Number four, we have not seen any plan for transitioning communities and Alberta families who will be affected by the early phase-out of coal. We're concerned that Albertans continue to lose their jobs, and this government is still without a plan to address this. A mediator will not bring those jobs back. Albertans want to do their part for the environment. They always have.

Here is the bottom line, Mr. Speaker. The NDP job losses are now, and they are certain. The NDP economy is years or decades away and uncertain and probably part of a fantasy economy, which may never exist.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Central Alberta AIDS Network Society

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fourteen cents: the cost of one condom. This condom can prevent down-the-road health costs of $1.3 million if it prevents one case of HIV positive.

In my constituency of Red Deer-South we have a remarkable 27-year-old charity called the Central Alberta AIDS Network Society, which is responsible for sexually transmitted and blood-borne infection prevention and support in Alberta Health Services' central zone. The society's mission is to foster healthy responses to HIV and related issues through support, education, and research. In doing so, they undertake a broad range of rural and urban work, including prevention efforts and community outreach supports to those experiencing homelessness, gay and bisexual men, people living with HIV or hepatitis C, the street-involved and pregnant women and girls.

Twelve cents: the cost of one needle. That 12-cent needle could prevent a case of hep C, which could cost us anywhere from $52,000 to $327,000 if that person ends up requiring a liver transplant.

Since 1998 CAANS has been running an evidence-based harm reduction program, working to support sex workers and people who use drugs to reduce the risk of contracting an STI or hep C. This well-respected program distributes safer injection and inhalation supplies to over 450 active clients.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise today and acknowledge the tireless work of the Central Alberta AIDS Network Society in strengthening our community's response to blood-borne infections through prevention and support.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

County Clothes-Line Foundation

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The County Clothes-Line Foundation is proud to be celebrating 30 years in Sherwood Park. In that time they have contributed $1.6 million in grants and scholarships to local charities, community groups, and individuals within Strathcona county. They accept donations of gently used clothes, toys, games, books, and all small household items, then sold to the public at reasonable prices. Clients referred from local agencies are allowed to shop free in times of emergency.

Unlike some used merchandise stores, the profit from sales of the goods from the County Clothes-Line store goes back into the community through the County Clothes-Line Foundation. As these two entities work hand in hand, the generosity of people in the community continues to enrich the lives of the residents of Strathcona county. The County Clothes-Line Foundation grants funds generated by the County Clothes-Line store to Strathcona county nonprofit groups and individuals to assist them in initiating or supporting ongoing innovative projects or programs which contribute to a higher quality of life for the residents of Strathcona county. I know many seniors' homes have used these grants in order to address some of the needs that are coming up.

Applications for funding are submitted to the board of directors for consideration. Each application is judged on its individual merit and the perceived ability of the organization to meet its objectives. The County Clothes-Line Foundation strongly supports education and culture, local social agencies, and the concept of reduce, reuse, recycle, and repurpose.

The County Clothes-Line Foundation awards apprenticeship scholarships annually. The recipients are chosen by the Alberta apprenticeship board, and they must be training or living in Strathcona county. Their support has been ongoing to many local groups, and they have granted money to the Robin Hood association, the Strathcona Food Bank, A Safe Place, and the Saffron Centre, just to name a few. The continual contribution that they have in our community is something that we're extremely grateful for, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Carbon Tax

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the last election this NDP government ran on raising a lot of different taxes, but a carbon tax was never one of them. However, yesterday when Albertans were going to their places of worship, spending some time with family, watching the football game, the NDP announced a new carbon tax, which will increase the cost of everything for every single person living in this province: gasoline, groceries, electricity, you name it.

Mr. Speaker, this tax on everything will steal hundreds, possibly thousands, of dollars away from families at a time when they need them the most. Yesterday anti-oil activists celebrated the news of this NDP carbon tax. These groups have no jurisdiction in Alberta or interest in seeing us succeed. One organization even tweeted an image about how this new plan will keep over six million barrels of oil in the ground each and every day.

Shame on this government for rushing through this disastrous idea just to impress their friends in Paris. They say that this tax will be revenue neutral, but the revenues it generates will go straight back to the government and not back into the pockets of families who paid the tax in the first place. That is not revenue neutral, Mr. Speaker. That is a cunning tax grab. This is dramatic interference in the marketplace by an ideological government bent on risky ideas and economic experiments.

The Wildrose knows that there is no better social program than having everyday people having more money in their pockets to feed and support their families. The NDP has no mandate to bring this tax in. This government continues to kick Albertans when they're down. The Wildrose is the only party that will stand up for Albertans and fight against this government's carbon tax, which will make every family in this province poorer. We will be there for families every step of the way.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation and Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to give oral notice of a motion for tomorrow's Order Paper, that motion being:

Be it resolved that notwithstanding Government Motion 16 the Government House Leader may notify the Assembly that there shall be no evening sitting that day by providing notice under Notices of Motions in the daily Routine or at any time prior to 6 p.m.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies of tablings for the written responses to the questions from my Health estimates from last week.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to also table the requisite number of copies of written responses to questions I committed to follow up on in my budget estimates debate of November 16, 2015.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to table the requisite number of copies in response to outstanding questions arising from the Standing Committee on Families and Communities, November 19, 2015, meeting in consideration of the main estimates for Human Services.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Larivee, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Minister of Service Alberta, pursuant to the Government Organization Act the Petroleum Tank Management Association of Alberta annual report 2014. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Ceci, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, responses to questions raised by Mr. Fildebrandt, the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks; Mr. Cyr, the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake; Mr. Bhullar, the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway; and Mr. McIver, the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, at the November 3, 2015, Ministry of Treasury Board and Finance 2015-16 main estimates debate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we are at the point of my dealing with some points of order. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Point of Order

Referring to a Member by Name

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order raised by a member present under 23(h) and (j), please, if you would: "makes allegations against another Member" and "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." The reason I use (j) is that the hon. minister knew full well that using that naming at this point would indeed cause or create some disorder in the House.

I refer you to House of Commons Procedure and Practice, pages 613 and 614, and I'll quote from that. "During debate, Members do not refer to one another by their names." The minister actually did indeed use the member's name. On page 614: "The Speaker will not allow a Member to refer to another Member by name even if the Member speaking is quoting from a document such as a newspaper article." It goes on to say that "remarks directed specifically at another Member which question that Member's integrity, honesty or character are not in order."

I believe that under 23(j), indeed, it's been discussed in the House, it's caused disorder in the past, and the minister knew full well that using that statement would cause disorder in the House, and I stand on that. We would ask that the minister apologize, and we can carry on.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to this, that there is, in fact, no point of order. As members know and as the hon. member just pointed out, we cannot refer to members of this Chamber by name. What's interesting is that the member himself has used the term "Fildemath." I'll quote from Hansard on October 29.

The secrecy behind this announcement is concerning. The minister announced that of the 31 projects on the list, 25 were approved, meaning that six were not. If they're following the Fildemath, maybe they can know what's going on. The minister seems unwilling to tell us what the criteria were. Maybe she has good reason for cutting these projects; maybe she doesn't. Would she tell us why these projects were not approved?

At that time the hon. member did not raise a point of order against himself. You know, clearly, if that was not a point of order on October 29, then there is no point of order here today.

I do want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the minister did not use the member's name. She did nothing other than what he has done in the past.

While I'm on my feet and we're talking about unparliamentary language, I'd also like to point out that the very member referred to the Minister of Health as mindless today. All members of this House are honourable, Mr. Speaker, and I think that language is close to the line of what is acceptable and what is not.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you have additional information to add?

Mr. Hanson: Just something I'd like to add.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I don't believe you get a second opportunity.

Is there another member who would like to speak to it? Is there another member that would like to speak to the discussion?

I have looked, very quickly, at the points being raised. I would point out to the hon. minister of economic development and to the member that I think I would be hard-pressed to say that when an individual member of the House chooses to use certain language, he or she owns it and has the responsibility of that. We all have that responsibility, so I'm not sure the argument that you're putting forward applies in the situation you're suggesting.

I would also suggest that all the members of this House realize that these kinds of words do have at times, depending on how they are used, an inflammation to the sore that already exists. I would very much like the members to please be much more conscious of these words. This is not a schoolyard. You have schoolchildren here, but that does not make this floor a schoolyard. I would ask each of you to not only respect each other but to respect the House and its traditions.

Notwithstanding those comments, the word that was used was not an actual reference to the individual member named. [interjection] I'm making the ruling right now, hon. member. Please. I would rule that there may be other times, but I do not believe that in this instance there's a point of order.

Orders of the Day Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 202 Alberta Local Food Act

The Chair: Would any hon. member choose to speak to this bill? The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Chair. I actually have an amendment to present, and I have the required copies to distribute. Should I just read through them or read them out?

The Chair: If you want to just give it a moment for the pages to distribute the amendment. We'll call this amendment A1.

Great. Hon. member, go ahead. Thank you.

Cortes-Vargas: Okay. Thank you. The amendments proposed were made from the lens of narrowing the focus of the bill and addressing the concerns that were discussed in the debate here in the Legislature and through consultations I've undertaken. As the list of amendments is long – it's two pages – I will make comments on the amendments by section.

Section 1 is amended in clause (e) by striking out subclauses (iii), (iv), (v), and (vi). Amendments to the definition of public-sector organization would narrow the focus to the advisory committees and would thus be for developing a realistic strategy that would recommend to schools, postsecondaries, and government.

Section 1 is amended in clause (f) by striking out "and Agriculture." The removal of "and Agriculture" throughout the document is done in an effort to narrow the scope and clearly identify the purpose of the bill, which has always been to be a driver for the local food economy by creating food security and improving, maximizing return on local food infrastructure. The striking out of "and Agriculture" will be seen throughout the document and will remain consistent, and I will no longer mention the strikeout.

Section 2 is amended by striking out clause (b) and substituting the following:

- (b) to improve and maximize economic return and food security by maintaining agricultural land for the purposes of farming;
- (b.1) to support the development of local food infrastructure for processing and distributing food.

The amendment divides and clarifies these two purposes, which the advisory committee will focus on.

The heading preceding section 3 is amended by striking out "and Agriculture."

Section 3 is also amended by striking out "and Agriculture," and "remuneration" is substituted for "renumeration." It's just a spelling error. They're pretty straightforward.

The heading preceding section 4 is amended by striking out "and Agriculture." Again, this is a change to emphasize the focus of the bill.

Section 4 is amended in subsection (1) by striking out "and Agriculture"; in subsection (2) by adding to clause (b) "recommendations for creating" before "long-term, mid-term and annualized targets" and by striking out subsection (c) and substituting the following: "(c) a public website including all recommendations included as part of the strategy"; in subsection

(3)(b) by striking out “, and” at the end of subclause (ii), by adding “and” at the end of subclause (i), and by striking out subclause (iii); in subsection (4) by adding to clause (a) “, organizations or groups” after “agricultural associations,” by adding to clause (b) “, organizations or groups” after “organic farming associations,” and by adding the following after clause (e): “(e.1) retail food associations.”

These changes have been made to reflect the actual intent of the advisory committee. The advisory committee will be struck with the duty to develop a strategy that improves our local food system, much like we saw with the climate change panel. That would facilitate this by adding recommendations for creating a committee that will be able to suggest viable options instead of mandating the public-sector procurement. Ensuring that public websites include all recommendations included as part of the strategy allows the committee to draft reports and collect data, but the local food sector is small enough that sharing the raw data itself will be limited to alleviating the concerns that a release of data would infringe on producers’ and processors’ right to privacy. As the committee is charged with consultation, “organizations and groups” include informal groups that we would often see. The inclusion of retail food associations is identified as important as they are an essential group in the local food system and its growth.

The heading preceding section 5 is struck out and the following is substituted: “Annual report.”

Section 5 is amended in subsection (1) by striking out “shall publish a report every 2 years” and substituting “shall publish a report annually”; in clause (a) by striking out “targets and”; in clause (b) by striking out “recommendations and targets during the preceding 2 years” and substituting “any recommendations for that year”; and in clause (c) by striking out “and targets in the next 2 years” and substituting “for the following year.” As the committee would be coming up with the plan, I believe that the progress should be available yearly, and accountability is essential to success.

Section 7 is struck out and the following is substituted:

Local Food Awareness Week

7 To promote the purchase of local food in Alberta, the Advisory Committee shall designate a week that shall be recognized each year throughout Alberta as Local Food Awareness Week.

Through the consultation process this change would charge the committee with identifying the best date for local food week to happen during the year so the effectiveness of the week is maximized.

Section 9 has been changed to define the act as coming into force on proclamation. This change is pretty standard, and it will allow for further consultation and public dialogue before it becomes law.

Thank you.

The Chair: Does any hon. member wish to speak to amendment A1? The hon. member for . . .

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Yeah. It’s actually Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. They keep beating me up because we keep forgetting Sundre, so I don’t like to forget the guys back home.

There’s basically a lot in this document, and I’m not really sure how any member can in good conscience vote on this this quickly and actually know what is going on. I mean, this is pretty close to a rewrite of the entire bill, so I would suggest to the hon. member that she refer this to committee so we have some time to discuss this appropriately. If not, I can’t see how this caucus could vote on it in good conscience.

Thank you.

The Chair: Anyone else to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Yes. Thank you. I just want to echo my esteemed colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre; there are an awful lot of amendments here. We do have a parliamentary process in place called the committee, and I would very much like to see this bill go to committee so that we can discuss these amendments and the whole bill at length, go through it in a more fulsome manner than just ramming it through the House. So I would encourage the hon. member to refer this to committee so that we could have a good look at it and take a look at all of these different amendments that are in here. Indeed, in committee there may be some other amendments for improving this bill even further. I would ask the hon. member to do the honourable thing and make use of the legislative committees that we have in place for these things.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Yes, Madam Chair. I didn’t even receive a copy of this till after the presentation was over, so I haven’t even had a chance to read it yet. I don’t see how I can vote on it without time to consider it. I do think it needs to go to committee, or at least give us some time to read it since I didn’t even get a copy of it till after it was presented.

Thank you.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Chair. The two full pages of amendments that we’re seeing here in the short period of time since Bill 202 was first introduced show us that, you know, the bill itself was incomplete and deserves further study. It would be very unfair to ask us or any reasonable person to vote on an amendment of this complexity with this short notice. I use that term “any reasonable person,” okay?

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Any other hon. member wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Madam Chair, it’s really my pleasure to speak to the bill and especially to the amendments. I think the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park has listened and has consulted widely not only with the constituents in her community but throughout the region, in Alberta. The amendments were written based on the feedback that she has received, so I would really like to urge the Assembly to support these amendments.

Thank you.

The Chair: Anyone else wanting to speak to the amendment? The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Chair. It’s my privilege to rise and speak in favour of this amendment. I appreciate some of the comments that the opposition has brought forward.

A couple of things. Much of this amendment is actually house-keeping in nature and cleaning up some language. There are a couple of points, though, that are a little more substantive, but I want to assure the members opposite that this amendment, that the hon. sponsor of this bill is putting forward, is based on feedback that they’ve garnered from engaging with the different industry players, small and mid-size. This is something that they were asking for themselves.

I recognize that this can be a little bit of a challenge as far as getting an amendment and trying to flip back through the bill to go through it. I can tell you it's a challenge that we rose to for a number of years, in fact 44 years, going through different amendments that the government of the day put forward.

I do want to just highlight the fact that in part F, when it's talking about section 4, instead of mandating the targets, this is making recommendations for annualized targets, again coming at it from the point of view of targets that will be derived, that should be realized but that aren't being obligated to be met, so providing a little more flexibility in there.

The other section that I will highlight. In section 5 it's talking about reporting I believe it's yearly as opposed to every two years, which, again, just means that information will be more readily available.

Again, when I'm looking through the amendment, much of it is housekeeping in nature. Of course, section 9 is on the act coming into force upon proclamation.

I urge all members of the House to support this amendment, but I encourage further discussion with the mover of the bill should there be any. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chairperson. I just want to put a couple of things on the floor. First of all, again, I thank the member for her work. The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park and the hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade talked at length about having fully engaged Albertans and people in Alberta involved in the food industry.

My goodness, are we having a different experience with this bill. Alberta producers I talked to have clearly – clearly – told me that Alberta's extraregulatory framework, Alberta's extra regulations, have already put us at a definite competitive disadvantage to other provinces. They feel absolutely strongly that with a system now where entrepreneurs and Albertans want to have independence, have had strong independence and absolute proper and prime supply of all kinds of local foods, from beef production to bees and honey to farmers' markets, which has worked so well to provide excellent pricing, excellent supply, this kind of thing is going in absolutely the wrong direction.

How sure am I that these people are easy to engage? Again, I'm surprised by what the hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade and the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park have indicated about this great discussion and communication with stakeholders. I already understand that in Lethbridge the government's first chance to communicate with farmers and ranchers about the bill changing occupational health and safety labour standards and workers' compensation is sold right out. People cannot get in. That's how eager this group is to be involved in the stakeholding.

I will say that my colleagues have adequate and real good reason to complain or to state that the intent of this bill is off, is missed on a strong industry that doesn't need help from the government, that doesn't need more government interference. I think, as one quick example, of abattoirs in my constituency that always talk about how many more there are in Saskatchewan, how much more competitive the industry is there, how much easier it is for the competition and the market mechanisms to hit the consumer in Saskatchewan than it is in Alberta. Guys, we're falling behind.

The intent of the bill is wrong. Some side of seven or eight amendments are thrown on our desks with no time to even try and make it more productive and more efficient for many, many of our good providers, many of them that are in their sixth generation of providing safe, quality, competitively priced food for all Albertans, all 4.3 million of us now. So I, too, will not support the amendments as I don't support the original bill.

When I had a chance to speak to this earlier, I talked about contrasting our food system. I talked about how you can walk into a farmers' market or how you can walk into a Safeway, a Superstore, a Costco and see such great selection, great variety, great prices. I ask the government to consider the comparison of that to Alberta Health Services, where it takes three years to get a semi-elective surgery. This is the area we're going down. You started down the wrong road. Now you're going down the wrong road way too fast. I ask that you consider what my colleagues said, and if you absolutely insist on passing this, let's at least move it to committee. These same people that are going to Lethbridge in record numbers to speak against your bill, your changes on occupational health and safety, workers' compensation, and labour standards without full consideration of the family farm, without full consideration of what these people have been doing for six generations, are easy to engage.

In the spirit of working together, I ask you to consider what my colleagues are saying. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other member wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Yes. Some of these seem to me to be more kind of technical errors than feedback. I'm looking at it, and, you know, if in the two weeks' time since this was introduced, you've come up with this many errors or changes, I think this really kind of speaks to the point that we need to have a chance to take this to committee and review it further, in depth. If we take this and bring it up to some of the experts in the field and have them have a chance to look at it, I think we might be able to find a few more things that would be required to make a better bill. You should have more consultation on this before it gets passed.

I would just say that I would move to have this brought to committee rather than having it done this way. I can't support this amendment as it sits.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other member wishing to speak to the amendment?

If not, then we'll call the question on amendment A1 as proposed by the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: We are back on the bill. Are there any members who wish to speak to Bill 202? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Chair. I'll just be brief. I supported the amendment because I think it makes the bill less bad. If there was a further amendment to refer this to committee, I would also support that. But the bill as it is I couldn't possibly support unless it gets referred to committee.

The Chair: Any other member wishes to speak? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak about Bill 202. It would be, I guess, correct to say: the amended Bill 202. I find it kind of interesting that in many places this government sought, in their absolute distinct efficiency as many times as they could, to take the word "agriculture" out of the bill because that is part and parcel of the heritage of this province and is very important to the economy. A prominent Drumheller radio broadcaster likes to use the words: if you eat, you're involved in agriculture. I find that to be quite an interesting, common-sense statement in many ways.

Madam Chair, as you know, I have been involved in agriculture and farming all my life. It's a subject that is not just a job, but it's a way of life. I'm confident in saying that I have some, if not a lot, or a considerable amount of experience in this matter. My other job, though, is representing my constituents, and as their MLA I find that an onerous responsibility. It's actually my second term, and with that they report to me mostly on a daily basis. My cellphone certainly gets the brunt of that. There are many things about being an MLA that are puzzling, and one such instance occurred to me, similar to this situation, when my private member's bill was sent to a form of committee. It was actually initially voted down in the Chamber and then brought back. At the time I felt that it was a straightforward piece. The only amendment, effectively, was to quash the bill or to take it to another form of activity not in the Chamber. We could have achieved that discussion here and now in this Chamber. It's kind of a comme ci, comme ça situation. I think that in some ways this bill and some of the writings in it and some of the amendments may have many unintended consequences as we go forward.

The intentions of Bill 202 – and I've spoken to the member from Strathcona-Sherwood Park presenting this. Some of the discussions that we had unfortunately didn't make it to the amendment. I find that kind of interesting. I presented those changes with no malice and with as much openness as I believed there could be. So I find it interesting that there are other changes that we discussed, actually, in regard to the valuation of land, the description of land, going forward here, that are not in the amendment.

Sometimes generalities go off, and the gaps are then filled in by regulations. I'm anxious to see what this committee could bring forward, this advisory-only committee, which I find troubling, Madam Chair, in many ways.

Madam Chair, I'd like to advise yourself and the Chamber that there are many various types of farming operations that utilize this type of market with positive results. Local, small farms, year-round greenhouses, and, indeed, full-scale farms are all able to sell their products directly to consumers and retailers, but in some cases they have different standards. This situation has no allowance for traceability, and I'm concerned with that.

How do we determine the scale and what type of agricultural operations fall under this legislation? Do local community gardens and backyard beekeepers and commercial farms or, indeed, Hutterite colonies qualify? Hutterite colonies, Madam Chairwoman, are actually family farms on a completely different scale. They operate on a large scale. With that, I wonder how future legislation – there are bills that are going to be in front of this House that may or may not affect those scales of operation.

One of the major questions that remains unanswered by this proposal is exactly what segment of agriculture this act is being designed for. What, exactly, is the definition of an agricultural producer under this bill? Is it simply the growers? What about the livestock producers? Will there be an exemption for poultry, for beef, for commercial poultry, for commercial beef, for volunteer beef production, for volunteer poultry production? We have that in our legislation, and it talks about the potentiality of conflict going forward here.

Madam Chair, how can the government ensure food stability without product safety and product traceability? In this situation people that sell their goods – and in some cases the pretense, if you will, of the bill is to have government agencies procure all their food for this, whether that be hospitals, whether that be schools, whether that be seniors' care, whether that be penal institutions. They have to have a method of traceability for their food for safety going forward. I don't see that in this bill, and I'm anxious to see how this can be brought forward with an advisory committee. There's no definitive methodology to bring this forward. Under the agricultural producers act there is. I don't know how this can all be actually brought forward in a form that can create steady annual production or steady annual income for those people.

If it is required that numerous producers are needed to meet these public-sector needs and there is an issue with an agriproduct and an illness or issue arises, how will this act ensure that the traceability of supply is guaranteed? We don't have that in this situation. Traceability and safety of the food chain is paramount. How does this government propose to ensure that local producers meet the same requirements current commercial producers have in order to have their products enter the supply chain? There are no definitive requisitions within this act that would allow that. Having people produce food on open city blocks, that are open to the public or public vandalism, not unlike with commercial producers, there is no way and no methodology for the regulation of the chemicals that are applied. There is no soil testing to the soil that the food is being grown on. So there is an unreliable methodology of the food that comes from that source.

Madam Chair, the processing act of this has implications as well. Processing of local food: how, for example, will local producers deal with the regulations and requirements regarding the slaughter and/or processing of livestock? I have spoken to the minister of agriculture on this very subject, and we have several small producers threatened by litigation by marketing boards even now as it is. They are voluntarily and, if I could say, Madam Chair, cooperatively coming together to market their own eggs, and they are facing the full brunt of the egg producers' marketing boards. Sometimes it's a good thing, and sometimes it's a bad thing. We need to know. If this is as successful as the member purports it to be, how could it actually possibly fit into the agricultural marketing boards' laws and acts that we have in the province?

I have discussed in this House previously the example of food supply. For the past four to five years the Canadian beef industry has not had cattle numbers large enough to supply Canada with our own ground beef. We, therefore, import trim to make into ground beef. For example, A & W imports Australian trim to mix with Canadian hormone-free, antibiotic-free, 50-50 trim that is obtained from grain-fed Canadian cattle. Public-sector organizations' ground beef purchases will almost always have an offshore component due to existing regulations. The rules and regulations governing slaughter and inspection will make the processing of small producers' livestock cost prohibitive.

That's the issue with the small producers marketing act. It's not the bent of the bill; it's the actual physical regulations that come into play in regard to food safety and liabilities that relate to that. Will the government be forced to mandate these processing plants to take in small batches of livestock in order to allow sales under the Alberta Local Food Act? These are some of the things that come forward. Or will the government open its own facilities to make sure all producers comply and compete under equal and fair rules?

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Does any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and don't feel bad when you miss it. Try saying that over and over in a speech several times in an evening; it can be awkward.

First of all, I'd like to congratulate the member for stepping forward and showing an interest in a rather interesting agriculture initiative. The overlying goal outlined by this bill, to encourage growth in one sector of our larger agrifood industry, certainly seems noble. I'm sure we all would enjoy increased access to affordable, fresh, locally grown food. However, as my friend and colleague from Drumheller has previously pointed out, the methods outlined by this bill leave many more questions than answers. The legislation seems to indicate that government is considering giving public bodies a mandate to buy local. It naturally begs several questions. Who is local? Who decides what should or should not be purchased from whom? Are the food producers in power to seek the most economical options? If not, who will pay the additional costs? The questions, Madam Chair, are endless while the answers are in short supply.

The fact is that there is no way to implement this legislation without creating a new bureaucracy and opposing additional reams of regulations and red tape. I know this government has staked an ideological position on this issue, but the truth is that you simply cannot regulate an economy into growth. However, if you want agriculture growth, there's a better place to start. Try asking farmers. When you do, they will tell you that the number one barrier to selling their food locally has always been regulations. Whether it was the Canadian Wheat Board, CFIA regulations, or Alberta Health Services' periodic hunts on church bake sales, the number one obstacle between local food producers and consumers is government. The fact is that all Alberta farmers are local farmers and all the food they produce is local food.

Madam Chair, do you know who excels at finding markets for their products? Once again it's our farmers. The proof is readily apparent. Many of the socialist naysayers predicted absolute doom when western Canadian farmers were given the ability to market their own wheat. Instead, the agriculture sector grew like never before. It is no coincidence that the most effective system our farmers have for connecting with local consumers is also one of the least regulated, farmers' markets. If this government wishes to get serious about encouraging local food, it would focus on reducing regulatory barriers rather than imposing new ones.

Unfortunately, this has not been the NDP government's approach to agricultural issues to date. On Bill 6, for instance, which is comparable in some ways to this, the government has chosen to regulate first and consult later. Not only does charging ahead with bills like this and Bill 6 without consultation fly in the face of this government's pledge to do business differently, but it directly impacts the growth and long-term viability of smaller farms, the same farms that currently provide honey, vegetables, and other in-demand raw food. In fact, when it comes to ensuring growth in our local food sector, Bill 6 will do more harm than any good that can be accomplished through Bill 202. When it comes to debating Bill 6, I hope the government will remember this. All farmers are local farmers, and all the food they grow is local food.

Now, Madam Chair, I would like to turn my attention to another matter, efficiency. One of my chief concerns with this legislation is that it seems designed to encourage farmers to embrace less efficient production methods and reject modern innovation. Taking one of the largest sectors of Alberta's economy back a generation may make fine socialist policy, but it ignores some inconvenient truths. Like it or not, we live in a globalized world. The wheat, barley, canola, and livestock grown here sells to markets around the world at a global price. Reducing production here not only holds back Alberta's economy but also raises the price of food in developing countries.

This is not a hypothetical argument. Increased production will be vital. Global population is expected to reach 9.3 billion in 2050. Leading experts tell us that the world will need 70 per cent more food by 2050. As a leading agriculture producer, the world will be looking to provinces like Alberta to help meet the growing demand. We won't meet this demand by embracing less productive agriculture projects. Rather, I suggest we look at history.

In the mid-20th century the war-torn nations of Pakistan and India were experiencing widespread famine despite the availability of vast tracts of arable albeit poor land. At the same time an American with a PhD in plant pathology and genetics was conducting research in Mexico. Concentrating on boosting wheat production, he led a team that would work with nitrogen-based fertilizers to improve poor soil. The wheat varieties grown there had tall, thin stalks unable to carry the weight of plum grain grown with fertilizer. To counteract that, the team put its effort into refining a variety that had shorter, thicker stems. The new variety was particularly well suited to the Asian subcontinent and set a revolution off in food production, saving millions of lives in India and Pakistan. The variety was called dwarf wheat, and the man who gave this gift to the world was Norman Borlaug. He was awarded the Nobel peace prize in 1970.

There have been several agriculture revolutions since that time, each time giving us the ability to increase production and ensure that food remains affordable for all. Turning our back on this innovation would have been short sighted and sends a dangerous message to the world: it's our land, it's our food, and we don't care about you. Madam Chair, sending such a message is not in keeping with our values. From the time of Confederation Canada has always been a trading nation, and in times of world calamity we have stepped forward to help feed the world.

Let's not stop now even if it means taking further time to study this well-intended private member's bill. I say "well-intended" because I believe that is exactly what Bill 202 is insofar as it was drafted with the intention of encouraging growth in an albeit small sector of our large agrifood industry. However, the bottom line, Madam Chair, is that the bill seems designed to create more bureaucracy, more regulation, and encourage farmers to adopt less efficient production practices. The goal may be noble, but the methods are naive in numerous respects. Let's not call this progress. There is nothing progressive about this legislation, and it should be defeated.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Do any other members wish to speak? The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and speak in favour of this bill. I'd like to clarify a few points that both the previous speaker and the Member for Drumheller-Stettler articulated a few minutes ago. First and foremost, this bill is about food security. I mean, some of the members opposite are trying to equate this bill to previous policies in other countries and talking about how this is going to have a hurtful effect on the Alberta economy. Not at all, hon. members. This is about, again, improving food security but also about striking an advisory group to come back with a strategy to government, to all of us, actually, within 12 months. I appreciate the fact that maybe you're trying to speak to your constituents, but, you know, interpreting this bill for what it's not is not helping anyone.

I do want to mention that the hon. member who is the sponsor of this bill did have numerous conversations with the opposition and actually not only took into account some of their recommendations, but they were in the amendment that we recently put forward. I find it interesting that the Member for Drumheller-Stettler spoke about how we removed the word "agriculture," yet that was his request, to remove the word "agriculture" in order to focus the bill and provide a little more clarity. I mean, at first we take his recommendation, and now we're being criticized for taking his recommendation. I don't understand. You can't have it both ways, hon. members.

The other thing that I want to clarify is that I believe it was the same member who asked for – under section 4(3)(b)(iii), "an examination of valuation of agricultural land" has been struck out. Again, it was the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler's request to the sponsor of the bill that that be removed. We, in fact, did that.

We listened to opposition comments in order to strengthen this bill, which is something that we've talked about numerous times as a government, that we want to work with all members in this House, and again this is proof of doing just that. So you can imagine my surprise and confusion when members opposite are – well, I don't want to use the word "attack," but you are criticizing us for doing exactly what you've asked us to do. You can imagine that that's quite confusing from this point of view. Again, I'll save the political comments.

The purpose of this bill, again, is really about empowering a group to come up with a strategy to enhance Alberta's food security. This is not about limiting access. This is not about telling farmers what they can and cannot grow or where they can or cannot sell their products. This is about encouraging local food production for local needs. We completely appreciate the fact that much of the food that is grown in our province is used for export, and we want to continue to work with our agricultural sector and our farmers to do just that. Again, market access is one of my priorities, and looking at ways to enhance that within Canada but also internationally is a priority. So I just wanted to get up and clarify a few of these points.

You know, what the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park has put forward is really a bill that empowers, again, our own local producers. This is focused more on a strategy moving forward, not on forcing certain action. The other thing, too, is that some of the amendments, like I said earlier, were recommendations from the opposition that we in fact took, and the hon. member included them in her amendment, again showing that we're looking for best ideas, not which party they come from.

I urge all members of the House to support this bill. Let's move it out of committee. There's been great debate thus far, but I'd love to move this into third reading and continue our dialogue at that point.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's another opportunity to talk about local food production and agriculture in Alberta and to talk about how it specifically would be impacted by Bill 202, the Alberta Local Food Act. You know, what I would say is that what we have here essentially is a difference of opinion as to the best way to promote something.

On the side of the government we have the opinion that the best way to promote something is by creating a committee and then going ahead with some government intervention. On this side, for the most part, I think that what we're saying is that those measures should only be used when it is demonstrably effective to in fact implement those measures. If any argument was offered during the course of this debate in second reading that would indicate that government intervention or stepping in with an advisory committee, with a report, with measurements, all of which cost money – all of which cost money – that should happen only if indeed it can be demonstrated that the sector needs assistance and that, in fact, the objectives that are stated are not being achieved because of a lack of that committee or that action.

Well, I would argue that the hon. member that moved Bill 202 provided in her opening comments the strongest possible indication that Bill 202 is, in fact, not necessary. I quote once again – and this is directly quoting from her speech in Hansard – "95 per cent . . . of Alberta households are using or want to [use] food grown or made in Alberta." That's pretty hard to improve upon. If you're already hitting 95 per cent, you know, to achieve an incremental advantage in getting those last 5 per cent of Albertans convinced that they, too, should join the crowd, I would suggest to you, is going to be very difficult. In addition, some of the other statistics that were quoted: the number of farmers' markets is up 27 per cent since 2010; the market value of products marketed through farmers' markets is up 64 per cent; with people involved in local food enterprises, there's a 77 per cent increase in investment in business, a 94 per cent increase in sales growth, a 78 per cent increase in profitability, and a 96 per cent increase in gaining new customers.

You know, Madam Chair, this is a great increase, and it's all happening, if you'll forgive the term, organically. It's happening without government intervention. It's happening without a committee, without reports, without targets being set. It's all happening and being driven naturally by Albertans. It concerns me when we have a government that feels that that process has to be somehow interfered with or that there has to be some sort of government intervention in that process. I'm not saying that I don't necessarily trust it, and I'm not saying that government intervention is wrong in all situations, but I'm concerned when there's government intervention in something that clearly is already working pretty well.

In my speech on Bill 202 I outlined a number of areas of local food initiatives that I'm familiar with in my constituency. Really, you know, these are scattered throughout constituencies all around our province. We saw it during the course of Alberta Farm Days, and this is the kind of thing that I really think is a very strong argument against the need for this sort of thing happening.

You know, one of the things that is a fundamental property during the course of any debate on any issue is: is there a need for change? Is there a demonstrable need that the current situation must be changed? I would submit to the members of the Assembly that there is no demonstrable need for change in this situation, that a great deal of success is already occurring.

With regard to the comments by the hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade with regard to consultation, I found them rather interesting because our caucus – we're still here – raised a number of issues that we had with regard to this piece of legislation, but we were not consulted on any suggested amendments. Specifically, in my speech I indicated that I had a great deal of difficulty with the latitude that was allowed to the Lieutenant Governor in Council – in other words, cabinet – under section 8, entitled Regulations. Indeed, section 8, regulations, gives an incredible amount of power to cabinet. In other words, regulations can be developed in cabinet without any further consultation, without any further debate here in the Legislature. Specifically, clause 8(c) – and I'll state it again – allows for the making of regulations “concerning any additional matter or thing that is necessary or advisable in connection with the implementation of this Act.”

That is an incredibly open-ended statement that, I submit – and I'm not a lawyer – could be interpreted in a way to allow such a broad degree of powers, depending on what the implemented measure was, that I simply do not entirely trust the regulatory power that this bill will ascribe to cabinet. I just think that it is overreaching, and I think it's especially overreaching in a situation where things are already happening and happening quite well.

This bill has failed to demonstrate a need for change. This bill has failed to demonstrate that intervention is required. Finally, it has failed to demonstrate that the measures that are being recommended – the committee, the recommendations, the targets, and all the other things that are recommended in the bill – will in fact improve the situation. None of those things have been satisfied in the case of this bill. If those things cannot be satisfied and especially given that this is a private member's bill, on which we can vote freely, and that there is no whipped vote – or at least theoretically there is no whipped vote – I would mention to my colleagues and I would state to my colleagues that this bill should not be passed in its current form.

Now, if we want to see it passed, if we can understand the idea behind it or if we can support the basis behind it, one way to do that is to take it out of the methodology of consideration within private members' business, which has very limited timelines, and move it to committee and allow committee to delve into some of these matters more deeply. At that point we could possibly come up with the wording of a bill that would then be acceptable across the House, and we could move forward. But in its current form and even with the amendments that were passed, which, I would suggest, are relatively minor and don't really change the bill that much, the egregious parts of the bill are still present. They have not been removed from the bill, and they don't demonstrate in any way, shape, or form that the bill is in fact going to accomplish the goals that are stated.

For those reasons, Madam Chair, I will be voting against this bill.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. While the idea of local food is, in fact, a truly great idea, which I don't think anybody would be opposed to, obviously with the number of amendments that have been presented, the bill has not been thought through carefully. It was not well presented, which has created some of the reaction to it, quite clearly, and it does cause me to fear. If thinking about farm issues are that quickly rushed forward without even clearly thinking them through, what's going to happen with the WCB farm safety bill? We all know we need farm safety, but are we going to see 20 or 30 or 40 or 50 amendments on that one as well, because there was no consultation prior to actually presenting the bill? Those are my problems with it primarily.

Does anyone actually plan to talk to producers or processors or marketers – and all three of those are essential to any kind of food marketing, any kind of food production – with regard to this bill before enacting it? An urban, Birkenstock version of farming just doesn't really do it in the real world; quite frankly, Birkenstocks aren't WCB-approved anyway, so they wouldn't fit in the field. Anyway, I do have concerns about the way this thing has been just haberdashed together and then immediately rewritten, and I wonder if it'll be rewritten again.

Especially in a year that's been extremely difficult for Albertans, with as many people unemployed as we have seen, who've lost their jobs, now we have a government that's not only increasing taxes on almost everything but also creating bureaucracies on almost everything that they can. I do agree with much of what my colleague from Lloydminster has just finished saying about the additions of bureaucracies not really going to the results that are required. I just fear that this government is proving again to be a disappointment in regard to overreaching into the Alberta marketplace, a marketplace that they fundamentally don't understand or have the knowledge or the experience to deal with well.

The intention of the bill is to create a stable market through public-sector food purchasing, which, in fact, contradicts a lot of economic realities. The bill outlines wide-sweeping goals but doesn't really express much in terms of how these vague definitions will be achieved. I rise today to ask the government: exactly how will this bill affect Albertans, and what can Albertans realistically expect from this conversation?

To begin with, I think we would all like to know how this government will decide, for instance, which public-sector entities will be making purchases and what the process is to decide which farms will be able to act as vendors. Is the government going to work to create another delayed sunshine list of producers, of who will be picked and who will be missing out? Is it going to be sole-sourced contracting of some kind? There are so many unanswered questions here in this whole thing.

As has already been said, a lot of this kind of producing, processing, and marketing is already taking place in very, very real ways. The reality is that the advent of Internet communications has made it possible for farmers all over this province to be marketing directly from their farm gate, and they are, so I don't understand what the value of bureaucracy is going to accomplish. I have my doubts that the government really understands the complexities of the food industry. As has already been said, there are a multitude of factors that affect producers and everything that they do, the whole processing aspect of it, and then the marketing aspect of it. There are three stages there in the value chain for food, and food does not get to your plate without actually going through all of those three processes. The reality is that very, very few individuals can have a completely vertically integrated market and successfully do all three of them at once.

Moreover, the agriculture sector is interwoven into the fabric of international trade deals in this country, whether we like it or not. I fear that this legislation may ultimately be impacted by that, because whatever the recommendations are that are brought forward, then the next step is going to be to want to act on them, and that may throw us up against the issue of international trade deals. By giving government bodies the mandate that they have to buy local, will the NDP be opening up the government of Alberta to an endless stream of lawsuits from our trade partners? They've already shown that they are more than willing to do that. Agrifood issues are often on the forefront of international trade negotiations. Nations that are viewed as too protectionist often lose out on signing new deals, which destroys the prospect of increasing their trade network. While I think the government pays a lot of lip service and has good intentions for the economic diversification of our food industries, actions like these show that the priorities sometimes are quite the opposite.

If the NDP is really serious about helping out smaller scale farms, why are they continually pushing for policies that make Alberta a harder place to do business? Year-round greenhouses contribute significantly to the production of local food, and they do it without subsidies or bureaucratic intervention, quite frankly, but economically these businesses have a very high input cost due to the amount of natural gas needed to heat a greenhouse in minus 40 weather. Are we really to believe that the new carbon tax is going to help these small producers be more competitive?

What about the example of meat-packing facilities? These facilities carry a very large overhead in regard to their electrical bill due to refrigeration. Keeping an animal cold for 21 days, which is standard practice, consumes a lot of electricity, especially with the volumes. What is the NDP's plan to help with this value-added step in the local food industry? Is shutting down power plants ahead of schedule and increasing the cost of electricity supposed to make it so that more meat producers can do business in this province? Clearly, there's a lot of homework to be done on this issue.

We've also learned that the government intends to be policing thousands of acres of farmland as well. How will these inspectors realistically help local food production when they're out there performing their inspections? This bill calls for an advisory committee, which will be handed a blank cheque from the minister's office.

Recently we've seen the NDP's version of accountability when making appointments. Well, I'm not allowed to use the name, so I won't. Someone was recently appointed to the Manning centre, but there was no appropriate consultation on that. The advisory committee will just be another soft landing place for NDP candidates. How is the minister going to decide who sits on these committees?

Clearly, in my mind, the bill has not been thought through. All of the amendments prove that. It does nothing more than increase the bureaucracy and the obstacles to small business and local food production that this government continues to pile on Albertans. We need less bureaucracy, not more bureaucracy, and food will flourish.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 202, which on the face of it makes a lot of sense for Alberta. I don't know what the proportion of local food consumption and sale is. I hear statistics that it's increasing. That's good. I think that anything we can do to improve the access of people in this province to local food production is good for business. It's good for the environment. It's good, I think, for nutrition if we know and have control over what kind of exposures to chemicals our own local food has. We are not entirely sure because only a sampling of food that comes across the border is tested for various contaminants. Anything we can do to promote local food, I think, is a good thing.

I like the amendments that the hon. member has put forward, and I certainly think that there's an opportunity here that we shouldn't throw out of hand. If we're going to create a committee that's going to actually examine the market system, communications around local food, how we can enhance, perhaps, efficiencies in local food production, if there are some ways that government can facilitate through regulation greater access to local food and promote the growth of local food, especially organic foods, it seems to me that this is an opportunity not only to diversify our economy but also to improve the business climate for small-business people, especially, obviously, food producers, trucking agencies, wholesale and retail markets.

While I appreciate the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster's concerns about giving too much power to put in regulations through an order in council or whatever, I think that's a little far fetched given that all we're doing here is creating a committee to actually examine the benefits and opportunities and how we can actually help, in a way, facilitate what is already growing, to be sure, but could be growing faster, could be benefiting Alberta more, and could be helping us to move into a stronger position economically. I'm not as concerned as my colleague. If we're promoting the purchase of local food in Alberta and adding value and adding potentially safer food, I'm very anxious to support that.

Thanks, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. My family many years ago decided that we would like to eat a little healthier, and my wife convinced me of being able to eat locally grown food. I think it's a great idea. I think it's a fantastic idea, that I personally support. I guess the question that I've come to is: does this need to be a government initiative versus a private initiative? This is something that the free market will automatically promote and that individual consumers will automatically promote. I think that there is education that could be done on this issue, and I do believe that there's actually already education being done. I think that some of the information that I received a couple of years ago, as I said, came from just local individuals saying that the health benefits of eating locally produced produce is valuable.

Really, the concern for me is not that this isn't a good thing. I believe it is a very good thing, and I think that it will help promote the healthy practices of our families. I guess the concern that I have is that when the government gets involved, what is the outcome? What are the consequences to that?

There are some real concerns that I have as I kind of look through the purposes of this act, the first purpose being "to ensure a resilient, sustainable and strong local food economy and agricultural land base in Alberta." Now, the first question that I have is: how do you ensure that? I think that's something that some governments have tried to accomplish, with very little success. I would have to say that probably one of the worst examples of not working are the Communist countries of the Soviet Union. They did try to ensure a stable, resilient, strong local food economy, and they shut the borders. They were hopeful to be able to accomplish that, and it didn't work there. Now, I know that this is more of a microeconomic model that we're talking about, but the principle still stands. If it doesn't work on a macro scale, most likely it won't work on a micro scale.

The other thing that I question is that promotion of local consumption is something that is not just practised by provincial governments but also by the federal government in terms of trade. I'll give you an example of supply chain management. With supply chain management farmers in certain farm sectors, such as with cheese and milk products, have created trade barriers that stop us from being able to buy from outside sources. That was an initiative, I think, to be able to buy locally. Unfortunately, the cost of that to us is three times the cost of cheese. You can buy cheese for three times less across the border in the United States than you could in Alberta. Is this the kind of outcome that we want from this kind of legislation? Is this another measure of supply chain management, which is a federal issue? On a provincial issue do we need to exacerbate this kind of a problem?

You know, one of the things that it says here in terms of purposes is "to increase public awareness of local food in Alberta, including the diversity of local food." I actually applaud that as a purpose. I believe that that's very important. We should be promoting local producers and diversification in our food, and I think that that is a very good role the government can facilitate. That again goes back to educate versus legislate, and it's something that I think needs to be the mantra of this House on many other bills as well. The education of people, I do believe, happens from people in general, amongst each other, through social media, and through the value of eating locally. Is it really something that needs to be done on a provincial level by the provincial government? I question whether that's the reality.

The other thing. It says here: "to promote sustainable farming practices." I think the reality is that sustainable farming practices are best identified by farmers who are successful. That's the best sustainable farming practice that I can think of, and it would probably be the best for this House to recognize. Sustainable means that it's going to last in that it has a proven track record, that it's capable of being able to carry on, not just now but in the future. Usually when the government gets involved, what I've seen is that they get it wrong because they're not in the industry. We don't know everything about every industry. So allowing the industries to be able to make the choices and to determine their course of action is really what Adam Smith taught us about hundreds of years ago. He taught us about the invisible hand, with the invisible hand being the market forces, and how supply and demand and the equilibrium price work. That decides for us how markets should ebb and flow.

Usually when the government gets involved, it messes up that supply-and-demand equilibrium price. This is a classic example of the supply chain management on the federal side, where we are paying three times what it costs for cheese or double what it costs for milk. If we start to try to micromanage an economy, there are too many nuances involved in an economy that we get it wrong. This is the reason why – even as much as I, personally, in our family, on a microscale follow this already. We've already bought into it a few years ago. We believe that this is something that we need to do, that we need to eat more locally grown food, that it's a healthier product, healthier for our families. But in terms of the application of this from a provincial level, I am not in favour of this, and that's why I'll be voting against this.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just a couple of small items. I'm happy to speak to the amended Bill 202. Speaking of the amendment, it was brought forward by the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. A couple of comments made by the Member for Drumheller-Stettler regarding the amendments and how he had – actually, some of the amendments corrected some of the discussion that's been had by the member with the member proposing. Now, it kind of brings me to my point, the fact that we were delivered this amendment, two full pages, a lot of legalese, and given about 10 minutes to look at it. Now, had the member had maybe 24 hours to discuss and go through and strike out the sections before he made his speech, he may not have mentioned those two points. I guess it's very important that – you know, that's a good lesson to everyone in the House, that maybe if there is an amendment, we should be given a little bit of time to digest it before we start to discuss it.

The other thing is the concern that I have when it comes to delivering goods and services to an institution. We've struck out quite a few of them: "a facility within the meaning of section 1 of the Mental Health Act," the Hospitals Act, or the Nursing Homes Act. But we've still left in quite a few sections: "a department, branch or office of the Government of Alberta," "an agency, board or commission of the Government of Alberta." Then it follows with "a school or post-secondary institution in Alberta the enrolments of which . . ." and it goes on.

Now, my concern is that after the year that we've had in Alberta, with very unpredictable whether – we have drought conditions. You can have pests. A lot of the farmers up in our area are dealing with an issue with clubroot. That's to do with canola. You know, that stuff with the yellow flowers on it. At the point where a farmer or a group has made a commitment to an institution to supply them with, let's say, carrots or potatoes, and they have a drought or a disease come through and wipe out their crop or significantly wipe out their crop, who then becomes responsible to fulfill those contracts? It could be very, very expensive and almost to the point of breaking a local supplier if they had to all of a sudden start fulfilling contracts for a year or on a yearly basis that they've made with one of these huge institutions. That's a concern.

The second one is when it comes to what's already taking place in the province. We've already got, you know, associations that deal with the large greenhouses. I had mentioned Sunshine Food. They supply Sobeys. They supply Extra Foods with locally grown foods. They can buy up anything that a greenhouse can produce. As a matter of fact, I had a proposal with a group from Two Hills that was going to produce five acres of cucumbers, lettuce, carrots, happens every Friday at 1 o'clock. I'll tell you what. It's the quality of produce, how clean it is, and its price. Those folks in there work that out in a hurry. If you want to sell your produce and get home, it's good quality, it's clean, it's packaged, and the price is right. Now, if we take that away from them by infringing legislation on them and competition with larger groups, it's only going to serve to hurt the small producers. Again, I stress that my main concern is fulfilling contracts. There's a lot of legality here, and I don't think that a lot of these smaller producers can afford to get into a legal battle with an institution where they've said: "Okay. You're going to supply us with carrots every week." "Well, we have a crop failure. Now what do I have to do? I have to go out and buy carrots from Mexico or South America to fulfill my contract." So I guess that's my concern.

The other part of it is that after a mere two weeks on a six-page document, we've got two pages of amendments. Now, I understand that some of the amendments are just verbiage and that they were discussed with our shadow minister for agriculture, and a lot of these things did make sense and were passed. We thank you for considering those. My concern is that if we can find within two weeks two pages of amendments to this document without any chance to discuss it, what are we going to do in further bills that are a lot more complex, that just try to get rushed through the House in a matter of a couple of days without any discussion or going to committee? On those grounds themselves I think the bill is not bad. It could use some tweaking, and with a little bit further discussion we could probably have something that's more workable to the common small producers in Alberta. On those grounds alone I'll be voting against this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak?

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. At this time I would like to propose an amendment to Bill 202.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A2.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. In light of the discussion with regard to this bill, the Minister of Economic Development and Trade referred to it as a food security bill only. I see that there are many different aspects of this bill that I would question the validity of. But when we talk about a food security bill, I see that in section 6, public sector procurement of local food, "the Minister, in collaboration with the Advisory Committee, shall consider ways to increase the procurement of local food by public sector organizations as part of the strategy."

In my opinion, this bill is becoming more than just a bill on food security. It is also implementing a strategy to increase the procurement of local food by public-sector organizations without really putting any guidelines into the description of that. I would propose that if we truly are concerned about food security and that food security is the basis of the formation of this bill, we would consider, then, to amend Bill 202 by striking out section 6.

The Chair: Any others wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Okay. I think there needs to be clarity brought forward that one of the amendments in the previous one is to create recommendations, not to mandate public-sector procurement but to create recommendations of what is feasible. The strategy would address what barriers are faced by public-sector procurement so that they could possibly decide – not mandated, decide. If they want to access local food, they can do it. Are you discouraging public sectors from accessing local food? I really don't think that it's necessary. I think that the amendment provided a circumstance and a way for it to have flexibility and to evaluate the feasibility, and it addressed the issues that you had brought forward. You know, what are the things that make it difficult for the public sector, the contracts? All of those things need to be brought forward in a strategy to answer those questions. That is what this bill is asking for. It's asking to strike a committee that would evaluate the feasibility for the public sector for local food systems to be improved – what are the barriers addressed? – to create a committee that would be voices for the local food system.

Now, I don't think the concept of the amendments that I brought forward was really understood. There is no longer a mandate for the public-sector procurement. To take this part out is to discourage any progress, so I discourage voting for this.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2?

Mr. Hanson: I'll speak to that one.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd just like to point out that, under purposes, under section 2, "the purposes of this act are as follows," under section (c), "to provide an increased and stable demand for local food through public sector organization purchasing." To me, that speaks to legislation when we're talking about government. Okay. I mean, we go through the process, under definitions of the act, of listing which departments or branches of the government of Alberta will be involved in this. We've gone through the motion in the amendment to purposely strike out four different types of organizations, but we still left three in. Then we go and say again in (c), "to provide an increased and stable demand for local food through public sector organization purchasing." Now, to me, that tells me that you're going to legislate and force these organizations to purchase locally.

Cortes-Vargas: The act doesn't give that power. The act is asking to strike a committee.

Mr. Hanson: An act is law. An act is law.

Cortes-Vargas: No; I understand.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. The hon. member who's proposing this bill made a statement a moment ago that said that this is nothing more than a recommendation. Frankly, we don't need a law to make a recommendation. The government of Alberta doesn't need a law to make a recommendation. Bill 202 is a law. It's not a motion urging the government to do something. Perhaps what's really going on here is that this should have been a motion and not really a bill. When you enact a law, this is a law. That's where this bill is headed, to be a law. We don't need a law telling the government to recommend things. It's just silly.

The other thing I have a problem with is that we don't need a law to strike an advisory committee either, yet here we have another advisory panel. I just went through Sunday, and the outcome of one of this government's advisory panels just hit the people of Alberta with a $3 billion tax bill, so I'm a little bit gun shy when it comes to this government's proposing that we need another advisory where this bill is headed, to be a law. We don't need a law telling the government to recommend things. It's just silly.

The other thing I have a problem with is that we don't need a law to strike an advisory committee either, yet here we have another advisory panel. I just went through Sunday, and the outcome of one of this government's advisory panels just hit the people of Alberta with a $3 billion tax bill, so I'm a little bit gun shy when it comes to this government's proposing that we need another advisory panel. Sorry; I get kind of skittish about what taxes are going to come out of that advisory panel.

There are already mechanisms within this Legislature to act as advisory panels to government. They're called standing committees, legislative committees. I am very concerned that this government is so fast to call for advisory panels but is not making use of the legislative mechanisms we already have in place, which are the standing committees, who could then call on Albertans to come and consult and to speak to these bills, have expert witnesses come. This is the consultative process that our forefathers thought was a good idea, so they created these standing committees, which are not being utilized by this government. Instead, you're going time and again to advisory panels, which are expensive, which do not make use of the legislative process we have in place. Is it that you don't trust legislative committees? Is it that, you know, there are people out there you're trying to support by putting them on your advisory panels? What is exactly the problem with having these bills go before the legislative committees that are in place to do this kind of work, to bring people in to give testimony? If we went before a legislative committee, we may find that there are other errors, other omissions, other things that could be included in this.

I agree with my colleagues who have come before me and have said that the intent of this is fine but that it needs help. Quite frankly, you know, when it comes to public-sector purchases, there is already no barrier that I'm aware of hindering the public sector from buying things anywhere that they want to. It is known, for your education and elucidation, as free-market enterprise. We have the freedom to buy wherever we want to buy, and the public sector can do the same. I don't need someone legislating to me where I can buy carrots or not buy carrots, thank you very much. I don't believe that we need to be legislating this kind of a thing. In my opinion, it is a waste of legislative process, especially when you are already not making use of the legislative process that's in place to consider these things. They're called committees.

I cannot support this bill, and that's all I have to say. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other member wishing to speak to amendment A2?

Mr. Hanson: Just a note. The member who posed the amendment: is he not able to close the amendment?

The Chair: He can speak again, but there is not a formal closing of the debate.

Mr. Hanson: So he can speak again? Sorry; he didn't realize that.

The Chair: He could speak again if he wished.

Mr. Hanson: Can we let him go? Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. van Dijken: Sorry for that, Madam Chair. I thought I would be asked to stand to speak.

The Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park stated that the amendments brought forward today, in striking out from section 1(e) items (iii), (iv), (v), and (vi), would essentially accomplish the intent of my motion to strike out section 6. When we have as one of the purposes within our proposed bill purpose 2(c), "to provide an increased and stable demand for local food through public sector organization purchasing," I would have hoped that if that intent was clear, that would have been struck out also.

I would encourage everyone to consider striking out section 6 in the interest that this would be then a food security bill more so than a food procurement bill.

The Chair: Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: All right. We are back on the main bill. Any further comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to Bill 202?

If not, then we will call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 202 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Feehan: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 202. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Persons with Developmental Disabilities Services (Public Consultation) Amendment Act, 2015

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm incredibly happy to rise today and commence second reading of my private member's bill, Bill 205, Persons with Developmental Disabilities Services (Public Consultation) Amendment Act, 2015.

On December 3, 1992, the United Nations established observance of an international day of disabled persons. The United Nations declared the need for active participation of persons with disabilities in the planning of policies and processes that affect their lives. The motto that came out of that was Nothing about Us without Us.

The goal of this bill is simple in its wording and complex in terms of how the end result will be achieved. This bill is about changing the trajectory of the current supports for persons with disabilities in Alberta. This bill is about changing the way that we do things, and it's about truly endorsing the phrase: nothing about us without us.

Madam Speaker, as I'm sure you know, Alberta has a long and sordid history of supporting people with developmental disabilities. The segregation of people with developmental disabilities has been long documented in this province. Although I think we've taken huge steps to correct things, we still have much work to do. It's beyond just geography. It's beyond just where they live or how they live. When people are segregated and not consulted, they become objects of pity and not true participants in their communities. They become passive recipients of charity and not fully contributing members of their communities.

Like all movements, people with disabilities rallied to change things. Until very recently I was a pretty active part of those rallies, and I never imagined that I would be inside of this House speaking to the issue that I was always outside speaking about. The gains that people with disabilities have made in Alberta and in Canada are a direct result of the work they have done. The community living movement is a direct result of the work done by people with disabilities. Independent living is far more than living independently. Inclusive education is far more than being included. It's about education both ways. It's about students with disabilities, any form of disability, having relationships with students that are not labelled with disabilities, and it's about all students learning from each other. When we have true inclusive education, we all win; inclusive employment, we all win.

Alberta Works is one of the programs undertaken, actually, by the previous government that is still functioning today. Although I disagree with the way that it was born and that it was without real consultation from stakeholders – and by stakeholders I mean people with disabilities – it was an important step in recognizing the skills and attributes of people with disabilities.

Unfortunately, we have far too many examples of the previous government getting it wrong. There were changes from the top-down sort of model to community governance, which was in place for years, which had community boards, appointed boards. Those were removed and replaced with the idea of community engagement councils. Those were also removed, and then there was nothing.

When you don't have something between the bureaucracy and the ministry and the people in the community, you lose something in translation, and I think that in the last few years we've seen that. Examples of that include movements to regulate the way people live their lives, not just where they live but how they live. In an effort to keep people safe, the previous government introduced regulations that looked at keeping people safe, but instead of actually keeping people safe, what they did was create homes that were small institutions. They removed choice, and they segregated people once again because they started to remove options.

Other examples of that were tools that they used to try to level the playing field, but these were assessment tools. One example is the supports intensity scale, which is a needs-based assessment that looked at meeting an individual with a disability and determining what they needed in terms of support. I don't think it's fair to ever assign a number and a level to a person to determine what they need to live successfully in the community.

Those are just some of the examples.

In my life before coming to this House, I worked much of my adult life with people with disabilities in the community, and I learned a great deal. I often had some wonderful ideas and some visions. I've been told that I'm a dreamer, and I don't think I'm the only one. I thought I had the answers for people, and I learned very early on that I was wrong. It was only when I actually consulted the people that I was hired to make decisions with that they worked.

I think it's time for us to not only move towards change in terms of the language that we use and the policies we endorse and the paths that we take, but we have to focus on giving a voice, giving the decision-making power as much as possible to the people that the decisions we're entrusted to make involve. That means real consultation. That means bringing in the stakeholders – people with disabilities, their families, their friends, their supporters, the organizations that do the work on the ground every single day – not just special-interest groups and not just people that are interested in making decisions for them.

I'm hopeful that we can all together agree on some common things, and that is that people with disabilities have the absolute right to determine what is important for them and for their lives, for their families, and for their friends; where they live, how they work, when they work, where they work; how they're assessed, what supports they get. It's vital. I think it's vital to our communities. It's only when everybody is included that our community is most rich. Inclusion is not a buzzword, should never be a buzzword but should always be a verb and always be something that we work towards.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. I look forward to hearing what the other members have to say as well.

The Deputy Speaker: The time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded. We are moving on to the next order of business.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Harm Reduction Policies

505. Ms Miller moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to review how best to integrate harm reduction policies throughout Alberta's public health care and human services systems with the goal of amending and incorporating these policies in related legislation and regulations.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today and bring this important motion to the floor for debate. Harm reduction is and should be an integral part of Alberta's response to the negative effects of drug use. Often we hear about prevention, treatment, or enforcement, all of which fall under the umbrella of harm reduction, but often we miss the conversation about what harm reduction really means in terms of day-to-day action.

It's important that, first, we define what we mean when we talk about harm reduction as this is key to the overall understanding of this important policy tool. Harm reduction includes policies, programs, and practices that aim to keep people safe and minimize death, disease, and injury from high-risk behaviour. Harm reduction recognizes that the high-risk behaviour may continue despite the risks.

The cornerstones of harm reduction are public health, human rights, and social justice. Harm reduction benefits people who use drugs or engage in other risky behaviours, families, and communities as a whole. There already is a lot of great harm reduction work going on throughout our province that is supported by both AHS and by front-line nonprofit organizations. In fact, I was pleased to see that included in the recently announced AHS board of directors was Marliss Taylor, an expert with years of experience in harm reduction. This shows the continued importance of this issue and how serious our government takes the idea of harm reduction.

The motion was formed in part by the work going on in the city of Red Deer, which has committed to integrating harm reduction policies locally to great benefit so far. The city has incorporated part of the renowned four-pillar strategy to respond to alcohol and drug use, which focuses on prevention, treatment, harm reduction, and community safety. The success of this strategy is something my colleague from Red Deer-North and I are both very excited about, and we commend all of the constituents involved in making this so effective.

I am also proud to say that Red Deer signed on to the Vienna declaration in 2011. The Vienna declaration is a statement seeking to improve community health and safety by calling for the incorporation of scientific evidence into illicit drug policies. The declaration was drafted by a team of international experts and initiated by several of the world's leading HIV and drug policy scientific bodies and was prepared through an extensive consultative process involving global leaders in medicine, public policy, and public health. The declaration was the official declaration of the International AIDS Conference, AIDS 2010, which was held in Vienna, Austria.

We recognized then, as we do now, that incorporating scientific evidence into drug policy is imperative. But with any harm reduction strategy it's important that we work within the law and with communities to make sure they are safe for everyone involved. This government cares about the health and well-being of all Albertans, including people with addiction and mental health needs. We are supportive of interventions that save or improve lives.

AHS currently does have a harm reduction policy in place, so this motion supports the good work that is already being done across Alberta. The Harm Reduction for Psychoactive Substance Use policy states that

- Alberta Health Services recognizes the value of harm reduction as an important component in the continuum of care required to effectively serve individuals that use psychoactive substances.
- Alberta Health Services may directly, or in partnership with community agencies, provide a range of harm reduction programs and services that assist individuals, families and communities to reduce the risk and adverse consequences of psychoactive substance use.

Programs and services are provided directly by AHS harm reduction teams. Alberta Health currently supports many harm reduction programs and policies throughout Alberta. Most notably, AHS provides harm reduction supplies distribution such as needles and condoms through AIDS service organizations.

The Central Alberta AIDS Network, CAANS, is a local community-based charity located right in my constituency of Red Deer-South, and it's a great example of an organization incorporating harm reduction policies into their programs. CAANS is responsible for sexually transmitted and blood-borne infection prevention and support in the Alberta Health Services' central zone.

But CAANS isn't alone as an organization using harm reduction techniques. CAANS has sister charities across Alberta that all use this approach: HIV North, with offices in Grande Prairie and Fort McMurray, serving the northern zone; HIV West Yellowhead, serving Hinton, Edson, Jasper, and area; Streetworks in Edmonton; Safeworks in Calgary; Lethbridge HIV Connection; and HIV Community Link in Medicine Hat. These organizations all provide exemplary services rooted in a harm reduction approach. We need to continue to invest in addiction and mental health programs and services that have proven to be effective at helping Albertans.

It's also important to note that most of these organizations are working within their main city and that rural outreach is still rare. We know that addictions can be present in communities of all shapes and sizes. That's why I'm so pleased that our government has undertaken the mental health review currently being led by the members for Calgary-Mountain View and Lesser Slave Lake. The mental health review will help inform our strategy for addiction and mental health services going forward. In anticipation of its release and its recommendations Alberta Health has budgeted $10 million.

We all know that one of the biggest issues facing many Alberta communities right now is the issue of fentanyl addiction and overdose. This issue has hit Red Deer especially hard. My constituents and nonprofits working to combat this were extremely pleased with the minister's efforts on this issue and the expansion of the community-based, take-home naloxone kits across the province. This action has saved lives, and I thank the minister for her action on this.

It's also important to note that AHS recently launched a fentanyl harm reduction website to coincide with the provincial campaign, www.drugsfool.ca. This campaign targets recreational club users with messaging in environments of potential use and also in online environments. Additionally, the campaign will . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Excuse me, hon. member. Can I just interrupt you for a moment? I want to remind the members that we are not in committee and that you must all be in your seats during this portion of the proceedings. Thank you.

Proceed, hon. member.

Ms Miller: Additionally, the campaign will see dissemination of wallet-sized harm reduction materials for the entrenched user population through all partners in Alberta's new take-home naloxone program. I know this program will benefit my constituency, and I know other members of this Assembly can expect the same benefits from this program to be seen in their own constituencies as well. In recognition of fentanyl concerns associated with some aboriginal communities in Alberta, the campaign will also roll out awareness messaging to several aboriginal communities across AHS's five zones. This campaign is exactly the type of action this motion today hopes to support and see expanded.

The study and integration of harm reduction policies will continue to save lives and make a difference in the lives of Albertans facing addiction issues. Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to bring this important motion to the floor today. Harm reduction ensures that people are treated with respect and without stigma and that substance-related problems and issues are addressed systematically. Alberta is already doing a lot of great work in regard to addictions and mental health, and I hope this motion will help to further that work today. I sincerely hope that all members in this House will join me in supporting this motion today.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to thank my colleagues on both sides of the House for their contributions to this discussion and their compassion. I'm going to start with a little history. You know, many years ago during the Troubles in Ireland the British Home Secretary remarked that the situation had been kept to an acceptable level of violence. This comment was widely regarded as a terrible gaffe at the time. It was a cynical calculation that just didn't sit right with most folks.

I think much of the public debate around harm reduction strategies comes down to how we view the calculation at the very heart of harm reduction. Let's make no mistake here. When it comes to the use of narcotics, there is no truly and completely safe way around it. We can see this with the recent fentanyl crisis in this province. The difference between life and death can come down to a single milligram.

Now, I don't think anyone here would disagree that we must try to mitigate the harm done by these dangerous and damaging drugs, drugs that have robbed so many of their friends and family members. However, there needs to be acknowledgement that these hard-core drugs also rob the living of their health, their vitality, and their livelihoods. The ideal – the ideal – should always remain the elimination of these destructive forces in their lives.

The long-term elimination of narcotics in our society is by no means an easy goal. As members of this Assembly we all know how drug use has impacted our own constituencies and our province. Nobody will claim that removing these tentacles of illicit narcotics that have crept into our communities is a simple task.

I'd now like to paraphrase a great leader from years ago, with whom I'm sure many will be familiar. He was speaking in a different context and delivered it better than I can, but I believe the sentiment stands.

We choose to . . . do [these] things, not because they are easy, but because they are hard, because that goal will serve to organize and measure the best of our energies and skills, because that challenge is one that we are willing to accept, one we are unwilling to postpone, and one which we intend to win.

Now, clearly, there is a spectrum of harm reduction policies out there. Many, in fact, are already being used in Alberta. I mentioned fentanyl earlier, and I think it's important to note that many places around North America have expanded access to naloxone, which is the antidote for opiates. Here in Alberta we also offer methadone substitution treatment for addicts to try to help get them off these harmful substances.

That, again, is the key point here. The end goal is getting people off these substances, that cause so much pain, grief, and misery. We must show compassion to those affected. We must reach out our hands to help them out of these cycles of dependency and do everything we can toward that goal. My concern is that a focus on harm reduction has the potential to crowd out treatment and proper support. It is my sincerest hope that we continue to offer every support to those who need it and strive towards the health and well-being of all Albertans.

While there are certainly successes within the harm reduction model, there are also successful alternative models that we should look at. We could examine a nation like Sweden, that has taken a firmer approach to the elimination of drug abuse within their borders. The United Nations notes that the Swedish strategy has yielded positive results in the form of reduced drug use and abuse, even lower than European averages. Keep in mind that they do not use a particularly heavy-handed or overly punitive approach. Their prisons, in fact, have far fewer occupants from drug crimes than many comparable nations.

They do however see an emphasis on drug reduction and the ultimate goal of elimination of these dangerous and addictive substances as part of a broader perspective on health and wellness policy. The alternative to harm reduction is not an increase in harm, and an alternative can have the same public health objectives accomplished a different way. I find their goals admirable. They advocate for a drug-free society, and with compassion, treatment, and adequate supports for those in need they are working towards that each and every day.

Let harm reduction successes be a bridge to treatment and overall harm elimination. Nobody would expect any less for their own friends or family. I dearly hope that we do not see harm reduction as merely a second-best or good-enough solution while treatment and detox supports are neglected. It would be a true tragedy, Madam Speaker, to see treatment options reserved only for those with the means to access them. I earlier mentioned the cynical calculation of an acceptable level of harm. Interestingly, one law enforcement officer from downtown Vancouver remarked in the National Post, "The rich get treatment, the poor get harm reduction." I hope to see a system where all people are given every chance to reclaim their health, vitality, and dignity.

To conclude, I do support some harm reduction strategies as interim measures preventing mortality and improving health outcomes, but I also know and believe that we are already doing many of these things in Alberta. This motion, as written, is also too vague while many of the possible approaches require far more discussion and debate than the very limited time here.

Finally, I would like to see a much greater emphasis on proper treatment options and an eye always – always – toward a laudable goal of harm elimination.

Madam Speaker, for these reasons, I don't believe I will be supporting this motion as written.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Miranda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to rise and speak in support of this motion, and I thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-South for bringing it forward. The concept of harm reduction is supported by research showing that many drug-related problems are not just the result of the drugs themselves. In fact, there are many compounding and contributing factors such as the unregulated manufacturing of drugs in addition to existing policies and laws that do not deal with the root causes of the problem. We know that expenditures for law enforcement related to illicit drug use, while very important, often have limited success in the overall reduction of consumption. We know from history that a prohibition-type policy approach does not work.

Madam Speaker, we need to recognize that high-risk behaviour often continues despite people being informed of the risks or being jailed for drug-related offences. Harm reduction strategies ensure that people who use psychoactive substances are treated with respect and without stigma and that the substance abuse related problems and the related issues are addressed systemically. This will include a recognition that there is a mental health component to this issue. I hope that the mental health review currently taking place will help us reformulate our current strategy for addiction and mental health services going forward. I look forward with anticipation to the recommendations.

I would encourage all members to be supportive of this motion and to support an approach that can save and improve lives and improve the health and well-being of all Albertans because this is a community issue that impacts all of us. We all need to be part of the solution.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm rising today to speak in support of this motion. Members of this House can have honest disagreements about the intent of it or the outcome of it. Perhaps it is vaguely worded, as motions typically are. The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat spoke before me for my caucus and listed the reasons why we should not be giving up on people with addictions and not be focusing on harm reduction to the exclusion of recovery from addictions. But there is still a role for harm reduction, and I don't believe that this motion excludes recovery from addictions.

Too many of us – and I've probably been guilty – look down on people with addictions, condemn them, think we're better than them, but people with addictions are not just the lowest rungs of society. They're everybody: they're middle-class people, they're powerful, they're rich, they're poor. It can happen to anybody. It doesn't just happen to one social class or one ethnicity. We're all susceptible to it, and we have not done the job we should be doing as a society to help people recover. We haven't done the work we need to do as a government, as a province in helping those with addictions minimize the harm to them.

There are right ways to do this, and there are wrong ways. I once lived in Victoria, B.C., and the government had opened up a needle-exchange program beside my home. Well, doing that in a neighbourhood that did not have those kinds of problems was harmful. It created a crime wave in a neighbourhood that had previously not had that level of crime. It exposed children to danger, with needles on sidewalks.

But that isn't to say that there is not a real place for harm reduction. It's not to say that we shouldn't be doing everything we can to help those who need it. This is one of the roles of government. This is one of the reasons why we are here. Not everybody is going to be cured of addiction. Perhaps I'm a bit defeatist, but not everybody's going to be cured. Not everybody's going to be clean, but we can make life better for them, and we can make life better for those not addicted. Many of the drugs people are addicted to have public risks for those not addicted themselves, be it needles left in parks or crime that comes from people who are willing to do anything to get their next fix.

We can have honest disagreements about how the motion is written, but I read it as not excluding addictions treatment. I read it as promoting harm reduction. Now, the specifics of that are to be seen in the details. We have to wait and see, if this motion passes, what the government comes forward with, and I'll judge that particular bill on its merits. But the motion as presented right now, I think, is in the best spirits of why we're here, to help those who desperately need it, some people who need it and want it, some people who don't even know they need help yet. As long as this motion is not coming at the expense of addictions recovery, then I can support it.

While I will understand why some members here won't – I think we have a legitimate difference of opinion on the interpretation of the wording – I know that all members, regardless of how they're voting on this issue, have the best interests of those that need help at heart. So I encourage all members of this House to support the motion from the Member for Red Deer-South.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak in favour of Motion 505. This past summer I had the opportunity to tour the Boyle Street Community Services, one of the many dedicated social agencies which are located and operate in Edmonton-Centre. As part of that tour I had the opportunity to meet an amazing woman, Marliiss Taylor, who co-ordinates one of their most important programs, Streetworks.

For over 20 years, under Marliiss's direction Streetworks has been working with injection drug users and participants in the sex trade to provide them with the skills, knowledge, research, and support they need to remain safer and healthier. This support is provided without judgement and instead focuses on creating relationships of trust, that allow Streetworks staff to provide crucial education about the health risks that these individuals face, which many members have noted here today, health risks such as hepatitis B and C, HIV, or drugs such as fentanyl. Streetworks arms these individuals with the means to protect themselves and helps them access treatment centres or medical care. Their services are available at six locations across our downtown core and through the Streetworks van, which operates six evenings a week responding to calls from individuals in need and supplying them with clean needles, condoms, and basic medical care on the streets where they live.

On my tour of Streetworks at Boyle Street Marliiss also introduced me to the HER pregnancy project, which with funding from Alberta Health Services provides intensive outreach to street-involved pregnant women who would likely not otherwise access or receive prenatal care. A recent social-return-on-investment case study found that for every dollar invested in the HER pregnancy program, there is a return of $8.24 in social value created by the program.

But more importantly, Madam Speaker, through this outreach more than 130 street-involved pregnant women were able to access previously out-of-reach health and social resources and services, leading to 60 recorded births, of which HER staff attended 13. Because of this program 32 children were able to remain in their mother's care and another five were taken in by family or friends. That's 37 children who have a brighter, healthier future. Evaluations have also shown that the women who received assistance also exhibited positive behavioural changes related to their substance abuse and sexual practices and felt more empowered to stay safe and be involved in decisions about the care of their babies.

I'm incredibly happy to say that just one short month ago the woman that headed that program, the woman who's been the driving force behind Streetworks and the growth of harm reduction services here in Edmonton, Ms Marliiss Taylor, was appointed as a member of the new Alberta Health Services board of directors. Now we as a province have the opportunity to benefit greatly from her deep knowledge of and experience with implementing harm reduction as well as her deep compassion for Albertans caught in the vicious cycle of addiction.

These services help people and save lives. They reduce the need for costly health and social interventions by helping individuals in need make safer, healthier decisions. Let's be clear, Madam Speaker. The ultimate objective of harm reduction services is to see individuals empowered to cease the activities that cause them harm. Harm reduction services help people to do so without the judgement and stigmatization which have traditionally accompanied social policy. Organizations like Streetworks support individuals in need to access treatment by first building relationships of trust, by assisting those in need, offering them small amounts of help, and then over time helping to guide them towards treatment and, hopefully, one day being free of the activities that caused them and others harm.

As noted, I recognize that there have been many important first steps that have been taken by Alberta Health Services to support and implement harm reduction services. I'm very grateful to see those having been taken. I believe we have the opportunity now to do much more. We have an opportunity now to benefit not only those Albertans in need, these vulnerable populations, but all Albertans across the province. For that reason, I will be happy to vote in favour of this motion in the hopes that both the availability of and the support for these services will be expanded across Alberta.

Thank you.

5:30

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other hon. members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise in the Assembly today to speak to Motion 505, put forward by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South. First, let me express my sincere appreciation to the member for bringing this motion forward. I believe wholeheartedly that the member is bringing forward this motion in an effort to help the most vulnerable amongst us, and I salute the member for this.

As I have said before in this Assembly, I believe that as a society we are judged by how we treat the most vulnerable among us. I believe – and I trust that members on both sides of the aisle agree with me – that we should strive each day to help those most vulnerable in our society. We might not always agree on how to do that, but I truly believe that all members of this Assembly do want to help.

I spent a good portion of my previous life working as the executive director with the Mustard Seed. I have worked for many years with homeless individuals suffering from addiction. I had the privilege of growing up in a family that has been dedicated for decades to caring for Alberta's homeless population. It's an issue that I care about very much, and it is at the core of who I am.

There are many reasons why people end up homeless, but with the limited time that I have here today, I would like to focus on the fact that addictions are very common among our homeless population. Some individuals are homeless because of their addictions, some became addicted after they were homeless, and of course, some homeless people are not suffering from addictions. But without a doubt, if you spend any considerable time working on the streets with homeless people, you quickly learn that addictions are a major issue.

With that in mind, I want to make clear to this Assembly that I am all for reducing the harm to those suffering from addictions. I want to ensure that we are helping the most vulnerable in our society, as I have said, Madam Speaker. However, I have some concerns, though, that sometimes harm reduction strategies that I have seen in the past – their focus often unintentionally becomes not about helping people get better or about helping people become productive members of society or helping them overcome the prison of addiction they find themselves in.

I believe wholeheartedly that we need to provide avenues for individuals to not only reduce harm but to truly eliminate harm, to try and fix the situation and to help individuals escape the pit of addiction that has been destroying both their lives and the lives of people around them. We need to make sure that while focusing on reducing harm, we are not just taking the individual and hiding them from the world. Simply hiding the problem from the view of the day-to-day public is not a solution. We must not relegate these individuals to areas that are essentially palliative care and say to them: "Here you go. Here's a safe place. You're not in an alley any more. We're reducing harm from your addiction. You're still harming yourself, but you're just doing it slower and out of sight." Instead, we need to ensure there are places and programs in place to provide support to these individuals and services not only to reduce harm but to eliminate harm, enabling them to get better and to have better lives.

I do not want to see people in the streets, suffering from addiction, placed in what amounts to palliative care, where, yes, the harm from their situation is being reduced, but it is not being eliminated, and they are still suffering from the pain and severe consequences of addiction. I know I have been to more funerals for addicts than I can count and more than I care to count. I have worked with many addicts who are homeless. Some have been able to escape the prison of addiction; some have not. I can tell you that the ones who have escaped the prison of addiction are living happy, productive lives in our society. The ones who did not are still on drugs, living in despair. Many have been shuffled off to housing units somewhere. Some are even no longer with us.

One of my favourite success stories in my career belongs to a young lady who I will not name, Madam Speaker. She realized that she had had enough, that she wanted help. She was severely addicted to methamphetamines for many years. She called an uncle and begged for help. He, of course, did not know what to do, as family often does not, but he started calling everyone he could to help this girl. He called dozens of agencies. All were full or had waiting lists that were weeks or months long. He ended up calling me, and when I answered the phone, he started telling me the story. I had to say the same thing as everyone else: "Sorry. I'm full. I'm beyond full. Every bed is full." He pushed me passionately for this girl. He knew he had no options left.

My gut told me to do something, Madam Speaker, so I talked to our staff, and we ended up putting her up in a motel, and we found her some treatment programs focused on beating her addiction. She arrived at our facility less than a hundred pounds, looking as near death as I have ever seen somebody walking. Within six months she was unrecognizable, sober, and learning the skills she needed to cope. She would eventually become my executive assistant and would go on to college. Just last year she graduated with an accounting degree and has never looked back.

I know dozens of stories like that. They're what made the job worth doing. That is important for two reasons. The reason this girl got treatment was because we managed to squeeze her in. Our donors generously provided enough resources so that we could go outside the box and get her the help she needed. Secondly, from the moment she arrived, we focused on getting her the help she needed, not reducing the harm that came from the behaviour but, instead, giving her the tools and the support to overcome her addiction.

I've seen other street people that I have known through the years, that came into our facilities to eat or sleep on the mat. They stayed on the streets or entered programs that were not focused on getting resources to help them overcome their addiction. Many of them are dead now, Madam Speaker, more than I care to remember.

Addictions are terrible. Of course, we want to see harm reduction, but we do not want to see out-of-sight, out-of-mind policies: you, go sleep here; continue your behaviour. This is less risky, but you're still doing what is killing you. That is basically palliative care for drug addicts. I do not want to push to have the problem become out of sight, out of mind. Putting them in this corner makes it a little more comfortable for us and safer for them to do their behaviour, but the behaviour is still killing them, prolonging the inevitable. To me that is the avenue of no hope. That is the road of giving up. I instead would prefer to help people overcome their addictions, overcome their burdens and have great lives.

I spoke in this Chamber before about my dad. My dad is my hero. Here is a man who was homeless at 12 years old. He became addicted to every substance under the sun. He drank Lysol and other terrible things just to fuel his addiction. The RCMP in his hometown became so sick of him that they decided to go with the out-of-sight, out-of-mind approach. They picked him up passed out in a park, because they were so sick of dealing with him, and they threw him on a bus. He woke up in Calgary, where he continued to live on the streets and slowly kill himself.

If it was not for a group of men who saw him and took pity on him, fed him, clothed him, housed him, taught him how to face his demons, I shudder at the thought, Madam Speaker. If it was not for them, I would not be here, my brothers would not be here, my kids would not be here, the Mustard Seed certainly would not be here, and the tens of thousands of people that my dad helped through his work at the Mustard Seed would not have been helped. The girl I told you about would not be a sober accountant living a successful life. You see, those men chose to invest in my dad. The RCMP that day – and I’m not ragging on the RCMP – chose out of sight, out of mind.

I ask you, Madam Speaker: which option was the better option for my dad, for our society? Clearly, the path to getting my dad sober and free from demons was the better path. The path of supporting the girl I worked with, who is now an accountant, was the best path. The critical thing for her was that the resources were in place that were needed to get her help. We need to ensure that we get the funding to those who can help the people in need, that we make clear that we can face these terrible problems with people and help them overcome it, that we choose to invest in people rather than put them out of sight, out of mind.

I’m all for harm reduction. I know that we cannot help people who are dead from overdosing on a bad fix. I know how terrible it is to see somebody get an incurable disease from sharing needles. I’ve seen it. I get it. But I’m not in favour of the sort of harm reduction that focuses on the palliative care model, which provides no avenue of hope to overcome the streets or the prison of addiction.

For me this motion is vague. It does not fully spell out what we are trying to do. I cannot vote for a motion that does not make clear that we as a society, as a province, and as a government are not only focused on reducing the immediate harm; we must remain focused on eliminating that harm and helping people out of the prison of addiction. As such, I cannot support this motion. I feel obligated to always vote on the side of investment in individuals. I want to ensure that we are not just reducing harm but that, instead, we are providing hope and making lives better.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and thanks to the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundry for his very honest and powerful statement supporting, I think, harm reduction in addition to the many other ways that we have to show real commitment and compassion to people who have a disease called addiction and who cannot make good choices as a result of that addiction.

I hesitated to get up because I am involved in the mental health review with the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake. But it’s a well-established, well-shown, well-proven approach to reducing risk. It is only one aspect of a comprehensive care that includes housing and counselling and detox and many approaches to cognitive and behavioural therapy and all manner of things: for some, meditation; for some, acupuncture. There are many different traditional treatments in the First Nations community that have been shown to help.

Nobody is saying that harm reduction is the be-all and end-all treatment of addiction. What we’re saying is that there’s been ambiguity not only in this province but also federally by the Conservative Party of Canada about whether they support it or not. They’ve given a little bit but not sufficient. They have not been clear about what they do not – and it is a subtle issue, to be sure. Some people can argue that you’re enabling drug abuse by giving a substitute, for example Suboxone for fentanyl or methadone for blocking . . .

An Hon. Member: Heroin.

Dr. Swann: Heroin. Thank you.

It is only one of an array of care that has to do with really helping a person to take that next little step to freedom.

While I can’t indicate recommendations before the committee commits to its recommendations, I can say that as a public health officer, someone who’s been involved with addictions over many years through the public health system, I’ve seen the benefit of limiting the spread of HIV with condoms. I’ve seen the benefit of methadone in people who reach the point where they suddenly say: “I think I can do this. I have the supports I need. I have a house. I have the mental capacity now. I see what I’m doing. I’m going to make the tough decision. I’ve been given these extra few weeks or few months as a result of the methadone I’ve been on. I’ve had a good counsellor for the first time. Somebody has demonstrated their commitment to me, and I suddenly feel like I believe in myself.” All these things come together, and harm reduction is just one piece of that, which allows them to take that big leap to say, “This is it; I’m going to get off” whatever the addiction is.

There’s no question that it’s a little big vague. It’s a general principle, but it’s a general principle that we haven’t had the confidence of the federal government. Even the provincial government hasn’t sustained and seriously committed to and educated the public to reduce the stigma and to reduce the sense that this is enabling drug addiction or that it’s enabling promiscuity or whatever they want to argue about the other side of harm reduction. I just wanted to say that from a public health perspective, from somebody who has worked with high-risk individuals in the past, there’s no question in my mind that the evidence is there. I will certainly be supporting this, and I’m hoping that my committee – I’m only one of three who are heading up this review committee – will also support it clearly and strongly.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other hon. members who wish to speak to this motion? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I really want to acknowledge the wisdom and courage that’s been shown by many of the speakers across the aisle as well as on our side. I’m rising, actually, just to augment and echo what the Member for Calgary-Mountain View was saying. As a physician I’m very aware of the medical consequences of not doing harm reduction. Some of you may know that for many years I was the medical director of a blood transfusion service in this city. I can tell you that the failure of our medical system back in the mid-80s to recognize harm reduction as a means of preventative health led to one of the greatest medical tragedies that this country has ever experienced. Whether or not we can deal with mental health issues with medication or with counselling or with better genetics, we are still left with this problem of needing to deal with the consequences of this, and certainly this motion would help our society deal with the realities of the effects of mental health.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Then the hon. Member for Red Deer-South to close debate.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I’m very pleased that I had the opportunity to bring this important motion to the floor today. I really enjoyed the thorough debate and appreciated many of the points made from all sides of this House.

In closing debate, I’d like to reiterate that there already is a lot of harm reduction work going on throughout our province that is supported by both AHS and by front-line, nonprofit organizations. I’m proud that this government cares about the health and well-being of all Albertans, including people with addiction and mental health needs. The minister's work on this file shows this. We are supportive of interventions that save or improve lives. Harm reduction ensures that people are treated with respect and without stigma and that substance-related problems and issues are addressed systematically.

Madam Speaker, I hope this motion will be able to help further that work, and I thank everyone for their contribution to this important discussion today. I sincerely hope that all members in this House will join me in supporting this motion today.

Thank you.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta10 a.m.*Tuesday, November 24, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a sad day. The strengths of this Assembly are our diversity and the commitment to public service that all of us share. The Member for Calgary-Greenway lost his life in public service. I thought it fitting that today we might have a prayer that was of his faith. Please bow your heads.

What do I know? How will I die? What sort of death will it be? If I do not forget the Lord Master from my mind, then my death will be easy. The world is terrified of death; everyone longs to live. By Guru's grace, one who dies while yet alive understands the Lord's will. O Nanak, one who dies such a death lives forever.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the prayer.

I would seek unanimous consent from the House that at the beginning of tomorrow morning's sitting we begin with a prayer and then move immediately to Ministerial Statements.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, if you seek it, I'm sure you will find unanimous consent in the House to stand adjourned till tomorrow morning in honour and in remembrance of a great Albertan, a great man, a man with an even bigger heart than his stature, our friend and colleague Manmeet Bhullar.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Unanimous consent granted; the Assembly adjourned at 10:04 a.m. to Wednesday at 9 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta9 a.m.*Wednesday, November 25, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

PrayersThe Speaker: Good morning.

Let us bow our heads. Fellow members, today and for the next few days and weeks this will be a difficult time for all of us and particularly for some of our peers. Today we are also remembering the tragic events of Holodomor, that resulted in so many lost lives in the past. As we close our eyes and think about our former peers, a former MLA and our most recent brother who we've lost, we might think about what those members would be saying about events such as that that have taken place in our world and the need for us to continue our fight for greater freedom for people around the world and for democracy and to ensure that those events might never happen again as they demonstrate our collective need to fight for democracy and freedom.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the House that following discussions with all parties Ministerial Statements will not take place this morning but rather in the normal fashion, during Routine proceedings this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I would also move that the House adjourn to 1:30 this afternoon.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 9:02 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 25, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

As we all know and feel, this is a very solemn time for this Assembly, members, family with the recent passing of a former member and a current member.

Hon. members, as is our custom, we pay tribute to former members of this Assembly who have passed away since we last met.

Mrs. Weslyn Melva Mather
October 2, 1945, to November 22, 2015

The Speaker: Former member Weslyn Melva Mather was born on October 2, 1945, and was with us to November 22, 2015. Mrs. Mather served this Alberta Legislative Assembly as the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods from 2004 to 2008. Trained as both an educator and a chartered psychologist, after years of teaching, she became an adjunct professor at the University of Alberta's faculty of education. During her term in this Assembly Mrs. Mather tirelessly advocated on behalf of children's issues. She received many awards over the years, including the Alberta achievement of excellence in education in 1984 and the YMCA woman of distinction for education in 1997. In a moment of silence I ask you to remember Mrs. Mather as you may have known her.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, I would call upon you to say a few remarks and introduce the guests.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the House for the opportunity to pay tribute to my former colleague and friend Weslyn Mather. Today is an especially sad day in the Legislature. I was heartbroken to learn of the death of my friend and former colleague Weslyn Mather, who served in this House from 2004 to 2008 for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

I was elected alongside Weslyn, and she's been a stalwart of the Liberal Party in Alberta. I'm proud to have watched her champion causes and fight for a better, more accountable government. In particular, Mr. Speaker, what stands out most in my mind was her passionate advocacy for children and her long and eventually successful efforts to make the Child and Youth Advocate independent and reporting to the Legislature, which improved accountability and has helped so many since then. Weslyn, we will miss you.

With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, allow me to introduce to the House the members of Weslyn's family who are seated in your gallery. I'll ask them to stand as I call their names: first, Christyann Olson, sister – welcome – Ava Morasch, sister – stay standing if you will – Dale Morasch, brother-in-law; Alexis Holstead and Larry Holstead, sister and brother-in-law; Mary-Jo Woolgar, sister; Kiza Trentham, niece; Stu Trentham, nephew; also Richie Mather, Weslyn's grandson. Thank you for joining us today. Let us give you the warmest welcome from the Legislature.

The Speaker: Prior to Introduction of Guests, given the unique circumstances we are in today it is my sense that we will reach 1:50 prior to Ministerial Statements. I would therefore seek unanimous consent from members now to continue with the Routine until after all ministerial statements are complete.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: I would call on the Minister of Economic Development and Trade to introduce.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly honoured guests from Alberta's Ukrainian community. In 1932-33 Ukrainians were subjected to a horrific, callous, and sustained act. The Holodomor was a government-imposed famine in the Ukrainian SSR that took the lives of millions and scarred the lives of millions more. Today I am humbled to introduce two survivors. Pani Natalia Talanchuk and Pan Leonid Korownyk are with us today, and Mr. Korownyk is also joined by his wife, Pani Anne Korownyk. No words can describe what they endured, and their stories of survival and courage are an inspiration to us all.

Mr. Speaker, today they are joined by the president of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress, provincial council Olesia Luciwi-Andryjowycz; as well as past president Daria Luciwi; treasurer, Romana Latenko; provincial co-ordinator and the child of a survivor, Slavka Shulakewych; as well as Bishop Ilarion of Edmonton and the western eparchy of the Ukrainian Orthodox church of Canada; and from the Edmonton eparchy Most Reverend Bishop David Motiuk.

They are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I'd ask our honoured guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Minister of Transportation and of Infrastructure and Government House Leader, I understand you may have some guests to introduce.

Mr. Mason: I do, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a distinguished guest and former Member of this Legislative Assembly, Jim McPherson. Mr. McPherson served in the Alberta Legislature from 1982 to 1986 as the Member for Red Deer, leaving public service after the 1986 general election. Mr. McPherson joins us today as part of the delegation from Advocis, the Financial Advisors Association of Canada. There are nearly 60 members of Advocis that may be in the gallery, so I hope they'll forgive me if I don't name them all. I would ask Mr. McPherson and all members of Advocis to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you a group of special guests in the Legislature today on Gurpurab, which marks the birth of Guru Nanak Dev Ji, the first Sikh guru. Equality of all human beings and wand ke chhako, which means share your resources with others, help those in need, are the fundamental teachings of the guru and Sikhism.

These individuals are members of the Sikh community, Manmeet's community, which represents 27 million Sikhs around the globe. They include Balwinder Kahlon, Manjit Suri, Dr. Yadwinder Cheema, Parshotam Dass Bhardwaj, Manjit Singh Piasa. I would like to mention that these individuals are all members of Drug Awareness Foundation Calgary, which helps to raise awareness of the dangers of substance abuse in youth. I also have Chand Sadioura, Joginderpal Singh, Arundeeep Sandhu, Harinder Sandhu, Mahan Judge, Gurdev Plaha. In partnership with Canadian Blood Services these individuals helped organize blood drives in 80 cities across Canada. I attended one such event two weeks ago to commemorate the anniversary of the indiscriminate killing of Sikhs in Delhi in 1984. I would ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education and Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly members of the University of Alberta Students' Union. In attendance are all members of the five-person student executive as well as members of student council, the highest governing body of the students' union, all of whom have been democratically elected by the student body. The organization's mission is to run and maintain a building built by students for students, create a sense of community on campus between all students through programming and events, operate relevant businesses on campus, and advocate on students' interests to the University of Alberta, government, and the general public.

They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I'd ask that they all rise as I call their names: Dylan Hanwell, Cody Bondarchuk, Vivian Kwan, Fahim Rahman, Charles Lewis, Donald Ademaj, Sandy Xu, Ben Angus, Matthew Ryan, Sam Cheng, Jane Yu, and last but not least is Bo Zhang, who's also my constituency assistant. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, to you and through you to the members of this Assembly I will introduce Team Lethbridge, and I will do so by beginning with: I love Lethbridge and this wonderful coalition, and I hope that you will, too. This evening all MLAs are invited to a meet-and-greet hosted by Team Lethbridge to learn more about the many strengths, opportunities, and progressive work being undertaken in our city, and many of my colleagues have said thank you for the mugs. I will now introduce the first 23 members of Team Lethbridge, followed by my colleague: Councillor Liz Iwaskiw, Councillor Bridget Mearns, Mayor Chris Spearman, Jenn Schmidt-Rempel, Don Lacey, Angela Zuba, Cheryl Gilmore, Donna Hunt, Ken Tratch, Melody Garner, Brad Cook, Diane Kotkas, Erasmus Okine, Kim Gallucci, Michel Béchar, Cathy Maxwell, Chris Smeaton, Erin Low, Kurt Schlachter, Carol Roessler, Danny Ponjavic, Harry Gross, Marnie Brown.

Now my colleague Minister Shannon Phillips.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and of Status of Women.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the additional members of Team Lethbridge from the city that I have the honour to represent: Tom McKenzie, Mike Mahon, Mike Schmidler, Nathan Neudorf, Nikolaus Wyslouzil, Ryan Westerson, Patricia Epp, Paula Burns, Richard Westlund, Councillor Rob Miyashiro, Rudy Friesen, Sacha Johnson, Sandra Mintz, Shilpa Stocker, Simon Griffiths, Sonny Zgurski, Stuart Cullum, Susan Eymann, Suzanne Lint, Trevor Lewington, Wendy Kalkan, and Wes Carroll. I would ask that all of you rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome, neighbours.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group from Edmonton-Decore, the North Edmonton Seniors Association. It was formed in 1978 and provides over 600 programs annually to more than 2,000 seniors in northeast Edmonton, with supports from long-term partners like the Northgate Lions Club and the city of Edmonton. Here today from NESA are Sharlene Wyness, Ken and Elaine Berg, Hugh and Shirley Newell, Robert and Pat Carpenter, Randy Tomy, Louise Ertman, and Sharon Johnston. I would like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this House two people who work tirelessly every day to make Fort Saskatchewan an amazing place to live and raise a family. Please stand as I call your names: Mayor Gale Katchur, mayor of Fort Saskatchewan; and Heather Boonstra, executive director of Families First Society. Both of these women teach me all the time about how to be a better representative and how to effectively reach into the community. I ask the House to join me in extending the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who have guests to introduce today? The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly representatives from the Lung Association, Alberta and Northwest Territories; the Canadian Pulmonary Fibrosis Foundation; pulmonary specialists; and patient and caregiver advocates. They are here today in the Alberta Legislature to educate us about lung disease and its impact on Albertans. There are many in attendance, so I'm going to name one – that's probably in bad form – Kyrell Gayle. If Mr. Gayle and the representatives who are also here in attendance could please rise. He's the youngest one in attendance. He is here with his mom and a whole team of people to advocate on behalf of clean, good air and good lungs.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this otherwise sad day it is a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the House two former Alberta Liberal colleagues, Reverend Bruce Miller, former MLA for Edmonton-Glenora, and Kevin Taft, former Leader of the Official Opposition, Liberal, and MLA for Edmonton-Riverview for 11 years, almost as long as me. He is a consultant and a bestselling author, as many of you will know. They join us today in memory of our friend Weslyn Mather, and I ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: Allow me, hon. members, on behalf of all of you to acknowledge to each and every one of you and particularly the party caucuses that in spite of the differences of opinion that get discussed in this Legislature, I've had a real sense of the loss that you've all shared, and your co-operation has been quite exceptional.

I would therefore call upon the hon. Premier to make some remarks.

March 1, 1980, to November 23, 2015

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On another day I would be happy for an occasion to rise in the House and shower a member with praise. Today I wish with all my heart that there was no need to do such a thing. I'm deeply saddened by the loss of Manmeet Bhullar. We have all lost a dear friend to a tragic accident, and we can only pay him the tribute he so richly deserves in his absence.

Today we remember our colleague the late Member for Calgary-Greenway. I count myself lucky in that I had the pleasure of his acquaintance for seven years. He and I both became MLAs in the same election, as part of the class of 2008. He was a lot younger than me. He was just 28, the youngest MLA ever elected at that time, and he already had an impressive history of public service behind him. He'd organized a youth group in Calgary. He'd volunteered generously to raise money for community and youth causes. His community leadership had attracted recognition that led to his receiving the Alberta centennial medal, the centennial medallion, and the Athabasca University leadership award. He came to public life with a determination to do even more for his community.

As new MLAs we had a lot to learn about this Legislature, about our new responsibilities, and about each other, and it wasn't long before I grew to appreciate his good humour, his sense of duty, his sharp intelligence, and his powerful compassion, fuelled by his faith. He served the people of Calgary-Greenway and all Albertans as an MLA and as a minister of the Crown always with utmost integrity and dedication. Clearly, he was always meant to accomplish great work.

As Minister of Service Alberta he acted to protect Albertans from unscrupulous contractors while homeowners were rebuilding after the southern Alberta floods. That protection went as far as laying charges. His special passion was advocating for the vulnerable in our province, especially children. That passion found its expression when he became Minister of Human Services, responsible for children in care. He led the move to greater transparency and reporting on fatalities of children in care. He led it with an unprecedented openness born, I believe, out of a confidence that, he felt, it was simply the right thing to do.

Whether in government or in opposition Manmeet was accessible, authentic, committed, and very capable. He had a special place in his big heart for people trying to escape discrimination and threats of violence and death, especially for practising their religion and their faiths. He learned of the discrimination first-hand on a recent overseas trip and urged the federal government of the day to lift restrictions under Canada's private sponsorship program for refugees. Just two weeks ago he spoke passionately in the Legislature on issues of human rights in Pakistan, India, and Afghanistan.

Manmeet was also very gracious, and just last week, as we ended our estimates debate on Executive Council, he offered up his very generous and personal praise of and directly to public officials for the work that they do both now and when they worked with him. He saw the good in everyone around him, and when confronted with hurt, his first instinct was to do whatever he could to put it right. It was typical of the Member for Calgary-Greenway that he would stop to help someone in need, stepping from the warmth of his vehicle in the midst of a heavy snowstorm. For him there was no other way to live. He thought of others before himself. With his energy and his youth and his passion I truly expected to see Manmeet in public life for decades to come, and I believe without question that Albertans are worse for the fact that we will not.

My thoughts continue to be with his family, his friends, and his colleagues. A family has lost a son and a husband, Calgary-Greenway has lost a champion, Albertans have lost a strong voice, the Progressive Conservative caucus has lost a loyal member, and this House has lost a colleague, a good and decent man.

His passing is a reminder that the members of this House are a family despite the differences between us and the disagreements they sometimes provoke, and we will do what every family does when it loses a loved one: we will grieve together, we will draw strength from one another, we will help each other to heal, and most of all we will never forget the person we lost, the Member for Calgary-Greenway, Manmeet Bhullar.

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A fitting day is the birthday of the first Sikh guru. [Remarks in Punjabi] Greetings. [As submitted] Namaste. It is with great sadness that I rise today to speak on the passing of the Member for Calgary-Greenway, our dear friend and colleague Mr. Manmeet Singh Bhullar.

Death will always carry with it an incredible sense of pain. In all of mankind's endeavours to understand the deepest mysteries of the world, nothing has remained more elusive or out of reach than comprehending the meaning of death. It touches us all. As families, as different communities of faith, as a society we have all learned that there is simply no easy remedy, no tonic, no invention that can mend the grief and brokenness we all feel in our hearts with such a sudden loss of life. So we look to each other, we turn to our individual faiths, we pray for one another, and we remember in our own way this man. We take comfort in seeking and understanding a simple truth. That truth is that we were put on Earth with a meaning and for a purpose, a purpose to love one another, a purpose to serve one another and our fellow persons, and a purpose to make a positive difference in our world for others.

We stand in this Chamber where giants have truly stood, where the dedication of men and women who, with far-reaching vision, have sought to see Alberta be the very best it can be. We are known around the world as a refuge and as a place to be. Manmeet Bhullar brought part of that reputation here. The dedication of men and women from Alberta, people with far-reaching vision, is known. This week we have lost one of our finest, friendliest, and kindly giants – I don't mean in stature although that is true; I mean in purpose, vision, and accomplishment – a man who, with a deep sense of patriotism and commitment to his province and country, sought to bring people together, a man who, in deep commitment to his Sikh heritage and faith, always sought to be the champion of the needs of the afflicted, the needy, and the vulnerable. We could take a great example from him, and we should.

Manmeet accomplished much in public life. Before he became an elected official at the age of 28, he served as an adviser to our former Premier Jim Prentice. Upon his election he promised to be an MLA who bridged people together, and, in my opinion, his ability to stay true to this pledge is among his greatest accomplishments. As Service Alberta minister he made some important reforms. As Infrastructure minister he proudly championed new schools and other important projects right across the province.

But I believe that in the eyes of history he will be most fondly remembered for his work and accomplishments overseeing the Department of Human Services. There is perhaps no ministry in any provincial government that requires such empathy, compassion, and humanity. During his time in office there was perhaps no one who better exemplified these particular traits. Lifting the veil for families and our most vulnerable children will always, without question be one of his crowning achievements. But it is the love he felt for those without a voice that we will all remember in our hearts. He truly felt it and lived it.

In opposition his service continued. His most recent advocacy work, to help refugees and at-risk minorities in Afghanistan, was just the sort of project he would champion and talk about frequently to his friends.

To his family, friends, caucus, and all of his colleagues here today, our deepest condolences. To his father and mother, Bill and Sukhvir Bhullar, and to his wife, Namrita, my personal sympathies: no greater loss than a son. We all hope and pray for a comfort that is beyond understanding and that will surround them all, all of us, during this difficult time.

Manmeet truly had limitless potential in what he had to offer our province. We will always be a little less for the silencing of such a large, towering individual. But his family can be reassured; Alberta will forever hear his voice. Mr. Speaker, we are all saddened here today, but the work of this place must continue. He would want that. Manmeet Bhullar's work will continue. We must do that. Let us all strive every day to be like Manmeet and do all that we can to help Albertans, to help Alberta be the best it can be, especially those in need. That would be what he would want.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would seek the unanimous consent of the House so that the leader of the Progressive Conservative party, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, and the Member for Calgary-Elbow be able to respond to the Premier's statement and that in the case of the leader of the Progressive Conservative party the customary three-minute limit be set aside.

The Speaker: The hon. member, the leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The PC caucus would like to thank all other members of the House for your understanding. As we gather here today, there's a hole in our close-knit caucus. It's not just a physical hole. You can see the flag-draped desk here amongst us. It's a reminder that one of our family members is missing and is missed. There's a hole in our hearts. The Member for Calgary-Greenway, Manmeet Singh Bhullar, was not just our colleague; he was a son, a husband, a brother, a friend, a confidant, a community leader, and the heart of the PC caucus. His death on Monday has left us heartbroken.

Manmeet, Manny or Meeta if you prefer, was first elected to this Legislature in March 2008, but many of us in this House knew him long before. In the hours following his leaving us, we heard from some hon. members who told us that they played sports with Manmeet, they went to school with him, they served on a community board with him, or they campaigned with him long before he ran himself. I knew him when I arranged with him and the then mayor Bronconnier to declare the first-ever Sikh Awareness Week in Calgary. Even then, years ago and not far removed from his teenage years, Manmeet was inspiring young immigrants to dream big and to be part of the solution. He passionately lectured them – believe me: passionately – to embrace Canada and recognize the rule of law, the only thing that protected their quality of life.

At the same time, he was a fierce defender of the underdog and would not stand for the bullying of minorities. I remember him talking about getting taunted for switching from his turban to his helmet when he was playing high school football. Now, he did crack a bit of a sly smile when he thought about how he could settle his own scores on the football field. Lord help those who brought on Manmeet's ire, but he needed to clear the way for more modestly proportioned athletes to follow.

In the Alberta Legislature the MLA for Calgary-Greenway served on numerous committees and served as the Minister of Service Alberta, Human Services, and Infrastructure. At the time of his first election he was the youngest caucus member. Even then he knew it.

Manmeet the advocate and MLA accomplished more in his short years than some will fulfill in a long, long lifetime. He was involved in helping so many people and organizations, and his philanthropy and advocacy knew no borders. Manmeet was not bound by the borders of Alberta or even Canada. Recently he was on a personal mission to south Asia to find ways to protect persecuted Afghan minorities and refugees. Sometimes – heck, most of the time I didn't even know where he was, and he made this trip at his own expense. We learned yesterday that two families from Afghanistan are now safe in the Punjab thanks to Manmeet's efforts.

I'd like to share some remembrances from our PC caucus members. The Member for Calgary-Lougheed will always remember Meeta as a, quote, spiritual mountain of a man. He loved him like a brother, a very much younger, bigger brother with a much more impressive beard. He particularly notes working side by side with Manmeet to secure assistance for the people of Nepal after its devastating earthquake.

The Member for Calgary-North West laughs when she remembers how often he liked to point out that he watched her on TV since, as he said, he was a very young child – and she joked that this was his way of pointing out how much older she was than him – and how he always wanted her to sing the channel 2 and channel 7 theme songs. She has now admitted that she has never had the heart to confess to him that she didn't know all of the words.

The Member for Calgary-West remembers Manmeet advocating fiercely for him when he decided to enter politics, and he remarked on the way that Manmeet had such a profound effect on any room that he walked into, including this one. Manmeet Bhullar never went anywhere unnoticed.

The Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti remembers two years of sitting beside Manmeet in this Chamber and listening to him belt out O Canada with his powerful lungs. He says that Manny was great at many things; singing was not one of those things, and he smiles at the tone-deaf version of our national anthem that he endured on the front bench during that time.

The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek said that he had the honour of working with Manmeet in the community for just causes and through the mutual engagement in the rich fabric of diversity we're all blessed with in Alberta long before he was honoured to serve literally elbow to elbow with Manmeet as a legislative colleague, and he's grateful for the time he has shared working closely with him over the past six months.

The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster remembers being told that his Movember mustache didn't compare to Manmeet's facial hair when Manmeet was 12 years old.

Dr. Starke: And it's true.

Mr. McIver: Yeah, it's true, too.

He loved Manmeet's sense of humour and admired his energy.

Finally, a message from the Member for Calgary-South East: Manny, I will miss our chats, your quiet wisdom, and your smile; it was so nice to Manmeet you. We have heard that line a lot in the last few days. It was a hash tag trending on social media, and it gave Albertans a place to share some wonderful memories of our friend. I have picked out just a few.

Since the news broke of Manmeet's passing, we have heard from current and former colleagues, members of the press gallery, constituents, family, and many members of this House. The PC caucus is most appreciative of all the kind words and wonderful descriptions of Meeta, the anecdotes of precious memories of him and the insights into his character that we have seen and heard: a big man with a big heart and, even then, larger than life, a brother, best friend, hero, a passionate advocate for Alberta, a humanitarian. And, apparently, Manmeet gave the very best hugs.

Yesterday our caucus went to pay our respects to the Bhullar family, and it wasn't hard to see where Manmeet got his strength, his pride, and his courage. As they grieved, they told wonderful stories about the boy they loved and the man they were so proud of.

As Manmeet would say: I've got this.

His grandmother talked about how he always wanted her to tell her stories. He could never get enough of his grandmother's stories. It was only a week ago when he had to leave before one of her stories was finished, and she told us now that they will never get to finish it. His unfinished story is perhaps the saddest thing in our hearts.

Farewell, Meeta. Thank you for the time you gave us. Thank you for the inspiration. We love you, and now it is up to us to continue the great work you have always done.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm pleased to say that one of my first remembrances of your peer was in my very novice days in this House. Apparently, he had stood to ask a question, and I saw a shadow come over the room. I wondered where it came from. I then said: Hon. member, I'm sorry; I didn't see you. He looked at himself. He said: we really are going to have trouble with this new Speaker from here on in.

Our condolences to you and your peers in your party. I know that these members are with you.

The hon. leader of the Liberal Party.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Sikh community gathered here today: namaste. I appreciate this opportunity to add a few words and comments on this sad occasion. Like everyone, I was deeply shocked, saddened to hear of the death of our colleague Manmeet Bhullar. Manmeet was a passionate, hard-working, good-hearted servant of the community. This House has lost one of our most respected members. We will feel his absence every day.

Although I did not always agree with Manmeet, I never doubted he was working for what he thought would be the best interests of Alberta. In particular, I'll remember his hard work in making public the names of children who died in government care.

To the Bhullar family: the people of this province extend our deepest thanks for so generously lending Manmeet to public life for these past years. Indeed, everyone in this Chamber knows all too well the sacrifices our families are asked to make so that we can serve here. As you so beautifully described, we understand that with Manmeet and the Bhullar family – the light has gone out of our lives. It's my sincere hope that you know that his light also helped make our province brighter.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Party.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a sad day but a tremendous honour to stand here today and speak about a great man. The last time I had a long discussion with Manmeet was after he gave his moving speech in celebration of Diwali. The Legislature rotunda was absolutely captivated, and there was silence as he talked about the persecution of Sikhs. Despite the anger that this persecution rightly generates, he spoke of the fact that it is only light that can fight darkness. Now, he was a big man, as we've heard today, and his stature got lots of attention, but much more than that I remember his words. His words were tremendously powerful, passionate, intelligent, meaningful.

A lot has been said about the work he did in this House and the very public way he supported his community and stood up for vulnerable Albertans, but what many don't know, of course, that we've now talked about today, is the work that he did quietly all around the world, helping those people badly in need, not for glory or for personal reward but because it was necessary and he knew that he could help. Manmeet worked tirelessly behind the scenes trying to help Sikh and Hindu families living in Afghanistan who faced constant discrimination and the inability to fully practise their faith in the face of threats of violence.

He spent his own money travelling the world in order to help those who needed his aid, using his significant personal charisma and experience to insert himself into conversations with officials in Brussels, India, and other parts of Asia in order to advocate for his community, and I think it's important to note that he inserted himself into those conversations whether they liked it or not. He stepped in to help because he could, because he knew it was needed, and there really is no more fitting tribute to Manmeet Bhullar than to recognize his work helping others. He is exactly the sort of person we need in public office, and the world needs more Manmeet Bhullar, not less.

His loss is absolutely devastating, and I can't imagine what his family is going through, nor his community, nor his colleagues in the PC caucus and your staff. My team has connections to yours, as I'm sure you know, and on their behalf I offer our sincerest condolences and offer any support you need at any time.

This absolute tragedy has brought members of this House together, though, in a way I think we wouldn't have otherwise. On Monday night we cried together, some prayed together, and we built bonds that cannot be broken.

Manmeet said that politics is still comprised of human beings. We all seem to forget this; Manmeet's legacy means that that is no longer true.

Rest in peace, my friend.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, this question, like all of our questions today, is based on one that was asked by our dear friend Manmeet Singh Bhullar. I'm going to talk about the government's least favourite subject, the economy and jobs. Premier, there are many things that you cannot control in the economy – for example, the price of oil and other countries' oil production levels – but you can control your policy responses to the economy. Do you really think now is the right time to implement tax hikes, that can result in massive job losses?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, the economy-wide carbon price, which our government announced that it would be implementing as part of its climate change strategy, a strategy which I believe is long overdue and a strategy that will make Alberta a leader not only on a national stage but on the world stage, will be completely recycled back into the economy because it is those very issues that we are very concerned about. We understand that the economy is vulnerable, and therefore we are committed to ensuring that that carbon pricing is recycled back in and, in fact, will almost inevitably create more jobs, not less.

Mr. Jean: We are already number one in the world of oil-producing countries with our environment.

Again, from the Member for Calgary-Greenway on June 22: "I represent the people of Alberta, and I'll fight to make sure their jobs are looked after, Madam Premier." Will the Premier please tell us what her plan is to find thousands of Albertans new jobs when their employers pick up and move to Saskatchewan or to British Columbia because of her government's new taxes and bad policies?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think it's really important to understand that even with the implementation of the climate change leadership plan, that I was proud to announce on Sunday, Alberta overall remains the lowest taxed jurisdiction in the country, to the tune of about $8 billion, and that's not actually going to change. So the fact of the matter is that we're not particularly worried about jobs leaving, nor are we worried about emissions leakage because we worked very hard with industrial and economic leaders across the province to put together this plan. We have the endorsement of many leaders within those communities because they see that this is actually a good way forward for our province.

Mr. Jean: The Premier forgot to ask the people that pay the tax how they felt about the $3 billion tax, which is the citizens of Alberta.

Again based on a question from Manmeet Bhullar:

Madam Premier, it is your opportunity now to protect the economic interests of hard-working Albertans. How, ma'am, are you going to protect a dry cleaner, how are you going to protect a pizza shop owner, how are you going to protect your neighbourhood florist by raising their [business] taxes by 20 per cent or by saddling them by a carbon tax? I added the last part about the carbon tax, but he would've if he was here today.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, indeed, when we introduced our climate leadership plan on Sunday, one of the things that we talked about was different models for rebating the economy-wide carbon price to particular parts of the economy, and one of those parts is the small businesses that were just outlined by the member opposite. You can anticipate that we will actually be reaching out to small businesses to ensure that any negative consequences from the plan will be addressed and, in fact, that they would be able to benefit from a number of incentives to bring about the kinds of emissions reductions that all Albertans and our children need us to make real.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

International Humanitarian Aid

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hon. Bhullar truly lived the spirit of namaste, and one of his final projects was the protection of vulnerable minorities in Afghanistan. When the world's attention was rightly focused on the Syrian crisis, Manmeet did not forget the critical needs of the 2,500 remaining Afghan Sikhs and Hindus out of over 200,000, most of whom had fled or perished during almost four decades of festering violence. Now, this summer he undertook a personal mission to south Asia, drawing upon his rich, world-wide network of relationships to acquire homes and jobs, medical care, and schooling for asylum seekers abroad. To the Premier: how will humanitarian efforts like these held dear by hon. Bhullar be supported by the government of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've always found the advocacy from the Member for Calgary-Greenway for religious minorities incredibly commendable, and a number of the organizations that he thought were important, whether it be Women for Afghan Women, the World Sikh Organization, the Organization of Human Welfare, and a number of different government officials and volunteers, undertake incredibly valuable work in our province and abroad, and our government will continue to support the work of these innovators as they work to promote human rights and as they work to promote effective settlement because they reflect the values that I think all Albertans want to see lived every day.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Premier. While meeting with Afghan minorities who had fled the country, hon. Bhullar discovered that many of them had been systematically prevented by locals and sometimes by government from practising their religion, obtaining education for their children, and accessing basic health care. He also learned that Afghan authorities could not protect Sikh and Hindu women from forced marriage and religious conversion. Manmeet expressed his passion for helping those most in need through a promise to help Afghan minorities that the world has forgotten. Again to the Premier. Please tell us: what can the government of Alberta and indeed all Albertans learn from Manmeet's commitment to safe and supportive social environments, which will enable Albertans to truly realize their dreams?

Ms Notley: Well, I think that it's fair to say that Manmeet Singh Bhullar's ideas about how we need to reach out and make sure that the fundamental human rights of people all over the world are respected are one of the reasons why people are so moved by and troubled by what happened on Monday. He was a person who spoke for values that are held deeply in many of our hearts, values of inclusion, values of freedom, values of respect for people regardless of their religion and indeed sometimes in respect of their religion. We are a strong and free province because of the diversity we have in this province. Mr. Bhullar knew that, and we will do everything we can to continue that legacy in the work that we do.

Mr. Rodney: One of hon. Bhullar's greatest passions was striving to ensure that all Albertans are treated with the dignity and respect that they deserve, and that includes everyone: citizens, permanent residents, and those seeking to become Albertans. Manmeet sought to bring Afghan refugees to our province with the hope that they would experience and enjoy an environment in which they had the opportunity not just to survive but to thrive and in which they were afforded protection from basic human rights violations and systemic discrimination. Finally, to the Premier: what can the government of Alberta do to ensure that refugees, new Canadians from Afghanistan, Nepal, and all over the world will have the opportunity to live in an open and welcoming environment in the future regardless of where they're from?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member's question underscores the importance of our province doing its part to help those from war-torn areas who face violence, oppression, and poverty every day. The thriving communities that we already have in Alberta demonstrate that our province welcomes people from many faiths and many countries. It also underscores the need to reach out to those people when they come to our province, to include them in our communities, to include them in our institutions, to help them with language support, and to ensure that they are genuinely quickly part of our family. That's the way to make sure that they live in the way that the member has so eloquently described and that Manmeet Bhullar was seeking to have happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Openness and Transparency in Government

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Calgary-Greenway was a tireless champion for openness and transparency in government. During his time as Minister of Infrastructure he oversaw the creation of a website that tracked the progress of school builds in all communities around the province. This system was designed to show Albertans when and where they can expect new spaces for students. The member said that the interactive website "was a very powerful tool by which people could see regular progress on projects." To the Minister of Infrastructure. In estimates you outlined that this website would be restored as soon as the updating of information is complete, and we applaud that commitment. When will this happen?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for the question, Mr. Speaker, and to the hon. member. The website that was created when the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway was Minister of Infrastructure is a great tool to see progress on the development of schools in the province, and I share the member's desire for more openness and transparency. We expect that updated school build information will be loaded on the site in coming weeks. A full list of the schools can be seen at infrastructure.alberta.ca, and we're working with school boards to confirm remaining details and aim to relaunch projects.alberta.ca very soon. I would also like to announce today that we will be expanding the site to include progress updates for all capital projects.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the response. Again to the minister: given that the last motion submitted by the Member for Calgary-Greenway urged the government to accept this policy, the practice of disclosing any relevant legislation and policies upon which it bases decisions affecting Albertans, will your government commit to ensuring that this measure of transparency is followed through by making public this type of information?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. I know that the Member for Calgary-Greenway was a believer in transparency and accountability. He could always be counted on to put forward creative ideas to solve problems. The motion that he put forward is an example of that approach. I want to tell the member and the House that we believe that this is an interesting idea that is worth consideration as we move forward with our work to strengthen transparency and accountability in government.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister, for the response. Again to the minister: given that the Member for Calgary-Greenway was most passionate about child welfare and youth vulnerability and given that the member's vision was to push for continuous improvement of supports for vulnerable children and their families, how is this government ensuring that the Member for Calgary-Greenway's five-point plan is being implemented and strengthened to continuously improve the child intervention system?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Our government agrees in principle with the five-point plan, which highlighted the need to address the root causes of many issues that affect the safety and well-being of children such as poverty, addiction, sexual abuse, mental health, and family violence. Our government will continue to fund sexual assault centres and will invest in preventative measures and programs such as FCSS, family and community support services, and the like to address these important issues.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Legacy of Former MLA Manmeet Singh Bhullar

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank all the caucuses for their care, their grace, and their understanding during this difficult time. It means a lot.

Mr. Speaker, in speaking with Manmeet Bhullar's father last night, he spoke a bit about how he raised Manmeet. He referenced Monday's tragedy and said, and I quote: no matter what the circumstances, you must stop and help someone in need. You have to stop and help. End quote. So it's no surprise that Manmeet was such a caring, diligent, and effective advocate for his constituents. To the hon. Minister of Human Services: what improvements have been made in recent years to the ways that this government provides services to Albertans as a result of the many constituency cases Mr. Bhullar had brought to this government's attention?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. We know that Manmeet was a passionate person and that he was passionate about helping others. He served in three different ministries, and because of this he was very skilled at helping his constituents navigate the government system to access supports. While he was Human Services minister, as the hon. Premier and other members of this House mentioned, there were a number of changes that he made to support Albertans to receive and navigate those services, including opening two new Alberta sports centres in Edmonton and Red Deer, the launch of a province-wide mental program, and a welcome to parenting initiative.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Bhullar helped dozens of families establish themselves in Calgary and Alberta, including young doctors, nurses, dentists, engineers, accountants, transportation professionals, day home operators, labourers, researchers, and the list goes on. To the same hon. minister: which government programs have been improved to help attract and retain new Albertans to become established in Alberta based on the amazing work that Manmeet did?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. As many of us shared here today, Manmeet was about helping others, and till the last moment that's essentially what he was doing. If I speak specifically to my department, the Department of Human Services, he made many important changes to this department. Specifically, I can talk about what everybody mentioned today, the publication ban around the deaths of children. There are many initiatives that we can see government-wide that he did when he was minister that will help Albertans, and there are many initiatives which he embarked upon as a community leader, as a member of his Sikh community, that will always be remembered and will set a path for future generations.

Thank you.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I have to say that I didn't realize there were this many people over there. Now that our good friend is gone, there's clearly a void.

You know, we all have a minute in time on this planet, and in that minute that Manmeet had, he did so much for so many. It's been referenced by the Premier and the caucuses and countless Albertans, the work that he's done. We have honoured previous advocates for people in their own right such as the hon. Grant Notley. To the Premier: would you so graciously consider naming the federal building after the hon. Manmeet Singh Bhullar?

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We absolutely believe that there should be an appropriate and ongoing tribute to the Member for Calgary-Greenway. We are beginning that, of course, in this House today, and we'll be talking more with the member's family about what future tributes might be appropriate. We welcome any and all ideas about how to appropriately pay tribute to the member and his dedication to Alberta. We've just been presented with this idea, and we will definitely give it some very vigorous consideration to honour a memory that must be acknowledged.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

International Postsecondary Students

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Manmeet Singh Bhullar was a passionate advocate for his constituents and for Alberta. In the October 20 meeting of the Public Accounts Committee Mr. Bhullar asked about the operations of international student recruitment. Typically international students pay up to 3.5 times as much in tuition as domestic students because the government of Alberta does not provide them with base grant funding. This incentivizes institutions to heavily recruit international students. To the Minister of Advanced Education: are budget shortfalls in your ministry being filled through international student recruitment?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Of course, it was the priority of our government upon being elected, and in our first session right away we put money back into postsecondary education to make sure that it's accessible and affordable and stable for all Albertans. That's been our priority. You know, enrolment is up. Many students are really taking advantage of this, and institutions are grateful for the new funding.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, with respect, I was asking about international students. Mr. Bhullar thought that increased revenues to the system from international students certainly felt like a commercial enterprise. In fact, international students were left out when the government reversed the post-secondary market modifiers and instituted a tuition freeze. Even more, some programs have increased international tuition by up to 30 per cent in this academic year. To the minister: why didn't the government's policies apply equally to all students studying in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We don't have jurisdiction on controlling international tuition. Institutions do this. We are in the process, though, of very quickly rolling out the adult learning review. This is something that we have heard, the concerns about international tuition fees. We're looking at that, and we'll be listening to the community and others who are concerned about this, but right now we don't have jurisdiction over internationals. We did want to make it stable and affordable for our students here in Alberta, and that's why we moved forward very quickly to put back $133 million in the postsecondary system.

The Speaker: Hon. member, second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, there's a discrepancy here between how we treat certain groups of students in this province, a discrepancy that Manmeet and his constituents were very concerned about. To the minister: will you commit to regulating international student tuition so that Alberta students are entitled to fair treatment regardless of where they come from?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, we are going ahead with the adult learning review, and this will be one of the things that we're looking at. We welcome people's ideas around this. At this point we're just gathering that information. It's very important for us to hear from all groups regarding this. We look forward to reporting back after that's complete.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, I understand you may have a motion.

Mr. Mason: Yeah. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would ask unanimous consent from the House to continue the daily Routine past 3 o'clock today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Violence against Indigenous Women and Girls

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're all very familiar with the statistics that show that indigenous women and girls are three times more likely to experience violence than nonindigenous women. Earlier this month in my own constituency of Calgary-Cross we lost Janel Squirrel to such violence. She was 26 years old and a mother of three. This needs to change. Can the Minister of Aboriginal Relations tell us what the government is doing to ensure that indigenous women are safe?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. We know that too many indigenous women are going missing and being murdered. Each one of these women deserves to be honoured and mourned and has a family in need of healing and a community in need of answers. Alberta was proud to join these families and other provinces in the call for a national inquiry into missing and murdered indigenous women. I have had the opportunity to speak to my federal counterpart in Prime Minister Trudeau's new government, and I'm eager to get started on this important work.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We can call for a national inquiry, but we need to see action now, and we need to see the dollars that are going to be invested in programs here in Alberta. Can the Minister of Aboriginal Relations tell us what initiatives are already under way that take a stand against violence towards indigenous women and girls?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Of course, I'm proud to see so many people today in this Legislature wearing the moosehide swatch in support of this important issue. The Moose Hide campaign was launched a year ago by the Alberta Native Friendship Centres Association, one of our community partners. This powerful campaign asked indigenous and nonindigenous people to wear the swatch to show their commitment to standing up against violence to indigenous women and girls. We know we can be a part of the solution, and this is one way to show that commitment.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Moose Hide campaign was launched a year ago, and I truly believe in its power. We want to know what the government is doing now to show our commitment to keeping indigenous women and girls safe. To the same minister: what are we investing in today?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Well, this campaign was started a while ago. As we know, many of our friends across the House, including the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway, were advocates for minorities. Certainly, our government has recently provided funding for an additional campaign. We provided $125,000 to support the I Am a Kind Man program in nine communities across Alberta. The Alberta Native Friendship Centres Association is leading this initiative, which is based on traditional teachings, to help restore and repair family relationships in the indigenous community.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Human Services

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to my colleagues today for all your kind words. My friend the Member for Calgary-Greenway was someone who had a great passion for fighting injustice. He fostered a sense of hope wherever he went, asking the difficult questions, holding everyone to account, and making sure that the attention of the government was always squarely focused on the lives and needs of Albertans. When he saw a problem or someone who needed help, he would act. It's an example that we in this House should all strive for. To the Premier: how will you ensure that your government and your ministers remain focused on accountability and achieving the best possible outcome for Albertans, as Manmeet Bhullar did?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. As has been mentioned before but I think bears repeating, Manmeet Bhullar, of course, took a very major step forward in terms of releasing the publication ban and moving forward in terms of reporting and the scope of reporting of fatalities and injuries that occurred to children in care or receiving services. That information is the first part of accountability, so I think that we need to remember that and, of course, move on from that, which we will do and I'll talk about more in another question.

