canada, and my heart still goes out to those people who were affected by that tremendous tragedy – a government that made me proud to be Canadian; that invested in our infrastructure, $47 billion over eight years, the largest infrastructure investment in the history of Canada; a government that protected the vulnerable.

Yesterday we talked about the residential school apology. I was there when the Prime Minister correctly and courageously made that apology. It was right to come from the federal government, and he made that apology. Stephen Harper made that apology, not a Liberal Prime Minister, not any previous Prime Minister but Stephen Harper, and I was very proud of that.

I'm very proud of my time in Ottawa for a number of reasons, and I won't get into them because we will be asleep for a long time before that. I fought for some big ideas. I fought for decentralization, for limited taxation. I fought for a lot of things, passed about 25 bills in committees that I was part of. I was parliamentary secretary for transport and infrastructure for six years, and I enjoyed that portfolio very much.

As all of you will know if you ever have the opportunity to go to Ottawa, it's a long trip. From Fort McMurray it would be anywhere from seven to 10 hours of flying twice a week. That's travel time, and it becomes exhausting. I was missing my family. I had a young family. So I decided to come home and stay. I didn't want to stay in Ottawa. I'd never actually been in the House of Commons before I was elected. I was actually never in this House before I was elected. I'm not in politics to be a politician. I'm in politics to make Albertans', Canadians' lives better.

You know, I decided to go to Ottawa because things were bad there. People were stealing our money, and it's our money, all of us here and all citizens of Canada. They were taking that money and using it for political purposes, to put in their own pockets and to change the course of history and the elections without the democracy that we all have so much respect for. That's why I went to Ottawa.

Under the Liberals the things that were happening there were exactly the same, in my opinion, as the things that drove me to run against the PCs in the last election. I saw the identical issues with the provincial government that I saw in Ottawa with the Liberal government 10 years before. They weren't listening to the people, whether it be Willow Square in Fort McMurray or just about any decision that the people actually spoke up for. They would do the opposite or thought they knew better. It was the same attitude that I saw back in the '90s with another government that thought they knew better, and that started the reform movement. I say to this government and I say to all people in this House: don't forget who put you here because they can just as easily get rid of you. Entitlement, overspending, cronyism: a government that believes in nothing except staying in power will have no priorities, and people will not keep them in power.

Then, of course, there is health care. Health care drove me to this. It's almost 50 per cent of our budget. We do have wonderful, dedicated front-line workers, but we have a system that just simply does not work. It is not good enough for Albertans. We spend more per capita on health care than anybody else in Canada, and we get bottom-of-the-pack results. I put it to you as the government: please fix health care. Concentrate on health care. It is not just a disaster; it is part of taking away our loved ones if it's done wrong.

So I did get back into politics for the same reasons that I was driven to politics federally. I ran for the leadership of the Wildrose because Wildrose believes Albertans need a better government. Wildrose believes that Albertans need true democratic reform. My compliments on Bill 1. Wildrose believes that Albertans need transparency, not secret deals, secret laws, secret regulations that contradict what politicians actually say out loud. It's time to do what you say and say what you do. Wildrose believes that Albertans need efficient ministries, not cronyism and sole-source contracts. Wildrose believes that Albertans need this government to get down to the business of actually fixing the health care system and seniors' care. I challenge you all on that. Most of all, Wildrose believes that Albertans need a government truly committed to fiscal responsibility. I mentioned that health care is the most expensive in Canada per capita and gets bottom-of-the-pack results, but we have the most expensive government in Canada and get bottom-of-the-pack results.

I say this to you, Mr. Speaker, not because you can fix it all by yourself but because you might be able to carry the message on to others.

It's not our money. We need to be truly committed to fiscal responsibility and prudence in our management styles to make sure that what we do is right for future generations, and when I say future generations, I mean our children, our grandchildren. We do not want them to carry the debt of our stupidity. We want them to have a better quality of life than we have, and that's why we need to focus on fiscal prudence in the future, right now, starting today, and moving on for the next four years and the next four years after that. The government can do better and needs to do better.

Albertans do deserve to have the best quality of life in the world, but when your third-largest line item is debt financing, it means that you cannot have that money to do other things because you borrowed it. And I say to you all: please, do not borrow any more money. Albertans are smart, and they can spend their money much better than we can. They will get the dollars where they're supposed to go for them and their priorities instead of us and our priorities. Every time we decide to make a spending decision for them as a government, that decision costs money to implement, to announce, to roll out. The money is better left with them.

During the election Wildrose campaigned on five priorities, and I'd like to compare those priorities to the throne speech. The first priority, of course, was standing up for low taxes, balanced budgets, and a long-term savings strategy. Our plan would have balanced the budget by 2017 without raising taxes. We would have done this with actual reductions in spending, not draconian reductions but actual small reductions in spending across government, cutting PC waste, and the whole time protecting one hundred per cent of our front-line services. Our plan actually included a long-term savings strategy and investing back into the heritage fund.

Now, the first thing that bothered me about the throne speech was that it was very thin. The second thing was that it didn't have any, not one, mention of fiscal responsibility. This government at this stage has no plan for getting our spending in line with our revenue levels. Now, we've heard that oil is low. That's because we heard it from the previous government. Well, oil prices are not low, folks. We are in the third-highest revenue year that this government has ever seen, the third-best sales of this corporation's, this government's, business ever. Any business would be proud to have the third-highest sales in its history to deal with as far as expenses. So it's not a revenue problem; it's a spending problem.

And this government has no plan for savings. All indications are that this government will spend every dollar of the future legacy that is our resource wealth. When it is gone, what do we do then for jobs? We hear of diversifying our economy, but we see very little action and, bluntly, no action from the previous government. We must go away from the path of PC debt, PC entitlement, and PC cronyism and move to a new era of what's best for Albertans.

Every indication so far is that this government is committed to growing the bureaucracy and to growing government. I say to you:

think differently. Compare yourself to the rest of the country and what they do with the same amount of or less resources. Not once in the throne speech is there any mention at all of economizing. Already we have seen this NDP government resume a hiring boom and cancel the wage freeze to the senior managers in the civil service.

I went to a chiropractor just the other day a couple blocks from here, and he told me that he couldn't believe – couldn't believe – how many jobs were being advertised at AHS with six-figure incomes, and he was thinking of leaving private practice to go to Alberta Health Services. What scares me the most is how much money we don't have to spend, how big the bureaucracy is, and how much we're spending on the bureaucracy now in inefficiencies, middle managers, upper managers. It is not serving Albertans. It is pushing paper from one end of the desk to other, and that doesn't actually cure patients.

When it comes to fiscal issues, I promise Albertans, Wildrose promises Albertans, that we will fight the NDP government's fiscal folly. We are hoping they will see the light.

Our second priority was standing up for patient-centred health and seniors' care, both of which are very important to Canadians. We have about a million new Canadians that become seniors every year. We have 65,000 to 70,000 people in Alberta that become seniors every year. We cannot ignore this issue any longer. While we do want to reform the health system and guarantee Albertans that their wait times would be medically reasonable, unfortunately we were not elected with a majority to do that. A wait time guarantee would have put an end to excruciating and dangerous wait times Albertans face across the province. I would suggest that would be a very good start on health care.

We also wanted to have a mental health and addictions strategy. We believe that health care is about patients cured, not about dollars spent and managers hired. Health care is not about the system or the procedure. It is about the patient. It is about curing.

This throne speech has no mention, none at all, of how this government will fix health care. This is the number one priority for many Albertans, but the government's only plan seems to be to employ as many pencil-pushers as possible. That is not reasonable, and that is not what Albertans need.

Our third priority was standing up for a world-class education system. Fifteen years ago we were number one in the world, number one in Alberta. Today we're number five in Canada. That is not reasonable. We need to concentrate on an education system that builds schools both on time and on budget. How many did the PCs build? One school. How many did they promise? One hundred and twenty-three. How many times did they promise them? Two hundred and forty. Let's try business differently this time.

Our plan focused squarely on parents. We wanted to eliminate mandatory school fees for parents. We wanted to protect their right to choose what's best for their children's education. Parents across Alberta have told us that it was time to get back to basics. Wildrose MLAs will fight to develop consistent provincial grading standards with traditional letter or percentage grades for students from grades 5 to 12. We've heard clearly that this would be an important first step for education in this province and to restore education to where it was and where we all want it to be.

This throne speech has no mention at all of how this government will give Albertans the top-quality education system that we did have. Not one mention in the throne speech. All we know is that the government is prepared to throw money at the system. They claim that they're investing $103 million in the system, but if you have a calculator and add it, it actually comes out to $213 million. They claim that it is to fund 12,000 new students except that if you look on the website, the school boards have indicated that they only anticipate 7,500 new students. The throne speech does not mention curricula. The throne speech is very weak on education.

Our fourth priority focused on democracy and accountability. We had a series of reforms to cabinet and to how MLAs should work. We would limit severance packages across all government, not just among political staff. We wanted to keep politicians accountable, and we wanted MLA recall legislation, true fixed election dates, and – you might guess this – a ban on floor crossing without a by-election. Now, you might say: why? Well, I will tell you why. I believe, clearly, Mr. Speaker, that the floor crossing was an attack on our reputation as politicians. It wasn't an attack on the Wildrose or the PCs or the NDP. It was an attack on all of us, and democracy should not be attacked like that again.

This throne speech has some elements of progress on this particular front, and I would like to compliment the House leader and the Premier. Yesterday we passed Bill 1, which almost – almost – gets rid of union and corporate donations. Pretty exciting. We campaigned on it. The NDP campaigned on it. Good opportunity. But I do say almost because the bill leaves in two huge loopholes. Unions can still guarantee loans to the NDP, like they have done in the past, and unions can donate paid time of their employees to the NDP, like they have in the past, two loopholes that, clearly, the NDP knew existed yet they did nothing to close. We thought we'd seen the end of governments that were opportunist and changed the playing field to their advantage. We're hoping that that loophole can be changed.

The law in Alberta defines contributions as cash, goods, or real property. I'm pretty sure the Premier doesn't think that union and corporate employees are goods or property, so I think this gives us a tremendous opportunity to slam the door shut on those two loopholes. It's not a fair playing ground, and we need to be fair so Albertans know that we believe in democracy for all parties, not just for the NDP.

But there is hope that we can fix it. The Premier has invited all parties to sit on a special committee to deal with these sorts of issues. We're hoping that the members from the government on that committee will be open to amendments and open to closing these loopholes. Of course, I look to the House leader, in particular, to give directions on that front. It's a good thing. I do commend the Premier for that effort, and I'm hoping that we will see better legislation in the fall.

Our fifth priority was standing up for Alberta communities, for healthy communities, for vibrant communities, to make sure that people want to live in Alberta communities, both rural and urban. Our rural and urban communities are tied together. It is not a mutually exclusive situation. They are dependent and codependent on each other. And why do I say that? Because the urban areas do not hold the natural resources or the people that work on most of these natural resources. The rural areas hold that. But the same is reversed. When people in Fort McMurray want to have a nice weekend out, they go to Edmonton, and that's where they spend a lot of their money, or to Calgary to watch a Flames game. There is a connection, and we're very proud of Edmonton and Calgary, living in the rural area, the same as, I believe, urbanites should be proud of the rural areas in Alberta.

Our urban communities need funding certainty. We heard that clearly from the mayors. For too long politics has been the key determinant of funding. That has to stop. We proposed the 10-10 municipal funding plan to solve this problem, to take politics out of infrastructure funding. We would give this funding to municipalities with no political strings attached.

The throne speech is very weak on community issues as well. It really fails to understand resource issues entirely. It fails to mention agriculture, one of the most important things that actually built this province and that keeps food in our mouths. What about tourism, other key economic drivers in so many communities that have been left out entirely from the throne speech? Not one mention. The government's policy on energy issues is also particularly concerning, and to suggest otherwise – nobody's listening. People in Alberta are worried. Communities are worried. Corporations and businesses are worried.

As the MLA for Fort McMurray-Conklin I know how important our energy sector is. When I moved to Fort McMurray in 1967 there were 1,500 people there. Today there are over 100,000 that live in that area, and there are another 70,000 that work in the work camps, which means that probably about 110,000 people work in the work camps because they hot-swap the beds. I know how important the energy issue is to us because I saw these people every week, flying back and forth to Toronto, to Newfoundland, to B.C., when I would fly to Ottawa. The planes were full, and there are three direct flights a day to Toronto and points beyond. The economy of Canada rests with our energy industry here in Alberta.

People wonder why Alberta has such a big influence on the world stage. There are a number of reasons. One of the reasons is the oil and gas industry and the success we have with patents, with ingenuity, with the people, the men and women that work in this industry that go around the world and bring their resource specialties into the world and bring Canadian jobs and investment into the world. What does that do? Well, when you come from Alberta, which is the most generous place in Canada per capita, and Fort McMurray, which is the most generous place in Alberta and Canada per capita for all nonprofits, including the United Way and other groups, we have the ability to influence not just Canada but the world with our decisions. That's why every decision that is made by your government is so critical to not just us in this place, not just Edmontonians and Calgarians and not just the people in rural Alberta but to all Canadians. To the entire world we are an example of what can be done with a proper democracy. We have struggled in the opposition to get the government to acknowledge the importance of our energy sector and our need to get more pipelines to get our product to market. As all of you know in this place, the Wildrose is here to help.

The throne speech is also weak on communities. Our cities and other municipalities will still have to go cap in hand to the government for their funding, and they will have to play political games to get their projects built. The most popular infrastructure program in Ottawa was the gas tax fund. The Federation of Canadian Municipalities gave rave reviews of it. Why? Because it was certain. It was based on population. It was indexed, so it would grow with the rate of inflation, and it was fair. It didn't take myself or someone else to make decisions on where the money would go. It would go to the communities based on their need and their population. It's a fair system, and that's a system that our 10-10 program suggests, very similar, and I would recommend that particular infrastructure investment project to be adopted by the NDP. It's a great platform, and we'd be happy to help to go over more particulars.

Overall, as you can tell, I'm not thrilled with the throne speech. I thought it was very thin. Really, it is a speech about how the government will return in the fall to give a Speech from the Throne. So it was a speech about a speech. That is very concerning. Albertans have gone months without a budget and a government, and we have a time in our lives right now that is very unpredictable. The economy of the world is faltering, and we need to make sure that the corporate community, the business community, Alberta families have certainty in their decisions. In my mind, that means that when we have an election, we come to the people with a clear, laid-out plan for where the priorities of the government are so that they can feel confident and focused in the future.

As I mentioned, the throne speech fails to mention agriculture or forestry or tourism, which are all very big industries, and all of those industries need assurances that this government hasn't forgotten them. The throne speech has no plan for health care. It has no plan for restoring Alberta to world-class education. It has no plan on dealing with our communities.

It does have some elements that deal with improving democracy in Alberta, but much remains to be done about accountability, and now some on this side of the House would question this particular act based upon the two loopholes that allow the NDP to have employees working for them from unions or to allow loans. Those are troubling issues.

The throne speech really has no plan about fiscal issues except to raise taxes. You might have heard: the Wildrose is not in favour of raising taxes. Not just raising taxes but spending the money faster than they can tax it: that's something new for the NDP. Albertans are worried about their jobs, and they want the government to be predictable. They want the government to promote long-term stability, and this throne speech does not do that. It does none of that.

I think that it would have been helpful for Alberta businesses and Alberta families to get a clearer picture of this government's priorities, especially given the economic situation that's just come about in the last few months. That economic situation is not not enough revenue. That economic situation was brought about as a result of those folks over there, that spent faster than it came in, and they had no plan to do so. They threw it around like it was their money. It is not their money.

Getting that clarity from the government as far as a focus on the future would have been very helpful, and it would be helpful now because we see in our marketplace, we see in the economy that the uncertainty is causing difficulties with businesses. People are deferring funding and investment decisions in Alberta, and you can say that that's not happening, but it is. People are worried. A clear road map is the best thing to do before you get in a car and take any trip, and we have no map.

All we can do now is hope that the government goes away for the summer and, as the House leader said, as the Minister of Infrastructure said, works hard over the summer to come up with a plan, to come up with a strategy that identifies what Albertans want as their priorities. We can hope that it will take the time, that it will listen to Alberta families, listen to communities, listen to Alberta businesses. We can hope that such consultation will result in a stable and mainstream throne speech in the fall or the winter, as the case may be, or next year, as the case possibly might be even further – I hope we get to vote on it before the end of the year, but we'll see – a new budget and throne speech that actually deal with priorities that matter to Albertans and not just the ideological hobby horses which matter to this government's partisans.

I think there's nothing clearer than to make sure that we all represent Albertans with hard work, with honesty and perseverance, recognizing that we are here but for a very short time. To move this mountain called government, one way or the other, is difficult even with the largest majority, but to make things better only takes one step in the right direction.

Please, Mr. Speaker, through you, when you and everyone else takes the step, might they please take the step towards fiscal responsibility, prudence, and understanding that the money does not belong to the government. It belongs to the people of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, with respect, I would move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 2

An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue

[Debate adjourned June 23: Dr. Starke speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the time I have remaining, I did want to talk a little bit about something that's been talked about quite a bit here in the Chamber, and that is: does this province have a spending problem, or does this province have a revenue problem? Well, I will put it to the members that we do have a spending problem. We spend $1,300 per person more than the national average.

One of our problems is that we pat ourselves on the back – or, at least, I can tell you that in the past the government has patted itself on the back – by saying that we spend more per capita on education, we spend more per capita on advanced education, we spend more per capita on health. That's not a measurement of success. That's not the metric you should use. You should be looking for results.

But, Mr. Speaker, we have a revenue problem as well. The Alberta advantage is that we collect 11.5 billion fewer dollars than the next lowest taxed jurisdiction, which is British Columbia, and if you brought in the tax regime of Nova Scotia, there would be an additional $24 billion per year. We've made up the difference between high-cost services and low taxes with royalty revenue, with nonrenewable resource revenue, and when resource revenue goes down, as it has in the past year, that gap becomes extremely problematic.

Notwithstanding some of the things that happened in the last election and a strategy which I won't choose to go into today, we decided to try to do some of both, in decreasing spending, which we did, and increasing revenue, which we also tried to do. Clearly, the voters felt that that was not the direction to go, and we accept that verdict.

Mr. Speaker, I would say, though, that it is important that we do not view issues on the economy in terms of black and white. Most issues are nuanced, and most issues are in multiple shades of grey. I won't give a specific number. It's important that we do look at things in that way. I do believe that a cautious but prudent approach is the correct one to do, and the members of my caucus will do that in this Chamber.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or observations?

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to see if we could get some help for the House, to get some clarity on an issue that the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster raised before the break – I'm not entirely sure that he can provide the help, but perhaps we can get help – suggesting there was something untoward in the retroactivity of the date of Bill 2 coming into effect, the 1st of January. I assume that this merely reflects the need to make the changes that encompass the entire year and that the changes would be retroactive as well as pro-rated based upon the year. I'm just curious to know if anybody in the House knows the answer to this, particularly the member if he does. I'm inclined to believe that he knows more than me, particularly because of his experience at Treasury Board, but I just wanted to see if there was some chance for a little clarification on that or if we knew that at this point.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Parenthetically, I'll just say as an aside that I'll just correct a common mistake in the pronunciation of my home community. It's Lloyd-min-ster, three syllables, not Lloyd-minister. It's all about the church, not the preacher, which is, indeed, how a lot of things should be.

With regard to the retroactivity or, at least, the coming into force or effect, I will tell you that I'm not aware of any situation that I've encountered in my admittedly limited parliamentary career where any act that has been brought in has a retroactive date for the coming into force or effect. My problem with it, quite frankly, is that in this situation it bridges over a period of time in which the existing government was not, in fact, in power. I have a fundamental issue with that.

You know, it also raises the question: what limitation is there on that retroactivity? If the government in power, for example, as they have asserted before, decides, let's just say as an example, that royalty revenues that have been collected by government have been insufficient for the past five or 10 or 15 or 30 years, will they pass after the royalty review a decision to raise royalties that is retroactive for the last 30 years? Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that that would be a measure that would cause considerable turmoil and one that we members of the Assembly here would certainly reject.

I have a fundamental problem with this act including a reference to a coming into force or effect that occurred before the date that this party won the election or was sworn into office. We already had a considerable debate as to the effect of Bill 1, and that debate was resolved, or, shall we say, it was defeated. But in this situation we're going right back to January 1 of this year, and I do have difficulty with that.

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the pro-rated numbers, as you can see, for the 12 per cent they would be 10.5 per cent. So everything over $125,000 to $150,000 would be taxed for the 2015 year at 10.5 per cent. That's a pro-rated 12 per cent amount for three months of the year. There is a requirement when you're dealing with personal income tax to deal on a yearly basis, and that's why it goes back to January 1. But we're only pro-rating that fee, that 12 per cent fee, at 10.5 per cent, and we implement it on October 1.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly understand the math involved here. That's not the issue. The issue is that, in point of fact, in order to affect the change that you're wanting and to bring in the tax rates that you're wanting, you have to start taxing people before you were ever elected. That is fundamentally wrong. You may say: "Well, it doesn't matter. They earn a lot of money." It's a question of fairness. Whether you earn $50,000 or $500,000 or $5 million a year, fairness shouldn't change based on income level. So with regard to that, I reject this notion.

Yes, I understand the math. I get the math because, you know, that's what you have to do if you're implementing a tax for a three-month period. You have to stretch it out, and you do a multiplication, and that's not complicated. My difficulty and my problem with it is that we are being asked to pass a bill that retroactively has its coming-into-force date well before the election of the government. That's problematic for me.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will always rise in this House to defend Alberta's hard-working families, and I will always fight against an increase in the size and the scope of government. It should be no surprise, then, that I vehemently oppose Bill 2. This is a regressive and harmful experiment with Alberta's jobs and the future prosperity of our province. It is nothing more than a direct attack on the Alberta advantage. The government should have realized by now that 60 per cent of Albertans didn't vote for them, that 60 per cent of Albertans didn't vote for an attack on Alberta's hard-working families, and that 60 per cent of Albertans didn't support this government's plan for higher taxes, higher spending, and even more debt and borrowing against my children.

Mr. Speaker, the Wildrose was sent here on a platform of no new taxes. I'm humbled and I'm honoured to be here on behalf of my constituents in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. Where I come from, we don't believe in higher taxes before we deal with spending problems, and we don't believe in taking money away from our hard-working families' pockets before we deal with spending problems. And you know what? We're proud of it. We don't believe in taxing our way out of spending problems. It's reckless and regressive.

We think that this government, just like the old government, needs to get spending under control. They need to take a look at the books, find efficiencies where efficiencies can be found, cut the waste where there's waste to be cut. Instead, Mr. Speaker, this government thinks that there's not a single cent to be saved. They think that after 43 years of waste and mismanagement and cronyism there's not a single place to find savings. Really? Forty-three years of PC government, and the NDP thinks that they're going great. That's a little surprising, to be honest. That's why Wildrose has long advocated for finding efficiencies and cutting waste. We believe Albertans are taxed enough. Hard-working Alberta families are the lifeblood of our communities and our province, and we shouldn't be taking more from them to fund the pet projects of the new NDP government.

Mr. Speaker, these tax hikes will mean the end of the Alberta advantage. It will mean the end of our competitive advantage, and why on earth is this something that we should be in favour of? Why should we be in favour of making Alberta a more difficult place to start a business? Why would we be in favour of making Alberta a more expensive place to raise a family? Why do we think that Albertans should be penalized for choosing to make our beautiful province home? I just can't figure it out. We have a government that wants to chase people away from our province, to encourage families to move away and work in more competitive jurisdictions like B.C., Ontario, and even Quebec. I never thought I would live to see the sad day that Quebec could end up being a better place to live and work and raise a family than Alberta.

I'm going to fight against higher taxes until the day I die. I'm going to do it every day that I'm in this House. I'm going to fight this government every step of the way because hard-working Alberta families need a champion in this House. Wildrose is here to be that champion. We do not believe in higher taxes now or in the future, Mr. Speaker. We are here to fight for hard-working families. We are here to fight for our constituents, that rely on the Alberta advantage. We are here to fight for keeping Alberta a great place to live and work and raise our families, and we're going to keep doing just that. I will wholeheartedly and without reservation vote against this bill every step of the way. I will never give up on the fight against the regressive tax hikes of this NDP government.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any questions or observations? The Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That was rather quick. I'm very, very, very pleased to rise, I guess to be recognized by you to be able to speak. I rather wish that the subject of this discussion was something other than what it is. What I think it is is short-sighted political, ideological moves that are coming at a time when the economy is incredibly fragile. I know that the members opposite feel that we need to make changes to our income tax system. I for one believe we need to make changes to the income tax system. I think that significant and substantial changes at a time when the economy is in such peril are incredibly unwise. It is self-serving to put one's political ideologies and pursuits ahead of everyday, hard-working Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I want to share with you a story of today. Earlier today I was in Calgary attending a school function. At that function I happened to check my phone, and I saw a headline about a particular company in Calgary that was going to lay people off today. So I immediately thought of a friend that works there, somebody I went to high school with, somebody that I've known since childhood. He was born and brought up in northeast Calgary. He's worked incredibly hard. He is the son of two immigrants that have worked labour jobs their entire lives so that their kids could have better opportunities. I thought of him immediately. I thought: "Oh, man, he works there. He works there, and he works in the major capital projects area."

Now, he's a guy that has worked his tail off. In a period of 13 years he has been able to get himself in a position where he's the sole breadwinner in the family, because one of their children has a medical condition, and his wife decided to stay home with the child. I thought: damn. I hope I can say that. No? My apologies. I'll take that back from the record. I thought: if he is the victim of this layoff, this is really going to suck. There's no other way to put it.

Now, I started calling him and sending him text messages, and for a period of about four hours I did not reach him. It wasn't until I was starting to come back to Edmonton that he finally called back, and he said: "I just missed it. I just missed it." He could have been one of those unfortunate people that lost their job today, and his life would have been turned upside down. So why in the world would we be debating a bill in the Legislative Assembly today that has the potential to have more of these stories, Mr. Speaker? I just don't follow that.

I'm not saying: don't bring in changes. I'm saying: bring them in in a thoughtful way that doesn't have a negative effect on the economy. Bring them in in a thoughtful way. I stand with you. You know, unlike other members of the Assembly, I do believe that there need to be some changes and adjustments to our income tax system. I get that. But you can't do it overnight, and you really can't do it at a time when thousands upon thousands of Albertans have either lost their jobs or are in fear of losing their jobs. That's just not cool. That's not right, Mr. Speaker. That's damn – sorry; again I retract that. That is unjust.

If we want to talk about justice and fairness, then we should be pragmatic in our approach. I see the members opposite and the government opposite, Mr. Speaker, stand up in the House on many decisions, on many things they talked about during the campaign, and they said: "You know what? We said that in the campaign, but now we might have to reconsider it." So you're willing to give on things like the Calgary cancer project, but when it comes to thousands of hard-working Albertans, you're not willing to reconsider their livelihoods. How do you explain the difference? How do you explain that difference? I invite any single member opposite to stand up and give me the rationale. How can you justify? How can you say, "This is a complicated decision, so we have to wait and look at our options"? Well, what about the income tax system and the corporate taxes? You don't have to do that for that? That's not complicated? That's not going to affect tens of thousands of hard-working Albertans?

I get it. You want to make changes. It's all good. Just do it thoughtfully, and don't jam it down the throats of Albertans in the midst of what may be one of the most significant economic crises that we face in many, many years. We have estimates right now that production levels in many countries are going up. What does that mean, Mr. Speaker? That means that we're going to be in this low-price environment for years. If that is the case, sir, you're going to have a significant reduction of capital expenditure. You're going to have a very significant reduction in capital expenditure across this province.

Now, what does that mean? That means that our hard-working friends and neighbours are going to be out of luck. That means that some of them are not going to be called back to work. That means that some of those gravel truck drivers are not going to have a season. Some of the rig workers: nope. That hotel or that motel in rural Alberta: empty. What about the diner? There'll be a couple of guys like us that go around, that want to shake some hands. We'll be in the diners. That's about it.

This is real. So if you can have the pragmatic instinct to delay the Calgary cancer project or now rethink your position on that, I'd invite you to do the same here for a bill that's going to have an effect on tens of thousands, millions of Albertans. That's all we're saying. We understand your ideological perspective. You want to make changes. Rock on. Just do it in a way that doesn't already kick people when they're down. That's just not right. That's not cool, you know.

I brought some other substantive issues up, Mr. Speaker, in the past, and I'd love it if the government opposite could provide us with answers. Alberta has double the high-income tax filers of other provinces, double the high-income bracket tax filers of other provinces as a percentage. Now, why do I bring that up? They're about 12 per cent of tax filers whereas in other provinces they are about 4, 5, 6 per cent of tax filers. Why am I bringing that up? I'm bringing that up because that means that there are a heck of a lot of people that pay their taxes in Alberta. On December 31 of any given year they say: I am an Albertan because Alberta has that advantage. So they pay their taxes here.

They pay their taxes here, and some 33 or so per cent of our income tax revenue comes from those very high-income earners. Some 33 per cent. So my question is: if you chase those people away because now they have to pay 15 per cent in Alberta – let's say that they live in B.C. They've got to pay – what is it? – 12 per cent. Why would they not file their taxes in B.C.? How much are they going to lose in their income? How much are we going to lose in revenue?

My question to the members opposite is: how will you make up for that revenue in two, three, or four years from now? You're going to go back to everyday, hard-working Albertans and say: "You know what? I know we said that we're going to keep you at 10, but we've got to bump you up." There's no other way, or you're going to have to bring in a sales tax. You tell me. If you lose that 33 or so per cent of our personal income tax revenue, you've got to make up for it somewhere. I don't see them, Mr. Speaker, making cuts.

I know my friends to the right proposed $5 billion in cuts. I don't think that's reasonable. I don't think that's fair. I don't think that's sustainable. But what the government is proposing to do, Mr. Speaker, just will absolutely hinder our economy at a time when we can't have it. At the end of the day, if you look at the two-, three-, four-year horizon, when a good chunk of the personal income tax revenue is gone, there are going to be everyday, hard-working Albertans that are going to have to pay more.

You know, ideological pursuits aside, sometimes you've got to think this stuff through, just like you're thinking through the Calgary cancer centre project. I'd invite you to do the same thing here. Go out; talk to a few people, maybe more than a few. Talk to some experts. More importantly, talk to some of those tax filers. Talk to the guys making $100,000, people making $50,000, the gals making $80,000. Talk to some of them, and then talk to some of the guys making $200,000 or $300,000 or $400,000 and say: if our rates go up, will you continue to file taxes here? Then tell me if your plan is sustainable in three or four years.

Now, I understand that this stuff is really emotional. You can get people all jacked up to say: "You know what? Those who do better should pay more." I get that. I get that you can get people worked up any second. But you've got to think right now – unless you're planning on just, you know, four years of this. Otherwise, you've got to think that in four years from now you're going to be going back to those same people and saying: "We chased away a whole bunch of tax filers. Now we've got to go up with the rest." You've got some folks around the table here that are in those categories. I suggest you talk to them.

On the corporate income tax side, for the Premier to stand up and say, "For those that have benefited from the good times in Alberta, we expect them to pay more now," you know what? I don't know about anybody on that side of the House, but businesses don't create themselves, Mr. Speaker. They don't create themselves. You don't wake up and have somebody go and switch on the lights and open the doors to your dry cleaning shop. It doesn't happen. You've got to work. You've got to put in that work yourself.

So for all those hard-working business owners, small-business owners – because a small business can easily do $500,000 in gross sales a year, 1,400 bucks a day. Fourteen hundred bucks a day. I invite anybody here to go to their neighbourhood pub, go to their neighbourhood restaurant and ask them what their daily sales are. Then you'll see how many businesses are actually being affected by your plan. It's not bigwig corporate Calgary.

An Hon. Member: It's profit, not gross.

Mr. Bhullar: It doesn't matter. [interjections] Seriously?

The Speaker: Hon. member, could you . . .

Mr. Bhullar: Do I have the floor, sir?

The Speaker: No. I'd like you to sit down, and then you can have the floor. That's why I'm standing.

Could we let the hon. member finish?

Proceed.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, it's quite simple. Those who understand business, who understand the hard work required to succeed in business, would never jam a 20 per cent tax hike down the throats of hard-working Alberta entrepreneurs overnight. It's ridiculous. Ridiculous. The members opposite say that they need months and months and months to prepare a budget. What about the budgets all these businesses have prepared? You're going to throw all those out the window? You're going to throw all of those budgets out the window? What about the planning they've all done? That's all done.

The Speaker: Any questions or comments? The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to start off by thanking the member for his very impassioned speech. Clearly, we see your ideology shining through here.

A couple of points that I'd like to address. First of all, I find it interesting that the hon. member is talking about kicking people when they're down. Last time I checked, income earners earning $125,000 or more aren't considered being down.

I'd like to juxtapose that comment with the many men and women working multiple jobs earning minimum wage. That side of the House has vehemently opposed raising the minimum wage so that those people can afford to live and pay the bills. You know, I find that it's quite disingenuous talking about those earning significant salaries, as the hon. member's colleague had said the other day, talking about how people earning $125,000 or more can possibly afford to make ends meet. I was quite surprised at that.

You know, I want to just address a couple of things here. First of all, 70 per cent of Albertans polled in a poll from this hon. member's party voted in favour of a 2 per cent corporate tax increase. So when the members opposite talk about all of these Albertans that are opposed to it, there are a significant number of Albertans that had said that the profitable corporations can afford to pay a little bit more. A 2 per cent increase still puts us in the middle of the pack, even lower than the average of the middle of the pack, as far as a corporate income tax rate goes.

As well, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that "tax" is not a four-letter word. We pay taxes in order to build roads and schools and hospitals and pay for the critical infrastructure. The members opposite often like to talk about and ask the front bench during question period when they're going to get a new amenity or an upgrade to a facility, yet they don't propose how it's actually going to be paid for. How we pay for it is through everyone paying their fair share. Again, you know, raising personal income tax in a graduated system starting at $125,000 a year is very reasonable, is very prudent. We're talking about saving dollars for those Albertans earning an income under $100,000. We're actually making life more affordable for the majority of Albertans while, again, asking those who can afford to pay a little bit more to pay a little bit more.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the member talked a little bit about businesses or individuals being chased out of the province. I remind the hon. member that there are many different things that make Alberta an incredible place to live and to invest in, and our tax regime is only one factor in a myriad of reasons why people choose to live in our province. We have an incredible infrastructure. We have no PST in this province. We have incredible amenities and services. Again, one of the reasons that we have such a robust economy is our natural resources. So although members opposite may think that many different businesses or individuals may decide to pick up and leave, the reality is that the natural resources that many people's jobs are dependent on are here in Alberta. Therefore, people will be staying in this province to continue to lead very prosperous lives.

We're not trying to say that Albertans shouldn't deserve to make good money and that their hard-earned money shouldn't go toward valuable projects. But at the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, it's not just about the taxes that people pay; it's what they get for their dollar. Again, in this province this government is committed to building schools, to ensuring that we're staffing them with teachers and support staff, to have hospitals, health care that's there when a person needs it.

Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, the proposal that this government has made is quite reasonable. This bill talks about doing a very modest increase to ensure that Alberta can continue to remain prosperous and that the province has the amenities and services here for our citizens. I appreciate the hon. member's impassioned speech on this topic, but I felt moved to speak and offer some reasons as to why this is still an incredible province to invest in and to live in.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to talk about Bill 2 not as a legislator but as a father and a grandfather. I'd like to talk about the people who will be affected by this, those who can't vote for or against this bill but who will be expected to pay for it. I want to speak for our children and grandchildren.

Politics was once described to me as an act of determining who gets what from the cookie jar. A farmer wants the government to put in a culvert for him whereas a baker in the city wants a crosswalk in front of his shop to make it easier for his customers to come and buy bread. Each of these individuals competes for a limited fund called taxes unless, however, the government of the day happens to be the NDP. Then another option is available. In this option the farmer and the baker both get what they want because the NDP government is more than willing to mortgage our children's future in order to satiate their present spending.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The previous government would not address the problem of overspending and were convinced Albertans wouldn't mind if they stuck their long arm down taxpayers' short pockets. As can be evidenced by the scarceness of the numbers of those on my left, that didn't seem to work out so well. I would caution this new government to learn from our past. That history will be prone to repeat itself.

I've heard the Premier and many of her cabinet say that Albertans were consulted during the election, that therefore they have the right to bring forward the policies Albertans want. I would remind the governing party that even though they have a legal right because of their majority status, they did not receive a mandate from the majority of Albertans. The majority of Albertans voted for something other than the NDP platform. So to state that Albertans asked for what's coming down the pipe is simply spinning the reality of what actually did happen during the election.

The NDP government have often used the word "fair" to describe the implementation of their platform. I would ask them: what is fair about saddling our children and grandchildren with a debt burden that they have no say in? Over the next few days we will decide whether we should address the root of the problem, which is government overspending, or whether we will saddle our children and our grandchildren with mounting debt.

I read a telling caption the other day. A couple of fathers were observing their newborn babies in the hospital nursery. One father asked the other why all of the babies were crying, to which the other father proclaimed: because they just found out they were $23,000 in debt.

With complete solemnity I would like to ask this governing body to do something for me. When you go home tonight and tuck your children in bed, I want you to lean over and ever so softly whisper in their ear that you have successfully sold their future to some banking interest. I want you to whisper in their ear that you have just made them someone else's future investment. Whisper in their ear that you appreciate their willingness to pay for your spending problems. Then in good conscience pat them on their head and tell them that you will ever remain their champion.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows five minutes for questions, comments. Anyone? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak in response to the hon. member's statement. After listening to yet another member of the second and third parties making disparaging comments about my motives and accusations that my support of this bill is purely ideological, I can sit no longer. Time after time I listened to the accusation that I do not care about the citizens of this province and seek to cause harm to the wealthy citizens and corporations – I listened to the defence of the status quo in taxation as if there have been no victims – that I am not thoughtful and have not talked to the people affected.

Well, I stand to speak as a social worker with 33 years of experience, having worked in private practice, small business, nonprofits, government services, and at the university. I have committed my life to talking to the people of this province every day about their lived experience. While I could speak to many aspects of the accusations levelled against me and the members of the government, I wish to address just one to demonstrate a point.

A report from the Edmonton Social Planning Council, an agency for which I worked, states that 1 in 10 children living in the province of Alberta lives in poverty, with over 77,000 children living in poverty today under the regime built by the right wing in this province. From the report: Alberta children who live in low-income families experience a greater depth of poverty than the national average. Alberta children also tend to live in poverty longer than children in other parts of Canada. Among Alberta children living in poverty, 32 per cent lived in families where one or both parents worked full-time year-round, and only 22 per cent lived in households where no one worked. Yet these people are against a minimum wage of $15 an hour, still a poverty level.

Children living in poverty is a debt that we have already exacted on our children and our generations to come. Research indicates that children living in poverty costs our province between $5 billion and $10 billion per year in extra social costs and lost economic potential. Poverty is a primary indicator of the social determinants of health. It is time we had a government that did not focus singularly on one indicator of well-being, that being wealth. It is time we focused on indicators of well-being that are complex, sophisticated, and future-thinking like the social determinants of health.

I intend to speak to these issues in a larger way in my first full speech to the House, but I ask the members of this side of the House to remember that the concern and care that brought me and many of the people on the government side of the House here today are concerns about the people and their well-being and where we are going and the need to develop a complex understanding of the ways in which we construct a social society in which everybody benefits and not the 7 per cent that had benefited under the previous regime.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We're back to the main debate now. Does another hon. member wish to speak on Bill 2?

Mr. Fraser: Are we still in questions?

The Deputy Speaker: No. Standing Order 29(2)(a) is done. You can speak to the main bill if you like.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, it's interesting to me to hear the comments of the member that just spoke, talking about the good intentions of the people that come to this House, the people that put their families in front of the public to view, to be criticized. There is a saying that the first one to lead is the first one to be criticized, that it is the first one to make mistakes. I would agree, from the third party, that we have made mistakes.

I'll keep this short. You know, I was on the phone earlier tonight with friends that I grew up with from northeast Calgary that fought tooth and nail to become accountants, to become traders in the market for oil companies today. I'm calling them: "How are things going? What do you think about this corporate tax, this Bill 2?" They're like: "Rick, we don't care. I'd be happy to pay the corporate tax. That's if I have a job." Albertans are losing jobs because of this.

[The Speaker in the chair]

You know, it's funny to me. We talked about this. We've been talking about it in question period, yet you're laughing. You're laughing across the aisle, which you said you would never do if you were in that position. You said that you'd have debates, that you would change the way things were done. Well, you have an opportunity right now to admit that rushing this and putting through Bill 2, corporate taxes, in a downturn is costing Albertans jobs. You can reverse that. You can do something maybe that you criticized that we never could do. You could say that this is a mistake and that we're going to press the stop button, the pause button.

Further to that, I've got to tell you that if I was on that side of the House, which we were, and we were making decisions on finances – flood recovery or anything else, particularly on this one – and then retroactively put it back six months, how does a family budget for that? How does a corporation budget for that, that retroactively they're going to have to pay taxes going back to January 1? How is that fair? Let me remind you that you did have corporations that did vote NDP. You did. So it's fair to retroactively charge them?

I go back to the intent. Definitely, as a Progressive Conservative, which I am, I fought tooth and nail for everything that I have. Thank God for my wife, thank God for my parents, and thank God for my friends because they had faith in me that I would come here and I would do the right thing.

You're seeing right now that it's pretty hard to manage all the moving parts of being in government, and I wish you the best. I do. You know why? It's my kids. It's my dad, who owned a small business, who didn't have a pension, a defined benefit pension. He didn't work in the public sector. He fought for everything as a single parent in Georgian Village. You know, distinctly I remember sitting in the area of the hockey boards, where drug dealers were making deals right next to us. I was the age of my youngest son now, and I couldn't even imagine him having to deal with that. But thank the Lord and thank God for parents and thank God for friends, that that community put me on a track that put me in this House to make a difference for Albertans.

If you think that it's disingenuous why I'm here – I was a paramedic. I went to school specifically to serve my community, and like I said before, I've seen the best and the worst of this province. I am urging this government to press the pause button, to consider how many jobs are being lost. I would agree with the hon. member that at the end of the day . . . [interjection] See? Once again you just can't let me finish the debate without a comment, which you said that you wouldn't do.

An Hon. Member: You guys do that to us.

Mr. Fraser: Well, no. We're talking about Albertans' jobs here, good sir. Jobs. If you lost your job tomorrow . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you. The intent here: I know that you want to do right by Albertans. Everybody in this House does. You have an opportunity to slow it down, consider the jobs being lost, make a readjustment. Like the member said, we're not saying that you can't raise corporate taxes at some point or look at a royalty review at some point. Those are important things. We believe in that. I believe that government should always be evolving. This is an opportunity right now where government is evolving, so you can do something different. I'm urging you, I'm urging you with my constituents who are losing jobs . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member – and again I say this to all of the members in the House – I respectfully request that you try and direct your comments through the Speaker. I think that's part of the emotion that's being dealt with, if you would. Thank you.

Please proceed.

Mr. Fraser: Yes, sir. Mr. Speaker, thank you for that. My intent in looking at these members is not to spar. It is certainly to have a debate and give the side of the people that I'm talking to that are concerned about losing their jobs, and I think we all care about that. This government has a great opportunity right now. Like I said, press the pause button; save jobs. Let's figure out where we need to be. I do believe that the Wildrose, the Progressive Conservatives, and people in the independent parties absolutely want to help this government. I think right now that the economy, jobs, and making sure that Albertans are whole is job number one for this government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. Thank you to the hon. Member for Calgary-South East for those words. The point I'd just like to talk about is that I think he just misspoke a little bit when he talked about the corporate income tax being retroactive. It's not going to be retroactive. It'll be coming in on July 1. It'll only be two percentage points greater than the 10 per cent it is now. It's not retroactive. It'll be going forward.

The hon. member talked about retroactivity in terms of the personal income tax also. That will be implemented on October 1, but it will be pro-rated for the 2015 year only at a lower level, so it implies that it's only three months of taxes that it'll take in. It's going forward October 1, and the corporate income tax is July 1. The calendar year needs to be used by the CRA for personal income taxes. That's why we had to call the 2015 year only a pro-rated level; for instance, 10.5. For a 12 per cent effective tax rate for 2016, it would be 10.5 for 2015.

Thank you, hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just real briefly, the hon. member earlier spoke with very apparent passion for the kids that he's working with, and that's very commendable. He's not the only member of this House that's dedicated his life to the poor and the vulnerable in our communities. I've spent 30 years with one of our largest nonprofits in the province that's dedicated to the homeless, seven years as the executive director of it. I can tell you that raising the minimum wage will not help one of those over a thousand homeless people that that agency works with a day. It won't. You know why? Because it's taking away jobs, that we need. For the kids that the hon. member discussed, taking away jobs from their parents does not help make the kids' lives better. It's that simple. Nobody on this side of the House is trying to hurt anybody. You're going to cost Albertans jobs, which is going to hurt the most vulnerable of our population in this province.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments?

The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I couldn't help but notice that there was a discussion earlier in relation to vulnerable Albertans. You know, there are 450,000 seniors in Alberta. There are going to be a million seniors by just over 2030. Seniors, of course, are one of our most vulnerable sets of citizens. In this particular case, I saw a joke recently, just today actually, that had two people come up to the counter of a coffee shop, and one person said to the other, "What could be wrong with a minimum wage of $15?" Meanwhile the clerk said: "Here's your coffee. That'll be $12. Thank you, sir." There's no question that with people's salaries going up, costs are going to go up. I owned a Quiznos franchise, and I can tell you that when I have to pay $15 to $25 for somebody to put sandwiches together, I have to charge more for subs, so the prices are going to go up.

My question to the member is: how will that affect seniors in Alberta? That's who I'm worried about, the most vulnerable. I think seniors on a fixed income are going to be the hardest hit because they don't work anymore. They've set aside money to take care of their future, and their future is now changing. Costs are going to go up, and the costs of things that they buy are going to go up. Could the member please answer that question?

Mr. Fraser: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you to the Leader of the Official Opposition. You know, being a paramedic means you spend a lot of your time with the vulnerable, particularly seniors. Again, like I've said before, I've seen the best and the worst in this province regarding that. When you raise the minimum wage, you think about the store owner. He's going to raise the price of milk. He's going to raise the price of bread. He's going to raise the price of the essentials to cover those costs. But what we haven't done and what we haven't heard, because there isn't a detailed budget, is how we're going to give seniors and those folks on a fixed income today, based on how they've been saving – how are they going to be able to afford these things?

When that happens, what I can tell you is that at the end of the day, for all these other things that they say will be offset by raising the minimum wage, it is actually the opposite. When seniors feel they can't afford things, they do get depressed. When they get depressed, they call the ambulance. When the ambulance has to take them, we have to deal with them, whether it's a mental health issue or whether it's an actual emergency. Oftentimes they wind up in the emergency department. It's not an actual emergency, but somebody needs care. At the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, it just costs more money.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak against Bill 2, An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue. There is nothing fair in raising taxes. The individuals and businesses in this province that are getting this rather large increase in tax are about to be hit by a high inside pitch: unexpected, hard to see, and painful.

Mr. Speaker, it was the poor management of the public purse by the former government and the inability of this government to address the inherent spending problems throughout the public sector that will result in job creators being punished. Higher business taxes can have harmful effects on the economy.

University of Calgary School of Public Policy economist Jack Mintz stated that Alberta would lose 8,900 jobs for each one-point increase in the business tax rate. The findings of Dr. Mintz's study have been reviewed by Toronto economist Mike Moffatt and University of British Columbia economist Kevin Milligan. This study is not disputed. Another study of European companies, piloted by the University of Oxford, found that a dollar rise in corporate tax reduced the wage bill by 75 cents.

Businesses are not going to break into their profits to pay for an increase in taxes. What we can expect to see is an increase in prices of goods, a lowering of wages, and the laying off of workers. These are the front-line protections that businesses will have to explore before giving up profits. Punishing the job creators will only further delay Alberta's economic recovery from lower-than-forecast oil prices due to geopolitical events; Saudi Arabia has turned on the taps. Raising business taxes will increase government revenue but only in the short term. Long term it will deter investors when Alberta loses its advantage over other provinces. Combine that with an increase in minimum wage, and business profits will decline sharply.

These business tax increases have the potential to drive investment and jobs to other provinces. For example, Saskatchewan, right next door, is already making noises, asking business to come and invest in their province and inviting people to move over there for the Saskatchewan advantage.

But here's the one that really gets to the bone, Mr. Speaker. Alberta will now have a higher business tax rate than the province of Quebec. Yes, Quebec, Canada's bastion of all things left-wing, the fiscal basket case of debt and deficit, and the largest recipient of transfer payments, will now have a lower business tax than Alberta, at 11.9 per cent. I can already hear Premier Philippe Couillard crowing about Quebec's competitive advantage over Alberta. It's embarrassing. Alberta has lost its place of fiscal leadership in Confederation.

This is a 20 per cent tax increase all at once. No discussion about phasing in this tax. The government is more than willing to phase in a minimum wage over three years but not a tax increase that will be detrimental to jobs in Alberta. Alberta businesses like Earth's General Store, an organic food store right here in Edmonton; Poppy Barley, a shoe store; Calder Bateman; and Yardstick Software, all here in Edmonton, are facing the issue of having to find 20 per cent somewhere. If their profits cannot handle the increases, lower cost and poorer quality inputs may have to be what's used, which could potentially ruin the businesses' reputations in the long run. Potentially, staff salaries would have to be cut or positions eliminated or hours of workers cut back or, at the worst, businesses will just have to close. Your favourite corner pub will be affected in exactly the same way. How much will you have to pay for your favourite pint of beer?