But I'd like to just say one thing, which I didn't have a chance to say before. When we talk about Human Services – you know, back when I was in opposition, it was a critic area for me, and it is arguable at the time that I had more access to front-line workers and information from front-line workers than those in government at the time might have had. I think it's important for all of you to know that I heard from most front-line workers that there was a tremendous level of respect for the work that Manmeet Bhullar did at that time. He was very much seen by the people who worked for him as a champion for their cause.

Ms Jansen: Thank you to the Premier. One of the great successes, as the Premier just mentioned, of Minister Bhullar's tenure was the ending of the publication ban on children who died in care. The Member for Calgary-Greenway moved immediately to take action to open up the system to Albertans. To the Minister of Human Services now: what steps will you take to build on those accomplishments?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. As has been mentioned in this House, removing that ban was a huge achievement and a huge step forward in Human Services. Building on that, we will try to improve those services to take it another step forward by bringing in an independent mechanism to independently investigate all deaths of children in the care of the province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, in February of last year the Member for Calgary-Greenway announced that the government would be putting up $5 million to ensure that children facing mental health issues can get help as quickly as they can. Again to the Minister of Human Services: given the rising issues we have seen with addiction amongst our young people, can the minister assure this House that the plan and the funding committed by the Member for Calgary-Greenway are still in place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member. We know that children involved with the intervention system are at higher risk to develop mental health disorders, and the funds committed by Manmeet Bhullar will continue within the children intervention division of Human Services. We have also added $37 million back into the intervention system, which will also help us improve the lives of these children and youth. We have also launched a mental health review, which will also help us assess our needs and determine the path forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Diversity Initiatives

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Bhullar was Mr. Community Initiatives. Some members and staff remember accompanying Manmeet on one of his many mid-session trips between Edmonton and Calgary to unveil a facility in Calgary in the morning, attend question period, a community fundraiser in the afternoon, and back to Calgary for a community event that night. Many of us remember Manmeet – and he has some fame – as the first turban-wearing Sikh minister in the Alberta Legislature, and who can forget his emotional address during the recent Diwali celebrations here in the Legislature. To the minister of culture: what can you do to assist MLAs in this House and their staff to learn to best support Alberta's increasingly diverse population to establish success and, in so doing, strengthen all of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of culture.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker, and thank you so much for the question. I know that Manmeet was a tireless community advocate and had an amazing capacity to – I saw him, at one point, appear in two gurdwaras in two different cities in one single day. I know that he worked very hard to not just access the community development funds that we have through the ministry of culture for northeast Calgary but for the whole province as well, and you can see his work made manifest on many plaques around the province and you see where he's got the money for the important community work that he does. This year, for example, in northeast Calgary there was $50,000 at the Cornerstone Youth Centre, which, I think, is very, very well done.

Mr. McIver: Again to the same minister. Given that Mr. Bhullar and the respective leaders of dozens of cultural and religious organizations – he supported them and helped troubleshoot their efforts to establish applications to the government. Mr. Bhullar along the way frustrated several Alberta agencies, boards, and committees by demanding that they treat ethnocultural organizations with the same due consideration as anyone else. In what ways is this government making sure that agencies, boards, and committees and government departments, for that matter, become open to Alberta's many diverse community organizations?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, I think it's a very fitting tribute to the continuation of Manmeet's work that we look to ensure that we have cultural diversity in agencies, boards, and commissions and that we look at the grant structure. Of course, we have a long history of grants and institutions going in a certain way, but to move and to expand past some of the Eurocentric tendencies to invest in certain cultural institutions and look to having our investment as a government reflect the diversity of Alberta in 2015: certainly, all of us endeavour to do so.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, Manmeet Singh Bhullar didn't always wait for government policy to do what had to be done. He helped many young Albertans learn about and enter into the community development policy worlds in health, health care, law, public service, justice, and other careers, including using the STEP program, which the government is going to bring back, and sometimes, lots of cases, worked with parents in children's cases, that he helped resolve in the system. How will this government continue to support Mr. Bhullar's passion for fostering diversity and supporting Albertans who don't necessarily fit into the current government programs?

The Speaker: The minister of culture.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, Manmeet's tenacity and capacity to advocate for not just his constituents but for all Albertans is a good example to many of our new MLAs, to simply not take no for an answer, for one thing. If you perhaps didn't quite equal the physical stature of Manmeet, you could certainly work to have that tenacity in your heart. For all Albertans and for vulnerable Albertans especially, you know, I know that Manmeet would not stand down. I always like to lead by example, so I will endeavour to do so in my own personal life.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to preface my comments by stating that, certainly, the PC caucus and Manmeet's family have been greatly appreciative of the support that they have received outside of this Chamber, but I also want to say that the PC caucus is highly appreciative of all of the support we've received from inside of this Chamber, particularly from the House leaders from government, from the Official Opposition, and also from our independent members, to modify the rules under these extraordinary, exceptional circumstances – we appreciate it – and especially to the Official Opposition caucus for affording us four additional questions so that we might be able to all ask questions.

Midwifery Services

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, amongst Manmeet Bhullar's many passionate causes – and there were many of them – one that is perhaps a little bit less known is that he was a passionate advocate for midwifery. Midwifery has been recognized under Alberta's Health Professions Act since 1998. One year after Manmeet was first elected, midwifery was funded by Alberta Health Services. He was a passionate advocate for the expansion of midwifery services in Alberta. He understood that a good life began with a good birth, and he knew that skilled and compassionate midwives would provide these services to women across Alberta, the women he so affectionately called his mothers and his sisters. To the Minister of Health: what expansion of midwifery services has Alberta seen since 2008?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. The number of midwives in Alberta in the initial year, 2009, when it became publicly funded, was a 37 per cent increase in that year alone. Now there are approximately 90 midwives and midwifery staff appointments through Alberta Health Services, which is great. You know, in the very first year it was funded, my niece, Anika, is proud to say that she was helped out by a midwife. It's certainly impacted our family in a personal way, and I want to say thank you for the contributions.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, one need only speak with Manny's mother and his sisters or his beloved wife to know how much he honoured and valued the role of women in our society. Now, his love for children is also very well known, and the fruits of his efforts as a role model and mentor to hundreds, if not thousands, of young people will be seen for many years to come. To the Minister of Health. In September additional funding for midwifery services was announced. How many additional courses of care will be provided this year, and how will women be able to access these expanded care courses?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. More than 2,700 families will be receiving midwifery care in the coming year. That's an expansion of more than 400 supported midwifery births. There's actually a centralized database now through the midwifery website, and there are a number of communities that it's been expanded to. Some, actually, are still accepting new registrants this year. So good news: we haven't totally exceeded our capacity yet. Obviously, the demand is going to continue to grow with the expansion of this great service.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, Namrita would want to see us to continue expansion of midwifery services, not just in the number of courses that we offer, courses of care, but also in the opportunities for training new midwives in Alberta and for expanded availability of midwifery to all geographic areas of the province, including rural and urban areas. Could the Health minister share with Albertans her plans for fulfilling Manmeet's vision?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. We are certainly working closely with Mount Royal University and with the College of Midwives of Alberta to understand their needs and ensure that they understand the needs of women throughout Alberta. The expansion of midwifery services: I'm really proud to say that just this November we expanded to the community of Plamondon. That's great news. Additional midwifery services have also been recently added in other communities in addition to Edmonton and Calgary, which are the two where we currently have the greatest demand. We also have expanded services in Cardston, St. Albert, Medicine Hat, and underserved communities in northeast Calgary and surrounding areas as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Registry Services

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When he was Minister of Service Alberta, Manmeet Bhullar oversaw many services, including those offered by more than 200 registry agents. He always sought to ensure Albertans received efficient services while providing fairness to private-sector partners. To the Minister of Service Alberta: given that many rural-based registries are providing services at a loss to ensure rural residents have convenient access to them and given that these agents were slated to receive a dollar fee increase on July 1st, how is your government assuring the stability of rural-based registries, and will you be establishing a formula-based model for future increases?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I know that the Member for Calgary-Greenway believed that Service Alberta needed to continually move forward in providing quality services to the people of Alberta at the best value. Like him, we certainly value the role that registry agents play in delivering those services on behalf of the government. So we continue to work productively with registry agents to ensure that Albertans do receive the quality services they deserve, and we continue to be committed to ensuring that rural Albertans have access to the quality government services that they need.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the province plans to offer more services online and has built the MyAlberta e-services portal to do so and given that Alberta has a proven partner which continues to offer convenient services to all citizens, will your government commit to offering registry agents the ability to participate in the government of Alberta's future plans for expanded online services?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you once again to the member for the question. I certainly know that the Member for Calgary-Greenway recognized that our world is changing rapidly, and it's important that our government services keep up with the opportunities and demands that come with that. So we continue to seek opportunities to strengthen our registry services, including expanding our online services so that Albertans who choose to access services that way will have the convenient access that they are looking for. As we move forward, I can commit to proceeding with the option that will best meet the needs of Albertans, that they have convenient services at the best value.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Same minister: given that the number of registries has not increased since 1993 and given that in estimates you indicated to Manmeet that you are looking into issuing requests for proposals for new registries when your ministry issues the new RFPs, will you guarantee that the government of Alberta is provided with the best value possible by ensuring the highest bidder is awarded the contract?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. The procurement process that the government of Alberta established is open, transparent, and committed to ensuring that Albertans get the best value possible. So in terms of any possible changes to registry services I certainly can guarantee to follow that process to ensure that we can continue to serve Albertans efficiently and effectively at the value that they expect and deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to start out just adding to some comments by my colleague by thanking not only all the members of this House but you, Mr. Speaker, and all of the LAO staff for accommodating us in the House but also on the committee level as well. That's been very deeply felt by us. Thank you.

International and Local Relationship Building

Mr. Gotfried: Born in Calgary, Manmeet grew up in an environment where the value of social and cultural fluency, in both the local and international contexts, was instilled in him at an early age. Former Premier Prentice recently mentioned meeting Manmeet when he was just 10 years old, following closely behind his father as he worked tirelessly to build a gurdwara in Calgary. His parents' example of hard work and community leadership stayed with Manmeet through his life, leading to his negotiation of a memorandum of understanding and further bridge building between the government of Alberta and the state of Punjab in India. To the minister of economic development: in what ways was this agreement to facilitate trade, enhance relationships and socioeconomic partnerships important to both postsecondary education and agriculture between the two jurisdictions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the hon. member for the question, recognizing that today has been quite an incredible day of learning about all the different successes that the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway had and all the ways he touched Albertans' lives and those of the international community as well. I know that Alberta and India both share a co-operative and mutually beneficial trading relationship, and they are an important international partner for us. This agreement that the hon. member speaks of was announced in January of 2014, and it focuses on the aspects of agriculture, animal genetics to help increase trade in the areas of dairy production and swine genetics. It also established an agricultural working group to encourage communication between our jurisdictions. Our government is focused on looking at ways to increase market access and trade, and this trade agreement was made with a very similar focus, and I thank the member.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you. Again to the minister: given that relationships with a wide variety of people from Alberta, Canada, and beyond were critical to Manmeet's success at home and abroad on topics as diverse as improving government services, domestic violence, and local entrepreneurship, what are the most important improvements this government is planning to ensure that its network of local and global relationships is grown and sustained in the broadest context?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. Currently Alberta has 11 international offices, with one that is located in New Delhi. I'm working with my department to look at all of our foreign offices with an eye to efficiency, effectiveness, and productivity. We are very supportive of diversifying Alberta's economy and expanding new and existing markets, which includes a strategic and cost-effective international presence. These offices are key to sustaining these global relationships, and, again, I know that the Member for Calgary-Greenway was a very strong advocate and had a very strong hand in getting this office set up, which I look forward to adding to in my next response.

Thank you.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you again to the minister, with our deepest appreciation. Given Manmeet's long-standing passion for community-building based on mutual respect and understanding and given that his success in this area was an integral part of the successful signing of the aforementioned MOU with the state of Punjab and given the importance of postsecondary education and agriculture to both Alberta and Punjab, in what ways have residents of the two provinces benefited from the improved trade and partnerships, and how do you see those being strengthened in the future by this government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member again for the question. Our strengthened ties and MOU with the state of Punjab that Manmeet worked so hard to see signed have had many benefits for the people of Alberta and Punjab. Again, I don't want to understate the role that the Member for Calgary-Greenway played in building the relationship between the state of Punjab and the government of Alberta, and for that we thank him. Punjab has benefited from an increased export market for agriculture. Approximately 72 per cent of India's population lives in rural areas, with 65 per cent employed in agriculture. The Indian agrifood industry is estimated to be worth about $180 billion and is expected to grow to $310 billion by 2020. Agriculture currently accounts for 17.4 per cent of India's GDP. These ties will be strengthened as we continue to utilize our international offices to diversify Alberta's economy through expanding and existing markets.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would make this observation, and I will be referencing it in my years ahead in this House. In my mind, it's going to be called the Bhullar phenomenon because today I heard people speaking, and it is a wonderful, wonderful event that we ought to repeat yet again many, many times. If you hear me mention his name in the future, you will know of what I speak.

Hon. Government House Leader, I understand that we may have a motion.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I hope you don't get too fond of this.

I would like to ask for unanimous consent that, notwithstanding Standing Order 7(4), the Member for Calgary-McCall be allowed to participate in Members' Statements today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Members' Statements

Mr. Manmeet Singh Bhullar

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in the House today to pay tribute to our beloved friend and colleague Manmeet Bhullar. He was a shining star of Alberta. Manmeet was a dedicated public servant. He went to work day in and day out representing the great people of Calgary-Greenway. Manmeet exhibited the core principles of Sikhism, the faith he practised and the religion that grounded him.

Mr. Speaker, today is Prakash Purab, birthday of Guru Nanak Dev Ji, the first of the 10 Sikh gurus. He was the founder of Sikhism, and his birthday is celebrated world-wide as Gurburab. [Remarks in Punjabi] What this means is that when Guru Nanak was born, the darkness all around vanished, and there was amazing light everywhere. His main message of Sikhism is to spread the message of kindness and peace and to promote the equality of all human beings and for equal rights for women.

Manmeet Singh Bhullar was able to live a life that Guru Nanak Dev Ji called for, and all of us should be proud of this. His educational background, character traits, and his personal appearance always gave the comfort and confidence anticipated from an authentic and brave sardar ji.

When Sikhs and Hindus were persecuted in Afghanistan, the ones that could afford to managed to get out. The poor and the weak remained stuck there. Of late Manmeet had been working tirelessly to get them out also and to settle them in a safe country.

Looking at what he accomplished in his brief 35 years, it is not difficult to understand how much potential was taken away so soon. Although he is not physically with us anymore, that star will forever be enshrined in this province's history. Sir William Osler once said, "We are here to add what we can to life, not to get what we can from life." Manmeet Bhullar died doing what he always did, helping others.

In closing, I would like to extend my deepest condolences to Manmeet's family and friends here and all over the world. Our thoughts and prayers are with them. I hope that they'll find comfort in knowing that their loved one made all the difference to his community, to his province, and to his country. He served this province, and for that we are forever grateful. May he rest in peace. [Remarks in Punjabi]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Holodomor Memorial Day

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this sad day I also rise on another sad occasion, on Holodomor. The word "Holodomor" comes from the Ukrainian words for "hunger" and "plague." In Canada the fourth Saturday of every November is marked as the official day of remembrance for the people who died in the Ukrainian famine, known as Holodomor. An estimated 10 million men, women, and children died of starvation in this famine. To put that in perspective, this is more than double the population of all of Alberta. It was truly a horrific period in Ukrainian history.

Mr. Speaker, more than 300,000 persons with Ukrainian ancestry call Alberta home. Many of them are constituents of Stony Plain, the riding that I represent. Many of them are descendants of those who suffered or are survivors of the famine itself. The Ukrainian community makes up an integral part not only of my riding but of Alberta. They are our teachers and doctors, our MLAs and our ministers, our neighbours and our friends. The stories they share of the horrors that occurred must be remembered. They remind us of the courage and strength of the human spirit and inspire us to continually promote the acceptance of all people and all cultures. We must work every day to ensure that crimes like Holodomor never happen again. We must work hard to respect and honour the memory of those who died in this senseless famine.

Mr. Speaker, I would encourage every member of this Assembly to honour the memory of those who suffered by redoubling our efforts to fight persecution, racism, violence, and discrimination.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Manmeet Singh Bhullar

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. As Manny would say: don't worry; I've got this. Mr. Speaker, this has been a hard one. For us, losing Manmeet is like losing a partner in the line of duty. When we're up here in Edmonton, we spend more time with each other than we do with our own families. One of the reasons Manmeet and I got along so well was because the doors of both our constituency offices are always open to the people, and Manmeet listened to the people. He did not hear; he listened. And after listening, he tried to find a solution, and that's why he was so beloved. Regardless of who they were or what their background was, Manny knew that the people knew that they could go to Manmeet and that he would listen and that he would try to find a solution for you or for your people.

His work at the Legislature was equally impressive. Manmeet was the first turbaned Sikh to hold a ministerial position in Alberta and, although I don't have confirmation of this, in Canada, I've heard. The symbolism of that appointment was not just significant for the Sikhs and other ethnic communities; it was important for all of us. He became Canada's most visible minority, and in doing so, he inspired anyone and everyone. For youth he was a particularly powerful symbol because they saw that in growing up in Canada, they could be who they are and could still achieve greatness.

He was a man of influence in his community, and he took that responsibility to heart. Because of his physical stature – let's face it; he was a mountain of a man – we never expected the gentleness that we saw. Within moments of meeting this gentle giant, he won you over with his warm smile and his huge heart. That doesn't mean that he was a pushover. Manmeet was a force of nature, with a strong will to match his big heart. He took charge of his ministries, and he was passionate about ensuring their work was ethical and efficient. He led by example, had high expectations of the people that worked for him, and he was a natural leader. Public consultation was the hallmark of every initiative he prompted.

Along with his ministries Manmeet was passionate about other causes close to his heart. He was an advocate with regard to violence against women. In fact, on the day of his passing he had spoken on that very same subject in Calgary. I've already mentioned his constituency work, which set a fine example for all of us. His constituency office was a champion for all cultures. He had a level of understanding of a person's struggles no matter what background they came from.

Now, as a former police officer I have to take a moment to address the people involved in Monday's accident. Please don't carry the burden of guilt for the events that unfolded on that day. You've got to know that Manny would not have wanted that because he was a generous soul, and he was doing what he loved. He was helping people.

I will leave you with one final quote. As I embraced his father yesterday and we hugged and we cried, he said to me: God needed him more. But it was nice to Manmeet you. We love you, and we miss you.

Thank you, all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First off, I just want to commend my colleagues in the PC caucus. The way that you're honouring your colleague today is really remarkable.

3:20 Violence against Women

Ms McPherson: I'm committed to a world where women and girls can walk alone without fear, free from fear of harassment, free from fear of assault, free from fear for their personal safety. I'm wearing an orange scarf today for a brighter future in honour of the International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women. This day, proclaimed in 1999 by the United Nations, commemorates the Mirabal sisters, who were political activists from the Dominican Republic assassinated in 1960 for their opposition to the dictatorship.

We are all diminished by violence against women, and we all lose out when half of the population finds it necessary to walk alone at night with their keys gripped in their hand like a weapon in the futile hope that they can fend off any would-be attackers, when women need to develop the skill of avoiding angering a man in order to keep ourselves safe. All women have ignored offensive comments, laughed off inappropriate invitations, and swallowed their anger at being belittled or talked down to because they don't know what might happen if they object.

World-wide 1 in 3 women has experienced physical or sexual assault. That means nine members of this Legislature, including me. In Canada indigenous women are seven times more likely than nonindigenous women to be killed by serial murderers. Alberta has the second-highest rate of self-reported sexual violence in Canada.

Violence against women is a human rights violation. It happens in our province every day, and it is up to all of us to change that and to take a stand. Raise awareness. Challenge the behaviour and the language that keep violence hidden. Speak up when you see harassment. Give generously to those groups that are working to end this violence. Wear an orange scarf, a moosehide swatch, or a white ribbon to show your support. Let us take care of one another.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Manmeet Singh Bhullar

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, colleagues, for allowing me to speak. It is with a sad heart that I rise today to speak about the untimely passing of a fellow member of this Legislature, Sardar Manmeet Singh Bhullar. A life that was dedicated to public service, to helping others, and to representing the constituents of Calgary-Greenway has been cut tragically short. Mr. Bhullar had a drive to do better for Alberta, which he showed during his seven years as a member of this Assembly and in his capacity as a minister of government, including the portfolio of Human Services, that I hold today. Manmeet wanted to make a difference in people's lives, and that's what he was doing at the time of Monday's tragic incident.

Mr. Speaker, I met Manmeet recently at various events, where he shared with me very passionately his work around Afghan Sikh refugee resettlement. In his remarks at the Diwali event here in the Legislature rotunda and at the Genesis Centre in Calgary he discussed the symbol of lights from the Diwali festival – and I paraphrase – as a metaphoric reference to stress that light must be shone in all dark corners around this globe against all oppression and against all violations of basic human and democratic rights. He certainly has shone light on many lives and worthy causes, and his work will live on in our province. His efforts will be remembered by Albertans and all those whose lives he touched.

It's beyond imagination to think of the devastation of Mr. Bhullar's family. I would just say that my thoughts and prayers go to Mr. Bhullar's family and to all those who knew and loved him, and I will join all my colleagues here to offer my heartfelt condolences to all of them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Families First Society

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am reminded today of what a privilege and honour it is for me to be able to stand and speak in this House. Today I speak about the Families First Society, located in my home of Fort Saskatchewan, and recognize the efforts of the executive director, Heather Boonstra, and staff.

"Through improving the lives of our children, youth and families today, we help create a resilient healthy community for tomorrow." Founded in 1998, Families First has been using this foundational statement to grow the many ways they serve and educate the community. Serving more than 950 families last year alone, Families First became a parent link centre, providing evidence-based parent education programs to Fort Saskatchewan and Sturgeon county. They also provide family support programs, including community kitchens, home visitation, and the angel whispers program for couples suffering the loss of a child. They also staff a family violence prevention co-ordinator thanks to the support of Fort Saskatchewan's mayor and council.

The community they serve continues to grow. Fort Saskatchewan has a population that grows as much as 6 per cent year over year, with a 20 per cent increase in five to 14-year-olds and a 37.5 per cent increase in children aged zero to four. This growing demand has meant that Families First was looking for a new home. With leadership from Mayor Gale Katchur and councillors that advocate for the health of their communities, Fort Saskatchewan city council agreed to lease their former RCMP building to Families First for $1 per year.

The new space will provide them with the ability to grow and meet the needs of a broader community of parents seeking safe, strong, and happy families. Families First does an amazing job fundraising through community events such as the Touch-a-Truck event and the Take Back the Night walk. Taking to the streets in support of the White Ribbon campaign – I wear the ribbon today – aims to end violence against women. On Monday morning the hon. Manmeet Bhullar was speaking about the role that our men and boys play, that important role, in ending violence against women. I thank him for his efforts.

Again, I just want to thank these women in my community for mobilizing their community to help make it a better place, and I look forward to seeing them in their new home.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Ceci: This is a report from the hon. Minister of Seniors. She wants to address the questions that were asked of her in the main estimates for the Ministry of Seniors. She has the appropriate copies here.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I thought you were going to be wearing another, different colour today. When is that going to happen?

Mr. Ceci: The Stampeders don't seem that important.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 9 Appropriation Act, 2015

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 9, the Appropriation Act, 2015.

This act will provide funding authority to the offices of the Legislative Assembly and the government for the 2015-16 fiscal year. The schedule to the act provides amounts that were presented in greater detail by the 2015-16 government and Legislative Assembly estimates tabled on October 27, 2015. These estimates were subsequently debated in Committee of Supply and standing committees.

Madam Speaker, as we're all aware, Albertans are facing tough economic times. Budget 2015 serves as a temporary shock absorber to shield Albertans from the worst effects of the oil price crash. The measures we introduced are based on three priorities: stabilizing front-line public services, setting out a plan to return to balanced budgets, and stimulating economic development and diversification.

As noted, stability is at the top of that list because I think we can all agree that what Albertans need most during this economic downturn is stability. Now is not the time to bring chaos to hospitals, classrooms, or cut front-line staff. Alberta's population is still growing. This budget ensures that we'll have the doctors, nurses, teachers we need to provide the public services Albertans rely on.

Madam Speaker, as I mentioned, returning to balanced budgets is another priority we'll move forward on. This will be achieved by limiting spending growth, finding savings, and investing in infrastructure now, when costs are lower. Between cost-saving measures, a gradual rise in oil prices, and a new tax structure, revenue will grow by about 6 per cent a year over the next four years while spending will be held to 2 per cent. Our plan will put Alberta back into the black by 2019-2020 or sooner if the economy recovers stronger than anticipated.

We're also shifting the province away from a failed experiment with regressive flat taxes. We're moving towards progressive taxes, like every other province and the federal government have. We have instituted a modest rise in the corporate taxes, from 10 per cent to 12 per cent, which puts Alberta in the middle of the pack among provinces in this country. Our government believes that creating the conditions for success is not about a race to the bottom on taxes. It's a matter of investing in the infrastructure, programs, and services that allow businesses to thrive and stay competitive and Albertans themselves to enjoy a high quality of life. Everyone who benefits from those advantages should pay a fair share, just as they do everywhere else in Canada, because being able to make these investments is crucial, especially during a downturn. Investments in infrastructure will help maintain jobs in the short term while building a more efficient and competitive economy in the longer term.

But, Madam Speaker, our government realizes that growth alone isn't the solution. Where that growth comes from also matters if Alberta is to be insulated from future oil price shocks, and that's why the third priority in our budget is economic development and diversification. We're responding to the fiscal challenges of today by developing a plan for economic growth and diversification that supports job creators, entrepreneurs, and workers. As part of that plan we created a new Ministry of Economic Development and Trade to lead efforts to steer Alberta's economy in a different direction so that it becomes less prone to commodity-fuelled boom-and-bust cycles. Because we know that it's businesses and investors that create jobs, not government, we'll be a good partner to industry, providing support through a number of initiatives, including a new job-creation incentive grant, which will provide up to $89 million per year for the next two calendar years to Alberta employers who create jobs.

We're providing an accelerated capital plan which increases infrastructure investment by 15 per cent over three years, and it'll create 8,000 to 10,000 new jobs. We're also enhancing access to capital for entrepreneurs to help them take their bright ideas from conception to design to the market.

Madam Speaker, we're also putting money in the hands of smart lenders and investors who know what to do with that money. ATB Financial will see a $1.5 billion increase in the amount it can borrow in the capital markets, allowing it to make more loans to small and medium-sized enterprises in Alberta. The Alberta Enterprise Corporation will receive an additional $50 million to invest in venture capital funds, helping innovative businesses with a strong presence in Alberta to access new capital that will help them achieve commercial success. Our investment arm, the Alberta Investment Management Corporation, or AIMCo, is being encouraged to invest up to 3 per cent of the heritage fund in growth-oriented companies in this province. Altogether we are mobilizing over $2 billion to support economic growth and diversification to make Alberta the best place in Canada to launch and grow a business.

Madam Speaker, to recap, Budget 2015 achieves three important things. First, it stabilizes public services by providing long-term sustainable and predictable funding, which is what Albertans asked of us and what we are going to deliver to them. Second, it puts us on a path towards balanced budgets in a reasonable time frame without radical cuts or front-line service layoffs. Third, it ensures our government is a good partner to our province's entrepreneurs and job creators, the keys to diversifying our economy.

Madam Speaker, Budget 2015 is a responsible plan that addresses our short-term economic challenges and stabilizes the programs that Albertans depend on while growing the economy over the long term. I would ask all members of this Assembly to support this bill.

Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, I'm hoping that if you seek it, you will find it, unanimous consent for the remainder of the evening for the House to go to one-minute bells.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. When I wrote this speech, I was in a slightly more aggressive mood than I am today, but I'll do my best to address the budget in the light in which I had originally written my remarks.

Today I rise to speak to Bill 9, which allows me yet another enjoyable chance to speak against the budget. Everything I have to say about this budget has pretty much already been said in this Chamber before. Most of the points I'm about to make have been made by myself, by my colleagues, and by Albertans in every possible forum. I've received phone calls, e-mails, and snail mail telling me that this budget will destroy the Alberta advantage. I've had town hall meetings in Brooks, in Bassano, and in Strathmore where constituents have told me that this will hurt their businesses and their livelihoods. At these town halls my constituents have told me to fight this budget at every turn.

This government has gone out of its way to make people forget about what we used to call the Alberta advantage. We have discussed at length how this government has a chronic spending problem, a problem that existed long before they were elected, but while previous governments had a spending problem, this government has elevated it to a spending crisis, a crisis of such magnitude that spending and debt levels in this budget are not even legal under the current budgetary framework.

That is why the government is also proposing Bill 4, allowing not just consolidated deficits to be financed with debt but now even structural/operational deficits to be financed with debt. It attacks the last line of defence that Alberta has had against spendthrift politicians. That line of defence was established long ago to protect Albertans from politicians that lack restraint. Over the last decade successive governments have watered down and weakened those walls of fiscal defence every time they have run into them. It took the NDP just five months to propose tearing down yet another wall. Bill 4 will allow this government to pass this budget, allowing them to take on more than $50 billion of debt.

I'll give this much to the NDP: at least they are not trying to hide their intentions. They didn't wait until year 3 or 4 to raise the debt ceiling after three or four years of pretending that they would even balance the budget. No. They are proposing to break the bank in their very first year. This budget expects to run at least four consecutive cumulative deficits. That is under the best-case scenario, with predictions for years 4 and 5 that we will see an incredible 16 per cent growth in revenues those years. As we wander out of the 12 years in the deficit desert, the Minister of Finance believes that he can part the sea and lead us to the promised land of oil and honey.

If I was doing the books for a business in Brooks, would they renew my contract if I told them that they would see a 16 per cent growth in revenues years 4 and 5 out with zero data to back it up? During the estimates process I asked the Minister of Finance to give us his numbers for years 4 and 5 of the budget. I asked him repeatedly, and he provided us with nothing more than the ministry's talking points. When pressed into a corner, the minister flat out refused to provide the data. I asked for these numbers in this House repeatedly. I asked that the numbers be tabled in this House. I asked that the numbers be given to us in estimates. Nothing.

They say that this is a three-year budget. Fine. We can deal with that. But if this is a three-year budget, then they should take years 4 and 5 out. Remove the two outlying years, that project a balanced budget without a shred of data whatsoever detailing how they actually intend to get there. Otherwise, this is not a three-year budget; it is a five-year budget that doesn't do its homework. Either the crystal-ball predictions for the next four and five years need to be removed from the budget, or the revenue and spending breakdowns must be provided. You can't have your cake and eat it, too, Madam Speaker. The government can't give these highly unlikely but very good for publicity numbers and not tell us how they plan to actually achieve them. This budget does not deserve to be passed without full details.

But since I've asked the minister dozens of times and not gotten any answers, I'll have to take my best guess about where the money is going to come from. On Sunday morning, while most Albertans were at church or watching football or taking the kids to brunch, the Premier announced her new ND PST, a massive, new, $3 billion carbon tax that will hammer every single small business and family in Alberta. During the election the Premier promised Albertans that she would never implement a PST, but this carbon tax is the equivalent of a 3 per cent PST. In June the NDP brought down the biggest single tax increase in the history of Alberta. Just a few months later they beat that record again. The ND PST is how the government plans to part the red ink sea: more taxes on Albertans, who are already struggling.

During estimates I asked the Minister of Finance if he had any further plans to raise taxes. He said: no, not unless the economy took a further severe downturn. Yet here they are, raising taxes just a few weeks later. I'd be fascinated to see a single piece of economic literature that says that during times of economic downturn governments should increase taxes as a way to fix the economy. I must admit that I have a hard time finding any economic theory to back that up. The only example I can find is what the NDP are doing to Alberta right now.

While the big five oil companies might be happy to pay a carbon tax, it will be devastating to the hundreds of medium- and small-sized oil producers and drillers like those in my constituency. It will hammer Alberta taxpayers and Alberta families and Alberta small businesses when they can least afford it. It's kicking people when they're down, Madam Speaker. The Premier promised during the election till she was blue in the face that she would never impose a PST, and she never once spoke during the campaign saying that she would implement a carbon tax, but that is exactly what they are doing right now. This government has no mandate for an ND PST carbon tax.

A $3 billion, backdoor PST would be bad enough on its own, but it's not. This budget taxes and taxes some more, in fact raises over 60 new or higher taxes, not including the tax on everything, that we've just learned about. This budget is reckless not just for its wanton tax hikes, but it is reckless also because the numbers don't even add up. A few weeks ago the Parliamentary Budget Officer released a report detailing their predictions for WTI oil prices over the next five years. As far as reputable, reliable, and respected sources go, the PBO is all of the above. Their numbers were a little different than the government of Alberta's. By a little, I mean a hell of a lot. In fact, the numbers were so different that it opens up an $8 billion hole in the revenues of this province for the next three years alone.

I want to know how the government managed to book a difference per year of $11.60 per barrel compared to the PBO's projections. The NDP cannot have a multibillion-dollar rounding error every six months. Every $3 change in the price of oil is a half-billion-dollar change in revenues for the government. This is not a small rounding error. A $2 billion hole per calendar year is not acceptable. Before the budget is passed, it must be amended with realistic oil projections. In 2018 the PBO projects oil to be $53.80 per barrel. This government projects $72; it doesn't even come close. It is nearly 50 per cent higher than the PBO's projections. It's not even in the same ballpark, Madam Speaker.

Additionally, we don't even have oil projections for years 4 and 5 in this budget whatsoever. The PBO projects oil to be at $59 in 2020, which, by the way, is the price that the NDP projects it will be next year. The PBO projects $59 in 2020, but the NDP don't even show their numbers for that year. All the minister could tell me in estimates was that it would be in the, quote, mid-70s range, yet the NDP project their revenues to increase by 16 per cent in those two years.

The Premier's claim that the ND PST will be revenue neutral should be judged with some obvious suspicion by the Albertans who will pay for it. Oil predictions are through the roof. Taxes are through the roof. The breakdown for revenue numbers in years 4 and 5 simply doesn't exist.

Just the other week I made a friendly bet with the Member for Calgary-Currie that without tax hikes, unbudgeted in the NDP's platform, this budget would not meet its revenue projections of a balanced budget by the next election. Well, I thank the Premier and the Finance minister for making me the easiest $100 I've ever made in my life.

When we are standing in this place in a few months for the next budget, I'm sure that the Minister of Finance will have all sorts of excuses for why his optimistic numbers never came to fruition. But we don't have to wait a few months to fix the mistakes we're making right now. We don't have to wait four months for the minister to say: oops, I didn't see it coming. It's as clear as day, and every member on this side of the House sees it coming. Let's do the responsible thing with this budget for Albertans and send it back, to the shredder.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to my colleagues. I think I'm going to ask for a certain degree of forbearance as we try to sort of get back into the swing of things. If my comments seem a little bit scattered, you'll have to excuse me. All of us are operating on fairly limited sleep this week, but we'll get back at it, and we'll be banging on all cylinders soon, all eight cylinders, as it turns out.

Madam Speaker, I do want to address some of the issues that we've talked about over these past couple of weeks with regard to the budget. It certainly is a far-reaching document, and there can be no question whatsoever that this budget is very different and represents a significant departure from past practices. There is no question that this government is a clear departure from past practices and past courses of action, so that should not come as any surprise to Albertans. Some are heralding that, some are hailing that as being a brave, new frontier, but I will tell you that others are concerned and are not nearly as joyful about this.

Now, I do want to state here and now that there are some things in this budget that we find entirely laudable, and we want to make sure that the government knows this. To the Minister of Finance: it's a short list, so he may want to stay around so he can hear it. I should be done by 5.

First of all, we are glad to see the reinstatement of the STEP program. The STEP program is a useful program, and it was a program that, certainly, we cut from the budget with a significant amount of trepidation because we know it was important to nonprofit organizations, to cultural organizations, to communities, who would often hire STEP students to do programs in the summertime that would assist with recreation and culture and tourism events.

So we're glad that STEP is back. I'm a little bit puzzled by the continuous reference to STEP being now available to small businesses. STEP, to my knowledge, was always available to small businesses. Well, I had a small business, and I hired STEP students, and I don't think I was breaking the law. If I was, I think I'm past the statute of limitations. We had a small business. We hired STEP students for many years. I'm a little bit puzzled by that, but perhaps you could offer some clarification.

The second area that I'm actually very glad to see – it wasn't directly in the budget; it was a previous announcement that was made – is the increased funding to women's shelters. We believe that this is an important step. It's a step, certainly, that our colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway would have supported, and I'm also especially encouraged to see the expanded funding for second-stage shelters. These are critical in terms of the transition of women who are fleeing family violence situations back into the community and doing it in a way that becomes successful. I'm pleased to see it. I know that in Lloydminster, for example, we have a very active women's shelter. I know the director of that shelter very well, and she has come and met with me about second-stage funding, so I know she was glad to see this.

The third area. You know, for me personally, I'm glad to see the expanded funding for midwifery. I mentioned it earlier, during question period. As most of you know, during the course of the rural health review one of the areas that came up again and again was that people in rural Alberta want to be able to be born in their community, they want to be able to live in their community, and they want to be able to die in their community. In order to do that, there has to be the kinds of supports for the various services in the communities that they need: health supports, social service supports, educational supports.

Above all, they have to have rural communities that are economically viable and, in fact, economically thriving. I will argue with this government that nearly every step that they take is working towards the destruction of rural Alberta. They may refuse to see it, or they may not wish to see it, but I know from what I'm hearing from my constituents and the personal – and it is anecdotal information, granted. I know. I think I was one of the people that coined this term: the plural of anecdote is not data. But anecdotal information is still important because it is important to each and every one of those people's lives, and you cannot ignore anecdotes when people tell you how things like a carbon tax will affect them.

There is no public transit in rural Alberta. I know that the Minister of Transportation wants to expand rural bus services, but I will tell you right now that the option of getting on the LRT in Streamstown, Alberta, is not there today, it won't be there tomorrow, and it won't likely ever be there in my lifetime, nor should it because it would never be economically viable. By necessity rural Albertans travel longer distances to get to work, to get to recreational activities. They burn more fuel because they have to, in order that they can feed Albertans and, indeed, feed the planet, and when you put a carbon tax on things, it makes that more difficult.

Madam Speaker, those sorts of things are being told to me on a regular basis. Ultimately, that accumulation of individual situations and anecdotes is what we need to keep track of as members. It's what our colleague did such a great job of, why he has been so loved over his time in this Chamber. That is why we are paying very close attention to it as we all should in all situations.

Now, Madam Speaker, I want to turn to four specific areas of the budget that are of concern to me, and I want to talk about each one of them separately and the associated budgeting process overall, that we just reviewed in estimates.

The first is a refusal by this government to seriously address government expenditures in the name of stability. We heard that word uttered by the Minister of Finance several times. Well, really, it's a matter of definition. It's a matter of definition as to what you view stability as being. A former leader of our party and a former Premier, Premier Hancock, used to like to say that the NDP approach to everything is: just add money and stir. I will invoke those words as well because certainly that is the approach that this Finance minister has taken with his budget: just add money and stir.

The idea that stability is simply spending more and changing nothing is, to me, akin to having a plane in a nosedive and simply keeping the throttle open full and doing nothing to pull back on the stick. That's a stable situation because nothing is changing, but the outcome won't be very good. The refusal of this government to recognize that we are indeed in a nosedive and their refusal to recognize that we need to pull back on both the throttle and the stick indicate to me that there is a problem with their basic financial and economic, fiscal literacy.

I have a significant concern, for example, when the Health minister, in the name of stability, does not want to at least look at how AHS is operated, the single most expensive line item in our budget. I know that AHS, for example, has a new board of directors, and these are all excellent individuals, but a good board of directors and good individual directors does not guarantee good governance, and it certainly does not guarantee good outcomes for Albertans. It is well documented that although Albertans spend more than any other jurisdiction in Canada on health care, our outcomes are not what they should be. When Minister Horne was the Health minister, he freely stated that if adding more money was the solution, we'd have solved the problems by now, so I cannot see simply adding additional funds as being the solution to this. I do not see a sufficient commitment to restraint in this budget whatsoever. All I see is additional spending.

That then leads me to my second area of concern, and that is the depletion of the contingency account. Now, the contingency account is one of those things that doesn't get a lot of chat. A lot of people won't talk about the contingency account, but it is, in fact, a vitally important way to manage the ups and downs that we know occur within a resource economy. Now, our contingency account has gone up, and it has gone down, but as of March 31, 2015, before this government came into power, the contingency account balance was some $6.5 billion. By the time the fourth-quarter financial results were completed and the surplus from the last fiscal year was added into the contingency account, the contingency account balance at the end of June this year was approximately $8.3 billion, or, put another way, roughly $2,000 for every man, woman, and child in Alberta.

Well, less than a year and a half from now that calculation is going to be much, much easier to perform because, thanks to this government, that $8.3 billion number will be reduced to zero; $8.3 billion will be spent by this government in less than a year and a half in the name, I assume, of stability, and there is no plan whatsoever over the course of this budget to replenish the contingency fund. Now, in terms of household finance we all know that most financial planners recommend that you keep one to two months' worth of your salary on hand as an emergency fund in case of something happening, in case of damage to your car, a very expensive veterinary bill, those sorts of things. Now, we also unfortunately know that Albertans don't always necessarily have that on hand, but zero contingency account: Madam Speaker, we have no savings. We have no emergency fund.

That then will get us into the area that I think is very concerning to us, and that is the abandonment of the principle that you pay for operations and that you pay and keep a balanced budget on operations. When we're borrowing to pay day-to-day operations, we step onto an extremely slippery slope, that we haven't been on for over 20 years in this province. I think that that is something we have to avoid.

The third area of concern. This came up in estimates, and this is a big area of concern for me. Now, it maybe doesn't deal directly with numbers, but I think it deals with how, then, those numbers are spent, and that is what in committee after committee, in department after department we went through in estimates, the total abandonment of long-term strategic planning documents that were prepared, we'll say, by the previous government, but in truth they were prepared by Albertans. These strategic documents were put together usually after broad-based, province-wide consultation and were largely written by panels that were led by experts in the field, that had involvement from elected officials but were not run by elected officials.

I know because I was involved in at least two of those processes. One was a rural health review that we completed in March; the other was the recreation plan that guided fitness in amateur sport. We consulted broadly across the province with stakeholders. We got their input, and – trust me – their input was not always complimentary of government. We recognized it, we wrote it down, and we said: we will take action on these things. I can tell you that if you read the health review, it will show you clearly that people had a number of things and were very concerned about how rural health care was being delivered in Alberta.

For example, the tourism framework, the tourism framework act of Alberta, the Alberta cultural plan, the rural economic development action plan, the rural health review are all not even showing up in the business plans for the various departments of this government. If you don't have a plan, how can you expect to go forward and spend wisely and judiciously? I think it's fair to say that there is no plan, and what plans that were there have been abandoned.

I would like to make one specific exception to that that I'm aware of, and that is the Minister of Environment and Parks. The plan for parks, a 10-year plan that started in 2009, is being continued. It was referenced in the business plan for that department, and a number of very important initiatives, including an inclusion plan, which we announced last summer, to increase attendance at Alberta's provincial parks by those groups that are underrepresented in terms of park attendance, were maintained. I am pleased to see that.

There's one other area, and maybe this is just a personal concern that I have. But it is an area that I am very familiar with, and that is with regard to the use of the tourism levy. Now, back in 2005 Alberta passed the Tourism Levy Act. What it did . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. leader.

Mr. McIver: I was actually on pins and needles wanting to know about how this act affected the tourism act, particularly because the hon. member speaking is a former tourism minister, and I can think of no one more qualified in the House to elucidate on that than the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. I was hoping that he could expand upon that thought.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Madam Speaker, thank you very much, and I appreciate the opportunity to do so. The tourism levy that was established, called by some the pillow tax, is the 4 per cent levy that is added onto your hotel bill or any fixed-roof accommodation anywhere in the province. It has been by far, across Canada, the most successful form of stable funding for tourism promotion and development in any province in this country. It is the envy of all other provinces. Other provinces have developed tourism levies to emulate ours, but I can tell you that in every case they go and they say: you know, this is great.

What is one of the things we hear about so often in terms of government funding? Stable, predictable funding. Well, the tourism levy provided that. I say "provided" in the past tense because it used to provide that. The tourism department as well as Travel Alberta would know what kinds of allocations they were getting because they knew how much was collected by the tourism levy in the previous fiscal year, and they knew that that was being allocated to both the department and to Travel Alberta. But no: this year, in this budget some $9 billion of the tourism levy is being sucked out of the tourism business, is being drawn away, siphoned away and put into general revenue by this Minister of Finance and this government.

It is perhaps the greatest betrayal of our tourism industry in more than a decade, and when the Minister of Economic Development and Trade and others say how important tourism is to this province, it is a hollow gesture. It is a hollow gesture that they do not back up with their actions because they have siphoned off some $9 billion of the tourism levy, money that's supposed to go into tourism promotion, money that's supposed to go into the building of tourism in this province, and put it into general revenue. Madam Speaker, I find that to be particularly disturbing.

You know, we're hearing it get trumpeted that they created a new Ministry of Economic Development and Trade. They didn't create it; they just brought back a ministry that wasn't used for a number of years, partly because the economy was banging along on so many cylinders that it was hardly necessary. Now the 13th Minister of Economic Development and Trade stands up regularly in the House and trumpets how important his ministry is. Well, it is an important ministry, but it is not new, and he's the new minister, but he's hardly the first minister.

Madam Speaker, in concluding my comments, I'd like to thank the hon. members for their attention. We cannot support this budget because of a number of reasons. I mean, I'm sure that all the members of my caucus and other members within the House could find a number of shortcomings and insufficiencies in this budget, and they are many. But this budget is not one that we can support, certainly not one that I can support, and I believe that it creates a number of very dangerous precedents, that I will not celebrate, nor will the constituents of Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. Still under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Cooper: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm just curious to know if the member would provide some context. You know, you mentioned about the leadership of the organization being very important. This evening the government even voted down only amendments that would reduce spending, albeit not very significantly in total number values, on the minister's office itself, a total of less than a million dollars in the whole budget, but I think that could have been a real signal on the direction and the leadership that ministers were taking. I wondered if you might add some comments to the lack of desire to save.

Dr. Starke: Well, Madam Speaker, it's entirely indicative of the entire budgetary process, the fact that ministers need to show by example and lead by example and demonstrate that they are prepared to take some cuts themselves, just as we MLAs will probably take a freeze once the Members' Services Committee makes the decision. Back in February we took a 5 per cent rollback in the wages of MLAs. It was because leaders need to show leadership.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Madam Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity. My colleague the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster was quite eloquent in his remarks, and I'm just going to add one thing.

I've been thinking about this thing, and one of the things that disturbs me the most about the budget, one of the things that makes it hardest for me to support it, is the amount of debt that we will be in and the almost nonexistent capacity that we'll have to pay it back at the end of four years, five years.

I got to thinking about it, and I got to thinking about it in terms of my own minuscule family budget, a budget, I'm sure, in the order of magnitude of probably a lot of Alberta families. Most Alberta families do not have at their disposal $47.4 billion, which will be the debt the government will be in, by their own numbers here, in five years. But they do understand that lots of times the family will borrow money – it might be for a car; it might be for a home – and they also understand that there has to be a plan to pay it back.

In terms of what I think is a fairly reasonable comparison to a family budget, let's just say that the budget was $47,000 a year, $47,400, because the $47.4 billion, Madam Speaker, is not that far from the government's annual provincial budget. We're talking about a one-year budget. That's the comparison I'm trying to draw here. The government is going to put themselves in debt by about one year's full expenditures on a budget. That's not unusual for a family to do because sometimes a family that makes $100,000 a year will have a $200,000 or $300,000 mortgage.

But I'll tell you what they don't do. They don't make those payments for the whole year based on one week's pay. According to the government's budget, four or five years from now, when they say that they're going to start paying it back, they're going to pay it back in the first year that they have a surplus, and that surplus will be $1 billion. So if the annual budget is, you know, $47 billion – it's about 52 weeks, about a billion a week – they'll have just a little more than a week's pay to pay back the whole mortgage for the whole year. I'm trying to draw this comparison, but in numbers, in terms of how Albertans relate to it, if you were going to pay back your mortgage on one week's pay, your $1,000 on your $47,000 loan or mortgage, well, that's monthly payments of – what? – 80 bucks. I mean, I'm not sure what size of home you could get to do that.

I know members might say that, well, a family would never do that because they would normally budget sometimes up to 20 or 30 per cent of the annual take-home pay to pay the mortgage except that this government in four or five years will not have the capacity to do that because they've made it quite clear that they're not going to cut any government jobs, any wages, any salaries, any front-line expenditures, hold the line on anything. They've been quite clear about that.

I'm doing my best not to put words in their mouth, Madam Speaker, but the fact is that I think the average Alberta family will see it doesn't add up. You can't pay a mortgage the size of your annual revenue on one week's pay without supplementing with 10 or 20 or 30 per cent of the rest of your income. It's just not there. The government is not doing it. When you think about that – and I hope members opposite will think about that – I think that financially it's kind of a crash-and-burn plan. I'm not sure how it could be paid back except by taking on more and more and more borrowing – and those banks and those people that lend money will at some point say: enough is enough – or by having to take at some point in the future draconian measures to cut back on expenditures.

I think what we're suggesting is that the government now take reasonable measures to control expenditures, reasonable measures to control growth, reasonable measures to make sure that you can afford to provide. The government is right about one thing, a few things, but I'm going to give them credit right now for one thing. Albertans depend upon their services, and they want them. One of the important things about that is that if they're that important today, they're still going to be that important in five years, and it's important that we're going to be able to afford them in five years.

If I haven't explained it well enough for everybody, I apologize. I'll call that a weakness in my ability to express it, but to me it's pretty clear that they're headed for a brick wall, where it's going to have to be either draconian cuts or massive debt, something that eventually, finally, you'll say no to. And what's at risk? Those very services that the government says – and I agree with them – are so very near and dear to the hearts of Albertans. As long as that's true, I couldn't possibly support a budget that puts Alberta on an absolute collision course with those services that Albertans depend upon. All Albertans, but particularly those that are educating their kids, will need those teachers five years from now. Those that have family members that get sick will need those services five years from now. Those who are weakest and poorest amongst us will need social services and social supports five years from now. This budget puts all of that at risk, all of it.

It's going to be fine probably for five years, but my goodness, Madam Speaker, I believe it's our duty to look beyond five years. I think it's our duty to look to the long-term welfare of our children and our grandchildren. While there are a lot of other things for me to complain about with this budget, this one issue is so overwhelmingly disastrous, in my opinion, that I'm going to take all my time to talk about that because I think that it really accentuates how this budget is putting Alberta on a disastrous course, a course that I implore the government to turn away from.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Alberta Human Rights Amendment Act, 2015

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to rise today to move Bill 7, Alberta Human Rights Amendment Act, 2015.

Bill 7 amends the Alberta Human Rights Act by adding gender identity and gender expression to the list of prohibited grounds of discrimination. For clarity, gender identity refers to a person's internal, individual experience of gender. Gender expression refers to the varied way in which a person expresses their gender through a combination of dress, demeanour, social behaviour, and other factors. Protection from discrimination on the basis of both grounds is relevant to transgender and gender-variant people. Their gender identity and expression may differ from the sex they were assigned at birth.

Currently Alberta human rights law includes gender in the list of prohibited grounds of discrimination, which is interpreted as covering gender identity and expression. Nevertheless, trans and gender-variant people continue to be a highly marginalized and discriminated group within our society. In my consultation with members of the transgender and gender-variant community I heard numerous stories of discrimination. I heard of people who had lost their jobs and people who could not keep a job once they came out. Others told me about their safety concerns while staying in shelters. More told me about how hard it was to find a doctor who would treat them, even for conditions unrelated to their gender identity. Even something many Albertans take for granted, using a washroom on a road trip, can be an issue that creates anxiety and safety fears.

I also heard how much work lies ahead of our government. We need to reflect on whether gender needs to be provided on administrative forms. We need to think about wayfinding within the health care system for trans and gender-variant individuals who are looking for a doctor, and we need to find ways to respect the names that people choose to give themselves.

Madam Speaker, more than anything, we need to continue to listen. We need to continue to listen because all Albertans should be able to have the same opportunities to be treated with equal dignity and respect. This proposed amendment will ensure existing rights are clearly reflected in the legislation. It will empower the trans and gender-variant community as they confront stereotypes and discrimination. We know there are still people we haven't heard from, and we're committed to reaching out to hear those voices. The Alberta Human Rights Commission is supportive of the amendment.

Madam Speaker, this is a critical issue. Trans and gender-variant people are still subject to discrimination. Many still struggle with suicidal ideation, and many are still subjected to violence. This government is committed to upholding the rights of all Albertans. We want trans and gender-variant people to feel welcome not only in Alberta but in this Legislature. It's my pleasure to welcome feedback from the Trans Equality Society of Alberta, the Pride Centre of Edmonton, Outreach Southern Alberta, the Institute for Sexual Minority Studies and Services, and the Centre to End All Sexual Exploitation.

Thank you to the MLAs for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, Calgary-Hawkwood, and Calgary-Cross for their work, passion, and dedication to this issue. Most of all, I would like to thank the individual members of the trans and gender-variant community who shared their stories with us. It's your stories and strength that have brought this legislation forward. Madam Speaker, we have heard their concerns, and Bill 7 is one way we are acting to help address them now.

I would now move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 5

Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to move second reading of Bill 5, the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act.

This bill follows through on a promise to increase transparency in our public sector, Madam Speaker. If passed, the bill will significantly expand disclosure of public-sector compensation. Disclosure will include employees of public-sector bodies governed by the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act, including AHS. Disclosure will also apply to employees of Covenant Health, and the legislation can be expanded by regulation to include other entities that receive significant public funds. These bodies will have to disclose the names and compensation of all employees who earn more than $125,000 in total compensation, including overtime, severance, and bonuses. By including bonuses and other forms of remuneration, we will ensure that compensation cannot be withheld from disclosure.

In addition, these bodies will be required to disclose all remuneration for all members of their boards and other governing bodies. These positions have sometimes been criticized as patronage appointments, so this government, in addition to reviewing ABCs and appointments, will ensure that compensation for these positions is publicly available.

Disclosure for government of Alberta employees will stay the same, but the bill will move the rules from the existing Treasury Board directive into an act. The threshold for these employees will remain at the current level of $104,754, excluding overtime.

Madam Speaker, the act will also enable regulations to require disclosure of physician compensation. Because physicians and other medical professionals are compensated through a variety of funding mechanisms, unique rules need to be applied. Details will be developed after consultation with physicians and laid out in regulations.

For municipalities and school boards we are providing some flexibility. These two groups are accountable to their electorate and will be able to decide for themselves what best fits the public interest in their community. This act enables but does not require disclosure of names and compensation paid to employees, including teachers. To be clear, this act does not mandate the disclosure of a single teacher's salary.

The threshold for public-sector bodies and other entities is set at $125,000. Madam Speaker, the number was chosen in order to capture high-income earners. This will also reduce the administrative burden on various groups in that they will not need to extract the overtime hours from the threshold calculation. All thresholds for compensation disclosure will be adjusted annually for inflation.

If passed, this act would come into force on royal assent, and the first disclosure under the act would be on June 30, 2016.

Overall, this bill will help Albertans understand how public funds are used by agencies, boards, commissions, and other bodies. The government has committed to ensuring that Albertans know how public money is spent, and this is another step on this path.

Madam Speaker, I'd now like to move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 6

Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am honoured to rise and speak to Bill 6, the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act. Farmers and ranchers have long been the heart and soul of our province. Long before our cities were cities, these people were the pioneers who sowed the seeds of what we have become today, a province that embraces the same values that have always been held dear: integrity, ingenuity, and a love of the land. There's no question. Those who work in agriculture have always recognized opportunity and work hard to make the most of it.

On a farm or ranch the hours are long, the chores can be exhausting, and the outcomes are often unpredictable. In those ways it might be similar to working in many other types of jobs or industries, Madam Speaker, but there aren't many jobs where rain followed by a hard frost can make the difference between profit and loss. Despite this ever-present uncertainty farmers and ranchers keep doing the job because they love the land, the lifestyle, and the feeling of pride in producing products that help feed the world.

Madam Speaker, I think that we can all agree. These folks face enough uncertainty without having to worry about what would happen to their families if they were injured or, worse, killed on the job. When most Albertans go to bed at night, they don't need to worry about that, and that's because most of us are covered by laws that protect our health and safety on the job. Most Albertans are covered by workers' compensation to support them and their families if they are hurt while working. But not every Albertan has this support. Unlike the same basic protections workers in other industries have had for decades, Alberta's farms and ranches are not covered by any workplace legislation. To be clear, Albertan workers have been covered by occupational health and safety legislation since 1976, nearly four decades ago, yet farms and ranches remain exempt.

What does that mean? That means workers cannot refuse to perform unsafe work or do work they're not trained for without guaranteed protection against being fired. It means if a farm worker is seriously injured or dies on the job, an occupational health and safety officer cannot investigate the incident to see what went wrong or work with the employer to prevent future incidents. In 2014 17 people died in farming-related accidents. Madam Speaker, those are 17 devastated families who may not have the answers as to why or how their loved one died. Those are 17 missed opportunities to have an OHS officer work with the employers to learn from the incident and to provide support to help prevent future incidents. Those are 17 heartfelt reasons why I support Bill 6, the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act.

Bill 6 proposes changes to several pieces of Alberta's current labour legislation that cover occupational health and safety, workers' compensation, employment standards, and labour relations. If passed, this bill will remove the exemption of farms and ranches from labour legislation, and workers in this sector will be able to access protections all other Alberta workers are already entitled to. As it currently stands, Alberta's workers' compensation is optional for farm and ranch workers. We have only minimal employment standards for those employees, and they have no right to unionize or bargain collectively. Madam Speaker, it's time for this to change.

Farming and ranching is one of Canada's oldest industries. Certainly, it dates back to a day and age where most Canadian jurisdictions didn't include the agricultural industry under their respective labour legislation. Back then things were different. Over time farming operations have grown bigger and paid farm workers have become more common. There is also a growing public awareness and willingness to ensure that workers, regardless of the industry, enjoy basic workplace rights. Alberta farms and ranches remain one of the last sectors that don't have access to any form of labour relations coverage for farm and ranch employees, something other Albertans have been able to access since 1938, before the Second World War.

Employment standards are more complex. Employment standards legislation relates to such issues as hours of work, overtime and overtime pay, holidays and general holiday pay, vacations and vacation pay, restrictions on employment of children, and minimum wage. We should support this bill because every worker is entitled to basic rights and protections. Every worker should have a safe, fair, and healthy workplace. Every worker should be able to return home safely after work and should be able to sleep at night knowing their families are protected if something were to happen on the work site.

Madam Speaker, what this bill asks for is that Alberta's farm and ranch workers have the same protections and rights that most of Alberta's other workers – you and I and the vast majority of workers – take for granted. This bill asks for fairness across industries and protections for both workers and employers, no matter the profession.

What this bill does not ask for is one-size-fits-all legislation that would force farms and ranches to follow rules meant for a vastly different industry. That's why consultation is a key component of how changes will happen if the bill passes. Our government understands that farming and ranching is not the same as oil and gas or construction. Our government is seeking the input of those who will be affected by the bill so that any changes will make sense for the industry and will be practical and enforceable.

We all want workers to have rights and protections. We all want job sites to be fair, safe, and healthy workplaces. Bill 6, if passed, will ensure this is the case for the farmers, ranchers, and their workers. It's basic common sense, Madam Speaker. It's the right thing to do.

With that, Madam Speaker, I move that debate be adjourned.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: Just before I recognize the hon. Government House Leader, I just wanted to once again acknowledge the wonderful spirit of co-operation and support that we saw today from both sides of the House as we paid tribute to our colleague from Calgary-Greenway. We heard very eloquently about his strength of spirit, his huge heart, his caring, and his larger-than-life personality. He'll be greatly missed in the days ahead, but for today, this afternoon, he was very much with us here in the House.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you for those comments, Madam Speaker. It's been a very hard day, I think, but a very good day in many ways. I would also like to add my thanks to all members of the House for the compassion and care that they have shown, regardless of stripe. I think it is much appreciated, and it is itself a tribute to the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

I think we have made good progress. I want to thank all members of the House for their co-operation and their contribution, and I will move, Madam Speaker, that we call it 6 o'clock and that we adjourn until tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:49 p.m. to Thursday at 9 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

9 a.m. Thursday, November 26, 2015

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Let us reflect. As we bring a very difficult week to a close, let us reflect upon the things that really matter. We serve the people of Alberta, but we also owe a debt of responsibility to the people we love – our families, our friends, our colleagues – and, most importantly, to ourselves. We must remain strong and healthy in order to continue in our role as public servants, and this means taking time to rest, time to heal, and time to treasure each precious moment of life.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 9 Appropriation Act, 2015

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Mr. Cooper: Well, Madam Chair, it's an absolute pleasure to rise this morning. I look forward to many productive mornings together as we talk about the issues of the day that are extremely important to Albertans. While they're busy doing important things, we can be here this morning sharing some conversation around the future of our province. Really, in many respects that's what Bill 9 does. It lays out a new path for the future of Alberta.

I can tell you, Madam Chair, that in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, that I represent, I've been hearing from lots of folks about their thoughts on this budget. Again, it's my pleasure to rise to represent those people, not just those people but the many people across Alberta who have been reaching out to the Official Opposition and saying: "Please do what you can to slow down this government. Do what you can to impress upon this government the need for pause when it comes to driving the province over a fiscal cliff." That is exactly what we have before us, a fiscal cliff that ends in upwards of $50 billion of debt.

We have before us a plan that's been set out by this new government that moves the province in a direction that we have not seen in decades, a direction where the government is changing laws so that they can be borrowing for operational spending. Madam Chair, it's like taking out a loan to buy your groceries, to pay for your electrical bill, to pay for your child care, to pay for your personal day-to-day expenses, and I just don't believe that that reflects the values of hard-working Albertans, Albertans who believe that you should live within your means and that when your fiscal picture changes, you should take a moment and reflect to see the areas where you can find some fiscal restraint.

A perfect example of that, Madam Chair, was that yesterday in this very House the opposition proposed some very reasonable amendments, not amendments that would fire teachers, not amendments that would stop road or bridge construction but that would give some indication to Albertans that this government is actually serious about looking for efficiencies. Yesterday they proved that they're not, because in many respects they were a fraction of the overall minister's budget, not the budget that they spend delivering services to people but the inner workings of the office. We're talking about paper and whiteout and office furniture and hosting, the hosting costs of a minister's budget, having their friends and important stakeholders to their office for special events.

In many respects many of the amendments were as small as $50,000, but this government doesn't believe in saving one cent. What they believe in is big spending, raising debt, and not living within their means, and they proved it to all of Alberta yesterday by voting down every single amendment that the opposition proposed. So it is a big concern to the opposition that the government doesn't have a desire to live within its means, that there's no sense to reduce costs, and that the government has made a conscientious choice to drive us towards $50 billion of debt.

The costs, Madam Chair, to service those debts are astronomical. By 2018, I believe it is, or 2019 the costs just to service the debt will be upwards of $1.9 billion. It always amazes me to stop and think: how many teachers would that employ, how many roads would that $1.9 billion build, and how many hospitals would that fix, repair, or build? But when the government has made this conscientious decision to put off the problems of tomorrow, to spend today, it does not put Alberta on the path for success. It puts Alberta on the path for danger.

As I think about the future, I'm reminded of my three children and family and the challenges that my children will face as a result of the decisions of this government today, the weight of the government of tomorrow on the children of today. It's concerning because of the path forward. At that time, in maybe it's 10, maybe it's 15, maybe it's 20 years, the real, full weight and burden of the debt that this government is driving us to at breakneck speed will be felt. But at that time the only choice that they will have is to raise taxes even higher than this government would like to raise them . . .

Mr. Cooper: Or there will be no people left in the province to tax. . . . or absolutely draconian cuts, that this government likes to accuse the opposition of, that we would not do.

In fact, this opposition party has talked at great length about the resources that we would spend, the resources and the ways that we would fund front-line workers, the way that we would put a freeze on the cutting of front-line workers. In fact, just last week in this House we heard about areas of front-line workers that this government is going to be responsible for cutting. We heard my good friend from Cypress-Medicine Hat raise concerns around nurse practitioners in the constituency of Highwood doing wonderful work but who are going to be out of a job in January, not because of the Official Opposition but because of this NDP government, and to that I say: shame.

This opposition, Madam Chair, has continually come to this House, been in the media talking about ideas that we believe can set the province on the right foot, and if the government is looking, they can find many, many proposals on the opposition website. You can find a number of recommendations to move this province forward.

An Hon. Member: Where can we find your shadow budget?

Mr. Cooper: I do love to hear the government talk about a shadow budget, because if you go back in history, Madam Chair, if you look for NDP opposition shadow budgets, they do not exist, so it makes me smile when I hear them talk about this.

What the opposition has done is provided a number of ideas, and what this government does time and time again is vote against them even when it's in the province's best interest. I think you might remember, Madam Chair, a 7.25 per cent pay raise that this government, in the face of job losses all across this province, voted in favour of, and it was only because of this opposition party bringing ideas forward that they saw the error of their ways and turned around, and for that I say thank you.

I encourage the government to listen when the opposition brings ideas forward, just like we did yesterday afternoon, to show a small amount of fiscal restraint, but that's, unfortunately, not what we saw. It seems that what we're beginning to learn about this government is that this government believes that they know better than all of Alberta, that they know better than all of the opposition, that they know better than every farmer in the province, that they don't need to consult or listen to anyone because they're from the government, they're here to help, and they're going to solve all of our problems. But I can tell you, Madam Chair, that what Bill 9 does is that it proves that nothing could be further from the truth, because it takes Alberta down a path that we have not been on for many decades.

Recently, Madam Chair, Alberta has enjoyed a government, and the government wasn't perfect, and the opposition is likely in its place today because the previous government made a bunch of grave mistakes. One thing that they did do is that they put into place – and more recently they started to change the rules and got away from those key principles that are so important to this party. But one thing that they did do is that they put into place a bunch of rules and regulations that will require the government to stop and think before moving forward and require them to make changes to legislation, and we've seen that happen. These laws initially were put in place so that the government wouldn't drive us down a path of $50 billion of debt, that it would drive the government in the direction of finding ways to be more efficient in their expenditures.

A perfect example of that, Madam Chair, is as a result of the good work that the opposition has done in the past. I read a newspaper article last week about AHS saving $5 million on cellphone bills alone. There is a tireless researcher that does wonderful work for the Official Opposition, and I firmly believe that as a result of his good work – his good work – the opposition was responsible for shedding light on an issue, that now the government is going to save $5 million worth of Alberta's hard-earned taxpayer dollars because of the work of this opposition. This is the exact type of thing that we need, we must see from this government, but it is absolutely not what we see in Bill 9. We see the exact opposite of that. I had hoped when there was a change in government that there would be a new, fresh set of eyes, but that is clearly not what we have. We have a government that is fully intending and 100 per cent bent on spending every single dollar plus the ones that they don't have, not looking for ways to save 5 million bucks, not even looking for ways to save $50,000, a literal drop in the bucket when it comes to the overall budget, a government that is ideologically opposed to saving taxpayer dollars.

If it wasn't for the good work of the opposition and the dedication of some of our staff, this 5 million bucks would have been spent again next year. I think that he and I think that the opposition deserve some thanks from this government because time and time again we propose ideas, we propose amendments, and the government chooses to go in the opposite direction. It is concerning. I think that what we've seen, as we move forward to this record amount of debt, is that this commitment to overspending is the exact opposite direction that the vast majority of Albertans were hoping for when this government took office. On top of all of that already troubling framework that this budget has created in the last couple of days, we've seen new taxes being introduced on every single Albertan in the form of a carbon tax. Madam Chair, what we need is not to go down the road of taxing Albertans on every single thing that they purchase, on all of their activities, but we need to provide a framework that respects both our environment and industry.

We're getting down this path of creating a new tax that will solve some of their spending problems and be a significant burden on the Alberta taxpayer. We have a government that's fully committed to only spending, no reductions. We have a government that's fully committed to $50 billion of debt. We have a government that hasn't laid out a plan in Bill 9 or any bills that they've proposed as to how they would repay that. On top of that we have a government that's essentially going to introduce a $3 billion carbon tax. Certainly, many believe that there's a significant risk that this carbon tax is going to wind up being a path forward for them to balance their budget on. What the government has made claims about is that this particular plan is revenue neutral. That was the claim on day 1, and now we've seen a number of people discussing just exactly what revenue neutral means and presenting all sorts of risks and challenges around this revenue neutral. The Premier herself has said that in the future it may be the opportunity for the government to utilize those funds on government-related expenditures.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: I would like to take the opportunity to at least cede some of my time to the hon. member over here.

The Chair: Hon. member, we're in committee. You can speak multiple times.

Mr. Smith: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chair. When you consider a budget, there are some realities that I think all of us face. Whether it's a family budget, whether it's a school budget, whether it's a government budget, there are some realities that all of us will face. When I come into this House and when I consider the things that my constituents are thinking about, these are some of the things that I hear from my constituents, and these are some of the things that I reflect on when I look at budgets.

One, budgets should balance. We understand that there are times when maybe they can't, but in general budgets should balance; expenses should equal your revenues. That's a pretty key reality when you start talking about budgets. You should be careful before you spend more than the revenue that you generate. In my family, in your family, in all of our families, and in the family that we call Alberta you'd better be very, very careful before you start racking up debt. You should be careful about spending more than what you generate. When you spend more than what you generate – in my income, in my family, and in the Alberta family that we represent in this House, we understand that eventually that money has to be paid back and usually with interest.

So when I look at a budget, these are three of the realities that I consider. They're really important because – and this is where I think, in many cases, probably the members sitting across the House and I probably will agree – budgets at their very heart are really about social policy. I know that the claim over on the other side is that many of the things that you do, you do because you believe you want to help people and you are concerned about social policy. Well, so am I, and so are the people on this side of the House. What I really get concerned about is that when we don't recognize some of the economic realities that are present in budgets, when we get them wrong, when we ignore them, the impacts are very real, and they're felt socially within our society.

I believe that this NDP budget doesn't set Alberta up for a positive social reality but in the long run is going to have a very negative impact. As governments we provide services that address social needs: schools, hospitals, roads, bridges, human services. There's no one in this House, none of the 87 people in here, that doesn't understand and that doesn't agree that governments need to provide these social services. Budgets will impact the social realities of the people that we govern, and it's very important that we get them right.

There are some, like Paul Martin, that would argue and who have stated that good social policy is good economic policy. I think he gets it wrong. Good social policy is built upon good fiscal policy. I believe that our present Prime Minister got it wrong when he said that budgets balance themselves. No, they don't. It takes hard work, as you are finding out. You have to make hard choices. You have to decide whether you're going to increase taxes or whether you're going to cut spending. You have to make decisions about where that spending is going to go. Budgets don't balance themselves, and I'm sure that the hon. Minister Ceci understands that better than probably any of us. [interjection] I'm sorry. Thank you very much. I apologize.

I believe that this government is getting it wrong. I believe that this government, with a series of deficits, is getting it wrong. I believe that a $50-billion debt by 2020 is getting it wrong. I believe that an illusory promise to balance the budget is getting it wrong. I believe that by jacking up taxes during a recession, you're getting it wrong. When you jack up those taxes and you destroy the economic realities that we sometimes call the Alberta advantage, you lose that advantage, and you create an economic climate that is crushing business and pushing those that could invest out of Alberta. You're getting it wrong. I believe you're getting it wrong when you believe that environmental image will create jobs, and therefore this government, when it's willing to sacrifice good jobs for the promise of international goodwill on climate change, gets it wrong. When you put Albertans out of work, you're getting it wrong.

Focusing on spending and creating massive debt: the people of Alberta are very worried about this. I believe – at least in my constituency they're telling me that you're getting it wrong. Responsible governments that truly care about their people ensure that budgets are balanced. They ensure that they keep the economic incentives that keep the economy working. They keep their taxes low while providing the best level of services that they can within the fiscal realities that they face. That, I believe, at the end of the day, when they do that, allows for good social policy.

Only when budgets are balanced and there is a positive balance in the provincial bank account, will any government be able to responsibly provide for the services that their people need and demand. I do not see that in this budget. It's a serious flaw, and it should be addressed. The economic and social consequences that come when governments do not consider these realities and when they willingly go down deficits and debt – the social consequences of that are very real, and when continually ignored, Madam Chair, the policies can be immensely painful.

Anybody that is any kind of a student of history understands that poor financial and fiscal responsibility and budgeting can bring down governments. If you studied your French revolutionary history, you know that at the heart of it was a government that did not take care of its financial and fiscal responsibilities. If you take a look at the Weimar government, you'll see that the rise of fascism was directly related to a government that did not and could not contain its fiscal responsibilities. When you take a look at Argentina in the '80s and the '70s, when you take a look at the United States today, when you take a look at Greece today, the social consequences in all of those countries are the result of a government that did not take care of its fiscal responsibilities, and they should be ashamed.

You need to look at your history. [interjections] Nations that do not live by responsible fiscal policy not only are incapable of compassionate social policy, but, worse, these governments can threaten the very stability of the society. It is a historical reality that revolution and wars are the result of economic instability. [interjections] And while I am not even suggesting that we are that far down that path . . .

The Chair: Hon. members, the hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Smith: . . . I'm suggesting that you need to be aware that there are very solid reasons for making sure that you balance budgets and that you take care of your people.

Far more likely, in Alberta there will be economic pressures because of this budget that will create too few jobs. Too little wealth will be circulating in the economy. Too few government programs will be available to cushion the economic realities that Albertans are going to face. And one of the things that worries me – we've created one of the best societies in the world. We have a multicultural society that we should be incredibly proud of.

My brother-in-law was not born in this country. He comes from a country that came out of civil war and civil conflict. My brother-in-law knows what it's like to have lived in a situation where bombs are being lobbed over his high school, where he volunteered to go pick up body parts in the streets.

When you get into a situation where your fiscal responsibilities are so dire and when you've ignored the realities of the economics, when the government can no longer find the money to take care of its people and to take care of its responsibilities, the result will be a multicultural society that will begin to break down. It will begin to tribalize by race, by ethnicity, by income. When you do not take care of your fiscal responsibilities, there can be dire consequences.

I am not saying to my NDP colleagues that we are there or anywhere close to being there yet. What I am saying is that the philosophy and the ability to completely ignore economic reality sets us down a path that we do not as Albertans want to go down. This budget places us on a path that we do not want to go down.

As the representative for Drayton Valley-Devon I have canvassed my constituents, and I would like to read some of the responses that I have received from my constituents about the state of the economy, their fears, and their concerns.

From one of my constituents:

I do not think either the provincial or federal governments understand the depth of the ramifications of the low oil price and resulting slow down in the industry to those living in western Canada outside of the larger urban centres. I do not believe the government understands how dependent the rural communities are on the oil and gas service industry.

I'll skip down a little bit.

Bankruptcies and takeover of smaller companies that based their business plans on much higher oil prices are already occurring. A number of oil and gas service sector businesses are now learning that some of the junior oil companies have gone into bankruptcy and uncollectible receivables are yet another financial blow.

Workers are unemployed or underemployed ... Homeowners have provided their homes for security to mortgages and to personal lines of credit. Should unemployment rates increase beyond 10% many will be unable to meet their financial commitments. A recessionary economy reduces real estate values. Workers will no longer have sufficient equity in their homes; foreclosures and bankruptcy will result bringing further devastation to our economy.

These are the words of one of my constituents, and I know that I have talked to people in my constituency who are handing over the keys to their houses because of this economy and because of some of the decisions that are being made.

We are in a period of economic uncertainty and oil companies like any business owner need certainty to make investments. Oil industry projects require a great deal of time to acquire approvals, permits etc. The industry needs to have a clear understanding [of the] government's position on royalties.

A little further on:

I do not feel the Provincial Government has a clear understanding of the devastation to the oil and gas service sector and the extent of the adverse effects to small business and its workforce. The current provincial government seems to lack both an understanding of the role of small business in the economy and the political experience to deal with a recession of this magnitude. Time is of the essence.

Let me flip to another one of my constituents.

My companies are all service related oil and gas based companies. Since winning the election there has been a gloom and doom atmosphere within the oil patch that has caused companies to revisit their spending budgets until they see something positive come from the new government. Small business is being hit with higher taxes, both corporate and personal and looming carbon tax (which will affect every family in the province by driving up the costs of consumables such as fuel, food, clothing etc)

We are told by Premier Notley there is "nothing to worry about" but her words and actions suggest otherwise.

The Chair: Hon. member, another reminder, please, that we don't use names.

Mr. Smith: I'm reading straight from the letter.

The Chair: It doesn't matter, even if you're quoting.

Mr. Smith: That doesn't matter? Okay. I'm sorry.

We are told by [the Premier] there is "nothing to worry about" but her words and actions suggest otherwise. Higher corporate taxes and higher personal taxes, along with a hike in minimum wage will spell disaster for Alberta small business owners and drive away investors. We are already seeing projects being shut down, energy stocks in a tail spin and a growing unemployment rate with no end in sight ... and all that topped off with them trying to put through a 7.25% pay hike to themselves! I thought we were supposed to see the end of lining their own pockets ...

To date [my company] has had to lay off 2 employees and ask employees to take a wage reduction to get us by these troubled times. Less customers through the door has meant tough decisions and ultimately it is going to be the corporate Alberta that is going to take the hit for the lack lustre performance of the government to recognize what this province was built on and what has kept the rest of the country strong.

Our government needs to drop the plans for tax increases to corporate Alberta now! It needs to get the confidence back into the major players of this province by not increasing royalties! Forget the carbon tax as their way of funding all their election promises! Reduce government red tape and lose those high paying jobs that eat up infrastructure money!

I'm done now.

Here's another constituent.

I work as a salesman ... My job is to find work for oilfield trucks (hot oilers and tank trucks). We have had to reduce our prices to a break-even point or in some cases at a loss just to keep trucks working minimally. With extra taxes on corporations and low oil prices they are leaving wells that would normally be hot oiled or worked over with a service rig shut in ... I have taken a 15% reduction in my salary to keep my job. That is 15% less that I am paying in taxes, 15% less that I am spending in the community, and I have 15% less interest getting up for work in the morning. It is my personal opinion that the NDP Government has an agenda to eliminate any job in Alberta that does not have union affiliations. Oil companies are being forced to ask service providers to work their employees and equipment at a loss, by increasing corporate tax, and talk of carbon tax, and increasing royalties for the oil companies. The increased taxes on corporations are also being passed on to consumers as an increase in price at the till. There is such a high rate of unemployment in Alberta now.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. Under 29(2)(a) I'm wondering if the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon would like to share more of the views of his constituents.

Mr. Smith: I'd love to. Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, we're in committee. Standing Order 29(2)(a) doesn't apply here, but you can speak numerous times.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Okay. Madam Chair, I thought the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon had some very pertinent points from the members of his constituency. I've had constituents e-mailing me about the inability and the unwillingness of this government to listen. In 36 hours I had over 50 e-mails about Bill 6 alone, that this government is unwilling to hold proper consultations, not a single consultation in my constituency. That's why I've had to hold our own town hall meeting in Bassano for farmers to come out.

This bill has an even greater significance to every single Albertan in this province, and we've not seen a proper budget consultation process, just the same old gimmicky polls on a website. I think it's important that we hear from constituents directly in this Chamber, which is why I think it's valuable for us to hear him reading some of the correspondence that he has received from his constituents.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to continue with this. Remembering that these are the words of my constituents, I think that it's important that this Assembly know what the constituents of Alberta are saying. We should be listening, we should be considering, and maybe we should be changing direction.

To continue:

There is such a high rate of unemployment in Alberta now that revenue from working Albertans will not be able to sustain it (more people unemployed more people to pay out of the revenue). Then when EI runs out it is welfare for those people. With the NDP Government borrowing money for make work projects to keep unionized workers employed (construction, steel workers etc.) with no incentives for oil, gas, or pipeline work or workers.

I think the NDP Government will tax Alberta into poverty by the end of their term.

There is another one here that I'll read, from another company in Drayton Valley.

My business is being affected negatively due to the uncertainty in Alberta. Alberta has weathered many ups and downs in the price of oil before; however, Alberta has never before experienced a government that is working against the very industry that fuels the economy. Jobs are being lost, investors are fleeing and those who are fortunate enough to still be in business or garner a paycheque are being extremely frugal in this situation. To top it off, businesses are struggling and yet are paying higher taxes. A recession is not the time to be punitive to businesses.

I would like to see government reverse their position on higher taxes, the royalty review and the overall "anti oil and gas" message they are moving forward with. They claim they are supportive, but it certainly isn't clear as their actions show otherwise. A healthy, robust economy benefits both the government and the people which seems like a win-win.

Another business owner:

I am [an] owner/operator . . . and self-employed since 1974 and have been supplying welding and supplies to drilling companies within Alberta. I built up my company from one truck to 3 welding trucks. I have employed over the years 2-3 subcontractors. Just barely made it through the recession of 1981 and in 2010 we remortgaged our home to continue to keep our business operational. When my son took up the trade I sponsored him to attend school and get his journeyman welding ticket. He has been employed since receiving his ticket. After the recession of 2010 we were able to employ 1 part-time bookkeeper and 2 casual yard people. In the fall of 2014 there was a down turn of work in our industry and I have laid off all of them. We remortgaged our home once again and took out another personal loan to pay down our debt which we are still owing our creditors. I get daily calls from our debtors and I have to keep telling them that we do intend to pay them only I have not worked enough hours to pay anything. I am nearing retirement age but because of the loans and mortgage renewal I have to try and find another job. Because I am 66 yrs old I was hoping to retire and have my son take over the business only he will have no work to support his growing family. My wife has a job and her pay will not cover the loan and mortgage payments, utilities, and upkeep of our home. Let alone buy groceries for us to eat. We will have to close our company and hopefully someone will hire me so I can help to pay for our immediate needs and slowly pay off companies we owe money to. We need a bail out or help of some sort. There has to be a way of helping small businesses stay in business.

These are just some of the ones that I have received, and it speaks to my point. When governments don't recognize the fiscal realities of budgeting, these kinds of problems creep up. If you really care – if you really care – about the people of this province, you will care about the fiscal realities that go into budgeting.

We must be responsible in this House. We must listen to the people of Alberta. They do not support accumulating massive debt. They do not support spending beyond our means. They want fiscal responsibility, and for these reasons I will be voting against this budget.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to start off just by saying that no government has ever taxed its way to prosperity. No government has ever taxed its way to a surplus budget. Hasn't happened. Won't happen. We keep spending like this, we're going to be in trouble. You know, if we look across the pond to Greece, you can see what happened there. You can see the fiscal problem that they're in. Greece has got its own set of problems. You've got the U.S. The U.S. keeps moving their debt level up, and the U.S. keeps getting deeper and deeper and deeper into debt. We have so many different comparisons that we can look at, and we can go through country after country. Time and time, history tells us that you cannot borrow your way out of debt into a surplus.

Alberta runs the most expensive government in all of Canada. Raising taxes, asking people to hand over their hard-earned money via the taxes, well, that money does not make the Alberta government more efficient. In fact, I believe it's the opposite. We become less efficient when we tax. Albertans expect that their government will be good stewards of their money. You know, this is something I've been told time and time again.

When is the government going to look at how much money they're spending?

An Hon. Member: We just did.

Mr. Taylor: You did, too, and we're looking at $47 billion; $50 billion wouldn't surprise me.

How much money does it take to service that debt? How many positions are going to be lost? How many schools won't be built? How many roads, bridges won't be built as a result of having to service the debt on this? We need to make sure our fiscal house is in order.

You know, this budget is so important to my constituents. They expect any bill, any law that impacts them into the future – well, they expect consultation and consideration for these ones, and that means a timely amount of consideration and consultation. Our debt financing has increased to $15 billion. Like I say, it's going to affect Albertans right across the board. You're raising taxes. You're raising the debt ceiling like the U.S. The U.S. kept raising the debt ceiling, and they'll just continue to raise the debt ceiling time and again.

You're raising taxes, sin taxes and taxes on everything. The carbon tax is going to be a tax across the board. It's going to hurt all Albertans. The fuel for railways, all of a sudden now it went from 1.5 cents a litre to 5.5 cents a litre. That's a huge increase when you look at it as a percentage. That's not reasonable. That's not asking to give a little bit more; that's a lot more.

Towns that are around my area where I live – Hardisty, Provost, Wainwright, Lloydminster – they're all feeling the pinch of what's happening here with this royalty review that you've put on there, pending, and the carbon taxes. They're all feeling how much it's hurting them with their jobs. People are worried about what's happening with their jobs.

Fifteen per cent is what you have right now for the debt ceiling, and that's roughly $50 billion, and the servicing of that we'll have to pay back. I don't know how we're going to get around this very quickly. We spend $2,000 more per capita than B.C. on operations. On capital B.C. is spending about $10.7 billion. Alberta will be spending $24.6 billion over the next three years. I should have said that that's for B.C. as well. B.C. is growing faster than we are, yet we're spending way more money.

We need to focus our taxpayer dollars more efficiently before we start hiking the taxes. If we look at ways to make sure that we're getting efficiencies, that's more important than just saying: tax this; tax that; just go and spend. We need to look at what we're spending on, how much we're spending, ways to maximize it. Ways that we can maximize it is through consultation. Bill 6 is a great example of not enough consultation. We need to go out, and we need to be asking the farmers about Bill 6, same as we should be doing when we're going to make huge increases in taxes. We should be asking Albertans what's more important.

An Hon. Member: We just had an election.

Mr. Taylor: Albertans aren't getting the value for their money, and we can see that. Like you said, let's talk about the election. I think in three and a half years we'll see a new election, we'll see a new government.

An Hon. Member: You can think all you want.

Mr. Taylor: I'm quite sure. Instead of thinking, let's go to some certainty of what I believe here.

Anyway, thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. [some applause]

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Chair. Actually, I appreciate the cheers from the opposition. I am actually looking forward to discussing this in a rational way. I hadn't heard a lot of rationality, actually, from the other side this morning, so I'm happy to participate and bring some actual, real information to this Assembly.

I think what we're hearing this morning in this Chamber is a very interesting ideological discussion. On that side the ideology is that debt is the Satan. Debt is a four-letter word, but it has been proven throughout history, at least throughout economic history, that debt can be used as a very powerful means to improve the overall economy.

The name that's associated with that is Keynes. It's spelled K-e-y-n-e-s. Some people pronounce it incorrectly. Keynesian economics suggests that investing in our economy in a countercyclical way is the best way to deal with periods that we call depressions. In fact, the Great Depression was conquered by the application of Keynesian economics. The Nobel prize committee in economics has recognized this on at least five different occasions over the years up until the one given about three years ago. Countercyclical investment by taking on debt when the overall economy is in a depression is a proven way to deal with our problems, and that's what our government is doing.

Our government is investing in Albertans. Our government is making sure that we have schools today or tomorrow that our students need. If you listen to the members across the way, they would wait to build these schools until we were in surplus. That might not be for four years if the Minister of Finance is correct. We need those schools today.

I want to go back to some of the comments that were made by the previous speaker about – and I just couldn't believe these comments coming out that every jurisdiction that went into debt ended up in some sort of fascistic environment. I really think that was one of the most ridiculous comments that's ever been made in this Legislature. The previous Premier of this province, the leader of the third party in the early 1990s, basically decimated the province of Alberta. I lost a third of my colleagues in medicine to the depredations of that leader. My colleagues had to move to other provinces. The nurses that worked in the hospitals at that time that were shut down and who got laid off had to move to other provinces or to the United States, and they've never come back. It devastated this province, this mindless application of the cutbacks, and that's what the party across the way is suggesting. That's exactly what the party across the way is . . .

Dr. Starke: Madam Chair, a point of order.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, you have a point of order?

Point of Order Insulting Language

Dr. Starke: Madam Chair, we have a long-standing tradition in this House that we do not impugn the character of those that are not present. In addition, we have a long-standing tradition that we do not impugn the character of past leaders and past Premiers. We show them respect and honour. To use the term "mindless" to represent our past Premier, regardless of whether you agree or disagree with the past Premier, is the worst sense of disrespect. You can disagree, sir, but you cannot use terminology like this in this Chamber if you expect to have respect shown to you.

Mr. Mason: Madam Chair, if I can just respond to that, I want to correct one thing. It is not the leader of the third party but it is, in fact, former Premier Ralph Klein that is being referred to. That is not a rule. You may not refer to members by their name if they are a sitting member of the Assembly; otherwise, you can. There is not a rule that you cannot make comments on previous governments. If "mindless" gives offence, then I will on behalf of the member rephrase that to "incorrect policies" if that helps assuage the sense of the hon. member.

Dr. Starke: A point of clarification. I did not state the applicable standing order when I rose, and that was an error. It is 23(j), which is: "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." This was insulting, sir, to refer to a past Premier as "mindless." That is the worst form of insult.

Mr. Mason: I'm sorry, Madam Chair. I feel that I've dealt with that issue. If the hon. member wishes to continue, he can make those comments in his speech. But normally someone makes the point of order, somebody responds, and the chair deals with it. You don't get extra kicks at the can.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

I would just caution all hon. members that in speaking, we make an attempt to refer to policies rather than referring to individuals themselves. Just be a little more cautious as to your language.

We can proceed.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Chair. I certainly intended to refer . . . [interjections]

The Chair: The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has the floor.

Mr. Mason: I would advise the Opposition House Leader to get a grip on his members.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Chair, rising on the point of order – I'm not entirely sure what point of order it was – while I can appreciate that this side of the House is slightly concerned this morning, mildly heightened, what we didn't see was a point of order addressed. What I think was asked for was a withdrawing or an apology about the comments. The hon. member on the other side had that opportunity, and he chose not to. I think that would do well to lower the temperament in the House.

Mr. Mason: Madam Chair, I don't want to continue this. I had intended to indicate to the House that the comments on behalf of the member were withdrawn. Obviously, an error on my part not to include an apology for that as well. I hope that that will settle the matter and that we can get on with business.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.
Please continue, hon. member.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to continue these remarks. I was referring to the time in the mid-1990s as an example of what can happen when a government doesn't plan well when they introduce massive cuts. This affected me personally, it affected my friends, it affected the people that I had worked with, and I certainly have strong feelings. It is my strongly held opinion that the policies of the government of the day were misinformed.

I do want to get on to other examples, though, from my own experience of where government debt has been a very good thing. My father served for several years in the Royal Canadian Air Force overseas. He missed the death of his father, came back to a Canada that was recovering from the devastations of the Depression and the contributions to the war effort. My father was able to acquire a half section of land only because the VLA, the Veterans' Land Act, basically subsidized his taking on of debt to do that. I know that there would be many other members in this Assembly that have similar family associations, where starting a business or starting a farm or buying a new home requires taking on debt.

This is good debt. This is debt that we're all committed to repaying at some point and that is going to add to the economy. I think this is a very good example of how you can use debt, or at least the funds acquired from debt, to invest in our future. There were allusions to governments that got into debt that seemed to get into real trouble. What about the United States of America? They have a debt, as was noted, which needs the limit raised regularly, of several tens or hundreds of trillions of dollars. They are the most successful economy in the world bar none. Bar none. The most successful economy in the world functions on government debt to a large extent.

I want to turn now to climate change. I hear a lot of nonsense from the other side that this is going to be a tax on all Albertans and that we should put aside trying to deal with climate change. All Albertans are telling us that we need to deal with climate change. My constituents, up until this morning, are e-mailing me with congratulations on the Premier's action on this. This involves a carbon tax. This is a good tax. The carbon tax is going to be reinvested in our climate change strategy so that alternate energy can be supported and we can support individuals, communities, institutions in dealing with the predations of climate change. I would urge the members opposite to consider those sorts of things when they're decrying the use of tax policy to get the economy going.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you to the member across for his mindful comments. Actually, I do enjoy our exchanges. We both sit on the Public Accounts Committee together, and I'm going to give him a hard time right now. He does certainly contribute a lot in the Public Accounts Committee, but that's not going to spare him from right now.

Where to begin? Well, let's just start with Keynes because that was out there. The member has, I suppose, announced himself as an avowed disciple of Keynes. Well, better Keynes than Marx. If we're going to have economists as our role models, I suppose Keynes wouldn't be the worst one in the Chamber that we might aspire to follow, but if we do want to follow Keynes, let's look at what he would actually say. The member talked about countercyclical deficit spending. It's the theory that when the economy is down and government revenues are down, governments should be borrowing to, quote, prime the pump of economic spending, get the wheels turning. So Keynes said that in bad times you borrow money to fund the government in countercyclical spending, but in good times you pay down debt, and you cut back spending.

Well, Madam Chair, I'm not sure how that fits in the Alberta model. Alberta was borrowing money at $100 a barrel. Alberta was borrowing money during the biggest boom in the history of this province. We haven't balanced the budget in nearly a decade. At what time are we supposed to actually balance the budget? Are we supposed to balance the budget at $100 a barrel or at $40 a barrel? Are we supposed to balance the budget in recessions or in booms? In Alberta it's all deficits all the time. This is not countercyclical spending. This is borrowing for good times and borrowing in bad. In fact, we drew down our sustainability fund, now renamed the contingency account, from $7 billion to what is going to be virtually zero by the end of the fiscal year we're coming into now.

We have gone from zero dollars in debt to a debt that stands at about $15 billion today and that will hit $47 billion before the next election under the very best economic forecasts available. Now, the member is saying that we should be borrowing money in bad times. But what about the good times projected in their budget? Well, in years 4 and 5 of their budget they are predicting a 16 per cent increase in revenues. They're counting on some kind of economic superboom to get us out of this mess. They're projecting very good times coming up in years 4 and 5, but they still plan to borrow in those years. Every single year of this fiscal plan the government intends to borrow, including during the good times. Importantly, they have no plan to pay back a single dollar of that debt. They don't have a plan to pay back a single dollar. Their plan is to wait for us to come to government and pay it back for them.

As much fun as that might be, I believe it would take a Wildrose government a very long time to pay off the debt that this government is racking up in one short term. This is part of the problem we have with political economics, that you can have a fiscally irresponsible government for one term, and it can take decades to fix the mess. One term of the NDP in Ontario drove that province into the ground, and it took the Conservatives to pull it out of the ditch. It took two terms of Conservatives in that province to fix what the NDP did in one term.

We are still trying to pay off the debt from Pierre Trudeau. We're still trying to pay off the debt from Brian Mulroney. We ran a decade of surpluses, giving due credit to where it's deserved: the federal Liberal government of the day and later on the Conservatives for some time. In 10 years we paid off $150 billion of debt. But how much did we take on in the years before? This is the problem. NDP governments and leftist governments of other stripes take five steps back, and it takes Conservatives a long time just to go one step forward to fix their mess.

If the member was honestly talking about Keynes and countercyclical spending, well, at least he would be on some firm ground in terms of having some economic theory to back that up. But this is not countercyclical spending. This is just more spending all the time, with no plan to ever pay it back.

You know, now that we're talking about former Premiers – and I'm going to be careful with my comments. I will be careful with my comments. But now that we're talking about former Premiers, the hopeful tone about debt did bring back a few memories. A former Premier, who will not be named, talked about debt as hope, that the more debt we had, the more hope we had, that debt was a good thing, and that the more debt you have, the more prosperous you will be. Well, there might be a time and place for debt: national emergencies, wartime, major disasters, unforeseen economic downturns, when you balance your books in good times. Unfortunately, we've spent our rainy-day fund in good times. We haven't balanced the budget in a decade.

Now, we've been through much worse before, but the member is saying that we should be spending right now. A former Premier said that the more debt we had, the more hope we had, that debt drives the economy somehow. Well, let's look at other jurisdictions that have done this. Alberta since 2004 has been the engine of the Canadian economy. We have year after year had twice as much private-sector investment in our economy as Ontario and Quebec combined. That is an economic miracle. That wasn't debt driving investment into Alberta. It was the Alberta advantage. It was a business-friendly environment. It was low taxes. It was governments of a different stripe than us but conservative for at least a period that believed that you attract businesses not by taxing them and regulating them to death but by lowering their taxes and treating them all equally.

The member has said that the more debt we have, the better off we'll be. But let's look at what the other provinces have done. Ontario right now is about to go bust. Ontario has gone from the engine of the Canadian economy to a have-not basket case in the span of one decade.

Mr. Westhead: That's because of Harper.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Wow. The Member for Banff-Cochrane seems to think Ontario's debt is the fault of former Prime Minister Harper, speaking of former leaders. I'm surprised to learn that the current Member of Parliament for Calgary Heritage is responsible for the government of Ontario's finances.

This government is following the example of the government of Ontario. They're going to replace reliable forms of energy with windmills and sunflower seeds. The government is proposing to finance its very basic operations with debt. They are raising taxes at every corner. They are now imposing a backdoor provincial sales tax, an ND PST, which is a tax on everything. It's going to hammer every single Albertan in this province, every single small business. It's going to hammer the small drilling and service companies in my constituency.

They're following the examples of governments around this country that have choked themselves off through overspending and debt financing, believing that the answer to increased deficits is to continually increase taxes. But if you increase taxes and continue to increase spending, you're not going to fix your budget hole. You're just going to choke off the economy and keep the deficit in place. We are now, this year, facing the largest deficit in our history by far, a $9.7 billion deficit as defined by net change in financial assets. It is twice as large as the next-largest deficit run in 1992 by the government of that day. We can't continue to do this year in and year out.

Again I'll thank the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud for his comments. I promise to be a little more friendly when we're back in the Public Accounts Committee. But I wanted to remind him that as much of a fan of Keynes as he might be, I do not believe that Keynes would approve of the policies of this government and this budget.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to join in the festivities here with respect to this bill. Now, we've heard a lot today about history, both local history in the province of Alberta and history going back to the French Revolution. I think the best thing you could say about some of the things that we've heard is that it's revisionist history. I won't deal with the history lesson that we received from the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon other than to say that to encapsulate the French Revolution without talking about the failure to tax the aristocracy or the Weimar Republic without talking about an international, global depression or the role of inflation or to ignore all of those complex factors that made each situation unique is simply not a very credible argument to be made with respect to this budget.

Now, I want to say that it is worth looking, though, at some of the more recent history in the province of Alberta. I'm going to deal with the tenure of Mr. Klein as the Premier. I served with Mr. Klein. I knew him. I liked him. But at the same time I believe the policies of the government at that time were extremely damaging to the province in the long run and something we're still continuing to deal with. So I'd like to talk about that. I'll talk about it in terms of infrastructure because one of the things that happened during that period, quite apart from thousands and thousands of people losing their jobs in the health care sector, in education, and so on, and the impact that that had on the economy, was the failure to invest in infrastructure.

Now, to their credit, subsequent governments have realized the need to increase the investment in infrastructure to try and recover some of the infrastructure debt that was created. We did engage David Dodge, of course, with respect to this, to determine what exactly was the sustainable capacity that we had for spending on infrastructure. He made the case – and this is something I think is being completely ignored on the other side – that all governments and the private sector use debt all the time. It is a part of the machinery of any organization, that allows it to expand, to grow, and to make investments that will result in further growth. I think that this oversimplification of how governments budget is wrong.

Most families, for example, have significant debt, primarily through their mortgages. That's the normal way of financing a home. And, of course, we all accept that the debts incurred have to be repaid. That's not the question.

Let's take a look at the time when Ralph Klein was the mayor of Calgary. I served at that time on Edmonton city council, and we had two very different policies with respect to borrowing. In the Edmonton council we had inherited the policy that had been established by Mayor Laurence Decore, who went on to be the leader of the Liberal party in this place, and it was pay as you go for capital. In other words, you wouldn't borrow for capital. If you needed to build an overpass or pave a road, you had to save up the money first, and then, you know, you could build it. The result was that very little investment took place in Edmonton. At the same time Mr. Klein, who was the mayor of Calgary, was busy borrowing money for capital and making investments. What happened coming out of that? The economy of Calgary moved ahead. The investments were made that allowed the economy to grow whereas Edmonton constrained itself and fell behind.

That is, I think, an important question that people need to consider. How does investing and borrowing in infrastructure relate to future economic growth? This is something that Mr. Dodge talked about, and I think it's something that we need to bear in mind, that when you make strategic investments – and we're very much focused, by the way, in the capital plan on investments in infrastructure that have an economic return to the province or even to the government. So that is something we need to take into account.

You know what happened in Calgary? It had quite a significant debt, especially compared to Edmonton, but the economic growth that occurred there made the debt manageable because there was more activity taking place. This is something that I think bears some thought as we consider this budget.

I want to leave with another point. I feel that I am compelled to make this point to some members opposite because I have had meetings with a number of MLAs on both sides of the House, including the Official Opposition, and it's pretty clear that there are significant infrastructure needs that have been unmet so far in people's constituencies, including on the other side. I've had any number of opposition MLAs ask me to support capital spending in their constituencies – and good for them because that's their job – but the point I always leave them with is that, you know, you need to consider that when the budget comes up, if your constituency and your municipalities are going to have their needs met, we need to have the means to do that. You can't have it both ways, Madam Chair. You can't say, "Don't borrow any money," and say: "You know what? I need my highway. I need this. I need that." That is exactly what's happening over there. They all want spending in their constituency, but they don't want to borrow for it.

The question is, then: how are you going to build the infrastructure that's necessary? Well, you can adopt the method that we tried in the city of Edmonton, but as a matter of fact, I think hon. members need to recognize and they need to see that they are saying, "Do this," on one hand and, "Do that," on the other hand. There's a contradiction there. It's very convenient for the opposition to have that sort of: cut millions of dollars, cut billions of dollars, but don't lay off front-line staff; don't borrow any money, but, you know, build me my overpass. Madam Chair, that's a little bit hard to stomach. I regret having to point that out, but I think that it was an important point to make.

Madam Chair, just to conclude, this budget will stimulate the province's economy. This will prepare us for a return to prosperity. This will get us back to balance. This will protect the public services that all Albertans want, and I believe all members of this Assembly should support this budget.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud was talking about the need for some rationality, and I would like to, if I may, take a moment and correct the hon. member in his understanding of economic theory. Countercyclical borrowing is incumbent on some things, and one of those things, if you studied economics, would be that countercyclical borrowing is incumbent on the organization's ability to service and repay the debt. Point two is that the very economic theory quoted by the hon. member specifically states that countercyclical borrowing is for infrastructure, not for operational needs.

Furthermore, the hon. Government House Leader attempted to correct us over here because, as he points out correctly, we have infrastructure deficits within all of our ridings and we are asking for those infrastructure deficits to be handled. But then what he's asking us to do is to vote in favour of an overall budget that covers, yes, the infrastructure deficits that we all have in our ridings but also to borrow money for operational needs, also to bloat the size of an already bloated government, and we simply cannot do that. There are elements within the budget that are needed, desperately needed, by every community within this province, but you're asking for carte blanche, and quite frankly you're not going to get it. You're not going to get carte blanche from this side of the House.

A little more education, I believe, might be needed for the other side. We've heard the term "revenue neutrality." Well, as a student yet and a teacher – and as anyone who is a teacher in this room knows, you'll be a lifelong student if you're going to be a teacher – there is in the field of economics and business administration the term "revenue neutrality," and I would like to read to the House the definition of revenue neutrality. I'm very thankful that the hon. Minister of Finance is here since perhaps he could use this definition. I'm sure it would be useful.

To quote: taxing procedures that allow the government to still receive the same amount of money despite changing its tax laws; the government may lower taxes for one particular sector of its economy and raise taxes from another, but this allows the ultimate revenue that they receive to remain unchanged. That is the definition of revenue neutrality, and that is not what we have just seen. We have seen a government that is digging into the pockets of Albertans for $3 billion to continue to bloat the size of government and to continue to waste money and to continue to justify the borrowing for operational expenses because this government doesn't know how to save money.

There is one more definition that I would like to cover, and that is the definition of arrogance: it is an insulting way of thinking or behaving that comes from believing you're better or smarter or more important than other people. I would ask you to consider: are you smarter than the authors of the texts and the teachers of economics? Are you smarter and better than the authors of the texts and the teachers and MBAs or even your own grandparents and your parents?

I challenge every member in this House to seek the wisdom of our elders that have gone before us and those that are far wiser than any one of us in this room. You will learn from your grandparents this old adage: you have to live within your means. We've all heard that from our moms, our dads, our grandparents, our forefathers. You live within your means, and when household revenue is down, spend less. It's just that simple. When dad loses his job or mom loses her job, you do not go the bank and borrow more money. You tighten your belt. You slow down. You get rid of that extra car.

There are any number of people in this room who are old enough now and have gone through the economic ups and downs that we all experience throughout this world in just plain living. I don't know anybody who went through the '80s and didn't learn that when you lose your job, you spend less. When your income is down, you tighten your belt and spend less. You find ways to spend less. You don't go out for dinner. You start eating beans and rice. You tighten your belt. This government doesn't understand the basic economics that every mom and dad down through time knows: when revenues are down, spend less.

Countercyclical borrowing is incumbent on the organization's ability to service and repay the debt. All we've seen in this budget is to spend more, tax more, spend more, tax more, spend more, tax more, waiting for – what? – some mystical day when the King of Saudi Arabia is going to drop off a cheque to you? It isn't going to happen. The price of oil is going down, so revenues are down. Spend less. Look for ways to save. Instead, you're bloating government on the backs of Albertans, and your days are going to be numbered because Albertans are not going to put up with it. You're going to be a one-term government that's going to sink our province so deep in debt that you will be remembered for a very, very long time.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. leader of the third party, did you wish to speak to the bill?

Mr. McIver: Yes, please. Thank you, Madam Chair. I won't be too long, you'll be happy to know, because I've been on my feet a couple of times, but there are a few things that have to be said. This budget is, unfortunately, full of things that are not good for Alberta, and therein lies the problem. I talked at some length last night about the debt and that there's no reasonable plan to pay it off. You can't pay off a year's income debt with one week's pay. We talked about that, and I think most Albertans understand that implicitly and don't need me to go on at length about that again.

Among the other things that are of concern is the lack of cost control. What the government is right about, Madam Chair, is that Albertans love their services. What the government is wrong about is that they're going to put themselves in a position where they won't be able to provide those services because there won't be any money left. If you want to keep providing those services you're so fond of, you need to make sure there's some money left five years from now to pay for them. Some of us and some of you have kids and grandkids who are going to need those services later. Some of us have parents that are going to need those services either now or later, and some of us need those services now. These are things that this budget does not weigh or consider, unfortunately.

I've got to actually correct some of the revisionist history attempted to be created by the Transportation minister although I'm sure his intentions were nothing less than honourable, ever. But, you know, he spent some time on Edmonton city council, and I spent some time along with the Finance minister on Calgary city council. The Finance minister is a fine man, but we disagreed quite a bit then. He's a good human being. We just don't always see the world the same way. But he might even agree, because we were there for nine of the same years.

Unlike what the Transportation minister said, that the debt was quite manageable and that there weren't any issues after Mayor Klein was there, the debt was actually fairly big in the city of Calgary. The Olympics were coming. The city spent pretty heavily to build an LRT system, which still serves the city very well to this day. I'm not saying that it was a bad expenditure. Rather, we're talking about the level of debt. The level of debt was such that the city built very little infrastructure for the next decade after that. The next mayor after Mayor Klein, Mayor Al Duerr, was, in my view, unfairly criticized in many circles for not building enough infrastructure, because what a lot of people didn't really realize was that he was burdened with paying back a very heavy debt load, that had to be done. In my view, that mayor was unfairly put upon because he had to do what had to be done.

We're trying to avoid a future Premier and a future government having to stop building the things that Albertans need because we don't want the debt load to become so burdensome and so heavy that you have to stop providing the things that Albertans need just to pay for the poor planning that's gone on in the past. I hope I have, without taking too long, corrected some of the incorrect revision of history that went on here this morning. I also heard the minister say that you can't have it both ways, and I agree with that. If you borrow the money, you've got to pay it back. You've got to have a plan.

And you have to keep building infrastructure. Now, where I might disagree somewhat with the Official Opposition: I think borrowing is okay if you're spending the money on the right thing capitalwise and you have a plan to pay it back in a reasonable amount of time. I've heard it said: save the money. But the fact is that you can't teach the kids under a tree, and you can't do surgery in the local park.

An Hon. Member: Well, you can.

Mr. McIver: Or it's not recommended. I suppose you can do both of those things, but it's not a good idea in February. It's not a good idea in February.

The fact is that you have to keep building and you have to keep providing those services. Sometimes you have to borrow, and that's okay if you have a reasonable plan to pay it back. Telling people that you're going to save the money: nobody wants their six-year-old to wait to start grade 1 till they're 16 because we wanted to pay cash for the school. You can't do that. But you need to have a plan to pay it back.

The other thing that I'll take issue with is a return to prosperity. You know what? For decades before May 5 we mostly had prosperity, and we want prosperity to continue for this province. The hon. minister made it sound like Alberta hasn't had prosperity. Alberta has had the best economy in Canada and probably in North America for decades. Again, in fairness to my colleagues, what we're not blaming you for is the low oil price – I hope we never have, and I hope we never do – but you're doing just about everything you can to not help with the low oil price, and that's the concern.

I will try to start closing with the one advice – with further advice, not the one advice; I've already given some advice. The further advice I will give to the government is to listen to Albertans. Folks, it's not easy. We were in government, and we had to remind ourselves now and again how to listen to Albertans. Here's the tough thing about it when you're in government. Albertans will talk to you, and what's really easy is to listen to those that agree with you. What's a little more difficult and, I think, even more important is to actually listen to and hear those that don't agree with you. That's where you can actually learn something. With all due respect, Madam Chair, that's a lesson that I don't think the government has learned yet. You've been here more than six months now; it's kind of time.

Again, there'll be lots of people talking to you and agreeing with you, and it's all nice to hear the attaboys and attagirls, but you also have to hear the kicks in the pants: "Why did you do that? You're doing this wrong. Why are you not protecting my job? Why are you borrowing so much money? We won't be able to have schools 10 years from now. Why are you spending so much that we won't be able to pay the taxes? Why are you putting a carbon tax in place that'll make everything else less affordable? Why are you raising the minimum wage and taking away the very job that I have rather than helping the job? Actually, that job will disappear." These are the things that people will say to you that you don't want to hear, but it's so very important that you listen to them.

Because I don't believe . . . [interjections]. Madam Chair, I can tell from the cheap seats that that lesson – the hon. member just made my point. He just made my point. I've always found that even when people disagree with me tremendously, that's when I learn the most. I would respectfully submit to you and to the government that that's a lesson they have yet to learn, and at some point Albertans will punish them for that if they don't learn it.

Madam Chair, that's why I won't be supporting this budget. It's not good for Alberta. It will not bring us a return to prosperity. It will not create jobs; it'll actually kill jobs. It will not make it more affordable, and there's a big risk that unless the government changes course, five years from now Alberta will be in such a big hole that even – and I can't imagine it – if this group is still in government, they will have to do draconian spending cuts because the banks at some point will say no. That will indeed be a sad day. There's still time for the government to correct its course, and our advice is that the government does just that.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there any other hon. members wishing to speak?
The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you. We as a province are dealing with a low barrel price, which has had an effect on many Albertans across many sectors. Massive cuts are not the solution. You don't lay off more workers in hopes of creating more jobs. I can say with confidence based on the conversations I've had with my constituents from Bowness, Cougar Ridge, West Springs, Valley Ridge, Patterson Heights, Greenwood Village that they understand that we have a debt in this province already and . . . [interjection] I'm not only talking about financial but in terms of infrastructure, social programming, schools. Cuts to these sectors will only hit Albertans harder during these tough economic times. Our constituents, like mine in Valley Ridge, need schools, or constituents like mine in Bowness who need access to DRP. We need transportation investments like investments in the Calgary ring road. This is not the time for massive cuts.

We can't state that we aren't listening to Albertans when our business leaders and job creators are praising this carbon tax. We are being praised in this province as leaders when it comes to our climate policy, which was clearly achieved by a collaborative effort between government, business, and Albertans.

This bill makes an investment in Albertans, and that's why I am standing here and supporting it. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak?

If not, then we will call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the clauses of Bill 9 were agreed to]

[The clauses of Bill 9 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Mr. Mason: Madam Chair, I would move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Connolly: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 9.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. That does explain some historical views.

I would request unanimous consent of the Assembly that notwithstanding Standing Order 64(2) the House should proceed immediately into third reading of Bill 9.

Mr. Mason: I have a further request, Madam Speaker, that any further divisions on Bill 9 should have the bells shortened to one minute.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading Bill 9 Appropriation Act, 2015

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, I want to indicate to the House on behalf of the provincial Finance minister and President of Treasury Board that the Appropriation Act, 2015, lays out our fiscal priorities and our plan to stabilize core services, show a path to a balanced budget, and create jobs to grow and diversify the economy. I want to say that it deals with the priorities that Albertans told us, that it supports families at a time when they need that the most, it sets out a plan that we need now to ensure our province gets back to the path of prosperity for the future. I would ask all members of the House to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak on Bill 9, the Appropriation Act, 2015, or, for Albertans watching, the Alberta budget. It certainly took a long time to get here, and frankly we're very disappointed. Before Christmas, especially, we thought we would see something exciting, but it's not. I will say to the hon. Minister of Finance – hopefully, he's watching – that this is an issue of timing and good management, and it's not just an issue of borrowing, borrowing, borrowing and spending, spending, spending.

The problem the Official Opposition have is that there's no plan in place that's realistic. The numbers are outrageously highly forecasted for revenues. In fact, what we've seen is that even the revenue projections over the last seven months are so far out of whack that there's no possible way, in reality, that this government is going to reach any of those revenue figures and that, certainly, the spending will far exceed any ability to pay it back in the near future. The difficulty with that is that when you're going in the wrong direction, you take a lot longer to get back to where you need to be.

Right now the challenging thing for Albertans is jobs. We're losing more than 1,500 jobs a week for Albertans, who are looking and wondering what's going on because their government is not responding to them. This is a situation that we haven't seen in decades, frankly. I remember being in Fort McMurray during the '80s, being in Alberta during the '80s, and I can assure you that it was not a pleasant time. It was a very bad time, and people were lined up, just like they are now, for the food banks. Food bank demand has gone up over 26 per cent just in the last short period of time, and we believe it's directly as a response to what's happening in the economy. The government is not actually taking any steps to improve the economy or to protect jobs.

Now, they talk about what they're doing to possibly stimulate the economy with a $5,000 hiring tax credit. But let's be clear. That tax credit is not going to be seen by businesses for at least 16 months. You know, it's not going to stop anybody from being laid off. In fact, it's not going to create any new jobs for at least 16 months. Frankly, as an owner of more than 15 businesses, successful businesses, I might add, it would not encourage me to hire any employees at all. I can't imagine that anybody would be encouraged to hire any employees at all for a $5,000 temporary situation, especially when you consider that $5,000, Madam Speaker, as you know, when you're talking about an average income in Alberta is one month's salary. So what do they do? Hire them for a month and then lay them off? I'm certainly hoping that there are more details on the plan by the government that would ensure that they'll be good-paying jobs that people will be interested in hiring for under this program. I just don't see it. It's not worked in other jurisdictions, it hasn't worked for the federal government in the past, and I don't see it working, at least at this particular time.

We know as well that there are at least 100,000 Albertans out of work. That's a lot of people. That's a lot of people from the background of the highest per capita income in the country. That's a lot of jobs. Also, those highest income per capita jobs paid more tax than anybody else in the country per capita as well. It was a system that worked very well. Those jobs, that have just been lost in the last few months – 65,000 since, in essence, this government came into power – are a lot of jobs, and the government has done absolutely zero to stop the flow of jobs. Absolutely zero. I don't hear anything from the other side on how they propose to do anything different.

Now, the thing to recognize, too, is that 40,000 of those jobs are directly tied to the energy sector. Again, $40 a barrel: everybody keeps talking about how we have to blame the $40 a barrel. Well, I remember when it was $8 a barrel. I remember when it was $12. I remember when it was $15, when Syncrude Canada, one of the top employers in Canada, said: if it reaches $15 a barrel, we are going to be so happy. Well, it's at $40 a barrel. Then during the '90s, for a 10-year period, guess what the average price of a barrel of oil was in Alberta? Forty dollars a barrel. That's right, $40 a barrel. Very similar to today. The economics have not changed very much in relation to that. In fact, we see some of the indicators, the core indicators and key indicators, that are very, very similar to that.

We did have somebody talk about mindless things earlier, and I don't want to doctor anything up about the particular thing that that gentleman brought forward, but I would like to turn ourselves back to it and talk about exactly what happened during the '90s with Ralph Klein. I think he was one of the best Premiers we've ever seen in this province, and I agree with my friend the leader of the PC Party in relation to that because, you know, he was able to make serious decisions. One of the serious decisions he made was to cut. Now, we've all heard on this side that we would like to find efficiencies of about 2 per cent. Two per cent. Ralph Klein in the '90s cut 20 per cent, 10 times what we proposed in the election. Twenty per cent.

What did that do? Let's talk about what that did to the economy in Alberta. Well, the first thing it did is that it brought a lot of private capital into Alberta. Even though private capital seems to be two dirty words to this government, it's not. They brought $80 billion in private capital into Alberta during that period of time, a 10-year period under Ralph Klein. Eighty billion dollars in private capital. Do you know how much went into Ontario and Quebec? I know that you, Madam Speaker, know that. It was about $72 billion.

More money came into Alberta during that time period because of the efficiencies that Ralph Klein brought forward and the good tax legislation he brought forward, lowering corporate taxes, lowering personal taxes, having a tax structure that worked well for people and that paid more and collected more income tax than any other province in Canada per capita as individuals. We saw more private capital come into Alberta during that period of time than went into our two largest economies, Ontario and Quebec. That speaks volumes about a person and a Premier that did a great job, a tough job for the province when it was necessary. Certainly, he became one of the most popular leaders of all time, not just in Alberta but in Canada.

Now, instead of talking about the best ways to defend and promote our energy sector, what I've seen clearly is that this government, the NDP has been a tireless crusader against our oil and gas producers, not just in the last, short period of time but overall, generally. I know that I was in Ottawa at the time when the NDP, the national party, which is the same party as this, though, a different division but certainly the same party, went to Washington, DC, not to encourage a pipeline, not to encourage oil, not to encourage Alberta jobs. They picketed. They went outside Washington and said: stop oil sands. They called it tar sands, but I have news for you. They don't produce tar; they produce oil from that product, so it's oil sands. The NDP went over there. In fact, I've seen, you know, some pictures of the Premier with "stop oil sands" signs. Now, that's not what you do to protect an industry. That's not what you do to protect jobs.

You know, you may be smirking over on the other side; some of you are. You have guaranteed jobs for four years, but Albertans don't have that luxury. They don't have a bureaucracy behind them that will provide them with all this information and a steady paycheck that goes into their bank account every month. They're even wondering if they're going to have a job tomorrow. A hundred thousand Albertans are out of work. Do you care? You're not doing anything for them. You're not doing anything for those Albertans that have lost their jobs, and you're not doing anything for the 1,500 Albertans that are losing their jobs every single week.

Now, you say, "Oh, we're doing so much; we're doing so much," but the truth is that you're doing nothing positive. In fact, the instability you're bringing into the economy – I wish there was one businessperson on the other side that knew what stability means to businesses. Stability means jobs. It means investment. It means confidence in the future. You're not adding that by taxing, taxing, and more taxing.

You talk about promises that you made. Well, I never heard any promise about a carbon tax. It's in essence a PST because it's not revenue neutral. In fact, even your plan suggests that nothing more than 10 per cent will go back to low- or middle-income Albertans. Ten per cent. That's not revenue neutral, and it's not honest. If you were honest, you would've gone to Albertans and said: "Listen. We're bringing in a $3 billion carbon tax. You need to know that before you vote for us because that carbon tax is on top of the $1.5 billion in additional taxes that we're going to bring in against you if you do elect us."

Now, that's $4.5 billion in new taxes that this government has brought in in a very short period of time. Who's going to pay that? Corporations? That's laughable. Corporations don't pay taxes. Corporations increase their prices to consumers and pay their employees less money because they can't afford it. You laugh again, but that's how it works, folks. They pay taxes that flow on to consumers, that flow on to their employees because it's not about . . . [interjections] It's not about that. Investment is down. Companies are fleeing Alberta.

And there's more laughter on the other side. I really wish that Albertans would come to this place and have an opportunity to explain how they feel. Farmers, businesspeople, they want to tell you. You can look at Facebook posts that have over half a million hits. Why don't you come to my Facebook and take a look? You can share my Facebook posts to your friends and see how it is.

Albertans are waking up. They are waking up and realizing what's going on, and that's why they're sharing what they are. That's why they're saying the things that they are, about how they don't like what you have done. They don't like that you lied and then brought forward a tax, that you deceived them on the basis of your vote. That's not what Albertans want. They expect their government to come in, tell them what they're going to do, and do that. Now, you've done that, but you've done a lot more than that, and what you're doing is damaging the economy. When people have to look at their cheque and what's coming in, they recognize that when it doesn't come in anymore, they have to adjust things, and they are seriously worried about paying their bills. Those 100,000 Albertans are very worried.

Truthfully – truthfully – there are 100,000 beds in the surrounding area of Fort McMurray. Those beds are camp beds. The oil sands plants in this province pay about $185 a day, per person, to stay in those camps – that's right – $185 a day to stay in those camps. Well, the camps are empty, and those camps did not hold Albertans. Some of them did, but very few. Most of them held other Canadians, and those Canadians were making between $150,000 and $250,000 a year. They're gone. They're gone. So those 65,000 jobs that have just been lost since the NDP came into power are a small, small portion of the real jobs that are lost in Alberta.

Those 100,000 jobs, the Albertans that are no longer here in Alberta: they say that those are just people collecting unemployment insurance. How about those people that have severance payments? How about those people that haven't started collecting unemployment insurance or have decided to leave the province? The number is much, much higher, and as I say, the government is doing nothing. It seems they don't want to do anything.

The Calgary Herald this week told the story of Catherine Appler, a Calgarian. She has worked in the oil and gas sector for some time.

She's aware of how it works, and she had a one-year contract. Well, she received the call from human resources: you're let go. Now, she accepted her two-week notice, understanding that this is what happens in the oil and gas industry, but now she's been out of work for nine months. I will tell you that things do not look any better.

I have a good friend by the name of Bob. He worked up in the oil sands, flew in and out from Calgary. He's been unemployed for six months now. He's been trying to sell his house in Calgary. Housing prices went down 20 per cent just in the last six months. He can't sell it anymore, but he can't afford to keep it.

Now, I remember being a lawyer in Fort McMurray doing foreclosure work for banks right after the '80s. Yeah. Nasty guy. Well, I'll tell you this: I have never felt worse in my life than watching what happens when people lose their homes. It was disgusting, it was depressing, and it was real, and it is real today. I talked to a good friend of mine in Fort McMurray that's been selling real estate up there for 30 years. That friend of mine told me that he's seen more keys given back in the last six months than he's seen in the previous 30 years. More in the last six months than in the previous 30 years: is that a laughing matter? I'm not laughing.

I remember seeing these people's houses taken and their lives destroyed. Everything that they've worked for for 20 years was gone through bad government policy. That was the national energy program, and I promise you that every business in Fort McMurray – every single one – went bankrupt except a couple because of bad government policy. Nobody cared. I'm hoping the government will care. This government should care because these are people that are actually counting on this government to make a positive difference, and we don't see that positive difference happening.

There are thousands upon thousands of stories just like this, just like Bob's, just like Catherine's, thousands upon thousands. Until you individualize them, you don't realize how many people are destitute, but they are.

What are you doing about it? "Let's bring in a $3 billion carbon tax." Who do you think pays that carbon tax? I do. You do. But all the people that can't afford it do, too, because you're increasing the price of gasoline. You're increasing everything that goes into a petroleum product. You're increasing all the costs of the products people buy. You don't think so, but this is a PST. It's a provincial sales tax. You can call it whatever you want, but it's a provincial sales tax. It's a nonneutral carbon tax. The people that pay it – of course, the oil sands companies are happy. They thought they were going to be shut down or at least devastated.

Let's face it. Your own Premier – your own Premier – stood up with a picket sign saying: stop the oil sands. Do you think I'm going to believe now that she's had a call to the altar and she's going to turn around? This is just the way to do it. I've got pictures. I can show you. I've got one for you, too. This is a Premier that went against our oil companies, and now the oil companies were very nervous. I know that because I know all of those people, very, very many of them. I've lived in Fort McMurray my entire life, and I've dealt with the oil companies for a long time, but I don't work for oil companies. I work for Albertans.

If I was in big oil, I'd be pretty happy right now, too. You know why? Because the NDP government passed on all of the cost to consumers, to Albertans, every single cost to Albertans.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Jean: They should be ashamed of themselves, not only for coming out with one story during the election and doing something else. What's happening in three weeks from now or three months from now? What's the NDP government going to bring in next?

What new taxes are you going to bring in next to destroy the economy and the quality of life of Albertans?

An Hon. Member: Untrustworthy.

Mr. Jean: Totally untrustworthy. It doesn't matter because we are, unfortunately, stuck with these people for a while.

I think the Albertans that voted for you are feeling a lot of remorse. They are, and you hear it, too, because even though you may not believe that we can hear it, we see it. We see it on everybody behind the front row, everyone. You're worried, especially in rural Alberta right now. You should be worried. People are very upset. In my 11 years in politics I've never seen people this upset. I've never had a Facebook post that's gone to 500,000. Never. I am thinking that there are going to be some very angry people. I'm hoping that everything stays calm and we have the ability to have discourse. That's what I've encouraged all people to do because this is about talking. This is about persuading the government that they're headed in the wrong direction.

I only say that because, you know, when you start on a path, Madam Speaker, as you know, when you start on a road trip and you look at a map and you go down that road, if you're going in the wrong direction, it's going to take a lot longer to get back to go to the right place. It's going to take a lot longer to get back to where we need to go, which is, frankly, to give Albertans a good return on investment for their tax dollars. They work hard.

I'll tell you that in my riding they work very hard. I invite you all to come up there and see how people work in Fort McMurray, how they're away from their families for 14 hours a day – 14 hours a day – how they go back and forth on a road and then work very hard and come home and don't even see their kids before they go to bed because they're trying to create a better life. Well, those people are losing their jobs. It's not just about month-to-month anymore. Now it's about digging into savings, about losing the house, about losing the car, about having no RSPs for retirement, about having to extend your work life. It's not 55 or 60 or 65.

People have to work longer now because of your actions, because of your actions to create new taxes and to penalize Albertans when they're already down. When there are thousands of jobs that have been shed, what do you do? You penalize them. You kick them when they're down with another $3 billion in additional taxes. Shocking. It doesn't matter. You don't seem to care, but I'll tell you that there are accountants in Alberta that have been laid off. There are a lot of engineers that have been laid off. There are truck drivers. I know that. Two of my sons have class 1 drivers' licences. Neither one right now drives. They have to do what they can to get jobs. Neither one is doing what they want to do because they're taking whatever jobs they can.

It's very common. My nephews own companies up in the Fort McMurray area. They're aboriginals. They have very successful companies. They're still doing fairly well, but most companies in that area are not. In fact, a lot of companies – look at Calfrac. I was driving down highway 2 a few days ago, and I saw the Calfrac yard. It's so full of sump trucks that they have no more room for sump trucks in their yard.

An Hon. Member: We need a sump truck for this speech.

Mr. Jean: You know, it's a laughing matter to some people. I hear the member on the other side. He should be ashamed of himself. While we're talking about people losing their jobs, he's talking about a sump truck needed here because of my speech. [interjections] Well, I can assure you that I listened to that, and I think that Albertans are listening to the trivial way that you deal with this speech and how important it is that they've lost their jobs – 100,000 people. You've got your job permanently. [interjections] Yeah, for four years you do. I promise you that we will do everything we can and I promise Albertans that we will do everything we can to make sure this NDP government has one time.

It's for Albertans that I stand up today. It's for Albertans that Wildrose stands up every single day in this place and fights for their jobs, fights for their quality of life, fights for a different idea than this government has brought in. This government is already taking the most inefficient government in Canada and making it bigger. They're bringing in a carbon tax that, frankly, does nothing for carbon. It doesn't lower GHGs one iota. In fact, it's going to be about 30 megatonnes more than it currently is under their own plan. I've got it. I think it's on page 9 of your report. It shows that the megatonnes are not going down; they're going up.

So what are you doing with this money? Well, it's a slush fund, right? It's a slush fund to do all your pet projects, to try to get re-elected, to do all those things that you talk about doing in the best interests of Albertans. Well, who's going to pay it? Albertans pay it, and they pay it on the backs of jobs because there won't be jobs here. The jobs will be gone.

Albertans have never looked, I don't believe, to Alberta, the government, for handouts. I don't think that that's what they want. What they do want from their government is for their government to have their backs and not work against them, to not penalize them when they're down, to not kick them when they're in the penalty box. That's what this carbon tax is doing. That's what this budget is doing. It's kicking them while they're down.

They're looking for a government whose everyday focus is on their jobs, on their quality of life, and on our economy. Instead what we have seen from this budget is a dangerous and ideological agenda. It matches the rest of the agenda the NDP have brought in here and right across the country in previous governments, an agenda that seeks to interfere tremendously with the free market that we do have. It's not in the best interests of Albertans. This government is instinctively suspicious about businesses and believes, I would suggest, that businesses are not good things. Well, we believe differently here on the Wildrose side. We believe that jobs are created by businesses, not government.

Now, this government believes that there is no shortage of regulations or laws or new red tape that can't fix a problem. We disagree. Sometimes simpler is better. Sometimes smaller government is better. Sometimes bureaucracy and managing managers that manage other managers that manage managers to manage are not really a good thing. Smaller governments can be effective. We know that because every government in Canada is smaller and, in fact, has better results.

If you look at any organization that does matrixes and does tests on these types of results, you'll find that Alberta is in the middle or at the bottom of the pack on just about every single matrix, yet we're the most expensive, $2,000 more expensive than British Columbia, without infrastructure. Let's take infrastructure out of it. Without infrastructure, before this budget and before the carbon tax we cost $2,000 more for every man, woman, and child in Alberta than British Columbia, which has a very similar population; $2,000 more for the same services, the same constitutional obligations.

Why? I'll tell you why: because the government is inefficient with what it does, and the government is too big. That's why we stand up for the people of Alberta. That's why we do it, because we believe, based upon objective evidence right across the country, that you, the NDP, could do a better job governing this province and governing the bureaucracy. You could do so through attrition. You could do so by freezing wages. You're not even prepared to do that. In fact, you gave civil servants a 7 or 8 per cent raise this summer.

When people are being laid off, you give civil servants a raise. The people that are paying their bills are the taxpayers of the province, and they're losing jobs, yet you give a raise.

Have you even thought about freezing wages? Have you even thought about pulling back some of those bonuses and those special privileges and perks for these bureaucrats that work for the people of Alberta that are losing their jobs? Have you even thought about that? Has anybody come forward with any proposals to be more efficient in your government, in your departments? Not one. Not one single minister has said that. Are you telling me that it's already running as effectively as it possibly can? More importantly, are you telling Albertans that? Because that's what you're saying: "Albertans, even though you're losing jobs, we want to give bureaucrats a raise. We want to give them more perks, and in fact we're going to hire 1,600 new middle managers." That's what you did just in the last few months.

Did you announce that in your budget? No, you did not. Did you announce it in your campaign? No, you did not. All of these little sneaky things you're bringing out now when you have a majority are things that you never said you would do. There is no authority to do so, but certainly it appears that you're going to push it through as quickly as possible, and that is not in the best interest of Albertans.

Now, I could speak a long time on this because I feel very passionate about it, and I know that the Government House Leader on the other side wants me to. I know he's very excited about my speech, but I'll try to wrap it up as quickly as I possibly can. Maybe we can have an opportunity to speak outside afterwards, and I can persuade you of some of my great policy ideas.

We do believe that every Albertan must be treated fairly. Everyone must play by the same rules. That means stop giving corporate grants and handouts. Stop being friends to the corporations here. We don't want to see more corporate handouts. If they can't operate without government handouts, they shouldn't be in business. We believe that stability in our two most important job sectors, energy and agriculture, are very important because they employ the most Albertans. In the 110-year history of Alberta it is these principles that have made Alberta great. It's these principles and the people that have made Alberta the best place to live and work and raise a family, but ever since the NDP took office, they have gone against every one of the key principles that Albertans stand for.

They have brought in policies that have had a direct negative impact on our economy, especially our energy sector, and now they are attacking farms. Do you know that we have more small farms here than anywhere else in the country? I think 47,000 small farms. And you're attacking those farms, which is a way of life.

There's absolutely nothing positive in this budget for Alberta businesses, which, we believe on this side, create jobs. The NDP remains stubbornly committed to a dramatic 50 per cent increase in the minimum wage. We believe that this will reduce the number of jobs and that it will reduce the number of hours. I've owned a Quiznos franchise. I can tell you that it will reduce the number of people because they can't afford it. Those businesses operate on very tight margins, and when you increase business taxes, increase minimum wages, all of these things at once – I'm not saying necessarily that these things can't be done appropriately over time, but you just keep kicking. They're down on the ground, and you just keep kicking. They think that you're going to walk away, and you turn around and slap them and kick them with a carbon tax. This is not what to do to the people who are our bosses. These people pay us to give them the best government possible, and you're not doing that.

There will be higher costs for everyone. There will be lower rates of employment and fewer hours for employees. Many small businesses are worried that they will have to close shop, but the NDP remains stubbornly committed to it. This goes right in the face of every empirical study and any economist. All of them say the same thing: don't do them together because it is a stability issue. It is about piling on and piling on and piling on at a time and place when they can't afford it.

If you do anything, I would ask the NDP government to slow down. Take some time. Maybe, just maybe, what you might want to do is consult with farmers before you put the bill in place. You know: we're going to have consultations. Well, you've already introduced the bill. How are you going to consult on a bill that you've already put forward? A postconsultation? Seriously, folks. What are farmers telling us? They're telling us that they're travelling six to eight hours to get to some of these meetings, consultations, postconsultations, but they're all fully booked except for, I think, a couple that just came online, and even those, my understanding is, are fully booked. Doesn't that send a message to you that maybe, just maybe, you should slow down and listen to the people that pay your salaries?

You know, I heard a great question from the PCs earlier this month, and it was in relation to the minimum wage. Now, with tax consequences we have the second-highest minimum wage in Canada because we treat people that are more vulnerable better than any other province in Canada. We had the second-highest minimum wage already. Now, you know, you have to wonder, when you do that, what the implications are going to be to these people, and I'm very concerned about them because these are the most vulnerable in our society.

One of the things that sort of shocked me about this was when the NDP came forward and promised that business taxes would fix things. You know, of course, I think some Albertans were hoping it would fix things and give them some more revenues. They promised, in fact, that it would bring in about $805 million this year and $2.6 billion over the next three years. Well, instead it was only $250 million a year. All your calculations are off. That's what brings us the largest fear factor in this. When you bring forward these numbers on expenses, well, those are real. But your revenue projections are so far-fetched that they're in fantasyland. Even this particular one, you know, $2.6 billion: it's only going to be $750 million. We see it clearly now, and you do, too.

You need to readjust your figures. What we'd ask you to do is to readjust how many cheques you send out the door to bureaucrats, how many slush funds you create for your own desires and your own political ambitions. Stop. Think about what you're doing. Think about all the Albertans that are unemployed and create a program that actually keeps Albertans employed, not something that's going to happen 18 months or 16 months from today. Employers aren't going to rehire people for a $5,000 tax credit. Be serious, folks.

There is a $1.5 billion hole in revenue that the NDP promised just from these tax increases. It's just a testament to the fact that you cannot tax your way into prosperity. You cannot tax away incentive and expect your economy to grow. You've all heard it. I'm sure you have because I hear it. The Wildrose hears it. That is: businesses are leaving Alberta. They are going to Saskatchewan, they are going to British Columbia, they're going to Texas, they're going to Louisiana, they're going to South Africa, to Brazil. They are because of your tax rates, because of the instability you're bringing into the economy, because of the lack of clarity in your bills or any backup to your numbers.

By the way, the projected 27,000 jobs that the NDP say their policy is supposed to create is less than a quarter, 25 per cent, of the people who have already lost their jobs over the last year, and it's not even going to come into effect for another 16 months, 25 per cent of the people that have lost their jobs just since you've been in power. What are you going to do about those people? Nothing, because we've seen nothing. Your legislation is fixated on an ideological bent instead of worrying about the people that are losing their jobs, about making sure corporations can hire new people or at least sustain the people they have.

What are you doing? You're increasing the cost of government. You're increasing the cost to people that pay for that government, because they do pay for the government. They pay for your wage, they pay for mine, they are my boss, and we have an obligation to do what's in their best interest.

I am very worried about the energy sector only because of how many jobs it creates, because our obligation is to create jobs and to keep Albertans employed so they can have this great quality of life, so they can take those trips and have those music lessons and dance lessons and send their kids to the best schools and do whatever they would like to do with their family, to have choice. That is something we have here in Alberta that other places don't have: choice. Choice to do what we want with our money. Choice to go where we want to go, to educate our children, to farm how we want to within certain limits. We have choice, and the NDP are taking away that choice. Why? Because when people go into their pockets, they come up with nothing because the NDP government is not allowing them to keep money to spend how they want.

EnCana said as much earlier this year. In fact, this month they announced that they were moving money and jobs away from Alberta. Guess where they're going? Texas. They're going to Texas. For those whose livelihoods depend on the viability of the energy sector, hoping for a fair hearing, they're out of luck. The Finance minister, the Premier, all of the NDP caucus have made it clear. The only way that royalties are going is up. They say that they support pipelines, yet they don't support pipelines. They say that they support the oil industry, yet there are clear signals that they don't. They are simply spending too much money, and we'll have to pay it back. We will have to pay it back.

We've asked for a spending freeze. We've asked for a freeze on wages. We're asking just to calm down on your ideological agenda just to make sure we can keep as many Albertans employed as possible without borrowing too much money. I don't think that's too much to ask, just to step back, take a breath of fresh air, think about what you're doing, and watch the statistics, watch what's taking place. The idea that Albertans should have to pay more taxes and pay more for their power bills, pay more for their oil and gas, pay more for all the products they use, whether it be a phone or BlackBerry or whatever – they will be paying more. You have control of your policies. Please take a breath. Please step back. Please keep Albertans employed.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak on Bill 9. I'll be as brief as I can with the time being as it is. Three goals, it seems to me, are forefront in this bill, the appropriations bill: number one, make sure that we're spending our money wisely where it is; number two, stimulate the economy while protecting jobs; and three, shift from a heavy overdependence on oil and gas revenue to an alternate economy.

With respect to ensuring that we review existing expenditures, I think there's no question, having worked in the health system for as many years as I have, that there are significant inefficiencies, and I was disappointed to see that there wasn't any evidence after six months that we were looking at some significant changes in efficiencies in the health system. We are indeed racking up a significant amount of debt, some of which is essential to deal with the current reality of low oil prices, but we cannot push this substantial debt onto the next generation. We have to start paying our way as we go.

With respect to stimulating the economy and protecting jobs, we've recommended that the small-business tax needs to be reduced. That would be a sustainable way to stimulate an alternate economy and protect jobs, not giving $5,000 per job hire as a short-term subsidy to business.

We need to look at the linear tax issue in rural Alberta and make sure that it's more fairly distributed. There are billions of dollars available through linear taxation that are going to just a few opportunely placed municipalities. That needs to be assessed as an opportunity to stabilize some of our infrastructure spending without borrowing so significantly.

We need to see a much more clear commitment to a repayment plan for the debt that we're incurring, and that hasn't been forthcoming.

Certainly, we support the new clean technology incentives that we're seeing the government come forward with.

With respect to shifting from oil and gas, what we've seen over the last 25 years is a drop in royalty return to Albertans, from 27 per cent of oil and gas revenues in the early '70s, when Mr. Lougheed came in, to about 4 per cent of oil and gas revenues at this time, a shocking loss of revenue for the public purse. So we fully supported a need to review the royalty regime in Alberta.

We clearly need action on climate change and carbon, and I have to applaud the government for its bold, courageous steps on a carbon levy. It is, in fact, a provincial sales tax; don't get me wrong. The past government was not willing to bring in a carbon levy or incentives for improving our carbon emissions in good times or in bad. Clearly, there is no perfect time to bring in a carbon levy, but we are way, way late in getting moving on alternate clean technologies.

In order to give others a chance to speak, I will take my seat, Madam Speaker, and recognize that while there are some very good initiatives in this budget, we will not be supporting third reading.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I believe we only have one more speaker to complete this item, and then we expect a division after that, so I would ask unanimous consent of the House to continue until we complete this item.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Government House Leader and indeed to all members of the House for unanimous consent to continue this debate in a timely manner. Also, a special mention and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for being so brief in your comments. I will also attempt to be brief.

What I think is important to recognize in this budget is that there are some positive aspects to this budget, which I can support. I believe that infrastructure spending is badly needed in this province, and I believe it is okay to borrow some money to build infrastructure to catch up, to create jobs. Those are laudable objectives and, I think, totally and entirely appropriate at this time. My question, though, is the scale of that infrastructure spending and the total lack of any sort of plan to pay back the debt that we're taking on. I'm curious about whether or not we'll be able to actually deploy this capital effectively and whether or not, in fact, we will find in very targeted areas that we have shortages of trades, which drives up costs and, in fact, doesn't achieve the objectives.

I'm supportive of the access to capital for entrepreneurs in this province. That is something that drives our economy in our province. It's a great source of pride for me personally as an entrepreneur, and anything we can do to support entrepreneurs and venture capitalists as they take risks, grow the economy, and create jobs is to be lauded.

Stability in education is also important, an aspect of this job. Stability in our public education, public health care systems is to be applauded as well.

But my problem with the budget overall is that the numbers simply don't add up, not only in this year – we know there's a $6.1 billion deficit – but in years going forward. What I don't see in this budget is any sort of attempt to constrain spending or do more with less. Albertans all around this province – in their households, in their businesses, even in municipal governments – are doing more with less. This government has not chosen that path. They've chosen a path to feel like money is infinite, that it just comes from somewhere, that we just simply ask Albertans for more taxes, from individuals and from businesses, and that all we need to do is worry about the spending side. That's simply not true. This government ought to be doing more with less just like Albertans are.

Now, there's been a lot of talk in this House about our alternative budget, and I'm going to talk more about our alternative budget because I believe as an opposition member and as an opposition leader that it is my job not simply to reflexively oppose what the government does; it is my job to propose alternatives and to present Albertans with our vision and answer the question: all right; how would you do it?

Well, here's how we would do it. This budget increases program spending this year 2.54 per cent. We would also increase program spending, at about 1 per cent less. From 2014 to 2018 this government will increase spending 10.54 per cent. We would also increase spending but only at 5 per cent.

It's important that we constrain the growth of operational spending in particular. There is no thought given in this budget to operational efficiencies. There is no mechanism in place to enable the public sector – and there are tremendous people in Alberta's public service – to do their jobs more efficiently, to create a free market for ideas, to allow the front lines to suggest ways of operating more efficiently and more effectively. The culture needs to change.

There's $4.4 billion – $4.4 billion – allocated over five years to new projects and programs. That is a slush fund which we don't know where it's going to go. It makes it impossible to support this budget.

Personal income tax. While I am supportive of a progressive income tax, five brackets are too many brackets. A 15 per cent top marginal tax rate is too high. It disincentivizes individual initiative, and that is what this province was built on.

The corporate income tax increase, up to 12 per cent, is estimated to increase revenue by only $250 million or $450 million by 2017, but in fact the revenue decreases a billion dollars for each of the next two years. Now, I know some of that can be attributed to challenges in the economy, but I have to think a significant portion of that is a result of tax leakage, of corporations deciding Alberta is no longer the lowest tax jurisdiction in the country. They'll find somewhere else to file their taxes. There are a lot of very bright accountants in this province who have found ways of doing that absolutely legally, and that is to the detriment of Alberta. If we lower taxes on corporations in this province by 1 per cent, we return Alberta to the low tax advantage that we've enjoyed for so many years, but we still generate enough revenue to fund those badly needed programs. This government's budget is out of balance.

There's a 4 cent per litre increase to locomotive fuel tax, which is a 267 per cent increase, which increases the cost to transport our goods, in particular our bitumen, by rail. In the absence of pipelines, that will become an increasing challenge. Now, I will say, speaking of pipelines, that I do broadly support the climate plan because I do believe it will result in and create the scenario where Alberta can finally see pipelines built and can finally get market access built.

I want to speak briefly about the job creation grant, which we've heard a lot about in this House. The very best-case scenario for any company is to create jobs in calendar 2016 and then claim this credit by the end of 2016. We don't know exactly how that's going to work. But if it works that the net number of jobs that you've created by the end of 2016 is greater than the jobs that you had at the beginning of 2016, what is to stop a company from creating a bunch of jobs on December 15, 2016, firing those people on January 1, 2017, yet claiming $5,000 per job? Or let's take a best-case scenario. Let's say that Alberta's economy picks up in the fourth quarter of 2016. It would be wonderful. But those jobs would have been created anyway. Companies are claiming the tax credit for jobs they would have created anyway.

Instead, we need an investor tax credit to allow businesses to decide how best to deploy their capital to stimulate further investment in those businesses. It's not up to government to tell a business how to best operate their business; it's up to business to decide.

I'll talk briefly about energy price projections. In 2017 this budget presumes oil prices will be at $68 a barrel. Today's forward curve – I just checked a few minutes ago. The average forward curve for 2017 is $52.11. That's a $15 difference. If we do the math on that, that is a $2.7 billion hole in this government's fiscal plan. That's an enormous risk to this province, and I have grave concerns that this government doesn't fully understand that risk.

They're borrowing for operations. They're borrowing $700 million for operations in 2016 and $3.1 billion for operations in 2017, or over $5 billion if their forecasts are wrong.

They have not done a sensitivity analysis on the credit rating downgrade; we did. My single budget analyst did a quick credit rating downgrade scenario. A 1 per cent increase in Alberta's borrowing rate because our credit rating is downgraded will cost us an extra $700 million a year in debt-service costs alone, starting in 2017. That is a risk that this province cannot bear. How big a risk is it that we lose our credit rating? There are five scenarios that the Dominion Bond Rating Service uses. Three of those five are already offside for Alberta. Only one of them is debt to GDP.

With that, Madam Speaker, I want to say that I cannot support the budget. Thank you again to the House for the opportunity to speak.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other speakers to the bill?

If not, the hon. Minister of Finance to close debate.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I will just say that, you know, for the last three days I have been meeting with economists both in Toronto and here, talking about Budget 2016 and Budget 2015. On the whole they believe in the direction this government has presented before them. The debt-to-GDP ratio that we have put forward is supported by these same economists and by investment bankers and by others who would look at investing in Alberta.

Previously, a friend across the floor talked about the Calgary days, former Mayor Klein, and his significant investment all across that city. Yes, Mayor Duerr was hamstrung with the amount of debt, but I think that if we look at it, it was very different in terms of the proposal that this government is putting forward on debt to GDP. I don't know what the figure was that Klein had raised debt to in Calgary, but it was not the same as today. We are starting from a better fundamental place, with no net debt in this province. We have a plan before this province that will support programs, services, capital investments and bring us back to balance in 2019-2020, which is what we will do.

Thank you.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 26, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any school groups for introduction today?

Hearing none, the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to rise on your behalf and introduce Mr. Jim Black. Mr. Black is a constituent of Medicine Hat, a strong community advocate, and a personal friend to you. I would ask that Mr. Black, who is seated in your gallery, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the introduction didn't indicate it, but he was sorry that Mr. Clark couldn't be here today. He actually ran against me as an Alberta Party member, and we're still friends.

The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some visitors from the Department of Environment and Parks. I'd ask them to rise as I call their names: Ms Melissa Killick, Mr. Duke Hunter, Ms Wendy Proudfoot, Mrs. Angela Turlione, Miss Leah Arnason, Kristine Cariaga, Amanda Buer, and Graham Brittain. I wish to thank them for all of their service to our province and ask the House to extend the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of Health and Seniors.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions. First, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two visitors from Friends of Medicare. For 36 years Friends of Medicare has been leading the fight to preserve a public, comprehensive health care system that's accessible to all Albertans. Sandra Azocar has been the executive director of Friends of Medicare since 2012. She is joined by communications and administrative staff member Trevor Zimmerman. I commend their efforts in support of protecting, promoting, and restoring the physical and mental well-being of all residents of Alberta. I now ask that Sandra and Trevor please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

I do have a second one, Mr. Speaker. My apologies. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Paul Haskins. Paul is a physician assistant at the Alberta Health Services Sturgeon community hospital. Prior to his current role, he served as a physician assistant and med tech in the Canadian armed forces for more than 25 years. We are grateful. Tomorrow, November 27, is National Physician Assistant Day in Canada, which is an opportunity to acknowledge the positive impact that PAs across Canada, including Alberta, are making on Canadian health care: improving access to medical care and helping to reduce wait times. I'd ask that our honoured guest receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Daniel and Delores Warawa. Daniel has 10 years as town councillor for the county of Lamont and also serves as deputy reeve. He is joined by his wife, Delores, who, along with their son Ryan operate a farm outside of Mundare, where I had the pleasure of joining him on his combine to take in the harvest of flax. I thank them for their warmth and generosity. They have truly shown me what it means to experience good, Ukrainian hospitality in Mundare. Please join me in extending the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm excited to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the group from Schonsee park and playground. They're a group of very dedicated volunteers that are working towards developing a park and playground at 76th Street and Schonsee Drive. They were absolutely thrilled with the outcome of the western final as not only are the Edmonton Eskimos headed to the Grey Cup, but the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort has donated the hundred dollars to Schonsee park. Here today from Schonsee park and playground are Nicole, Mackenzie, Madison, and Chloe Nicholson; Alice, Mason, and Ty Funk; Deborah and Eric Clark. I ask that they please rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hope you advised them that the hon. Minister of Finance has some new income, so he's good for more than a hundred dollars.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Peace River Constituency

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In our national anthem we sing of the true north strong and free. I'd like to tell you a bit about my true north, my constituency of Peace River, using three words: diversity, resilience, and diligence.

Diversity. La Crête is home to a large Mennonite population, primarily of German and Dutch descent but also from Mexico and Brazil. We have three distinct First Nations: the Dene Thá in Meander, Bushe, and Chateh; the Little Red River Cree in Fox Lake, John D'Or, and Garden River; and Beaver First Nation in Boyer and Child Lake. We have a large Métis community in Paddle Prairie and across region 6 and francophones in Marie-Reine and St. Isidore. Fort Vermilion, Alberta's oldest community, represents a unique cultural diversity of language, religion, and ethnic background. Fort Vermilion also holds the record for the coldest temperature ever recorded in Alberta, a frosty minus 60.

That brings me to resilience. Peace River responded to the devastating floods in the '90s by creating PeaceFest, a celebration of art and music. The First Nations in the north are incredibly resilient, overcoming the residential school legacy to build strength and industry. Traditional language and way of life remain alive in these communities, and they create fabulous aboriginal art. Oil patch towns Zama City and Rainbow Lake adapt to industry cycles and population fluctuations that put pressure on the local economy, and the citizens band together to reduce isolation by creating community activities.

That brings me to diligence. In Peace River we have people who help others and enrich the community through projects like the Curtis Marshall memorial skate park or by sponsoring Syrian refugee families. We have long-established family farms in North Star, Dixonville, and Nampa and family businesses that are models of energy efficiency such as Manning Diversified and The Carbon Farmer. And in High Level we are working diligently to develop and diversify our economy through ventures such as our upcoming winter ice Frostival on December 5.

An ancient Beaver Indian legend says: drink the water of the Peace River, and you will return. I invite you to discover the truth of that. Come and visit Alberta's true north.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member, and please express my regrets to your community that I cannot be there. I would have liked that very much.

Government Policies

Mr. Barnes: I'd like to go beyond the front-page news and share the incredible impact of NDP policies on Alberta families. So far this year there have been 65,000 jobs lost in our province and counting. That's the same as the entire city of Medicine Hat receiving a pink slip. Behind each one of the 65,000 jobs lost is an individual, a neighbour, a family. If you want to see the human impact of the things we discuss here, come and see the people in my home riding.

Mr. Speaker, as you and I well know, the families and communities of southeastern Alberta are still recovering from the previous government's natural gas royalty review. Now it seems that the people of Cypress-Medicine Hat cannot go a single week without hearing of some new government policy that will only further compound their difficulties and reduce their opportunities.

In spring Cypress-Medicine Hatters were hit with a tax increase on their livelihoods and productivity, in the summer they faced ideological meddling in the labour market with the announcement of drastic minimum wage increases, and now they get saddled with a PST in disguise, massive increases to utility costs, and farming regulations rammed through with no consultation and no certainty of where it will leave them. All along the way the job losses mount, sometimes by the hundreds, as we saw recently with the closure of the Finning heavy equipment dealer in Medicine Hat, but far more often it's by the dozens. Sure, there are newspaper headlines, but you're not hearing about those trying to make their mortgage payments, being unable to enrol their son or daughter in spring sports, or missing out on a Christmas donation to the Salvation Army. It's the small businesses paying the price. It's the entrepreneur who has invested in any one of these many spinoffs from the oil and gas industry. It's the family farm getting buried by a host of costly new taxes and regulations.

My constituents and all Albertans need, more than ever, a government that allows them to be productive and to have opportunity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Calgary to Cochrane Trail

Mr. Kleinstaub: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From my early days as a political candidate in municipal politics I've always been a strong supporter of bike paths and trail systems. That is why I'm pleased to rise today to congratulate the Glenbow Ranch Park Foundation and Alberta Parks on their initiatives to link the park's internal trail network to the city of Calgary and the town of Cochrane. This initiative is known as the Calgary to Cochrane, or C to C, trail. The C to C trail will provide access to some of the most spectacular parkland and vistas the Bow River Valley has to offer through a system of walking, hiking, and biking trails.

In early spring 2015 the Glenbow Ranch Park Foundation began the C to C trail fundraising campaign, with a target of $100,000 to complete phase 1 of the Bears paw Trail. This 2.2 kilometre trail stretches from Glenbow Ranch provincial park to Calgary's north-west corner, Haskayne park. By mid-July I attended the Parks Day celebration in Glenbow Ranch provincial park. There was a big announcement that day, and the Glenbow Ranch Park Foundation announced that around 740 individual donations exceeded the $100,000 target set earlier that spring and had raised more than $194,000 for the first phase of this project, proving its wild popularity.

As a donor I was pleased to receive an e-mail at the end of October confirming that the first phase of the trail is now complete. The Bears paw section of the trail now winds through the beautiful native grasslands on the north bank of the Bow River, connecting commuters, hikers, runners, and cyclists to the existing trail system. Someday soon the plentiful trail networks of Calgary-Northern Hills will have a seamless trail connection for residents all the way to the western corner of Glenbow park.

The foundation continues to lead fundraising efforts for the next two phases of the project, and when completed, the trail will be part of the Trans Canada Trail network.

I'd like to end by congratulating the Glenbow Ranch Park Foundation on a fundraising job well done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Charitable Tax Credit

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you are aware, Albertans are known for their incredible compassion and generosity. Whether it's contributions of time, talent, or finances, the generosity of Albertans is unsurpassed in Canada, and it is at times when the need is greatest that the spirit of this province shines brightest. It is through these contributions that charitable organizations are able to offer the vital programs and services that assist youth, families, seniors, and the most vulnerable both at home and around the world. As a social worker and having spent many years working with child and family services and in developing education programs, I've seen the impact first-hand. Indeed, without charitable contributions, many of these programs and services simply could not be possible.

For many the ability to provide that financial contribution has been impacted by the same economic conditions that make their donations and the programs those donations support that much more important. Alberta's charitable tax credit has been maintained in Budget 2015 and is intended to encourage those who are able to continue to support the charitable causes that matter to them. Albertans making a contribution to a CRA-registered charity are eligible to receive a 50 per cent tax credit for every dollar donated above the $200 threshold.

The charitable tax credit is one of the most generous in Canada, and it helps to stretch that donation dollar a little bit further. The Minister of Culture and Tourism has encouraged all MLAs to assist the efforts of charitable organizations in their communities by helping to spread the word of the charitable tax credit. Mr. Speaker, full details of Alberta's charitable tax credit are available online at the Alberta Culture and Tourism website, culture.alberta.ca.

To all of those who give so generously in support of their fellow Albertans, thank you. To the charitable organizations and the incredible volunteers who are making a difference in their communities and in the lives of those in need, thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Friends of Medicare

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For over 36 years the Alberta Society of the Friends of Medicare has been championing our treasured public health care system and pushing governments to ensure that strong public medicare continues to be a defining part of life in our province. Many surveys have shown that public health care is something that Canadians identify with so deeply that it is now a key part of our national identity. Access to quality medical care when we need it most, regardless of personal financial situation, is one way we as Albertans demonstrate our concern for one another.

The Friends of Medicare has been a steady voice, holding government to account whenever health policy falls out of sync with the Albertan values of compassion and care. Friends of Medicare is not just the story of a group of volunteers who happened to believe in the merits of public health care; it is the story of citizen action and resistance to those corporate interests that would put profits ahead of people. Friends of Medicare has helped to educate Albertans about the benefits of our medicare system and to outline why certain policy directions endanger that system.

Public health care is sustainable, more equitable, and more efficient than private, for-profit medicine. Countries around the world look enviously at what Canada has achieved.

During these tough times Albertans need dependable health care services, now more than ever. As the baby boomer generation heads into retirement and old age, they need to know that the medical system they've spent their working lives to support is now ready to support them. Likewise, many new parents are in the process of raising Alberta's next generation, and these young families also need a public health care system that they can depend on.

I take comfort in knowing that no matter what may come, the Friends of Medicare will still be here, fighting for the quality health care that all Albertans deserve.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Simon House Recovery Centre

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the tireless work and dedication of an organization within my constituency. Simon House Recovery Centre is a recovery centre for men who have accepted that they have a problem with either drugs or alcohol and want to remedy it by changing their attitudes and behaviour.

Simon House operates through four phases. Phase 1 begins with a full-time classroom portion and lasts for 12 weeks, during which the 12 steps of Alcoholics Anonymous are completed. There they receive incentives, specific counselling, and learn life and relationship skills. They also learn to manage anger, anxiety, and depression. Through Simon House's partnership with Alberta employment, immigration, and industry they are taught cover letter and resumé writing and job search skills. Phases 2 and 3 begin semi-independent living and independent living, with added responsibilities and privileges. The final phase of the program is phase 4, the goal of all their clients, which is sober living while living independently in the community and being reunited with family and friends.

Mr. Speaker, I must share that Simon House is one of North America's leading recovery centres, where 50 per cent of their clients achieve the benchmark of one year's sobriety. This far exceeds the industry average of 15 to 20 per cent.

On the last Wednesday of every month Simon House celebrates its graduation ceremony at our Bowness Seniors' Centre, where the graduates of the 12-week, phase 1 program are honoured as well as those celebrating their birthday month, the month they chose sobriety over addiction. Here friends and family honour milestones, and current and former graduates share their stories of recovery. Since July either myself or a member of my staff has attended these graduations, and I can personally attest to the sense of community and collective perseverance shared not only just from the graduates but from family and friends and members of our community.

I thank them for all the hard work that they do for Alberta. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, allow me, if you will, to echo the remarks of the Deputy Speaker yesterday. This has been a very difficult week and next several days for this House. I know I speak for all of the Assembly to the leader of the third party and our fellow members who are here: please express to the family again our sincerest support. It has been a difficult yet a learning experience for all of us about the importance of each other.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Carbon Tax

Mr. Jean: We know that at least 2,200 Albertans have lost their jobs this month. That's on top of the 65,000 Albertans who are already out of work. Those who still have jobs are seeing their wages plummet. In fact, a new report says that the average weekly earnings for Albertans are falling fast. What's the NDP's solution? To hit everyone and everything with a massive new carbon tax, that will make everyone poorer and damage our economy. Why is the Premier making Albertans, who are already hurting so, so badly, suffer even more?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member opposite knows, one of the critical pieces that we need to do to encourage our economy to recover and to ensure that we can get the best return on the resources that we own is to ensure that we can find markets for our product and, with any luck, get a pipeline to tidewater. One of the key parts of that is to show leadership on climate change, and that is what our plan does.

Mr. Jean: I would like to congratulate the Premier for bringing in the largest tax grab in Alberta history. It will make everything more expensive: driving, heating your home, turning the lights on. The final bill: almost a thousand dollars a year per household. For every Albertan seeing their wages go down – they have to heat their homes in the winter or drive to work – the Premier has one message: tough luck, too bad, so sad. One economist is calling this the equivalent of a 3 per cent sales tax. The Premier never campaigned on this carbon tax. How can the voters ever trust the Premier again?

The Speaker: Madam Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the member opposite seems to have some difficulty in terms of interpreting and reading the information that we've put out with respect to our climate change plan. We've been very clear that the carbon price will be completely and fully recycled into the economy, including being dedicated to families and households and small businesses to make sure that they can make ends meet. This whole process is going to actually trigger economic diversification and a renewable economy and renewable jobs. Our experts say that it . . .

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Jean: The only recycling this does, frankly, is to recycle more funds into the government to slush wherever they want.

Municipalities are warning that this carbon tax will make life more difficult for everyone. For the city of Red Deer it will cost an extra $4.2 million per year. We know what that means: higher property taxes, higher fees, higher prices for everything for everyone right across the province. For most middle-class Albertans any offset they would get would be a tiny fraction of what they pay directly and through increased prices. Premier, this is much worse than health care premiums. It's as bad as a sales tax. Why can't you just admit it to Albertans?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I can admit to Albertans, which I think the member opposite would have some difficulty with, is that climate change is real and it is time for us to do something about it. We have had municipal leaders, business leaders, civil society leaders all tell us that this is a good plan. Just yesterday we had the federal Minister of Natural Resources say that this plan is going to help us get our resources to tidewater while we're doing the right thing on climate change, which these guys aren't even sure exists.

The Speaker: Second set of questions.

Mr. Jean: The Premier's claim that this massive carbon tax is revenue neutral is simply dishonest, and it's breaking the trust of Albertans. Everyone knows that this is a tax grab. A revenue-neutral tax would have the government not taking in any more money. A revenue-neutral tax would not raise the overall tax burden on Albertans. If the Premier lowered income taxes by $3 billion, the carbon tax would be revenue neutral, as she's claimed. Will she do that?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what we are going to do is that we are going to put every single bit of that carbon price which is collected back into the economy to promote renewable energy growth so that we can get rid of coal by 2030, something which everybody knows is long overdue, so that we can promote energy efficiency, something that we haven't had ever in this province, unlike every other province in the country, so that we can make sure that families can make ends meet. All that money is going back in there, and what it's going to do is build the economy, not bring it down the way the guys opposite would like us to do.

The Speaker: Are we at your first supplemental?

Mr. Jean: Yes, sir.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Jean: The economist Trevor Tombe: "The Alberta carbon tax plan is not revenue neutral . . . the government shouldn't try to mislead people." The economist Jack Mintz: "The new consumption levy is . . . directed at spending, not tax relief." The Calgary Chamber: "None of the . . . $3 billion raised for these measures is directed toward reductions in personal or . . . income tax." Premier, are they wrong, or will you admit that this is just the largest tax grab in Alberta history, that's going to be on the backs of Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, in fact, I believe the Calgary Chamber of commerce endorsed our plan. Dr. Roger Gibbins, a senior fellow and former president of the Canada West Foundation, not actually known as a left-leaning think tank, said: the first word that comes to mind is balance; also, funds generated by the carbon tax will remain in Alberta, and given that Alberta had to act, the Premier has delivered a package that should sit well with Albertans.

Mr. Jean: Well, it doesn't.

Of course, the NDP won't cut taxes; they only raise taxes. They want to take more money out of the pockets of families and into their government coffers so they have slush funds. Wildrose thinks this is wrong. Alberta families do not deserve economic experiments. They don't deserve to be made to pay almost a thousand dollars more every year with no benefits. Premier, I'll ask again: why are you raising the price of everything for everyone without cutting any taxes?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, I do need to clarify. The numbers that the member opposite is using are completely wrong. That's the first point. The second point is that what we have talked about is recycling, and we may see some tax relief in some areas. So he doesn't actually know what he's talking about.

What I will say is that I'm going to offer up a different quote because I think this gets to the heart of it. Dr. Joe Vipond said that closing these plants will do more to save lives than he could ever hope to achieve as a physician working in an emergency room. That, Mr. Speaker, is why we are taking action.

The Speaker: Third set of questions.

Mr. Jean: Closing down 30 communities.

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation Consultation

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, last week I asked the Premier about her plan to saddle Alberta farms and ranches with poorly conceived regulations. The video clip of that exchange has become a bit of a viral sensation in rural Alberta. It has been downloaded actually hundreds of thousands of times and seen by half a million Albertans. What does the Premier have to say to the 45,000 Alberta family farms, that are deeply worried that this government, which has no farmers or ranchers in its caucus, is about to badly hurt their way of life?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I would begin by saying is that Alberta is a province which is part of the country of Canada, which recognizes fundamental human rights. Some of those human rights are the right to refuse unsafe work and the right to be covered by basic employment standards legislation. Now, we have indicated all along that we understand that when it comes to family farms, ensuring that members of families who are working on the family farm are exempted or not covered by this is something that we need to consult with farmers about. That's what's going on right now across the province, and that's what will happen, but we will not back down on ensuring that . . .

Mr. Jean: They just don't get it, Mr. Speaker. This government consults on complicated matters, apparently. Democratic reform changes are getting a committee and hearings. The Municipal Government Act: that bill will be tabled and then lots of hearings. But changes to hundreds of years of a way of life for 45,000 Alberta families who depend on farming and ranching: they get no hearings, no committee meetings, and no study by this government. This bill will be rammed through this place and enforced by January 1. Why is the Premier treating our ranchers and farmers like second-class citizens?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you. Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, it has been the position of our caucus and now this government and certainly our party going forward through the provincial election that this is exactly what we would do. Moreover, when I got elected in 2008, the former government started reviewing it, and then they reviewed it again, and then they had a study, and then they had another review, and then they had more consultations. So the fact of the matter is that it's been reviewed extensively. The reason it keeps getting reviewed is because it is absolutely untenable that in this day and age in the province of Alberta we would deny basic, fundamental human rights to certain groups of workers in this province.

Mr. Jean: Well, if she won't consult farmers, she can consult the people behind her that are going to be very upset after this weekend, when they talk to farmers. This government claims that it is consulting and refers to some town hall meetings across the province, but some of those town halls are scheduled to happen after everything has passed in this Assembly. Also, those town halls are limited-seating meetings, and almost all of them are full, standing room only. Now we are hearing that these won't actually be consultation meetings as much as come-and-be-told meetings. Does the Premier think that this is how Alberta farmers and ranchers deserve to be treated?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, in fact, I was advised yesterday that in Grande Prairie, where there was a great deal of interest in attending the consultation, a second meeting has just been scheduled. So a full second meeting has been scheduled because it was fully subscribed in the course of organizing it.

But let me be clear, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the members opposite are not quite aware. We passed this legislation, but the regulations are still being consulted on because the regulations can address a number of the concerns that have been raised around the family farm. [interjections] That is an appropriate way to go forward. It's standard governance procedure. I'm not quite sure what these guys have a problem with.

The Speaker: How quickly we forget.

The hon. leader of the third party.

Victorian Order of Nurses

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Victorian Order of Nurses, VON, just announced that they had closed their Alberta operations. Ten full-time and 95 part-time workers will lose their jobs. In addition, much needed programs such as elder-abuse intervention, adult day programs, and home support by the VON will cease to exist. They will close their programs in Alberta and five other provinces after 115 years. Rather than let this not-for-profit provider of much-needed services leave Alberta, will you commit to working with the VON and perhaps supporting them with some percentage of their operations or some other help to keep them providing their services?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the member opposite has indicated, the nonprofit Victorian Order of Nurses is shutting down operations in six provinces, including Alberta, and will operate only in Ontario and Nova Scotia. We know that this will affect a number of staff. We also know that it will affect roughly 191 people. AHS is working diligently with those people and with the VON in order to ensure that those services are transitioned in a safe and effective way. We are certainly happy to keep members of this Legislature apprised of what those arrangements are looking like.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. I'm glad to hear the Premier say that they're working with those people because the home-care services are deeply personal, and changes in caregiving personnel can be quite upsetting for those that need the services. Given that it's been long noted that home health care services actually save health care costs and that this is exactly the kind of services the VON has provided decades ahead of the curve, because it's considered very important right now, will you work with those people and keep them, the same people, the same caregivers, whether it's as part of the VON or some other part, with the same care receivers. It's very gut wrenching.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the sentiment communicated by the leader of the third party. You're quite right, particularly when it comes to home care, that continuity of treatment and continuity of caregivers are fundamentally important. Certainly, we want to begin by saying that we are very grateful to the VON for the work that they have done. I believe that AHS will be doing everything that they can to ensure that that continuity and that transition are as smooth as possible. There are part-time employees who are impacted by the VON's closing. There may be opportunities to keep those people in the system. I will ask my minister to work with AHS to ensure that continuity and stability.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you. I appreciate the answer from the Premier, and I'm going to extend my question just a little bit further. Will you work with the other provinces to see if there's some joint solution? It may turn out that if we do that, it's more cost-effective for Alberta or will provide more choices on how to deliver the services needed in a more cost-effective way or just maybe a better way. Will you team up, communicate with the other provinces and see what can be gained?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. The Victorian Order of Nurses is committed to ensuring that there are stable services offered by them until December 2, so given the urgency – and that's around the home-care piece – I'm really focused on making sure that we have alignments in place so that by December 3 there is a smooth transition to protect those patients. Right now that's my number one focus.

In terms of working collaboratively with other provinces, that's certainly something that I will have my department follow up on, and in terms of day supports the Victorian order will provide those until December 9. We're really working on making sure that we have a smooth transition for every single one of those patients.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Opioid Use

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Fentanyl and other opiates of abuse continue to spread in our communities, and the consequences are deadly. Experts are indicating that we may be facing an unprecedented one death per day in Alberta by year's end. These deaths are preventable. It requires brave leadership from this government. Bluntly put, we need action, and we need it now. To the minister: what instructions has the ministry provided Alberta Health Services with regard to increasing access to naloxone and medication-assisted treatment for opioid-use disorder?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for his question as well as for his service on the mental health review. Of course, mental health and addictions go hand in hand, so this is an area that we have been working collaboratively on. There's a fourfold strategy. Increasing access to naloxone is a must. We know that it is one of those last-minute life-saving strategies, and we've been continuing to add more kits and making sure that it's available in communities throughout Alberta. That is certainly one of the pieces as well as the other prongs, that include addressing recovery and addiction beds, making sure that we're cutting off supply, and also education on the front lines because, of course, we want to cut off . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we enter the unique stresses of the Christmas season and considering the one death per day, will the minister consider declaring a public health emergency to free up resources and allow her to free up access to naloxone for EMS workers, who still can't provide it, nurses, and even responsible family members to provide this life-saving drug?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We know that there is a community response needed on this. In terms of first responders paramedics are currently able to administer and prescribe the antidote, so that is certainly good news. We are working to change regulations for EMTs so that they can administer naloxone as well. That is very important. All paramedics and pharmacists can administer naloxone in an emergency.

In terms of the question around a provincial state of emergency I've been looking into this, and it's my understanding that that wouldn't actually change any of the federal requirements which are governing this area. I'd be happy to discuss that in more detail afterwards.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, that raises the question for the minister: how hard is she working on the federal government to change Bill C-2, which restricts access to harm-reduction services in this province? How hard are you working on the federal government to change that bill?

Ms Hoffman: I think I hear an offer from a member of the party that is now in federal government to support me in my lobbying efforts at the national level.

Certainly, harm reduction is seen nation-wide as being one of the best strategies to extend lives, and evidence is driving our government's decisions on how we address issues such as the one we're currently facing. I hope it will be the focus of the new federal government moving forward. Certainly, harm reduction and access to naloxone are fundamental in addressing the fentanyl crisis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

2:10 Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I represent a constituency with a strong community of hard-working farmers and ranchers. Many of these people agree that we need to protect the safety of these farm and ranch workers. However, they are deeply concerned that changes could hurt their family farm and affect their way of life. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour about the way she is making sure that this government strikes an appropriate balance between farm safety and preserving the family farm.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I know that he is a strong advocate for farmers and ranchers both inside and outside of his constituency. We know that these changes are long overdue, but we also want to get it right. We are aware of the concerns that family farms have raised about the need to protect their way of life, and we take those concerns very seriously. We will be looking to other jurisdictions on how they struck an appropriate balance between farm safety and preserving the family farm. We also want to hear the views of farmers and ranchers, which is why we're holding town halls, the first of which is being held tonight in Grande Prairie.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Speaker, given that I have heard that this government is moving forward too quickly and given that there is a lot of misinformation that is fuelling this opinion, can the minister tell the House about a timeline on how these rules will be rolled out?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The regulations, that are the true nuts and bolts of these proposals, will be rolled out in a sure-footed manner. Occupational Health and Safety Act exemptions will be lifted January 1, 2016. Occupational health and safety code technical requirements will be effective in 2017. Workers' compensation is effective January 1, 2016. Labour relations and the employment standards will be effective in the spring of 2016. The regulations of the safety codes will be developed while working with farmers. Consultation is so important to us in going forward.

An Hon. Member: Then do it.

Ms Sigurdson: We're doing it.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this issue is so important and given that town halls are filling up incredibly quickly, how can farmers ensure that their views are being heard to help inform . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member. I didn't get the last part of your question.

Mr. S. Anderson: I think you just like to hear my voice, sir, or the opposition does, too.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm still having difficulty hearing you.

Mr. S. Anderson: The last part of the question was: how can farmers ensure that their views are being heard and helping to inform these historic decisions?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have added additional town halls to ensure that the views of farmers and ranchers are heard and that they receive appropriate information from our officials. There are also many other ways they can be involved. We do have an online survey so that they can have their views sent to us, and we encourage people to e-mail us or phone us if they have further concerns. And we're happy to add additional ones if that's needed. People have responded very positively to that. It's so important for us to hear from farmers and ranchers in the industry, to know how we can support them to create the right balance.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tobacco Recovery Lawsuit

Mr. Nixon: The government's tobacco litigation project is in the news and not in a good way. The awarding of a contract to litigate health cost recoveries is under huge suspicion. It appears that this Assembly has been deceived and that past Ethics Commissioners have been deceived. Well-connected insiders were improperly awarded a contract that could be worth hundreds of millions of dollars while senior civil servants who should have blown the whistle looked the other way. Can the Premier inform the Assembly about what is being done about this matter?

The Speaker: The hon. Justice minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Well, of course, these very serious allegations have been raised, and we are taking them seriously. We have asked for more information and will be completing a review on this matter. Obviously, it raises complicated and conflicting legal issues, and we're committed to ensuring that we move forward in a way that ensures transparency and accountability on the part of government.

Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: This issue matters because two of the senior civil servants of this contract are still in this government. One is now the Deputy Minister of Energy. Given that this senior civil servant looked the other way when a former minister fixed a contract and given that the Deputy Minister of Energy will be responsible for billions in contracts under the new carbon tax and that we know that this deputy minister does not stand up to politicians, what is the Premier going to do about it?

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Well, of course, as I've mentioned, these allegations are deep and concerning to this government, and this caucus did raise similar concerns when they were in opposition. Certainly, we are reviewing it to make sure that we proceed in a transparent and open manner and that we have all the information we need to resolve these competing and conflicting legal issues and that moving forward we're able to operate in a way that gives the public faith in our transparency. Certainly, my deputy minister, who has been assisting me in this, is new to government and has come in since our government has been in.

Mr. Nixon: Given that this is a serious issue that deals with the trustworthiness of this government and given that the government isn't dealing with this issue in an appropriate fashion, will the chair of the Public Accounts Committee tell us if this matter should be put on the schedule of that committee to be investigated and can he also tell us what steps that committee might undertake?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very honoured to actually answer a question in question period, and I will actually give an answer.

The Public Accounts Committee, due to the unique circumstances in which we find ourselves, will be meeting briefly on Tuesday to discuss a series of meetings that we'll probably be having later in the winter. I will be asking members of the Public Accounts Committee to put on the agenda that we call the office of the Solicitor General and Department of Justice to get to the bottom of this. We're not interested in playing the blame game, but it is important that Albertans get answers so that we can find out what systems broke.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Legal Aid

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year the former government provided the required one-year notice to review legal aid. Yesterday the Minister of Justice announced that the review would occur. Legal aid is an important service, but in the past year the former government provided it with an increase of $5.5 million, and over the next three years the government is looking at increasing it by a further $9 million. To the Justice minister: when this review is finished, will you release the cost of hiring lawyers versus contracting them, which is what is currently happening now, and share those details with Albertans?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Of course, legal aid is an issue that is critical to all Albertans since it protects the most vulnerable in society. We are looking into this review going forward. Certainly, we will be making the outcome of this review public as we work with Legal Aid Alberta to ensure that we can move forward in the best method possible and to ensure that we have the best structure and delivery of legal aid. So we will be looking into those issues.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, to the same minister: given that yesterday the Minister of Justice also announced that she was increasing Legal Aid lawyers' fees from $84 per hour to $92 per hour this year alone and given that this government is running a $6 billion deficit, give or take, will the minister disclose to taxpayers where this additional money for lawyers' fees is coming from?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Well, of course, the interim measures that have been brought forward to our government were brought forward by Legal Aid. They had expressed a concern that they were having difficulty retaining counsel to protect vulnerable Albertans and to act in these matters, particularly in the cases of family law. As a result, we have addressed a series of interim measures to make sure that Albertans have access to those services in the interim. In terms of the actual cost, that's within the purview of Legal Aid, so I would suggest that the member direct his question to them.

Thank you.

Mr. Ellis: More money to victims. That's what I say.

To the same minister: given that some members of this House have been suggesting that the victims of crime fund surplus should be used to fund lawyers in Legal Aid and given that this fund was set aside specifically for victims of crime, will the minister commit today to ensuring that the money in the victims of crime fund is directed solely to victims of crime, as it was originally purposed?

Thank you.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Yes, I will commit that the funds in the victims of crime fund will not be used to fund legal aid and that they will be directed to victims of crime.

Thank you.

Wainwright Health Care Facilities

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Wainwright hospital sewage system backed up, filling the basement with feces. It was reported that the whole hospital reeked of body excrement. In 2010 Alberta Health Services warned the government of this facility's sewage issues and the risk of being shut down. Minister, I sent a letter about this on August 28, to which you replied that while you appreciate the invite to meet, your schedule does not permit you to do so at this time. Are you going to just let this hospital close?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. I was talking about a specific site visit to the facility. I'm certainly open to having opportunities. It's just that right now I'm really focused on making sure that we're in session, that we're connecting with stakeholders. I certainly feel for the situation that has been brought to light in this House and will be happy to follow up directly with the hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Given that the Minister of Health has made a promise to meet with me during a previous question in the House and given that I have contacted her office to set up the appointment and given that your office would not provide me with an appointment date, I would like to ask: when will the minister meet with the mayor and myself to discuss where the patients of the Wainwright hospital are going to go to meet their health care needs?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Right now I am booked from at least 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. every day. I'm not booked on Sundays, though, so I'd be happy to take time to do a phone call on Sunday, a three-way call on Sunday with yourself and with the mayor.

Mr. Taylor: Well, thank you, Minister.

Now, given that this is a very serious health care issue for the people of Wainwright and given that the minister's own government has flagged this facility for upgrades, will the Minister of Infrastructure consult quickly with the Minister of Health and commit to a new facility for the town of Wainwright, which obviously desperately needs one?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, we have many competing priorities, as the member knows, but obviously the health of patients throughout the province is a top priority, and we will act accordingly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Ministers' Office Budgets

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in Committee of Supply members of the Wildrose caucus introduced a proposal to make minor cuts to ministerial budgets in the wake of the province's slowing and struggling economy. Unfortunately, the NDP government unilaterally opposed this proposal. They opposed a $50,000 decrease in the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry's budget, for example, a budget of $1.3 billion. To the minister of agriculture: why won't this government put itself in the shoes of the people it serves and take a cut in the lavish perks that ministers currently receive?

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: I'll note that there was a point of order. I'll make note of that.

The question?

Mr. Ceci: I'm happy to answer the question. We have put forward a budget that is built on three priorities. Those priorities will be addressed through the course of this budget. The proposals put forward in Committee of Supply and in several estimates committees were not reasonable in our view, so we refused them.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's economy is struggling, it would appear to me that now is not the time to be spending lavish amounts of money on government officials. But while a record number of Albertans are losing work, it is clear that life in the bureaucracy has never been so good. Again to the Minister of Agriculture: why are this government and senior officials so opposed to cutting their budget, like a measly $50,000 out of a $1.3 billion budget, in order to better serve Albertans and to better allocate their hard-earned tax dollars?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, there's been a hiring restraint kept on by this government. It was instituted by the previous government, and we have kept that on. We believe that's in the best interest of Albertans and government. When you look at the proportion per capita number of workers here in government compared to many years ago, we haven't grown substantially. So we'll keep this going the way we believe it needs to go.

Mr. Hanson: Well, given that I can't get an answer to my question, I'll try to be more direct.

Albertans are hurting, and many are losing their jobs, and the lucky few that are still employed are facing pay cuts and buckling their belts to face the brunt of this economic storm plaguing Alberta. But for this NDP government, however, times are a-boomin': six-figure salaries, unreserved power to tax and spend, and lucrative, luxurious perks for the privileged few. Minister, why are you standing here today defending these perks and cashing in on the backs of hurting Albertans?

Mr. Ceci: You know, there was a former Finance critic of the Official Opposition who said: we will not balance the budget on the backs of front-line public service workers and services; we will not unilaterally terminate the legal rights of any Albertan. That is not the way to do business. That former official sat on that side before. I think we're doing what we need to do. We're keeping public-sector workers doing their jobs because throwing them out would put them on the unemployment lines. Obviously, that would help the situation, right?

Climate Change Strategy

Mr. Fraser: As a lifelong Albertan, son, husband, and father the environment has always been important to me and more so since I became a father. So I do want to applaud the government for executing the decision on your climate change strategy. I also appreciate that it generally follows the Progressive Conservative plan, outside the carbon tax on all individuals. To the Minister of Transportation. The broad-based personal carbon tax will apply to every Albertan. In order to help reduce individual carbon footprints, will you commit the revenue from that tax to build and support better public transportation like the southeast legs of the LRT for Calgary and Edmonton?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're going to be looking as a government at a broad range of applications for revenue, all of which are focused on improving the situation relative to climate change. I would think that transit might fall into that category, but no decisions have been made, so I'm unable to supply an answer to the member at this time.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Environment: Minister, given the fact that you've announced a goal of 30 per cent renewable green electricity generation by 2020 and given the fact that renewable energy investors will only invest in Alberta if there is a power purchase agreement in place with the government and given the fact that you've already shown the government's hand in terms of your broader goals, how can you ensure that Albertans will now get a fair power purchase agreement with these companies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. It was our intention, as reported in the climate change panel recommendations that we accepted, to phase out coal emissions by 2030 and replace that electricity generation with renewable power and natural gas. Our plan will create a diversified renewable electricity sector. It will do so using market mechanisms. The Alberta Electric System Operator and AUC will play key roles in maintaining stability.

Mr. Fraser: To the same minister: given the fact that I've said that our environment is one of the most important legacies that we will leave our future generations and given the fact that what you say and do as a government has a definite impact on every Albertan, can you exactly articulate what you will be saying to the world at the climate change summit about Alberta, our industry leaders, and our already world-leading track record on environmental regulations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to practise my talking points before I get to the UN summit. We are going to be talking about how Albertans are not followers; it is time for Alberta to lead on climate change and energy development. We will do so by introducing a large number of renewables into our electricity system. We will do so by pricing carbon appropriately. We will do so by diversifying the economy and building on the back of our energy sector so that this province may have a conversation with our trading partners about energy infrastructure on its own merits.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend our government announced a climate change strategy that has received support from both industry and environmental groups. My constituents know that in these tough economic times we need to stimulate economic growth and diversification to support job creation. They hope our climate strategy will build support for new markets for Alberta's oil. To the minister of environment: how will our new climate strategy support jobs and diversification?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For starters, of course, our climate change plan has a very strong focus on jobs, which is why we heard from so many industry leaders on the weekend about exactly that matter. For example: Alberta wins in today's announcement. Murray Edwards from CNRL said that it "is a significant step forward for Alberta [and for the industry] . . . In this way, we will do our part to address climate change while protecting jobs and industry competitiveness in Alberta."

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Minister. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that constituencies like mine already have experience and capacity in the energy industry, to the same minister: how will the transition to a greener economy create stable jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, Sunday was about articulating our larger vision for leadership on climate. Now a number of things will follow such as our ambitious renewables phase-in. Our methane policy has sort of been a quieter little sister to the other pieces, but our methane goal of a 45 per cent reduction by 2025 will lead to increased energy jobs as companies are investing in leak detection and pneumatic devices in addition to the energy efficiency investments that we will making and the policy frameworks around small-scale renewables, efficiency retrofits, geothermal, you name it.

The Speaker: I'm pleased that the first supplemental allowed you to speak about your little sister.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that revenue from the proposed price on carbon will stay in Alberta, again to the same minister: can you provide details on how this revenue will support families and communities in my constituency?

Ms Phillips: Thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, the carbon price will be directed to two places, Mr. Speaker, investment in the economy and adjustment. The adjustment will help families make ends meet. It will support small businesses, First Nations, and people working in the coal industry through the transition. All revenue collected will be put to work right here in Alberta, building our economy, creating jobs, reducing pollution, and promoting greater energy efficiency.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 6 is threatening family farms across the province, and it's being imposed with little to no consultation with the people it will hit the hardest. Now, to be sure, the minister would never negotiate union contracts without proper input from union members. Farmers should be treated with the same respect. This legislation should not be rammed through this House without proper consultation. My office is being flooded with calls from people who feel ignored. To the minister: will you give farmers the dignity they deserve by providing proper consultation on this bill before it is passed?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education and of labour.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Family farms are essential to the culture of Alberta, and it's very important to us as a government to make sure that we hear from farms and ranches and industry leaders to make sure that we get it right. That's why we're having extensive consultations. We've added additional ones because they were so well subscribed to. We're very pleased people are stepping up, and we absolutely want to hear what they have to say. We'll work with them to make sure that we understand the specific nuances of the industry.

Thank you.

Mr. Hunter: Given that the first offence for breaking an OH and S rule can be a $500,000 fine and six months in jail, farmers are rightfully afraid that this legislation could ruin their farms and their lives. That's why in every consultation in the past – every one, Mr. Speaker – they have asked for education, not legislation. Can the minister guarantee that farmers will not face hefty fines or jail time just for doing what they've done proudly and safely for generations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This bill is about safety. What we're doing as of January 1 is that WCB is mandatory as well as the exemption from the Occupational Health and Safety Act is lifted. That just gives us access to the farm and ranch sector so that if there is a fatality, we can go on and help prevent it. We absolutely know that education is essential to make sure that we can prevent these kinds of serious injuries and fatalities in the future, so we'll be working in an educational way.

Thank you.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I was asked the following question by a farmer, so I will ask the minister. Given that the NDP's big argument is that Albertans have been waiting 98 years for this legislation, why is Bill 6 not applying to the rest of the four and a half pages of industries that are exempt from WCB? Four and a half pages of exemptions. If Albertans are in such need, then why so many exemptions still?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's really important for us to strike a balance between the safety of workers on farms and also protecting farmers. We know that there have been previous fatalities where the worker's family has no recourse but to sue that farmer, and then that farmer often will lose their farm. WCB will provide safety for both the farm owner and the workers. We know that this is a really important way to go forward, and it helps both parties.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some – and I emphasize some – elements of the new climate change action plan adopted by this government should be largely applauded. Indeed, the government has acted upon a number of initiatives that our caucus believes are very important such as continuing with the important work to reduce methane gases from venting and flaring and fugitive emissions. However, there are serious concerns with the overall plan which need to be addressed. To the minister of environment: what will be the costs to taxpayers of transitioning from the previous climate change compliance framework, the specified gas emitters regulation, to the tax on carbon?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, we have quite a lead time for this because when we updated SGER, the specified gas emitters regulation, we did so for 2017, so there will be a phase-in of the performance standards model in oil sands and other energy-intensive, trade-exposed industries beginning in 2018. We have a bit of a long runway here so that we can ensure that we get those performance standards right, that we've had those appropriate conversations with all of the sectors that are energy intensive and trade exposed.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you to the minister. We still didn't get the costs on that.

The government first said they wanted to stop funding carbon capture and storage and then discovered it wasn't such a bad idea after all, and we now find that CCS is absent from this plan. The government committed to continuing our CCS project, which has worked successfully in Germany, Australia, and Saskatchewan. Why is there a gap here? Why did this government continue with CCS if it was not to be part of this climate change plan?

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you to the hon. member for the question. You know, Alberta has made its fair share of investments in CCS, some would say more than our fair share. We were committed to working with existing projects that had signed contracts with the government, to see them through. Going forward, we intend to evaluate all of our options. There will be investments that we make in technology and innovation, Mr. Speaker. What this Alberta government is committed to is science. So if there are science-based reasons for those investments, if they reveal themselves over time, then we will consider those at that time, but we will not be following any more bright, shiny objects and looking for silver bullets.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think there's a song about that as well: Blinded by Science.

Again to the same minister: given that we are seeing very different approaches to reducing carbon emissions from coal versus carbon emissions from other sources, why is this government letting the market dictate and drive improved efficiency with other carbon emission sources, including noncoal energy generation – personal vehicles, for example – while not affording the coal industry the same chance to innovate?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, if the panel report was read closely, it is a phase-out of coal-fired emissions by 2030. The fact of the matter is that the panel recommended to us a number of ways that we could find to reduce the easiest emissions. That's why we took the position that we did on methane, that's why we are looking at energy efficiency, that's why we are engaging a coal-fired phase-out, and that's why we have implemented performance standards in energy-intensive, trade-exposed industries, to drive our emissions down. That's exactly what we will do. We will bend that curve and lead the country.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are fifteen seconds away from time, so I'd suggest that we move on.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation and Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am standing to provide notice of written questions and motions for returns to be dealt with on Monday. They are written questions 1 to 6 and motions for returns 1 and 2.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education and Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Bill 8

Public Education Collective Bargaining Act

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 8, the Public Education Collective Bargaining Act.

I've been here since 2004, and this is the first bill I've introduced.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a first time]

Bill 206

Recall Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today and request leave of the House to introduce Bill 206, the Recall Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 206 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education and Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present to the House the Budget 2015 Advanced Education questions and answers that weren't provided in estimates, so I offer them to the House now.

Mr. Mason: I'm probably not on your list, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: At least not on this list.

Mr. Mason: I'm just throwing you a curve here.

On behalf of the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry I would like to table the requisite number of copies of the written responses to questions the minister received on estimates at the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future.

Mr. Smith: I'm not on your list, either, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Actually, you are.

Mr. Smith: I would like to table the requisite number of copies of the correspondence that I referred to this morning.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. One is on naloxone availability and the take-home kits, reported in a recent newspaper article.

The second is a memorial tribute to the late Weslyn Mather, printed by a local media outlet.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Minister of Education and Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the requisite number of copies of my written responses in regard to the November 3 review of Alberta Culture and Tourism.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the previous questions that have been raised in this House regarding the Wainwright hospital and also the facility infrastructure capital submission from Alberta Health Services in 2011. I do have the five required copies here.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Section 46(1) of the Conflicts of Interest Act I would like to table with the Assembly the requisite number of copies of the annual report of the Ethics Commissioner of Alberta for the period April 1, 2014, to March 31, 2015.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, do you have a tabling?

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you. Another tabling, yes. I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of the Calgary YWCA's media release announcing the Great Gulf group of companies' no-fee lease extension of two years. I congratulate the leadership in both organizations for ensuring the YWCA continues to offer services for women fleeing violence and seeking social services.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Ms Phillips, Minister of Environment and Parks and Minister Responsible for the Status of Women, pursuant to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act the Environmental Protection and Security Fund Annual report, April 1, 2014, to March 31, 2015.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would make an observation for the information of the House. There was a practice that I was not familiar with. There is a lot that I have not been familiar with. There was no point of order raised, but there was a question to the chair of a committee. I intend to re-examine that process and make myself better informed of it.

We also have the Government House Leader, who has raised a point of order, I believe. The Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Items Previously Decided

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My apologies for not noting which member of the Official Opposition – thank you very much, hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills – was asking a question which reflected upon a decision of the House that had been previously made. The rule is that “a question, once put and carried in the affirmative or negative, cannot be questioned again.” This is from O’Brien and Bosc, House of Commons Procedure and Practice. “Such reflections are not in order because the Member is bound by a vote agreed to by a majority.”

So then this exception is a notice that the motion would be rescinded. I just wanted to make that point of order, that questions should not be about previous decisions of the House, and this question was.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Government House Leader. I have to dispute the point of order. I will take it under advisement for the future and have a better look at things.

My question wasn’t actually to have the government rescind a decision that had already been made. I was just pointing out to the House and to Albertans that we missed a great opportunity yesterday to pull back a little bit and just show a little bit of leadership from the House. That was my only point. I wasn’t asking anyone to rescind a decision that’s already been made in the House.

You know, further, I feel that I will stand up in the House and defend the interests of Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills and all Albertans at every opportunity when it comes to lavish spending by ministries.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you stand by the point you made. Is that correct? Are you standing by the point?

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, I will stand by the fact that I didn’t ask anyone to rescind a decision made by the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I just received some background and notes on this matter. I recognize that the House would prefer that I make a ruling immediately. I intend to just study the matter. I will address it, if the House is agreeable, next week.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 5

Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act

[Adjourned debate November 25: Ms Ganley]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to stand in the House today and speak to Bill 5, Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act. Under Bill 5 the Alberta government is significantly expanding public-sector compensation disclosure with the proposed public-sector compensation disclosure act.

Albertans deserve to know where their money is being spent. I think we can all agree on this. I’ll remind members present that this government is keeping its promise to increase transparency in the public sector and expand the sunshine list of publicly disclosed salaries. The bill would require disclosure from agencies, boards, commissions, postsecondary institutions, offices of the Legislature, physicians and other medical practitioners as well as health services entities, and other public-sector bodies. The bill would result in a salary disclosure primarily for those earning more than $125,000 per year, putting the focus on higher income earners and managers.

The disclosure will include employees of public-sector bodies governed by the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act. There are currently 157 of these entities, including public postsecondary institutions and Alberta Health Services. The legislation also extends salary disclosure to the offices of the Legislature. Finally, disclosure will also apply to employees of Covenant Health, and the legislation can be expanded by regulation to include other entities that receive significant public funds. The bodies will have to disclose the names and compensation of all employees who earn more than $125,000 in total compensation, including overtime, severances, and bonuses.

When it comes to board members, the vast majority of them do not receive a salary, as we well know. Instead, they often receive a per diem and rates for meetings. These positions have often been criticized as patronage appointments, so this government, in addition to reviewing the agencies, boards, commissions, and appointments, will ensure that the compensation for these positions is publicly available.

Now, specifically when it comes to physicians and other health service providers, Mr. Speaker, the act will also enable regulations to require the disclosure of fee-for-service payments as well as other payments made with public funds to physicians and other health services providers. Because physicians and other medical professionals are compensated through a variety of funding mechanisms, unique rules will need to be applied, and the details will be developed after consultation with physicians and will be laid out in the regulations.

Delivering honesty and ethics in government was a key priority in the Alberta NDP election campaign platform. Mr. Speaker, commitment 2.5 of the election platform states, “We will extend the sunshine list to include our province’s agencies, boards and commissions.” I’m proud to speak to the fact that we’re following through with our platform promises.

I’d also like to speak to the fact that the Justice minister has been very open on this. On November 6 in the Edmonton Journal the Justice minister stated, “The bill follows through on our promise to improve transparency in our public sectors.” This government is serious about increasing transparency, and this bill will show Albertans how their tax dollars are being spent.

It is with great honour that I speak to this bill, and I encourage all of the members of the House to support it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've been advised that the Government House Leader may have a request of the House with respect to a procedural matter that was overlooked.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I would request that we revert to Notices of Motions.

The Speaker: And you're asking for unanimous consent to do so. Is that correct?

Mr. Mason: Yes.

Mr. Fildebrandt: We don't know why.

Mr. Mason: Well, I did it wrong. Okay?

Mr. Speaker, I did not state the complete motion. It has to do with the written questions and motions for returns that the government has accepted.

The Speaker: As I understand his motion – I think this is the very first mistake that the member has made in the House – it was just simply a correlation between his words and what was on the record.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Notices of Motions

(reversion)

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) I am rising to advise the House that on Monday, November 30, written questions 1 and 6 will be accepted and written questions 2, 3, 4, and 5 will be dealt with.

Also on Monday, November 30, Motion for a Return 2 will be accepted and Motion for a Return 1 will be dealt with.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 5

Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act

The Speaker: We're back to the bill. The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has finished.

The next speaker is Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This bill has a special place in my heart. I'd like to say that I grew this bill from my heart outwards. There might be a copyright on that. In all seriousness, I am very pleased to see this bill come forward, and I thank the last member for his constructive comments. I am pleased to see that the sunshine list, that, I might say, I think I had some hand in getting started several years ago, is now going further.

When I served with the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, there was little to no public information available on the salaries or severances or contracts of government employers and contractors.

The fight for a sunshine list in the province got started with a fight over the disclosure of information for government staff. I wanted to know how much the chief of staff for the Premier of the day in 2012 was making. Normally the government allows anyone and everyone to access that kind of information using the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, or FOIP. I filed a FOIP for the Premier's chief of staff at that time to find their contract in order to find out what severance that member of her staff was making. It seemed like the kind of fact that I believed taxpayers had a right to know. If a large severance package was being paid out to top government officials with taxpayers' money, then the taxpayers paying for that bill had a right to know how much was being spent, which, I might add, was just the transparent thing to do.

Telling taxpayers how their money is being spent is an integral part of transparent and open government. When I FOIPed the Premier's chief of staff for the severance and contract, I was, surprisingly, denied. They gave me the runaround and kept making excuses as to why they could not or would not give me the information. That's when I knew that the information would probably be really interesting. This kind of information used to be public. In fact, previous chiefs of staff to the Premier had had their contracts and severance FOIPed, and it had been released, but for reasons that I still do not understand, I was denied the information.

We took this fight public and told Albertans that they were being denied information about how their money was being spent, that they had a right to know. To say the least, many Albertans were upset, so we launched a campaign to go further than this, not just to give us this one-off contract and make us fight for every single government employee's contract but, instead, for a full sunshine list to disclose the salaries, severances, and pension entitlements of senior government employees making $100,000 or more.

Instead of just releasing this one piece of information, the government did the right thing and created its first sunshine list. The government created a sunshine list to detail the salaries and severances of its senior employees. The sunshine list of that day was the seed for the bill that we are expanding upon today. That sunshine list was brought into place through regulation and orders in council. This will entrench it in law and expand upon it. Alberta was one of the few provinces without any sunshine list for its government employees. We have a relatively small sunshine list at the moment, but this bill is a good and strong step forward to a more fulsome sunshine list.

Alberta spends a lot on government employees, their salaries and benefits. In fact, half of Alberta's budget is spent on salaries and benefits. I'd like to say that 50 per cent of every tax dollar is being spent on salaries, but in fact it has grown to become quite more than that. The government is spending more than it is bringing in, and we are now on track to see the portion of our government spending focused on government salaries increase beyond 50 per cent. I'd like to say that it's beyond the point, but that is the point. The point is that if we are spending too much on salaries, Albertans have a right to know about it whenever government is spending their money.

This bill is a major step forward. We would like to see this bill include all 147 of the ABCs under the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act and all 52 agencies reporting directly to the government of Alberta. I would read every single one into the record, but one of my colleagues, I believe, will be doing that soon. I'm kidding. Not funny to the Government House Leader, I know. I'm not kidding also that this bill should include, though, every aspect of the government, all of the ABCs. Why would Albertans want to know only part of the government's large salaries?

Albertans want a full and comprehensive sunshine list. Albertans deserve to see a sunshine list that is comprehensive and includes the entire government.

Don't get me wrong. This bill is a major step forward and has the full support of the Wildrose Official Opposition, but we can make it better. This builds on what we have, and it accomplishes a lot of what we have been asking for. Our amendments will be constructive and helpful. Quite possibly, I think that the government may be welcoming some of the amendments that come, amendments that would expand the scope of the sunshine list but also ensure that certain areas that the sunshine list has been expanded to or has been proposed to be expanded to are done reasonably and not release the salaries of employees whom no one is asking to see the salaries of. The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon will be speaking on that in a bit. Either way, this is an improvement on a good piece of legislation, that needs to be implemented in this House fully and completely.

I don't mean to dwell on the past, but the past is a large part of the reason why we have a sunshine list in this province. Previous governments, not just in this province but across the country, have been accused of using patronage appointments to fill high-paying jobs with their friends. I'm sure that this government and any future government would not want to be accused of doing that, and I know that no government would want to be found guilty of giving patronage appointments. Jobs should go to those who are skilled and most qualified for the job, not because they are friends of the government or ran in an election for them at some point. Could you imagine a government that was voted out of office because they were constantly accused of doing this kind of thing, only to find out that the new government does it? That would be horrible, and I'm sure that citizens of that jurisdiction would not be happy about it.

An expanded sunshine list would ensure that governments cannot give patronage appointments without those who pay for their government salaries knowing about the appointment. Just as the ability to file a freedom of information request is a tool for the people to keep governments accountable, so too is an expanded sunshine list. Albertans should not have to file a freedom of information request for every single contract, for every single person in the government to discover who was being paid or overpaid for their position. When sunshine lists were created in other provinces, we discovered parking attendants being paid more than $100,000.

Mr. Mason: Where?

Mr. Fildebrandt: The Government House Leader has asked: where? The Toronto Transit Commission had toll booth attendants, I believe, who had salaries exceeding $100,000. As much as we value the work, it might be a bit overpriced. Without a sunshine list the odds of someone deciding to file a freedom of information request for that person's contract would be slim to none, but the public needs to know if there are positions that are not being reasonably paid.

The sunshine list helps to keep governments in check. It reminds us that if we are going to give friends in high places high-paying jobs, the public will know, and they'll have a right to respond however they so choose. There will be no way to hide this kind of government entitlement. Without every aspect of the government being covered by a sunshine list, there is always that one hidden place where this kind of entitlement could be hidden. That is why we need a full and comprehensive sunshine list. We need to ensure that no government is ever tempted to give their friends jobs that they're not qualified for.

I am in full support of this bill. My colleagues will be offering constructive and helpful amendments. Before we come to those amendments, I encourage all members of this House to vote for this bill in second reading.

The Deputy Speaker: Do we have anybody who wants to make a comment or a question under 29(2)(a)?

If not, then we will go on to the next speaker, the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you. Well, I suppose the real skill of a politician is reworking things, so you not only plant the seed, but you also have amendments to something that isn't really your idea. I'm always stunned at how the members across the way take credit for everything. [interjections] That's okay. It's all right. You're just here to help, and I appreciate that.

This bill is one of the commitments our government made. Many of the constituents I've met with and chatted with have also expressed to me their satisfaction at the fact that we are taking this seriously and we're moving forward right away. They've expressed that Albertans should know where their tax dollars are being used for public services. Transparency is essential to being accountable to Albertans. Public-sector entities are financed through tax dollars. We all know that transparency is essential.

Municipalities and school boards are governed by elected officials within that entity. They will be given the choice to publicly disclose their compensation. These two groups are accountable to their electorates and will be able to decide for themselves what best fits the public interest of those communities. The act enables but does not require disclosure of the names of and compensation paid to employees. They will be able to create their own rules around threshold amounts and other details around disclosure.

It should be noted, Madam Speaker, that school boards are already required by the School Act to disclose the compensation paid to board members, superintendents, and secretary treasurers. Municipalities are also already required to disclose the salaries of councillors, the chief administrative officer, and the designated officer of the municipality through the Municipal Government Act. In addition, these bodies will be required to disclose all remuneration for all members of their boards or other governing bodies.

Government of Alberta employees: this bill moves compensation disclosure for government of Alberta employees, currently a Treasury Board directive, into legislation. For government of Alberta employees the threshold remains the same, $104,754, excluding overtime. Including bonuses and other forms of remuneration will ensure that compensation cannot be withheld from disclosure. They will be able to create their own rules around threshold amounts and other details around disclosure.

If passed, the act would come into force upon royal assent, and the first disclosure under the act would be on June 30, 2016. Ministries will be consulting with entities on how best to implement some aspects of the act through regulations.

That is about it. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does anyone have a question for the hon. Member for St. Albert or a comment under 29(2)(a)?

If not, then go ahead, hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise on a bill that aims to bring greater transparency to our government. I know the previous government attempted this, and it never came to fruition. I only hope that this current government doesn't show the same bad habits like potentially giving patronage appointments to failed candidates. But that being said, this bill is a step in the right direction. Publishing public-sector compensation lists, a.k.a. sunshine lists, is a simple and important tool in the maintenance of accountability and transparency in democracy. That's why the Wildrose has always supported this.

There are over 52 agencies reporting directly to the government on top of 142 agencies, boards, and commissions. However, the $17 billion that funds Alberta Health Services has been shrouded in secrecy. I think I speak for all Albertans in expressing my interest in what's going on behind the curtain.

This is not an attack on the public sector or any of their agencies, boards, or commissions. In fact, it's quite the opposite. We appreciate the tremendous work they perform, and we understand that they are instrumental in the delivery of many vital services. But like many companies around this province right now, it's important, now more than ever, that we analyze how the organization is functioning. Sunshine lists will also be important moving forward. They will serve as a benchmark for government spending and make sure that we can understand how much the bureaucracy is bloating.

There are a lot of layoffs happening across the province right now. On this side of the aisle we hear about it from our constituents daily. Thousands of Albertans are struggling to make ends meet right now, and these people have a right to know exactly what their hard-earned tax dollars are going towards. Those same Albertans are the ones that are facing tax hikes on almost everything they buy, thanks to the carbon tax grab. They are the same Albertans that are facing a decrease in hours at work because the increase in minimum wage is making it harder for them and their employers to run their businesses.

So while the government is lining their coffers with new taxes on essentially everyone and everything, it is at least nice to know that they'll be showing who is making $104,000 and up for government employees and $125,000 per year for public-sector bodies. Truth be told, Madam Speaker, any number selected as a threshold limit is a fairly arbitrary number, but I can understand that bringing Albertans closer in line with other provinces in Confederation is a logical starting place. Now, if only the NDP would apply some of the same logic to the farm safety bill, there might be some real progress.

I've heard some speculation that introducing a sunshine list will cause a wage increase among employees near the threshold, that government employees will be trying to negotiate higher wages once they find out what their counterparts are making. That is a possibility. But what I believe to be just as likely is a compression of wages near the upper end of the pay scale. There are several examples of these.

Now, I'm sure everyone in the House well knows there is no pressure like public pressure. Sunshine lists themselves are a check and balance from runaway government salaries. However, if there are any agency departments that experience a peak in pay, I believe that public sentiment would push those wages downward, and I would hope that rather than the government raising other service providers up a level, they would correct the inflation. Madam Speaker, I cannot speak too confidently on that matter, though. After all, we do have a government that is starting to build a $3 billion slush fund.

I'm wondering why certain agencies, like the Environmental Monitoring Management Board and the Environmental Monitoring Working Group, seem to be exempt from this legislation. Is there a particular reason why these agencies should be held to a different standard than other groups receiving government funding? Again, not to detract from the work that these groups are performing, it only seems logical that other ABCs receiving government funding will be subject to the same set of standards. This will not only build trust from the public but will prevent the sentiment of favouritism.

Overall, I am pleased to see a step in the direction of transparency and accountability, a step that's been long overdue in this province. Madam Speaker, I'd like to express my support for this bill and the much-awaited sunshine list for the government and agencies, boards, and commissions and employees. Just as a friendly reminder to the Minister of Infrastructure: we're still waiting for your sunshine list.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Seeing none, I'll recognize Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to thank the government for bringing forward this piece of legislation. It is a good piece of legislation, and with some amendments I think that it could be a great piece of legislation. Every province in Canada excluding Quebec has a sunshine list of some form or another. We were one of the last, if not the last province, to enact a sunshine list.

During Redford's reign the government of Alberta sunshine list was created, which listed those making over $104,000. This allowed taxpayers to know who was being appointed to high-paying positions directly within the government's main decision-making centre. But this sunshine list was only for government of Alberta workers and excluded employees of the public-sector bodies. It excluded agencies, boards, and commissions governed by the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act. This bill extends the sunshine list to include those boards, agencies, and commissions. It's a great step forward towards comprehensive transparency.

The Wildrose has long championed and campaigned on extending the sunshine list to include the 142 agencies, boards, and commissions, or the ABCs. What I am confused about is why this government would choose to include most boards but exclude others. When the Redford government created this legislation, it was because Albertans were accusing them of giving patronage appointments and high severances. The sunshine list was created so that the government would be transparent with how much they are paying people in all high positions in the government.

Now, this bill sets to ensure that all high-paying positions that use taxpayers' money will be fully disclosed. At least, that is what I had hoped. But the speed of this session has not left us with much time to spend on these bills. It doesn't appear that all of the province's agencies, boards, and commissions are covered by this new sunshine list. I'm wondering why some things are excluded, and it's tough to come up with an answer. If the members opposite have more information about this, I would really, truly like to hear more details.

I have had the great pleasure of raising five children with my beautiful wife; several of them are grown up and have moved on in life. But before they grew up, they were just kids, and kids sometimes try and get away with things. They tell you a story about what really happened and how Jimmy down the street was the real culprit and how they were innocent little angels. Sometimes kids use tactics to try to get away with some things, and one of the tactics they try and use is to tell you 90 per cent of the story with hopes that you don't see the other 10 per cent.

Now, what I learned is that that 10 per cent is the key, that 10 per cent has the rest of the story in it, and how illuminating that 10 per cent truly turns out to be. The other 90 per cent sounds really good, and my kids really were little angels most of the time, but at this point you have to look for what they are not telling you, not what they are telling you but what they are not telling you. They give you so much information, hoping that you overlook that little bit of information left out. That's what I call the 10 per cent rule, which is: always look into the 10 per cent. True transparency and accountability demand more than 90 per cent; they require the last 10 per cent as well.

Transparency and accountability are extremely important, especially when it comes to spending other people's money. Since 50 per cent of taxpayers' money goes towards paying for salaries, accountability and transparency for salaries needs to be beyond reproach. I hope to hear more about who is included and not included and some of the reasons for that.

The last government was accused over and over again of not being accountable and transparent. They lost an election for it. I don't think that this government would like to be similarly labelled. We all want government to be accountable to Albertans. I congratulate this government on bringing in this bill and for taking this major step to make sure that the highest taxpayer-funded salaries are out in the open. I look forward to hearing more debate and to going through Committee of the Whole and hearing what my colleagues have to say.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. I was just wondering if you could expand on some of things with regard to Bill 5 that could be expanded on. You had alluded to some of the things that you thought could be changed or expanded on. Would you mind expanding on those things?

Thank you.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you to the member. I guess the question is: do we have an extensive list of the ABCs that are being added to this sunshine list? From some of the research that I've done, it shows that we do not have an extensive list. So the question remains: if there are some ABCs that are not added to this list, is there a way for the government to appoint patronage positions to these agencies, boards, or commissions? That's my concern. We want to make sure that this bill is right and that Albertans are right with how this bill goes forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other comments under 29(2)(a)?

If not, then I will recognize the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, it's regrettable that we even have to have a conversation about having a sunshine list in order to keep governments honest and responsible when compensating employees or people that have been appointed to agencies, boards, and commissions. It's not something that, you know, in the world that we live in . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Excuse me for a moment, hon. member.

Just a reminder to members that we're not in committee anymore, and you cannot walk around, visit with people from desk to desk. Please use the pages if you need to talk, or pass a note. Thank you. Go ahead.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

You know, I guess that when you come into the world of politics and you've lived most of your life outside of it, it's just something that you wonder. How does this happen, and what's the need for a sunshine list?

You know, it's regrettable that we all can probably point to past examples of governments from around the world and across Canada and perhaps even in Alberta that have lived up to the maxim or the idea that it's okay for governments to use political patronage and to belly up to the public trough in order to reward your political friends. I'm sure that for those of us that went to university and studied any kind of political science, we've all read stories of this kind of unacceptable practice.

So I am very happy that we have the opportunity today to speak to the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act, that we will have the opportunity as a provincial government to make our government better and to make the spending of our hard-earned tax dollars from our citizens more efficient and have more merit in the spending of that money. It's sad to realize that sometimes governments care more about rewarding political allies than ensuring that the hard-earned tax dollars of our citizens are being spent wisely and prudently. As I've said, it may be regrettable and it may be sad that this occurs, and it appears that a sunshine list is necessary, so I'm glad that we're looking at that today.

Bill 5, as I understand it, extends the public-sector salary disclosure to include employees of public-sector bodies, including agencies, boards, and commissions. This bill will require the disclosure of a salary over $104,000 for government of Alberta employees and taking it from regulations and into formal law. Board members of agencies will have to disclose all compensation that they receive. It adds physicians, independent offices of the Legislature, public postsecondary institutions, Alberta Health Services, teachers, and other organizations to this sunshine list.

We've heard other members say it from this side of the House. The Wildrose Party has long supported the addition to the sunshine list of agencies and boards and commissions. We campaigned on expanding the sunshine list to include the 142 agencies, boards, and commissions under APAGA and the 52 agencies reporting directly to the government of Alberta.

I guess this is one of those times when we can have common cause with our compatriots across the aisle. Indeed, I would note that the NDP also campaigned in the recent election, stating that they would extend the sunshine list to include our province's agencies, boards, and commissions. So when we may have had to disagree in some areas in the House today, it's nice to be able to agree today at this point in time.

You know, when you take a look at appointments to the agencies, boards, and commissions that serve this government, I think we would all agree that these appointments should be based on merit, that it should not be on whom you know but on what you can do and what you bring to the table. The compensation of those people from these agencies, boards, and commissions should be reflective of the duties that are entailed. The compensation should reflect the level of the job and the duties, and the things that they are expected to accomplish should be reflected in that compensation. But the compensation, Madam Speaker, should be also reflective of the need for good stewardship of the tax dollars that are collected by the government of Alberta from the taxpaying citizens of Alberta. That compensation should not be excessive. That compensation should be reasonable. The taxpayers have not only a right to know where their tax dollars are being spent but also that they are receiving good value for those tax dollars.

I believe that this bill will move us forward and take us closer to ensuring that not only do we have good stewardship of our resources but indeed that the people that are performing these services on behalf of Albertans are doing a good job. It's important for all Albertans to know and to have confidence that the remuneration provided to those who serve on government-funded agencies, boards, and commissions is fair compensation and that we are indeed being fair to the taxpaying citizens of this province.

While a sunshine list, I do believe, is not designed to ferret out the salary or stipend paid by the Alberta government to its public employees, not on every salary that is paid for by the government, it's designed, I believe, to shed light on spending that may be deemed as being excessive. I don't believe it's designed to threaten the privacy of your average, ordinary wage earner who is actively working in the public service. Rather, a sunshine list is designed to protect the taxpaying citizens and to ensure the good stewardship of public finances.

That is why I can support the threshold of disclosure in this bill. It's been set at $125,000, and that will be adjusted annually for inflation. I believe that it's a reasonable limit, a reasonable threshold. Other provinces have set thresholds. British Columbia, for instance, has set a threshold of around $100,000; Manitoba is at $50,000; Saskatchewan, $50,000; Ontario, around $100,000; Nova Scotia, $100,000; Newfoundland and Labrador is at $100,000 starting in April 2016. I think we can see that there are various thresholds that have been set across this country. While I suppose we could argue about whether the number in this bill is too high or too low, I believe, personally, that it sets a reasonable monetary threshold. This threshold will allow the people of Alberta to review those who receive significant compensation from public coffers while allowing for the privacy of average salaried employees of the government of Alberta and those people who serve on agencies, boards, and commissions overseen by APAGA.

There's a balancing act that we have to find here, one that allows for your average citizen, your average person serving on a board or a commission, to have the privacy that they deserve when it comes to their salary and their remuneration while at the same time ensuring that the financial remuneration is not excessive and that it is for the good of the people of Alberta.

There is at least one group of people that I believe is unfairly targeted in this bill, and that is teachers. Why teachers were singled out I guess only the government and the people that drafted this bill can answer. But this MLA and, I believe, this party that I represent believe that Bill 5 should be amended, that it should be amended to correct what I can only refer to as a puzzling aberration in Bill 5. I think that it is simply a matter of fairness and the reasonable desire for privacy by those people who are not receiving excessive compensation from the government of Alberta.

So while I take a great deal of pride in being able to say that I support Bill 5 and the creation of a sunshine list, I will be tabling an amendment to ensure that teachers are provided with the same threshold limit of $125,000 as the rest of the public employees in Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments? No questions or comments for the hon. member?

Any other hon. member who wishes to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to second reading of Bill 5, the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act. I'd like to congratulate this government on taking the first big steps to making more transparency from within the Alberta government. Wildrose has long been an advocate for this type of reform in order to help address Albertans' demand for greater transparency and accountability across government.

Currently the sunshine list only exposes six-figure salaries and contract disclosure exposes vendors over $10,000 but only in government departments, meaning that 142 agencies, boards, and commissions have avoided this level of scrutiny. Most notably, a $17 billion agency known as Alberta Health Services avoids all this. Every individual in this province has a right to know for what and how their money is being spent. I believe that this measure along with a few amendments will help to provide the taxpayers with this level of oversight. It is incumbent upon us as legislators to set these standards in the spirit of good governance and transparency. These measures should help to ensure that public-sector workers' salaries are based on merit and experience.

Going forward, there are a few obvious gaps that we will have to address in order to ensure that the privacy of our public-sector workers is respected. As my learned colleagues have already noted, while this legislation does empower school boards and municipalities to self-report, it does not set a definitive marker for the minimum thresholds that must be met in order to quantify a need for disclosure. The threshold should be universally applied across all the ABCs, and it should not be allowed to vary among different groups. If $125,000 is a standard for departmental employees, then there should be no reason not to extend that to all agencies, boards, and commissions.

Madam Speaker, while we support the passage of Bill 5, I believe that we need more time to fully examine the legislation to ensure that it strikes the right balance between transparency and protecting the rights of individuals. We have to remember that this is not a fire hall. We don't have to go very quickly on these things. This is a House of legislation. We need time to evaluate and read these things and to understand it and debate it.

Given the ATA announcement it is clear to us that stakeholders have not been properly consulted. This legislation affects thousands of Alberta public servants, and we should be honouring their hard work by giving this subject the due attention that it deserves. A few hours debating a bill does not allow for a fulsome debate, and it clearly has left some stakeholders out of the conversation, but that seems to be consistent with a lot of the NDP consultations.

Overall, the Wildrose supports Bill 5, and we will make amendments to further strengthen this legislation. Albertans have a right to know where their tax dollars are being spent, and transparency is essential to good governance for only with transparency can citizens fully understand their government's operations. I hope to see more common-sense pieces of legislation in the name of transparency and accountability from this government, and I urge them to listen to my learned caucus colleagues and to their suggestions to help strengthen this bill.

This government should know that the Wildrose, despite what the Member for St. Albert said, did campaign on several specific issues. We campaigned with an emphasis on health care and education. We campaigned on a fiscally responsible government that was transparent and accountable. That was a key point of our platform. The NDP platform: you got by on the good looks and charm of your leader. [interjections] Madam Speaker, we've got to get these guys to settle down. They've been drinking a lot of the Orange Crush, which is a really pretty drink – it's sparkling, and it's sugary sweet – but ultimately it has no nutritional value. We have to recognize that what they serve in the hospitals is ginger ale.

I'm glad to see this government taking all sorts of good suggestions from us. Certainly, I noticed that the Health minister was bragging during estimates about the $5 million in savings from cellphone plans. That was a Wildrose platform that the NDP candidate up in Fort McMurray laughed at, but I'm glad to see that this group, once they were in government, recognized the value of the Wildrose's suggestions. I really want to appreciate that, and I hope you continue to listen to us because we have work experience. Not only are we good looking and charming over here, but we are smart. We have business experience. We have life experience.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments for the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Bill 5, the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act, brings forward a level of transparency that we haven't seen in Alberta. People drawing a public salary are given a public trust to perform, and public officials work on behalf of the public, not for themselves. By allowing the salaries of the highest paid people to be made public, the public at large has a means of ensuring that they are held accountable when they are earning a salary that most of us would consider high.

Salary disclosures for agencies, boards, and commissions are the norm in other provinces. In fact, Ontario prints an incredible all-inclusive list annually. I remember when the former government brought out the first salary sunshine list. A few of the political staffers were pretty freaked out because their names were now in print and showing up, but in a government where there were problems with staffers, there was some accountability brought to bear.

Agencies, boards, and commissions are a convenient way to hide public expenditures, and Alberta Health Services, being the largest of these, will be given great exposure. This will be a significant start in the effort to figure out what is happening at AHS. Albertans will have the ability to see where a significant amount of their wealth is being spent and where it's going.

The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission has an enormous regulatory role, so large, actually, that at one point they were their own department, so there will be some light shone in this agency's dark corners for their salaries earned as well.

When the former government brought out its initial salary disclosure list, some MLAs trumpeted it as being the gold standard, but the Wildrose knew better. There are 142 agencies, boards, and commissions under the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act and another 52 agencies reporting directly to the government. I welcome the change that Bill 5 represents to allow the sunshine in on the agencies, boards, and commissions.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments for the hon. member under 29(2)(a)?

If not, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We, the Members of this Legislative Assembly, are part of a very long and, I think, a beautiful system of parliamentary procedures. Democracy is defined as being government of the people, by the people, and for the people. As such, every one of us in this room is a servant to those people: the people who pay the taxes, the people who work very hard in this province. A portion of their hard-earned money goes to provide governance, goes to provide public services to them.

I think that throughout the history of democracy in this province we have a wonderful heritage of people being elected to office, not just being elected to office but those who are elected to office and in government as well, then, having taken liberty over the years to appoint people, to create boards and agencies and appoint people, and also to determine what their salaries are going to be. In that moment of creating an agency and appointing people to run those agencies, all of a sudden the public has now been excluded, and these agencies are operating often at arm's length. Some of these agencies that we have with us today are even quasi-judicial, operating at arm's length, where there is not the degree of public scrutiny that all of us in this House are subject to.

I believe that in order for us to continue to be truly a democracy of the people and by the people and for the people, it only makes sense to me that those people who are living off the taxes collected from our people ought to be all right with letting those very same people know how their money is being spent. While I support this bill and applaud the government for bringing it forward, I as well as other members have voiced a concern over the exclusion of certain ABCs from the sunshine list. Frankly, given the number of ABCs that we have in this province, which is hundreds, with all of the people being paid on these ABCs, sometimes very high salaries, I think it is only fair to our people, the good people of Alberta, that those ABCs also be subject to the same scrutiny that every one of us in this room is subject to.

I've spoken with many MLAs before the election, during the election, after the election. I have yet to meet a member of this House, regardless of party, who has a problem with the good people of Alberta knowing what we make or what we spend in our expenses. I don't think anyone in here has a problem with that. The scrutiny comes with the job. We knew about it before we got here. We expect it. I don't think anyone in here would believe that that is somehow a negative, that the good people of Alberta know what we earn and the expenses that we incur in serving them.

By that same token, then, when it comes to these ABCs that are existing and the wages that are there, I know that in my riding during the election I had people coming up to me voicing great discontent because they had heard that certain senior people within some of the ABCs in our province were making $400,000, $500,000. The rumours were crazy. The problem with it is that we don't know for sure. We just don't have that information. It's not readily available. I think that in fairness to our people, the good people of Alberta, that pay their taxes and whose money is used to pay the salaries of people in government and government agencies, it is only fair and right and I'll say even a righteous thing that we expose to the public the reality of what people are being paid with their tax dollars.

So I support this bill. I believe it is an excellent first step, but I do hope that members opposite will see this as just a first step, that they will give serious consideration to amendments that are going to be coming forward regarding this good first step and that you will give serious consideration to whom this bill is serving. It is serving our people, our families, our neighbours, our friends, the people in our communities that are paying the taxes that support this great big machine called the government of Alberta. So I hope that in fairness to those dear people every one of us will consider very seriously any exemptions that this bill may offer and take very seriously the need of our people to know where their money is going, as they should in a free and open democratic process.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

If not, any other speakers to the bill? Okay. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The intent of the sunshine list is to provide information to Albertans about how their tax dollars are being spent. This information is intended to ensure that government spending is transparent at all levels. Through Bill 5 people who work for the public sector, who are paid by Alberta's tax dollars, and who earn more than $125,000 will have their names and compensations disclosed publicly. The current disclosure list for Alberta government employees is set at $104,000. This increase is probably an important one given that the wages in Alberta typically have been quite high. This bill is not about seeing who is making what but is about ensuring that government is using our tax dollars wisely.

Secondly, Bill 5 extends the public-sector salary disclosure sunshine list to include employees of public-sector bodies, including agencies, boards, and commissions governed by the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act, APAGA. Bill 5 adds physician fee-for-service disclosure, the independent offices of the Legislature, public postsecondary institutions, Alberta Health Services, and other large organizations.

Bill 5 does two things. It increases the number of people who will have their names and incomes reported while increasing the base income level that will be reported on. Wildrose has been in favour of reviewing and expanding the sunshine list to include the ABCs in Alberta for quite some time, and we all campaigned on it. By increasing the scope of the people who will have their income reported, Albertans will get a more complete picture of the use of their tax dollars. Payments to public-sector workers comprise a huge, huge amount of the 47-some billion dollar budget, and I'm thinking that it's somewhere in the area of $25 billion. I could be wrong there, but that's what I've heard. This level of transparency is a very positive step. Prior to this bill there were large pieces of the public-sector that were exempt from being on the sunshine list. Bill 5 provides a more robust approach, and we commend the members opposite for that.

However, there are some shortcomings to this particular bill. Specifically, not all of the ABCs are included. Now, it's one thing to – we would like to see a more comprehensive list of exactly which ones aren't included, and there may be a very good reason for those to be excluded. What we would like to see is the agency and the reason why it would be excluded. Again, there may be a very good reason for it; we'd just like to know what it is. You know, some of the ones that we see that are excluded are in Environment and Parks: Environmental Monitoring Management Board, Environmental Monitoring Working Group, and the Provincial Environmental Monitoring Panel. It would be really nice to know why those particular ones have been excluded, and there are others. Again, just for clarity and transparency I think that Albertans deserve to know why some of these boards were excluded and some were not.

As well as the admission of these ABCs, there is some confusion about how school boards and, in particular, how teachers will be affected by this legislation. Wildrose is very committed to making sure that the sunshine list is used for the purpose for which it was intended, allowing all Albertans to have a more complete understanding of how their tax dollars are being used to pay public-sector employees. To that end, we will and I will support this bill. We will be tabling an amendment to ensure that teachers are treated the same as any other public-sector employee, and if they earn over the $125,000 threshold, their names will be published as part of the sunshine list but not below that threshold. I think that they should be treated the same as every other employee in Alberta.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments for the hon. member?

Seeing none, are there any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 5. This is quite interesting. I remember that this was part of the Wildrose campaign platform, I believe, in 2012, so this is actually really interesting, to see this come to light here in the House and to be a part of this. I mean, for all of us that's really great that we're doing this. You know, taxpayers do have a right to know where their dollars are being spent. Our salaries are public knowledge, which is really great, and this is an excellent extension into the transparency of this government. It helps to create a little bit of trust as well, which is something that I think that we're really, really struggling with. This is a really great step.

I am curious as to why the threshold in this bill is $125,000. In other jurisdictions it's about $100,000 or $50,000. I think that $50,000 is probably too low. Some justification for this would be great. Perhaps, you know, there's some protection in that area, but that would be good to know.

I think that there's a bit of a loophole, and I'd like for the members opposite to be open to amendments on this bill, just to make sure that the legislation that we pass through this House is actually really solid – right? – something we can all be proud of in the long term and that nobody will be embarrassed by. I'm really hoping that we can work together on that moving forward.

You know, there are a couple of risks with this bill. One of them is that this can lead to higher public-sector wages as individuals know what their counterparts are making, hopefully, of course, only over and above or when you make the sunshine list at $125,000.

Disclosing fee for service is unlikely to be popular amongst physicians. I know that's been addressed, so I certainly hope there will be more conversations surrounding that particular area.

Municipalities and school boards are exempt. I think school boards – certainly, in my office I've had a number of concerns with the specifics around that particular piece, so that's something that needs to be discussed as well. I think that's one of those loopholes that exist.

The sunshine lists do not highlight value for money or publish reasons behind compensation for the said individuals listed. For example, overtime: our health care system certainly has many workers that are taking advantage of overtime because it's absolutely necessary and that's what we need. But will this discourage said workers from participating in overtime activities, where we need this but they may not be so inclined to take on these extra hours for fear of having their information disclosed publicly? Certainly, that's something that we need to consider in the debate of this bill.

In 2010 the Nova Scotia NDP government introduced public salary disclosure legislation which set the threshold at $100,000. Again, why is Alberta different? I mean, Alberta is certainly a much different province than Nova Scotia. Our salaries are generally much higher.

I very much look forward to the member across speaking to this bill for Albertans and his constituents because you certainly have some things to say. I am definitely interested in debating this with you, so, please, I encourage you to speak to this as well.

You know, I'd just like to point out that Bill 5 was really, truly a Wildrose idea. I heard earlier that maybe it wasn't. I don't really know if it matters or not.

That is, I think, mostly touching on what I'd like to say. Let's discuss this. I encourage these members opposite to be open to amendments and to really make this a solid piece of legislation that we can be proud of moving forward. I commend you for bringing up this bill in the first place, but let's make it great.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments for the member? If not, then the next speaker to the bill, Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, good afternoon, everyone. A pleasure to get up this afternoon to speak to Bill 5. Recognizing that the time is late and everyone's probably tired, I'm sure the attention will be, as usual at this time of day, probably minimal, but I'll try to get through some of the points that I do have. I've got some stuff here, hon. Minister of Education, that actually you might be interested in this afternoon. [interjection] Well, a pleasure to work with you again today.

Anyway, we've seen a lot of things come through in the past few weeks from the government. But certainly with this one here – I hate to say it – I really do want to say that I can support this one. This one seems to be something that we needed to see for some time. We've seen in recent years that it's one thing to talk the talk on transparency but another thing to walk the walk. One of the best things about Bill 5, in my estimation, is that it does not seek to reinvent the wheel. Too often when it comes to instituting reform to ensure greater transparency and accountability, we seek to implement transformational change in short periods of time. Too often these initiatives are victims of their own ambitions, though, and shelved indefinitely sometimes. Bill 5, on the other hand, takes a system that is working and improves upon it.

The Alberta sunshine list, requiring the disclosure of government employee salaries, has been in place for several years, actually. I understand that in the beginning this reporting made some quite uncomfortable. Since then I think we've seen the benefits of transparency outweigh such concerns. Thanks to the sunshine list, Albertans have been able to have fully informed and, I dare say, frank conversations about the former government's severance packages.

I can tell you as a guy that has been around here for three and a half to four years that it has been a topic that has raised the ire of a lot of people over many, many days. For instance, with the update made public in July of this year, we learned that the severance payments to four senior government managers ranged in size from $104,000 to $143,000. This information helps inform the ongoing public debate regarding the expenditure of tax dollars and helps us as MLAs to fulfill our mandate and act as faithful stewards of taxpayer dollars, and that's pretty important.

One of the glaring shortcomings, though, of the sunshine list to date is the fact that it only requires the disclosure of salaries for a single stream of government employees, usually. Expanding the requirement of all agencies, boards, and commissions will vastly improve this system, it sounds like, making it fairer for both the employees and the public at large.

The bottom line for me, though, is that transparency in all forms of business is essential, including government. Only with transparency can a citizen be fully informed about the operations of government. Without transparency there can be no accountability. This is a core Wildrose principle, of course, and expanding the scope of the sunshine list was a policy on which I was proud to campaign earlier this spring. We definitely were going around from house to house and town to town throughout my large riding to talk about this on frequent occasions, and it certainly did get a lot of good response when it was brought up.

Setting a threshold for disclosure of salaries is fair, providing that we ensure that the same threshold applies to all employees. I've received concerns from several constituents recently regarding the specific wording of this legislation, however, which may allow those employees with compensation far below the $125,000 threshold to be included on the list. I think this concerns all of us. It's been raised I think here in the House this afternoon from several speakers, and it certainly has a lot to do with the education world and some of these other people, municipalities, et cetera. At the core of the process, though, is a commitment to balance the need for transparency with the privacy rights in a just and fair manner. If we allow thresholds to be applied inequitably, it calls this commitment into question.

At the same time we must recognize that while government transparency is more about knowing how much everyone gets paid, true transparency requires that we conduct the business of the House in such a manner as to ensure that citizens outside this House have the opportunity to better understand the issues with which we grapple. In the case of Bill 5 I know some doctors, as an example, who've raised concerns that the data released by the sunshine list is oversimplified, that citizens reading the list, for example, may not be able to recognize the difference between a medical practitioner's revenue and a physician's personal income.

This is probably a valid concern and points to the fact that transparency requires more than just information. It also requires time to understand this information more thoroughly. This is probably something we can give them. By taking more time to discuss government bills and policies, we can give citizens a better opportunity to get informed and understand the issues.

The key is more time. In 2014 Alberta MLAs sat for only 42 days, the second fewest in Canada. By comparison, the Legislatures in Ontario and British Columbia sat for 77 and 71 days, respectively. Meanwhile Members of Parliament were allotted 127 days in the House of Commons. This isn't improving under this new government, by the way. I think we're currently on pace to sit for 42 days again this year. We can debate how many days are needed, but I can tell you this: true transparency requires more than 42 days.

I will be supporting Bill 5 because I support the initiative to make the government more transparent. It's a step in the right direction, but let's not congratulate ourselves too much. There's a lot more we can do to ensure that Albertans have an opportunity to discuss their government's operations. As faithful stewards of taxpayer dollars it is incumbent on us to continue fighting to make this institution more transparent and more accountable.

Thank you for your time this afternoon. I hope that contribution makes us think a little bit more thoroughly about what we're about to discuss here in the next few days on Bill 5.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My fellow colleague mentioned transformational change. He delved into it a little bit. I'm hoping he could give some examples of some legislation that was maybe not well thought out, that was put through too quickly, and some of the unintended consequences of that action.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, thank you for the question, hon. member. Having not actually delved into this one too deeply, I may not have a lot of answers to your question, but I can say this. Over the past few years we've seen an awful lot of this topic come up, whether it's been in some of the contractual things that the previous government of the day had entered into and some of the other kinds of different professions that came up under scrutiny at some of our Public Accounts meetings and so on and so forth.

This has been something that the public has been extremely well aware of. The press has followed it from day to day, from week to week, from month to month, from year to year. Having this kind of transparency is going to definitely – definitely – improve the situation in that regard. Certainly, there has been a lot of controversy, and some of the professions, including the doctors, some of our educators, municipalities, have always been against this sort of thing, so it will definitely be interesting to see how this unfolds as we process this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

If not, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler on the bill.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I, too, rise to echo support for Bill 5. I believe that there is potentiality for some changes and some amendments to come forward. The Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act at long last talks about government agencies, boards, and commissions, some much larger than others, which will have to report salaries over $125,000, much like what's happened in the government of Alberta employee realm. Madam Speaker, the Wildrose campaigned throughout the election on expanding the sunshine list to include 142 agencies, boards, and commissions under the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act as well as 52 agencies that report directly to the government of Alberta.

Now, some out there may say that this legislation replaces the former Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin's gold standard in disclosure, but I would be very careful in calling this a platinum standard in disclosure. There still appears to be some impurities in the molten metal that need to be removed. For instance, there is discussion about the Environmental Monitoring Management Board. I'd like to know: if they are making a six-figure salary, would this be included in that list, Madam Speaker? Then there is the Banff Centre board of governors. The facility for artists in spectacular Banff is an incredible asset to operate. Most people do not realize that this is a public asset, not a private or Parks Canada operation.

With that, Madam Speaker, I'd like to indulge the Government House Leader and the Minister of Advanced Education and also the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. He and others in the Chamber may remember a day when the Member for Drumheller-Stettler rose in the House and spoke in regard to the public disclosure of a member for Tourism Alberta. There was a discussion in regard to the dispensation of an expense account regarding a tuxedo. There was a considerable amount of discussion about that. It was only discovered through the freedom of information act, but it was a form of transparency of government spending, and it was sorely needed.

When that employee expensed his tuxedo, a lot of people thought that it was simply as a result of a highbrow attitude of elitists. Therefore, we need to know some of what those elitists' salaries are. Bill 5 will provide some change. It's something that's important when you're dealing with taxpayers' dollars. I ran in the election on open accountability of taxpayers' dollars.

Other academically inclined organizations like the public universities will fall under this legislation and also open themselves up to scrutiny. I've been hearing for some time complaints from professors at the university for being nickelled and dimed on approval of the use of their per diems for attending conferences to present their research while administrators make big salaries. Opening up the salaries to scrutiny will enable these agencies' boards of governors to see the full picture and maybe roll back the compensation and redirect that money elsewhere, maybe to professors' salaries or applied research, maybe even to grants and, ultimately, bursaries to students. I know my colleague for Calgary-Foothills highlighted excess salaries at the Alberta Innovates corporations. Without having to dig through annual reports, those top salaries will be available in one easy-to-find list.

Albertans and, indeed, Albertan taxpayers have a right to know where their tax dollars are being spent. Transparency in government, Madam Speaker, is essential. Only with transparency can citizens fully understand their government's operations. The Member for Strathmore-Brooks talked about his involvement in the Canadian Taxpayers Federation and their believing that we can have open accountability and have legislation, freedom of information for the taxpayers of Alberta.

Madam Speaker, I think Albertans would appreciate the upgrade in transparency and accountability that Bill 5 provides in spite of some of its flaws. There may be some amendments going forward. I'd just like to reiterate again that I present support for Bill 5.

The Deputy Speaker: You have a question under 29(2)(a), hon. member?

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yes, I do. The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler and I have spent some time here. We've experienced an awful lot of this, as I said earlier, and he alluded to a couple of the items before. I wondered if he might have a moment to help us recall when one of the former ministers – was it the minister of transparency and accountability? – had a certain standard that he always demonstrated in the House? Would he like to, you know, enlighten us on that one?

Mr. Strankman: Well, Madam Speaker, it doesn't come as immediately to mind as the event regarding the minister of tourism at the time. But it was brought forward as a – you know, I remember the recantations of the minister, talking about gold standards. There was a good deal of humour on this side of the Chamber of the understanding of exactly what that was.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other questions or comments?

Seeing none, another speaker to the bill?

Seeing none, we will call the question.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, November 30, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us reflect. Fellow members, this past week we lost a former member from the 26th Legislature and then one of our own, the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway. Yesterday many of our fellow members attended the memorial and heard his family and friends express heartbreaking words to describe the loss of light in their lives. Although it's hard to make sense of the events of this past week, the tragedy of a great life lost too soon, it is clear that this gentle giant of a man brought light to countless lives here at home, abroad, and indeed to this Assembly. Let us take a moment to remember him and what he would be asking of us as we move forward.

Hon. members, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark. I would invite all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Hon. members, I believe that our former member who has left us would have been singing that national anthem with pride.

Sergeant-at-Arms, would you please march off the colours of Alberta.

Please stand.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms removed the Alberta flag that was draped over Mr. Bhullar's desk and marched it out of the Chamber]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Thomas Palaia, consul general of the United States of America. The consul general took office this past summer, and we're delighted to welcome him on his official visit to Edmonton. The bonds between Alberta and the United States run deep. The U.S. has long been our largest trading partner. In 2014 alone Alberta's exports to the U.S. were more than $109 billion. We have strong linkages in energy, agriculture, and forestry and countless ties in education and culture as well. I had the pleasure of hosting Mr. Palaia at a luncheon earlier today. We discussed areas of mutual interest and the potential to build on our relationship, especially when it comes to leadership on the environment. Mr. Palaia is seated in your gallery. He has risen, and I ask all members of the Assembly to give him the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: I understand that we have some schools with us today. The Minister of Health and Minister of Seniors.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the MLA for Edmonton-Riverview and fellow cabinet minister I'm happy to introduce a group of students from Grandview Heights school. There are 35 visitors in the audience. Ms Levesque as well as Mrs. Chan, Ms Stromberg, and Mr. Li, would you and the students please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Legislature a group of grade 5 and 6 students from Aurora elementary school in Drayton Valley. There are too many guests for me to introduce individually. I want to assure this Assembly that Aurora school is an amazing place full of dedicated teachers and students totally engaged in their learning. Over the years I've been welcomed on many occasions to the school as I've run basketball clinics and programs for the elementary students in Drayton Valley out of Aurora school. In the group today are former colleagues, former students, children of students I have taught, and to top it off, there is even one student that goes to the same church as myself. This is my family. May I ask the students and staff of Aurora school to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. Minister of Health and Minister of Seniors, do you have another introduction?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House a group of medical students who are here today to advocate for changes to the immunization policy in Alberta. These medical students have a rich history of advocacy related to their future patients and to the health of all Albertans. They include Justin Khunhkhun. He is here as the chair of the Political Advocacy Committee at the University of Alberta. We also have John Van Tuyl, senior chair of the Political Advocacy Committee at the University of Calgary. Both are joined by their student colleagues, who share in this Assembly's passion for public health. I ask that they rise in addition to the other members of the delegation and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly today two people without whose love and support I would not be here today, my parents, Ruthven and Annette Shepherd. My father arrived in Alberta from Trinidad in 1967, my mother from the Netherlands in 1948. They are proud Canadians, who've worked hard to build good lives here and now in retirement freely give of their time, most notably in support of their church community and their 13 grandchildren. While our political views may differ and from time to time we've had the differences that parents and children do, I know that I've always had their love and their support, as evidenced by their presence here today. With them here today is my niece Brooklynn Shepherd, who I look forward to the opportunity to speak a bit more about when we have an opportunity to speak about Bill 205. While they have risen, I'd like to ask everyone to provide them with the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Dan Jolivet. Dan is one of my constituents, who lives in Belle Rive. He's extremely interested in government and politics and has volunteered on numerous political campaigns, including the most recent, Janis Irwin's federal election campaign, as well as my own in Edmonton-Decore. Of course, I would like to ask Dan to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a privilege and an honour to introduce to you and through you some very hard-working folks who live and reside in my constituency. I'd like to introduce you to Mr. Dave Plett, the CEO of Western Feedlots, and Melissa McWilliam, the resources manager of Western Feedlots. Some folks travelled with them today to talk a bit about Bill 6 outside on the Legislature steps, and those would be Darlene McWilliam, James Palin, and Bernie McWilliam. I ask them to rise and this House to give them the warm traditional welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. and Mrs. Stephan and Mira Quintin. I've had the pleasure of knowing them for quite some time. Stephan and I have a shared mutual interest in going door to door and making phone calls, which we've done quite a bit of this year. Mira, of course, is a proud employee of the government of Alberta, and I'm glad that she gave up her lunchtime to spend some time with us in the Assembly today. With them is Mira's mother, Stojanka Lakovic – I hope that I've got that reasonably close – who is visiting all the way from Serbia. I ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the staff of the Rutherford constituency office, Thomas Bonifacio and Vicki Anderson, two very hard-working people who spend their day amending all of my errors. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly four fantastic people whom I love and admire. First of all, I would like to introduce to you my two youngest children, Savannah and Justus. I have five children, but these are the only ones that are still at home. Next, I would like to introduce to you my beautiful wife, Angie. She has been the love of my life for 25 years, and I look forward to the next 50 years with her. Last but not least, I would like to introduce my mom. She is the one who, when I was young, was my greatest champion. She was the loudest cheerleader at the basketball games and the most embarrassing person at sappy movies. These four drove up today in order to show their solidarity with our farm brothers and sisters. My wife is a city girl, just so you know. I say this to show that this movement is supported not just by rural Albertans but by everybody. If you could rise and receive the traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I have others.

The Speaker: My apologies. Please proceed.

Mr. Hunter: Sorry. We don't want to forget anybody here.

I'd like to introduce to you Brian Hildebrand. He's a third-generation farmer from Skiff, Alberta, who farms with his wife and five children. He is here today because he is concerned about the implications that Bill 6 could have to his family farm. Brian's grandfather immigrated from Ukraine after the Russian Revolution in search of freedom and opportunity and purchased the farm where Brian now lives. Brian is hopeful that his children will follow in the footsteps of his grandparents Gerhard and Maria and his parents, George and Irma, and continue the family passion and business of providing Albertans, Canadians, and the world with food that is produced in a safe and responsible way.

I'd also like to introduce Don Penner from Grassy Lake. He's a third-generation farmer. Don and his wife, Jennifer, raised three children on their irrigated dryland farm. His daughter and son-in-law, Ben and Rebecca Thomas, now farm with him and are here also because of their concerns with Bill 6. Ben and Rebecca have three small children, who are enjoying growing up on the farm.

Tim Willms from Grassy Lake is a third-generation farmer who started farming with his father when he was knee-high to a grasshopper. Tim farms both irrigated and dryland with his wife, Michelle, and three children. Tim and Michelle hope their children will follow in their footsteps on this 90-year-old safe and amazing farm.

Jason Saunders from Taber is a fourth-generation grain farmer. Jason began farming with his father, where he learned safe and best practices from three generations before him. He has two adolescent children, who are enjoying the opportunity that farm life provides them. Jason has served on numerous boards and commissions and is a great advocate for agriculture in Alberta.

I'd like them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

Mr. Cooper: You got Whac-A-Mole.

Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise and introduce a good friend of mine as well as a constituent of the magnificent constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. Devin Hartzler is a farmer in the Carstairs area, where he farms on a multigenerational farm. He has a number of children, all of whom also have a passion for farming. There's no one in this entire room that wants a safe farm more than Devin Hartzler. He's here today to express some of his concerns about the direction that this government is going, and I really appreciate and value his long drive here today. I ask that Devin rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you three gentlemen from Foremost, also a long drive away, that also run very, very successful family farms. Whether it's the 1,600 e-mails I received since Friday or the 1,500 people on the front steps two hours ago opposed to the implementation of Bill 6 – the value that these gentlemen and these farms have provided to all Albertans. I would like to ask Dan Mehlen, Ross Scratch, and Wade Sturtevant to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A great pleasure for me today to introduce to you and to the House my incredibly hard-working office manager, Shannon McClennan-Taylor. Shannon has worked for me for three years coming up in January. Diligent, compassionate, and very competent, keeping my office and sometimes my life running smoothly, she's joined by her husband, Lonnie Taylor, who is assistant manager at Atmosphere in downtown Calgary. Both are great assets to me and my constituency. I wanted to recognize his five years of service as a member of the Social Media Committee with the Calgary Stampede and the last three years with me in Calgary-Mountain View as well. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:50

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other guests for introduction today? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you for the indulgence, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to introduce to you and through you indeed to all members of the Legislature some of Alberta's fine farming families. These are the same farming families that have taken time out of their hectic schedules to exercise their rights to play opposition to actions, potentially, in the Legislature. They deserve to be acknowledged. They are Shandele Battle, who has achieved 21,000 electronic petition signatures, and her husband, Ted; my assistant, Laura McDonald, from Hanna; Faye Hibbs; Laurie Painter; Guy Neitz; Doug Larson; John Gattey; Daryl Bouisson; Danny Hozak; Travis Olsen; James Palin; Justin Griffith and Dawn Griffith along with their children Cordel and Mandy. We also have Neal and Vanessa Roes with their toddlers Brinley, Tenley, Jurta, Riber, and Kywnn. Also, we have Vaughn Roes with that same family. We also have Kevin James and Pat James, Vernon Snethun, Jason Wilson, and Jared Dougan. Would those of you who were able to make it into the Assembly please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Her Majesty's Leader of the Official Opposition.

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation Consultation

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, all my questions today are about trust. When a government loses the trust of voters, it becomes much harder to govern. This NDP government is determined to squander whatever trust Albertans were prepared to give them. First, they attacked our economy with tax increases and more regulation. Second, they went after the energy industry with the royalty review. Third, they went after a $3 billion carbon tax, that no one campaigned on, and now they want our farmers and ranchers to trust them. What has this government done to keep the trust of Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the opportunity to address the question. Certainly, we are working to make sure that we have opportunity to collaborate with Albertans themselves. I want to thank my colleagues for taking the time to actually attend the rallies that have been spoken of. I think it speaks to our values in wanting to work collaboratively with individuals to make sure that we set the record straight around what specifically this legislation means and making sure that we get it right in regulations moving forward.

Mr. Jean: Sounds like we might actually have consultations coming.

There are over a thousand farmers and ranchers here today because they don't trust this government to protect their way of life. They know that this government has zero hands-on experience in farming or ranching. They also know that this government is too arrogant to actually listen to farmers. They know that the government ministers and MLAs say one thing, but the government's own information sheets and the bureaucrats who are running the come-and-be-told meetings say the exact opposite. Why should Alberta farmers and ranchers trust this government at all?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have been informed that there was some misinformation shared by officials at the meetings. That is being rectified. We will have cabinet ministers in attendance at all of the consultation meetings moving forward, and we are very happy to engage with the individuals.

In terms of assertions that have been made about people not having any hands-on farm experience, that's simply not true, Mr. Speaker. There are lots of different types of farms in Alberta. I myself actually happen to be a shareholder in a farm. We own our family farm, that was homesteaded by my grandparents, and I'm very proud of that and to continue with that legacy.

Mr. Jean: Well, I'm sure that if your grandparents were here, they'd have something to say about this particular lack of consultation.

Mr. Speaker, there are 45,000 family farms. I doubt you could even find a hundred of them who are prepared to give this government a blank cheque on regulating every aspect of farm life. Everyone is telling the government to go back to the drawing board. Even left-wing commentators are saying: tap the brakes; slow down. Farmers don't trust this government because they know that this government doesn't trust farmers. If this government won't listen to farmers, will they at least listen to their friends and apply the brake to their plans to hurt Alberta's farm families?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we are also upset about some of the ways that this has unfolded, that there has been misinformation shared by some members, even, of this House about what the actual legislation is about. We're working to make sure that what we do is that if some tragic incident does happen, farmers don't have to worry about losing their farm and that the family members of the person who may have been harmed don't have to worry about losing their only source of income. This is legislation that's in place in every other jurisdiction in Canada, and we're working to make sure that we can bring Alberta in line with what was done 98 years ago.

Mr. Jean: News flash: you're in control of this mess.

The NDP government has a strange definition of consultation when it comes to farmers and ranchers. They have written a law that allows cabinet to do whatever it wants through regulations, and their answer to concerns is: trust us. Well, every farmer who attended their first meeting knows that no consultation is happening. Not only that, but the civil servants at that meeting had no answers for the thoughtful questions put to them by farmers. That is not consultation; that's telling them how it's going to be. Why is this government treating farmers and ranchers like second-class citizens?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We certainly heard the feedback loud and clear from the members in participation in Grande Prairie. Tomorrow there is a consultation happening in Red Deer. There will be cabinet ministers in attendance as well as a number of other supportive parties. We think that the questions that have been asked have been very valid and deserve to have thoughtful responses, and that's one of the reasons why we've worked to expand the number of consultation meetings and to make sure that members have access directly to the ministers implicated.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jean: Every single person wants safe farms, but anyone with real-world experience in agriculture knows this is a very complicated issue. Farms and ranches are so much more than workplaces. The rules for a white-collar office or a factory have to be different than those that apply to a 24-hours-a-day, 365-days-a-year farm or ranch. If this government actually did any consultation whatsoever, they would know that, and if ministers and government MLAs attended the come-and-be-told meetings, they would know that. Why isn't this government actually consulting with Alberta's farmers and ranchers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are going to be attending all the meetings. There will be cabinet ministers in attendance tomorrow night. [interjections] I know that the question was asked, and we already gave the answer in an earlier question, but it was asked again, so I'm giving the House the respect that they deserve in knowing what's going to be happening moving forward.

I want to thank people for wanting to build this in partnership. I know that there are many farmers, including farmers in my own family, who want to make sure we get this right and that everyone can rest assured at the end of the day. We are absolutely committed to making sure that we address the various types of farms in consultation with farmers.

Mr. Jean: It's very simple, Mr. Speaker. Stop the bill. Put the brakes on. Listen to farmers and ranchers. Don't pass it next week. Any farmer who attended the first information meetings on farm labour changes quickly figured out that it wasn't a consultation meeting. They also figured out it wasn't a place where they could go for any answers whatsoever. Any detailed questions were met with: oh, I don't know. Any government that introduces a bill that impacts the lives of 45,000 Alberta farm families but can't answer detailed questions has got it wrong. Stop. Will the minister just admit that she has messed up this issue, and will she slow down this bill and actually go back and consult with farmers and ranchers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard from farmers and ranchers, and I want to thank them for speaking up and making sure that we work together to support their livelihood moving forward. One of the reasons why we've added so many new consultation opportunities is because there has been significant demand as well as making sure that cabinet ministers are there in the future and that there will be opportunities to get answers. There is consultation happening tomorrow, and there will continue to be consultation for many days to come. I think that farmers are showing great leadership in this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Royalty Review

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A hundred thousand Albertans are unemployed, and the NDP remain stubbornly attached to their risky ideological agenda. Carbon taxes, business taxes, massive job losses: it's all beginning to add up. There is perhaps no better reminder than the NDP's royalty review. Over the weekend a panel member had this message to send about the end product. Quote: I am confident that segments of the industry will remain competitive. Unquote. Translation: companies will be shutting down. How can Albertans possibly trust this Premier after the economic chaos the NDP is bringing to our province?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question. We are working with industry to ensure that we optimize our royalty system to maintain competitiveness and create long-term sustainability for industry as well as for Albertans. The panel will submit its advice to the government in the near future. We look forward to receiving their feedback and making sure that we are acting as the owners of the resource and that it's certainly supporting all Albertans.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Well, here's another quote from the royalty review panel member: whenever you have a change of this magnitude, there are always elements of the industry that cannot be competitive. Unquote. We know the carbon tax will handicap companies. Oil well drillers have already said that without lower royalty rates, companies will be running out of this province, and now panel members are cushioning Albertans for another crippling blow to jobs in the energy sector. It's making Albertans sick. Does the Premier realize the damage her policies are doing to people's lives, or does she just not care?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're absolutely working with the royalty review committee. They will be submitting their report by the end of the year. One thing that I think is really clear to all of us on this side and, hopefully, some members on the other is that a good economy is good for Albertans. The two go hand in hand. We are certainly working with them to make sure that we take the feedback that's being gathered into careful consideration. We want a healthy energy sector for many years to come to benefit all of us.

Mrs. Aheer: We hope this idea of feedback will transfer to some of these other issues we're talking about.

Jon Schroter, the head of Victory Well Servicing, has already had to move out of Alberta because of this toxic investment environment, calling the NDP, quote: one more reason why the western Canadian oilfield is slowly going to die. Unquote. Mission accomplished for the NDP. For other small to mid-sized companies still trying to invest in Alberta, all signals are that this royalty review will either make them shut down or move operations. Premier, that's fewer jobs for Albertans out of work; that's less money here in Alberta. Does anyone in the NDP understand?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're really proud of the fact that we're continuing to work with industry on a variety of initiatives, including the royalty review as well as the climate leadership strategy, and that was endorsed astoundingly by a number of individuals in the sector, including CAPP. They want to make sure that they have a strong product that they can sell internationally. Part of that means a strong reputation internationally, and the only way we're going to have that is if the fearmongering on the other side stops and we start working for what Albertans want, which is good Alberta product and good long-term jobs.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Public Consultation

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By now we've all learned about this government's farm and ranch consultation process. It consists of a few consult phone calls, some trust-us-we-know-everything meetings, and little sharing of the feedback received. This government only hears what they want to hear and already agree with. To the Premier: for the benefit of rural Albertans who are wondering why they were not consulted before legislation was forced upon them, what can you tell us about what your government's policy for consultation should be?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. I know that after 44 years sometimes it takes time for change and what the processes are going to be moving forward. We made it really clear after the first meeting that we are going to be having cabinet ministers at the consultation meetings moving forward. We've increased the number of consultations, and we're going to be making sure that we have an opportunity to engage with individuals. Certainly, the member opposite would have every opportunity to bring recommendations forward to government or to the democracy committee moving forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's talk about change. When I was labour minister, our government, including the agriculture minister of the day, met with farm and ranch communities on farm safety, and we were at the point where our discussions were leading to overall acceptance of some new rules. Since then, this government has gone in the opposite direction and washed away all of the trust and goodwill built up. To the labour minister: what have you done to so obviously break trust with farmers and ranchers and undo the good work that was previously done?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. It will give me the opportunity to clear up some of the misconceptions that are out there. We most certainly have been consulting with farming groups right throughout the summer. Acknowledging perhaps the work that the third party had done and did nothing about, we will, I assure you, take it forward with the consultations that we're going to be taking from now and moving forward to make sure we're doing the right thing.

Thank you.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, farmers and ranchers don't agree with what the minister said.