The fastest way to close these fine Alberta businesses down is to raise taxes. Higher taxes will mean fewer staff in the service sector. Fewer staff means poorer customer service. If people are travelling from all over the world to come to a town in my constituency of Little Bow to engage in all things Star Trek, they are not going to come back if they get poor customer service. Events in my constituency like Vul-Con and Spock Days will be negatively affected by higher taxes and personal taxes.

Mr. Speaker, I implore the members opposite to please vote down this unfair tax increase at this time of economic readjustment in Alberta. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions or comments? The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

9:20

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank my next door neighbour, the Member for Little Bow, for his comments today. There are a number of very interesting points that he hit on. He's speaking about the very direct impact that this is going to have upon his constituents. The Member for Calgary-South East spoke about the good intentions of every member in this House regardless of their ideological intentions or bent. We all want to help Albertans, but we come at some things from pretty different perspectives at times. But it's important that we stick to our principles when we're here and we stick to the facts.

The Member for Calgary-Greenway said a lot of things that I very much would agree with other than some pretty strange factual errors such as us cutting $5 billion from the budget. Now, as a fire-breathing fiscal conservative I might fantasize about doing so in my wildest dreams, but that was nowhere close to the Wildrose's balanced budget program. In fact, we were proposing to cut as much from the budget, $2.5 billion, as his own party had been proposing to cut from the budget until one week before it tabled that budget in this House, fatefully.

I find it strange, as much as I agree with many of the arguments coming from the third party, I find it mind-bending that a party that introduced 59 taxes on Albertans, targeted primarily at the middle class, to raise a tax burden on the average household in this province by two and a half thousand dollars a year can now position itself as a champion of taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, Margaret Thatcher called it popular capitalism. A defence of capitalism requires a broad buy-in by all people. A defence of capitalism cannot be focused only on high-income earners or large businesses. It must benefit all Albertans, all people. That is why the Wildrose has more than twice as many seats in this Legislature as the previous government.

I was wondering if the member would like to comment about the remaining taxes that have not been withdrawn by the current government, taxes imposed by the previous government like the one that affects many members of this Legislature very personally and dearly, the beer tax.

Mr. Schneider: What do you want to know about the beer tax?

Mr. Fildebrandt: The government's repeal.

Mr. Schneider: Well, all I can say, hon. member, is to just reiterate what I said in my speech. This is a clear 20 per cent increase in a tax for corporations, small businesses that hire the people that go out and shop and spend money and keep the economy rolling around. If things move up by 20 per cent, Mr. Speaker, your beer downtown isn't going to be near as tasty, is it?

The Speaker: Any other questions or comments? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What an interesting conversation tonight. It's great that we all love Alberta so very, very much, and I think it's time to recognize that there is middle ground here. For the longest time this province was proud to hold a competitive economic advantage in relation to the rest of Canada. The late Premier Peter Lougheed famously dubbed it the Alberta advantage. Sadly, the days of the Alberta advantage are numbered thanks to the last decade of PC mismanagement and the NDP economic reforms like Bill 2.

For decades businesses big and small would look to Alberta as the land of opportunity, the land of low taxes and economic freedom. This government, however, is set to implement the largest business tax increase in recent Alberta history. For years families from across Canada would move to Alberta for lower taxes and plentiful jobs. Now those, too, will become a thing of the past. It's already started, with the 50 per cent income tax hike for high earners and a 50 per cent hike in the minimum wage. Think twice, please. Lastly, the oil industry, Alberta's economic powerhouse, is set to face turbulent times with a royalty review and a carbon price review levied over their heads. In short, these provisions included in Bill 2 are set to strip Alberta of the advantage it has enjoyed for decades.

I'd like to take the next few minutes to briefly explain why. To begin, a staggering tax hike of 20 per cent on businesses across this province will guarantee two things: one, lower wages; two, higher prices on everything, from apples to zucchinis. An apple a day keeps the doctor away. We can't afford one every day. This will only hurt Alberta families. This will hurt your children. A tax hike on businesses, the job creators in this province, will only further weaken the already fragile Alberta job market. The proposed business tax hike will make Alberta a less competitive place for business to invest in. It's fact. Alberta will now become less competitive than our neighbours in British Columbia as well as other large provinces, Ontario and even Quebec. What will this do to our province? It will drive out jobs, growth, and prosperity.

Next, let's take a look at the personal income tax hike. The NDP platform promised that their proposed income tax increases would rake in $1.1 billion in revenue. Now we are being told that only $800 million will be raised. That's far, far less. Where will the NDP find their funds for their spending commitments, commitments that have already been proposed? The math simply does not add up. We wonder how many more tax hikes we will see before voters can get to the ballot box again.

Finally, I'd like to draw the attention of this Chamber to the government's overall spending forecast as proposed in the bill. This government is set to include almost $700 million, unless it's $600 million, in net new spending, and that's just for the minibudget, to keep the government running until a full budget can be announced. We still don't know when.

All of this is to say that one thing is clear. You cannot tax and spend your way to prosperity. This has never worked; it never will. Contrary to the belief of this government you cannot just raise taxes without addressing the core of this problem, shrinking the size of government.

I will speak against Bill 2.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions or comments? The chair recognizes the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise before the House today because the Alberta advantage is under threat, and probably for the first time since the Alberta advantage was created, it is under threat from within our province, not from outside of our province, and that is a shame. Bill 2 compromises a very delicate balance between revenue and expenditure that Alberta has to maintain in order to ensure that our advantage is sustained. Let's be really clear about something. We're in a global marketplace, and we are also in a national marketplace. There are other provinces that are looking at Alberta right now for the first time since the Alberta advantage was created. They are looking at this province, and they are seeing our companies as some kind of golden prize that they can take from us. Never before have we had a government put that at risk.

This revenue stream, that is the backbone of all of our social programs, depends on and is maintained by industries, by small and large businesses and their desire to build the Alberta economy. Now, business people are attracted to a climate that fosters entrepreneurship. The Alberta advantage, of all the things that it was, was a climate. It was a regulatory climate, a taxation climate, and an economic climate that fostered entrepreneurship, so people like me, like others in this room that have started businesses looked at the climate and said: this is the place where I can start a business and prosper. Some of us succeed, and some fail, and we keep trying, but up until now Alberta was a place worth risking that investment.

If this bill passes, we are going down a slippery slope where the investors, small and large, are going to look at this economic climate, this regulatory climate, this taxation climate, and they are going to say: Saskatoon is looking pretty good right now. Now, I don't want to be too disparaging against Saskatoon because I'm an immigrant. I emigrated from Saskatchewan in 1961, so I'm a foreigner but an Albertan today.

Just on that note, my family moved us from Saskatchewan to British Columbia. Then an NDP government got elected in British Columbia. I have a confession to make, Mr. Speaker, before this House. You'll have to forgive me. I did vote NDP that year. Of course, it begs the question: well, how did that work out for you? Two years later I was without a job, could not find a job, and I moved to Alberta. Thank God I stayed, except for a few short years overseas where the taxation rate was – get this – 45 per cent. It was 45 per cent overseas. I came home again only then to – well, we'll see how this goes.

Entrepreneurs brought their ideas to this province historically because of the Alberta advantage. They built their businesses here because of the taxation regime that we had. They kept their businesses here because in return for their capital and their ingenuity Alberta has provided them with a very fair taxation framework, one that was the best in our country, as we all know.

These revenue streams that came into the Alberta government permitted this province to build roads, hospitals, and schools for our children. Our per capita funding of services like health care and education was higher than anywhere else in Canada. Why? Because entrepreneurs had an environment here where they could prosper in their businesses. Revenue, as you have heard probably more than once, is not Alberta's problem, but spending is. Let's not misconstrue the poor fiscal management of the third party in the past decade as a flaw in the Alberta advantage. That wasn't the problem at all.

Now, this advantage permits good public services alongside of low taxes. The members opposite seem to think that as long as you have good public services, you can tax at any old rate you might want to, that people will live here for the public services. This is really a dangerous, slippery slope to be going down. There has to be a full-meal deal to keep businesses in this province. We have to have good public services, which are funded by taxes which are paid by profitable companies, but we need those companies here. We need those businesses here, and they will stay as long as we have a favourable tax regime for them.

The combination that we have had has provided a great life, with rising incomes and reasonable public services. However, this economic policy right here is sending us down the road to finish off what is left of the Alberta advantage, and that is tragic. We're going to push away businesses that contribute to our revenue stream by creating an unfavorable economic climate. Worse yet, we are going to push away highly skilled workers that are instrumental to this province's intellectual capital, individuals who are a critical part of this province's knowledge economy.

Now, Canada offers political stability, natural resources, and a highly skilled labour force. We attract investment into this province specifically by maintaining a comparable tax advantage. As we have heard, Albertans are wary of the weakened position, competitively, that Bill 2 puts us in compared to our neighbours to the east and to the west. It is this combination of things that I believe worries me most of all. We have a cumulative effect in just the first few days of this Legislature. We have an NDP government that is actually gambling that the cumulative effect of a 20 per cent rise in the corporate tax, a 50 per cent rise in the minimum wage, a 50 per cent rise in the top marginal personal income tax, and a royalty review will somehow magically not bother anybody, that it's not going to affect jobs, that it's not going to affect prosperity.

For goodness' sake, Mr. Speaker, this is a cumulative package that is just hitting our province in a way that our province cannot stand to be hit at this point in time. This is not a risk that we should be taking. Moreover, in my opinion, this is not a risk that that government has a mandate to impose upon Albertans. This is not what they were elected to do.

As we've already heard, there are economists, three of them, that have calculated that we will lose 8,900 jobs for every one-point increase in the business tax rate. In my town of Sylvan Lake we already are seeing the for-sale signs going up all over town. We have a population in Sylvan Lake the average age of which is 35. This particular demographic are the young moms and dads with little children. They are oil field workers. They are young families, and they are being hit hard. We have a number of drilling companies who have land in the industrial park in Sylvan Lake, and those yards are chock full of drilling rigs. There is nothing moving. Those young people are out of work because these companies are holding back. They're holding back, Mr. Speaker, because they are very worried about a government that is taking away the Alberta advantage, and they are not willing to put billions of dollars of their shareholders' money at risk at this time in this province with this government's actions. In my opinion, this is irresponsible governance. This is not what Albertans asked for.

The reason why the third party is no longer in government is because Albertans determined that that was irresponsible governance, and we're not seeing any much better government now. Orange is, you know, the old blue.

Wildrose is concerned for everyday Albertans, responsible government, responsible fiscal policies, creating a climate that fosters entrepreneurship, that keeps businesses here, that provides Albertans with a quality of life that we all enjoy. This is what Wildrose was elected for, this is what we will stand for, and – I know I speak for my colleagues – this is what we will fight for.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Strankman: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker. If I might, I'd like to ask my hon. colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake why it took him so long to get to Alberta.

An Hon. Member: Is that our fault, too?

An Hon. Member: Absolutely.

The Speaker: Are there any other questions or comments?

The chair recognizes the Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

9:40

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me this opportunity to speak in opposition to Bill 2. You know, I find it really quite interesting that the government of Saskatchewan had a 17 per cent business tax, the highest in the country. They reduced it to 12 per cent, and business picked up. This NDP government is looking to raise taxes, and expects – what? – business to pick up? I don't know. Now, the NDP government has floated the idea that their business tax be reduced from 12 per cent to 10 per cent in Saskatchewan in order to stimulate more development, more jobs, and higher earning jobs. Consequently, a by-product of that reduction would be more income generated from personal taxes.

In 2001 the PCs under Ralph Klein slashed the income tax from 15.5 per cent to 13.5 per cent and then further reduced it to 10 per cent in 2006. That, I believe, was an Alberta advantage. It seems that the NDP here in Alberta want to destroy that advantage we have, while their comrades in Saskatchewan are waking up to that reality. Business stakeholders have been calling me, e-mailing, phoning me, just telling me, basically, that these new taxes are going to hurt the bottom line.

You know, I find it really ironic that Bill 2 is supposed to be an act to restore fairness to public revenue. It's not really about fairness if jobs are lost, is it? What did the tax increases that B.C. just recently put in do for their economy? Well, private businesses took a dive in the province, dropping 3 per cent since 2012 while the rest of Canada saw an increase of 1.5 per cent. Sources project that without investment B.C. won't grow as much. Its per capita GDP for 2014 is below the national average in contrast to two and a half decades ago.

What we understand of Mintz's study and the two other people that are backing it up is that we really need to focus on what's good for the Alberta economy. Albertans now in high-paying jobs are going to leave this province in search of locations that are more favourable to work and grow a business in.

Here in Alberta we used to attract others looking for the Alberta advantage. Unfortunately, that's not what's happening now. Over and over again I'm hearing from small-business owners that we do not need a minimum-wage hike. They know that this will affect their bottom line. They know that they will have to either increase prices, lay off workers, or ultimately come to the conclusion of shutting their doors altogether. The combination of a minimum-wage hike, new business and personal taxes, and a royalty review – let's not call it a royalty review because I don't believe that's what it is. I believe it's a royalty hike that will stifle the oil sector. It will have a trickle-down effect, and in the end it will affect all businesses to one extent or another.

Sorry, folks, but this government's plan to get more money out of Alberta taxpayers' pockets is not going to do the rest of Alberta any favours, and when you pile on top of one another the wrong-headed economic policies of this government, we're even in more trouble.

For the sake of Albertans I urge you to reconsider tax hikes. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments?

Hearing none, I would call upon the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Truly these are important and difficult conversations, and somehow I wish we could get outside of the box and find creative and real solutions to them because I struggle with the fact that one policy always seems to injure the other, and there always seems to be a loser. Somehow I think that that doesn't necessarily need to be our reality.

Government clearly does need revenue. How much may be debatable. More importantly, government does need to fulfill its social contract. I think we all do care about those who struggle in our society, those who have less than others. Let me make it clear that from my point of view none of this is about not providing for the needs of people. My concern is that increased tax may, in fact, even make it impossible to do that. I know that my constituents would struggle deeply with this bill. Raising taxes would go against principles for most of them, and part of that would relate, I guess, to the realities of economic theory, which I plan to move toward here as I speak.

Throughout my life I've both seen and personally had the benefits of lower taxes, as I think we all have. We've all lived in a regime in which there's been prosperity around us. Alberta has boomed because of low taxes. Lower taxes benefit the citizens who live at all levels of taxation, actually. Lower personal taxes encourage entrepreneurial growth, which does provide jobs for all levels of society, and lower business tax rates encourage more businesses to actually start up and stay in Alberta, and then they have the need to hire you, whatever job you might fit into.

I'd like to suggest that it's not just my word. I'd like to also read a little bit more in detail from a recommendation proposed in 2005 by the NDP government of Saskatchewan with regard to business taxes and how they viewed it. I will say that this comes in two stages. They went partway first of all and then more the second time.

Reading from their report.

We recommend that the general Corporation Income Tax . . . rate be reduced from 17 per cent to 12 per cent.

And I would quote three things from them that they said lowering the tax rate would result in. The first is:

A more neutral tax regime, removing an impediment to business expansion and investment caused by the significant difference between the small business tax rate and the general rate.

A second point would be:

A general [corporation income tax] rate that is competitive with western provinces and would significantly reduce the costs associated with capital investment in Saskatchewan.

Their third point:

A higher allocation of corporate profits to Saskatchewan for income tax purposes – an allocation that is more consistent with economic activity, resulting in higher provincial revenues.

Here's my point. Raising taxes does not necessarily equate to raising the needed revenue for government and, conversely, lowering taxes doesn't necessarily go the other way either. Sometimes it's counterintuitive. There is an inverse relationship.

I want to continue to quote from the Saskatchewan report.

When the recommended [corporation income tax] rate reduction is combined with the recommended phase-out of the general [corporation capital tax] rate, a significant reduction would occur in the tax on new investment. The Committee believes that these reforms would increase the economic opportunities in Saskatchewan for its residents – and investment means jobs.

There is an inverse relationship. It's counterintuitive. Just because taxes are raised does not mean that revenue to the government will be raised.

Now here's my favourite part of the Saskatchewan report.

The Committee further recommends that, as fiscal circumstances permit, the general [corporation income tax] rate be reduced to ten per cent – to match the [corporation income tax] rate applied to manufacturing and processing . . . activities.

Let me recap a little bit. The Saskatchewan committee resolved that, first of all, lower tax rates would actually encourage business expansion and investment. That expansion and investment means more tax revenue. If these businesses did not expand, there would be less revenue to generate. The more a business expands, the more jobs it creates. The lower tax rate creates jobs.

The second thing that they said, as I summarize, is that a more profitable a province is, the more business profits a province earns, which leads to more revenue. A lower tax rate encourages business creation, which means more taxable revenue, so – get this – lower taxes create more revenue. That's what this Saskatchewan NDP government committee resolved.

Thirdly, they are saying that lower taxes mean less tax on new investment, and new investment, of course, means more economic opportunity, more jobs. There's a pattern emerging here.

I'd like to suggest also a little bit of economic theory. Arthur Laffer is an economist who wrote in the 1979 era, fairly famous for what's called the Laffer curve. In it he equates taxes or the rate of taxation with the resultant rate of revenue that governments can collect. He says that there are two results that can happen. The first one is arithmetic. In the arithmetic case a tax increase in the simple short-term does actually seem to raise taxes a little bit, but then he says that in the long-term the revenue will in fact stagnate and decrease rather than increase.

The second effect that he says you will observe is what he calls the economic effect. The economic effect is actually a long-term result. Lower taxes, whether business or personal, actually increase the overall tax base over time because money in the hands of the people, in the hands of the taxpayers, causes them to spend it. They spend it on businesses, businesses are encouraged to grow and invest. What he says is that pretty soon the increased revenue outruns the lost dollars of the tax cut. The larger the tax base, the larger the revenue.

It's certainly not clear in economic theory today, the more you read, that raising taxes will increase government net revenues. I'd like to use an example, actually, from Canada of that same fact this evening. A study done by the School of Public Policy had this to say.

[Federal] corporate tax rate reductions of more than 30 per cent (since 2000) . . .

Now, that's just a combination of all the different kinds of taxes: excise taxes, income taxes, business taxes.

. . . have, contrary to the critics' cries, failed to make an appreciable dent in tax revenues thanks to [other sources of revenue growth].

The comparison is obvious, but I want to point it out just to make it clear that not only do lower tax rates at a provincial level create more revenue, but lower tax rates on the federal level created more revenue. That's because, as I've said, businesses, whether large, small, or medium, look for a country and a province where they can make the most profit.

We are in a competitive environment. Businesses will pick up and move to another province. I am almost embarrassed to have to admit that my oldest son is one of those. For generations we have cried in Canada about the brain drain to the U.S. My oldest son is an academic. He has a PhD from Stanford University, and he says: dad, I'd love to come home and work in Canada, but the tax rate here in the U.S. is so much better; I'm going to stay down here. The reality is that the brain drain of Canada into the U.S. in part is a function of taxation. By providing a lower business tax rate, we can attract more business to come to Alberta, which means more general revenues for the province, more jobs. I realize there are ways that we do need to care for the people who are struggling and don't have their income, but I don't think that killing business or creating impediments to business by creating environments that cause people to actually lose their jobs is going to do that.

You know what? I think I've made my point. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll leave it at that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions or comments?

The chair would recognize the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think many members in this House may agree that timing is everything, and certainly our caucus has felt the pain of ignoring that particular instance. But timing is everything in Bill 2, and I think that we need to look at the unintended consequences that seem to not be being adhered to here.

In the last week or so I've talked to three different individuals in the oil and gas sector, one a mid-sized oil and gas company. Their comment was: this government is killing our industry. The second instance from a local gas producing company that had two opportunities for investment of approximately $400 million, one in Alberta and one in California: they've chosen the one in California. A third company, a large foreign-owned company with $200 million to $300 million in investment capital looking to invest in their sector: they've chosen to invest in Saskatchewan, B.C., and the United States. Mr. Speaker, these are undermining the Alberta advantage, and Bill 2 is going to further undermine that.

I tend to try and look at things in a fairly simplistic way. It helps me to form my thoughts around it. I look at the Alberta advantage, that many of us have grown to know and love over the years, as a combination of three things, some of which have been challenged recently. Certainly, one of those is robust job creation. We can cross that off the list with the policies of this government. Relatively low taxes is number two. We can cross that off the list with this bill. Number three, which has been challenged more recently over the last decade or so, is relatively attractive housing affordability.

As I've mentioned, with my background in the housing industry I've seen this seriously undermined in this province over the last 10 years. It used to be that if you moved – you could move here from almost anywhere in the country. If you came from Toronto or Vancouver, it was like winning a lottery in terms of the ability to purchase an affordable house. I used to say that we acted more like a large Saskatoon than a small Toronto or Vancouver. That has been undermined more recently by new urban land supply ideologues who are intent on further undermining housing affordability. I further am concerned that this government may also pander to that ideology.

It seems to me that this government in their policies is undermining number one and number two very seriously, and they may actually have the unintended consequence of achieving number three. Mr. Speaker, the decimation of our economy may result in a further bloodbath in the residential housing sector in undermining the real estate market. These unintended consequences of killing the Alberta advantage through the decimation of the robust job creation that we've become used to, the in-migration that results from that, the relatively low taxes that we've enjoyed as a hallmark of the Alberta advantage: I'm concerned that the unintended consequences that we will see from these policies are now the hallmark of this government, which appears to be intent on unintended consequences.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, any questions or comments?

The chair recognizes the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are at this time discussing the merits or lack thereof of Bill 2. We talked yesterday about Bill 201 regarding savings. There seemed to be unanimous support for savings, just a difference of opinion on when and under what conditions. There was also agreement on the benefit of compounding interest when saving money. This idea of compounding was not lost on myself and others. The problem is that we are seeing the government creating a compounding detriment to the economy of our great province.

Presently our economy is slowing. The largest part of our economy is taking a hit with low oil prices. Jobs are being lost, businesses are suffering, and families are suffering, too. The world price of oil is not under the control of the Alberta government, but the price we get for our oil is influenced by our access to markets and our access to multiple markets.

I know the current government may not buy into this idea, but competition for a product you sell allows for a stronger return. I think Albertans deserve a higher return for their resource. While this government feels that increasing royalties is the way to go, we believe Albertans could benefit from higher world prices. This could increase interest in business investing in Alberta rather than relying on a detrimental royalty scheme that has failed before.

The royalty review creates instability. Businesses in our energy industry have no idea when or how much royalty changes will affect them. That creates instability. It wasn't that long ago that we saw the effects of the previous government's royalty review. In the end, it cost Albertans. This government talks about stability but only when it suits them for political rhetoric. We need true and honest economic stability.

This government has brought forward a minibudget. It's maxi in dollar amounts and mini in details. They have used the PC's election-killing budget and added more ambiguous spending. They then tell us that Albertans support this. Huh? I don't get it, and I don't think Albertans get it either.

That brings us to where we are now. Our current government is considering pushing through measures to bring in higher taxes on Alberta families and businesses. So let's get this straight. We have a slumping economy. We have a royalty review creating instability. We have a minibudget with little information. We have rough estimates in that budget in the hundreds of millions. We have no idea of projected revenue. We have no idea of deficit numbers. We have lots of uncertainties except higher taxes.

Let's be clear. Albertans did not give the government a blank cheque. The NDP feels that Alberta residents and businesses need to experience a raise in taxes. Am I alone in thinking that something is wrong here? Is there anyone else that is concerned about this situation? I think Albertans are concerned. I think they're very concerned. As much as the ideology that drives this government makes them feel warm and fuzzy, it makes Albertans queasy and uncomfortable.

Now, it's a given that this government wants to raise taxes on Alberta families and businesses. It doesn't matter that they don't know how much these taxes will bring in in revenue. Their own platform promised that the business tax would bring in $800 million. Now they say that it's only $300 million. Who is going to make up for that extra $500 million shortfall?

They talk about the $5 billion deficit. How will they balance it? How? How much more in taxes will you have to raise? You can't tax your way to prosperity, but they're going to give it a try. This government has no idea how much they need. They don't even know where it's going to be spent. But they just can't wait to raise those taxes, with no care for the consequences. For example, a tax hike of 20 per cent on business doesn't just affect business; it gets passed on in higher prices and lower wages.

The government has stated over and over that they are new and need to get up to speed on topics. They want consultation. They want fulsome discussion. If I had a dollar for every time they used those key words, we wouldn't have a deficit. But when it comes right down to it, they're no different than the previous government. They just forge blindly ahead with their own ideological agenda.

This bill needs to be sent to committee to make sure that we get it right the first time. Competitive tax rates attract investment. Investment creates jobs. Believe it or not, jobs create tax revenue. This government wants to kill the goose that lays the golden eggs. That will only increase poverty.

Alberta used to be the leader in fiscal responsibility. We bragged about the Alberta advantage. Over the past eight years or so we have become the laughingstock of Canada and probably the world. All the revenue we take in, record revenues year after year, and massive deficit after massive deficit: the Alberta advantage is now a dimming memory of better times. Alberta already runs the most expensive government in all of Canada. Alberta already collects the most income and business taxes per capita in Canada. Let's work on the foundation here. We need government to be more efficient, not default to ill-conceived tax hikes.

There are solutions to our troubles. The government just needs to be willing to look beyond tax and tax again. It cannot be overstated enough. We don't have a revenue problem in Alberta; we have a spending problem. With a government that is a hundred per cent about new spending and zero per cent about reducing waste, it looks like it will be a long four years for those of us who care about balanced budgets.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments?

I would recognize the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me this opportunity to rise and give my thoughts on this bill. The government across has put forward a bill that will affect every Albertan who makes more than $125,000 a year. They want to get rid of the flat tax by adding tax brackets from 12 to 15 per cent on income over $125,000. They are telling us that due to Alberta having a massive revenue problem, we need to increase taxes for 7 per cent of the population and more than that if you live in a resource town with high costs of living like Bonnyville and Cold Lake. Why are they not willing to focus on the real problem? That problem is spending.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to give you an approximate number of how many Albertans, that 7 per cent, will be affected. As of October 2014 our population was 4.146 million people. Seven per cent of 4.146 million is about 290,000 people, 290,000 Albertans whose taxes will be affected. One of the things that I love about Alberta is that people don't look at your name, they don't look at your family, they don't look at your colour, they don't look at your sex, they don't look at your gender, they don't look at your sexual orientation, and they don't look at your religion. They ask if you have a good idea, if you will work, and if you're a good neighbour. Hiking taxes and creating divisions within Alberta go directly against our spirit.

We hear a lot about how hard it is to keep enough doctors in this province, especially in our rural communities. I wonder how hiking taxes by 50 per cent on most of our doctors will help them. These are key people that everyone in society deals with on a day-to-day basis and who we seek out for important services, key Albertans that we respect and depend on who are also in that 7 per cent. If they don't see Alberta as attractive, they won't stay. I have seen many doctors in Alberta work long, hard hours on services that you and I benefit from and sacrifice time from their families, friends, and interests to help their patients.

Most of the professionals in this tax bracket have invested a great deal in their education. We don't want to create a tax system that drives these talented people out of our province. What I can eventually see happening here is that they may be attracted to other job markets that will offer them the advantage and remuneration they deserve. We need to do more than just attract them. We need to give them reasons to stay in Alberta. What attracted these professionals and businesspeople here before was the Alberta advantage. That's what was going to keep them here. That's what's going to keep them in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, the government across is now going to implement a tax increase to businesses, from 10 per cent to 12 per cent, which is in reality a whopping 20 per cent increase to what businesses are handing over to the government. They are raising taxes on 7 per cent of Alberta's population, their personal taxes, to a resounding 50 per cent on the highest marginal tax bracket. They are raising our minimum wage by 50 per cent.

Now, of course, the Wildrose caucus and I are of the opinion that no taxes should be increased, and the government should instead work to be more frivolous . . .

10:10

An Hon. Member: Less frivolous.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you.

. . . less frivolous and less wasteful. [interjections] They are listening. Yeah. However, even the PCs' budget earlier this spring, which I obviously didn't agree with, was a better budget than this one that is being presented. The government across is now going to inflict upon us a massive impact all at once. At least the PC budget was going to be in phases and not unleashed for our economy to bear the brunt at a time when people are losing their jobs and being cautious with their spending.

These are radical reforms to our economy, and the government should take some time to ensure that they are not bringing down a calamity in this time of slowdown. If we don't keep the Alberta advantage here, we're going to see key Albertans moving to other jurisdictions, key people who sustain our health care system, who sustain our business sector and many other services that we receive on a daily basis. We are going to see a lot of people bearing a burden they should never have had to bear, especially in a province like Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions or comments?

The chair recognizes the Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise and would like to speak against Bill 2. My notes say: Bill 2, the Alberta disadvantage. I don't know where that came from.

It has long been a source of pride amongst Albertans, Mr. Speaker, that the phrase "the Alberta advantage" was synonymous with growth, prosperity, and economic potential. People from all over Canada and, indeed, the world flocked to Alberta in hopes of realizing this advantage. They found jobs in not only the oil fields but restaurants, hotels, and the retail sector, anything associated with our growth. If you were willing to work hard, the possibilities seemed endless. We were the envy of Canada. The Alberta advantage was partly economic, part swagger. Sadly, that swagger has disappeared, and due to poor governmental policies of the past and economically shaky ones of the present we are at a disadvantage.

Mr. Speaker, one of the main advantages of the government in the neighbouring province of Saskatchewan when it was governed by the NDP was the export of its citizens. They came to Alberta. They were the pride of Alberta, and they are still the pride of Alberta's workforce to this day.

We were the benchmark for austerity in Canada. But, sadly, we have dropped to the bottom of the pack, now spending $8 billion more than our neighbours in B.C. That was generated in the Klein years, Mr. Speaker. The government got lax, they got complacent, and they spent without thought. We had that prosperity so that when Alberta collected the most business taxes per capita across Canada, it wasn't harmful to the economy because it reflected more investment and productivity in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business had an interesting comment. They said that small business is big business.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 3 Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2015 (No. 2)

The Speaker: Members of the Legislature, I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but in accordance with Standing Order 64(5) the chair is required to put the question to the House on the appropriation bill on the Order Paper for third reading.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:15 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 2 An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue (continued)

[Debate adjourned June 23: Mr. Strankman speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, again, Mr. Speaker. I'll take up where I left off if it's less painful for you.

The government got lax, they got complacent, and they spent without thought. We had that prosperity so that when Alberta collected the most business taxes per capita across Canada, it wasn't harmful to the economy because it reflected more investment and productivity in Alberta.

10:30

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business stated that small business is big business. Unfortunately, the success of dubious policies by our previous government combined with the change from the socialist government in Saskatchewan to the current one under Premier Wall has stolen some of our thunder, so much so that Premier Wall now jokes about the Saskatchewan advantage. He was using that phrase even before the NDP government here took over and brought us back to the middle of the pack or worse in so many ways.

I am nervous that he could be onto something, Mr. Speaker. In a recent editorial in the Calgary Herald it was quoted by Mark Milke:

Over time, to recap: The new NDP government will raise business income tax by 20 per cent (to 12 per cent from 10 per cent), hike the minimum wage by almost 50 per cent [from $10 to $15], add multiple new provincial personal income tax brackets while increasing the top bracket by 50 per cent, and may hike resource royalties after its promised review.

All that means is that there is a great opportunity to create jobs and prosperity in Saskatchewan. I also lived within six miles of the fourth meridian, sometimes known as the Alberta-Saskatchewan border, and growing up I specifically saw and recognized the disparity in visiting with my cousins from Saskatoon and various areas.

For those who would think economic success and employment are accidental and inevitable creations, the mere result of natural resources in or above ground, the next several years in Alberta will be a useful case study. Maybe change is good – and I adopt change, Mr. Speaker – but given the direction Alberta's new government has chosen to take, it's dubious at best. Facing low world oil prices, this government is doubling down on bad news in Alberta.

Raising business taxes: a hike of 20 per cent for businesses will not just affect them, it will mean higher prices and therefore lower wages. This business tax increase will now make Alberta a less attractive place to invest than Quebec, Ontario, British Columbia, and only tied with other provinces.

Raising personal income tax: a 50 per cent hike in income tax for higher earners. The top 10 per cent of earners in Alberta already pay 50 per cent of the taxes. Alberta already collected the most business taxes per capita across Canada because it invited more investment and productivity in Alberta.

Minimum wage increase: a 50 per cent hike in the minimum wage with no facts to back up this radical election promise despite assurances that there is study after study that it will somehow create jobs. It's a mystery to me, Mr. Speaker.

Royalty increases: recall the disastrous effect this had when combined with the 2009 downturn.

In my younger years I had a chance, with my farming career and my licence as an aviation pilot, to travel many times into Calgary in the heyday of Calgary prior to the invocation of the national energy review. It was very difficult, if not impossible, to obtain clearance on the control tower frequency in Calgary with the activity that was going on with the aircraft at that time. Mr. Speaker, after the national energy policy was invoked, there was absolutely no problem. When you switched to tower frequency, it was dead air. There was no problem getting on the frequency.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta already collects the most business taxes per capita across Canada, even with the lowest rate, because it invited more investment and productivity in Alberta. This isn't about the big faceless corporations that the left loves to portray as a bad guy. It's about all kinds of everyday businesses. The Alberta advantage applies to everyone. It applies even to the agriculture sector, upon which Alberta was primarily founded and which helps diversify the economy. It certainly applies to those in construction and the trades, people who chose to build a better Alberta for all Albertans, which is why this government set upon taking more from those that work hard to build a better life for themselves. Where is the Alberta advantage in that policy? Why would a government decide to single out people who happen to be, through their own volition, more successful than others?

When the government takes more money from the pockets of Albertans, that doesn't mean that they are redistributing the pie. It probably means that they are shrinking it. I profoundly believe that wealth is not limited. Wealth is a creation around the world. The northern and southern hemispheres, that I have travelled into, have experience with different government models, and therefore the missteps that these governments have endorsed generally relate to their global success or not success, positive or negative. The MLAs across the aisle need to realize they are in the business of government, not the business of Robin Hood.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I yield.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Fildebrandt: What's the time remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: You've got five minutes.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Excuse me. I want to make sure that you're rising on a question or an observation for this speaker?

Mr. Fildebrandt: A question for the Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank my friend for his comments. As my neighbour to the north, our ridings have a lot in common. Around my constituency there are hundreds of flags of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, and Saskatchewan, economic refugees from other parts of this country, people who have come here for opportunity. People did not leave the beautiful shores of Newfoundland or Nova Scotia to come here for the weather, as I've said. They've come here for opportunity. People have come over the border from Saskatchewan not for similar scenery but have come here for reasons of economics.

Lloydminster stands, I believe, as a moderated example of the great economic experiments of the 20th century. We could take the exact same peoples, the exact same languages, same cultures, people who eat the same food, but put them in two systems of government, two systems of economics. Now, it is a much more moderate example than East and West Berlin or North and South Korea – they're not anywhere on par – but it is an example of people who are the same, families living on different sides of the border, so we can see the way they react to different economic incentives.

Would the Member for Drumheller-Stettler care to talk about his experience with people from Saskatchewan, Nova Scotia, and Newfoundland in his constituency and the likelihood of them staying in the event of us following the policies of those provinces?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I would. It's a great honour to do that. Through the election cycle I had a chance to meet a young couple who, through negotiation with one of my constituency workers, happened to put an election sign on their property. I went in to thank them for that support. They didn't know who I was, but this young couple with two kids, two and four, were from the greater Toronto area, the Golden Triangle, I understand it's called. They were pleased and proud to be in Alberta. The reason for that? They came here for a job. They came here for jobs, and they are happy to raise a family in a lower taxed environment.

To the differential of the environments created, I'd like to relate to some articles by an organization called the prairie centre wherein they talked about the formation of two provinces in 1905, I believe was the timing of it. One was called Saskatchewan, and one was called Alberta. Both formed at the same time. In the 1930s, '35, I understand that there were some 943,000 people in Saskatchewan. In Regina there was a General Motors truck plant, there were the headquarters of Esso Petroleum. In fact, my wife's uncle worked for Esso Petroleum, and they were exploring a lot of oil, Mr. Speaker, out in around, I believe, your home area of Weyburn and Estevan, now known, ladies and gentlemen, as the Bakken reservoir.

This Bakken reservoir was difficult to relate to with the technology that they had at that time because, from what I understand it to be, it was what they called a tight formation, barely accessible by vertical drilling. But in a whole other era, Mr. Speaker, on that subject, horizontal drilling and the production thereof caused great wealth creation in what's now known as the Bakken reservoir, both in southeastern Saskatchewan, your home area, and also in Minot, North Dakota.

Mr. Speaker, in the 1940s, though, there was an illustrious gentleman that came to power in Saskatchewan, and his name happened to be Tommy Douglas. If anybody happened to see the movie from the National Film Board – it's called keeper of the flame – it shows wagon cavalcades leaving the province of Saskatchewan, sometimes in the dead of night, because they believed that the nationalization of the industry in Saskatchewan was going to take away their royalties. Now, that didn't happen specifically, but at that time . . .

The Speaker: The chair recognizes the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request unanimous consent of the House to shorten the bells to one minute, please.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: The next speaker is the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise to speak to Bill 2, An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue, in second reading. This is the title of this piece of legislation, but I have to be honest. Fairness to public revenue is not how I'd describe what this government is doing today. With this legislation the government is moving quickly to raise taxes on Alberta businesses from 10 to 12 per cent, a 20 per cent increase. Alberta will no longer be able to claim that we are the lowest taxed province in this country.

This low-tax business climate has attracted businesses. Families have moved to our beautiful Alberta to raise a family, take a risk and build a business. The sort of people this reckless tax rate targets are the people that built this province. The local dry cleaner that employs your kids during the summer, the local diner where you go for lunch on Sundays, the gas station where you worked to pay your way through school: these are the people that you are targeting. There is nothing fair about that.

The Premier and members of the NDP caucus have been fond of claiming that an increase to the taxes that businesses pay is fair, that it is just. Their argument depends on a skewed image of the ultra-rich corporations abusing the hard-working residents of Alberta and profiting dishonestly from their labour. We cannot pretend that there is no relationship between the health of Alberta's businesses and the health of Alberta's residents. Alberta has a proud history as a leader in attracting business investment. Between 2004 and 2013 $1.6 trillion was invested in Canada.

Mrs. Pitt: How much?

Mr. Yao: One point six trillion dollars.

My goodness. You know what Alberta's share of that was? It was 33 per cent. We can do math. During the same period Alberta led the country in job creation, adding over 400,000 jobs. These are incredible figures. A population with roughly 10 per cent of Canada's population attracted over 30 per cent of its investment. This has not been accidental good fortune. The Alberta advantage is something that the people of Alberta have demanded and fought to maintain.

We didn't want a PST. We did want a flat-tax system. We wanted the lowest business tax rate in the country. Because we had these things, we also had the highest level of investment in our province. We had the lowest unemployment rates. But it doesn't look like the Alberta advantage is going to be sticking around.

The other thing that this bill proposes is raising the income tax on higher income earners. [interjections] You like that. I do not. I do not support increasing taxes for either individuals or businesses. I just can't support this. We've been talking for years about the gross misuse of tax dollars. Why is this government not looking at savings before you raise taxes? Are you expecting wild cost overruns long before taxes are raised? It would seem prudent to foresee where money can be saved. This isn't good fiscal management, Mr. Speaker.

According to Stats Canada Fort McMurray has 40 per cent of income earners over $100,000 versus 10 per cent across Alberta. With four times as many higher income earners this will affect four times as many people in my community. So when the Premier talks about this affecting 7 per cent, it's closer to 30 per cent in my community. And that's not even the whole story because the cost of living really is that much higher in Fort McMurray.

A hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars: that's a lot of money. What are new MLAs doing with that kind of money? Buying a new car? A down payment on a nice pad on 17th Street or Jasper? Because of this bill the people of Fort McMurray will be hit harder than everyone else. Fort McMurray is the land of opportunity, the land of milk and honey, yet in Fort McMurray people can barely make ends meet with that kind of money. If we were to do a show based on the lifestyles of the MLAs of Alberta, the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo would show off his manufactured home, a home that's worth $500,000. In layman's terms that's a trailer. I live in a trailer park, and that trailer is worth half a million dollars. What can half a million get you in Edmonton?

What can that get you in Calgary? I'll bet all of the city mice in the House that I can afford two trailers with that in your cities or one ridiculously nice house.

The people of Fort McMurray work very hard. We work long hours. We do tough work in a harsh climate. These people are your pioneers. They are very similar to all of your ancestors – your parents, your grandparents, and your great-grandparents – the ones who came over to Canada, who were willing to leave their homes, the comfort of their homes, of their communities to make a better life. They were willing to go up to the Great White North to get ahead. And these aren't just oil sands workers. These are people who work in the service and support industries, people who come from across Canada hoping to get ahead. They hope that if they can get up to Fort McMurray and if they work two, three jobs, they will get ahead. These are people in the service industry: your waiters, your dishwashers, your cooks. You'll hurt everyone with this taxation plan.

Under the PC plan everyone in Alberta would've been paying 2,500 bucks more. Everyone in Fort McMurray would have been paying $2,000 on top of that. You've ensured that McMurrayites are still going to pay thousands more. You'll hurt everyone with this taxation plan. If the NDP plan is to simply decimate this beautiful city of Fort McMurray just because of those cursed oil sands, you're on track.

Albertans are hard-working. They take risks, protect their families, and lend a hand whenever possible. This bill undermines the Alberta spirit. This bill says: go elsewhere to start a business; it's not worth it to take the risk. Now the answer to every question is bigger government.

The Wildrose will bring back the Alberta advantage. We're here to stand up for our families, for the people that employ us, for the people that have an idea and take a risk. We want that place to be Alberta.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments, hon. members? I recognize the Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this evening and address Bill 2. We've heard for weeks that the new government is not yet ready to release their budget. They're not ready to tell Albertans how they're going to spend the billions of dollars that are now in their control. They've released no details about how they're going to save money, but here we are today. They're ready to ask Albertans for more money.

There are no reasons that the NDP have given for why exactly they need all these additional resources. In reality, it would appear that they're just playing politics. They don't even know exactly how much money this is going to bring in, or if they do, they're certainly not saying. They certainly don't know how many jobs are going to be lost because of these tax hikes, but here we are, charging ahead anyway. They don't even know what the long-term impacts of this tax hike will be, but it's full steam ahead. Let's pray that we're not headed over a cliff.

Now, we should be spending this summer meeting with our constituents and having conversations with them about the future of Alberta, but wouldn't it be great – wouldn't it be great – if we could be spending this summer not just chatting about the future of Alberta but consulting about these tax hikes?

That's why it's my pleasure to propose an amendment this evening.

The Speaker: I'd ask that the hon. member pause for a moment while the pages distribute the proposed amendment. While the amendment is being distributed, the chair would like to alert members to the procedures governing amendments. Is this the appropriate time for me to read the amendment?

The proposed amendment by Mr. Cooper to move that Bill 2, An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

The amendment is subject to debate. Once all members who wish to speak to the amendment have spoken, the chair will call the question on the amendment. If the vote is carried, the bill stands referred to the committee. If the vote is defeated, the Assembly returns to the debate at second reading. Is the bill distributed?

I will now recognize the member to move the amendment.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As mentioned, the amendment for Bill 2 would read:

An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

I think we have a great opportunity to send this bill to committee. It's exactly why I've proposed the amendment today. I hope it's something that all sides of the House can agree on. We should consult with Albertans. We should get the facts straight. We should meet with stakeholders. And when that's done, and only when that's done, then we should proceed. When Albertans elected a new government, they expressed a desire for change, not just a change in the colour of the government website from blue to orange, but substantial change.

Now, there's an inspiring politician that I know many Albertans have hope for. In fact, I have hope for them as well. I'd just like to quote them at some length, but just for a little while.

I know that a select group there in cabinet have convinced themselves that this is all okely-dokely, but I would suspect that a vast number of the Conservative caucus itself are not fully briefed on what this means. Either way, the fact of the matter is that most of the people who are impacted by this piece of legislation have not had an opportunity to really fully consider the implications of these changes, nor have they been given the opportunity to really fully communicate to this government, which is accountable to them by way of that trite, old, little institution we call democracy, to listen to what they have to say about this.

The Speaker: Hon. member, we have a point of order that was called.

Mrs. Pitt: The hon. Finance minister is not in the right chair.

The Speaker: I'm glad you pointed that out because I noticed that on this side of the House there were a couple of people that moved before as well. Thank you for pointing that out.

Mrs. Pitt: You're very welcome.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Cooper:

Because this has such an incredibly far-reaching set of consequences to the lives of so many Albertans, I would suggest that this not be a bill that we ram through at, you know, 4 o'clock in the morning as this government is scrambling to get out of the Legislature so they can run off and slap a whole bunch of ineffective bandages over this broken political vehicle.

The fact of the matter is that what we should be doing is actually putting on our good-governance hat and putting out a very clear, open, transparent process for everyone to participate in discussing what the consequences of this bill are, what the objectives of this bill are, the competing expert assumptions, the competing characterizations of what different components of this bill mean.

I continue, Mr. Speaker.

All that information should be fully canvassed and fully discussed by having this matter referred to the standing committee. Then, hopefully, that committee would move to have public hearings on it and secure independent expert [advice]. By doing that, we could ensure that we actually acted in the interest of those people who voted for us and got the best deal for those people, all people, not just those people but also the taxpayers that the Finance minister claims to be standing up for – frankly, I think that's a bit disingenuous – and let everybody in on the conversation. That is what we could do by accepting this amendment.

Of course, the reason for it is because there are just so many things that are wrong with this bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for your indulgence. By the way, those wise, astute, forward-looking, consultative words were the words of our current Premier. Yep, this Premier. The Premier, the one leading the new government, believes in consultation. She also believes in getting the facts lined up before proceeding. That's exactly why this bill should be referred to committee. It's what the Premier would want, I'm sure. Surely, her caucus would agree.

The question is: don't you want to talk to your constituents? Don't you want to make sure that we're making the right decision, not just based on a campaign promise but what's actually the best for Alberta moving forward? Surely you don't want to play politics with the jobs of hard-working Albertans. Surely you're not just raising taxes without getting all of the facts lined up. That would never happen. Under a new government with a new way of doing things, we wouldn't be rushing such critical legislation that is important to Alberta's future. That's why the committee should spend the summer holding hearings and conducting consultations with the public.

We have heard this government speak at length about the importance of getting the budget right. In fact, they're going to delay the budget from May to June to July to August to September to October, six months, to get it right. Here today we see the government giving businesses and Albertan families six days to get it right. Surely, we could spend a brief summer consulting with Albertans. The committee should spend the summer holding hearings before going ahead. That's exactly how this decision should be made. We should be, you should be one hundred per cent certain that we're doing the right thing, and Albertans should have the ability to provide feedback that that is, in fact, the path forward. We should have the facts to back it up. We shouldn't be conducting economic experiments that threaten the jobs of hard-working Albertan families. That's the old way of doing things.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my closing remarks by quoting another esteemed colleague in this House of mine. I might even say a friend of mine. Well, he was until just moments ago. We agree on a few things every now and again. He recently said:

Once again we're in a position where – should this bill get referred to committee in Committee of the Whole, I do see that as a positive step. But I do need to voice my frustration with the fact that once again it's another example of the government putting forward poor legislation then being stopped in its tracks by the public, by opposition parties and forced to go back to the table. If it was done with adequate consultation in the first place, then we wouldn't have to be here and constantly going in circles.

Very smart. The new Minister of Municipal Affairs: he understood, when he was fulfilling the important role of opposition, the critical step of consultation with Albertans, and somehow, since the 5th of May, it seems that he has forgotten all about that critical step of consulting with Albertans. Now, he's a good guy, and I like him. Like I said, we agree on things from time to time, and I hope that this can be one of those times.

We need to have public consultation. We need to get the facts straight. It's not that hard. We can do it. In fact, very rarely has this place taken into full consideration an amendment like this to refer to committee. We have the opportunity to do things differently in the 29th Legislature. We have the opportunity to have Albertans actively engaged in the process of providing input into legislation.

As you know, the Wildrose is here to help. Here's an opportunity where we can be better together. We have proposed a number of recommendations that would make this Assembly work better. One of them is using standing committees for exactly what they were designed to do, and that is reviewing important pieces of legislation that affect Alberta's future. That's exactly why this bill should go to committee for public consultation so that we can get it right.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to just briefly speak to the referral motion that's been moved by my esteemed colleague, the House leader of the Wildrose, not that I would want to generate any discord over there by talking about your potential ambitions, hon. member. He's made a very persuasive case. I listened with interest to the words of my Premier, whom he quoted at length about the importance of consultation. I have to say that I'm persuaded that consultation is, in fact, important in something like this.

I will point out, however, that we have just been through one of the most extensive, far-reaching consultation processes on just this point that is possible within the realm of politics in our province. That was the late election that we just had. In this election the question of taxes was a major issue.

Each of the three main parties took quite different positions. It began with a Progressive Conservative Party, then the government, that brought forward a budget which included tax increases for, essentially, middle-class people, and this was the so-called tax to pay for the health care levy, which was something that they put forward as their view. The Wildrose, on the other hand, put forward the position that there should be no tax increases whatsoever and – more power to them, Mr. Speaker – that the very large deficit that was projected by the government should be eliminated and all of this should be made up by reductions in spending by the government on a massive scale. That was the position that the Wildrose Party took in the election, and they campaigned vigorously on it. They talked to hundreds of thousands of Albertans about their position. We talked about the importance of making everyone pay their fair share.

We talked about a small corporate income tax. We were very clear in our platform about what it was that we were going to do. We also talked about eliminating the flat tax and reintroducing, like every other province in Canada, a progressive income tax. The results were very clear, Mr. Speaker, in terms of that consultation. That was a far more extensive consultation than any committee could possibly do operating over the summer.