Mr. Speaker, public relations companies are hired to sell products and push out messages. This government hired such a public relations firm to facilitate what they called a consultation in Grande Prairie. To the labour minister: how much was this PR firm paid, and was the contract sole sourced?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. It's very important to us as a government to make sure that we're walking with farmers and ranchers to ensure that we hear, and it's so important that we understand the nuances of the industry. That's what we're going to do. We've changed things for the forums coming up, and I'll be attending them along with the agriculture minister.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, when this government was elected, there was a lot of hope – a lot of hope – that perhaps things would be different. I said “was” because it seems they're falling into the same trap that so many governments before them have fallen into. I'll take the House back to June 3, 2008, when the Government House Leader said, when dealing with a contentious piece of legislation, “I don't think that we ought to be making significant changes to policy that affects thousands and thousands of people's lives without consulting with them.” [interjections] To the Government House Leader: do you still believe this?

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member. I did not hear your question because of the noise in the House.

Mr. Clark: I will happily repeat the question, Mr. Speaker. On June 3, 2008, the Government House Leader said, “I don't think that we ought to be making significant changes to policy that affects thousands and thousands of people's lives without consulting with them.” My question to the Government House Leader is: do you still believe those words?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question around government policy and consultation. We're certainly taking the feedback that we've been hearing after Grande Prairie's consultation into careful consideration. The meeting tomorrow will be held differently. We will continue to ensure that we have opportunities for farmers to work in partnership with the government of Alberta to support their industry.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now I'd like to share what the hon. Premier said on that same day, June 3, 2008, when she talked about consultation, saying that we need: “to consult with those who are impacted by it. You know, work that is done behind closed doors does not count . . . as the kind of consultation that's required." To the Premier: do you still stand behind those words?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the opportunity to say again that we are absolutely taking the feedback that's been given through phoning our offices, sending e-mails, and attending the meetings into consideration. It's absolutely impacted the way that consultation . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Now could I hear your answer, please, Madam Minister.

Ms Hoffman: It's impacted the way that consultation is going to be continuing to unfold moving forward, and I thank Albertans for their feedback on that. Hopefully, everyone will be feeling better about the process tomorrow, after the meeting, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, I'd like to share one last quote from the Premier, this time from May 15, 2008, when she said that the government "should talk to the people who work in the system," and that "a lack of consultation . . . will not achieve [their] goal," that "we need to ensure that we take the time to finally get change for the better." Now, this government wouldn't change legislation affecting unions, teachers, and nurses without consulting them first. To the Premier: are there stakeholders in Alberta that are not worth consulting prior to implementing legislation?

Ms Hoffman: No, Mr. Speaker. We're happy that we've had so much feedback, that there's been so much interest in moving forward. We also are going to be happy, at the end of the day, when people can . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Could you try again, Madam Minister?

Ms Hoffman: We want to work with family farms and with all different types of farms to make sure that there are so many different types, that they have opportunities to have their voices heard. There are a number of individuals that have said that they appreciate some of the assurances that will be brought forward with WCB. Some have already volunteered to be a part of that. We hope that we hear from everybody on all sides of this moving forward because we know that what farmers want is also what we want: safe workplaces and good returns for Albertans, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

2:10 Provincial Fiscal Position

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's financial plan has had positive response from constituents speaking with me. The Finance minister met with economists and credit agencies last week to discuss Alberta's economic outlook. Can the minister update the House on those discussions?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to update the House and the MLA from Spruce Grove-St. Albert. I've heard a lot of things and positive responses about the budget, but I think the most important one is that today DBRS came out with a confirmation of Alberta's triple-A credit rating, and they said that we're stable. They confirmed that our government's strengths include a strong financial position, the lowest overall tax burden amongst all provinces, and a low debt to GDP.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: in your meeting with the Conference Board of Canada and chief economists what advice did you hear on how to kick-start Alberta's economy?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. The meeting took place last week, Mr. Speaker. I heard that Alberta is focused on the right things, I heard that they supported our countercyclical approach to investment in Budget 2015, and I also heard that we're in line with private-sector forecasters around WTI and other things.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the sharp decline in the global price of oil this year, again to the same minister: what advice did you get from chief economists about the government's forecasting?

Mr. Ceci: The advice they gave me is to look at private-sector advisers and to see what their forecasts are. We've taken a low average of all those forecasts going forward.

They also said to stick with the program. They believe that we have to keep on top of expenditures and bend the curve on operational expenditures. They also believe that we've got a countercyclical approach that'll benefit the economy in this province in the outgoing years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are frustrated with this government's lack of wide consultation. This government claims to be doing things differently, but when groups like the Western Canadian Wheat Growers, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, and indeed the Hutterian Brethren have cause to complain, this government needs to listen. To the Premier: will this government state today that they will promise actual consultation with Albertans that are directly affected by proposed legislation rather than special-interest groups?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I'm going to start with something that we can all agree on, and that is that safety is paramount. I think everybody in this House can agree on that. You know, I had the opportunity to talk to many farmers just out here on the steps this afternoon. I welcomed that opportunity to do so. I welcome the opportunity to consult and talk with as many farmers as I possibly can over these next few days and over the next few months, keeping in mind occupational health and safety regulations. We have 13 months yet to consult and talk with these farmers, and I very much look forward to doing so.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, indeed, Minister, safety is a priority.

I have a lot of friends today in the gallery and indeed outside the door. They want the government to make this Legislature a place where problems can be solved, where a level of co-operation and trust between all parties can be achieved. To the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour: will you give more than lip service to these Albertans by actually spending time hearing their concerns today?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member again for the question. I absolutely hear the concerns of these farmers. I take it very seriously. I take it as a personal responsibility, a responsibility of this government. As we've said, as cabinet members have already said today, we're taking all that very seriously, and we're moving forward. We're hearing as many farmers as we possibly can.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member. Second supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government has no issue with creating panels to consult with ivory tower elites on climate change and indeed royalties, can the minister explain why you chose to ignore farmers' direct input? Will the minister commit to attending a public forum in Bassano on December 5 to face these farmers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for his suggestion to attend a forum in a town I hadn't known there was a forum in. I couldn't commit to that. Members might know that I lived for some years in Bassano, so I'd actually welcome that opportunity. I also welcome the opportunity to talk to as many farmers, as many farm families as I possibly can. I've had the opportunity to talk to very many – many, many – over the summer; I welcome that opportunity again. Moving forward, this is going to be the right thing to do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Family Farms and Bill 6

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As someone who grew up on a farm, I understand that farming and ranching is a lifestyle. It is a labour of love. Small family farms are community driven, and friends and neighbours are a big part of how these farms survive when the workload reaches capacity. Growing up on a farm teaches you a great deal about life and hard work. The majority of Alberta's farms are small family operations. As an MLA in rural Alberta I'm proud to have the support of many constituent farmers, and I work hard to advocate for them and their families. I'd like to ask the minister of labour: do you support family farms?

Ms Sigurdson: Family farms are essential to the culture of Alberta. They're very important to us. I myself grew up in the Peace River country, and my friends went to 4-H. They'll continue to go to 4-H. Friends and neighbours, the culture: they'll still exist. This bill does nothing to take that away. We're very proud to increase safety on farms. That's what this bill is about. It's about safety.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there's a big difference between a family farm and a large corporate farm or a large feedlot when it comes to labour, to the minister of labour: how do you differentiate between family farms and corporate farms?

Ms Sigurdson: Well, it's very important for us to work out these nuances together in the consultations to make sure that we're hearing them because there's not one size fits all. It's very important for us to make sure that we listen to farmers and make sure the legislation is reflective of that. We absolutely want to work with the farming and ranching sector to get this right.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the minister for the answer. Given that you support family farms and you differentiate between them and large corporate farms, to the minister of labour: do you think you can group family farms and corporate farms into a one-size-fits-all basket for labour standards?

Ms Sigurdson: We absolutely knew that we can't do one size fits all. That's why it's very important for us to work with the sector, and that's why we're having these consultations. We very much need to work that out. We're very pleased because we know that everyone wants workers, people, to be safe on farms, and that's what this legislation is about.

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, this weekend I saw something that I have never seen before. I organized a town hall this weekend, and within 24 hours I had 184 farmers come to tell me their concerns. I saw people plead and cry over proposed draconian, government-forced changes to their lifestyle. These farmers love to do what they're doing, and if you mess with that, you're not just messing with their livelihood. You're messing with their lifestyle. How many people will it take telling the government not to do something before the NDP actually listen?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Certainly, we are keen on working in partnership with farmers throughout Alberta. There are over 11,000 farms just in the NDP caucus ridings alone, and we know that there are many on the other side as well. We want to continue to work in partnership with them and make sure that their feedback can be well received, and I thank them for doing so.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, there were 1,500 people out there telling them one message: kill the bill. We know that education versus legislation is the best approach. Given that we have the lowest farm-related fatality rate per capita in Canada – and this because no one cares more about farm safety than the moms and dads who run them – what makes this government think that mandating a government-led initiative will be a silver bullet that makes everything better given that the industry-led initiatives have been working for years and years and years?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are different types of farms, and of course we want to make sure that no matter where you are working, you can go home at night feeling safe. I thank the many farmers of Alberta for showing their leadership over many years. It's been 98 years since they were left as the one sector not protected by legislation, and 98 . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Just finish your sentence, Madam Minister.

Ms Hoffman: We want to make sure that workers as well as employers can feel safe at night. Farmers are often employers for their communities and for their neighbours. Certainly, the way of life is something that we want to continue to support moving forward, Mr. Speaker, and we'll do so in partnership.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, we have consulted with farms and ranches. They feel it's safe. Why can't the NDP government get this?

Given that it is already difficult for young farmers to take over the family farm, does this government believe that adding more red tape will incentivize young people to get in the saddle and take the reins of the family farm, or is this just about the government's plan to have big, unionized, corporate farms buy out the family farms?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know that there have been a lot of misconceptions and misinformation out there. Let me be clear. Kids will still pick rocks in the summer, neighbours will still help each other out in times of strife and when they need help with their work, and . . . [interjections]

Mr. Mason: Come on, you guys.

Mr. Nixon: Well, stop lying. Jeez.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Ms Hoffman: Albertans want to roll up their sleeves and help each other, and that will continue to be the case in Alberta. We're confident of that. What has been said is that too much time has passed where simple protections haven't been offered to workers and assurances to employers that if something tragic happens on the farm, they won't lose the farm because they didn't have supports of WCB or other types of insurance programs. We simply want to make sure that we work in partnership to make sure that everyone can continue to have successful livelihoods.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past weekend I met with farmers and their families with tears in their eyes because they thought about the future of their way of life and our province once the NDP are done wreaking havoc. I can tell you that all that my constituents are asking for is just a chance – just a chance – for their voices to be heard before their livelihoods and their communities are attacked. To the minister of agriculture: will you acknowledge the need to actually listen to farmers and ranchers before this government attempts to ruin their way of life?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I can assure the member that I will protect family farms to my last breath. The safety of family farms is paramount and will continue to be so. We heard from the third party earlier about the decade of work they've done, that they've unfortunately failed to act on. I will assure you that this government will act. We'll do the right thing.

Mr. Nixon: Well, given that our province as it stands today was built around family farms and homesteads and given that any drastic changes made to the rules surrounding the 45,000 family farms in our province will have a serious and direct impact on farmers' livelihoods, their children's, and their children's children, will the agriculture minister wake up and realize that listening, not unilateral implementation of legislation without consultation, is the way to go?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the member: I can assure him that I am fully awake, and I relish the opportunity to talk and discuss with as many farmers as I possibly can going forward on this. Hearing from them, I hear their concerns. Without a doubt, I'm looking forward to the discussions at the town hall meetings, as many as I can. I can assure you that I do listen to them.

Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Given that there is the truth about family farming and the way that it will be implemented by this government and then there is what the government is saying and given that over the weekend the jobs minister said, and I quote, that farm kids will continue to make their communities proud in the local 4-H programs, end quote, and neighbours and relatives will continue to help each other out in times of need, when you look at OH and S's own website, it says the exact opposite. To the minister of jobs: why does her ministry's website disagree with her?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for bringing up 4-H. I'm quite proud of our 4-H program in Alberta. I'm quite proud of the 4-H program right across Canada. This legislation will in no shape or form have any effect on the 4-H program; 4-H is an educational, recreational system. It's not an employer-employee relationship. Anyone who thinks that it is, I'm afraid, is sadly mistaken. As well, the culture of a farmer helping out another farmer: this legislation will in no shape or form change that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Farm Safety

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The most important thing when it comes to farm safety is education. Farms are owned and operated by caring and responsible Albertans, who understand just how dangerous things could be if not treated with the respect that they deserve. The diversity of size, the diversity of product, and the diversity of cultural background of each and every farm in this province have a bearing on what farm safety looks like. Family farms strive for the safest possible working conditions because their farms are not only their workplace; they are their homes. My question to the minister of labour: can you explain what expertise this government has that Alberta farmers do not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the member for the question. I know that many farmers every day are very conscious of safety and doing everything they can to make things safe. We want to work with them to make sure that that's across the board, that there is no jurisdiction in Alberta where workers aren't safe. We'll make sure that the safety rules go ahead. We're going to do that.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Only an NDP minister of labour could equate legislation with safety as a causal effect.

Given that the Farm Safety Advisory Council has researched and consulted extensively with Alberta's farming industry to create action plans for increasing the culture of health and safety through education, certification, and training resources, to the minister of labour: what recommendations from the Farm Safety Advisory Council's 2012 report have been integrated into the government's future plans for farm safety?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of labour.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the hon. member for the question. I just want everyone to know that we're using all of the information that's already been gathered. Further, through the consultation processes we are listening very specifically to farmers about what we need to know. It's, of course, education and legislation, those two things together. Every other worker in Alberta has that, and we're going to make sure that farm workers are protected, too.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's very interesting that the minister of labour's interpretation of that safety council report is very, very different from what the authors of the report stated. Given that one of the most dangerous aspects of the farm is often machinery or heavy equipment operation and given that Alberta farmers know very well how to get the most out of their equipment for the longest period of time, will this government be implementing regulations that will require farmers to upgrade older equipment to adhere to regulatory standards?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of labour.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We're continuing to listen to the farming and ranching sector to make sure that we're understanding the very specifics of their sector. We want to work with them to make sure that it works for them, and we're very proud to make sure that it'll be safe for everyone. Just like workers in other workplaces, they'll be protected, too.

Thank you.

Health Services for Transgender and Gender-variant Albertans

Mr. Connolly: Mr. Speaker, transgender and gender-variant Albertans face a variety of barriers on a daily basis, not the least of which is adequate, supportive access to health care services. As someone who's very involved in the fight for LGBTQ-plus equality, I hear from people from across Alberta concerned about this issue on a daily basis. To the Minister of Health: what measures does the ministry have in place to assist transgender and gender-variant individuals seeking full access to health care?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Our government is very proud of the commitments that we've made to publicly support the trans and gender-variant community in Alberta. Of course, part of that is continuing to have budget allocations for gender reassignment surgery from Alberta Health. That's included in this year's budget. As well, we are proud of the fact that we brought Bill 7 forward as a government caucus, which passed first reading unanimously in this House last week. We're working to enshrine gender identity and gender expression as protected categories in the Alberta bill of human rights.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that supportive medical personnel in care can be vital for the well-being of transgender and gender-variant individuals and given that transgender and gender-variant people are at a higher risk of heart disease, anxiety, depression, suicide, substance abuse, eating disorders, interpersonal violence, and certain cancers because physicians and mental health practitioners often turn away transgender and gender-variant people because of prejudice or perceived lack of skills to treat such patients, how can Alberta Health ensure that these individuals will be able to access appropriate resources?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Our government, of course, believes in universally accessible health care, meaning that we have that top-quality health care for all Albertans, not just those who can afford to pay for it. We are working to identify good models of practice for standard of care.

In Alberta there is a gender clinic at the Grey Nuns hospital, that has been operational since 1996, something we should all be very proud of. As well, in the Calgary zone there's currently a pilot project at the mediclinic, that's been operating for about a year, at the Alberta Children's hospital, which was formed with the partnership of endocrinology, addiction and mental health, and sexual and reproductive health and has demonstrated positive outcomes and a good set of evidence-based practices for care. The mediclinic pilot . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Madam Minister.

Mr. Connolly: Mr. Speaker, given that many transgender and gender-variant Albertans are worried about beginning and maintaining hormone regimens, to the same minister: are there any plans to help make hormones more accessible?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Right now physicians in Alberta can prescribe hormone therapy to assist with transition if a doctor and patient together decide that that's the best course of action. At times Albertans are also referred to an endocrinologist to ensure that appropriate hormones are prescribed. I'd encourage all Albertans and their family physicians to contact the College of Physicians & Surgeons to identify the appropriate physician specialist to assist with ongoing care of individuals who receive hormone therapy.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Government Policies

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Words are important as they provide meaning to what we are trying to say. Words have definitions. It seems like this NDP government has trouble with definitions. They seem to have the incorrect definition for terms like “revenue neutral,” “consultation,” and even the simple word “no.” To the government: how can something be revenue neutral when it raises $3 billion in new money? People across this province and outside these doors are against some of your most recent actions, saying no. Is it NDP government policy to not consult, or is it just the current government practice?

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Second point of order noted.

Response, minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member. If I understand the question, of course, our carbon announcements last Sunday made by the Premier referenced the uses for our carbon price, which is that every dollar that is collected in the new carbon price will stay right here in Alberta to build a new economy. An adjustment fund will help families make ends meet. It will support small businesses, First Nations, and people working in the coal industry. That is what leadership looks like. Throwing up your hands and denying the science of climate change is a thing of the past.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government does not have proper definitions or answers, let’s fix the problem by giving them all dictionaries for Christmas. Given that during the last election the NDP promised to review rail costs for Alberta’s agriculture industry in order to make transportation more affordable to them, maybe the next definition they should work on is “promise” because this promise was broken. To the Minister of Transportation: why are rail fuel taxes rising in your budget when this government promised to lower rail costs?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, it’s pretty clear to me with respect to this matter that our taxes, rail fuel taxes are lower than in other provinces, and in difficult times it is time for all of us to pull our weight.

Mr. Loewen: Given that farming can be a difficult thing to do in that the majority of farming is time sensitive as seasonal changes dramatically affect farming actions and given that this government is interested in forcing legislation onto farmers that is ill conceived – I see that no one on the other side represents farmers, though there seems to be lots of consultation with unions – can this government commit to real consultation before passing any bill that affects our most important agriculture sector?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Rest assured that we’re going to be talking to those farmers going forward. It’s paramount that we take all into consideration for this legislation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One thing that I find to be the most valuable tool to a legislator is the ability to consult, to listen, and to learn. There are 1,500 folks here today with family farms. They didn’t get consulted, they weren’t listened to, and certainly no one learned from them. To the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour: can you tell us specifically who you spoke with who actually has a family farm?

The Speaker: The minister of labour.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. It’s very important for us to be consulting with farmers and ranchers, and we have been and will continue to. It’s ongoing and . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Please continue. I will continue to give you the necessary time until I can hear your answer, and that goes to the entire House. Madam Minister, please proceed.

Ms Sigurdson: It’s very important to us to hear and listen to farmers, and that’s what we’re doing. We’ve had one consultation, and there are eight more scheduled. If we need to schedule more, we’ll do that. Please rest assured that we’re doing that. It’s very important to us.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Consulting after the fact.

Again to the same minister: given that we’ve heard from stakeholders who report that the consultation process can in some cases be a phone call informing them of a decision or a meeting where the details of the decision are provided in lieu of asking for thoughts and opinions, can the minister provide any assurance to Albertans who are concerned that government has confused consultation with declaration?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the minister I just want to apologize for some of the challenges that have already gone on. We have listened, and we know that we need to do things differently in the forward consultations. So we’re listening, and we’re changing the way we’re doing it. We know that this is about safety, and we all want that. We all want to make sure workers on farms are safe. I know everyone agrees with that.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that a key component of proper consultation is a constant and respectful interaction between government and those affected and given that as elected officials the buck should stop with us, will you commit that the members of your caucus will attend every single consultation going forward? If not, then who is ultimately responsible for answering to this legislation?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. The buck stops with me. I know that it’s my responsibility, and I take responsibility. I went out on Friday and listened to farmers talk about their concerns. I went out today. I’m going to be attending the consultation as well as ministers and caucus people. Rest assured that the buck stops with me, and I'm wanting to go forward to make sure that we listen and make a plan with farmers.

Climate Change Strategy

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, following the climate rally at Lethbridge city hall yesterday my constituents told me that the new climate change strategy shows that we are showing leadership to protect our health, environment, and economy for future generations. I'm proud to say that around Lethbridge we're home to one of the biggest wind farms in the province, several biogas plants, and that many constituents have solar panels on their homes. To the minister of environment: how will the new climate change strategy support . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Today the Minister of Energy and I announced our government's plan to have 30 per cent renewable energy by 2030. We were joined by leaders from Alberta Energy and electricity companies as well as companies looking to invest in building Alberta's future electricity system. We know that what we have done here has charted a path forward for a stable investment climate for renewable power and a way to transition us off coal, protecting our families' and our future generations' health.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that places like Lethbridge College currently offer training that supports growth in important renewable energy industry jobs, to the same minister: how will the new climate change strategy help expand new jobs for Albertans?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, we know that investment will be the driving force behind many of the new jobs that our policies are creating. For example, the vice-president of EDF EN Canada today said, "With this announcement the province is well-positioned to attract billions in direct investment from corporations like EDF EN, growing the green energy economy and creating well-paying jobs for Alberta families." I believe that those job creators speak for themselves.

The Speaker: Second supplemental, please.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that coal-fired power plants will be phased out by 2030, again to the same minister: what are you doing to ensure that Alberta has a strong, stable, diversified renewable energy sector to support our power needs?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. We are working with our partners to steer Alberta towards a cleaner electricity future. Through this transition we will work in co-operation with the electricity generators and our power regulators, the Utilities Commission and the Electric System Operator, to implement these goals. The president and CEO of the Alberta Electric System Operator today said, "The AESO is confident that by working closely with government and industry, we can reliably implement the transition away from coal." That's exactly what this province will do.

Members' Statements

NutraPonics Canada Corporation

Cortes-Vargas: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise today and acknowledge an Alberta-based business venture that is five years in the making, in my riding of Strathcona-Sherwood Park. What is clear is that there are a variety of ways that many of my constituents continuously focus on local food sustainability and entrepreneurship. This manifests whether it's in our fields or in our warehouses. In this case it's in our warehouses.

NutraPonics Canada Corporation is dedicated to the development and commercialization of intensive, small footprint, high-density natural food crop production technology. I toured this facility in October, and I learned about how this process works. It contains a single aquaculture tank of fish, which supplies nutrients to 10 plant-growing bays as well as harvesting and processing areas. It covers a 38,000-square-foot warehouse, and this warehouse can provide food to over a thousand people in the constituency, Mr. Speaker.

The technology is perfectly suited for individual businesses. Its scalable, modular facilities fit any production demand. Their modular growing facilities are well suited to urban agriculture, remote communities, industrial camps, commercial developments, and even farms. There is low water utilization because they are using recirculated water. NutraPonics supplies naturally grown vegetables and herbs, functional foods, nutraceuticals, and much more. Finally, NutraPonics gives back by contributing to solutions addressing the United Nations zero hunger challenge.

Mr. Speaker, this is an exciting business and a fine example of innovative, sustainable entrepreneurship happening in Strathcona-Sherwood Park. Moreover, it's how the larger conversation of local food sustainable practices needs to be had throughout our province.

Thank you.

Bill 6 Opposition

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, there's an old saying. Put 50 farmers in a room, and you'll hear 100 opinions. That old saying doesn't ring true today because today hundreds and hundreds of farm families have rallied at this Legislature to send this government one message: stop Bill 6 and provide meaningful consultation prior to passing this bill. They're joined in spirit by thousands and tens of thousands of their friends and neighbours back home who are organizing in opposition to Bill 6. Our rural communities are very, very concerned about how this government is taking this rushed approach to this bill. This approach puts at risk their livelihoods, their homes, their very way of life. Farmers are going to have none of it. By refusing to provide meaningful consultation on regulations prior, this government has angered rural Alberta like never before.

Over the past week my office has received a flood of opposition to this bill, hundreds of calls and e-mails, not to mention the stacks of hastily prepared petitions. Family farms shouldn't have to be here demonstrating and demanding a voice. Grandmas and grandpas shouldn't have to be going seat to seat in local arenas for signatures just to protect their very way of life. But they're doing it, Mr. Speaker. They're doing it because they care about their friends, their families, their neighbours, their communities, and their way of life. They're doing it because they recognize the inherent value in that way of life and this government is choosing to ignore it.

Mr. Speaker, if the government's chief objective with Bill 6 was to organize farmers, congratulations; they've done it. This government promised change, to admit when they were wrong, to apologize for their mistakes, and fix the error of their ways, and that's exactly . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Bill 6 Opposition

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, farming is more than a job; farming is a way of life. Across Alberta thousands of farmers are rising up in anger because they see their way of life threatened by Bill 6. Already facing the usual challenges of markets, weather, and rising input costs, now farmers are facing legislation that threatens the very fabric of rural communities. This government has insisted that Bill 6 does nothing more than give farm workers the same rights afforded workers in other sectors. That sounds great, but it's not nearly that simple.

Bill 6 tries to treat every one of the 45,000 family farms in Alberta like little factories, factories that operate from 9 to 5, shut down on weekends, and stay closed on statutory holidays. It completely ignores the reality of farming. There's not a farmer that gets seeding done by working a 40-hour work week or gets harvest done by shutting down on weekends, Mr. Speaker, and I have yet to meet the cow that can plan her calving around weekends, after hours, and statutory holidays.

Let's be very clear. Opposing Bill 6 does not mean opposing farm safety. But in its present form Bill 6 goes too far too fast and demands Alberta farmers accept rules that haven't been discussed or agreed to, and this, to farmers, is completely unacceptable. It's no way to treat the people that feed us and feed the planet.

We agree that employed farm workers should have a financial safety net in the eventuality of an injury or death, we agree that farm accidents should be investigated, and we agree with common-sense rules that are supported by facts and best practices. But we disagree with rules that have no clear details and threaten the 90 per cent of Alberta farms that are family operations. We disagree with ramming this legislation through without proper consultation.

Please, delay the passage of Bill 6.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

HIV/AIDS Awareness

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow, December 1, is World AIDS Day. It's a day to help us remember and reflect on all that we've lost. December 1 is also the start of Aboriginal AIDS Awareness Week in Canada.

It pains me to say that in 2014 there were approximately 2 million newly infected people world-wide, bringing the number of people living with HIV/AIDS to 37 million globally. While the face of HIV has changed, in Canada there is still much more work to be done to address the stigma and improve access to testing, treatment, and support.

In 2011 over 71,000 Canadians were living with HIV, and it is estimated that over 3,000 people were newly infected. It is also estimated that at the end of 2011 25 per cent of Canadians who were living with HIV did not know they were infected. If people aren't aware that they have HIV, they may unknowingly infect others.

World AIDS Day is a day to reflect on what we have achieved with regard to the national and global response to HIV and what we must still achieve. World AIDS Day is also a time for remembering those who have passed on and for raising awareness about AIDS and the global spread of the HIV virus. We have what it takes to break the AIDS epidemic. Let's all do our part to break the cycle and the stigma.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Calgary Lions Club Festival of Lights

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, 2015 marks the 29th year that the Lions Club has lit up Calgary's greatest constituency, Calgary-Klein, with its Festival of Lights. The Festival of Lights is a drive-by Christmas lights display located on the corner of 14th Street and 24th Avenue on the Confederation golf course. Of course, people are welcome to walk through the display and use the wicked toboggan hill located on the site. Otto Silzer, Lions chair, says that the display was started by the Lions as a way of giving back to the community for its support of the Lions' traditional sight-related programs such as the Lions Sight Centre and diabetic research.

While the display is always magnificent, Mr. Speaker, this year is particularly special because 2015 marks the year when the Lions Festival of Lights, which stretches over a half kilometre, is an entirely green display. With an investment of $120,000 and over 3,000 volunteers, they converted 300,000 conventional incandescent light bulbs to LEDs. It is estimated that a string of 25 LED lights uses the same amount of electricity as one incandescent bulb.

This year's feature display is a fanciful Rudolph, which stands more than 11.3 metres high and 10 metres wide. The fanciful Rudolph fits perfectly with this year's 29th anniversary. The lights bring greetings from Santa Claus, toy soldiers, Rudolph, Frosty, misty snowmen, toy trains, and the gingerbread family. Stockings full of toys, 18 dancing Merry Christmases, 50 decorated trees, tolling bells, and trumpeting angels bring joy to the nativity scene.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Lions Club as well as all the volunteers and sponsors for this wonderful and well attended display, and I encourage all to pay a visit.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Bill 6 Opposition

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All across Alberta farmers and ranchers packed town hall meetings to voice their concerns about Bill 6, and Wildrose MLAs were proud to be part of that process. We understand the critical importance of consultation, and we know that farmers want to be heard on this even after the NDP tried ignoring them. Ramming through this legislation is going to hurt family farms.

Just like in Grande Prairie last week the members opposite were absent for most of these meetings, so farmers and ranchers picked themselves up, got in their trucks, and drove here today to the Legislature. If this government was listening, they would hear them loudly but respectfully telling them to slow down Bill 6 and get it right.

These aren't the only people calling for a slowdown to Bill 6. Today the Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association said the same thing: slow down Bill 6; get it right. Even some of this government's biggest supporters are saying: slow down Bill 6; get it right. But the government doesn't want to listen.

It's no secret that this government is being run by people from virtually everywhere in the country except Alberta. Since there are no farmers in this government, let me enlighten the members opposite about what kind of people farmers are. They are some of the hardest working and most dedicated citizens. They feed us, they steward the land, and they solve some of the most complicated problems. In Alberta we're proud of our farmers, and we look for ways to support them, not attack them.

You can't just ignore farmers or hope they give up. They have the strength and courage of conviction that the members opposite couldn't even begin to understand, and when it comes to Bill 6, they have right on their side. Slow down Bill 6. Get it right. You can hear the calls coming from every corner of this province and from the front steps today. This government needs to listen.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, as chair of the Standing Committee on Private Bills I would like to report that the Standing Committee on Private Bills has had certain bills under consideration and wishes to report that the following private bills proceed: Bill Pr. 2, Bethesda Bible College Act Amendment Act, 2015; Bill Pr. 3, Rosary Hall, Edmonton Repeal Act; Bill Pr. 4, Canadian University College Amendment Act, 2015; Bill Pr. 6, Covenant Bible College Amendment Act, 2015; and Bill Pr. 7, Living Faith Bible College Amendment Act, 2015.

Further, the committee wishes to report that Bill Pr. 1, the King's University College Amendment Act, 2015, and Bill Pr. 5, Concordia University College of Alberta Amendment Act, 2015, proceed with amendments. As part of this report I'm tabling five copies of the recommended amendments to bills Pr. 1 and Pr. 5.

I request the concurrence of the Assembly in these recommendations. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the member has requested concurrence in the report. Does the Assembly concur in the report? All in favour say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: Opposed, say no. The motion is carried.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request unanimous consent for two items. Number one, I request, in reference to Standing Order 7(7), that we go past 3 o'clock to finish the Routine for today.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Mr. Bilous: My second request is that we revert briefly to introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Calgary-Bow, you have a report?

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the following six letters of support for Bill 204. They are from the Elizabeth Fry Society of Calgary, CEASE up here in Edmonton, the YWCA of Calgary, Calgary Housing Company, Calgary Counselling Centre, and HIV Community Link Society. I have the necessary five copies of each letter.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on behalf of my colleague to table a petition detailing hundreds of signatures of people across Alberta who oppose Bill 6.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm pleased to table five copies of the Child and Youth Advocate annual report 2014-2015 in accordance with section 21(1) of the Child and Youth Advocate Act.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Hoffman, Minister of Health and Minister of Seniors, pursuant to the Health Professions Act the Alberta College of Occupational Therapists 2014-2015 annual report, the College and Association of Respiratory Therapists of Alberta annual report 2015, the College of Dietitians of Alberta 2014 annual report, the College of Physical Therapists of Alberta annual report 2014.

The Speaker: My apologies. We need to revert to Introduction of Guests.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Please proceed, hon. member for the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three fine young Calgaryans from the riding of Calgary-Fish Creek. I ask that they rise as I introduce them. The first guest is Philip Schuman. Philip is a professional in the risk management industry, working for the third-largest insurance brokerage in the world. He also instructs at the Insurance Institute of Canada and the Insurance Brokers Association of Alberta. Outside of this busy schedule he is an active and dynamic entrepreneur, with many projects and partnerships always on the go. He also runs a weekly poetry club at a seniors' residence and is politically active and engaged, volunteering on several constituency associations, including his current role as the youngest president in the history of the Calgary-Fish Creek PC Association.

Next is Elliott Schuman. Elliott is a visual designer with knowledge and experience in various creative fields and mediums while also being active in the promotional industry. Elliott is also an entrepreneur, having just launched his new business, Alpina Visual, which seeks to provide small business and charities with affordable options in creative and original designs. Elliott is active in PC Youth, sits on the Calgary-Fish Creek PC board, and volunteers his time for several other worthy causes.

Finally, Kinga Nolan. Kinga is a politically active high school student who has been involved with a variety of federal and provincial political campaigns since 2006. Additionally, she has been in the sea cadet program for four years, having been awarded three medals for her citizenship work; namely, the Lord Strathcona medal, the Royal Canadian Legion cadet medal of excellence, and the Navy League medal of excellence. She has volunteered at a local long-term care facility, at the Royal Canadian Legion, and with sustainable resource development to help build trails and identify species at risk. Kinga has suffered from postconcussion syndrome for over 16 months. However, in truly inspirational fashion she has used this negative experience to strive towards bringing awareness to the danger of concussions in youth. She hopes the province will consider a bill similar to Rowan's law, which is currently under consideration in the Ontario Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in the traditional warm welcome accorded to all guests.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a very great honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly five guests, that I was told were going to be here, and I certainly hope they've made it. In the spirit of the season they are five wise people who have come from the east. They're here because they have serious concerns about Bill 6, and I'm very pleased that they were able to make it: Melissa Guenther, Lindsay Westman, Helen and Tyler Nowosad, and their five-year-old son Rowdy Nowosad. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd like everyone to join me in giving them the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any other guests? The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two Lions Club members who made the journey from Calgary today: Otto Silzer, Lions Club chair, and Alastair Smith, Lions Club member. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, any other guests? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the House Barry Anuszewski. He's a farmer from the Whitemud area, northwest of Valleyview. He drove a long way to be here. The Premier mentioned that some of the issues with Bill 6 were about giving the farm workers the opportunity to say no. Barry was at the Grande Prairie meeting and, of course, with everybody else there said no. He's here today, too, to say no. I'd like to give him the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, any other guests?

I believe we are at points of order, and I noted that there were three today. The Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Parliamentary Language

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll proceed with my first point of order, and I will withdraw the next two. At 2:22 the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre said to the Minister of Health something to the effect of: then you need to stop lying. The word that is considered perhaps the most unparliamentary of all is to accuse other members of lying. I want to reference, I mean, obviously, 23(h), (i), and (j), but under Beauchesne's, Unparliamentary Language, section 485:

- (1) Unparliamentary words may be brought to the attention of the House either by the Speaker or by any Member. When the question is raised by a Member it must be as a point of order and not as a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker, section 488 gives a partial list of words that are considered unparliamentary. In this list, on page 146, the word "lie" is referenced 36 times. It is, I think, perhaps the most unacceptable and unparliamentary thing that can be said in the House.

I will indicate also, Mr. Speaker, that I have had numerous complaints from this side of the House of other members on the other side using this term. I have not, unfortunately, heard them and so have not taken this step until today, but I clearly heard the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre use the word. So I would ask that the member apologize to the House and withdraw his comments.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I rise to address the point of order. From time to time in the House temperatures can rise and certain members can get a little bit excited, and I think that it would be best for all if on behalf of the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre I withdraw and apologize and ensure that he does not make accusations of the other side being liars or lying again.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I personally did not hear the comment myself. Yes, that's one way of describing it, that the temperature rises occasionally. It's usually the noise that's rising occasionally.

I should also mention, for the advice of all of the House, that I received a note of apology from a member last week who used a very similar phrase. I just want to remind all of you: please do not let the temperature rise to the point that those kinds of comments take place in the future.

You had another point of order, Government House Leader, or did you withdraw it?

Mr. Mason: I withdraw those. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Point of Order

Items Previously Decided

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have a report which I considered at the last sitting of the House, last Thursday, and I reserved a ruling on a point of order raised by the Government House Leader. The point of order was raised in connection with a question asked by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, which can be found on page 646 of Alberta Hansard for last Thursday.

I wanted to review Hansard before deciding on this point of order as it is in his preamble to the main question that the member referred to an amendment in Committee of Supply that was proposed to the estimates of the Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry and was defeated. In arguing the point, as found on page 650 of last Thursday's Alberta Hansard, the Government House Leader cited House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, at page 617, for a principle that a question once decided by the Assembly cannot be questioned again.

Although not mentioned in the discussion of the point of order, the principle referred to by the Government House Leader is in fact incorporated into Standing Order 23(f), which states as follows:

- 23 A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member . . .
 - (f) debates any previous vote of the Assembly unless it is that Member's intention to move that it be rescinded.

I have reviewed Hansard. The member's actual question did not refer to the vote on the estimates, what transpired in Committee of Supply; therefore, I must rule that it was not a point of order.

However, even though questions may not violate the rules, I want to remind the member and all members that preambles should be tailored to comply with the usages and practices of the Assembly and relate to the actual question. Hon. members, there have been instances when I might have risen and have drawn your attention to that. I particularly want to advise Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition that on future comments you be conscious of that.

Go ahead.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for that recognition.

I wish to advise the House that notwithstanding what's on the Order Paper, there will be no evening sitting tonight.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Orders of the Day

Written Questions

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

[The Clerk read the following written questions, which had been accepted]

Alberta Health Services Employee Earnings

- Q1. Mr. Barnes:
As of April 1, 2015, how many Alberta Health Services employees earned more than $200,000 per year in salary and total benefits?

Student Learning Assessment Spending

- Q6. Mr. Smith:
How much has the government spent on the student learning assessment pilot projects for the fiscal years 2010-11 to 2014-15 and from April 1, 2015, to November 30, 2015, and what are the details of what the money was spent on?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Alberta Health Services Surgeries and Procedures

- Q2. Mr. Barnes asked that the following question be accepted.
For the fiscal years 2012-13, 2013-14, and 2014-15 how many surgeries and procedures were postponed in each Alberta Health Services facility?

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I wish to have an answer to this written question for a number of reasons. In the three and a half years that I've been the representative of Cypress-Medicine Hat – and I'm very grateful for the opportunity to serve – other than the furor around Bill 6 and the lack of consultation with that, other than the previous government's attempt to harm our property rights, easily the most consistent and enduring complaint and concern of over 42,000 constituents has been the two to three years of waiting to get an elective or a semi-elective procedure done, often to be cancelled at the last moment, often to be delayed further, months into the future.

There is great compassion that I feel for these people, that other Albertans and taxpayers would feel. Of course, there are all the surgeries and procedures that are not elective. How often do those get postponed? How often does some very needy, worthy Albertan fall through the cracks?

You know, it's compounded when I jump into my car and turn on the radio. For any one of Medicine Hat's five quality radio stations easily – easily – the number one paid advertiser is a Montana station from Great Falls or Kalispell saying: Albertans, come here; no wait time; we'll do your surgery. Then there are a number of Albertans, a number of Cypress-Medicine Hatters, that come into my office and tell me how they spent $13,000 to $17,000 to get a rotator cuff fixed or $23,000 to $29,000 to get a knee or a hip fixed rather than wait the three years. Madam Speaker, these are the kinds of things that we have to measure. We can't manage it unless we accurately measure it. These are the kinds of things that Albertans need to have control over and Albertans need to have better results in.

Part of the reason why I also feel that this question is very, very pertinent is the recent New Democrat budget. We've hit $19.7 billion in annual health care spending, almost $12 billion of it to Alberta Health Services, escalating at over 6 per cent a year, and we're not getting the measured outcomes. So let's measure the outcomes. Let's make the system more accessible for all Albertans.

I would also add that in the recent budget, Madam Speaker, 700 full-time equivalents were added to Alberta Health Services, without the oversight, without the direction. Again, I think that one of the key areas that our New Democrat cabinet can look at is: let's see how many surgeries and procedures were postponed in each and every Alberta Health Services facility, where these facilities are now receiving, coupled with the Alberta Health Services money, $19.7 billion of our hard-earned tax money.

Madam Speaker, that's why I seek the answer to that question.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Minister of Seniors.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, as well as to the member for bringing forward the written question. Certainly, the intent is, I think, worth responding to in a factual way. I want to make sure that we can get the actual information that's being sought, so I have two very small amendments that I would like to move with regard to question 2. The first is by striking out the words "and procedures," and the second is by striking out the word "facility" and, instead, substituting the words "high volume surgery site due to system capacity issues." I'll provide some rationale on the wording of the proposed amended written question.

Would now be an appropriate time, Madam Speaker? Thank you. So the question would read:

For the fiscal years 2012-13, 2013-14, and 2014-15, how many surgeries were postponed in each Alberta Health Services' high volume surgery site due to system capacity issues?

There are a couple of reasons why I think this is pertinent, Madam Speaker. One is, of course, that we don't perform surgeries on people who aren't healthy enough to be able to have them done. So there are some times when test results will come back and will require that a surgery not be provided that day, that it would have to be postponed because of patient need. But I'm proposing, to get back to the original wording, striking the words "and procedures" because it's not actually defined for data collection and monitoring purposes. Surgery certainly is, but procedure is not something that is used to track or that is well defined within our tracking systems.

I am also proposing to amend the question to specifically high-volume surgery sites because those are sites where Alberta Health Services currently maintains information on postponed surgeries. To be more specific, AHS collects information and data on the top 20 sites where surgeries are most likely to be, the top 20 areas of volume. So there are, certainly, areas where we do have that data and would be able to share it. AHS is working towards an integrated operating room reporting system to get better data for operational purposes and reporting to the public just as has been motivated by the member who asked the written question.

I look forward to providing the member with further details related to this question in our written response, but these are the two amendments that I'm proposing today to make sure we can give you a timely response and an accurate one, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat on the amendment.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you to the Health minister for your answer. I appreciate it. I can accept that the word "procedures" was maybe not detailed and focused enough and that surgery is, you know, more direct and maybe easier to measure.

Limiting it only to high-volume surgery sites greatly concerns me. We have seen since the creation of Alberta Health Services and the centralization eight or nine years ago the lack of engagement, the lack of autonomy, the lack of authority, and the lack of success. Compassionately, the human resource side is a mess in rural Alberta, where good front-line workers can quite often not get answers to their questions, cannot become involved in making the system better for all Albertans. To me, 20 high-volume surgery sites suggests that once again some rural providers, some rural hospitals may fall through the cracks.

In today's electronic world, where – my goodness – we can track so many things, I can't imagine that a corporation with 110,000 employees and $12 billion of our money can't make this wherever surgeries are performed, wherever hard-working Albertans are willing to let their tax dollars go to make our system better.

I'm wondering, hon. minister and Madam Speaker, why the minister wants to add the words "due to system capacity issues." You know, in some ways it clouds the answer. I also believe I've seen the hon. minister quoted as saying that many of the problems in our health system now are systemic, so maybe that means they all are going to be caught in this situation.

I appreciate that we all want a system that works compassionately and well for all Albertans – all Albertans – that need our jurisdiction to be the great provider that it can be and should be, and it starts with accurately and comprehensively measuring where our tax dollars are going now. So I would ask members of the Legislature to vote against the amendment and to stick to the original question. Please, let's have as much quantifiable information as we can to ensure we help all Albertans, urban and rural.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment?

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Deputy Speaker: Any further members wishing to speak to the written question itself as amended?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Health to close debate.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to my colleagues for their understanding around the current reporting structures and also to the member, who proposed that we not support the amendment, for his feedback around data tracking moving forward. It's certainly something that I will raise with my officials around the smaller facilities.

In terms of the root of the question I think it's in terms of the system that surgeries are being delayed, not in terms of the health outcomes. I know that to test blood, make sure your white blood cell counts are at appropriate levels so you can recover from a surgery and that it won't put you at greater risk: I don't think the House is interested in information that's based on medical need. It's based on system need, so that's the rationale for that amendment, which was just supported.

Thank you to my colleagues. I appreciate the feedback.

The Deputy Speaker: My apologies, hon. members. It was the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, the mover of the motion, that was to close debate, so I will call on that hon. member now.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I thought that was great, too. That's great, and thanks to the Minister of Health for her commitment to get some measurables so that we can actually make the system better.

Again, my concern is clearly with the rural divide and the needs that so often, the further you are from the centralization, can be overlooked. If the problem is systemic, we don't need that part added to the question. Just bring us the information, and let's measure it in a way that – again, I think of the people that have waited two, two and a half years for a surgery that have it postponed at the last minute, and they hear it's because our system didn't have the capacity to handle other emergencies or handle the overflows that are in the acute beds. You know, when it's about the money that goes in, it appears to be rationing a system and forcing people out of our jurisdiction, who have worked all their lives in Alberta. I think the very least we owe them is a measurable and a commitment to make it better.

Thank you.

[Written Question 2 as amended carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Alberta Health Services Overtime Payments

Q3. Mr. Barnes asked that the following question be accepted. What was the total cost of overtime payments to all part-time employees of Alberta Health Services for the fiscal years 2012-13, 2013-14, and 2014-15?

Mr. Barnes: Thank you again, Madam Speaker. I just want to talk about two primary reasons that I ask this written question today. First of all, again, in Cypress-Medicine Hat and when I go around the province, dedicated, intelligent, caring front-line workers tell me time and time again that the centralized system has moved them from a situation where they can have authority and autonomy to ensure that needs are met quicker, more cost-effectively, and, obviously, something very important in the medical profession, more effectively. I think the whole premise behind centralization, or one of the major premises, was to save money. From what I hear about overtime costs throughout our system, I think the light that this question could shine on our spending could be enormous. It could be very, very helpful in the measurement we need going forward.

You know, I hear about the story – and I think I've said it in here before – where a front-line worker, a maintenance person, needs a little bit of glue, and four weeks later a whole case comes down from Edmonton. Then I hear front-line workers tell me about the overtime costs and how they see it and how they can't believe the inefficiency. Again, we're here for good, effective programs. We're here to compassionately help all Albertans when they need it, but we owe it to the hard-working taxpayer to get as much value for these programs as we can.

The other part of this question to the Minister of Health, the NDP cabinet, Madam Speaker, is that it's hard to find too many of our good front-line workers who will say that they are happy in their job. I am concerned. I am very, very concerned about the human resources impact that this centralization is having on our good front-line workers. Using Medicine Hat as an example, I'm told time and time again that 10 years ago, when we were regional and we always came in on budget, if you had a problem, you could go into the minister's office, the administrator of the hospital's office, or to one of the people in charge and have a resolution in 20 minutes and then go about your day. That's why you wanted to be there serving and helping Albertans in need. Here's what I'm told happens now. An answer goes up the chain, usually no answer comes back, and if it does, it's five or six weeks later, and it's usually inconclusive.

3:30

Madam Speaker, we've got this big, big centralized system, which we sought for stability and cost savings. We've seen, with people quitting, with the appointment of yet another board, that the stability is very, very much in question. As I've just detailed, you don't have to walk too far in any Alberta Health Services facility to find human resources teetering on the edge as well. I'll bet you that when we look at the total cost of overtime payments to all part-time employees, we will find considerable waste and a lack of resources in the way that they should be. So that is why I would like to see the answers to this question and an effort to be more compassionate for the needs of Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Seniors.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It probably wouldn't surprise the House to know that before Alberta Health Services became one health region, there were multiple, different payroll systems that were deployed in the various regions, and for that reason, of course, in terms of data gathering and comparative data it makes it highly labour intensive. I don't think that the intention of this House is to create highly labour-intensive initiatives for public servants who are working in the organization but is, rather, to have information to help guide future decision-making. I want to say that I commend the position from where I think this request is coming.

I do have an amendment. Basically, I want to strike the words "2012-13," but to do that, I have to strike all of the years, 2012-13, '13-14, and '14-15, and substitute "2013-14 and 2014-15." The rationale is that that data simply is not easily accessible for 2012-13 because of the multiple, different payroll systems. So I doubt that it would be the intention to spend considerable HR resources, that could be spent on addressing some of the concerns that the hon. member has just brought forward, to gather information from before there was one consolidated system.

The good news is that by having the move forward to one system, we have much more easily accessible data like the payroll data around overtime payments from one system. AHS has moved from these multiple legacy systems that existed with the former health regions to one, single province-wide system, so it certainly is going to make this request and any subsequent request – I imagine that this might be one that might come up on a regular basis – easy for us to be able to provide the information on in a timely fashion and consistently.

Just to clarify, the amendment is to strike "2012-13, 2013-14, 2014-15" and substitute the words "2013-14 and 2014-15." The amended written question would read as follows:

What was the total cost of overtime payments to all part-time employees of Alberta Health Services for the fiscal years 2013-14 and 2014-15?

That's the rationale for the amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat on the amendment.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you again, Madam Speaker. I'd like to thank the Health minister for that answer. Certainly, transparency costs money and is always worth it, but in the interests of moving forward, in the interests of the commitment to gather the information and go forward, I would ask the House to accept this amendment. Let's go forward, build on that, and use this information.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment?

If not, the hon. Minister of Health and Minister of Seniors has moved an amendment to Written Question 3.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. members wishing to speak to the written question as amended?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to close debate.

Mr. Barnes: Just again, thanks to the Health minister for the commitment to making, you know, our measurements stronger in there. In the three and a half years that I've been here, it's sort of frustrating and interesting that so many Auditor General reports start with the words: cabinet failed to have enough oversight. I encourage you to put in the measurables to make our very, very important health system as good as possible for those that need it. Obviously, we all will someday, our families and our friends. I appreciate the commitment to that and your commitment to electronic health records as well. It's nice to hear that that's high on our list as well. When I'm out talking to Albertans, it's important that we have this system developed and we have a system that is there for all of us. Again, I ask everyone to support the question now, and I look forward to going forward with this.

[Written Question 3 as amended carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Distracted Driving Violations

Q4. Mr. Cyr asked that the following question be accepted.
How many tickets were issued for distracted driving violations pursuant to sections 115.1 to 115.4 of the Traffic Safety Act, broken down for the period from September 1, 2011, to December 1, 2011, the calendar years 2012, 2013, 2014, and from January 1, 2015, to August 31, 2015?

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The reason we're moving this question forward is that I've talked with several law enforcement agencies across the province, and they're bringing forward concerns that distracted driving convictions are increasing. The only way to find that out is by actually writing a question. That's pretty much exactly why we're moving this forward.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would like to thank the hon. member for his written question, and I would like to propose an amendment that Written Question 4 be amended by striking out "tickets were" and substituting "convictions resulted from tickets that were." The amended written question would read as follows:

How many convictions resulted from tickets that were issued for distracted driving violations pursuant to sections 115.1 to 115.4 of the Traffic Safety Act, broken down for the period from September 1, 2011, to December 1, 2011, the calendar years 2012, 2013, 2014, and from January 1, 2015, to August 31, 2015?

The reason for the amendment is that Alberta Transportation does not receive data on the number of tickets issued for distracted driving violations but only the resulting convictions. I want to indicate that I think, based on what I heard the hon. member say, that this will be sufficient for his purposes because it's actually what he's after.

I wanted to just conclude, Madam Speaker, by saying that distracted driving is unacceptable, dangerous, and puts everyone on our roads at risk. Between 20 and 30 per cent of all collisions are due to distracted driving, so it's clear that more work needs to be done, and our government is committed to doing that work. We have increased fines under the Traffic Safety Act from $172 to $287 for distracted driving. Those charged with careless driving could face fines of up to $543.

I would like to make this amendment as requested, and I want to also indicate to the member and to the House that we are pursuing distracted driving demerit points through regulation. That is a key disincentive for repeat offenders, some of whom are happy to just pay a monetary fine. Actually, the demerits provide a real disincentive over a longer period of time for distracted driving. We are committed in moving in this direction.

I thank the hon. member for his question with respect to this matter. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, do you wish to speak to the amendment?

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. Thank you to the hon. minister. I would agree that this clarification of my question does add clarity, and I would thank him for that clarity and would ask all of my colleagues to accept this amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment?

If not, I have to call the question.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Deputy Speaker: On Written Question 4, any other hon. members wishing to speak to the question?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake to close debate.

Mr. Cyr: I'd like to close debate.

[Written Question 4 as amended carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Alberta Health Services Employee Earnings

Q5. Mr. Cooper asked that the following question be accepted. For the fiscal years 2009-10 to 2014-15 what was the total amount and the amount at each level paid to employees at the management and executive levels in the Alberta Health Services central zone?

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The reason why I proposed this question is that there are some who believe that the costs of management are increasing greatly. Oftentimes it's difficult to get answers in the midst of question period debate, so I wanted to provide the opportunity to the Minister of Health to give some indication to all members of the Assembly of just exactly what's happening in the central zone.

I've had a number of folks contact my office that are front-line workers, who share some concern with the perceived growth at the management level and that the front lines of the hospitals in the region aren't seeing the sorts of supports and resources that they believe are critical to ensuring that they can provide a level of service that Albertans expect, that certainly members of this Assembly expect, that we on this side of the House expect, and, I'm certain, that members on that side of the House expect but who at the same time are quite frustrated that they see multiple layers of bureaucracy growing and growing and growing. So I said that I would be happy to ask to see just exactly what that looks like, and then it will provide us an opportunity to continue the debate around levels of management.

I know that, specifically, I've had individuals highlight some concerns about what it takes to get a job posted and, like my hon. colleague from Cypress-Medicine Hat mentioned, what it takes to get some glue or other supplies, some of the inefficiencies that these multiple layers of bureaucracy have created.

It's a small step just to try and get a sense of what's happening at that management level. It's unfortunate that finding the information is so difficult that we need to take it to this step, but I look forward to the minister being forthcoming with all of the information that is available to her.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Some of the information is difficult to access; other information certainly is not. For example, the executive level compensation is posted on the website. Part of this is very easy to access. It's through the audited financial statements. But we'll be happy to gather that information in a way that makes it more easily digestible for all members of this House.

I do have a slight amendment: first, by striking out the words "management and executive levels" and substituting "executive level," and then later, after the word "zone," adding the words and what was the total amount paid to management in the Alberta Health Services Central Zone commencing the fiscal year that Zone reporting and the single, province-wide payroll system (E-People) took effect up to and including the fiscal year 2014-15.

Just for a little bit of rationale, Madam Speaker, I'm proposing the amendments because the information requested is readily available at the executive level in schedule 2 of the AHS audited financial statements but not readily accessible for the management level. For management pay requisite data can be provided for the central zone starting with the first available fiscal year when both zone reporting and the single province-wide payroll system e-People came into effect, so not dissimilar from the amendment we voted on for Written Question 3, which I believe was 2013-14. Certainly, we can gather that information for the executive and management levels and return it to this House in a timely fashion.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on the amendment.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I might just say that late last week, on Friday I believe, the chief of staff to the Health minister did call and provide a bit of an update that this may be the direction that the minister would like to go, and for that I would just like to say thanks. All too often in this place we have a fairly adversarial approach, so from time to time when we can work on areas of mutual benefit or concern, it's always enjoyable. I would love to see the government take more direction, if you will, from the opposition. I know that might make them a little nervous, but at least, perhaps, the government might listen just a little bit more, and we could actually have more of these types of exchanges, which I think would be better and not worse.

Having said that, I just wanted to very briefly highlight – and I don't want to pile on – some of my concerns that got us to this point. I must admit I was surprised on Friday to hear the extent of the work that the department would have had to undertake if the amendment hadn't been accepted, just in terms of trying to go through old paper records and finding boxes of files. It's surprising to me that it was only, really, just a few short years ago that this information became so readily available, and I hope that the new government can continue to make a commitment and then follow through on that commitment to a more open and transparent government in terms of information.

I know, certainly, that on this side of the House that has been and that would be our desire. Should Albertans ever trust us to form government, we will be advocating at every turn to try and find ways to make information that should be available to people readily available to people and to be able to access it where appropriate. Obviously, we don't think that, you know, personal details of every employee of the government should be released publicly, but where appropriate we should be taking steps to move in that direction.

I thank the minister for reaching out to us. I express my disappointment that the question can't be answered, because much of the concern of the constituents in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills certainly began around that time frame that was written into the question. Having said that and knowing that the information is extremely difficult to garner, I will encourage members on this side of the House and all members to accept the amendment as presented by the Minister of Health.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the question?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to close debate.

Mr. Cooper: With brevity being close to godliness or something like that . . .

An Hon. Member: That's cleanliness.

Mr. Cooper: Oh, cleanliness. I sometimes get these things wrong. . . . I'll close debate.

[Written Question 5 as amended carried]

Motions for Returns

[The Acting Clerk read the following motion for a return, which had been accepted]

Alberta Health Services Severance Payments

M2. Mr. Barnes:
A return showing a list of all severance payments made to Alberta Health Services employees at the management and executive levels, broken down by each individual position, for each of the fiscal years 2012-13, 2013-14, and 2014-15.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Construction Projects

M1. Mr. van Dijken moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing for the period from April 1, 2007, to March 31, 2015, a list of all the projects identified in each of the published Alberta Transportation three-year tentative major construction projects lists that have not yet been contracted.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm asking Alberta Transportation to provide a list for the last eight years outlining all of the projects that were not contracted yet published in the Alberta Transportation three-year tentative major construction projects lists. This is an exercise in accountability. These lists were not sunshine lists. They provided a snapshot in time of what may have been the transportation projects in a three-year forecast if something more important didn't arise.

By identifying the projects not contracted over this time frame, Albertans will be able to hold Alberta Transportation to account for some of the most important projects not done. Not only this, but Albertans will start to understand the scope and magnitude of the infrastructure deficit at Alberta Transportation by seeing all of the projects that were priorities that suddenly became no longer priorities. Madam Speaker, there may even be an opportunity to identify political projects on these lists. Highway 19 has been promised to be twinned for two or three elections now, and it still has not happened. The latest list has the highway 19 twinning project broken down into smaller sections.

Madam Speaker, this request is very simple. It may take a junior clerk or an intern summer student a week to check against the road optimization and decision-making application database and compile a new list for distribution. I trust that the hon. Minister of Transportation will see the valuable service the compilation of this list will provide to himself and his department as they strive to serve Albertans better each and every day.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation and of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I, unfortunately, will ask for this motion for a return to be rejected. The Transportation department tenders hundreds of projects through each year. As this is a continuous process, the list of uncontracted or untendered projects is ever-changing and is, therefore, only valid on the day it's produced, particularly for the current construction program. The department does not keep historical records of what projects went untendered on an annual basis.

Although our list of major construction rehabilitation projects over a three-year cycle is updated each year after careful planning and is available to the public on the Alberta Transportation website, how many projects are contracted and completed in a given year or when exactly a project is contracted depends on many factors, including the project priority changes and what new projects come onboard; the length of the construction season, which depends very much on weather, as we all know; environmental issues; market capacity for material; unexpected land- or utilities-related challenges; industry and sector capacity; and the evaluation of projects for cost-effective delivery.

As a result, some projects may be delayed, some may be combined with other projects for cost-effective delivery, and some may be cancelled. To produce the requested list would require going through Alberta Transportation's contract system to check the status of about 1,500 projects. Additionally, changes were made to the contract system technology in 2010, so the time required to retrieve earlier data would be even greater. This would be very time consuming and, I suggest, not a very effective way to use an already busy staff who are working hard to move these projects forward, and that is our priority. If the member is interested in specific projects, we would be happy to work with him or other members to make that specific information available.

I would urge all hon. members to vote against this motion. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to speak in favour of my hon. colleague's motion for a return. While we've had a fair amount of co-operation in the first number of questions – and for that I'm grateful – I think that the other thing we're seeing is that governing can be quite difficult and finding answers can be quite difficult. I wish that I had before me some of the comments that the Minister of Transportation has made in the past when it comes to rejecting motions for returns or written questions because I certainly have been privy to a number of times when members of the NDP, while they were in opposition, stood up in this place and were extremely frustrated and disappointed in the government when they would reject a question out of hand all because it was difficult to answer.

While I appreciate the challenge – I think the number used was 1,500, and that is a big number – some of that information is vitally important to Albertans, and as my hon. colleague mentioned, the truth of the matter is that it could be very valuable to the department to have a sense of contracts that they tender and that they don't and exactly where they're at in the process, particularly on a year-over-year basis, so that it can help them in their planning. So not only is it good information for us to have, it's also good information for the department to have. It allows them to plan on a year-over-year basis. It allows them to decide when they should and shouldn't be sending things for tender and exactly what processes they might need to be refining so that they can move forward in a more effective and efficient manner.

When we reject a question out of hand like this, the challenge is that it gives the illusion or the sense that there's information that the department has that they're trying to hide not only from opposition members but from Albertans and particularly folks like the road builders association and others who are concerned about the status of our roads. I know there are lots of counties that are concerned about the status of bridges and the overall condition of roads and maintenance. This is a really good opportunity for the department to come forward with that information, to provide information to all of those folks that might like to have a better sense of the direction of the department and also provide the opposition with the information that we require in order to do our job.

We've seen the Minister of Health work as well as possible with members of the opposition to try to come to a mutually agreed upon solution when it comes to the question that's being asked, and I find it a little bit unfortunate that the Minister of Transportation wasn't able to do the same. While he mentioned in his remarks that some of the even older information is significantly more difficult to track down and to go back and find, I am certain – I wouldn't want to speak for my hon. colleague, but I might just say that it would be my best guess – that if the hon. member had proposed some form of this question so that we could get a sense of the direction of the department, he too, like the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat and myself, would be agreeable to getting any piece of the information we're hoping for.

It is a little unfortunate, and it is for these reasons that I will be supporting the motion as written and not the fact that the government will be rejecting this request for information out of hand.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock to close debate.

Mr. van Dijken: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's been identified by the minister that this appears to be too onerous a job to actually get completed and that it would be too time consuming, but from my understanding of the road optimization and the decision-making application database, that's already been compiled, I fail to see where it would be too onerous and not offer good information for the department and also, then, for Albertans to know where we are at with these projects. So I would continue to encourage everyone to vote in favour of this.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 204 Residential Tenancies (Safer Spaces for Victims of Domestic Violence) Amendment Act, 2015

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment to present, and I have the required copies to distribute.

The Chair: The amendment shall be known as amendment A1.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Ms Drever: Thank you. The amendments proposed were made after discussion I've had since the introduction of my bill in an effort to increase protections for tenants as well as those they care for. The amendments are as follows. Section 2 is amended by adding the following after clause (a):

(a.1) by adding the following after clause (j):

(j.1) "protected adult" means an assisted adult, represented adult or supported adult as [those terms are defined] in the Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act.

This amendment will extend the protections of this bill to not just include children under the age of 18 but would also protect those whom the tenant cares for, whether they be a dependent blood relative or someone that the tenant is a caregiver for.

Section 4 is amended in the proposed section 47.2(1) and in section 47.3(1) by striking out “when a person or that person’s dependent child” and “or that of a dependent child of the tenant” respectively and substituting the newly added clause including protected adults.

In the proposed section 47.4 in subsection (2)(b) there is a similar substitution, again to include protected adults. Again, in the proposed section 47.4 the amendment adds the following after subsection (4): (5) the designated authority shall issue a decision with respect to an application for a certificate made pursuant to subsection (1) within seven days of its receipt.

These are high-risk situations, and we need to ensure that applicants for these certificates are not waiting around for weeks to know whether they can flee without the financial repercussions. This addition ensures that they will receive a response no later than seven days after the application.

These amendments offer more protection to the survivors and those they care for. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Back to the bill as amended. Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Acadia.

Ms Payne: Yes, Madam Chair. I rise to introduce an amendment to the bill, and I have the requisite number of copies.

The Chair: This will be amendment A2.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Ms Payne: Thank you. I am pleased to rise to table the following amendment on behalf of the Minister of Service Alberta. The bill will be amended as follows. Section 10 is struck out, and the following is substituted:

10 This Act comes into force on Proclamation.

This government amendment, to delay implementation of Bill 204 until proclamation, will allow for consultation on regulatory development to begin in January 2016. Time for regulatory development and consultation with affected stakeholders will allow government to implement Bill 204 effectively and properly and ensure that all stakeholders understand their roles in protecting tenants who’ve experienced domestic violence. Service Alberta expects consultations and regulatory drafting with key stakeholders, including landlords, certified professionals, and women’s organizations, to take six to eight months.

I implore my colleagues to support this amendment, and I commend the Member for Calgary-Bow for her fine work to support and protect victims of domestic violence across Alberta.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just rise for a very brief – I won’t say that, just in case it’s not. I rise to speak to amendment A2. Part of my concern or frustration is that we’ve seen an amendment proposed before the House, and we are all going to need to make a decision on that in the next few minutes. There’s a pretty high likelihood that at the end of me being on my feet, the government isn’t going to continue debate. I don’t know how many of my hon. colleagues will also be rising, but the challenge is that we received this amendment approximately 35 seconds ago – that’s untrue – at the beginning of the hon. member’s discussion. It’s my guess that prior to her rising, she had a very good sense that the Minister of Service Alberta would be proposing this amendment. It makes some significant changes to the way that the bill will be rolled out.

We have seen some co-operation in this House earlier. In fact, the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow had the opportunity and shared some of her amendments or some of her hopes for her bill earlier with the opposition, which allowed the opposition time to review, to think about, to consider some of the ramifications of the amendments that she just proposed. As we saw, the opposition felt that there were a number of good things here, but the benefit is that we had the opportunity, prior to a couple of minutes ago, to review those and then to make the decision that we didn’t have much to add specifically to the amendments. We saw them voted on in this House by members of this side and members of that side, and the bill can move forward. I think that that is a healthy process.

The hon. member talked about consultation from the time that she introduced the bill until today, which has been a number of weeks. We’ve seen some of the positive things that can come from consultation, and we’ve seen the government – perhaps the government could learn a lot from this hon. former colleague and, it’s my guess, someday to be a colleague again on a day very soon. Not that I would speculate, but if I was, that would very likely be the case. So we might just, in fact, see her back on the government benches, and perhaps that’s going to be a win. The hon. member gets the need to reach out to stakeholders and potentially deviate course on a bill and an amendment, and we saw that, but what we haven’t seen on this particular amendment is any reach to the opposition.

We heard the member rise and speak about the need to change the proclamation date so that they could consult on regulations. If, in fact, there is this great need to consult on regulations, we on this side of the House have been very clear over the last number of days that this is exactly the type of thing that needs to be done prior to making law because so many of the details of a bill are often tied up in the regulations. What regulations do is that they give cabinet essentially carte blanche ability to make whatever changes they see fit as long as it fits within the framework.

We’ve seen the government propose an amendment that makes significant change to the rollout of Bill 204. Let me be clear – let me be very clear – that members on this side of the House and, as we’ve seen in the past during debate, members on that side of the House fully support Bill 204. Today, as I stand here, I continue to support Bill 204 and much of the very, very, very important work that Bill 204 intends to deliver upon.

The frustration is around the government’s lack of desire – and I say the government’s lack of desire because it was moved on behalf of the Minister of Service Alberta, who is not a private member in this Assembly – to consult. They certainly didn’t even mention it in passing to the opposition, that this might be something that you want to consider and be prepared for. We’ve seen legislation move through this House quite quickly from time to time, and today very well may be another example. So it is extremely difficult for me under such short timelines to understand the full ramifications of what moving the date of proclamation around does, particularly in terms of consultation on regulations and some of the details and the nuances that will be required because of this bill. It’s because of that that I certainly won’t be able to support this amendment.

I know from consultations with members of the community in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that what they had hoped we would do, certainly me and, I would expect, many members of this Assembly, is to be able to provide thoughtful consideration to legislation that's placed before the Assembly. Submitting amendments mere moments before expecting members to vote on them is not what our constituents expect. What they expect is for us to be able to provide thorough, thoughtful review that at the end of the day will ensure that our province is better tomorrow than it is today.

While Bill 204 does many of those things – and let me be clear. At third reading, barring any massive new surprises in amendments from the government, I will be proud to stand in this Assembly and support Bill 204 and all of the good intentions that it does do. But I will not be supporting an amendment that's placed before the Assembly with no prior consultation, with no discussion with the opposition. We saw this last week as well. It's becoming a trend.

We have also seen the government make some errors when they haven't taken the appropriate time. I don't want to dig up old challenges, but 7.25 per cent comes to mind. Bill 203 comes to mind, when the government went one way and then stopped to go another. Lots of times that happens because they haven't taken the time to listen to the opposition. They haven't taken the time to properly consult, which is exactly what we're seeing in government business on Bill 6, and are creating significant concern.

So I will not be supporting the amendment as presented. I would encourage others, when it comes to considering legislation thoughtfully, that's it's very difficult to do in just a matter of moments.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak to the amendment?

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to speak to this amendment. I guess I, too, have conflicting thoughts here. I'm very much in favour of the spirit of the bill. But, quite frankly, I'm frustrated by the process, as a succinct statement. I am pleased to see that the Member for Calgary-Bow has tried to put forward a piece of legislation with the intent to make a hopeful and a helpful and a meaningful impact for victims of domestic violence. To be clear, violence is evil. I am totally, truly in support of the intent of the bill. Albertans escaping domestic violence already face a lot of substantial barriers to a safe and healthy life. A dangerous living situation can actually be made worse by sort of the systemic issues that this bill desires to change.

Sometimes people just need to leave the situation that they're in, pick up and go, so to speak. When a situation is unsafe, it's really not fair to expect Albertans to put themselves or their family in harm's way, which is what sometimes going back to a residence means. Often the perpetrators of domestic violence will still be at the victim's home when they come back from a shelter or a hospital, and we just don't think that that would be appropriate, to expect them to have to go to an unsafe place. As legislators it is our responsibility to ensure that Alberta's most vulnerable really do have a means to protect themselves and their families regardless of the economic issues. This is really a core of what it means to believe that violence is not appropriate in our society. Just because a person can't afford to break a lease shouldn't mean that they're bound to stay in an abusive situation.

So while I think that the bill has noble aims – and I will support it, as I said at the very beginning – my point is that I'm very frustrated with the process not just for this bill but the pattern of the process. I do believe that there are opportunities to make this legislation more complete. What I'm frustrated with is to see bills continually presented and then, "Oh, withdrawn; we forgot to put this in," and before we even get to discussing them, a whole raft of amendments are thrown at us. Surely, these things should have been thought of before the bill was handed out and presented.

The reality is that a really good intent that's done in a wrong way doesn't produce a good result. I think what we're seeing here with bills being presented or motions or whatever being presented and then, "Oh, let's take it back and change something," maybe change a whole bunch of things, as with the bill we saw the other day, 24 different amendments to it, is that there is a lack of consultation. There is a lack of considered thought going into these things. They're being thrown out like I don't know what, and I am frustrated with the process. This is not a professional way for us in the Legislature to be presenting bills that change people's lives. I just wish we could slow things down and think through them well enough so that we don't have to change them before we even start discussing them. That's my biggest frustration.

I would like to suggest, though, that in light of that, there are some areas – and I throw them out for consideration – to be thought about because I do believe there does need to be consultation on this bill, that there are some important discussions that need to be had here rather than just rushing forward with it. There are a number of nonprofits in the service sector that do help victims of violence who have actually written and made suggestions to us. I think they need an opportunity to be heard. I think the bill can be made more complete. I'm glad to hear that at some point there will be some sort of consultation. The reality is that it probably should have happened before we got to this stage.

One of the points that's been made to us by one of the foundations in Calgary is that the bill makes no provision for accountability on the part of the abuser. They go on to say that they would recommend that the bill not be put forward for second reading and, further, that inclusive consultations with service agencies would actually take place. I actually am glad to see that implementation will be delayed somewhat so that some of this could happen. But, again, I think the process here – I mean, it's continually getting the cart ahead of the horse, pushing things forward and then having, "Oops, we need to change that," before we can even deal with it.

A second suggestion again from the same organization. Their concern is that parts of the way this bill is written may in fact in the end reduce the number of available places for rent to victims of violence. Why? Because they may in fact be shunned and passed over in the rental application process when some landlords figure out that they're dealing with those kinds of situations, and then they have this bill. I think there just needs to be more thought put into bills before they're put forward. I think one of the essential principles of law-making is that they should be just, that you should do no harm, and I agree. I understand that's the intent of this bill, no harm for one segment of our society, truly a vulnerable segment. At the same time sometimes in our enthusiasm to protect one group we turn around and we create injustice for another group.

We have those who have said to us that in its current form – actually, the Calgary Homeless Foundation has suggested that in its current form landlords are exposed to a great deal of risk from those who may seek to exploit the program. I think that it's possible to mitigate some of these risks while still maintaining the intended protections for those who are vulnerable and those who are victims of abuse.

May I also suggest in that regard that the reality is that many landlords are amateurs. They're not professionals. They're not slumlords, as sometimes they're caricatured as. In fact, a growing number of landlords in our province at this particular stage in our economic cycle are people who have lost their jobs, some who have gone elsewhere to get work. They've got their house. It's underwater in terms of mortgage. They can't sell it. They want to rent their house out. The truth is that many of those landlords have no idea how to actually rent a house. To be honest, many of them don't even understand the landlord and tenancy regulations. Furthermore, many of them, quite frankly, are good, gracious, and I'm going to say sometimes timid people who don't want to offend, who don't want to be abusive, who don't want to be hard with tenants.

As a result, all too often – and I'm sure many of you know stories and experiences of the horrors of being a landlord – you can be taken advantage of. You can end up with people that you can't get rid of. You can end up with people who do thousands of dollars of damage and then leave in the night and you have no idea where they went. Amateur landlords, what I think of as homeowner landlords, who don't understand the process, who don't understand the rules, often get taken advantage of, beat up, and abused and spend nights in tears and fear and lose thousands of dollars over it.

There are seniors that I know of who in an attempt to try and fund their income have actually moved into smaller places, tried to rent out their house, but again they're not capable landlords in some cases, and they get taken advantage of. I don't know. Sometimes the landlords are also abused, and I think that there needs to be a justice that goes for all people.

I just suggest that it needs consultation, it needs thinking.

An Hon. Member: Then vote against it.

Mr. Orr: I'm going to vote against the amendment. I will vote for the bill because I think that the spirit of the bill is right. I just wish it was written well in the first place. I wish all the issues were taken into consideration before a bill that's half thought through is thrown out for everybody to approve.

So I will vote against the amendment in principle, but I think that in principle it's the right thing to do. Let's just do it properly. That's all I'm saying. When nonprofit agencies who care for abused people are sending letters saying, "We have concerns with how this bill is going to be implemented," it causes me to sit up and listen. I cannot vote for the amendment, but I will vote for the bill because I think that it is an important bill and I think that we should move forward on it. I just wish we could see a process in which things would be handled a little bit more clearly and professionally.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much. I just want to rise very briefly to address some of the comments that have been raised. I mean, obviously, this amendment is intended to make it the case that, in fact, the bill doesn't come into force until proclamation. It's a fairly short amendment. It's fairly straightforward. The reason that it's not going to come into force until proclamation is because we would like to consult on some of these very issues. This is an amendment that has been moved by the government to a private member's bill.

I just want to say that I actually think that some of the member's comments with respect to the bill from the Member for Calgary-Bow are overstepping a little. I think that she's done a very good job with this bill, and I think to say that she proposed a bill that was slapped together or unprofessional is a little bit unfair to her. I think that she's done a very good job. I think that, you know, people have proposed some amendments to that bill that will make it easier to move forward. We're all co-operating, and I think that we're working very well together.

Those are my comments. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm going to support this amendment because I like the idea of going back and making sure that all the t's are crossed and the i's are dotted. In doing so, I think one of the things we find when we look at putting legislation together – and this has happened in a lot of cases – is that as we come up with the final product, there are oftentimes people who come forward and bring out a thoughtful change. I think intelligent leadership is looking at those changes and saying: okay; that actually makes the bill better. I actually believe that you don't have to necessarily assume that a bill is slapped together when amendments are brought forward. I prefer to think of it as making thoughtful changes in order to make a bill better.

In this case, I was happy to see this bill, and I believe, in speaking with the member who proposed it, that the idea behind bringing in the amendment that the act comes into force on proclamation is just to be able to get some checks and balances in place so that when the bill actually is used, there is an opportunity for people to use it in the right way. That's why I'm going to support this.

I want to actually talk about something, and the member brought it up. I think it was the concept that there could potentially be discrimination against people once there is a bill like this. I'm going to go out on a limb here and assume that you're talking about single moms. I find it a little bit disturbing that there would be a conversation about the potential of keeping single moms out of rental facilities because there is an assumption made that they are in that situation because they're a victim of domestic violence. I would also say – and I say this as a single mom – that if a situation arose where any woman in the province felt she was being kept out of a rental facility because someone made that assumption about her, I would hope that she is able to come forward to the government, report that landlord, and that landlord would face punitive measures for their behaviour.

When we have positive legislation such as this, I think that we have to put aside that need to nitpick, and I think we have to move forward with it and understand that sometimes some checks and balances have to happen afterwards, but in this case, I think – not every piece of legislation is perfect, but having a discussion about it, making some changes as you go through the process, and moving it forward so people in this province, so women in this province can use it and be protected by it I applaud. I applaud the amendment. I applaud the bill. Let's just get on with it.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A2?

If not, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

The Chair: We're back on Bill 204. Are there any further comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in favour of the Residential Tenancies (Safer Spaces for Victims of Domestic Violence) Amendment Act, 2015. Domestic violence is an unacceptable societal wrong, which we must all stand up against. Often victims are forced to stay in dangerous living situations because of financial reasons, putting themselves and often their dependants in harm's way. This bill proposes an approach to help mitigate the financial burden of breaking a lease due to domestic violence.

My office has received some concerns about this bill which have led me to make the following minor amendment. This amendment is merely a housekeeping formality, which I've actually spoken about with the member already, to attach a statutory declaration to the attested statement. I believe this will provide concerned landlords the insurance that this process is monitored and is subjected to a strict . . .

The Chair: Excuse me, hon. member. Can you ensure that the amendment is brought to the table here before you continue with it? We need the original copy.

Mrs. Pitt: Okay. Do you want me to wait?

The Chair: Just until we at least have it here.
The amendment will be A3.
You can proceed, hon. member.

Mrs. Pitt: I'm actually just going to read the amendment. I move that Bill 204, Residential Tenancies (Safer Spaces for Victims of Domestic Violence) Amendment Act, 2015, be amended in the proposed section 47.4 by adding the following after subsection (3):

(3.1) A statement made under subsection 2(a)(ii) must be in the form of or accompanied by a statutory declaration attesting to the veracity of the statement.

I urge my colleagues to support this motion with this common-sense amendment, and I thank the Member for Calgary-Bow for putting forward this piece of legislation.

The Chair: Any hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Madam Chair. Just a couple of questions for the mover of the amendment that maybe she could respond to. I guess the concern might be that the steps that would be required to obtain a statutory declaration may be difficult to achieve by someone who's under the stress of family violence and trying to move out and protect their kids and so on. Could the hon. member speak to how a statutory declaration might be obtained and how somebody under considerable personal stress might be able to accomplish one in a timely fashion?

Mrs. Pitt: That's a fair question. It was actually one that was discussed when this amendment was first proposed within the caucus. I mean, the intention is to sort of satisfy the stakeholder groups, the landlords in this situation, while still making sure – the intent of the bill is to protect those fleeing domestic violence, that they are having an easier time getting out of those situations. It's actually quite easy to have a commissioned letter free of charge, too, in most places. I'm sure that it won't be that difficult in that situation as well, understanding, too, that a lot of times these situations aren't actually immediately, that night, that this is something that has been in the works possibly for a couple of days, weeks, months, whatever the situation may be. But city halls offer, free of charge, services for this; I believe there's somebody always at a police station as well, so it won't create an extra barrier in this circumstance.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm looking at the amendment, and I have some additional questions. The amendment says, "A statement made under subsection (2)(a)(ii) must be in the form of or accompanied by a statutory declaration attesting to the veracity of the statement." Now, I noticed that in the initial bill as presented, the declarations are provided by members of various professional organizations. I think the College of Social Workers is one of them. Now, I am a member of a professional organization myself. I'm a member of APEGA, the professional engineers and geoscientists association, and when I make professional statements, my stamp and seal are the standard that I'm held to. I trust that my colleague from Calgary-Foothills can also attest to that because I know that he is also a member of APEGA. It seems to me that just having a written statement from a member of a college or a professional association should be good enough.

I'm just wondering why the Member for Airdrie is not willing to take professional people practising within their scope of practice at their word and why they're putting this additional hurdle in front of people when professional members of these professional associations are providing their professional opinion, which they have to be held to account for according to the code of ethics that they operate under. It just seems to me that this might be an additional hurdle to the people who are seeking this kind of declaration. As well, it degrades the value of the professional services that the people on the list are providing. So I'm wondering if the Member for Airdrie could provide some more clarification on those points.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: I would be more than happy to. Thank you. I first of all would like to start off by saying that I have great respect for all persons with professional designations. That's not quite the issue here. When a document has had a statutory declaration, the person who is responsible for signing that document can actually go to jail in a case of fraud whereas persons with a professional designation don't have that level of accountability . . . [interjections] – sorry; I've not finished that sentence – as much as somebody who has actually commissioned the document. That's just the way the law is. It in no way is meant to be or add any additional barrier to a person fleeing domestic violence. It's just adding a layer of accountability during this process so that this is, in my opinion, a really good piece of legislation.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Gold Bar, then the hon. Member for Calgary-North West. Or Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I caught a case of the cold sweats when you suggested that I was from Calgary.

In response, then, I can't speak, of course, to the processes that are in place for the members of the professional associations and colleges that are listed in this particular bill, not having been a member of any of those associations at any time in the past. However, speaking from my own experience as a member of a professional association that does have a code of conduct and ethics, that all members have to abide by, I can say that the range of penalties for making false or misleading statements as a professional member of this professional association includes administrative penalties, letters of warning, and can range all the way up to having my professional designation revoked, which in essence means that I would no longer be able to practise as a professional geologist if I was found to make false or misleading statements in a professional document.

You know, I have no particular desire to go to jail, and I don't think that any members of any professional associations require that kind of penalty hanging over their heads to dissuade them from making false statements. Professionals or professional members are bound by a code of ethics. By and large, most members uphold those at all times that they're doing their work. I fail to understand how this is going to prevent somebody from making a misleading statement. In fact, I think it's a quite serious allegation against those professional associations to suggest that the codes of ethics and the regulations that those members have to abide by aren't sufficient and that we need to go to the level of requiring statutory declarations so that people can go to jail if they're making false or misleading statements.

I guess I'd like the Member for Airdrie to suggest to me why she thinks that the professional associations that these members in the bill are members of aren't doing their job well enough to encourage compliance with the law and why she feels that additional steps are necessary here.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Airdrie, did you wish to respond?

Mrs. Pitt: I do. I just want to add that this is something that's done in other provinces. It's commonplace; it's best practice. That's it. That's all. It's very simple.

Ms Jansen: I have to say that I've heard in the past from my Wildrose colleagues and from their leader that they didn't want to legislate on social issues. I get it; you don't like it. You're uncomfortable with it. But I find it unbelievable that your critic on women's issues would look at this bill, and the first thing that comes to her mind is: how do we protect the landlords? I think these folks seriously need to look at their list of priorities. When they're thinking about a woman leaving a situation where she is a victim of domestic violence and it's clearly stated in the bill who she has to talk to, they come up with an amendment suggesting that we need to protect the landlords. Unbelievable.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Madam Chair. I thank the Member for Airdrie for the amendment, but domestic violence is on the rise in this province. This bill addresses one of the barriers that currently stops survivors of violence from breaking the cycle of violence. We ensured that those lists of those able to write the third-party statements included professionals from communities in both rural and urban Alberta.

In rural communities, for example, having to make a declaration or to take an oath, as this amendment suggests, will create another unnecessary barrier to receiving help. In rural Alberta it is already difficult for survivors fleeing domestic violence to be able to get the help they require, which is why additionally seeking a commissioner to validate the statutory declaration on top of finding a professional from section 47.3(3) may have the unintended consequence of deterring a survivor of violence from taking the first step to break the cycle of violence.

The professionals on this list are individuals that deal with survivors of domestic violence on a daily basis, and I have the utmost confidence in their ability to decide on whether to issue their third-party statement. This amendment, although proposed with good intentions, will add additional barriers, especially to rural Albertans, and for that reason I ask that the amendment be defeated.

Mr. Clark: Very briefly, Madam Chair, I don't know what can be said beyond what was said by the hon. Member for Calgary-North West. I'm maybe not quite as charitable as my friend here from Calgary-Bow, but this is a ridiculous amendment and deserves to be defeated.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to share in my appreciation for the previous comments on this. I am, like the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, somewhat concerned at the aspersions that are cast on professional organizations. I am a physician, and I believe I am actually listed in the act as somebody that could sign this. To have an aspersion cast upon whether or not I would be faithful in pursuing my activities is reprehensible. I would feel the same if you'd cast aspersions on my colleagues in social work or psychology or nursing.

I think what's important is that women in this situation have the ability to remove themselves from the situation, and that's what this bill is about. It's not about people trying to game the system. These are women in crisis. Whatever this Legislature does, it needs to protect the most vulnerable. I would ask the Member for Airdrie or a member of that caucus to justify the comment that a statutory declaration can be acquired for no cost. I don't think that that's true. But if it is true, I would like to have the information so that I can pass it on to some of my constituents that might need that information in the future.

The Chair: Any further speakers to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: I wasn't going to say anything. I thank the member across from me and the mover of this bill and the other people who have spoken against this amendment.

My kids are alive, and I'm alive. This amendment would put myself, my children, or any other woman in that position in jeopardy. Please vote against this amendment.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A3?

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: The irony of what's happening here, the fact that we weren't consulted about this amendment: that is not common sense. The common sense that happened here was the bill that was introduced, which protects people from domestic violence in a way that is feasible by having social workers, by having the people that are already working get them out of that situation into a better place. That's common sense. What this amendment does is that it creates another barrier, and it shows that you don't understand what the issue is.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I feel compelled to rise to some of the comments that have been made in the Chamber. When I was first elected to this illustrious Chamber, I sought out to achieve the use of a legacy building that was abandoned in the small town of Youngstown, Alberta, to be used as a women's shelter. To the Member for Calgary-North West: I do know, and I have been involved. Many members in this Assembly will know and can learn that you can sign commissions. That's part of your role as representatives. You can sign commissions as a member of the Legislature. That is some of the role that we can do. So I think that some of the misconceptions and some of the emotions that are being brought forward here are unfair. This caucus is simply trying to improve a piece of legislation.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Chair, thank you. Let me be clear. We support Bill 204. We support women fleeing domestic violence and all of the horrible things that come with that. To say that we don't is a challenge. I just want to be clear that at no point in time was it the intention of this caucus, at no point in time was it the intention of the Member for Airdrie, at no point in time was it the intention of any member of this House to create barriers to women fleeing domestic abuse. It certainly is and was our intention when the amendment was proposed that it would not create those sorts of challenges and barriers in the future.

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but the committee now must rise and report pursuant to standing orders.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 204. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, say no. So ordered.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Microgenerator Regulations and Policies

506. Mr. Feehan moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to amend the necessary regulations and policies to encourage microgenerators to contribute more renewable electricity to the grid such as locally generated wind and solar.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise today to put forward Motion 506. I am very pleased to have an opportunity to speak to this particular motion and idea here in this House as I think it is very consistent with the movement of this government in its climate leadership initiative and continues the work that is being done by the government in a particular area, and that is the area of microgeneration.

Some 10 years or so ago new regulations were brought into this Legislature that allowed individuals, communities, and small farms to begin to provide electricity through various sources such as solar and wind and, most importantly, to be connected to the electrical grid and allow their generation to be contributed to the larger society around. At the time this was a dramatic change, allowing individuals to move on their beliefs and contribute to the larger society in a very particular way, focused on climate change, on responsible electricity generation.

We were very pleased that that legislation was brought in at the time, and now we're asking, as the legislation is coming due for renewal on December 31 of this year, that we revisit these regulations because so much more can be done than was previously done in the regulations introduced earlier. In particular, there are a number of limitations on the amount of generation that is allowed for individuals, whether they be an individual home or perhaps a farmer wishing to generate his or her own electricity or perhaps in the area of community leagues in the cities or in small towns throughout the province.

One of the limitations that was introduced at the time was that one could not be compensated for any more electricity than you actually consumed yourself, which meant that, at the very best, houses in the city or on farms throughout the province could simply generate enough electricity to pay off their own electrical bill. Of course, a laudable regulation at the time, but so much more is possible.

Now we have reached a place where wind and solar and many other forms of microgeneration have become viable for the average person. We can now put solar onto our house and be able to actually expect to pay the cost of that solar panel in a reasonable lifetime of our home. It means now as well that we have to consider something new, not simply that people are able to take care of their own contribution to the change in climate and to be responsible electricity users. Now we've reached the point where they can actually be contributors to the whole province and be part of a solution that goes much beyond themselves and their own personal needs in this situation.

We've reached a point where a farmer may be able to put solar out into his field and may be able to put solar onto the roof of his barn and generate enough money to not only pay off the costs of his or her electrical use on the farm but also generate small amounts of income to help sustain the farm over time. Given our deep concern for the family farm in the NDP we would really like to see an opportunity for them to be able to generate that kind of electricity and to be able to contribute not only to the environment, which, of course, they're very dedicated to as farmers, but also to the neighbourhoods in which they live and all of the electrical use in the communities they depend on to go and get their groceries and so on. This is a great opportunity for us.

There are a number of other regulations that I could go through, but each of them essentially is focused on the same point, that it's time. It's time that we not only have people able to take care of their own needs but that we invite every single person in this province to become part of the new economy that we are creating here in this province, the economy that is not dependent solely on the roller coaster of oil revenues but, rather, on a renewable energy production system that would involve not simply a few big companies but every single household.

Imagine, if you will, a community that every household has solar on the roof. Imagine that every farm has wind out by the barn. Imagine that every community in Small Town, Alberta, is able to use a biomass generator to generate their own electricity. What we have, then, is an opportunity for people all over this province to feel like they are contributors, to assist in this move forward from the economy in which we've lived for the last 44 years into a bold new economy, an economy that is already true in many other places in the world. Places like Denmark and Germany are already in a place where their renewables are producing enough electricity to account for full days' worth of electrical use in some of those countries on occasion. We, too, can be part of that.

As part of this, it gives us an opportunity as well to begin to develop the technology, the resources, the production lines, the training necessary to ensure that we become the leaders in international, global renewables and the installation of microgeneration.

Right now we are in a terrible place where we're watching other countries do things that we are moving away from. We are reducing our coal usage. We'll be completely out of coal usage by 2030, and we're watching at the same time countries like China build more coal plants. We need to set an example for them. They look to us for the type of living that they want to have. They see across the ocean, and they say: that's the middle-class living that we want to have; therefore, we are producing more and more electricity using coal because we want to have that middle-class living. Because we are the models of middle-class living and we do such a good job of it, it's a requisite upon us to make sure that that middle-class living is indeed a sustainable, long-term form of middle-class living. Simply doing what we've been doing for generations over and over again, we have learned, is unsatisfactory. Climate change is real, climate change is man made, and it is time for us to establish a new way of being that the rest of the world can adopt in becoming sustainable members of the whole world community.

This is our chance. I'm asking that we all in this House support the opportunity for people to come forward to develop the new green economy, to develop the opportunity for farmers to make a few dollars, for community leagues in the cities to be able to make a few dollars, and for small towns to be able to make a few dollars, all of which will sustain them financially and also sustain them in terms of providing work in the new green economy locally, in their situation, in their homes. This is a great opportunity for us. I'm thrilled to have an opportunity to do this.

Some 23 years ago, when I built the home that I live in now, we built a home to R-2000 specifications here in the city of Edmonton. As a result, we have felt like we've been contributors to this new, modern world. Unfortunately, at the time that we built the home, the individual who built our home, a well-known net-zero home builder in the city of Edmonton, told us that it just wouldn't work to put solar on the roof, that we'd never be able to reclaim that amount of money. So we didn't choose to do that, and now I find myself here in the House saying: let's change these regulations so I can go back and revisit what I wanted to do some 23 years ago and turn my house into a net-zero house. Everything else about it is ready. It's an R-2000 registered house with the federal government. All I need to do now is generate enough electricity, and I can actually stop polluting.

Thank you. I appreciate it.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you Madam Speaker. I'll be brief. I'd like to congratulate the member from the government caucus. It's the first green initiative, I think, that they brought forward that doesn't directly cost jobs. So congratulations on that.

You know what? I think the thought behind this is okay, so I'm not going to criticize the member for that. I think that his intentions are good, and I will even admire his grand vision on where this could go. I think the motion on its face is not a bad thing, but I think that when we go forward and green the planet and do all these things, we need to always make sure that we're not doing more harm than good.

What I like about the motion is that for those people that produce, if I understand it – I hope I do – more electricity than they can consume, they can sell it to the grid. Beautiful. If that's what it is, that's beautiful. If it's to have solar panels on every house in the world, maybe. Here's the problem. Again, as I think I understand it – and I'm happy to be corrected by someone with better science than I've read – solar panels are a good idea because the sun provides free energy. On the face of it, it is free. But solar panels have issues, I understand, because it uses up the rare-earth minerals that are available at a higher rate than they probably ought to be for what they produce. Nonetheless, for those that do experimental things, if they're going to produce the electricity anyways, why not let them put it into the grid? Great. Windmills have issues. When the wind is blowing, the electricity is essentially free, and the motion says that if you're going to produce the wind energy anyways, you should be able to sell it into the grid. Good idea.

All the new technologies start out with problems, but you don't get past them unless you experiment, at least with the new technologies. For those that put solar panels on, great; let them sell it into the grid. Let's study those solar panels so that we get to the point where we know that solar panels are good. For those that produce wind, let's let them put it into the grid while we study the windmills and we look for better ways to have windmills work and every other technology, too. As far as that goes, it's fine.

I probably wouldn't be quite as giddy as the member making the motion, assuming that the current technologies are that good that it's going to take us into the future. I would say that with every technology for more green energy that comes up that while we're studying it, we might as well let people put the energy into the grid. We should always be trying to do more research so that we can get better, cleaner, purer forms of energy, and for that, I'll say that I just wouldn't want anybody to make the assumption that this is any magical answer.

A lot of these technologies have good intentions. I mean, the first battery-powered cars and maybe the ones now: I think it was proven that the environmental damage might be more than the environmental good because of the problem with recycling the batteries after the life cycle of the car. Nonetheless, the intentions were good, and great for trying that.

I applaud the member for his good intentions. If it is what I think it is, that those who produce electricity be allowed to sell it into the grid, beautiful. I just wouldn't be quite as giddy as the member was that made the motion.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise, of course, in support of this motion. I note that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford went through a list of things that we could imagine: imagine if we had a world where we had more solar rooftops, imagine if we had small family farms producing their own power, imagine if we had community leagues or First Nations producing their own power and taking those input costs out of the functioning of their communities. I would submit to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford that I disagreed with none of what he said. However, I don't think that we need to imagine anymore. I think that the time has come in Alberta to act. We can act, we can do, we can move beyond imagining, and we can lead.

We heard during the panel process a great deal about micro-generation, a great deal about the possibilities. These were, in fact, some of the conversations with the public that were the most animated, that were the most real for people. Certainly, in the consultation process, in the technical engagement sessions, Madam Speaker, we heard as well from the renewable energy industry on this matter of microgeneration. But more than that, we heard from municipalities on this matter, we heard from First Nations on this matter, and we heard from the agriculture and forestry industries in the technical engagement sessions on this. We also heard in the buildings and houses technical engagement session a great deal of interest in moving our microgeneration policies beyond their current straitjacket of one megawatt into a more fulsome policy where we might realize some of the gains that other jurisdictions have begun to realize.

This is about more than simply feeling like we are doing the right things for small businesses, for our agricultural producers, for our forestry industry, for our First Nations, and for municipalities. It's about taking input costs out of their budgets. It's about smoothing out many of their electricity costs and other costs of undertaking the business of their organization such that they may focus their efforts on other important works: if they are municipalities, then focusing their efforts on issues related to reducing housing and homelessness, for example; if they are landlords for low-income housing, ensuring that they may keep rents affordable. These are all ways that organizations might benefit from such an undertaking as amending the microgeneration regulations, Madam Speaker.

We also heard in the engagement sessions, both in the public consultations, in which almost a thousand Albertans participated, and in the online written submissions, which numbered close to 500, a great deal about community power, about geothermal, bioenergy, and waste to energy. Again, Madam Speaker, these are community-building initiatives in which there is a great deal of entrepreneurial energy, that previously the government of Alberta had taken a pass on, essentially let it pass them by. We are interested in those job-creation opportunities. We're interested in that entrepreneurial activity. We are interested in the spinoff effects that such trades and other manufacturing jobs could have across the province.

Dr. Leach's panel did recommend an amendment to the microgeneration regulation, and, you know, in principle we liked that idea. The question then becomes, Madam Speaker, how to do it and to ensure that we are making the right policy design changes, that we are doing so carefully and thoughtfully in ways that ensure grid stability, to ensure that we have accommodations for later times once we have future advances in things like energy storage, that we have an appropriate regulatory framework for such undertakings, that we have the appropriate interaction with the transmission system. So that is the kind of work that our government will now undertake within the rubric of the overall implementation of our climate change leadership strategy, a leadership strategy that, I might add, is receiving local, national, and global acclaim for its collaborative nature.

One of the things that we heard loud and clear was that Alberta had previously not had an energy efficiency strategy or much in the way of a renewables overall strategy or framework, Madam Speaker. So those are undertakings that we will now examine through the work of the Ministry of Environment and Parks. Part of that will mean that we will make commitments to Albertans with respect to energy efficiency and what they can do in their own homes, and part of that will be these matters of microgeneration.

We've heard a great deal since launching the climate process in June on the possibilities for individuals, for small businesses, for First Nations, for municipalities, for farms and ranches, for forestry operations, and we believe that those dreams ought not to be dreams anymore. We believe that they should become reality, Madam Speaker. I think we heard a great deal in many ways from Albertans on this because this presents a democratization of power. It puts power in the hands of people.

Given that independence is a distinctly Albertan virtue and a value that all members of this House hold dear, I urge all members to support this motion.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of this motion. I note that this is something that we put out in the Alberta Party climate change plan, called Alberta's Contribution, last week, so I'm pleased to speak in favour of this. I'll note while I have the floor one more time that we are the only party on this side of the House that has actually put out our own climate change plan in addition to a full shadow budget. So I do look forward to seeing both of those from our friends if not in this go-round, then next.

But that's not what we're here to talk about. What we are here to talk about is microgeneration, of course, which I'm here to speak in favour of. Clearly, the one megawatt limitation was far too low. I concur with my hon. colleague, that this is the future of generation, and it's also part of that transition away from other forms of energy.

Now, I note that my hon. friend from Calgary-Hays noted that there are some challenges with microgeneration of solar and wind, but I can tell you that there are challenges in the generation of any kind of electricity, most notably coal-fired power. The impact of coal-fired power is of significant particulate matter in terms of pollution, a significantly higher portion of carbon emissions, which I give this government credit for taking steps to tackle.

I will cede the rest of my time, but I wanted to be on the record as speaking in favour of this motion. I encourage all members of the House to do the same.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today with enthusiastic support for Motion 506. I'm only sorry that he beat me to the punch. I am a renewables junkie. It's been my vocation for a lot of years. I am just thrilled that we are going to take a good, long look at the microgen act, and I'm hoping that at the end of the day, we just take the cap right off that sucker and throw it out the door.

I'm pleased to see this motion. Wildrose believes in practical, cost-sensible solutions to fight pollution on all fronts, and this is one of those lovely little things that can really do a major job on pollution of all kinds, not just greenhouse gas emissions. I know we focus on GHGs all the time, but frankly there's a lot more to pollution than just GHGs. Let's be honest about that.

I really look forward to having some sort of mechanism in place to reduce electricity demand by developing market-based mechanisms rather than subsidies, that encourage conservation and efficiency to allow our businesses, our co-ops, and individual Albertans to sell locally generated electricity from their cogen – wind, solar, biomass, or any other of the many alternatives that are out there – and move it back into the grid. Granted, that's not without challenges. We're going to need some very major changes in how our grid is currently managed and metered, as the member would know.

Now, this government recently announced the results of a climate change panel, and there didn't seem to me to be a sense of the technological and practical difficulties that make that plan kind of costly and, in my opinion, infeasible in 15 years. But if we were to take the cap off microgen, we just might squeak it in there. We'll see.

I am surprised, also, that this first truly sensible move since our government came into power, regarding the greening of Alberta's power grid, has come to the House through a private member's motion. But I'll take what you give me – right? – and I'm pleased to see a sensible proposal with the potential to really profoundly and positively impact Alberta's power generation.

We have a risky investment climate right now with this government and some of the plans that they've been throwing out here. We've got a call for 5,692 megawatts to be replaced by 2030. That number does not account for the expected growth in our demand for electricity of about 500 megawatts a year. Every time someone brings up numbers and facts, of course, it seems like those aren't really taken seriously, but this amount of power is enormous to just make up in 15 years. Although, in my opinion, this NDP government has been halting a lot of further industrial growth in Alberta – it certainly seems to be their plan – replacing 5,692 megawatts is a pretty daunting task if we're just going to be tackling that at a utility scale, that requires billions and billions of dollars of investment. It's going to be difficult to attract that kind of money here.

There's something else that I wanted to bring to everyone's attention in the House here. You know, I realize that coal has been vilified a whole lot, but I want you to know something about the last couple of coal plants that were built. Maybe this hasn't been brought to the attention of members opposite, but when it comes to particulate emissions, the last coal plant that was built, that came online, I think, in 2011 or 2012, actually has fewer particulate emissions than combined-cycle natural gas. Yet we're going to prematurely retire that thing, and the billions of dollars that the company is going to come after the people of Alberta for in compensation, that are going to come out of our pocket to unnecessarily retire a coal plant like that are to pick up what? In fact, it removes more particulate than combined-cycle natural gas. So why retire that thing so prematurely when there isn't any particulate gain and, efficiencywise, it's almost as efficient? It just seems kind of silly to me to be spending that kind of money.

Energy infrastructure has a cost, and that cost is amortized over three to five decades. The energy infrastructure that we're talking about for gas, for example, is going to cost about $3.3 billion in infrastructure.

There are a couple of other things here that I wanted to cover just briefly. To give you a little bit of an idea about the scope of replacing the amount of power that we're going to retire out of coal, we're going to need something between seven and nine times more wind than we currently have. That's substantial. Coming at this from the microgen point of view, it seems to me that it puts all Albertans now at work, and everybody and anybody that wants to contribute to the grid can if the changes are made appropriately in microgen. That is going to cause, though, a little bit of a problem, and that is the variable nature of so many renewables coming on and going off and coming on and going off the grid.

I've talked to some of the stakeholders about the current system that we have managing our grid. They're not sure that a high renewables fraction – I'm sure the member understands "renewables fraction" – can be accommodated by the current management system. That's going to be a cost. That is going to be a cost. You've got to admit that, right? You see. He's admitting it. There you go.

There's more than just saying that we're going to take the cap off with the microgen act and let everybody go at it. The grid has to be able to respond. We still have a baseload that needs to be covered off. If we have a lot of renewables coming in, how is that going to affect the bidding process, too? This is another consideration that has to be taken into account. Microgeneration can strengthen the grid by mitigating grid disturbances.

I want to add one more element here, and that is distributed generation with microgeneration. Distributed generation, of course, is always serving a nearby load, which means you are not then having to access massive infrastructure to get the power from here to there because you're just serving a nearby load. One of the mechanisms that we may have to look at, that I bring to the hon.

member's attention, is that if you're not going to require the main infrastructure for transmission of that electricity in serving a nearby load, are you still going to be hit with the transmission costs that are currently out there? This is a big consideration. That is a big number. I would ask the hon. member to take that into consideration here.

I've taught a number of students at NAIT that now work in renewable and alternate industries, and I've met with a number of this industry's stakeholders, and one of the topics that consistently comes up is the manner in which the existing limits on the microgen act have prevented investment and growth in this industry. In talking to them, there were three regulations that most of the time came up in those conversations, that I feel are preventing the act from achieving its desired outcomes. One, the regulations demand that the total nominal capacity of the generating unit does not exceed that required by the customer, so you have to consume the power on your own site. Number two, the regulations require that the unit is located on the customer's site or an adjacent site but no further. Number three, there is a very low cap, one megawatt, in place on the microgenerator's generating capacity under the regulation.

Another issue that was actually brought to my attention by a municipality is the movement of energy across property lines, from one property to another property. Currently, apparently – and correct me if I'm wrong – we don't have an allowance to allow for the movement of energy in this way. One of the benefits of microgen and distributed generation is that there is a component involved beyond just generating electricity, and that is the generation of heat. When you take, we'll say, a natural gas fired cogen unit or a combined heat and power unit, the efficiency of that unit could be in the 34 to 40 per cent range. When you also have the capacity to move and sell the heat from that unit, your overall efficiency now climbs into the high 80s, low 90s. There is no other form of generation that comes even close to it, and I'm sure the hon. member is familiar with CHP.

Again, we come to this problem of moving heat energy across a property line to sell to someone else. This is an issue that is going to have to be addressed if we're going to take the lid off microgen because now we're talking about moving substantial amounts of heat energy and electricity across one, two, three, four property lines. Now we're talking about energy corridors. [Mr. MacIntyre's speaking time expired] And I'm all done.

I'm going to support . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My knees were getting sore; I was going up and down so much here.

I confess that I do not know as much about . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Just one moment, hon. member. Just a reminder that we are not in committee.

Thank you.

5:30

Mr. S. Anderson: Okay. I do not know as much about this as the hon. member who just spoke at length, which I found interesting because every day I'm trying to learn more about these things, but I was excited when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford brought this forward. Feeding this electricity back into the grid and people getting credit for it: we know that right now the existing regulations have limits on them to a certain extent, where it wasn't intended, you know, to incent this microgeneration, and I think most of us here are saying that we know this needs to change. You know, as well, I was excited about the climate change panel's leadership report, that included recommendations to renew and update the microgeneration regulations, which will investigate the feasibility of small-scale community generation.

Madam Speaker, this does fill me with excitement because I've been receiving a number of questions and suggestions about possible positive changes that we can look at in the regulations from hard-working and innovative constituents in Leduc-Beaumont and actually, in general, in Leduc county. You know, the climate change panel also heard some broad interest from these individuals and co-ops and munis, or municipalities – I call them munis all the time – and it kind of brings to light some of the incredible initiatives being undertaken in Leduc county. Some of these projects I can't really talk about right now because they're under way and they're in early stages, but suffice it to say that things are changing in the province for the better. Keep an eye out for the county of Leduc as a leader in many aspects of that change.

I think we have many opportunities here to work hand in hand with these communities and industry and innovators, whether it be with biomass, wind, solar, bioenergy, geothermal, to create jobs and a greener economy, and I think we're all looking forward to that.

Madam Speaker, I think the future looks bright, and I, for one, am looking forward to being actively involved in it, so I encourage every member to support this motion. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I will first recognize the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's truly an honour to speak about this, and I believe I'll speak in support of this from the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. I can speak about it without a good deal of notes because I've done a lot and I've worked on this microgen regulation a lot on our farm. I was one of the first farmers in our district to have a solar-powered remote water pump, and I was one of the first operators in our area to spend some money – I actually got a master's student from Minnesota to explore our farm to see about the potentiality of wind generation and the sites that I'd chosen and how that would fit into the regulation existing at the time, once it came forward.

The concern that kept coming back from it was that the actual energy – the actual energy – in the province is cheap. It's not the cost of our bill. We have a bin site location at one of our farm sites where the bill that came just this summer was $240, but the actual energy charge was $2.38. The ongoing transmission of some of this stuff is frustrating. When we need energy at that bin site, we need to be able to flip a switch and have that energy at our beck and call and our demand. We can't wait for the wind, and we can't wait for the solar. We have no efficient method of storing it. If we could and if there was some way that we could efficiently store energy and retrieve it in an adequate fashion – that, I believe, is what some of the failure is going on.

I also want to speak to the success of a former private member of the Chamber at the time, an independent member, who at one time was the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, who got a private member's bill passed in this Chamber, the first bill in 90 years, I believe, that was a private member's bill, and it actually talked about the itemization of all energy bills that are brought forward in the province, and that will allow customers, consumers, to understand what their actual energy charges are and what the transmission and distribution charges are, which a lot of Albertans are being held ransom to.

Back to the microgeneration, the construction of or the achievement of. I do have it, and I believe that solar generation is on a new horizon, and that is a more modern way than the potentiality of wind generation. East of the town of Stettler there are some 90 windmills there in the county of Paintearth that are feeding power into the grid when the wind blows, with the great acceptance of the county of Paintearth, but when I attended the county of Paintearth's 50th anniversary celebrations and I met with the people from Capital Power to learn how they could commercially develop 90 windmills on a site and why I couldn't have one effective business model for my farm, the gentleman from Capital Power said: Mr. Strankman, in three words, the reason for this project is "American carbon credits." There wasn't a business model for what they were doing there. It was based off an assist from a foreign jurisdiction.

Now, I don't know the effect of that, and I never did go beyond that, but I know from the feasibility study that the master's student from Minnesota did for our farm that the potentiality of generating wind-generated electricity would have been something beyond 15 years. The lifespan of many windmills is 25 if properly maintained. So with a $60,000 investment – we have many machines on our farm that are worth well more than $60,000 – if there would have been a business model, a business investment for that, we could have gone to the bank or achieved whatever means possible to create a business model to have that, but because our energy costs are so low and the transmission costs are so large, the way this system feeds power in, it's not effective.

To my understanding, in other jurisdictions they have what they call a feed-in tariff. Much of the cost of electricity is somewhere near 15 cents a kilowatt hour whereas in Alberta the wholesale price at some times is well less than 3 cents a kilowatt hour. So there are great variables in this jurisdiction that we call Alberta. Fifteen cents a kilowatt hour would not be beneficial to businesses. It would not be beneficial to any sort of creation of normal businesslike models that need to be brought forward. So we need to be careful in our quest for what is somewhat ideological that there is reality to the business model that we bring forward.

Right now on our farm I'm looking at the extension – those members opposite who were at the AUMA and at the AAMD and C convention saw new innovator awards that went to the county of Starland, which is in the diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler, and that county of Starland has solar projects that are creating a lot of I'll say enthusiasm for that model, and there is reason for that to be done. It's a nonmoving thing, and solar panels now are of new technology. They're far more efficient than they have been in the past, and possibly they are created more efficiently. With that, I think there are ways that we can explore this. There are ways that we can look into doing this in efficient fashion.

I also want to close with a comment that a friend of mine that I confer with, counsel with, made mention of the other day. He said that within the last two years one of the most newly energized coal plants in the world was in the jurisdiction of Germany, and because they've learned that to create the flat power line curve that's desired and needed for AC electricity, they need to have a stable source of energy. Atomic energy is still not applicable or suitable to the personalities or the communities of people in Germany, so they went to what's called clean coal. Whether our facilities here in Alberta, with their electrostatic filtration devices like they have in Forestburg and Sheerness, are to that standard I don't really know, but it's something that we need to strive for because if we're going to continue to use alternating current electricity, it is an issue that we maintain a flat input curve to the electricity that comes forward.

With that, Madam Speaker, I'll turn the chair back to you.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise in this House today to speak to what is probably my favourite topic. I really want to congratulate members opposite for their insightful and important contributions. The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake is obviously an expert on this, and I think we have a lot to learn from him. I would actually encourage him to consider resigning his seat and taking a job with the government and helping us with implementing some of these new regulations.

To the Member for Drumheller-Stettler: as I said in my maiden speech, he and I have a common background in farming. I still operate a reasonably large farm in Manitoba, and I'm continually impressed with the ability of my colleagues that are farmers and involved in agriculture in general to be innovators, and this is what we're talking about. We're talking about looking at innovation and applying it and removing obstacles from the application of that innovation.

I also want to thank the other people that have spoken today on this. I will admit to being somewhat skeptical when everybody is in agreement with us on a bill. Is there a trap waiting for us? I don't know. I'll ask maybe my other colleagues that have more experience to help me out with that. But it is truly appreciated.

I'm sitting here looking at a monitor that tells me that the solar panels on my roof today have produced 118 watt hours. I've had solar panels on my roof here in Edmonton for over two years, and while it's not a money-making proposition at the present time, I have had a significant reduction in my power bills, and I get that warm, fuzzy, sunny feeling of contributing to the control of the emission of greenhouse gases. I would think that the members opposite would also be encouraged to support this motion. This is a no-cost-to-the-people-of-Alberta solution except for the valid concerns that were raised about the transmission system. From the microgeneration point of view, if I were allowed to put 28 panels on my roof instead of the 21 that I was limited to by the current regulations, this is of zero cost to the economy, and I would be producing, I guess, another third more power and reducing the equivalent of greenhouse gas producing coal-powered generation.

Alberta is a leader in this sort of thing. We have more solar-powered homes in Edmonton per capita than any place in Canada, and this is living in a city north of the 53rd parallel. Our citizens here in Edmonton and, I dare say, citizens in Calgary and the rest of the province are really interested in this. We need to respond to that interest and make it easier for them and make it more profitable for microgenerators to proceed.

I would invite all members to consider attending the ecosolar tour, which happens on a yearly basis here in Edmonton. The home builder that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford referred to is one of the main organizers of this, and there were 16 homes this past year that are net zero homes. One of them had two Tesla Model Ss parked out front, which all us old guys drooled over. One of them didn't belong to the homeowner, but that homeowner did own one of them, and even with the powering of that electric vehicle his home was net zero. Probably this summer there are going to be 25 homes on that tour.

We look outside the province of Alberta to the state of California, the state of Nevada. Germany was mentioned. Throughout the developed world, really, we're seeing the application of solar power to replace generation.

I do want to mention something that would be of interest to those of you that are representing rural ridings. I was at the conference, the bioenergy meeting, just recently. The bioenergy folks, which includes forestry companies as well as municipalities with waste management issues and, of course, farmers, are really interested in expanding this, and they are limited at the present time. As has been mentioned, they are limited at the present time by the cap on microgeneration. Let's get rid of it. Let's make it easier for Albertans to participate in dealing with this crisis that we have. We want to be leaders in climate change, and this is one way that we can contribute to that.

The solar panels that were put on my roof were actually supplied through Enmax. Both Enmax and EPCOR have programs that are supporting the application of solar panels. They do provide interest-free loans to individuals that are interested in this. To my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford: he could probably benefit from using the interest-free loans.

But the most important thing is that we need to be facilitating the easy application of this phenomenal technology. It's not just solar. It's not just wind. It's a whole range of others: bioenergy, biomass, methane. The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat knows about Methanex in Medicine Hat. They have very innovative projects to convert methane to non greenhouse gas causing elements. There's also in his riding a wind power system on the Milk River that we need to be helping to facilitate getting hooked up to the grid.

I think all of these initiatives are really positive, so I'll close with that. I am in full support of this motion, and I would encourage every member of this Legislature to support it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise also in support of this motion to strengthen Alberta's microgen legislation. I actually operate my home and business with more than 45 solar panels on my own home. I'm not quite at zero net.

An Hon. Member: It's a big house.

Mrs. Aheer: Yeah, and the business is as well.

Again, I feel the same as you. It's a wonderful feeling to be able to know that you're contributing to that part of this process. It's wonderful. It's so wonderful to hear. Thank you so much for bringing this motion forward and for helping us choose a path of accountability when it comes to these things and to become better stewards of the environment. These are all wonderful things, so thank you for that.

This was a long time coming, and I think that one of the things that we need to talk about, though, of course, is customer choice. By allowing Albertans to generate their own electricity through solar panels and wind, microgeneration fuel cells, geothermal, biomass, or small-scale hydro, we permit every single Albertan to be accountable for their own electricity in any way that they wish.

I know from our meetings with the stakeholders that one of the biggest issues faced by the companies is, of course, gaining that grid access. The thing that's so great about microgeneration legislation is that in its current form Albertans interested in generating their own electricity, like my family, are enabled to be part of the grid on their own terms. Small microgenerators under the act are permitted to sell their electricity back to the grid at commercial rates, but the larger generators are selling their excess back at the pool rate. These regulations will allow a consumer to express their individual willingness to pay for green technologies without actually burdening the users on the grid to share in that high cost of renewable generation. So it's obviously the most sensible way to green the grid in a noncoercive way.

One of the things I'd like to reiterate from my fellow legislator from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake is that he already highlighted the array of choices that would likely need to be taken into consideration. I'd just like to echo that a little bit by focusing on the fact that right now these units have to be located on the customer's site or be site owned or leased by the customer that's adjacent to the customer's site. So it can be very limiting for some obvious reasons; for example, for Albertans that don't own their own homes, Albertans that are living in high-density housing, Albertans who live in the middle of our cities and who live in condominium communities or other housing communities with standardized rules about how the houses have to look. That's extremely prohibitive, especially if you don't own your land or have room for a wind turbine or have permission to do something like a solar panel.

Raising the cap on microgeneration is a subject that we've brought up with many of our province's renewable energy stakeholders. The Alberta-based solar company noted that increasing limits on microgeneration could allow for things like a wind co-operative. That idea would have to have a bunch of individuals buy into a small wind farm; for example, in the Bragg Creek area, actually. Allowing for off-site microgeneration would be a really important step toward allowing Albertans to make those markets more accessible. In terms of the economics of that, that cap would be more efficient. Again, I do agree with the hon. member and with the other members that that cap needs to be raised or even extinguished.

Just to talk about California, that was mentioned as well. Just as something that I'd like to expand on with that, they've taken a number of steps to green their grid, and they've also made some mistakes that I think we can learn from. One of them was their decision to embrace solar panel generation, which was intended to get around the drawbacks of the burden of the large-scale renewable energy projects, like the capital costs of energy transmission across the large states. For that reason we believe that that initiative is laudable.

What California learned, however, is that the policy to transform the grid with tens of thousands of little decisions through their initiative to have Californians themselves develop a 12-gigawatt renewable energy infrastructure by 2020 has its pitfalls. One of the things that we want to look at is: what is that highest nominal capacity? What will allow that source of renewable power to function at that highest capacity? One of the things that has happened in California is that a large number of residential rooftop solar installations in San Francisco happened, but San Francisco has a humongous amount of cloud cover and fog during the summer, so it would be more optimal to relocate those high numbers of solar panels to an area like Apple Valley, where there's 22 per cent more solar energy each year.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 8(3) I will now call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to close debate.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Noting the time, I won't take very much time to end this debate. I just want to acknowledge and thank members on both sides of the House for your very thoughtful contributions. Many of the issues that you have identified were also identified by our team in terms of looking at the changes in microgeneration over the next little while. I really look forward to having further conversations with all of you and asking for your input, your experiences with the solar panels you have now, and, of course, talking to people all across the province who are interested not only in solar but in wind, in small hydro, in fuel cells, in biomass technologies, and in geothermal technologies.

My conversations so far with members of the rural municipalities and the wind and solar generation societies in Alberta have all led to the point where we can quite happily say that this is no longer a time when we're envisioning some great future. We are indeed at the opportunity where we can live that future today.

As the minister of environment indicated earlier, it is truly the time to act. I encourage all of you to vote in favour of this motion and for the government to take it upon themselves to act, to act now, and to act fully and thoroughly in terms of making the changes necessary so that microgeneration becomes a reality for everyday Albertans as soon as possible.

Thank you very much for your time.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 506 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. On that happy and harmonious note, I suggest that we conclude the day's business and call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:56 p.m. to Tuesday at 10 a.m.]

[Mr. Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us reflect. This past week the Pope, who is the head of the Catholic religion, paid a visit to Africa, and there was a section from that prayer that I thought would be appropriate for us as we contemplate our work today. O God of the poor, help us to rescue the abandoned and forgotten of this earth, so precious in your eyes. Bring healing to our lives that we may protect the world and not prey on it, that we may sow beauty, not pollution and destruction, touch the hearts of those who look only for gain at the expense of the poor and the earth.

Please be seated.

Second Reading

Alberta Human Rights Amendment Act, 2015

[Adjourned debate November 25: Ms Ganley]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General and Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Ms Ganley: I believe that I was probably sufficiently through my speech on this, so we'll just call that the end.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you have 16 minutes left if you wish to speak any longer.

Ms Ganley: Yeah. That's sufficient. Thank you.

The Speaker: Who would wish to speak to second reading of Bill 7, Alberta Human Rights Amendment Act, 2015? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak on Bill 7, the Alberta Human Rights Amendment Act, 2015. This bill, which will add gender expression and gender identity to the Alberta Human Rights Act, is something the transgender and the gender-variant community have asked for for decades. This bill will allow transgender and gender-variant Albertans to confront discrimination that we know still exists in our society.

Some of our members may not be familiar with what being transgender means. As a gay man and ally to the transgender and gender-variant community I make my fair share of mistakes, too, but I do my best to get it right. That means listening to transgender and gender-variant individuals when they tell us about their lived experiences. What does transgender mean? Transgender is an umbrella term for people whose gender identity differs from the sex assigned to them at birth.

The key to understanding what transgender means is understanding the difference between sex and gender. Sex refers to the physical characteristics that are associated with being male or female, including primary sex characteristics such as genitals and secondary sex characteristics such as breasts. Gender refers to the social presentation of masculinity and femininity. Many cultures have strict rules about how to perform masculinity and femininity.

Rigid masculine and feminine gender roles are referred to as the gender binary. However, ideas about gender are not static. They change across time and place, within one society, and between different cultures.

Transgender individuals do not identify with the sex that they were assigned at birth and present their gender in a way that reflects their true selves. Some transgender persons choose to have gender-affirming surgery so that their physical characteristics reflect their gender identity, and some do not. Gender identity does not relate to sexual orientation. Transgender and gender-variant people may identify as straight, gay, lesbian, bisexual, pansexual, or any other sexual orientation.

You may not know the difference between gender identity and gender expression. Gender identity is one's innermost concept of self – male, female, a blend of both, or neither – how individuals perceive themselves, and what they call themselves. One's gender identity can be the same or different from their sex assigned at birth. Gender expression is the external appearance of one's gender identity, usually expressed through behaviour, clothing, or a haircut, which may or may not conform to socially defined behaviours and characteristics typically associated with being either masculine or feminine.

Trans and gender-variant Albertans face problems none of us could even imagine. When the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General and Minister of Aboriginal Relations, the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, and the Member for Calgary-Cross, and I held consultations, we heard of the incredible struggles that these individuals face on a daily basis. Not only is it difficult to find a proper psychologist as a trans individual; it can be near impossible to find the particular psychologist that can offer the services required to start hormones or apply for gender-affirming surgery. There are also only two doctors in Alberta that have the authority and the knowledge necessary to connect these Albertans with the one clinic in Canada that can perform gender-affirming surgery if the individual wishes to have the gender-affirming surgery.

Many transgender individuals chose not to have the gender-affirming surgery and are therefore ineligible to receive various forms of government identification with their correct gender on it. While this legislation will not deal with this specific issue, it is an important first step to show the transgender and gender-variant communities that we are on their side when it comes to these issues.

Trans and gender-variant individuals are less likely to have access to health care in our province and are often turned away by physicians and mental health practitioners because of prejudice or perceived lack of skills to treat transgender and gender-variant Albertans. This happens even if the individual is seeking care for issues not related to their gender, which has led transgender and gender-variant people to have higher risks of heart disease; mental health concerns such as anxiety, depression, and suicide; substance abuse; eating disorders; interpersonal violence; certain cancers; and to be less likely to participate in preventative health.

Follow-up care is also a big issue as few doctors will assist postsurgical patients directly, requiring trips back to the original surgeon for any corrective work. For trans women finding a gynecologist willing to give examinations can be a problem. One trans woman had her gynecologist refuse to refer to her parts as a vagina, instead only calling it her hole. Offensive and hardly the attitude of a caring physician, but this was the only gynecologist who would agree to see her, so she stayed.

Another trans woman in Calgary was given an M wristband despite presenting both her forms of ID with the F marker. When asked to change it, the clerk refused. Alberta Health Services policy already states that a client's preferred gender should be respected on wristbands and in the address regardless of ID presented, so this action was against policy and significantly added to her stress right before undergoing a fairly major procedure.

The concerns of trans and gender-variant individuals is only increased by the fact that approximately 50 per cent of transgender and gender-variant people have been raped or assaulted by a romantic partner and that transgender and gender-variant people of all ages frequently face rejection by their families. Youth who experience family rejection are more likely to attempt suicide, experience high levels of depression, use illegal drugs, and become homeless. This helps to explain why the LGBTQ community makes up the highest segment of homeless youth, with the majority of that youth being transgender and gender-variant.

People loving and accepting transgender and gender-variant family members are the cornerstone for transgender and gender-variant Albertans to have happy, healthy, and longer lives. Without the support of family it can be hard to build strength and to fight against the inequality and discrimination that transgender and gender-variant people face in their day-to-day lives.

Employment can be an incredibly tenuous situation for many transgender and gender-variant Canadians, particularly once they begin to transition. Once a transgender person loses their job, it can be very difficult to get rehired, especially in our current economic climate. Chronic unemployment is a significant factor in the community and drives the disproportionate level of homelessness, depression and may result in trans individuals taking higher risks to make ends meet.

As an example of how little understanding there is among employers, I was told by one transgender woman that when coming out to her supervisor at work, he expressed concern that she would show up to work looking like a drag queen. So it's clear there's still a long way to go in explaining the difference. While she can't conclusively say that it affected her career arc, the supervisor stopped taking her along for lunch with consultants and bringing her to trade shows. Another woman, just starting her transition at work, was told by her boss: if it affects our customers and they stop coming in or our employees have an issue, then we will have to have a difficult discussion. This was from someone whom she thought would be supportive.

The concept of the toxic work environment figures heavily into what trans people face in the workplace. Rarely is someone told that they are being terminated because they are trans; instead, they are made to use different facilities, asked to work from home, or simply made to feel unwelcome until they leave.

Bill 7 will help to show transgender and gender-variant people that we stand with them in solidarity. We are here to show this community that we cannot and will not sit idly by while our friends, family, and colleagues are struggling to survive and receive the care that they are supposed to be guaranteed by our Constitution. Forty to 50 per cent of transgender and gender-variant individuals have attempted suicide, and 90 per cent have seriously considered it. This is absolutely unacceptable. We are here to show Albertans that we will not stand for discrimination of any kind.

Albertans are diverse and welcoming and understand that our communities thrive when they are supportive. We must ensure that our legislation holds true to these values. Simply voting for this bill does not mean that we as MLAs have vanquished transphobia. It does not mean that we can no longer be called transphobic ourselves. It only means that at this point in time we were able to do the right thing. Legislation is only ink on paper unless it can somehow be moved from paper into the lives of Albertans; therefore, legislation cannot be the government's only role. Basic human rights for trans and gender-diverse people must be embedded into the culture of all that comes forward. Each and every member of this Legislature, every staffperson, every department, every communiqué, every policy and future piece of legislation must ultimately change with this bill.

We must remember to think of how everything we do in this Chamber will affect the LGBTQ-plus community, especially the transgender and gender-variant community, so that we can stop the institutionalized discrimination minority groups face across the province. Only when people are provided with knowledge will we see real change in the lived experiences of transgender and gender-diverse people.

Albertans recognize the importance of freedom. With Bill 7 we can provide protection for transgender and gender-variant people to live freely as their authentic selves. That is why I'm supporting this bill, and I hope all my colleagues in this House will as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Eggen: On 29(2)(a)?

The Speaker: Minister of Education, I'm sorry. There is no 29(2)(a) on the second speaker, hon. member.

Thus, the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour and privilege to rise today to speak in favour of Bill 7. I'd also like to recognize that we have a couple of members of Alberta's trans community here with us today. It is such an honour to present today in favour and support of such an important bill. It allows individuals, all Albertans to feel protected, to feel included, and to feel truly part of our community and our society. It give allies the ability to effectively argue in favour of and advocate for their family, their friends, and their neighbours. It provides the clarity that's needed. Irrespective of any argument that transgender expression may already be included, it clarifies and removes any doubt, which is why this is such an important bill.

When we think about what that actually means – and I was listening closely to the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood and reflecting on his words, and I think he brought a lot of clarity and power to this discussion and debate, and I thank him very much for his words, for his advocacy, all members of the government caucus, and indeed others who've done work on behalf of transgender Albertans. It is quite something that we have unanimity, I believe, in this House on this issue. It's, I think, a big change over the course of even just a few short years. I think what it does is that it reflects what Alberta really is today, and I think we should be proud that we're in this place, having these discussions openly and without controversy. I think that's very telling, very encouraging.

Having said that, our work here is not done. We well know that there are challenges in schools in particular. As we look at what's happened specifically at the Edmonton Catholic school board in discussions around access for a transgender student simply to use the washroom of her choice, our work is not done. It is not simply about, as the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood says, putting words on a piece of paper. What we need is advocacy.

I suspect we may not actually get to my Motion 511 here this fall, but that motion, in a nutshell, calls for the Minister of Education to allow school boards time to come up with an appropriate policy but not much time. It calls on the minister to allow them till March 31, 2016, to come up with an appropriate policy to his satisfaction that will in fact protect all students, transgender students included especially, and, should they not come up with an appropriate policy, to impose an appropriate policy upon them. I applaud the minister for his leadership on this issue to date. There is still work to do, though, and I'm sure you know that we'll be watching closely to ensure that an appropriate policy is in fact put into place.

Words on paper are important, laws are very important, but action is equally important. So I would like very much to see – and again in keeping with the words of the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, we need to back this legislation with action. It's one thing to say that this will allow landlords to know that they cannot discriminate because it's in the law. I think that, unfortunately, for people who may think about discriminating, the first thing they do is not to go read the legislation.

I think it's important that we, not just here, as leaders in our communities and representatives of those communities show that leadership, but I really urge the government to think about ways of advocating, of communicating, of putting it out there that this is no longer acceptable and to consider some sort of communications strategy so that once Bill 7 – I'm hopeful it will be passed, and I'm hopeful that it will be passed unanimously and enthusiastically by this House but, once that happens, that the government will consider undertaking some form of information campaign to let every Albertan know that it is in no way acceptable in any circumstance, in any context to discriminate against transgendered individuals.

Again, I just want to close by recognizing the work that has been done by members on both sides of the House, going back even to the previous government. I think it's important to recognize the members for Calgary-Hawkwood, Strathcona-Sherwood Park, if I'm not mistaken, if I've got that right, and Calgary-Cross as well as the minister. I know you've all done a lot of work on this. I think you have brought a perspective that this House has been lacking for many years. It really is an important day here in the Legislative Assembly, so I want to thank everyone for the work that you've done to date. This will be an important moment in Alberta history and from here to recognize, however, that our work continues.

With that, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments for the Member for Calgary-Elbow?

Hearing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise and speak about Bill 7, the Alberta Human Rights Amendment Act, 2015. As you know, the Alberta Legislature has the unique privilege of hosting an exhibition of the Magna Carta, celebrating the 800th anniversary of the signing of this magnificent document, in 1215. Visitors are asked to come to the Legislature Grounds and experience this iconic document, seen as the embodiment of the underlying principles of parliamentary democracy and the legal system, that has arguably changed the course of law, justice, and human rights in the Commonwealth and perhaps across the world.

I begin there because it is crucial that we understand the importance of our shared history as a people and to highlight that it is not the first time that a single document can change the reality for so many of us. While many know the history of the Magna Carta, not too many know the history of the lesbian, gay, bi, trans, queer, and gender-diverse people who have fought for their rights and their place in history.

It is a commonly held belief that the LGBTQ liberation movement started on June 28, 1969, in what came to be known as the Stonewall riots. It was a watershed moment in the history of the LGBTQ people. The Stonewall Inn was routinely subjected to police raids, where the procedure was to line up the patrons and check for their identification. Police officers would then arrest trans women, subjecting them to abuse and humiliation. But on that June night many trans women refused to go with the officers, many others refused to produce their identification, and what resulted was the start of a movement that saw many of the laws change, including my journey here.

Regrettably, it is almost 45 years later, and it's not until today that we're talking about ensuring that the rights of trans and gender-diverse people are explicitly and clearly recognized by making discrimination on the basis of gender identity and gender expression illegal in this province. I would say that it's about time.

I take this opportunity to recognize and highlight for the members of the Legislature the violence and discrimination that are faced by the trans and gender-diverse community on a daily basis. In a recent nation-wide survey 74 per cent of trans and gender-diverse youth reported that they had experienced verbal harassment in school, while 37 per cent reported experiencing physical violence. Many face unemployment that is over three times the national rate, and many more are underemployed.

As a result of discrimination and bullying, the trans and gender-diverse community faces higher rates of mental health issues as well. Rates of depression are as high as two-thirds, and in some jurisdictions as many as 77 per cent of trans and gender-diverse individuals report having considered suicide, while 43 per cent have actually attempted suicide at least once. This is horrifying. Members of this Legislature have the opportunity to address the violence and discrimination faced by trans and gender-diverse individuals by passing, without delay, legislation that will amend the Alberta Human Rights Act to provide trans and gender-diverse individuals with the same legal protections as any other vulnerable group.

On the issue of human rights across Canada, while each province and territory within Canada has a human rights act or a code that enumerates protections for its citizens, as of March 2015 only some provinces and territories explicitly protected either gender identity or both gender identity and gender expression in their human rights legislation. Some provinces and territories are not explicit about these rights, but they do have documents explaining how such protections exist under other grounds. Still, sadly, as of today national human rights legislation in Canada does not explicitly protect gender identity and gender expression. Mr. Speaker, Alberta can and must do better than that because as of today the phrase "rights for all" is not quite accurate.

There are some specific areas that I want to tell you about, Mr. Speaker. The one which I've touched briefly upon is the issue of violence. Trans and gender-diverse people face extraordinary levels of physical and sexual violence, whether on the streets, at school, at work, at home, or, regrettably, sometimes even at the hands of law enforcement, although I'm happy to report that law enforcement agencies have made great strides in changing this in their respective departments. But the fact remains that trans and gender-diverse people often face bias-driven assaults, and the rates are even higher for trans and gender-diverse people of colour.

I applaud the work of antiviolence groups, women's rights groups, racial justice groups, and law enforcement agencies currently combatting violence against trans and gender-diverse people. I would only add that this effort cannot be limited to just a Transgender Day of Remembrance. Public education, as was mentioned earlier, policy changes, community efforts, and, in our case, legislation are indeed useful to address the complex causes of violence against trans and gender-diverse people and ensure that victims can receive support and protection under the law.

Employment is another area that we need to also keep in mind. Many trans and gender-diverse people have lost their jobs due to discrimination, and more than three-fourths have experienced some form of workplace discrimination. Refusal to hire, privacy violations, harassment, even physical and sometimes sexual violence on the job are common occurrences and are experienced at even higher rates by trans and gender-diverse people of colour. Many of them change jobs to avoid discrimination or the risk of discrimination, and extreme levels of unemployment and poverty lead many to become involved in underground economies such as sex and drug work in order to survive.

Many families, whatever their composition and however you choose to define them, support the well-being of trans and gender-diverse people. However, despite the existence of marriage equality in our country for many years now, trans and gender-diverse people and their families still face many other challenges. Both trans and gender-diverse parents and supportive parents of trans and gender-diverse children can sometimes face unfair and harmful challenges to their parental rights and their decisions. As with LGBTQ families in general, trans and gender-diverse people's families continue to face barriers to foster care and adoption and the recognition of their family relationships in many situations. Trans and gender-diverse people seeking support in the face of family rejection or domestic violence still often face barriers as well.

Health, another subject that we have briefly touched upon, is another area of concern that I would like to speak about. Trans and gender-diverse people need access to quality health care that is responsive to their unique needs. I want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood for his questions to the Health minister yesterday. It is clear that many continue to encounter barriers, and I am happy to know that our Health minister is committed to breaking those barriers.

Mr. Speaker, suicide is one of the most serious health risks facing trans and gender-diverse people. While the causes of suicide are complex, growing evidence links high rates of suicide amongst trans and gender-diverse youth and adults in part to stigma and discrimination. I hope the mental health review that is taking place will explore ways to address suicide prevention and double the efforts to help trans and gender-diverse people.

I would add also that I hope that anybody who is watching the proceedings here today while they are looking at their lives and they are looking at their existence and perhaps contemplating doing self-harm realizes that there are people out there who are like them, who understand absolutely what it feels like to be rejected and understand absolutely what it feels like to know that there are people out there who would hate you just because of who you are. But I also want them to know that they are people who can actually lead very productive, meaningful lives and can actually contribute to our society, and I would ask them to reach out for the supports that they need and to think about the future and how much they have to contribute to our society because we so desperately need them to be here.

Trans and gender-diverse people often face discrimination when seeking a home, and some have even been evicted from their homes because of their gender identity. This bill will make it clear that discrimination against trans and gender-diverse people or homebuyers based on gender identity or gender expression will constitute discrimination and will be prohibited under the law. Unfortunately, a general lack of awareness has contributed to continued discrimination, eviction, and homelessness of trans and gender-diverse people. It is with that in mind that clear, explicit legal protection from discrimination based on gender identity and gender expression is very much needed.

An alarmingly large and disproportionate number of trans and gender-diverse individuals have experienced homelessness at some point in their lives. Rejection by family and friends in addition to discrimination and violence often contribute to a large number of trans and gender-diverse as well as LGBTQ youth who identify themselves as homeless. Unfortunately, social services and homeless shelters that work with this population are not always equipped to appropriately serve homeless trans and gender-diverse people, including not being able to provide them shelter based on their gender identity or housing them in a gender space they do not identify with and failing to address co-occurring issues facing transgender homeless youth and adults. This bill will ensure that trans and gender-diverse people accessing housing and homeless services do not face such discrimination.

Identity documents and privacy is another area of great concern. Trans and gender-diverse people need accurate and consistent IDs to open bank accounts, start new jobs, enrol in school, and travel. However, the name and gender change process can be sometimes complicated and prohibitively expensive for some. As a result, many trans and gender-diverse people who have transitioned have not been able to update all of their IDs and records with their new gender. This is particularly problematic because gender-incongruent identification exposes trans and gender-diverse people to a wide range of negative outcomes, from denial of employment, housing, and public benefits to harassment and physical violence. Any remaining requirements that are intrusive and burdensome for trans and gender-diverse people to update their IDs should be eliminated, and I will encourage our government to do that.

Interactions with law enforcement, jails, and prisons can be traumatizing for most of us. They're often places where dangerous interactions can happen, especially for trans and gender-diverse people and for anyone who is gender nonconforming. Trans and gender-diverse people are more likely to be stopped and questioned by police while they engage in survival crimes such as sex work and when ending up behind bars are more likely to face abuse there. Being trans and gender-diverse in jail or prison can leave them exposed to humiliation, physical and sexual abuse, and fear of reprisals. We need to continue to look at ways to ensure stronger protections and create new tools for advocacy focused on trans and gender-diverse people's interaction with the justice system. Given that this bill is brought forward by the hon. Minister of Justice, I am hopeful that this will change.

Combating racism and poverty and uplifting the voices of marginalized people is paramount, even more so for trans and gender-diverse people of colour, who face greatly elevated negative outcomes in every area of life. Racialized trans and gender-diverse people report some of the worst outcomes regarding discrimination in obtaining a job, violence both in the streets and by law enforcement, accessing health care, and homelessness. People in rural communities also face significant barriers in their quality of life. We need to recognize that an intersectional approach and sensitivity is required when policies and advocacy work that seek to address issues critical to trans and gender-diverse people are implemented.

Trans and gender-diverse youth face many challenges at home, at school, in foster care, and in the juvenile justice system, and it should not come as a surprise that many trans and gender-diverse youth feel unsafe at school. I will say that it is not just hostility from peers that fosters these feelings. As we all know and as was previously mentioned, currently there are debates taking place regarding policies in the school boards. It is important for them to know that these students are looking to them to lead the way and provide the safe environment they need to grow. For now providing this environment is entirely under their control, but I ask them to please not fail these students.

Finally, older trans and gender-diverse adults face profound challenges and experience striking disparities in areas such as quality of health and access to health care services, mental health care, employment, housing, and other areas of livelihood. Research has revealed that many trans and gender-diverse elders routinely encounter both a health care system and an aging network that is often ill-prepared to provide care and services that they need and create residential environments that affirm the gender identities and expressions of trans and gender-diverse older people.

Mr. Speaker, discrimination is almost an everyday experience for many trans and gender-diverse people and can affect nearly every area of their lives. The phobias that drive discrimination we can eliminate, and I ask all of you to vote yes to this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must say that after listening to these words, I am so very, very proud to be one of your colleagues. I think that this is a conversation that we have to have, but we have to have all of the conversation. I kind of felt that maybe there was still something left to say, so I was hoping that the member might be able to finish off those thoughts for us.

Miranda: I would only add that another area that I think we need to set our minds to is the issue of voting rights. Voting is a key part of having our voices heard on the issues that affect all of us regardless of who we are. When we're talking about your ability to vote, also the other part that comes into play is identity and pieces of ID. It is important to know that having ID that doesn't match your gender identity or presentation does not affect your right to cast a ballot. In my work with the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, which has been appointed to review the Election Act, this is something that I will be making sure that we look at and take into account.

I would just end at that. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford?

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. Under 29(2)(a) I'd just like to ask the Member for Calgary-Cross: you called for people affected by this to seek out help when they are in need, and I would just like to know if you are aware of some of the resources that are available in Calgary for people who are in need at this time.

The Speaker: Hon. member, please proceed.

Miranda: Thank you. I do believe that there is one umbrella group that is called Calgary Outlink. They have a Facebook page, and also they are on Twitter. It's the one place that many people can reach out to and actually have access to many, many resources, including a suicide prevention line. They also help with providing the safe spaces that are needed throughout the city, actually, for people to gather in a safe environment to be able to interact with one another and learn from one another. That's just the beginning. But, of course, anybody who asks, wanting to have more information: I hope they can reach out to the MLA offices throughout the province. I know that all of us here are committed to ensuring that we provide those resources for people who need them and that we would be more than happy to help with that. I'm certain of that.

So there you go.

The Speaker: Any other questions for the Member for Calgary-Cross under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, I would recognize the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a shadow minister for Justice for the Wildrose I'm pleased to rise in the House today to voice my support for Bill 7, the Alberta Human Rights Amendment Act, 2015. I would first like to thank the government for introducing this legislation, which clarifies what rights are protected under the Alberta Human Rights Act. This is important work as it clarifies into law what is already understood by the courts.

As many members in this House know, something that is set in legal precedent may not be fully understood by the larger community. The impact of a disconnect between the legal judgment and a person impacted by the interpretation of the law can be overwhelming. Just because human rights lawyers know that gender is interpreted to mean gender identity and expression doesn't mean Albertans do.

This is important not only for those who might be discriminated against but for the employers and landlords who might not know that these grounds are prohibited. Let's face it. Most Albertans don't open their days reading case law.

Clarity and certainty are very important for Albertans and our laws. This is a complex, relatively new area, and the real benefit of this bill is that it lets all Albertans be more clear on what is unacceptable in discrimination. In this particular instance, the amending of the Alberta Human Rights Act by adding gender identity and gender expression to the list of prohibited grounds for discrimination is an important landmark for transgender and gender-variant people within our province.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity to share some of the stark facts about what transgender people face in their day-to-day lives. Transgender individuals continue to be a highly marginalized and discriminated group within our society. A study released this year by researchers at Western University in London, Ontario, found that 35 per cent of trans people seriously consider suicide over a 12-month period and that 11 per cent try to kill themselves. This is a far higher rate than the general population. One in 167 Canadians try to kill themselves each year, but for transgender people that number goes to 1 in 9. We know legislators and Wildrose MLAs work for all Albertans equally and must work to protect all Albertans.

Transgender Albertans deserve the same inclusivity and acceptance as all other Albertans. It is my true hope that with this communication and clarity in legislation those alarming suicide-attempt statistics will drop. What do these numbers have to do with this legislation? By clarifying what the rights are, protected under the Alberta Human Rights Act, we ensure that this clarification is circulated to the LGBTQ community. While it may seem like a technicality, it is not. This could be a significant step that would make a significant difference in transgender Albertans' lives. The fact of the matter is that one life lost because a transgender or gender-variant person feels as though their rights aren't protected is not acceptable, and one is too many. I am hopeful that, as was stated to me in the briefing on this legislation, should it receive royal assent, the big thing will be education to the community impacted by the change about their rights.

Thank you for this opportunity to speak about this legislation. I am confident that it will be passed with support from all parties in this Legislature.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) for the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. I'd just like to ask the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. I know you are the Justice critic for your party. I'm just wondering if you feel that your views, that you've expressed today, represent the whole of your party and if this is the position that all of the Wildrose will be taking.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.
The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Mr. Feehan: He's got to answer the question.

The Speaker: Do you choose not to respond to the question, hon. member?

Do you have a question under 29(2)(a) for the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake?

Mr. Connolly: Yes.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the member for his comments. I was just wondering if one of the other three members of his party who decided to come and debate this bill would like to speak on the bill as well?

Dr. Starke: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of Members

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, once again – and we're getting used to the rules, I understand – you cannot refer to the presence or absence of members either directly or indirectly within the House. It's against House rules and should not be brought up in either an indirect or a direct manner.

The Speaker: That has been my understanding.

I'd also tell the House that it's my understanding that a member can choose not to respond. I hope I've interpreted that correctly.

I'm not sure if you can get two questions under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Connolly: I was just going to respond to the point of order. Was it a point of order that was raised?

The Speaker: Oh, I'm sorry. Responding to the point of order: I'm with you now.

Mr. Connolly: Thank you. I apologize and withdraw the question.

The Speaker: Thank you very much. I appreciate it.

Debate Continued

The Speaker: Any other questions for the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake under 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I feel like I've been standing up lately and offering a lot of support across the aisle.

I have to say a special thank you to our Justice minister and to the Member for Calgary-Cross, whose words were lovely and filled with emotion. I can really understand how you are feeling today.

To the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood and the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park as well: I thank you for your advocacy on this. I think that lived experience in dealing with these issues is something we never had before in our government benches, and I think that's an important thing.

It was 2013 when I had the first meeting that the Trans Equality Society of Alberta had ever had with a government official. It was an incredibly emotional meeting, and it was the first time, the folks from TESA told me, they'd ever sat down in the Legislature and had a conversation about trans and gender-diverse issues.

You know, I remember thinking at the time that there are always going to be folks who have a level of discomfort talking about these issues. I believe that at the end of the day the more we have the opportunity to discuss them, to use the language, to understand the language, to understand what it means to be gender diverse, to understand what trans means, the difference between sexuality and sexual orientation, what gender expression and gender identity mean and why they are different from each other, when we have those conversations, for the folks that have a hard time wrapping their head around some of these things, that's when we'll move forward.

I have to say that when I was the minister responsible for these issues and we put out the first transphobic bullying fact sheets, we had an opportunity to really start to have that discussion, layering that information and that education with people. It was, to me, a wonderful moment when we were able to begin talking about a wish list with TESA and with folks from the trans community about what they wanted to see going forward.

What you are doing here today was on my wish list. Our government didn't get it done, but you are getting it done, and I could not be more thrilled to support this bill. I speak on behalf of all members of our caucus, who felt it was important to be here today to honour this discussion, to listen, to be educated, and to take part in something that changes the face of this province. I want to thank you for doing this work and to tell you that we are here to take part in the discussion any time it is warranted. We couldn't be more happy about it.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Eggen: Yes. I just would like to thank the hon. member for her kind words. I know that this was a difficult circumstance, part of a larger difficult circumstance that she lived through and worked through, and I'm really proud of how she came around and helped, ultimately, in the pursuit of equality and social justice.

I'd like to ask her as well just how Bill 7 might help us to develop coherent and province-wide policy in regard to GSAs and LGBTQ policy at a school board level.

Ms Jansen: I'm happy to take that question and happy to continue this conversation with our Education minister, whom I had a chance to sit down with and talk about these very things. They are hugely important to me. We know we have seen news stories in the last little while where, clearly, that conversation has not hit home with all the folks that really need to have it. We are struggling with some boards. We have a patchwork of policies across the province right now when it comes to dealing with LGBTQ issues. As I advised our Minister of Education, I think that it is time – and, certainly, I've had this conversation with the Member for Calgary-Elbow as well, who has a motion, I believe, that will not likely hit this session but is a really important piece around talking about what a province-wide LGBTQ policy would look like.

I believe that at the end of the day when we have that policy – we have some amazing people. I know that you're working with those stakeholders right now. I've worked with those stakeholders in the past. We have a lot of wonderful people in the province who want to help articulate what that policy could look like. It makes it easier for school boards if they don't have to sit down and try to carve through something they may not have a high degree of comfort with. But I think that at the end of the day something like this is an opportunity, that this discussion is an opportunity for people to become more comfortable with the issue, and as they become more comfortable with the issue, it can inform province-wide policy going forward.

This is an important place to be. This is an indication to folks in the province who still haven't wrapped their heads around it that this is where we are in Alberta in 2015. I think that means that going forward, any kind of a province-wide policy that school boards will adopt, hopefully, will flow from that.

So I think this is an excellent place to start. I believe at the end of the day what we will get is a province-wide policy for school boards that really changes the way that we view education in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Further to that, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. member had a very insightful comment in the beginning of her speech, which was that as we work through, we become more comfortable with the language and the ideas around LGBTQ issues and GSAs, so it becomes an educative process by which people can use those things. Rather, sometimes, I believe as a teacher, people can work through and own the policies that they develop over time and internalize those policies so that they can in turn become educators in each of their 61 jurisdictions so that we have not just coherent policy but that people have internalized and used that policy to teach the general population right across the province.

I would just ask the hon. member if, you know, the application of her first concept might be a way by which we can do this and, of course, just remind her that, as she knows, I have in fact set a March 31 deadline. It's perhaps some kind of mind meld between the hon. member and myself and Calgary-Elbow that that is indeed happening, and the clock is ticking right now.

Thank you.

Ms Jansen: I want to thank the Minister of Education for that. You know, when we talk about education – and I know that the Minister of Education views his job through the lens of his background as a schoolteacher, and I view my job through the lens of my background as a communicator and a former journalist.

An Hon. Member: And a mom.

Ms Jansen: And a mom. That's true.

The Speaker: Please. Are your comments finished? You can proceed.

Ms Jansen: I would just say that if we have the opportunity – and I've mentioned this to the Education minister – to put this into the curriculum, to have comprehensive sexual health education, to include LGBTQ education in that, that would be wonderful.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. I appreciate the time here to speak in support of Bill 7. Firstly, I would like to recognize that as a cisgendered woman – and for those who are not familiar with that term, it just simply means one's gender corresponds with their biological sex – I have a lot of privilege. I want to recognize that when I speak out about the importance of recognizing gender expression and gender identity as a human right, it is as an ally.

Four words. Four words, Mr. Speaker: "gender identity" and "gender expression." To many that may not seem like a lot, but adding those four words to the Alberta Human Rights Act will change lives for some of our fellow Albertans. I am so proud of this government for this bill, and I would like to congratulate the hon. minister for bringing it forth.

In Alberta many people have shared heartbreaking stories of discrimination and violence because of their self-identity. Loss of work, isolation, homelessness, assault, and, in too many cases, death are all realities for transgendered and transvariant people.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Madam Speaker, 70 per cent of young trans people have reported sexual harassment, 36 per cent have been physically threatened or injured, two-thirds reported self-harm, and more than one-third have attempted suicide in the past year. Because we only recognize binary expression of gender, so often people are forced to prove themselves and their gender in humiliating and degrading ways.

We need to do better to help these Albertans. Again, I'm very proud of this government for flying the transgender flag on the Legislature Grounds for the first time in this province's history for the international Transgender Day of Remembrance.

What this bill shows our transgendered and gender-variant Albertans is that we as a Legislature are your government and that we as a Legislature will stand with you.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize, first, the leader of the third party. Thank you.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: My apologies, hon. member. I neglected to do 29(2)(a). Was that what you were responding to?

Mr. McIver: No. I'll wait.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Were there any questions for the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow under 29(2)(a)? The hon. health minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm just wondering if the hon. member has had constituents reach out to her office and give feedback or in what way she'll be helping us to gather feedback from her riding to help inform further actions that we can take to support the inclusion of transgendered individuals in government initiatives?

Ms Drever: Yes. Over the summer I have been reaching out to many different stakeholders. I've had constituents come in. I'm just trying to find ways to help and to find these resources within my constituency and within Calgary to point them in the right direction like the suicide helpline for Calgary Outlink, for example. Those are the types of things I've been doing over the summer, and I will continue my work.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Then I'll recognize the hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to rise on this today. I'm not as conversant as some members of this House are. The Member for Calgary-Hawkwood – I was listening carefully – is obviously a lot more conversant than I am. But when our caucus discussed this legislation when it came forward, after all of the discussion it came down to some simple principles. Everybody in Alberta is equal. Everybody deserves to be able to live and work and find homes and get medical care without discrimination and without exception. Since we're in a place where transgender people are still experiencing that discrimination, then it just becomes obvious that the answer is to support this legislation.

Other people can use better words than I can and probably a more sophisticated description of the issue, but for us and for me it's a principle-based decision. Albertans are equal. Discrimination should never be tolerated in our province. Our caucus and I will be supporting this legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I thank the member for his comments, also the Member for Calgary-North West, and for the fact that the whole PC caucus will be supporting this bill.

There is a part of me, though, that has to get up and ask this question because for years, while I was a member in this House, I spoke in favour of amending our human rights legislation, with our current Premier as well for many years, asking the former government to do such a thing. I'm wondering, after 44 years, why the previous government didn't make amendments. Why suddenly this change of heart?

Mr. McIver: Well, Madam Speaker, I think it's a good question. I've been here since 2012. You know what? You're government. Someday, when you're not in government anymore – and hopefully that won't be too long. [interjections] But I will answer the question because it's a fair question. You'll find that there's work still undone, and I don't think it's any more complicated than that.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Cortes-Vargas: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead.

Cortes-Vargas: It's an interesting comment to me, and I want to refer this to you. When I was watching our Premier stand up and ask in this House for this to be included in the Human Rights Act, the answer by the minister was simply no. It is that arrogance of feeling that it was not supported and not important that created that feeling of marginalization in our community, that was advocating for it so thoroughly. It's not just a recognition that it just wasn't done, but there was a feeling generally from the previous government that only a few people truly supported it, and that is the experience of the transgender community, being marginalized. To say that it was just not done – there was a bigger issue at play, and it's a systemic issue. It is something that our government is quite different on. Not only do we have members in the community that know the community, know the feelings, and know who to reach out to and how to do that, but we're willing to follow through. We're willing to listen.

I would like to know, because the question was asked multiple times. I watched all of those videos. Sometimes it was just simply,

“No, we will not do it; you've asked that question before,” and they sat down. That's hurtful – hurtful – to a community that experiences such high levels of suicide, hurtful to a community that shows so much courage, courage in everyday existence to be themselves. Yet the former government was unable to do that. It has to be more than that it just wasn't done. My question is: why didn't you take action?

Mr. McIver: Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. You know what? I think there was probably an element of a lack of understanding, a lack of appreciation. You know, in fairness, a lot of us either don't talk to a transgendered person on a regular basis or we're not aware we do, and I'm sure there was an element of a lack of appreciation in the past of the importance. I think your question is fair, but it's before the House now, and we're supporting it. We think it's the right thing to do. In fact, we don't think it's the right thing to do; we know it's the right thing to do. For me, again, I've said that I'm not as conversant in all the finer details of what's going on, but I'm very solid in my belief in the principle that Albertans are all equal, that discrimination should never be tolerated, and I'm pretty comfortable with that.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments?

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, then.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to speak to Bill 7 today. It's a great day in the Legislature. I'm proud to rise today and join in the unanimity of this House in support of our transgendered and gender-variant community. Legislation has been a long time coming, and it's an important step towards greater equality and human dignity. It's something I believe in very strongly. Absolutely no one in the province should face discrimination because they are different. No one should face the sickening choice between being who they are and being safe. As we've heard, the transgender and gender-diverse community continues to face that choice on a daily basis in Alberta. The transgender community faces higher levels of violence, unemployment, homelessness, harassment, and, indeed, suicide.

This is why it was important for me to raise the issue with the Justice minister in our first meeting and in letters since. At every point I was delighted to find her every bit the passionate ally that I expected, and I thank her for bringing this bill forward.

Madam Speaker, we don't get the opportunity to push forward important human rights legislation often. It's an exciting and important honour to be part of it. Make no mistake: this legislation is historic and a first step in creating a safer and more inclusive society for transgendered and gender-variant Albertans. However, it's just a step. I'll end my comments with a quotation I'm quite fond of by former federal Liberal leader Michael Ignatieff. He's a great writer, a great thinker, and a great Canadian, in my view, and I quote from the book called The Rights Revolution.

Rights are something more than dry, legalistic phrases. Because they represent our attempt to give legal meaning to the values we care most about – dignity, equality, and respect – rights have worked their way deep inside our psyches. Rights are not just instruments of the law, they are expressions of our moral identity as a people. When we see justice done . . . we feel a deep emotion rise within us. That emotion is the longing to live in a fair world. Rights may be precise, legalistic, and dry, but they are the chief means by which human beings express this longing.

I would add, Madam Speaker, that this is more than principle. This is about relationship, this is about people, and this is about the care that we share for one another and that we must find the means to express in very tangible ways: in the ways we listen, in the way we ask, in the way we contribute to honest conversations, in the way we work together to solve relationship issues and conflicts and signs of mental illness and addiction in our community. This is a sign of real, deep respect for the human condition.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments for the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Cortes-Vargas: As I wrote my notes, Speaker, I started off by asking myself why I need to include in that your gender in order to identify you. I asked myself this question before I even came into this Legislature and was asked to identify my gender so Hansard could put that into the transcription. I have always battled with gender identity, gender expression, and I continue to do so. A lot of the time I don't have the answers to who I am, why I act this way, why I dress this way, but I do know this: I do know that I'm a person, that I deserve rights, and that anything less than that is unacceptable.

Gender, Speaker, plays a role in everyone's life, but for the trans community and for the gender-variant community it's magnified to a level that creates high suicide rates, high unemployment rates, high levels of work in the sex trade because people are shunned. People feel like they cannot be themselves without continuously having to explain to people that, hey, maybe I'm a boy and maybe I'm a girl. It shouldn't matter. If the way I look confuses people, I love it. I will always continue to challenge that the way I look needs to define anything about me, because at the end of the day, when I look in the mirror, I say: "For the first time in my life, when I cut my hair, when I chose different wardrobes, when I challenged my cultural identity as a Hispanic woman, hey, maybe I don't need to wear heels, and maybe I don't need to have long hair just because that's what is expected and that's what's considered beautiful. I think I'm a beautiful person."

Today is a marker of a historic decision, historic but not because it's new. It isn't new, and frankly I've been waiting far too long for this. We do need action, and we do need education, so that's why I was hoping to hear more voices from the other side. To truly make a difference in education, we need to have those voices heard, to make sure that we know that people are looking for something different, that people are hearing from the community that they've never heard from before, that people are reaching out. In order to do that, we need to hear your voices in the Legislature.

I'm humbled by the work that has been done by so many members and by, I always say, the courage, because it is a thing that at home you have to decide whether you're going to be true to yourself or not. To look in the mirror and to see something that doesn't represent you is heartbreaking, and that is a real experience of this community. To know that a society has accepted this as a way of being, as an acceptable law – yes, there were cases that made it so that everyone was welcoming. But to say that a community that has been marginalized to such an extent has to learn how to read law in order to defend their rights is unacceptable.

To the people present in the stands: it is your work, your continuous courage that I stand for here, and it is this government, that creates such a welcoming atmosphere for every single person in Alberta, that I stand with and that I know I am supported by. It is not an individual that is fighting for this, but it is a collective decision. That's what is needed.

My colleague spoke of the definitions, which I think are very important to know what we're talking about. If we're going to present legislation that affects their everyday lives, people have to learn about it in order to really understand themselves. To know what pronouns are, what they mean, to know what gender identity is: those are important to making sure that legislation is filled with education and to know that it was inspired by the community and driven by the community.

While I have my own personal experience that makes me extremely happy to see this happening, I know that there are many more stories, especially for the transgender community that works in the sex trade. It's heartbreaking to know that they're so ashamed, that they're so discriminated against on a level in the workplace, that in order to make ends meet, that is the option that they have. In order to create a society that is truly welcoming and so that we can see the benefits of a diverse culture, we need to be empowering, and that is what this legislation starts.

I've gone through the speech without crying, so I feel like I've accomplished a very good thing. I know it has taken a lifetime for me to understand where I am, who I am to this day, and I will have many more years to really understand whether gender binaries are what define me or whether I choose to decide that I can define gender binaries in the same way it was created by society. That's what I do every day. I ask myself who I am, why I act, and it will not be defined by words like "masculinity" and "femininity" because I will redefine them every single day, the same way that this community does in everything you do. Your support has been integral to my development into a healthy relationship, into a healthy self-esteem, and I am so grateful for the work that has been done before us. It makes it feel like it's a win not just for the government but for the community in an authentic and hard-fought way.

That's all I have to say. Thank you. [applause]

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments for the hon. member? I will call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The member touched on pronouns a little bit. I was just wondering if she could explain to the House how integral the use of pronouns is to many members of the trans and gender-nonconforming community and how using the incorrect pronouns can be triggering for many individuals.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you. I think pronouns are a concept that's sometimes hard for people to understand. It's reasonable because we teach this from a very young age. People need them to define how they're going to talk to you, how they're going to see you. Pronouns are a way of showing respect to the decisions that they have made, very personal and internalized decisions that they now want to be represented in their external world. That's what pronouns do, and that's what respecting pronouns does. That's why thinking about and asking people what they prefer is truly important and signifies a culture that is accepting of differences and different ways of living.

I think one of the most tangible experiences, I guess, is going to the washroom. The fact that it says, when you walk in, what gender is supposed to be going in there is an experience for a lot of the community because they have to reflect over and over and over again, because of the way our society is built, on whether they're going to enter a washroom that has a pronoun, that has a gender attached to it. When they decide to be called "she" or "he" or "they," to respect that is how we change society. It's how we show respect. It's how we show that we are willing to educate ourselves and we are willing to accept differences amongst everyone.

So thank you for the question because I think that it is truly important and probably one of the first times the importance of pronouns has ever been talked about in this Legislature. You know, I'm being called Member Cortes-Vargas because I don't think it is relevant to know in the transcripts whether I'm a woman or a man. Studies show that there is a difference in the way you interpret information, whether you're a woman or a man, so why does my transcript need to add that? What if I don't know whether I'm a woman or a man? It doesn't matter. I am a person, and Cortes-Vargas is my name, and that's all you really need to know.

Mr. Westhead: Well, I really want to thank the member for sharing a powerful story. Her story was so powerful that the majority of the members in this House got up on their feet and gave her a round of applause, although there were some notable absences of people standing. [interjection] I didn't name a member.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I would encourage you to refrain from making those types of comments as it is inappropriate to refer to absences.

Mr. Westhead: Okay. I'll retract my statement, then.

I would like to ask the member this. She mentioned how important it would be to hear some voices from across the way. I wonder if she can elaborate on how important it would be to her to hear those comments, especially from someone like the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Cortes-Vargas: You know, I think a lot of the times these changes have happened with one or two people pushing it and a bunch more people just accepting that it's happening. The difference is that if they are truly committed to making this change be felt authentically and creating a culture that does not discriminate, hearing your voices to make sure that that's what you're doing is extremely important.

Mr. Jean: I do want to congratulate the member, first of all, for her speech today. It was very moving, and I know many members of this place will congratulate her personally later on. I do think we've made it very clear on this side that we support this.

I spent many years in Alberta arguing the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Constitution. I'm very proud of my work in relation to that. I think everybody has the opportunity to be who they are to the fulfillment of what they want to do, and I clearly believe that all Albertans should be protected no matter what choices they make, and I will continue with that.

I do have a question for her, and I would like to say, first of all, that I do have many family members that are in various communities . . .

The Deputy Speaker: We are out of time on 29(2)(a).
Edmonton-Centre was next on the list.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm not sure I have that much I can add after such a powerful statement from the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, but given some of the experiences I've had since being elected, I did want to take a moment to say a few words, you know, acknowledging that as a cisgender heterosexual male I can't say that I understand the experiences of the individuals in the trans community. But I've certainly been very fortunate in having had the opportunity over the last few months to learn from many strong advocates, including these wonderful members here in our own caucus as well as some of the members of my own constituency of Edmonton-Centre.

Earlier this year I had the opportunity to meet with Mr. Mickey Wilson, who joins us here today, executive director of the Pride Centre of Edmonton, and had the opportunity to discuss with him the issues and the challenges that face many LGBTQ individuals. He made specific note of the issues that face many in the trans community here in Edmonton and across Alberta. I'd like to recognize the Pride Centre for their excellent work in being one of the few organizations which is here that provides direct support to people in that community. He made it quite clear in our conversation that trans and gender-variant people in Edmonton and across Alberta face challenges not only in finding acceptance and understanding and support but often just in accessing the most basic human rights, that the rest of us take for granted.

Over the last few months I've also had the opportunity to meet with representatives from the Society for Safe Accommodations for Queer Edmonton Youth, or SAFQEY. SAFQEY's goal is to develop safe housing for LGBTQ youth because, unfortunately, many of these youth find themselves homeless due to discrimination and a lack of support in their home, particularly those individuals who are trans or gender diverse. Once homeless they often face further discrimination, prejudice, and mistreatment, sometimes from staff and sometimes from fellow residents in shelters. In September I had the opportunity to view their documentary For Want of a Home, which specifically focuses on the stories of homeless trans individuals here in Edmonton and Calgary. Those were powerful stories, Madam Speaker. They confirmed for me again the deep need for greater awareness and education about the challenges faced by gender-variant and trans individuals here in Alberta.

In the time that I spent when I worked as a writer for Alberta Health, I was also tasked with responding to many inquiries from trans men and women regarding the challenges that they faced in accessing health care in Alberta. As my colleague from Calgary-Hawkwood noted, these men and women often face multiple barriers and prejudices as they seek to access transitional surgeries, hormone treatment, counselling, and even, unfortunately, simple, basic health care with the respect and dignity that we all enjoy and expect.

I also had the honour in early September of accompanying Mickey Wilson and two of my constituents, long-time Edmonton LGBTQ advocates Mr. Murray Billett and Michael Phair, to meet with the hon. Minister of Justice. At that meeting they expressed the clear and present need to amend the Alberta Human Rights Act to include protections for gender identity and gender expression. So, Madam Speaker, I was incredibly pleased to see that the minister did exactly that by bringing forward Bill 7.

Madam Speaker, as I said, I can't speak to the experience of individuals in this community, to the long years of suffering and fighting and advocacy that they've spent to achieve this moment and see this happen here in this House today. I thank our members so much for sharing their stories and giving us the opportunity to hear from them, to learn, and to see the deep passion and, I think, indeed the deep joy that they feel in this moment here today. It's an honour to be a member of this House, to be able to participate in this debate, and to be able to cast a vote in favour of Bill 7.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West under 29(2)(a).

Ms Jansen: Under 29(2)(a) I would like to ask the member just a quick question triggered by the Leader of the Official Opposition and a comment he made about folks who are trans or gender diverse and the choices they make. I'm wondering if hearing that is a little frustrating when I am given to understand that it's not about making choices; it's about living your authentic life. Can you explain this?

Mr. Shepherd: Well, Madam Speaker, I thank the member for raising that point. I would certainly agree with her. I'm sure that, provided the opportunity, the hon. Leader of the Opposition would wish to clarify that statement. I'm sure he understands as we all do that this is not a matter of choice but that this is a matter of who we are. Certainly, as our member expressed earlier, this is an issue of core identity. This is an issue of who people are in their hearts, in their soul, in their mind and body. I'm certainly sure that this is something that he would agree with as well.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Jean: Thank you. I did notice the time frame, so I didn't get an opportunity to complete my sentences, as you know. I did want to ask a question of the hon. member because I do have family members that I love very much that are in these different communities, and I have had an opportunity to work with them. Many of them have helped me on my campaigns in the past.

The choices we make are to fulfill who we are and who we believe we are, and there are a series of choices that go with that. I myself make choices every day. Those choices are to fulfill who we are and who we believe we are and who we are in our hearts. I think that that's very, very important.

My interest in this particular decision by the government and the reason why I'm supporting it is along the same lines as, I think, all members that are going to support this particular piece of legislation. It's time. It's necessary. It's past time.

My real, sincere compliments to the government would be on the clarity that it brings to the law and the certainty that it brings to people that have the opportunity to read the law. That's what I would compliment the government on in this particular case because too often citizens of Alberta don't know what they are supposed to do and what their obligations are. I think, clearly, this is one of those opportunities.

I would congratulate the member on that speech and let them know that I myself find – and I have for many, many years – very unacceptable the high suicide rates. Some parts of some communities, their lack of acceptance, I find very discouraging. I think that through education and proper bills like this that we can make the changes necessary to be inclusive to all peoples because that's what we have to be. We have to protect in this place all people. We need to stand up for all people of Alberta. That's what our job is. We have to protect each and every one of them the same way: with passion, with vigour, and with common sense. And this is common sense.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

If not, the next person to speak to the bill is the hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just have two points to add to what I want to say has been a beautiful debate. First of all, I want to say to the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park that she is beautiful and that while many of us have to make decisions every day, we don't have to make a decision about denying our true selves by the clothes we wear or the washroom we use. I think the law that we're passing today will take the world much farther ahead in making sure that people can actually be welcome and will actually make the world a better place.

In 2010, when I was first elected to public office as a school board trustee, that was the summer that the It Gets Better campaign was happening all across North America because so many kids were taking their lives. It's taken us five years, but we're here today to make it better. We can't just say: it will get better. So I want to thank all hon. members for what I'm sure will be a unanimous vote in actually making Alberta a more welcoming place.

On one other note, an employee from Alberta Health Services contacted me the day the bill was tabled and said: in an unwelcoming world I feel welcome in Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments for the hon. Minister of Health?

If not, the next speaker to the bill.

Ms Fitzpatrick: I'm going to keep my comments really short. This bill will take care of the legal part of changing the Alberta Human Rights Act. We have to be supportive in our actions to give definition to this bill, so I hope not just that each of the parties supports the legislation with your vote but that you stand and speak in support of this legislation when you return to your communities.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments for the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East?

Seeing none, do we have another speaker on the bill?

Seeing none, then, the hon. Minister of Justice to close debate.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's quite a challenge to speak after so many moving words. I perhaps wish I had spoken up front, but I'll do my best to give credit to this bill.

Over the last few weeks and leading up to the passage of this bill, I think I've had a lot of opportunity to reflect on the purpose of law and what it is and does in our society. I mean, certainly one of the things it does is the obvious thing, and that's to give remedy. In the case of this particular law that remedy was probably already available through case law.

But the reason this is so important, in any event, is because of the educational value that law holds for us in our society. You know, we as lawmakers, we as the people who sit here in this House have a real critical role, to act as the voice of the people and to voice their feelings and their will, if you will. One of the things this bill does is that it sends that signal, that we the people of Alberta stand with the trans and gender-variant community, that we feel that they are entitled to equal rights, that we feel they should not be discriminated against, and that we will stand up for those rights.

I think this signals to the wider population that that is our feeling, that we as lawmakers feel that equal rights are important and that they should be extended to everyone. So I think that that educational value is absolutely instrumental, particularly now, because this bill is, Madam Speaker, in my view, just a first step. This bill signals the government's and the whole House's commitment to move forward on these issues, but more than that it tells the population what it is we're thinking, and it allows us to start taking additional steps and to start having additional conversations.

Oftentimes, people who would speak against a bill of this nature would do so out of fear. It's that fear that ultimately we're here to combat, and the thing that will best combat that fear is education and information. People, unfortunately, often fear change and what they don't know. If I were to speak to those people, what I would say to them is that this small change in society, which they may fear, which may cause anxiety in them, is nothing compared to the changes that members of this community have to experience in their daily lives.

In order to simply be who they are, they have to go through an incredible – incredible – process of recognizing who they are, of being willing to stand up and tell the people around them. You know, I don't think that most of us recognize – and I'm not sure that I understood before we did the consultation with respect to this bill – that simply standing up each day and having the people around you understand who you are through the expressions that you have of that is a really critical value. To have people misunderstand who you are and to have to stand up to them and to face the fear that they will reject you on that basis, I think, is just an overwhelming demonstration of courage on the part of individuals in the trans and gender-variant community. So I think that when we as a society face a change like this, we need to understand that whatever anxiety people out there may feel, it's nothing compared to what these incredibly brave individuals have gone through just to be accepted as who they are.

One interesting aspect of this bill for me personally is that when I was originally standing for election, one of the very first questions I got asked through my brand new e-mail was about this specific issue, so one of my very first commitments as an individual politician was to this specific issue, to make these amendments. I really think, for me, it's sort of a very moving expression of democracy, to have had a value and to have had the opportunity to now stand in this House and to act on that value and to act to protect Albertans who deserve that protection, who need that protection, who simply want to stand and be who they are. So for me this has been an incredibly moving experience.

I mean, my reasons – and I'm sure everyone in this House has reasons that they stood for election because it's not, as you will be aware, a particularly easy process. My reasons for that were to increase political discourse because I felt that the values that I saw in my fellow Albertans – and I've lived in Alberta my whole life – were not necessarily reflected in the policies of the government of that day. I felt that if Albertans stood together and we discussed our values, we might see that we stood in a different place than where we appeared to the rest of the world to be standing. So it's just a real honour to ultimately be able to stand up and to reflect those values as a government.

You know, one of the things we heard in consultation from people was how welcome they felt here in this Legislature and in this government, and I think that that is absolutely critical. All people should be able to come to this place and feel welcomed. This is the place for the people. To hear that is so incredibly moving, that we would have this opportunity, that I could stand here with my colleagues and have this opportunity to make people feel like they are part of our wider Alberta community and that they are valued within our community. I think that that is just an incredible honour.

I'll move on because apparently I've been speaking for a while. I think one of the critical things to recognize with this and one of the things that I've certainly heard in comments that have been sent to my office or social media is that this is a soft issue, and I just want to make it really clear that this is not a soft issue. I had the opportunity to attend in Calgary the Transgender Day of Remembrance, and I have to tell you, Madam Speaker, that that list of names was long and troubling and disheartening. At the ceremony I attended they read out the ages of the people, and they were as young as 10. These were names of people who had died due to violence because of their gender identity or expression, so I think that this is a really critical issue.

The other thing that I wanted to make absolutely clear is that for this government this is not an end; it is a beginning. In my ministry one of the things we are working on right now is to adopt a best practices policy from other jurisdictions with respect to correctional institutes. Certainly, for anyone who has come into conflict with the law, going into a correctional institute is an overwhelming and difficult process. To then be housed in an incorrect institution because you are identified by a different gender is really, I think, very, very challenging. The other issues that we'll be working with going forward have to do with access to medical care.

Ultimately, you know, what we really need to work on is changing the views of those around us so that everyone is equally committed, so that everyone, rather than feeling fear when they encounter a trans or gender-variant person, rather than having that experience, should have an experience of feeling the need to support so that people can access housing, doctors, jobs, that they have sort of a comprehensive policy.

I suppose the last thing I will say is that we will as a government be examining our policies with respect to instances in which we require people to identify their gender, because sometimes it can be difficult to change and sometimes it's unnecessary.

I guess, in closing, what I'd like to say is that I'm incredibly honoured to stand here today with this bill, and I am incredibly honoured to have the support of the entire House moving forward. I'm really glad that we finally get the opportunity to get this done.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. I think we've all enjoyed a great deal of education this morning and a wonderful dialogue from both sides of the House. Thank you, everyone.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Magna Carta

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we begin, I want to share a message with you. I've managed to arrange for the Sergeant-at-Arms to be standing while I give this message. Earlier this week Magna Carta: Law, Liberty & Legacy opened in the Borealis Gallery in the federal building. This exhibit is quite a unique experience for Albertans to enjoy free of charge.

In addition to encouraging your constituents to visit the Magna Carta exhibition, you can also bring the Magna Carta story to them. A program has been developed that provides your constituency with its own version of the Magna Carta. A special Magna Carta package will be delivered to your office with instructions, educational information, and a scroll.

Today important documents are shared in an instant; 800 years ago great ideas expressed on parchment had to be mailed. That situation has changed.

I do hope you take advantage of this opportunity and share it with all of the people of Alberta.

Thank you.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two grade 6 classes from the Edmonton Christian northeast school. With them today are two teachers, Mr. Greg Gurnett and Ms Elaine Junk, as well as parent helpers Mr. Chris Maluta, Mrs. Amy Jeffery, Mr. Jason Visser, Ms Ilda Dias. I would ask all of them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the wonderful class from Millwoods Christian school that is enjoying the School at the Leg. program this week. I hope they're enjoying themselves. With them is their teacher, Mr. Nathan Marshall. I'd like to ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups to be welcomed today?

Hearing none, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a guest that is near and dear to my heart. Pat Nixon is seated in your gallery today. Pat is truly one of my great heroes. He came to this province as a homeless teenager and would go on start the Mustard Seed in Calgary in 1984, an organization that would eventually care for 1,100 people who experience poverty and homelessness daily, and would mobilize more than 11,000 volunteers a year to fight poverty in this province. Pat to this day still works helping those in need, and his newest role is as the executive director of Oxford House.

Pat hates it when we talk about his accomplishments, but I will mention a few. In 2001 he was named Calgary citizen of the year. In 2005 he became a member of the Order of Canada, and in 2007 he was inducted into the Alberta Order of Excellence. In addition to his many accomplishments in his career, he is also an accomplished family man, a fact I know as I am the eldest of his six sons. He, together with my mom, always challenged us to reach for the stars and provided us with an amazing childhood. The accomplishments of all of his boys is a testament to his dedication to his family.

My dad has played many roles in my life along the way, Mr. Speaker, but I will introduce him through you to this Assembly in the role that I value the most, and that is as my friend. I know there are members from all parties in this Assembly and across all aisles that are proud to call Pat their friend and know the value of that friendship. With that said, I would ask Pat Nixon, my dad and my friend, to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. member, I do hope that you are the biggest one, that there aren't ones bigger than you.

The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the grandparents of one of our pages, Andriy Krugliak. Andriy started as a page in August of this year and is a valued member of our team. Before moving to Canada, he lived in Ukraine, where his grandparents still reside. But today Volodymyr Sukhariev and Lidiia Krugliak are here to watch their grandson hard at work in the Legislature. They are seated in your gallery. They've already risen. I'd ask that we all give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Health and Minister of Seniors.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Michelle Merchant and Ellen Molloy. Michelle works part-time at the Edmonton-Glenora constituency office. She brings great experience as a social worker as well as a psychologist, having worked in child and family services and mental health. Ellen is completing her practicum in the constituency office as a first-year social work student. Previously, Ellen had eight years of medical training experience in the military. Through this and her work with the RCMP she has brought a focus on first responder support and advocacy. I'm very proud to have these two skilled women as part of my team in service to the citizens of Edmonton-Glenora. Will Michelle and Ellen please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you three special guests today. Patti and Don Machell are from the small town of Cereal, Alberta. Don spent 32 years and Patti spent 25 years teaching students in the Prairie Rose school division. They worked hard to bring passion to the classrooms and to make an impact on rural students' lives while also running a family farm. The farm has been in the Machell family for more than a century. Don and Patti are the parents of Aileen Machell, who is the press staff for the Human Services ministry.

They are joined by their son-in-law Matt Buchi, who recently moved to Edmonton from Prince George, B.C., where he worked at the University of Northern British Columbia as an AV technician, helping students in the medical program. It's my pleasure to ask my distinguished guests to rise and accept the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly several guests who are here with us in recognition of World AIDS Day. Shelley Williams is the executive director of HIV Edmonton, and Leslie Hill is the executive director of Calgary's HIV Community Link, both valuable organizations that provide education, prevention, and support across Alberta.

Maggie McGinn is also in the gallery. She's my mother and an HIV-positive person who is a tireless advocate for persons with HIV. Her contributions are numerous but include serving as the executive director of the Edmonton persons living with HIV society for over a decade and serving multiple terms on the boards of CATIE and CTAC.

Also joining them in the gallery today are Ray Chorney and Marlo Cottrell, advocates and persons living with HIV, as well as ACCH co-ordinator Ferdinand Langit. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a close friend of mine, Mr. Jason Kropp; his wife, Patricia Kropp; and their three boys, Mackenzie, Carter, and Caius Kropp. Now, if I were to describe some of the things that Mr. Kropp has gotten up to in his time, I may have to resort to unparliamentary language. The good news is that he would also probably say the same things about me. It's that mutually assured . . .

Mr. Cooper: Safety first.

Mr. Clark: That's right

. . . destruction that keeps, I think, a friendship strong. I would ask the Kropp family to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my constituency staff. Heather Belanger is a caseworker and constituency assistant for Edmonton-Manning. She has spent many years in the field of human services, assisting the community in northeast Edmonton. Her ability to listen to constituents and assist in times of struggle has proven to be very valuable in our constituency office. She is an excellent advocate for Edmonton-Manning. Her laughter and easygoing disposition make the office a welcoming place for all of my constituents. Michael MacLean is a constituency assistant for Edmonton-Manning. His ongoing work within the constituency has been praised by many of my constituents, and I am extremely thankful not only to have his commitment to his work for all Albertans but also his willingness and patience in dealing with me. I will now ask both Heather and Michael to please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is my maiden introduction. [interjections] It's my pleasure today to rise – thank you – and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly four guests joining us today from the Alberta Bottle Depot Association. I'd ask them to rise as I call out their names. Trevor Nickel is the president of the ABDA, representing and advocating for 216 independent small and medium-sized businesses that collectively are the point of return for about 2.1 billion beverage containers annually. He is joined by colleagues Jeff Linton, president of the Beverage Container Management Board, who has more than 30 years of management experience across multiple disciplines; and Guy West, president of the Alberta Beverage Container Recycling Corporation. Guy has been involved in beverage container stewardship since 1989. Guy also serves as director of the Recycling Council of Alberta. Also joining them today is Karim Dossa, owner and operator of the Beddington Heights Bottle Depot, located in my constituency of Calgary-Northern Hills, which has been a growing and successful family business since 1986. I'd ask all members to give our guests the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my absolute joy to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my excellent constituency staff. Alan Parish is my constituency manager and works around the clock to ensure that our office runs smoothly and that the people of Edmonton-Castle Downs are well taken care of when they contact our office. Heather Belanger is our caseworker and works relentlessly to help solve the many issues that arise on a daily basis that my constituents may need assistance with. Cassidy Green recently joined our office as part of her social work placement, and I'm so pleased to have her on our team. I'd ask them all to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a wonderful organization in my constituency, the Somali Canadian Women and Children Association. They're a nonprofit organization proudly serving all of Edmonton and the surrounding area that recognizes, responds to, and focuses on the unique concerns and needs of women, children, and holistic families, especially, of Somali Canadian women and their families. Visiting us today are Bob Walker, treasurer; Ahmed Ali, vice-chair; Jaamac Jaamac, board member; Kahye Dubow, youth manager; and Sahra Hashi, executive director. I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House five Calgary-West residents who have travelled to the Legislature today for question period. From the Discovery Ridge Community Association are Jacquie Hansen-Sydenham and Ben Lee; as well, from the Springbank Hill Community Association: Fiona Christiaansen, Marshall Naruzny, and Elio Cozzi. These residents are all tireless activists for our community, and I thank them for being here today. My guests are seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to stand and please receive the traditional welcome from this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to stand today and introduce to you and through you two wonderful women in my life.

An Hon. Member: Wonderful.

Mr. Hanson: Wonderful.

The very first is my wife of 34 years, Donna, my best friend for 36. The second is my daughter Nikita. She is an RN working here in the city of Edmonton and one of the reasons that I stand up proudly and defend front-line health care workers. I would like them both to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, on your collective behalf I would like to welcome all of our guests here today. You've heard today that there are many family members that are with us. I know I speak for all of you that the important stuff that we do in here only happens because of the family support we have at home. You should all be proud of them.

I would also apologize to one of the members. In fact, through my error I did not recognize him yesterday for some guests. If by chance in the future I am not able to see you, don't be afraid to maybe wave a little bigger.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

World AIDS Day

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today, December 1, is World AIDS Day. Today is meant to highlight the enormity of the pandemic and each nation's responsibility to ensure universal treatment, care, and support for people living with HIV. The theme of World AIDS Day 2015 is Getting to Zero: zero new HIV infections, zero discrimination and stigmatization, and zero AIDS-related deaths.

This virus does not discriminate. World-wide the fastest growing number of those infected are women. In Alberta 1 in 4 persons living with HIV is a woman. Odds are that you know or have met someone infected or affected.

I was born to an HIV-infected mother, who did not know she was positive, and while I did not contract the virus, my family and I live with the stigma every day. When I was about six years old, we attended a candlelight vigil to remember those lost to the virus. I recall sitting on my mother's lap and asking if she was HIV positive. She didn't lie to me; she told me that she was. I asked if she, too, was going to die. At the time our reality was that I would lose my mother before my 12th birthday. The fear of discrimination due to stigma meant that I kept this to myself.

Today my mother sits in the gallery – well, she stands in the gallery – expecting her first grandchild, whom we never thought she'd live to meet.

While persons living with HIV are living longer than ever before, the stigma remains, and while I am in a position to speak out about my family, not everyone is or feels that they can. Valuable organizations like HIV Edmonton, Calgary's HIV Community Link, and ACCH advocate against the stigma and discrimination, promote prevention, provide community support to those living with HIV, and educate all Albertans.

Today, this World AIDS Day, help us get to zero. Start by getting educated.

Thank you.

[Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I must say that I continue to be amazed when I hear speeches like that. I tie it back to the point I talked about, our family members. We should all be very proud of each other that those kinds of stories can be told here on behalf of all Albertans.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: I feel the need to mention – and I speak now because I won't be heard later on – that the volume in the House tends to creep on certain days, so I want to remind you all to please allow me, the members to hear. Handle your volume and probably your tone more judiciously than you have in the past.

With that message, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation

Mr. Jean: Yesterday 1,500 Alberta farmers rallied at the Legislature in opposition to Bill 6. Their message was simple: they want consultation, not dictation, and until that happens, kill Bill 6. This morning the Premier admitted that she's lost the trust of Albertans over Bill 6, but who's fault was that? Not hers, of course. It's the bureaucrats' fault. A failure to communicate, she says. She should be ashamed of herself. If the Premier wants to restore the trust of Albertans, blaming faceless bureaucrats will not cut it. Why won't she just kill Bill 6 and hold meaningful consultations with Alberta's farmers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There certainly has been misinformation on this issue, and it has come from official channels. We sincerely apologize for that and are working to rectify it.

I find the irony of the member opposite, who comes into this House and beats up on public services every day, talking about cutting billions of dollars from the budget, astounding. [interjections]

The Speaker: Could the hon. minister please finish her remarks? Were you finished? It was so hard to tell if you were finished or not.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure I'll have an opportunity to add more in subsequent questions.

Mr. Jean: It's my job.

It's clear the NDP don't understand farmers. No one in the government actually depends on farming as a livelihood. The new carbon tax will raise the cost of operating the family farm, driving vehicles, turning the lights on, operating farm equipment, and new changes being rammed through by the NDP will dramatically change how the farm operates. But the Premier is pushing harder on the gas pedal. This is wrong, stubborn, and simply out of touch with Albertans. Why does the Premier believe she needs to ram through her attack on family farms all across Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This bill is specifically about ensuring that paid farm and ranch employees have the same rights and protections as employees on every other work site. Every other province in Canada has implemented these reforms, and they continue to have successful family farms, and we will in Alberta, too. We've certainly heard some feedback from farm communities, and we are acting on that through amendments.

Mr. Jean: Over 45,000 farms are being hit hard by bad NDP policy. Carbon taxes, dramatic changes to farmers' livelihood: it's all creating fear and uncertainty. Farmers want this government to go back to the drawing board. They want the same respect municipalities are getting through the Municipal Government Act review. They're tired of the Premier, ministers, and bureaucrats patronizing them. They're tired of consultation meetings becoming come-and-be-told-how-it's-going-to-be meetings. How can the Premier expect any farmer in Alberta to trust them again after this direct attack on their way of life?

Ms Hoffman: This legislation is geared at ensuring that people who are injured, or, God forbid, killed on the work site have some protections. That's the point of this legislation, Mr. Speaker. I know the member opposite wants us to sit on our hands and wait another six months while people continue to be at risk, but we're not going to do that. We're going to keep working, moving forward together, in partnership, and we are absolutely willing to bring forward amendments. We've said that, but the member opposite just wants us to sit on our hands, and we're not going to do that.

Mr. Jean: If you were so right last week, you wouldn't be pushing amendments today.

Royalty Review

Mr. Jean: We know the NDP are hammering farms across the province, but companies are rapidly losing confidence in Alberta's energy sector. According to a new survey Alberta has plummeted as an attractive place to invest. Top reasons: political turbulence and bad policies, carbon taxes, business taxes. It's all making things much, much worse. Albertans are very worried. The NDP have made it clear that royalties are going up, and companies are shutting down. What does this government have to say for all those Albertans who will now be out of work as a result of your policies?

Ms Hoffman: I know the Leader of the Official Opposition thinks that the way to have a balanced budget is to lay off thousands of front-line workers, Mr. Speaker, and we're not going to do that. We're going to stand up for what Albertans voted for us to do. While the Leader of the Official Opposition might have no intention to actually implement things they campaigned on, this government does.

Mr. Jean: The only one cutting front-line jobs here is you.

A panelist from the NDP's royalty review recently said that there are, quote, elements of the industry that cannot be competitive. End quote. Engineers, geologists, administration staff, rig workers, honest and hard-working men and women will all be hit hard by the NDP's economic experiments. A new royalty review is creating further instability, which results in more money leaving our province very quickly. NDP policies are out of touch, and they're losing the trust of Albertans. Why does the NDP insist on kicking Albertans when they're already down?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We were elected to stand up for families, to stand up for jobs. That's the Alberta way. That's why we brought forward a budget that has balance: balance in maintaining services, balance in making sure that we're investing in job creation, a philosophy that the members opposite fail to see the merit in but that Albertans do. That's why we're going to create up to 27,000 jobs each year for the next two years. We're working with industry. We've created a ministry that's focused on this. We're actually working to build jobs and build the Alberta economy.

Mr. Jean: One hundred thousand Albertans are now unemployed. Their number one priority is getting back to work, but all the NDP can talk about is jetting around the world, taxing everything, hurting businesses, raising power bills for all Albertans, and attacking family farms. This royalty review has the potential to be the final blow to an economy already on the ropes. Why does the NDP care more about their own risky experiments than doing what's best for Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: I know the Leader of the Official Opposition finds it hard to keep his promises, but we are absolutely committed to doing that. He campaigned on bringing forward legislation to ban floor crossing, but we haven't seen that yet, Mr. Speaker.

We are absolutely committed to fulfilling our promises. We promised to bring forward a review of royalties, and we're committed to doing that. Former governments, that are no longer in power, failed to do that, and Albertans failed to believe their future commitments around royalty reviews. We've promised to do this. We're doing it. We're going to make sure that we get value for Albertans, Mr. Speaker.

Provincial Quarterly Fiscal Update

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, section 11 of the Fiscal Management Act requires the Minister of Finance to make public "the actual results of the fiscal plan for the first 6 months of the fiscal year, on or before November 30 in that year." That was yesterday. Every Finance minister since Jim Dinning has more or less faithfully provided a quarterly fiscal update, but today we find ourselves with a Finance minister who has for the first time broken the law. Can the minister tell us why he has broken the law and failed to provide Albertans with the fiscal update?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, which I tabled before this House, it said that we will not bring that in for November 30 because we are bringing a budget in. We tabled a budget on October 27. There's no need for a November 30 update.

Mr. Fildebrandt: The minister knows perfectly well that he has not passed Bill 4; it has merely been tabled in this House. The minister has not given any justification as to why we shouldn't get a quarterly update. These laws exist for a reason, to prevent politicians from spending beyond their means without any accountability. Perhaps the reason he has neglected to follow our fiscal laws is because the numbers are embarrassing. Can the minister tell us whether the projected deficit and debt for this year are higher or lower in the budget than they are in his phantom fiscal update?

Mr. Ceci: We have reported, Mr. Speaker. It's called Budget 2015. The deficit in Budget 2015 is $6.1 billion.

Mr. Fildebrandt: The minister is not answering the question, and he knows it.

This is an unacceptably dangerous precedent that the minister will be setting, breaking the law one day and then passing a law a week later, making it retroactively legal for him to break that law.

DBRS has predicted that they will run right through their debt limit before they stop borrowing. Do you see that this hurts your credibility, when you play fast and loose with our fiscal laws? Will the minister explain to this House why Albertans should trust the government with our finances when they can't follow their own laws?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I am not familiar with the exact details in the amount of time, but I feel uneasy, and I want to caution you with the use of the phrase "breaking the law" in the House.

Mr. Ceci: DBRS yesterday reported triple-A rating stable. The other thing I would say is that our fiscal plan and transparency act set out our financial regulation for this province. We will be following those, and we have reported on our deficit.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation Consultation

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday the jobs minister told this House that the buck stops with her on Bill 6. That was a positive statement. Then, to my surprise, Albertans were told on Tuesday that the Premier blames government officials for the miscommunication. Now, that is a far cry from the level of responsibility Albertans should get from their Premier. To the minister of jobs: does the buck still stop with you on Bill 6, or do you agree with the Premier on throwing all the staff under the bus?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We absolutely admire family farms, and we want to work in partnership with them. There were mistakes made through official channels, and we take responsibility for that. Moving forward, we've assured that there will be cabinet ministers on all of the consultations happening throughout Alberta. There is one happening right now in Red Deer, and we've got two cabinet ministers in attendance. I want to say thank you to Albertans for stepping up and working with us to make sure that this provides safety and also honours the role that a variety of farmers play in being experts in their own field.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, it seems the cat's got the labour minister's tongue.

Given that the Premier has decided to blame the staff, the hard-working members of the public service that operated under her political direction on Bill 6, can the labour minister tell us: does she agree with the Premier? Do you blame your officials, or does the buck still stop with you and the Premier?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. I think what's really important to know is that we're listening to farmers and that we brought forward an amendment today that we're working on. They asked us to put it in writing explicitly. It was our intent all along to do that in the regulations that would come out in 2017, so we're very proud. This is democracy in action. We're listening to farmers, and we know everyone is working together on that.

Thank you.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's pretty crowded under the bus now with the minister, with the staff, with farmers, with ranchers. There's no room under there.

But minister, again, since the Premier has dismissed your botched consultation that you claimed to do, will you commit today to showing up in person for all future consultations so that there's at least a slight chance you might get it right on Bill 6?

Ms Sigurdson: Well, I think it's pretty obvious that this is democracy in action, that we actually are listening, and that we're putting forward amendments. This is how it works, and I'm very proud to stand here and know that the public servants, our government are really taking this seriously, that this is very much a true consultation process, and that's why we're bringing this forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Violence against Women and Girls

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From November 25, the International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women, to December 10, Human Rights Day, the world has united in 16 Days of Activism against Gender-based Violence. This is a time to take action to end violence against women and girls. Twice an hour, every hour Calgary police respond to a domestic conflict call in which 1 in 5 calls involve actual physical violence. To the Minister of Human Services: what initiatives is this government taking to support social programs already in place to protect the victims of domestic violence?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ending gender-based violence is important to all Albertans, and it's a priority for our government. I thank the member for her advocacy on this important issue. What we are doing is stabilizing the funding for social services, and we have invested in women's shelters to provide wraparound supports for the women and children fleeing violence. We have restored the cuts proposed by the previous government to family and community supports programs. These initiatives will help . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that domestic violence is on the rise in Alberta and the strain on these social programs is increasing, again to the minister: how does the 2015 budget address the strain?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member. The member is correct that demand for Alberta social programs has increased, and the 2015 budget for Human Services represents a 4.6 per cent increase over the last year actual. What we have done is restore the cuts proposed by the previous government to the Human Services budget, and we will make sure that we provide all needed supports to Albertans during these tough times.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister for Status of Women. Given that one of the largest barriers toward dealing with domestic violence is awareness, what is this government doing to promote these services so that Albertans who desperately need them are aware of these programs and, more importantly, have access to them?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, Albertans need to feel safe in their communities and in their homes. There have been far too many accounts of intimate partner violence and gender-based violence in Alberta in the past few months. Our government works in partnership with many community organizations to raise awareness of services for survivors. A few of the ways we are raising awareness right now include supporting the UN's UNiTE to End Violence against Women Orange the World campaign. This Sunday marks the anniversary of the École Polytechnique massacre, December 6, and many MLAs and department staff will be attending the commemorations. We need to do better, and we will.

International Trade

Mr. Malkinson: Mr. Speaker, with the price of oil falling below $40 per barrel, my constituents are concerned about the economy. I spent the last four years working in the diesel generator business, and they are feeling this drop in the price of oil. When I talk with them, they tell me that it is time to look for new markets. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what are you doing to promote increased ties for Alberta businesses in Asia?

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the hon. member for his very pertinent question. We are very supportive of diversifying Alberta's economy, expanding new and existing markets, which includes a strategic and cost-effective international presence. Now, I'll educate the members of the House in the fact that we have 11 international offices, primarily focused in the Asia Pacific area: Beijing, Hong Kong, Tokyo, Seoul, Shanghai, Singapore, Taiwan, and in addition, Mexico City, New Delhi, London, Washington, DC.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that you just mentioned that there are eight international offices in Asia and two offices in China, can the minister explain the benefit of these offices to Albertans?

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm quite happy to talk about the benefits that these offices provide. As a trade-focused province our ongoing success is tied to how well we can seize opportunities in new markets and leverage opportunities in existing markets. This is why expanding access to markets in key global areas, particularly the growing Asia Pacific region, will remain a vital part of the work that my ministry does. Last year international offices facilitated nearly 200 negotiations, resulting in 33 trade deals or investment projects here in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that finding new markets will promote economic diversification in Alberta, again to the same minister: what are you doing to help promote Alberta's business interests to additional markets abroad?

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for his question. My ministry is here to promote trade with and attract investment to Alberta. Last year alone Alberta's international offices worked with more than 600 Alberta companies looking to diversify and expand into new markets. I'll be working with my department to look at our current foreign offices with an eye to efficiency, effectiveness, and productivity. I also want to inform the House that last year alone Alberta exported $121 billion; $109 billion of that was to the United States. Therefore, we need to look at expanding into other markets much more robustly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday over 1,500 farmers and ranchers took time to come to the Legislature and peacefully protest on the steps of this building. The government needs to recognize the anger and frustration that farmers and ranchers are feeling about the lack of consultation. Legislation before consultation or during consultation is ridiculous. Also, the moms and dads of small farms and ranches know more about safety on their land than any government can legislate. To the minister of agriculture: why don't you care about what farmers in this province are trying to tell you?

The Speaker: The minister of labour.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I was out at the rallies both on Friday and yesterday. Two ministers are there at the consultation today and all throughout the week. The consultation is very important to us, and we're listening, and obviously by saying that we're going to move forward and make explicit the amendment, that shows that we are. This is a good showing of working together.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that two ministers stood up in the House yesterday and provided vague answers, creating more uncertainty about consultation with farmers and ranchers, and noninformation from their government has left farmers and ranchers across this province just plain mad about the way that they're being treated and where safety has always been important on family farms and ranches, will the minister of labour acknowledge, as Rick Bell said, that "those in . . . government in charge of explaining things . . . well . . . they suck at it."

Ms Sigurdson: This bill, Mr. Speaker, has always been about safety on farms, and we want to work with the farming and ranching sector. This is about Kevan Chandler, who was killed in a farm accident, and his family, with three young children. His wife struggled with three jobs, and the farmer lost his land and his way of life because she had no recourse but to sue him. This is a disaster all across the board. We want to make sure that this never happens in Alberta again. Safety on farms and having compensation for people when they're hurt or injured is so important.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I am a farmer myself that manages 1,800 acres, doing all the work alone, and I understand the frustration that farmers and ranchers are feeling when I hear them say that their government isn't listening to them and that they want this legislation to go back to the drawing board, to the minister of agriculture. Based on your actions so far, this government is out of touch with Albertans. How can farmers and ranchers of Alberta trust that you will be looking after their best interests when you bring in legislation that affects them without prior consultation?

Ms Sigurdson: I think we're demonstrating very clearly that we are listening. We have put forward an amendment. Sara, whom I spoke with, who was the organizer on Friday, said, "We want it in writing, Minister," so that's what we're doing. We're putting it up front. It was always our idea to do it in the 2017 regs, but we're bringing it up front because they asked us. I think that's listening, that's acting, and that's respecting.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Climate Change Strategy and First Nations

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government has identified First Nations as a group that will feel significant impact from its climate change plan, and we know that First Nations are working hard to become active players in a resource sector that is already well established and difficult to break into. The government has talked about empowering First Nations to become more responsible for their energy efficiency and development and emissions and other resource activities. To the Minister of Aboriginal Relations: what are the specific details regarding the expected impact of climate change initiatives on First Nations communities, and what supports are you offering them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. We heard loud and clear in our indigenous stakeholder engagement sessions through the climate panel process that, you know, the new economy that we are about to embark upon with respect to green energy development and green jobs ought not look like the old economy of social and economic exclusions for indigenous peoples. That's why the panel made some very robust recommendations with respect to adjustment for First Nations, with respect to investment in First Nations. We are considering how to best move forward on that, and we'll have more to say about it through the Budget '16 process.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you to the environment minister, but we'll try it a different way. To the Minister of Aboriginal Relations: given that on November 4 we discussed estimates for Aboriginal Relations and there was no special budget line allotment relating to climate change for First Nations and given that there was no discussion whatsoever on the shifting ground that the climate change initiative will have for First Nations, where will the funding assistance for First Nations come from in Budget 2015, and how much is allotted to it exactly?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, as the member knows, the changes that we are bringing forward via the climate change leadership plan will have an effect in 2017 as part of the budget 2016-17 deliberations. Therefore, we have been presented with a number of options by the panel, a number of which are very creative ways to ensure that we have indigenous participation in renewable energy and in ensuring adjustment and investment in First Nations communities as we move forward with our green economy initiatives. That's why we will see those items in Budget '16.

Mr. Rodney: The first two questions were directed to the Aboriginal Relations minister, and I'm sure that our First Nations friends would like to hear from her. We'll try for a third time. Obviously, you'll have to consult with First Nations to determine the impact of your climate change plan on their resource operations. Given that your government's record on consulting has received failing grades from many stakeholders – business with regard to the minimum wage increase, farmers with respect to farm worker legislation, and your own Premier just a few hours ago – how can Albertans have any confidence that you will consult with First Nations to ensure that they do receive the assistance they need to adapt to your climate change plan?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As I'm sure the member is aware, there has been extensive consultation already going forward with First Nations, not only through my ministry but through every ministry in government. This is because this new government is committed to building a new relationship with First Nations. We have valid, actual consultation, unlike the previous government.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Public School Boards' Association of Alberta

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To quote the Minister of Education from the Calgary Herald, "We want to ensure we're spending public dollars . . . in the classroom." While we applaud his comment, many are finding it hard to believe. It is still unclear whether or not the Public School Boards' Association is still intending to collect the special levy from school boards to stop Lakeland Catholic school board from opening a school in Lac La Biche. The last time I brought this up, I did not receive a definitive answer. Does the minister know if the PSBAA is collecting or still intends to collect the special levy?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you for the question, and thanks, Mr. Speaker, for the reply. Certainly, we've been monitoring the circumstances very closely in the Lac La Biche area. Certainly, this government respects the right to Catholic education right across this province. I've sent a letter to the PSBAA as well as to the affected parties to make sure that they spend money in the classroom and not in litigation kitties.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's reassuring to hear that the minister is determined to ensure that school boards are properly spending his ministry's funds, but how can Albertans trust that he will do this? Given that Albertans want the ministry's money spent on education and not litigation and given that the PSBAA intends to pit school boards against each other in court, Minister, will you direct the PSBAA to either return the funds being collected from the school boards or redirect the spending of these funds so that they will be used to improve classroom experiences for our students?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, and thanks for the question. Certainly, you have to recognize that the PSBAA is an advocacy group that takes funds from different school boards, so they run their operations independently. But that being said, certainly I have spoken to not just the public school boards in those areas but also to the Catholic ones to have a détente on these litigation procedures and get back to putting the money in the classroom.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister said, “These boards are accountable for their decisions, but I would just like them to reconsider this choice they are making,” – in the words of a famous politician, I would like to trust but verify – will the minister commit to tabling documents in this House to show that funds allocated to the PSBAA for this special levy are being clawed back until they decide to stop the pooling of such funds into a litigation fund, a fund that takes money away from the children of this province?

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, once again let me make it clear that the PSBAA is an advocacy group unto itself, that we don’t have control over. However, certainly, I can put lots of messaging and very direct information to each of these boards to ensure that they back off from the litigation and get back to co-operating and building and operating schools in the best interests of our children here in the province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Government Policies

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government seems very out of touch with farmers. There was no consultation with them on the impact of this carbon tax on their fertilizer costs, on their fuel costs, or on their soon to be skyrocketing electricity costs. The Premier affirmed this morning that this government will ram through Bill 6 this session. So much for consultation. The minister of jobs claims that she has heard from farmers. Has the minister heard the farmers shouting, “Kill Bill 6” at every rally in the province?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I just want to say that we have responded to the concerns presented, and we have addressed them through the amendments that we will give more details about very shortly. We’re continuing to consult. We have cabinet ministers at those consultations. It’s very important for us to hear, so we’re already listening.

Thank you.

Mr. MacIntyre: Given that this government has consistently failed to seek proper consultation in advance of drafting legislation and given that this government has consistently failed to assess the economic ripple effects of its policy proposals, did the government bother to assess the cost of implementing Bill 6, the carbon tax, the corporate tax increase, the locomotive tax increase upon Alberta’s farmers, its industries, and its citizens, and can the minister table these calculations?

The Speaker: The minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, during the climate change panel process we did have technical engagement sessions with those in Agriculture and Forestry, and as a result, when our government released our response to the panel recommendations, one of the things we did was ensure that purple gas would be exempted from the carbon price. That’s just part of it. Certainly, we know there’s a tremendous amount of potential in our agricultural operations to ensure small-scale renewables, other waste-to-energy programs, which we’re examining to put together a regulatory framework so that we can make life better for farmers.

Mr. MacIntyre: Given that this government is obviously consultation challenged and given that we have yet to see any numbers necessary for a cost-benefit analysis of this coal phase-out, did this government bother consulting with the coal industry in advance of the coal phase-out acceleration regarding the plan’s price tag, and will the environment minister finally disclose to Albertans, who are on the hook for this bill, how many billions your plan is going to cost?

The Speaker: The minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Of course, we had a number of technical engagement sessions on the subject of the electricity system and the evolution of the system over time. Had the Official Opposition bothered to engage in the climate process at all, given that they were so busy denying the science of climate change . . .

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

Ms Phillips: . . . they would have read what the coal industry, the electricity industry, and others have said. Had they bothered to engage with this subject meaningfully, they would have seen the reaction to these plans from the electricity industry that we are moving forward.

The Speaker: A point of order is noted.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Calgary Southwest Ring Road

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have been working with the constituents of Calgary-West on the portion of the highway 8 corridor that is not on Tsuut’ina land. The residents have superb suggestions that will save the province $1 billion, but community groups are disappointed that their recommended cost savings have gone unheard since the NDP formed government. To the Transportation minister: given that the former government had been working well with the residents and given that since the NDP took over the project, the residents feel they have gone backwards, what is the current status of this project?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for the question. To the hon. member. The current status of the project is that a request for qualifications has been evaluated, consortia have been selected, and we are awaiting the issue of the tender for the work. I will remind the hon. member that according to the agreement that was negotiated by the previous government, there is a seven-year time frame for the completion of that ring road to the specifications set out in the agreement with the Tsuut’ina people. If we fail to complete it in seven years, the land, the highway, and everything else reverts to the nation. We want to make sure that that does not happen.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That’s why I said, “not on Tsuut’ina land.”

Again to the same minister: given that the residents of Discovery Ridge and Springbank Hill offered your government excellent recommendations that could save taxpayers, again, $1 billion and given that the city of Calgary has confirmed the savings that would result from these recommendations, why are you insisting on building a future 16-lane highway when we can reduce the bridge deck sizes now and save Albertans $1 billion?

Mr. Mason: Again, Mr. Speaker, according to the agreement previously negotiated by that member's government and by that member's leader when he was the minister, we have seven years to complete the road according to the criteria and the scope that are set out in the agreement. We are not going to delay that. The risk to the people of Alberta is simply too great, far greater than $1 billion.

Mr. Ellis: Again, I'm not referring to Tsuut'ina land.

Given that the Transportation minister has been an MLA for 15 years and given that when he was in opposition, he criticized ministers for not consulting, but now that he's in government, he won't meet with the residents in my constituency – the people of Calgary-West are deeply disappointed with the government as a result of that – will the minister commit today to meet with the residents of Calgary-West and review the cost-saving measures for this ring road?

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated to the hon. member, the project is about to be tendered, and there is a clock that is ticking. However, if the hon. member feels so strongly about meeting with his constituents, then I'm happy to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

2:30 Aboriginal Workforce Participation

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've worked in Alberta for over 40 years both as a teacher and an educational psychologist, and I've spent a significant amount of my life working closely with students from the First Nations, Métis, and other indigenous communities in Alberta. I'd like to see more opportunities for young people from these communities to find and keep employment; hence, I was very pleased to see an increase in the budget for employment and career development. To the hon. Minister of Human Services: how will this budget increase support for our aboriginal working-age population?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Our government was elected on a campaign promise to work with our indigenous communities as partners. Budget 2015 includes increased funding to support Albertans who need assistance to re-enter and enter the workforce, including our indigenous community members. These programs range from training for work programs like the aboriginal training to employment program and career development services. The outcomes of these programs are greater opportunities, enhanced skills, and sustained employment for all Albertans.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. I'd like to ask the hon. minister if he can share with us any statistics of working-age aboriginal people living off-reserve in Alberta. Also, what per cent of the total workforce is comprised of indigenous people?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. The number of indigenous people living off-reserve in September 2015 was 152,000. Of these, 94,700 are employed, which represents 4.1 per cent of Alberta's overall employment. Of those employed, 82,800 were employed full-time and 11,900 were employed part-time.

In 2013 roughly 10,200 were enrolled in postsecondary schools.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that 4.1 per cent of Alberta's overall workforce is comprised of aboriginal people, I'd like to ask the same minister: what is this government doing to ensure their long-term employment?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Member, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government campaigned and was elected on a promise to renew the partnership, renew our relationship with First Nations, and we intend to keep that promise. That is the reason that we are scanning our programs and services delivered to indigenous communities in consultation with indigenous communities, led by the Minister of Aboriginal Relations, to make sure that those services are delivered in a culturally appropriate manner.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Sheep River Nurse Practitioners Clinic

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On July 29 – mark that date: July 29 – I wrote the Health minister about the lack of a funding model for the Sheep River nurse practitioner clinic in Okotoks. The minister said to me: I don't have time to meet with you; go through your shadow minister. Okay. So on November 19 the shadow minister at my request asked about this, to which the minister said: it's the first time I've heard of it. Minister, this clinic is in the process of shutting down because you've ignored your duties. Are you finally ready to work with these front-line workers to establish a funding model that works? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've prided myself on reaching out to my colleagues across the floor and to my critics to make sure that we have an opportunity to bring items of mutual concern forward in a comprehensive way to actually work through some of the challenges. It was brought forward in question period. I did not recall the letter until this moment, when I was reminded. It might not surprise you that I do receive a significant amount of correspondence. I'm really happy to work with the member to have a greater understanding of some of the challenges there. Of course, we want to make sure that Albertans get the right care in the right place at the right time by the right health professional.

Mr. W. Anderson: Words are good, but we need some firm timelines, Minister. She's already kicked the can down the road twice, and now this facility is closing, and the 1,800 people it serves are facing the lack of critical health care services. Given that we've repeatedly reached out to the minister and considering time is of the essence, is the minister prepared to do what she hasn't and sit down with the Sheep River nurse practitioners to find a solution today?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. If he passes a phone number to me, I'll be happy to find the time to call them. My schedule is very busy, but I will make sure I don't go to bed until I reach out to them personally if he will be so kind as to send the number.

Mr. W. Anderson: Airdrie, Wainwright, now Okotoks. This minister is cutting front-line health care services across rural Alberta, and she's about to close this facility, as was outlined in a letter to her from the nurse practitioners on October 21. Given that this makes three times now that I've asked the minister to sit down and do her job and considering she's not ready to commit, can the minister explain to the people of Okotoks why she ignored them for six months?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, I've said that I'll make the phone call. I'm committed to making the phone call. We've actually increased funding to health care as opposed to what members opposite are proposing, which is to cut billions of dollars from the overall budget. I find the irony of the fact that people who spend their days telling us how bad we are for spending on essential front-line services like health care and at the same time are criticizing us for doing so astounding. But I personally will reach out to the affected parties should the member follow up with a phone number today.

Climate Change Strategy

Mr. Fraser: Albertans care deeply about the environment, and as Albertans we also understand the importance of our actions and the potential outcomes on all levels. Mr. Speaker, the government needs to be keenly aware that their actions have real impacts, and that's why real consultations are so important, so I urge the government respectfully to stop talking and start listening. To the minister of environment. The coal-fired electricity generation industry has told us that many of their facilities will have to close before the 2030 date, with the onset of the government's carbon tax. This will drive energy costs well above the expected 20 per cent hike. Minister, how will you ensure grid stability when these facilities shut down early?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question and for his ongoing, I believe, respectful and genuine engagement on environmental files. I applaud it. On this matter of the transition and evolution of our electricity system we've made it very clear that, of course, under the previous government's timelines and the previous federal government's timelines, for that matter, 12 of the 18 plants that are currently coal-fired emissions plants would be coming offline by 2030 anyway, leaving the six. We have engaged in a process with the operators of the remaining six plants. We will be appointing a negotiator in order to make sure that we are doing this in a way that's fair for workers, companies, and communities.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: Given that Alberta does have an abundant supply of wind and solar possibilities and given that it's very clear that these sources will play an integral role in ensuring reliability, maximizing efficiency, and accommodating long-term growth and given that new transmission lines will have to be built through southern

Alberta to distribute the power from the source to where it's needed, to the same minister: how many transmission lines will have to be built, and how much land will have to be ceded to the government, and can you tell rural landowners what the consultation process will look like?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, we have been in constant contact and consultation with transmission generators and others as we move forward with this plan. Of course, this is a long-term horizon planning item that we have undertaken as part of our government's commitment to climate leadership, and we have heard already from transmission companies and others that have said that this is a golden opportunity for Alberta. We have some of the finest wind and solar and other resources in North America, and we know from the systems operator that this will be done in a careful, cautious, and thoughtful manner.

Mr. Fraser: To the same minister: given that the climate change framework has a strong emphasis on methane emissions and given that you have previously stated that you will look to work with the agricultural sector to address "certain inputs, certain outputs," what would be the total average burden placed on Alberta farming families when you add together the increase in personal income tax, the fuel tax, the carbon tax, the other effects of the climate change plan, and compliance with the spectrum of proposed changes in the farm workplace regulations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, our methane policies have to do with the oil and gas sector. Those were a very robust consultation process between industry, government, and environment groups, and we're very proud of those recommendations that we accepted.

Now, on this matter of agriculture we did undertake a number of technical engagement sessions with the agricultural industries. We will work with them on frameworks in order to ensure that we can give opportunities for small-scale renewables, for geothermal, for other microgeneration possibilities, Mr. Speaker, so that all Albertans can enjoy the benefits of a green economy.

Members' Statements

Government Policies

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, Albertans just can't trust this NDP government. See, when the NDP was elected six months ago, they promised to do things differently. They said that they'd be honest with Albertans, but the broken promises continue to pile up. Take, for example, their promise to deliver a balanced budget by 2019. That didn't last long. Then there was their promise to release a full infrastructure sunshine report. Say goodbye to that, too. Then they said that they would consult with Albertans. That might make sense given that their leader spent a lifetime in opposition talking about the importance of consultation, but that quickly went the way of the dodo.

As well, they instead made announcement after announcement without any consultation with their key stakeholders or local officials involved. I would point to their decisions in the Castle area, Springbank, and most recently their decision to impose the most heavy-handed agricultural legislation in provincial history without having consulted with farmers or ranchers, a decision, by the way, that they never campaigned on.

They promised to operate a government that was respectful of the public purse, but that didn't stop them from almost immediately ramping up spending and plunging Alberta deep into record debt and record deficit. Now they're killing the economy with their royalty review, business taxes, and most recently their backdoor PST, also known as a carbon tax, which, once again, they never campaigned on.

They promised to be open with Albertans, but look who's behind the curtain: radical activists, anti-oil crusaders, political mercenaries. Look at the damage that they've done in just a few months: tax increases, job losses, and ideological experiments that have caused unprecedented levels of unemployment. The NDP ... [interjections]

The Speaker: Was there anything else that you wanted to add, hon. member?

Mr. Stier: There certainly is, Mr. Speaker, if I may continue.

The Speaker: You have 10 seconds left.

Mr. Stier: Ten? I'm sorry, sir. That's not possible.

Family Farms

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to talk about Alberta family farms. Growing up on a farm, I learned a lot of lessons about life that I carry with me and still use today. When I was a kid, I was involved in 4-H. When I was 12, I chaired my first 4-H meeting. In the cities there are lots of activities for kids to get involved in like hockey, dance, karate, et cetera, but for me and many farm kids like me it was 4-H.

In 4-H you learn about farm safety and how to safely deal with animals. The 4-H motto is Learn to Do by Doing, so you are prepared for the unexpected and you have tools for how to deal with complicated situations with animals. These were things you relied on in all aspects of your life around the farm. If you took a tour of the farm on a quad and you happened by a cow that had gotten herself in trouble, you knew that you could help her because you were taught by your parents and your grandparents or you learned it in 4-H.

Farming, Mr. Speaker, is so much more than a geographic location or means of income for your family. It is a lifestyle, and this lifestyle, a great one, I might add, does not break down into specific compartments. Life on a farm is constantly mingling chores, extracurricular activity, and family life all the time. Whether you're dealing with your 4-H steer in the barn or a farm steer, you handle the animal with the same care and diligence because you were taught that way. There's no separation of states in farm life. You're a farm kid, and I would hate to see that lost.

I am proud to have grown up on a farm, just like so many of my constituents who grew up and continue raising their families on their own. I will continue to work as the MLA for Grande Prairie-Wapiti to advocate for the family farms of Alberta and ensure that this government is taking the right steps to act in their best interests and not against them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Alberta Bottle Depot Association

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Mr. Speaker, on the 24th of October I had the opportunity to visit Banff and deliver a speech at the annual industry conference hosted by the Alberta Bottle Depot Association. I have always been an active recycler wherever possible, so it was an event that I was happy to attend. Each year depot owners and stakeholders gather together in an effort to collaborate, educate, and recognize excellence within the industry.

The container return and recycle system in Alberta is an environmental, social, and economic success story. I learned that last year alone 216 bottle depots within the province were able to gather close to 2.1 billion beverage containers, achieving an 83.3 per cent return rate. Because Albertans chose to recycle their bottles and cans through the depot system, it meant that more than 129,000 tonnes of waste was diverted from landfills, and this waste was repurposed into other useful products that benefit society. Mr. Speaker, every incremental tonne of beverage containers recovered has a significant environmental impact, reducing GHG emissions by at least 4.1 tonnes of CO₂ equivalent.

In addition, this program allows community groups to raise funds through bottle drives, and it gives the disadvantaged a way to gain some income through recycling. The program also has the effect of benefiting the Alberta cans for kids initiative and the Ronald McDonald House through generous donations from within the industry. Ronald McDonald House received around $80,000 in donations that evening.

Demonstrating environmental stewardship and protecting our natural resources by reducing the amount of bottles and cans that end up in landfills is important to Albertans, and I am grateful that this system is in place. I would like to thank the minister of environment for the opportunity to attend the event. It was pleasure to meet many of the bottle depot owners and industry partners that make this a world-class system.

Thank you.

Climate Change Strategy

Mr. Hinkley: Mr. Speaker, our government is taking strong leadership on climate change, and I would like to provide for the record quotes from industry representatives. Many representatives from the energy sector have spoken loudly and clearly in favour of Alberta's climate leadership plan, and here are some of the quotes.

First, Steve Williams, CEO of Suncor: when we look back, we will see this day will be a historic day, certainly, for oil sands, I think for all of Alberta and for all of Canada; we think this is the moment for us to get back into the position of being a leader, particularly around environment performance; today is a real demonstration we are willing to take action, move from just conversation.

Also, the president of Shell Canada, Lorraine Mitchelmore, said:

It's rare to see energy companies and environmentalists find cause to agree ... the government of Alberta gave us reason not only to agree, but to stand together and applaud ... I firmly believe that Alberta's climate plan is a win for both the economy and the environment. It will position Alberta, and by extension Canada, to be a global leader in combatting climate change. It will also promote economic prosperity for future generations by focusing on jobs and diversification and by ensuring that the cost burden of the carbon price is eased for the most vulnerable Albertans.

TransAlta president Dawn Farrell called the strategy "a positive, timely and important step forward." TransCanada president Russ Girling said that he also supported this plan.

The Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers said in a statement that it agreed with Notley and expected changes proposed by the panel "to further enhance the reputation of our sector and improve our province's environmental credibility as we seek to expand market access nationally and internationally."

These quotes are just some of the many from industry that support Alberta's climate change leadership.

The Speaker: Thank you very much.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Family Farms

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very thankful to call central Alberta home. I draw your attention today to the central Alberta economic region, not just one riding but many. It's a region of 41 municipal governments of the top region by GDP in all of North America. This area has a long history of prosperity and continues to be a driver of our province's economic development. The manufacturing, oil and gas, petrochemicals, logistics, agriculture-agrifood sectors are the big five key industries. Central Alberta is Canada's largest producer of cattle, hogs, poultry, and barley. Our fertile soil and favourable climate make central Alberta a thriving centre for agriculture. This central region has the largest amount of farmland in Alberta, at 3.8 million acres, truly placing it at the core of the province's thriving agri-industry.

The natural assets of this region have made it one of the great places in the world. But our area isn't successful just because of the land. It's successful because of the people who work the land. Through generations of farmers and ranchers they have perfected their craft and passed down their knowledge to their children. The greatest farm product of central Alberta is not wheat or livestock. It's progeny, the children who become the leading young men and women of our future who grow up strong and free, broadly knowledgeable and experienced. There is no better or safer place to grow up than on an Alberta farm. Children who ride seeders with their moms and dads, children who learn to bottle-feed calves with their grandparents, the young man from Innisfail who at 12 just bought six preg-checked heifers this fall: they learn from experience. There is no teacher like it.

It takes a lifetime to learn the skills which are needed to keep our province's agriculture sector the strongest in the world. I urge this government: please keep the family in family farms. They are vital to their education and the future of our province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Ms Miller: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Section 15(2) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act I am pleased to table the 2015-2016 second quarter report on the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. The report has been distributed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition from Calgarians who want the provincial government to amend the Health Act to include an independent seniors' advocate.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Hoffman, Minister of Health and Minister of Seniors, pursuant to the Health Professions Act the Alberta College of Combined Laboratory and X-Ray Technologists 2014 annual report, the College of Dental Technologists of Alberta 2014 annual report, the College of Alberta Denturists annual report 2014, the College of Alberta Psychologists annual report 2014-15, the College of Naturopathic Doctors of Alberta annual report 2014, and the College of Registered Psychiatric Nurses of Alberta annual report 2015.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. My apologies.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table these letters from my constituents regarding concerns with Bill 6. I have the correct number of copies.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I believe there was a point of order raised by the House leader for the Official Opposition.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to a point of order in question period. I am specifically speaking to Standing Order 23(j): "insulting language... likely to create disorder." During question period the hon. Minister of Status of Women along with some other responsibilities that she has rose and was answering a question that had been posed by the opposition. In her reply she made a number of statements that created disorder in the House.

I know that we have seen a lot of misinformation being spread by the government. In fact, Mr. Speaker, just yesterday in this House there was an apology by an hon. minister for spreading misinformation. So for the minister to make claims that members of this caucus are climate change deniers and don't believe in science, while the government members may like to continue the spread of this misinformation from the backbenches, at no point in time, certainly to the best of my knowledge, did any member of this new caucus make any claims that would allow such a statement, that is not close to the truth, to be made in this Assembly.

If the minister is serious, she can rise and apologize for the misinformation that she's spreading and the type of language that continues to create disorder on this side of the House. I'm certain that disorder would cease if the government would stop spreading misinformation and untruths about this caucus.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, with respect to this point of order I can only suggest that it is simply a disagreement between members as to a set of facts. It is the opinion of many on this side of the House that, in fact, the Official Opposition, the Wildrose Party in particular, has had a long history of denying climate change and, in fact, it was a key factor in determining the outcome of the 2012 election.

We have subsequently seen that the Wildrose has continued to oppose climate change proposals, reasonable ones that are supported by a wide range of Albertans, including oil sands producers, First Nations, and responsible environmental groups. We heard the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod in his member's statement just today attempt to ascribe those kinds of policies to just listening to a certain bunch of radical environmentalists. That was my recollection of what he said. You know, in fact, even today in question period the Leader of the Official Opposition referenced a Fraser Institute report authored by a known climate change denier, Kenneth Green, who has said in the past, “We can expect the climate crisis industry to grow increasingly shrill, and increasingly hostile toward anyone who questions their authority.”

Mr. Speaker, there’s lots of evidence not to prove or demonstrate conclusively that everyone in the Wildrose Party is a climate change denier but to say that there’s a very strong element within that party that actually is . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. I didn’t hear any new information that you were providing to help make the decision.

Mr. Mason: I’m sorry, Mr. Speaker. I’m merely saying that the minister spoke the truth.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you’re certainly well aware, this House relies on decisions of past Speakers, and it relies on precedent in order to make decisions that are then consistent and carry us forward.

Now, I consider myself privileged to have been here in the last Legislature when the ruling of Speaker Zwodzesky came down. It was a very interesting day. It’s one that I’ll never forget because it was, in fact, the day that the predecessor to the current Official Opposition House Leader, while he was still a member of that party – sometimes it was hard to keep track of which side of the House he was on – and while he was over on this side, stated unequivocally that the Official Opposition agreed that climate change was real and that it, in fact, had a man-made component to it. He stated that, and he stated that that was the official position of the Official Opposition, which prompted, actually, calls as to how they felt about the whole round/flat Earth thing. Indeed, it did also prompt the Government House Leader at the time, the previous Premier of our province also, to point out that he had just seen the lake of fire freeze over.

Nonetheless, Mr. Speaker, the sum total of the discussion was that the term “climate change denier” was decided by Speaker Zwodzesky to be a term that should be avoided in this House, especially when referring to the Official Opposition. That may be the opinion of some hon. members on the government side, and we recognize that those members were not necessarily here during the last Legislature, but I think it is fair to say that using the term “climate change denier,” because it could also be linked to the denial of another event that happened in the 20th century, is, I would consider, a great insult. Because of that, the ruling of Speaker Zwodzesky at the time was that the term “climate change denier” should preferably be avoided by members of the House.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I would recommend to you that in ruling on this particular point of order, you simply caution members in the future to avoid this particular term because indeed it is a term that, while it is a matter of debate, can incite disorder within the House and therefore would be a violation of Standing Order 23(j).

The Speaker: Are there any other parties or members who would like to speak to the point of order?

Hon. members, when hearing the arguments, I thought this was a fairly reasonably straightforward matter, but on my cautionary approach to this new job I will take the opportunity once again to consider the arguments on both sides and report back. I recognize that I was not, for example, familiar with the previous Speaker’s ruling. Nonetheless, I will report back at a future time.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 8

Public Education Collective Bargaining Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education and Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I’m very pleased to be here today to introduce the second reading of Bill 8, the Public Education Collective Bargaining Act.

Since its introduction in the House last Thursday we’ve been having ongoing discussions with key partners about this legislation as well as discussions and interaction for many, many months. Our conversations have been very positive and constructive, and I have several more scheduled for the days ahead, in fact, subsequent technical briefings and so forth over the next three or four days.

We’ve been hearing much positive feedback around this and some concerns as well among school boards, so certainly we’ve been working hard to help everyone understand exactly what we’re doing. The role in determining what items might be bargained provincially, of course, is one item that people are concerned about, and we’re working to provide more information about the new teachers’ bargaining association and the fundamental role that school boards will play in this body. Boards will have a further opportunity to provide feedback in the coming days as well, and we’re actively sharing more details with them about this process.

Schools and teachers are a pillar of our community, Mr. Speaker, and they are a priority for this government. This bill will give the government, as education’s funder, a seat at the bargaining table, which is something that all parties involved understand the essential need for. I want to stress that this legislation focuses on how we bargain and not what we’re bargaining on, so this is an important thing to keep in mind as we work through Bill 8 here. Conversations about which items will be negotiated at each table will continue through the coming weeks and months.

During this past fall officials with my department consulted with every one of this province’s 61 school boards about the bargaining processes of the past and how we can move forward in a collaborative manner. The feedback from this consultation was very, very positive, as were my subsequent meetings with each of the 61 school boards in the fall and summer as well. Mr. Speaker, the conversation is just beginning. We know that our teachers and school board representatives alike work tirelessly to support our students and provide them with a world-class education, that they deserve. This bill marks a very positive first step to forging a collaborative relationship between all parties involved.

Mr. Speaker, I support the passing of this bill so that Alberta’s bargaining process can proceed in a fair and effective manner and so that we have the best control over our scarce public resources, to ensure that we continue on delivering really one of the best education systems across North America and throughout the world. This will allow us to continue focusing on our task, which is to shepherd our students through their K to 12 education, and I certainly encourage all members here today to speak fully on this, have a fulsome debate, and then help us pass this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there any hon. members who wish to speak to Bill 8? The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Merci, M. le Président. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise here today with the Minister of Education and my colleague the Member for Calgary-Shaw to move the second reading of Bill 8, the Public Education Collective Bargaining Act. We all know how critical it is to provide a quality education to our students because, above all, students are the future of our province.

I personally served as a school trustee in British Columbia for nine years, including a term as board chair, so I know that the focus of school trustees is on the students and their needs, and they do so by focusing their resources in the classroom. I also know that teachers, just like school trustees, are focused on creating great classrooms for their students and their students' achievements. I should also include that the support staff in our schools are also focused on ensuring that the students have great achievements.

School boards also reflect the values of their local community, and it's really important that we respect the roles that school boards have in reflecting the values of their local community. I believe that the establishment of the teachers' employer bargaining association, as mentioned in the bill, will allow all school boards to have a voice at the provincial table. I understand that the exact structure of that organization will be determined in collaboration with our partners. The hon. Minister of Education has been very clear that he respects the roles and responsibilities of elected trustees, and I know that he will take their input on the bargaining process very seriously. I have had the pleasure of meeting many existing school trustees in Alberta, and I know that they are dedicated to ensuring the best for their students in their school district.

We also as government must be in a good position to meet our obligations of balancing the budget and ensuring fiscal stability in the province as best we can. Bill 8 removes questions about the roles and processes for all parties and provides a framework by which all of these parties can participate in the collective bargaining process, including government.

Mr. Speaker, I firmly support this bill, and I do believe that it will be in the best interests of all parties to have it passed. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for allowing me to elaborate on the words of my colleagues in support of Bill 8, the Public Education Collective Bargaining Act. As I have said before in this House, I am a father of three young children, who will be attending school in Alberta for the next two decades. As such, quality education is a cause near and dear to my heart. Having had family who have been involved in public education, I have a strong interest in the matter. Since being elected, I have visited schools, met local trustees, and met members of some of the 61 school boards in Alberta. I have learned how some share similar concerns and how some have issues that are completely different from one another. That is why I stand here in full support of Bill 8, because I believe that putting a framework in place that allows multiple boards to find a fair, cost-effective way to negotiate a collective bargaining agreement is the right choice for our province, our taxpayers, and our children.

This important legislation will implement a two-table system that allows for significant monetary items to be negotiated provincially while allowing boards to retain autonomy and direct input on matters of local concern. These local matters can involve, for example, travel allowances for substitute teachers or stipends for sports team coaches.

For the first round of bargaining, which must begin before the current collective agreement ends in August of the next year, government will sit down with partners, including the province's 61 school boards, to identify and discuss which items will be negotiated at the central table and which ones will belong to the local board.

This process, Mr. Speaker, will allow all boards to have inputs on bargaining matters. Many people believe that this could divert a possible strike, which could be hard on single parents and households that require both parents to work. Major organizations, including the Alberta Teachers' Association and ASBA, have advocated for a two-table approach for many years. Just last year the president of the ATA reiterated his organization's belief that it is important to have the funders at the bargaining table.

I am proud of the work we are doing to establish a fair and effective bargaining process for all parties. For the sake of our children's education I urge all colleagues on both sides of the House to join in support of this bill.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) for the hon. member?

Hearing none, the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, once again we're seeing a bill introduced on a Thursday and attempting to be jammed through this House within just a few days without appropriate consultation. I have heard from school boards in my riding, and they are asking us to do what we can to actually slow this bill down. They're not telling us whether they're for it or against it. The issue that they have is that the only consultation they received was, quote, a three-minute conference call with the minister. That is not consultation.

Mr. Eggen: That's not true.

Mr. MacIntyre: That's what we were told.

Now, if you're going to have consultation, you're going to need to give the school boards an opportunity to gather together to deliberate over this bill and all of the parts within it and to have time to consider this. Frankly, this time of year, being the Christmas season, it's not exactly something that is necessarily easy to do. It would be, in my opinion, significantly better if this government would slow down. Take your time. Give the school boards an opportunity to deliberate appropriately over this thing. There is no rush. You know, why not wait until the spring session to put this thing through the House? Give the school boards the time they need to properly deliberate and time to get back to the minister with what their deliberations come to.

This government is failing to consult appropriately with key stakeholders on legislation after legislation after legislation. It is a consistent pattern that is alarming. We're not seeing bills going to committee for proper consultation with stakeholders. It's just: ram it on through here. They use their majority to simply bulldoze bills through this Legislature without taking the appropriate measures to make use of the parliamentary system that is in place like standing committees, like proper stakeholder involvement. Instead, it's just pushing stuff through this House.

We're hearing, as I said, from school boards saying: please do what you can to, quote, slow this government down. That ought not be something that school boards have to ask the Official Opposition to do. Come on. This is silliness. I would ask the government to please consider these concerns from school boards, that are legitimate. Slow down. Listen to what they're saying. Give them an opportunity to appropriately look at this bill and the implications of this bill on their individual school boards, get back to the ministry with their input, and then let the ministry develop legislation.

What we're seeing, Mr. Speaker, is that they're legislating first and consulting second. That's not genuine. That is not genuine consultation. That is just being almost dictatorial. It's really shameful. I would ask the government to reconsider their actions, to properly consult with these school boards, and let's come up with a really good bill that is maybe developed by the school boards for the school boards. It kind of sounds like a democratic thing to do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments for the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Mason: With respect, hon. member, the bill is not by school boards for school boards. The bill sets in place a framework for negotiations between the government and the Alberta Teachers' Association and between school boards and the Alberta Teachers' Association locals. That's what it does. To let the school boards write the legislation would not make any sense.

Mr. MacIntyre: While that may be true, Mr. Speaker, in having the involvement of the school boards, who are the ones given the responsibility for our children's education, who are given the responsibility for schools in this province, they should be having some serious consultation with the minister over the content of this bill, and that is simply not happening. My point is: consult first; legislate second. That's the right way around.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other comments for the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, I will recognize the Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister stated today, and I quote: conversations with each of the 61 school boards have been very constructive and positive. Perhaps he has had conversations like that. I can't help but wonder if there are other conversations than the conversation we're having today, and here's why. I say this with great respect, and I think that you know this, Minister. I have heard the opposite comment from those who represent trustees provincially. They've told me that they have not had a chance to discuss the bill with the minister or Alberta Education. The minister's call to the board chairs, which occurred on Friday, November 27, did not allow for questions to be asked, and the boards had not had an opportunity to review the bill prior to it being introduced.

We could throw in a number of clichés here, but I don't feel the need to do that. I think the minister gets the point. There seems to be a huge gap between the input that the school boards indicated they provided to Alberta Education and the comments the minister is making suggesting that this bill reflects the input and wishes of the school boards, a product of having missed a step in the minister's consultation process where input could have been validated with school boards and the related decisions explained.

School boards need an opportunity to meet with the minister or Alberta Education staff to understand the proposed legislation and how it advances the interests of school boards and how school boards are going to be engaged in the process moving forward. I would think it's just common sense that school boards need to have the chance to raise any concerns they have now as the matter may be concluded in this Legislature before they've had a chance to speak to the minister or Alberta Education.

I just see such an inconsistency from when they sat over here – and I heard them very loud and clear – talking about the importance of consultation. Many times when we were sitting over there, we were accused of consulting too much. There's got to be a happy medium here, and that is not what we're enjoying at this moment. There is a serious gap. I can't help but wonder what the minister is going to do with yet another significant consultation issue.

It's in your hands, Minister. Please do the right thing.

The Speaker: Are there any questions for the Member for Calgary-Lougheed under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Eggen: Well, certainly, I will frame the question in the broadest possible way. I just wanted to address, actually, the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake as well as yourself. Certainly, from the time that I assumed the role of Minister of Education, this was a very important part of what we wanted to work through with all of the parties that are involved. It's very important, again, to remind oneself that this is about how the framework of negotiation will take place. It's quite straightforward. From the beginning I made sure that not only I myself was touring each of the 61 school boards to have meetings with them in regard to this issue but also my senior staff that was working on the legislation and on the negotiations as well, so two layers of consultation on this issue and others over a period of many months.

Now, when you have the legislation itself, of course, you have some consultation, but is it not also very important to know that you don't hand out the legislation before you do so? It was made pretty much explicit what was in the contents of this before, as we went through the process, and then, of course, last week we had the representation from the Alberta Teachers' Association in one room here and a technical briefing for all of the members here in the opposition and with the School Boards Association as well. Now, the legislation is out, and then we go through a legislative process by which we debate the merits of the bill and also work through with each of the school boards over the next three days or four days how those technical things happen as well.

I mean, this is certainly very reasonable. I would think, to frame this into a question: isn't it about how we use not just the legislative process but, through layers of interaction over quite a long period of time, that we come up with the most reasonable solution? We're not trying to pull the wool over anybody's eyes on this. It's a framework which we can use, that people understand, and that was arrived at over a period of at least six months.

Thank you.

Mr. Rodney: I didn't quite hear a question in that, but that's the point. Our trustees, who are charged with these responsibilities, on Friday were informed of what was to come, to be debated, in the minister's words, in a few days. They weren't allowed to ask questions. I'm sure that over the months – I don't doubt the minister – he had good conversations but not specifically about this. It's one thing to not necessarily take this side of the House at their word, but these are the words of the people who are running our school boards and who voted to do exactly that. I would hope that the words, that I will not read into Hansard, would be heard loud and clear. I've heard so many times from members all over this House: slow down, do it right the first time, consult, and then legislate. It's just a word to the wise. That's all.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member made a comment that we've been accused of consulting too much. I heard the Government House Leader, though he didn't have the floor, say: and that never happened. I would say to the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed on Bill 6: when our government spent a long time talking to farmers and ranchers, while we didn't think we were quite finished yet, which is why we hadn't brought forward legislation, would you not agree that we had been accused of consulting too much? There's one shining example of that.

Mr. Rodney: There's no question about that, and there are others. I'm not necessarily proud of that other than the fact that we definitely strove to get it right. You look at the social policy framework as just yet another example. I was so proud of the wellness framework, the only one of its kind in North America. It's being copied all over the world right now.

I think that's the point. We're not opposed to a lot of the intent of many of these pieces of legislation, but we're saying that to ram it through before Christmas, in a matter of days and, I might add, nights and mornings, is nonsensical. I just urge caution. I urge us to slow down and get it right.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I just read again the point that was raised, again for your edification as well as my own. Standing Order 29(2)(a) – and I'm abbreviating it – reads:

To allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses to each Member's questions and comments.

I would remind all of the members, on both sides of the House, to maybe read that again in terms of their comments when time is used under 29(2)(a).

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today on Bill 8. I, too, will be echoing some of the concerns from folks on this side of the House about the direction that we're going on Bill 8. But before I do that, let me just say thank you to the minister. I know that he had a very busy summer getting around and meeting with lots of school boards and getting feedback on a wide variety of issues, and some of those issues are certainly addressed in this bill.

I don't believe that the comments we're hearing today are specific to the lack of consultation that took place in the summer, that included a wide swath of issues affecting the department, but more so the process and the rollout of the conclusion of those consultations. There are many steps that take place in the process of consultation. One of them is gathering information, providing feedback, thoughtful reflection, and then delivery of that, delivery of the results of that consultation. I think one of the real big frustrations – and I know that I had the opportunity to meet with one of the school boards that is in the area of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. They highlighted a number of frustrations for me and asked if I on their behalf could try and let the minister know some of their concerns and frustrations, and they are that while the consultation process certainly took place this summer, at no point in time did they receive any feedback of what the results of those consultations were.

Then on Thursday, when the bill was introduced, they were quite surprised by a bunch of the content in that bill, particularly in light of the fact that a lot of the consultations were around “what method of two-table negotiations would you like?” Not “are the two-table negotiations the only and the best way?” but “if you had to choose between these two types of two-table consultations or bargaining, which one of these would you like, and how can we make it work?” To say that there was consultation – certainly, consultation did happen, but it wasn't an opportunity to provide all feedback but more about: “This looks like the path forward. How do you feel about that?”

Then, also, this frustration and disappointment around not receiving any sort of feedback on the consultation so that they would have a sense of the path forward: I know that that certainly was an issue for this particular school division. In fact, what they've done is that they have identified for us a number of potential risks and challenges. I might just say that today I hope that we don't get through second reading because I'm just not a hundred per cent sure where I even fall on the bill. They've highlighted a number of concerns within the bill, and it would be great to have a little bit more time to be able to discuss with them as they continue to analyze and get more feedback from other members and other associations across the province.

They've highlighted just a couple of issues that I think are worth bringing to light today, particularly when it comes to TEBA not having a seat at the initial bargaining table to determine such critical aspects of the path forward, and that's predominantly around this discussion that will take place around what is local and what is provincial. The bill recognizes the importance of TEBA in future negotiations but not this first one. TEBA is the organization that's predominantly or solely the voice of school board trustees at the negotiating table, Mr. Speaker, so it naturally creates a sense of concern that the ministry and the ATA are going to do all of the decision-making when it comes to what TEBA gets to have input on and what they don't have input on, but they don't have a voice about what those things will be. It's a major, major, major concern for them.

The other concern that I know I've heard, not specifically from this school board that met with me this morning but from many others: some concerns around the vagueness in the legislation when it comes to who the minister will be able to appoint onto TEBA and who they might not. It doesn't give any parameters on exactly the groups of folks that he might appoint.

[Mr. Feehan in the chair]

You know, naturally there's some concern or risk that not this minister, sir – not this minister – but a future minister might take this opportunity to utilize this vagueness in the legislation for a political purpose, not one that is solely in the best interest of TEBA itself or in the ATA or perhaps even the department or Albertans but that it might be just a bit of a kickback for a friend or a political opponent or whatever reason that they might.

Let me be clear. I don't believe, not even a little bit, that this minister would ever have that intention, but the problem is that when we pass legislation in this place, it's not only for today, but it's also for tomorrow. We need to have pause and caution when we set out the course of the future, particularly around something so important as collective bargaining. You know, this next bargaining arrangement and agreement is going to be very significant for not only the public purse but also for the health and well-being of our teachers and how they engage in our classrooms. What we're doing is quite important.

So it's very, very concerning that school boards are saying: ah, we appreciate the chat in the summer; we appreciate the three-minute shout-out that this is what's going to happen on Friday – maybe “appreciate” is a bit of stretch there because I've received a little bit more feedback on that, that there was some significant frustration around that being a come-and-be-told conference call event, not a consultation event. But we will set that aside for now. There is this frustration about: now we consulted in the summer, but we are going to move forward at breakneck speed in the passing of this legislation.

I know one school board in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, the one that I spoke about prior, and I asked them about sharing some of this information. Certainly, they said that that would be fine. They have released a couple of public documents with concerns, and I'll just briefly mention some of those concerns from the document. I'm more than happy to table the document in the House tomorrow. We understand that there is consideration for second reading and third reading to be completed and the passage of this legislation into law before the currently scheduled December 3 end of sitting. Now, we did extend that today, so it's possible that it won't be quite as quick as the 3rd, but it's very reasonable to think that if this government doesn't slow the bill down and if members of the government don't rise to prolong the debate, by the end of the week this could in fact be law. These folks have concerns about that.

They go onto say that we have not seen this legislation prior to November 25, which in accordance to the practices of the House would have been a breach of privilege, and they were unable to see the bill. My guess, Mr. Speaker, is that this government knew probably sometime around the 26th of October, when we all got back to this place, that this bill was coming, so it could have been put on the Order Paper on the 28th of October or the 26th, early in the session, and allowed for this conversation to take place then. But that isn't what happened. They introduced the bill on Thursday. We're already here on Tuesday, debating the nuances of what is a quite technical piece of legislation.

I'll continue to quote:

It contains measures that we did not anticipate from a single consultation on a potential bargaining framework that was facilitated by your staff, referring to the consultations that took place earlier in the summer.

We believe that as locally elected school boards, democratically chosen to represent our students, their families, and our constituents, we should be given more than a few days to properly review the proposed legislation to provide you with our recommendations on Bill 8 prior to passing it into law.

The letter goes on, but those are the high points, Mr. Speaker.

It's with that in mind that I would like to table an amendment. This amendment, Mr. Speaker, is one that members of the opposition are quite familiar with. If you don't mind, sir, I would like to proceed while the amendment is passed out. This amendment is one that is becoming quite familiar in this place.

An Hon. Member: My guess: is it a hoist?

Mr. Cooper: It's not a hoist because that would stop a bill, and we don't suggest that this bill needs to be stopped.

Listen, the framework that's going to be created is a very important framework for the bargaining that's going to be taking place in the future. But what the framework needs to ensure is that all of the members, including TEBA, at the first round of negotiations can determine what is a provincial issue and what is a local issue. The only way that we're going to be able to make that happen is if this government sends a bill to committee.

For the record, Mr. Speaker, I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 8, Public Education Collective Bargaining Act, be amended by deleting all the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 8, Public Education Collective Bargaining Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

Mr. Speaker, we have seen the government on issues that are not nearly as significant in terms of private members' legislation send a bill to committee. In fact, with every piece of legislation that has come before this Assembly, the opposition has risen – I will withdraw that because there are maybe one or two that we haven't proposed this amendment to. But with the vast majority of legislation that has come before this Assembly, the opposition has risen and said that committees are important, that thoughtful reflection, consultation is important. The only time that we've seen a bill be accepted to committee is when the government rose on an opposition member's piece of legislation and sent that to committee, sir.

So it's my hope that today we can see a change in pace from this government, we can see a change in direction because goodness knows that there are other pieces of legislation that are currently before this House that are presently spiralling out of control because of the lack of consultation, and that could also be all solved by sending a bill to committee so that people, individuals, and in this case stakeholders can have their ability to chat, to talk about it.

What this bill does allow is ATA and the minister full breadth of negotiating power and not the same respect and authority for TEBA and locally elected school board trustees, and for that I think that we should probably pause, make sure that we get this right the first time . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, member.

Under 29(2)(a) would anyone like to speak? I will begin with the hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and the hon. member. There seems to be a bit of a trend here, and we all recognize that many of us are new to this House. Some of us have been around before, some of the members of the front bench. You know, speaking from experience, there are things that I wish we could go back in certain instances and say: let's take a little bit more time; there are some things we need to take a look at here. I think some members from across the way spoke in great earnestness this morning about their lives and how they felt towards the government at the time, that, simply, the government of the day didn't care. They weren't listening. So, I guess the question to you, hon. member, is: it's my understanding that boards only got to see this legislation Friday, so that's only a few days ago. That's what they're saying, minister.

Then, secondly, would it be so bad – and I get it. In government, hon. Minister of Education, it is important that when you do draft a piece of legislation to get on with it, get on with the business and make things productive. To the member: maybe you could elaborate a little bit about what you've been hearing because it just seems to me that it's going too fast. The general consensus from school boards, from trustees is to slow down. I would support this amendment to slow it down, but I understand it's got to go quickly. Perhaps we can put a timeline to it, get the school boards together, get them to get their input, and move forward.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, hon. member. I think that you're bang on. There certainly seems to be a trend with the new government of rushing through pieces of legislation. I know that I've heard from a number of school divisions within the constituency of Olds-

Didsbury-Three Hills that also share that same concern. You know, the truth of the matter is that time can be a great healer, and I think that we're going to see, likely later in this week, some amendments to legislation that the government has only proposed a couple of weeks ago. My concern is that if we don't take the appropriate amount of time on Bill 8, we'll also wind up there, and that's why it's just so critically important that we make the most of the processes that we have established in the Assembly to ensure that we can provide proper reflection. One of those processes that is in place, Mr. Speaker, is the process of committee. It's a good process. It allows for expert testimony. It allows for many minds to provide input into this legislation, and my guess is that members of the current backbenches also could provide some quality feedback at committee, so I hope that that's what can happen.

I might just correct the record. My hon. colleague there mentioned that they didn't see it until Friday. He was way off, sir. It was Thursday, the day prior, that they got to see the bill, so I just wouldn't want people to have the impression that we were stretching any information here. It was Thursday, the day prior.

His point remains extremely valid when it comes to the need to ensure that school boards can have a voice on a piece of legislation that is going to dramatically impact their ability to bargain, the issues that they're going to be able to or not be able to bargain on, and the fact that they bring a very unique voice that only school boards can bring. We have school boards from rural Alberta. We have school boards from urban Alberta. What is a local issue in Carbon, Acme, and Linden might not necessarily be a big issue in Edmonton-Centre or Edmonton-Glenora or all of the other seats that take up the capital or Calgary or Red Deer or Medicine Hat or all of the larger cities. If those school boards don't have a voice at the table, Mr. Speaker, in the first round of consultations on deciding what's local and what isn't, we miss an opportunity to ensure that all Albertans are represented in what is a critically important bargaining negotiation.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Member.

Would anybody like to speak to the amendment? I'll recognize the Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you. I am so happy that we're talking about public education and the role that school trustees have in the Legislature. When I think of my role as a school trustee in the past and the focus that I had to have on how well our students did and focusing all of the resources on the classroom, I am so happy that our government has introduced Bill 8 because Bill 8 is going to help school boards ensure that the most resources possible are focused on the classroom.

I just wanted to remind everyone in the House about the amount of consultation that the Minister of Education has had. I think that it's been mentioned in this House before, but I think it's really important that we know how many hours the Minister of Education has spent with each school board. He spent two hours with each of the 61 school boards, and I had the pleasure of being with the Minister of Education as he met with the francophone boards. So school boards have been consulted, and they knew that the government was looking at different ways of ensuring that in the next round of collective bargaining the process would be smooth, that it would ensure that every school board could meet their budget and that the teachers were fairly compensated.

The other thing that I think is important in this bill and why I don't think that we should be supporting the amendment that was proposed by the hon. member is that the bill leaves a lot of the details to be discussed between the school boards and the ATA and the government. It doesn't preclude the role of school boards and their input into the important decisions that will be taken on this bill. The bill really wants to make sure that for the next round of bargaining there is a process in place that will make it fair and easy for all of the school boards to be able to meet their budgets when agreements are made with the ATA.

I would like to urge all members to not support the amendment. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Anyone under 29(2)(a)? I recognize the Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a quick question for the hon. member. I respect your experience in education. I had 13 years around the world – kindergarten to university, three countries, and various subjects areas – yet I'm still learning a lot today. I've learned a lot in the last 11 years in this Chamber. I wonder if the member is familiar with the plethora – and I don't use words like that every day. But there are so many types of committees, not committees but types of committees, that I've seen in the last 11 years, too many for me to count right here and now. We've had numerous iterations of cabinet policy committees and special standing committees. It's a very, very long list.

But when it comes to all-party committees, I can tell you that – say what you will about the previous government – that was a creation of this previous government, and private members, especially, and opposition were absolutely delighted with their creation. It was unprecedented. It allowed an opportunity that had never ever been there for extremely important voices of elected representatives to be heard, not only them, not only those on the outside ring of the government side but all across here and much further to all elected representatives beyond these chambers, to places like school board rooms coming here, those folks who hear from parents and students and teachers, ATA, et cetera, every day.

Don't we want to hear from them on this? That's really my question. What do you think, Member? Should we take a little bit more time and get this right? This is not a hoist amendment by the hon. Wildrose member. This is not hoisting it. This is saying: send it to the committee. If the committees were not made for a purpose exactly like this, shall we disband all-party committees and not hear from private members and elected representatives, individuals, and stakeholders from across the province on any issue? Over to you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members like to respond under 29(2)(a)? I'll recognize the Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you. I'll be really quick. The Member for Sherwood Park mentioned that this bill would offer more resources in the classroom. I was just hoping you could explain to me how that works.

Ms McKittrick: Having been involved in collective bargaining in a number of organizations within the school system, I know that the sometimes long and laborious processes that individual boards sometimes need to undertake to achieve a collective agreement take time from my role as a school trustee, which is to ensure that the resources are going into the classroom. I see that this bill, by the way that the TEBA will be structured, will free a lot of time for school trustees to focus more on their role to ensure quality education in the school system rather than for 61 boards to sit individually and bargain with their individual teacher representation. That's why I meant that this bill, by the way that it is structured and by creating the TEBA organization, will allow school trustees and their staff to be more present and to ensure that resources are going to the classroom rather than spending more on bargaining.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Please go ahead, Member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question that I have for the Member for Sherwood Park is – I guess we're making an assumption here that this is what the school boards want. Their role is to make sure that the money that is being spent fits within the budgets that they have been provided. I question whether the assumption is not flawed, that school boards would want to not be involved in that process. I question whether or not that's what they want. In fact, from what we're hearing, school boards are saying: slow down so that we can at least find out if this is something that they need and will be good for them. I don't think that it's a difficult ask. In fact . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Member.

Would anyone else like to speak to the amendment itself? I recognize the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to this amendment asking that this be sent to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities. I guess what I want to speak to here is just that I know that for some us, people in this Legislature that have an education background, perhaps we understand some of these issues and some of the underlying nuances of bargaining as it's been done traditionally, but I think that probably many in this House, who have not had any kind of a real impact or ability to engage in the education system, may not understand these things. I think that the Standing Committee on Families and Communities allows more reflection.

Yes, it's going to allow the school boards a chance to have a little more time to reflect and to look at this minister's work and to look at this process, but I think that this House needs to do a little bit of homework as well, and I think this committee is a perfect way of doing that. It's tasked with the idea and the focus of digging into these kinds of issues and coming back to the House with recommendations and with ideas. I think that this would be a perfect opportunity for a committee like this to deal with something that's – I mean, this is very, very important. We're dealing with people's livelihoods here. We're dealing with how they feed their families and the kind of working conditions that they face. How are we going to approach coming to mutual agreement on the kinds of issues that teachers and schools and school boards face with regard to the monies and how they're going to be spent? I think this committee would be a perfect place for us to study that.

I think it's important that this committee take a look at the history of bargaining in this province. I'm not sure that everybody in this House understands the concept of, really, what in many cases is called local bargaining and why we've done that in the past, the advantages and the disadvantages that have come from local bargaining.

We know that some of the school boards in this province are in agreement that maybe we should pursue a different model. Well, it seems and it would appear, if we take a look at the ASBA and the PSBAA, that both of those organizations still seem to and have chosen to support the concept of local bargaining. While we understand that the minister has gone to a lot of work in consulting at the front end of this and has proposed a two-tier system, we probably need to take some time as a House and as a Legislature and especially on this committee to take a look at the benefits of local bargaining versus the benefits of this new model of bargaining.

We know that there have been issues. That's pretty clear for anybody that's been involved in education. We know that in 1994 there were problems with local bargaining before, and I think there are probably some individuals in this House that were in education at the time and realized that at the end of a new bargaining model, they were down 5 per cent at the end of the day.

That new bargaining model was an attempt to address several issues: one, the reality that the government of the day believed that they needed to get control of the spending in education and believed that a new model was needed to do that, but secondly, they saw inequities. They saw inequities in the funding between school boards and that this was creating a problem with educating our children, so they needed a new model. One of the things that the government did, that maybe some of the members here are not aware of and that this committee could help educate us on and look into these issues, is that the government took the taxing powers of the school boards away. They collected the money from property taxes and put it into a collective pot and came out with money that would be per-pupil funding for schools.

Now, you know, that was a pretty big introduction of change in the model of bargaining and in how we were going to do things, and I think that if we're going to move away from that – honestly, the minister knows that we've had some conversations in the past. There have been some issues with this model of bargaining, and we just have to take a look at the fact that the last two collective agreements have been done provincially rather than purely locally. There maybe needs to be some discussion as to how we could change this model, but I believe this committee needs to take a look at and consider the issues that may be brought up by school boards in this province.

If we're going to have success with a new model of bargaining, it would just appear to me – as a teacher I understood this. As a teacher I understood that if I was going to have success in my classroom, I had to be able to ensure that my students were engaged in their learning, that they had a positive relationship with me, that the parents understood who this teacher was that they placed in charge of their kids, that they had trust and confidence in me as a teacher, and that my principals all understood that I was teaching the curriculum and that I knew how to engage my students with different pedagogy to ensure that they would have success. It's a model of education that engages all of the major stakeholders and makes sure that they're a part of the process so that at the end of the day our students are educated and confident and able to partake in the society that they live in.