The results are clear. The Wildrose Party received 360,511 votes, or 24.2 per cent of the vote. The Progressive Conservative Party received a rather larger popular vote of 413,610, which gave them 27.8 per cent of the vote. The NDP received 604,518 votes, or 40.6 per cent of the vote. So with respect to the hon. member's motion I would suggest that the consultation has just occurred. It was far more extensive than any committee of this Legislature, and it does not need to be repeated in order for us to know the will of the public on this matter. As I've said, the question of taxes was one of the fundamental issues . . . [interjection] I think the hon. member opposite, Mr. Speaker, needs to control her temper because she is interfering with my right to speak in this House.

Mr. Speaker, the consultation has happened. The results are in. This motion is unnecessary, and I would urge all hon. members to vote against it. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the greatest of respect to my esteemed colleague across the way, whom I enjoyed listening to for the last three years, when he sat over in this quadrant of the House – I continue to enjoy him now. Nonetheless, despite the fact that our positions are reversed, I still totally disagree with him.

Mr. Speaker, I said this earlier when I spoke to Bill 2. I think that it would be a grievous error on the part of any member of this Legislature but certainly on the part of members of the government to make the analysis, based on the election result, that you have carte blanche to do whatever you like. I'm actually, quite frankly, a little bit surprised that an astute political observer, a veteran of the political wars such as the hon. Government House Leader would leap to the conclusion that he has made.

In point of fact, the consultation that has just occurred, the general election, occurred on a wide variety of subjects. To suggest that there was an endorsement of the taxation policies of the NDP, to go ahead with what they proposed as part of a very large platform – and it was only one part of that – that that somehow now gives them the authority to go ahead, I think, is certainly stretching matters. I'm, quite frankly, surprised that he would make that conclusion, because, certainly, when the hon. member was sitting over in this quadrant he regularly called for additional consultation and he regularly called for the referral of motions to committee.

I've said before that sometimes things can change, and I will tell you that my perspective has changed a little bit as well. I will speak from the point of view of someone who has been involved in a sitting government for somewhat longer than my hon. friend across the way, and whether he chooses to accept this or not, I'm going to offer a little bit of advice. Rushing through legislation is a mistake, and we can trot out a few examples of some mistakes that our government made rushing through legislation. Quite frankly, we had suggestions from this side of the House, some from your party, some from the party next to me, and that is that motions and/or certain bills should be referred to committee and use of the committee structure is a good idea in certain instances. This is one of those instances.

At this point I'm going to more address the members of the government caucus who are private members, who are not members of Executive Council, because they will vote in lockstep, and that is just part of being in Executive Council. But for those of you who are not in Executive Council, this is something you can vote freely on, and you should think about your vote because, indeed, you can make a statement that legislation should not be rushed through without due process and due consideration. This is an opportunity to take that due consideration. The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler will recall that, in fact, a certain member of the government last time voted with the opposition on one of these types of motions because he felt that this was a good idea.

So I'd encourage members of the government caucus to have the courage and have the foresight to listen to your conscience on this issue. If you're not comfortable with this decision, if you're not comfortable that the consultation that the hon. Government House Leader describes has indeed been fully the consultation that gives you the right to go ahead with these measures, I would encourage you to refer this matter to a committee for further study. This is a prudent measure because the measures that you're considering under Bill 2, the tax increases that you're considering, are significant and they will have consequences. My other colleagues have pointed that out very eloquently. The Member for Calgary-Greenway, the Member for Calgary-South East, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek have all cautioned this Assembly against taking this move this quickly.

I think that the committee structure is one that can and should be used in this instance, and it's why the committees are there. I would encourage all members of the Legislature to give this very careful consideration, and I would certainly encourage all members to support this motion for referral.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Please proceed, Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A lot of members have said and quoted from members past some pretty wise advice. I know that the Government House Leader has served this institution, served Alberta for a very long time in a very lonesome quadrant of the House, and he is justly rewarded for sticking to his guns and being where he is today. He lost many elections, however, before he won, yet none of those elections . . .

Mr. Mason: That's not true.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, not lost. He went through many elections and was elected to this House as a representative for his constituency without his party winning first, second, third place, and at no time – he was elected as an MLA to represent his constituency despite the vast majority of the province not voting for his party. His party overall lost election after election after election, yet at no time did he ever state that the government had carte blanche to do anything it wanted. At no time did he ever state that Albertans did not need to be consulted on individual pieces of legislation.

The government has a broad mandate to implement its platform, and we'll do our best to interrupt that from time to time, but they do not have a mandate to push through pieces of legislation without consultation, without expert advice. By referring it to an expert committee, they can still ignore the advice of that committee, they can ignore the voices of Albertans who come and speak against the legislation, or they can accept the voices of Albertans who will surely speak for the legislation.

I don't believe that this government has a mandate for its policies. Its mandate came from a desire of Albertans to throw out the previous government. It had remarkably little to do with policy. Mr. Speaker, I know of many Albertans who heard the opposite of what the former Premier said. When the former Premier told Albertans that only the Progressive Conservatives could beat the NDP, a lot of people heard the opposite side of that equation. People who did not in any way, shape, or form accept the NDP agenda or platform voted for the NDP to throw the old government out, a sentiment that I can sympathize with. They did not vote for the NDP's policies. Those are many Albertans, and I think that those Albertans would be poorly served if the government took that vote as carte blanche to implement their platform without any consultation whatsoever.

The government has informed this House that they need about six months to craft a budget, but they feel that they can implement these tax hikes, a key element of the budget, in a mere six days.

They have told us time and time again that they cannot even give us rudimentary information on how much they will be spending, how much they will be collecting, what kind of deficit they'll be running, what the debt will be, what the net financial assets will be, information that I could even get vaguely from Doug Horner. They cannot give us any of this information, and they say that they need six months to craft a budget because they need to consult, because the budget is a huge process requiring consultation. By going ahead on the revenue side of things right now, they are telling Albertans that half of the budget can be decided in six days, but the other half requires six months.

Can you implement a 20 per cent increase to business taxes without any consultation from businesses? Can you implement a 20 per cent increase on businesses without any warning? They talk about the need for preparing a budget not on the back of a napkin. By changing the financial plans of every single business in this province, in a matter of six days they are forcing every single business in this province to rewrite their own budgets on the back of a napkin.

What about the people whose taxes you are raising? We should not forget that those who earn more than $125,000 are people. They are Albertans, and they worked hard for that money. The Wildrose and Albertans do not believe in the politics of envy and the politics of jealousy. Because this government cannot rein in their spending, those Albertans are made to pay for the previous government's mistakes and the new government's mistakes to be made. It's almost like telling them to look in the mirror.

Albertans, including high-income Albertans, are generous people. In fact, Albertans are the most generous people in Canada by a country mile. The average Canadian tax filer donates $1,411 a year to charity, Mr. Speaker. The average Albertan donates $2,289. That is a huge difference between what the average Canadian income tax filer gives to charity and what the average Albertan gives to charity. Albertans give back to their communities. Efforts to portray successful people as greedy banksters is disgraceful. People in this province have worked hard for their money, and they give back to their communities. Albertans should not have to pay for the mistakes of the previous government with their hard-earned money.

This bill needs to go to a committee so that we can hear from Albertans. We need to hear from experts on the issue. The government can choose to ignore that advice, or it can choose to heed that advice, but it should at least hear that advice. Albertans are willing, just as we are willing, to help the government make a wise decision. Experts could be brought to the committee to advise the government so that you can make an informed decision.

This bill is rushed. I know that the members across support the principle of the bill, as is absolutely your right, just as we on this side of the House oppose the principle of the bill. But if you want to do justice to the people who elected you, you should not rush a bill even if you believe it to be a good bill in its intent. This bill needs research. It needs homework. We have not provided one shred of evidence that it is actually beneficial to Albertans. All the government has told us is that they voted for you. That fact is obvious since you sit across from me.

Whether or not Albertans voted for you, it's still your duty to do your due diligence as private members. It is your duty to show Albertans that you know what the effects of your actions will be. You need to look before you jump. It is still your duty to do research on this topic and not just throw tax hikes at the deficit and hope that it goes away.

Every piece of research I have read since this government suggested this tax hike has said that higher taxes will discourage growth that creates prosperity, jobs, and the benefits of a prosperous society. Even the research done by your own NDP fellows in Saskatchewan says that lower taxes will benefit the economy and government revenues, and to not one single conservative's surprise, when the Saskatchewan government lowered their taxes, their economy boomed.

This bill will only improve if we have a chance to consider it more thoroughly in committee. These taxes will not fix excessive spending seen in the government's minibudget. These personal taxes on hard-working Albertans will not solve the government's spending problems. This minibudget presented on the back of a napkin to the House contained not one single detail, not one single cut to spending.

The tax increases presented in Bill 2 do not cover the deficit projected by previous governments. With spending projected to be higher under this government than the last, the taxes do not cover even the spending, and we have to ask: will we see even more tax hikes beyond this in the future? I know that this bill was rushed through and not fully researched because it is forgetting a campaign promise made by the NDP in 2012. The Premier herself campaigned on lowering the small-business tax rate. This motion opens up a way for the Premier to help small businesses the way she said she wanted to. There is no shame in admitting that a platform was forgotten.

We're here to help the Premier remember her promises to cut spending and taxes. We are here to help this government help Albertans, and we are here to help the government help small business. The government can help small businesses by cutting the small-business tax rate by the Premier's proposed one-third. This would help small businesses deal with other rushed policies implemented by the NDP, a 50 per cent increase to the minimum wage that they will have to shell out from their profit margins. This tax cut will help save jobs that the minimum wage hike would take away from Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, we must do our due diligence. We need to be responsible with taxpayers' money in how we spend it and in how we collect it. We should not frivolously pass laws.

I will close by citing a statesman from the 19th century who, I believe, probably had a moment just like this when he said it. Chancellor Bismarck said that making laws is like making sausages: you don't want to see how it gets done. Let's not make sausages.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said before, I will always rise in this House to defend Alberta's hard-working families, and I will fight against increasing the size and scope of government. However, I am in favour of the motion that has been brought forward by my good friend and neighbour from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. We should not be experimenting with economic and taxation changes. There should be proper consultation, and this government should not be rushing through changes.

For the last two weeks we've heard from the Premier and her ministers that now is not the time to bring forward a budget. They say that they need time to consult. They need time to figure things out, and they need time to work out the details. That's what they say. So how is it exactly that they can bring forward a massive hike in taxes on hard-working Alberta families but they can't tell us where they are actually going to spend the money? Is there even a need for a massive tax hike? We don't think so. The NDP haven't made a case for why the money is needed. The NDP hasn't even told us what's going to happen. So far all we've seen is an NDP government that is playing politics with the future of hard-working Alberta families. It's disgusting that this government is playing politics with the future of Alberta families, and I say, Mr. Speaker, that they should be ashamed.

We should spend the summer consulting with Albertans, speaking with small-business owners and taxpayers, and spending the time needed to study the actual implications of hiking taxes on hard-working Alberta families.

That's why I'm in support of the motion from my hon. colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I think that there are many other members of this House that should also be in favour of spending the summer studying the impact of these high taxes.

One particular member is my good friend, well, my friend, the Minister of Municipal Affairs. He has said:

For a government that loves to talk about the word "consultation" and how they speak with folks, their actions don't seem to live up to their words. Although I could stand here and give numerous examples where consultation never took place even though it was asserted, I won't do that.

Once again, that's the Minister of Municipal Affairs. He said it so well that I couldn't have said it better myself. Naturally, I look forward to him voting in favour of this motion. This is a regressive and harmful experiment with Alberta's jobs and the future prosperity of our province and is nothing more than a direct attack on the Alberta advantage.

We think that this government, just like the old government, needs to get spending under control. They need, Mr. Speaker, to take a look at the books, find efficiencies where efficiencies can be found, cut the waste when there's waste to be cut. That's why Wildrose has long advocated for finding efficiencies and cutting waste. We believe Albertans are taxed enough. The people in my riding of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre believe Albertans are taxed enough. Hard-working Alberta families are the lifeblood of our communities and our province. We should not be taking more from them to fund the pet projects of the new NDP government, particularly ideological projects.

We now have a government that wants to chase people away from our province, Mr. Speaker, to encourage families to move away and work in more competitive jurisdictions. We do not believe in higher taxes now or in the future. We are here to fight for hard-working Alberta families. We are here fighting for our constituents, that rely on the Alberta advantage. We are fighting for keeping Alberta a great place to live and work and raise a family. We're going to keep doing just that. I will wholeheartedly and without reservation vote against this bill every step of the way, but I will vote in favour of this motion put forward by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. But I will never give up the fight against the regressive tax hikes of this NDP government, and I will never stop saying: shame on you.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, just a word of observation. I've received a few notes about comments across the House. In a preventive mindset as we go forward into the late hours of the night on this wonderful adventure, can I ask that you please be doubly conscious of remarks or feelings or opinions that you might have of the others – these are notes; they're not verbal comments – in a preventive way? Thank you for that.

The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and support the motion brought forward by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. The name of the bill says it all: An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue. Fair to whom? Will it be fair to the mom-and-pop businesses who hire high school students after school and on weekends, who now won't be able to afford to hire them? Will it be fair to companies in the oil and gas supply industry, who are dependent on the large producers for their work, the welders, pipefitters, mechanics who have started their own companies and now face reductions in charge-out rates and who still have to pay higher taxes? They will be losing out twice, once from reduced income and secondly from increased taxes on all of that income. Will it be fair to the people who would like to expand their business but decide not to due to increased taxes and uncertain revenues?

Is it fair to the people who used to work for the Lufkin service in Drayton Valley, Alberta? I say used to because they were all laid off in the last few weeks – all of them – 15 families from one community. Why? Because their parent company no longer saw the Alberta advantage. Their operation was no longer a profitable branch due in part to the reduction in charge-out rates demanded by the major oil companies. I found this out from a friend tonight as I was walking out of the Legislature for the supper break. He called me looking for advice, and I couldn't give him any. This is just one example. Every call I make to people I work with in the oil patch of northeastern Alberta carries the same message: cutbacks, pay cuts, and layoffs. That's what our future is.

Mr. Speaker, who is this bill fair to? The NDP government intends to make life much more expensive here in Alberta and to make our province a much less attractive place in which to do business. This government will raise business tax by 20 per cent and add new provincial personal income tax brackets while increasing the top bracket by 50 per cent. Now they are talking about a royalty review, which may well end in an increase in resource royalties. Where is it going to stop?

Looking at business alone, when Alberta raises its general provincial corporate tax rate to 12 per cent, that puts Alberta's business tax higher than B.C., higher than Quebec, and on par with Saskatchewan on the general rate of 12 per cent but higher than Saskatchewan's manufacturing and processing corporate tax rate of 10 per cent. This approach to fiscal management is from the NDP playbook. It has failed in other provinces, and it will fail here.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is poorly thought out, poorly planned, and based on faulty economic ideas of debt servicing and fiscal management. Increasing taxes is going to destroy our economy; indeed, even the threat of increased taxes is enough to start stories of business closures. We just talked about one in Drayton Valley.

We need to take our time with this bill. We need to ensure that we have input from the community and the best economic advisers before we do anything so ill advised as pushing through this legislation. The government will not even have a budget out, yet they want to increase taxes as a sort of pre-emptive strike in their planning. Referring this bill to committee is the only responsible and reasonable course of action.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to rise in support of my colleague from the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and the referral amendment. This government has repeated over and over again that they need time: time to get up to speed, time to get proper consultation, and time to get it right. On this I am in full agreement. We need more time. This bill needs to go back for further consultation. Albertans need to know what the government is doing in a clear and open manner.

I've lived in Alberta my whole life. I've raised a family here, started a business, and seen my family thrive. I want other Albertans to have these types of opportunities in the future. They deserve a chance to experience some of the Alberta advantage. Alberta was not only the standard which other provinces strived to achieve; we were also the benchmark for fiscal responsibility in Canada. Sadly, we have dropped to the bottom of the pack now, spending $8 billion more than our neighbours in B.C. Unfortunately, the governments of the past squandered most of that advantage, and we don't need this new one snuffing out what little remains.

Alberta already collected the most business taxes per capita in Canada because it invited more investment and productivity in Alberta. I'd ask the members across the aisle to listen closely and try to understand this. Alberta has been taking in more tax revenue per person, both corporate and personal, than any other province despite our so-called unfair taxation system. The system itself is a key to our prosperity.

The members that spoke on behalf of Bill 2 seem to think there is no downside to raising tax rates. I bet a lot of them think that profit is kind of a bad word. It means that workers could have been paid more or the government could have spent more. They don't realize that the low rates and pro-economy parties that have governed this province over the last 80 or 90 years are themselves a big part of why there are four times more people in Alberta than Saskatchewan. Saskatchewan has oil. Saskatchewan even has potash. But you know what else Saskatchewan had for many decades? CCF and NDP governments that took a combative approach with business and entrepreneurs and scared them and the jobs they create right over the border to us.

Raising business taxes 20 per cent will not just affect them; it will mean higher prices and lower wages. This business tax increase will now make Alberta a less attractive place to invest. How will this affect Alberta? How will it affect the business climate? Will employers be forced to scale back projects and thus employees in this uncertain economic climate that our government is creating? What reputable studies have been done to vet and evaluate this tax hike, especially in the context of minimum-wage hikes, royalty hikes, and everything else they are doing? You can't force through legislation simply because you feel that being elected gives you a blank cheque. Remember, more Albertans voted against your party than for.

This bill needs further discussion. Albertans need to know what the impact will be on them. Royalty reviews, minimum-wage increases, business tax increases, and personal tax increases on the top earners, who pay the majority of income tax: how does this government reconcile this heavy-handedness with the soft words they speak in this House when they need more time?

This government routinely talks about Albertans voting for change. So far, it has been hard to see any change. They used the same budget that the PCs ran on in the last election and lost, plus they've added more taxes. They've denied common-sense amendments to Bill 1 to keep unions and corporations out of politics. They restricted debate on the minibudget, that has max-spending. Change would include a willingness to work with opposition parties and consult Albertans. We've heard lots about change, a change in how government does business, but we've seen no change.

We keep offering to help, and they keep laughing. That doesn't give any sign to Albertans that there is any difference between this government and the last. We're serious. We want to help. Albertans would like to see a more transparent, consultative government, not just hear about one. Please show Albertans by action that you are willing to work with others.

I urge all MLAs in this House to support this motion so that this bill can be properly considered. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't have a prepared statement, but I think it goes without saying that a lot of the members of the Wildrose have already covered a lot of the meat of the subject here going forward, and I know comments like that may be somewhat offensive to the members opposite that may be more prone to vegetarian diets.

But it's certainly an important time. Having been in a previous sitting of this Chamber – the importance of proper debate on legislation is significant. The party that is now the third party in the legislature understands that, with the full vengeance of the voters that they received in the past election. The party now in front of us as the governing party has that to learn, and we'll see how that proceeds.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is important that we do take due diligence and time to fully examine the legislation in front of us. I therefore yield to you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to come at this issue – and I am in support of this, by the way, and I want to speak in support of this. But I want to talk to the issue of democratic institutions here. You know, one of the dominant issues during this last election, at least in Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, was the restoration of damaged democratic institutions. In my riding of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake in the 2012 election there was an overwhelming vote for a Wildrose MLA, and very shortly thereafter that MLA, without consulting the electorate, decided to cross the floor.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. MacIntyre: It was a shame. And because of that action, not consulting either the constituency association for that matter or the electorate, that MLA, of course, suffered some disappointment in this last election because the voters still wanted a Wildrose MLA, thank God.

Now, part of the process of restoring damaged democratic institutions is to restore the institutions that are within this Legislature right here. I cannot believe that any honest member opposite believes that an election to remove an entrenched regime from power somehow equates to a blanket approval of everything orange. It just doesn't. I know deep down inside, Mr. Speaker, that they know this as well. I am sincerely concerned that now that the NDP have the reins of power, they're not using their position to strengthen this Legislature right here and its democratic institutions, something that I believe all Albertans voted for in this last election. That was why the change. Democracy had been severely hurt, and the people of Alberta said: we want you and us to fix that, to strengthen the democratic institutions that we have. Now, it seems to me that there is a growing attitude far too similar to the same attitude that voters just removed from government in this province.

Now, one of the pillars of our parliamentary democracy that suffered considerable damage in recent years was the Legislative Assembly and the organs within it such as standing committees. Their intent originally was to take time to reflect on bills, to gather evidence on the subject, hear from the public thoroughly on all the contents of the proposed bills, to hear from experts to give evidence for and against, then make appropriate amendments, and then bring everything back here. That process has been in our tradition for a very long time, Mr. Speaker. It has been hurt severely.

I urge the members opposite to do everything they can to strengthen democracy rather than continue to damage it. By not accepting this motion, we are not strengthening democracy; we are instead continuing the legacy that just got voted out. So I encourage everyone in this House: please, support this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in this House to show my support for this amendment and to talk about the reasons why I believe it's important to support it. We have heard about an election that just happened from the members opposite to us. They've talked about the importance of making sure that the peoples' voice was heard, that this body represents them. It's important for us to remember that important truth.

I've had the opportunity to speak to many people this past weekend about these bills that are going forward. The words that I've heard don't represent the idea of this being fair. In fact, often I would hear the words: "This isn't fair. How can they spend this kind of money so quickly and push it through so quickly? How can they implement these taxations so quickly without consultation and support from the people?" Often I heard many of these people say: is there anything we can do? I said to them that we just had an election and that was the opportunity to be able to say no to these things. I believe that the intent of the people was for change. I believe that that was the intent, and to state that the people gave them a carte blanche cheque to do with what they want – I do not hear that. I have not heard that yet in my riding.

So I believe that this is not fair. I believe that this approach of being able to ram this through quickly without proper consultation, without a proper economic impact study is something that is folly and that will not help Albertans and that will not help the credibility of this House. Albertans are looking for a change. They desperately want it. They have experienced years of feeling neglected, and they are looking for that democratic right to be instilled back in their hands again. They want it, and we have the ability to give it to them. But what we're doing here tonight in pushing this forward is destroying that confidence that we're trying to rebuild. In good conscience how can we sit back and say that this is okay? In good conscience how can we go back to our ridings and talk to people, look them in the eyes, and say that it's business as usual? We cannot do that. We should not do that. It's not right.

I've heard a couple of statements made tonight by members that have sat on this side of the House in the past. It's interesting how circumstances change a person's perspective. In fact, we've often heard the saying: power corrupts; absolute power corrupteth absolute. Are your values, is your belief in the way that you should actually run your house circumstantial? Does it change when your circumstances change? I don't think it should. I don't think Albertans believe it should. I believe that this is something that we need to seriously look at in an effort to regain the trust of Albertans. This is something that I hope the members opposite in the House will take a look at seriously and realize that we are trying to champion, all of us are trying to champion, democracy as it should be.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. member for Barrhead.

Mr. van Dijken: Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. Hey. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of the referral motion brought forward by my caucus colleague. This referral motion is all about consultation, and this Bill 2 is of such major change to the tax structure of Alberta that we need to consult. Tax increases that will possibly have far-reaching effects on the Alberta economy, increases that will possibly have far-reaching effects on Alberta businesses, and increases that will possibly have far-reaching effects on Alberta families: I would submit that there has not been adequate consultation on this potentially destructive tax policy. I would suggest that we refer Bill 2 to committee.

Let us call in the experts, call in the senior officials from Alberta Finance and Treasury Board to hear their opinion of the implications of this tax bill at this time. I want to see Todd Hirsch from ATB Financial brought in for his opinion. I want to see Gil McGowan from the Alberta Federation of Labour. I might not like what he says, but I'm a small "d" democrat and want to hear his opinions also. The committee could review the impacts of these changes in the broader context of lower oil prices, minimum wage hikes, in the context of a royalty review and climate levies. Given that the Premier indicated that the budget won't be introduced until October, we do have time to make consultations by committee happen, Mr. Speaker. Bill 2 will only be ameliorated if we have the chance to consider it more thoroughly in committee. Experts and ordinary Albertans can then testify to the consequences they see of making these changes to Alberta's tax laws.

I will also appeal to the members of the governing party that are not in cabinet. You have an opportunity with a voice of freedom to prove to Albertans that you are willing to seek proper consultation. My father always encouraged me to seek the advice of wise counsel before making any critical decisions. I believe at this time that this is a critical decision at a critical time in the Alberta environment, in the Alberta economy. It would be wise for the members of the governing party that are not in cabinet to take into consideration your opportunity to go into the constituency and let the people know that you were willing to take advice and counsel, that you were willing to take this seriously.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: My apologies, hon. member, for not identifying all of your constituency.

The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising this evening to speak in favour of the motion before the Assembly. I wholeheartedly support this motion. So far I'm able to piece together that we have Bill 2, a drastic increase in taxes, to pay for Bill 3, a seemingly ever-changing runaway budget. Maybe the challenge with all these numbers getting thrown around is that the NDP have no idea what sort of revenue Bill 2 will bring in. Maybe they've haven't properly costed Bill 3. Maybe it's both. Who can know? We can't be too sure because the NDP isn't telling us.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

It seems like the runaway, unaccountable spending of the previous government is becoming part of this government. We, quite frankly, were hoping for more: more information, more details, more debate. We can debate all night long. We wanted to provide answers to our constituents. All we have are more questions for our constituents. I can't answer my constituents about what's going on here because we're getting no answers from the government.

This is Alberta, the place people come to do business, all sorts of business, big business. We do what we can to cultivate an entrepreneurial spirit, to encourage people and businesses that this is a place where you can take a risk. This is a place where you can invest in a business, where you can raise your family, where you can be part of this community, but the NDP is ruining that. They haven't had time to get a proper budget together, but they have had time to dismantle the Alberta advantage, and we have barely had any time to ask them how.

But back to Bill 2, which is about raising revenues to pay for the increased spending in Bill 3. Alberta had a spending problem under the previous government. Alberta is spending even more, causing a larger spending problem under this current government. Businesses come to Alberta because of our tax advantages. Ten per cent: we were the best in the country. We had the lowest business tax rate and this, combined with other tax advantages, a streamlined regulatory system, and a government that didn't meddle in the marketplace, meant that Alberta had the advantage over every other province in the country. Alberta was number one, but the previous government killed that Alberta advantage.

Mr. Bhullar: We made it number one.

Mr. Yao: Not after 44 years, my friend. Not after 44 years.

Mr. Bhullar: Number one in the country.

Mr. Yao: Yeah. After Klein it just went down.

Mr. Bhullar: Record growth last year. Record growth.

Mr. Yao: Record corruption.

Now the NDP are putting the final nails in the coffin of an advantage that was already on its last legs. When we had the Alberta advantage, it meant that businesses did flock to Alberta. It meant more revenue in all streams. I can personally attest to the businesses that invested in Fort McMurray despite the high real estate prices, despite the cost it took to get employees to go there to work. They invested millions and billions of dollars, and now every one of them is looking away. They're looking at other provinces.

My friends that work in the oil companies, they have said straight up that their companies are working and looking in Saskatchewan. Why? Because when these are international companies, we're a dot on that little map, and they have a whole bunch of dots all over that map, and right now they just look at that little dot in Alberta, and they think to themselves: "Okay. They have a new government now, and this government is antibusiness. They're going to raise taxes." It's not good for their business. The wrong movements happen by the government, and they just stroke that little dot off, and they go on to the next business.

Mr. Nixon: Stroke it right off.

Mr. Yao: Yeah.

With the 20 per cent increase to business tax Alberta will no longer be the first choice for businesses. Businesses can choose from B.C., Ontario, Quebec even, if they want a lower tax rate. Quebec. Good Lord. Then, if they want to pay the same tax, they can choose from Manitoba, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan. They're all at 12 per cent. We get to compete with New Brunswick. What incentive do new businesses receive from Alberta? Not too much under this new government. There's a question whether they could ease in these changes by phasing in these taxes over a slow period or, better yet, recognize that when oil is down, it's not a good time to raise taxes on those companies.

Just as the government is doing with minimum wage, I just don't agree with this. The phasing-in approach is much better than the shock and awe of a 50 per cent overnight increase. Business killer. That said, the 25 per cent increase they are musing about for this year is staggeringly reckless. Staggeringly. To help small businesses cope with the increase to taxes and minimum wage, a decrease to the small business rate could be one ray of economic hope in this dark cloud of antibusiness reforms being ushered in.

As an added bonus, recognize that Fort McMurray does have a high minimum wage, and you will see the same prices that we pay in Fort McMurray. You'll pay two bucks more for that Happy Meal. You know, it's just ridiculous. It really is. Fort McMurray. What else do you want to pay for? What do we pay? Oh, we pay for everything much higher. Much higher. Beer, oh my goodness. You look like a bunch of – no. I withdraw that. Liquor, you pay much more. We pay like 25 per cent more for our liquor up there. We pay 30 per cent more for our groceries. Thirty per cent more: can you imagine that? Your friends that work at Air Canada, can you imagine those guys trying to pay that high price on their current wages? That would be pretty tough for them, wouldn't it? Every time you fly to the United States, you'll be picking up food and smuggling it across.

Small business needs to be protected. Our whole economy needs protection when we see oil in a prolonged slump. Growing up in Fort McMurray, I'm used to the ups and downs. That is the way it is. We deal with it. We persevere. We get by. We save our money. We don't rely on the government to do handouts for us.

Mr. Nixon: You spend your kids' money, Tany?

Mr. Yao: Oh, good Lord, no. No. We don't take that up in Fort McMurray if we can.

But, anyways, back to the discussion here. They are making our slump worse. Only ideology would lead a government in a time of economic downturn to raise business taxes 20 per cent, personal taxes for high earners and minimum wage 50 per cent, royalties and carbon levies who knows how much. Y'all will be living in that same trailer park with me.

I am calling on this government to take a step back from this quintuplet of a whammy and take some time to get advice on what they are doing. Truly seek the advice because we have heard nothing about fiscal responsibility from you. Have you evaluated your ABCs? Slide over the books. We'll give you a hand. We'll tell you where to cut. All you have to do is slide those books over because we are here to help you. I don't want you living in a manufactured home for half a million bucks. Take some time to hear from the experts, to consider the effects of these drastic changes on the people of Alberta before passing this legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments to the hon. member?

All right. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Welcome. Well, I believe that more time should be given to Bill 2. Bill 2 undermines the Alberta advantage. This has to be debated fully, not rushed through. Albertans need to know what this government is doing. I'm passionate about Alberta, like many of you. I chose to raise my family and start a business here. I want others to have those opportunities as well, the opportunities the late Premier Peter Lougheed famously dubbed the Alberta advantage. We need an open, honest debate on Bill 2. Albertans deserve to have their voices heard in their Legislature. I was elected to do that, as was everybody else here. It takes more time to get my kids ready in the morning than the time we're spending debating this bill. My children are skilled debaters.

What's worse is that this may mark the end of the Alberta advantage. Between their mismanagement and the recklessness of the NDP our families and their businesses are going to be drastically impacted. For decades Alberta has been a land of opportunity, a place you would come and start up business, raise a family, plant your roots. This government, however, is set to implement the largest business tax increase in recent Alberta history. It's unreal. Seems more like a late night bar thought than a well-thought-out bill. This bill needs further discussion. Families need to know what the impact will be on them. They need to know now. How is this bill fair if we railroad it through the Legislature?

What of our economic engine, the oil industry, Alberta's economic powerhouse, set to face turbulent times with the royalty review and carbon price review held over their heads? What can be done? What will the impact be on this important job provider? Will they be forced to lay people off? What sort of studies has the government done to evaluate this seemingly reckless tax hike? Seems like none. It's possible that an enormous amount of thought and work went into this bill. It's possible, but we really haven't had time to discuss it. A quick rush through, minimal debate: it all leads me to believe this is simply a campaign tactic. Unreal. Except this isn't quite a campaign anymore. One is coming.

Mr. Yao: Mulcair isn't pulling the strings, is he?

Mrs. Pitt: I don't know. I have no details.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, let me remind you, through the chair, please.

Mrs. Pitt: My apologies, Madam Speaker.

You know what? Quite frankly, we should expect more honest, open discussion on the details of this bill. We need more time. I urge all MLAs here to support the motion so that this bill can be properly considered and it has the time it deserves, as we were elected to do, to serve Albertans and represent them here in this House.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I have confirmed that there is a five-minute question and comment period should you wish to take advantage of that.

Seeing none, I'll call on the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm rising this evening to speak in favour of the motion before the Assembly, brought forward by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. My family, my husband and I, in our 21 years of marriage have had many businesses together. We've employed many people over the years, and we've had many ups and downs with those businesses. But ultimately the incentives that are in Alberta were what drew us to create businesses, to create jobs, and to create a life for our family here in this great province.

Over those years in pursuing those businesses, Madam Speaker, we've learned a tremendous amount about how to pursue the dreams that happen here in Alberta, which means raising our children, you know, paying taxes towards a great education, and other things like that. That is what we're all talking about here, about the Alberta advantage, where our tax dollars go. This runaway, unaccountable spending and these reckless revenue increases are reminiscent of the previous government, and we're disheartened, I believe . . .

Mrs. Pitt: I thought it was a new government.

Mrs. Aheer: I know.

... to see this trend continue, when Albertans so clearly voted for change.

In the many years that I've been running businesses with my husband – my husband and I have a car wash. I think it's every couple of weeks that he's in the mud, slogging mud out of the sumps, to get it out of there, as a small-business owner working like crazy to make this business work in a province that actually allows us to have a business, to be successful. Nobody would ever complain about having those jobs, Madam Speaker, because we know that ultimately, at the end of the day, we are contributing to the fabric of this province, and we're very proud of that. It doesn't matter how dirty that job is, how much mud, how many hours in a day that we put into it. We work hard because we know that we're contributing to something bigger than ourselves. It actually has nothing to do necessarily with ourselves. It has to do with contributing to a province that takes care of its own, something I'm very proud of.

We need answers for the communities that we represent, and they have more questions about the repercussions of these tax increases. It's clear, Madam Speaker, that the government has put no thought into these tax hikes; otherwise, business owners like myself would have been asked. I don't recall ever having one single member come to my house to discuss this situation with me, especially being a small-business owner and especially with the amount that I personally and my family contribute into the fabric of this province.

The tax hikes in their platform: it feels like it's something that they feel they could get away with. I feel that that's probably not the truth, but it's an uncomfortable feeling as a person who contributes in this way. That's how we feel. That is the optics of this situation. It doesn't feel right. It's misleading, and it leads us to be mistrustful of the government at this time. We deserve full consideration of the effects, that this is combined with the missteps that we believe that they are taking.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has long cultivated the entrepreneurial spirit. They are attracted, myself included – and I think I can speak for many people over on this side – to the climate that fosters entrepreneurship. Entrepreneurs bring their ideas, their capital, and they have kept their businesses here because in return for their capital and ingenuity Alberta provides them with a fair taxation framework. That is the way that it has worked for us, that we are able, again, to contribute to this amazing province, something everybody in here should be extremely proud of. Alberta is a place where you can take risks, start a business, and, to reiterate what all of my friends over here have been saying, raise your family and be a part of our community.

12:20

Businesses come to Alberta because of Alberta's low business tax rate, and at 10 per cent, to reiterate once again, it has been up until now the lowest in the country. That Alberta advantage is not something to be taken lightly, Mr. Speaker. That Alberta advantage is a combination of Albertans working together to create something that is uniquely different from the rest of this country. It is called an advantage not because of – I mean, it's a combination of taxes and many, many other things, but it's also an advantage because it is unique to this province, something that we should be, again, let me reiterate, so proud of. How are we going to explain to our children one day that we have given away their future to the whims of something that has had no research and has no background and will not contribute to the future fabric of this province?

The Alberta advantage means good public services, low taxes, and a government that does not interfere excessively in the marketplace. The previous government eroded most of that Alberta advantage with their fiscal mismanagement, that led to the 2015 campaign budget that raised 59 taxes and fees. Now the NDP are guaranteeing the absolute destruction of an advantage that was already on its last legs.

We have an opportunity here, Mr. Speaker, to change that. Whatever it is that was campaigned on – we understand that there were many, many campaign promises that happened, but it takes a bigger person to look at the situation once you are in a position of power and understand that changes to the original ideology take courage. It takes a great deal of heart and compassion to understand that the changes that you make right now will affect the future of our great-grandchildren in this province, and that's not a legacy that I want to leave for mine.

Mr. Speaker, businesses flock to Alberta, contributing to our revenue stream. If those businesses stop coming to Alberta, it will mean less tax revenue generated in all streams: income, corporate, gas, sin taxes, you name it. The only thing that will increase is the need for government services to cope with chronic unemployment. Speaking as a businessperson, with this triple-edged sword of having to pay more taxes ... [interjections] It's a triple edge. I'm sorry, but there's no double here. It's got a point and two sides. There is the side of having to pay more business taxes, the side of having to increase minimum wage – that is two already – and then on top of that everything else is changing, too. We don't understand where our dollars are going to be going. We have no clarity. We have no understanding of that. None of us has any information to go back to our constituents with. Nothing.

There are alternatives that must be considered. If they are dead set, Mr. Speaker, on these increases, why isn't the government easing these changes by phasing in both business and personal taxes? Here's what I heard from one of our wonderful staffers. She came to me last night, and she said: they haven't had time to get a proper budget together, but they have had time to dismantle the Alberta advantage.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would speak to the amendment as presented today. I guess it is today. I know that as a newly elected MLA there are many things that I have to learn. I know that this places me in good company with most of the elected members of this House. I think that we are learning a lot today. We are learning a lot today about how government functions and how it works and even how long we can stay up at night.

Mr. Mason: Everyone in our caucus is younger than you.

Mr. Smith: Yes. Do they have their parents' permission to stay up?

There is much to learn and much to consider when deciding to raise personal and business taxes. I'm a fiscal conservative, and it's never made sense to me that you could tax your way to prosperity. I realize that across the House you believe that redistributing wealth through a system of progressive taxation speaks to equity and to fairness in our society, but does that happen if in the process you have driven people out of the province of Alberta to those provinces that have a more enticing tax regime?

Let me assure my colleagues that compassion and equity for those less fortunate are found on both sides of this House. It has been my experience in life that when taxes are low and people are able to find work and create businesses, it generates the wealth that is necessary for those people to take care of themselves and to take care of those people that have trouble taking care of themselves. In Alberta we need an economy that creates the kind of people that are reflected in our motto as a province; we need people that are strong and free. That does not mean that we don't care for those who need help, but we will only be able to care for and take care of those who cannot take care of themselves if we have a province that is prosperous, where the taxes are low, where the citizens have the wealth to provide world-class health care, education, and seniors' care.

When I was campaigning in the past election, I would go up to the doors of my constituents' houses and apartments, condos, and I would ask my constituents two very simple questions. "Are you happy with the government?" The people at the door either laughed or they swore. I would then follow that question with a very simple second question. "Have you figured out an alternative to the party in power?" The answer I received almost all of the time in the last days of the election in my constituency was, "Well, I'm either going to vote for the Wildrose, or I'm going to vote for the NDP."

That told me that this past election was more about wanting change than about ideology, but I also think that it showed me how desperate the people of Alberta were. They were so desperate for change that they set aside their deeply held fiscal conservatism, that had directed them to support in the past political parties like the Social Credit or the Klein Progressive Conservatives, and they were willing to consider either the NDP, that they hoped would be moderate, or the Wildrose Party, who had a new leader and who thought that the PCs had killed the Wildrose.

Well, I'm not asking anyone here to set aside their deeply held values and beliefs. I think that an honest conclusion about this past election is that while it was a mandate for the NDP to govern, it was not a mandate to use their majority to push forward legislation without pause for reflection and debate and that they would support a move toward sending this bill to referral. We all understand how a majority government functions. We've all been elected. We've all got a good education. We understand how this thing works.

This bill is, supposedly, about fairness and about taxation fairness, and I would encourage the NDP to consider how fair it is when people lose jobs because of the tax regime that they are proposing. This is not fiction. It is fact. You've heard today that there were 15 families in my home town of Drayton Valley that lost their jobs, that lost their incomes. I know that when I started into this election, the economic times were telling us that in the first two weeks of the election we had 15 people that handed their houses back to the banks in Drayton Valley. That's not something that we can ignore.

People and business owners in Drayton Valley and in Devon and in Thorsby and in Warburg and in towns and cities across this province are phoning all of us. They're phoning me, and they're wondering how raising their taxes will allow their families and their businesses to thrive. I don't think that I'm unusual. I don't think that I'm any different from you folks. I think you're hearing these things, too.

Drayton Valley is a young community. We've only been around as an incorporated community since about 1955 and Devon for only a little bit longer. The towns in my constituency were built by hard-working people who were willing to pay taxes, but they are worried about a government that would raise their taxes when their businesses and their families and their jobs are threatened by a downturn in the economy. It is these people – these friends, these neighbours, my electorate – that would support this bill going to referral. They would support a conversation by their elected representatives, by a committee that represents all parts of this Legislature that would be able to review the wisdom of the proposals that are found in this bill. This committee would be able to invite experts to testify on the wisdom of raising personal and business taxes during a downturn in the economy. This committee could invite large businesses to explain how these additional taxes are going to affect their bottom line and whether they are planning to lay off people or to move to another province with a lower tax regime.

Bring in the banks. Bring in the tax experts. Bring in the families. Mr. Speaker, we need to listen to the people of Alberta and then, in due course, follow their lead. I believe they will tell you to reconsider your plan to raise taxes, but you will never know this unless you are willing to support this amendment and send this bill to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future.

I therefore urge this House to support this amendment. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to the amendment? The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and good morning. I would be remiss if I did not speak to this, really, because I remember being across the way and the hon. Government House Leader on many occasions making very impassioned pleas for us to consider.

Mr. Fraser: We should have listened.

Mr. Bhullar: "We should have listened," says the Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Speaker, this is such a significant decision. This is such a significant piece of legislation, something that is going to affect virtually every single Albertan. It has the opportunity to hinder their progress and their livelihood in a very short period of time. I've said this before, and I'll say it again. If the government can reconsider the Calgary cancer centre decision and say, "Hold on; this is complicated, and we need to assess our options," then they should surely be reconsidering this.

You know, I understand that they have a mandate. I respect them for that. There are many fine people across the way, but as fine people we have an obligation to ensure that ideological pursuits are not cause for us to be blinded from the realities of the day. The realities of the day, Mr. Speaker, are that our people are suffering. It is a very, very real fear for many Alberta families, for many great people in our province that they may be losing their jobs, that their companies may be picking up and moving elsewhere.

We have a series of very significant issues, and I say this with all sincerity right now. We have a series of very significant economic issues. One of them we cannot control. That is the price of oil. We cannot control that, but it has a very significant effect on us, on the government's revenues. You know, it usually takes about a year from the time that government revenues are affected for the broader population to be affected. We're starting to see it now very significantly, very seriously. You and I and this Legislative Assembly cannot affect the global price of oil. We could shut off the taps in Alberta and, realistically, it wouldn't have much of an impact on the global price of oil. That's something that we cannot control.

The other factor, Mr. Speaker, that we do have some impact over, number one, is our tax rates. That's what we're looking at here today. I agree with the members. We should refer this to the committee, allow the committee to do its great work. We have fine Members of the Legislative Assembly from all parties and independent members who should get their feet wet, who should dive deep into the work of a committee and help provide the government with substantive feedback so that when they are ready to table their budget later this year, they will have had very significant feedback on the implications. I'm not saying: don't implement what they want. I'm speaking of the implications of the timing of their promises. I'm not saying: don't do it. I'm just saying: consider the timing. I come back again to, you know, if you're willing to do it on some infrastructure projects, why not this? It affects a heck of a lot more people. Taxes: that's something we control.

The next thing we control is the minimum wage. We can sit and have an ideological debate about a living wage and the minimum wage as it is today until all of us are red in the face, but the fact remains that if the cost of labour for a business goes up 50 per cent within a short period of time – say someone is being paid 10, 11 bucks right now and it goes up to $15, for the sake of argument, the cost of labour goes up 50 per cent for a business or a nonprofit – that 50 per cent has to be made up somewhere. Nobody's going to come and stick a whole bunch of money in someone's pocket and say: "Here you go. This will cover that 50 per cent." They're going to make it up somewhere. So where are they going to make it up? They're going to make it up by charging more.

I've had countless conversations with many business folks. Actually, you know, I go to this one restaurant, Mr. Speaker, because they have the absolute best Caesar salad in Calgary. [interjection] Yeah, I eat salad once in a while.

Some Hon. Members: Where?

Mr. Bhullar: Chianti's on 32nd Avenue. The best Caesar salad in Calgary and it's cheap. I've been there. I believe it's actually in the Member for Calgary-Cross's constituency.

That Caesar salad, that's six bucks, is going to be 10 bucks. It's going to be $10 if these changes are made overnight. I would ask the members opposite, then: what's next? Will you then be establishing new government programs to subsidize coffee, to subsidize Caesar salads? Is that what you will have to come to? A 50 per cent increase in the cost of labour will be likely matched with – I mean, that cost will be passed on to consumers. Somebody's got to pay, Mr. Speaker. Somebody has to. So that's the third piece, the third very critical factor that's affecting our economy today.

The fourth, Mr. Speaker, is a royalty review.

So you have four major factors that are affecting our economy today, one of which you have no control over. The other three the government of the day has all the control over, yet they seem to be a bit unwilling to consider the impacts of drastic action on the people. You know, I get it. You want to prove to your people that you're in here, that you're making change. But change isn't always a net outcome; change is also how you achieve something. You know, I've been lectured time and time again about how we did things. Now is the time to do something different.

I'll stand up, Mr. Speaker, and I'm very proud of some things we've accomplished, very proud. There are many things that – you know what? – I could have done without. But the fact remains that if I personally as a Member of the Legislative Assembly or as a cabinet minister at any point stood up and said that I was to do something, I tried my hardest to make sure it happened. You don't always win. It doesn't always happen, but if you don't try, it's not going to happen. There's no chance then.

Here I guess what's most concerning for me is the sheer fact that we have people across the way who continuously stood firm in their beliefs into the early hours of the morning repeatedly in this Assembly, stood firm in their belief in doing things differently, arguing that we could do better, we should learn, we should consult, we should bring people together. Mr. Speaker, those same people now are trying to jam something through in the early hours of the morning. This is exactly what they said we were doing wrong. This is exactly what they said they opposed.

You know, the budget is one thing, Mr. Speaker, the tax hikes are one thing, but what is most concerning, what's absolutely the most concerning piece here is how quickly somebody changes when they get into those seats over there.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other members of the Assembly who would like to speak to the amendment? [interjections] The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: There is no confusion here, is there, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Not with me.

Mr. Schneider: Not between you and I, I don't think. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A nonconfused Little Bow MLA rises to speak to the referral motion brought forth by my honourable colleague the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I think this is an excellent opportunity to summon the most learned experts, to determine the impact on Alberta of Bill 2 before we go to vote on something that could be harmful to this province. Experts in finance, economics, business, and labour all need to be brought forth as witnesses to testify in order to provide another side of how raising business taxes, income taxes, royalties, the minimum wage, and the carbon levy will compound the low oil environment and kill jobs for Alberta families. Yes, every Albertan, even the Canadian Taxpayers Federation and the Alberta Federation of Labour, should have their chance to speak to Bill 2, directly to the decision-makers.

With this consideration in more detail, this bill can only be improved if we send it to committee. Major changes to tax laws, as proposed in Bill 2, should not be done without significant public consultation. Yes, you will hear the argument that the election was the consultation, but that was just a rushed job and not just about taxes, Mr. Speaker. The government, the Executive Council, will say that it did a consultation, but that was an internal and not necessarily transparent consultation. We do not know whom the Executive Council consulted.

It's time, Mr. Speaker, for the Legislature to hold public consultations on Bill 2. This stage in the development of legislation has been sorely lacking and rushed in recent years. The result has been bills passed, laws enacted, only to have to change them within months for mistakes that such a consultation would have caught.

Let us support this referral motion and bring in the experts and the general public for their opinions. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to the proposed amendment?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would seek unanimous consent to shorten the interval for the bells for the rest of the evening to one minute.

[Unanimous consent denied]

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 2 lost]

The Speaker: We proceed back to the main motion. Is there anyone wishing to speak to the original motion?

Would the mover like to close debate?

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 12:50 a.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us reflect that we as members of our province's Legislature fulfill our office and duties with honesty, integrity, and mutual respect. May our first concern be for the good of all of our people. Let us be guided by these principles in our deliberations this day. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a school group from Cypress-Medicine Hat, from Ralston and Jenner schools. It's great to have you all here today. I know what a distance you came at the very end of the school year. We met earlier and had great conversations, and it's also important to my colleague from Drumheller-Stettler because many of you live in his constituency as well.

As our Speaker knows, colleagues, what a neat part of the province these people come from. Of course, it's ranching country, but it's also prairie rattlesnake country. It is home to the largest military base in the Commonwealth, where between 6,000 and 8,000 British soldiers come annually and train in the Suffield-Ralston-Jenner area. Of course, many of the students are from Britain.

I would like to please ask you to stand as I call your name. I would like to first introduce teacher Ian Spiers from Ralston, teacher Jennifer Herrell from Ralston, education assistant Candice Worrall, and education assistant Elaine Osadczuk. We have parents making the trip as well: Patricia Knauer-Bravo, Toby Simpson, Ivan Jesse, Wayne Connor, Lesley Konosky, Jody Stennes, and Leslie Kochie. Could I now ask all the students from Ralston and Jenner schools to please rise and my colleagues to show them the generous warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: If the House would allow me, I would like to also echo the words of my fellow southeastern Alberta representative. Welcome. Good to see young folks coming out.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of this House one of my favourite people in the world. She's contributed to this province in many, many ways. Professionally she's working right now as constituency office manager for my colleague the Member of Parliament for Edmonton-Strathcona, Linda Duncan.