Well, I believe that if you're going to have success with this model of education, this bargaining model, we're going to need to make sure that all of the stakeholders are heard, that all of the stakeholders are considered, and that we have a bargaining model that at the end of the day has the support of all the major stakeholders. I knew that that was the success for me in my classroom, and I believe it's going to need to be done here if we're going to have a successful bargaining model. I believe this committee could call in school boards. This committee could ask for their concerns and then listen to their proposals for how we could make this a better bill and then bring these back to the minister with the idea of creating a law that will stand in place not just for a few years but for many, many years, serving the parents, the students, the school boards, and the teachers that make up our education system.

Now, I think that this committee could – and I really wonder sometimes. I know that for somebody like myself, you know, the shadow minister of Education: yeah, sure, I have to dig into this bill, and I have to try to understand it. I believe it's important for the people on this committee to also understand the nuances in this bill. I think they even need to be able to understand that this formalizes a province-wide two-tier system of bargaining, that the provincial table will address the broader issues, the issues, as it states in the bill, for those that have significant monetary expenditures and for those where all of the school boards would share a common concern in that area. But if we don't start to talk about these kinds of things, how are we going to make wise decisions in this House? I believe this committee could help in that education process.

It's important. I mean, we have been talking in a very short period of time so far with school boards, and they're expressing concern over what would be a provincial issue. Based on the criteria that are in this bill, how would you determine what is a provincial and what is a local issue? What kinds of issues really are not significantly monetary? Which issues, if they affect one school board, wouldn't affect all of the school boards, and how do we determine that?

There is some concern as to the kinds of things that would be set up by a two-tier model here. I think that as a committee we could start taking a look at that. We could start looking at the kinds of recommendations after we've listened to some of the experts on this issue, and we could then come back to the House with some recommendations.

Mr. Minister, you said that the bill came out on Thursday, if I'm correct. Yeah. You know, really, we've only had Friday, and for those of us that continued – and I think that's probably all of us in this House – working on Saturday and maybe even Sunday and into yesterday and today, there have been only four or five days that we've had the opportunity to actually sit down and consider this.

I know that I've talked with school boards that are saying: listen, we're not even prepared to meet as a school board until, you know, the 15th or the 16th of this month. That's a significant problem for them. For something that's as important as this, why not give them the opportunity to sit down and talk as a school board to be able to see where they fit into this, whether they can actually live with this? The timeline is an issue here, and it's not because there was a lack of consultation. I'll give the Minister of Education his dues here. You went out and talked with the school boards ahead of time, and that's a really good thing.

I'm going to draw again a little bit of an educational analogy here. I know that in my classroom when we sat down and we started to take a look at an issue, we would brainstorm, we would talk, and we would try to focus our conversation on the issue under discussion. Then we would perhaps send them out to do some research. They would go out, and they would look at various sources. Some might go to the library, go to the shelves and see what we had in our stack of ancient library material. Some might go out and interview some people in our community that were pertinent to the issue. Others would go onto the famous Internet, and you could see how much time they actually spent on topic. At the end of the time they would come together, and they would look at their research. They would discuss the value of the information that they had discovered. Then they would talk with each other and see how it met the issue of the day and what ramifications would come out of that.

I guess that's the process that I would urge the minister to use right now and to use the committee as a part of that process, a part of gathering the research and information. Find out from your stakeholders what they really want, where they fall. You know, there's a lot of hard work that's gone into this, and maybe the government isn't willing to simply shelve this for local bargaining. On the other hand, maybe they are willing to take a look and see some of the concerns and address some of those concerns by amending this piece of legislation with the recommendations that come from this committee.

I would suggest that this is a very reasonable step in the process of consultation, that this amendment should be supported by the House, that it can look at the various issues that have been brought up, whether the two-tier model is what the boards want or not. They can take a look at some of the problems that the school boards have with this model, and they can even, perhaps, ask the school boards about some of the regulations that could be made after passing this bill so that they can do some forward thinking once they've considered what this bill is going to look like after and if it's passed by this House.

I think that this is an amendment that we could speak to in the positive in this House. I believe that this amendment is a reasonable amendment. I think that it sends it to the right committee. This is the committee that should deal with it, the Standing Committee on Families and Communities. I would encourage this House to vote in favour of this amendment.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Under 29(2)(a) would anyone like to make a comment or question? I recognize the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

4:10

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, coming to grips with this bill as I am, I appreciate the previous speaker's insights, and I guess I would ask: if this was to proceed, would there be any conditions under which he feels it could proceed?

Mr. Smith: Thank you for the question. I'm assuming that what you're referring to is: are there any conditions after the committee has met?

Dr. Swann: No.

Mr. Smith: Okay. Are there any conditions, then, during the committee?

Dr. Swann: Are there any conditions that would, through amendments to this bill, in your view, allow it to proceed and satisfy the concerns that boards have around this review?

Mr. Smith: Thank you very much. Okay. Mr. Speaker, I know that when we've talked with some of our school boards, they have voiced some concerns and some suggestions that they would like to see. Assuming that the government is not willing to pursue and go down the path of going back to pure local bargaining, if they are going to have a two-tier model, they, for instance, would like to see TEBA included in the first round of discussions so that it isn't just the government and the ATA that will be setting out the criteria and the issues that they wanted to negotiate at the beginning. TEBA, as one of the major stakeholders of this process, should be involved from the very beginning. That just seems to me to be a reasonable and fair position to take, that if you've got the three major stakeholders – the government, the teachers represented through the ATA, and the school boards that represent the parents and the students and that represent how money is spent within education – they would be a part of that very first process.

You know, we've had some discussion with some that are concerned and wondering why the Auditor General would not be a part of overseeing TEBA. There is a section in there that needs a little more clarification, and maybe that's something that this committee could look at and ask why the funds expended through the negotiating and bargaining process that TEBA and the government and the ATA would be a part of – why would those things not be under the purview of the Auditor General? That might be something that we would want to see discussed, and maybe the committee could come back to this House with some recommendations one way or the other with some reasons one way or the other on those kinds of issues.

You know, one of the problems that many of the school boards that we've talked with have come up with is just that this bill deals with the process of negotiation and that many of the issues that surround this process are fairly vague. So we'd like to see some clarification, perhaps some discussion, about some of the regulations that would accompany this. For instance – and it's been alluded to already in this House – the minister has the ability to appoint to the committee that will represent TEBA at the negotiation process. Why? Who would that be? Why would the people that represent TEBA not be from purely the school boards? Why would he see an issue with wanting to have to put in people that may not have anything to do with the school boards?

Maybe we misunderstand, but those are the concerns that are coming out of the school boards. I mean, one of the biggest problems that we have, I think, sometimes in life but also in this House and as people is that sometimes if we don't understand something, we fear it.

Mr. Mason: That's Bill 6 in a nutshell.

Mr. Smith: Well, you know, you may be correct. The member is absolutely free to have his opinion on that issue.

You know, if we could take the time in this committee to answer those kinds of questions or to ask and to work with the minister through this committee to answer those kinds of questions, get rid of some of that fear, then perhaps this would end up with a bill that is really very successful and meets the needs of the educational establishment.

Have I answered your question?

The Acting Speaker: We only have seven seconds under 29(2)(a), so perhaps I'll just proceed along and ask if anyone would like to address the amendment. I'll call on the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the time that we've had this bill, I've had a chance to reflect on it a little bit, not a huge amount. One of the great things about being the only member from my party and also one of the challenges is that we get to speak about absolutely everything.

Mr. Cooper: What's your party position on this?

Mr. Clark: Well, my party position – I may release a shadow Bill 8. We'll see. It's barely gone 4 p.m. today, and there are many, many hours left in the day for us to do some work.

Having said that, based on research that we've done looking at other provinces, other jurisdictions, at the end of the day likely we will support Bill 8. But I have tremendous sympathy for the idea of sending this to committee because there is a lot of work yet to be done on this. There are many questions yet to be answered.

You know, the overall consultation: it's been said many times in this House today – and I think the Minister of Education deserves some credit and praise for his extensive efforts to consult and meet with school boards and travel the province and talk with folks. But the question here is: what exactly was the question that was asked in that consultation? Was the question, "What would you like the process to look like?" or was the question, "What would you like the two-table process to look like?" It's a little bit like when my children were younger. The question wasn't: what would you like to eat? The question was: would you like peas or carrots? You're having a vegetable. That's been determined. It seems like there's a sense of this. There's some sensitivity – and I think rightly so – particularly in rural Alberta, but around the province, about a bunch of unanswered questions, about . . .

Mr. Cooper: The defender of rural Alberta.

Mr. Clark: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills rightly identifies me as a defender of rural Alberta. Absolutely right. Absolutely right.

But, you know, I think the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon also raised a good point, that where there's a vacuum, there's uncertainty and that we fill that uncertainty with fear. In this case I think it is, in fact, a framework with gaps that are to be filled through regulation. I worry that that may be becoming a bit of a theme for this government as it was with past governments.

The worry that has been expressed to me by school boards is that there's a one size fits all on the way from this negotiating process. There are significant differences between boards around the province, within and between not just rural and urban but within and between urban and within and between rural boards as well, around very important operational matters of how the school boards operate, around teaching hours, around lunch supervision, and around many, many other issues. In fact, I've met with representatives of some school boards earlier today. They raised some of those issues with me. I've asked them to please provide further input to me on exactly what their concerns are, because I want to learn more about this. As has been identified earlier, we do an awful lot of learning in this place.

Sending this to committee gives us an opportunity to reflect, recognizing that there's a timeline here, that time is relatively short. We need to get into that collective bargaining process, but we do I think have time here to get this into committee.

When all those questions are answered, I likely will support Bill 8 because it is something, as I understand, that is generally a direction that is going around the country. But I rise in support of the amendment. I think it's important that we take some time to reflect.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Under 29(2)(a) would anyone like to comment or ask a question? I recognize the Member for – oh, darn. Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills?

Mr. Cooper: Yes. I know that it's very forgettable, and for that I have no malice.

I was just wondering if the independent Member for Calgary-Elbow would mind passing along to us just a sense of how many school boards he might represent in that constituency there and the sort of breadth of the opportunity he might have for input. I mean this genuinely, not in any sort of joking way. Like, give us a sense of just the type of, the amount of feedback that you think you might receive or that you could receive and the school boards that affect the beautiful constituency you represent.

Mr. Clark: Well, first off, to the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, I think it's important to read the word "hooray" into Hansard if we haven't had an opportunity to do that. So hooray for the question.

You know, I think it's important, not just as leader of a party but, I think, for all of us as representatives in this House, that we represent not just the people who have elected us in our individual constituencies but that we represent, ultimately, all Albertans. Yes, while the two major school boards represented in Calgary-Elbow are the Calgary public school board and the Calgary Catholic school board, large school boards, there are charter schools in Calgary-Elbow, there are francophone schools, and there are private schools in Calgary-Elbow as well, so there is a breadth there.

You know, earlier today I met with representatives of half a dozen rural school boards from not just surrounding Calgary but around the province as well, so we're certainly doing our homework and our research. Ironically, on this particular topic I've only spoken with rural school board members. I haven't actually had the chance to speak directly with any school board representatives for the large urban boards in particular, that make up most of the schools in Calgary-Elbow, but I've asked our team to reach out, get their perspective as well. But I think that speaks to exactly why this amendment is a good idea: to give us the time to reflect, to learn more, to talk with more school boards, not just in our own constituencies but all around the province as well.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any further questions under 29(2)(a)?

Dr. Swann: I'm just wondering if the hon. member knows – and this is for my information. What's the deadline for negotiations, and what kind of timing do we have? I'm in a dilemma around this because I share some of the concerns on this side, and I'm just not sure what kind of timeline we have. Does the hon. member know when this has to be completed?

Mr. Clark: I don't know that, but perhaps the Education minister can rise under 29(2)(a) and let us know.

The Acting Speaker: Under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. I think this is important. We're trying to sort this out using this venue as a mechanism by which we can sort things out. An important piece of information that everybody needs to know – I'll form this in a question, somehow, like Jeopardy! – is that after December 31 the individual school boards can start individual negotiations with each individual local. So after this December 31 the whole notion of having this TEBA board, which is, by the way, guys, just to sort this out – I mean, it's an employers' board. It's the school boards' board, is what it is. It's not the teachers'. It's the teachers' employers, so they employ the teachers.

The terms of reference would be set by the school boards. It is a school board representative body that would do the one table, which would be wages – right? – the big one, then we would be there as well because we are the funder. That's a good way to do it. After December 31 – and we had a fair bit of time here. I'll talk more about the consultations and just the breadth of what we did and how we did it. After December 31 we can lose that opportunity to even execute this concept. That's something to think about, everybody, for sure.

The Acting Speaker: Other comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, would anybody else like to address the amendment? I recognize the Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Just think of the cable company and you'll remember.

I'm going to be brief on this. This is my major concern about this amendment and sending it to committee. I know the committee process can sometimes take a long time, especially depending on how detailed you go into it. The minister already alluded to this in detail, that we're on a limited timeline here. Negotiations are very complex. We need to start planning. We need to develop the TEBA board. We need to figure out which is going to sit on which part of the local and the provincial bargaining tables. I'm afraid that if we do this, if we move forward with moving this into committee, we aren't going to be able to develop this properly, we aren't going to be able to do a proper negotiation model, and down the road what will end up happening is that we could lead to strike actions, which would not be good for any students. This could lead to us having a very unfair deal.

With that being said, with as much briefness as I want because I know that time is very valuable, I would encourage this House not to support this amendment.

The Acting Speaker: Again under 29(2)(a), any response or comment? I recognize the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Member from Calgary-Shaw: have you actually talked to any school boards in your jurisdiction?

Mr. Sucha: I've talked to all my school boards in my jurisdiction.

The Acting Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), anybody? I recognize the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you. For the question. I understand the December 31 date, but I think that it might be somewhat artificial. I think that we should also say that the contract expiry date is not until July 16, which is seven months out, somewhat. Is that not correct?

Mr. Sucha: As the member alluded, the negotiation process can start in April, so we actually don't have as long of a window to start this process. We ultimately don't want to do work without a contract as well.

Mr. Orr: When does the current contract expire?

The Acting Speaker: Sorry; I just want to interrupt. That was a second question, and I can't allow a second question.

Mr. Orr: Okay.

The Acting Speaker: Would anybody else like to – I recognize the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Just a couple of comments to the member. Just for clarification's sake, I'm curious to know, following on from my hon. colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka, when that contract does expire. I might just add that there are lots of ways that we can manage through the committee process in terms of putting reasonable timelines on it.

The other questions that I might just ask, one being: when does the contract expire? The other: this House sat approximately 35 days ago for the very first day, and I wondered if the hon. member knows if this bill could have been presented before the House at that time and then allowed more opportunity for discussion amongst school board trustees so that we wouldn't be in this time crunch.

Mr. Sucha: Well, to be fair to the minister, as many of the members in this House have alluded to, he was meeting with members of school boards until about the end of October, so a lot of primary discussions were happening during this time. Then, ultimately, the bill had to be drafted by his team, which would give some time for that as well. Then there's research that's done with the drafting of this bill, so subsequently amendments and changes are being made as well. I don't see how this bill could have hit this House before last Thursday.

With that being said, going to the second question, all the contracts are up for expiry at the end of August as well.

The Acting Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)? I recognize the Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that there hasn't been true local bargaining in about 15 years, I wonder if the member could just talk about if he thinks that the current system is broken, and if so, if he thinks that this is a way to move forward in having two tables, one to discuss local issues and one to discuss provincial issues. Of course, the biggest provincial issue, I'd say, is funding the actual collective agreements that get negotiated. Would the hon. member think that this would be a way to work in partnership to address both local and provincial issues?

Mr. Sucha: I apologize for using the analogy that has been used countless times in this House during this subject, but one size does not fit all, and that's what two tables is all about. It's recognizing that we don't want to sacrifice the negotiation piece when it refers to things like salaries but that there is a divide between issues that impact certain rural boards and urban boards, and even certain urban boards have different challenges as well. I can tell you that the francophone board in Calgary has only two schools, so there is a large gap in distance compared to local Calgary public schools, that have two in one community.

You know, at the end of the day, it's prudent to have a model that recognizes that there are certain individual challenges for every single board and also recognizes that when it comes to negotiating things like salaries, we are all kind of in this together and that we have to make sure that we get the best deal for all Albertans and for all children.

The Acting Speaker: We are done with 29(2)(a).

Would anyone like to address the amendment? I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll try to be brief. I support the amendment. I think that one of the toughest things about sitting on the government side of the House is looking at a motion that comes from this side of the House and deciding: is that going to help me or hurt me if I support it? That would be a fair question, and members on the government side would be right to start out suspicious about that.

The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that some of it actually comes to help, and this is one of those things. When governments get in trouble, very often it's when they don't take the time ahead of the legislation to actually talk to Albertans, the ones affected by the legislation, and make a decision on that. Again, when legislation goes through without that – one of the few things that can actually save a piece of legislation if it's brought forward before the consultation is adequately completed is a motion like this, to get it to committee. In fact, in this current session there are a few pieces of legislation that would benefit from a trip through the committee system.

An Hon. Member: Bill 6?

Mr. McIver: We're not on Bill 6, but, yes, it comes to mind as a random example.

This is another case where, government members, your government might actually benefit from allowing this to go through the committee process. I think that this is an important piece of legislation. I have no reason to believe that the government's intentions were anything less than good when bringing this forward. Nonetheless, some of the communications that have come through my office from school boards would indicate that they haven't been talked to in a way that they would acknowledge as consultation. Again, a good way to cure that would be to take some time in the committee system.

Lots of benefits for government. You get us on this side of the House on the record in committee. Think about the benefits of that. You get to take submissions from other people should the committee decide to do so, and some of those people could be school boards or organizations that the school boards belong to. You could really build a case for why the legislation is a good idea, and you might even come up with some good ideas for amendments through committee that you would be happier with, yourselves and your government. I think that it could improve your chances of having a piece of legislation that you could be proud of down the road, that you wouldn't get a lot of stick for because people don't like it, something that'll work.

That's why I'm supporting the amendment. I would politely, I hope, request that members of the House consider doing the same. Thanks.

The Acting Speaker: Under 29(2)(a) I'll recognize the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad that the hon. member rose to speak to this. The hon. member has a lot of experience in this House, and it was while the hon. member was in government that standing committees were established. I would like to ask the hon. member if he could elaborate on the value of putting bills to standing committees for the sake of the MLAs that are elected in this House who don't have a lot to do with crafting legislation. There is this process of standing committees that was brought to this House, and I'm a little bit surprised that the members opposite who are part of the Standing Committee on Families and Communities are not supporting an amendment that gives them something to do to directly impact a piece of legislation that is so profound, really. It's going to completely transform the bargaining process in this province, yet they don't appear to want to participate. Could you elaborate on the value of such participation by all of the members of this House that belong to these standing committees?

Mr. Mason: Ask him how many times they did it.

The Acting Speaker: Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what? We all come to this House with value. We all have intelligence and thoughts, that could have value, that we bring to a process. As the hon. member asked, I'd say that this really will give you a chance to put a mark on something that matters. The Education budget is the second-biggest in government. This is to do with the process for bargaining on that. The collective wisdom is very often greater than the wisdom of the few.

It was also while I was up that I heard from the Government House Leader. Well, he didn't have the floor, but I heard it anyways. He said: ask them how often they did it. Mr. Speaker, that was a good question. It was out of order, but it was a good question because I would say – that was part of my comments to members on the other side – that we probably regretted sometimes when we didn't send things to committee.

That's why when I opened my remarks – one of the toughest things when a motion like this comes, particularly for the government members, is to think about: is this good for me, or is this not good for me? The things that went poorly or in a bad way when we were in government were some times when we didn't take the time to put something through committee. And, yes, it did happen sometimes when we didn't consult enough on the front end. Those are the things that come to bite you – those are the things that come to bite you – at election time, when you notice it, when you really notice it. That's what I would say.

To the member that asked the question, I think there is great value. It's great to go back to your constituents and say: I helped bring this amendment forward on this piece of legislation, that actually made it better. I think the issue of fairness, from the Member for Calgary-Shaw, was mentioned. It will be something that's more fair, more balanced between the rights of the taxpayers to get a good deal and the rights of the teachers to be paid fairly. It all does start with the empowerment of the legislation.

The shorter answer is: absolutely, there's value. All members of the House will have an increased chance of bringing that value. All members of the House would have a chance of having something to take back to their constituency, to say: "See? This is what I did. This is what I worked on, and I'm proud of it, and this is why you're paying me." So I would say: don't waste this opportunity. This can be a very good thing for all parties here if we put this through the committee.

The Acting Speaker: Under 29(2)(a) I recognize the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Member for Calgary-Hayes, thank you for your insights. Because you've been here a lot longer than at least this MLA and because you were on the government benches at one point in time, I guess my question could go to you. I'm not even sure if I could put it to a minister at this particular point in time because I don't know the rules of the House that well, so I'll put it to you, okay? Here's the question. We know that the Education Act was passed by the previous government and has not been proclaimed for many, many, many years, yet the education system has continued to move on, and . . .

The Acting Speaker: I'm sorry; 29(2)(a) is now done.

Would anybody like to address the actual amendment itself? I recognize the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you. Yes, I would like to speak to the amendment. Well, I will say that I am in favour of the amendment although, truthfully, I'm not really sure where I stand yet on the actual bill. I think there's a lot of consideration that needs to be given to this. There needs to be time for understanding to come to a good position on it, not just for myself but for the members of this House and particularly for others. I do think there needs to be time for consultation.

I would like to reference a letter that is actually dated today. It's addressed to the Minister of Education. I don't expect that you've had an opportunity to see this because it is addressed today – it'll come to you – but I do think that it has some interesting content, some interesting points. It comes from one of the school boards in my riding, actually from the chair of that school board. He says that he's actually very concerned about Bill 8, and I would like to just identify some of his concerns because I think they're important for the House, and I'd like them on the record.

He says that in the brief consultation held in September the trustees felt that the steps that were being taken would lead to the "continual erosion of the rights and responsibilities of school boards." Be that as it may – I don't know; I just report what he is saying. We have seen more authority being gathered to the central body of government, to cabinet, so his point may be worth taking.

Then he says:

In the absence of local autonomy, we may see rural education taking [yet another] hit as labour solutions that work in the city don't . . . fit in rural communities.

I think that he raises a very important problem there, that a centralized, single, fits-all solution to this is not going to be helpful in some situations.

He says also:

Should a provincial model be initiated, it was our board's position that during the preliminary consultations that the [Alberta School Boards Association] should be the body that represents our boards.

These are questions that a school board is raising. These are their concerns. They want them as their bargaining agent.

Then he says – and I think that this is an extremely important statement. He says:

We have further concerns that the preliminary consultations were simply not framed as the basis for the development of Bill 8, and [we] believe they shouldn't be used as such.

I'm hearing the members on this side of the floor say to me: yes, we went and consulted; yes, we went and talked to them; yes, we've listened to them. But here I have the chair of a school board saying that he didn't quite realize the discussion was really about Bill 8 and that it shouldn't be taken that way.

Although I think that the members opposite believe they have fully consulted, what we're reading is that they don't feel that way at all. They have serious concerns about that. They simply do not believe that the consultation – "the preliminary consultations," he calls them, "were simply not framed as the basis for the development of Bill 8." If they didn't realize that you were building Bill 8 out of your conversations with them, that in their mind at least is not real consultation, and they feel that it would be unfair that it would be used in that context. He says:

In this context, we believe Bill 8 does not reflect the feedback provided in that consultation.

Maybe you listened to a few things from them, but they feel like you haven't given any accountability to it. You haven't figured any of their comments into what you've gone ahead and done anyway.

He says:

These are but a few of our initial cursory concerns.

Then he talks about:

Given your apparent timeline for the [progress] of Bill 8, we are additionally concerned about our inability to dialogue and [have any further consultation] on the significant . . . shift this bill proposes.

Now, I can understand that. If they feel like they didn't know that they were really talking about Bill 8 and now they have no other opportunity to comment on that, then they feel like they have been overridden. They have not been listened to.

Having not seen your proposed legislation prior to November 25th, which is probably the disputed Thursday that we've been talking about, it contains measures not anticipated from the preliminary consultations facilitated by your staff.

I think that you believe that you consulted with them, but I don't think that you did it in a way that they understood what you were expecting to do with all of that. They certainly don't feel like it was valid or that it was legitimate. They feel like they had the bill dropped on them on November 25 and then had no opportunity to respond to that.

He says:

In agreement with many fellow boards, we believe that locally elected school boards representing local constituents, and addressing local issues, should be given more than a few days to review proposed legislation affecting one of the primary responsibilities of school boards.

We realize and he realizes that the government is saying: yes, we've consulted; yes, we've listened. But I would suggest to you that your process of consultation is not being effective with the people that you need to be listening to. We've seen that with just about every bill that's come forward.

I mean, as I said, I'm not sure the direction this bill should take. I do know that this school board does not feel like they have been consulted. They feel like there was a little bit of a process so that it could be called that but that nobody, in fact, listened to them. I just pass on to you the reality of a school board in my riding.

He says:

We trust this discussion will occur prior to the passage of Bill 8. While I appreciate your Board Chairs teleconference of Friday, November 27th, having not had any further opportunity to meet or share our concerns with you, we would look for every opportunity to discuss Bill 8 with you prior to its further progression.

This needs to go to committee. I mean, if you really want these people on your side, they need an opportunity to actually talk about the bill, not just a general sort of nice conversation. There is real concern with this, and I think it needs to be considered.

They have a couple of very specific questions they would like answers to. First: "In drafting Bill 8, what was the process employed by your office to analyse the preliminary consultation feedback from Boards?" They feel like it hasn't been listened to. Second question: "Were any boards additionally consulted in the drafting of Bill 8?" Thirdly: "What is the rationale for the proposed TEBA to exist outside of the ASBA, the association currently representing all 61 School Boards?"

My friends across the way, I don't have a position yet, but I know that this is a school board that does not feel like you are listening to them. I have to say that consultation, sending it to committee, would be the only responsible thing to do. It would be the only right thing to do. I spent a lot of time in past years dealing with and working together with democratic kinds of groups, small agencies and associations, where board members sometimes precook decisions before AGMs and things like that. Then they set it all out and expect the members to vote for it, and too often the individual members feel like: well, it's already decided; what's the point of me saying anything? I think this is how the school boards are feeling at this point in time.

On the weekend I was at a public event, and someone came up to me and said: I actually voted NDP, but what's happening there isn't real NDP; they're not true NDPs; they've forgotten the word "democratic" in this whole thing; these people aren't democratic; they're not doing democratic things. This is what this individual said to me. He said: real New Democrats wouldn't do this kind of stuff.

I have to ask: why is it that they're suddenly losing the D, the democratic? It leaves me and school boards wondering and questioning, and quite honestly I do have to question why. Is it catering to the ATA at the cost of school boards? Are there ulterior motives? Why the rush? I mean, if there's not a willingness to be open, not a willingness to consult, it leaves us beginning to suspect: okay; what's going on here? Is it that you don't really want to hear from the school boards, they're a bothersome nuisance, you just want to do what you want to do and get it done? Is it about bulldozing it through so quick that nobody has time to respond, so that your agenda is completed? I don't know. Is it that you don't trust the school boards and their comments? I said it yesterday, and I'm going to say it again: the right thing done in the wrong way will never produce the right results.

I do commend the minister for having made an effort to consult. It's more than we've seen on some of these other bills. But I don't think the school boards feel like they have been consulted with. I think the process is rushed. I think there are a lot of people in our province that don't understand what the huge rush is to shove all this stuff through before Christmas. It leaves people thinking there's something fishy here, and I have no idea what it is because, as I said, I'm not sure where this bill should even go. But I do know that in most social institutions people understand that procedure is often as important as content, and when procedure is abused and misused, it never, ever can lead to a good result.

So I have real concerns about pushing this through in a haphazard and in a quick way. I think some of the other members have spoken it well. This needs to go to committee. I would beg you to take it to committee for your own good. We're not trying to trick you into something here. This is the way process should go. When it doesn't go this way, well, somewhere down the road it will backfire, and don't say that you weren't warned.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Under 29(2)(a) I'll recognize the Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I'll try to use this opportunity to . . .

Ms Hoffman: To help.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah, to give a hand, right?

Once again – and I confirmed it again – in regard to the consultation, certainly, we did do lots, and I'll speak about that more. I have, for example, the agenda of the full-day meetings that we had with the school boards. The first item was establishing a bargaining association. Another discussion item was province-wide, two-tier bargaining. Number 3: level of government involvement and employee representation. So it was very clear what we were doing. That was just one layer with experts that I thought were very, very good, and then I came around, too, and a similar process was followed.

Sometimes people don't like to see the results of how things come out. Perhaps, you know, that's what I have to work with, right? I mean, that's part of my responsibility, to ensure that we're working through. That's why, in fact, we did make some modifications over time with this bill to make sure that the two tables – number one, again, very clear: it's the teachers' employer bargaining association. So it's the school boards that are represented with the TEBA, right? Then they're negotiating with the teachers, so that's kind of how it's split apart.

Again, I confirmed it again because I wanted to make sure. By December 31 a number of school boards can start negotiating on their own, okay? That's why the day that I was – well, probably a couple of days after I was appointed the Minister of Education I started on this process and set up the consultation that I did, and we're continuing on with that as well.

We have another set of consultations that are happening that I'll describe later when I make some final comments. There are three more in Calgary and Edmonton here in the next few days, just to clarify some of these issues, because, you know, I really do believe in collaboration. It's very important to have people functioning together to see that this will be an opportunity for all the local issues to be negotiated in a clean and clear and concise sort of way and have the funder there for the wage negotiations. What appears at those two tables is up to the TEBA, which is the school boards as well as us and then the teachers on the other side. That's negotiated straight up like you would negotiate any other parts of the contract, okay?

Again, I'll finish with a question, of course, just because that's kind of what it's supposed to be. I hope that you might understand that December 31 is a real deadline by which the whole idea of having some central bargaining would potentially be extinguished. Certainly, we've seen that in the past. In the last 15 years or so, you know, you had the bargaining breaking down. We need to control costs, right? It's very important to do so. That's the biggest reason we have, to have the wage part of this and so forth under provincial, so that the actual funder is at the table to make sure that things don't spin out of control like they have done in the past, where individual boards went with something big that we couldn't afford. They call it a whipsaw effect in negotiating. So I'll end with a question. Have you ever heard of the word "whipsaw"?

Thanks.

The Acting Speaker: Would you like to respond to that?

Mr. Orr: Just to say thank you and I realize it's a complex process. As I said, I still have not totally made up my mind. I'm just passing on what I think one school board has said. I do appreciate you're working on it.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else under 29(2)(a)? I recognize the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: For the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka. We've heard from the minister that there was this consultation process that took place through the summer with different school boards across the province. Now, if a joint letter was to come from the school boards across this province, a number of them, begging the minister to slow down and send this bill to committee, do you suppose that the responsible thing to do would be to do just what the school boards have requested and send this bill to committee?

Mr. Orr: Well, I can't answer for the minister, but I would say that if I was in that role, I would in fact do that.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: We are finished with 29(2)(a).
Would anybody else like to speak to the amendment?

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: I recognize the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to the amendment to Bill 8. With all due respect to the Education minister, I represent four school boards, and that's why I'm standing today, because all of the school boards that I've talked to in my constituency want me to ask you to slow this down. Despite the fact that you may have consulted with them in the past, I think that they think they've been involved in a little bit of a shell game here, and they would like to speak to you again about Bill 8.

I'll just share a couple of comments. I actually just got off the phone here about half an hour ago with one of the school board chairs. She feels that this is being rushed. They've had no chance to look over and discuss with other boards, and there is a significant difference between the input that the school boards indicated and what the minister is now saying. That is their feeling. That's their words, not mine. They don't feel that a three-minute phone call on Friday provided anything new compared to what the minister had said before to them. Again, with all due respect, sir, I think the school boards in our province deserve to be heard, and that's why I would promote that this would go to committee and offer some further discussion, further opportunities for them.

Just a couple other comments that we have. It says:

We understand that there is consideration for second and third reading to be completed and the passage of this legislation into law ... We believe that, as locally elected school boards democratically chosen to represent our students, their families and our constituents, we should be given more than a few days to properly review the proposed legislation and to provide you with our recommendations on Bill 8 prior to being passed into law.

They don't feel that they were consulted on Bill 8 as it's proposed.

Another note that I got from them says:

We have done our analysis of it and are very concerned indeed ... Quite apart from that analysis though, is that we believe that it is unreasonable and disrespectful to locally elected school boards, for the Minister and the Government to rush to pass this legislation. A reasonable amount of time must be allowed for us to review it, and then to provide the opportunity for us to be engaged in meaningful consultation with the government on what we believe is best for our students. It really doesn't matter what our own individual opinions are now. We need the time and the opportunity to review, discuss, and then decide on our position going forward.

Another comment from another board.

We want longer term agreements (4-5 years) that protects local relationships with a finite amount of money that could be negotiated locally. We do have concerns of what the TEBA would look like? Who would be the representatives (would we be assured a rural voice)?

So there are a number of concerns from the school boards that I think we need to address before we push this thing through second and third readings.

Again, I would challenge the members opposite and the members in the House before we even vote on the amendment or on this bill to consult with your school boards and see what they're thinking. Do they feel that they've been properly represented and that the prior consultation actually was consultation on Bill 8? You know, after that, if we can get this thing through a little bit more discussion and I can consult with my school boards, I will vote on their recommendation because that's what we were elected for. It's not up to us to stand here and portray our opinions. It's the opinions of the boards and the schools that we represent, the teachers that we represent, the students that we represent, the communities that we represent.

For that reason, I would like to just slow this down. Let's go back and talk to those school boards, make sure that they are aware of what they were actually agreeing to prior to this summer.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there any members that have a question for the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills?

Mr. Cyr: To the member. You talked about consulting. What exactly is it that you did to consult with your local boards? Did you call them? Did you send them e-mails? Did you send them letters? What exactly is it that you did to consult with your boards? That's my question.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much for the question, hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, my neighbour. Actually, I did quite a few things. I made phone calls and sent e-mails asking for their input. On Friday morning, actually, prior to the three-minute warning that they got about Bill 8, I consulted with them, and they hadn't even had a chance to call in for their 11 o'clock meeting yet. They're all very concerned that their voices aren't being heard and that they're not being represented or that they're being misrepresented, actually, and they would definitely like further consultation on this before it's passed.

Thanks.

The Speaker: Any other questions for the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills? The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you for that. Again, I'm using this 29(2)(a) in the broadest possible way, but I think it's probably helpful. I think, again, I just want to reiterate the importance that if we do want to have a table for province-wide wage negotiations, you know, that if we go past December 31, we end up in the same trap that has happened before, where individual school boards can start negotiating on their own. I mean, that's a very practical concern. Certainly, the legislative process that we have here, whether it's rushed or not – certainly, I will again in my closing comments explain or reiterate just how we went through the consultative process, both myself and my staff, in two different waves of consultation.

I don't want to get into this too much because it's not fair, but it can go two ways, right? Of course, if they are looking for more time, then by December 31 the whole thing becomes redundant anyway because some boards will start negotiating, and then, you know, the province-wide thing is gone for negotiating wages anyway. So you have got to think of it that way, too, right? People might just say: well, we'll just stall, and we'll take a little more time. And then – poof – of course, that window is gone, and then we're in trouble.

Again, for the sake of negotiating the big-ticket items with the second-biggest ministry, it's very important that you have the funder at the table, right? We've learned that over time. You know, we've never managed to achieve that, but I think that for the sake of fair negotiations for the workers' side and controlling costs for the province of Alberta, everybody who lives here and the school boards, for those two main things, that's very important – don't you think? – to try to achieve.

We have some time here now. I mean, this is a legislative process that we interact in with each other.

Certainly, we've set up some other opportunities as well: the Edmonton International Airport tomorrow from 1 to 4 p.m., the Calgary Clarion Hotel on Thursday at 9 a.m., and we have the Fantasyland Hotel on Friday at 10 a.m. for further direct interaction with my department officials. So I think that will be helpful as well.

You know, it's important to not confuse what this bill is trying to do, either. Please understand that it's just the how; it's the framework that the actual negotiations, what they negotiate, will hang on. It's a way to empower appropriately all of the 61 school boards with their own independent entity, that will be a statutory corporation. They will vote for their members to represent them on the negotiating team. It's pretty good, really. If you have all 61 there, then, of course, you have the representation there, so that's probably a fair way, a practical way to go.

It's not like we haven't thought about it carefully, and it's not like I haven't consulted quite a lot as well, you know. I really feel as though we can move ahead here using this time, which is also a bit adversarial sometimes. This is an interactive process that we have set up here as well in the Legislature.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I'm afraid, hon. members, that the time has passed for 29(2)(a).

Are there other members who would like to speak to amendment R1? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today because I want to discuss further the consultation that we need to see when it comes to legislation that passes through this House. We can legitimately pass Bill 8 fairly quickly, but the question is always: should we?

Right now we've got a newly formed government, and I understand that they want to change the world within six months. It's admirable to see that they want to make change, but if they're not doing the appropriate consultation or putting the appropriate thought into the fact that we've got a whole province to run, then we end up with angry stakeholders out front holding a massive demonstration against our wonderful Legislature here.

Now, it comes down to the fact that we keep hearing about a mandate. They're voted in. They've got a mandate. I don't remember seeing this as part of their platform. I could be wrong, but I don't remember seeing that. So Albertans haven't been aware that they wanted to change the collective bargaining process, they aren't aware that they're going to change this process within two or three weeks, and they're not aware of the repercussions of this.

What we need to be looking at is the fact that this is – and this has been stated over and over again – the second-biggest ministry that we have. The second-biggest ministry. We have a total budget of $8.9 billion spent in this ministry. Now, $7.6 billion is put to operations, most of which would be salaries and wages. Is this something that we want to rush through? We've got billions of dollars – billions of dollars – going through Education, and we're pushing through without proper consultation the wonderful TEBA.

Now, I believe that in the end we're hearing from stakeholders, that the minister has consulted some, but they were bringing a lot of concerns to the minister in these meetings. When you bring a lot of concerns to meetings, sometimes you don't understand exactly what it is the government is looking for.

Bill 8 is intended to formalize the two-table bargaining model. The first table is for items negotiated by the province. We understand that because this is so large, the province wants to be able to put their thoughts into the wages, and they should because this is, again, the second-biggest ministry. The fact is that what we've got are the salaries of the teachers. Our teachers are valued. Our principals are valued. Our trustees are valued. Our superintendents are valued. Everybody in the process is valued. We all also want to put our students first.

The fact is that the second table is for our local decision-making. This is for operational, pretty much nonspending or non major spending. Now, what we need to be looking at here is co-operation. We hope to see that these two different tables co-operate with each other. How are we going to get these two tables to co-operate with each other when they don't even understand what their roles are in this? The fact is that by rolling this out so fast, we really have pushed on what we feel the new process should look like, and we're just telling them what needs to be done.

Again, we've seen this before with Bill 6. We didn't consult; we introduced. That needs to be the big part here, that this needs to go through the proper process. For such a large amount of money that we have got going through the government on this, we need to make sure that our taxpayers are protected, our stakeholders are protected, Alberta's students are protected. What we need to be looking at is making sure that we go through the proper consultations. We need to make sure it goes to committee so that it gets debated in a reasonable way. The minister has already stated that it is adversarial and that the reason this has been put in place is to make sure that we put through complete legislation and don't need to fix it for the next four years.

Now, the only consultation that preceded this bill would have been through meetings with the minister and his staff and the board members in October. However, the preliminary consultations were not framed as the basis of a development tool to build Bill 8; therefore, the bill does not reflect any consultations with the stakeholders at all. Again, what happens is that we see over and over again that our government goes out, they bring an agenda forward, and then what happens is that they decide that their agenda is what is best for Alberta and that the stakeholders don't need to be talked to at all. This pattern that we're seeing of the government leaving out stakeholders comes down to the fact that the opposition, the stakeholders have a purpose. Pushing something through fast and furiously defeats that.

Now, what we're looking at here is a bill that literally hit our laps on Thursday. The fact is that when we're looking at these bills – and they're moving through so fast – really, we need to question: is this appropriate? Is consulting after the fact appropriate? It is not consultation when it leaves out important details like the structure of the TEBA, and all issues raised centrally will not have been settled by the time this bill goes through. The implications of this bill are unknown, and more consultation needs to happen. This is something that we repeatedly keep telling the government and that they repeatedly continue to ignore.

This bill comes into effect on January 1, 2016. Fast and furious. Fast and furious. Once again the NDP are rushing legislation. We know that any appointments made to TEBA may be highly political and divisive. I would like to know who will be making these appointments. Will this association become another place where NDP government just pushes through their agenda?

We know that this type of situation could lead to, possibly, serious outcomes as government maintains that they should have a formal seat at the bargaining table as 90 per cent of education funding comes from the government. We now ask the government to slow down. Slow down. Speeding up the process, your process, will only cause concern and can be considered undemocratic, which you've heard consistently throughout the opposition.

We know that most boards will not even have the time to meet before this bill is passed, and this just isn't fair. The fact is that we're putting through a bill at a time when there are going to be holidays. It could be that maybe some of these boards don't even meet until January, until after this bill comes into effect. The school boards are asking that you please slow down. A three-minute conference call with the minister is not enough time, and it is the only time they have had since the bill has been tabled.

Wildrose is committed to consulting with our boards, which you've just heard from my colleague just in front of me here. We have written our schools, we have e-mailed our schools, and we've called our schools on the phone. Now, that's consultation. That's actually going out and hearing what they have to say. You actually are hearing letters that were written since Thursday to MLAs because they care. I can only assume that the members across are getting the same letters that we're getting. The fact is that these letters that are coming in are all saying the same thing: there was no consultation; too fast; slow down. Slow down.

This is exactly what we're seeing with the farmers. This is exactly what we're seeing with the rest of the bills that are being pushed through this House. The fact is that we're moving too fast through these. Many of these bills have billions of dollars of spending. They do not have the scrutiny they need.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the NDP government please slow down the process and hold consultations with them and then go to committee with this so that in committee we can solve a lot of the issues that are coming forward before they become issues, instead of regulating it after the fact.

In the end I'm here to ask everybody in this Assembly to please vote for this amendment. This amendment is important. It is time we start seeing some bills go to committee, which we have not been seeing other than my colleague's bill, Bill 202. Bill 202 was to promote democracy in Alberta.

An Hon. Member: Bill 202 is the local food.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. I've been corrected. Bill 204? [interjection] Thank you. Bill 203. Apparently, I need education on the names of the bills. It is hard to keep up with the bills because we are not doing the appropriate consultation that it takes to get them through the House.

In the end, Mr. Speaker, I urge and ask everybody in this House to please vote for this amendment. Thank you.

5:20

The Speaker: Any questions under 29(2)(a) for the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake?

Are there other members who would like to speak to amendment R1? The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Respectfully, on the amendment, I mean, certainly, I can appreciate many of the comments here. You know, it's very important – and I know that perhaps there's someone trying to do this. It's not going to work – right? – because I have the evidence that we did lots and lots of interaction on this bill. Don't try to presume that we didn't do consultation. If you do so, that's at your own peril. You're only as good as your credibility if you're actually speaking the truth, right? So don't go too far there.

I'm just saying that people have other reasons to say: well, just give us more time and so forth. On December 31 the whole idea of having some provincial bargaining is gone. So if you want to push it on, then that's what's going to happen as a result.

Respectfully, I don't support this amendment because I would like to get this job done and make sure that we are in fact negotiating both in good faith and to make sure that we keep a close eye on our public finances. This is a public contract. It's the first contract for public workers. That will set a precedent for all the other negotiations. It's very important that we have the wages negotiated at a table where the funder is there. Just try to think of that, okay? Please.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, were you speaking under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Eggen: That was on the amendment.

The Speaker: On the amendment.

Mr. Eggen: Yes, it was. Thank you.

The Speaker: My apologies. Any under 29(2)(a) for the Minister of Education?

Are there any other members who would like to speak to amendment R1?

Hearing none, the question is called for amendment R1, which is an amendment to Bill 8, Public Education Collective Bargaining Act.

[Motion on amendment R1 lost]

The Speaker: We are now back to debate on the main motion.

Are you speaking to the main motion now? Is that correct?

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would request unanimous consent from the House for one-minute bells for the remainder of the evening.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Is there anyone else who would like to speak to the main motion?

Hearing none, bringing closure, the hon. Minister of Education. Is that correct?

Mr. Eggen: Yes. That's right, Mr. Speaker. I mean, this has been a very interesting process, certainly. Everyone should just take a step back and see it for what it is. We have a bill before us that we are debating, and we have a bill before us that has certain things that we all need to learn about, okay? Those are very important aspects of the legislative process that we're passing through here in second reading. Everyone can be edified on this and learn more about it, and over the next while we will have a chance to decide whether or not you think it's something that you can vote on or not. That's the way it works.

Certainly, just to try to summarize some of the concerns and things that people have spoken about in second reading here, first of all, in regard to the consultations that did take place in July and August and September and October, all 61 school boards were consulted as well as the Alberta Teachers' Association, the Alberta School Boards Association, the Association of School Business Officials of Alberta, the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta, and the College of Alberta School Superintendents, in September and October of this year. Then, of course, as I said, I went and visited all of the 61 school boards as another layer of consultation.

Now, with my department – and I'll table this tomorrow, Mr. Speaker – this was the agenda that we used for those department consultations. Discussion item 1 was province-wide two-tiered bargaining; discussion item 2, establishing employer bargaining associations; discussion item 3, level of government involvement and employer representation, which would be the school boards; item 4, dispute resolution process; and item 5, general discussion. I know that people perhaps are not seeing exactly the outcome that they might have wanted, but certainly this was the process that we did follow in complete good faith, quite exhaustive as well, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker.

In addition to that, over the next three days we do have the Edmonton International Airport Holiday Inn tomorrow between 1 and 4 p.m., the Calgary Clarion Hotel and Conference Centre on Thursday from 9 a.m., and then the Fantasyland Hotel on Friday at 10 a.m. Certainly, people can either be phoning in or they can actually attend these further consultations as they wish. I invite all MLAs to come to be part of that as well. It could be quite an edifying experience as well.

Again, I can't emphasize enough how important it is for everyone to understand where we're at with those consultations over these last six months and then moving to December 31, which is the deadline by which a number of school boards can start their own local bargaining process. So even if you thought, "Hey, maybe I could go for this table way of negotiating wages," that window could easily close by January 1 because people start negotiating. This is a pattern. I'm just basing this on a historical pattern over the last 15 or 20 years where certain individual local school boards would jump the gun and start the process and then create that whipsaw effect, Mr. Speaker, that I described before, where perhaps they think, "Oh, we'll go for a big contract because we want to keep our teachers happy," and then we end up with something that we can't afford.

Mr. Speaker, at the crossroads of this very important legislation is for us to make sure that we have a fair bargaining process for teachers but also that we are taking direct responsibility for the scarce public funds that we have available to us as a government. We all know what the circumstances are. We debate it every day. We, you know, indulge in hyperbole about it and so forth, but the reality is the reality. It's that the wages of our public service, not just teachers but the whole public service, are a very considerable part of our overall budget. The funder needs to be at the table to execute a proper negotiation of these things in a reasonable manner. If we're not there, we've seen a long history where negotiations have gone south or sideways and we end up paying a whole awful lot more than we can afford. We've never been in a circumstance where we have to be considering this in a very, very serious and sober manner.

Just be reminded. Don't get lost in, you know, the weeds of talking about consultation and trying to tie it to other things and no consultation and so forth and so on. The stakes behind this one in regard to collective bargaining with two tables are very, very high in regard to the future of funding and solvency of how we conduct this government. So please, everyone, consider that in the best way possible but in the most sober way possible as well if you can.

Certainly, in the many interactions that I have with school boards – and I will continue to do so, Mr. Speaker – and with the teachers and the public in general, too, I'm always looking for a way to find collaboration and to find consensus. Never has it been more important than with this particular piece of legislation – right? – because it's involving a lot of money, not just teachers' wages but, as I say, a precedent for the public service in general. So let's all remember that, please.

Also, it's important to read the bill and, if you need any further explanation, to get further technical briefing and/or explanations from myself, from my ministry staff, and so forth to see exactly what this is. This is, Mr. Speaker, a mechanism for how we conduct ourselves through bargaining. It's not what we are bargaining. If you can get that distinction through – it took me a while to figure that out, too, quite frankly, but once I got it, we know that we use fair, equitable processes of collective bargaining every step along the way to, one, establish the teachers' employer board association as a statutory corporation that has a representative assembly from all the school boards; 61 school boards vote for who goes on that board association. We will be at the table as well in the TEBA so that we have the funder there directly negotiating whatever comes to that table. Now, what is decided to go to that table, again, is decided and negotiated between the Teachers' Association now and then the employer board, which is the school boards and ourselves. Again, we use proper negotiating, which could involve arbitration, as to what goes to the main table for wages and what goes to the local table.

I know that school boards – and I sympathize because this has been a long process since 1993, I think, or before, when they lost their powers for taxation, right? But this is a way to make sure that further erosion of school board power along the way is at least stopped somehow because then you have the table that you can negotiate local conditions. That could be quite substantial. I mean, please don't think that this is just going to somehow bring all the wages up to one place. You have different wage levels at different places around the province with each of the school boards. I mean, that doesn't change. Things move up and down, but the regional variation doesn't change.

Also, there are many substantial things that can be negotiated that are inherently local in nature: northern living allowances, certain accommodation for substitute teaching in different places, other individual conditions that can be quite substantial and involve the local school board as well. The Alberta School Boards Association helps local boards along the way to engage in those negotiations, and that's very important as well. Certainly, we're not excluding. We are trying to make it clear how this process takes place and trying to make sure that we have fair negotiations and we keep a close eye on the public purse, Mr. Speaker, because that is a very important job that I cannot compromise.

So based on that, Mr. Speaker, I hope that people might consider this bill and help to support it. You will all feel better for it as well. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a second time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've had a good debate, made good progress, and I believe that we should adjourn until 7:30 tonight. Thank you.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 6

Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act

[Adjourned debate November 25: Ms Sigurdson]

The Speaker: Is there a member who would speak at second reading? The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This has been an interesting week. I have had the privilege of being able to speak with many, many people in not only my constituency but many people from constituencies all across Alberta. I've had the privilege of being able to look into the eyes and get a sense of the concern that farmers and ranchers have over this bill. It's overwhelming when you think about the outpouring of concern and the actual outpouring of solidarity that we've seen for our farmers and ranching brothers and sisters, and it's heartwarming to know that Albertans still know where the foundation and the bedrock of this province is. I count myself blessed and lucky to be able to associate with them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is a bill whose intention was farm safety. I want to first of all say that I want to thank the NDP for trying to make farms and therefore Albertans safer. I applaud their efforts. Everyone wants to be able to do their job in the safest manner possible, and farmers are no different. No one wants to put themselves in danger or put others in a position that could endanger another life. Luckily, we have a great province, that we live in, and our farmers rank per capita just as safe as in other provinces.

In fact, British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Alberta all have a fatality rate ranging from .09 per cent to .13 per cent, with Alberta being the lowest – the lowest – of these three provinces. This is something the NDP forgot to say in their press release. If we take a look across Canada, the highest fatality rate is seen in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces, with a total of .17 per cent, almost twice as high as Alberta's. It's important to note that Quebec has had OHS regulations on the farm since 1979. This would bring into question whether a government-led safety initiative will indeed help our farmers more than a farmer- and rancher-led initiative.

Now, I do not want to present these statistics to minimize the loss of life in any way or to reduce these lives to mere numbers because that's not what it's about. Every person deserves safety. I agree. However, it is extremely important, Mr. Speaker, to remind this House how proud farmers are of being among the safest in the country, and that's something that needs to be said. Albertans do their very best to ensure that their lives and the lives of their families and employees are kept as safe as possible. Albertan farmers have done very well in a challenging and difficult occupation. Make no mistake. Farmers and ranchers know that, but they go into it with their eyes open, knowing that because they love it, they will continue doing it, and they instill this in their children.

I know that farm safety is important on family farms because, truthfully, no one cares more about the safety of their families than the moms and dads who run them. This is something that I understand as a father and that I think everybody in here, as a father or a mother, would understand. There's nobody – nobody – in the world that cares more about the safety of their children than the moms and dads. That again has to be said. I heard that quite a bit over the last couple of weeks. Parents and grandparents will do everything possible to ensure that their children are kept as safe as possible, and every day across this province there are thousands of families doing a fantastic job of raising their own children safely on farms and ranches while instilling in them the values and virtues that have carried farming as an industry and way of life for generations and generations.

Now, I had the privilege of living on a farm for two years when I was growing up. It wasn't a large farming operation, but I understood the value of work. This is where I learned how to work and the value of a work ethic. When I got older, I got into business. I got into a construction company, and I found out that there actually is a difference between someone who has grown up on the farm and someone who hasn't. I found that they were some of the hardest workers that I ever was able to have the privilege of working with, and there's something to that. If we want to stop that, if we want to curtail farming parents' and ranching parents' ability to instill this kind of work ethic in their children, I think it is shameful, Mr. Speaker, absolutely shameful.

I got to the point where I would ask one question in interviews: where did you grow up? If they told me they grew up on a farm, I would stop the interview and say: you're hired. That goes to show how very much we appreciate the work ethics that our farming and ranching moms and dads are instilling in their children. We do not want to let that go.

On the other side of the coin, the government, while perhaps well intentioned, may not be accomplishing their goals in the best interests of families when creating this legislation even though it may look good to them on paper. This is why consultation is so critical. To make sure we get things right before we implement this legislation, we need to consult with farmers and ranchers. These are the professionals; these are the people who have generations of best practices. They've been taught the best practices, passed down from generation to generation. I'm not aware of a single farming parent who would dispute the need for safety for their children, neighbours, or employees, yet I am flooded with parents, who happen to be farmers, who are telling me to do everything I can to ensure that this legislation will not hurt their family farms and their family's way of life.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my job as an MLA and as the representative for my riding is to listen to what my constituents want me to do and to take those concerns with me to this House. This is the same job description for every single member in this House. I would like to point out that for the 13 others on the opposite side of the House who have farm families represented in their area, I think it's extremely important that you pay attention to this. These are some of the numbers in the ridings that represent the farming and ranching areas of the province: for the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, 1,955 families represented there; for the Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, 1,528 farm families represented in there; for the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, 1,430 families. There are 13 of these ridings that I could name, but I won't because there's lots more that I want to say, and the reason that I don't want to say the numbers is because that doesn't really show the face of who I'm talking about.

One of the dangers, I guess, of passing legislation so far away from the trenches is that they don't get to see the faces of those people who are working in the trenches every day. It's very easy, I believe, to say that this is a great project, that this is great legislation, that it'll work. Yet we have heard over and over again – and I won't be tabling these today – the petitions. The names that I have are coming in daily. I get this every day. This shows the resolve of farmers. In reality, Mr. Speaker, if farmers were for this, I wouldn't have thousands of names. It just would not happen. Yet this is an indication of where we are on this legislation and the resolve that farmers have.

My job is not to blindly follow ideology. My job is to do what is best for my riding and for the families living there. The other day I had the opportunity of being able to put together a town hall meeting. In 24 hours we were able to send out information via Facebook and social media. Within 24 hours, Mr. Speaker, we had – we thought we were going to get maybe 20 to 30 people – 184 people jam-pack the house that we were in.

I had an opportunity of being able to look into the eyes and to hear the stories of the people who will be affected by this legislation. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I learned something that I haven't seen before, and that is that you can go after someone's livelihood, but when you go after someone's lifestyle, that's when it becomes personal for them. This is a lifestyle for farmers and ranchers and the children that grow up on these farms and ranches. They want to stay. They love it. This is something they love to do. This isn't about just livelihood; this is about lifestyle. When you go after the lifestyle, I think that you've tackled something that I believe will come back to bite you.

Right now my job is to tell the members opposite that this farm legislation is not something that families in my riding want. The message was fairly clear the other day, I thought. The message, if they haven't heard it, was: kill Bill 6.

Mr. Speaker, when you came into this Chamber the other day, I made sure that I came in that door so that when you were coming in this door, our times would be the same so that the members here that didn't go out and talk to the people and look in their eyes, like I did, would have an opportunity to be able to hear them chant their resolve. Their resolve was crystal clear: kill Bill 6. Kill Bill 6.

Now, British Columbia and Saskatchewan, our neighbours on both sides, have exemptions for family farms and legislation that acknowledges the unique differences between various agricultural operations. They understand the difference and have been able to clearly demark the difference between a commercial operation and a family farm. The reason why they've done that is because they understand that there is a difference, that the magnitude, the economies of scale are different, and because of that, you cannot apply a solution for a commercial operation to a small family farm. It just doesn't work.

We hear this quite a bit from people: agriculture has been a vitally important part of this province's history and economy from our beginning and even earlier. Safety is a laudable goal, but let's consult with the tens of thousands of experts in the field whose families have farmed and ranched for generations. We need to give them that dignity, show them that we believe in them, not legislate them out of an industry. Believe that these farmers have the best interests of their families and their children, and do not legislate them out of this industry. This is not fair to them. This is not something that they want, yet we keep on hearing the government say that this is what they want. Fifty-four members of this House believe they know more than the thousands of people whose names dot the pages of these petitions. I am here to tell you that they don't know. The guys in the trenches do know, and we need to start listening to them. I invite the members opposite to listen to them.

If there are concerns, it certainly cannot hurt to get them straight from the source. Why is the NDP omitting something that both B.C. and Saskatchewan include in their legislation? Why is the NDP omitting something that every family-operated and -run farm in Alberta is begging for? Why is the NDP not listening to what the people want and not knowing the best practices of other provinces? Why is the NDP not doing the job they were elected to do, which is to listen to the constituents and follow their advice? Mr. Speaker, it is amazing to me to think that not one person in this government, that has put this legislation forward, is a farmer, yet they're trying to tell farmers how to do it better. The hypocrisy of it is incredible.

I'm not sure what members across the aisle, particularly those who represent some of Alberta's largest farming regions, have been hearing from their constituents. It'd be interesting to hear them get up and chat today about some of the letters that they've been receiving. I doubt that our ridings are the only ones that are receiving these letters. Mr. Speaker, I think that it's important for us to get clear disclosure from the members on the opposite side about the letters that they're receiving. I think that would be illuminating.

In any case, I would like to tell you what they have been saying to me. Now, this is a letter, Mr. Speaker, that I don't plan on tabling today. Again, these are letters; these aren't just petitions. These are actually letters from concerned constituents. I'd like to just read you a portion of this because I thought this was touching. Again, to talk about the numbers does not give this justice. It does not serve the people. We want to be able to put a face to this because if you're not willing to look into the eyes of the people who you're going to be affecting, then I want to be able to bring their faces to you today.

Mr. Speaker, if you'll indulge me, this is from a lady by the name of Kayleen Neilson. It says:

Dear Sir,

Please fight for the amendment or end of Bill 6! I was raised on a ranch, and my husband and I are raising our children on a ranch. It is a way of life; much more than just a job, and unless you have experienced it personally, you really cannot have any idea of what that means. But I will try to enlighten you. It means that you often start your day at the crack of dawn, work hard all day with (hopefully) a quick lunch break, a quick supper, and eventually heading in to exhausted but proud sleep after dark.

And I'd like to punctuate that. Mr. Speaker, these individuals, these farmers and ranchers, are proud of what they do. They love to do it. Again, we need to make sure that we know the faces of these people. They love to do what they do.

And then starting over the following day. It means that you glance at the thermometer on your way out the door, but the fact that it says -30 C or +30 C makes no difference in your plan to work the day, except perhaps in how you dress. It means that you work one or two or three extra jobs away from the place, so that you can feed your family but still keep the agricultural upbringing. It means that you make do with whatever you have to get by (old machinery, tools from your grandfather's time, boots with worn out soles...). It means you rely heavily on friends, family, and neighbors for help – you help them, they help you. A simple, but effective arrangement.

I love the way they put that: a simple but effective arrangement. There's no contract. There are no lawyers involved. There's a simple handshake. This is the sort of thing that made our province great. In fact, this is what made our country great.

Mr. Speaker, I have had the privilege, the great privilege, of travelling many parts of this world. I can tell you that in the places I've gone, when they describe Canada or Alberta to me, they say that the one thing they love most about us here is that we are honest with each other, that when we say we're going to do something, we do it. That kind of work ethic, that kind of honesty in business relationships is not easy to find in the world. People come here just for that. They love that. This is something that I think we forget about.

It means you rely heavily on friends, family, and neighbors for help – you help them, they help you. A simple, but effective arrangement. It means that you put up with poor cattle/grain prices, restrictive laws and rules. . . .

Let me punctuate that one: restrictive laws and rules.

. . . poor weather, bad luck, big vet and gas bills, a ridiculous amount of operation debt, etc.! . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you.

By the way, a reminder to everyone to make sure that we don't have our phones on.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As someone that was born and raised on a dairy farm my whole life and then managed the farm for 35 years after that – on the dairy we had usually at least five employees or more but the odd time fewer – I understand it. I get it. Safety is number one. It always was. You know, in all those years we had one incident on the farm. I think the guy was from a city down east, and he smashed his finger. He put his finger where he shouldn't have. I had my six-year-old son work there forever and never have one injury, but he learned as a young kid what to do and what not to do. Age doesn't mean anything; it's experience and the way of life.

Mr. Speaker, I don't take this lightly, though. As I said, safety is number one, and everybody, all farmers on all farms, supports safety and improvements that we can do to make farms safer. You know, it's not about legislation. Legislation isn't going to make any farm safer. I don't think that legislation will save one life. It's about outcomes and how you can make the farms safer. Legislation won't do it. I mean, the previous speaker quoted some great statistics. Around the country, obviously, this legislation hasn't necessarily made other provinces any safer. In fact, Alberta's numbers stand up very well without legislation.

So I think that, rather than legislation, education is the best way to make farms safer. You know, whether it's ag societies or 4-H clubs, we can help by putting that there. The government has given money to ag societies, and they wouldn't get grants unless they could prove that they had done work on farm safety and education around the country. But even all the education will never guarantee a hundred per cent that nobody is ever going to be hurt on a farm. That's just what happens when you work out in an environment with unknowns.

Mr. Speaker, I don't think that any farms, not many people anyway, would argue against OH and S as far as coming out, if there was a serious incident on a farm or, God forbid, a fatality, to do an investigation and try and determine what went wrong and what happened so that people can learn from it and maybe prevent it from happening in the future. That piece of OH and S isn't bad, and I don't think anybody would disagree with that.

You know, I think that our government had talked about it for quite a few years. Everybody said, "Yeah, you talked and you talked and never did anything," but that's because we were listening to the farmers. We would be brought legislation like this, and we would say, "No, that's too far; that's too much," and take it back. I think that we were getting close to bringing stuff forward, but we'd been consulting with industry for years, whether it was the Cattle Feeders' Association or different associations that actually run the feedlots, and had input. We'd been taking that input, and, yeah, maybe we should have done something sooner, but we were taking our time to get it right and consulting with everybody in the industry.

You know, it's been said before as well that one size doesn't fit all. I mean, I think everybody wants protection for farm workers. That's paramount in the big feedlots and in big industry, where there are lots of employees. There should be a safety net or an insurance program to cover the family or the person if something happens, but that doesn't necessarily mean WCB.

On our farm we had our own private insurance plan, Mr. Speaker, and then we had WCB because we did some off-farm work for a while. We were forced to have WCB to work in the oil patch, so we got it, but I can tell you that it was so much trouble and so much hassle and so expensive that when I quit working in the oil patch off the farm, we cancelled WCB and went back to private insurance.

When I did have the one casualty on the farm, where the guy got his finger smashed, we didn't have WCB; we had private insurance. But we didn't even use that. I took the young fellow to the hospital, we covered all his bills, I brought him home, and I bought him an airplane ticket to go back and visit his family in Ontario. We paid his wages a hundred per cent at the time, and we covered all of his costs. Within a week he was back on the farm, saying: "I don't like it in the city. I want to be here. I can't stand sitting around doing nothing." So he would start poking around the barn and doing light duty because he had his hand bandaged up. We paid him the whole time, and it wasn't long before he was back on full duty. I mean, his finger is a little gimpy, but it's still there, and it still kind of worked. WCB would have been – you know, he would have been back to work before the forms got filled out and he actually got a cheque from WCB, and he'd have suffered for a while without any kind of income. So WCB isn't the answer to everything.

I do know that that's not fair. I know that WCB has come a long way in the last few years, and it's a lot better than it used to be. When I first was elected to the House as an MLA, those first few years, most of the complaints to my office – all my girls did was handle WCB complaints. It wasn't a good program, obviously, but I'll give them credit that in the last few years the complaints are down, so they must be doing a better job. That's usually how you gauge how good something is doing. If you don't get any complaints, it must be all right. But as we see this week, when people complain or are upset about things, then something must not be right in the mix there.

Like I said, with OH and S and some insurance it doesn't have to be WCB, but you could make it mandatory, that anybody with farm workers has to have some kind of a level of insurance coverage. It could be specified.

You know, I think there are some good things that can come out of this, but as has been said before, it just went way too far too fast, without proper consultation with industry. We've seen that. Now my office is jammed with e-mails and phone calls, and we saw the steps of the Legislature yesterday. Obviously, this isn't what the farm community wants, and it must not be right for them even though people sitting in this House think they know what's right for the farm community. They don't know what's right for them. I don't agree with that, Mr. Speaker. Something has gone sideways here.

I think the legislation could be broken down into four parts. You know, there's too much in there. There's the Employment Standards Code, the Labour Relations Code, the OH and S Act, and the WCB regulation. It's almost like an omnibus bill, with too many things kind of jammed in there all at once. I think that if we started out slower and consulted more and eased into this, it could be the right thing to do for Alberta farms.

I know there was stuff said about – and I'm not here to blame ministers or bureaucrats or anything, but I did go to the original briefing on this bill, Mr. Speaker. I think I was the only MLA. No, actually, I'm wrong. Dr. Swann was there. I got the information and the papers, and it says right in there that the legislation would apply to your farm members. Down further, under number 3, it says that OH and S would apply only when children are helping out on the commercial operation of a farm. That's when kids are working on the farm. It basically says that. It was there in writing in the detailed briefing when this bill was presented, so to say that it was the bureaucrats misrepresenting it, or whoever was misrepresenting it – I'm sure the minister had seen this briefing material before it was out there and knows what it said. I did notice that it's been taken down off the website now, so there must be something there that wasn't quite right.

I know there's going to be lots said over the next few days and into the night here, and it's going to be repeated, and I'm not going to repeat myself too many times. You know, the member before me did a really good job on comparing some stats across the country. I think one serious incident or fatality – even one – is too many. We can't say that we're good and we're happy with the numbers, but we'll do the best we can. I don't know if this legislation is going to save anybody on the farms, Mr. Speaker. I think common sense, education, consultation, and everybody working together is the way to get this job done.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

House leader of the opposition, do you have a question under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Cooper: Yes, on 29(2)(a).

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wondered if the hon. member might just briefly comment. He's been in this Assembly for quite some time, and I'm just curious to know if there has been a time when he has been present where he's seen such a level of engagement on a bill, perhaps in terms of total amount of people coming to the Legislature to express some of their opinions and engage in the process.

Mr. Drysdale: Well, obviously, Mr. Speaker, what's been happening yesterday and in the last few days, I wouldn't say that it's unprecedented, but since I've been here, that's probably the biggest crowd I've seen out there. Whether it's good or bad, I don't know. I wasn't able to go back to my constituency last week because we had a committee meeting on Friday, so I didn't get there. But I can tell you that this weekend, when I go back home, there's a gathering in a local community hall that will be filled with farmers. I don't think I'll have a very enjoyable evening, but I'll be able to talk to lots of friends and neighbours, and I'll tell you what: it's going to be the buzz of the night. There won't be a whole lot of laughter and fun at the community Christmas gathering. There will be some pretty upset people, and I'm going to try and explain to them what's going on.

The Speaker: Any other questions to the member under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You mentioned about this legislation or this bill being taken off the website. What did that normally mean when you were in government? Can you go a little further with that?

The Speaker: Sorry, hon. member. I'm having difficulty hearing you. I couldn't hear you.

Mr. Cyr: I'm sorry. I'll repeat the question. How about I actually face the Speaker. Sorry about that, Mr. Speaker.

What does it usually mean when you take down a bill or information off the website? Does that usually mean that something is wrong, and has it happened in your experience in government before?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to speculate on what's going on. Everybody knows that there are amendments coming to this bill. I mean, it's been in the media. We haven't seen them yet, so we're trying to guess what they are. Obviously, they've had second thoughts over there, and they're going to amend things. Maybe they want to take down information that was up there because the amendments might contradict that.

From what I gather was said at the meetings – there was a meeting in Grande Prairie. Of course, we were in the House debating the bill, so I couldn't go there, but I heard lots about it. There was a lot of information given out then that contradicts what's in this stuff, and I heard today that in Red Deer what the minister was saying was contradictory to what was in print. Maybe that's why they took it down off the website as well.

I'm looking forward to the amendments coming forward. Like I said, we do need to do stuff to make things safer on the farm, so maybe we can try and make this bill better. I'll be waiting to see what it is. Obviously, it's changing from what they had up there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti if he could expand a little bit more on that omnibus bill that he was talking about, and why he thinks it's a bad idea to have this omnibus bill.

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said, there are different parts to this bill. Omnibus means, you know, there's a whole bunch of stuff wrapped up into one bill, and some of it gets lost in there, the employment standards, and when the bill passes, they won't have the regulations and all of the details. Even with what we've seen there, they may change it. There was nothing specific indicating what age limit they've decided for kids. I've heard 12, and I've heard eight.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hadn't anticipated speaking this early in the debate. But I will happily take the opportunity, certainly, to speak on a topic that has, I would say, in the rather short time that I've been here, rivalled any in terms of the level of engagement from my constituents and not just from my constituents but from Albertans all around the province.

Mr. Speaker, as I've probably bored the Assembly enough with – as you know, I'm a large-animal veterinarian – I was in mixed practice in Lloydminster for close to 30 years. But perhaps what people don't know is that I was actually born and raised in Edmonton. I'm a city kid.

I was exposed to farm life as a child. My uncle and aunt and my seven cousins farmed between Sangudo and Barrhead, in the Gardenview district between the Paddle and Pembina rivers. We would go out there on Sundays usually. It all depended on whether or not it was a day that my father, who was a butcher, was doing farm butchering, an open-air abattoir out on the farm. Perhaps that's where I got my initial interest in anatomy. I can't actually speculate. But I will tell you that it was interesting.

Some years later, as a teenager I worked on a small farm near Ardrossan, and that was when I first got the taste of working with animals that were large animals. Prior to that, I had actually planned on going only into small animal practice, but my employer at that time teased me. He said: you don't want to be a poodle mechanic; you want to be a real veterinarian that looks after real animals. I had my first exposure to horses. Prior to that, I was actually quite frightened of horses, but as a 14-year-old I had a lot of experience working with horses. I found that I really enjoyed them and that I also enjoyed cattle. I think that's where I was first exposed to cattle. I did some work with cows for those two summers.

Then some years later, after two years of agriculture here at the University of Alberta, I went to the University of Saskatchewan to do my four years of study in veterinary practice, graduating in 1983. I will tell you that it was during the time I was at school, when I was exposed to the opportunity to work with large animals and work with farmers, that I became enamoured with mixed practice, as we call it, multispecies veterinary practice, that and all of the James Herriot books, which I thought were really, really cool.

In 1983 I moved to Lloydminster, but I was still very much a city kid. I'd worked for a couple of summers in veterinary practices. One summer I worked in the city of Camrose, and that was where I had my first exposure to the dedication of farmers that have animals. It was fascinating. It was a real watershed moment in my life. That was when I realized that the clock doesn't matter. The calendar doesn't matter. Whether it's your birthday or your anniversary or the weekend doesn't matter. Your work is dictated by the animals you care for.

That was a philosophy that I adopted early on in veterinary practice and had throughout my veterinary practice. Animals have a very poor concept of clock or calendar. I will tell you that right now. The number of times that I was called away on calls, especially on, you know, the birthdays of my sons or on my anniversary or at other times, was just something that happened. What I learned, though, is that farmers put the needs of their animals ahead of their own. They put the needs also ahead of their own not just in the case of animals but of the crops that they tend, the land that they are the stewards of.

I learned some very profound lessons as a young veterinarian. I started practising when I was 22. As a young veterinarian I gained a lot of experience. I would even say, especially in those first five or 10 years of practice, that I learned a lot more from my clients than they learned from me. One of the lessons that I remember, that one of my clients, who's now passed on, told me, is when he said: son, one thing that we learn is that if we look after our cows, our cows will look after us. You know, that was a lesson. He said: we look after our cows, and our cows look after us.

That was, I think, at the same time that I had unfortunately suffered the first death of a patient. Well, I felt terrible. I felt terrible about it. It wasn't really my fault, but it was just one of those things that happens. And this same client put his arm around my shoulder, and he said: son, if you're going to have livestock, you're going to have dead stock. It was one of those lessons. It's simple, very clearly said, a lesson that I'll never forget.

So I say all these things, Mr. Speaker, because the appreciation for what farming is all about is one that can only be gained over time. I would actually say that probably until I had practised for five to 10 years, until I had been married to my wife, who's a farm-raised girl, for five to 10 years, it was only then that I think I really gained an appreciation for the level of dedication that farmers have to their work and their lifestyle.

Working with kids in 4-H clubs was absolutely a joy for me. One of the things they had me do quite often was judge public-speaking competitions, which I really quite enjoyed. I worked with the students, and we talked a lot about different means and the things that they learned by directly doing them, by putting the trust and the confidence in these young people. That is why, I would suggest to you, there is so much concern over this legislation, especially from the 4-H community, because 4-H is one of those institutions in Alberta that is so highly prized. I can remember going out to my cousins' place when I was a youngster and seeing their trophy cases filled with 4-H trophies and being jealous because the only trophies I had at home were for my prowess as an accordion player, and that was just kind of geeky by comparison. Mr. Speaker, it was something, you know, where you gained this appreciation for the 4-H movement.

Over time, I want to say, I have gained an appreciation for farmers, for the farming way of life, for the fact that, really, farmers were a big part of the reason why our business, our veterinary practice, was successful, why it remains successful to this day. The whole concept of, "You look after your cows, and your cows will look after you," we extended and essentially just changed one word. I said to all of my colleagues: if we look after our clients, our clients will look after us.

Now, in the course of this debate we've heard quite often that Alberta is the only province that doesn't currently have farm safety legislation. You know, I sometimes worry about that justification. Alberta is also the only province that doesn't have a sales tax. One would hope that the fact that we're an outlier on the sales tax front doesn't stimulate this government to saying: "Well, gee. We've got to come into line with all the other provinces."

The one thing that I will say, Mr. Speaker – and it's a thing that I think we can agree on – is that one of the aspects of this debate that really bothers me is that the impetus behind a lot of this debate over the last 10 years was due to a specific fatality where the farm worker in question was not readily compensated, his family was not readily covered for the injuries, in this case the fatality, and it's been mentioned that sometimes that involves taking legal action. I think that there is broad agreement amongst all parties that employed farm workers on large commercial and corporate operations should have some sort of financial safety net to look after them and to look after their families in the event of an injury or death. I think that's something that we could get agreement on and probably move forward on.

There's a second area that I think we have broad agreement on, and that is that currently we do not have a mechanism within this province for doing adequate reporting of farm incidents, accidents, and fatalities. There isn't a way to go in and do a proper investigation as to how and what could be improved to prevent that from happening down the road. Most farmers I talk to, even those that are vehemently opposed to Bill 6, say that that makes sense to them, that it makes sense that that is a provision that should be there.

Mr. Speaker, I think there are areas that we could move forward on, that there are broad areas of agreement, and I would prefer, rather than trying to – and I'm going to use a football analogy; we just had the Grey Cup. Rather than throwing the long bomb and trying to score a touchdown right off on day one, we would be better off running the ball up the middle and making some short passes and making a few first downs and moving the ball down the field gradually, making the progress we can make and that we can all agree on.

You know, this was the approach that was taken in some of the other provinces as they introduced farm legislation. What you have in that scenario is that you have the introduction of something to a group of people who are fiercely proud of their way of life. If you cannot sense that from the letters you've been getting, the calls you've been getting, the demonstrations on the front steps – if you can't sense that, then I'm sorry; you're political antennae need adjusting. Okay? You need to have a real adjustment as far as where things stand, what you're hearing from constituents.

Let's be very clear as we have this discussion. Farmers are not against the concept of farm safety. It's been said before and it will be said again that they are absolutely committed to keeping themselves, keeping their children, and keeping those that work for them as safe as possible. To suggest otherwise, quite frankly, is insulting to farmers. I have heard that, and I've heard that from a number of people, and I find that that just lowers the quality of debate, so let's flush that away right away. Let's at least agree that farmers aren't careless about safety issues. You know, that very suggestion really bothers me.

When we move ahead with this, I think one of the things that we really should do is move forward on those parts that can be agreed on. There are some that can be agreed upon. I'm not sure that we can adequately change the current legislation because the problem with the current legislation – it's such a short piece of legislation. It's enabling legislation to remove the exemption from four separate pieces of legislation, codes, and regulations. It removes right now that exemption and throws the farming industry wide open to every single regulation, every single stipulation within those four acts, regulations, and codes. If you wonder why farmers have been concerned and are now being accused of misinterpreting the legislation, it's because the information they have been given has not been adequate so they know exactly how this legislation will affect their farm. That is a failure of communication, Mr. Speaker, that has plagued the government in this particular initiative.

The whole way the government has gone about this particular piece of legislation is seriously, seriously flawed. The consultation process has already been talked about as to just how bad it is. There's no question that the consultation process has some very significant problems. There were 500 people in Red Deer today. Most of the other meetings were full. Now the halls have been expanded. That's a good thing that they are, but a number of those sessions are already full. I'm hosting a town hall session in Vermilion this Saturday. I know that 325 people can go into the seniors' centre, and there are concerns that there won't be enough space for the number of people that are coming. People care, and they care deeply about this.

For this consultation process to be happening essentially after the legislation is passing, that pattern by itself does not engender trust. Legislating first and then consulting after the fact: that just simply does not engender trust. I will tell you that in any relationship, whether it's a personal relationship, a business relationship, or a political relationship, once trust is broken, it is very, very difficult to rebuild. If trust is broken – it only takes one thing that breaks trust – it then takes months, years of consistent trustworthy behaviour, behaviour that is undertaken with integrity to rebuild that trust. Anybody who has been through a situation where the trust has been broken within a relationship – business, personal, political, whatever type of relationship – will know that this is true.

So the trust has been broken, and it now is left to the government to rebuild it. I would suggest with respect to the government that if you want to rebuild the trust with farmers, the best way to do it is going to be to pause this process and indicate that you will actually, meaningfully, respectfully listen to people, and while you're at it, it might not hurt to admit that you didn't do a really great job from the outset.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions for the member under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I found it very reminiscent, I guess, some of the sage comments that the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster talked about. One of them was the sage saying about the cattle. I remember another old saying regarding the tail of a cow and the economy. I was wondering if that member could recount that for the Legislature this evening.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to confess that my knowledge of western idioms is nowhere near what the knowledge of the Member for Drumheller-Stettler is, but I will tell you that there are a number of things that are of concern to me. I wanted to go back, if I might, for just a second to the whole flawed consultation process and not just consultation. We've heard repeatedly that this legislation will pass and that a lot of things will be worked out in regulation. That's a way of doing business that has come under some very heavy criticism in the past in this very House.

In fact, the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, when he was in opposition, on December 10, 2014, stated:

What we were looking for is to defer this bill into the spring to ensure that it includes everything that it should to maximize protection for condo owners and consumers. Many issues, Mr. Speaker, that should be dealt with in this legislation as far as what impacts condominium owners on a day-to-day basis aren't being dealt with in the legislation, and this was probably one of our largest concerns. They're being left to regulations.

Well, Mr. Speaker, you can take out the words "condo owners" and put in "farmers" and you've got a perfect substitution. That was from the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, and there are many, many other examples that we will bring forward in debate where the whole process of legislating first and allowing things to be left up to regulations, regulations that are developed and passed behind closed doors, not in the light of day, is not the level of transparency that this government ran on. That's what they promised. They promised that they would do things differently. In point of fact, they are doing things exactly the way our government did, and I would say that it is a very good way for all of you folks – well, what's left of you, at least – to occupy these chairs over here in three and a half years.

I'd like to close by just quoting from an e-mail that I received from a client. He states:

Going forward, I expect that we, like many others will simply take the chance that an inspector is not going to pop by, or that they will get lost on the way out to our farm. We may simply resort to processing calves on long weekends or evenings when the OH&S office is closed. I will be very surprised if we limit our children's eagerness to help and work alongside us or resolve to quit helping our neighbours. In essence actions speak louder than words, thus rendering the legislation a moot point. I can't speak for other friends and neighbours, but I suspect the vast majority of us will be knowingly contravening the law of the land. I would suggest that in a democracy this is a sign of poorly thought out legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I can't add much to that.

I urge this government: press the pause button. You know how it's done. Press the pause button, and let's not push this bill through with such haste.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Nixon: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Just real quick for the member. I know that the member is not in his first term in this Assembly, and many members are, of course. Maybe if you could elaborate a little bit on how big a reaction this is compared to normal. Lots of members won't have anything to compare that to in the short time they've been in the Legislature. Maybe you have some advice for some of the rural backbencher MLAs in the government.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I realize that time is very limited. It is by far the largest of any issue that I've dealt with, and that includes some very controversial issues that came up in the last Legislature.

I'm not going to presume to offer advice to the government members, whether they are in cabinet or private members. They will no doubt receive advice from their House leader and from their whip and from the Premier as far as how they should vote. Certainly, that advice has been very closely followed thus far, based on the voting record.

I would suggest, though, that as far as the overall size or the volume of letters, e-mails, that sort of thing, by far – by far – this is the largest issue that I've dealt with in the roughly three and a half years that I've been an elected member.

The Speaker: Any other questions under 29(2)(a)?

To the motion itself, the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's somewhat reminiscent of some of the things that we've done in this Legislature to stand and to speak to some of the legislation that's before us. In this case it's very near and dear to my heart as a lifetime agriculturalist, I might say, agrarian involved in the agrarian community for my lifetime. Actually, in the early years of my career, just out of school in 1972 I made a decision whether I would be working in the oil patch or in agriculture. The gentleman that I was working on the pipeline with told me that our next job was going to be in Red Earth, and I thought that I'd really rather stay at home and be involved in the farm. We had a chance to expand the farm operation, so we did, and I was fortunate enough to marry my wife, Dianne, who was a high school sweetheart, and we raised two fine kids there.

I actually got to introduce my son Jay in the Legislature as a young man, 24 years old, who knows the value of a verbal contract. In a modern society, modern-day, verbal contracts are difficult to come by, but I made a lot of my career phoning people or getting a phone call in the middle of the night saying that the grasshoppers were chewing their backside out and they needed – in 2002, particularly, myself and a very good friend from near Wainwright spent a good part of the summer sitting in ag planes dispensing chemicals to help those farmers save their pastures so that they didn't have to haul their cattle out.

I can appreciate some of the comments from the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster about livestock. Livestock just, for some reason, don't know how to read a watch. They don't know what day it is. They do know if there's snow on the ground, if it's 30 below, if the grass is green, or if there's no water in the water trough. They don't care, you know, about what's going on.

I want to talk to you and to the members of the Assembly about the potentiality of Bill 6 and its possible unintended consequences. A good friend of mine made comment of how his farmhouse is situated. If you enter in the back door, Mr. Speaker and other members, and you would turn to the left, that's where his farm office is, but if you turn to the right, that's where the kitchen is, and that's where a lot of the business is done.

They are concerned about the potentiality of OH and S entering the facility to inspect the paperwork and everything because in the closet right there they have a goodly number of predator control devices. Some of these predator control devices are found in the back of the truck and out in the shop and in the tractor in the springtime when they're calving because those predator control devices keep the coyotes away from the baby calves and they keep varmints controlled. Going forward, there might be unintended consequences that this legislation might bring forward in that regard.

This legislation is somewhat vague in the full definition of an agricultural producer. What is an agricultural producer? In some municipalities people with as few as four chickens, I understand, can keep them in their backyard. Now, you know, that may lend to the private member's bill – I believe that it was Bill 202 – about local food production. But is that a definitive agricultural producer? How do we do that? I had my research assistant today look up the definition of an agricultural producer in B.C. because it's been touted by members on this side of the Chamber and others that B.C. has exemptions for small family farms, but I can't find out what that definition is.

What my researcher did find, Mr. Speaker, was that in Saskatchewan, a much-touted and highly agriculturally driven province, OH and S is under the current act, but there seem to be as of 2014 several exemptions. The friends that I know from Saskatchewan had never even seen one of these farm police, as they call them, or grass police, as some people call them in the grass industry. My researcher writes down: exempts farming and ranching from the section on trained operators for powered mobile equipment, describes that farms and ranches over 10 employees must have an occupational health and safety program. Now, that's over 10 employees, and that's, you know, a significantly sized farm operation. It could be construed to be a factory farm.

Now, again, the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, with her private member's bill, talks about a production where they have an intensive vertical operation there. I believe it's a greenhouse operation. They may have more than 10 employees. I don't know. I appreciate the fact that it's local food production. I visited a farm in Coaldale just this summer, intensive agricultural production. They are producing what they believe to be either all the broccoli or all the cauliflower for the Calgary Co-op, and under the roof of the greenhouse they're going to, hopefully, be producing all of the green peppers. But all that is supposed to be done with the mandate of safety. Nowhere did I see or hear in talking to any of these people that were they openly flagrant about the exhibition of safety.

Again back to Saskatchewan. It prescribes that farms and ranches with more than four or fewer than 10 employees must have an employee representative and must set out in writing who is the supervisor of the worksite. It goes on to explain who these people are and what their job description might be. Mr. Speaker, they do have some legislation. In the potentiality of this government's motions coming forward, it's just a broad description. They are now coming forward after some consternation by Albertans in demonstrations like in Red Deer and Grande Prairie and just the other day out at the front of this illustrious Chamber. There is a lot of vehemence being brought forward.

I took particular enjoyment in one person out there. I think his name is Buddy. He chortles a lot. But he was wearing the sign: kill Bill 6. Apparently, Buddy made it past Thanksgiving and did not find it to somebody's Thanksgiving dinner table. As a result of that, Mr. Speaker, I penned a column this weekend, and it says that even in strong winds sometimes turkeys can fly. Some of you may remember, if I could embellish a little bit, a TV series called WKRP in Cincinnati, and during that show they exhibited an unsafe procedure where they were actually throwing frozen turkeys out of the airplane.

An Hon. Member: They were live turkeys.

Mr. Strankman: Well, they weren't live when they hit the ground, for some of those people. You know, we need a little levity in here sometimes, and I'm hoping to provide that.

Safety, though, Mr. Speaker, is not a laughing matter, as somebody who has been involved, not unlike the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, in a situation where somebody put their hand where a post pounder found it. That was not a personal experience. One of our members advises that you shouldn't put your fingers where you might not put something else. I've always found that to be a valuable rule. A valuable rule.

Mr. Speaker, again, getting back in seriousness to the Saskatchewan WCB now because they do have exemptions there, too. Even though they have WCB legislation in the province, they have exemptions for dairy farming; feedlot or livestock yard operations that are not in connection with an industry within the scope of this act; fur farms – I don't know how many fur farms they have in Saskatchewan; grazing co-operatives; land clearing, brush clearing or stumping not in connection with an industry, again, within the scope of the act; livestock brokers; mobile farm feed services or portable seed cleaning plants, which they have a lot of in Saskatchewan; pig farms; poultry farms; and trapping. So, Mr. Speaker, we've been told that they do have coverage, but they have a goodly number of exemptions. That is what I believe is being asked by the people that we've seen come out to these functions to demonstrate against that. They would like to have definitive input.

Earlier on it was asked, again, of the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti if in his time in the Chamber he had seen occasions when there was legislation that was brought forward that was not, I believe, popular with the citizenry or was found to be unpopular, and some of those pieces of legislation were bills 19, 24, 36, and 50. That, at one point in time, Mr. Speaker, was the battle cry almost for the Wildrose candidates because a lot of that legislation was brought forward without full consultation by Albertans, and once Albertans found out about that, they were enraged.

Last winter I read an article – I believe it came from the Edmonton Journal – saying that there's nothing that engages Albertan voters like good, old-fashioned anger, and I think that's what we're seeing out there, some people who are concerned. If it turns to anger – a lot of people in this Chamber may not know that this member after the beginning of our session the other day went out and actually spoke to the rally group out there. I told them that they needed to tone things down, that they needed to be respectful and peaceful in their demonstration. I was fearful that the security guards out there might have a lapse or someone else might have a lapse, and their presentation would not be respectful and democratic. That's what they have a right to do. In a democratic society they have a right to make their positions known. In fact, the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View has a private member's bill that actually talks about recall. It's an attempt to bring democracy forward in a good fashion.

Mr. Speaker, we had several forums. I mentioned bills 19, 24, 36, and 50. I happened to be in the Chamber when the Premier at that time was bringing forward his first bill, and it was much touted as a property rights bill, but it turned out to be the retraction of Bill 19, and Bill 19 had never actually been proclaimed. That's part of the choreography of what can go on in this Chamber. Some legislation can be passed in here, but if it does not achieve royal assent, it's not law.

In this case there was much ado. I still remember to this day – and I think the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat and the Member for Livingstone-Macleod may remember – that the bill that was presented to us by the pages was the equivalent of an eight and a half by 11 piece of paper, and we were looking at the front and the back and the sides and trying to figure out if that's all it was. This was an important piece of legislation brought forward in a democratic situation, in a democratic Chamber like we have, and this is all that was being presented to the people? What kind of a shallow piece of work was that?

To have these people come anywhere from four to six hours and take goodly time out of their personal lives – Mr. Speaker, I had constituents from the south end of my constituency. The Roes and the Griffiths came. I introduced them as guests to the Chamber. They had kids in swaddling clothes. These kids were two and three years old. These people have legitimate concerns about how those children will be exposed to the lifestyle that they believe is important as agriculturalists. These folks are ranch people. They don't have any more aspiration to be in this chair, really, than I ever sought to going forward.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. member, a question under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the privilege and honour to know the Member for Drumheller-Stettler's family. I visited his farm three years ago, when I spent some time campaigning with his son. I want to ask the member specifically about the consultation process adopted recently by the government of the day about the climate change report or, in other words, the carbon tax grab or whatever you call it. The government has taken credit for showcasing that as a successful bill they brought in, implementing their agenda about protecting the environment and whatnot, and they lined up all the stakeholders. But in this particular case, all those stakeholders are missing. They can't take them into confidence. Being a lifelong agrarian, I want to ask the Member for Drumheller-Stettler how he feels about this whole thing, being treated as a second-class citizen. What are your views about that?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member from Calgary. It is somewhat disconcerting although at one point in my agrarian career I had a rash on my wrists from handcuffs, when I got in trouble for hauling a little bit of wheat one day.

I want to speak though to that, specifically, because many people don't understand how change occurs. It's taken me a long time to understand how change really occurs. Many times change does not occur from within. This government is going to make a lot of change, and this government has a mandate at this present time to make a lot of change, but this government is going to realize that the democratic method that got them here is also the democratic method that can take them out of this Chamber. Mr. Speaker, it is an important thing to know and understand and recognize just what I said, that change does not necessarily occur in this Chamber. Change occurs outside the Chamber.

There are a lot of people – and I myself was one of those people – that asked for and requested change. I have great respect for the member bringing forward the royalty review, and I have great respect for the member bringing forward a carbon tax, et cetera, for their view, their democratic view to effect change, but, Mr. Speaker and to the member from Calgary, in three to four years there is going to be a chance for I'll call it redemption, I guess, by the voters, and at that time that will prove the truth of what Albertans feel. That is the responsibility, and it's somewhat onerous.

I've seen it through two cycles, both with the Progressive Conservative government that was in power and now with the NDP government in power in this province. I'm viewing it with cautious optimism and with the greatest respect for Alberta voters. In this case we have rural Alberta voters who are highly frustrated with what's going on here because of their perceptions, correct or not, about the presentation of a piece of legislation that's going to horribly affect their farms.

There are those that say that this is the beginning of something as inconsequential as a simple piece of legislation, and that may well be true, Mr. Speaker, but you look at some of these other jurisdictions, and I read off the exemptions from only one other province. Beyond that, there may be and can be a whole host of unelected and unintended consequential regulations. That is the danger that is being brought forward by the people that you see at these meetings and that you see on the steps of this Chamber and of this building. People are concerned, not necessarily about the legislation but about the regulation. The regulation is as important as the legislation.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this evening to talk about Bill 6. I'm a city boy, but I have a little bit of farm experience. I certainly threw some bales for my grandfather, when I was younger, on his farm in southern Ontario and actually spent two full summers in the tobacco fields, which is a different kind of experience, so different that Stompin' Tom Connors actually wrote a song about that called Tillsonburg. As the phrase goes, "My back still aches when I hear that word." I won't sing, you'll be glad to know.

I also spent 25 years in the meat business, starting off at the time when I was a butcher, which is why the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster thinks of me as a father figure, as he mentioned earlier. I thought, when he was telling the tale about his father open-air butchering, that that's probably where the saying comes from that sunlight is the best disinfectant.

Mr. Speaker, during my 25 years I was probably in every packing house in western Canada and, really, was in contact with agricultural product at the end of its production and was aware of how much care farmers had in the process from the gate to the plate, as they say, from the farm gate to the plate, and how much they care.

I'm going to give you some of my own thoughts, but someone on the steps of the Legislature said it way better than I ever could, and her experience is way better than mine ever will be, so I got her permission to get her remarks and read them to the House. For those that are interested, I'm going to table them tomorrow because everybody should read these. Her words:

My name is Coral Robinson and I live on my family cattle and grain farm 3 hours Northeast of Edmonton with my husband and two small children. We are fortunate enough to be keepers of land that has been in my family for three generations. We have one employee who is treated and respected as family. We would never ask him to do anything that he [feels is] unsafe. He chooses to work for us because farming is his love as well.

I just want to make one thing clear here today. We are not farmers against change, and we are not farmers against safety regulations in the farming industry. We are here today because Bill 6 will change the lifestyle of thousands of very real families like my own across Alberta by January 1, 2016. We simply want to be heard by the Alberta government before Bill 6 becomes legislation. Why does it have to be pushed through the Legislature at breakneck speed without consulting with the people who are most affected? We are here asking for the Alberta government to stop Bill 6, right now and come and get to know us. Did you know that not one of our ministers pushing this legislation has made a living farming?

If they had, they would realize that there has to be a distinction between family run farms and industrial farms which are operated by employees. The family farm is our home. It is where we live; it's where we work, and it's where we play. It is where our children will grow up and learn life skills that they are fortunate to learn on the farm. It's where our neighbours and friends gather when we need help, with the only payment, a good meal and maybe some drinks at the end of the day. The family farm is a unique way of life. It's a business because it has to be. It is a lifestyle first, which involves hard work, long hours, risks, love, and family. You could not possibly understand the work, the passion, and the life that comes with it, unless you live it. Bill 6 will regulate when I can teach my children our very lifestyle. It will regulate if my neighbours, family and friends can offer a helping hand when we need it most. It will regulate the hours worked in a day when we are harvesting and snow is in the forecast. This is not something that should be rushed through and passed before our MLA's go on Christmas break. This is over 100 years of lifestyle and tradition of farming families that is now going to be regulated. These are families who have passed knowledge and passion for farming down through several generations. Can we not take time to get this right?

[The Premier] and her supporters have painted safety on the face of Bill 6. I will tell you this. Safety of my family in my home and on my farm is the absolute most important thing to me. I know my three year [old] does not understand what OH & S legislation means. What she does understand is the love she has for everything farming. What she could understand is educational material directed toward her age group focusing on the dangers and hazards that are on the farm. What she won't understand, is not being able to bear any responsibility on the farm until she is 12, and even after she is 12, she is allowed to spend only two hours on a school day doing what she has longed to do since she started walking and talking (but only after I've obtained a permit from the Alberta government[]). If the government truly wants to save lives of people on the family farm, why not try to educate rather than regulate? We truly believe in safety but what we don't believe in, is being told when our children can have chores and responsibilities at our home.

Our urban friends; I want to try to relate to you how this group of people feels here today. Bill 6 is like you giving me a blank cheque to fix your car. I know nothing about you but I assume things like, you have a fancy car so you have a lot of money. I assume that you use your children, maybe even putting them in harm's way to earn your money to have your nice car. I am telling you that I am going to fix your car fairly but I am not going to tell you what I have found wrong with it. I am simply going to fix it and write the amount of money you owe me on the cheque. You are not allowed to dispute this amount. If Bill 6 passes through the Legislature in the next couple of days (just over two weeks after it was first proposed), it is like that blank cheque for farm families. At this point, there is no distinction between family farming operations and industrial farms which have several employees. [The Premier] claims that there will be distinction but she is going ahead on passing Bill 6 right now as a standard blanketing program. How can we trust that our lifestyle will be protected through proper consultation after this Bill is already law? I forgot to mention when you brought your car to me to get fixed that I in fact am not a mechanic, I am a gardener and I have never fixed a car in my life.

I want to leave you with a few realities of the family farm which are near and dear to my heart:

For the 75 year old grandfather who still has 30 cows left on his farm and the only reason he keeps them is because he is afraid if he sells them, he will have no reason to get out of bed in the morning; he has made his money and this is his retirement; this is his life and all he knows. His children and grandchildren help him when it comes time to bring in the cows or process calves. To them, and him, this is not work: this is love, happiness, pride, and a reason to get together after months apart. At the end of the year, he has to sell his calves and there is a business transaction, but this is not business. How do you regulate that?

For the husband and wife who work 12 hours a day at their day job and come home to 3 hours of chores to make sure their cattle are fed and taken care of. They built their farm from the bottom up. They are trying to afford their life and love of farming. This is their home; not their job. How do you regulate their hours of work in a day?

For the dad who picks up 'mom and the kids' on a Sunday afternoon with the side by side to go check cows; this is a family day. This is not work today; it is love and life but to OH & S this would be work. Where do you draw the line? How do you regulate that?

Bill 6 is not cut and dry. There is no possible way that the proper boundaries and regulations can be set by January 1, 2016 while respecting our rights as families to live our lifestyle at our home. This is the wrong approach for family farms. We believe in safety and we believe that there is a place for OH & S in the farming industry BUT there is one special and unique distinction that should be made, and that is the family farm. Other provinces have this distinction and Alberta should too.

Those words are better than anything that I could say because this is a woman that has lived the farming and ranching lifestyle, and we should listen to what she is saying.

Mr. Speaker, I've heard from the Minister of JSTL that they talked to people and this and that, but the fact is that that's not what farmers or ranchers are saying. I can tell you that when I was minister, along with the agriculture minister we did talk to farmers and ranchers. The likes of Page Stuart and Bryan Walton were leading almost every producer group in Alberta, and we were making progress. We were getting quite close to the point where safety legislation, regulations could have been put in place on the farms and ranches with the advice of farmers and ranchers. They would have embraced the legislation, which means that they would have lived by it. People will support that which they help to build.

My colleague talked about: you know, if you put a law in place that people don't follow, maybe it's not a good law. Maybe it's not a good law. If you actually bring them along and help them write the law and let them help government understand what needs to be in the law, then farmers and ranchers will embrace it, and government will have a lot fewer problems with enforcement, with inspection, with all of those things, because people will live up to a just law. One of the best ways to make sure that it's just is to actually consult with people who live the life that you think you're trying to regulate.

Mr. Speaker, there was a big protest out here this week on the steps of the Legislature, the biggest I've ever seen. You know what? Our friends across the aisle that are now in government: lots of them were out here carrying signs. But the fact is that half the people that were carrying signs with them were professional protesters. Certainly, a lot of them were, and they could never generate the type of enthusiasm that was on the steps of this Legislature this week, not by local Edmonton people that have a garage full of signs but, rather, by people from all over Alberta, honest, hard-working, decent farmers and ranchers, children, families. Whole families came. There were kids in diapers, and there were people that were very experienced in life, seniors. They were all here with a common purpose, not to say to the government, "Leave us alone" but just to say: "Talk to us first. Talk to us first. Listen to us. We'll work with you. We believe in farm safety."

In fact, Mr. Speaker, as has been said here in the House tonight, Alberta's record on farm safety is an enviable one in Canada, better than most provinces'. You know what? I believe that my colleagues across the aisle are good people and that they're trying to make the world better. I believe that. They're just going about it the wrong way. If you think you're going to save lives and injuries on the path you're going, you're confused. What is being contemplated may not save a single life or a single injury because Alberta's record is already amongst the best in Canada without the legislation. So I don't know where the magic is going to come from when you have got people with the best safety record, to a large degree. You know what? There are some things that need to be fixed, and the farmers and ranchers know that. They just want a say in making it better. They do. It's not an unreasonable request. It isn't. All they're saying is: talk to us first.

The government could do that several ways. They could put a pause on this: no more readings until they do that. They could send it to committee and invite farmers and ranchers to address the committee so they could learn what things there are. They could kill Bill 6, talk to people, and come back with a better informed bill.

Mr. Speaker, again, I'm sure government means well – I'm not going to cast aspersions on them – but the signs are all there of bad legislation. You've got meetings, including tonight in Red Deer, where you've got a government official saying one thing, and the pieces of paper they're handing out say something completely different. This baby is not cooked. It's not even half baked. Again, I know the intentions are good. I get that. You know what? The results could be good if they'd just slow down a little bit. It really would not be that hard to do. It really wouldn't.

You know what? I'm sure everybody on our break between 6 and 7:30 – what did we do? We ate something. Why don't we just spare a thought for the people that provided that food? Good people. Good people that feed the rest of the planet. Yeah, you know, they make a living at it. We should be proud of them, and they should be proud of themselves. Why would we make it more difficult for them to feed us? Why would we unreasonably make it more expensive for them to feed us?

You know, one of the advantages that Alberta can have just being part of Canada is that almost everybody says that it will be one of only six or seven countries in the world that will produce more food than it can itself eat. Why would we not try to make the most out of that instead of hobbling the people in that field?

Certainly, you know, out of a policy difference – and it's a really serious policy difference – the current government is going to lock billions of dollars, if not a trillion dollars, of value in the ground with coal. There's talk by some of them about locking billions of dollars of value in the ground in the oil sands and other places. Why not let one of the things that you haven't decided to lock in the ground yet, which is plants and animals – why not let them thrive? Why not let the people that produce that do that? Why not let that create more jobs for Alberta families? You know what? You'll even create more jobs for city folk.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: We're under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Schneider: Under 29(2)(a). As I listened to the Member for Calgary-Hays talk about this bill, I was wondering as I sat here – I was sitting at the time; now I'm standing, as you can see – if a gentleman like the Member for Calgary-Hays, that has been in this House for several years and has seen bills come and go and been part of constructing bills and amending bills and had all of that kind of experience, could expound and give us an idea, if you had the opportunity to write this bill from the beginning or to change this bill, of what would you do to make this bill better so that the farmers of this province would be proud of their government?

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's a good question, and I'll frame it for the government-side members as a cautionary tale.

An Hon. Member: Keep it simple.

Mr. McIver: No, no. Listen. I'll congratulate them. Again, you'll like the first part of this but maybe not the second part quite so much. There is a reason that you're over there and we're over here. We made some mistakes, Mr. Speaker. We did. Some of the mistakes we made were in rushing legislation. You make enemies when you rush legislation. You make enemies that remember when you rush legislation. You make enemies that remember when you don't consult with people, when you regulate their way of life or the way they make a living without actually doing them the courtesy of a proper conversation. That is the mark.

With all due respect, it took us, you know, four decades to have people throw us out of there. If you like what you do now, don't rush to that 44-year mark in six months, okay? Don't do that. I'm trying to help you here. Right now I'm the best friend you've got with what I'm telling you. I am. Don't rush to the finish line if you want to stick around, or we'll be happy to go back there. Believe me; we'll be happy to. If you want to save yourselves, this is good advice.

What the hon. member says is the mark of bad legislation: the mark of bad legislation is when a minister stands up in the House and says, "We've consulted everybody," and then everybody they were supposed to consult says, "No, you didn't, and we're not happy at all about it." Our government did that a few times, particularly in the last year or two. That is a sign of a government closer to the end of their life than the beginning. Folks, you've only been here six months. Don't do this if you want to stick around. Again, we'll be happy to go on the other side. I know there are other people here that would be happy to go on the other side. But this really has the marks.

You know what? Again, in your own ridings you've got what is reputed to be, I think, 11,000 farms in ridings that voted for people on your side of the House. Without those 14 seats, it's going to be a lot harder to hang onto that majority. Without the 11,000 votes times three or four family members times all the friends they have, that's really going to make it hard to keep those 14 seats in three and a half years. It's not in my best interest to give you this excellent advice. But you know what? I love Alberta. I love farmers and ranchers. I love to eat. So what choice do I have? What choice do I have?

To the hon. member: I would say that these are marks of bad legislation. When you've publicly got the Premier throwing the bureaucrats under the bus and you've got the minister responsible for the legislation under the bus, when you've got the biggest protest we've seen out here in years from people that don't protest on a regular basis, these are not good signs. To answer the hon. member, I'd say that from what I've seen – and I don't feel like the old man on the mountain, but I guess there are not a lot of people that got re-elected the last time around, and this is only my second term – from the experience that I've had, this has all the marks of something that will bring a government closer to the end of their existence rather than the beginning.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under 29(2)(a). I agree. You made the statement that the people on the other side of the House are basically good people and have the right idea. In your experience what is the best move forward for them on consultation?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak against Bill 6. You see, I was elected to represent the people of Grande Prairie-Smoky. During the past week I have received more e-mails, more phone calls, more texts than I've had since I've been elected. In fact, I've received more in the last week than in the total six months that I've been elected. Those communications were unanimous in that they all speak against Bill 6. Each one of those speaks with passion, with intelligence, and with respect in their call for this government to withdraw Bill 6.

I'd like to read a quote from a letter from one of my constituents, Travis.

For 98 years Alberta's farmers and ranchers have circumvented the onslaught of self-righteous, meddling, bureaucratic socialism, proving that industry, communities and families can exist and thrive based on simple yet fundamental principles of personal freedom and liberty. No farmer is opposed to the safety, the wellbeing, fair wages and fair treatment of their employees. What we are adamantly opposed to is the socialist ideology that the small group of ruling elitists knows what's best for other people's personal affairs without any consultation, and using force and intimidation to compel others to submit to their philosophies.

You'll notice, Mr. Speaker, "consultation." That's very important, and we'll see this repeated over and over again. We'll also see that no farmer is opposed to safety, and that's something that we hear over and over again from the farmers in our communities.

He goes on to say:

In a free society people are free to think how they choose and are also free to try to persuade others to agree with their way of thinking. Through persuasion and discussion different ideas are traded, weighed, and developed.

Actually, I would say that that would be a definition of consultation there.

He goes on to say:

A consensus is arrived at with all parties compromising and learning and, although imperfectly, they will eventually agree to a course of action.

Your government has chosen instead to arbitrarily decree a course of action, devoid of that free discussion, and to declare that those who are thus affected will have no freedom of choice, no freedom of democratic say in the matter and you will use force of law and the fear of bureaucratic or legal retribution to quell dissent.

Mr. Speaker, Travis has a very good command of the English language, as you can see. He speaks very eloquently and very respectfully to this government in his request for consultation. Of course, none of this takes away from his desire to see safety on the farm.

Now, I've just heard recently that in the phone calls that constituents have been making to ministers' offices about Bill 6, some of them, from what I understand, are being forwarded to OH and S and over to WCB. I also understand that the Premier's office phones sometimes are not getting answered. Sometimes they're not returning phone calls. I can understand that due to the volume of phone calls that must be coming in, they're having difficulties responding properly.

Now, this should serve as an indication that something is wrong. But, sadly, we hear that the Premier is doubling down and has promised that this bill will pass. Unfortunately for the people affected by this bill, with the government in place having a majority in this House, the Premier will be able to do whatever she wants. What's truly unfortunate is that the members opposite that represent rural ridings will not be able to represent their constituents, and that's sad. It's sad for democracy, and it's sad for the constituents that they're here to represent.

I want to read from another letter, from Terry and Maureen.

We are writing out of desperation and frustration as this government, which is supposed to be working for us, seems to not be listening to the very stakeholders this Bill 6 is supposed to be for.

Now, we heard in Grande Prairie loud and clear. Anybody that was there knew exactly what the mood of the room was and what the consensus was. When the question was asked, "Who is against this bill?" every single person in the room put up their hand. Every single person. So that would send a pretty clear message, I would think, to the members of this Assembly of the feeling of what's happening in rural Alberta.

Terry and Maureen go on to say:

We do not have fences marking out boundaries around our home to differentiate between what is deemed yard and what is deemed to be "commercial." The whole quarter section is our home, from the farm equipment parked in my driveway to the tools and farm items stored in our basement, tight to the fence line with our neighbors to the south and west of us.

They go on to say:

I ask you, is that a reasonable piece of legislation to pass?

I urge you all to go online to the Farm Safe handbook if you haven't already, and read it. I did last night and it was laughable. To document every aspect of everything we have to do around here to be stewards of the very land we sweat and toil on, which ends up in the food chain that will eventually feed Alberta families in cities, towns and in the country, actually is frightening.

These people, Mr. Speaker, are doing the research. They're studying. They're trying to learn what could affect them with this legislation.

They go on to say:

We are afraid for our civil liberties being taken away. This is not a job for us, it is a lifestyle choice as we could sell up and move to town. But we don't want to. We love farming our little farm. Oh and by the way, we do not make enough cash flow off of the 80 acres we actually have in crops to make it work so my husband also works full time to keep this place afloat. This is a dedication of a way of life he has known his whole life. It's not a job as I have said, it's our way of life. I am pleading for some common sense to prevail in regards to Bill 6 and withdraw it totally from being tabled.

Mr. Speaker, here's a couple that write this letter out of desperation and frustration with this government. They're not asking for anything unreasonable here. Like others, they're asking for consultation. They're concerned about safety, too. They don't want to see anybody hurt on their farm.

Now, the other day I was talking to a couple of my constituents. They're an older couple that has farmed their whole life. When they heard about Bill 6 and its implications, the wife asked the husband: so should we just quit now? Can you imagine having to have that conversation about your life, about the career you have chosen, all over a government bill that was brought forward without consultation with the very people that will have to live it daily.

Now, here's a question from a concerned farmer, Nico.

I have a question about bill 6 and the proposed rules for farmers and ranchers. Sometimes we get casual labour just for the day to process cows, and I pay them at the end of the day. How am I to pay WCB on these workers who may show up only once every year or two for about 8 hours? Can a farm pay into a "casual labour fund" – based on historical payment towards casual labor for a year – to cover these casual workers?

We both know this is going to pass; I just want to make sure it is workable. We already pay for WCB on workers that we produce T4 slips for, so I do not mind paying WCB. That is not the issue with me or I suspect most farmers. It is the details of this legislation that could be troublesome.

Mr. Speaker, you see here that we have a classic example. This farmer already covers his regular workers with WCB, but he needs to have his questions answered. Unfortunately, even if he shows up at an information meeting, he will most likely not get his questions answered. You know why? Because this government doesn't know what the rules are. What they want is a blank cheque, and then they want to make the rules afterwards. Why should he trust this government? What has the government done to encourage that trust?

Now, I want to go on to a letter from Rosanna.

I've watched our farm grow from nothing. It takes passion. Determination and a lot of hard work. Long hours. Many long hours. These are hours worked out of necessity to have a successful year. We fight the one thing no one can control, and that is weather. We work when we can and as long as we can, because that is the key to survival.

Mr. Speaker, farmers don't have control over a lot of the things that they are subject to in their business. They don't have any control over the weather, and it's something that's always on their mind.

She goes on to say:

If we shut down after X amount of hours, it would mean watching our crops get rained/snowed on and most likely even left out on the ground. Which leaves them worthless, and us without our yearly income. I don't believe our workers are mistreated, underpaid, or made to do unsafe activities. We try to take care of them, appreciate them, and pay them well. We know better than anyone the dangers and risks. We do not put ourselves, our workers, or our children in a dangerous position. We understand the operation inside and out. We understand the machines. We understand the need to be very well informed, trained, and always, always aware of what is going on around you. There is no need to have someone who is "trained" to monitor us, inspect us and control our operations.

Mr. Speaker, that's why the farmers of Alberta keep talking about this word "consultation." They want to be consulted because they know better than anyone the risks on their farm and how they could alleviate those. All they're asking for is, simply, consultation and to be able to work these things out.

She goes on to say:

This would just financially drain family farms that already have small profit margins. Some years, no margins at all. I don't believe even 1 person who has never grown up on, or owned a farm, could ever understand the dynamics, risks, dangers, safety, and overall operation of a farm. It is not something you learn in a book. It is something you learn growing up around it, watching, doing, working, observing, and riding. It is more than a job. It is a way of life.

How many times have we heard that, Mr. Speaker, that it's a way of life? It's not just a job. That's why these people are so passionate when they show up en masse to protest things like Bill 6. It isn't just a job.

She goes on to say:

A way of life that we have worked hard to obtain and keep. One that we want to pass on to our children. This way of life instills in youth an incredible sense of work ethic, and the ability to work hard and never give up. It also teaches values and principles that cannot be learned so well from a book. We are a community that will always band together to support and help each other out. Don't change that. That is one thing still good in this world. Stop Bill 6. Remember who puts food on your table and thank a farmer instead.

Stop Bill 6. Those who attended the rally on the steps of the Legislature yesterday heard the term over and over: kill Bill 6. If this government is truly listening to the people, I would say that they would have no choice but to act on what they've heard, but we don't see that, Mr. Speaker.

I hear some say that there is misinformation regarding this bill. Maybe there is, but the truth that is spelled out in black and white is scary enough. Farmers are resourceful, intelligent, and willing to work with government regarding any concerns they have. All they have to do is consult with them, work with them, talk with them, meet with them. That's what has to be done.

I'm going to go on to a letter from Jay:

Personally, I'm not a farmer or a rancher, but I share many Albertans' concerns regarding this bill. I'm aware of the implications it places on the hard working farmers and ranchers in our communities . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions for the hon. member under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: I heard a lot about farm families in there, and it seemed like there was just so much passion, you know, from the people that are speaking to you. I was wondering if you had any more stories to share.

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, I do. Thanks for that question there.

I'll go on to what Jay was talking about. He says:

We all know someone, or have family members who choose this lifestyle to make ends meet and enjoy their lives.

Another concern I have is how this will affect hunting, shooting, recreational vehicles (quads, ATVs, Skidoos, etc.) on private farmland. Will the same rules and regulations apply to the average citizen who wishes to go hunting or do other lawful activities on privately owned farmland?

Mr. Speaker, these are all important questions that are left unanswered.

Again, when they show up at these meetings to have questions answered, it seems like there are no answers. In Grande Prairie the most common thing said was: well, we don't know; we're not sure. I guess that in Red Deer today the most common thing was: well, there are some amendments coming. Unfortunately, nobody knows what's going on. The people sent to these meetings don't understand what's going on, and it seems like even the people that do speak at these meetings contradict themselves over and over again. That's not helpful. That doesn't help the people that are concerned about their livelihood. That doesn't help them with their concerns at all.

I do want to make sure I fit in one letter here. This is from a 17-year-old girl named Megan. She says:

My name is Megan . . . I am a 17 year old high school student residing in Northern Alberta. I have been raised on the farm my whole life and am going on my 9th year as an active 4-H member.

This is the letter that she actually wrote to the Premier. She says:

Please note that attached to this letter are photos from across the province gathered from my 4-H friends and Family. They have come from as far south as Calgary and as far north as Manning.

I am responding to the issues brought up by the proposed Bill 6. I must say that any tolerance and patience I had in this government, let alone the faith I may have had, is completely gone. The first straw was the attack on the oilfield, and now this.

Now, remember, Mr. Speaker, that this is a 17-year-old high school student.

An Hon. Member: Smart girl.

Mr. Loewen: She's a very smart girl. I know her.

I'm a bona fide "Farm Kid." I grew up hauling hay, chasing cows, and moving cattle on horseback. My workday was never limited to 20 hours a week like a part time job, nor 40 hours like a full time job. Farming for me is, and always has been a way of life.

A farmer does not check in and check out, wake up is my check in and when I go to sleep the work doesn't end. There are no scheduled breaks, it's not the typical 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. day with 2 coffee breaks at 10:00 a.m. and 3:00 p.m. and lunch at 12:35 p.m. We work until the job is done. During calving season someone in our household is up at 3 a.m. and out checking the cows.

My way of life is something that I cherish and to impose a law that restricts my way of life is not something I can stand for. I know I speak for a large majority of family farmers when I say that this Bill threatens that way of life. To say that the government has support of the farmers in my community is a broad lie and an insult, one I wouldn't dream of making.

To make myself perfectly clear, on the farm I was taught "common sense" a trait that doesn't seem to be as common anymore. To expand on that I have never been asked, told or forced to do work that I believe is unsafe on the farm. Even if presented with a situation I have been equipped with the proper tools to defend myself, stand for my rights, without the need of new legislation. This view would have probably been brought up if any of the MLAs in the NDP Party came from a farming background. I know this to be true, which gives me the validation to say that because of this fact the NDP government is not qualified to be dictating the affairs of the local farmer.

Remember that this is a 17-year-old girl, a high school student.

The government cannot expect the farming community to respond positively to a Bill that causes unnecessary hassle, paid out of our pockets, that threatens our livelihood. When combined with the shift from "chores" to "child labour." I'd have to ask the government to show their work. Where on any typical farm have those two words been synonymous? I strongly believe that the values that I have learned on the farm are imperative and fundamental. Some of the best times I have had were when I spent an entire day on the farm with my Dad, or rode in the tractor with my Papa. These skills include work ethic, determination . . .

Speaker's Ruling Question-and-comment Period

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

You mentioned that your constituent referenced the point of patience. As the hour gets later, my patience gets somewhat tested. I want to remind all of the members, particularly, of the following, 29(2)(a). I quote an excerpt from it: “to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses to each Member’s questions.” Could I ask you all to please read this again and make sure that we practise this as we move forward.

9:30

The Speaker: I believe the next member is Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is really an honour to speak to this bill, as it is an honour to speak to all bills in this Assembly. Now, I may not be from rural Alberta, but I know a bad bill when I see one. This is actually not a rural issue or an urban issue. It is an Alberta issue. It is a fundamental issue of how a government goes about passing legislation and how, in fact, a government consults or doesn’t consult the people who are impacted by a certain piece of legislation.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Let me tell you this. As an MLA representing an urban constituency, I want to let everyone in this Assembly and through you all of your constituents know that urban Alberta has got your back because this is not an issue of urban and rural. This is a fundamental issue of fairness and democracy, and there is a lot of concern about this bill that I’ve heard from my constituents in Calgary-Elbow. It is not an issue that impacts people just in rural Alberta.

Now, there’s an extended way that we are all impacted no matter where we live. As it’s been said many times, if you ate today, thank a farmer. Absolutely, that’s true. But there’s something more important than that. Albertans all around this province, from inner-city Edmonton and Calgary, Red Deer, Lethbridge, rural Alberta, and even from outside of Alberta, as I’ve heard from my cousins and relatives in Saskatchewan, are wondering what the heck is going on, wondering what the big deal is about Bill 6. The minute they learn a little bit about it, they say: “Well, that doesn’t feel right. That just doesn’t seem right. What in the world are we doing here? Why are we rushing through this?”

Now, I want to be very, very clear that farm safety is important to me, and I think that it’s absolutely important to every single one of us in this House. We want people to go home safe at the end of the day. We want people who work in paid employment on farms to be safe, to have access to compensation, workers’ compensation, and we want people to make sure that proper standards are applied. We want every single person, whether they’re a paid employee, whether they’re a family member, whether they’re hired help, whether they’re an uncle from across the fenceline, to be safe on a farm. But what I haven’t seen and what I’m very, very curious to know from the government side is: what are the numbers? What problem are we trying to solve here?

Early on tonight in the debate the Member for Drumheller-Stettler quoted some statistics and indicated that, in fact, Alberta’s numbers of injuries and fatalities on the farm were, in fact, no worse than other parts of Canada. Now, I don’t know that to be definitively true. I’ve heard it here in the House tonight. I’m going to do some research, but I would hope that the government would also have done that research and could tell us definitively what problem we are trying to solve here. What is the scale of this problem? Tell that to this House. Tell that to Albertans. How big a problem is that, really? I’m learning here. I’d like to know. I’d really like to know.

One farm fatality is too many. I think we would all agree with that. Any injury is too much of an injury. That’s not something that any of us want to see, but how do we go about solving those problems? Before we go to solve a problem, we need to identify what the problem is. We need to understand the scale of the problem, understand the nature of the problem. Do that research; present it here to this House so we can all make sure we understand how that works. I noticed that every speaker this evening has been on this side of the House. I’d be really interested to hear what the government caucus has to say on this issue and would love to hear what the rationale is and some of the details because I genuinely care about people’s safety in this province.

With the bill itself I have significant concerns, which have been talked about previously. What this bill is, when we look at it, is a very thin bill. It is a shell of a bill that says that at some point in the future the government will pass some regulations that do some things. We’ve heard some pretty concerning things of what Bill 6 might do. It might regulate 4-H. It might mean that kids can work only limited hours. It might mean that once equipment is a certain age, you can’t use it anymore. Well, Bill 6 doesn’t say any of that. Nowhere does it say that in Bill 6, but nowhere in Bill 6 does it not say that. When there’s a vacuum, when there’s a lack of information, in rush judgments. We have no leg to stand on. When someone says, “Greg, this bill regulates 4-H,” I can’t point to anything in this bill and say, “No, no, no; that’s not true; look here; it says right here that it doesn’t do that” because that’s not what Bill 6 says.

Now, we hear that there are some amendments coming, and I look forward to seeing those amendments in committee, but until such time, unfortunately, speculation is going to be rampant, and, my friends, that is on this government for allowing that to happen.

Now, I’d like to compare what happens with Bill 6 with the work that the environment minister did on the climate consultation. You all know, I think – I’ve been very clear in this House – that I think very highly of the process that the environment minister went through in creating a panel with very clear terms of reference, an expert panel that included stakeholders from industry, that included stakeholders from environmental groups. They had a very broad public input process. The outcome of that process: while I don’t agree with absolutely everything in that, we can’t argue that the process that was followed was a very strong and very sound process.

I sincerely hope that the royalties process is the same thing. There are expert people who are in charge of that panel. They’ve consulted widely across industry. They’ve held public consultations. In fact, up until December 4 we as Albertans can submit our input to the royalties panel. I’ve done that. I hope everyone here does the same thing. The outcome of that work product: I don’t know if we’ll all agree with it or not, but we won’t be able to quibble with the process that they used to come up with those results.

Let’s compare that to what has happened with Bill 6. Now, you’re the NDP. We know you’re going to legislate in this area. That’s not a surprise. What is a surprise is exactly what’s in this bill or what’s not in this bill. I would really encourage you to reflect on why we had 1,500 people on the steps of this building protesting and concerned about their livelihoods and concerned about family farms. We haven’t had that on the climate panel, and there’s some very bold policy coming out of that climate panel that is going to fundamentally change how Alberta operates. That’s a big deal. It’s important. It’s important to the future of this province, and it was taken seriously by your government. You should be given credit for that. Why haven’t you taken Bill 6 seriously? Why haven’t you taken the family farm seriously? Did you just think: “Well, it doesn't really matter. We're just going to do it anyway"? This is a lesson, and I think it's an important lesson for all of us in this House to understand, not just on the government side but for all of us to understand. It sure feels like you're taking rural Alberta for granted. It sure feels that way.

As we get towards the amendments, so far what we know of these proposed amendments are two bullet points in a news release. So getting closer, there's talk of exemptions for family farms, but there were some exemptions earlier on this evening listed out in other jurisdictions – our neighbours to the east, in Saskatchewan – some of the specific areas that are exempt from family farm regulation. It raises questions for me. What if someone brings in hired help for a couple of days to help fix fences, to move cattle, or to help during calving season? What if you accept payment in kind? Will you have to get WCB or OH and S for that? Will you still be able to use equipment? What if you bring somebody in to use equipment? None of these things are clear. To simply say, "We're going to pass regulations at some point that cover these things," it just leaves so many questions that I really believe this bill needs to go back to committee. We need to either pull the bill entirely and do a proper consultation or at least send it to committee.

So as it stands, I can't support this bill. I care very deeply about the safety of all Albertans. I care deeply about farm safety, but this bill is ill conceived. It needs to go back to the drawing board. At the very least, we need to send it to a committee, we need to study it extensively, we need to consult Albertans, and that may mean killing this bill entirely and starting again.

I guess I'll conclude, Madam Speaker, by just saying that what Bill 6 lacks more than anything else is respect, respect for the people who are impacted by the provisions of that bill. That is a fundamental tenet of any legislation.

You have to consult, but what does consulting mean? Consulting doesn't mean telling; consulting means asking. Consulting is a two-way process; it's a dialogue. I think the government would find that had you consulted on this bill, we wouldn't have had 1,500 people on the steps of the Legislature. You wouldn't be receiving angry e-mails and phone calls and letters in your constituency offices. I think that you have the opportunity to make this right, and I encourage you to do that.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. MacIntyre: Madam Speaker, I am just so thrilled to hear from the Member for Calgary-Elbow that the good folks in Cowtown, the city folks, the urbanites in Cowtown, that do like to wear cowboy boots though they've never maybe stepped in what cowboy boots step in, are supporting the stand of the farming community against this bill. I am just thrilled. Thank you so much, hon. member.

I would be interested to know from the hon. member if he can recount to us maybe some of the comments of the Cowtown folks that he has spoken to, the city dwellers who have the backs of our farming communities and are supporting our farmers in opposing this very ill-thought-through bill that has not consulted the experts in farm safety, the very farmers themselves.

Thank you.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Having grown up in Calgary, being born and raised there, I've spent a lot of time at the Calgary Stampede. It is, I think, an important part of our western heritage. It's not working on a farm – I acknowledge that – and there are some other parts of the Stampede that are not purely related just to our western, agrarian roots. But one comment, I guess, that I can recount to the House was that after the Member for Calgary-Hays had made some comments, someone – he used his name, obviously, as opposed to his seat – said to me: I have a hard time believing I'm agreeing with the Member for Calgary-Hays; this is a first.

An Hon. Member: He's learning and growing.

Mr. Clark: They're learning and growing, I guess.

You know, it's a process issue, absolutely. There is some concern over the process that was used here, or lack of process, as it relates to Bill 6, but there is something more fundamental than that. What I'm hearing from people is that they're saying: "Well, a family farm is different. It's different. It's not a regular workplace. It's not an oil sands site. It's not a drilling rig. It's not a welding shop. There's something else. There's something different about it. It's home. It's home." We understand that.

I don't claim, by any means, to speak on behalf of all of urban Alberta, but as a representative of an inner-city, big-city constituency I can tell you that a lot of the folks that I've talked with have expressed exactly that, saying: I'm starting to understand what the big deal is with this because there are some pretty fundamental things about what it means to be Albertan. So they have a lot of questions, and hopefully I've fairly represented those in my statement tonight.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. To the Member for Calgary-Elbow again: you mentioned the Calgary Stampede, and I think that's very, very important to Calgarians and Albertans and Canadians. It's a tradition that's gone on for a very, very long time. I'm just wondering if you have any idea how this new legislation is going to filter down through the years and how it's going to affect the Calgary Stampede.

Mr. Clark: Well, that's a good question. I don't know. I mean, what I know is that I remember that my relatives from Saskatchewan would come in, and they'd bring their polled Herefords in. They'd come for the Stampede show, and that was great. We got to see them. My cousin gave me her fifth-place ribbon to keep. I thought that was a pretty big deal.

But, you know, in all sincerity, we're taught to respect cultures, all cultures all around the world. I have a tremendous amount of pride in Alberta's multicultural society. Our culture is western heritage. That's who we are. That is who we are. We shouldn't ever apologize for that. That is absolutely who we are, and I maintain that. You know, my exposure to that is through my family on my mom's side, who still farm in Saskatchewan to this day.

You know, the Calgary Stampede is a lot more than a midway and Cowboys nightclub. It's an awful lot more than that. I think it's really important to remember what it is and what it represents, and that is a tangible reminder every day in the big city of Calgary about our western roots. It's not such a stretch to think that people in Calgary would be concerned about this issue because we still identify with that ranching and farming heritage.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you. To the member a further question. The issue about rodeos is actually . . .

The Deputy Speaker: We are back on the main bill. I want to call on the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am very happy to rise and speak to this legislation on behalf of the farmers in the beautiful riding of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. The majority of our farmers are within the county of Red Deer, some in the county of Clearwater. We have mixed farms, and we have ranchers. I have heard more from my constituents on this bill than on any other issue, in fact on all the other issues combined. Many of my constituents were here at the Legislature the other day. More were at the meetings in Red Deer. Some brought some four-footed friends along. There were a few turkeys there.