I hate this. You know, the minister here suggested I do this, and I have to say that I find that it's always a challenge for me to introduce dear friends. Nonetheless, let me say that, in general, perhaps with the exception of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, I'm not sure that any one of us on this side of the House would be here were it not for the contribution of this person. She has not only worked more recently, as I said, for the MP for Edmonton-Strathcona; she also managed her breakthrough campaigns. She's worked on my campaigns. A decade and a half ago she volunteered as provincial secretary for our little party, when we couldn't afford to pay any staff. She's one of those people on whose shoulders we all stand. I would ask that Erica Bullwinkle rise and that the rest of you join me in welcoming her to the Assembly.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: I would recognize the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Good afternoon, Mr. Speaker. It is my great privilege today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the House my father, Leo Piquette. Mr. Piquette is the former Member for Athabasca-Lac La Biche, a large part of which is now part of my own riding of Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater. Although he is today most famous for the Piquette affair in 1987, where his refusal to apologize for speaking French in the Legislature touched off a national and international controversy, he has long been active in his local community, the francophone community, and provincial politics. He was a former school board member of the Conseil scolaire Centre-Est in 1994 and was chair of the board until 2004, when he was elected president of the Fédération des conseils scolaires francophones de l'Alberta. He is also a founding member and president of the Chambre économique de l'Alberta. Actually, I could keep going for another maybe half an hour on the other boards and things he's done. I would like to call upon our members to grant to Mr. Piquette the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-South East. My apologies again to the House. It was the fun that we had last night. That's my excuse today.

The Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Pastor Bruce Gritter and Sharon Top-Gritter, husband and wife, constituents of Edmonton-South West. Bruce and his wife, Sharon, moved to Edmonton in 2001 and have enjoyed growing with and helping to build the social, physical, and spiritual infrastructure of southwest Edmonton ever since. Bruce is the lead pastor of the River community church, and Sharon is the director of Brander Gardens Rocks, a social service agency that supports various individuals and families living in low-income housing in southwest Edmonton.

Bruce and Sharon have been involved with numerous community boards, including TRAC, which helped get the southwest recreation centre built. Currently they are passionate about development of the new South Pointe community centre, a creative public-private initiative that will provide much-needed community space in southwest Edmonton. They are also co-chairs of the Heritage Valley Spectacular, a brand new Canada Day fireworks and music celebration launching this year at South Pointe on July 1. Bruce and Sharon have six children, including two beautiful aboriginal foster girls, and are proud to be Albertans and Edmontonians. I ask them to please rise so that all members of the Assembly may greet them with the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education and Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the Elder Advocates of Alberta. This group supports elderly members of our community. They are actively involved in protecting the rights of seniors and fiercely advocate for their continued mobility. It is a great honour to have this group represented, and I applaud their continued hard work. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I ask that they stand as I call their names: Jim Savoy, Kerry Modin, Ollie Schultz, Roy Avery, Mary Pelech, Julie Ali, Helga Martens, Shauna McHarg, Barry Snell, and Ruth Maria Adria. Please give them all the warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two incredible people. Although I was elected three years ago, this is the first time that I rise to introduce these two very special people. I'm incredibly blessed to have two of the most generous, supportive, and giving parents. I wouldn't be standing here today if it wasn't for their commitment, self-sacrifice, and hard work. I'd now like to ask my parents, Orest and MaryAnn, to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly Ms Maria Victoria Venancio, also known in her community as Vicky. Vicky is a 29-year-old from the Philippines who came to Edmonton to work in the service industry under the temporary foreign worker program. She came to Canada in search of a better life for her and her family. As the sole breadwinner Vicky would send money back home to her parents. However, in June 2012 she was struck by a truck on her way to work, leaving her quadriplegic.

Many people have rallied around Vicky to advocate in her best interests and the interests of other temporary foreign workers. One of them, joining Vicky today, is Marco Luciano, director of Migrante Alberta. Migrante is an organization that aims to educate, organize, and mobilize Filipinos in Alberta so that they know their rights. They also work to generate support and work to build a more just and humane society. They work with other migrant and social justice organizations as well as trade unions.

I would ask the members to provide these guests with the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly some very special guests. I met our first guest, a constituent of mine, Dr. Nhung Tran-Davies – and I'd ask her to stand if she would, please – about a year and a half ago on the front steps of this very Legislature as she organized a protest against the government's support for discovery, or inquiry, learning. This brave lady has been organizing Albertans and has been fighting to protect our system of education. Dr. Nhung Tran-Davies has been and is responsible for organizing the math petition of 20,000 Albertans who have spoken out against the inquiry methods of education. Sitting with her – and I'd ask these individuals to please rise – are Dr. Ken Porteous, U of A professor emeritus of engineering; Cynthia Cheung, with a bachelor of commerce degree from the University of Alberta, a designated accountant; Dr. Marion Leithead, with a doctorate in education, retired; Mr. Bill Leithead, mechanical engineer, retired.

These Albertans have been tireless advocates for a world-class education system in Alberta, with a focus on preparing our children to be active and competitive citizens within Canadian society. I would ask my guests to rise, if they haven't done so already, and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to the House two guests from the Alberta and Northwest Territories division of the MS Society of Canada. This year was the 26th year of the Johnson MS ride, and over $2 million was raised. This is the most successful ride across Canada. On June 13 over 1,900 cyclists left Nisku to cycle to Camrose, and on the following day they braved the elements to cycle back. It's a gruelling 180-kilometre ride. I've had the pleasure of doing this ride as a cycling marshal for the last few years, and I stand in awe of the number of cyclists with MS who do the ride.

One of those cyclists is the Johnson MS Bike Tour spokesperson Patrycia Rzechowka. Patrycia gave a moving speech on the Saturday night about her struggle with MS and how she was not going to let the disease beat her. Accompanying Patrycia is Julie Kelndorfer, the director for government and community relations for the Alberta and Northwest Territories division of the MS Society of Canada. I also have the pleasure to introduce a page for the Legislative Assembly, Matt Owens, who also was on the ride and raised a substantial amount of money and was one of the fastest riders.

I would ask that the House offer the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly to these guests. Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure today to continue what is apparently bring your parents to work day in the Legislative Assembly. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to my colleagues in the Legislative Assembly my father, Gib Clark. After a very distinguished legal career of 35-plus years on both the prosecution and defence sides of the bar, my father has retired and spends most of his time now as a grandfather. He in fact has sought elected office for this very seat that I hold today, and it gives me great pleasure . . .

Dr. Swann: For which party?

Mr. Clark: I believe it was a different party. He has, however, seen the error of his ways.

So I would ask, please, with that, that my father, Gib Clark, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. Are there any additional guests to be introduced?

If I might just take a moment. In my short period of time along with all of you I think you would share the view that when we hear these introductions of our fellow Albertans, it is we who should be impressed rather than the way it is sometimes framed. Welcome to all of you who represent our strong province.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Environmental Advocacy

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud of my work as a faculty member of NAIT's School of Sustainable Building and Environmental Management. There is no question that government can do more to ensure Albertans can enjoy clean land, clean air, and clean water, but Albertans are also moderate and responsible citizens. They believe our energy industry should be approached as partners at the table and not as adversaries. They believe that through innovation and entrepreneurship Alberta can continue to be a leader in clean, renewable, and responsible nonrenewable production, and they believe all this and more can be done alongside our conventional energy producers while growing the economy and leading our province into long-term economic and environmental prosperity, powered by a mix of energy configurations using conventional and renewable sources, which is why, after reading a book that our environment minister helped to inspire, contributed to, and wrote the introduction for, I have some grave concerns.

An Action a Day Keeps Global Capitalism Away is the title of the book. It demands radical action against Alberta's economy. It seeks to inspire vandalism and militant action against our energy industry. It calls for blockades to stop Alberta's resources from getting to market. It calls for an end to capitalism and free markets, and at one point in the book it delivers a series of radical cheers. One reads: let's shut down the oil machine; the time has come for oil to go; you can't take us for a ride; you must stop the genocide.

Mr. Speaker, Wildrose stands for moderate and responsible advocacy for our environment. In my work as an author and instructor in the alternative energy industry I taught my students to separate between environmentalism based on emotion that hurts an economy and science-based environmental action that systematically leads to an increased economy.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Policies

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, we have come to the time in session where we have to deal with government's fibs, misstatements, and, as the Premier likes to say, hoey. Yesterday I asked the Education minister why he insists on using the figure of 12,000 extra students in Alberta's schools this fall. That number is false. It's incorrect. It's hoey. Public data from the school boards actually shows clearly that there will only be 7,500 students, not 12,000 students. His press secretary actually discovered all of this information a month ago, so he must know. Why are the minister and the Premier using the number that the government knows clearly is false?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Certainly, it's important to clear this up. We are using numbers that are from the finance board, and they give us a figure of approximately 12,000 students. From all of the school boards across the province as well, if you add them up from our website, it adds up to about 12,000 as well. So I'm not sure where these guys are getting their math or how they're doing their mathematics on this, but certainly we know that we are financing $103 million to ensure that students get the education that they need in the fall.

Mr. Jean: Actually, if you add up the numbers, there are over $200 million in your own press release.

Yesterday I asked the Premier if she knew of any businesses which plan to hire more employees because of this government's plan to increase the minimum wage by 50 per cent. She said that she did, but when asked, she didn't name names. I'm surprised the media, actually, didn't pester her about this for more details. Exactly which employers have told the Premier that they plan to increase the size of their workforce because she is raising minimum wages by 50 per cent? Could she give us some names and table a list, please?

Ms Notley: Again, Mr. Speaker, I must say that the notion of a supplemental question is quite broadly interpreted right now. That being said, what the question asked yesterday was: in the current environment do we know of any employers that are going to hire new employees? And I answered that yes, I did, and as I said previously and yesterday, for instance, just on Friday I was at a press conference where Telus announced that it would be investing a billion dollars in the city of Edmonton, notwithstanding that they knew about our plan about minimum wage, and that there would be . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: It's all about hoey. The labour minister and the Premier have both said more than once that increasing the minimum wage by 50 per cent will result in more jobs in Alberta. They say that the consequences of this policy are all good, all wonderful, and no harm will come to Alberta. So let me ask a policy question. Since the Premier says that there is no harm and only positives from boosting the minimum wage by 50 per cent in three years, why isn't she actually calling for a 100 per cent boost? If this policy increases employment, why don't you set the minimum wage at $20 or $25 or $30 since we're going to get more jobs?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, it comes down to this. The folks over there think it's totally appropriate for a single mother of two or three to have to work 70 hours a week in order to earn a living wage. I say to you that they're just wrong, and that's why we are changing the minimum wage in Alberta.

The Speaker: The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Environment Minister

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, there's a big difference between being the fourth party in the Legislature and being the government. Some might say that it's akin to growing up. Being government means setting aside radical ideas of youth and making grown-up decisions. The Premier's environment minister wrote the introduction to a book, An Action a Day Keeps Global Capitalism Away. This radical book calls for blockades and street protests. It refers to our energy industry as genocide. To the Premier: what does she have to say about this?

Ms Notley: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I think that the folks over there are confusing writing the foreword for a book with writing the book. So that's the first thing. Secondly, when you're in opposition, I understand that it is very tempting to engage in mudslinging, which is what these folks are doing right now. What we are interested in . . .

The Speaker: Hon. Premier.
First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, anyone who's been around Alberta for a while has heard of Mike Hudema, the radical environmentalist. He's led all sorts of extreme environmental protests. He's a radical's radical. Albertans care about the environment, but Hudema is on a radical fringe of these issues. Hudema said that he could not have written this radical book without the help of the environment minister. Surely, the Premier recognizes that this sends the wrong signal to Albertans and industry.

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader with a point of order. Are we on a point of order?

Ms Notley: Yes, for afterwards, I believe.

Mr. Speaker, you know, I think this is really interesting. Sort of a friend of a friend of a friend, so we're going to start attacking the government based on friendships that are 10 years old and all that kind of stuff. But let's just go back three and a half years, when the former leader of that party publicly said in an election debate that she didn't think climate change was real. That's radical, my friend.

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, the radicalism of the environment minister is an issue. She embodies the issue we raised in Bill 1 about unions donating paid labour to the NDP. The environment minister was the Alberta Federation of Labour's person in Lethbridge, where the AFL has no office. She's also the spokesperson for the NDP in Lethbridge. She was paid by the AFL, but she worked for the NDP. If the Premier isn't worried about radical writings, is she worried that the minister is a poster woman for donation loopholes?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I'm worried about is ensuring that this government finally after many years establishes a reputation on environmental protection that will allow us to develop new markets and protect Alberta jobs. I am not at all worried about the ridiculous mudslinging that's coming from over there that actually embodies opposition efforts that do not work towards making things better for Albertans and certainly don't help Albertans.

The Speaker: Might I remind all of the House that in order for the Speaker of this entire Assembly to hear, I would show respect for the other parties as they answer the questions that are asked.

The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Inspiring Education Framework

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be tabling a petition today signed by thousands of Albertans urging the Minister of Education to reverse the implementation of the Inspiring Education doctrine. The Wildrose has opposed the fads in Inspiring Education since the beginning. Will the Premier assure Albertans that this government also rejects the failed approach of Inspiring Education?

Ms Notley: I think that the member is mistaken when he talks about the overarching issue of Inspiring Education. There are a number of elements of Inspiring Education that had value. I do however understand the issue that he's concerned about with respect to the math issue. I will say that I actually share a number of his concerns, and I've articulated that to the minister. We will ensure that there is a proper evaluation of the way in which math is taught in our schools because I want to make sure that Alberta students learn the way they need to learn. I think that there are some important points that we need to reconsider and revisit.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, given that there are questionable practices, which we can both now see there are, embedded in Inspiring Education such as placing methods ahead of content and academic results, mandating teacher instruction styles, replacing the three Rs with the three Es, will the Premier commit to an educational system that ensures that students obtain the basic foundational skills and knowledge needed to excel in the global economy?

Ms Notley: Well, I think that's sort of a given. We care a great deal about our K to 12 system, and that's one of the reasons why, unlike the folks over there, we thought it was really important to ensure that those 11,500 new students had a teacher when they started school in September. That's why we took action just yesterday to make sure that that happens, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dr. Tran-Davies, the organizer of the petition tabled today asking the minister to reverse the implementation of Inspiring Education, is in the Legislature today. I introduced her to you earlier. She has written a letter asking the minister to meet with her. Will this Minister of Education meet with Dr. Tran-Davies today, and if not, why not?

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, I thank the member for the question. I think it's always important that we do these things in a congenial sort of way. The person is here, and certainly my door is open for meetings. We can book a meeting time for that to happen. I think it's important, in the spirit of collaboration, that we look for ways to strengthen our education system, as we did by putting $103 million for the 12,000 students that are coming into the system. You know, let's do it that way, and I think we will end up serving children better in all ways.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Minimum Wage

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Restaurants Canada recently submitted information to the Premier and the Minister of JSTL on the $15 per hour minimum wage threatened by this government. It is puzzling that a government such as this, which seems to want to appeal to young people, is actually taking jobs away from those in the age group 15 to 24. This May 40 per cent more of them are unemployed versus last May. About 1 in 5 Alberta careers starts in the hospitality business. To the Minister of JSTL: why would you intentionally hurt the very young people who helped elect you just last month?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak on this issue. It's something that I'm very proud of. You know, it's interesting. Federal labour data in the U.S. – people were asking where we got this – showed that 13 states raised the minimum wage in 2014, and in 12 of those cases all had higher employment in the first five months after raising the minimum wage. I'm not quite sure that I accept your premise, hon. member. I continue to believe that when you put money into the pockets of low-wage people, you actually generate economic activity.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, nonprofits sweat and struggle to raise money now. The Calgary Chamber of Voluntary Organizations, when asked about the $15, was quoted as saying: many nonprofits would have a hard time with that transition. They followed that with: they need time to plan it out and finance it. To the same Minister of JSTL: why would you intentionally hurt the nonprofit sector with this plan? Isn't it a bit early for this new government to alienate all of their friends who are not big labour?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you also to the member for the question. The Premier and I met not long ago with members of the sector he's talking about, and we also met with business and industry. We're moving forward on increasing minimum wage to $15 an hour by 2018, and we're doing it with the consultation and input from all these stakeholders. Absolutely we're taking that into consideration. It's very important for us.

Thank you.

Mr. McIver: Yesterday the Premier was recorded in Hansard saying: "We do not want a province where the only businesses that survive are those that require people to be paid at two-thirds of a living wage. We cannot grow our economy on the backs of the poor." Mr. Speaker, we cannot grow our economy on the backs of the unemployed either. To the labour minister: now that your government has worked to take jobs from youth, older workers, nonprofits, energy, agriculture, tourism, and those that need their first job, who do you think is left to build the economy on the backs of?

Ms Sigurdson: Well, we know that when we support the most vulnerable workers, they right away are spending money in our economy, which means that they're investing in local economies, which helps all of us and actually does increase employment. We're doing that to invest in Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Childhood Immunization

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Under the previous government Alberta saw disease prevention programs weaken and child vaccination rates go down, raising the prospects of more outbreaks of serious preventable diseases. Recent data showed two-year-old vaccination rates at only 74 per cent. Action is required to protect Albertans, particularly children. Public policy experts have recommended a system that simply requires parents who choose to not vaccinate their children to be informed of the risks and sign a waiver. This simple requirement improves vaccination rates substantially and saves lives. To the minister: will your government show leadership and adopt this straightforward policy?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I look forward to working with him to ensure that we move forward collaboratively in addressing the mental health needs of Albertans, and I'd be happy to review the study that he's just shared with me today in this House.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that another school year is starting soon, it's vitally important that steps be taken in the short term to improve Alberta's low vaccination rates: diphtheria, tetanus, whooping cough, measles. Will the minister commit to creating a system that informs parents of the risks and benefits of vaccinating preschool children, and if not, what is this government's plan to improve vaccination rates?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the important question that he raises. I'm glad that he raised it at such an early opportunity in our tenure so that we can have an opportunity to develop a strategy together to make sure that we do increase vaccination rates. I'm happy to announce that I recently reviewed the college of physicians report, and I'm really happy to hear that since more physicians are able to do vaccinations, rates have actually increased significantly over the last year. I'll be happy to share that information as well.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, it's a straightforward proposition, and I hope the minister will act promptly. Vaccinations save lives and health care costs. Given that Alberta is lagging behind, why is the government not ready to commit to a system that simply requires parents who choose to not vaccinate their children to sign a waiver? What's so difficult about that?

Ms Hoffman: I'm not ruling that opportunity out. I look forward to reviewing the report that's being shared by the hon. member and having an opportunity to take it into consideration just like all of the great opportunities that we have now that we're in government, and I look forward to working with members from all sides of the House to do that.

I misspoke to the last question. It's pharmacists. If you haven't had your vaccinations, look forward to going to get flu shots and other vaccinations at your pharmacy, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Injured Temporary Foreign Worker

Mr. Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Vicky Venancio, whom I introduced to the Assembly earlier today, has been living without medical coverage to pay for treatment since her accident. Fortunately, she has been receiving free physiotherapy as part of a research project at the University of Alberta. Vicky would like to stay in Edmonton to continue her physiotherapy and some day begin working once again. To this end, she has applied for permanent resident status on humanitarian and compassionate grounds. To the Minister of Health: how does the minister respond to the challenges Vicky is facing?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member for raising the question, and thank you, Ms Venancio, for being here today so that we can have an opportunity to hear a little bit more about your story and to communicate with you directly. I look forward to setting up a meeting with Ms Venancio in the days that follow session. She is an amazingly strong individual, who has overcome a very tragic situation and is making the best of it. I want to say thank you to her for her courage and inspiration as well as to the Albertans who have rallied behind her, donating financially. She has fallen through the cracks provincially, federally with the temporary foreign worker program and now with applying for permanent status. I look forward to getting to know how I can help you more.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Loyola: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Health once again: will you commit today to helping Ms Venancio receive the care that she needs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I just mentioned, we have a woman here who is falling through the cracks of a federal and provincial struggle. The College of Physicians & Surgeons recommends that the patient receive a full cycle of care. That's solid advice that's coming forward from medical professionals. I am wanting to explore every opportunity we have to ensure that she gets the support that she needs, and I think that we have an opportunity to work with the federal government, whether it's today or whether it's in the fall, to make sure that tragedies like this have happy endings, not sad ones.

Mr. Loyola: Mr. Speaker, the temporary foreign worker program, as we've seen from Ms Venancio's experience, is fraught with problems. To the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour: what is being done to protect the people who come to this province to work?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. First of all, this program is a federal program. We in Alberta are concerned about how it's been laid out, and we're working very hard with the federal government to improve it. Temporary foreign workers here in Alberta have the same workplace rights as other Albertans. They are under the employment standards, occupational health and safety, and workers' compensation regardless of their immigration status, so they are able to access all of the rights of other Alberta workers. We're committed to developing Alberta's workforce here in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Urgent Health Care in Sylvan Lake

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We needed the funding model for primary care networks fixed, and I'm grateful that the Health minister listened. Sadly, Sylvan Lake is still without access to any 24-hour emergency care for our sick and injured. Ours is the fastest growing community in Alberta, with over 15,000 residents today and 900,000 tourists annually. Will the Minister of Health please confirm that an urgent care centre for Sylvan is contained within this $18 billion minibudget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I think he's referring to the interim supply bill that we've brought forward to this House. Interim supply is something that we've had an opportunity to vote on. We've proposed that we put $500 million back into public health care, which the third party had proposed cutting. I wish that Members of the Official Opposition had supported us in that. The only way we're going to be able to fund health care is if we have additional revenue to do so.

Mr. MacIntyre: In the pre-election March budget our community was promised for the umpteenth time an urgent care centre. Frankly, the council, local health professionals, and the community have put years of resources and time into trying to make this a reality, even raising $66,000 for equipment. We shouldn't make them wait any longer. They just need an answer. Will the minister please confirm that Sylvan Lake will receive this desperately needed urgent care centre?

The Speaker: I presume there was a "given" in there at the beginning. I may have missed it.

The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: I am happy to answer the question, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity. In terms of negotiations that may have happened with past government and the Official Opposition around floor crossings and promised infrastructure projects, I can't speak to what happened before the election. What I can speak to is what happens after the election. On May 5 Albertans gave us a clear message. They voted for a party that believes in a strong public health care system, strong public education, and making sure that we create jobs, and we're proud to deliver on that mandate. We're not going to make announcements in the time it takes to write press releases. We're going to actually analyze data and make sure that when we do make a commitment, we follow through on it.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you. It really is unfortunate that we have to bother the minister regarding details of this minibudget. Will the minister please encourage her colleague the Minister of Finance to live up to her party's promise of transparency? We've been asking for details on this interim supply, and we haven't been given the details of this thing, so communities across the province don't have the information that they need.

The Speaker: Hon. member, what's your question?

Mr. MacIntyre: The question: will the minister please encourage her colleague to let the details be made known?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, I've actually gone into quite a great deal of detail around the Health estimates. I'm happy for you to review that, and if you have additional questions around the interim supply discussion that we had with regard to Health, I'd be happy to go into that in further detail. In the fall we will have a whole and fulsome budget for us all to be able to debate in great detail – we've been very clear about that – and we look forward to bringing forward a sunshine list around infrastructure projects as well.

Rural Economic Development

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, last year, after a province-wide consultation, Alberta agriculture and rural development released the rural economic development action plan. Rural Albertans supported this initiative, as they essentially wrote it. But now rural development has been dropped from the ministry's title, and based on a recent examination of the ministry's website, the rural economic development action plan has also mysteriously disappeared. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: do you remain committed to the rural economic development action plan, and why has this plan been removed from your department's website?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. I'd like to thank the member for reminding the House about the importance of that program, and I look forward to discussing it in more detail with him soon. As the House knows, farm families work extremely hard and are a pillar of Alberta's economy. That's why I've been meeting with farmers and producers to hear their concerns and their ideas and why as government we're working actively to strengthen agriculture and the communities that they support to help grow Alberta's economy.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, that was certainly very well read.

Given the broad range of public consultation that went into the rural economic development action plan and given the vital importance of having a vibrant and sustainable rural economy to the economic diversification and overall success of Alberta, can the minister outline how he has determined that he knows better than rural Albertans on this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I in no way think that I know better than rural Albertans, and that's why we are doing our best to consult with farming families and the rural communities. The interim supply bill is simply a way to keep current programs operating for this year. I look forward to discussing funding priorities in more detail with this member and this House as we develop the full budget coming into the fall.

Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given the propensity of this government to ignore not only the recommendations of rural Albertans but rural Alberta in general – first on health, now on rural development – there's a palpable and growing sense of resentment in rural Alberta towards this government. To the Premier: what other recommendations from rural Albertans does your government plan on ignoring?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that the member is perhaps overstating his case just a little bit. We are very concerned about ensuring the sustainability of our rural communities. We are very concerned about ensuring that we give those kids who grow up in rural communities a reason to move home, to come back home. That means supporting our strong public services in our rural communities as well as ensuring that we focus on job creation opportunities in rural communities. As we move forward on our job creation strategy and as we move forward on our budget in the fall, we have every intention of ensuring that the interests of rural communities feature prominently in the work that we do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Wildlife Regulations

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the last election Albertans wanted openness, they wanted transparency, and they wanted consultation before any new laws or regulations were passed. Even the new minister has said that she believes that Albertans expect fulsome and comprehensive reviews before decisions are made. But the minister recently approved a series of controversial changes to hunting regulations that ignored the recommendations and objections of landowners. Why didn't the environment minister consult with landowners before she pushed ahead with these controversial changes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for his first question of the environment minister. It's an auspicious day. I will take the member's concerns under advisement. I do know that there were some very small changes made recently, and I'm certainly happy to take it up with the member afterwards if there was anything in particular that he found problematic in those wildlife regulations.

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, given that these changes involve doubling the hunting days allowed in the big-game season, landowners had a number of ongoing concerns. Minister, we understand that there are competing interests here, but do you not think that more consultations would be a better solution to the issue rather than getting it wrong?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I would remind the member to speak through the Speaker when he asks questions.

I am happy to revisit some of those consultations if the hon. member has any particular concerns with the changes that were made. I'm happy to follow up with him outside of the House, and we can report back to the Assembly together.

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, I understand that this government is new, but Albertans I've heard from want to know how this decision got made, and given that the last government regularly ignored the rights of landowners – and I hope that this government isn't offering more of the same – I ask: did you know what you were approving, or did you just sign whatever the bureaucrats put in front of you?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will ignore for now the wording of the question and, leaving that aside, simply say that our province is dedicated to sustainable practices in hunting and wildlife and that we are dedicated to sustainable resource development on the land in consultation with landowners.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order has been raised.

The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Minimum Wage (continued)

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past few weeks we have heard the government casting themselves as the champions of the underprivileged and downtrodden, as if they hold a monopoly on all things charitable and decent. This morning, however, we heard from nonprofits and charitable organizations that not only talk the talk but also walk the walk every day on the front lines. They have expressed grave concerns over the dramatic rise in the minimum wage. Has the minister consulted with the charitable and nonprofit sector and asked how this policy will affect them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you also to the member for the question. I must say that I not only have spoken with them, as has the Premier – we had a consultation regarding minimum wage – but, you know, I am a social worker by profession. I have worked for many nonprofits supporting vulnerable and marginalized people, and I've worked in child protection as a child protection social worker. I feel like I do have some good understanding and knowledge of serving vulnerable people.

Thank you.

Mr. Hunter: That's great news. I hope it's true.

Can the minister table a list for this House of charities and nonprofit organizations that she has consulted with?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has a commitment to make sure that Alberta is for all of us and that it's fair and just. We already have met with nonprofits, the business sector also and labour, and we will shortly be moving forward on what's happening with the minimum wage. We've done a fulsome consultation, and we're moving forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you. Given that the largest group to clamour for this increase is not those who are on minimum wage but, instead, the special interests of big labour, can the minister assure us that this policy is not designed to pander to their largest voting block?

Ms Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, this commitment was part of our platform, to move to $15 by 2018. Alberta has the greatest inequality of any province in Canada. We currently have the lowest minimum wage. We're moving in a phased way to increase it. It's the fairest thing to do.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mandatory Country of Origin Labelling

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The House of Representatives has recently voted to repeal mandatory country of origin labelling for fresh beef, lamb, pork, and other fresh items, which required producers and processors to identify where an animal was born, raised, and slaughtered. It was costing Alberta agricultural producers millions of dollars to comply. This vote to repeal COOL was a great step forward for Alberta agricultural producers. My question to the minister of agriculture: as this decision by the House of Representatives goes forward to the U.S. Senate for consideration, what are you doing to ensure that Alberta ag producers see this law repealed for good?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for bringing up this very important issue. Alberta livestock producers work extremely hard and are an essential pillar of Alberta's economy. Our government is working to protect Alberta's farmers, which is why we are pleased that the WTO has ruled again, for the fourth time, that these regulations are unfair. Our number one priority is always standing up for hard-working Alberta families and protecting Alberta jobs. We are committed to protecting our livestock industry, and we'll continue to encourage the U.S. to lift these unfair and damaging rules.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: given that last week you confirmed that you have not spoken to Rob Merrifield in the Alberta Washington office or any other staff working abroad, for that matter, how can you say to the Alberta agricultural sector that you are working on their behalf to lobby our southern cousins to repeal this regressive legislation?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I said last week, actually, was that I'd spoken with my deputy minister in that department. In fact, I've been advised not only through the deputy minister but through other people that our representative in Washington has done quite a good job on country of origin labelling issues and that that work is continuing to go on. So, you know, we're in good hands. I know we're making progress on that issue, and I anticipate more work being done through the minister of agriculture in conjunction with it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister of agriculture: given that you will be receiving very little support from this Premier, what can Alberta agricultural producers expect from you to offset the negative effects of having a government that is solely urbancentric?

Mr. Carlier: Thank you again for giving me the opportunity to explain that these discriminatory practices do hurt Alberta's farming families and need to be changed. I met with the U.S. consul general just yesterday and discussed this issue. The U.S. House of Representatives has voted overwhelmingly to lift these unfair restrictions. It is now up to the U.S. Senate to follow suit. I understand there is a Senate committee hearing on this very issue tomorrow.

The fact is that the U.S. is almost out of stalling tactics. We are working with the federal government. I have spoken with Minister Ritz to offer our support to ensure that Alberta's interests are protected and that the appropriate measures are taken if the Senate does not act to remove these regulations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

2:30 Postsecondary Education Accessibility

Mr. Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While thousands of students are able to attend postsecondary institutions, including myself, the province continues to have the lowest student participation rate in the country. Even though people want to attend our postsecondary institutions, many struggle to find the resources needed to complete an advanced education. My question is to the minister of higher education. What is this government doing to make higher education more accessible to all Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our government is committed to making universities, colleges, and apprenticeship programs accessible to all Albertans and affordable. Last week we announced a reinvestment of $40 million in postsecondary and apprenticeship programs and froze tuition to ensure that students have access. We're very proud of this.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for her answer. Given that over the years advanced education has experienced huge funding cuts and given that while the province announced a new cash injection into postsecondary education, the previous government's grant rollbacks have led to reduced student spaces, what's the government's plan to ensure that there are enough postsecondary education spaces for all qualified students in our province?

Ms Sigurdson: Well, we are working both with postsecondary institutions and with student groups to hear what needs to happen to move forward. We're going to do an intensive consultation process over the next couple of years to make sure that we're moving forward so that students do have access to affordable, accessible education here in Alberta.

Mr. Connolly: As a result of the aforementioned funding cuts, institutions like Mount Royal University and the University of Alberta have had to cut programs to save money. What is the minister going to do to ensure valuable programs are preserved in Alberta's advanced education system?

Ms Sigurdson: Institutions regularly review their programs to see what is best. For some programs it makes sense for them to actually close. For other programs they might want to expand capacity. This is just done routinely. The insertion of new funding won't necessarily change these decisions by institutions, but we certainly are working closely with all institutions regarding those decisions and making sure that the right training is available here in Alberta.

Thanks.

Dialysis Service in Lac La Biche

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, Lac La Biche has been promised a dialysis centre for years. In 2010 a touring dialysis bus was provided as a bandage. The bus broke down in the parking lot. AHS removed the wheels, and it has remained there ever since. To the minister. This is a travesty and an embarrassment to all Albertans. There is room in the hospital for the unit. When will you get rid of this bus and give my community the permanent dialysis unit it deserves?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for raising the question again today. I did hear his member's statement yesterday and passed him a note saying that I will be looking into that, and I absolutely will. I want to work through Alberta Health Services to make sure that we're providing the best service possible for all Albertans no matter where they live.

Mr. Hanson: Given that there are no emergency services on the bus and considering that in May a patient collapsed on the bus and paramedics could not get a stretcher onto the bus, which meant that the patient had to endure the indignity of being treated on the floor, when will you tow this bus out of the parking lot and provide a permanent solution? When?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question. Some previous governments may have heard a question like this, written a press release, and pretended that things were going to be fixed without actually putting a plan or funds in place. You don't have that in this government. We're not going to make a promise unless we can keep it. I can't make you a promise today, hon. member.

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, while Alberta Health Services was wasting millions of dollars on salaries, severances, and bonuses, the good people of Lac La Biche raised over $100,000 for the dialysis centre the government promised them but never delivered. As the minister said, nothing needs to change at AHS, and things are stable. Should my constituents expect more of the same AHS hokey, or should we expect to see the treatment centre we need and were promised?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. What I was talking about was when the same party was asking for simply having a reorganization and that that would magically solve all problems. Albertans disagree. Albertans need stability in the public health care system. We've had only five years. We're trying to make sure that we have opportunities for the fatigue from change to actually be addressed and for the staff to be able to bring forward solid recommendations. I look forward to updating this House when I have an opportunity to do so.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-West.

Bail Process Review

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In this House two days ago the Minister of Justice talked of reviewing Alberta's bail process. Perhaps the minister is unaware that in 2009 a short-term bail reform pilot project was implemented at the recommendation of a task force that gave Crown prosecutors the role of the bail hearing officer, with the goal of putting more police back on the streets. We don't need more studies. We need action, and we need leadership. To the Justice minister: why reinvent the wheel when you can adopt this previous initiative and implement a better bail process in short order?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. It is absolutely crucial to this government to make sure that we are reviewing the bail process and that we make the right decisions to keep our communities and our front-line officers safe. In this case we want to look at the information, and we want to make sure that we are making the right decision so that we can move forward with the right solutions to keep everyone safe.

The Speaker: Hon. member, first supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, again, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force provided a thorough review of the bail process and also suggested other ways to reduce crime in its Keeping Communities Safe report, which I have with me and will table later in the House, will you commit today to build upon the recommendations of the task force, which I will, of course, table in the House for your reference?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. At this point we're moving forward with the review. We're looking into it. We would like to put information ahead of decisions because this is an issue that is critical. It deals not only with the rights of people who are subject to the state's power; it also deals with the safety of front-line workers and with all of our communities. So we would like to have information first and action second.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much. I appreciate you looking into this, but as I indicated, we need leadership on this.

To the same minister: given that you have worked as a criminal defence lawyer yourself and are well versed with the bail process and I, of course, am a former police officer with 12 years' experience and formerly recognized by the Chief Crowfoot Learning

Centre of the Calgary Police Service as a subject matter expert on bail hearings, will you accept my offer today to work with you to help improve the criminal justice system, to improve its effectiveness for all Albertans while ensuring both members of the public and first responders are better protected?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. We are absolutely committed to working with all stakeholders going forward. The review will engage all of our stakeholders. It will engage with all the police forces throughout the province, and I would be happy to hear from the member on that matter.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Calgary Young Offender Centre

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The future of the young offenders in Calgary was called into question just a few short months ago, when it was announced that the Calgary Young Offender Centre would close and move young offenders to Edmonton. Concerned Albertans made their dissatisfaction about this decision clear. In response, Alberta's new government put interests of youth first and announced in May that the Young Offender Centre in Calgary would reopen to continue to serve youth in Calgary and southern Alberta. My first question is to the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. What is the reason behind your decision to reopen the Calgary Young Offender Centre?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I think that reopening the Young Offender Centre shows the values of this government, and those values are in supporting vulnerable youth and supporting our communities in ensuring that they are safer. By reopening the Calgary Young Offender Centre, we have ensured the long-term safety and rehabilitation of the offenders as well as the safety of the communities.

Thank you.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: The closure of the Calgary Young Offender Centre was supposed to save the province money. Less than two months later it's being reopened. To the same minister: how much money will this reversal cost Albertans?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. This was a common-sense decision that was made in favour of Albertans. We believe that the cost of reversing the decision is far less than the cost of closing the centre, which would have had an impact on youth of the southern Alberta communities. This will allow those residents to stay in their communities, to stay attached to their support networks, and to increase their rehabilitative possibilities, which will save the system money in the long term.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Again to the same minister: if you put the campaign platform aside, what does opening the Calgary centre really mean for the youth of southern Alberta?

Ms Ganley: Thank you to the hon. member for the question. The decision to reopen the Calgary centre will allow youth to access programs and support and education while staying in their communities and staying linked to their families and their wider support networks. Mr. Speaker, we believe that the effectiveness of these services is significantly increased when these young offenders not only have access to the programs they need but also have access to supports from their families.

Thank you.

Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day

Mr. Piquette: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this occasion to extend greetings and best wishes to the francophones of Alberta on behalf of the provincial government on the occasion of Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day. Saint-Jean-Baptiste is the patron saint of French Canadians, and this day has been celebrated in Canada since 1636, yet to my knowledge this is the first time that Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day has been recognized by a statement in the Alberta Legislature. It's about time.

Thanks to the efforts of individuals such as my own father, Leo Piquette, who stood up in this Legislature on April 7, 1987, to ask a question in French and was silenced, the right to speak French in the Legislature has been affirmed, and I would now like to take advantage of it.

Je suis très fier de souhaiter aujourd'hui à tous les Franco-Albertains et à mes collègues dans la Législature une très bonne fête Saint-Jean-Baptiste. La fête Saint-Jean-Baptiste est une importante célébration de la vitalité de la Francophonie canadienne et albertaine.

Nous voulons, comme le nouveau gouvernement, remercier les importantes contributions des Franco-Albertains au développement économique, éducationnel et culturel de l'Alberta. Aujourd'hui plus de 200,000 Albertains parlent le français. Ceci est grâce à nos excellentes écoles francophones et aux programmes de l'immersion française. Les jeunes qui fréquentent ces écoles représentent une importante force économique et culturelle pour notre province.

[Translation] As a francophone I am very proud today to wish a very Happy Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day to all Franco-Albertans and my Legislature colleagues. The celebrating of Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day highlights the vitality of Alberta and Canada's Francophonie.

As Alberta's new provincial government we wish to recognize the important contributions Franco-Albertans have made to the province's economic, educational, and cultural development. Today more than 200,000 Albertans speak French. This is thanks to our excellent francophone and French immersion schools. Students in these programs represent an important economic and cultural force in our province. [As submitted]

Au nom du gouvernement néo-démocrate ... [Mr. Piquette's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: Hon. member, the clock, in French or English, is always still the same.

Rural Issues

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, a strong and vibrant rural Alberta is vital to the success of our province. In 2009 the Conference Board of Canada estimated rural Alberta's contribution to Canada's economic activity at $77 billion. Our farmers produce wholesome, premium-quality foods that are highly sought after around the world. Alberta is a leader in the development of innovative and sustainable agricultural practices.

That's why it's hard to understand why this government has apparently ignored agriculture and, in a broader sense, rural Alberta. There's not one word in the throne speech about agriculture, our largest renewable resource. Rural communities finally get mentioned on the very last page of the throne speech and then only to be told that they need to keep contributing to the prosperity of Alberta. Rural Alberta is little more than a cash cow for this government, and based on Bill 3, we're going to need some more cows. They want to milk those cows, but they could care less about the condition of the barn or her pasture.

Mr. Speaker, rural Albertans know all about contributing to the prosperity of Alberta. There are no farms or ranches, there are no forests, coal mines, or oil wells in our cities. The people who grow our food, log our forests, and extract our mineral wealth don't ask for much, but they expect to be treated with dignity and respect and not to be forgotten or ignored by their government. That's exactly the message they've received in this throne speech.

People tell me, "Well, all their MLAs are from the cities," but that's not accurate. There are 11 government members, fully 20 per cent of their caucus, that represent constituencies that are at least partly rural. I expect that even they are frustrated by their government's lack of commitment or attention to rural Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, a strong Alberta depends on strength in all regions, urban and rural, from the largest cities to the tiniest villages to the hundreds of thousands of Albertans that live on the land and provide the food that nourishes and sustains us. It's high time for this government to acknowledge this and show rural Albertans some respect.

5th on 5th Lethbridge Youth Services

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, I am standing to make the following statement about a key issue among many issues in Lethbridge, the issue of youth support programs. At this time I'm going to speak about 5th on 5th, a youth support service for youth between the ages of 15 and 30. This is an amazing program which has operated in Lethbridge for the last 20 years. During this time the program and its incredible staff have supported thousands of youth in Lethbridge and from many areas of southern Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, 5th on 5th plays a pivotal role in youth homelessness prevention, crime prevention, reduction of those on income support, and increasing youths' self-esteem and their quality of life. I know because my grandson was one of them. Our communities are happier, safer, and healthier places because of the success of this program.

Some of the programs offered are resumé assistance, printing 14,000 and developing 500 annually; career mentoring of 300 people, with a 75 per cent success rate; express literacy, with 100 people per year meeting learning goals; referrals, with 60 to 100 calls and visits per day; a job board posting 400 non-online job openings; a resumé bank, with 25,168 resúmes on file for 12,244 clients.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-South West.

2:50 South Pointe Community Centre

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to share with the Legislative Assembly a project under way in Edmonton-South West. A group of dedicated citizens have taken it upon themselves to convert a former church into the South Pointe community centre. Should funding be approved, this new community centre would be a partnership between private business, the city of Edmonton, community leagues, and the province of Alberta. This remarkable group has been able to identify an ideal location for a new community centre that will serve the surrounding communities at a fraction of the cost of building an entirely new facility. Once completed, the centre will provide program and office space for local community leagues, a performing arts and theatre space, a banquet facility, a daycare, a small conference centre, and a community library. It will become a social hub for the residents of the neighbouring communities.

Southwest Edmonton is one of the most rapidly growing areas in the city and in the province. There is a need for space for public events, indoor programming, and meeting and daycare facilities. This new community centre will provide some of this much-needed space. The renovation and expansion of the proposed centre would provide an exciting, practical, and viable solution to addressing the needs of communities in southwest Edmonton. It would also expedite the provision of needed community space that would otherwise take years to develop.

It is exciting to see community members coming together with a vision and energy to make their neighbourhood a better place to live. I'm proud of the work being done by residents of Edmonton-South West to ensure that everyone has access to the very much-needed community space and services. I look forward to being a part of what lies ahead with this project.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Nathan O'Brien Children's Foundation

Mr. Rodney: A terrible tragedy occurred on June 29, 2014, when five-year-old Nathan O'Brien and his grandparents disappeared. However, Nathan's spirit continues to inspire people to make a change in this world for the good of society in the form of the Nathan O'Brien Children's Foundation.

With the support of volunteers and friends and colleagues and corporations, Nathan's family received a wonderful gift to honour Nathan, a hockey game at the Saddledome, to make his dreams come true while helping other children. It was an unforgettable evening which featured superheroes and flash mobs, TimBits hockey players, Flames and NHL alumni, and Nathan's heroes, which included Calgary police investigators, generous corporate citizens, and our MLAs. The O'Brien family felt that it gave them the opportunity to follow Nathan's lead in life, to always play hard and have fun. The game raised almost $60,000 for children in need, and the family thanks every single supporter, whom they refer to as real-life superheroes.

Now, since then the Nathan O'Brien Springbank TimBits tournament donated their proceeds of $11,000 to the foundation, and the Airdrie Dads golf tournament and Shaw Communications added to that, and the Cougar Ridge soccer association, Nathan's previous league, recently held a drive to send soccer jerseys to Central and South America, and there is more.

The first annual Nathan O'Brien Children's Foundation superhero decathlon with Kids First will be held on August 15 and 16 at Springbank park for all seasons. The fundraiser will keep children in sport by adding coaching and equipment and extra sport training. Jennifer and Rod O'Brien have told me: "We've seen tragedy turn into something beautiful and quite unbelievable. We've been blessed beyond belief with our foundation and our chance to be parents to Nathan's spirit forever. Our prayer is that other parents who've lost a child could receive such blessings. We invite everyone to follow the Nathan O'Brien Children's Foundation on our Facebook page to see just how great his spirit is and the great work that continues in his name for other children.”

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Affordable, quality child care is out of the reach of far too many Alberta families, and this is particularly true in my own constituency of Peace River. Universal public child care has social and economic benefits. It enhances the education and the well-being, the social development and education of children, and it enables parents to contribute financially to their own families, which improves their well-being as well. It's an important issue for our government, and to that end I'm really pleased to present this petition. It's sponsored by the HSAA, the Health Sciences Association of Alberta, and the petition was signed by almost 2,000 Albertans. It reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, [petition the Legislative Assembly] to introduce legislation that will provide universal, accessible, affordable, quality and public child care for children in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there other petitions?

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to table this petition on behalf of Dr. Tran-Davies. The petition is entitled Petition against Inspiring Education. It has thousands of signatures and represents massive support by Albertans for her position.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Three o'clock approaches, and we have not quite finished the Routine. I think it would be in the interests of the House if we did, so I would request unanimous consent to extend Orders of the Day until we complete the daily Routine.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure again.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to give oral notice of Government Motion 12, which reads as follows:

Be it resolved that:

- (1) A Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee of the Legislative Assembly be appointed to review the Election Act, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, the Conflicts of Interest Act, and the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, consisting of the following members, namely Gray (chair), Payne (deputy chair), Renaud, Cortes-Vargas, McLean, Nielsen, Miller, Loyola, Miranda, Anderson (W), Cyr, Nixon, van Dijken, Jansen, Starke, Swann, and Clark.
- (2) In carrying out its duties, the committee may travel throughout Alberta and undertake a process of consultation with all interested Albertans.

- (3) The committee shall be deemed to be the special committee of the Assembly for the purposes of conducting a comprehensive review of the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act as provided for in section 37 of that act.
- (4) In carrying out its duties, the committee may solicit written submissions from experts in the field.
- (5) The committee is deemed to continue beyond prorogation and may meet during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued.
- (6) Reasonable disbursements by the committee for advertising, staff assistance, equipment and supplies, rent, travel, and other expenditures necessary for the effective conduct of its responsibilities shall be paid, subject to the approval of the chair.
- (7) In carrying out its responsibilities, the committee may, with the concurrence of the head of the department, utilize the services of the public service employed in that department or the staff employed by the Legislative Assembly Office and the officers of the Legislature.
- (8) The committee must submit its report, including any proposed amendments to the acts, within one year after commencing its review.
- (9) When its work has been completed, the committee must report to the Assembly if it is sitting. During a period when the Assembly is adjourned, the committee may release its report by depositing a copy with the clerk and forwarding a copy to each member of the Assembly.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the rural economic development plan, which is on the Agriculture website. It gives us a solid base to build on going farther to further develop rural Alberta.

Thank you.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I have copies to table today of two documents that I referenced in my questions today, entitled Alberta Minimum Wage: Submission, by Restaurants Canada, and also the media article Non-profits Raise Concerns over NDP Plan to Hike Minimum Wage. I have the requisite number of copies.

The Speaker: Are there any other reports or returns to be tabled?
The hon. member.

Mr. Ellis: Yes, thank you. Mr. Speaker, I have five copies of the Keeping Communities Safe reports, which I will be tabling to you.

Thank you very much.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the Hon. Ms Hoffman, Minister of Health and Minister of Seniors, pursuant to the Health Professions Act the Alberta College of Medical Diagnostic and Therapeutic Technologists annual report 2014, the College of Medical Laboratory Technologists of Alberta annual report 2014, the Alberta College of Pharmacists 2014-2015 annual report, the Alberta College of Speech-Language Pathologists and Audiologists 2014 annual report, the College of Alberta Denturists annual report 2013, the College of Licensed Practical Nurses 2014 annual report, and pursuant to the Public Health Act the Public Health Appeal Board 2013 annual report.

Point of Order
Imputing Falsehoods against a Member
Reflections on a Nonmember

The Speaker: I'd like to move the Assembly now to the two points of order that had been addressed today. I'll call upon the Government House Leader to speak to the first point of order.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During question period the member for Chestermere-Rocky View engaged in some questions to the minister of environment and the status of women. I have two citations, which I would like to cite. First of all, that the hon. member opposite imputed false or unavowed motives to another member, being the minister. This is under section 23(i) of our standing orders.

The second thing that occurred, Mr. Speaker, was a reference to Mr. Hudema, who was the author of a book that was referenced by the hon. member in her question. There I would like to cite Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms at page 151. It is section 493(4). "The Speaker has cautioned Members to exercise great care in making statements about persons who are outside the House and unable to reply."

First of all, I'd like to deal with that portion, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member in her question referred to Mr. Hudema – and I don't have the Blues – as a radical's radical. She made a number of disparaging comments about Mr. Hudema, who is not present in the House to defend himself. That is certainly not in keeping with the direction of Speakers and the precedents of this House. That is not acceptable practice.

But then the member went on to try and smear the reputation of the minister of environment through guilt by association. Having smeared Mr. Hudema in the way that she did and used the disparaging language that she did, she then attempted to associate the minister with him. Mr. Speaker, that is unacceptable. That is really, in my view, a very low form of criticism in question period. Unfortunately, it's very consistent with the pattern that we saw with the Wildrose opposition before the last election, where personal attacks and smears are substituted for constructive criticism of the government and its program, and it is unacceptable.

The minister indicates to me, just to set the record straight, Mr. Speaker, that at the time that Mr. Hudema wrote that book, he was the president of the University of Alberta Students' Union and the minister was an employee of the students' union whose job it was to edit the introduction of the book. She is in no way associated with the statements made by Mr. Hudema in that book and takes no responsibility whatsoever for those opinions and comments.

For the member opposite to attempt to associate the minister with all of the comments and opinions of the young man who was the president of the students' union at that time is completely unfair, unwarranted, and unacceptable as far as I'm concerned and certainly constitutes imputing false or unavowed motives to another member. I would argue very strongly that in doing so, the hon. member has transgressed the rules of this House and has dealt very unfairly and unacceptably with another member of this House by associating with her views that are not her own or were not her own at the time. Furthermore, she has spoken very disparagingly about an individual who is not present in the House to defend himself, which is also in contradiction of the rules and practices of this House, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. House leader – Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: We'll all get there some day. I mean to the House leader part. I don't mean you, sir.

It's my pleasure to rise on the point of order. I guess there's a large smattering here this afternoon that quite possibly could become a matter of debate. I'm just not a hundred per cent sure where to start, but let me start with addressing Mr. Hudema. It seems to be the start here.

The hon. member across has suggested that we made disparaging comments against Mr. Hudema. I just have a couple of points of reference. In fact, I think that we didn't say anything disparaging about this particular individual because he says these things of himself. I have a newspaper article here that I am more than happy to table where he's quoted saying: I am radical to the core. He speaks in his book, which I'm also happy to table in the House, about his first experience with radical cheerleading as he is a radical cheerleader. The hon. member was merely pointing out that this individual is a radical. He has associations or had had associations with the minister, and this side of the House was looking for some clarification around those associations and some of his radical viewpoints.

I might just add that when it comes to an individual that's not in the House to defend themselves, there is a wide range of opinion as to exactly who they're referring to, whether it's former members or if it's the general public, so there's a matter of debate within the good reference books that we use. But I might just add that moments after this interaction, which, clearly, is a matter of debate, the Premier made disparaging comments about some other member who used to be in this place. So if the Government House Leader is rising to say, you know, "You can't be talking about people outside of this House," and the Premier mere moments after is making disparaging comments of not just the general public outside of this House but of former members, who many of us agree or disagree with, I just think it's a little bit disingenuous to use one argument to benefit themselves and another when it benefits them.

The last thing that I will say on this point of order is that perhaps we will take the point under advisement and we will be much more cautious in the future when describing close, personal friends of the minister.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to offer some comments from the third party with regard to this matter. I, quite frankly, agree with the Government House Leader with regard to the nature of the comments. But I do have to point out that using that same clause or that same subsection from Beauchesne, from page 151, with regard to references to persons absent from the House and unable to reply, I have to confess, sitting here in the third party caucus over the course of the last several days, that if I were to leap to my feet every time a person who is absent is disparaged using terminology like "corruption," "incompetence," "mismanagement," and some of the other stuff that's been thrown around both by the government and also by the Official Opposition, I'd have worn out the floor under my chair from leaping up and down so much.

So, Mr. Speaker, while I would agree with the Government House Leader that the comments I think went a little too far, it is indeed a difficult thing to parse that down to determine exactly where that line exists, and it is unclear exactly where that line exists. If I could offer my own personal opinion on this, I think we err better on the side of not impugning those not present and not impugning those present. Quite frankly, as has been ruled by Speaker Zwozdesky in the past Legislature, this only serves to raise the temperature within the Chamber and reduce the level of co-operation between all parties within the House.

As a result of that, Mr. Speaker, you know, from our standpoint this point of order I believe is in fact well taken, but at the same time I would caution that, again, if we go down this path of leaping to our feet on a point of order every day on Beauchesne's page 151, which is a very commonly cited section of the rules and orders, we're going to waste a lot of time defending those not in the House.

The Speaker: Are there any other hon. members who would like to speak to the point of order?

Hon. members, a recent citation that members should exercise caution when making statements about persons who are outside the House and unable to reply: Beauchesne's, paragraph 493(4) as well as the House of Commons, page 616 to 617. I have the advice of the table on a particular ruling on this order. I have however decided to take it under consideration myself and report to the House tomorrow.

I can't say enough to this issue. The hon. member just cited time. This is the most valuable commodity that you have in this Assembly. I, too, do not wish to rise as often as I have because every time that I do, I'm taking away time from you. The word of caution applies across the House, not just on the opposition side.

I share with you these preliminary views. If you do not wish this Speaker to rise and interrupt and take time from your questions, I would ask all of you – and I think there are some specific ones in the House, that I choose not to name at this point, that already know who I might be speaking about.

I, therefore, at this point in time would defer my decision until tomorrow.

The second point of order. The hon. House leader of the Official Opposition.

Point of Order Insulting Language

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief here. I just wanted to bring to your attention, sir – I will be citing section 23(j), "language of a nature likely to create disorder." In question period earlier today we saw the minister of the environment and the status of women, in response to a question from the opposition, used the words: I'm going to ignore that. While the word "ignore" itself may not be unparliamentary, we have all been elected to this House to debate the issues and to debate policy, and if there was any question today that was specifically based around policy – we were speaking specifically around a hunting regulation issue, and the response of the minister was: I'm going to ignore.

Here we have a situation where the government in the form of the minister is clearly being disrespectful and, some on my side have suggested, insulting. As the citation indicates, they used language that is disrespectful of the debate, to ignore one side of the House that's been elected to represent their constituents. If this type of language and attitude towards the Official Opposition isn't likely to create disorder, I'm not entirely sure what is. Sometimes it's not the words, whether they be radical or some other language that we can debate is parliamentary or not. Sometimes it's how we say the words that may be determined parliamentary or not.

When we take this sort of position – and I understand that there may have been some frustrating parts of question period for the hon. member, but to use language that is likely to create disorder certainly goes beyond the scope of our rules, and I would hope that in the future this type of language wouldn't be used when it comes to addressing questions that are fair and reasonable to be asked in this place.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With the greatest respect to my friend opposite, I do not believe that there is a legitimate point of order. I don't have the Blues, but my recollection is that the question went along the lines: is the minister making her own decisions, or is she just signing documents her staff put in front of her? There was an insulting implication in the question, which the minister then responded to by saying that she would ignore that and went on to answer the meat of the question, so quite the opposite of what the hon. Opposition House Leader is suggesting. I would suggest that it was actually the question that was more likely to create disorder as it was very insulting in its insinuation, and it was to the credit of the minister that she chose to ignore that implication and that insult and went on to answer to the best of her knowledge the meat of the actual question.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I will read from the Blues that have been provided to me. I believe the sentence in question is as follows: "Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will ignore for now the wording of the question." The minister, I believe, was simply commenting on the innuendo in the member's question. I would also interpret the sentence to read: "I will ignore for now the wording." I would therefore rule that there is no point of order.

Orders of the Day Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order. Before we proceed, I just realized that there was an oversight when we first called the committee to order last week. For the newer members, who perhaps don't understand the process as well, when we're in committee, it's a little bit more relaxed. The men are allowed to take off their jackets, people can walk around, and you're able to sit in another seat as long as when the vote actually comes, you are in your own seat. Some of this arose last night when we were still in session, that members were sitting in different seats, which is not allowed until you are in committee. So, you know, feel free to be relaxed. You can bring in your coffee in the proper cups and that sort of thing and kind of enjoy that slightly less formal committee atmosphere.

Bill 2 An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue

The Chair: I'll recognize the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you for the opportunity to speak today to Bill 2, a bill which the Wildrose caucus cannot support in any way. Raising taxes to cover the excessive spending by this government and the previous government is not good or responsible governance. Since the NDP will not listen to reason and abandon this bill or even send it to committee for study, I hope that they will accept this amendment.

Madam Chair, I would like to present an amendment to Bill 2. I will pause while the House distributes copies.

The Chair: This amendment will be known as amendment A1.
Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Chair, small businesses are the engine of Alberta's economy. According to Industry Canada, here in Alberta there are 165,607 businesses; of those, 158,049 are classified as small businesses. That means that small businesses make up 95 per cent of the businesses in Alberta. They, just like large businesses, are job creators for Albertans. Small businesses like Rocky's coffee shop and bakery in Strathmore are hubs of local activity. One of the best shows on TV in recent years, Corner Gas, was based on a small Canadian business. Although life isn't always that funny in rural Canada, that show portrays the effects of a small business and what it can provide for a community.

I am worried, Madam Chair. I am worried about our small businesses. That is why I have submitted this amendment. Let me read it into the record. I move that Bill 2, an Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue, be amended in section 1(3)(b) in the proposed section 22(2.1294)(b) by striking out "9.0%" and substituting "10%".

Let me explain for a moment what this amendment means. This amendment changes the difference that small businesses pay compared to large businesses. Small businesses do not make as much as their larger counterparts; thus, Canadian provinces tax them differently. The effective tax rate at this moment is 3 per cent. By changing 9 per cent to 10 per cent, we lower the effective tax rate from 3 per cent to 2 per cent. This amendment would take some of the bite out of the economic hardships of the NDP bills before us on small businesses.

The government is imposing onto Alberta policy after harmful policy that will hurt small businesses. Many who both own and work in small businesses in my constituency of Strathmore-Brooks have expressed their concerns to me directly. They have told me face to face that they are worried for their jobs, for their businesses, and for their futures. They do not know how they will afford to pay their employees 50 per cent more and still keep their doors open.

They have to stay competitive with larger businesses. Larger businesses can keep their prices low by the sheer volume of product they produce. Larger businesses have an army of accountants, lawyers, and other employees on staff who can assist them in finding places to cut or to move money offshore. Small businesses do not have that luxury. Small businesses do not necessarily have anywhere to cut. Large businesses can often absorb losses by many different means. Small businesses are limited to a few options such as how many employees they pay or by raising their prices. Small businesses are operated sometimes by two or three employees, not counting the owner or his or her wife or husband. By forcing those businesses to pay 50 per cent more for their employees, two employees will now cost what three employees used to cost.

Jobs will be lost because of the minimum wage increase. I have not seen one serious study to suggest otherwise. According to Industry Canada, private businesses employ 1,315,227 people here in Alberta. Of those, 1,053,244 are employed by small businesses right here in Alberta. This increase to the minimum wage directly threatens, by some estimates, upwards of 10 per cent of Alberta's jobs. The only questions are: how close to that number will we actually come and what portion will come from small businesses? Small-business workers need our help. Small-business owners need our help. They need all of our help. This amendment will help them. By cutting the tax rate for small businesses, they may be able to recoup the cost of the minimum wage increase. This tax cut will allow small businesses to stay competitive with larger businesses.

I admit that I am doing this for somewhat selfish reasons. I want to make sure for selfish reasons that small businesses will stay open. I want to be able to ensure that the schnitzel truck around the corner stays there and doesn't go out of business. I want to make sure that Smiley's in Strathmore continues to provide their delicious products at a competitive price. I would rather that none of these tax hikes go into effect, but the least that we can do here is try to protect small businesses and mitigate the damage.

My worries about small businesses are increased by the negative effects that the royalty review could have on this province. With jobs already being cut from the energy sector and companies backing out of Alberta, the number of people with money to invest in small businesses or at all is shrinking.

3:30

In Duchess, just outside of Brooks in my constituency, the Whistle Stop for years was a busy hub of business activity. It provided sandwiches to oil patch workers who needed a tasty meal at a cheap price really quickly. If you go there today, Madam Chair, it's empty. They're barely keeping the doors open. They're hurting.

When the recession of 2008 hit the global marketplace, the Bank of Canada wisely reached out to help Canadians. The people at the Bank of Canada knew that during times of economic downturn something needed to be done. The Bank of Canada lowered interest rates to help Canadians get through the rough times, but we cannot expect interest rates to stay low forever. The low oil prices and the royalty review are pushing Alberta to the brink of another economic downturn. We should not turn a moderate economic downturn into a full-blown recession. The NDP should follow the example of the Bank of Canada and help Albertans instead of hindering them.

Don't raise Albertans' taxes. We are trying to hold the line on raising all taxes for Albertans because we know that this will not help them. But since the NDP insists on raising personal and business income taxes as well as the minimum wage, we believe that this small-business tax cut is both affordable and fair. This tax cut will be a minor stimulant to the economy, in need of desperate help. This tax cut will possibly generate more revenue.

Let me refer back to everything that the Wildrose caucus has stood for and said over the last week: lower taxes encourage growth; lower taxes encourage new businesses; lower taxes create more jobs. Growth, new businesses, more jobs: all increase the tax base and thus increase the overall revenue for the government. At the moment Alberta has the highest – let me repeat: the highest – small-business tax rate in western Canada. British Columbia's rate is 2.5 per cent, Saskatchewan's is 2 per cent, and Manitoba's small-business tax rate is zero, an NDP accomplishment which I hope can be replicated here someday. This decrease, a 1 per cent decrease in small-business taxes, would give Alberta at least some competitive advantage. This bill effectively removes Alberta's advantage when it comes to attracting large businesses. So let's give small businesses a helping hand. Give Alberta a slight help toward bringing back the Alberta advantage by lowering the small-business tax rate by 1 per cent.

Now, I know that we can agree on this amendment because this idea is not mine. As the House leader will know, I love to take credit for ideas and coming up with something brilliant like the idea of cutting the small-business tax rate. Instead, I must unfortunately hand all of the credit to the Premier herself. Let's all give a round of applause for the Premier. In 2012 the Premier campaigned on lowering the small-business tax rates. I will read a quote from the Premier that she gave on the 29th of October 2012.

In the last election campaign the NDP proposed to raise corporate tax rates by 2 per cent while reducing taxes for small businesses by one-third to help them grow. We were, ironically, the only party of any of the political parties in the election to propose a tax reduction. That was a tax reduction for small business.

Well, I've never agreed with the Premier more, Madam Chair.

The Premier has kept her promise, unfortunately, to raise taxes on large businesses. The Premier may have forgotten that she promised to lower taxes on small businesses. It's a good thing we're here to help and remind the government. I'm helping the Premier bring in an amendment that she herself campaigned on. I am helping the Premier by introducing an amendment that helps small businesses.

This amendment will provide a beacon of hope in a storm of increasing personal taxes, changes to the royalty structure, increases to the minimum wage, and increases to business taxes. This amendment may not fix the damage that the combination of these bills will create, but it will help. Members of this House, I plead with you: let's help small businesses; let's help the Alberta economy; let's vote for this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I won't be supporting this amendment. The reason I won't be supporting it is that the 2012 NDP platform did talk about reducing the small-business tax. That was in a very different economic climate. Fast-forward to March 2015. The PC budget that was produced really showed everybody, because of the economic outlook, that it was going to be a tough, tough fiscal environment. The budget that this NDP government ran on did not include a tax cut at that time for small business.

The environment for all businesses in Alberta, including small businesses, is very strong in terms of what they can have. We have a low-tax environment overall. We have many other things that small businesses rely on. We have an educated population and strong infrastructure, both physical and social.

The cut itself that's being proposed would cost a significant amount of money, about $167 million. We have a different fiscal environment. We need to ensure we have stable revenues. It's really interesting that the member opposite wants to chastise government on one hand for not having put forward a budget this month but on the other hand is proposing a tax cut when he really has no understanding or idea of the impact on our programs and services.

I would say that, on balance, we have a good plan going forward. Small business will benefit because we have a globally competitive environment in this province. They're going to benefit from all that's going on here. A reduction like this, on the back of a napkin, perhaps is not the best way to do things.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Chair, how much time do we have left for this?

The Chair: That was it. Oh, you have 20 minutes yet. I apologize; the timer hadn't been set.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'll briefly respond to this before allowing my colleagues to continue the debate. I think it is incredible that the government would accuse anyone of not costing something out under the present circumstances. I will remind this House that the Wildrose balanced-budget plan actually added up before we presented it to the media during the election.

I'll remind this House that the government has given us six or seven different figures in the span of 24 hours on what their new spending will be. The best answer we got was that it was somewhere in the $600 million area. This is a bill that is raising taxes without any idea about how much their total revenue will be for the year. They have previously passed a bill in which they have no idea how much new spending they will be putting forward to Albertans this year.

If the minister is concerned about costing and the affordability of this tax cut, then I would recommend that he table figures to this House detailing what he expects the total revenues of the government to be. Unfortunately, I have asked him nearly a dozen times, and at no time has he ever been able to provide that answer.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have to admit to being just a little bit gobsmacked when the Finance minister popped right up and knew it was $167 million. Wow. That is, like, the first answer we've gotten from you that's complete and to the point. Thank you. I'm amazed.

But what I find amazing about it is that when I asked the government, you know, for example, how much they thought they'd raise by increasing corporate taxes by 2 per cent, something that they had in their election platform, something they've talked about for months, something that they dragged into this House in a bill, they haven't got a clue. Why do I know they don't have a clue? Because they said that they don't have a clue. I'm taking their word for it that they don't have a clue, Madam Chair, because they said that they don't know how much the tax they want to raise is going to bring in. That's why I'm so sure, because the government told me. That's why I know.

However, it's amazing that when the opposition brings up a tax decrease, well, that number came right to the Finance minister's mind between – I don't know – the time the document was handed out and the time the minister was on his feet, maybe seven minutes. You are brilliant. I just wish that you took a little more time with your own work. If you are waving around the Wildrose document, which is against the House rules – but we'll ignore that right now – I would be embarrassed, if I was you, that the opposition parties know more about what they're talking about than the government does.

The Chair: Hon. member, just a reminder, please: through the chair.

Mr. McIver: Yes, Madam Chair. I thank you for that reminder. I am grateful for it, and I will heed it.

Consequently, I find this amazing. The government minister – I think it was the House leader at the time – a couple of days ago, when I was asking questions about other topics, also didn't have answers about where the other $500 million has gone. Actually, the government's numbers are so inaccurate, Madam Chair, that they couldn't actually tell me whether it was $500 million or $600 million, couldn't actually tell me whether they are spending less than the $1.8 billion or, if they were indeed spending that, what the heck they were spending it on. I believe that, too, because I heard it from the government. That's why I am so very sure that I'm right about that, because I heard it from the government.

Madam Chair, referring to the Restaurants Canada document that I tabled in the House today, they did talk about a typical restaurant business 101, and in the document that they furnished the government with, at least the labour minister and the Premier, they talk about a $10 restaurant bill. Their breakdown of the $10 restaurant bill goes like this: $3.48 for wages and benefits, $3.40 for food and beverage, $2.41 for operating expenses, and 71 cents for pretax profit. So if you've got a 7 per cent pretax profit and the government is taking 3 per cent out of that, that's taking a big bite out of small business, a very big bite.

Now, I appreciate it's not the sense of the bill, but it does speak to how important this is, Madam Chair, and to what a good idea this amendment is, which is why I'm going to support it, and I hope all members of the House do. When you've got the average restaurant, which is probably not completely typical of all small businesses – but I'm sure there are a lot that mirror that – and government has already taken 3 per cent out of that 7 per cent, down to 4, leaving them with 5 instead of 4 has got to be a good thing, particularly when we know that those same small businesses, be they restaurants or otherwise, are still, I assume, going to have a $15-an-hour wage increase inflicted upon them.

Let's keep them open. Let's keep them open. Let's not tell Albertans: you have to cook at home because we're closing up all your restaurants. If the restaurants stay open, there's no way they're going to be able to do it without radically increasing prices. That's what restauranteurs and bars do. I do have the occasional adult beverage in a pub, Madam Chair, and the people in those pubs tell me – their words, not mine – that when this $15 comes in, the cost of the beer on tap is going to go from $6 to $9. In terms of percentage – it's one and a half times – I think that is probably a believable number. You know who's going to suffer the worst? The people making the 15 bucks. If they could afford a beer once a month now, they won't be able to afford a beer once a year. So if you think you're helping them, you're not.

That takes us right back to the amendment before us. The government has said that they are going to torture and hurt small businesses by adding to the minimum wage by 50 per cent. Let's let them live. Let's let them live. The House leader said this to me the other day, because I asked him that, and his words were pretty close to: the same as they were with your government, $500,000. But just doing quick and dirty math, $500,000 a year divided by 365 days is $1,300, $1,400. If that's not exactly right, forgive me, but I know it's not far off.

So if you've got a business that's doing $1,300, $1,400 a day worth of business, how much profit are they making? Seriously, I mean, even at 30 per cent they're making $500 a day. A small-business owner typically puts in 12, 14 hours a day, and that's assuming that they have no other expenses to take out of that. So letting them have a little bit more so that they can keep their business open, so that they can keep employing other Albertans – be they young, be they seniors, whatever – seems like a very good idea. Giving a smaller tax burden on businesses that are already small is a very good idea.

I support the opposition's motion, and I encourage all other members of this House to do the same.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Chair. I apologize for waving the piece of paper. I'm learning many things here in this House this week, my second week, sitting in a chair when I shouldn't be sitting in a chair and waving a piece of paper I shouldn't have waved, and I apologize. Forgive me.

The paper in question was something that I pulled off the Wildrose website. It came out at 11:48. It talked about a 1 per cent tax cut to the small-business tax rate. So I asked my staff if they would cost what that was, in the time between when it came out, earlier today, and sitting here and rising to speak to this point. The small-business tax rate, at 3 per cent in the March budget of the PCs, would have brought in $503 million. When you take a point off that, that's $167.7 million. The idea that we should do that on the back of a napkin or as a result of a press release doesn't seem like a really strategic way to look at a fiscal plan going forward.

I do want to remind everyone that the tax environment in Alberta is still, even with the tax changes that we're talking about in this bill, An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue, towards the low end, all across the country. That is why I'm suggesting that we not do this. I insist as Finance minister in this government that we look at the revenues and at doing the best job with the expenditure of revenues to support small businesses and other businesses in Alberta through a competitive economic environment in this province.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to talk about the amendment to Bill 2 and to express my concern that the governing party is not in support of this. I have to say that as a small-business man, I know what this would have done for my business.

In order to be able to clearly articulate my concerns about this refusal to support this, I want to give you an example. There seems to be a misperception about small-business men, that they make huge amounts of money. I have been a small-business man since I was 14 years old, the first time that I had the opportunity to be able to rent a lawn mower from my father, the first time that I had an opportunity to be able to use his rake and go out and generate money. I worked hard. It gave me a sense of purpose. It gave me a sense of the ability to do something on my own and to have ownership. This is the sort of thing that is at risk here.

There is a perfect storm beginning in Alberta. Where the Alberta advantage defined us, now we seem to have this perfect storm starting where small-business men are being squeezed out. I don't think that that's the intent of this government, and I'm not saying that it is. But I want to just point out that if you do squeeze out the small-business man or the small-business woman, it creates less competition in your economy. It provides larger corporations, who have higher margins – they have higher economies of scale, so they can weather these bad policies, in my humble opinion. I don't think that it is the intent of this government to punish small businesses, but in reality their policies are punishing small businesses. Because small businesses don't have the ability to weather these things as larger companies do, they will shut the doors, and there will be less competition, and that's always bad for an economy.

Now, I tell you this from my own perspective. I didn't read this in a book. I did go to university. I did get as much education as I could, but this is knowledge from the school of hard knocks. I have had the opportunity of running many businesses, starting up from scratch, which is the most difficult thing to do, and I have seen what the Alberta advantage did for me. If there is opportunity, an entrepreneur will look for that opportunity, and they'll try to make it happen. They put in their own time, their effort. They wear many hats. They invest what scarce resources they have, and they become chief bottle-washer in every way.

This is the sort of thing that every economy – if you take a look at historical precedents, every economy that has helped small businesses and given them what they need has prospered. Every economy that has not helped or has hindered – red tape, barriers to entry, whatever it is, lack of competition – has always faltered. I am concerned, greatly concerned, at the tone and the optics of what we're seeing here.

I'm concerned that we have other provinces in western Canada, B.C., at 2.5 per cent, as my colleague has said; Saskatchewan, at 2 per cent; Manitoba, at zero. Now, obviously, we need to address an issue here that seems to be lacking. I've brought this up a few times, and I think it needs to be brought up again. We are losing our comparative and competitive advantage. In small business we understand that principle. We understand that in order for you to be able to make it work, you have to be comparatively advantaged to another company. You need to be competitive, and if we lose that competitive edge, then as small-business men we have to close our doors.

Now, I think that on a micro scale that can transfer to a macro scale as well, as the government is a larger business. There's only one income. That's taxes and fees. If you take a look at that as a static, nonmoving pie and you just need to take some more of that, then, obviously, if you have a spending problem, you're going to try to take more of that pie. A conservative approach – the reason why I am a conservative is because conservatives take a look at the economy and say: "You know what? This pie can be grown. What can we do to be able to help this pie grow?" The best way to help a pie grow is to stimulate the economy through helping small businesses grow. They are the major driver in an economy, the absolute major driver in any economy that actually is doing well.

I think that with the intent of the sitting government being to help the economy, to help supply social programs that I believe in – I believe they're important. They help the people who need it the most. You want to have that pie or the portion of that pie to be able to do that. I would caution you to think about this for a second. If you want that pie or you want more, to be able to increase social spending – to take more of that pie just means that you're going to drive out businesses. If you take more out of a small business's pocket and they don't have high margins to be able to cover that, then there's no way that they can survive, and they go out of business. Then your pie shrinks, and now you have less that you can actually use for those social programs. If you really, really are concerned about having the money to be able to provide for these social programs, then the best approach to this is to be able to help small businesses.

Now, making us competitive, which I believe this amendment will do – it allows us to be more competitive. It stimulates small businesses. This is why I'm in support of this amendment to Bill 2. I hope that by doing this amendment, it does actually restore the fairness to public revenue. I hope that this argument has been heard, and I understand that there might be ideological reasons why it hasn't been. But I can tell you again that this is not coming from a person who's read a book about some possible way of being able to do this. I've actually lived it. I've lived it most of my life.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, it was brought to my attention – and I apologize; I didn't notice – initially that you weren't in your proper seat to speak, and that was something I neglected to also mention. While you can move around in committee, you must be in your seat to speak or to vote. Just to clarify that for any other members who wish to do that. That's in accordance with Standing Order 16.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, did you want to be recognized to speak? Then I can recognize you next.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to get up to speak in support of this motion. I think anyone who was part of the campaign recognizes that the Alberta Liberals were pushing the agenda for small business to get a break, especially during these down economic times. We don't have the lowest small-business tax in the country. We have an opportunity to give an olive branch, especially during the challenges faced in these last six months and the foreseeable future, frankly.

I think we have to assume that there may be a longer downturn than we initially anticipated, and some of the best predictors, as if anyone can claim to be a best predictor – but many of the pundits in the oil industry and internationally are saying that this could last longer than we thought. The Saudis have a large reserve. They can play this game indefinitely, and I think we need to look beyond party lines to see how we can reach across to the small-business community, enhance new economic opportunities, increase or stabilize the jobs where we can, and look at the opportunity to send an olive branch, I guess, during these times of challenge.

There's been a little too much polarization in our debates in these last 24 hours, 48 hours. I'd like to see some opportunity to reach across and find some common ground here. It's a small change. It's a reasonable and responsible change. I think it would send a good message, especially at a time when we're looking at so many uncertainties. The government is looking at a royalty review, a carbon levy, both of which I supported, but it is going to have to be seen in the context of some of the negative impacts it's going to have on jobs and business.

Actually, if we adopted this amendment, we would fall into closer line with the rest of the country and send a strong message that we're not totally ideological, not entirely going one way. So I would encourage the government to really, seriously think about it and allow a free vote on that side. It would also send a good message to the Legislature that this is something that has partly to do with balanced thinking, a balanced approach, a democratic response. I dare say that many people on that side of the House are in touch with small businesses and have a sense of what this would look like in their communities as well. I don't need to say very much more except that it would be a powerful statement, reaching across the aisle and seeking to co-operate at this early stage in our work.

I support the amendment, and I hope others in the Legislature will.

4:00

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for his very constructive comments. It's a very rare and strange day when we agree on very much, and today is one of those days. He is an elder statesman in a Legislature that does not have – not to impugn his age or imply an expiry of any kind . . .

Dr. Swann: I just changed my mind.

Mr. Fildebrandt: We have now lost the support of the Liberal Party.

But he is an experienced statesman in a Legislature that does not have very many experienced statesmen, and I think that we would be well served to heed his advice, to not blindly follow our ideological zeal. We all have it. We all have our own ideas, our own principles, ideologies, or philosophies, but we should not blindly follow them without being open to evidence or to amendment or compromise. In my maiden speech to this House I said that we should stick to our principles but not refuse to accept "a proverbial half-loaf of bread" at the expense of those principles.

This is a responsible measure. This is a measure that will help take the bite off some of the other measures the government has proposed or already passed. Whatever those members think about how correct those policies may be, they must recognize that they will have adverse effects on businesses, especially small businesses.

I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for his comments. He brings a lot of wisdom to this Chamber, not wisdom that I will agree with most of the time. He is a member of this Legislature who appears to agree with the governing party on the vast majority of the issues. Perhaps his independence of mind relative to members of the government gives him a certain clarity, and I beseech members of the government to listen to his advice.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I, too, rise to support this amendment, making that perhaps nearly unanimous on this side of House. I echo the comments of the Member for Strathmore-Brooks and echo the request from the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, that we do have an opportunity here to demonstrate to Albertans that, in fact, those of us here in this House in the 29th Legislature are ready to operate and to govern differently, to hear good ideas irrespective of which side of the House they come from, and to support those ideas. And I encourage all members of the House, both on the front bench in government as well as private members on all sides, to think very hard about what this amendment will do, the positive impact it will have.

One of the great things about this province that I think we lose sight of sometimes: as Albertans if you have a good idea, if you work hard, if you're honest, you will do well in this province. That's the entrepreneurial spirit, that makes Alberta a great place, and it's something that, unless you have lived and worked overseas – in my case my wife has moved from overseas to Alberta. We sometimes lose sense of that perspective. Even in other parts of this country that entrepreneurial spirit is not as strong as in this province. So this allows a vibrant and strong culture of small business. It allows Albertans to hire Albertans. It creates jobs. It creates prosperity. It creates wealth, and when we have wealth creation, all Albertans benefit. So this policy is consistent, certainly, with Alberta Party policy, and I support it without reservation.

One thing I would encourage the government to think about is the consequences of their policies, whether intended or unintended. Now, one of the key concepts of taxation policies is the concept of integration. Integration is an important principle in the Canadian tax system, especially for businesses of all kinds, Canadian-controlled private corporations, and their shareholders. It's based on the premise that an individual earning an income through a corporation should be in the same tax position as if an individual had earned the income directly. In other words, an individual should be indifferent, from an income tax perspective, as to the type of entity used to earn income. Now, this may sound like dry accounting-speak, Madam Chair, but it is very, very important. It is a critical and very key point to understand when we talk about tax changes of all kinds.

Income earned in a corporation is first taxed in the corporation, and the after-tax amount is then further taxed at the personal level when it is distributed to an individual as a dividend. The combined personal and corporate tax represents the effective tax rate of earning income through a corporation. So in order to achieve integration, dividends received by individuals from taxable Canadian corporations are subject to a dividend gross-up and dividend tax credit mechanism. The individual shareholder includes income in a grossed-up amount representing an approximation of the corporation's pretax income and then gets a credit representing the tax paid in the corporation, so in theory the tax is effectively paid at the personal tax rate.

Now, that's a very important point. Prior to the introduction of this bill Alberta entrepreneurs and shareholders enjoyed near-perfect integration as the Alberta dividend tax credit effectively operated to provide taxation rates on the flow through of business income at 39.6 per cent for income earned at the small-business rate and 39.3 per cent at the general business income tax rate. So when compared to the top marginal tax rate for personal taxation, previously 39 per cent for Albertans, there was essentially no material difference between earning income personally or corporately. With all the numbers the important point, I'll say again, is that there was essentially no material difference between earning income personally and corporately.

Now, with the changes announced here in Bill 2, the gap between earning business income and earning personally has grown dramatically. I won't quote the numbers, but I can assure you that there is an imbalance here. This amendment, Madam Chair, creates an opportunity for businesses to generate more income, to generate more wealth, and to create more jobs for Albertans.

Let's state again that Alberta has a higher small-business tax rate than our provincial neighbours. B.C., Saskatchewan, Manitoba, all have lower small-business tax rates. Add to that – the fact that Alberta is no longer in a strong position of integration creates the very real possibility that Alberta entrepreneurs will perhaps purchase a revenue property in B.C. or Saskatchewan, and perhaps they will declare that as their taxable residence on the 31st of December each tax year. That means that there's significant tax leakage risk out of the province of Alberta. Whatever we can do in this House to prevent that from happening and keep those tax revenues in this province to fund the very important programs that Albertans rely upon – I think it is incumbent that we do that.

I also think we need to think about not just the revenue side of the equation; we do need to think of the expense side of the equation. We need to think about whether our Alberta tax dollars are in fact spent effectively. I find it unfortunate that we haven't had much discussion in this House about the cost-efficiency side of things, about good management of Alberta's public services and good stewardship of our finances. Is our public service as efficient and effective as it could be? Has the government taken steps to ensure that key ministries like Health but all others focus first on cost efficiency before simply asking for more dollars? What has the government done to change the culture of Alberta's public service, that is significantly more expensive than other public services around the country? My worry is that if there is what seems to be an infinite amount of someone else's money in the mix, there's an awful lot less incentive to find savings.

So, Madam Chair, with that I would again reiterate my support for this amendment and encourage all members of the House, on both sides but in particular government private members, to give very serious consideration to supporting this amendment.

Thank you.

4:10

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I also rise in support of this amendment today and to reflect on a few topics that maybe I see here emerging. I see big government, I see big taxes, and I see big labour, none of whom seem to be overly concerned about the plight of small business here today.

Deficits – I think small businesses call them losses – cannot be financed by a wave of the Finance minister's magic wand. Let's keep that in mind. Small businesses live and die by their annual revenue that they keep, by the taxes they pay, by the wages that they pay, all issues that we've discussed here today. Those deficits, those losses mean a loss of livelihood, employment, and ultimately, in many cases, the failure of small businesses, hard-working owner-entrepreneurs, risk takers that help build this province. I think the figure, that 95 per cent of businesses in this province are small to medium-sized businesses, has been stated before.

But when I think about my constituency – we don't have a lot of big corporations in my constituency. It is primarily small businesses that add vibrancy to the community. They take risks. They pay rent. They employ young people or maybe senior citizens, in many cases, or people who are looking for part-time employment. I look at the Cornerstone café: owner managed, hard-working people there. They have coffee, they have homemade food, and they provide a venue for local music. A popular spot. Only about 25 or 30 seats there. I'm sure they struggle at the end of every month to decide whether the owner-manager can take any wages themselves to support the risk that they take to run that enterprise. Madam Chair, I worry about businesses like that.

A new business, that I actually met the owner of during the election, Around the Bend soft pretzels: in the community he's tucked away back in a strip mall, probably the only spot he can afford as a new business. He actually lives in Calgary-South East, but he wants to move closer to his business, so he's going to buy real estate there. He's going to invest. He's looking at schools for his children. He and his wife both work there. She has a full-time job, but she comes there. And the opportunities I've had to go into that store: young people from the community, living in the community, are employed there quite happily, with a new entrepreneurial – a new concept. First concept of its type, I think, in Alberta.

I worry about their viability, their ability to survive. I hope that they can come through this. But every little bit helps. A minimum wage, which is going to deeply affect them, is already a problem. This amendment at least allows some relief on the other side of the coin if they're lucky enough to have a profit that is going to be taxed. Let's hope that they can achieve that.

Sunshine, a local Vietnamese noodle house; Razors Edge Barber Shoppe; Deer Valley Florist; the local Bonavista computer shop: all their success, viability, or failure could hinge on the small latitude which could be accorded by this amendment. As mentioned before, small business is big business in this province. It's the entrepreneurial spirit of Alberta.

Madam Chair, I support this amendment to protect the businesses. And let's be honest. If those businesses disappear, there will be no taxes. The livelihoods and the people and the families affected by this and by what seems to me to be a blatant disregard for Alberta's entrepreneurial spirit and by extension the Alberta advantage – thank you.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, you're on my list. Did you wish to speak? Go ahead.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Madam Chair. I thank you for the opportunity to speak on this amendment. Just as my friend the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks said earlier, I'm not for raising taxes. I think we've been pretty clear on that over the last few days.

Having said that, though, I do believe that this amendment can undo some of the harm that this bill will do to Albertans. A 50 per cent increase to minimum wage is much easier for a large business to absorb than a small business. Small businesses are run by a very small number of employees. Forcing a small mom-and-pop shop to pay 50 per cent more for their employees will mean, in some cases, that they can only afford to keep 2 out of 3 employees. Madam Chair, this is just not a viable option for small business. I've heard members across the way from the NDP caucus say time and time again that they support local business, and I'm sure that they do believe that, but this is their opportunity right now to prove that that is really true.

Local businesses, Madam Chair, are not Walmarts and they are not Starbucks in your local area although I'm sure that you can expect the price of your nonfat soy milk latte to go up. They are, though, in fact, the shop on the corner whose owners wake up every morning to make breakfast for their neighbours. They are the shops at the local farmers' markets in my community, that bring fresh fruits, fresh vegetables, local meat, and fresh-made doughnuts. This amendment would help those small businesses cope with the harsh policies that this government is implementing. This amendment would help those small businesses cope with the increase to the minimum wage and an economic downturn that a royalty review may encourage, that this government is planning.

This is a small tax cut, Madam Chair. This is a 1 per cent tax cut, but it would help Albertans. We want to help Albertans. The members across the way say that they want to help Albertans. Well, this amendment helps Albertans. To the members opposite through you, Madam Chair: I would like them to know that even your Premier suggested that this tax cut would help offset the overall hike to 12 per cent. Even your leader wanted to lower small-business taxes. Even your leader saw the benefit that a 1 per cent tax cut would make for Alberta.

Now, the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks went on at length about what the Premier said in regard to small-business tax cuts. I suppose, though, that the argument could be that a lot of that was said in 2012 and that the climate may change. So maybe we should have a look at what the now Minister of Municipal Affairs said when he was in opposition just a little over a year ago, on April 22, 2014, Madam Chair.

I'd like to remind the House that the Alberta NDP was the only party during the 2012 election that had in our platform a reduction in the small-business tax. We would have reduced it by a third. We understand that small businesses really are what drive the Alberta economy. But, again, instead of helping out the little guy, this government . . .

And he was referring to the government of the day.

. . . is interested in returning the favour of the bigger corporations, the ones that help them get elected election after election. You know, it's quite frustrating.

This is now the current NDP Minister of Municipal Affairs.

I would say again through you, Madam Chair, to the members across the way that this amendment can help Albertans. Everybody in this House claims to want to help Albertans, so they should want to get behind it. So I'll say on behalf of all small businesses in Alberta: please vote, all members, for this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Madam Chair, thank you very much. I rise today in support of the amendment by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks to amend section 1(3)(b) in the proposed section 22 by striking out "9.0%" and substituting "10%," which will effectively make Alberta's small-business tax rate 2 per cent instead of 3 per cent, as the New Democratic government is proposing, on top of the already 11 per cent charged by the federal government to small businesses.

I support a lower tax principally for four reasons: first of all, the nature of small business; secondly, the timing of this tax increase and the nature of our economy now; thirdly, the efficiency and the value and the wealth that the small-business economy adds to Alberta like no other part of our economy does; fourthly, the $167 million that this cut would put back into the pockets of Albertans, potentially, is about one-third of 1 per cent of what already the most expensive per capita government in Canada is spending, and that's where we should look first.

I want to talk about the nature of small business. I've had much opportunity to work with small-business people, be friends with small-business people, and see what small-business people add to our province and our community. Madam Chair, you cannot walk into a small business without somebody behind you asking that business owner for a donation, a helping hand, a barbecue spot, some things that 99.9 per cent of the time small-business people do to make our charities stronger, to help our people, to help our communities.

Owning a small business: I think the statistics are that 4 out of 5 go broke or shut down in three years. I think the statistics are that very, very few of them are that profitable anyway. I can't count the number of times that I have talked with a small-business person who has said something to me like: I don't have an RSP; my RSP is my business. Or worse yet, during times like now they say things like: I had to take my RSPs out to pay my suppliers, to pay my staff, to pay my rent, to keep my business going.

To the New Democratic government: these are the people you're hurting. These are the Albertans that the Wildrose is fully prepared to stand up for and make it so that they have a better chance to share. And we owe them. They provide so much for us. Every community has many businesses that provide us choice and options and competition and give us better services and better pricing. Their reward, after the New Democratic bill is through, will be the least competitive small-business tax rate in all of western Canada.

Needless to say, small businesses also employ our friends, our children, our neighbours. They purchase goods and services so that all of us have jobs, so money flows through the economy. I've heard many small-business men talk about how hard it is to stretch a dollar. That dollar generally has three or four places to go – and it's amazing how they make it work – and our new government is adding to this burden.

The second reason I'm totally in favour of the amendment of the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks to keep our small-business tax rate competitive is the timing. There's one bad-news announcement after another of people being laid off, of businesses closing in Alberta, big ones and small ones. The economy is cyclical here. It's part of the process. It's part of what could happen, for sure.

Many of our good small-business men will get under this, find a way to be more efficient, find a way to be more competitive, work longer hours, stretch that dollar even further. But now they're going to have to find a way to pay our government, already the most expensive government per capita in all of Canada, even more of the fruits of their hard-earned labour. At the same time in the next three years they will be facing a 50 per cent increase in their cost of labour. My goodness. How much do you expect them to do? How much do you expect them to give up rather than look at your own house first? And I know you inherited that house. That's maybe the best opportunity to take a look.

The third reason that I'm in favour of a 2 per cent small-business tax rather than the 3 per cent increase the new government is providing is the efficiency, the efficiency of money that small business leaves to the economy: how this money circulates, how other jobs are created, other taxes are paid, other purchases are made. Small businesses and the not-for-profit sector of our economy are easily the most efficient, are easily the best way for us to have more quality of life and more choices, and every chance we get, we should promote it and help encourage it and help make it stronger.

We've talked a lot in Alberta for many, many years about diversifying the economy. Many people will say that the best way to diversify the economy is through competitive tax rates, nationally and internationally. You combine competitive tax rates with stable utility prices – and we all know what the previous government did to our transmission costs on our utility bills, especially for our seniors, and I wait for the day when we can talk about that again.

Balanced budgets: it's important to have balanced budgets.

Running deficits: businesses know that it's just a future tax, and they know that a lot of the time they are the target of that future tax, so they prefer to locate in a jurisdiction that doesn't run deficits.

Minimal bureaucracy is another way to diversify the economy. You're inheriting a government that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business has given a D to for five or six years in a row, so there should be lots of room for improvement there.

The last thing is property rights. The government needs to have strong property rights for individuals as those are the foundation of wealth. Governments need to know their limits so that individuals and businesses can create wealth and have their say.

One PC Premier several years ago cut taxes, put in a 10 per cent personal flat tax, cut corporate taxes. It led to $17 billion in the sustainability fund. It led to several years of prosperity, wealth creation, and job growth. It's a model that works. It's a model that will allow individuals to flourish, that will allow governments to then tax them. The pie can be bigger. Individuals can have more freedom.

I just want to close by saying thank you to all the small-business people for all they've provided in terms of the choice, in terms of the jobs that they provide, in terms of the wealth that they create. I would ask this government to at least stay competitive with other provinces, with other states. Look for that $167 million from the $45 billion we already spend annually, and let Albertans have the freedom and the choice that that would provide.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to the amendment put forth by my hon. colleague, neighbouring colleague, Strathmore-Brooks. As I'm sure like all ridings throughout the province – everybody here represents one – my constituency of Little Bow contains a number of small mom-and-pop-style businesses that do not make more than $500,000 a year in profit.

4:30

Small local businesses provide job opportunities for local residents. This can be in the way of part-time help or full-time management. Local jobs keep the residents in town, so the advantage is generalized outward as the employee spends money at the local restaurant during meal breaks, gasses up at the local gas station to get to work, and stops at the local grocery store on the way home at night. The advantage of a small local business employing local residents creates a domino effect that helps the community as a whole.

Small local businesses support the area through their everyday needs. Small businesses open accounts at local banks, hire local CPAs and attorneys. When they need supplies, they can simply step out, go down the street, and pick them up. Reducing the small-business tax from 3 per cent, the highest in western Canada, to 2 per cent keeps the money at home, so to speak. It allows small businesses to retain earnings and reinvest in their businesses during this time of economic uncertainty.

British Columbia and Saskatchewan joined with Alberta to form the New West Partnership in order to reduce trade and investment barriers across our three economies. It would be a real step in the right direction to be able to harmonize that small-business tax across the three jurisdictions to show how friendly the west is to small business in these troubling economic times. Alberta's small-business tax rate is one full per cent above Saskatchewan's and a half per cent higher than B.C.'s, and of course we've heard that Manitoba's is zero. Alberta appears to be the true sore thumb here.

Now, the NDP have talked about this very subject in the past. In 2012 the NDP proposed reducing the small-business tax. It was within their platform, on page 18. There are even references going back to 2004 that the NDP wanted to reduce this tax. In fact, as has been said here twice already, the Premier supported cutting small-business tax. Her quote is within Hansard, and I don't need to read that again. Although I don't necessarily agree with what the comment from the Finance minister may have been regarding the context of what was going on in the world at that time, I would say that was a quote. This isn't a court of law. It's just something that is in Hansard, so we quoted it.

While the amendment alone will not stop the NDP government's philosophical agenda against entrepreneurs, it will provide a beacon of hope for small businesses from every corner of this province, small businesses like the Coffee Bureau on Jasper Avenue, here in Edmonton; or the Coaldale Bakery, in downtown Coaldale; or the local food producers who attend the farmers' markets all over this province. This tax reduction would be a boon to those who want to promote and buy local food.

A high tax on small business is one of the least efficient ways to raise money. High taxes hurt jobs and economic growth and directly impact local communities. We hope that the NDP will put pragmatism before ideology and work with the opposition to make this positive change to the legislation.

The Wildrose will continue to stand up for Albertans by standing up for small Alberta business, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment?

If not, then we'll call the vote.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:33 p.m.]

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Back on Bill 2. The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Actually, Madam Chair, I'm rising pursuant to Standing Order 32(3), requesting unanimous consent of the House to shorten the bells' interval to one minute for the remainder of this session.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair. At this time it's my pleasure to introduce an amendment, which I assume will be called A2. I'll give the pages a moment to come around and pick it up so that it can be distributed, and then I'll chat more to it.

The Chair: This will be amendment A2.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to move amendment A2 to amend Bill 2, An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue, that it be amended in section 1(2) and (3) as follows: (a) by striking out "July 1, 2015" wherever it occurs and substituting "January 1, 2016" and (b) by striking out "June 30, 2015" wherever it occurs and substituting "December 31, 2015."

Madam Chair, it's a rather straightforward and simple amendment, the intent of which is to afford the opportunity of the corporate entities, the businesses that will be affected by the 20 per cent increase in the corporate tax rate, at least a little bit of time to adjust and to budget properly for this rather significant change that now is scheduled to take effect in six short days.

It's been discussed at some length in the Assembly already that there are a number of things where the new government has let the House know that they need time to prepare a budget and to study things. You know, I'm prepared to accept that discussion because, certainly, putting together a budget is a complex piece of work, and they are new at it. So I am quite prepared to cut them some slack on that although I'd certainly like to see it happen as early in the fall as possible, but it needs to be done carefully.

In the same breath, for this government to introduce this taxation act and to bring in a corporate tax increase 15 short days after the Speech from the Throne to me is acting with undue haste. Last evening we had considerable discussion about the merits of referring this bill to committee, and that was rejected, which in my view is unfortunate. But in lieu of that, Madam Chair, I think it's a very good idea and I think it would be very prudent on the part of the members of this Assembly to put back this increase to January 1, 2016, so that companies could have a chance to do proper budgeting and not, if you want to use the term, change the rules in the middle of the game. This is a major change, and it will have major effects.

I'm sure the Minister of Finance has probably already got the calculations from his office because I know that the Finance deputy minister and staff are excellent at doing those sorts of calculations. I'm sure he has the numbers as to how much revenue this will mean that the government will forgo. I understand completely, when we see the kinds of spending increases both accounted for and unaccounted for in other pieces of legislation, that this government wants to turn on the revenue tap full blast as fast as it possibly can. But, Madam Chair, that is not without consequences. That is not without effects on our economy.

Again, I will offer the experience that I had serving on Treasury Board in the last government. One of the things that, you know, all of the economists we spoke to told us very carefully is that these changes to the budgeting process and to the taxation structure need to be made carefully, and you need to take the time to do them and to give proper forewarning. Instituting a 20 per cent increase in corporate tax rates with virtually no warning other than that it was policy in the election, but then to turn around and do it so quickly, with so little warning in my view is not prudent, and it does not allow the corporate entities – hence, the amendment that I am moving. I would encourage members to carefully consider this, and I look forward to the debate.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's a delay, of course, of several months, half a year in this case, of CIT. Six months' delay in CIT, when we know that CIT on an annualized basis will bring us in $350 million to $550 million is quite an expensive endeavour to take. It's an expensive hit to take. I can't recommend it. It would only balloon the rather large deficit even larger. So I would urge my fellow members on this side to reject it out of hand because we can't afford it.

The former government and the third party's own PC budget would have added to the PIT rate. It would have been slower and lower; I grant you that. Nonetheless, they were talking about taxes at the PIT level. But what they didn't talk about was corporate taxes even though, I think, a rather large percentage of Albertans who chimed in on an Internet survey to that extent, to look at what they wanted to see in government revenues going forward and the balance, were quite supportive of CIT. About 69 or 67 or 70 per cent of the people on average wanted to see that, and for some reason that didn't show up.

The hon. member is correct. It did show up in the successful party platform of the NDP government as a 2 percentage point increase from 10 per cent. Frankly, when I was at the doors talking to voters, they were quite supportive of raising the CIT, not because they wanted somebody else to pay for it but because they knew that we all had to share in the burden that was before us in terms of the deficit of this province.

So, Madam Chair, I would say that the amendment put forward by my friend across the aisle would just be going down a bad road. We can't afford it. We need to stick with the program. I think we've got a good fiscal plan going forward that will get us out of this deficit in four years.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I want to speak a little bit about my dad, whom I love to death. As I mentioned before, a single dad, he started a business back when I was a little kid, and I learned everything about that business. As I got older and in between a not-so-stellar professional hockey career and school, I worked for him and learned about the business. One of the things I remember about my dad is that under the Progressive Conservative government – I don't typically do this, where I mention the Progressive Conservative Party, but I guess since I'm on this side now, I'd better get used to tooting our own horn a little bit harder – he had the ability to groom that business, that, you know, at one point employed 30 people and fed 30 families.