An Hon. Member: With feathers.

Mr. MacIntyre: There were some with feathers.

My constituents have voiced pretty consistently their concern about the speed with which this bill and other bills – but we're talking about this bill – is being run through this House. That's number one.

Number two: the fact – and it's a sad fact, Madam Speaker – that this bill was crafted by people who are not experts in farming. They may be experts in a lot of things, but there was nobody who crafted this bill from the farming community. They are the experts, especially the family farmers. They are the experts in farm safety. They have been the experts in farm safety for a long time, and the statistics that my colleague quoted earlier are statistical proof of just how well Alberta farmers have been operating safely in this province. We have the best statistics in the country. Surprising? Not really, not if you would take the time to go and live and work on a farm. Go through the four seasons and see all of the things that farmers do to ensure safety for themselves, their families, their workers, and for all of the living creatures whose lives they are responsible for. Safety doesn't just involve people.

Like all Albertans, farmers want to make sure that we in this Legislature get this legislation right, and they do not trust this government to do so because they have not been consulted appropriately. This government has a pattern of legislate first and so-called consult second, and that's not genuine consultation whatsoever. That is actually very dictatorial, and it has no place in a democracy. They want to make sure that their voices are heard. We had 1,500 or more of them on the steps of the Legislature.

I want to applaud the Hutterian Brethren for coming out. Members opposite may not know who they are. They were also at the Red Deer rally. You've got to understand that this is a religious order that is pacifist – they have a 500-year history of staunch pacifism – to the point where they have been persecuted for being pacifists, yet this bill was felt by them to be so draconian that they, you know, almost against every fibre in their being, came to that rally.

I was shocked to see the Hutterian Brethren there. I happen to have a long history with the Hutterian Brethren. I have worked for them as an employee of the Hutterian Brethren. I know them very well. They're a wonderful people, pacifist to the core, and they were here. I was very surprised to see them here and very surprised to receive a text from my constituency office manager in Sylvan Lake, who was at the Red Deer rally, saying: the brethren are here. She, too, was surprised.

That's the level of concern that the farming community is feeling about this bill, which they have not had input into. No input into this. It's shameful. Now, the Hutterian Brethren don't vote, but I'll tell you something: that can change. That can change if you push them into a corner. We'll see. I mean, they came to this rally, for crying out loud.

Farming and ranching are fundamental to Alberta's economy and culture, and this is as true today as it has ever been for generations. Our province grows wheat, barley, canola, alfalfa, oats, peas, and many other crops. We raise cattle, horses, chickens, pigs, and children by the boatload. We grow vegetables, berries. We have orchards. We have wineries right here in prairie Alberta. We have apiaries. We have the best honey anywhere. The abundance that our farms and ranchland provide feeds our province, much of our country, even many parts of the world.

There is a lesson that the other side, the members opposite, need to know: do not bite the hand that feeds you. Do not bite the hand that feeds you. They are feeling like their hand is being bitten, bitten by an insensitive government that isn't listening to the people. The hon. member – I'm sorry; Calgary-Hays, perhaps? – gave some fatherly advice. Bless you for some fatherly advice. We old guys like to do this from time to time. He gave an appropriate level of warning to the other side based on his own experience of what happens when a government is insensitive to the needs of the people. They're not government anymore. Three and a half years will go by mighty fast. Mighty fast.

There are 43,000 farms in our province, representing hundreds of thousands of farmers who, Madam Speaker, are the experts on farm safety, who have not been listened to, who have not been consulted and feel insulted instead. Much of our population in this province, though not on the farm at the moment, comes from the farm. Many children now living in the city have come from the farm, and they vote. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: We're not in committee anymore, hon. members.

My apologies. I was so engrossed in what you were saying that I didn't notice.

Mr. MacIntyre: Oh, my goodness. I've never had such a captive audience before unless they were my students. They weren't allowed to leave, so I could bore them to death.

That said, it is important to note that farming is not even solely an aspect of rural life. We have urban citizens that are increasingly rediscovering the satisfaction of growing plants and raising critters for food, from backyard chicken coops to community gardens, and municipal governments are even encouraging this shift in some places. They are becoming farmers. The reason for that is because it's a beautiful way of life. It's not a job. This Assembly is considering a private member's bill to even encourage local food production because Albertans recognize the value of farming, the personal value of farming.

Given that farming and ranching are so very important to Albertans, it would seem self-evident, well, at least to us over here, that we should carefully consider how we can best protect the people who work so hard doing that job, and rather than legislate and not consult, we should consult and then see if the legislation is even needed in the first place.

At these rallies that we have seen, Madam Speaker, the one that was held out here on the front steps, I took note that the Member for Calgary-Northern Hills was at that rally, on the outskirts of the rally, in a safe place around a planter, not too close, I suppose. Nevertheless, I know that that hon. member heard from the farmers, and we heard from the farmers. In fact, I was walking down the steps over here, and I could hear the farmers chanting from inside the Legislature here, with the big doors closed outside. What do you suppose I heard, I know that that hon. member heard? Kill Bill 6, kill Bill 6, over and over and over again.

We have heard the hon. ministers, at least two of them, say the following phrase, "We have heard from the farmers loud and clear," but not one of them said what they heard. I believe that maybe they're embarrassed to say what they heard. I know that the hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills heard: kill Bill 6. I guess my question to the hon. members on the other side who have farmers in their communities would be: are you hearing "Kill Bill 6," and if you're hearing it, are you bringing that story to caucus, or are you so ideologically blinded that you refuse to speak up on behalf of the people who put you in those seats over there?

Now, I just received a message here a little bit ago, Madam Speaker, that there are a great number of people actually watching this Assembly right now. There must not be a game on or something, but they're watching. They're watching to see what's going on, and the one thing that they will notice is that there's hardly anyone speaking about this bill on the other side. [interjections] No one, yet some of them have farmers.

So for the benefit of those who might be watching, the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose has at least 1,955 farms in his riding. You can reach him at 780.672.0000 in Camrose and 780.352.0241 in Wetaskiwin. You might want to phone him and let him know what you think about Bill 6, people.

The Minister of Energy, the Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, has 1,528 family farms in her riding. If you're watching – I wish I could do that number thing across here like they do on YouTube – just phone this number. It's 780.835.7211 or 780.837.3846, and let him know what you think about Bill 6. Their e-mail addresses are available on the legislative website.

Madam Speaker, I'm aware of the lateness of the hour. [interjections] Take it to the end? Give them some more?

Well, the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville has 1,430 family farms in her riding, and if you're watching, you can call these numbers: 780.992.6560 in Fort Saskatchewan, 780.632.6840 in Vegreville.

An Hon. Member: She's not standing up for farmers.

Mr. MacIntyre: No. The question that I would like all of you viewing tonight to ask is: are you standing up for farms; are you saying, "Kill Bill 6" in your caucus?

Well, Madam Speaker, it is now 10 o'clock, and perhaps we should move to . . . [interjections] No? Don't move? Keep going? [interjections] My colleagues want to keep going. I guess we'll keep going.

An Hon. Member: Just say the numbers a little slower, though, so they can write them down.

10:00

Mr. MacIntyre: Oh, they've got to write them down. That's true. Sorry, all you folks at home.

The Member for Leduc-Beaumont, who's here tonight: 1,255 family farms and has yet to speak up about this bill. If you're watching, you can reach him at 780.992.6560.

An Hon. Member: That's not the right number, actually. [laughter]

Mr. MacIntyre: Suffice to say, Madam Speaker, the laughter that you at home are hearing is the members on the opposite side, that seem to be mocking the serious reality of this draconian legislation, and they have not got the intestinal fortitude to stand up to this silly bill and vote it down.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. I will sit down.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments for the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. S. Anderson: Would the hon. member across from me actually like the number? Because I have been talking to people. I was just responding to an e-mail as he was speaking, and I was listening. So if you would like the real number, no problem. Every second of every day I'm open to listening to my constituents, and I've been talking to them every day so far. It's 780.929.3290.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments for the hon. member under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd move to adjourn debate until tomorrow morning.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Ms Phillips: Madam Speaker, I'd move to adjourn the House until tomorrow morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:04 p.m. to Wednesday at 9 a.m.]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. As we begin another day in service to the wonderful, hard-working people of this province, let us do so with patience, empathy, and a positive attitude.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 4

An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to move an amendment on behalf of the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board. I have the appropriate number of copies. I'll wait until they're distributed.

The Chair: All right. This will be known as amendment A1.

Mr. Bilous: Do you want me to proceed, Madam Chair?

The Chair: Yeah. I think you can go ahead.

Mr. Bilous: Sure. Colleagues, as you know, Bill 4 includes the so-called 1 per cent rule, which limits in-year operating expense increases to 1 per cent. Section 7(2) of the proposed Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, which is part of Bill 4, provides a series of exemptions to the 1 per cent rule for specific purposes such as emergencies, disasters, and the cost of new collective agreements.

Section 7(2)(e) was intended to provide an exemption for unbudgeted spending of reserves by entities like Alberta Health Services, postsecondary institutions, and school boards and also to allow them to spend incremental in-year revenue. This provision was included in Bill 4 given that the new budget format includes these entities on a line-by-line basis, consistent with the government's year-end financial statements. Unfortunately, section 7(2)(e) as currently drafted does not make it clear that school boards are exempted from the 1 per cent rule.

The proposed amendment A1 will correct this error. Schedule 1 is amended as follows: (a) in section 7(2)(e) by adding “, a board under the School Act” after “Financial Administration Act”; (b) in section 16 by striking out “1(1)(b)(iv); 10(1)(b)” and substituting “1(1)(b)(iv); 7(2)(e); 10(1)(b).” These small changes make it clear that section 7(2)(e) also applies to school boards.

Going forward, it's the government's intention that spending of reserves by these entities be factored into the government's budget in advance.

Those, Madam Chair, are my comments with respect to the amendment. I encourage all members of the House to support this amendment for the purpose of clarity.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's an honour to rise today and speak to the first amendment to Bill 4. I believe this amendment is made with the best of intentions and made to fix some of the errors in the bill. We're in the stage now where we can take a bill and make goodwill changes to the bill and amendments to it, and I thank the Deputy Government House Leader for acknowledging that this bill needs improvement. By the government's own admission Bill 4 is flawed and is not perfect and should not be put on a pedestal.

This amendment will find the support of the Official Opposition. It is a common-sense amendment to give some of our arm's-length agencies and institutions the flexibility that they need under what used to be the Fiscal Management Act. You will find the support of the Official Opposition for this amendment, and I would encourage all members to support it. But I would encourage members of the government side to acknowledge this as a sign that Bill 4 is not perfect and to consider reasoned amendments to the bill as debate progresses.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would kind of concur with what my hon. colleague just finished saying. This makes it less bad, in my opinion, which is an improvement, so thank you for the improvement. What it doesn't do – and there's a recurring theme here. I feel like a broken record, but unfortunately the government keeps teeing this up for us. It doesn't replace genuine consultation with the people most affected. It doesn't. There it is. The amendment is an improvement. It just is no substitute for actually talking to the people that you're legislating most directly upon.

Consequently, at least in my view – I don't know whether our whole caucus is going to go that way or not – this is an improvement. Again, I'm going to be a broken record now, but there is no substitute for real consultation.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I have significant concerns with a couple of sections of this bill, and section 7(2)(e) is one of those sections. While I concur that this does make it less bad, to pick up on the theme of my friend from Calgary-Hays, has anyone talked to school boards on this? Is this something that is coming as a surprise to our friends in school boards, and will they be wondering what this means in terms of their reserves?

I have a larger question about this section itself. The words at the end of section 7(2)(e) say, “unbudgeted additional revenue.” That, to me, is tremendously vague. In fact, I intend to bring an amendment later this morning to address that problem with this section. What does unbudgeted additional revenue mean? Is this a loophole so that the government can simply allocate money to school boards or postsecondary institutions or health care as a way of breaking if not the letter then the spirit of this act?

I have a tough time supporting this amendment because I don't believe section 7(2)(e) is appropriate at all. So I cannot support this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, we'll call the vote on amendment A1 as proposed by the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Back to the bill. Are there any further comments, questions, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Good morning, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to have you in the seat this morning. I appreciate your remarks as we had the opportunity to reflect. I believe that they concluded with something about a positive day. I think we have the opportunity this morning to work together collaboratively, to do what we've been sent into the Assembly to do, and that is to represent Albertans.

I know that members opposite sometimes like to make accusations about the opposition, but one of the things that the opposition is committed to doing is providing good ideas, reasonable solutions, and amendments to pieces of legislation that can strengthen the legislation that's being proposed by the government. We saw that last week with the opposition proposing a number of amendments to some of the estimates. We've seen the opposition proposing amendments to bills to send them to committee. On a few occasions we have seen the government and the opposition work together just as we did moments ago. The opposition supported an idea of the government, which is evidence that not everything that the government does is bad.

Now, the bill that we're debating is not that good, but the idea to amend it and make it less bad is a step in the right direction. This morning and perhaps into this afternoon, depending on the flow of debate, we have the opportunity to provide a bunch of those positive, common-sense type of amendments that will strengthen Bill 4, that will work towards ensuring that some of the key values that Albertans hold dear and have held dear over many generations in this province are upheld, and that can reflect some of the things that are important to Albertans. None of the amendments will stop the government from doing the things that they've spoken about doing but will put some parameters around their decisions and around those things so that Albertans can have certainty and the government still has enough rope in order to do what it needs to do.

I look forward to a really great morning and perhaps afternoon around some of the discussion about these amendments, and I encourage all members of the Assembly to thoughtfully consider the fact that the opposition also has some reasonable ideas and can add to the debate.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you to the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, the Opposition House Leader, for his comments. I will begin by discussing the need to amend this bill in general, and then I will be speaking specifically to proactive amendments that the Official Opposition will be making.

As we've just seen a few short minutes ago, no bill is perfect. There is no such thing as a perfect bill. There is no such thing as a perfect piece of legislation. There's good legislation, and there's bad legislation. Good legislation can be made better legislation, and bad legislation can be made, as the Member for Calgary-Hays has said, less bad.

What the Wildrose Official Opposition will be doing today is making amendments that make this legislation less bad. It's not like cough syrup, that is good for us but tastes bad. It tastes bad, and it's bad for our health. But we're going to do our best as the Official Opposition to make constructive amendments to this legislation to move it in the right direction. The government has now admitted through its own amendment that this legislation requires improvement. The government has admitted that their bill is not perfect and that it could be made better. Rather than make it better, I'm here today to make it less worse.

With that, I'm going to introduce a series of amendments, which I'm sure the members across will enjoy debating with vigour. Madam Chair, I will introduce our first amendment to the bill. Would you like me to read the amendment?

The Chair: Sure. Go ahead.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I will move that Bill 4, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, be amended in schedule 1 in section 2 by adding the following after subsection(2):

(2.1) The Contingency Account may only be used for the purpose outlined in subsection (2) if it has not already been used for that purpose in each of the two immediately preceding years.

Members, this is a common-sense amendment to ensure that what we've been doing for many years comes to a halt within the next two years. Once we went through a painful round of austerity as a province to get our budget under control. Previous governments had spent recklessly and broke the bank, and tough spending reductions were required to get the budget under control. We balanced the budget, and then we paid down the debt, and then the government of the day began to save.

They put money into the sustainability fund, but the sustainability fund was never intended to be able to support the government's operations for a decade. It was meant to be a short-term rainy-day fund. It was meant to get the government through a rough patch: if we had a large flood in Calgary, if we had wildfires in Slave Lake, if we had a recession in 2008. This was meant to be a short-term rainy-day fund to get us through a rough patch. It was never meant to be a permanent Band-Aid for long-term structural deficits and to paper over structural problems in the government's finances.

Since 2008 the government of Alberta has not balanced the budget once. Since 2008 the government has run consolidated deficits. In fact, the government even had to change the definition of a balanced budget to pretend it was running balanced budgets. But every single year our net financial assets have declined, every single year of the last eight years.

Under Premier Klein and later Stelmach the sustainability fund hit $17 billion. That handsome savings account allowed the government, though, to paper over its long-term structural fiscal issues once it ran deficits. Since 2008 that fund has been drawn down year after year, and this year it will finally run out. A rough patch can last a few years. But if we are spending more revenues than we are taking in, then we have a long-term problem that must be fixed.

The sustainability fund two years ago was renamed the contingency account. I suppose the name "sustainability fund" became a bit embarrassing when it proved to be less than sustainable as it almost ran out. But we've been papering over both consolidated and operational deficits for eight years now.

This amendment proposes to ensure that the sustainability fund, now called the contingency account, is only allowed to be used as a short-term rainy-day fund, that the government cannot build it up and then run another decade of deficits. Deficits may be appropriate in times of emergency – floods, fires, significant recessions – but they are not appropriate on a permanent structural basis. We have an obligation to taxpayers in this province to be responsible with their money. We have an obligation to young Albertans to not only stop taking on debt but to save for their future. If we are using the contingency account for more than two years consecutively, then we're not doing our job. We're not doing our job if we can't balance the budget on a long-term structural basis.

Now, this amendment does not preclude the government from continuing debt financing, which is a different topic entirely. It still allows the government to run consolidated deficits, but it means that on the operational side the contingency account cannot be used for operational deficits for more than two years. This puts a safety valve on the government's financial structure. This ensures that if the government wants to run a deficit, if there is an emergency, if they have a good reason for running a deficit one year, they are forced to have a plan to get back to at least an operational surplus within two years, let alone a consolidated surplus, again, one which we have not run in eight years. This is a common-sense amendment.

The members across have said that they want to balance the budget. I'm not sure I believe their plan is particularly realistic. I'm looking at the Member for Calgary-Currie: he's never going to forget that. I'm not sure that the plan to balance the budget is particularly realistic, but if the government members opposite believe their own plan, if they believe that we will be back in surplus in that time, then they should have no problem voting for this amendment.

This still allows the government to run consolidated deficits – something which will drive me nuts, and I'm sure you'll hear lots from me for the next three and a half years while you do so – but it puts limits on how long you can draw down the contingency account. Actually, that shouldn't be a big problem because we'll be out of money in the contingency account this year anyway. You won't be able to draw it down. It's going to be empty.

This is an amendment to fix a long-term problem. When the Wildrose balances the budget in five years, we're going to start putting money back into the contingency account. When we get back to a balanced budget, we should start reinvesting into the contingency account. [interjections] I'm very happy to see that the members across are bright-eyed and bushy-tailed and ready to debate fiscal policy today. That brings joy to my heart. Question period started early today.

While the contingency account is going to be out by the end of this current fiscal year, when we do get back to a balanced budget, the responsible thing to do is to start reinvesting in the contingency account, not up to $17 billion so that the government can paper over deficits for a decade but up to a figure in the $5 billion range. That account should not again be used to allow the government to paper over long-term structural problems. If we get back to a balanced budget, we need to rebuild the contingency account to an appropriate level so that we can cover off deficits for two years in the event of an emergency and then begin to reinvest in the heritage fund once again, something that we've been guilty of as a province for a very, very long time.

This is a common-sense amendment that will require no sacrifice of this government during the term of this Legislature. They don't intend to balance this budget until the next election, and even then – mark my words – they're not going to do it because their revenue projections are not even close to accurate. Even if they were, they still don't plan on balancing the budget until 2019 anyway, so the deficits that they will run between now and then will be financed 100 per cent through debt financing and not through drawing down the contingency account.

This amendment will not effectively come into force for at least some years to come, but it will fix a long-term structural problem with our finances. Governments in the past have with the best of intentions put money into the contingency account, once called the sustainability fund, and just used that when times got tough to run deficits but then never actually did the tough work necessary to get back to a balanced budget.

I know the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has talked about countercyclical economics and the need to run deficits when the economy is down. Even Keynes would say: run deficits in bad times, but run surpluses in good. Keynes never recommended permanent deficits. This is an amendment that I think Keynes would support. I think the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is nodding in support. That's a good sign.

I will conclude my opening remarks on the first Official Opposition amendment to Bill 4. I'd encourage members across to give this serious consideration. This is not an amendment that will affect the operations of the government in the term of this Legislature because, as I said, the budget is surely not going to be balanced at any time during this Legislature. Even then, it allows for two consecutive years of deficit financing for operations through the now contingency account. It will not affect anything you do for the rest of this Legislature, but it is a good, common-sense, long-term safety valve on the finances of the province.

Now that the members across have admitted that this bill needs improvement, that it needs to be less bad, I ask them to keep an open mind to this amendment and work together with the Official Opposition and all of the parties in this House and do what Albertans sent us here to do, and that is to try to find some common ground and work together. We don't vote against anything just because it comes from the government, and we hope that you will not vote against anything just because it comes from the Official Opposition. Let's do what Albertans sent us here to do and work together.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Having read the amendment and listened to the debate from the hon. member, I think that I need to correct the record on a couple of things.

Part of the problem with this amendment is that it's built on flawed assumptions. The hon. member said twice, at least a couple of times, during his speech just now that the budget hasn't been balanced in eight years. Well, the fact is that it was balanced last year. Now, I know that the hon. member will never agree with me on that, but you know who does? The Auditor. Folks at home listening, if they're wise, don't take anything that I say at face value and don't take anything the hon. member says at face value and maybe don't take what anybody says in this House at face value because it's always worth checking the facts. But I'll tell you facts that are worth checking are the ones that the Auditor approves, and the Auditor says that the budget was balanced last year.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Nope.

Mr. McIver: Yes, he does. So one of the biggest problems with this particular amendment is that it's based on a flawed assumption that, essentially, the Auditor doesn't agree with.

The other issue that I have – and the hon. member made some good points – is that the contingency fund, if there is money for it, is useful for things like emergencies, disasters when they come up.

None of us want those things to happen, but the fact is that they do. We've seen examples of it in the last few years: a major fire in Slave Lake; a major flood in High River, Calgary, southern Alberta; some areas of northern Alberta as well had flood damage all at the same time. While I actually appreciate the hon. member's intention to have money in the contingency fund – that's a good idea; thank you – I also know from previous things he said that the hon. member isn't in favour of debt, but this thing could actually lead to the government taking on more debt if that bright, shiny day comes where the government actually has money in the contingency account, and I didn't see any evidence that the government plans on doing that in the budget that they have on the table.

The fact is that should the government use money one or two years and then you have a disaster for one year, then the government, if they pass this, wouldn't have access to the contingency account during the very year when they have a disaster. Should the government use the contingency account for one year, and then there's a disaster two years in a row – we hope that never happens, but we all know that it could. We get forest fires. We get other fires. We get all manner of things.

At the end of the day – and I know that the intention is good; I know that the intention is to make the bill either better or less bad, depending upon your point of view, but I don't think that this particular amendment quite meets that standard. So I won't be supporting it, and I hope I've explained reasonably well why not.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair. First of all, my thanks to the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks for this amendment. I'm rising in support of the amendment for a couple of reasons. I want to talk about the longer term, the bigger picture. Obviously, if we dip into the contingency fund, which used to be the $17 billion sustainability fund, two years in a row, we have a structural deficit. We have a situation where we're spending more than the revenues allow, and of course that's inflationary. That's a hardship on the next generation. It's a situation where, you know, we need to ensure that here representing Albertans, working Albertans today, the next generation, we look in reality at how this overspending causes situations.

I look at the debt that Alberta has taken on in the last few years in spite of our record revenues, and I want to compare it to the reason we're here and where another jurisdiction is at. The education, the health care, the transportation, and the welfare that we're here to provide Albertans: of course, every tax dollar we take from hard-working Albertans competes with these other important requirements. I want to talk about the situation in Ontario for a second, where they face $11 billion or $12 billion a year in interest. Education, health care, transportation, and welfare must compete every year with this $12 billion in interest expense. I remember reading a report some time ago that indicated that in Ontario they spend more on interest than they spend on advanced education and job training combined, which makes me think you could have two York universities, two Carletons. We could have all kinds of job training. But, instead, that money is paid to bondholders. That money is paid to capital markets. That money is not put to the use of citizens.

I want to talk about where Alberta could be for a sec and why we need these structural reforms, why we need proper oversight on government spending. Of course it's hard. It's hard for government to say no when there are important needs, but I want to talk about the value of what savings could be instead. Of course, we're looking at a situation where a year or two ago royalties were $8 billion or $9 billion. This year, if I remember the number right, it's somewhere around $2.8 billion in royalties, a significant drop for the treasury of Alberta and the services we can provide, never mind the hardship that is providing for Alberta employees, Alberta families, and Alberta communities. Again, the opposite – the opposite – of spending more and more, spending our savings is what the interest could do, you know, for our economy instead.

I think back to the previous administration, especially the last eight or nine years, and the spending. I think back to where we could have been if we'd have just saved $100 billion or $120 billion in the heritage trust fund instead. I understand AIMCo makes 7 per cent, 7 and half per cent a year as an annual average. If we'd have saved about $120 billion, that would be that $8 billion or $9 billion that could easily replace royalties, which could easily fund the health care, the education, the welfare, and the transportation, that over 4 million Albertans are counting so desperately on, and the sustainability that gives us better value, that gives us better opportunity to plan long term. How easy would it have been to have saved $120 billion? I understand that royalties in the last 44 years were some side of $275 billion.

I remember reading a report that suggested that if the previous government would have just let compound the approximate $35 billion in interest that the original $17 billion that was put in the original heritage trust fund in 1976 – if they'd have just let that compound, it alone would have grown to $200 billion. Instead, this money was put into operations, and this money was put into government spending instead of the discipline – the discipline – that the last government, the discipline that this House could have shown over those 44 years that would have leveled out this situation, the situation that Albertan families, employees, and communities are facing now.

I look at how we as a House need to do things with equity and fairness. Absolutely, we a hundred per cent believe in supporting front-line workers. Absolutely, the stories roll in about how private companies and private employees are taking it on the chin right now and what that's going to do to our communities.

Alberta released yesterday – and I believe these are year-over-year results for where our economy is at. Exports are down 25 per cent. Agriculture receipts are down 4.8 per cent. Manufacturing: a 15 per cent drop. Wholesale sales: 9.8 per cent drop. Home sales in Alberta are down 25 per cent.

So we contrast this with a motion from the Official Opposition and our shadow minister of Finance, who wants some oversight and control on spending, on the ability to make sure that we get value for tax dollars.

I will take some exception with what the leader of the third party was saying about the budget being balanced. We get into this discussion of: do we count capital spending, what does the Auditor General think, what do other jurisdictions do, and do we actually borrow money to save money and take the risk of that? The fact remains, colleagues, that until five years ago, I think, Alberta was able – able – out of our annual revenues to pay for our operation expenses and our capital expenses. That is the comparison that I prefer to look at. Just a short five years ago the Alberta government was paying for operating, capital, and not putting the next generation of Albertans deeper in debt.

Reports are out there, and I did a report as Infrastructure critic called On Time and On Budget, that I tabled to the House, that showed how the last government had increased spending in the last eight years 54 per cent, more than population growth and inflation would have warranted. If our last government in that time period would have held spending increases just to population growth and inflation, a very, very reasonable measure and standard by many business interests and by many other jurisdictions, it would have been 54 per cent less spending, a total of $41 billion, $41 billion that we could have saved for future services for Albertans that need them.

So when the Wildrose opposition and our shadow minister come across with a thought-out amendment that says, “Let’s put the brakes on not controlling how we look after our finances, to provide health care, education, welfare, and transportation, to fund front-line services, to ensure that we don’t get the next generation, you know, deep in debt at a tremendous loss of services or a payment of interest to wealthier Albertans, Canadians, and people around the world,” it’s with caring and concern for being able to pay for front-line workers and protect the next generation.

I want to end by – it was mentioned that: oh, if we roll into the third or fourth year and we have a disaster, we might have to pay for that anyway. I remember a couple of budgets that I looked at that the last government had put forward, and I can’t honestly remember what the new government’s budget said a short time ago, but it appeared to me that we’ve been consistently underbudgeting what these disasters were costing us. We have historical records as to what disasters cost Albertans year after year. It’s imprudent and it’s improper not to budget properly for that. Use the information, put it in the budget, and let’s make sure that we protect Albertans’ needs: education, health care, welfare, and transportation. Let’s put in the mechanisms that allow us to control spending so we don’t put the next generation deep in debt at a loss of services.

Thank you.

9:40

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. I’ll keep my remarks brief. I was very, very proud to serve in this Chamber at a time when we built up the sustainability fund to $17 billion. That did not happen by itself. The truth of the matter is that when a lot of folks see that number, they think of the heritage trust fund. I trust that everyone in this Chamber knows those are two very different funds, and I’d ask every member of this House and all Albertans: do they know of any other jurisdiction in the free world where there is a $17 billion fund? At least there was a $17 billion rainy-day fund, as some referred to it. There isn’t one. It’s important that we differentiate between the two, and we appreciate that we do have the two.

I do have to react, though, to the point that was made a short time ago, how easy it would have been to save about $120 billion. Well, if it was easy, I’ll tell you that it would have been done. This is a comparison to Norway, which is nonsensical. A question I would have is: when you have the population of Red Deer moving to Alberta every year – and it’s cliché, but it’s true – people don’t bring their roads, schools, and hospitals. They don’t bring their services. Yes, they bring their taxes, but how can you possibly keep up with that? That’s a question that I would have.

But I want to get back to this comparison to Norway. Norway’s taxes – news flash – are sky high even in comparison to what this NDP government is proposing.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Don’t give them any ideas.

Mr. Rodney: No. I don’t want to give them any ideas.

But let’s just take a look back. Until a very short time ago Alberta enjoyed the lowest taxes of any jurisdiction anywhere, yet we had the $17 billion plus the $17 billion between the two accounts. Norway is a country. They don’t have to pay equalization payments and transfer payments. That does not apply. If you had been keeping track, it was $10, $15, or $20 billion that was sent towards Ottawa that we did not receive. If we kept those, we would have had way more than Norway, but Alberta is a province, as you know, and we are part of Canada, and this is constitutionally binding. This is something that we simply must do as a good member of Confederation.

I appreciate that the mover of this amendment has a great intention, that the rainy-day fund is to be used for rainy days and other similar circumstances. It’s a good idea. It’s simply not flexible enough. That’s the problem that I have with it. If we have a huge fire one year and a devastating flood the year after that and a terrible drought the next, I guess my question would be: are the people who suffer from the problems in years 2 and 3 simply out of luck? That’s not the Alberta way. That’s not what that’s for.

I would trust that forever we would have enough money to pay all of our bills and we wouldn’t have to use the rainy-day fund for things like operations, right? I completely understand about how you build in a downturn because of all of the costs going down, whether it’s the people who are going to be working there or the hard costs for materials, et cetera, but the fact of the matter is that a rainy-day fund should be there. It should be used only in rainy days, but it should be respected as such with flexibility.

So it’s a good idea, just not quite enough flexibility, and I would ask to call for the question unless there are other speakers.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, I thank the Member for Calgary-Lougheed and the leader of the third party for their comments. Actually, they’re well received, but I respectfully believe that they’re perhaps not understanding the full meaning of the amendment and its implications. When I spoke about the contingency account being a good tool for disasters, it does not affect the Fiscal Management Act, now renamed the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, a rather Orwellian title. It does not actually affect the ability of the government to borrow or use the contingency account for disaster spending. Disaster spending is a special section of, again, what is currently the Fiscal Management Act, which is in place and which will be grandfathered into the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. Nothing in this amendment changes the disaster-spending section of that act. So under this amendment the government could draw down the contingency account, running deficits for two years, but if a disaster happened in a third or fourth year, it would still have every single legal mechanism at its disposal to spend for disasters. Nothing changes that part of the act.

Right now governments already budget for disasters. One thing that I’ve long believed we should do is budget more realistically for disasters. We normally spend approximately $400 million to $500 million a year on disasters. Some of that might be because governments like to reallocate money around because it does allow for unbudgeted spending during the fiscal year. But regardless of that rather separate argument, we should be budgeting realistically for disasters to begin with.

Beyond that, this amendment in no way affects that part of the act which gives the government the power to spend for disasters. So if we hadn’t any money left in the sustainability fund, or contingency account, which is now running out, we would still be able to draw it down for another two years. If in that third year we had a significant natural disaster, nothing would preclude the government from being able to draw down the remaining funds in the contingency account if there were any or to go to capital markets to borrow to cover off that disaster spending.

The Member for Calgary-Lougheed and the Member for Calgary-Hays, the leader of the third party, would be very well placed with their concerns about this amendment if that were the case. So I would give them friendly counsel to reconsider that because I would agree with them if that were the case, if this were amending parts of the act which would prohibit the government from disaster spending beyond the contingency account. I would give friendly counsel to reconsider their position in light of their arguments, reasoned if well founded. I would urge them to reconsider their arguments as this amendment does not in any way impinge upon that section of the act.

Thank you.

The Chair: Other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would urge all of the members in this House to consider voting for this amendment. This is something that was started by putting surpluses into a sustainability fund. Over the first few years of a boom under Stelmach it hit $17 billion. Only a few billion were put into the heritage fund by Klein, none by Stelmach.

What we're seeing now is the fact that we're going to be running massive deficits going into the unknown future. I understand that we've got projections that we could possibly hit a balanced budget in five years; that's what the government is putting forward in their projections. But to be clear, we're not getting any paperwork or any backup on how exactly they're coming up with these radical assumptions of increased revenue that we're going to be looking for.

Now, we did see the implementation of a possible carbon tax. What we're hearing from the Premier is that they're planning on spending it all. Even if they were depending on additional funds coming through on this newly announced carbon tax, all we're hearing is that additional spending is coming forward. The question is: are we going to be balancing the budget any time?

This is why this amendment is so important. The intention of this fund wasn't meant to just continue to draw down every year because we can't make operational spending. It comes down to the fact that what we're looking at is that it's something that we need to be using in times when we have low oil prices, for instance. I understand that now is a good time to be looking at using the contingency fund, but the problem is that bad times have been happening for the past eight years, so we've been looking at drawing down a lot of this contingency fund. The thing is that we need to be looking at protecting this fund because in the end, if we use all of the fund, there won't be any contingency funds left.

Now, we're hearing from the NDP; they keep going back to this mandate that they were given by Albertans. I don't remember the mandate from the NDP platform saying that they were going to blow through our contingency fund. By voting down this amendment, they're voting against maintaining a contingency fund. This troubles me to no end. We could end up with no protection in the future.

Since 2008 the government has been using the fiscal gap that has been developing, and we're seeing that this fund is continually being drawn down. We're amassing debt as well as drawing down this contingency fund. We're not only seeing our contingency fund being drawn down; we're also seeing massive debt coming into place. What troubles me is that we're also looking at implementing a massive amount of debt in five years. This is in the government's projection. They're looking at creating a monster amount of debt. We're looking at $47 billion of debt. We probably won't have a contingency fund at the end of that five years. Where is the accountability from the NDP when it comes to protecting Albertans' contingency fund here?

Now, the contingency fund is really only meant for short-term deficiencies in income. This appears to be something that was not implemented when it first came forward with the original legislation. My colleague that put this forward is using foresight to show that this is something that we need to put forward to make sure that we actually start to put money forward for our future generations. In the end, we are accountable to our children. Someday my children are going to come to me and say: "You were a member of the Legislature. There's no money left from when the times were good. Why, exactly, is it that you didn't get up and speak in defence of us?" I am going to say that on December 1, 2015, I stood with my colleague . . .

Some Hon. Members: It's the 2nd.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you.

An Hon. Member: We fought this thing on December 1, too. It's okay.

Mr. Cyr: Yes. We're still reeling from Bill 6.

The fact is that I will be able to say to my children that on December 2, 2015, I stood up to protect the contingency fund and that those voting against trying to protect the fund were not looking out for Alberta's best interests in the future.

Going forward, we need to be addressing the fact that contingencies are always being put into place to protect Albertans, and as we draw down these contingencies, we need to be looking at the fact that our predecessors, who may not have been perfect, were actually using some foresight when they created these funds. Over the next five years I see nothing in the budget to actually start putting money into a contingency fund. Not only are we going to be drawing down on this, but we're also not going to be putting money forward for our children.

I understand that we do have the Alberta heritage trust fund. That is separate from the contingency fund, and this is money that is going to be moving forward. I am proud to say that I sit on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee, and we do want to be stewards of that money. Why are we not being stewards of our contingency fund when we want to be stewards of the Alberta heritage trust fund? We are actually responsible to Albertans to make sure that some of this money that we are making now gets moved forward into the future. We're all trying to make sure that in the end what we're looking to do is to make Alberta a better place, and the only way to make Alberta a better place is to make sure that we protect the ones that come after us.

I guess my fear is: should this fund cease to exist, are we going to be able to maintain the services and the front-line workers that we have today? There is no way to make sure that there are funds available in the future. Let's be clear. We need to be looking at the ability of our front lines to bring services forward. I understand that the only way that we can do some of these services right now is by possibly drawing down the contingency fund, but we do need to be making sure that we are spending within our means. This is where Wildrose has been very clear that instead of bringing in massive spending increases, we need to be looking at possibly going into our management and making cuts or through attrition going into the bureaucracy of the current government, making sure that our government is sustainable while reinforcing our front-line workers because in the end the front-line workers are what is important to all Albertans. I guess the point that I'm trying to drive down to is that spending this entire contingency fund isn't protecting our front-line workers.

To wrap it up, I would like to say that I support my colleague in this amendment. I support what he is trying to accomplish with this.

He is trying to bring accountability to government, and for that I would like to thank my colleague.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Back on Bill 4. Are there any further comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is fun to rise a second time. We'll see if we can find a few more fiscal conservative votes in the House on this one. I'm going to be putting forward another amendment to Bill 4. Would you like me to read the amendment?

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

10:20

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will move that Bill 4, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, be amended in schedule 1 in section 3(1) by striking out "15%" and substituting "7%." This is a reasoned amendment to, as the leader of the third party put it, make this bill less worse. This is an amendment to lower the higher debt-ceiling level that the NDP government is proposing to a lower threshold of 7 per cent of GDP.

In 1993 former Provincial Treasurer and Finance minister Jim Dinning, a man whom I have great admiration for and who is possibly the greatest Finance minister this province has seen, put forward the Government Accountability Act and the Fiscal Responsibility Act. In there he put forward reasonable limits on our debt limit, on the reporting of that limit, and basic accountability measures to ensure that politicians' spending did not get out of hand, that the debt we were taking on would be limited to a reasonable amount.

Circa 2008 those acts were continually watered down. They were watered down further in 2012, when the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act were repealed. Jim Dinning said in '93 that if any subsequent government were to repeal or even water down either of those acts, legislators would have to look Albertans, quote, in the whites of their eyes and explain to them why they deserve subpar government. But those acts were first watered down and then repealed. The Government Accountability Act and the Fiscal Responsibility Act were replaced with the Fiscal Management Act.

The government is now proposing to replace the Fiscal Management Act with the Orwellian-named Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. If there is fiscal planning here, it is planning for more debt and more deficits. It is planning to recklessly increase our debt limit still further. The debt limits that have been proposed continuously in this House have been fictitious.

The U.S. Congress raises its debt ceiling nearly every year. The politicians come together, they pat themselves on the back, and they say: we're setting a limit on the debt. A year later they meet again, and they do it all over. They continuously raise it up. The debt ceiling goes up, and the bar of government goes down.

The new government is now proposing a 15 per cent of GDP debt limit. That'll be approximately $50 billion of debt. Financial institutions have said that the NDP is likely to blow through this, that they're not even likely to balance the budget by the time they hit the 15 per cent debt-to-GDP limit. There is no consequence for going over that debt-to-GDP limit. If we are going to take as a given that this government is going to continue to take on debt, then there should be a more reasonable limit on the level of debt that they take. Fifteen per cent is an unacceptably high debt burden for the most prosperous jurisdiction in North America to be carrying. Fifteen per cent of GDP, or $50 billion of debt, is an admission of fiscal failure. It is an admission that the government has no plan to ever balance the budget.

As I've discussed, our net financial assets have declined as a province for nearly a decade now. At some point we have to turn that around. At some point we have to balance the budget. The further we go into debt and the deeper we dig ourselves into a hole, the longer it's going to take to get out of it. Fifty billion dollars of debt will be difficult even for a fiscally conservative government to dig us out of within a decade. Now, if the members across will allow me to embellish for a moment, in a sense I'm asking them to make it a little easier for the Wildrose to make us debt free in a few years. I'm asking them to dig the hole a little less deeply for us to get us out of in a few years.

We're proposing a reasonable limit on the debt. Seven per cent of GDP is still too high. Zero per cent of GDP is too high. We are the most prosperous jurisdiction in North America. There is no reason that we should not be able to balance our budget. There is no reason that we should have $50 billion of debt but a mere $17 billion in the sustainability fund. So we're proposing a reasonable compromise, not that we believe that 7 per cent of GDP is reasonable but because we believe it is less unreasonable than 15 per cent of GDP.

I ask all members of this House to give it serious consideration. If the members across have any real intention of balancing the budget, then they should have no problem voting for this amendment. This will still allow them to take on gross amounts of debt in the next few years, but it requires them to stop taking it on before this Legislature is dissolved before the next election. It means that they have to put their money where their mouth is, that if they actually believe that they can balance the budget before the next election, then they should be able to vote for it.

Now, they've changed their balanced budget date promise three times already. They changed it once during the election, they changed it once immediately after the election, and they changed it again just a few weeks ago. I've got 20 bucks for any member across who is willing to bet me that they'll change it again pretty soon. I'm looking for Calgary-Currie.

In all seriousness, Madam Chair, this is putting reasonable restrictions on the power of the government to borrow without end. A 7 per cent debt limit still vastly increases the powers the government is giving itself to borrow and to spend, but it is giving fewer proposed powers than they are proposing to give to themselves. This is fiscally responsible.

This is not just fiscally conservative. This is not just something that those of us who believe in limited government support. This is something that Tommy Douglas would support, a prairie populist socialist who believed in redistribution but understood that you need to balance the budget to do that. Tommy Douglas believed in balanced budgets. Tommy Douglas knew that you couldn't take on debt without end. He knew that if you wanted to distribute wealth, as the NDP likes to do, you still have to balance the budget at the end of the day.

So this is not just about fiscal conservatism or limited government; this is about fiscal responsibility. All members of this House who want to go back to their constituents and look them in the whites of their eyes and explain to them why they're willing to take on $50 billion of debt without any plan should vote against it, but members who want to go back to their constituents and look them in the eyes and say that we did what was right will vote for this amendment.

Madam Chair, I encourage all members of this House to vote to lower the debt ceiling that the government is proposing from 15 per cent to 7 per cent. It is the fiscally responsible thing to do.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

10:30

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to rise today in support of this amendment, and I actually rise because I'm in support of any amendment that curtails the spending that this government has been willing to do. Any measures that provide checks and balances on a government, I think, always serve the best interests of Albertans.

I think about where we were 12 or 15 years ago, when I was proud to be an Albertan. We had no debt. We had a plan for our children's future. We had hope, and because we had this, Madam Chair – and it wasn't found in other provinces and other parts of the world – people came to Alberta in droves. This is the reason why we had not as good – $18 a barrel: that's what we did this on. Today we're at $45 a barrel, and when you can't balance your budget on the third-highest income that your province is seeing ever, then you've got a problem. You don't have a debt problem; you have a spending problem. You have a spending problem, not a revenue problem. This is the problem.

The problem that I see with this government is that they adhere to the concepts of Keynesian economics. There absolutely is a plethora of information out there now that shows, Madam Chair, that Keynesian economics have done the world no good. Greece.

We have record debt throughout the world, the depreciation of every currency in the world, yet these governments and our government to this day seem to be holding tenaciously to the idea that we can spend ourselves out of the problems that we have.

Madam Chair, really why I got involved in this in the first place was because I became a grandparent. I was very concerned by what we would be able to bequeath to our children and grandchildren. I was concerned about the state of affairs that they would have to be given, and I thought that it's important for us to be champions for the people who don't have a voice yet, those people who aren't 18, those people who aren't born yet. It has to be a sustainable program that we provide for our children's and grandchildren's future. If it's not sustainable, there's another word for it. It's called a Ponzi scheme. It is not able to continue for the future. Yes, there might be lots of bells and whistles and it might look fantastic, but it's not something that is sustainable, and it will not allow our children and grandchildren to be able to inherit something that we would be proud to give them.

This is the number one reason why I decided to get involved in politics, because our children and grandchildren deserve a champion. They deserve someone who will be able to stand up, even though they don't have a voice today, for their future. There are many countries throughout the world, Madam Chair, that are not willing to put their children's and grandchildren's interests first. Now, the members opposite can laugh and scorn all they want, but at some point – at some point – this debt has to be paid off.

So I'd like to take this a little bit differently. I'd like to take a different tack on this. The new Alberta way: we've changed the wording from the Alberta advantage, which I was very happy with and millions of Albertans were happy with. The Alberta advantage allowed us the opportunity to prosper. This is what the people wanted. Now, if you compare what we did with other provinces, we were light years ahead of them, and we were proud about being Albertans. In fact, it was so amazing of a juggernaut economy that the rest of Canadians decided that they needed to come here. This is why we had 100,000 people moving in every year.

The new directive or the way we're going to describe Alberta is called not the Alberta advantage but the Alberta way, and this is now being described by the NDP government as the right way. My question is: if we get ourselves into debt – it sounds like the die is cast. Nothing but the crying needs to happen now. So if they have the ability to diversify, as they say they want to do – they want to move away from the roller-coaster ride of the oil and gas. Given, it has been a wild roller-coaster ride, for sure. But if they move away from the oil and gas sector and move into other sectors and then get themselves into serious debt, what assurances or what precedents do we have that that new economy that they're touting will actually be able to pay off that debt in the future? What assurances do we have that the economic approach that this government is trying to present to us actually is the proper go-forward plan, the plan that will allow us to have the financial stability that our future generations deserve?

I don't see any precedents. I have seen no precedents. I would love to see the studies that these guys are building their platform on. In fact, every single time, Madam Chair, that we've asked this government to give us an economic impact study, which is a forward-looking approach to their plan, they've said: stay tuned; as things roll out, we'll let you know how it's going. That's dangerous.

You know, as much as I would like to be someone that helps – and we've talked about that. [interjections] I think that we have a situation where this government is definitely ideologically based. I think they have great ideas. I think they have the . . .

Mr. Cooper: Point of order, Madam Chair.

Point of Order Decorum

Mr. Cooper: Madam Chair, I rise on 23(j), language or whatever. We have a very long morning. I appreciate a very good heckle from time to time. I think as we move forward – we've got a morning all the way till noon to spend together. I just think that perhaps we could try to keep the banter down on all sides of the House. I wondered if you might agree.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. First of all, this isn't 23(j). The member on this side did not use abusive or insulting language.

I think, though, that the opposition House leader's point is that members are getting very excited and very passionate about what we're discussing, which is great to see. I think that there isn't a point of order here but that members on all sides of the House can maybe be a little more respectful of the speaker.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. members. I was actually just at the point where I was going to remind everyone that the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner did have the floor. So please be respectful of the person who is speaking.

Thank you.

Continue, hon. member.

Debate Continued

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do appreciate the concern that I'm hearing. I really am not trying to say things that are inflammatory. I'm trying to tell you that my concern is real, my concern for those people who don't have the opportunity of being able to vote, don't have the opportunity of being able to say: "This is what I want you to do for my future. This is the hope that I want you to be able to give me. This is who I want to champion."

10:40

I'm asking you to support this amendment, which allows us to still be able to provide the front-line workers that we all need and want in this province. Teachers and nurses and doctors play an integral role in our workings in our province. We respect them. We honour them. We know that they need to be able to have proper remuneration for their work. I don't think we've ever said anything different. What we're saying is: let's make it sustainable; let's make it something that does not put undue burden on future generations. That is called a Ponzi scheme. Simply put, it is not sustainable, and we have to get back to a model that is sustainable, not one that we think might be sustainable but that actually in the past has shown that it is sustainable, and that is making sure that you don't spend more than you have.

In this situation this is actually a compromise. This is a compromise. It's not something that I would – I am not a person that believes in getting into debt. I was so happy to be an Albertan, proud to be an Albertan when Ralph Klein, with his big white stetson hat, stood up and said "Paid in full" with a big sign. Now, I appreciate that getting out of debt, that having the lowest taxed jurisdiction in Canada creates a juggernaut of an economy so that everybody wants to get involved in it and have a part of that Alberta advantage. I understand that. So we supercharged the economy because of policy, not because of an $18 barrel of oil. Let's be clear about that. It's because of good fiscal policy. That's what made them come. You build it, and they will come. This is the sort of thing that we need to get back to. If you build opposite to that, they will leave, and then our pie will shrink. We won't have any opportunity of being able to provide for those services that we hold near and dear in this province.

The province has some of the best trained doctors and nurses, some of the best trained teachers. I respect them. I used to teach. I taught for two years, the proudest two years I ever had, and I made the least that I've ever made. I'm glad that teachers do make more so that they can provide for their families. I think it's important. But, once again, the model has to be sustainable. We need to take a look at this and say: are we overspending in terms of our operations? Now, I get that capital expenses are important. I am in favour of some debt for capital spending because oftentimes when you put a dollar into capital spending, you get $7 out. That makes financial sense to me. Now, that is an investment.

But when you go into debt or you deficit spend for operational spending, that's dead money. That's like taking your credit card and going out and buying your groceries or your filet mignon or whatever you buy on your credit card. It's dead money. This is the sort of thing that we need to make sure we stay away from. I am one hundred per cent in favour of this amendment that my fellow colleague has brought forward because it is a way of being able to say: let's put in some checks and balances, let's put some thresholds on the spending ability of this government and all governments in the future.

The United States has been struggling with this for a long time. Every single time we hear of them saying: we're going to shut down the government because they want to raise the debt threshold. I think that the 7 per cent is reasonable. I'd love to see it lower than that. I'd like to see it at zero, to tell you the truth. I'd like to be able to see us actually have a rainy-day fund that is robust, that allows us to be able to go through those difficult times, those peaks and troughs in any economy, but we're not in a situation now. We've blown through that rainy-day fund. So I understand that we have to take it from where we're at now, which is that we're going to have to deficit finance.

This is why I think that this is a compromise that's a prudent compromise. It's that we are taking a look at our scenario that we're at right now, not wishing that we were at a different scenario, and I'm in favour of this compromise. I do wish that we had not gotten to the point where we were having to even look at 7 per cent, let alone 15 per cent.

Madam Chair, I've had the opportunity of being able to, I think, articulate my concerns with the general budget and my appreciation for the amendment that has come forward to show the fiscal restraint that every reasonable government should be looking at. I thank you very much for the opportunity to be able to speak on this matter today.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to speak against this amendment. There are a couple of things that the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner said that I have a real issue with. He talked about the fact that he was proud to be an Albertan. I'll tell you what. I am now and I always will be proud to be an Albertan. Whether any of us agrees with what policy is passed or not passed in this House, I am fiercely proud to be an Albertan, and I always will be.

The other thing I take issue with is the discussion of the fact that you don't believe in Keynesian economics, but then you went on to say that capital spending can return $7 to $1 invested. That, my friend, is the definition of Keynesian economics.

Lest our friends on the government side get too excited, I have some significant concerns with the amount of borrowing this government plans to do. The 15 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio in and of itself is a reasonably prudent limit, but what I want to be really clear with the government about is that that is not the only factor that credit-rating agencies use to determine Alberta's credit worthiness.

There are five factors that the Dominion Bond Rating Service, DBRS, uses, debt to GDP being one of them, the cap at 15 per cent. Of those five factors, so far so good for Alberta.

The real GDP growth rate is another measure. Unfortunately, Alberta's real GDP growth rate is forecast over the next three years to be below the national average. That's one strike.

The surplus-to-GDP ratio should be a 2 per cent threshold. We want a 2 per cent surplus-to-GDP ratio. Unfortunately, we're now at negative 1.9 and not predicted to recover until 2018. That's strike two.

Federal transfers as a percentage of total revenue. Currently, we are above the threshold level of 15 per cent at 16 per cent and not anticipated to recover until 2018 at the earliest. Strike three.

Point five: our interest-costs-to-revenue ratio, a 5 per cent threshold. Based on the forecast projections in this budget, we'll exceed that in 2019. Strike four if there is such a thing. That's a significant concern.

What happens? What happens if Alberta has our credit rating downgraded? Our interest costs go up. Has this government done the math? Has this government actually done the calculation, a sensitivity analysis, to find out what it will cost should Alberta find itself in a position of having its credit rating downgraded? According to the Minister of Finance in estimates the answer is no. You haven't done that work, and that scares me a great deal, Madam Chair. Our team has calculated that Alberta will face an extra $700 million in debt-service costs alone by 2019 if we, in fact, suffer a 1 per cent increase to our costs of credit.

Now, having said that, this amendment specifically talks about reducing that threshold from 15 per cent to 7 for a couple of reasons. One, I think that capital spending in a time of economic downturn creates jobs, builds the capital infrastructure that we need in this province. But, also, the fact is that it is but one of five factors at least that we need to consider.

Given that, I will be voting against this amendment. Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd like to speak to the amendment. One of the things I'd like to talk about is that when we're talking about this 15 per cent threshold, to me, that threshold is reasonable. I mean, even at 15 per cent Alberta's government's debt-to-GDP ratio would be half the weighted average of the other provinces combined, which to me seems reasonable. Also, the 15 per cent ratio – you know, we're talking with the ministers here – is the ratio that's regarded as a reasonable and manageable limit by our credit-rating agencies. During other debates in the House that comes up rather often, and we still have a triple-A credit rating, and there's been no indication that this 15 per cent plan would do anything to harm that.

Going forward, you know, Alberta still remains a great place to invest. We have sustained tax advantages over other jurisdictions, and the investments that we make today will lay the foundation for a more diversified, stronger economy. I've also heard from the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner that he was against all government spending. It was his opening line, and then he later went on to say: build it, and they will come. You know, part of what this 15 per cent limit allows us to do is some spending on infrastructure for things like schools and roads and the things that Albertans need.

The members opposite also suggested that – you know, a previous Premier, with a stetson, held a sign, "paid in full," that the debt had been paid back. Well, unfortunately, that debt was paid back not by saddling Albertans with debt but by saddling Albertans with crumbling infrastructure, that, I would say, the last election was fought on. The reason why we're bringing forward our capital spending plan aggressively is to correct those errors.

The previous debt was an infrastructure debt, and I believe that the 15 per cent number is reasonable. Reducing it to 7 per cent, I think, would unnecessarily hamper the plan that we are putting forward and would unnecessarily hamper Albertans in regard to the schools, the roads, for me personally in Calgary the ring road, cancer centres, and a variety of other infrastructure needs that every single MLA in this House hears about from their constituents and that need to get built because previous governments had not invested in infrastructure.

I will not be supporting this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, this is an interesting day. We have an amendment here to take the government's planned 15 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio down to 7, made by the member that a few minutes before that said that zero per cent was too much. Here's what's interesting, Madam Chair. The mover's colleague the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner said what I thought was a reasonable thing to say: some debt is fine to build infrastructure. So there seems to be a split in the party there about: what is their party's position? We heard two very divergent opinions within about a half hour in the House from seats two rows apart.

I would submit to you that I would agree more with the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. That is the position that our party, when it was in government, took, that some debt was reasonable to build infrastructure, but you had to have a reasonable plan to pay it off. Madam Chair, that's where our party stands, really, in the middle of the extremes over there and the party over here. The party over there wants to build things, which is great, and wants their borrowing essentially unfettered, which isn't great, and has no plan to pay it back, which isn't great. Our party's plan always was to borrow reasonably, build the infrastructure as you could, and have a reasonable plan to pay it back.

Now, the party making the motion likes to take the position that they don't want any debt, and they talk about how they'd like $120 billion back, but they don't like to talk quite so much about which roads, schools, and hospitals they would unbuild to get there. That is why Albertans are looking for a more reasonable position, a position that I would submit to you that our party . . . [interjections] Madam Chair, we heard from the party over there that they were concerned about a good heckle but didn't like it when somebody was trying to make somebody not get heard, and here we are trying to be back to where you can't be heard.

Again, that's part of the inconsistency, Madam Chair, to say one thing one minute and something the next minute and hope that Albertans won't notice, but Albertans do notice. They do notice. They notice that they want hospitals, schools, and roads, and they don't want runaway debt. There is that zone in the middle that our party, when we were in government, always aimed for and we still advocate for today. That's where we're at. You know what? I think that this motion, Madam Chair, actually moves us closer to there.

I would say to the mover that maybe he's having a weak moment because this seems like fiscal conservative lightweight compared to what he usually says. Having said that, it's an improvement on where the government was going to go, with 15 per cent. In fact, I'm surprised that he didn't go lower than this, but this is an improvement on what the government's plan is now.

I can see my way clear to support it because it does get us closer to the place where the PC Party has always been, where we believe in a reasonable amount of debt to build the hospitals, schools, and roads that Albertans need within the range that they can afford and pay back in a reasonable amount of time, not zero debt.

I've said in this House before – and I'll say it again because I think it's worth saying – that telling Albertans that we're going to pay cash for your schools: tell your six-year-olds to wait till they're 16 so we can pay cash for the school, and then they can start grade 1. I know that the party over here doesn't want that, but that's the problem that they have. You can't say, "No debt," yet you're going to build things at the same time. They're just not consistent with reality. [interjection] Yeah, they are. Albertans know that. Albertans know that.

I do like the party over here, the fact that they want debt controlled although, as we heard this morning, there's a divergence of opinion within the party. Sometimes they take a hard line – all debt is bad – and sometimes they take a more reasonable line like we heard here this morning. A little bit of debt to build infrastructure and paying it back in a reasonable amount of time are the right things. That's the PC position. Thank you. I appreciate that.

That, I think, is the position where Albertans are, but I will say to the government members that I don't think that Albertans are at the point to have runaway debt with no plan to pay it back, to take on debt that amounts to a year's income for the government and only have a week's income from the government available to pay it back, because, essentially, you can't pay it back.

I also have sympathy for some of what the leader of the Alberta Party said on . . .

Mr. Clark: The surplus.

Mr. McIver: Yes, the surplus. It's important to be in a position where you actually can afford to pay your day-to-day operations in a reasonable way.

On balance, this has been an interesting discussion, but at the end of the day I find myself finding the motion from the Wildrose Party Member for Strathmore-Brooks to be an improvement on what the government put forward in the legislation. When the time comes, when you call for it, Madam Chair, I intend to vote in favour.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in support of this amendment. Presently the government is proposing a 15 per cent debt-to-GDP limit. That's $50 billion. I'm sorry, but that's just too high a limit. This amendment proposes a 7 per cent limit, which is $25 billion. Twenty-five billion dollars is a lot of money. I believe that's the highest debt that this Alberta government will have ever been in. That's a record debt. I don't see where the problem is with a 7 per cent limit. I think that's very reasonable.

I think that what happens in government is that we get used to talking about millions and billions of dollars like it's nothing, but I think we need to realize that this is taxpayers' dollars. This is hard-working Albertans' money, that we are caretakers of, and we need to respect that. We need to spend every dollar wisely. This government that we have here now is bringing in a budget where there is absolutely no restraint shown.

Now, here in Alberta we're the envy of the country and maybe even the world because we're blessed with abundant resources. I'm here to say right now that I'm proud to be an Albertan. To have the Member for Calgary-Elbow suggest that the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner is not a proud Albertan, I take great exception to that, and I know he takes great exception to that, too. That was something very disingenuous to say. It was a cheap political shot. He in no way indicated that he was not proud to be an Albertan.

Now, the members opposite laugh about $50 billion of debt. It's too bad that the people of Alberta can't have a camera there watching them laugh at $50 billion of debt, laugh at the loss of jobs, laugh at Bill 6. I wish that the people of Alberta could see that.

There have been some comments today about deficits and the different types of deficits and how the Auditor General views things with deficits. We can keep this simple, very simple. This government, the Alberta government, has been spending more than it has taken in for eight years now, and this government's plan is to do that for another five years. Now, we can call that whatever we want – you can twist things around and call a surplus whatever – but I know that in my household when I spend more than I take in, I'm in the hole. That's the way every other Albertan views that, too. When I go into the bank and I say that I've spent more than I've taken in the for last eight years and that I want to do it for the next five years and that I want to borrow some money, I'm going to get laughed out of there. We need to realize that what I consider a deficit is spending more than I take in. That is a deficit, and that's clearly the definition that most Albertans would see, too.

Now, we've had some scoffing go on about how much money we could have saved with the heritage trust fund. It's at $17 billion. I've seen some figures here that suggest that had we not taken the interest off that $17 billion over all this time, we could have $300 billion saved right now. Can you imagine? Three hundred billion dollars. And we have $17 billion. What I want to remind everybody is that interest can work for you if you have money saved. You take the interest and you acquire more interest from that interest, compounding interest. Then your money can work for you. But when you're in debt, the interest works against you. It's a burden. I don't want to see Albertans burdened. I don't want to see my children and grandchildren burdened with this debt and the interest that we have to pay.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It gives me pleasure to rise at this time to move an amendment. I have the requisite number of copies for distribution. While the copies are being distributed, I'll give some background remarks to this particular amendment.

11:10

The amendment appears rather long, but in point of fact the salient point of this amendment is at the very bottom, where it deals specifically with operational deficit. In my discussions with constituents and in other places around the province the area that has created by far the most concern is the abandonment in this budget of the 20-plus-year-old policy of not borrowing for operations; in other words, running a balanced budget. In some years even running a balanced budget on the operational side means dipping into the contingency fund. You know, in point of fact, I guess it could be argued that it's not truly balanced. That debate is one that I think we could have at another time, but it means that operationally, basically, you have the funds to pay for day-to-day expenditures and that you're not borrowing for day-to-day expenditures.

I think one of the things that fundamentally separates the various parties within the House is how debt is to be handled and the idea that there is good debt and bad debt. In my view, good debt is the kind of debt that is an investment and that will pay off in the long run in terms of building the economy and providing the necessary infrastructure for public services going forward. That, to me, is good debt in a number of ways, not the least of which is that it means that infrastructure that is needed – schools, hospitals, roads – can be built when it's needed or at least closer to when it's needed and that we don't have the situation where the economy has a false brake placed on it because of lack of critical infrastructure.

You know, just in that regard, I'd like to make mention of a conversation I had with a state legislator when I was on a Pacific NorthWest Economic Region trip to the capital of Alaska, Juneau, in January. Parenthetically, it was interesting. There were a number of different members of our caucus who travelled to different things, and I found it somewhat humorous that I was chosen to go to Juneau in January, but that was the nature of the beast. It was very interesting, though, in that I met with the chair of their state Legislature's finance committee, and I also met with the state's Governor.

We often hear about Alaska and its permanent fund. The permanent fund is now somewhat in excess of $50 billion. We talked a little bit about operational spending versus capital spending. I asked the question: "You've got a $50 billion permanent fund. Do you borrow for capital expenditures? Do you take on capital debt? You've got this huge permanent fund." The reply I got from the chair of the finance committee of the governing party was: "Well, of course we borrow. You'd have to be a moron not to borrow for capital." I found that an interesting statement. I said, "Well, why would you borrow when you have all this cash in the permanent fund?" They said: "But the permanent fund is earning us 6, 7, 8 per cent, and we can borrow at 2, 3 per cent. Basically, what we do is that we borrow, we build the necessary infrastructure, and we go from there." Now, I would argue, based on my casual observation from being there for two or three days, that they don't do nearly enough borrowing for critical infrastructure. My assessment of the infrastructure in Alaska was that it was woefully inadequate, but that's a discussion for another time.

The discussion that we're concerned about today and the discussion that Albertans are vitally concerned about is the notion of borrowing for operations. This, to me, is a fundamental fiscal error. Operations need to be funded out of day-to-day revenues, and even in the worst-case scenario, where day-to-day revenues have a precipitous fall, as we're experiencing this year, there needs to be contingency fund savings to pay off and to be able to soften that blow.

We hear about a shock absorber quite often from the other side in describing this budget. Well, the purpose of having a contingency fund is so that you indeed do that shock absorbing. My concern with this budget is that we're going to hit rock bottom on the springs in less than a year and a half, and then the shocks are gone. Then the shock absorbers are no longer in the vehicle that Albertans are riding in, and every bump that we hit we are going to feel very, very firmly because the $8.3 billion that was turned over to this government by the previous government in the contingency fund will have been blown through.

I just want to clarify that for my friends in the Official Opposition when they say that we've blown through our savings. In point of fact, at the time that this government took over, there was $8.3 billion still in the contingency fund. Granted, not as high as $17 billion, when it topped out, but still $8.3 billion. Now, the rate at which they're depleting that fund is frightening, I would certainly agree, and it's a concern to Albertans. Not only will the $8.3 billion be gone, but there is absolutely zero plan to rebuild the savings whatsoever over the course of the next three years.

Operational deficits are indeed an enemy to all of us. Operational deficits do not assist us. They're bad debt. They're debt to run your day-to-day operations. In terms of your day-to-day household expenses, it's borrowing money to keep the lights on. It's borrowing money for day-to-day expenses, and that simply increases the spiral of debt and deficit.

You know, we here in this party call ourselves fiscal conservatives, but we're also fiscally pragmatic people. That means, when we're pragmatic, that we take on reasonable and judicious levels of debt for capital spending, for capital investments, and we have a plan to pay it back. That does distinguish us, I think, from both the party of the Official Opposition as well as the government party in terms that there it's borrow for everything, here it's borrow for nothing, and we're saying: no, no; Albertans believe we should borrow judiciously for those things that you need that will build the economy.

Madam Chair, borrowing for everything, especially borrowing for operations, is not a good plan. Therefore, this amendment calls for that, and I would encourage all members to support the amendment as presented.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm going to speak to this amendment in a forward-looking way. Sometimes this House – and I'm a guilty party to this – focuses too much on the sins of the past. Certainly, the vast majority of people who count themselves as Wildrosers today counted themselves once upon a time as Ralph Klein Conservatives. Certainly, there was a divergence of opinion at some point.

When I speak about historical examples, I'm not meaning to dwell on the past or to try and hurt in any way the current members of the third party but as historical lessons. We also speak favourably of much of the past as well. We don't necessarily mean it as a commendation for the third party either. We speak favourably of the past for some things, but we also condemn the past for others. We're not going to try and play the blame game today. We need to focus on going forward, what the government today is doing, so bear in mind that when I speak of historical examples here, it's meant as lessons from the past for the future.

I thank the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for bringing this amendment forward. I believe it's meant with the best of intentions; however, it is quite problematic. The new government has inherited a small contingency account relative to its historical levels, but it has also inherited $14 billion of debt and a trajectory that would have taken on significantly more debt. There is good debt, and there is bad debt, and I think we may differ in our opinions of good debt and bad debt.

Now, governments like to say that, well, businesses take on debt, so we can take on debt, too, but when businesses take on debt, smart businesses take on debt for assets that earn a return. A widget maker might buy a machine that helps him make widgets, and that can earn a return. When governments take on debt, the vast majority of that debt is for assets that do not make a return. They might be valuable assets in their own right, but they do not earn a financial, tangible return. Schools might have long-term intangible returns on them, fire stations might have long-term intangible returns on them, but they are not cash assets. Assets that make returns are assets like, for instance, a toll road that would earn a cash return. That would be a more reasonable comparison to private-sector debt taken on by businesses. If an asset does not earn a financial return, then by a business definition it is not good debt.

This amendment does make this bill slightly less worse, but it does perpetuate something that could potentially make it worse. Again not intending to offend members of the third party, we've had a significant problem in this province for years now where we've changed the definition of a balanced budget to make it called balanced. I would be enthusiastic about this amendment if the word "operational" was stricken out and replaced with "consolidated." When your net financial assets decline, you're running a deficit. When you are poorer one year than you were the year before, when you have less money to your name and more liabilities to your name on net, you are running a deficit.

Now, nothing under that definition of a deficit, net financial assets, precludes a government from borrowing as long as they're saving more in that year than they're borrowing. That is change in net financial assets, and that was a tried-and-true definition of how we calculated the fiscal health of this province through most of the 1990s. It was straightforward. You could disagree with the government's policies of the day – are they spending too much, or are they spending too little? – whatever side of the fence you stood on, but at least you knew where the government stood.

We attempted to address this issue around operational deficits in our first amendment put forward by the Official Opposition. For reasons I don't fully comprehend, members that I would hope to agree with on some things could not find themselves agreeable. My concern with this is that limiting this merely to operational allows governments to pretend that that's the only measure that matters. That's the problem. It matters more than just our operational spending. This year our net financial assets will decline by a record $8.7 billion. That is the largest deficit in the history of this province. When I say $8.7 billion, I almost feel that I have to put my pinky to my lip; $8.7 billion. It is by far the largest deficit in the history of this province, but that's not just an operational deficit. That is our consolidated deficit. That is our net change in financial assets.

If you run an operational surplus but you're borrowing $8 billion a year, even to do good things with that money, it's not sustainable. You can't do it forever, and you can't continue to tell Albertans that you're somehow running a surplus when you're borrowing more money than you're saving year after year after year. Eventually you've got to pay the piper. Eventually the bill comes due, and unfortunately we see no interest from the members on the other side to ever pay the bill. They're interested in letting someone else clean up the mess when they've left office. They just want to kick the can down the road forever.

I would encourage more members of the caucus that put this forward to speak to the issue. It tears me in different directions. It makes Bill 4 slightly less worse on paper, but my concern is that if we focus only on operational, we miss the big picture. We miss the forest for the trees when we focus only on operational and not the consolidated budget. Even if you believe in taking on debt, you can't do it forever. Eventually you have to pay. You have to balance the consolidated deficit.

I thank the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for his comments. I may not agree with them all or even many of them, but I believe they're thoughtful, though, and meant with the best of intentions. I would encourage a member of that caucus to perhaps provide more context and tell us why the fiscal conservatives of this party should consider supporting this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by Calgary-Currie.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, very much. You know, while my Teutonic friend up the way here and I share some background things, we do have some differences in some areas. I will say that this whole debate as to the difference in determining whether it's a consolidated deficit or an operational deficit – you know, I come from the business world. I fully understand the separation between a balance sheet and a statement of income. To mix the two, as he is doing, is certainly not a practice that is done within business. It's certainly not a practice that's done within municipalities. When we present these budgets to municipalities, they understand full well the idea of an operational budget, and they understand full well the idea of a capital budget and capital expenditures and that sort of thing.

You know, I suspect that in the time that we have to debate here and given that in Committee of the Whole we can go back and forth and speak as many times as we like, we're not likely going to come to agreement on that issue. So I'm going to just say, "You know what? We're going to agree to disagree on that side of things."

I do want to take issue, though, with a comment that was made. I just find this one absolutely astounding. From time to time we get some absolutely astounding comments from over here. The astounding comment that we got this time was that a school is not a good investment, that it doesn't provide an economic return. The suggestion that you cannot, you know, get a direct dollar return on investing in things like schools is, to me, just astounding. One of the things that we have as a huge economic advantage in this province is the fact that we have a well-educated workforce. In order to have an economy that can produce at a rate as our economy does, a GDP per capita that is 50 per cent over the national average, part of the reason we can do that is not just the energy we have in the ground. It's the energy that we have above the ground. That energy, quite frankly, is fuelled by our young people who are trained in, I still say, some of the best schools in the country. Obviously, you always want to strive for improvement.

The other thing that we have is outstanding postsecondary institutions in this province. We have world-class universities and colleges in this province. We have universities and colleges and research institutions that do world-class work that bring researchers from around the world. All of that – to build those universities, to build those colleges, to build those schools – costs a certain amount of money, and that's largely supported by government funding. We're saying that it makes sense from time to time to borrow to do that because, quite frankly, if you wait until you've got the cash between the cushions of the couch, you're going to have to wait a long time.

I'm no fan of debt, just as my friend from Strathmore-Brooks is not a fan of debt either. You know, as a personal example, I was debt free up until about six years ago, when my two sons began attending university and decided that they didn't want to live in residence anymore.

An Hon. Member: And then you took this job.

Dr. Starke: Yeah. And then I took on this job. That didn't help.

You know, they went to university and didn't want to live in residence anymore, so my wife and I along with our sons purchased properties both in Edmonton and Calgary and – oh, my goodness – we took on debt. We were no longer debt free. You know what? It was the right thing to do. It was the right thing to do because we're building equity, and they have a place to live. Do we get a financial return on that purchase? Maybe one day. Maybe. We'll see. Possibly. But the truth of the matter is that those are investments that you make. No, we're not debt free anymore. And you know what? I'm okay with that. It was a smart debt, and, yeah, we have a plan to repay it. We will eventually repay that debt, and we'll get there. In the meantime we have a place to live. Best of all, we bought a two-bedroom place for my son, and I moved in with him when I got elected in 2012. They talk about kids moving in with their parents; well, I pulled the switch on him. I'm really glad we got a two-bedroom place because I punted him into the smaller bedroom.

Ladies and gentlemen, we can have this discussion for a long, long time, Madam Chair, about debt, good debt or bad debt, but it's just astounding to me this notion that investment in critical government infrastructure – governments aren't supposed to be in the business of business, or at least that's what we get told over here on a regular basis. Governments shouldn't be picking winners and losers. They shouldn't be in the business of doing business, right? Governments don't inherently invest in things that make money – we get that – because if they did, then they'd be in the business of doing business. But governments do invest in the things that fuel an economy and in the things that improve quality of life.

The things that improve quality of life in Alberta, I would submit to you, are infrastructure like roads, schools, hospitals, and other critical infrastructure that Albertans need. We can have an argument back and forth as to whether those investments at certain times in our past kept up with the growth of Alberta. I think that's a discussion that we could get involved in. But the bottom line is that with the growth we are still experiencing – despite the economic downturn, we're still the fastest growing population province in the nation – we need new infrastructure, and borrowing needs to be done to do that. I think there have to be some limitations on that, and there obviously has to be a plan to pay it back.

This particular amendment, Madam Chair, deals specifically with operational deficit, the day-to-day expenses and the day-to-day revenue. My concern is that in Bill 4 we have made a departure from the policy that day-to-day expenses shall not exceed day-to-day revenue, and we're even allowing day-to-day revenue to be augmented by contingency funds, so we're saying that we recognize that there are going to be some years where it's going to be hard to make that balance but that with careful and judicious use of the contingency fund, you can still make the balance work.

Quite frankly, I'm again astounded by my hon. Teutonic friend up the way that he would suggest that it's a bad thing to not balance that spending. You know, to me, that strikes me as a little bit contradictory to what their stated objective is, and that is living within their means.

Madam Chair, I would certainly encourage members on all sides of the House to consider supporting this. I would even encourage members of the government caucus to consider supporting this. I think that a lot of your constituents would like to see you adopt an approach that is somewhat more prudent and somewhat more cautious and, indeed, allows for some flexibility in operational spending because you still can dip into the contingency account but not drain it completely in the space of less than a year and a half.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Calgary-Currie, followed by Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. Hearing you talk, it appears that we maybe have some things in common, which is always encouraging. You spoke about the need for the government to invest in the things that Albertans need, and you talked about items like capital in schools, which we've often on this side of the House chatted about as well. With those things like schools and roads and other capital expenditures, there also needs to be the professionals that Albertans rely on in order to staff those schools, hospitals, police stations, and so on.

For me, with this amendment, you know, I understand where the member is coming from. I don't think I necessarily agree with the limitations. When we have a situation like we're in currently, where we've had a very dramatic drop in the price of oil, which previous governments have used as a very large portion of our operating budget, when that suddenly shrinks, we have $6 billion that all of a sudden we need to find. There would be multiple ways you could deal with that. One of them would be to dramatically cut back on services or dramatically increase taxes.

Now, we just had an election, where all of the various parties put their platforms forward. Our party's platform was that we would act as a shock absorber in times of economic downturn, and other parties had various versions of their platform which suggested that we don't do that. I think Albertans spoke very clearly on what direction they wanted the government to go on this matter.

So, for me and my constituents, I would say that I will not be supporting this amendment because I believe it would adversely limit the government's ability to act as a shock absorber in times of economic difficulty. I think Albertans want us to act as a shock absorber in times of economic difficulty, so unfortunately I will not be supporting this amendment.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I was briefly encouraged there by my constituency neighbour from Calgary-Currie. I thought maybe you were edging towards voting in favour of this amendment right to the end there. You had us right there, right at the end. It was a surprise ending.

Dr. Starke: No. It's not that big a surprise.

Mr. Clark: Yeah. Maybe not that big a surprise.

I rise to speak enthusiastically in favour of this amendment. I think it's thoughtful and absolutely appropriate. I think debt is totally appropriate if it's well managed. Capital debt is absolutely appropriate if it's well managed. We've talked about this at length. Government is government; business is business. Those are two different things. We get a return, a social return, on investment in appropriate infrastructure: in schools, in hospitals, in flood mitigation, in transit, in roads. All of those things provide a return to our society and to our communities, and for investing in those things, the government is to be commended. I'm absolutely onside with those things.

I would challenge our friends in the Wildrose caucus – hello; nice to see both of you – to tell us how you would do it. What, specifically, would you cut to ensure that the budget is balanced? What, specifically, would you do? You may or may not be aware that we in our caucus put out a shadow budget. We did. It's true. All of us – all of us – in the corner here put out a shadow budget, detailed, three full PowerPoint slides of numbers. It is a remarkable thing to behold. But the point is that we are very clear and very specific about what we would do. What we do in that shadow budget, my friends, is that we bottom out precisely as my hon. colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster says, and we do not at any point borrow for operating in our shadow budget, which I think is absolutely vital.

I note that in today's Calgary Herald, updated precisely at 8:36 a.m., is a headline that says that oil prices may not rally until 2017. Uh-oh. What happens? What happens? This budget presumes that our top line revenue in this province increases 28 per cent between this fiscal year and 2019-2020. How does that happen if oil prices do not increase substantially?

I also note that the budget projections on west Texas intermediate for 2017 are $68 a barrel.

Mr. Rodney: How about western Canadian select?

Mr. Clark: Well, I don't have western Canadian select on my PowerPoint slide. However, I'm sure that if we did some math, we'd find out. Regardless, western Canadian select is also down significantly.

An Hon. Member: Welcome back.

Mr. Clark: I can repeat some of the things I said earlier if . . .

Mr. Cooper: It's okay. We heard you.

Mr. Clark: All right. Perfect. But now I've lost my place. Here we are.

I think what this amendment does and why I'm so enthusiastically in favour of it is that it creates a floor below which the government cannot go, and they need to then make hard choices, very difficult choices about spending. That does not need to mean significant cuts to front-line services. What it does mean is fiscal discipline. It means strong management. It means getting more with less, just like Alberta households are doing, just like Alberta businesses are doing. All around the province it means doing more with less, and I want to see much more of that from this government; otherwise, we're in an awful lot of trouble.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Chair, I'm sure the members opposite are very pleased to hear me rise again with another helpful amendment.

Some Hon. Members: Hooray.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Unfortunately, this is not going to be a puffball question.

"Hooray" is copyrighted by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. He will be coming for increased royalties soon.

The last amendment, put forward by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, was an attempt to make the bill less bad. It was not an amendment that we were fully in agreement with, but it was one that moves the ball in the right direction or actually, in this case, holds it where it is against the direction the government wants to go. Alas, there are more votes on the government side, but it is our duty as the opposition to put forward thoughtful amendments to the budget and to Bill 4 enabling that budget.

With that, I will come to my latest and greatest amendment to this bill. I will table another amendment to this bill.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 4, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, be amended in schedule 1 in section 3 by adding the following after subsection (2):

(3) A Bill that proposes to increase the ratio of debt to GDP referred to in subsection (1) may not be introduced in the Legislative Assembly unless the increase in the ratio is approved by a majority of the electors who vote in a referendum under this section.

(4) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may order a referendum under this section and sections 4 to 11 of the Constitutional Referendum Act are deemed to apply.

(5) An order under subsection (4) is deemed to be an order under section 5 of the Constitutional Referendum Act.

In English, Madam Chair, what we are saying here is that if the NDP government or any subsequent government wishes to raise the debt ceiling beyond the 15 per cent that they are proposing right now, they will have to go to the people to do it. We are proposing to move this soft debt ceiling, a ceiling so soft that we are now looking like the U.S. Congress regularly raising our debt ceiling irresponsibly, to a hard ceiling. We are proposing that if the NDP believe their own rhetoric and that they will only go to 15 per cent of GDP and not exceed that in debt, they should put their money where their mouth is. They should be willing to go to the people for their approval.

The debt ceiling is not a laughing matter. Well, actually, perhaps it is because it's so flexible and we change it so regularly now. But it shouldn't be a laughing matter. It should be serious. If Albertans truly support taking on more debt to finance the bloated spending of this government, then the NDP could go to the people and ask for their consent in a referendum.

This amendment will put teeth on the debt ceiling. It is supposed to be an absolute limit, not a target or suggestion for the Minister of Finance or the government of the day to change willy-nilly whenever they're going to get close to it. This eliminates the temptation to overspend and puts the power of the debt ceiling in the hands of Albertans. It takes it out of the hands of politicians and puts it in the hands of the people, who will actually pay for it. Albertans deserve to have a say on whether or not we incur more debt, which eventually they will have to pay back. The people in this House may find it easy to vote for this and for that, but the people outside this House, who have to pay for it, may have a different view.

This government did not campaign on taking on $50 billion of debt. They have no mandate for it. They never said to Albertans during the election that we'll balance the budget in 2019-ish. They never said that we would take on $47.4 billion of debt-ish. They never said that we would raise the debt ceiling to 15 per cent of GDP-ish. They promised Albertans a balanced budget in 2018. They never said that we would take on this kind of debt.

Now the NDP are trying to vote themselves a new mandate and give themselves one that the people did not give them. Well, if they want to do that, it's difficult to stop them with the numbers in this House. We can't defeat their budget. We can't defeat their bills although there is one that is going to come mighty close, I think.

But they can vote to show confidence in their own proposal. If the government members were to vote to require a referendum to raise the debt ceiling beyond what they're proposing, then they would be showing confidence in themselves. They would be showing confidence that they believe they'll actually not exceed 15 per cent or that if they do, they will have the support of the people to go beyond that.

DBRS has predicted, however, that the government will run right through their debt limit by 2020, one year after the next likely election. It is a certainty that unless oil prices have a massive recovery, they will not meet their revenue targets. The Parliamentary Budget Officer in Ottawa has projections that are wildly less optimistic than the government's.

Now, they've brought forward the largest tax increase in the province's history, a $3 billion carbon tax on everything, a backdoor PST that they have no mandate for, a tax that they never told Albertans they would impose on them, that they will make middle-class and working-class Albertans pay in a non revenue-neutral structure. Perhaps that will help them to meet those wild revenue projections. If the members opposite believe that they can meet those revenue projections and not exceed 15 per cent of GDP, then they should have every confidence in voting for this.

In summary, what we need here is to ensure that the debt ceiling is not a glass ceiling, that can be easily broken whenever the government feels it's convenient. The debt ceiling should be something that we take seriously, not something that we amend every year or two. I hope and will work and fight to ensure that this government does not exceed its 15 per cent of GDP debt ceiling, but I fear that they will. If they have confidence in themselves not to do that, then they can vote for this. Let's take a critical decision like this, that is made too casually by politicians, out of the hands of politicians and put it straight to the people.

I encourage all members of this House to vote for this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee will now rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Miranda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 4. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Yes. Madam Speaker, I move that we adjourn till 1:30 this afternoon.

[The Assembly adjourned at 11:56 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, December 2, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Are there any school groups for welcoming today?
Hearing none, the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and introduce on your behalf two friends of yours who reside in my constituency of Red Deer-North. I would ask that Mr. Buzz Vander Vliet and Ms Wendy Klassen, who are seated in your gallery, rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and introduce three absolutely fantastic constituents of mine, the Lewin family: Joel, Jennie, and Sapphira. They're here and have been quite excited to view the Magna Carta and have been talking about it for quite some time. We'll be enjoying that this afternoon, I would imagine. I would ask them to rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Sharon Stevens and her daughter Jodie Stevens. Sharon is a long-time supporter of mine, and she was my community assistant when I was an alderman for the city of Calgary. She's also an arts activist and the executive director of the Alberta Media Arts Alliance Society. Sharon also works at International Avenue BRZ on 17th Avenue, helping to animate that avenue. Jodie is currently working as a customer service rep at Access Calgary, a specialized transportation service. She volunteers her time as an advocate for people with mental health challenges in Calgary. I'd ask them both to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly several members of our caucus outreach team, led by director Garett Spelliscy and joined here today by Angela Liu, Ewar Jalal, and Mustafa Ali. I'd like to welcome them. The outreach team works hard to ensure that our caucus is supported as we work to connect with our constituencies, whether it's through events, meetings, or even pancake breakfasts. I'd ask them all to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw. No guests.
How about I try Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: I'm here, Mr. Speaker. It is a tremendous honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the two people who keep my constituency office ticking over. Jodi Christensen and Simone Lee are here as part of the constituency team, winter session. It is a tremendous honour to introduce them to you. In the six months that we've worked together in our constituency office, we've developed one heck of a team. I would ask that they please now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills. No guests today?

Well, I do know, as I've got a lot of cards, that I'll start here. The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two farm housewives from my constituency, Tanis and Lynne Longshore. If they would please rise after I introduce my marvelous constituency assistant, Laura McDonald, who also, I believe, is in the gallery today. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you one of our constituency assistants from the Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo and Fort McMurray-Conklin constituency office, Meghan Sereda. She has a background in environmental technologies, and she was born and raised in Fort McMurray. This is her first time observing a session. I'd like her to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Christopher McMillan. Christopher McMillan has contributed to numerous NDP election campaigns over the years and is also an advocate for various social justice issues in Calgary. Christopher is also one of my CAs and is a wonderful asset to my office. Those of you who have ever seen me speaking in my local riding will notice that I often speak a lot more poetically and with more enthusiastic use of a thesaurus. Part of that would be Christopher's fault. I'd like him to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome for all the work he does.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: This is regarding a tabling. Sorry, Mr. Speaker. My writing is . . .

The Speaker: Mine is absolutely perfect. They never have to . . .
[laughter]

How about we try the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly some of the strongest advocates for health care in the great constituency of Airdrie. Please rise as I say your name. I believe you're behind me. Michelle and Jeff Bates. Michelle is first and foremost a loving mother, who has suffered a great tragedy due to the lack of an urgent health care facility in Airdrie. Mr. and Mrs. Bates lost their son Lane, an avoidable tragedy. They are joined by Michelle's mother, Lucinda de Klerk. Michelle is the chair of the Airdrie Health Foundation and is here today to urge the government to build a 24-hour emergency care facility in our community. Mackenzie Murphy. Mackenzie is Miss Teenage Airdrie, and she's an antibullying and mental health advocate. Kim and Kim Titus. The Tituses lost their son, who also was one of my childhood friends, to suicide earlier this year. They are embarking on a campaign to remove the stigma surrounding mental health. They are also joined by other members of the Airdrie Health Foundation, Dr. Tammy Paulgaard-McKnight and Stan Grad, a member of the Alberta Order of Excellence, who is a tireless advocate for entrepreneurship, leadership, and philanthropy. She's also joined by several hard-working community advocates. I now ask all of Airdrie that is here to stand and up and please receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and to the House a neighbour and friend, Cheryl Cortina, who comes from the beautiful hills of the northern Philippines. She's been here for several years and is now a permanent resident, working as a nursing assistant in long-term care. Nursing is her passion, and she continues to support her family and her 12-year-old back in the Philippines. Cheryl, rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure if I see my guests here, but I'd like to introduce them on the chance that they're behind me. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two guests joining us from the CNIB, John McDonald and Ben McConnell. John is the executive director and regional vice-president of the CNIB, who recently announced the My Wish Is advocacy campaign, asking Albertans to tweet their support for the visually impaired using the hash tag #mywishis. Ben is a strong advocate for his community and the CNIB who is currently finishing his articling after recently completing his law degree at the University of Victoria, and he is also a motivational speaker. John and Ben are also both constituents from my wonderful constituency of Stony Plain, and if they're here, I'd ask them to both stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Janice Fraser. Janice works as my constituency assistant at the Calgary-Glenmore office. She is a very hard-working and dynamic woman who has been performing her duties diligently to serve Calgary-Glenmore. I'm proud of her work and would like to thank her for her excellent services to the constituents of Calgary-Glenmore. I would now ask her to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and a privilege to introduce to all the members of this Assembly a special guest of mine in the gallery this afternoon, Miss Terri-Lynn Skinner. In grade 7 she became the vice-president in the Britannia junior high school Kiwanis group. Now in grade 9, this is her second year as president, and for all three of those years many activities for the students at Britannia have come to life and fruition through her tireless and dedicated efforts. She is an excellent ambassador for all the students in Alberta and is willing to serve in roles of leadership. I ask that she now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you two of my constituency staff from Hinton, my constituency manager, Kathleen Westergaard, and constituency assistant Leah Sedgwick. If they could please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House. I'm not sure that they're in the gallery behind me.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three guests from the Autism Edmonton society. Since 1971 Autism Edmonton has been providing services and support to people in the community who are living with autism spectrum disorder. Autism Edmonton has become known as the go-to source for families, individuals, and professionals looking for information about autism. Joining us in the gallery today are Hendriatta Wong, the executive director of Autism Edmonton; and Susan Angus, who is a director of Autism Edmonton. Joining them is Gino Ferri, chair of Act Now for Adults with Autism. I ask them all to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I suppose this is my first introduction to the House. We know I don't like to speak here too much. I want to introduce to you and to the members of this Assembly, if they could rise, my two constituency assistants, Heather Pigott and John Hilton-O'Brien. John was a founding member of the Wildrose Party, helped to write our constitution many, actually not too many, years ago, I suppose. John is my assistant for Strathmore. Heather is my assistant for Brooks. They've been swamped by e-mails, phone calls, and petitions coming to the office over the last few weeks, and I really want to thank them and recognize them in front of the House. I'd ask this House to give them its traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome, to all of you.

Are there any other guests to be introduced today?

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise today and introduce someone who is very important in my life and in the lives of the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. She has been a faithful servant of the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and, in fact, Albertans through her work as a constituency assistant. This summer I had the pleasure of marrying her. That came out wrong. I had the pleasure of performing the service in which she was wed. I'm not sure, but my wife, I think, is coming today as well, so things could have got awkward quickly. Anyway, we should just move on and ask Brenda Berreth to rise and receive the traditional welcome.

The Speaker: I was wondering, hon. member, how you were going to account for the three children.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Farmers

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the eighth day God looked down on his planned paradise and said: I need a caretaker. So God made a farmer. God said: I need somebody willing to get up before dawn, milk cows, work all day in the fields, milk cows again, eat supper, and then go to town and stay past midnight at a meeting of the school board. So God made a farmer. God said: I need somebody with arms strong enough to wrestle a calf and yet gentle enough to deliver his own grandchild, somebody to call hogs, tame cantankerous machinery, and come home hungry. So God made a farmer. God said: I need somebody willing to sit up all night with a newborn colt and watch it die then dry his eyes and say, "Maybe next year," and I need somebody who can shape an axe handle from a persimmon sprout, shoe a horse with a hunk of car tire, someone who can make harness out of haywire, feed sacks, and shoe scraps and who at planting time and harvest season will finish his 40-hour week by Tuesday at noon and then, in pain from tractor back, put in another 72 hours. So God made a farmer.

God said: I need somebody willing to ride the ruts at double speed to get the hay in ahead of the rain clouds and yet stop in midfield and race to help when he sees the first smoke from a neighbour's place. So God made a farmer. God said: I need somebody strong enough to clear trees and heave bales yet gentle enough to tame lambs and wean pigs, someone who will stop his mower for an hour to splint the broken leg of a meadowlark; it had to be somebody who'd plow deep and straight and not cut corners, somebody to seed, weed, feed, breed, and rake and disk and plow and plant and tie the fleece and strain the milk and replenish the self-feeder and finish a hard week's work with a five-mile drive to church, somebody who would bale a family together with the soft, strong bonds of sharing, who would laugh and then sigh and then reply with smiling eyes when his son says that he wants to spend his life doing what dad does. So God made a farmer.

Thank you.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation

Mr. Jean: I want to thank the agriculture minister for the commitment he made to farmers yesterday to work to stop Bill 6. The ag minister attended a town hall in Red Deer, and did he ever get an earful. He now knows first-hand what a mess the government has made with this. He admitted to the farmers that this is an odd way of making laws. He later told farmers that he would advise the NDP caucus to pull the bill. When is the Premier going to listen to farmers, listen to ranchers, and now listen to her agriculture minister and kill Bill 6?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. This is a prime example of the kind of miscommunication that's being spread around this issue.

I have to say that I want to thank the agriculture minister for showing leadership and coming to the meetings as well as the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour. I think that they've been treating the individuals who have been raising valid concerns with the utmost respect as opposed to what's happened with the staff from the office of the MLA for Chestermere-Rocky View, who referred to one of the people who wrote in about concerns as not superliterate. I think that's disrespectful, and I hope that the Leader of the Official Opposition asks the member to apologize.

Mr. Jean: I am prepared to apologize for this government in their handling of Bill 6.

It is so clear that this government just doesn't understand farming and ranching. Family farms and ranches may be small, but they are very sophisticated operations. They pay attention to markets and commodity prices. They pay attention to taxes and organize themselves to minimize their tax bill. They put family members on the payroll and give them T4s because that's the smart thing to do. That's just one of the many reasons why this government's amendments won't work. When will this government admit that it doesn't know anything at all about farming or ranching and kill this bill?

Ms Hoffman: I know that when you make a mistake and you disrespect somebody and you call them illiterate, you should apologize, Mr. Speaker. I am shocked that the member opposite will not take responsibility for what was done and apologize to the person who's been raising valid concerns in a way that they wanted to reach out to elected officials. Apologize, and let's move on.

Mr. Jean: Right now the jobs minister will be at a Bill 6 come-and-be-told meeting in Okotoks. It won't be pretty. There will not be enough space for all of the ranchers that want to attend. Convoys of farm equipment actually started going there this morning at first light. The minister will hear that everyone involved in agriculture thinks this bill needs to be pulled. She will hear that this government just doesn't get it. Tomorrow farmers will once again rally at the Legislature. They want this NDP government to kill the bill. Why won't the minister listen to farmers and ranchers and kill Bill 6?

Ms Hoffman: The meeting is ongoing. The meeting was moved to the parking lot to accommodate all of the people who wanted to attend. I have to say that that's respectful, Mr. Speaker. When you show up, you have a dialogue, and you treat people with respect as opposed to calling them illiterate. That is the way to actually consult with people and to make sure that you find good solutions. [interjections] The members know that when people have asked us to put things in writing, we're prepared to do that. We have amendments that we'd like to propose. We need to get to the committee stage so that we can amend the bill and put in writing exactly what this bill means.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I don't know where it came from, but I've heard members' first names used. I want to remind you about refraining from that. It was on this side of the House, by the way.

The second question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Energy Policies

Mr. Jean: Albertans know that government should not pick winners and losers. It now appears that this is exactly what happened with the climate change panel. There is a media report that four oil companies got a side deal in exchange for endorsing the Premier's initiative. When combined with the royalty panel hinting that some segments of the energy industry will be wiped out by these royalty changes, it means that many Albertans should be very worried about their jobs. How many energy sector jobs were sold down the river by this government so that the Premier could have window dressing at her announcement?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I have to say how proud I am that this government was able to pull together two groups that have typically been on opposite sides of an issue for a very long time. That's what leadership is. You get people together who have competing interests, and you find ways to move issues forward. It didn't happen when the member opposite was in Ottawa. It didn't happen with the last government when they were in power. We brought together environmental NGOs and industry, and we've got a plan moving forward that they're proud to support.

Mr. Jean: The cracks are showing. The oil well drillers say that the carbon tax is rotten. Several industry leaders and companies were left out of the negotiations with the NDP, and to pull it all together, Albertans are getting hammered with a $3 billion carbon tax that's coming in the back door. It's a PST; let's face it. When governments pick winners and losers, when they dole out special favours to their friends, when they don't consult with everyone, that threatens investments and jobs in Alberta. Why is this government continuing its risky ideological experiments, that are putting so many Alberta jobs at risk?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. There is no secret here. Our plan is public, and it enjoys public support from a wide range of diverse people, groups, and companies, as you could see by the support that was on the stage with the Premier when the announcement was made about how proud we were moving forward. The only person standing alone here is the member opposite.

Mr. Jean: That's how it works when you ask questions. You stand by yourself.

The government has to be aware of the genuine anxiety of the energy industry to the comments coming from the royalty panel. The suggestion that some segments of the energy industry would not be competitive after this NDP government brings in royalty changes is alarming, to say the least. When any segment of the energy industry disappears, that means the loss of thousands and thousands of good Alberta jobs. We've already lost 65,000 jobs this year because of this government, and the government has to avoid job losses. That's your job. Will the Premier promise Albertans that nothing coming out of the royalty review . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Only the opposition thinks that Albertans should not get fair value for their resources. Only the opposition thinks that we should not work with industry to modernize our climate change strategy, to modernize our royalty system for the 21st century, for Albertans today, and for Albertans tomorrow. We are working in partnership. That's what leadership is. Opposition is doing their job in criticizing it even when we get it right. I don't know why they hate oil and gas so much.

An Hon. Member: Why do you hate oil and gas?

Mr. Jean: I don't. I just hate big, corrupt politicians.

An Hon. Member: Worst of all hate corrupt politicians. [interjections]

Mr. Jean: I didn't say that. We all hate [inaudible]. Don't we all hate [inaudible]?

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'm sorry. Did I hear a point of order?

Mr. Mason: Yeah.

Alberta Health Services

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the Health minister has doubled down in her support for Alberta Health Services even though the support directly contradicts the views of her colleagues the Minister of Infrastructure and the Premier herself. Perhaps the Health minister has forgotten her own words on social media before being elected. I quote: people are telling me they want strong, local representation; let's learn from the bad AHS superboard move. To the Health minister: did you suddenly change your mind on this, or did you decide that it was easier to stop listening to the people?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We made it really clear during the election that our number one commitment was providing stability to the health care system. We've talked to a lot of Albertans about how they feel moving forward. I've certainly had opportunities to review perspectives. Staff have told us that they want to show up at work in the morning knowing who they'll be reporting to in the afternoon. We're going to make sure that we continue to have systems in place to support stability within the system and not create more chaos.

Mr. Barnes: We're amassing quite an impressive list of ministers who were against AHS before they were for it. The Health minister is trying to claim that her conversion to superboard support was based on stability, but Albertans know that AHS is as stable as a house of cards. Just last week the first order of business for the new board was continuing the revolving door of CEOs and administrators. Will the Health minister agree with the colleague right beside her that this is yet another demonstration of systemic inefficiency and administrative chaos?

Ms Hoffman: I want to thank the CEO of Alberta Health Services for her service to Alberta, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank her for treating the employees, that she's been working with very closely, in an open and transparent way, and part of that is, when you've decided that it's time to move, letting everybody know. I have to say that I really appreciate the professionalism that she's brought to the position, and I wish her all the best moving forward.

Mr. Barnes: Even the outgoing CEO admitted to tensions between her and the board and ministry. For example, the office of the Privacy Commissioner has said that patient record violations are an epidemic in this province. After AHS employees were disciplined for inappropriately accessing patient data, the nursing union called on the CEO to resign, and since September Alberta Health Services has been in a bitter labour dispute with the AUPE. When will the Health minister acknowledge that it's not her calling the shots but the NDP's union handlers?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That certainly is not the case. The buck stops with the minister's office.

I have full confidence in and I've heard nothing but praise for the new Alberta Health Services board that we brought in. We have experts who were former deputy ministers for the government of Canada. We have an expert who was running the Canadian Institute for Health Information. We have an expert in harm reduction, who's been a nurse practitioner working on the front lines in Edmonton. We have experts from the University of Calgary who are coming together and making sure that we have the very best system moving forward. I think that we deserve to give them an opportunity to get it right. They just had their first meeting yesterday, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: I'll just check with the table. It was my understanding that there was some time left for the minister. [interjections] Hon. members, the Speaker decides the time here, no one else.

The hon. leader of the third party.

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As an elected official and a former cabinet minister I know that when a minister makes a decision, tables a bill, or speaks in this Chamber, that minister is responsible for the outcome. We had the Health minister today and the jobs minister yesterday or the day before say that the buck stops there. The Premier, on the other hand, blames public service staff – official channels, as they call it – and her ministers and throws them all under the bus for errors around communicating Bill 6. To the Premier: will you show the leadership that Albertans deserve and at least two of your ministers have articulated . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Your time has run out.

In answer to the question, the hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is showing great leadership. She's showing leadership on the international stage by going to Paris and standing up for Alberta jobs and standing up for our global economy. She certainly is happy to acknowledge when a mistake was made. There were errors made in communication through official channels. We all own that, and we're getting it right moving forward.

Mr. McIver: Well, maybe the minister can send a memo to the Premier because she needs that message.

The Minister of JSTL spoke yesterday about how we are witnessing "democracy in action" while at the same time Albertans were kicked out of a consultation meeting. Given that for democracy to work, all the people need to be in the room to have their voices heard, will this minister do what is necessary to make sure that everyone that wants to be listened to on Bill 6 will actually be let into the room and then heard?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Unfortunately, the room capacity at the space we were at yesterday could not accommodate everyone, which is why I went outside and stood on a bench for two and a half hours to listen to those farmers, to give them an apology for the miscommunication, and to share with them our commitment to moving an amendment forward to ensure that farm families will not be covered by that bill. We listened to every person that went there, and I'm very proud of the action we took in making that happen.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Now that the minister has admitted bad planning in the room size, they can do better in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to agree with the agriculture minister when he remarked yesterday that it is odd to introduce a bill first and bring in the rules later. To anyone on the front bench over there: do you support Bill 6 in its current form, or do you think that maybe you should, as the agriculture minister says, acknowledge this isn't the right way to do it, talk to farmers and ranchers, and put it on pause until after that is done?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We certainly promised better protection for paid farm and ranch workers during the election, and we believe in following through on our commitments. We have heard from farmers loud and clear what their concerns are around protecting the family farm, and we are sorry for that stress. As a result, we will introduce amendments to ensure that farm families will not be covered by this bill. But everyone agrees that safety for paid workers is important, and this bill is focused on bringing those . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Affordable Housing

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Winter is upon us, and with the arrival of beautiful Christmas we also see the arrival of snow. Ice and frost may be enjoyed by many of us, especially those with a home, but it can be a matter of life and death for those with low-income families and without a home. The Alberta plan to end homelessness remained in the lurch for the past four years, and cash-strapped municipalities are all but begging for help. To the minister: at a time when cities are struggling to address the housing needs of Albertans, how can this government justify leaving them high and dry?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. We are making investments in affordable housing units. They haven't met current need. We've inherited over a billion dollars of deferred maintenance and renewal costs, and the stock itself isn't meeting the current demand. I'm proud that we're moving forward with adding more than 800 new social housing and seniors' lodge units as well as renovating and replacing more than 1,900 units across Alberta, but we do need to do more. I'm excited that there is a new federal government, who seems to share a commitment to affordable housing, and we have a new provincial government. We'll work with our municipalities as the three orders to serve the citizens, that we are all responsible to.

Dr. Swann: The province's failure to provide affordable housing is forcing cities to turn to private funders in the middle of a recession. In Calgary the Resolve initiative has brought in private investors to raise $120 million to build affordable housing for 3,400 vulnerable and homeless Calgarians. To the minister: should municipalities now expect to depend on the private sector, and how does this really develop a sustainable housing plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have to commend the Albertans who roll up their sleeves and pitch in and do everything they can to make sure that they are supporting one another, and this is an example of that. I want to thank industry for stepping up. I also have to say that we are investing $164 million in affordable housing, so that's $25 million over the actuals from last year. We know that there's need for additional supports in the system. We're certainly moving forward on having a thoughtful plan, but this isn't something that the provincial government is going to do on its own, that the municipal government is going to do on its own, that even the federal government is going to do on its own. We need to work collaboratively to make sure that we take responsibility and support people in their most basic human needs.

Dr. Swann: This is a fundamental responsibility of government. Given the tremendous savings that it would mean and a commitment to humanity, if housing first means anything, the government has to commit more to housing, not only badly needed infrastructure but investment over the long term, to reduce the costs of homelessness in human terms and in financial terms.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. This morning we listened to amendments that would have required us to make sure that we didn't have any deficits. This is the type of reason why we sometimes need to run deficits, because turning our back on people who are literally out in the cold is not an answer. I do look forward to bringing forward a plan in collaboration with all parties in this House that we can proudly support moving forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

2:10 Renewable Energy

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's new climate leadership plan will strengthen our economy and make Alberta one of the most environmentally responsible energy producers in the world. Many constituents are proud of the government's leadership on this important issue but are worried about having a government setting high goals and not actually being able to follow through on them. To the Minister of Energy: is the recently announced 30 per cent renewables goal an achievable target?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, absolutely. During the climate change panel, the work they did, they worked with the Alberta electrical system operator, known as AESO, to ensure that plans could be handled. The AESO is a widely regarded body within Canada and has a good core of competent people. They are very confident that this can be established in the next 15 years. So a 30 per cent target is absolutely in range.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that current renewable energy capacity, be it wind, solar, geothermal, or even biomass, all differ greatly, depending on the technology being implemented, to the same minister: what renewable technologies will be able to meet these targets?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Well, as I mentioned, we have a competitive electricity market, and this will foster competitive forces as we green the grid. We have an abundance of natural resources here in our wind, solar, geothermal, and biomass, and we will be looking at all of those. In the short term we expect to see some action in wind and solar in competitive options, and we'll have more to report on that.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we are competing for investment for renewable energy, again to the same minister: are we confident that private companies will invest in Alberta under this new architecture?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Very confident. Last week I was in Calgary for three days meeting with industry. We've set out the what. Now we're looking at the how. We met with companies like Enbridge, TransCanada, Suncor, Capital Power, TransAlta, just to name a few. With companies like these ready to invest as well as ones from around the world, we are confident there will be no shortage of companies. In fact, I was joined on Monday by ATCO, AltaLink, Enbridge, Acciona, and EDF to announce the next steps in our renewable plan.

Urgent Health Care in Airdrie

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, close your eyes and imagine it's after 10 p.m. and a loved one suddenly needs urgent care. For those of us from Airdrie, the worry and fear is that we will not make it in time: will the baby be born on the Deerfoot on our 45-minute commute, or will my child die? This government's critical lack of infrastructure care is hurting communities like Airdrie and resulting in senseless deaths. Can the Minister of Health explain to my constituents here today why a community of 60,000 people does not have access to a 24-hour health care facility?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I grew up in a community that was 30 minutes away from the closest hospital, actually 50 kilometres, so it was 30 minutes away. I have to say that when I was on that highway, I knew that there was a light at the end of the tunnel. It would be nice if it was closer to home; I need to acknowledge that. I have been in conversations with the mayor, and I will be visiting Airdrie on December 14. We have had very constructive discussions. My office has also been in touch with project proponents, and we've met with some of them in person, and we'll continue to learn more.

Mrs. Pitt: It's sad that a lot of those conversations haven't made it my way or to those involved.

Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta Health Services is cutting front-line workers and fired Dr. Kyne, one of Airdrie's leading health care advocates in our community, who was fired for standing up for our community's long overdue needs, and given that this action comes as a direct insult to the community members here today, will this minister correct the actions of Alberta Health Services, reinstate Dr. Kyne, and provide the people of Airdrie with around-the-clock health care?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we've talked about how inappropriate it is to bring up somebody's HR situation in this House, and I stand by that.

In terms of what has happened, there was an individual fired, there was a contract that was not renewed, but I am not going to get into the specific details because it's not fair to either party, Mr. Speaker, and I think that the members opposite owe due respect to the individuals involved not to bring up personal matters with regard to HR in this House.

Mrs. Pitt: It's inappropriate this the Health minister will not take responsibility for her own department.

Mr. Speaker, given that this government created the 2015 budget and given that the Minister of Infrastructure emphasized during question period yesterday that spending $1 billion was not as important as keeping Albertans safe, again to the minister: why has your government ignored the people of Airdrie and their safety by keeping us out of your capital plan?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me be crystal clear. I had nothing to do with the HR situation. The HR situation is between an employer and an employee, so I want to be very clear about that.

In terms of the questions that have been asked around the capital plan and specifically a facility for Airdrie, I need to work with evidence for all communities. I understand that there is a clearly expressed case for why the proponents believe they should be the top priority. I also need to weigh the evidence from all communities throughout Alberta. But no matter where you live, you should be assured that you have the right care in the right place at the right time by the right health professional, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. While opinions on Bill 6 differ, members on both sides of the Assembly, up to and including the Premier, are in agreement that the communication has been an unmitigated disaster. We have the Premier blaming unnamed government officials and information sheets, that I will table, with what is now misinformation appearing and then disappearing off the government website. To the minister of labour: the buck stops with you. Given the level of confusion that you have created surrounding Bill 6, why are you still forging ahead with this clearly flawed piece of legislation?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know we don't typically talk about that somebody is not in the House, but I want to say in this circumstance that the minister of labour is meeting front line with farmers to ensure that she understands their concerns.

Mr. Jean: Point of order.

Ms Hoffman: I'm happy to make sure that I pass along the feedback that's been raised.

In terms of moving forward, we're absolutely willing to bring forward amendments to ensure clarity on this matter, Mr. Speaker, and we hope to do so later today in committee.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the minister for that because given that we've been assured by the ministers of agriculture and labour that Bill 6 was written only after extensive consultation and with widespread agreement from farmers and given that now the government admits that the bill needs to be amended, to the minister: exactly whom did you consult with while you were hastily preparing the amendments?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I believe that consultation was going on for about 10 years while that party was in government, and one of the reasons why the consultation happened is because there was a tragic farm incident, the Chandler incident. A father was lost. There have been calls for years to do something to offer the same protections to farm workers in Alberta that they have in every other province. So the consultations continue to happen with hands-on farmers today. It's been with industry so far under this government, but past government consulted as well.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that many newly elected members of this Legislature are bewildered by the legislate first and draw up regulations later and given that one the most baffled by this process is the minister, who is the self-proclaimed champion for Alberta's farmers and ranchers, who said yesterday that, and I quote, it is an odd way of doing things, to the minister of agriculture: if you aren't comfortable with how you're proceeding and given the overwhelming opposition from the very people for whom you are supposed to be champion, why are you ramming Bill 6 through?

Ms Hoffman: Since the tragic death of Kevan Chandler in June 2006, Mr. Speaker, 122 others have died in work-related incidents on farms and ranches in Alberta, and they're the people that deserve to have these protections and the safety moving forward.

Just to be very crystal clear, this is about farm and ranch employees. This is not about family members. This is not about friends. It's not about volunteers. We're going to make sure that we have a crystal clear explanation of that in the amendments that we plan to bring forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

2:20 Rural Health Care

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently rural hospitals have high numbers of ER visits from patients who cannot get an appointment with a regular family physician. Many physicians are not even taking on new patients because their caseloads are full. As you full well know, ER visits have a far greater cost to the system than clinic visits. To the Minister of Health: can you explain to me and, in fact, all rural Albertans what you are doing to help them with their medical needs in this regard?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for this question. We've appointed what I have to say is a top-notch board for Alberta Health Services, and I couldn't be prouder of the expertise they're going to bring to that organization. As members know, Alberta Health Services oversees hospital operations. Ensuring that they have a stable budget, that they have predictable funding, and that we're not laying off thousands of people by bringing in billion-dollar cuts every year will certainly help this situation.

Mr. Loewen: Yeah. A superboard that you didn't support before. Minister, it's not working, obviously.

Given that the Valleyview community found a doctor willing to come and work in a local clinic and given that this doctor had specialized training in traditional and aboriginal medicine and was uniquely qualified to work with the rural and aboriginal patients in this area, will the minister tell us here today why, even though this doctor made numerous attempts to contact AHS, his calls were not returned and he was allowed to slip through the cracks and was forced to go elsewhere?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Of course, we want to make sure that we have the right care in the right place at the right time by the right health professional. The system that we have right now has flexibility around where people can offer their practice. I am getting used to doing these late-night phone calls. If the member has specific details that he needs to share, he can certainly contact my office at any time, not just in the late hours of the night. We certainly would be happy to have somebody follow up and provide some clarity if it's required.

Mr. Loewen: That's really interesting since this was all spelled out clearly in a letter that the minister received and I was CCed on.

Given that this doctor had practised medicine in Alberta for 11 years, is a Canadian citizen, had practised in the rural locum program in the hospital that he wished to join, and had full hospital privileges in another Alberta hospital, can you tell us, Minister: why does the government have to make things so difficult? Why did he have to apply again for hospital privileges when, in fact, in doing so, his application was forgotten about and caused this community to lose an opportunity to have the health care it deserves?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be happy to follow up with regard to this specific matter.

In terms of some of the questions that have been asked by that party, there was a question about a 0.2 employee, a 0.4 employee, and misinformation shared around the situation of a hospital where there was water and members opposite said that it was feces. I will be happy to ensure that there's clarity, but there are ways, certainly, to do this. Trying to blow up situations in this House is not the most respectful way to treat health professionals.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back in June I let the Minister of Health know what was going on with the dialysis bus in Lac La Biche. I was encouraged that she visited and seemed to care about the community. Since then, though, nothing has happened. This wheel-less treatment centre would be an embarrassment in a third-world country. No bones about it; the people of Lac La Biche have lost their trust that the minister will do the right thing. To the Health minister: why not cut the $700,000 carbon tax propaganda budget and fix this problem?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker and to the member for his hospitality this summer when I did come to see first-hand the situation he was speaking of. I have to say that growing up in a rural community, there were a lot of times we had to be on the highway to go to Edmonton and other municipalities for service. Being able to have service in your own community is certainly an asset. I want to acknowledge that I don't think that it's the ideal situation, but I'm certainly happy that individuals living in Lac La Biche do not have to be on the highway, particularly in the winter, three times a week.

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, given that when the minister was in Lac La Biche, we discussed the glaring bathtub issue, which is still not installed, by the way, and given that since June there has been plenty of time for the minister to spout hot air on the issue but not hot water for showers and tubs and whereas the minister should know that the showers have now broken down in that hospital, resulting in a temporary set-up in a patient service room, when can we expect her to live up to her title of Minister of Health and actually deliver real results for real Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the question. In terms of the specific bathtub sometimes there are specifics that are hard to recall because, of course, we have a significant system here in Alberta. In terms of the specific bathtub, when I did ask the question, I was told that it was operational and had been hooked up.

I will confirm that that is indeed the case because that is inconsistent with what I was informed of by the hospital staff.

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a real disconnect between this government and rural Albertans. Since July the northeast region of Alberta has been feeling the acute and tragic loss of a great pathologist, and to date AHS has not even advertised for a replacement. Given that the constituents in northeastern Alberta deserve the same level of care as all other Albertans, to the minister: when is your ministry and AHS going to stop dragging your feet on rural health care issues?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. This government is actually investing in infrastructure moving forward as opposed to what the Official Opposition proposed during the election, which was cutting lower priority infrastructure projects, including $9 billion worth of infrastructure. I find it very shocking that they would say that we're dragging our feet when they're actually the ones who are proposing significant cuts to infrastructure spending in Alberta. We're going to move forward and make sure that we continue to have the right supports for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Sexual Health Education in Schools

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we saw a historic moment in this Legislature with the vote on Bill 7. I felt particularly compelled by the conversation around educating people about LGBTQ identities. An excellent place to include this is with comprehensive sexual health education. Comprehensive sexual health education is an important tool for Alberta students and an important tool in helping to create an inclusive atmosphere in our schools. To the Minister of Education: can you tell me how you plan to make sure these issues are included in the curriculum?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. Certainly, we know that sexual consent is the law, and we need to reflect that in our curriculum throughout K to 12 and beyond. It's very important, for example, when we have these LGBTQ issues and GSAs, to not just impose laws from above, from Edmonton, but to have it permeate through the education system because that's, after all, the way people internalize values and the way that they act on them and are responsible for them as well. You can make laws, but unless people actually have it in their hearts, then they're not very meaningful at all.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, education and dialogue are the key to understanding. Given that as elected officials we should be aiming to enhance the conversation with actual consultation, will the Minister of Education commit to bringing this issue to the Families and Communities Committee to allow all parties to work with interested people and groups to develop a policy that can be embraced by every school board in the province?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the question. Certainly, I think it's important that we use all avenues available. As I said before, it's an educative moment not just for our children and parents but for all of us as well. The debate that we had on the Human Rights Act over the last few days I think was an edifying and educative moment for all of us and for the general public as well. I'm very interested in speaking to the Families and Communities Committee to see if they are able and willing to help me on this because, quite frankly, it's a very big effort, but the results and the gravity of the situation are just as large.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Education minister. I know there are certain people who worry about the risks of legislating social policy in Alberta, but if we're going to work on these issues and be effective, we need to do just that. Can the minister assure the House that there will be real consultation on comprehensive sexual health education that would be available to all Alberta students?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I know that, certainly, the MLA asking is very involved in working with these issues. As I said before, I need all hands on deck to ensure that we do have a comprehensive sexual health education program embedded into the curriculum and then also infused throughout all of the things that we do here through the Legislature. Certainly, I am interested in working through this. It'll be a process that involves moving ideas along a little bit, perhaps bumping up against some established values, but at the end it's worth it for our children.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

2:30 Services for Francophone Albertans

Ms McKittrick: Merci, M. le Président. Je suis vraiment fière des députés dans cette Assemblée, où il y a au moins 15 députés qui sont francophones ou qui parlent français.

[Translation] Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to be an MLA in this Assembly, where at least 15 MLAs speak French or are francophone.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has a long history of contributions made by the francophone community. Twelve per cent of Albertans have French ethnic or cultural ancestor origins. [interjections] According to the 2011 . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you have a question?

If you don't have a question, is there a response from the front bench?

Your time is up. Do you have a question?

Ms McKittrick: Yeah, I have a question. [interjections] To the minister of culture: what is your department doing to support francophone and minority language rights throughout the province?

The Speaker: Hon. member, you've got to get more brief with your comments.

Speaker's Ruling Timing in Question Period

The Speaker: There are choices that I have. I can be flexible or be arbitrary. On both sides of the House it's practised, and that's what I intend to do. I also appreciate that these are not always the simplest decisions to make. If I make a choice to allow it, it may be the same on the other side. The question is whether or not I apply it fairly. I intend to do so, and I believe the record says that I have.

Hon. members, when you are asking, making your point, I talked yesterday about your preambles on both sides of the House. They are consuming the very time that you want and need.

Services for Francophone Albertans (continued)

The Speaker: Can I go to your first supplemental question? Do you have it?

Ms McKittrick: Sure.

The Speaker: Quickly, please.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that francophone schools have seen rapid increases in enrolment over the last few years, I'm wondering what supports are available to francophone school boards across Alberta.

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Certainly, we see our francophone community growing exponentially here in the province of Alberta; thus, we are making decisions about expanding our francophone education system to match that. For example, we've been working to expand our francophone capacity in Sherwood Park, in Edmonton, and in Calgary as well, and we're very proud to do so. Our government stands to enrich and expand our capacity and the services that we provide to our francophone community.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we need to support our francophone community, can the minister detail some of the community efforts and services that are already offered not because of the law but because the government wants to do so?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I think we're seeing a great flowering in the capacity for us to offer services in French, not just in terms of education but in regard to health, employment, settlement, legal assistance, early childhood development. You know, the francophone community here in the province, in fact, leads in many ways with their early childhood provisions that they put in their schools. We could learn a lot to do so in our own English public schools here across the province. We're very proud of how we're working together. People are looking to bonjour.alberta.ca as a mechanism by which they can see all of the services that we provide en français.

Government Policies

Mr. MacIntyre: Mr. Speaker, recently the Premier cited that all of the problems that have surrounded Bill 6 have been due to bureaucrats miscommunicating the message around Bill 6. Now, let's forget for a moment that this was a directive from her and her ministers, and let's gloss over the fact that the Premier has no problem throwing her underlings under a bus. To the Premier: since you've singled out your bureaucrats for creating the hot water you're in, have you fired any or asked any of them to resign, or are you simply saying: let them eat cake?

Ms Hoffman: Let me add to the pile. I think that members opposite have certainly embraced the opportunity to spread misinformation.

In terms of HR matters we will certainly be addressing them appropriately, but in this House is not the way that we plan on doing that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacIntyre: Given that both bills 202 and 6 need broad government amendments and the ministers of labour and Agriculture and Forestry have a combined communication budget of $1.8 million and since all this government seems to be able to communicate are propaganda pieces and misinformation, apparently, does the Premier think that this is an effective use of her politburo's resources if they can't effectively convey a concept to the very people these bills impact?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have certainly made it clear that our government apologizes to the farmers for the stress and anxiety that it caused them to believe that the family farm wouldn't be addressed. That's why we're introducing an amendment just to introduce language to ensure those families can rest assured that families will not be covered by that bill. We will move forward to ensure paid workers are safe, but we do recognize that farming is not just a business but a way of life, and we will respect and protect that way of life.

Mr. MacIntyre: Mr. Speaker, given her own railing against the ineffectiveness of the WCB while she was in opposition – quote, Alberta has the most miserable compensation board in the country, and Alberta workers suffer for it; end quote – why is the Premier now forcing this apparently miserable system upon 45,000 farmers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This bill is about establishing a minimum standard of protection for paid workers, and it is important that those workers are protected. This bill is focused on bringing protection for paid employees in line with other Alberta workers. Within that, though, we understand that farm and ranch families are a cornerstone of this economy, and we will work with them to ensure that they can still enjoy and protect the way of life to which they are entitled.

Carbon Tax Revenue Utilization

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, we have heard this government sing the praises of their carbon tax both here and abroad. However, what we have not heard are details around how this tax will be indeed revenue neutral. To the minister of environment: given that British Columbia has legislated to return every single dollar it collects from their carbon tax, which is true revenue neutrality, and on your own website returning money from the carbon tax to Albertans is listed last when detailing how the revenue will be spent, why won't you come clean and admit that your carbon tax is not revenue neutral?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: I think that in the announcement it was made fairly clear that there are going to be two buckets, one to entice industry for technology and one to help consumers who find some of the prices difficult.

Mr. Gotfried: To the minister of the environment, Alberta's own Robin Hood: given that when asked if the money from the carbon tax would be used to reduce other taxes, exactly what B.C. does, this Premier stated that that would not necessarily lead to the kind of change we are trying to generate here while also stating that some people may actually benefit financially from measures within this plan through direct rebates, will you admit that the lack of revenue neutrality in your plan makes this carbon tax more about wealth redistribution than about tackling climate change?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. We're proud of the message that we are sending in cleaning up our environment and changing the behaviour of all of us for our future and for our children's. Every dollar will be put back here in Alberta, building our economy, creating jobs, reducing pollution, and opening up those new conversations for pipelines to be built.

2:40

Mr. Gotfried: Also to the minister of environment: given that this government does not intend to reduce taxes with money obtained through the carbon tax and given that middle-income Albertans now fear that commuting to work, driving their kids to sports, and heating their homes will now place an undue financial burden upon them with no rebates or tax reductions in sight, why does your government think that tax slapping the everyday lives of hard-working Alberta families – again, kicking them while they are down – is the best way to address climate change?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. Again, our climate change is going to strengthen our economy and make Alberta the most environmentally responsible energy producer in the world. This is important because if we can get those pipelines built, that brings tons more jobs to Alberta and it strengthens everybody and it brings money into our coffers.

Anniversary of l'École Polytechnique Shootings

Ms Payne: Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, December 6, 1989, 26 years ago, 14 women were murdered in the halls of their engineering school at l'École Polytechnique in Montreal. Fourteen women lost their lives for the simple reason that they were women studying in a nontraditional field. Before opening fire, their killer said: you're women; you're going to be engineers; you're all a bunch of feminists; I hate feminists. Yet in the weeks and months following the massacre the media downplayed the gender-based violence in this attack, saying that it wasn't about women and it wasn't about feminism. We know that this isn't true.

December 6 marks the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence against Women. On campuses across the country students' unions and women's centres will hold vigils honouring the victims of the Montreal massacre and honouring all of the women who have lost their lives to domestic violence.

Twenty-six years have come and gone. In those years we've seen some steps forward and some steps back. Domestic violence is no longer considered just a private marital issue. Governments across the country, including our own, provide financial support for women's shelters. Yet those same shelters turn away nearly twice as women as they are able to help. Social media has become a tool for misogynists to spew hateful invectives and threats against women in power, including many women in this Chamber and our Premier. Sadly, it is still considered okay in some circles to say: I hate feminists.

Today I rise to honour the 14 women who were murdered in their classrooms in Montreal. I rise in honour of every woman who has faced violence and hatred simply because she is a woman. I add my voice to the many who call for an end to gender-based violence and an end to social and systemic gender equality. I rise to say that I am a proud feminist.

Economic Development

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, limited government, regulatory efficiency, open markets, a world-class financial centre, a highly educated and motivated workforce: no, this is not today's Alberta. Perhaps it could, should, and will be in the decades ahead, but not on our current course. Many have said that this is Canada's millennium of the Pacific, so perhaps we need to learn something from our friends and trading partners in Asia.

Hong Kong, my second home, has a population of just over 7 million, negligible natural resources, and a GDP per capita almost $10,000 U.S. higher than Canada. Foreign direct investment is $15 billion higher than Canada. It has been recognized as the world's freest economy for 21 consecutive years. What drives this bastion of economic success? An entrepreneurial can-do attitude, an unparalleled work ethic, low taxes, robust foreign investment, low unemployment, limited government, regulatory efficiency, and leveraging of human capital against global opportunities.

Does this sound familiar? Yes, this is the Alberta I grew up in, that allowed Albertans and newcomers from across Canada and around the world to strive and thrive, to know and feel what the Alberta advantage meant to them and their families, and to have hope for the success of their children, grandchildren, and for generations to come. Yes, this is the dreaded 44 years that we often hear maligned in this House, and, yes, the Alberta advantage was real. I'm here to tell you that it and Albertans are worth fighting for, and I intend to do just that. Let's do the right thing to protect our planet, but let's do it with the innovative, problem-solving, can-do, entrepreneurial work ethic that we are famous for across this country and around the world.

Alberta, let's take our rightful place as a responsible, resource-rich leader in the global economy, but let us not kill the Alberta advantage in getting there. Most certainly, that is not the Alberta way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Autism Spectrum Disorder

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about a neurological disorder affecting 1 in 68 Albertans. Autism spectrum disorder is a neurological condition that affects the ability of an individual to form relationships, communicate with others, and deal with abstract concepts.

The province of Alberta has long been considered a leader in children's services for those living with autism and other developmental disabilities; however, when autism is present, it changes the lives not only of children but of whole families. Parents with affected children find their lives turned upside down with worry for their children's well-being, the effect on their other children, or the strain on their marriage.

It is estimated that the costs associated with raising a child with autism is over $3 million over a lifetime. Given these high demands on the family, the services of community partners are vital. One such partner is right here in Edmonton. Since 1971 Autism Edmonton, previously known as autism society of Edmonton area, has been providing services with support to people in the community who are living with autism spectrum disorder. Autism Edmonton has become known as a go-to source for families, individuals, and professionals looking for information about autism. Autism Edmonton helps families and individuals navigate their options for services, find vital information, and develop skills and peer support through facilitated activity and discussion groups.

On October 23 I had the great fortune to attend Opening Doors for Autism, a gala held biannually to raise funds for Autism Edmonton, where the total for a single evening of fundraising exceeded $500,000. This significant generosity will help to provide families with much-needed support, information, and advocacy services.

I would like to extend thanks to the many sponsors and say congratulations to Autism Edmonton, who, like so many Albertans, has decided after 44 years to make a significant change. Congratulations on your new name, Autism Edmonton, and thank you for your service and support to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Women Parliamentarians

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1917 Louise McKinney and Roberta MacAdams became the first women elected to this Legislature. Since that time, there have been almost 1,000 MLAs elected to this House. Only 99 have been women.

A significant move forward occurred on May 5, when I was proud to join 24 of my female colleagues in the NDP caucus, bringing us the closest any government party has ever come to achieving gender parity. Much work remains to be done, however. There are numerous barriers and reasons women hesitate to put themselves forward to run for public office. Breaking the glass ceiling of a traditionally male-dominated environment, discrimination, intrusive public scrutiny, and the expectations around women's roles in child care and child rearing are just a few.

As Deputy Speaker I'm the Alberta steering committee rep for Commonwealth Women Parliamentarians, a nonpartisan organization that is dedicated to achieving more equal representation of women in government across the Commonwealth. CWP engages in a number of activities such as outreach to young women, mentorship, raising awareness, proposing supportive legislation, and, perhaps most importantly, peer support so we can become more effective in our roles.

I believe we're well positioned here in this Legislature to take some real steps forward in removing barriers and enhancing the ability of women to be successful in the political arena. I'm looking forward to working with CWP, with our new Ministry of Status of Women, and all the women in this House to make some significant gains in that regard and to find better ways to support and encourage each other.