The one thing that I do remember: the government of the day, whether it was even the federal government, when they made changes, it affected our family. When there was a downturn in the economy or something changed in the housing market, it affected our family. It affected things like the ability to pay for postsecondary education, the ability to go on vacations, the ability to do home renovations. Once again, I think that we've got an opportunity here. Everybody understands the platform of the governing body. Certainly, you feel that's your mandate to govern. But I think that one of the important things in any kind of leadership is that you have to have grace. Far too often what we see in this Chamber, in this House is not too much grace afforded to the people that went before us because it's easy to armchair quarterback after the fact.

I think we also need to recognize the contributions of businesses, large and small, throughout the province, what they've been able to give Albertans, the charities that they helped fund, the events that they put on. We've all been a part of that. I think, once again, that this would be a great opportunity to afford these folks some grace, to afford families some grace. In all honesty, the people that I'm talking to are concerned about jobs. They're concerned about their jobs. Now, whether it's oil prices or some of the new things that the government is instituting in terms of policies around finances, this would be a great opportunity to allow people some time and some grace to put their own fiscal house in order and, you know, provide some breathing room.

So I ask the members of this House to support this amendment. Thanks for your time.

5:00

The Chair: Any others? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate your recognizing me this afternoon. I rise in support of the amendment from our colleagues down the aisle here a little to the left. You know, I think we've heard a lot from this government about the importance of consultation, the importance of getting things right, the importance of spending time to prepare and to plan. They're taking May, June, July, August, September, October: six months to get it right. As an everyday Albertan I hope they do. I hope that our province is better because of their governance rather than worse, and I hope that we can play a role in ensuring that happens.

Today I rise in defence of the many, many, the thousands of Albertans and the family businesses and businesses that don't have a voice here in this Assembly. They have been given no time – and by no time I mean seven days till the 1st of July in one case and to October in another – to make the necessary adjustments to their planning. I think it's a little disingenuous of the government to talk about the need for planning but then not give the very people who elected them that opportunity or that same ability to plan.

I think that this afternoon we have the opportunity to do what's right for Albertans, not just to move this desire of the government to rush through this. You know, it's becoming more and more clear that the government has a desire to rush into these massive increases of 20 and 50 per cent in some cases. But this could potentially be a small token, a gesture to recognize the importance of those outside of this place by allowing them the opportunity to take the necessary steps to prepare for the incoming change that this government is bringing.

So I rise in full support of allowing that to happen, and I encourage all members of this Assembly to think about the individuals and the Alberta businesses that don't have the same sort of ability and latitudes that this government does.

The Chair: Any other hon. member who wishes to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will be brief, but I rise also to speak in favour of this amendment. You know, I committed to the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, when he told me what this amendment was going to be, to listen to the case and the arguments that would be made on both sides of the House and that I would make up my mind based on the evidence presented in the House. Based on the evidence presented by the hon. members who have spoken, I do support this amendment, in particular the very short time frame that businesses of all kinds have been given to adjust to this change.

Business demands predictability. It demands a stable environment. I believe that amending this to give them just that, an additional six months, is more than appropriate. Ultimately, over the course of the next three and a half years, I suppose, from the time this amendment will come into force to the time of the next election, this government will be able to collect increased revenue, as is their desire. But I believe in predictability and also as an indication to Alberta's business community that this government is willing to work with them not only in word but in deed and in action.

With that, Madam Chair, I'll sit. But, again, I speak in favour of the motion. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

If not, then we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Moving back to the bill itself. The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. At the risk of inciting the statement that doing the same thing over and over and over again and expecting a different result is the first sign of insanity, I do have another amendment.

An Hon. Member: The first sign of opposition.

Dr. Starke: And that, too, I'm getting used to. Thank you.

I'll wait for the pages to distribute this amendment. I'll maybe just say a few words to preface this. Where the last amendment dealt specifically with the sections of Bill 2 that were dealing with the change in the timing of the implementation of the increase to the Corporate Tax Act, this has to do with the sections of Bill 2 that have to do with Alberta's Personal Income Tax Act.

So I'll allow the pages to complete the distribution of this, and then we will go into the details of the amendment.

The Chair: This amendment will be known as amendment A3.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair. The sum effect of all of the changes that are listed in amendment A3 are essentially, again, as was attempted in the last amendment, to move the effective date of this to January 1, 2016. Specifically here – and we discussed this briefly last night – one of the portions of this amendment is the coming-into-force date. The coming-into-force date is on the very back page, on page 22 of the bill, in subsection (20), which indicates that the coming-into-force date will be January 1, 2015. There is a practical or, shall we say, a mechanical reason for that, and that is so that the tax rate that is to be instituted as of the 1st of October can then be applied for the full taxation year, from January 1 to December 31, but at a one-quarter rate to reflect the one-quarter portion of the year that it applies to. I'm certainly familiar with how all of that works.

My difficulty, Madam Chair, is that by setting a coming-into-force date, in fact this government is taking ownership and actually applying what they are doing, the changes in their policy, to a period of time where they weren't actually elected. I have a fundamental democratic problem with that. I cannot tell you if it is completely unprecedented. It has not to my knowledge happened in the time that I have been here in this Chamber, but that does not mean that it has never happened before. Indeed, my concern is that it introduces a retroactivity to what is being done within this motion.

You know, I'm opposed to the degree of the increase in personal income tax. Hon. members on both sides of the Chamber will know that our party proposed in our most recent budget prior to the last election a modest increase in personal income tax phased in over the course of a couple of years to those income earners over a taxable income of $100,000 per year, which would be approximately 9 per cent of Albertans, and a further half per cent taxation on those Albertans earning over $250,000, which would be approximately 44,000 Albertans, roughly 1 per cent of the population. To me it's essentially very similar to what the members of the government proposed in their platform, differing only in degree and magnitude and differing only in terms of how quickly it was imposed. Here, again, the reason for that more gradual imposition of those changes is simply because the best advice that we received from the Finance department was that doing it more quickly and more suddenly would in fact be negative to the economy and create difficulties for our economy.

To me it is cleaner, it certainly makes things a whole lot easier if these changes are instituted as of the 1st of January, at the beginning of the tax year. Then we don't have all these transitional issues, we don't have the things with the different calculations, and we don't have, you know, the truthful and the very real situation where people will now be taxed additionally for income they've already earned and income for which they have already had their tax deducted. To me that's a sort of retroactivity that says: well, your take-home pay was X number of dollars from January to June, but now we're going to take a little bit more of the taxation off so that that rate can be applied for the full year. I have an issue with that. I don't think it's fair.

I know that this government ran on a platform of fairness. It was one of the big watchwords in the platform: let's be fair. You can also make the argument, because I've certainly heard it, that: well, for someone who has a taxable income of $200,000 a year, you know, it doesn't matter. Fairness doesn't have a price. Fairness applies whether you earn $50,000 a year or $500,000 a year or $50 million a year. Fairness applies at all levels.

Quite frankly, I'm concerned – and it really bothers me – when I sense that members of this government, in their zeal to adopt some of the socialist policies which they haven't been able to adopt for 110 years of Alberta's history, now having the levers of power and the keys to the treasury, are very enthusiastic about following socialist dogma and bringing it into place just as fast as they possibly can. You know, that's certainly the appearance. I hear my friend from across the way suggesting that that simply isn't true, but that's the way it appears to me. I would suggest to my colleagues across the way that this is the time for pragmatism. It's better to be pragmatic than dogmatic. For a veterinarian to say that is a little odd. Nonetheless, it is a time where we have to consider the pragmatic effects of these changes and recognize that these effects can be profound.

Madam Chair, it's perhaps a quixotic attempt to tilt at a windmill, to move this particularly amendment. But I would again suggest to the members of this Assembly that a retroactive clause, as subsection (20) lists, and a coming-into-force date a full five months before the actual election date are unprecedented. I think that it is a dangerous precedent, and I would question whether that, then, would allow this government the opportunity to bring in legislation that has a coming-into-force date that might precede the date of their election by one year, two years, five years, or longer to rewrite history that they feel has been wrong over a period time.

So, Madam Chair, I would encourage members, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow indicated, to listen to the debate that will ensue on this particular issue, and I would encourage members to vote in support of this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I would urge people not to support this amendment.

There is just one small correction in something that was said. This change for personal income tax would be from October 1 forward, not from June 1 forward. I think it was just misspoken.

So we're really talking about a tax change that comes into effect after we got here. We got here on May 5. We're talking about October 1 for changing the taxes going forward. The reason that it's written the way it is in the bill, Madam Chair, is that the personal income tax system only supports one annual rate. As a result, the lower pro-rated rates are being introduced for 2015, and they have to be introduced effective January 1, 2015, to reflect the October 1 introduction of the full rate. That's why these numbers for 2015 on the personal side are things like 10.5, 10.75, 11, and 11.25 per cent. When you annualize that, it comes out to the 10, 12, 13, 14, and 15 per cent that will be in place for 2016.

I just wanted to also point out that we're not changing the level at which the tax rate jumps from 10 per cent to 12 per cent. It's at $125,000, and 93 per cent of tax filers in this province as a result won't see a change in their taxes; 93 per cent of tax filers are at $125,000 or less. That 7 per cent balance goes up the graduated levels up past $300,000.

I'll just use the word "fairness," that was identified earlier. Bill 2 restores fairness in our income tax system by asking the most successful corporations and the highest income earners to contribute a little more. This bill establishes a progressive tax system for those who earn $125,000 and beyond. It will be implemented on October 1, and salaried individuals will see their tax change at that point in time. For self-employed individuals who file their taxes at the end of the year, the tax rate will be pro-rated, as I said, Madam Chair, so that they contribute the same amount as individuals who are salaried.

That's why I think we're not doing anything untoward or in any way other than being clear about why we need to see the taxes change on the personal side. I think there is precedent, actually, or I heard there was precedent from members of the ministry, in that a province in this country introduced a change in taxes mid-year, and they went through a similar process as we've got before the House in this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. In listening to the Finance minister, I have no reason to doubt that he believes what he's saying, but I am saying that his argument actually indicates, maybe even better than my colleague did, just how unfair this is because what he's saying is that this goes back to January 1 of this year. It's one thing to say that we're only going to give somebody five or six days or a short period of time to get ready for a tax increase. This isn't changing the rules in the middle of the game. This is changing the rules after the game is just about over for the year and after people have put budgets in place and made financial arrangements and estimated revenues and estimated expenses and estimated whatever other personal and business costs they may have and saying: "Yeah, well, your estimates are no good. We've just changed them because we can."

With all due respect to the government, Madam Chair, what I just heard indicates even more strongly that what is being proposed in this amendment actually makes it more fair, much more fair. For a brand new, shiny government, that I think would say that it prides itself on fairness for Alberta, unless you support this, you're not proving it. It's just the way it is.

I will ask you and other members of the House to support this. It's a way of saying to Albertans: "We actually want to treat you in a fair and equitable way. Even though it doesn't match our particular philosophy or dogma exactly, we're going to do it because it's the right thing to do." I'm going to support the amendment, and I urge other members of the House to do the same.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise also to support this amendment. One of the key reasons that I think it's very important to move the date to the 1st of January is that it has become significantly more complex for Albertans to file their taxes based on a couple of elements of Bill 2, the first being that going from a single tax bracket to five tax brackets makes it more complex for ordinary Albertans to figure out how much exactly is above this amount and below that amount or above this amount and below that amount. It's a challenge, and it's another reason why Albertans would then need to seek assistance of an accounting professional to complete their taxes, which are complex enough as it is.

But I also wonder how many Albertans are going to receive a significant bonus on September 30, 2015. I also wonder how we're going to determine how much income was earned from January 1 to September 30, 2015, and how much income was earned from October 1 to December 31, 2015. Are we going to require Albertans to get two T4 slips? That adds confusion. It also adds, I think, the opportunity for Albertans to shift income into a certain period and to perhaps not have the desired effect that the government would like. At the end of the day, I think we'll find that the difference between making the changes effective October 1 and the changes effective January 1 is probably not that significant and material to government but, I can tell you, is very significant and material to Albertans.

In my statement in speaking to the previous amendment, I talked a lot about efficiency and the importance of asking the questions: "Why do we have taxation at all? What's the purpose of it and making sure that the government is always mindful of the value of the money that Albertans entrust to them? Why do we have taxes?" Well, we have them to pay for badly needed programs that Albertans rely upon. I want to make sure the House understands that I'm not against taxation. The Alberta Party ran on a platform of subtle, measured increases to corporate taxes, 1 per cent, not 2, which would have maintained Alberta as the lowest corporate taxed jurisdiction in the country, which would have allowed us to ensure that we have a low-tax advantage and not created any incentives for companies to perhaps seek a different jurisdiction in which to do business.

The reason we have those taxes is to pay for important programs in public health care and public education. I am a strong believer and the Alberta Party is a strong believer in public health care and public education. We're strong believers in long-term care and home care for seniors. We're strong believers in a strong and robust postsecondary education system. We believe in our parks and recreational opportunities. We believe in strong, equally enforced, and predictable environmental regulation. We believe in infrastructure building, including – and I'll note it especially – flood mitigation. But those things won't be there if we don't manage our public finances well, if we don't deliver government services efficiently and effectively, if we don't get good value for the tax dollars that Albertans entrust to us.

I encourage the government and all private members in this House to consider supporting this amendment from the perspective of fairness to your constituents, transparency, and ease of completing their own taxes when that time comes.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A3? Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, you wish to speak?

Mr. Gotfried: Just brief remarks, please, Madam Chair. I know that we're talking about some key issues here. I know that the term "balanced budget" is not necessarily something that is going to be well known across the floor here, but many households actually try and live by a balanced budget. They have tax and retirement planning to do, and much of that is done before the end of February every year. Many of those people also have no pensions, so their ability and their planning for contributions to RRSPs and to RESPs for their children's education is extremely important. Tax deductions, if I'm not mistaken, are generally distributed by employers in January to set the rates of deductions for the year ahead.

Granted, $125,000 sounds like a lot of money, but if you have a family of five, you're trying to save for retirement, you're trying to save for your children's education, and you're planning for a mortgage, you may be stretched on that a bit, as many Albertans are, but you've made those commitments and you've made those plans for a balanced budget. You have family costs. You have sports. You have extracurricular activities. You may have uncovered costs. If you do not have a pension, if you don't have a health plan, you may have kids' braces or you may have health care costs that come up. Here we're going to change the game in the middle of the year albeit it said that it's going to be in the fourth quarter of the year, but in fact it's not. It's actually going to be retroactive and stretched across the entire year.

I would encourage this House to support this motion, again, in support of fairness for Albertans. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers on A3?

If not, we will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: We're back on Bill 2. Any further speakers? We've got the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair, for allowing me to speak on Bill 2 and what are its short-sighted, misguided, and detrimental provisions. No matter where I've travelled in this province, I have found one thing to be universally true. Albertans are a motivated, industrious, and humble people. We are prudent with our finances. We work diligently towards success. We don't expect more than our share, nor do we object to sharing the fruits of hard-earned labour.

Why do we do these things? Because Albertans are builders. I believe it's in our DNA and our heritage, and it defines this province. We work to build better lives for ourselves, better communities for fellow citizens, and a better future for posterity. We toil, and we create. We strive, and we achieve. We work, and we build. I say this so that the human element to our discussions may not be forgotten.

If there's one lasting remnant of the previous regime that I found truly discouraging, it's the depersonalization of the Alberta taxpayer. I've listened intently to this debate, not just now but months prior. From the previous government I've heard time and time again about the need to find new revenue streams. Madam Chair, Albertans are not revenue streams. We are people: builders, creators, entrepreneurs. We are neighbours, family members, and caregivers. Albertan taxpayers are not a piggy bank to be smashed when the mood strikes nor a limitless supply of blank cheques for the latest spending scheme.

Let's dispense with the euphemisms and cut right to what this is about. This government wants more money and must take it out of the pockets of Albertans. Make no mistake; this money will come out of the pocket of Albertans, all Albertans. Any tax involves a certain amount of economic disruption. There is no such thing as a consequence-free tax, and the cost is ultimately borne by everyone in the economy. When money is moved from the productive sector, it shrinks investment and deters entrepreneurship and growth. This is why Winston Churchill famously said that a nation trying to tax itself to prosperity is "like a man standing in a bucket and trying to lift himself up by the handle."

Of course, that is not to say that taxation doesn't have its place. Society accepts a certain amount of taxation, harmful though it may be, as a necessary cost of running a government. Given that taxation depresses economic activity, the art is in finding the minimum levels necessary for the administration of the province.

We are being told by those across the aisle that the province has not been collecting the appropriate levels. Let's address that for a moment. This fiscal year is projected to be the third highest – the third highest – for revenue collection in Alberta's history. For all the talk of a revenue roller coaster we have seen this increasing steadily for years. Consider that even now, with our economy on unsteady footing and projected royalties down, we are still expected to bring in this tremendous revenue. We have been asked repeatedly by our government to pull together or to do our part. Albertans could be forgiven for wondering why the government refuses to hold up its own end of the bargain.

Before trying to extract even more money from our economy, from our communities, from our job creators and innovators, I would again suggest that the government explore many possible ways to bring our runaway spending back to sustainable levels. Before asking for yet another blank cheque, perhaps this government should produce some results for the vast resources it has already been given.

There's no question that the previous administrations did not provide enough value to show for the wealth hard-working taxpayers gave them. It's also true that we let a fantastic opportunity waste away by not building savings instead of accumulating debt. But for this administration to turn to the people and ask for even more money to finance sprawling, bloated, inefficient government is to only compound the mistakes of the past. Worse, it serves to put the blame for those mistakes on the people, Albertans, who have provided more and more money to the government. The government is telling Albertans that despite near-record revenues, the problem is that Albertans still aren't providing enough. Hard-working and prudent people who have wisely managed their own finances – wisely managed their own finances – are being asked to provide even more to a government that cannot manage its own.

What more does this government need to properly do its job? They've insisted that they require more money from the productive sector to finance health and schools and public service. Given our untamed levels of spending, have they first considered fixing the administration of these programs? If the governing party is so insistent that we have not seen appropriate results in these programs, then I would suggest to them that they now have all the tools and levers of power necessary to go about improving the delivery of these programs.

Instead, the new NDP government appears to be doubling down on the trends of the past. They're continuing the old way of trying to fill the holes we've dug with barrels of hard-earned taxpayer money. The waste and inefficiencies of the existing system have made it seemingly impossible for the government to live within its income at any level, and the only solution we've seen proposed is to accelerate the ever-bloating levels of spending.

You know, a constituent joked to me years ago that the only reason the NDP couldn't beat the PCs was because they could never figure out a way to outspend them. Well, they're certainly giving it their best shot now, and most troubling is that they're giving it their best shot on the backs of Albertan taxpayers and the Albertan economy.

I mentioned how often the government has asked Albertans to chip in to do their part because we are all in this together. If only they could live by their own rhetoric. What a glorious day it would be if only they, our new government, understood what it means to be a part of an integrated economy. Yes, we truly are all in this together, and it's high time that this government started to respect that. A tax levied on the productive sector is a tax on all.

I understand that there has been a fair bit of an attempt to suggest that some people don't contribute their fair share. I understand that there are political motivations behind who gets targeted by this legislation and publicly castigated, but we're all in this together. Not one of us here is immune to what happens in the Alberta economy. These are tax increases on Albertans, first and foremost Albertan people, Albertans who work earnestly to provide for their families and spur growth in our economy. They are creators, builders. They are employers, entrepreneurs and innovators. They are your friends and neighbours.

While it is important to support small business, why should we put burdensome tax rates on those who wish to grow to become a large business? Why should we discourage their ambition? Don't we want to promote the idea that this is a place where one can do his or her best, strive forward with new ideas, and build something productive for the benefit of Alberta and all Albertans?

Madam Chair, my colleagues across the aisle have perhaps gotten caught up in the rhetoric at times. They appear to have forgotten that the people of this province are the economic engine. Those affected by this tax may very well be your local farmer or successful restaurant owner or locally owned oil-service business. They employ others. They innovate. They reinvest, reinvest the fruits of their labour back into their businesses and our communities.

You know, Medicine Hat is a bit of a long drive from Edmonton, and most of Alberta is farther north still. Every once in a while, as I'm stuck in one of those long drives, I'm amazed by the sheer enormity of our province. More so I am struck by the thought that somebody had to carve what we see today out of this rough, untamed wilderness. What we have now was once built by weathered and work-weary hands. It's an overwhelming testament to the building spirit of Albertans. It's a spirit that has lived on for generations and one that has turned this land into the economic powerhouse it is today. In the past, we have actively tried to encourage that spirit by promoting the Alberta advantage, and what an advantage it was for many years.

As you know, the riding of Cypress-Medicine Hat borders Saskatchewan, and I have always found it fascinating to get to know people who have come here during various points in their lives from different jurisdictions. They came seeking opportunity. They came here seeking prosperity, that we had to offer in abundance. They came here, like us, to build something for their families and for their and for our future. That advantage has resulted in enormous – enormous – economic benefits for all people. It was John F. Kennedy who said that “a rising tide lifts all boats.” Well, that rising tide, set in action by our competitive and equal tax rate, lifted the prospects of all Albertans.

The governing party has said much about minimum wage increases lately also. I'm sure they mean well, but as we've seen right here in Alberta, the best – the best – way to raise the minimum wage is to actively encourage and sustain the economic conditions that make higher wages possible. When the economy grows, so, too, do the opportunities for workers, entrepreneurs, and job creators alike.

Now, my hon. colleagues across the aisle will say that our rates will still be competitive after their hike. They'll point out other places that have comparable tax rates. They will say that we're in line with the average. With due respect this has never been an average province. Alberta has always been a remarkable province with remarkable people. I don't want to live in an average province, and, I suspect, neither does anyone else in this House.

If average results were good enough, we just as easily could have continued with business as usual: mediocre performance from the services we pay for, endless expanding budgets with little accountability, and an increasing reliance on Albertans to bail this mismanaged system out. But Albertans expect and deserve better. Alberta should be a place of boundless opportunity, where we are free to pursue our goals and dreams. Alberta should be a place known for its vast wealth, produced by the hard work of all generations since its founding, and shared with those who seek it within our borders and beyond.

The NDP may feel that it has a mandate to scrap the Alberta advantage, but I do not believe that they have a mandate to change the fundamental spirit that has built this great province, the spirit of building, the spirit of creating and innovating. Albertans have never had a problem carrying their share of the load, but it's time we started seeing that from our government. I stand with my colleagues in the Wildrose opposing tax increases to finance the inefficiency and wastefulness of the past when the government, our new government, has expressed no willingness to get this fiscal house in order.

Madam Chair, I will not be voting for Bill 2. I implore my colleagues from all parties to carefully consider the serious impact these proposals will have for all who live and work in our communities and our economy – our community builders, our workers, our producers, and our friends – and ask you all to do the same.

The Chair: Strathmore-Brooks, go ahead.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Is this questions and comments or new?

The Chair: This is on Bill 2.

Mr. Fildebrandt: This is just to Bill 2? It's not questions and comments?

The Chair: No, not in committee.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Chair, I would like to introduce an amendment to Bill 2. I will not speak long to it, but I will allow a chance here for the pages to distribute it to the members of the House.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A4.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. Since the government has not seen fit to support my first amendment, which was supported by every single member of the opposition in all parties, from centre right to centre left, we have put forward another amendment. We believed that the effects of Bill 2 are damaging to all businesses and the economy of Alberta, and my first amendment sought to take some of the bite out of that and to relieve the concerns of small businesses to ensure that they are not abandoned by this government. In the past the government has always portrayed itself as against big business. Their voting against my first amendment, I believe, should be seen as being against small business.

Now, the government has said they can't give up the money of $167 million, so let's see if they can give up $16.7 million. This amendment proposes to cut the small-business tax rate from 3 per cent to 2.9 per cent. That is a cut of one-tenth of 1 per cent, Madam Chair. I believe that we should show as a House, as a democratic Legislative Assembly, that regardless of the ideological intents of this government, we are not against small business. I believe that by voting for this amendment to cut the small-business tax rate by one-tenth of 1 per cent, this House can give a symbolic gesture to small businesses to know that you are not against them, that you want to work with them as the primary job creators of this province, as the engine of the economy in this province.

Madam Chair, let's show that this government might be against big business but that it's not against small business. Let's vote for this as a symbolic act that will only cost the government $16.7 million, a sum of money that they can lose beneath the couch in an afternoon. Let's vote for this to show our support for small businesses.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I want to address a couple of things. The hon. member has said that voting against their first amendment and if we vote against this amendment are proof that we're against small business. Nothing could be further from the truth. In the last election, when I was the leader, we put forward a proposal to reduce the small-business tax from 3 to 2 per cent, which was the equivalent of the Wildrose's first amendment. At that time we felt that the province could afford it. We believed that there are benefits to reducing the small-business tax, and if the economic and financial circumstances facing the province were not as severe as they are today, we likely would have supported that particular amendment.

Now, I want to disabuse any members of the notion that we're opposed to small business. I've met, during my time as leader, with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business many times with different people, and we often found areas of common agreement. So I just want to indicate that.

However, we've been left with a very serious situation by the previous government. Of course, their previous leader, Mr. Prentice, went on television to talk about the very serious situation, the very large deficit that was included in their budget, which we have inherited, as well as a number of tax measures that the former government also introduced, which we have replaced. We have cancelled the tax increases and many of the fee increases that the former government had proposed in their budget and would have been imposed had they won the election. We would have been debating their budget and approving their budget at this time, at the same time. We've replaced it with things that are more consistent with the mandate that we believe that we have received.

Which brings me to this particular amendment. I regret to say it, but I think that this is a rather pointless amendment. I think the Wildrose seemingly wants to prove some kind of point, perhaps that we would never entertain any reduction in the small-business tax at all. That's not the case at all, Madam Chair. We would embrace a much larger reduction than envisaged in this particular motion if we were in different economic and financial circumstances, but we're in a very serious period of time in terms of a loss of revenue relative to falling oil prices. All members are aware of that. So I don't really see what this accomplishes. The hon. member says it'll only cost the government $67 million. I would put that a little bit . . .

Mrs. Aheer: Sixteen point seven.

Mr. Mason: Sixteen point seven. Thank you for the correction, hon. member.

I would just phrase that a little differently. It will only add $16.7 million to the deficit, and that's something that we don't choose to do. Frankly, I don't understand the purpose of an amendment with a fraction of a per cent change in the tax rate. It won't help small business in any significant way, in my view, and will only increase the deficit that the government has to undertake.

With the greatest of respect to the hon. member I urge all members of the House to reject this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do appreciate the member opposite's new-found enthusiasm for eliminating the deficit. If he is concerned about adding $16.7 million to the deficit, perhaps they should bring forward $16.7 million of spending reductions.

The member opposite said that this was pointless. I couldn't disagree more. I don't believe there's anything pointless about showing confidence and support in small business.

The member opposite talked about different economic circumstances. Well, if I am not mistaken, I do believe that the hon. Premier just a few weeks ago said that the economic circumstances and fiscal outlook of the government were more rosy than she had been led to believe during the election, so perhaps the economic circumstances have changed, and they would make this more affordable.

If we are talking about economic circumstances of 2012 and 2015, the government was running a deficit then, and it's running a deficit now. This amendment would cost $16.7 million and provide a small stimulus to the economy. We think that it is a common-sense amendment and that the government would be ill advised to vote against it.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment?

If not, we'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A4 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:53 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: The committee is now called to order.

Bill 2

An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? No one wants to speak to the bill? All right. Are we ready to call the question, then?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 2 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Mr. Bilous: I move that we rise and report Bill 2.

[Motion carried]

The Chair: The committee will now rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mrs. Schreiner: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 2

An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue

Mr. Ceci: Madam Speaker, it's my privilege to rise today and move third reading of Bill 2, An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue.

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wish to speak to the bill in third reading? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Does this government think that Albertans are children? Is the NDP worried that Albertans will blow their paycheques on beer and popcorn? Is that why the NDP thinks they are the ones best suited to decide what Albertans do with their money? Maybe they can help me out. Why aren't the NDP looking for cost-saving measures? If they want, I have a few suggestions. Instead, they just tax, tax, tax. "Raise taxes; give us your money," the NDP says. "We know what to do with it." I doubt that.

We even pitched in. We proposed a reasonable amendment: soften the blow to the job creators in this province. The economic climate is scary enough: tax hikes, royalty reviews, drastic minimum wage increases. We are trying to be the voice of reason here. Let's be reasonable. Let's not tax job creators out of business or out of the province. I feel like we aren't being heard here. Many Albertans agree.

What we really would like is if this government would send this bill to committee. Let's have a fulsome debate on the impacts. Let's do a bit of research. We can call stakeholders in. The Premier can bring in her big-labour report writers, but we can also hear from independent experts and real-world businesses to make sure that we are taking a measured approach. Rushing this through seems reckless.

The thing is that we over here at the Wildrose want strong and effective front-line programs, too. We want families living in poverty to have the tools to get by and gradually thrive. We want to protect our vulnerable. We just don't think a bloated bureaucracy is the way to go. Similar to how we feel about Albertans knowing how to spend their money best, we think the front-line service workers, the people on the ground, know the best way to administer services. All this can be done with current revenues, which are headed for the third highest ever this year.

We also spend lots of money, and we still can't be sure how much this government is spending, because they aren't being transparent. Spending alone cannot be the measure of success. If it were, our government would be 20 per cent more successful than B.C., but we aren't. It's how many people that are served and how well they are served that matters. In fact, how well you serve the needy with the fewest dollars taken from Alberta families should be the measure.

For starters, I'm not sure why this government sees the need to fill every vacant spot at AHS when everyone knows they're already bloated. Why not spend half as much and spend it directly on surgeries? But from what we've seen, this government's priorities are government workers and raising taxes to pay for them. I hope we get a different impression before long.

I imagine this is a steep learning curve for these new NDP ministers, but let's slow this down. Let's get this right. Let's talk about it. We may have some ideas that could help. Albertans deserve more. They deserve a better government.

The Deputy Speaker: Next I will recognize the hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to the House today on Bill 2, An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue. With this legislation the government is proposing an increase in taxes on Alberta businesses from 10 per cent to 12 per cent, a 20 per cent increase. Alberta will no longer be the lowest taxed province for businesses in Canada. In fact, only Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and Newfoundland and Labrador will have higher business taxes, and that's no advantage.

While Wildrose has helped this government already, namely by lending them our policy of ending corporate and union donations – and I can say that you're welcome – it seems not even Wildrose's sound, pragmatic amendment of lowering small-business taxes by a meagre 1 per cent was able to break through the antibusiness armour this government has cloaked itself in. It was an opportunity this government chose to waste despite the fact that their own party campaigned on it three years ago today, and I'm sorry.

I would be remiss if I didn't highlight that business taxes aren't the only taxes this bill raises. Bill 2 proposes an increase in the income tax on higher income earners. Those earning more than $125,000 a year will now be paying a higher tax rate at 12 per cent. The bill's name, An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue, implies that these changes will make Alberta taxation more fair, but this is not the case. It wouldn't be so bad if Bill 2 was the only time this government had chosen to go against well-established, modern economic policies in favour of an extreme, dangerous antibusiness legislation, Madam Speaker, but this government seems intent on doing its best to destroy the Alberta advantage in its first hundred days.

Another example of this government's fanatical antibusiness mania is their foolhardy proposal to increase minimum wages by nearly 50 per cent. While this proposal sounds helpful – and I'm sure it's well intended – the truth is that it does exactly the opposite. Earlier this week the Premier was asked whether she believes that increasing the minimum wage will lead to more jobs in Alberta. Her response: "I absolutely believe that increasing the minimum wage will lead to more jobs." She goes on to say that study after study shows that increasing the minimum wage actually "grows jobs and it grows economic activity." With that, Madam Speaker, trickle-up Notleynomics was born. [some applause] Thank you for that applause. Thank you.

I know that I speak for many in this Chamber when I say that I would love to see these studies. In fact, I can think of more than a couple of universities that would be interested in seeing these studies as well. The economics department at the University of Chicago would, I'm sure, be very interested in seeing these studies. When asked about what studies the Premier was referring to, all she could cite was a Unifor study that even the left-leaning government of Ontario has cashed out on. The Premier also made an unfounded claim that raising the minimum wage helps the poor. That might be true for the poor who are getting minimum wage but not overall and certainly not for those who are getting laid off.

While I won't hold my breath on seeing anything other than a big-labour sponsored study for evidence of her claims, I thought I would share some of the studies I found. I'll preface it by saying that these are studies conducted by academics from universities and not big labour. The study entitled The (Non) Impact of Minimum Wages on Poverty: Regression and Simulation Evidence for Canada, by Michele Campolieti, Morley Gunderson, and Byron Lee, discovered that the effect of minimum wages on poverty for Canada using data from the Survey of Labour and Income Dynamics (SLID) for 1997 to 2007 [finds] that minimum wages do not have a statistically significant effect on poverty and this finding is robust across a number of specifications . . . Furthermore, we find that job losses are disproportionately concentrated on the poor.

A similar study, Teen Employment, Poverty, and the Minimum Wage: Evidence from Canada, by Anindya Sen, Kathleen Ryczynski, and Corey Van De Waal, found that a 10% rise in the minimum wage is also significantly associated with a 4%-6% increase in the percentage of families living under Low Income Cutoffs . . . A higher minimum wage [may] paradoxically result in a significant negative shock to household incomes among low-income families.

According to these numbers a 47 per cent increase, as the one we're seeing here, would reduce employment by as much as 4.7 per cent to 14.1 per cent. What does that look like in real jobs? Well, according to Stats Canada in 2014 there were 2,054,499 people employed in Alberta. So that means we can expect a loss of jobs anywhere between 96,000 to 290,000 jobs lost in Alberta.

But there might still be hope for Notleynomics. Stephen Gordon, an esteemed professor of economics at Laval University, wrote in a 2006 article:

- When minimum wages are 'low' – say, less than 40% of the average hourly wage – then moderate increases won't have a significant short-run effect on employment.
- When minimum wages are around 45% of the average, they significantly reduce employment.

What is the skinny on Alberta's average hourly wage? Given that the average hourly wage in Alberta is around $25 to $29, depending on your source, a minimum wage of $15 is more than 50 per cent of the average, so it would indeed significantly reduce employment. Stephen Gordon wrote a piece in Maclean's in 2013 discussing the theory being pushed by big labour, that minimum wage hikes mean more jobs. In his survey of the literature he found that there was no proof of it and that Canada, even more clearly than the U.S., has shown a clear relationship between wage hikes and job losses.

In addition, in the survey of the literature he cites a peer-reviewed 2012 study that finds that, quote, our results highlight that, political rhetoric notwithstanding, minimum wages are poorly targeted as an antipoverty device and are at best an exceedingly blunt instrument for dealing with poverty. Why? Because most people making minimum wage are not in poverty. They are young people or others who share a home that is not under the poverty line. But young people and the poor are the ones hardest hit when the lower wage jobs get cut. There are many more articles Gordon surveys in the Maclean's piece, and unlike the Premier, I'm happy to table this article that lists an array of them. In fact, I'll be tabling all of the reports and peer-reviewed articles I mentioned tomorrow afternoon.

Don't get me wrong. I genuinely want Notleynomics to do what it promises: increase jobs, help the poor, lead to a stronger, more robust economy. Why wouldn't I? Why wouldn't anyone? I think we can all agree that more people working for more money is exactly what we all want. Unfortunately, the studies and statistics and, more importantly, common sense simply don't lend themselves to Notleynomics, and I fear that by the time this government finally figures it out, it will be too late for hundreds of thousands of Albertans. I believe the changes proposed in Bill 2, raising business and personal taxes, will not result in a better economy for all Albertans and that we need to reconsider these major changes to Alberta's tax structure.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) comes into effect. Are there any questions or comments?

If not, I'll call on the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for giving me the opportunity to rise and speak against Bill 2. The Alberta advantage is a comparative advantage. Bill 2 compromises the delicate balance between revenue and expenditure that Albertans must maintain in order to ensure that the Alberta advantage is sustained. This revenue stream depends on and is maintained by the commitment by industries to build Alberta's economy. We in the Wildrose caucus are troubled by the NDP's unwillingness to heed our pragmatic concerns regarding this ill-conceived proposal.

Alberta is not the place for radical experiments. After British Columbia increased their business taxes, private investment declined sharply, dropping 3 per cent in 2012. In contrast, the rest of Canada saw a 1.5 per cent increase. Madam Speaker, Alberta depends on private capital investment to encourage economic growth. Between the minimum wage increases of nearly 50 per cent, a 20 per cent increase in income taxes, adding multiple new provincial personal income taxes, imposing uncertainty on our energy industry by royalty reviews, and carbon levies that will stifle private investment – we haven't even heard about the carbon levies, if anybody can clarify. Albertans with high-paying jobs like our doctors will leave this province in search of locations with more favourable taxation conditions to work and grow business in. Large businesses will leave Alberta for more favourable taxation conditions, and we are deeply concerned about the impact their exodus will have on individuals they employ and the mom-and-pop businesses that provide services to larger companies.

Alberta will no longer be able to claim that we are the lowest taxed province in Canada for business. It's this low-tax business climate that has attracted business. The NDP are destroying the Alberta advantage. This province will see an overall effect that will end and negatively affect all business to one extent or another.

Madam Speaker, an energy company can drill a well in Saskatchewan or in North Dakota just as easily as it can drill in Alberta. Albertans are advantaged greatly from having the lowest business tax rate in the country. Because of our friendly business climate we have the highest level of investment and the lowest unemployment rate, something to be very proud of. Jack Mintz said that Alberta would lose 8,900 jobs for each one-point increase in the business tax rate.

The passing of Bill 2 will push away businesses that contribute to the revenue stream with unfavourable economic conditions. It will push away the highly skilled workers that are instrumental in this province's intellectual capital, individuals who are a critical part of this province's knowledge economy. Madam Speaker, 800,000 people voted for someone other than the NDP, and they also deserve to have a voice at the table.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Does anyone have any questions or comments for the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View?

If not, I call on the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

7:50

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I believe in a progressive income tax. I also believe that large corporations can and should pay more, and I believe that Albertans are willing to pay fair value for efficient, high-quality public services. That, I think, defines modern Alberta, but we've missed the balance here.

I believe five brackets of personal income tax are too many. I believe a 50 per cent increase in the top marginal tax rate for individual earners is too high. I think a 2 per cent increase to corporate taxes eliminates Alberta's low-tax advantage and creates a risk of capital flight to other provinces. The Alberta Party proposed in the provincial election to increase corporate tax 1 per cent, maintaining Alberta's low-tax advantage, the lowest taxed jurisdiction in the country, but generating badly needed revenue. The same with personal income taxes: we believe in raising the top marginal tax rate to 13 per cent across three tax bands. This delivers more revenue, which I do agree is badly needed, but it also creates an incentive and a requirement for the government to exercise fiscal discipline to ensure that the public services that we deliver are in fact delivered efficiently, to ensure that we get more value for the money that we spend on our public services in this province. That's the balance that I believe has been missing from this discussion.

I also reiterate the argument around integration of the tax system and the fact that we, I believe, inadvertently on the part of the government created what will likely result in tax flight away from the province of Alberta. Those dollars, that are badly needed in this province, will end up in the treasuries of other provinces. That is a significant risk that this government must understand.

In the end, Madam Speaker, as much as I do understand and agree with the basic principles of progressive taxation, ensuring that large corporations pay their fair share, I cannot support Bill 2. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Five minutes of questions and comments for the hon. member?

Seeing none, we'll proceed with Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise tonight to speak against Bill 2. I promised my constituents in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre that I would fight against the tax hikes being brought in by the NDP, and tonight I'm here to do just that. It would seem that we now have a government with a narrow-minded mission to destroy the Alberta advantage. They're blinded by ideology, and hard-working families are about to pay the price. That's why we are here fighting against higher taxes that are going to hurt Alberta.

These tax hikes are going to hurt seniors, who spent their lives building our province and the economic engine that it is today. These tax hikes are going to kill jobs and provide a disincentive to move to Alberta. It's going to send a signal to the world that Alberta is not open for business, that Alberta is no longer the best place to live, to work, or to raise a family. Madam Speaker, that's exactly the wrong signal that we should be sending to the world in a time of economic uncertainty.

When thousands of Albertans are being told they no longer have a job, why on earth would the government raise taxes? It's just plain dumb. When Alberta businesses are facing competition like never before from within Canada and around the world, why would the government raise taxes? Seriously, it's just dumb.

In my life before politics I worked with disadvantaged Albertans. They were down on their luck, but we did everything we could to help them. We didn't rely on the government; we relied on donations from generous Albertans. Now the government wants to take more of their money. That's not being very helpful, Madam Speaker.

In this House we shouldn't be finding ways to make Alberta less competitive. We should be doing the exact opposite. We should be working to ensure that Alberta remains the most charitable jurisdiction in Canada. Taking money away from hard-working Alberta families does the opposite of that. We have heard absolutely no details on where the government is planning on saving money or finding efficiencies. Not a single detail. This government does not have a plan. Personally, I think it's because the NDP has no plan to make the government more efficient. They have no plan to find savings with existing programs or spend existing tax dollars more responsibly. They're just going to take more money from hard-working Alberta families instead. It's shameful, Madam Speaker.

On this side of the House we're going to stand up for hard-working Alberta families. That's why we're fighting against these tax hikes. Hard-working Alberta families need a champion, and this NDP government is anything but. They're not standing up for Alberta families. They're not keeping the Alberta advantage. They're doing just the opposite. They're making us less competitive. They're making it harder to live and work and raise a family in Alberta. They're implementing a tax hike for the sake of their blind ideology. They're playing politics with the future of Alberta and with the livelihoods of Alberta families. It's shameful, Madam Speaker.

Albertans expect more from their government, and we're going to hold them to account. We're going to vote against Bill 2 and not put up with it.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments?

Seeing none, I'll next recognize the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak during third reading of Bill 2. I want to spend a little time considering the effect the tax will have on Albertans, specifically seniors. Living on a fixed income, as many seniors do, requires budgeting, careful planning, and an eye for savings. Based on the sort of budgeting and numbers we've seen from the government so far, they could use some advice from the people living on a fixed income.

I need to communicate to people who live carefully and responsibly what the NDP has planned for the budget of this province. The Wildrose needs to communicate and the NDP certainly needs to communicate why increased revenue is the only option. We're here to advocate for everyday Albertans, all of them. We want to advocate for the front-line workers, for small business, for farmers, for seniors, and for families. How can we do that if there aren't any details provided for the spending? How can Albertans know how to budget if the NDP has no idea what the impact of the tax increases will be? How is it going to impact our seniors?

We have proposed changes to Bill 2, adjustments, ways that this could be implemented without making rash decisions. You cannot tax your way to prosperity. You cannot tax us all to a healthy economy. It's never been done. Give businesses and people the chance to get jobs to buy houses, to keep our economy successful. Give them a chance to absorb the measures by making them less sudden and less drastic. Let's talk to business owners. Heck, even talk to big labour. That would mean that we'd have the chance to fully debate this.

Wildrose wanted to try a more measured approach because I'm concerned about the impact of these tax increases on seniors. How can we communicate these changes to people on fixed incomes, who will be sure to feel the effects of these significant economic changes? What studies have been done? What research? What stakeholders have been met with to consider this question?

Rather than raising taxes, we should instead look for savings. If we can figure out how we can save money so that those who are delivering the services, those that best understand the needs of our communities, are served to the fullest capacity.

Let's go off script for a second here, shall we? Wake up. All right.

Madam Speaker, in my previous life I've had the pleasure of working in communities such as Ponoka, Lac La Biche, and Peace River. I did educational stints in Edmonton and Grande Prairie. I flew the air ambulance and ground ambulance all across this province and all of western Canada, B.C. and Saskatchewan, from the Territories, even to the States. We dropped patients off. I have been everywhere, and I have literally seen every type of habitat that seniors live in. They don't live much differently than the rest of us, but there is one difference. Their homes are dilapidated. Everything is old. The fences and the houses aren't painted. Everything is worn down. They need adjuncts in all their homes to be ambulatory. They need rails in their houses so they can walk around. They need bars on the sides of the toilets so they can literally use a toilet, and they need medications and so many other things. They need wheelchairs, they need walkers, they need a whole lot of things, and they do it on a very fixed income.

When we increase taxes for Albertans, we should be confident that this is actually to help Albertans. So far we've seen no evidence, no studies to show that this is the case. I hope that this government will truly reconsider the decisions that they are about to make.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions or comments.

Seeing none, go ahead, hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I enjoyed the hon. member's comments about his travel and visiting other locations. I was wondering if he could just expound on that a little bit because I gather from that that he's seen how seniors are treated and managed in other jurisdictions. I was wondering if he could expound on that a little bit, please, because I'm thinking that they are and have been and have gone to different tax jurisdictions.

Mr. Yao: Why don't you throw me puffballs like what the NDP throw out at each other? I can honestly say, Madam Speaker, that the seniors issue is a widespread issue right across this country. It's actually a North American thing. There are issues. Not too many jurisdictions have invested in their seniors. They rely mainly on local support, and eventually they get the government sponsorship. There are hospitals everywhere that continue to have seniors.

Seniors live in apartments, houses, lodges, shared accommodations of various types. They live in the basement, a room of their children. They live in hospitals. They live in trailer parks. They live in all sorts of various accommodations. Truly, I haven't seen – some communities do have, like, some amazing facilities. I hope that Fort McMurray can get one such facility because it is long overdue.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It seems to me that we've come to a point here where earning $125,000 is subject to punishment in Alberta, which I think would be interesting news to those people who work hard and invest their time and energy in this province, many of them working long hours, some of them in manual labour, some of them in trades, others in professions, to achieve that.

I'm going to make it a little bit more personal. I'm going to use an example of a gentleman that I know.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, is this under 29(2)(a), or were you speaking directly to the bill?

Mr. Gotfried: No. Sorry. This was to the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Then I will call on you again in just a moment.

I'd like to recognize for the moment the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak on Bill 2. I would like to keep this brief. The term "Alberta advantage" was never directed at the majority of Albertans, just the top 7 per cent and large corporations. This bill changes that. The Alberta advantage now represents the majority of middle-class Albertan families. This new tax system will give Albertans the proper services and infrastructure so desperately needed in our health care, social services, and education. This is what they voted for, a fair taxation system, which requires everyone to pay their part towards moving Alberta forward.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments for the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow under 29(2)(a)?

If not, we'll move on, and I'll now recognize you, hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again, I'll just go back to saying that it seems that we're moving towards punishing people that work hard and are lucky enough to earn more than $125,000. As I said, I would maybe bring this down to a bit more of a personal story of an individual who I think maybe started out well below that. A gentleman I know came to Canada as a new immigrant in 1982 with nothing but an education, which he got at the University of Manitoba, paid as a foreign student to achieve that education. He chose Alberta for his new home. He came to Canada and worked hard – in fact, he worked in an ice cream shop while his spouse worked to complete her CA – and nurtured a dream to start his own business.

He took risks, made well-reasoned investments, employed people, only a few at the start but has now turned his operation into well over a hundred individuals working directly in hundreds of trades and other suppliers working for him as well. He made commitments, both short and long term. He built relationships with integrity, honesty, and trust; struggled with ups and downs and economic cycles; and even carried employees through times of difficult economic conditions.

Early on in his success – actually, before his success, when he probably was not even taking a paycheque home himself – he made a $100,000 a year commitment to a childhood cancer organization. He shared with me that there were many times in the early years when he wasn't sure where that $100,000 was coming from. In fact, he hadn't paid himself at all in many of those years. Since that time, in the late 1990s and early 2000s, through being an entrepreneur, starting out as a small-business man who did not make $125,000 – in fact, he didn't take a paycheque home – I'm sure that gentleman worked himself up somewhere through that period to be taking home $125,000 in the business that he and his wife grew and sacrificed for and worked long hours for.

Over the past decade that same gentleman and his wife have done some of the following things: given directly $1.6 million to childhood cancer and helped raise over $5 million for the same cause, supported a local multicultural festival to the tune of $1.5 million, committed a further $1.5 million to a regional nonprofit recreation facility, donated a million dollars to Mount Royal University to establish a centre for continuous learning, donated $3 million to a local college to establish a business school, and committed $2.5 million to a foundation focused on social enterprise to support sustainable practices in the nonprofit sector.

Madam Speaker, these are the people that we're disrespecting, that we're going after now as if they deserve punishment for their success and hard work, who support not only our economy but our society in many ways that are too great to measure. I would suggest that this bill attacks people that this province works hard to attract: entrepreneurs, spirited people, people looking for a bright future, people looking to establish homes for their families with a bright future. We hear that all the time. That's why people come here. This bill appears to punish those same people, and I object to that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I will call on the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's no secret that Alberta's economy is slowing. A large part of our economy is suffering through low world oil prices. Jobs are being lost, as seen by the recent elimination of 185 positions with TransCanada. When we are facing extended low oil prices, the government should be offering policies that help the economy grow, not shrink it further. Families are suffering. Businesses are suffering. The problems are compounding, and this poorly conceived bill is adding to Albertans' burden.

While the economy is in a downturn, why does this government want to railroad through changes to the minimum wage, changes to business tax, and changes to personal income tax for those 10 per cent who already pay 50 per cent of the income tax? As if this isn't enough, the government compounds the problem by suggesting a vague royalty review as well. A review. Let's be realistic. A review is an open dialogue. This is a punitive action, plain and simple. You can't tax yourself into prosperity no matter how noble you perceive your actions to be.

This government was elected to serve all Albertans. You can't begin a process in the middle. That doesn't help Albertans. It simply compounds the problems they already face. This government needs to start at the start. You find where to start after you do everything to become more efficient. That's a simple principle of business. You cut the waste, cut the inefficiencies, the duplication of positions.

Alberta already runs the most expensive government in all of Canada. There needs to be a concerted effort to make government more efficient. Streamlining doesn't mean harming the vulnerable, as our opponents would have you believe. It can be done without impacting front-line services. It's the logical place to begin.

An obvious step would be scrapping half of the AHS managers, consultants, travel, advertising, and conference budgets. Everyone knows that there is too much management bloat at AHS, money that could be best utilized flowing in to front-line staff. The majority of this could be achieved through job attrition. This would save $300 million, roughly the same amount as the damaging business tax hike being proposed.

Another possible saving measure could be a wage freeze on government of Alberta upper managers and political staffers. Reducing those managers by a third and reinstating a three-year salary freeze on remaining managers could save an amount close to the business tax hike revenues as well.

Why should the burden always fall on taxpayers when so much could be achieved by simply running a more efficient government? Why not start with basic efficient policies and see where that gets you before you start raising taxes and punishing the people and businesses that have embraced the Alberta advantage? If you are struggling to pay household bills, you find ways to cut spending; you don't tax your neighbours.

Taxes are one of the least efficient ways to raise money. It hurts jobs and economic growth. This isn't about big, faceless corporations. It has a lot to do with regular businesses that employ plenty of Albertans. Despite assurances by the government that study after study shows that raising the minimum wage is good for Alberta, they can't produce more than just the one done by big labour, and that's because the studies in Canada show that it leads to job losses.

In fact, a recent piece in Forbes talking about the city of L.A.'s comparable raise in minimum wage contains that increasing minimum wage results in "reduced employment opportunities for the most vulnerable among our workforce." So where is the benefit to having jobs paying $15 or more if there are fewer jobs available? That only helps the ones who get the raise instead of being laid off, and it certainly doesn't help small businesses. The government hasn't mentioned any research they've done on what the overall effect of a 20 per cent business tax hike, a 50 per cent income tax on high earners, a 50 per cent increase in minimum wage, a royalty review, and a carbon levy will have on our economy when we are already hurting from low oil prices and job layoffs.

The Wildrose believes that in order to offset this increase in taxes, the government should work with us and help reduce the burden placed upon small businesses. The government talked about the $600 million, plus or minus, increase in the budget. We suggested, through an amendment, a .1 per cent reduction in the small-business tax, $16 million. When we look at $600 million, plus or minus, we don't know if it's $500 million, $600 million, $700 million. All we asked for was $16 million, and that was too much, too much to help the small businesses in Alberta.

The Premier expressed support for tax decreases when she was in opposition. It is pretty embarrassing that she's allowing partisanship or ideology to defeat helpful amendments now that she's in government. We've tried to improve this bill, but to no avail. Please join me in defeating Bill 2.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments?

I will call next on the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I really in some ways hate to say this, but when I first read the title of the bill, An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue, I kind of liked it, when I first saw the title. When I opened the booklet to see how this government would envision their idea of fairness, I guess I was a little surprised. I think I have a very different idea of fairness than my esteemed colleagues across the aisle. Fairness sometimes is in the eye of the beholder. Sometimes it can be governed by self-interest. It can be very personal. I understand that.

So what is fairness in the context of the economic crisis that we are facing in Alberta? Fairness would be creating an economic climate that encourages investors to come to the province and to start businesses. Fairness would be encouraging the businesses that currently are here to grow and to prosper, fuelling the economy. This is fair to everyone. This encourages growth. In the name of fairness this government has decided to increase taxes on businesses. This is a tax on being entrepreneurial, on being innovative. Is it fair when increased taxes put small businesses under, causing lost jobs and lower revenues?

Bill 2 has also introduced changes to the personal income tax. This is the end of Alberta's famous 10 per cent flat-tax. This government believes that it is fair to take a higher percentage of taxes from people who earn more, but this also discourages people from taking risks and from being innovative. With this bill we are losing the title of the lowest province for business tax. We are losing our status as the only jurisdiction with a flat personal income tax.

These policies encouraged reinvestment and were a fundamental part of the Alberta advantage. At the very time that the government needs to be attracting investors, the government intends instead to scare them away by hiking business sales taxes. Under this bill Alberta, which currently has the lowest business tax rate in the country, will be in a tie with Manitoba, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan, and 0.1 per cent higher than Quebec.

In the course of Bill 3 we saw that this government's approach to increasing spending was to simply extrapolate the PC spending and add more spending on top of that, based on their campaign promises. This bill, close on its heels, brings in higher taxes but, again, without enough background. What is the rush, Madam Speaker?

They are not sure how much revenue will be gained and have not taken enough time to consider all of the implications of these quick tax increases. We wanted them to spend the summer consulting on this in committee, but they are in a rush for some reason. Earlier the Member for Strathmore-Brooks tabled an amendment that would have reduced the tax on small businesses, but this was voted down by the government members.

Fairness. It is unfair that this government is not telling us where the money is going and how we will know if our hard-earned dollars are being used wisely. Madam Speaker, fairness is when you work together and you make decisions that are mutually beneficial. Fairness is about everyone participating and owning decisions. Albertans are being asked to chip in just a little bit more to see us through this period of low oil prices, yet when that little bit more comes from just two parts of the equation, families and businesses, the third part is getting a free ride. That third part is government.

This government has done nothing to shoulder their part of the responsibility. They have not reduced their spending. They have not begun to try to shrink the bloated bureaucracy. I can tell you that I have talked to many people that work in that bloated bureaucracy, and they have come to me and said: there are a lot of ways that you could shrink that bloated bureaucracy. Government is asking the productive side of the economy to do just a little bit more to help out yet has not even begun to address its own responsibility.

We've had some conversations about: what should a civil society look like? I would suggest that a civil society will only be fair when it recognizes the right of all Albertans to freely pursue wealth and to accumulate that wealth free from unreasonable government intervention. Albertans have a right to their own labour. The wealth that is generated by their labour does not belong to the state. It does not belong to my neighbour. It belongs to the person that generated that wealth from their labour. And unlike the ideology of socialism, at least what it seems to believe, labour and the wealth that is generated from that labour is not owned even by the poor. That is not to suggest that anyone in this House on this side or that side wants to have a poor underclass, but to suggest that we can deal with that by simply taking from the labour of hard-working Albertans in an unreasonable manner is not going to solve the problem.

As a citizen I freely choose to share that wealth, that labour that I generate, and I freely choose to pay taxes, but I have some problem supporting a bill or a government whose philosophy believes that it can take more of that labour simply because I have earned more money as a result of my labour. While we all acknowledge that there is very little anyone can do about the price of crude oil, government can and must develop sound fiscal policies to ensure that the economy stays competitive and strong in the long run and that earners and businesses take home wages that they work so hard for.

So, Madam Speaker, I do not support Bill 2, and I encourage my fellow MLAs to vote against it.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, we will go to the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to address Bill 2, an Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue. Six days from now the business tax will increase in this province. Six days. The business community will not have much time to react, but I guarantee you that over the summer businesses will start passing on those tax increases on the goods and services sold to you, to me, to all Albertans. The effects of this decision along with all the other policy changes causing business expenses to rise will be paid for by you and me.

Business taxes, minimum wages, royalty reviews, carbon levies. Some of us, and that includes those of us in this House, won't really notice when the coffee goes up 50 cents or the lunch goes up a dollar or the shoes go up $5. But you know who will? People on fixed incomes, like seniors. Whether it's the minimum wage hike or this tax hike on businesses, it all contributes to inflation at a time when a lot of Albertans are expecting to make the same, less, or even get laid off. It's just not very well thought out. Retired folks know that they won't be benefiting from any minimum wage hike. They're on fixed incomes, so they are really going to feel the pinch of the inflation it will bring. Higher prices and less money to buy will mean fewer sales, and with fewer sales come layoffs. It is a perilous scenario that is already playing out, and Bill 2 is not helping.

The Premier and I have received a letter from the owner of a small health food store in Morinville. The owner already has three employees making minimum wage. As the business owner she is making less than minimum wage in a desperate attempt to keep the business afloat. If the minimum wage rises to $15 an hour, she will have to lay off one or two of her staff, people who can ill afford to lose their jobs. After a period of time, trying to do even more herself, this business will likely fail. This is the impact of the minimum wage hike.

Then we have the pending royalty review, Madam Speaker. The royalty review is spooking investment in the oil and gas sector. Last night you heard the testimony from my hon. colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. The trucks and the drilling rigs are parked in the yards. The workers are being laid off. There is no work.

Then we have the rumoured increase to the carbon levy. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek put into evidence capital flight being under way. Hundreds of millions of dollars to be invested are already leaving the province to more business-friendly environments. You may want to try and blame this on geopolitical events like OPEC, Saudi Arabia, Russia, and the like, and while the price of oil has played a part, this NDP government is also playing a part, a voluntary part, by introducing a whole suite of policies that are antibusiness. Capital is globally mobile, Madam Speaker, and it picks up and leaves for places where there is a strong, stable investment climate.

Tax increases, minimum wage increase, royalty review, carbon levy: this NDP government is moving too fast. Madam Speaker, Albertans I talk to, even those who admit they voted NDP, are in shock as to the implications of their decision on May 5, and they're absolutely aghast to watch the last of the Alberta advantage be wiped away. The Alberta advantage, or, rather, I would tend to call it the Alberta incentive – low taxes, small government, and fiscal responsibility – was an incentive to develop your business, hire employees, and contribute to the lifeblood of this province, knowing that the government would not get in your way. Nowhere in all these pieces of legislation is there any move to cut spending.

Madam Speaker, Alberta is home to some of the toughest, smartest, most enterprising, self-reliant individuals the world has ever seen. Settlers came here and turned the wilderness into productive farmland. Sawmills and pulp mills were set up to make good use of our abundant forests. The oilmen developed the province as a world-class leader in the production of petroleum.

An Hon. Member: And women.

Mr. van Dijken: I'll give you that.

Along with these industries every supporting business you can imagine set up shop here and made Alberta an economic powerhouse. The important thing to note is that all of this was done by far-sighted individuals, individuals who saw opportunity. I believe sound public policy is critical to the success and sustainability of these Alberta industries. Government does not create wealth. Government does not create jobs. People do. Government consumes wealth. Money in the hands of individuals is always spent more wisely than by bureaucrats. Government by its very nature is a destructive force and if allowed to grow too big will impede individuals . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please.

Continue, hon. member

An Hon. Member: Say it again. It sounded so good last time.

Mr. van Dijken: Madam Speaker, I will say it again because I do believe it. I do believe that government can get in the way of building a business in this province and in this country, and sound public policy is critical.

8:30

Ms Notley: I assume you're against fire trucks.

Mr. van Dijken: If you're overspending to run that fire truck, I am against the overspending. I am not against the fire truck.

Government by its very nature is a destructive force and if allowed to grow too big will impede individuals, suppress and eventually destroy wealth generation by ever-increasing regulation and taxation. The government that governs least governs best.

This NDP government is prepared to risk it all while they experiment with Alberta and put Alberta families at risk. This NDP cabinet is taking us on an experiment, and they are doing it with great speed with their socialist tax-and-spend policies. If they are allowed to continue, the Alberta incentive will be over. Taxation will be crippling, and we will be forever stunted by insurmountable debt.

I have received no assurance that this government has any intention to address the bloated bureaucratic spending that has been allowed to run out of control. Rather, they are asking even more from Albertans and are prepared to saddle future generations with their failure to address the real problem, wasteful spending. I would ask this government to focus some of their efforts to improve the efficiency of bureaucratic expenditures. We can and we must do better, Madam Speaker.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: There are five minutes of comments or questions. Anyone wish to take advantage?

Any other hon. members wish to speak to Bill 2? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you so much, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and have a better understanding about just exactly what makes the NDP government a little excited. Clearly, there are some significant divides when it comes to the opinions on government, and they take the "Hi, I'm from the government; we're here to help" position quite to heart and that clearly government knows best and that government knows better than the people, because that's what we're seeing all throughout this session.

All throughout the debate we're seeing example after example of policy that says: we know better than Albertans. If we look at things from large tax increases to the lack of accountability and openness when it comes to, as some would say, the minibudget – others would say interim supply – we see this continued narrative throughout the government and this cabinet that they know better.

You know, we just have to look back through Alberta's history to see that the greatest successes of our province were when the government was doing its best job to get out of the way of Albertans. We saw that with the introduction of the flat tax a significant number of years ago. At the time media reports all throughout the country, both provincially and nationally, were talking about the incredible new era that would be ushered in in Alberta because of a tax rate that was fair for everyone. What we saw through that time was a period of time in Alberta's history not because of what the government of the day did, although they may have set somewhat of a stage, but because they cleared a path for Albertans to succeed. They cleared a path for the entrepreneurial spirit of Alberta to flourish.

When we look at what's happening today – and even the government of the past had forgotten that success and were moving to a tax structure that this government has embraced with open arms that doesn't spur on that spirit. It doesn't say to Albertans that the more labour you put in, the more opportunity there is. In fact, it has the ability to create a disincentive. Madam Speaker, from my perspective, it's un-Albertan because the foundations of this province were built upon men and women who worked hard, who put their families first and fundamentally believed and continue to believe that they know better than government and that they can spend money better than government and that they can make the best decisions for their children.

It brings me great concern that we may be entering into a period of time where we're going to see just the exact opposite, a time where we're turning our back on the fairest taxation method in all of this great land. In fact, you know, we've heard some great comments on fairness this evening, and in this province we've done a great job of balancing a number of different things. We look at things like having the highest tax-free threshold in the province, and you put on top of that a flat tax, where the people that make the most money give the most money. A flat tax creates an environment in which we are equal, where all Alberta families can be treated equally when it comes to the tax system of Alberta, a system that inspires growth and an expanding economy. This government seems so committed to destabilizing that.

We look at a number of their government-knows-best policies when it comes to increasing the minimum wage, when it comes to increasing taxes on hard-working Albertan families, when we talk about royalty reviews. There are just a number of different avenues where this government is rushing to destabilize our economy, to not encourage growth, to not encourage head offices to stay here. I'm not suggesting that they go in the opposite direction and incentivize that. What the Wildrose believes in and what I believe in and what the vast majority of the good people, the hard-working people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills believe in is that the government can always do what's best to get out of the way.

You know what else Albertans do when they're faced with a challenge? Albertans take personal responsibility for the predicament that they find themselves in. Today I heard the Premier get excited about: of course the lack of oil revenue is a massive contributor to our challenges. But what an Albertan does when they find themselves in a bad spot is that they look around and find ways that they can solve the problems for themselves. That's exactly what this government should be doing, looking at what they can do themselves, not turning to hard-working families, not turning to businesses that drive our economy.

But some would say: look in the mirror and see just what the government can do to pull its own bootstraps up. When it comes to pulling its own bootstraps up, that means looking at the massive amounts of waste that we can find inside the government. In the last election the Wildrose laid out a very clear plan of ways that we can cut corporate wealth.

The Premier might think it's funny. She might think that driving business out of the province is funny. She might think that raising taxes on Albertans is funny. What she ought to be doing, Madam Speaker, is looking at areas that she now has direct control over and turning the taps of government to a cool stream, not a full-blast, all-out, $600 million, or in that area, in new spending, looking at the spending streams that they have control of, pulling up the bootstraps of government, just like Albertans do when they come upon a challenge.

Madam Speaker, I challenge all of us to do that because we are spending and the government is spending billions and billions and billions of dollars. It's easy to lose track of just what a billion dollars is. Earlier this week the government passed an appropriations act that had $18 billion.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Cooper: Eighteen billion. If billions were seconds, a billion seconds ago I was barely alive.

It's important to know, Madam Speaker, that we don't lose track, that our eyes don't glaze over when we get fast and loose with $600 million or in that area, when we get fast and loose at the possibility of a tax cut for business. We get fast and loose like it doesn't matter that it was $16 million that earlier this government said no to because of what that could have communicated to our businesses: that we value business in this province, that we value the hard work that they do, that we value the fact that they drive our economy, that they employ our people.

I want to be sure that I, as what I hope to be, a responsible legislator, look honestly, openly, transparently on each dollar and ensure that the dollars that we're spending on behalf of the hard-working families in this province are done in a way that reflect the Alberta spirit. I'm firmly in the camp that raising taxes on those individuals and those businesses that drive our economy is just not that. It's not the Albertan way, and that's exactly why we won't be supporting this.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments for the hon. member?

Any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is interesting to rise on third reading of this bill, and it's interesting to be listening to the discussion that we've had here. I think what we're starting to hear this evening are some of the different ideas and some of the different ideologies that perhaps we can agree on and certainly some of the ideologies that we don't necessarily agree on. That has certainly been an interesting discussion.

As has been discussed in earlier readings of this bill, this bill, primarily setting out to change the taxation structure, both on the corporate side and the personal income tax side, has some profound effects. As we've said and as they have asserted throughout the process, the government has the power to make those decisions and to bring in those changes, which they feel they have a mandate to move forward on. Through various different amendments that were proposed, the opposition parties have proposed various ways to soften what we feel is a negative blow to our economy. Those were all summarily rejected by the government, which is a pattern of behaviour with which I'm somewhat familiar, and I will tell you that there are times when I sat over there, Madam Speaker, where I questioned whether that was truly the best thing to do.

I will tell you now that, sitting here, I question it even more because one of the things that I said in my maiden speech in this Chamber three years ago is that no one party has a monopoly on all the good ideas. It really shouldn't matter if it's a Liberal or an Alberta Party idea or a Wildrose idea or a Progressive Conservative idea or an NDP idea. What really should matter is if it's a good idea. I stand by those words, quite frankly, Madam Speaker, and over the course of the last Legislature I listened to what was at that time a much smaller caucus from the NDP members – the hon. Premier, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, and the Member for Edmonton-Calder – and they brought forth points that were rooted in their firmly held beliefs in terms of how a socially just society should run. You know, quite frankly, some of those points resonate with me because that's the beauty of having different points of view being brought forward in a situation like this.

But now, with the changes in government, this Legislature and this government is in the hands of a different party, and clearly this party has a different set of ideas as to what is best for the province. The truth of the matter is that all of us can probably go out and quote from a think tank or go find a source or go find an academic that happens to have the same leaning that we do and demonstrate definitively that our course of action is the right course of action. The truth of the matter is that in many of these situations the only proof is time, and time will tell.

From my standpoint, I am very concerned about the changes that are being made in this. I am concerned about the rate and the degree to which they are being made. The attempts to soften that blow and to have that blow be less pronounced and profound were rejected by this government, and that is fine, but I do have to agree with my honourable friend the Member for Calgary-Elbow in saying that these changes could have been made more gradually and could have been made less profound and have less of an effect. But the truth of the matter is that we will only know the effects as we go forward.

Quite frankly, there has been a lot of talk in the course of this debate about the Alberta advantage, and that's, of course, I think, what we're learning this evening, that that is a term that means something a little different to everybody, that some people have one view of the Alberta advantage and others have others. I tend to take a somewhat objective view in terms of trying to measure the Alberta advantage in terms of how we're doing economically, and there is absolutely no question, Madam Speaker, that Alberta has been for some time the economic powerhouse of Canada.

The numbers bear me out on this. If we even were to look at the period of time from 2010 to 2013, so a three-year period, according to statistics from Statistics Canada, over that period of time the per capita GDP for the province of Alberta went from a figure of $71,988 to a figure of $84,000, an increase over three years of 17.2 per cent. The $84,000 figure is by far the highest level of any province in Canada.

The next highest is our friends, our neighbours, to the east, the province of Saskatchewan, who had a per capita GDP in 2013 of $73,948, but in the last five years they're gaining on us. The province of Saskatchewan's GDP has in fact increased by 22.6 per cent in those past five years.

When we look at some of the other provinces that we have in our dominion, the province of British Columbia, to the west of us, has a per capita GDP of $50,121, a nearly $34,000 lower GDP for every man, woman and child. That is economic strength, and that is economic power, and that is indeed what affords us the opportunity to enjoy the standard of living, the quality of services, the quality of infrastructure, and the things that we've been able to enjoy here in our province. Contrary to what has been expressed by another member of the House, the Member for Calgary-Bow, that Alberta advantage does not accrue to 7 per cent; that Alberta advantage indeed accrues to all Albertans.

Madam Speaker, if we were to look at another measurement, and that is one of fiscal capacity – fiscal capacity is the measurement of the ability of a jurisdiction to generate revenue within itself, a combination of various forms of taxation, consumption taxes, business taxes, that sort of thing, but it is very much a measurement of economic strength. In fact, it is the measurement that is used by the federal government to determine whether or not provinces receive equalization payments. The fiscal capacity of the province of Alberta is 180 per cent of the national average. Let me say that again. Our fiscal capacity is 80 per cent higher than the national average and 37 per cent higher than the next highest province, the province of Saskatchewan.

Madam Speaker, I read all these numbers into the record, and perhaps some people think that numbers are crazy or that numbers, you know, don't tell the whole story, or that, you know, there's lots that can be hidden in numbers. Of course, I'm expecting somebody to trot out that old quote that statistics are like a bikini: what they reveal is interesting; what they conceal is vital. Nonetheless, what is important in talking about this and why I bring these numbers forward is that they are an objective measurement of the Alberta advantage and the economic power that we currently have. Since we're now going to embark on this experiment that is being brought forward by the NDP government, this experiment that they've been waiting so long to be able to open up the laboratory door, to put on their white lab coats and their safety goggles and start manipulating the levers of power, we will see as we get on this ride of the province of Alberta where these numbers will end up in four years' time.

I am concerned, Madam Speaker, that our economic performance over the next four years' time, because of decisions made by this government, will not nearly be as good as what it has been for the past 44 years. But I am prepared to be wrong, and if I am wrong, then I will say: "Hats off to this government. The changes that they have made have been good ones." I am not clairvoyant, and I am not gifted with the power of prophecy, so I don't suggest that I will know one way or another. I would respectfully suggest that there is probably nobody else in this Chamber that can tell us exactly what the future holds. But I will be watching. The members of my caucus will be watching. But most importantly, Albertans will be watching. We will be watching to see what effects these changes have, the ones in Bill 2, with the increases in taxation, the ones in other pieces of legislation and initiatives that are yet to be brought forward by this government but that I similarly suggest could be highly damaging to our robust economy. We will see, indeed, what happens.

Madam Speaker, I am interested to see how this all turns out. It's a little like going to a movie when you haven't read the book that the movie's based on and you really don't know how things are going to end. I certainly hope that over the next four years this province prospers and thrives because I don't wish any ill, certainly not on the province, and quite frankly I don't wish any ill on my colleagues across the way in the government. But I am concerned. We will watch to see how these numbers change, and we will watch to see how the Alberta advantage defines itself and changes over the next four years.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions and comments. Did you want to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Jean: Yes, I did.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. leader.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I listened intently to the member, and I wanted to have an opportunity to speak, but I've been quite busy lately. I know the members opposite have been wondering what my position on taxes is, but I can assure them, if they haven't heard, that my position is that I wouldn't raise them.

I do want to ask the member in particular that just spoke a question relating to a particular sector of our society that I think will be greatly negatively affected by these changes that the ideological NDP have brought in, and that's, particularly, seniors. I know that most seniors don't work and can't work. Frankly, they shouldn't have to work. The $15-an-hour wage is not going to help them at all. In fact, we know quite clearly it's going to hurt them, especially because it's going to raise prices on things through inflation and otherwise. I see in particular that the first bill that they brought forward was an attempt at a change in democracy, and the second one was a taxation increase to hurt seniors, in my opinion.

I'm just wondering. We haven't seen anything as far as increased housing benefits or more housing being built for seniors. We haven't seen any seniors' benefits at all go up, just taxation go up. I'm wondering if the member has thought about any other particular issues that are going to affect seniors that I haven't brought up today, how these particular measures by the NDP are going to hurt those people on fixed incomes, the 450,000 seniors in Alberta and the million or so that are going to be here by 2030. I was wondering if you could comment on that because that is a huge part of our society and those that are the most vulnerable, in my opinion, in our society.

Dr. Starke: Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. Leader of the Opposition for the question and for the discussion point. Certainly, seniors are a population sector within our society that have perhaps one of the least abilities to be able to respond to the negative changes within the economy. As the member correctly pointed out, many are on fixed incomes. Many have limited capacity to increase that income, and that is a characteristic that is not only common to seniors but is also common to other sectors within our society that I have similar concerns for.

Quite frankly, I believe that some of the changes that are being discussed, the increase in corporate taxes, the increase in the minimum wage, will result in increases in the cost of living in our province and the cost of living of goods and services that are purchased by those groups because they have to; they have no choice. They purchase groceries. They have to buy housing, or they have to supply themselves with housing. In the case of seniors, many of them have health issues. In many of these situations the costs that they will face will go up. It's a little bit like the farmers I used to do work for, where they said: you know, we live in a business where we can't set our selling price but our input costs we have no control over. They would remind me of that when I tried to raise the price of the caesarean section by $5.

Madam Speaker, it is indeed true, as the hon. member has stated, that our seniors population is also growing. We know that that is the case. Demographics don't lie. In ten years I will reach that threshold myself. It is certainly a concern of all Albertans, I would suggest, that these changes don't adversely affect the most vulnerable in our society. But the concern that I have is that the social engineers on the other side will then devise other programs to fix the problems that they've now created by the initial set. Unintended consequences. Certainly, the social engineers are always interested in bringing about another program and another program and another program to fix the problem when, indeed, they caused the problem in the first place by monkeying with the economy.

Madam Speaker, while I may not agree with all the members in the caucus to the right of me as far as the role of government or what role government should play, I will say that government does have a role to play in some of these areas, but sometimes more harm can be done. One of the principles of medicine, that even veterinarians learned, is to first do no harm. That can be applied to government as well.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. At the risk of being a little bit redundant – and I know this Legislature detests redundancy – I have to rise after 11 years in here and ask my colleagues to the right: having had 44 years to find the right balance between the contributions of citizens and corporations and the support services and infrastructure that is needed for a successful province, I guess I would have expected a little more humility from this side, having had 44 years at in some cases $100-per-barrel oil, in some cases much lower, but now in a position of deficit, debt, untold social deficits in our young people, in our First Nations, in our seniors' care, and, in all fairness, in our infrastructure and maintenance. I think it's fair to say that you didn't have the balance right between the money coming in and the needs of a society.

To quote again from Follow the Money, our leader did a careful analysis in 2012 of the changes in our public returns on investment. Corporations in Alberta pulled in profits three times the rate per capita of any other province during the period leading up to 2012. The big jump in corporate profits began in the '90s but accelerated in the mid-2000s. In 1989 corporate profits in Alberta were about $4,400 per person. By 2004 to 2008 the profits ran at $16,000 per person, three times the average of $5,000 per person in the nine other provinces. Balance?

In the 2005 and 2007 reports of Toronto-Dominion Economics Taft reported that corporate profits in Alberta as a share of GDP were 23 per cent compared to 12 per cent for the rest of Canada. So our GDP indeed was growing significantly, and the corporations were taking more and more while we were moving less and less towards serving the people and the infrastructure needs of this province.

I have to say that this is all about finding the balance. Albertans decided that this past government did not have the balance. Whether these folks will have the balance remains to be seen, but they are moving in the direction that Albertans are saying is more fair, more likely to produce resources for the other essentials that we need besides business. We need business, but we also need to start redressing the imbalance between infrastructure and social supports and an environment that is actually properly monitored and where standards are enforced so that the world can trust what we're producing. All of those things have been progressively neglected.

You have to accept some humility, I think, for the state that we're in today and the fact that many Albertans, let alone many other countries, have lost confidence in this province's ability to deliver on its commitment to sustainability, to environmental responsibility, to social supports, and to government that finds the balance between revenue generation and supports for the people and the infrastructure of this province.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Would anyone like to take advantage of 29(2)(a), five minutes of questions or comments?

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You know, much of what I can only try to say but not as eloquently as my hon. colleague has obviously been said. But I think I've learned from some of the most effective third parties around; namely, the Premier and the Government House Leader when they sat on this side of the room. For that reason I feel I must speak. The members opposite are probably wondering: "We got the votes. Why do these guys care to speak? Why do they care to say their piece when they know they're going to lose a vote?"

Mr. Mason: It never stopped us.

Mr. Bhullar: Exactly. That's exactly it.

There is something great about the people of Alberta, Madam Speaker, and that is that the ill-conceived, ideological, I'm going to say ridiculous piece of legislation we are about to pass will not stop the spirit of the entrepreneurial people of Alberta, because all of those people know that although they may have to suffer for the next couple of years, there are proud, proud people in Alberta with strong conservative values and an entrepreneurial spirit that will ensure that these wrongs are corrected. They will ensure that these wrongs are corrected.

I would love to hear from the Premier herself as to why she feels the decision about the location of the Calgary cancer centre, such an important part of the NDP's policy around the Calgary region, is a decision that can be delayed because it requires further investigation and further research, yet this, something that will affect virtually every single Alberta family, is something they are not willing to consult on. I don't understand that. I just cannot understand it. One piece of infrastructure – it's a very important piece of infrastructure; don't get me wrong – that they used to get votes with they're willing to delay, they're willing to rethink and examine. But the fundamental backbone of Alberta's business climate they're willing to mess with in a second? Come on. Seriously? Honestly?

I actually believed these individuals when they sat across the way and said: "We would do things differently. We would do this, that, and the other thing." Now here they are doing exactly what they said they would not do. That's exactly the way they said they would never behave. They said: "We would never, you know, just come into the Legislature and push things through. We would give our members free votes." I remember all the times we used to be – I won't say heckled. Actually, I will say heckled. The Government House Leader is acknowledging this, I think with a certain degree of pride. We were heckled repeatedly.

Mr. Rodney: We still are.

Mr. Bhullar: We still are. Exactly.

Madam Speaker, I would say that I'm incredibly disappointed, not just in the policy positions of this government – they believe in this stuff. Cool. I am disappointed in their lack of attention to the pragmatic reality that the people of Alberta face today. I just cannot imagine, when so many people are concerned about the economic well-being of their families, their loved ones in our province collectively, that this is what they're concerned about.

I mean, there's news from economists around the world about Canada, even today, about our housing, about Alberta's housing situation. There are reports out of the U.S. that there are many individuals, many big funds that are actually betting short on the Canadian housing market. They're doing that because they predict a crash. We have challenges with our oil and gas sector. We have incredible challenges because of the low price of oil. You have some very large investment firms that are starting to predict that there can be a Canadian housing crisis. And they're jamming through a bill to raise taxes on top of that. Even the charitable sector is saying, "Hold on a second here" about their minimum wage increase. Even the charitable sector, the nonprofit sector. I'd love to see how they're going to acknowledge all that. I'd love to see how they plan on dealing with that.

I posed questions to the ministers last week. I still haven't seen the written answers, but they were committed to them. I hope I get them. How are you going to deal with this? How are you going to deal with more layoffs? Where are the dollars for more layoffs? Where are the dollars to make sure that people are looked after? You know, a simple example: your rental accommodation rates. With the increase in minimum wage do you not think rental accommodation rates for apartments are going to go up? You're at a place right now where in Calgary and Edmonton vacancy rates are incredibly low. Incredibly low. So you jack up minimum wage. Do you not think the costs of landscaping and snow removal and maintenance are going to go up in those buildings? Where are they going to make that up? Where are they going to make that up, Madam Speaker? They're going to jack up rents.

Then what? How are you going to deal with that? Do you have plans to deal with that? What's coming next? Do you have social programs, then, that will deal with that? Where's the money for it? I don't remember voting on that in interim supply in the budget of something in the area of roughly, approximately, figuratively, give or take the $600 million range. I just don't get it. I don't get it.

You know, this is a very significant situation. This is a very significant economic situation. To be quite honest with you, I hope we're wrong. I hope this is just a little blip in our economy. I would rather put my head down in front of you all than to see my friends and neighbours lose their jobs and maybe lose their homes. I hope to God I'm wrong. I hope to God all of us are wrong on this side of the House. I really do.

But if we're not, you folks better be prepared. You better be prepared to ensure Albertans aren't losing their homes. You better be prepared to ensure Albertans are not losing their homes. You best be prepared to make sure people have income and that strong, dignified people that are used to working for themselves, to making a go of their own entrepreneurial pursuits, are not left to rely on the charity of others. You know, we have a saying, Madam Speaker. Forgive me, but I'm going to say a line in Punjabi if you would allow. Thank you. We say [Remarks in Punjabi]. What that means is: with the strength of my own chest. We always say, you know, that people succeed on the strength of their own shoulders. I hope to God those strong and courageous people are not left to be charity cases in this province because of these economic policies. You know what? If their businesses suffer, they'll rebuild, but if their spirit suffers, that spirit with which they have created everything they have today, that will do this province more damage than anything.

So I hope that the members opposite take the time – I know they want to get out of the House as soon as they can – to go and visit with at least a couple of business owners in their constituencies. I can tell that many of you are fine people. I've enjoyed getting to know you so far, but I'm talking to a lot of your constituents as well, many of them business folks, some of whom actually voted for you. Now, though, they're saying: "Why is nobody talking to us? Why is no one talking to us? We thought we were voting for something different. Why are they not talking to us?"

An Hon. Member: They don't care.

Mr. Bhullar: Exactly. Something to laugh about, nice to see. Something to laugh about.

Madam Speaker, I guess that's just it. Regardless of what happens – I said this yesterday; I'll say it again – once people get new seats, all bets are off. I hope that I'm wrong. I don't think I am, though.

Mr. Eggen: Yes, you are.

Mr. Bhullar: Standing Order 29(2)(a), hon. member, is about to come up. You know, you could just wait. I thought we were talking about decorum in this House. You could just wait and ask questions then. But, Madam Speaker, no; they choose to heckle. I do see that as your responsibility. I am a member. I as a member of this Assembly have my rights to speak in this Assembly interfered with when people are heckling me. How was that for change? Exactly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, would anybody like to take advantage of 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to make a comment on the definition of the Alberta advantage that various members were speaking on and perhaps discuss who hasn't seen the Alberta advantage. The single mother who has three children and is forced to work 70 hours a week to pay for rent in the city has not seen the Alberta advantage. Who hasn't seen the Alberta advantage? The people who are desperately trying to get into a shelter haven't seen the Alberta advantage. You know who didn't see the Alberta advantage? My family and myself when I was growing up here. The Alberta advantage is all well for the 7 per cent top earners. But what about the rest of Albertans? Where is the Alberta advantage for those families depending on food banks? There is no shame in paying your fair share to ensure that all Albertans have access to basic resources.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, I apologize. I saw you begin to stand. Do you want to speak on 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Jean: No, thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

9:20

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow: you know, there are a lot of people who came to Alberta because the economic structure of this province provides an advantage. I'll give you the story of my own parents. They didn't show up with any advantage in their pocket. You know, my grandfather didn't write a cheque for 20 million rupees and say: "Here you go, son. Go off to Canada; go off to Alberta. I've stuck a bunch of that Alberta advantage in your pocket. Now you can make something of yourself." He came here. Alberta was the advantage. Alberta was the advantage, and it's because of that advantage he had of being in Alberta that he made something of himself.

You've got nearly 100,000 people moving here every single year. Every single year. They're not in some top 7 per cent you speak of. They come here because of the Alberta advantage. They don't have, you know, some big corporate bank accounts or daddy's whatever accounts. They come here because this province gives them an advantage, and it's not always easy.

Madam Speaker, I can tell you that in my own family I remember the days when my mom used to come home from working in a plastic factory and tell us stories about her racist supervisor in the 1980s and how much we used to celebrate when she got, like, an 18 cents an hour raise. Eighteen cents an hour. We celebrated. Then she went on to a window factory, and she worked hard. She worked very hard. They provided us with the ability to achieve a lot. There are millions of these stories out there. It's not government's job to write these stories. It's government's job to make sure that the conditions are there so that people can step up and write these stories.

When things get tough and you slip and you fall, somebody's there to help you up. Everybody slips, everybody falls, but when you slip and you fall and you need a little help getting up, you want to make sure those same conditions that allow for success are there. It's really that simple. That's the advantage. That's the advantage we cherish. That's the advantage we'll fight for every single day.

The Deputy Speaker: A couple of seconds left on the questions and comments.

Ms Drever: That's the advantage we have now.

Mr. Bhullar: Madam Speaker, I'd just like to remind all members of this House . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry, hon. member, your time is up.

Mr. Bhullar: . . . that they can't speak unless you recognize them first. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: That's a good reminder. Thank you.

Any further speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm probably pragmatic to a fault, kind of a practical person, and what concerns me about this bill is that through reports done, through research done, we're pretty sure that with the increase of the corporate taxes, there are going to be about 20,000 fewer jobs in this province. We know that, and that is no small matter because, as my colleagues so eloquently said, people come here for opportunities.

What I hope the members on the other side – I think they made up their minds today. I hope I'm wrong, but I think they have. What I hope they take the time to notice later on is that people don't move as easily as money does. My dad, a welder – there were seven of us kids growing up – used to refer to himself as a working stiff. He said: "We're staying where we are, but if the people that own my company decide that they don't like it to be here, they'll push a button on their computer, they'll move their company somewhere else, and I'll be out of work." That is my concern not just for Alberta but for all of Canada.

Frankly, whether you like it or not, for most of the last 44 years Alberta has been the place where people could come to from the rest of Canada when they couldn't find work there to find it here. If you kill that and you think that you're going to get support from the rest of the country – there are precious few other provinces with the ability to do that. It's a real crime – it is a crime – when you reduce the ability of the province with probably, almost for sure in my mind, a hundred per cent for sure, the best ability to provide that support to the rest of the country and you turn it into a place that people can no longer move to. You've actually done more damage than will become apparent in the first year or two. That's why I won't be supporting this bill.

If you love Canada, if you love Alberta, you should actually think about how you vote here. I know you've got your orders. I know you'll never be in cabinet if you don't do everything you're told. I'm sure you've all been told. But I'm sure that when you went door-knocking and talked to people on their doorsteps, you said to them: I will represent your interests. I'm sure you never said: I will represent your interests as long as it's good for me, and if it costs you your job, then so be it. I don't think anybody said that. I'm pretty sure nobody said that. All I will say is that if you care about this country, if you care about this province, please care about the people that you said you wanted to represent when you were door-knocking.

To the member talking about people that are at the food bank and need help: yes, they need help. The best way to give people help is through a job. The best way to give people help when they're unable to get a job through whatever conditions life has thrown at them is to be helped by the taxes and the generosity of other people that have a job. But when you take away the ability to have jobs in the first place, it all falls down. And that is why I will not be supporting this bill. I genuinely believe that this is taking part in killing the Alberta advantage, which is the ability for Albertans to have a job, to better their own lives, and to better the lives of their family, their friends, their neighbours, and even strangers.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments for the hon. member?

Any further speakers to the bill?

If not, then I'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:29 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, June 25, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Members of the Assembly and guests, let us reflect. As we conclude these last two weeks of our work in this Assembly, we renew our energy with thanks, thanks for the freedom of opportunity to speak, our work here, and for the people in the constituencies we all represent.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, on your collective behalf it is my privilege to welcome former Premier Mr. Dave Hancock and his family to the Assembly. If I might, I would just reflect on some of the service that the hon. Premier has made. First elected to this Assembly in 1997, Mr. Hancock subsequently served as minister of federal and intergovernmental affairs in 1997, as minister of intergovernmental and aboriginal affairs from 1997 to 1999, as Minister of Justice and attorney general from 1999 to 2004, as minister of advanced education from 2004 to 2006, as minister of health and wellness from 2006 to 2008, as Minister of Education from 2008 to 2011, as Minister of Human Services from 2011 to 2013, as Minister of Innovation and Advanced Education from 2013 to 2014, and as Deputy Premier from 2013 to 2014. He also held the role of Government House Leader or Deputy Government House Leader in 16 out of the 17 years that he served in this Assembly. In 2014 he became Alberta's 15th Premier.

I ask that Mr. Hancock and his family, seated in the Speaker's gallery, rise as I call their names: Mr. Dave Hancock; his wife, Janet Hancock; his daughter Janine Hancock; Ally Ismail, a good friend of Janine; daughter Janis Stauffer; granddaughter Miya Stauffer; and grandson Kai Stauffer. Please join me in thanking the entire Hancock family for their contribution, support, and services that they have made, all of them, over the 17 years of Mr. Hancock's service as the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Before I ask for that round of applause and appreciation, I must tell you, if you allow me, a personal story. I had the pleasure of meeting the former Premier in the cafeteria this morning, and he wears on his lapel a pin that speaks about children. I saw him four years ago, and I learned – it was renewed again yesterday – that he first accepted that pin, I think, in his first year in this Legislature, and he's worn it every day since on his suit. Would the House please rise and welcome our guests. [Standing ovation]

If the House would allow the Speaker one additional comment that all of us can reflect upon. If we receive this kind of attention and respect after our service in this House, that may serve as an example of an outcome that we are proud to represent. Thank you, hon. Premier.

I would now recognize the leader of the third party, the Member for Calgary-Hays. I believe you may have a visitor. Is that correct?

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce Dave Quest, in the Speaker's gallery or wherever you are. Dave, I can't see you from where I am. Mr. Quest served this Legislature in a very respectful and responsible and a great way over a number of years. Amongst other things, he was associate minister of seniors. He was one that could always be counted upon to put Albertans' interests first and foremost. He has remained a friend, a supporter, and a great Albertan. It's my honour to ask him to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly my constituency assistant, Sherry Hunt. Sherry was born and raised in Kimberley, B.C., and became a resident of Lethbridge about 20 years ago. This is the place where she met her husband, Aaron, and where she and Aaron have chosen to live and have their home and have their two boys, James and William.

Sherry has been a public service worker for a number of years. She is an avid community, PSAC, and agricultural union and social justice activist. With the birth of her two boys she experienced the difficulty of finding affordable and quality child care. Her activism surfaced, and she became a member of the Children's House Child Care Society in Lethbridge. She has been a member of that organization for 10 years and has been the board chair for eight of those years. She has also participated in a child care advocacy committee with Public Interest Alberta. Sherry is someone who puts her money where her mouth is. She steps up, and she takes positive action. Lethbridge-East is extremely fortunate to have her as our constituency assistant. I'd ask Sherry to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Statement by the Speaker

25th Anniversary of Death of Constable Ezio Faraone

The Speaker: Before we move to the additional guests, there was an oversight that I made, and I would like to use that moment now. Today is the 25th anniversary of the death of Constable Ezio Faraone of the Edmonton police force. I would remind the House to remember that member and his family and his peers as we think about the events for today.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Now other guests. The Minister of Education and Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce through you and to you two people that are very important to me, my wife, Somboon, and my eldest daughter, Genevieve. They, of course, have seen the Legislature before – I've been here since 2004 – but they've never seen it quite like this. Genevieve just came back – she was away for five weeks or so – and came home and asked, "Dad, what have you been up to?" I said, "Oh, not too much, but why don't you come by and see how things are?" It's very exciting for them to be here today.

I also just wanted to very briefly express my admiration for Dave Hancock. You know, I've only been doing this for about a month or so, and I'm just so tired. Dave has always been someone I looked up to and tried to emulate in so many ways, and I just wanted to mention that, too.

If my family could stand, please, and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If you'll indulge me, I also have an introduction to deliver on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, with which I'll begin. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly on behalf of the Minister of Justice a group of 16 employees and mediators from the civil mediation program, a program of resolution services in Alberta Justice. The civil mediation program is an effective and confidential way for Albertans to resolve a lawsuit. Through the facilitation of mediators, parties to a civil suit are given the opportunity to dialogue about their issues and problem solve together. Mediators assist the parties with communication and help them write up an agreement that works for all parties, in many cases thereby settling a lawsuit and negating the need for a trial. I would ask the members to join me in welcoming them to our Legislature, and I'll ask them all to please rise.

Mr. Speaker, for my next introduction I'm going to introduce three individuals briefly, three valued members from my team. First, a young lady named Clarice Eckford. She's been working in my constituency office since February of this year. She brings years of experience working in project management, she's an accomplished actress, and I can say that she always has a smile on her face and is full of energy. As well, Marcela Lillo just joined my team as my constituency assistant. I'm excited to work with her as she brings to the job experience a social justice activist background and working with women who are fleeing domestic abuse. Thirdly, a young man by the name of Garrett Spelliscy, who was my constituency assistant from 2012 until recently. I can tell you that he started with me prior to 2012. He's actually been working with me since 2011, and without his help and support I can tell you that I would not have been a member in this Assembly in 2012 and re-elected this year. I definitely want to thank him for all of his countless hours and hard work for me and on behalf of me. He's done an incredible job helping constituents in Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. I'll ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, if I might be allowed to indicate to the mediators that you introduced to the House that there was a mediator in the province who took on a role far more than he ever expected in terms of mediation. So as they look at new career opportunities, there's a lesser supply of mediators in the province than there was before.

. The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the participants in the Alberta public service policy internship program, 15 of whom are with us in the galleries today for question period. This unique corporate human resources program recruits recent university graduates to the Alberta public service and provides them with formal training, mentorship, and professional development opportunities, with the intent of building the policy capacity in the Alberta public service. The policy internship program gives these recent graduates valuable experience in policy development, planning, and implementation through two 8-month placements with policy areas in ministries across government.

Please stand as I call your name and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. The members of the APS policy internship program are Astrid Arzu, Erica Woolf, Helaina Zyp, Zeo Xiao, Glennis Leathwood, Trenton Broens, Lindsay Salloum, Kam Aujla, Charlene Campo, Bola Sowemimo, Jeffrey Chalifoux, Jesse Vreeken, Jordan Vincent, Sami Brar, and Jonathan Beauchamp. Mr. Speaker, there they are.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through to the Legislative Assembly Sarah Hogendorp and Jennah Martens-Forrester. Sarah and Jennah have worked tirelessly to promote the inclusion of consent into Alberta's sex ed curriculum. As a father of daughters I am a strong supporter of this work, and only yes means yes. Later today I'll be presenting a petition signed by over 1,300 Albertans asking for consent to be added to Alberta's sex ed curriculum. It is my honour to introduce you to my friends and colleagues in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. I'd ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the pleasure of introducing to you and through to all of the members of this Assembly my guest, Leah McRorie. Leah is a community activist with a passion that matches my own: social justice for those with disabilities, promoting inclusion for all people. Leah is currently the manager of children's supports and services at the Gateway Association and a parent facilitator at Getting Ready for Inclusion Today. In addition to being a certified facilitator for the Alberta Caregivers Association, she is the proud mother of three daughters. In recognition of Leah and the Gateway Association's commitment and passion to building a more inclusive and caring province, I would ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for status of women.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the group of people that keeps my life together so that I can do this job. My mother, Barb Phillips, or as she is now known, Grandma Barb; her new life partner, retired RCMP officer Mike McCague; and the guest of honour for me today, my six-year-old son, Finn Phillips-Davies. Finn has recently graduated from kindergarten, where he has very much enjoyed his numbers and his letters and putting together sentences and making little drawings to go along with his stories and, of course, his beloved, beloved movies, that his mama lets him watch on weekends. When I look up in that gallery at his little head peeking from behind that pillar, I remember exactly why we all worked so hard to make change for all Alberta. Please give the warm welcome of the Assembly to Finn, Barb, and Mike.

The Speaker: I met the minister's son in the cafeteria, and he had aspirations for the Speaker's chair.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, we have some important business to attend to, so I would move that we extend the Routine so that we can complete ministerial statements before going to question period.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

1:50

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise for the first time in this Assembly to introduce to you and through you to the House five bright young individuals who join us in the members' gallery this afternoon.

Zachary Gee is a graduate of Old Scona academic high school. He was on the executive for his student union and participated in their model Legislatures.

Darren Choi is a graduate of Strathcona senior high school and will soon be studying astrophysics at the University of Alberta. He has a love for the arts and drama and is a skilled pianist.

Nimesh Jayasuriya is a graduate of Ross Sheppard high school, with honours. He was captain of the indoor track team and aspires to be a neurosurgeon.

Yahya Jama is also a graduate of Ross Sheppard high school, a member of the Muslim liaison committee for the EPS, and director of youth activities at the Muslim Association of Canada. He was the co-captain of the Ross Sheppard debate team and is a volunteer for Fort Edmonton Park, working to preserve Edmonton's heritage.

Lastly, L.J. Valencia is a member of my constituency and also volunteered on my election campaign. Recently graduating from Ross Sheppard high school, he was an executive member of the debate team, a member of his high school choir, and will soon be studying economics and political science at the University of Alberta.

I would now ask that my guests rise, which they have already done, to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. Thank you.

The Speaker: We will proceed with the remaining two additional guests. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all members of the House for indulging me on this rather long day of introductions. I promise that I will keep them as short as I can. With me today I have two guests. The first is a constituent in Edmonton-Gold Bar, a long-time supporter and member of the NDP. This is his third visit to the House this session because he still can't believe that there are so many New Democrat MLAs sitting here, and he'll continue to come until he convinces himself that it is real. I would ask that the House give the traditional warm welcome to Mr. Merle Schnee.

For my second introduction, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and to the entire Assembly here my wife, Tena Trefz. Tomorrow we'll be celebrating our 10th anniversary, and I know that this introduction carries a lot of weight on it because depending on how well it goes, it may have an impact on our celebrations tomorrow. We were married 10 years ago tomorrow at the Sedgewick Seventh-day Adventist church, a house divided a little bit like this one, with people on this side who love me dearly and people on that side who are just learning to love me. For the past 10 years we've been raising three children together. I've supported her while she went to university to get her degree in nursing, and in turn she supported me through two provincial election campaigns.

Now, we all know that the 25th anniversary is the silver anniversary and the 50th anniversary is the golden anniversary. But not many know that the 10th anniversary is the Legislative Assembly anniversary, Mr. Speaker, because, really, I can't think of anything more romantic than to say "I love you" through a neutral third party like you.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll keep this brief as well. It is my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to this House two constituents of mine, Liz Acheson and Ken Zinyk. Liz and Ken are retired today. Liz was an accountant, and Ken was a teacher. They are joining us today just to watch our question period. I would now ask that my guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Tribute to the Hon. Dave Hancock, QC Former Premier of Alberta

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in order to be the first to rise to provide a tribute to our former Premier Dave Hancock. I can see that he is here but just barely, around that corner, so I'll just be leaning over a bit, like this, every now and then as I talk.

You know, there are very few Albertans who have had the honour and the privilege of serving our province as Premier, and I rise today to acknowledge someone who filled this role with grace and integrity and good humour. Premier Dave Hancock has joined us in the Speaker's gallery for this afternoon's proceedings, and I would like to extend again the warm greetings from this government to him and also to thank him for his service to our province and its people.

Now, all of us in this Chamber know that politics is especially challenging for families, and I would like to take this opportunity as well to thank Janet, Ian, Janis, and Janine for sharing Dave with Albertans. I would also like to welcome them and his grandchildren Miya and Kai to this Assembly today.

Premier Hancock, the son of a fur trapper, was born in the Northwest Territories, the first Premier of our province since it joined Confederation in 1905 to be born in the Territories, from which our province itself was carved. Spending large swaths of his youth in the northern part of our province, Premier Hancock became involved in politics at a relatively young age, flirting with the Socreds before making what would be a lifelong commitment to the Progressive Conservatives, although it's never too late to change.

Throughout his youth he encountered many who disagreed with him, both from the right and from the left, as the hon. Government House Leader can attest personally. But Dave Hancock's commitment to his party remained steadfast throughout, and that is one of the things for which I have great admiration.

Premier Hancock served in this Chamber for more than 17 years as the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, a riding in which he was highly respected and extraordinarily well liked, a popularity the longevity of which all members of this House would no doubt be thrilled to have for themselves. This popularity extended out of his riding and into this Chamber, where Premier Hancock won the respect and the friendship of many members regardless of their partisan stripe.

As House leader for the NDP I sat in more than a few meetings with Premier Hancock where we attempted to negotiate Assembly procedures. Suffice to say that we probably disagreed as much as we agreed, probably more, in fact, to be fair, because I was a bit disagreeable back in those third-party opposition meetings, I'm sure he would say.

Mr. Mason: Not any more.

Ms Notley: Not at all any more.

But even with that, I never really understood how well Premier Hancock did his job as Government House Leader until after he left it. And notwithstanding our frequent disagreements about House procedure or about the policies that it was facilitating, there was always one characteristic about which I could never disagree, and that is Dave Hancock's work ethic and his obvious dedication that he brought to his work every day in this House, days that regularly spanned 12 to 14 hours as a matter of course. Notwithstanding the frequent, shall I say, wrong-headedness of his policies, there is and was no denying that they were all prosecuted through the lens of what I could see always was a genuine commitment to providing pure public service to a province and an Assembly that I could tell always he clearly loved.

At the time of his retirement Premier Hancock was known as well for his excellent parliamentarianism as he was for his accomplishments in the government of the day. Now, over the years he served in nearly every cabinet portfolio, a testament to his skill and his character. Through years of growth as much as through years of downturn, through years of stability as much as through years of tumult and change Premier Hancock provided our province with steady and competent leadership in each of the roles he filled, from International and Intergovernmental Relations to Health and to Education. The Member for Edmonton-Calder actually quipped to me today: you know, Dave pretty much quarterbacked the whole operation. That's what it looked like to us sitting over on that side.

Though his tenure as Premier was brief, Dave Hancock nonetheless had a tremendous impact on the public discourse of our province for almost 20 years. His legacy will not be soon forgotten, and I'm honoured today to welcome Premier Hancock back into this Chamber this afternoon, to congratulate him, and to thank him once again for his incalculable contributions to our province, to our communities, and especially to this Assembly.

Thank you.

2:00

The Speaker: I recognize the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege and an honour to acknowledge a fine man and a true public servant, both in this House and his life beyond, Premier Dave Hancock. Throughout his years in public service he never stopped trying to make our province a better place. We did not always agree, but he never let that get in the way. You could say, as they say, that he disagreed without being disagreeable.

He was the Government House Leader for the vast majority of his career, and he was pretty darn good at it. I know he was good at it because he drove the opposition crazy. It is a pleasure to see Premier Hancock back in the Legislature today, but I think I speak for all of my Official Opposition colleagues when I say that it's a relief to see him in the gallery instead of across the aisle, where he used his tremendous abilities to foil our plans.

Mr. Speaker, we can joke now, but as a newly elected MLA three years ago I couldn't help but respect his competence at all things in the House and his commitment to being an effective legislator. It was actually six years ago, not three, that I first met Premier Hancock. At that time he was serving as Minister of Education, and I was attending a school board meeting with him present. I still remember being instantly struck by his experience, his knowledge, and his caring. He was ready to listen to our local concerns and eager to contribute to the discussion.

You see, Dave was never just a politician; he was a public servant. That's not to say that he wasn't good at the politics of public service. I would argue that he was one of the best. But he was never in the game for the glory or the perks. He was here to serve his community. That hasn't stopped since he left office, and I have no doubt his community service will never end. That's what makes him one of the best and is why he is so fondly remembered in this House.

In retirement he's an elder statesman, though I don't think that's necessarily fair. He's more middle-aged.

For years I heard him described as the best Premier we never had, and then, seemingly overnight, he was our Premier. With his party at its lowest point and with faith in this institution and the democratic process completely and utterly destroyed, Premier Hancock stepped up, took the mantle of leadership, and did his best to right the ship. Thank you for that, sir. For that and for his service, that spread across several ministries under three different Premiers, this province and this House have much to thank him for.

Premier Hancock's time as Premier may have been brief, but his commitment to public service has been an entire life's work. Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that his impact on Alberta lives on today. Premier Hancock, to you and your entire family: Alberta thanks you all.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I beg the indulgence of the House to grant unanimous consent so the leader of the PC opposition, the leader of the Liberal Party, the leader of the Alberta Party, and, very briefly, myself may offer some brief remarks.

Thank you.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today. As I do, I first want to thank our current Premier for her grace in allowing this to happen today – thank you; that's classy – and of course the House leader of the government. Classy. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I always referred to Premier Hancock as the master of the game, and I think we've heard a little bit of evidence of that today. Believe me, Premier, that's a compliment. During my time here we've already heard of Premier Hancock's ability to control the current government when they were over on this side of the House, to control the Official Opposition or at least do his best to on that side of the House, and it was a real example of skill. When House leaders get up – and there is none better than you, sir – they typically get out the green books, looking for references, as they do, and that's doing their job right. The one thing that I thought was always different? Premier Hancock already knew what was in there. He was just finding the official reference and always being careful. He was that good.

I did get to spend some time under his tutelage, as a deputy House leader, and almost nobody knows that because he never missed a day's work. He was so good at what he did and he knew he was so much better than me and everybody else in this House that he wasn't about to leave the important proceedings in the House in my hands when his hands were so much more confident, competent, capable. That's just how it was. We heard from the government and the Official Opposition of his ability while he was and remains a tremendous public servant to control the politics of it. He was that good within our party, too, Mr. Speaker.

I can tell you that Dave Hancock was probably on the more progressive side of our party, and I believe I'm more on the conservative side of the party, so even, you know, when we had caucus discussions, we didn't always agree on things. I don't remember ever beating him. I don't think I ever did, and that's a real testament to the man because he does his homework. He pays attention. He was always a competent person and a calming influence in the House, in caucus, and I expect every place else that he spent his life.

Thank you to the Premier, to the teacher, to the man, to the husband, to the father and grandfather. Alberta is better off for having Dave Hancock.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. leader of the third party, I would like to tell you that Mr. Hancock has agreed to give me tutorials in the green book over July and August.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and salute the former Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, the interim Premier, and his family, a true and tireless stalwart of the PC caucus for almost a century.

An Hon. Member: A century?

Dr. Swann: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. It just seemed like that at times.

He comported himself most effectively and respectfully in a number of ministries, most recently in creating the challenging omnibus ministry of Human Services. He tried in all his activities, including his short tenure as interim Premier, to put Albertans and especially children first. He welcomed youth involvement, mostly nonpartisan, in education reform, from which Inspiring Education emerged. In particular, he must be honoured for the dark days when we reviewed unreported children who died in care, convening a round-table with Human Services to address archaic and secretive policies that needed to change in order to put children first.

2:10

An intrepid debater, he gave no quarter, but I always found him informed, forthright, and I appreciated his efforts to open up new avenues of consideration and do, again, what he felt was in the best interest of Albertans even if his party didn't. With extraordinary prescience that exceeded most observers', he stepped aside in anticipation of a change in Alberta. He proved himself a true public servant by agreeing to serve as interim Premier of this great province.

To my former colleague I extend my sincere thanks, best wishes for many, many more years of contribution to Alberta, and for the greatest joy, more time with family.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As usual, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View is a tough act to follow. It is an honour to rise today and welcome this distinguished guest, who has given so much to our province over his long career and who I know is nowhere near finished his contribution to Alberta. While I personally haven't had as much opportunity to interact with Premier Hancock as I would like, I certainly hope to have that opportunity in the very near future. I know he was a mentor and a role model for members on all sides of the House and for many who consider themselves progressives in Alberta and certainly within the Progressive Conservative Party, although all things are relative.

One of my staff members worked directly with Premier Hancock and has nothing but great things to say about him. Natasha Soles tells me that it was Premier Hancock who inspired her to become engaged in participatory democracy at a very young age, when she sat on his board in an advisory capacity at age 8. I guess that's part of the secret to the PCs' long run in government.

He has been described to me as an übercitizen, and his own political involvement started young, as president of the PC Youth at the University of Alberta. Some say that he may have even started a Liberal club just to have someone to debate with. He has a well-earned reputation for focusing on children and youth in Alberta as well as being a champion of economic, environmental, and, especially, social innovation in our province, and I know he still proudly wears his Children First pin today.

Thank you, Premier Hancock, for your service to Albertans, to your constituents, and for standing up and being one of the people who made a difference. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm really pleased to have the opportunity to talk about my friend Dave Hancock. Dave served as minister of eight different departments during his time plus as the Premier, plus he was the Deputy Premier and the House leader. So over the time he was here, he had 11 jobs altogether in just 17 years. That means something. It means that he couldn't keep a job. I'm going to be gentle on Mr. Hancock because he's not here in the House to reply, and there is that rule, which I learned from him.

He has just been the recipient of an honorary degree at the University of Alberta and, I think, one at Athabasca University as well, and that, I think, is a great honour as well.

I enjoyed my time when I was House leader of our caucus, sparring with Dave in the House, and I learned many, many rules from him and had many lessons in the parliamentary rules, which I hope I can turn to some good use. He was the Premier for a brief time, eight months, which he describes as the best summer job he ever had.

I won't tell any stories about our time together at university in the Fiji house. We both lived in this fraternity. I was not a member; he was. They invited me there, and I went to live there for the very affordable price of the room and board, only to discover to my horror that it was the young Tory frat on campus.

You know, he was very effective as a legislator and a politician. During the time that he spent in this Assembly, the NDP caucus never exceeded four members. Once he left, you can see what happened.

I want to thank his family and particularly Janet for standing by him while he served our province so ably and so well, and I just want to say that I'm proud that I can call him my friend. [Standing ovation]

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, looking at the time, I'd like to request unanimous consent of the House to wave Standing Order 7(7) to allow for the Routine to continue past 3 p.m. today.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Energy Policies

Mr. Jean: I have some questions about today's tax announcement. I say tax announcement because it was not an announcement about emissions. Since the specified gas emitters regulation was enacted, no emitters have actually reduced emissions. Instead, they pay a tax to pollute. Emissions are just the way this government calculates this tax. Will the Premier act on the Wildrose's natural gas GHG policy, which actually moves us towards a lower carbon fuel, or will raising taxes remain this government's only policy?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and that's a very good question about a very important announcement that was made today. We know that Alberta needs better access to world markets, and to do that, our government is addressing one of our biggest challenges, climate change. We need a climate change plan that is bold, that is ambitious, and that will bring Alberta into a new era of responsible energy development and environmental sustainability. Today's announcement with respect to the specified gas emitters regulation was just one small part of that. The other important piece was the fact that we've appointed a panel chair to meet with Albertans and industry leaders to figure out a way to go forward and bring about real change that will impact our marketability going forward.

Mr. Jean: One of the things said at today's taxing announcement concerns me. The environment minister talked about incenting renewable energy. That should actually worry Albertans. In other jurisdictions such incentives have become boondoggles. It has been a disaster in California, in Germany, in Ontario. In Spain it got so bad that crooks were actually running diesel generators to power floodlights to shine on solar panels at night. This they did so they could pocket the subsidy. What will the Premier do to prevent a renewable energy boondoggle here in Alberta?

Ms Notley: As we move forward on developing Alberta's climate change policy, what we will do is that we will develop that in consultation with key stakeholders, including industry. I was very pleased to see that the CEO of Shell appeared with the minister of environment today at this announcement along with the head of Capital Power, along with the head of the Pembina Institute. I think that's a good start to show that we're all going to be working together. But we'll do that transparently, and we will consult with all Albertans to make sure that what we do works.

Mr. Jean: There was one part of today's announcement that didn't concern taxes. It was when the environment minister declared that the Energy minister will very soon be announcing the details of the royalty review. Now, very soon isn't today, and the Leg. rises today, not to return until after the federal election. The opposition will have absolutely no chance to ask the government questions for Albertans about the details of the royalty review. Why is the Premier avoiding Legislature accountability with regard to the royalty review that is so, so important to Albertans?

Ms Notley: You know, as we've been consulting with industry over the course of the last four weeks, when we became government, we heard from them, and one of the things they told us was: "You know what? As you go forward on the royalty review, as you go forward on the climate change review, two things that we acknowledge need to happen, be sure that you deal with the two in a similar way and that they're working together." So the announcement with respect to the royalty review will be coming very soon, Mr. Speaker, and it will be a very transparent, open process. Members opposite as well as members on this side and all Albertans will be able to hold that process accountable as we move forward.

Mr. Jean: But absolutely no accountability here.

Legislative Process

Mr. Jean: Today is the last day of this session, so let's sum up. Bill 3: the government claims they were being champions of democracy by bringing Bill 3, their minibudget, to the Assembly for debate, but as soon as their numbers were tabled, they limited debate at every single stage. It took them no time to fall back on using the PC playbook to limit debate in this place. Will the Premier commit to end the shameful practices by accepting the Wildrose's 12 proposals to improve democracy in this Assembly for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the interim supply bill the rules that were used are rules that have been in place for a long time, and there were no special rules used to limit debate. With respect to Bill 2 debate could have gone on much longer. There were certainly no efforts made by this opposition to limit debate. So the length of debate that we enjoyed was the length of debate that the opposition chose to engage in. But moving forward, I know that my House leader and the House leaders opposite will be meeting to talk about a number of different initiatives that we can take to improve the way this House functions, and I look forward to hearing from them about what their suggestions are.

Mr. Jean: Chose? We had no choice. The orange is the new blue. PC 2.0.

Let's go to Bill 2. When the NDP was in opposition, the Premier and the Government House Leader were strong advocates for consultation and thorough debate, but that is not what we see now. That is not what we have. On Bill 2 they didn't want any consultation. The Finance minister actually said that he couldn't consider even a symbolic tax cut without a fiscal plan. But he didn't need a fiscal plan to bring in the largest tax hike in Alberta's history. Will the Premier admit that this Legislative session was called just so her caucus could rubber-stamp a record tax hike?

Ms Notley: As I've said before, this session was called because we needed to get interim supply because otherwise we would have run out of money in June, and that would not have been good governance. The other option was special warrants, in which case none of us would have been here and we wouldn't have been able to spend all this great time getting to know each other. You know, it just wouldn't have been as fun. So this was the happy medium. The other thing would have been to bring in a budget with four weeks' notice, and that, quite frankly, would not have been responsible either. But let me just say this. In terms of debate on Bill 2 there was a provincial election on it. We were very clear in that election about exactly what we were going to do, and Albertans made it very clear about the way they thought we should go.

Mr. Jean: Well, I'm glad to see the Premier admits that this is not responsible either.

Now Bill 1. The NDP in opposition used to believe that it was the Assembly's duty and responsibility to get legislation right the first time. Wildrose supported the intent of Bill 1. After all, it was our idea. But when we presented amendments designated to close NDP loopholes which violate the very spirit of Bill 1, this Notley government said no. That might be because the NDP uses those very same loopholes in every election. Is the Premier counting on these loopholes to help the NDP in the Calgary-Foothills by-election?

Ms Notley: Well, I'm glad that this issue came up in question period because it gives me an opportunity to correct the members opposite with more people listening. Let me be perfectly clear. It has been the position of the Alberta NDP going back to at least 2004 to ban corporate and union donations. The Wildrose and the various parties that preceded it did not exist then, so it was not your policy. It was our policy, and I'm very glad that you came alongside with that.

With respect to the other issues, that were good issues, that you raised, the fact of the matter is that election financing reform is complicated and complex, and we believe quite strongly that it requires everybody's engagement, including the engagement of . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Child Protective Services

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A couple of days ago I stood on the steps of the Legislature with colleagues from all parties. We heard stories from parents who lost their children in provincial care. I can't imagine the heartache, and I know that everyone in this House wants to improve how we protect our kids. We want to work with the government to improve the system, and we want to be able to tell parents the mistakes of the past that we learned from. Will the minister plan to improve and strengthen protective services for children in care?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Actually, I was also on the steps of the Legislature on that day. It's a really sad and concerning situation. I mentioned there as well that we are committed to improving the system and we are committed to bringing in more independent oversight and transparency so that the public knows what's happened and so that we can improve the existing systems.

Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: I appreciate the government's thoughts, and I know our colleagues know that we need a better system. It's a system that is often detailed with stories of tragedy. We are wondering about the situation of a child who was removed from one dangerous situation and later died in provincial care. The child was left unchecked for five hours. There is a provincial inquiry into the death of this child. Will the minister update us when the inquiry is complete, and how will we be changing this policy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Member, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. When a child dies in our care, it's a heartbreaking situation. As the member identified, there is an inquiry going on. I think it's inappropriate at this point for me to comment on that inquiry, and I think that if there are any recommendations, we are committed to improving the system, and we will do that.

Mrs. Pitt: When it comes to the children in this province, let's put our politics aside. We need to protect our kids. What is the plan moving forward so this will never happen again?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Member. I agree that the ministry deals with vulnerable Albertans, and it's not a partisan thing that government has a responsibility, we as a society have a responsibility to provide for and protect those. In that spirit, I think I've reached out to the member and the member from the third party as well, and we'll make sure that we sit together and we reach out to our partners and we put together a plan that works for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Energy Policies (continued)

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, this morning the Environment minister held a media conference. A journalist asked if the current rules requiring carbon levy funds to be spent in Alberta would continue, or would they be able to be spent elsewhere, to which the minister replied: I am open to that. The government won't help industry develop pipelines to export product, but it seems open to exporting Alberta tax dollars and, by extension, jobs. Will the Premier rein in her minister before she actually does this?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said earlier, the plan going forward – there's been no plan set to change the way the emissions management fund is expended or where it is expended. What we have done is ensured that the contribution to that fund will slowly increase over the next two years, while at the same time we're working in partnership with industry, with stakeholders, with community members in order to develop a comprehensive climate change strategy that will (a) bring about positive outcomes for Albertans and (b) improve our ability to access markets with respect to our product outside of this country.

Mr. McIver: It sounds like the Premier is open to that, too, Mr. Speaker, because she didn't say no.

Mr. Speaker, given that the previous government was proposing increasing the stringency levels from 12 to 24 per cent and what was presented this morning, in my understanding, may actually water that down, certainly not increase it – I know that the minister wants to impress her fancy foreign friends in Paris later on this year, but why, in order to do that, would she weaken and water down the rules that a previous Environment minister was going to bring in?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, when it comes to climate change, this government will do better than previous governments, and I rise today to report to the House that we have proposed an increase in specified gas emitters regulation from $15 to $30 per tonne by 2017 and increasing the stringency to 20 per cent. These numbers have not come as a surprise to industry. There have been conversations on this topic since we assumed office, and we look forward to future conversations that we are going to be having with industry, environmental groups, and Albertans as we move forward.

Thank you.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the government's plan looks like a rehash environmentally of what was going to happen anyway except that we're seeing more rules and more regulations, undoing the Alberta Energy Regulator, adding a royalty review, higher taxes, higher cost of doing business. To the Premier: how can you reassure hard-working Albertans that they're not going to lose a whole lot of their hard-earned dollars with these increased costs that have to be passed along to them in the form of higher energy costs, and are you actually going to help with pipelines so that if better and cleaner energy is developed, we'll be able to sell it to someone?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think there are about 19 questions in there. It's going to be a little bit hard to get to all of them.

I think it's interesting that the hon. leader of the third party, on one hand, is suggesting that we didn't go far enough with the tax with respect to the specified gas emitters regulation and then, on the other hand, he's suggesting that we're going too far in terms of some of the other things that we're discussing. What we've decided to do is to move forward on the changes that his former government delayed putting into place for years and years and years. They talked a lot but never actually put them into place. So we've moved forward with those in consultation with industry. In the meantime, we're working with industry and other stakeholders about other important issues . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Health Care System

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, we've talked about a lot of issues in this brief session, but there's been very little discussion about health care, which is consistently the number one concern for Albertans. Our province has the highest per capita health spending in Canada, but outcomes are in the middle of the pack, and wait times are unacceptable. Twenty per cent of Albertans do not have a family doctor, and, as a result, our emergency rooms are badly overcrowded. To the Premier. We know that the only thing that will bend the cost curve of health care over time is consistent access to primary care. Do you support the primary care network model, and if not, what is your plan for primary care?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I mean, it is certainly very true that we need to do a better job ensuring that Albertans have their health care needs met when they need them, and there are a number of different tools at our disposal. We talked in the election about the need to do a better job with respect to long-term care. We talked about ensuring that we didn't willy-nilly drag a billion dollars out of the system without ever managing to know where it would come from. We also know, of course, that primary care up front is the best way to manage health care. So we're going to be meeting with stakeholders to talk about how we can improve outcomes through primary care going forward.

Mr. Clark: So no answer on PCNs, whether or not you support primary care. More meetings with stakeholders.

The Minister of Finance has recently confirmed that half of Alberta's budget goes to wages and benefits, and I want to ensure that our health care system is viable and sustainable over the long term. More money isn't always the answer, but better management always is. Again to the Premier: what specific plans do you have to ensure that the management of Alberta Health Services is efficient and effective?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that we felt we needed to do in order to improve outcomes in health care and to get better care for the amount of money that we are investing in health care was to begin by establishing a sense of stability. We have a health care system which has been in complete chaos for several years now, and with that chaos comes waste. Stability was the first order of the day. Then, I went ahead and appointed a Minister of Health in whom I have complete faith, who

I know is working, day in, day out, hours every day with stakeholders to find ways to ensure that we get better outcomes going forward.

Mr. Clark: Again not much of an answer. I'll try one more time.

To the Premier. Your Environment minister has taken decisive action on an important and complex file, so there's at least a plan to come up with a plan. What's taking so long in health care?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I'm happy to update the Assembly on some of the work we've done. As was mentioned by the Premier, I've been on the job for four weeks. I've had the honour of meeting with the AMA as well as a number of other stakeholders as well as the PCN physician leads. We'll be working with them in the months ahead to make sure that they're being financed in a way that's sustainable, that they're not sitting on $70 million of reserves moving forward, and that Albertans get the best possible care when they need it where they need it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Acadia.

Midwifery Services

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is experiencing a baby boom, with over 55,000 babies born annually in our province. Given that Alberta midwives offer an alternative to obstetrician care for low-risk pregnancies and birth, to the Minister of Health: what is this government's position about the value Alberta's midwives bring to our system?

Ms Hoffman: I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question. Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to say that this government is a strong proponent of midwifery and of choice for women when it comes to that exciting and important time in their lives. Today midwives support thousands of pregnancies in our province. Midwives also have their own profession body, an excellent program at Mount Royal University, and they often work in teams with nurses and other physicians and caregivers to welcome new babies into Alberta, and we're proud of that.

Ms Payne: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that many Alberta women are on wait-lists for midwifery care, can you explain what barriers may be preventing Albertans from accessing this important, publicly-funded service?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question and to the member for raising it. Midwifery became funded under the previous government in 2009. I know a lot of women who are grateful for that. The number of babies delivered by midwives since that time has doubled. It's good progress, and this government is committed to doing more. We have recent graduates from Mount Royal who we know are looking outside our province, potentially, for a placement because of some of the limitations around funding here in Alberta. That's something I will be addressing with my colleagues in the months to come because, of course, we want to ensure choice and safe deliveries for all Albertans.

2:40

Ms Payne: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: will your ministry review the funding model for maternity care so that dollars follow babies and that more mothers are allowed the opportunity to choose midwifery care if that's the best option for them and their families?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not the only woman who knows a number of mothers out there who called a midwife before they called the father because midwives are in such short demand in this province. Midwives have been doing a lot of work through the Alberta Association of Midwives on behalf of their association as well as the moms in demand of their service. Because of the fact that this House is working to reverse the cuts that were being proposed by the last government, we have some money to actually increase funding, not significantly, but we will increase funding in the short term between now and the fall budget. I look forward to having an opportunity to discuss this more thoroughly when we bring forward a detailed budget in the fall.

Health and Seniors' Care in Strathmore-Brooks

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, in Strathmore-Brooks health care and seniors' care is a serious concern. Our hospitals are older than most members of this Legislature. While the previous government promised for years to upgrade and maintain our facilities, residents and especially seniors continue to go underserved. They have been promised action by the government for over a decade, but it has not delivered. We've been told that the money has been budgeted, but we've seen nothing. Will the Minister of Health commit to my constituents that she will follow through on the long-standing promises made to them for health and seniors' care in Strathmore-Brooks?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the question. I'm really glad that we have a government that's actually committed to reversing the cuts. They obviously would have seriously impacted the ability to deliver.

What wasn't impacted in the weeks leading up to the last election was the number of press releases that went out – I believe it was eight in six weeks – specifically talking about infrastructure announcements without actually having any money budgeted for the actual delivery of those health care services in those regions. I won't be making promises that this House can't keep. At this point you're going to have to stay tuned, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's answer and also her generous promotion to my position in this House.

A specific case in my constituency is the hospital in Bassano. Since the Newell Foundation has worked with community stakeholders to produce a detailed plan for the construction of a new seniors' care facility that includes acute-care beds and continuing care units and all that is needed is the final follow-through from the province, will the Minister of Seniors commit to working with the Newell Foundation and myself to ensure that this critical project does not fall through the cracks?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you to the member for the question, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. What she giveth in terms of promotion, she can taketh away, I guess. My apologies for using the wrong title, hon. member.

I look forward to receiving correspondence from you on this issue, and I will certainly follow up with my department to make sure that we can provide you with updated information on the project.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, I think we can all appreciate that the ministers are new in their portfolios, and we will be patient, but we will continue to do our job and press them.

The Strathmore hospital is the busiest hospital in rural Alberta and does not provide adequate and accessible care for seniors. Since the former government promised to upgrade the facility in 1997, 2008, and in 2012 and all we have seen are large novelty cheques and building Alberta signs in the empty field next door, will the Minister of Health commit to working with myself and the municipalities of Strathmore and Wheatland on renewing the Strathmore hospital?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you to the member for the question. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to having an opportunity to be able to work collaboratively with the Minister of Infrastructure and our cabinet to bring forward a sunshine list that really reflects the needs of Albertans. In the fall we expect that we'll be able to do that, and we'll be able to have a dialogue with all members of this House. In the interim I encourage members at any time to send correspondence to me about questions and concerns that they have, and we'll certainly do our best to get back to them in a timely way.

The Speaker: I must express to the House cautious optimism, but the Speaker appreciates that today I can hear most of the discussions.

Constituency Office Administration

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, constituency assistants are the non-partisan eyes and ears helping connect MLAs to the people in their constituencies. They perform vital work, helping Albertans on a daily basis. So I'm surprised to hear from some job seekers that they need to submit their resumes to an individual who is serving as the executive director to the Alberta New Democratic Party and they have to be NDP partisans. My question today is to the Premier. Is this the way her government is going to conduct itself going forward?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe there was a period of time when the executive director of the NDP was on a leave of absence from the NDP and was assisting my office in terms of helping with the staffing processes around our brand new MLAs, who didn't have constituency office staff. I also believe that he has returned to his previous position and he no longer has anything to do with that hiring process and that, in fact, there are people in my office – I think now they're in the caucus office – who are assisting in providing support to MLAs around the process of hiring constituency office staff.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, constituency assistants are also being told that they're going to be unionized, and some have been told that they need to do business such as hotel bookings and catering with unionized shops. Again to the Premier: is this the new way of doing business?

Ms Notley: In fact, for the last many, many years – I think it's probably been about two decades; it would go back to the '80s – the NDP caucus has had a voluntarily recognized relationship with their staff that looks like a union. It is not technically a union because they can't be unionized underneath the legislation, but we have agreed to treat it like a union. That's been the case for about 25 years now. That applied to our previous staff, and with respect to incoming constituency assistants, we are also offering them access to the same rights.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have copies of job postings for the constituencies of Calgary-Cross, Banff-Cochrane, Edmonton-Gold Bar, Edmonton-Manning, and more. I will table a copy of these in the House at the appropriate time. Given that each of these requires applicants to send their resumé to an individual who is the executive director of the NDP, my question again to the Premier. NDP credentials, only union shops get business, the party hiring their assistants, unionizing our constituency assistants: is Alberta's new motto Go Union Or Go Home?

Ms Notley: Again, as I've said, I don't believe that the postings say, "Submit your application to the executive director of the NDP." I think the postings say, "Submit your application to [this person]," who at that point was not fulfilling that role. However, the key issue here is that it is the motto of this government that our employees will be treated with the respect and the dignity that is often employed with respect to people who are members of unions. We've done that for a long time. Why would we change the way we do that now?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Environment Minister

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A short, simple, but very important question. The Minister of Justice is a lawyer, so I'm sure she knows that a lawyer can never, ever counsel or advise someone to break the law. Does the Minister of Justice think that the same standards should apply for the ministers of the Crown?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the Minister of Justice. I'm not quite sure what the premise of that question is asking as it was quite vague and a hypothetical question. I'm happy to respond to questions around our government and our policies, but I don't have an answer for a hypothetical question.

The Speaker: Could the hon. member try and make it more clear?

Mr. Cyr: Given that Mike Hudema said that the minister of environment directly contributed to the content of a book and since this book actually advocates for breaking federal criminal laws and provincial law, will the minister apologize to Albertans for contributing content to a book that counsels breaking the law?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that question. I'm sorry that the Wildrose feels the need to continue its campaign of guilt by association, but it strikes me, Mr. Speaker, as a little hypocritical. One of their members sitting on the front bench here deliberately violated the law by trying to sell his grain and actually was . . .

Mr. Strankman: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order has been noted by the Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Mason: It's a little hypocritical in my view, Mr. Speaker, for them to ask a question like that, which is entirely hypothetical, when in fact members of their own caucus have deliberately flouted the law.

The Speaker: Hon. member, we are going to be addressing at least a portion of this matter at the end of our discussion day on the point of order that was raised yesterday. So I would remind the House that I may have been too optimistic in my hopes that the decorum between the two sides would continue.

Mr. Cyr: Given that this is an easy problem for the minister to get out of, she needs to apologize. She needs to move on, needs to commit to being a moderate, balanced minister. But instead of an apology, we get a story about her role. Will the minister apologize to Albertans for her direct contribution in writing a book that asks people to blatantly break the law?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, I think it's a new low for this session to ask the question. The explanation was given in a point of order yesterday, and the minister has nothing to apologize for.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past couple of days we've heard from the NDP that the PCs are to blame for layoffs and lack of investor confidence because they didn't diversify the economy. To the Finance minister. Can he explain exactly: how does raising taxes help diversify our economy?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much to the hon. minister across the floor.

An Hon. Member: Member.

Mr. Ceci: I'll taketh away, too.

Hon. member across the floor, we are addressing stable and fair taxes in this province so that we can plan a fiscal plan going forward. In the fall we'll have our economic plan, come forward with that. Without doing stable revenues, we'll be on the roller coaster, up and down on oil revenues, and that's not good for anybody, including the whole province.

The Speaker: I would remind the ministers that at the rate you're going, the numbers are going to be changing here.

Mr. Cooper: Given that raising taxes on hard-working Albertan families in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills will hurt our economy and destroy the Alberta advantage we all know and love and given that I hear from my constituents that hiking the minimum wage to $15 an hour is going to destroy jobs and small businesses, why is the minister responsible for creating jobs, killing jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our government believes very much in supporting people who are working here in Alberta. Right now we're investing $40 million into education programs, apprenticeships to help people have good jobs here in Alberta. Telus is investing $1 billion to create 1,500 jobs here in Edmonton. Alberta is still a great province for businesses to work in.

Mr. Cooper: Given that I have heard from Connie, a small-business owner in Olds who's going to be forced to close her café, the Bean Brokers, due to this massive minimum wage hike and 10 people will lose their jobs, why does this government believe in putting politics before the livelihoods of hard-working Albertan families?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We as a government care very much for working Albertans. We want to make it more fair, especially for the most vulnerable workers in this province, the single moms who are supporting their kids on very low incomes with a high cost of living in this province. We know that giving money to the most vulnerable people by raising the minimum wage prudently and in a phased-in way is going to support all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Nonprofit Organization Employee Wages

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and good afternoon to the minister of jobs. I'd like to follow up on that particular response. If the minister says that they'll be looking to support Albertans in every way, the average nonprofit that employs 20 people that'll have to have a 50 per cent increase in wages is going to have to come up with $192,000 a year. How, Minister, will you support these nonprofits?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Of course, we care very much about the significant contributions of nonprofits and the work that they do to help people here in Alberta. We know that raising the minimum wage and working with nonprofits, who we've already consulted with and will do further consultations forward to do a phased-in approach prudently, will support everyone.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If that's how you show people you care about them, I think a lot of people really don't want you caring about them anymore, Minister. We have 23,000 nonprofits in this province. If just 5,000 of them are affected, that is nearly $1 billion in additional funding that they will require. To the Minister of Finance. That is money no one is offering, sir. Where will you come up with this?

Mr. Ceci: I'm not sure I accept the premise that the hon. member is putting forward. But I do want to say that in this latest interim supply there was an increase to a very important program that nonprofits rely on, and that's called FCSS. We'll continue to do that if I have anything to do with it going forward, year after year after year.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That, Minister, was a few million. Here we're talking about to close to $1 billion. Now, given that the vast majority of these nonprofits are not unionized, is this an attempt by the government to invade territory that they currently don't have power and control over because of the entrepreneurial spirit of many of our nonprofits and unionize and bring further work into the government's direct purview?

Mr. Ceci: I wasn't sure who was going to get to respond to that, but I will say that I don't think that grand plan that the hon. member is talking about is anything close to what this front bench or this caucus is contemplating. Our grand plan is to support Albertans, to support business, and to make sure we balance the budget going forward in four years.

3:00 Transportation Infrastructure Priorities

Mr. Piquette: Mr. Speaker, I know all members of the House were deeply saddened to hear of two recent collisions on highway 63, with one resulting in a fatality. Could the Minister of Transportation please update the House on our government's progress in improving safety on highway 63?

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much for that question, hon. member. Mr. Speaker, I do share the member's sadness and want to express my condolences to the family of anyone who was involved in that terrible collision on highway 63. Improving safety on that highway is a priority for our government, and Alberta Transportation is working hard to ensure improvements are on track. I can inform the House that 70 per cent of the twinning between Grassland and Fort McMurray is expected to be completed by this fall.

The Speaker: Hon. member, first supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the importance of highway 63 to moving people and goods to Fort McMurray and other communities in northern Alberta, could the minister please update the House on longer term measures to improve safety on highway 63?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member. We can expect big changes on highway 63 this year and next. By the end of this construction season motorists can look forward to having access to over a hundred kilometres of newly twinned highway 63 and 240 kilometres by the fall of 2016.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's excellent news, not only for the people in my constituency but, I'm sure, you know, the other ones as well.

Given that my constituents are concerned about the conditions of roads in their community and across the province, would the minister please update the House on some of the road improvement priorities Alberta Transportation will be pursuing in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member. The safety of Alberta's roads is my top priority as Minister of Transportation. We have over 31,000 kilometres of provincial highway, 28,000 kilometres of which are paved. Alberta Transportation plans to provide much-needed rehabilitation to approximately 1,400 kilometres this year, an improvement over previous years. Furthermore, Alberta Transportation will rehabilitate several thousand kilometres of roads and highways in order to ensure our vast network of roads and highways meets the needs of our growing province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just recently Alberta Health Services rolled out a new patient-first strategy for the delivery of health care in Alberta. Now, on paper this sounds like something all Albertans want and something that we have been desperately needing for many years, but I do have to ask the Minister of Health: if AHS is just now getting around to putting patients first, who were they putting first before?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. That announcement was actually when I was in my first week on the job, so if you want to know what was happening in government before I got here, you'll have to ask the members of the third party.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the government and AHS have been unable to solve our growing health care problems for years. Given that in the past we've seen AHS put managers first, bureaucrats first, expense claims first, and sole-source contracts first, what assurances can the minister give us that this new strategy is not just another bureaucratic make-work project that will accomplish nothing for Albertan patients and families?

The Speaker: I'm going to check Hansard to see if there was a "given" at the front of that question and not afterwards.

Ms Hoffman: Given that, I'm honoured to answer the question, Mr. Speaker. I really was proud to be a part of the announcement. I was standing there with patients and family members and staff, who are all committed to the patient-first strategy, and I think it's something that we all should be proud of as Albertans. If the hon. member would like more information about it and the direction that we're taking through Alberta Health Services moving ahead, I'd be happy to have a conversation with him after he reads the document.

Mr. Barnes: Given that the current structure of our health care system has produced mediocre results at ever-inflated prices and considering that the government has firmly committed to doubling down on the flaws and mistakes of the past by piling more hard-earned tax dollars into a broken system, will the Health minister commit to making real changes that cut through the massive waste and bureaucracy and inefficiency and see that our money gets to the ground level and the front lines so that patients and Albertans are truly served first?

Ms Hoffman: It's clear to me that a number of people aren't pumped about what happened on May 5 – that's people in this House – but what I can tell you is that the people of Alberta were very pumped to elect a government that actually stands by the Canada Health Act, that will reverse the cuts that were coming to public health care and front-line services, and that's going to work together, of course, to find areas for efficiency but not at the cost of patient care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

International Trade Strategy

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that broadened market access ensures Alberta companies get the best price for their products or services, this is an important part of building upon the Alberta advantage in an increasingly competitive global economy. Albertans have proven, with the support of the previous administration, that they are able and competent competitors on the global stage. My question to the Premier. International market access is key to export market development, diversification, and protecting jobs. Will your government move beyond its insular and big-labour-focused policies and tell us how your government will effectively utilize our international offices in support of our policy-battered economy?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I will say that I think one of the things we all know that is really challenging our issues around market access is, in fact, our environmental record. It is, in fact, how we are perceived internationally, and I think our leaders in the oil and gas industry understand that better than even the folks over there. So one first key step that we are taking when we do go overseas is to ensure that we develop a climate change strategy that will actually ensure confidence on the part of international markets. I would like to have something to say before I go off to these international markets to sell our product.

The Speaker: The first supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In defence of hard-working Albertans and, again, to the Premier: given our current economic environment and your industry-killing policies with resulting layoffs and idle capacity, what specifically are you doing to help Alberta companies in their survival in developing export markets?

Ms Notley: Well, of course, I completely and entirely reject the premise of that question. What I am doing and what I have been doing since pretty much the day after I was elected is that I've been reaching out to people in industry to talk about how we can build relationships and work together on critical challenges that we have here in this province that are focused on getting us off the oil and gas roller coaster, diversifying our economy, and creating long-standing, mortgage-paying jobs for Albertans. That's my focus, that's what Albertans elected me to do, and that's what I will work with our partners to achieve.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that within the international economy we are already in a relatively high-cost, low-productivity environment and your government is determined to further inflate labour and other costs while increasing taxation, what specifically are you doing to ensure Alberta companies remain competitive in the international business community?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I think I pretty much answered that question. Again, I reject the premise. I think that what we are doing is ensuring economic stability in Alberta. We are focusing on economic stability. We are ensuring that we have more investment in education and retraining, not less. We're ensuring that we have more revenue stability, not less. We're ensuring that we have more prosperity shared amongst all Albertans, not less. All those things contribute to sound economic growth and, ultimately, to a growing capacity to export.

Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Crêpe and Shake Café

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and a privilege to stand for the first time in this hallowed hall. It is my pleasure today to speak about a small business in my constituency of Leduc-Beaumont. We've had many discussions about big businesses and corporations and some about small businesses, but today that's what I want to focus on, a small business that exemplifies Alberta values, the Crêpe and Shake.

Mr. Speaker, I make this statement today about the Crêpe and Shake not because of my healthy love for all things ice cream, as we can see, but instead about a family, Kerri and Jeff Bauer, committed to connecting their fellow citizens and protecting a special building in Beaumont's history. The business is located in one of the oldest buildings in Beaumont, the original convent of les Filles de Jésus, Daughters of Jesus, which operated from 1939 to 1969, until the Bauer family purchased it. The business has invested time into ensuring that the community understands the history of the home and also has a place to relive memories they may have had by spending time in the front yard and with other members of the community. As Beaumont was originally a French-Canadian community and still has many French-Canadians, much of the history includes family connections to the rest of French Canada, and the Bauers intend to integrate that into their model to encourage those family and historical ties.

In a time when corporate focus is largely on cutting costs, one of my favourite parts of the Crêpe and Shake is that they take the time and the money to locally source their ingredients and divert 90 per cent of their waste to compost facilities or recycling. This model is not only good for them but an example of how a local business can support the creation of jobs and innovation.

The owners employ many young people in the community, even taking time off to celebrate their graduations and special events with them. They encourage youth to come and spend time at the Crêpe and Shake, and they hold a youth open mike weekly to showcase their talent. In a town with few business services for youth, this is an important touch point for them. Mr. Speaker, when a business works so hard at maintaining and strengthening the community, we really appreciate having them in our community.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Grassroots Change

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the most amazing things to happen in the tech world was the switch from centralized software development to open-source programming and content. At first everybody said, "It'll never work," but it did and it does because amazing and incredible things happen when everybody participates. We now have open-source everything. Even the staid New York Times is going to an open-source newsroom.

The recent election was another indicator that our world has changed. The failure of the past government was the failure of centralized thinking, with a command-and-control vision of management; cabinet knew best. Rather than consult with citizens, they created a massive centralized health authority where everything comes from the top down. They created one massive centralized power distribution line where today technology begs for low-cost network power generation and distribution. This is why cabinet control of land zoning, use, and rights is utterly intolerable in democracy. Their party even tried to control who could run and where because the boss is the only one who knows everything, and that is why Alberta voted for change.

Grassroots means that the life and ideas of our constituents and everyday Albertans matter more than the elite. This is a core Wildrose belief. Some of our previous members didn't understand that and are forever gone. That's why even though everyone thought we were dead in December, the people just elected even more of us in May. If this government reverts to this failed model of big bureaucracy and centralized decision-making, we will tell all Albertans, because they do care: it's time to create a lean, efficient civil service, not bigger bureaucracy. Change is here, but it's not trickling down from any ivory towers. The days of networking with Albertans to create an open-source society are here.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

211 Information and Referral Service

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. 211 Alberta is an information service similar to 311, 511, or 811 that provides Albertans with reliable information and referrals to community, social, health, and government-related services. This one-stop-shop approach is an important preventative tool and gives people convenient and stigma-free access to everything from advice on child care available in their community to information for an adult child seeking transportation for her or his aging parents to mental health supports and suicide prevention.

211 is also multilingual, with over 150 languages supported, providing a 24-hour information and referral system for thousands of services available across the province, making it easier to navigate the often confusing maze of community, health, government, and social services information. 211 can help with finding solutions to day-to-day needs as well as coping with stressful situations before they escalate into a crisis.

Unfortunately, despite the promises of the past government and despite clear evidence that the program helps Albertans, 211 service is only available in approximately 60 per cent of our province, primarily urban Alberta: those living in Edmonton and area, Calgary and area, the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, and Red Deer. Rural 211 service will ensure that all people, regardless of where they live, will have equal access to this vital information.

The good news, Mr. Speaker, is that province-wide 211 is cost-effective. A 2013 Safe Communities report showed the start-up cost for a provincial 211 is only $1.2 million, and the annual operating budget would be cost-shared with municipalities, meaning the province's share is only $1.35 million a year. The demand for the service is high because the benefit of the service is significant, so significant that the communities around the province are demanding their own 211 service, and one-offs are starting to pop up.

I call on our new provincial government to make this urgent and very cost-effective investment in the health and well-being of Albertans and deploy integrated 211 service around the province. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Meadows Community Recreation Centre and Library

Ms Woollard: Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured to rise today to tell you about a new and exciting facility in my constituency of Edmonton-Mill Creek. This is the newly opened Meadows branch library, which is sharing a building with the Meadows community recreation centre. It's the first collaboration between the Edmonton public library and the city of Edmonton to bring together a public library and a recreation centre under one roof. This example of integrating services shows how a community hub can be created where people can learn, be active, and connect with others. As well as being an environmentally friendly facility with a green roof, it is colourful, open, welcoming, and conveniently accessible.

When my children and later my grandchild were younger, going to the library regularly was an important part of our routines. As a teacher I knew that reading to and with preschoolers is the single best predictor of success in school. As well, I always ensured that my children and my granddaughter knew how to swim for safety, exercise, and fun.

As I toured this innovative building, I reflected that having a library and a recreation centre in the same building perfectly illustrated the concept of mens sana in corpore sano, a healthy mind in a healthy body. As Brent McDonough, an Edmonton public library trustee, noted, "libraries are integral to the educational and cultural hub of a city and society. Libraries must be non-threatening places where people of all ages, educational background and economic status can gather to be enriched." As well, the recreation centre part of the collaboration provides benefits that are essential to the health and well-being of individuals, communities, the economy, and the environment of Alberta, as noted by the Alberta Recreation and Parks Association.

It's exciting to see a development of this kind be built to support a great quality of life to all those who make their home there. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Killarney-Glengarry Community Association 60th Anniversary

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to acknowledge the forthcoming anniversary in my constituency, the 60th anniversary of the Killarney-Glengarry Community Association. Founded in 1945, the Killarney-Glengarry Community Association represents one of Calgary's oldest suburbs. The majority of the houses in the area were built after World War II. Soldiers returning from the war were sold lots for just $25 to help them settle down, rebuild their lives, and raise their families.

As in 1945 Killarney-Glengarry is changing today to reflect the changing needs of families of the new millennium. A new LRT line has reached the area, and infills replace some of the original houses. Such change is never smooth. The Killarney-Glengarry Community Association has been there to help the community through these changes, with an aim to preserve the character of the area. This is a neighbourhood where all voices are heard, one that residents want to call home and raise their children in.

The community associations are citizens' first level of contact with their government, and Killarney-Glengarry Community Association is a prime example of doing good in the community. I had the honour of being there for their recent AGM, and the level of connection with the community as well as with the board was truly inspiring.

Again I congratulate the Killarney-Glengarry Community Association on their 60 years of service to the community and look forward to attending their anniversary Stampede barbecue on July 4. I also look forward to representing their views and commitments to a strong, healthy community as a part of Alberta's new government. We know that the issues that matter to local Albertans are also important to us here in the House, and I look forward to bringing their concerns to this House.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Impaired Driving

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to try not to cry. The morning of October 28, 2011, I was woken by a phone call from Sheila Wilson, grandmother of my godson Vincent Stover. She said to me: Vince is gone. I listened in shock as she shared that the night before, 16-year-old Vince and three of his friends were killed when their car was hit by a truck driven by a drunk driver. My smiling, caring 16-year-old godson was gone along with fellow Warriors football team members Walter, Tanner, and Matthew.

Since that day I've had to watch Vince's two young brothers struggle with the loss of their brother, who had in many ways helped their single mother to raise them. I have watched his extended family and friends, his grandmother and aunt, who are in the gallery today, struggle as birthdays, graduations, anniversaries of his death, and other special days passed reminding them of their loss. I've watched his mother, Jenny, also here with her partner, Mike, today, suffer through wave after wave of grief as she faces again and again that her son was lost in a completely preventable accident.

Since then several of us have become involved in the work of MADD Canada, a grassroots organization committed to stopping impaired driving and supporting its victims. Each year thousands of Canadians are killed or injured in impaired driving crashes: irresponsible, dangerous, and intolerable acts. MADD Canada strives to offer support services to victims, their families, their friends to heighten awareness of the dangers of impaired driving and save lives and prevent injuries on our roads. That is what we all want, to end the senseless loss of life so nobody else has to suffer the way the family and friends of Vince have.

Please, please do not drive impaired.

The Speaker: I think I speak for all the Legislature when I express our regrets.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to present, with over 1,300 signatures, stating as follows. "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to mandate the inclusion of the topic of legal, responsible, healthy, and affirmative sexual consent as part of the sexual education curriculum developed by the Ministry of Education." I'm pleased to see that Sarah Hogendorp and Jennah Martens-Forrester, who collected these signatures, are still here with us this afternoon.

Thank you very much.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Highwood, you have a tabling?

Mr. W. Anderson: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night I spoke to Bill 2. While speaking, I referenced various articles, a survey of employment, Stephen Gordon of Maclean's, the impact of minimum wages on poverty, anti-poverty policy in Ontario, and the Warwick economic research papers. I now wish to table the appropriate number of copies.

Thank you.

Mr. Clark: I have a tabling, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. It's my pleasure to rise and table the requisite five copies of the Alberta Justice and Solicitor General Safe Communities 211 Alberta discussion and options paper that I referred to today in my member's statement.

Tablings to the Clerk