Yesterday we celebrated the inclusion of gender identity language in the human rights legislation during second reading of Bill 7. This is an important and significant step forward for Alberta, but we have a long way to go when it comes to basic human rights for half the population. By working to ensure that women are represented more fairly in our government institutions, we are leading the way towards having a more equal and equitable representation among our legislators, one that better reflects the true makeup of our province and the people we serve.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

2:50

Bo Cooper

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to talk about one of my constituents, Bo Cooper. Bo is only 26 years old and has been diagnosed with acute lymphoblastic leukemia for the third time since 2011. He has used up a lifetime worth of chemotherapy and has exhausted all known therapies in Canada. His current treatment of this medication therapy is in the final days of funding. As of December 10 it will expire, and he will have nothing left to keep this leukemia at bay. His most likely prognosis at this stage is death at 26 years old.

However, there is one last hope. There is one therapy that is available only in the United States. There is a specialist that has been providing a different type of cellular therapy, and in her study she has a 90 per cent success rate for leukemia. She has cured cancer. Unfortunately, it is not approved in Canada. Thus, Alberta Health Services will not pay for this treatment, and this family cannot afford a treatment that runs over half a million dollars. The bureaucracy has lost sight of its mandate to help Albertans and simply sees a paper with a name on it and looks at the associated costs before making its decision. Patients are not statistics; they are people. Denying Bo this opportunity to receive this life-saving treatment is an indictment to our broken health care system. It's a system that's supposed to mean that those who need access to health care will receive access to health care. It's clearly not, and it's not for Bo.

Almost $20 billion is spent on health care every year by this government, yet Bo can't get a life-saving treatment that he needs from this government. We spend more on health care than any other province in this country, and still people are left behind. It's a broken system funded by a government that thinks spending $700,000 on a budget public relations campaign is appropriate, the same government that spends another $700,000 on a PR campaign for a carbon tax. If spending on ad campaigns is fine, then this Health minister needs to tell her department that spending a fraction of that to save the life of a 26-year-old man is the right thing to do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Minister of Education and Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a document that I referred to yesterday during second reading of Bill 8, talking about school board consultations. It just gives an itemization of what we had been doing in our consultations during September and October.

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the requisite number of copies that were referenced by the Health minister with regard to the e-mail that was in reaction to Bill 6.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce two tablings to you this afternoon, and I'd like to go back to the words of the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo just a few minutes ago. He talked about how statistics are not just numbers; they're people. These articles that I'll be tabling today are about people who could be potentially affected by Bill 6. The first article is titled Kevan Chandler Killed in Grain Elevator: Alberta Family Gets Compensation Six Years Later. Some of the text reads: "Lorna Chandler's husband, Kevan, died on Father's Day in 2006."

The Speaker: Hon. member, can you just indicate in a generic sense what options you have and put them to the table.

Mr. Westhead: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. The second article, sir, is: Alberta Farm Worker Fights to Change Labour Laws.

The Speaker: Are there any others?

Mr. Westhead: No, those are the two, and I'd encourage the members opposite to read these to put a face to the bill.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, I rise today to table five copies of the page biographies for the First Session of the 29th Legislature, fall 2015, and I know that I speak for all of the House that we do very much appreciate these quiet young people who tolerate us. I would ask that you all give them applause.

Mr. Yao: I have one more tabling, sir.

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Yao: I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a GoFundMe page for Bo Cooper. I ask that all members review the story and consider spreading it on your public media. I know you all have access to such things. It's a sad day in Canada when we have to fund raise for someone's health.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I now would rise to table the requisite number of copies of an 11-page document entitled Cultivating Safe, Fair & Healthy Workplaces for Alberta's Farms & Ranches. This is the informational document that was on the website, that has now mysteriously disappeared, but we're very glad to be able to provide a hard copy for anyone who wishes to read it.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter here that a farmer and rancher named Coral Robinson read on the steps of the Legislature. I read it last night in the House, and I promised to table it today, and so it is.

The Speaker: The Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a mother's plea to the Health minister.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. One is a petition from an organization called Dying With Dignity, with over 400 signatures from people who are calling on the Legislative Assembly to investigate, make public, provide some venues for discussing assisted dying. I'll table those.

Following that, an article from the Edmonton Journal entitled Edmonton Affordable Housing Projects Left to Die on the Order Paper.

Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Timing in Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, first of all, a comment from myself. When I made the comment earlier about the 35 seconds and my efforts to try and give the opportunity for all members to include their comments within that period, I in fact, after that, read the points of order. As I move forward, I want you all to be aware that the 35 seconds will simply apply in very black-and-white terms. If you're not finished, we will use the standing orders which we have in place. That was a mistake on my part.

We also had three points of order today. I will call on the Government House Leader, I think, for the first one.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). At 1:53 today the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre referred to members on this side as corrupt politicians. At 492 of Beauchesne's, page 149, the term "corrupt" is listed as an unparliamentary word.

Mr. Speaker, It's unfortunate that some members opposite would turn a legitimate difference on policy and a legitimate difference of opinion into accusations of corruption on any side. That is beneath the dignity of the hon. member opposite and lowers the tone of the House and, in my view, is unnecessary and unacceptable. We can disagree most strongly about the direction that we want to go on this and other matters, but that does not suggest in any way that politicians on either side are corrupt, merely that they disagree.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to address the point of order this afternoon. Without the benefit of the Blues, I'm not entirely sure what may have been said or wasn't said. I was aware of some banter going back and forth across the aisle. I don't think it was spoken in this House because the hon. member is a hundred per cent correct that it would be wildly unparliamentary to call members of the other side of the House corrupt. Some of the off-the-sheet banter I heard was a statement around not liking corrupt politicians.

3:00

Again, I'll have to see if it's in the Blues, but at no point, that I heard, was there an accusation made against that side, just that we don't like corrupt politicians. I think that the other side also agrees with that statement. We have not, would not, and will not make an accusation that there is a corrupt politician on that side of the House in this place. That didn't happen today, barring seeing the Blues. That didn't happen today, and it won't happen in the future.

The Speaker: Hon. Opposition House Leader, you're suggesting that we wait for the Blues. If it was said, do I interpret that this would be an apology from you?

Mr. Cooper: Oh, certainly. If it was said that someone on this side of the House made an accusation that said that that side of the House was corrupt, one hundred per cent, unequivocally, I would withdraw that statement. I don't believe that took place today, but if it did, I will certainly withdraw it.

The Speaker: Unfortunately, I did not hear the remark myself, so I would use this opportunity to remind the House that what is called banter, particularly today, is simply not the stature that this group of people ought to set for themselves. It is far too low. I would therefore, I think, need to simply ask that you be more cautious of those comments, and please avoid them at all cost.

There was a second point of order raised by the Official Opposition, I believe.

Point of Order Referring to the Absence of a Member

Mr. Cooper: Yes. We have two separate points of order. For the first one the reference can be found in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, chapter 4, attendance. If you are looking at the second edition, 2009, it's on page 213. Earlier in question period the Health minister made a statement very similar to: I'm not going to refer to the absence of a member. Something to that effect. I'm without the Blues, but some sort of statement that was very close to: I wouldn't want to refer to the absence of a member; however, in this case they are out of the House discussing this bill. I just think that we have practices, procedures, guidelines, rules in the Assembly for a reason, and to get right up next to a rule and tell everybody, "I'm about to break a rule" doesn't give permission for that to take place.

I just think that we need to try to stay within the confines. Listen, this side of the House has been guilty, and we've stepped outside of those confines from time to time. But I think it is imperative that we honour the traditions of the Assembly. It's my opinion that that wasn't honoured today.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yeah. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. Opposition House Leader has a good point. We will avoid skating close to the edge of the rules in the future.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I'd remind all members of the House to be cognizant of that.

I think there was also a point of order 3.

Mr. Cooper: Yeah. You know, I will withdraw that point of order.

The Speaker: What an excellent idea, hon. member.

Folks, you ought to laugh more and yell less.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Hon. members, yesterday afternoon I reserved ruling on a point of order raised by the Official Opposition House Leader. The point of order arose from the following remarks by the Minister of Environment and Parks and Status of Women in response to a question by the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, which can be found at page 712 of yesterday's Alberta Hansard. "Had the Official Opposition bothered to engage in the climate process at all, given that they were so busy denying the science of climate change . . ." The Official Opposition House Leader rose under Standing Order 23(j), stating that the minister's comments constituted "insulting language . . . likely to create disorder."

The hon. Government House Leader spoke to the veracity of the minister's statement.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster touched on something that caused me to delay a ruling when he mentioned a ruling by former Speaker Zwodzesky concerning the use of the term "climate change deniers." That ruling can be found at page 1719 of Alberta Hansard for April 8, 2013. The former Speaker's ruling that the expression "climate change deniers" was presumptively out of order was based on circumstances that existed at the time and what was occurring in the Assembly at the time.

I am not inclined to rule out of order a particular phrase at this time. As members should be aware, whether a word or a phrase is unparliamentary depends on the context in which it is used. As stated in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, page 619:

Thus, language deemed unparliamentary one day may not necessarily be deemed unparliamentary the following day. The codification of unparliamentary language has proven impractical . . .

And I have a book that thick.

. . . as it is in the context in which words or phrases are used that the Chair must consider when deciding whether or not they should be withdrawn.

To be clear, I'm not sanctioning the use of expressions that deliberately incite members of the Assembly and violate Standing Order 23(h), (i), or (j). On this point of order I'm finding it to be a dispute between members on facts – indeed as Beauchesne's, sixth edition, paragraph 494, put it – but want to caution members about using inflammatory language. We all realize that this is a place of sometimes heated discussion and debate. I would continue to ask all of the members to respect this institution and its rules.

I would rule that there was no point of order.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

3:10

Bill 5

Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 5, the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act. Bill 5 significantly expands Alberta's existing public-sector compensation disclosure. It is encouraging to see that many members voiced their overall support for the initiative during first and second readings.

I will be introducing a government amendment at the conclusion of my speech, and I look forward to and anticipate amendments being brought forward by the opposition parties as well.

These bodies will have to disclose the names and compensation of employees who earn more than $125,000 in compensation, including overtime, severance, and bonuses. The threshold is intended to focus disclosure on higher income earners and managers rather than front-line staff. There will be no threshold for board members in the entities covered by the bill. As members have mentioned, these positions have sometimes been criticized or perceived as being patronage appointments. We have also considered that the vast majority of board members do not receive a salary. Instead, they often receive per diem rates for meetings. Therefore, if this bill is passed, all compensation paid to board members of these agencies, boards, and commissions covered under the act will be required to be disclosed. Requiring the disclosure of compensation paid to these positions is in keeping with the principles of open government.

Payments to Alberta's physicians and health practitioners total in the billions of dollars a year. As a result, requiring the disclosure of compensation paid to physicians and other medical professionals also contributes significantly to our goal of informing the public on how their tax dollars are spent. Several physicians raised concerns, as have members of this House, that disclosure of fee-for-service payments would not reflect the actual take-home income of physicians and other medical professionals because of the way the offices are run.

We recognize that physician compensation is complex, and we understand that unique rules will need to apply to the health-sector group. These rules will be developed in consultation with Alberta Health Services and other health entities, physicians, groups like the Alberta Medical Association, other medical practitioners as well as other stakeholder groups. We will take the time necessary to ensure that the regulations are comprehensive, that they accomplish what we're setting out to do, and that stakeholder concerns are heard.

In addition, Madam Chair, the bill enables municipalities and school boards to disclose the names and compensation paid to employees if they wish to do so. Teachers as well as several hon. members have expressed concern with the bill and its effects on school boards and teachers. Specifically, concerns have been raised over the lack of an imposed threshold by government that mirrors the rest of the public sector.

It's important to emphasize that this bill does not mandate disclosure of a single teacher or municipal employee in its present form. Municipalities and school boards are governed by individuals that are elected by the public, and we wanted to respect their autonomy. However, having heard from stakeholders, our government has been working with, I'm pleased to say, all of the opposition parties, including the Wildrose, the Alberta Party, the Progressive Conservatives, and the Alberta Liberal Party, and while we may not agree on all issues, we're working together to improve transparency here in Alberta.

I'd like to introduce an amendment to address concerns raised by the offices of the Legislature. I have what I believe to be the correct number of copies.

Shall I wait while it is distributed, or will I continue?

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A1.

Please continue, hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair. The Legislative Assembly offices raised concerns that given their oversight role, reporting or being subject to an audit by the minister could interfere with that mandate. We fully respect and are committed to ensuring the integrity and independence of the legislative offices. These offices also confirmed their commitment to the principles of transparency in public service, including transparency in the legislative offices. Legislative offices will still be required to publicly disclose compensation information in a manner consistent with other public-sector bodies subject to this amendment.

The amendment adds to section 6 of the act subsection (5), which exempts legislative offices from the requirement to disclose or advise the minister of their disclosure. Public-sector bodies, which the offices are considered under the act, are required to make this disclosure both publicly and to the minister. Again, the office will still be required to publicly disclose. They simply will not have to report that disclosure to the minister responsible for the act.

The subsection also removes the responsible minister's compliance and auditing powers. Instead, the amendment provides auditing powers to the office of the Auditor General through a new section, 9.1. The Auditor General will have the discretion to conduct an audit where the Auditor General considers it appropriate. In regard to auditing the Auditor General's compliance with the act, the amendment provides the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices the authority to appoint an auditor. This is consistent with the auditing scheme contained in the current Auditor General Act.

Finally, under the amendment offices are required to co-operate fully with an audit. The results of the audit will be presented to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices or in one case the Members' Services Committee. The committee can make the audit results – sorry. It's the Auditor General in another.

With this amendment, Bill 5 is consistent with the existing oversight structure for legislative offices. Any possible perception of lack of independence from government is avoided. Importantly, the requirement to publicly disclose is maintained. I urge all members to support the amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any hon. members wish to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I thank the hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General for participating in the debate on Bill 5. I've spoken broadly to Bill 5 and expressed the strong support of the Official Opposition for this bill. It is a huge step forward. My questions here are genuinely now to solicit a bit of information about these amendments. No technical briefing was provided that I'm aware of. Am I incorrect?

Ms Ganley: If that is correct, then I apologize for that.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'm not aware of there being a technical briefing, but perhaps there was. It is the first I've heard of these amendments. The Official Opposition often doesn't provide technical briefings to government because we don't expect ours to pass most of the time, but if we do think that there's a chance, we sometimes consult with members opposite to ensure that they're aware of what's coming down the pipe.

I'm going to ask perhaps a series of questions here, not to delay the process in any way but to genuinely find out if these are amenable to our caucus, so if the minister can bear with us. If I'm understanding correctly, the intent of the amendment here is to ensure that the ministries do not obtain any direct authority over officers of the Legislature, which would be, obviously, something that all members here would want to avoid for the independence as officers of the Legislature report to this House and not to ministries. If the minister could take some time to explain that that is the intent of this but that those offices will still somehow be required to comply with the sunshine list or the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act. How will they still be compelled to comply with the act but not be subject to the authority of ministers' offices? If the minister could speak to that, please.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair. What the first part, part A, does is that it adds subsection (5) to section 6. Essentially, in the act, when people are disclosing, there are two requirements. One is that they disclose publicly, and the second is that they report to the minister responsible for the act that they have done the disclosing. In this case, they will still be required to report publicly, but they won't be required to tell the minister because they felt – and we agreed that they were correct – that having them report to the minister in that way was probably a little bit inappropriate. That's one piece of it.

The other piece is that with respect to agencies, boards, and commissions the responsible minister will have auditing capacity. If an agency, board, or commission discloses salaries or says, "We don't have any at $125,000, so we're not going to disclose," the minister's office is able to bring someone in to audit that to make sure that that is, in fact, correct. They also felt that it would be inappropriate for the minister's office to be auditing the offices of the Legislative Assembly, so instead the Auditor General will perform that function except in the case of the Auditor General's office itself, in which case the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices can also appoint an auditor to conduct an audit to determine whether the legislative office of the Auditor General is compliant with the act. In that case, it goes to the committee instead.

In terms of the enforcement mechanism and the auditor appointed under subsection (2), if it's an auditor appointed by the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, that report will go to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices. If the Auditor General does the report, then that report will also go to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices. That will be the oversight body in those cases.

We actually just made one small correction to this, and I just want to make sure that I'm absolutely correct on it. The results can be made public in a "form and manner determined by the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices or, in the case of an audit in respect of the Legislative Assembly Office, by the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services."

Those are sort of the oversight bodies. We've delegated to a committee because they are, we think, with respect to Legislative Assembly offices a more appropriate place.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you to the minister for her thorough rundown through this. I have two questions. I just want to summarize this.

My first question. If it would be appropriate – maybe the chair could rule on whether this would be – perhaps a single copy of any further government amendments could be disclosed to the various opposition parties so that we could kind of take a brief look at it while the rest of the debate is transpiring to try to get some idea of it. I'm incredibly nervous about looking at legislation and voting on it in a matter of minutes. It makes me a bit nervous even if I do believe the honest intent of the legislation. If one copy could perhaps be distributed to each of the different caucuses so that we could look at it. If there are further government amendments to come forward, if that would be appropriate, I think that would be helpful for the flow of debate here.

My second is perhaps my final follow-up question on this. Correct me if I'm wrong. These offices of the Legislature will be reporting to the public, but instead of reporting to ministries, they will instead be responsible to legislative committees rather than to offices of ministers. Am I correct in the assertion that while different agencies, boards, and commissions and other government entities will report to the public and report to ministers' offices, the difference for offices of the Legislature is that they will report to the public but that their responsibility will be to legislative committees as opposed to ministers' offices directly? Am I correct in that assertion or summary of what you've said?

Ms Ganley: Yes, I would say that that is a correct summary of the thing.

Now, in terms of their disclosure, they just disclose publicly, and then if either the Auditor General, in the case of offices that obviously aren't the Auditor General's, or the committee, in cases of all offices, feels that an audit is required, then they'll be the body to do that. They're the oversight body.

We can on a go-forward basis, I think, maybe do a better job of providing some things up front, and I apologize for that. We don't intend to propose any further amendments. Assuming that the amendments from the other side play out the way we have anticipated, then we shouldn't need to make any further amendments – I guess I shouldn't presuppose that – or probably not.

In terms of the amendment currently under consideration, is there a way to move to another amendment? No, there is not. Okay. We're happy with that.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Yeah. The amendment has to be dealt with and passed before we can move on to the next one.

In terms of your request, that's something that you would arrange between the minister's office and the Official Opposition.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'll just thank the minister for her comments.

I do believe that this is done in the best spirit. Perhaps we'll just work on a bit of communication, moving forward, for amendments. Again, this not being exactly my file, perhaps there was a technical briefing and I was not made aware of it. But seeing this as it is now, I cannot see any reason the Official Opposition would not support it, and I would encourage members of the House to support the amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just for clarity, it looks like we're just dealing with offices reporting to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, so those six offices. Is that correct? Essentially – I'm not real good with all the verbiage; I'm kind of from the business side and cut through the gobbledygook – we're looking at all six offices being required to report to the committee, and the committee would make the determination on whether or not to make that public. Is that what this is essentially doing?

The Chair: Hon. minister, you wish to respond?

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair and to the member for the question. I'll just read out the definition because it'll make it a little bit easier.

- (j) "Office of the Legislature" means
 - (i) the Legislative Assembly Office,
 - (ii) the Office of the Auditor General,
 - (iii) the Office of the Ombudsman,
 - (iv) the Office of the Chief Electoral Officer,
 - (v) the Office of the Ethics Commissioner,
 - (vi) the Office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner,
 - (vii) the Office of the Child and Youth Advocate, and
 - (viii) the Office of the Public Interest Commissioner.

Those are the ones that we're talking about when we say, "Office of the Legislature," so those are the ones that will be covered. Those offices will still be required to disclose publicly, and they will be responsible to the Auditor General, except for the Auditor General, and also to the committee. The intention is that they will disclose publicly automatically, and then if the Auditor General or that committee were to perceive some problem, they could perform an audit. They are intended to disclose publicly. They just don't report to the minister that that disclosure has happened.

I see you shaking your head, so I will let you get up and ask the question.

Mr. van Dijken: May I?

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. van Dijken: I guess that when we look at 9.1(4), "to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices" and then we move into 9.1(6), "in the form and manner determined by the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices or, in the case of an audit in respect of the Legislative Assembly Office, by the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services," what I'm seeing here is essentially that they're being required to report to the committee, and then the committee is determining whether or not to make that public. It looks to me like they're looking for an exemption in reporting to the committee and the committee determining.

3:30

Ms Ganley: I can answer that one, too. Subsection (6) is dealing with the results of an audit in the instance when an audit is performed by the Auditor General and that audit says that, you know, you need to include further or corrected disclosure relating to a statement of remuneration previously disclosed through the audit. So if the previously disclosed statement is questioned in some way either by the Auditor General or by the committee and the committee performs an audit, then this is the procedure for determining whether that new and further disclosure is made public. It's not referring to the original disclosure; it's referring to further and better disclosure as a result of an audit. If that's helpful.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Back to the bill, Bill 5. Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. Wildrose believes in public discourse, that it is an important step for openness and transparency towards taxpayer-funded salaries. Indeed, our party campaigned on that, as did the NDP, the idea of a sunshine list. We're pleased to see that this legislation would extend the sunshine list to include Alberta Health Services, most postsecondary institutions, the independent offices of the Legislature, physicians, and other health service providers, including the Alberta Medical Association and other health care entities.

We've had this conversation, but we believe it's important for Albertans to know and have confidence that remuneration provided to those who serve on government-funded agencies, boards, and commissions is fair, that this compensation is determined by merit. The expanded sunshine list will provide the people of Alberta with more confidence in that matter. A sunshine list is designed to shed light on spending that may be deemed as being excessive. It is designed to protect the taxpaying citizens to ensure good stewardship of public finances.

We've had these conversations, and that's why we on this side of the House and I personally can support the threshold of disclosure in this bill. It's been set at $125,000, and this seems to be a reasonable number.

This bill as it's presently written enables school boards to disclose names and salaries. This is a concern to me personally and to many teachers. Wildrose does not want teachers to be concerned about their salaries being disclosed as an indirect consequence of this legislation. Teachers are the backbone of our education system, and their focus should be on ensuring that students reach their full potential, not on whether their names and their salaries are being disclosed on the sunshine list. When it comes to educators, any disclosures that boards decide on should not go below the threshold of $125,000 proposed in the bill for agencies, boards, and commissions.

I'm supportive of this bill, but I do think that it could be strengthened to ensure that it meets the intended purpose, to ensure that taxpayers have the information they need to know where their tax dollars are being spent and also that they are receiving good value for those tax dollars.

After consultation and feedback with stakeholders affected by Bill 5, I would like to introduce an amendment to ensure that teachers are provided with the same threshold limits of $125,000 as the rest of the public employees in Alberta. I would like to table a notice of amendment through the House. I'll wait until it's passed out, Madam Chair.

The Chair: This will be amendment A2.

You can go ahead, hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. The amendment reads: Mr. Smith to move that Bill 5, Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act, be amended as follows. Section 1(o)(ii) is amended by adding "or by an education body" after "public sector body." Section 10(1)(a) is struck out, and the following is substituted: "(a) the names of those employees of the education body whose total compensation and severance during the previous calendar year is greater than the threshold referred to in section 1(o)(ii)."

The Wildrose Party, as we have said, understands and I think this House now understands that when we're looking at a sunshine list, it is for excessive amounts. Teachers and most employees, wage-earners, don't necessarily need to have their names on a sunshine list. At $125,000 we agree with the government that this is a reasonable threshold, and we believe that it should be applied to all teachers.

I would ask you to support this amendment.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Just for the education of committee members, even when you are reading a notice of amendment, it would be inappropriate to use your own name in reading that, so just as we go forward.

Mr. Smith: Oh. Okay. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise also in support of this amendment. I sincerely hope this is a good example of how we can all work together as opposition and with the government to truly improve a bill. Bill 5 as originally presented did an awful lot of enabling of potential – it created a very open possibility for school boards in this case but also other bodies to do some pretty broad things when it came to sunshine lists. What this amendment does is really narrow down that focus to a more appropriate number.

I have some general concerns with sunshine lists as a concept. I'm not quite as enthusiastic about them as our friends in Wildrose. Perhaps I will elaborate on those specific concerns when we get to third reading, but I rise and will speak here in favour of this amendment. Later this afternoon I will be presenting a similar amendment for a different section to close another loophole along the same lines.

Really, I just wanted to rise and thank the members for the opportunity to collaborate and work together on this with members of the Official Opposition as well as the members of the government to do what I think opposition is meant to do, and that's to ask good questions and close loopholes in legislation to make it as strong as it possibly can be for the benefit of all Albertans and, in this particular case, to ensure that we have assuaged the fears of teachers, I think the very legitimate fears of teachers especially, and of others in public education and all education systems that their information will not be shared unnecessarily. There are other ways of ensuring transparency in education, pay grids and public negotiations being chief among them.

With that, I'll take my place and look forward to hearing from the government. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I would like to thank the members opposite, both the Wildrose Party and the Alberta Party, for working with us on this amendment. We did hear a number of concerns from the ATA and from individual teachers with respect to this bill, and we are happy to support this amendment that they have brought forward to assuage the fears of those teachers and to make sure that they feel that they are properly protected and that their incomes will not be disclosed unnecessarily by this legislation.

I think this has been an excellent example of co-operation on all sides of the House. I would like to thank the House for working with us on this and for the overall commitment, I think, on all sides to transparency in government. I would urge all members to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

3:40

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the minister for the work that the government is doing to improve the transparency act. I rise to support the amendment to Bill 5. Wildrose has advocated for all agencies, boards, and commissions to be included on the salary disclosure sunshine list. Albertans have a right to know where their tax dollars are being spent. Transparency in government is essential. Only with transparency can citizens fully understand their government's operations.

When the bill was introduced, I did all of a sudden start to get e-mails from teachers with concerns, so I think the work that's being done here is good, and we can support this amendment. That being said, Madam Chair, teachers are unique when it comes to salary disclosure. School boards have negotiated a salary grid with the teachers' union. If you know the name of the teacher and their years of experience teaching, you will already have some idea about their salary. Our educators in our classrooms should not be distracted by the possibility of being on a sunshine list. Feedback received from teachers all around the province shows that teachers are very concerned. The Alberta Teachers' Association opposes this provision of Bill 5, and I do not think there is any need for lists of teachers' names and salaries to be published.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A2?

If not, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

The Chair: We're back on the bill. Are there any further speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to present an amendment to this bill, section 11. I'll hand around the appropriate number of copies, and with the chair's indulgence and in the interests of moving things along expeditiously this afternoon, I will speak to the amendment while it's being handed out if no one minds.

I'm presenting an amendment to section 11, and I've given away all my copies, so I can't tell you exactly what it says.

The Chair: Hon. member, if you could just wait for a moment until I get a copy of the amendment, and then we can go ahead.

Mr. Clark: Yes.

The Chair: Thank you. Do you have the original?

Mr. Clark: I was given the original, unfortunately.

The Chair: Yeah. That's what I need, the original, please. All right. Go ahead.

Mr. Clark: Shall we try again?

The Chair: Yes.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much. We live and we learn.

This amendment is very similar to the amendment we just passed on section 10, this one applying, however, to section 11, which refers to municipal bodies, municipal authorities. The amendment reads that Bill 5, Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act, be amended as follows: section 1(o)(ii) is amended by adding "or by a municipal authority" after "public sector body," and that section 11(1) is amended by striking out clause (a) and substituting the following: "(b) the names of those employees of the municipal authority whose total compensation and severance during the previous calendar year is greater than the threshold referred to in section 1(o)(ii)."

All of the same arguments that applied in section 10 apply here. It puts a floor under what municipal authorities are able to disclose in the same way that we just did in section 10 for educational bodies.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any hon. members wishing to speak? This will be amendment A3. The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Once again, I'd like to thank the members of the House for working together on these amendments.

The initial intent of the bill had been to provide municipalities and school boards with sort of the discretion to choose what the limits were. We think that it's important that if we're going to impose limits on those entities, the limits are the same for both entities. We know that, certainly with respect to teachers, concerns have been heard, I think, by all members in the House, and I suspect that similar concerns probably could have been echoed by municipal employees about what might ultimately be done with those salaries.

I think this is a great example of co-operation. I'm really happy to support this amendment as well, and I would encourage all members of this House to vote for it.

Thanks.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I really just have a question here regarding the consultation, perhaps, that went on specific to this particular amendment. We just had AUMA and AAMDC meetings, and I'm wondering if there was any consultation with the municipal districts regarding this kind of thing and what their input might have been. I don't know, so I'm asking the question.

The Chair: Any hon. member wishing to respond to that question?

Ms Ganley: I'll apologize because I don't have the information directly off the top of my head in terms of how that went forward. I certainly know that initially, I believe, there were some initial conversations with municipalities, particularly with respect to the Minister of Municipal Affairs, but I'd want to confirm that. I mean, in terms of the amendments I understand that they were brought forward by members of the House on the basis of information that they received from third, outside parties. Certainly, those same third parties contacted my offices. It's difficult for me, when we're talking about amendments being made by other parties, to speak to whether or not consultation was done.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A3?

If not, then, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 carried]

The Chair: We are back on the bill. Any further comments, questions, amendments to Bill 5? The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Chair. I have in my hand the required number of copies for an amendment to Bill 5. I'll give them a chance to be distributed, and then I'll speak to it.

Thank you.

The Chair: This will be amendment A4.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Ms Jansen: Okay. Thank you, Chair. We propose the following amendment to Bill 5 by adding the following after 7(7) to make this 7(8): the minister shall receive a report from the appropriate standing legislative committee about the continued effectiveness of compensation disclosure by no later than January 1, 2019, and every four years after that. A review every four years, we think, is an important part of making sure that this legislation is as effective as possible. As responsible legislators we want to make sure that we regularly review the legislation to ensure that it has the continued beneficial effects in the context of all our legislation, and then we have the opportunity to improve it if we need to.

3:50

I'm explicitly referring this legislation to committee for review. We think this is necessary because in the broader context of over a century of Alberta legislation we have had only one public salary disclosure since 1998. That was by the Treasury Board directive 12/98, and that required disclosure of compensation for the top-rung staff at GOA organizations. As we continue to build on Alberta's public-sector compensation framework, we think it's appropriate for the House to review the effectiveness of the steps we take and just to consider whether the legislation remains current and whether it remains relevant. If we have the opportunity to periodically consider the effects of this act, to evaluate new research and evidence about the entire range of effects and impacts of compensation disclosure, we stay on the cutting edge of this, which I think is important.

We also want members of the public to have the explicit opportunity to pose their own questions and their own comments about how well this system of disclosure fulfills or doesn't fulfill their expectations, which is pretty important, to make sure that it's doing exactly what it needs to do and that members of the public feel that it does as well. This Legislature takes the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Standing Committee on the road every year. They do that in order to gather information from the public, and that is an important thing.

Future legislators should not have to appeal to political whims in order to review this legislation. This is about openness and transparency. They could still review it sooner if they wish, but we think that four years is a pretty good amount that we settled on. I would certainly hope that you would consider this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in support of this amendment. I think it's very important that any legislation that's about transparency be reviewed by the people of Alberta on a regular basis. As we know, in the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee I've made a very similar motion to take it on the road. As the Member for Calgary-North West has indicated, the Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee travels the province and talks to Albertans. I think that's a very, very important thing for us to do, and I think that when we have a bill that's about transparency, it's important that we take the opportunity and put that into this bill, that we will come back and ask Albertans again what they think. It also gives this Legislature and future Legislatures some accountability to make sure that the bill doesn't have any unintended consequences.

One of the concerns that I have in general with sunshine lists is that when we look at other jurisdictions, there's a wage inflation problem. If I find out that my salary is $2,000 less than the person sitting in the desk next to me, it's pretty unlikely that the person in the desk next to me is going to ask for a pay cut. It's pretty likely that I'm going to ask for a raise. So there's some risk with sunshine lists.

I think it's very important that as we go down the path of expanding Alberta's sunshine list, we make sure that there are some brakes in legislation and look down the road to say: "Are there unintended consequences? If so, let's deal with them." Let's make sure that we put some formal process in place to ensure that that happens.

I'm speaking and voting in favour of this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I won't speak long to this, but I want to thank the Member for Calgary-North West for her thoughtful amendment to the bill. I think it's prudent for us to regularly review legislation, regularly review the things we do in this House. I'm not sure if we would do this for everything we do, but I think that this is prudent. I've long been an advocate for sunshine lists, and I think that even things that we support we should be always willing to question and review and make sure that they are still a good idea after we've passed them into law. I'd encourage all members of the House to support the amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I actually have a question for the hon. member with respect to this. I, too, feel that this is an excellent idea. I think that, certainly, in this particular case it's important to have some review and oversight of the act to make sure that it's working in the way that we want it to work and that it's having the effects that we want it to have. So I think that that's a great idea. I just wanted to ask specifically about the committee. I apologize; this may just be my newness to the House. Would this cause a committee to be created? If there's a special committee, does this go to a pre-existing committee, or will the government come forward and work with the opposition to create a new committee?

Thank you.

Ms Jansen: Thank you to the minister. I believe that it wouldn't cause a committee to be created. I think we could give this to one of our committees that we currently have in existence, and it could be handled that way.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. I also have a question. I support in general the intent of the amendment. I'm just wondering if she has any description, as she's put in here "a comprehensive review of this Act" as opposed to just a review of the act, of what's envisioned in a comprehensive review as opposed to just a review.

Ms Jansen: I thank the member for the question. You know, because it's an amendment, I haven't been prescriptive here, so I haven't exactly outlined where we want to go, but I think that's certainly a discussion that we can have going forward. I think certainly that we want input from the public. We want to make sure that the information we're asking the government of Alberta and public bodies to go to the effect of compiling: is it appropriate? Is it sufficient information? We need to be checking that as we go forward. I believe that sort of the idea behind this is that we make sure that we're doing that. The information that we ask to be disclosed, the purpose of it, really, is to help Albertans better understand how we compensate our public servants. We want to make sure going forward that we have that. When we talk about comprehensive, that's the discussion we can certainly have at the committee level.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak? The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Yeah. Madam Chair, I'm glad to hear that the minister is interested in this and thinks it's a good idea. A hundred years ago, when we were over on that side, one of the pieces of advice that we got . . .

Mr. Cooper: How about six months?

Mr. McIver: It was six months. I know. It seems like a hundred years.

One of the pieces of advice that we got from legislative experts was that most or perhaps all legislation should be reviewed on some schedule to make sure that it remains current – I think the phrase we used for it was evergreening – just looked at once in a while to make sure that it still makes sense. I think that's what this amendment says, and I'm highly suspicious – if the government checks with experts, they'll talk to probably the same people or similar people that we did and probably get the same advice. We think this is genuinely good advice for government and hope that they choose to listen.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in support of this amendment. I especially like that we have this four-year anniversary for a review, and I would like to see that actually attached to almost every piece of legislation that a government ever puts forward. I think it's a great idea. I'm not all that familiar with some of the language used in these things, but it does say, "a special committee," and I understand, hon. member, that you're amending it now to a legislative committee?

Ms Jansen: I think we're going to strike that out.

Mr. MacIntyre: Okay. Great. Then my question becomes redundant, and we can just throw this to a committee, which is kind of where I was going to go with that.

I'm very much in favour of this. As you all know, we have been – how shall we say? – adamant about referring things to committee. That's sort of an understatement. We have been doggedly adamant to refer things to committee, and I would very much like to see this bill follow that routing. Ultimately, I hope every member in this Legislature will support this bill, that makes good use of the parliamentary processes that we have in this Legislature with regard to standing committees, which are there to do this very good work, that involves each one of us that is perhaps not on the front line of this Legislature. But it involves us backbenchers, and it gives us direct input into the development of good, sound legislation, which is a valuable contribution that each and every one of us who has been elected here can make to legislation.

I'm very pleased to see this amendment, and I enthusiastically support it. Thank you.

4:00

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think that we'll find support for a friendly subamendment to strike "special" from the amendment. Perhaps I'm mistaken, but I believe we'll find general support, if not unanimous support, to do so as a friendly subamendment.

Ms Jansen: And we concur.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. I'd just like to ask the member a few questions for my own understanding of the timing of these things. You indicate that you would be asking that a review of the act begin on January 1, but I don't understand what that means in terms of when a review would need to be tabled, if there is any limitation on the amount of time that review could take.

Secondly, under section (b) it refers to: "every 4 years after the date on which the . . . committee submits its final report." Is that, again, the beginning of the review, or do they need to submit the next report at the deadline of four years from the date of the initial report?

Thank you.

Ms Jansen: I thank the member for the question. We're prepared to give the government some flexibility on this.

Mr. Feehan: I'm sorry. I missed the answer.

Ms Jansen: All right. We're prepared to give the government some flexibility on this.

Mr. MacIntyre: Just regarding the timing of this and not understanding fully the whole procedures of these things, is the timing of the delivery of the report something that is subject to the government's wishes or the committee's wishes? In the timing of these reports' delivery, in the amount of time that a committee has to study this legislation, for example every four years, is that window of study determined by government or by the committee?

Mr. Mason: Well, in the hon. member's amendment, unless I'm misunderstanding you, sir, it says that it will begin on January 1, 2019, and that it will "submit a final report . . . within 6 months" of beginning the review.

Mr. MacIntyre: Within six months of that date?

Mr. Mason: Yes.

Mr. MacIntyre: Okay.

Mr. Mason: So that would be instruction to the committee. If they can get it done in four months, great.

Mr. MacIntyre: Okay. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to say that, you know, there are many times in this House when, sometimes, it gets heated and we're not necessarily seeing eye to eye on things and where we're often at odds with each other and our vision for where we want to go in this province, but it is very refreshing to be able to stand here today and to see the kind of co-operation that's going on here. I know that I would love to speak to this amendment and say that I can support it wholeheartedly.

I don't know. I mean, I'm so brand new to this House that most of the things that go on here tend to go right over my head, and I really appreciate it when the members from the other side of the House sometimes remind me that, no, I can't use a person's name or I can't refer to somebody that's not in the House. You do it gently, and you forgive me for that.

But when I can stand up and I can see the House co-operating, as it is today – I don't know. I mean, I've not been aware of: has there ever been a day in the House when every party has submitted an amendment to a bill that's been accepted in one day? I don't know.

You know, when I stood in front of my kids in my class, I said: please don't judge the House and its effectiveness based on question period, and please realize that when we go into things like the Committee of the Whole, there are often times when they will actually listen to each other and they will talk to each other, and sometimes good amendments and good ideas can come to the forefront.

I think that we can be very proud of what we've done today, and I would just commend the House and ask you to support this subamendment to the amendment to the bill. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I believe you will find unanimous consent that I move that amendment A4 to Bill 5, Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act, be amended by striking out "special" wherever it occurs.

The Chair: I believe that I can accept the subamendment as long as all members of the committee are okay with waiving the requirement that everybody receive a copy of the subamendment. Agreed? All right.

So it will be SA1, which is a subamendment to strike the word "special" from amendment A4.

[Motion on subamendment SA1 carried]

The Chair: So we are back to amendment A4 as amended. Any further speakers to that? The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, I just wanted to rise one last time and try to be brief, just to thank all members for their co-operation here today. I think we've done some really good work, and I would urge all members to support this amendment. In particular, I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-North West for her contribution.

The Chair: This is on amendment A4. Any further speakers to amendment A4 as amended?

If not, we'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A4 as amended carried]

The Chair: We're back on the bill. The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment to put forward. With your permission, I'll start reading it while it gets distributed.

The Chair: If you could just wait, hon. member, until I get a copy, please.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Thanks.

The Chair: Go ahead.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chair. The amendment is to move that Bill 5, Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act, be amended in section 7 by striking out subsection (2) and submitting the following:

The Minister shall aggregate and republish all of the information disclosed in accordance with this Act and such information shall be made available to the public including on the public website of the Minister's department.

Madam Chair, I'm hoping that this will be received kindly. Clearly, it's a sunshine bill, so the government has every intention of shining sunshine on the information that they've collected. They've actually committed to do that. Why would they go forward with this in the first place? All this says is something that I hope the government will see as common sense and transparent. Put it in one place where the public can find it. Clearly, the government has said that it's important to collect this information. Clearly, the government has said that it's important to make this available to the public. I just think it would be a nice service to the public if the government would put it all on one website where the public could find it since the whole point is making it so the public can find it anyway.

On that basis, I am ever hopeful. We live in hope. I'm ever hopeful that the government will consider this. They may be intending to do this anyway. I think it's good to make that clear to the public, and I'm, again, hopeful that the government will look kindly upon this amendment.

Thank you.

4:10

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to strongly support this amendment. It's a common-sense amendment. Again, the government may have been intending to do so in any case, but I think it's important to write it into the legislation. The original sunshine list, which was done through order in council, created an excellent website, which serves as a resource for those who want to access the information. This would require by law that all of the different entities coming under the act would bring the information together in aggregate so that Albertans do not have to check 200-odd websites or 200-odd different sources to find the information.

We can look for an example like the B.C. sunshine list, which is technically only accessed through freedom of information, and then I believe that the Vancouver Sun has created its own strange website for it. It's a bizarre spectacle, that when people want to access public information, they have to go to a newspaper to sort through for the sunshine list in that province.

I think that this would be a very useful tool. Again, the government may have been intending to do it anyway, but I think that it would be important to put it into the legislation so that all of the different entities that would now fall under it would all have that information aggregated together.

I thank the leader of the third party for the productive amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair. And we were on such a roll. I rise to speak against the amendment, and the reason for that is that – we are absolutely committed to ensuring that this sort of information is available out there and is available to the public. We did do some cost estimates on what this sort of amalgamating and creating a searchable database would be, and there was a substantial administrative cost involved as a result. We feel that it is not appropriate, given the shortage of public funds currently available, to direct them in this particular way. You know, we feel that administrative cost is maybe not a thing that we should be increasing substantially at this time, so I would not support the amendment, and I would encourage all members not to support the amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. We were so close. So close. It has been a pretty remarkable afternoon, actually. It is pretty remarkable when this Legislative Assembly can work in the way it does, passing amendments that perhaps the government wasn't expecting, but with thoughtful consideration on the part of the government we have in fact passed those amendments. So I give the government a tremendous amount of credit for their flexibility, for their willingness to accommodate and to listen to what the opposition has to say, and I'd encourage them to do the same on this amendment.

You know, as you read the amendment, "be made available to the public including on the public website of the Minister's department," that doesn't need to be a highly interactive, very expensive, searchable database that you can carve up in a bunch of different ways. It could conceivably be an electronic PDF document. Just put it on there. Here it is. That costs virtually nothing, and it takes about five minutes to do that.

I think that in 2015 and forward it is what Albertans expect. How do I find out what the sunshine list says? I go to the government website. That's what Albertans will do, and to think that they need to file a request to get a physical document – that PDF could be searchable, just by control F, find information, that way. It doesn't need to be a big, expensive process. In fact, it may be an object lesson for the government in finding ways of doing things like this very cost-effectively. It could be essentially zero cost to the government. There are ways, just sitting here at my desk, that I thought of doing that.

I would encourage the government to reconsider their position on this and to vote in favour of this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: I'll recognize Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair, and I'll thank the Member for Calgary-Elbow for his comments. As he said, we were so close. Since we're having a productive discussion, I would ask the government to reconsider its views on this.

Most of the costs for this are sunken. These institutions report to ministers' offices, in any case. The information is already being compiled. It is merely putting it into a single spreadsheet. Now, I'm not volunteering to do the cutting and pasting myself, but I don't think that it would be particularly difficult for ministries who are receiving this information. This information is being reported to the ministries, in any case. They will have it in their hands. It would not be very difficult to aggregate it together in the existing website. A website already exists, created in I believe early 2013 if memory serves me correct. It is an excellent, easily accessible website, that this information could be easily plugged into.

Other jurisdictions in our own country that have sunshine lists do this. You could go to the Ontario sunshine list website and search for both the salaries of a minister's chief of staff and a TTC toll booth attendant in the same search. It's pretty easily done. It's done elsewhere.

I like to think that I'm one of the members more concerned with costs in this House. If there are significant administrative costs that are not sunken but are above and beyond current administrative costs, then I would ask the Minister of Justice to table the documents indicating what those costs are. But I would be skeptical of there being significant administrative costs that are not already buried. The ministries have this – we'll have this information, in any case, and the idea is that we merely put it onto the website, compiling it in a single, accessible spot for Albertans to access. I hate to see another third-party organization or news organizations have to do what they've done in British Columbia and have people of our province go to somebody else's website, where someone has hired a computer programmer to aggregate the data for them. Albertans should be able to go to their government's website to find out how much government employees are making.

I would strongly encourage the minister and the government to reconsider the position here in light of the Kumbaya atmosphere we seem to have built over the last hour or so.

Thank you.

The Chair: Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you very much. If the minister prefers to stay with 7(2) as it's currently written, I just wonder if you could tell us, please: what is the intent of how you would distribute the information? Quite frankly, a sunshine list that either can't be found or isn't made public isn't really a sunshine list. As it's currently written, it says, "in the form and manner determined by the Minister." So what does that actually look like, please, if you could tell us?

Ms Ganley: Sorry?

Mr. Orr: My point was that 7(2) as it's actually written says that it's entirely at your discretion, which is fine. But my question is: how do you plan to make it public? A sunshine list that is not public or can't be found isn't really a sunshine list. It's at your discretion, but what is your discretion? What's your intent on the manner determined to make it public?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chairperson. The intention was to have the individual agencies publish their list themselves, so those would be made available on their website or in whatever manner they sort of saw fit to publish that information. I mean, if what we're being asked to do is to essentially take the sheets of information and reprint them online, that's fine. If what we're being asked to do is to recombine all the information by last name and create a searchable database, the costs initially in terms of administrative burden in going forward are substantial and, we think, sort of not worth the additional cost given that someone can simply go to that particular board's website or go to that particular board and get the information that way.

I mean, the intention had been that at some point a website would be developed with links to these other various sites. But in terms of this, which I can only assume is suggesting that we need to bring all the information together and create a searchable database, the cost of that is considerable.

The Chair: Lacombe-Ponoka, go ahead.

Mr. Orr: Yeah. I do appreciate the sensitivity to costs. I commend you on that. I guess my only question would be: if every board and agency and department is allowed to publish it on their own, do you anticipate any issues of compliance or checking or making sure that they actually do? I have some concerns, I guess, about that.

Thank you.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I mean, obviously there are methods to ensure compliance within the act itself. In addition to disclosing publicly, the individual agencies, boards, and commissions or municipalities and school boards, as the case may be, are required to disclose publicly and also to the minister, so the minister will know that that disclosure has been made or be told that that disclosure isn't made. If they're not compliant, there are compliance mechanisms in the act with respect to auditing or with respect to ensuring the disclosure occurs. With respect to the Legislative Assembly offices, obviously, we've just amended those compliance mechanisms today. Other than that, I would suggest that it's already in the act.

Thank you.

Mr. Gotfried: Madam Chairman, I just wanted to speak. I understand some of the issues addressed here, one of those being cost. I'm not an expert on websites or anything of that sort, but I've certainly been involved with development of many websites over the years. It would seem to me that if cost is an issue, one website with a standardized template, with a standardized request for information for input so that the information that is being developed by the various organizations, bodies is done in a standard format would then allow for an easy upload into a single website, which could be compartmentalized to allow that to occur.

Instead of having three or five or seven or 10 different organizations loading up information all in different formats, you send the format out to everybody, tell them to use this, push a button, it automatically uploads, and all you have to do is have one administrator ensure that it is uploading correctly. I think the cost argument here doesn't hold for anybody who's ever developed any kind of websites or uploaded information. In fact, a single website would be more cost-effective, easier for people to access, easier for government to administrate, and all that is required is some front-end work to achieve that.

Mr. McIver: Listen. I'm, in fairness, happy the minister is concerned about costs. Thank you. But, Madam Chair, I will also say that the amendment as it's written isn't really prescriptive. This would leave the ministry the flexibility of scanning the reports and plunking them up there. I appreciate that that's not as good as a searchable, mashable database, but our duty here isn't to information mashers; our duty is to Albertans that want to know what the government has said they ought to be able to know. You know, if the mashers want to take off with the scan sheets, print it, and pay somebody to put in some searchable database for themselves, then that's not the government's expense. It's not the government's problem.

All I'm saying is that hopefully the minister will reconsider what she said because I don't see anything in my amendment that requires a fully searchable database in any particular format. Obviously, if the government found a way to do that, that would be best, but the fact is that I would consider the amendment honoured if the government just said: once a year, when we get this stuff in, we'll scan it and post it.

One of my colleagues said that there are apps you can get for your smart phone for $5, where you can take a picture of something, and it pops up on the website once you get that automated. I appreciate that the government will probably want to do things slightly more sophisticated than that because it's a pretty big machine.

Anyway, I hope the minister will reconsider what she said when she stood, particularly in light of what we're saying. We won't be criticizing if it's not in the most searchable, most sophisticated database. We're actually kind of trying to save the government from criticism, that people will say: now we have to have sunshine on the sunshine list. It's probably best if people don't have to say that. I hope that the government can see their way clear to accepting what I think is intended to be helpful and I certainly hope a reasonable amendment.

Mr. Clark: A fairly simple and straightforward question for the minister. In the year 2015 and in subsequent years if this information is not already electronic, I'd be very surprised. If you don't anticipate distributing this information via a website, how do you anticipate distributing this information? And what's the hesitation here given the different options that have been presented, which seem pretty reasonably in terms of simplicity and getting this information out there?

Ms Ganley: Well, I think the hesitation in this case is not to publish the information online; we're happy to publish the information online. In fact, we have every intention of making sure that it is as available as possible. The exact mechanism of that hasn't been determined.

I mean, to me, the way this is worded, "aggregate and republish," looks like we're having to aggregate and republish, which I would assume means putting all the information together. I think that I find it overly restrictive in terms of what we have to do going forward, you know, ensuring that that information is widely available and ensuring that the cost is as reasonable as possible. Like I say, I have cost estimates from our technical experts. I was never a person who programmed databases or who was a technical person in that way, so I can only assume that the cost estimates that I have received are accurate cost estimates, and those cost estimates were fairly high.

Certainly, we can commit to having a website where everyone can access the information. I'm just a little bit concerned that this is overly restrictive to the government. I mean, I appreciate the points that you're all making, and perhaps you know things about computers. Certainly, my experience has been that when you're dealing with things of this nature, and I think specifically of the university transitioning – I shouldn't mention specific examples. But specifically when you're dealing with databases of this nature, they are often much more costly and much more onerous than you expect that they're going to be, or at least that has been my experience. I can but rely on the advice of my technical experts, which is that that sort of thing would be very expensive, and I feel that this is unnecessarily restrictive to the government's ability to pick how to do that.

The Chair: Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm going to repeat something I said earlier. Again, I pride myself as being sort of the penny-pincher in the House. So, you know, if there was a strong argument that this was not cost-effective, I'd certainly be willing to hear it. Can the minister tell us what that estimated cost is, provided to her by her department, before we could vote on this amendment? If it is unduly expensive or burdensome and a cost figure has been provided to the minister, I would love to hear it.

The Chair: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I just want to indicate to the members that having just seen this now for the first time, there are some considerations that the government needs to take into account. For example, in fact, is the best way to make the information public to aggregate it on the website of the minister's department? That is an assumption that's contained in this motion. It's not necessarily something that relates to what the actual best use or desire of potential users is as to where they want to find this information. So that's an unknown question. It's simply an assumption that this is the best way to do it, and there needs to be some additional work done in order to determine what costs are and so on.

The simple fact of the matter is, Madam Chair, that the government is not prepared to support this amendment at this time. At some future date this, in fact, may well be what we do, but we're not prepared to support this amendment at this time.

4:30

The Chair: Calgary-Elbow, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to point out something in the bill itself. Section 7(2) currently reads, "The Minister may aggregate or republish." So the words "aggregate or republish" are actually in the section as it stands now. We're not quibbling on "aggregate"; we're quibbling on "shall" and "may." And far be it from me to cast aspersions or suggest that your government would ever do such a thing, but what if you choose not to? What's the point of this law, of this bill? Given that you "may" aggregate or republish, really, this is perhaps the ultimate loophole in this legislation. You may choose not to publish any information at any point.

As this bill is written, if I'm to interpret this section literally, you "may aggregate or republish any part ... of the information disclosed in accordance." So you may choose to publish the last period at the end of the disclosure. The number 6: you may choose to simply disclose that. I'm not suggesting that you will. I think that there's a lot of goodwill here this afternoon. This bill, for those who feel strongly about sunshine lists – if we're going to have a sunshine list bill, you know, I think that there are a lot of great things in here.

I have some questions and concerns. I guess, you know, as we dig and unpack this section, I think it makes the amendment presented before us all that much more important because, frankly, this could be the ultimate loophole to publishing absolutely no information at all.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Well, I don't think anything could be further from the truth, notwithstanding the fact that it's the government that brought forward the bill in order to extend transparency with respect to this, and that is the intention of the government.

If you look at section 3(1), it says:

Commencing in 2016, on or before June 30 in each year, every public sector body shall disclose to the public and the Minister, in the form and manner determined by the Minister, a statement of remuneration in relation to the previous calendar year in accordance with subsection (2).

Subsection 2 lays out exactly what the information that has to be disclosed is. So there is a legal requirement for the disclosure of this information in the act, and it is not a loophole.

The Chair: Go ahead, Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Chair. The minister spoke of estimates for the cost of this aggregate disclosure and publishing, and I was just wondering if she could table those documents. I pray that there's more than one estimate.

The Chair: Any further comments or questions to amendment A5? Did you have a further comment?

Mr. McIver: Just that I hope the government will take the last 15 or 20 seconds before I close and reconsider. This was genuinely intended to be helpful, and I think that the government is putting themselves at risk of needing to put sunshine on their sunshine list, and I would hate to see that. I think that you've got a chance. You brought forward a piece of legislation, I think, with good intention. You've got what I think is a pretty easy opportunity here to solidify that good intention, and I'd hate to see you lose that opportunity.

Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Chair, I might just ask for unanimous consent of the House to go to one-minute bells until 6 o'clock.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Chair: On amendment A5, are there any further speakers?

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A5 lost]

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment to put forward, and I'll give the appropriate copies here.

While it's circulating, I'll just say a few words about it. I think everyone wants to ensure with those agencies and commissions and boards and publicly funded organizations that we have access to information around how they're paid and what role they perform in our public system. That's part of why a sunshine list has been discussed and, in many cases, supported.

I think there are some sensitivities around individualizing the incomes of people. Professionals, especially private professionals, have certainly got concerns about how it will be interpreted, who will use it, whether it can be used by some individuals for purposes that are really to attack or to diminish or to embarrass without full knowledge. Certainly, some of those would be the physicians who have been in touch with me.

This amendment is an attempt to recognize that if you're being publicly funded, there needs to be public awareness of what that public funding is, but it's less important to know who's getting what. In fact, some of the results that I've seen around previous sunshine lists are that when someone notices someone else is getting more, they usually lobby to get equal. So it actually ends up raising the income and the salaries of many of the people, when the goal of this is to try and keep a lid on increases.

This amendment, I think, is an attempt to anonymize, make anonymous, the incomes of individuals but still identify what that professional group as a median income might make. For example, in the case of physicians, if a general practitioner median income is $250,000 a year, that would become the important information that the public needs to know. We don't need to know that John Man received $260,000 this year and that Joe Btfsplk got only $125,000 last year. [interjections] Who is Btfsplk? It came from some cartoon.

An Hon. Member: Li'l Abner.

Dr. Swann: Li'l Abner, was it? Thank you.

Are we getting off topic here? [interjections] I dated myself. Hands up: how many know who Joe Btfsplk is? About 10 people here. It was a test. I've lost a lot of people. Wow.

Could you bring us back to order, Madam Chair? Where was I?

The Chair: A reminder that the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has the floor, and we are debating amendment A6.

Dr. Swann: So it may well be that we want to know what GPs in Alberta get. We could see every individual GP and their income for the past year but without a name associated with it, and we could see a median income for all GPs to get an idea of what the standard GP income is, recognizing that we have no idea what their overhead is – how many staff they have, how much in office expenses and so on – which puts it into a bigger context. We will not know that, and that's part of, I think, what physicians have contacted me about, concerns about a gross number as opposed to a net number and having an individual name attached to an individual salary. Who gains benefit from that?

I think that what we as a public want to know is: are GPs being paid, on average, too much? Are cardiovascular surgeons being paid too much? Do we need to know what this particular cardiovascular surgeon makes compared to this cardiovascular surgeon? I don't think that's the purpose of this, but we do need to know why we're paying so much for cardiovascular surgeons and so little for GPs. That's the important thing. Why aren't we valuing general practitioners more in this culture than the cardiovascular surgeon? That's relevant information. I think that we need to know the median. We do not need to know individual names attached to it, which creates very significant sensitivities in the community, not only doctors but other professional groups as well that are receiving public funds.

I'm recommending that it be anonymized, that we have a median income for that particular category of practitioner, and that indeed it could be the same in some of the other organizations that we're concerned about. We identify the position, executive director, and in this line of work executive directors have a median income of this. We don't need to know the individual name attached to that, but we need to know: on average, what's the median income of the executive directors of these agencies, boards, and commissions, and is it within reason or not? Then we start to make some systematic changes if they seem to be out of line with the rest of the public service.

The Chair: Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for his contribution to the debate. I must now follow the bad habits of the Minister of Justice and be the naysayer. I will speak against the proposed amendment.

I understand what the member is trying to achieve. In probably 99 per cent of the cases we don't particularly care about attaching a name to things, but it is important for reasons of transparency. In the original fight for the sunshine list in the winter of 2012-2013 one of the reasons compelling the government of the day to do it was so that we could find patronage appointments scattered throughout the government. Now, someone appointed to a position paid for by taxpayers: we would not be able to necessarily find out where that person has been plunked down in the bureaucracy or plunked down into different posts. You know, I won't get into too many specific examples here, but a former member of this House, defeated in the 2012 election, found himself a plum patronage appointment in the government. Now, the sunshine list did not appear at that time. We found that information out through other channels. But for the sunshine list to be of use in identifying those kinds of patronage appointments, a name must be attached.

Now, we've had a sunshine list for the core public service of the government since the winter of 2012-13 or the spring of 2013. I cannot recall a single news story from the Edmonton Journal or the Calgary Herald saying how much John Doe makes working as a policy analyst in the department of agriculture. It's just not of particular public interest. But it's important that we have the information because those capers will exist, hidden throughout the government.

This amendment, unfortunately, takes the sunshine out of the sunshine list. It destroys, largely, the purpose of the sunshine list. There are multiple purposes to sunshine lists. The reason that people want to use it is up to the taxpayers paying the bills of the people listed in the sunshine lists. It's well intended but, I think, misplaced. The evidence does not support the idea that putting names on a sunshine list will inflate salaries. Quite the contrary. The jurisdictions in Canada that have sunshine lists tend to have, on average, I've seen, slightly lesser increases in public-sector compensation. It's been a few years since I did the study, but I think it was over a five-year period or a 10-year period that I did a study myself a few years ago. I don't believe that wiping the names is going to change that in any way, both pro or con.

The member is well intentioned, I think. I think he's also intending to protect doctors here, which is admirable, although I do trust the Minister of Justice when she says that a suitable – don't quote me on that. It's in Hansard. Don't quote me, Hansard.

I do trust the Minister of Justice when she says that suitable regulations will be drawn up to ensure that fee for payment for doctors is not listed as the salaries for those doctors. That would not be an accurate reflection of how much money they are taking home. I believe that is a suitable nuance that can be decided in regulation. Many things should not be decided in regulation but should be directly in legislation, but I think that is enough of a minutia that it could be trusted to be dealt with in regulation, and I think that the Minister of Justice has the best of intentions in that.

While I thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for his contribution to debate and while I hate to be now the second person to speak against any amendment in our new-found spirit of co-operation in here, which I suspect will be quickly dissolved in discussions on Bill 4 and Bill 6, I must unfortunately speak against it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment for a couple of reasons. Like with teachers and nurses, for doctors, which I know is part of the intent of this amendment, there is a pay grid. Albertans know what overall and particular physician compensation is, and I see, really, no good purpose served by naming names in this particular case.

I'll start by challenging or questioning one of the assertions made by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, that there is no evidence that disclosure of salaries increases compensation and overall salary costs. In fact, there is, and I have two studies here that my crack research team has unearthed for us, which I'm happy to table tomorrow at an appropriate moment. These are academic papers. The first, Increased Compensation Costs: an Externality of Mandatory Executive Compensation Disclosure, evidence from Canada; and the second being The Impact of Mandated Disclosure on Performance-based CEO Compensation. Probably these papers are just as exciting and interesting as their titles promise. Most relevant is: "With the imposition of mandated disclosure . . . cash compensation increases more." I will table these at the appropriate time.

I think that the purpose of a sunshine list ought to be to see broadly what the compensation is, but I see no clear benefit in naming names specifically, and I'm sure our friends in the public service would agree with me on this point.

I do want to bring up a serious issue which has been attempted to be addressed in the bill. We've had some discussion, some very important and very moving and very powerful discussion, in this House about domestic violence. I know this is something the government takes very seriously, that I take very seriously. For those people who are at risk, primarily women, I think it must be said, although not exclusively, who may be putting away some of their money to escape a domestic violence situation, there is a provision in this bill which allows for anyone who's subject to the bill to request to the minister that their name not be disclosed. If their spouse knows their name and specifically what they make, it can be part of what the spouse uses to keep them in a violent situation. Now, for someone to be required to apply to the minister to be excluded from the sunshine list – and in no way am I suggesting that the minister would not grant such an application expeditiously – is one more hurdle, one more barrier, and I think that's important for us to consider in this House as we think about the impact of sunshine lists. It's one more tool that an abuser can use to control that person.

In that vein, in that context, then, Madam Chair, I speak in favour of this amendment, and I encourage the government to please consider passing it. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, sadly, I rise to speak against the amendment as well. Hopefully, the Member for Strathmore-Brooks and I can go back to being friends at least temporarily.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View has raised, you know, an interesting point with respect to physicians. We're certainly aware and we have been hearing from physicians that their fee-for-service compensation, when it comes in, sort of goes to cover office costs in addition to salaries and that that's not necessarily the same. We are certainly aware of that problem. I myself very recently worked in a situation where the hours I billed – my office overhead costs and library costs were deducted from that. So I'm aware of how people can misinterpret what that means, and certainly we will be working very closely with physicians. I will be working with my colleague the Minister of Health to work out with physicians what is a more appropriate way to do that going forward. So we will certainly be looking into this issue.

In terms of names specifically, I think the Member for Strathmore-Brooks really made the main point here, which is that, you know, we need Albertans to have faith in their public service not just in terms of how their tax dollars are being spent but also in terms of the fact that appointments and hiring are being done on an appropriate basis, on the basis of skills and experience and not on the basis of being a patronage appointment. We do know that those criticisms are out there. There's a substantial number of criticisms with respect to agencies, boards, and commissions in specific, which is exactly what this list covers, so we think it is important for the public to have that information.

I think I would reiterate that the reason we chose the disclosure limit that we did choose is because we are aiming at higher income earners. We're not looking to disclose the salaries of everyone. We're looking to disclose the salaries of those who are in the top bracket, I suppose. I mean, certainly, I'm a person who has her salary disclosed online, and I don't think that that's a particular problem. I think that in order to maintain the confidence of the public not only in how their tax dollars are being spent but in how people are being hired, too, and how people are being appointed to agencies, boards, and commissions, it is appropriate to proceed forward in the way that the bill proceeds.

I do thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for bringing forward this point for discussion, but unfortunately I am not able to support it at this time. I would encourage all members not to support it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd just like to follow up a little bit on the comments that the Minister of Justice made and respond to some of the concerns that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View has raised. Certainly, I have also received many e-mails to my constituency office asking the same question that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View has addressed: why do we need to publish names? It seems to a lot of people in my constituency that this act is more about shaming people for how much they make than actually providing transparency in how much people in the public service and other public agencies make. I just want to respond to those concerns with my own personal experience.

For those of you who are keen observers of the existing sunshine list, you will know that my name appears on the sunshine list for 2013 and 2014. As a hydrogeologist who used to be an employee of the department of environment and sustainable resource development, I made the princely sum of $103,000 a year. All of that information is now publicly available to anybody who cares to look for it.

The publication of the sunshine list came at a time when tension between the public service and the government of the day was high. There were many in the public service that felt that there would be serious ramifications to us when our names were published. Then the day came when our names were published with our salaries attached to them, and – guess what? – none of those things that we feared would come to pass actually came to pass. I didn't ask for a raise. Nobody that I knew of in the office asked for a raise based on what other people saw on the sunshine list. With the way the public service salaries work, there is a strict grid system. It's not based on how much the boss likes you, right? You move up according to the grid at the appointed time. So those fears are inflated.

In fact, there were no other serious consequences. My family didn't ask me for more expensive Christmas or birthday presents even though they knew how much money I made. The political party that I'm proud to be a member of couldn't possibly ask me for more donations, because they already phone me six times a day and send me . . . [interjection] Yeah. Exactly. You know, none of those things that we feared would happen as a result of having our names published on the sunshine list came to pass.

The second thing that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View raised was the lack of context. I'd like to just let the Member for Calgary-Mountain View know that everybody who has their name published on the sunshine list already has a lack of context. You know, in my case the salary of $103,000 is out there without any other context. It doesn't really speak to how much I would get paid in a similar position if I were hired by the private sector or by another public agency. In fact, in many cases, if I were to go and be a hydrogeologist in any of those other agencies or in the private sector, my salary would be much higher. So there's that context piece that's missing.

It also speaks to, you know, how my own personal expenses aren't reflected in that as well. In fact, there is one entertaining story, an interaction that I had with a staff member. I know that she's an avid viewer of the proceedings here at the Assembly, so I'm sure that she'll catch wind of this eventually. She worked in the same office that I did. She made substantially less than I did and refused to share the candies on her desk with me because she knew how much money I earned. She said: you can well afford to buy your own candies. The piece of context that was missing there was that she was a single person who had no children and still lived with the support of her parents – so her personal expenses were much lower than mine – whereas I had a wife in school and three children to support and a house to pay for.

You know, all of those contextual pieces around salary are missing for everybody that's published on the sunshine list. I don't think doctors have a particular concern that doesn't apply to anybody else who's included on the sunshine list.

Just to conclude by reiterating my points, I think people's fears are unfounded. There aren't going to be serious consequences for having their names published on a sunshine list, and those contextual pieces are always missing no matter what information we put on the sunshine list. I think that we need to go forward with the sunshine list as proposed and defeat this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm going to be brief. I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for his comments. I'm ashamed that an NDP-er has put the case for a sunshine list better than a Wildroser has. I think he very eloquently put forward some very good arguments for this and for why folks should not be concerned.

I wanted to point this out to the Member for Calgary-Elbow, who has raised concerns about government-sector salary inflation as a result of sunshine lists. A few years ago, during the original fight for the sunshine list, I did a lot of research around it, and I wanted to read some very important statistics very quickly. Between 2008 and 2012, if we divide provincial governments into two categories, those with sunshine lists and those without, those without sunshine lists were Alberta, Quebec, Newfoundland, and Prince Edward Island, and those with sunshine lists were B.C., Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick. Those with sunshine lists saw increases in government-sector compensation of 12.3 per cent. Those in provinces without sunshine lists saw increases of 13.7 per cent. This is data from Statistics Canada.

Now, there's a lot more to the context. There's a lot more behind the context of sunshine lists driving it up or down. But I think that fears around sunshine lists being a major driver of government-sector costs going up are exaggerated if not outright incorrect. If they were correct, I'd probably be the biggest opponent of government-sector sunshine lists, but I don't believe that they have the inflationary record expected. When Ontario sees its costs go up by significant amounts, it probably has more to do with the government and the political climate and those kinds of factors rather than if there is a sunshine list or not.

I wanted to just share that data from Statistics Canada with members of the House concerned about that issue. It's obviously an issue that is very, very serious to me, around the sustainability of the cost of our government, and it's not one that I think will be affected by the sunshine list.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A6?

If not, we'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Chair: We're back on Bill 5. Are there any further comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill?

If not, then we will call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 5 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 4

An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act

The Chair: We are on amendment A5, as proposed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks. Are there any further speakers to amendment A5?

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I expect that we will be able to move forward through the House this afternoon with a little bit of speed, but I just wanted to remind the House where we were prior to the break, because I know that there are a number of new members that have joined us here in the Assembly this afternoon that were unable to be a part of the debate. Given that we're just mere minutes away from voting, I wanted to make sure that everybody had the opportunity to know where we're at.

It's important to keep in mind that the things that we're doing here aren't just for today, but they're also for tomorrow and tomorrow's tomorrow. No one member of this Assembly is bigger than this Assembly. So it's important that everything we do has an eye on that tomorrow as we move forward and plan for the future of the province. I think that this is a good opportunity for us to maybe pause and look beyond, beyond just ourselves and beyond the challenges of today, to some of the risks of tomorrow. Madam Chair, we have seen all over the world in many jurisdictions that as governments grow and spending increases and as we move from crisis to crisis, many politicians in the past have this sense that today's problems are always the most important problems and they don't look for tomorrow.

We've seen the government propose in Bill 4 a debt limit of 15 per cent, which at the end of their plan will include $50 billion of debt, a level of debt that I don't believe Albertans are comfortable with, a level of debt that we have not seen in generations in Alberta. Those core conservative values of living within your means have been essentially thrown away and discarded for a big-spending, big-government, high-tax plan. So as we look forward to this new debt limit of 15 per cent that's been set by the new government, I think it's wise that there is some preplanning that's done around this 15 per cent. I can only imagine that the House will have the will of the governing party, and as a result we will set a debt limit in this place of exactly 15 per cent, and that will equate to $50 billion in debt by the end of the government's current fiscal plan.

What the amendment proposes is that in order for the government in a number of years from now to just say: oh, man, the price of oil has been lower for longer, the current economic conditions aren't nearly as good as we'd hoped, or perhaps our revenue projections haven't been quite what we expected – the government of the day can just come and pass another bill to raise the debt limit. Maybe it goes to 20 per cent next time. Maybe it goes 30, 40 per cent. Who knows where it stops?

But time and time again we've seen across many jurisdictions that politicians often have very little gumption to actually look at the spending side of the ledger, put the brakes on, and say: when is enough enough? I think that what this amendment does do is that it provides a little forced gumption [interjections] That's right, not to be confused with Forrest Gump but forced gumption.

It puts into place a pressure to look at the spending side of the ledger. It puts into place a stop, a pause that would require the government of the day to go to Albertans, to go to the ones who will actually be picking up the tab, and say: are you okay with us going past a 15 per cent debt ratio? I think that what we have before us in an amendment that will provide certainty and clarity for the Alberta public that this government isn't just going to continue to raise the debt limit all willy-nilly but that they will only ever do that with the backing of Albertans.

We've seen DBRS – and I know that the government likes to roll this out – predict that we will run right up against our debt limit that they're currently setting without a change in course. What we've seen is that this government is planning to not change course and is planning to run up massive amounts of debt, which will put us right back in the exact same place as we are today, which is unacceptable to Albertans. It's unacceptable to the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I can tell you that none of them have come into my office and said: thank goodness that at the end of this plan we're going to have $50 billion of debt. Not one. Many have come in with concerns about $50 billion of debt at the end of the plan, but not one has come in with praise for this type of spending and this type of debt.

I think it would be wise of the government to put in some checks and balances, some ramifications that would exist in the future so that we can't just turn our backs on the hard work that's been done in the past and turn our backs on the values of Albertans, of living within our means, and that we would turn this over to the voice of reason, and that's Albertans.

That's why I stand in this place fully supporting the amendment proposed by my hon. colleague.

The Chair: Are there any further speakers to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. I stand to speak against the amendment.

DBRS also talked about the strong financial position and low debt of this government. We have a 4 per cent debt-to-GDP at this point in time, the lowest of all provinces and territories. Even at 15 per cent, Alberta's debt-to-GDP would be half the weighted average of other provinces in this country.

We have a prudent plan to look at bending the curve on expenditures and spending. We have a plan to invest in capital development throughout this province to stimulate our economy. We are going to stick to 15 per cent of GDP. That is sound. That is the lowest in the country. That is a debt cap that is calculated to help us get to where we need to go, which is to build the economy, to protect services, and to move on to build an Alberta that everybody believes will get us back to a positive GDP.

So I hope we are all united in saying that, no, we don't need this amendment. We are going to work hard to stick to the program and go forward. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you to the minister for joining us in debate, although I don't feel that his remarks actually spoke to the substance of the amendment. The amendment was not: should the debt-to-GDP ratio be 15 per cent? The amendment was not: is it a good idea to have 15 per cent of GDP? The amendment was not: comment on other provinces. The amendment is to assure taxpayers that the government will not break its word of 15 per cent of GDP without going back to Albertans first for approval.

The minister's statements were confused in their facts about having the lowest debt-to-GDP. By the time Alberta has a 15 per cent debt-to-GDP, Saskatchewan's debt will nearly be paid off.

Saskatchewan will nearly be paid in full. Saskatchewan is the new Alberta advantage, unfortunately. By the time we reach 15 per cent debt-to-GDP, which I fear will be even sooner than the minister believes, we will not have the lowest debt-to-GDP in the country.

I'd ask that the minister rise not to speak about if we should have a 15 per cent debt-to-GDP, if that's a good thing or if it's a bad thing, but that he would address the substance of the amendment that is before for us, which is: does he have confidence in his own statement and documents that our debt will not exceed 15 per cent? If he has confidence in his own budget documents and statements, he will support the amendment so that the debt ceiling cannot be easily exceeded and broken by mere legislation. If he has confidence in his own budget documents and his own debt ceiling, the minister will support the amendment.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to speak against this amendment. You know, often we talk in this House about the will of Albertans and that we should bring their various points of view to this House. What I see in this amendment sort of seems contradictory to some of the things that we've talked about previously, especially coming from the other side and especially in areas of spending Albertans' money in ways that make sense.

Now, it would seem to me that if we needed to go to a referendum, that would be adding extra expense in the form that we would have to then have either a referendum or have it be in addition to an election. In reality, that is already happening, and they are called elections. It's very similar to the one we had quite recently. You know, the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills actually said that we have no gumption to talk to Albertans about this and our plan. In fact, we do, and we did it in the last election. Albertans chose a plan forward, and we plan to go forward with that.

For those reasons I think that this amendment is unnecessary, and I will not be voting for it. Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Go ahead, Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just a couple of things regarding the statements that were just made by the hon. member. Yes, elections are the referendum, but I would remind the hon. member that you don't have a mandate for a $50 billion debt load on our province. You were never campaigning, going around your riding, with a great big placard saying: I'm going to put you $50 billion in debt; vote for me. Not one of you did that. So to stand up in this House and say that you have some kind of a mandate to put the good people of Alberta, including me, my children, my grandchildren, in this kind of a debt scenario is an absolute fabrication and a misrepresentation of the truth. That argument doesn't hold water.

Now to the hon. Minister of Finance's argument here regarding this issue before the House. I want the hon. members in the House to understand something about this debt-to-GDP ratio that we keep hearing thrown around in the press and in this House. It is a fool's paradise to use debt-to-GDP as the only measuring stick. The reason for that is that in this province, this incredible province, the per capita GDP output of the people of Alberta cruises around $80,000 or so. It's the highest in the land.

So when you have a province like Ontario, that has about half the GDP per person that we do here, a 15 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio in our province is equal to a 30 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio in Ontario. Do you understand that? That means that a 15 per cent ceiling here would have the same impact upon our people as a 30 per cent ceiling in Ontario. So the problem with having a 15 per cent cap is that we're realistically – oh, and comparing that cap to Ontario, that has a 30 per cent cap, and saying, "Well, we're only half of what Ontario is," that is absolutely an inappropriate comparator. Fifteen per cent here is every bit as problematic as 30 per cent there. What you're doing is comparing, then, our beloved province with the most indebted subsovereign jurisdiction on the planet. I do not want my province to be another Ontario.

Hon. members, at all cost we must never have that kind of fame. To be the most indebted subsovereign jurisdiction in the world? Good grief. Right now, today, the impact of Ontario's debt is resulting in an absolute migration of investment and manufacturing out of the province, along with their skyrocketing electricity costs. They are losing investment and losing jobs and losing manufacturing on account of that. To mimic them in any way, whether it be their debt-to-GDP, whether it be their energy policies, whether it be – I don't care what policy, do not mimic Ontario. It would be death to our province.

You are putting Alberta at risk, not just a little but in every facet of this province's economy and way of life. You put it at risk by trying to mimic anything in Ontario. Please do not do this. Do not vote against this very sound measure.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: Back on the bill. Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Hooray. Thank you, Madam Chair, for giving me the opportunity to speak, with another amendment to make Bill

4 less horrible. I will introduce the amendment before I speak to it. Would you like me to begin reading it out while it's distributed?

The Chair: Go ahead.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 4, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, be amended in schedule 1 in section 3(2) by striking out "subsection (1)" and substituting "subsections (1) and (3)" and by adding the following after subsection (2):

(3) In any month that the Crown debt exceeds 15 per cent of GDP for Alberta, no member of Executive Council shall receive any salary prescribed under section 43(1)(a) of the Legislative Assembly Act.

Judging by the looks on the faces of members of Executive Council, I'm not expecting the consent of Executive Council. Madam Chair, I see that the Government House Leader is having a violently ill reaction to the prospect of having his cabinet pay docked if they cannot abide by the law.

Now, let's go back just to yesterday. Yesterday we found that the Minister of Finance was – how should we put it politely? – not strictly adhering to the legislation, some might say in severe breach of the legislation. The Fiscal Management Act required the Minister of Finance to produce a quarterly update, every three months, to this House, and while they had introduced the bill, Bill 4, which we're debating now, which would exempt the minister from doing so, this bill has not passed. Therefore, the minister was, as we'll say politely, not sticking to the intent of the legislation. I'm being careful as the Government House Leader looks at me ponderously.

This amendment seeks to put teeth in legislation so that if politicians break the law, there are consequences. This is so that if Executive Council, the cabinet, exceeds the debt limit, breaking their own laws, there will be consequences for breaking those laws. Cabinet must be accountable for their spending, and those responsible for spending beyond their means should face consequences. If any members of this House drive home and they get caught speeding, they don't get pulled over by the police and questioned in question period and then get to go home. They get a ticket, and they must pay a fine. If a member of this House parks somewhere they shouldn't and they don't happen to have an MLA universal Edmonton parking pass and they get a ticket, they don't go to question period and get questioned by a peace officer. They have to pay a ticket. But for some reason politicians can come to this place, pass laws, break them, but they don't have to pay a ticket. There are no consequences for their actions.

We are proposing an amendment to this legislation which has precedent in several other provinces, namely British Columbia, where when members of Executive Council, cabinet, in that province break, I believe, the taxpayer protection act – forgive me if I'm misquoting the exact name of that legislation – members of Executive Council in that province have their cabinet pay docked. It means that if members of that cabinet cannot follow the laws that they themselves have passed, there is a financial penalty attached to doing so until they're back in compliance with the act.

This amendment will mean that if this government cannot follow its own debt ceiling, they will get a ticket. Taxpayers will give them a ticket, and while they'll still receive their pay as an MLA, they'll no longer get their stipend as a minister. They'll still get to keep their vehicle allowance, they'll still get to keep their housing allowance, they'll still get paid as MLAs, but because they're not doing their jobs properly in Executive Council, that will get docked.

This amendment will still allow the government to exceed its 15 per cent debt ceiling legally so long as the government has to face a consequence for it. It is a minor consequence instead of the effect that it'll actually have on Albertans. Albertans will already under the budget proposed be paying $1.3 billion a year in interest in just a few years, $1.3 billion in interest that will be wasted, money put on a pile and burned. While Albertans will see their tax dollars wasted and their own tax rates go up to pay for it, cabinet ministers have no consequences right now for that.

You're proposing to this House a 15 per cent debt limit. Well, you've voted against any attempt for us to lower that limit or to put limits on your ability to increase it. Now we're proposing that if you want to exceed a 15 per cent debt limit, there'll be some consequences. If the Minister of Finance and members of the cabinet are confident that they will not exceed a 15 per cent debt limit, then surely they should have no qualms whatsoever about voting for a few financial consequences for themselves if they exceed that limit. I believe this is reasonable, it has precedent in other jurisdictions in our country, and it provides a real incentive. If the Minister of Finance takes us over the 15 per cent debt limit and he sees his cabinet pay clawed back, perhaps he'll be a little more motivated to get us back under that 15 per cent limit.

When I was a kid, I got $10 a week in allowance for doing chores around the house. I got $10 a week. With inflation . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, as much as we'd like to hear the story about when you were a kid. However, it is approaching 5:45 p.m., and pursuant to Government Motion 17 the Assembly must vote on the motion for consideration of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor's speech. Accordingly, the committee must rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 5. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 4. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Connolly moved, seconded by Ms Kazim, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Motion carried]

Government Motions

Address in Reply to Speech from the Throne

18. Mr. Mason moved:
Be it resolved that the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne be engrossed and presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor by such members of the Assembly as are members of Executive Council.

The Deputy Speaker: This is a debatable motion if anyone has any comments they wish to make to the motion by the hon. Government House Leader.

[Government Motion 18 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, Madam Speaker, I hesitate to give up 15 minutes of Assembly time, but I think it's important, so I would move that we return to Committee of the Whole.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

Bill 4

An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act (continued)

The Chair: Hon. members, we are back on Bill 4, amendment A6. Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, I was just saying, Madam Chair – where was I? I think I'll start over.
I will conclude . . .

An Hon. Member: Start from the beginning.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'm being egged on to start from the beginning. I will spare the hon. members across from that. [interjections]
Thank you very much.

When I was a kid, if I did all my chores, I'd get 10 bucks a week, but if I didn't cut the grass or shovel the driveway or do whatever we needed to do, that got clawed back. One of the earliest lessons we learn as kids is that if you don't do your job, you don't get paid.

Some of that should apply in here, I think. If we're not doing our job for taxpayers, why should taxpayers pay us? If the cabinet cannot do its job and abide by its own law, in the act it is proposing, of a 15 per cent debt limit, then there need to be some penalties. This is in line with what other jurisdictions in Canada have that seek to protect taxpayers. It is something that would serve us well, and I would encourage the Minister of Finance, if he is confident in his own proposals for a 15 per cent debt ceiling and does not feel that he will ever exceed that, that he would vote for this and show confidence in his own budget.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Just in response to this, the hon. Member for Strathcona-Brooks . . .

Some Hon. Members: Strathmore.

Mr. Fildebrandt: That would be a really big riding.

Mr. Mason: That would be really big, yeah. Thanks very much. . . . Strathmore-Brooks – sorry – you know, has made some comments. He suggested that I was horrified, but actually, Madam Chair, it was more sort of a puzzled amusement, I would guess, at this because it's clearly just a bit of a stunt. It's a for-show kind of a motion. I can assure you and all members that this government has no intention of exceeding that debt limit. There are many responsibilities of the government, that it's obligated to fulfill, and it does that. Particular financial penalties for something that just happens to be a poster child for the opposition's issue are unnecessary. It's clearly just something for show, and for the hon. member to suggest that voting against this indicates some nefarious intention by the government to violate the debt ceiling is just simply unfair and untrue, and I would urge all hon. members to vote against the amendment.

5:50

The Chair: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. To say that this is for show: I think that's not the intention. I mean, if this is something that's not going to happen, it should be an easy vote to hold the House accountable. That's what we all campaigned on, accountability and transparency. If we have the opportunity to show our province and Albertans that we are capable of following through on the promises that we make, I think, and when we do it in the House together like this, it goes that extra bit of distance to show that we are actually capable of doing those things. Deficit spending is a poor economic policy, and I truly believe that it will erode the services that are so important in the long run. Contrary to the government's claims, these are real numbers and real people and real dollars that are being diverted for what? So the government doesn't have to look inward and cut inefficiencies? Any other business has to cut inefficiencies.

An Hon. Member: Or nurses.

Mrs. Aheer: We're not talking about people or nurses. We're talking about looking at inefficiencies. We're talking about looking at the bloat, at what can be cut inwardly, not about people. For a taxpayer, it's an abuse of taxpayer money if you're not improving your operational efficiency in the manner that any other private sector would be responsible to do and, as they would be, held responsible to their stakeholders.

If you're meeting or exceeding that debt limit, there are very real consequences for that. I mean, Albertans are being forced to contribute billions of dollars to servicing debt. Billions. That's getting ripped out of the economic cycle, and these are Albertans' hard-earned dollars, all of ours. The money won't be invested in industry or families or local economies even though it's their money, our money. Nothing new can be produced when these funds are allocated to debt servicing. There's nothing more that can go into building infrastructure like a road, something that everybody gets to use to get to work, to move product, to be industrious. These are things that influence the economy positively, and they're investments that create a means to work, to be paid, to become a contributing member of society, and that debt servicing interrupts that. It interrupts an important economic driver, and it's a disrespectful management of the funds.

It undermines the proper use of taxpayer dollars. I mean, think about that. We're accountable to all of the Albertans in our province for their money, and we're asking them to just contribute to this, not understanding that we're taking away from the ability to actually create something for them for the long term. This could happen even before reaching the limit, I mean, if the world sees us as an unreliable borrower and an unrestrained spender. We are a resource-dependent economy, and as you know, there are ebbs and flows to this economy that are unique to Alberta. It requires finesse to handle the fluctuations of this cyclical nature of this province and to deal with the volatility of products that we depend on for our revenue.

That 15 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio has typically been used as a benchmark figure, which jurisdictions must stay below in order to qualify for that triple-A credit rating. Alberta, however, being a resource-dependent economy, has a much higher risk classification. Therefore, it's absolutely necessary to stay well below that ceiling of 15 per cent.

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee must now rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Ms Woollard: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill: Bill 4. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 4. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, I think that we're a lot closer to 6 now than we were before, Madam Speaker. I'll move that we call it 6 and adjourn until 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:56 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 6

Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act

[Adjourned debate December 1: Ms Phillips]

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and speak to one of the most important bills that this Legislature has faced this particular session. I'm pleased to see the leadership taken by this new government, leadership that was decidedly absent in the last government, who talked about it for years, did all kind of committee meetings, consulted, consulted, consulted, heard many different views, including the international community. It even went to the UN and the Queen of England, who actually sent support to the Farmworkers Union here in Alberta and sent her support for change that was long overdue. The civil liberties group in Alberta and nationally has sent its support, so not only once Albertans learned that we are still in the 19th century with respect to enforceable standards in agricultural workplaces, including the largest industrial operations anywhere in Alberta and right down to the so-called family farm, which actually employs many, many people in many different risky activities.

I applaud this government for having the courage to step forward. I, too, regret the lack of good communication about the family farm and some of the impacts that could be expected on the family farm.

Interestingly, at a reception that I just now came back from, two dairy farmers came up to me and said that they've had WCB, and one of their workers got injured, and they were pleasantly surprised by the length of physiotherapy he was funded for, eight weeks of physiotherapy, which very few insurance companies are prepared to cover. Of course, other insurance companies don't offer the no-fault insurance, where the operator, the owner, is protected from lawsuit. You can't bankrupt a farmer if you get injured because WCB is no-fault insurance.

These two dairy farmers also commented that near Red Deer just last week a 50-year-old man was crushed by a bull, and he's been off work for a week. He's getting back on his feet, but that farmer had no insurance, so this worker has been on his own, struggling. His wife is worried about income. They've got no income this week because he's been off work.

I can give you a number of stories over the years that I've gathered just because I took an interest in this early on after I got elected. I started to hear stories about Mexican Mennonite kids in southeastern Alberta who ostensibly are home-schooled. Their parents get a thousand dollars a year for home-schooling. What they're actually doing in summer months is quite different from going to school, though. They're actually out helping with potato gathering. They're helping with bean cropping. They're helping with animals in some cases. Of course, they're such a vulnerable population in some ways. They have some language challenges. They have some cultural sensitivities. They have some financial problems, and many of these Mexican Mennonite families don't like to speak up. When they get injured, they just keep it all behind closed doors.

So not only do the children end up being placed at risk because the families need the income – and there are no child labour laws on these operations, so they can slip their children in to help them with the . . . [interjection] Yeah, I can actually introduce you to some Mexican Mennonites, and the chief of police down there in Taber and the head of the school district will tell you exactly what's happening down there.

Then, of course, there's Philippa Thomas, who has been in the news in the last couple of years. She had what looked like a minor finger injury in her workplace, a horse-riding stable in Calgary. It got infected, actually, some kind of serious nerve damage that went up her arm and has continued to go into her spinal cord and caused what's called a sympathetic dystrophy, that has left her incapacitated with pain. She's on long-term pain management, is unable to work, and this has been about 20 years now. They've spent about $80,000 of their own money on trying to get the help she needs and the rehabilitation she needs and the financial support. Fortunately, her husband has a good job, and they've been able to manage this.

Then the famous story that was alluded to today: Lorna Chandler, whose husband died on Father's Day eight years ago. No coverage for him or the family, so she had to take him to court. She had no money, but fortunately she found a lawyer who was compassionate. For six years they went to court together. She finally got a settlement, and it bankrupted the feedlot that he was working at.

All these incidents and the increased awareness across Canada about the anomaly that is Alberta around farm worker safety, compensation for injury, labour code standards, obviously, child labour issues, have come home to roost. In spite of all these issues over 44 years the previous government managed to just push it to the side because that was their voter base, of course, and many of them didn't want to see a loss of their voter base even if it meant – especially if it meant, I guess – the farmers having to pay a little more than what they were.

They actually have to take out WCB, which is really quite reasonably priced. When I heard some of the prices that they're quoting, it's really pretty small, a few cents per hundred dollars of wage. And, of course, if you don't have an accident, you get a refund from WCB at the end of the year. All kinds of good reasons to take care of farm workers, and most farmers, most operators do that. They're responsible. They value their employees. They take care of them. They make sure they get holidays. No question that this is not a majority of farmers we're talking about or big operators even.

Another interesting anomaly down in Brooks is that the meat-packing plant on the north side of the road employs hundreds of workers, and they're all covered by workers' compensation.

An Hon. Member: Where?

Dr. Swann: The meat-packing plant on the north side of Brooks. All covered by insurance, all covered by WCB, all covered by occupational health and safety standards. You go across the road to the feedlot: 40 Mexican and other community workers there, no compensation, no occupational health and safety standards. Same company, but they can get away with it because the meat packing is not considered an agricultural operation. It's an industry. So there are these interesting inconsistencies that raise questions.

With respect to consultations, in my 10 years here the government of the past has attended many consultations with farmers, and they always came back with the same conclusion:

more education, more education. There's nothing wrong with education. It's an important element of safety and health.

As Judge Barley said after the Kevan Chandler inquiry – and this was unusual, to have an inquiry after a death because occupational health and safety cannot investigate deaths on agricultural operations. They do not have any jurisdiction. Whether you're electrocuted, poisoned, or crushed on a farming operation, OH and S cannot go in there. Sorry. It's out of our scope, so we actually don't investigate many of these deaths. We don't find the preventable changes that we could be putting in place. We don't learn from these accidents, and it's repeated to the tune of, on average, 18 per year, including three to five children every year. Can we do better? Yes, we can.

As Judge Barley said in his decision around the Kevan Chandler case: education is a key element; the other element is legislation. He called for legislation around standards. The government has done consultations. Every agricultural group in Alberta has had some consultations around this issue. The only question is: was the government willing to do anything? Actually, not.

I have a letter here from the crop sector working group from May 2015 where they talked about the March 23 meeting, the farm safety working group meeting.

In the last several months the most acceptable compromise we can see with this new government is option 1. This involves full coverage under the OH and S Act. With no technical rules initially agriculture's exemption from the act will be withdrawn. Initially OH and S officers would not have any rules upon which to issue orders or apply penalties. The industry in collaboration with OH and S would develop a set of core industry practices within a specified time frame. OH and S officers could then apply those sector-specific rules. This option would give the industry the leeway to work collaboratively on technical rules that could be broad and common to farming activities and specific to farming systems.

That's the crop sector, March 2015.

I've spoken repeatedly with the Alberta Federation of Agriculture. They represent over 40 producer groups. They've been at the table for many years, and they two years ago in their annual meeting said: pass a resolution; we want universal WCB. That's what the Alberta Federation of Agriculture said, and they want child labour standards. They find it offensive that children in southeastern Alberta are working in unsafe occupations just because the families need them to and are not going to school as they're supposed to be as home-schoolers because there are very few people to enforce home-schooling.

Those are a few anecdotes that have led me to the place where I am today, to say that the whole question about the small family farm and intrusion on the small family farm is a red herring. It is a red herring. This is not going to interfere. This is only going to make things safer, and the rub off from the rest of the operations will eventually trickle down to the small family farm. It is not going to impede children being involved in the chores, children being trained.

By the way, I was a ranch hand for five years in my late teens and early 20s. I know some of the risks that are associated with farming and ranching – my dad was a rancher for about 25 years – and will never forget being on the back of a hay bailer when the linchpin slipped out of the tractor hitch and I went careening down the hill in the front of the stack of hay. I was wondering whether to stay there and wait for the thing to catch into the ground and then get thrown off or whether to jump. I eventually decided to jump, fortunately, because that hay bail just did a complete flip, and if I had been in there, I certainly would have been injured if not something more serious.

I was quite game to drive tractors. I loved to drive tractors. I was 17 at the time, so I had some maturity. Gee, I drove on side hills. I didn't know what angle I could handle, so I just kept testing it and testing it. Finally, I said: this doesn't make much sense because if it does tip over, I found out what the angle is that it can't tolerate, but I may not live to tell the story. So many risks. I guess I would say that as a child, as a young person without experience, without much training – I knew how to drive; I knew how to drive a car, and I had driven tractors for several years – I was always testing the limits. I was always trying to do more and wanted to please my boss. For me to say, "No; I can't do that job; that doesn't look quite safe to me," that would never enter my mind, to say no, because the boss, who hired me for the summer, should know what I can do, and if he's asking me to do something that's a little bit extra and dangerous, I'll try it, not really realizing the level of risk that I was taking.

So from that point of view I feel very strongly that getting a sense of what this bill is really about is important and not being distracted by the notion that it will cost a little more. Yeah, safety costs a little more. Workers' compensation, protecting the owner and the ranch hand does cost a little bit, but it protects people from longer term suffering and, really, financial breakdown, financial collapse in some cases. You know, treating staff fairly means in some cases a holiday, in some cases giving them the evening off even though it is harvest season and you want to get through as much as you can, recognizing when people are fatigued and they might be at risk of injury just due to fatigue and acknowledging that. When it's all about production, when it's all about finishing the crop, then safety sometimes comes second, and I understand that. Injuries happen. But let's be reasonable about what are, in the 21st century, decent labour standards, employment standards, child labour, compensation, and occupational health and safety standards. Do we know what is reasonable in the various work sites across Alberta? No. I don't think we do, and we've got a year to find out.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: You're questioning under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Ceci: I am. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View: when you read out that crop sector letter to us that was on your computer, it sounded to me like their recommendation mirrored exactly the approach this government is taking. Would that be your view, or is there something I missed there?

Dr. Swann: I would have to look more closely at what they are agreeing to. They said option 2. I don't remember correlating option 2 with what your government is doing. What I'm saying is that they were consulted in March. They agreed that this would be the direction they wanted to go, one of the two options your government presented. I'd be happy to table that, Mr. Speaker, to let everybody see.

Consultations have been going on. The beef producers have been in consultation with this government over health and safety and compensation issues. I'm sorry; the claim that there hasn't been any consultation: there's been a decade of consultation. This government has made efforts to consult, and it's only been a few months that they've had a chance to consult. They haven't had anything like the 10 years that this government had to consult, the 44 years, in fact, but they've done a credible job in attempting to get through the tremendous array and variety of ranching and farming operations.

The Speaker: Any other questions? The Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, hon. member. We share many of the same positions here. You know, I wanted to say, too, that this bill doesn't do anything to – we don't want to change the family farm. Okay? So – listen – we're going to delineate between what it means to be a parent on a farm and what it means to be an employer on a farm.

The Speaker: Hon. member, could I clarify? Standing Order 29(2)(a), please.

Mr. Coolahan: I'm going to ask a question, Mr. Speaker. I'm sorry.

The Speaker: Please.

Mr. Coolahan: I haven't been around as long as the hon. member, of course, but maybe you could enlighten us on this. When a lot of the labour legislation came into being here, when it was written, I'm assuming that a lot of the professions that have some exemptions, like police officers and whatnot, on working hours and working days were likely given basic rights first, and then the consultation happened afterwards, where you can decide what exemptions are required for specific industries.

Dr. Swann: Well, indeed. Almost every bill we pass in this House is incomplete in the sense that the regulations have to follow the legislation. There are details. There are fine points. We always say that, of course, the devil is in the details. Let's wait and see what they're actually going to do.

But we need some guidance. We've got some guidance about this, and with the amendments that this government is going to bring forward, I think that if we're not politicizing this thing totally out of whack, we should be able to move this forward.

The Speaker: Are there any other questions for the member under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to rise and speak against Bill 6. It is always a true pleasure to represent the views of my constituents here in this Assembly. I just wish I could be doing so today under better circumstances. Wouldn't it have been nice if the views of all farmers and ranchers could have been expressed before we got to second reading of this bill that so drastically impacts their lives? Wouldn't it be nice if we were sitting here discussing carefully crafted, respectful proposals that were created with the input of our experts in the industry, our experts the farming families? Instead, we are discussing a litany of flaws, concerns, and short-sighted ways in which this legislation does not reflect the way of life you'll see out there on our province's farms and ranchland.

I'd like to remind my colleagues of Dwight Eisenhower's wise words: "Farming looks mighty easy when your plow is a pencil and you're a thousand miles from the corn field." Well, Mr. Speaker, we're much closer than a thousand miles away from our province's wheat, canola, and barley fields. You see them the minute you head out on the highways in any direction from this building. You know what? You find these shared values within the city limits as well.

Farming influence runs deep in this province. Keep in mind that most urban centres today were once small agricultural towns many years ago.

Mr. Speaker, you and I jointly represent the urban area of the city of Medicine Hat, and I'm sure you're hearing about this issue every bit as much as I am. My office has seen over 1,900 e-mails and letters from deeply concerned citizens of all stripes just since Friday. This isn't a rural-urban issue. I've seen this, and I think you have, too. This is a trust issue. This is an issue of a government more concerned with ramming through its out-of-touch agenda than actually listening – listening – to what Albertans want.

Given the realities of farm life that surround us, how much more inexcusable is it that this government did not bother to go out and consult with those for whom farming runs in their blood? If the government is now surprised by the outcry we hear just outside these Legislature steps, it can only be attributed to the fact that this government never bothered to ask in the first place. And make no mistake: the lives of farmers and ranchers are intrinsically tied to their business and to their land. Their families are not just workers on a job site; they are so much more. They are stewards of the land, the best stewards. They are caretakers of, in so many cases, multigenerational farms that have been tasked through the decades with sharing some of the most valuable skills and values imaginable. Mr. Speaker, the grandfathers and grandmothers of these families came here many generations ago, when there was far less than you now see.

I'd like to share a story from one of the thousands of concerned constituents that I've heard from. As you know, the railway opened up this land to settlers and homesteaders, but in the early 1900s there wasn't much else greeting these people when they arrived. This man told me an incredible story of how his family arrived by rail, then walked 25 miles with all their belongings and children to their plot of land, a plot of land that they had never, ever seen. This man has no recollection of that long, hard walk because he was just a baby at the time. Can you imagine? Can you imagine that, Mr. Speaker?

I hope that stories like this will demonstrate to the NDP members across the floor exactly why the people of Cypress county, the county of Forty Mile, Medicine Hat, Redcliff, Bow Island and Foremost are so darned proud of their heritage. I hope you'll see why they care so deeply for their way of life and what was so painstakingly earned. They carved these fields out of rough, untamed wilderness to provide abundance for all, and provide they did. They provided blessings for posterity as they fed the province, the country, and other parts of the world.

Today we are left with 47,000 farms, and it's with a heavy heart that I say that this number is shrinking. It's shrinking because the local family farm is becoming more and more of a challenge. I can assure you that I've heard this from scores of my own constituents in Cypress-Medicine Hat and many across Alberta, that this government's actions have already hurt our farmers and our ranchers. Sometimes it feels like they and indeed all of the productive sector are being hit from all directions. From drastic labour market meddling to tax increases on their inputs like gas and utilities, they find it harder to build each and every day. They find it harder to innovate and grow every day. They find it harder to prosper, provide, and share their abundance every day.

Mr. Speaker, now we face sweeping, broad, incompletely considered omnibus legislation that makes it harder for our farmers and ranchers to even pass along this way of life to their children. Again the struggles mount. I cannot stand by as an entire way of life, that has carried this great province for so long, comes under fire by a government that is fundamentally out of touch with Albertans' values. They deserve a voice, and if the government and this Premier won't go out there to meet them, I will bring their concerns here.

I know that we heard about the consultation sessions across the province, but from what I've seen, these have produced many more questions than answers. Government officials seem to be doing more damage control than actually providing an opportunity for constructive input. Any so-called consultation that may occur once the bill has reached its final draft is patronizing, at best, and a meaningless show, at worst. For those lucky enough to get into them – and I can assure you that the Cypress-Medicine Hat meeting filled up within hours – it seems they are more pronouncement sessions than consultation sessions.

Mr. Speaker, the horse has left the barn. It's long gone, in fact, and the government's solution seems to be proudly boasting and making a big show of this government's ability to close the gate.

I'd like to share with this Assembly a variety of concerns I've heard. They are common themes, so common that I cannot believe the government is now so baffled to be hearing them. One constituent, writing about her greenhouse operation, says, and I quote:

Increases projected to minimum wage plus the cost of Bill 6 plus increases in corporate taxes will make greenhouse operations totally unprofitable. Prices received for greenhouse product are subject to supply and demand and have not increased in many years. Last year was our highest production year, with a very low dollar return. The family farm cannot pay wages, holiday pay, corporate tax, loan payments, et cetera, with money it cannot generate. We have recently transitioned our family farm to our children, and we have great fear they will not be able to sustain themselves.

End quote.

I've also heard from two brothers, ages seven and eight. If I'm not mistaken, they're from the Leduc area, so I'm sure that their hon. member on the government side has seen this as well. Together with their family they've reached out to us because their own government MLAs refuse to speak for them to the NDP leadership. With some help from his mom the first young boy writes:

I like to go and catch my own horse to ride or help move cows. Every spring I look forward to petting and playing with the baby horses and calves. I like fencing during the summer. Living on a farm lets me learn how things work and how to fix them. I look forward to joining 4-H in the future. I hope these chances are not taken away.

His younger brother writes:

I like riding my horse, checking cows with my papa and at my nana's arena. Every year I look forward to feeding the baby calves. In a few years I hope to join 4-H. I hope this isn't taken away.

And still another concerned mother writes:

As parents it's our duty and privilege to raise our children to be responsible, respectable members of society. Parents, children, grandparents, extended family, and neighbours work together to manage the land and provide food for society. It is a wonderful way for our children to learn this responsibility. The family that works together is stronger and beneficial to all of society.

You see, Mr. Speaker, farmers have understood for many years that to be successful, you must rely on your family, your community, and your neighbours. Given this emphasis on community and family do you not think that farmers care every bit as much about safety as we do in this House? Some may see farms and ranches as simply workplaces to be regulated, but I can assure you that these farmers and ranchers see them as their homes first and foremost. They take pride in their operations, and their love for their calling extends to wanting to see their way of life protected and their families protected. Not one of us here could care nearly as much as a parent raising his or her child to grow up and follow in their footsteps.

To impose vast, ill-defined regulations on these groups is to risk cutting out all those elements and values that make the family farm successful and that have made Alberta successful. Do we restrict the home life of a child who contributes to his family farm? Do we tell neighbours chipping in for their friends that they cannot contribute to the harvest if they first do not meet every single requirement of a complex code that was never written to apply to farms and ranches in the first place?

I've heard this government claim that they will iron out all these complex details and more if you just write them a blank cheque and give them authority to fix all this through rules and regulations. No, Mr. Speaker. Since the election we've discovered a number of previously held NDP ideals that suddenly become – how should we put it? – flexible. One of these previously held ideals from their time in opposition was staunch opposition to the previous government's overuse of the practice of writing broad, undefined legislation, then using regulatory . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under 29(2)(a), which is to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech, are there any questions for the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat?

Mr. Cooper: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The question I have for the member is: would he like to continue concluding his thoughts?

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, hon. member. In the three and a half years that I shared the opposition lounge with the four members, it is disheartening that a shared desire to have a government that was more open, transparent, listening, and fully consulting has been totally disregarded.

Mr. Speaker, one of these previously held ideals from their time in opposition was their staunch opposition to the previous government's overuse of this practice of writing broad, undefined legislation, then using regulatory authority to carve out the details. These four opposition colleagues at the time were right to oppose this. Decisions of such scope and magnitude were meant to be discussed in public, not behind closed doors. Previous cabinets had become dependent on this way of governing, to the detriment of the province and democracy and, as I heard a bit of last night, to the detriment of the party itself. How things change when you get to the other side of the aisle. It's sad, but that's what it seems.

They asked us to trust them to get it right behind closed doors once the bill passes, but I have to marvel at just how much trust the NDP feels is still out there. With backdoor PST taxes on everything, rapidly hiked costs of utilities, and now attempting to slip this bill past our farmers and ranchers without any oversight from the very citizens it affects, I think it's safe to say that the reservoir of trust has been greatly depleted. Mr. Speaker, if this government hopes to earn that trust back, I hope they will tap the brakes on this bill, hear the concerns of those they govern, and get this right.

It makes me think of before I was elected in 2012, when the PC government had put in bills 19, 36, 50, and 24. Here we are, a new government later – obviously, the voters spoke and showed that it was time for change – and we are doing the very, very same things. In Cypress-Medicine Hat, Mr. Speaker, in our Cypress Centre, in opposition to Bill 36, the last government called a town hall and did exactly what I think this government did in Grande Prairie three or four days ago. They had about 300, 400 landowners in the building, immediately divided them up into five or six smaller groups, didn't give them a chance to convey their thoughts in full, and at the end of the meeting the government consultant went to the middle of the room, and the words I remember were these. “Albertans, we have heard you loud and clear: kill Bill 36.” Well, we still have Bill 36, but we do not have a Progressive Conservative government.

What I heard from 1,500 people on the steps of the Legislature, what I heard from 1,900 e-mails from Cypress-Medicine Hat and Medicine Hat in just four or five days was: kill Bill 6. We weren’t offered the full chance to be consulted. We are concerned about how this affects our ability to live our lives, raise our families, and share our prosperity with our communities, our neighbours, our country, and the world. I remember before the 2012 election a sign with a line through the PC. Today I see a line through Bill 6 and the New Democrat logo. Are we repeating the past?

8:10

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Under 29(2)(a)?

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) has passed.
The Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to speak on this bill. I want to say first of all that I believe that in this entire Chamber there’s not a single person that wants a bill that’s going to make life worse for any farm family in this province. I think the members across the aisle know that you’ve got a lot of goodwill here. I think that you guys are kicking butt on the social issues – you are – but you’re not kicking butt on this one. You’re not.

I will say that everybody has a different lens through which they view these issues. Certainly, we’ve got a lot of members from my colleagues over here to the right who come from a rural background, and they get that visceral reaction about this bill from their constituents: thousands of e-mails, calls, that sort of thing. I will also say – and I don’t want to do any inflamed rhetoric here – that there are certainly members across the aisle, despite what some folks say, that certainly have that rural knowledge and those folks in rural areas. I know what you’re hearing in terms of feedback as well. And then someone like me, who’s an urban girl, comes from a slightly different mindset. We all have a different lens, you know. I look at a lot of issues through my lens as a journalist for 25 years and as an urban MLA.

I was lucky enough to go with our former ag minister and spend some time touring the Medicine Hat area. I was particularly taken with some of the things the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat said about his experience in talking to some folks out in that area. In fact, that’s where I had my first television job, at CHAT television in Medicine Hat. I did the news, the weather, the radio, everything. That’s what you do in a small town when you’re starting out in broadcasting.

I had lots of opportunities to talk to people out there. I think that every urban MLA should have the opportunity to do that, to get on a plane, commercial, and go out to some of these rural areas and have those discussions with people. You can call them consultations if you want. I don’t really think of them as consultations. I think of them as going out and meeting the folks that live in your province that have issues in different areas and talking to them, in fact, about some of the successes that we’ve had from our agriculture ministry in the past.

I talked to a guy out in I think it’s the Little Bow area who had a family farm that was failing. He got some grant money from Agriculture Alberta. He switched his crop, and now he’s one of the largest exporters of lentils and hard peas to India. Fantastic stories of success out there. There’s a family farm out that way where they make a hundred per cent of North America’s catnip, something I didn’t know before. Some wonderful stories I heard out there.

You know, when I listen to those stories, when we visited the folks with the greenhouses out there, I particularly had an affinity for them because there were some good Dutch families out there in the greenhouse business. Certainly, they’ve got a lot of concerns. I a hundred per cent agree with the idea that when you’re working your butt off 16 hours a day in a greenhouse and then you’re hit with a whole bunch of tax changes and things like that that affect your business, you’re going to feel pretty crappy.

I think, you know, that in order to be able to launch into this whole consultation piece, we have to talk about the fact that when we went out on these tours, the idea that we were sitting down and listening to people was one of the most important things we did as MLAs. When my colleague for Calgary-Mountain View talked about the Mexican Mennonite children and the child labour and safety codes and standards, I don’t think that there’s anyone who will disagree that those things are important and that we have to have that conversation. I think it’s an important conversation to have, and I don’t think anyone is arguing that you shouldn’t have that conversation. I do respectfully have a bit of a problem with: the reason the PCs didn’t do anything was because we were worried about losing our voter base. I don’t really like to consider the term “voter base.” I’d like to consider those folks as farm families, who have a challenging job out there, and maybe we shouldn’t call them the voter base. Maybe we should call them Albertan families who are working really hard to make a living and are worried about that living being taken away from them. It’s not politics.

You know, when we talk about a rural versus urban issue, it’s an issue for all of us. What happens in these areas is an issue for all of us. I came upon that demonstration, the protest with the 1,500 families. I walked through the crowd at the back for a little while, and I came upon the agriculture minister having a very heated conversation with a number of farm families. I felt bad for him because I don’t believe for a minute that he had bad intentions with this. I don’t at all. But I also think – and I want to take you back to a little episode from my past that I like to call Bill 10.

An Hon. Member: It’s that week.

Ms Jansen: Yeah. It’s that week.

You know, here was a situation where some folks with the best of intentions came up with a piece of legislation, and we all jumped in there to try and make something out of this dog’s breakfast, and that wasn’t an easy thing to do.

Dr. Swann: These folks may need a brief explanation.

Ms Jansen: Of Bill 10? I don’t think too many people need an explanation of Bill 10. That’s just a hunch.

I’ll say this. Then all of a sudden everybody had their hair on fire and were running around going: oh, my God, let’s throw some amendments in there, and we’ll make this better. In fact, it just became a bigger dog’s breakfast, and the Premier was out of town, so there’s a weird parallel there as well. I remember thinking at the time – and this is a cautionary tale, and I say this in the whole framework of trying to be helpful – that you do have to live with history you make.

There’s going to come a point in time where, we’ve already seen now, that some amendments are coming in. For some of the things that got some of these hard-working farm families so upset, now we’re seeing amendments: “Oh, we actually didn’t mean this. We’re going to do this.” I get that. You’re trying to fix something because you know that it’s flawed, and that’s a natural reaction.

The thing is that as much as we talk about consultation, when we bring something in and then we decide to consult after the fact, you're going to have a front yard full of angry people, hurt people, people who feel betrayed, and people who feel like: why did we have to drive 12 hours here and back to raise our blood pressure on the steps of the Legislature in order to get someone to finally listen to us. That is a problem. We faced it, and you're facing it now.

You have an opportunity, and I say this to all the folks there. I know that there are folks on that bench who are looking at the way this whole process has been unfolding and are saying, "Good grief; we didn't talk to any farm families?" or "We didn't talk to enough farm families?" They're feeling like that was a mistake, and I get that because we lived the Bill 10 experience, and finally, when Albertans stood up and had their say and said, "We're not going to take this; it's not right," we then pulled it. We went back, and a consultation process began.

I think that there is an opportunity here. I believe that intelligent leadership is the ability to say: "You know what? Look, we're all going to screw up all the time." So over the course of the next four years it's going to happen many times where we misjudge. We misjudged on our legislation. We go in with the best of intentions, and then we have to turn around and say: "You know what? That wasn't the right the fit. We tried to consult with as many people as possible." But when the ag minister was standing out front and was talking to these families, families were saying to him, "Who did you consult with?" He was offering a list of the folks that he consulted with, and they said to him, "Well, why didn't you consult with any of the farm families?" He didn't really have anything to say, and I felt bad for him because I'm not sure that he was in complete control of the consultation process, and that happens sometimes.

So there is an opportunity here. There's an opportunity to pull this, to go back, and to sit down with these folks, who want good legislation. But they know, as we know, that there cannot be a one-size-fits-all policy, that we need to sit down and have conversations. There are some amendments coming down the pipe. I know that my colleagues have some. We have some. I know that you folks have some amendments. That's good, to have that conversation. We're at the end of our legislative session now.

Ms Hoffman: Only if you stop talking.

Ms Jansen: I'm not yet. I'm not stopping yet. I'll stop when the bell rings, and that's my prerogative.

What I'll say is this. There is such a short period of time now to talk about these issues, and I think that there are some important conversations to be had and there's some goodwill to be won back. Why not take a little bit of time and sit back down at the table, let cooler heads prevail, have that conversation, and bring in a stronger bill in the spring session? I think that there's an opportunity there to say – you know, you can say that everyone can shoulder the blame for this. There are lots of folks: "We all should have done more consultation. We all should have asked more questions." But if we walk away now and take some time to consult, then everybody has a chance to have their voices heard. I don't want to stir up any: this bill is doing this, and this bill is doing that.

All I'm saying here is that we have an opportunity here to say: "Look, let's take a closer look at everything. Let's let everybody have their say." We've got 1,500 to 2,000 farm families who stood out front and said, you know: why wasn't my opinion respected and valued in this whole process? They're upset, and they have a right to be heard.

I think that for those of us city folk who are watching this unfold, you know, from my experience in the consultation process I know that – and we've learned the hard way on this – when you present people with a solution before you've articulated the problem, then you've got a problem. That, essentially, is what we have here. This is one of the things that – I will be quite honest – our government was terrible at. We often provided people with a solution to a problem they didn't know they had.

I'm saying that here we have an opportunity to sit down and to have that conversation. It doesn't have to occur over a long period of time. We're back in session in mid-February. I would bet you any money that we could sit down in January, have some very good conversations with people, look at the nuances of this so that we're not looking at a one-size-fits-all policy, talk about the amendments that you folks have on the back burner, talk about the amendments that my colleagues in the Wildrose have, talk about some of our amendments, and, especially, talk to the farm families, who are directly affected by this, and some of the other stakeholders who are now coming forward and are upset. Let's have that conversation in another venue and then come back in the spring session and take another crack at this.

The Speaker: Are there any comments or questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the Member for Calgary-North West for her comments. I thought it was a pretty good insight from one of the veteran members of this Legislature. I thought her comparison to Bill 10 was quite apt, all content aside, in terms of process, in terms of perhaps consultation going wrong and losing track of things and the need to sometimes step back, recognize your mistakes, consult with those whom you haven't consulted with, talk to those who have maybe been your opponents. If she could talk a bit more about her experience in that process. I know that she was intimately involved with it. I think there are valuable lessons for this entire House from that process.

Ms Jansen: I thank the member. You know, I want to talk a little bit about having a large caucus and having those conversations about what happens around the caucus table and all of those voices you have. Everybody wants to have an opportunity to speak to this. You feel the pain of this, whether you live in an urban area or you live in a rural area. I'm guessing that there are some folks on the other side who maybe feel differently about this bill but have been encouraged to vote a particular way and not express the opinion they really feel, because you've been told that you're part of a team, and as part of a team you've got to do what the team wants to do. We've heard that narrative before, and I think that we experienced that on Bill 10. There were certainly folks who had differing opinions but, you know, had that narrative: we've got to do this for the team.

I would say that there's going to come a point down the road where you're going to be in conversations or you're going to be looking at re-election, and folks are going to be saying to you: why did you not speak up? I think there's going to be a come-to-Jesus moment there for you. You have an opportunity now to say: "Look, I'm not being disloyal to my government when I say that I'm not comfortable with this. I'm not comfortable with it right now. It doesn't mean I don't think we're headed in the right direction, but I want to take another crack at this, to go back and look at it again." If you are one of those members who wants that, please, you know, seize the moment and express yourself. At the end of the day, you have to go back to your individual constituencies, and you have to answer to the folks who live in them. Your first job is to be a legislator – a legislator – not a member of a party and not a member of a team. It's to be a legislator.

And every piece of legislation – and I don't vote with my caucus all the time. I think that's obvious. As a legislator, for every motion – and I've voted with the government on certain motions – that comes across my desk, the first question I ask myself is: is this good for the people in my constituency and the people in this province? If I can't answer yes, then I'm not going to get up with the team and support an idea that might be good for their constituents. That's our job, to be legislators. We are elected not by the rest of our team but by the people in our constituency, and we have to answer to them.

I would say in response to the member's question that probably the biggest take-away that I had from the whole Bill 10 experience was to trust your instinct. You are here because you have that political instinct. Use it. Trust it. Trust that inner voice, and when you look at every bill, every motion, every piece of legislation, every amendment that crosses your desk, keep in mind that your first responsibility is to provide good legislation for the people in this province.

Mr. Coolahan: I want to ask the hon. member: is this bill good for paid farm workers and their families?

Ms Jansen: I thank the member for the comment. As I said before, there are good pieces of this bill. I don't think this is a bill you need to throw out wholesale, but I think that there are pieces that are flawed, and there's a consultation process that didn't happen the way it needed to happen. By getting folks back to the table, you can keep the strong pieces, and you can build on the pieces that are flawed. In that way, you go back, take a little bit of time, and take a more measured, thoughtful approach.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'd ask the indulgence of the House. I've been asked for a brief introduction. I need unanimous support to allow the member to introduce a guest.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: I recognize Calgary-South East. Please proceed.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks, members. I'd like to introduce Bill Jarvis. Bill Jarvis ran against myself as a Wildrose candidate in 2011. You know what? It was the first election I ran in, and I must say that he's a gentleman. I know he's a dedicated father and husband. He's been a successful trainer and has trained many professionals. I just wanted to introduce him and ask for the warm welcome of the House. Please rise.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you'll let me, actually, Bill Jarvis is here representing the Calgary-Foothills constituency office. Thank you, Member for Calgary-South East, for beating me to that introduction.

8:30 Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 6

Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, you may be wondering why a guy from Calgary cares about farming.

Mr. Yao: Well, you like to eat, right?

Mr. Panda: Yeah. Being a 30-year oil and gas guy, I was in a dilemma about this bill in the last couple of weeks. When we talk about safety, it's above all. It is nonnegotiable. For someone like me, a member of APEGA, it is unethical to compromise the safety of anyone, whether they're in your care and custody or not. But there are a few things, Mr. Speaker, we need to consider here: trust, fairness, equity for all. What I'm hearing, myself and my constituency office manager, from my constituents is that they feel that farmers are being discriminated against.

It seem this government is applying a double standard for one sector of society versus the farmers. Specifically, I'm talking about the climate change plan. Not very long ago the Premier announced that plan, and she claimed that they had consensus among all stakeholders. She had nice window dressing behind her, lining up all the people from downtown Calgary and environmental activists and so on, but in this particular case the stakeholders are missing. They are coming here to protest, so that moved me to speak in their support.

Also, after hearing from the Member for Calgary-North West that legislators should listen to their constituents, being her MLA – I actually have constituents in this House. After listening to her speech, I suspect I'll be in trouble if I don't speak along the same lines that she spoke a few minutes ago, particularly after she expressed her own experience of supporting bills unknowingly in a wrong way during her last term. So she actually gave words of wisdom to all the new NDP MLAs: pause and do the right thing. I'm taking her counsel, too, on this. I also have an extra benefit of sitting next to veterans like the Member for Drumheller-Stettler, who is a lifelong agrarian, so when he says something, there is credibility and authenticity. I have lots of respect for him.

From my own experience, Mr. Speaker, I grew up in a village in southern India, and my family did farming. Those are very fertile lands there. Unlike in North America, we don't have large-area farms there. By law the size of the farms there are limited to units of 40 acres for a household of wife and husband. I was actively involved in farming. I still have some family land there which belongs to me, so I'm proud to say that I'm a farmer, too. When I grew up, as a kid I worked on the farm helping my dad. I grew up in a joint family with my uncles and my cousins. We all worked together, and every day before I went to school and after I came back from school, I helped on the dairy farm and also the agricultural farm.

So with that background I feel strongly about the issues and concerns raised by the farmers, and I'm not supporting Bill 6 for the reasons that I'm going to explain to you now. Of all the departments that government is administering, agriculture is the most diverse. You know that, Mr. Speaker. You come from Medicine Hat, and southern Alberta is predominantly an agriculture-based economy. That is why it is so stable now as opposed to the cyclical economy of oil and gas. You know what goes on in a farmer's life day in and day out. Safety on the farm is of utmost importance, and the loss of just one life or any injury is simply one too many. We all agree about that. I know that members opposite feel strongly about that, and we are not disputing that. We support them on that. We are here to help. We'll help them to make the bill right.

Farmers and ranchers, we all know, put the food on the table that Albertans and Canadians eat each and every day, three times a day in my case. I remember that every time I have food, and Calgarians are telling me that we should not bite the hand that feeds us. Mr. Speaker, there is no farmer in Alberta who doesn't want their operation to be as safe as possible. Nobody cares more about farm safety than the moms and dads who operate them and call them home. The gap between the NDP's Bill 6 and common-sense Alberta farmers is that this bill is legislating first and consulting next. That's what I heard from the farmers on Monday.

An Hon. Member: Educate, not legislate.

Mr. Panda: Yeah, educate. Legislation is not the ultimate solution.

Agriculture is a vital part of Alberta's economy, which makes it shocking that the government has decided to introduce legislation as comprehensive as Bill 6 without in-depth consultation. There may be some consultation, but it's not enough. That's what we are saying. According to the NDP plan they'll be implementing this bill and its wide-reaching impacts in less than 45 days from the time it was tabled in this Assembly. Looking at the calendar, realistically, we'll be lucky to have five days of debate in this House before we end the fall session.

For example, these changes include participation in WCB. The WCB is an institution that even the current government has said needs reform. Then why not fix it first before making farmers and ranchers join it. In any case, farmers have been telling us that many of them have private insurance well beyond the scope of WCB and that in many ways it is superior to what WCB provides to injured workers, but Bill 6 doesn't care. Every January 1 they'll be paying for WCB, whether it is better or worse than what employers already have. Has this government done any consultation with these farmers and ranchers to ask how they currently operate when it comes to insurance for their workers? Perhaps, if this government had focused more on listening, they would understand the widespread processes already in place.

The focus on WCB in this legislation is especially puzzling because on October 30, 2012, the now Premier stated:

What we've heard from a number of members, at least on this side of the House from all three parties, is that we're all very acutely aware that the [WCB] does not function in the way we would like it to – there is a fairly broad understanding amongst injured workers that it's pretty hard to get a fair shake out of the Workers' Compensation Board – and that, really, what we would love to be doing is reforming the system as a whole.

This is from Hansard. That's what the current Premier said then, Mr. Speaker.

So if this board is deeply flawed and deserves to be reformed, as the Premier has stated in the past, then why not fix it before forcing farmers into it? Is this government not doing a huge disservice to the tens of thousands of Albertans you're now burdening with forced WCB coverage, especially when Albertans, as she said, can't get a fair shake out of it? The Premier has actively demonstrated against the WCB. So what are we to conclude the government thinks of farmers when this government has no problem making WCB mandatory for them a month from now? With the additional costs through increases in electricity rates, gas taxes, unknown OH and S compliance costs, and now mandatory WCB costs there is no question that this government's policies will be pushing farms out of business. It's just a matter of how many.

Bill 6 doesn't care about that. The manner in which the bill has been proposed, Mr. Speaker, has the appearance of making up the rules on the fly. At the very least, Bill 6 should go to a legislative committee so they can hear from the actual producers and industry members in order to mitigate the possible unintended consequences. The NDP government quite simply cannot afford to neglect consulting stakeholders prior to crafting the legislation. The Alberta NDP government must recognize the distinction between the small family farm and the large commercial operation, which will help them gain an understanding of the multitude of differences in the way that they function.

What we are seeing is this government, which vowed to be more open and transparent, doing just the opposite. After they came to power, they're just doing the opposite.

This past week we have seen hundreds and hundreds of farmers protesting at the Legislature, at the government's own consultation session in Grande Prairie, and at the numerous town hall meetings throughout Alberta. The grassroots momentum against this bill has yet to peak, Mr. Speaker, has yet to peak. We'll see that tomorrow. We're seeing a strong surge of Albertans demanding consultation on this legislation. The Premier should not make it a prestige issue. We should do the right thing of listening to the farmers and fixing the bill before we implement it.

Mr. Speaker, our provincial neighbours have working legislation models that make clear distinctions between large commercial operators and family farms, that could and should be studied to understand what does and doesn't work. The truth is that farming legislation cannot be a one-size-fits-all solution. That's what the Member for Calgary-North West also said.

What is needed more than anything with farm safety legislation is the time to make sure that we get this legislation right. Alberta has one of the world's most productive agricultural economies, supporting the livelihood of tens of thousands of Albertans. Agriculture is also responsible for a great deal of the province's renewable revenues and billions in economic activity, this even before we count the tremendous spinoff benefits to other sectors, Mr. Speaker. Agriculture has existed sustainably as one of our enduring industries since much before our time, even before our inception as a province. So it is safe to say that all farmers and ranchers would agree that their livelihood is one that goes beyond nine to five – it's not a routine nine to five job – and one that poses many challenges and risks.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, my sole question to my hon. colleague is: would you like to complete your thoughts?

Mr. Panda: Sure. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The dedicated people who devote their lives to farming and ranching in Alberta deserve nothing less than the due diligence of proper, proactive consultation on any legislation of this importance. Drafting legislation and then consulting is simply putting the cart before the buffalo, I say, because that's how I grew up. On our farms we had cows and buffaloes back in India. The bulls were used for tilling, so I would say that it's equal to putting the cart before the horse.

Mr. Speaker, now it's all about the fairness. Are we here to just bring some legislation, whether it is complete . . .

Mr. Yao: I don't think he's listening.

Mr. Panda: I'll wait.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I thought you had so much more to say.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I was just wondering: is it the right thing to ram through the legislation which is incomplete, which is not fair to the farmers, who are feeding us every day, day in and day out, or should we take a pause and then consult them, listen to the experts? That's the right way to do it, and if the government is taking credit for bringing in the climate change plan after thorough consultations with everybody, why not do the same thing with the farmers? Why are we applying double standards? Why are we treating them as second-class citizens? Is it the fair thing to do? Is it a Canadian value? I don't think so. One of the reasons I moved to Canada is that we treat everyone, including the farmers, fairly, but in this case that's not what I'm hearing.

I suggest and I encourage my neighbouring riding members from Calgary-Hawkwood and my young friend from Calgary-Shaw and other members on the opposite side to do the right thing. In fact, the Member for Calgary-North West actually eloquently explained her own personal experience when she supported a bill which now she has second thoughts on, and she shared something on social media of her pain going through those forceful commitments to support a bill which she didn't actually buy in to. If you are going through the same dilemma, here is your time to speak your inner voice and do the right thing and to be fair to the farmers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, hon. member. I wonder if you would give us some insight into whether you've ever worked on a farm where there was no occupational health and safety standard or compensation for injury. Have you worked on a farm with that?

Mr. Panda: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. I know you are a doctor. I'm an engineer. Let's play to our own personal experiences in life. I actually worked on the farm. I don't know whether you worked on the farm or not.

Dr. Swann: Did it have occupational health and safety?

Mr. Panda: I'm coming to that.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think it best that you direct to the chair.

8:50

Mr. Panda: Thank you, sir.

When I talk about farmers' issues, Mr. Speaker, I am talking from my personal experience, from my own involvement. As a doctor the hon. member might have given birth to babies here, but as a farmer's son I actually helped my dad in pulling out the baby cows and all, so I feel very strongly about farmers' issues.

Coming to OHS, I... [Mr. Panda's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: Hon. members, as the hour gets on I find that the tensions get a little higher as the clock ticks by. My apologies to the member that I wasn't entirely listening to the comments that were going through me to the House, but I was looking for some guidance with respect to a clearer definition of 29(2)(a) but wasn't able to do that.

In the meantime I'd heard three members in the House reference Medicine Hat, so that brought some things – as I thought about 29(2)(a), an old saying came back to me, which was stuck in my 4-H days: head to clearer thinking, heart to greater loyalty. I couldn't remember the third one. Health. Health to better living.

Mr. Panda: You are taking up with the farmers, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that. I am thankful for that.

The Speaker: Thank you. An observation.

The next member is – my apologies for that departure – the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and good evening, everyone. It's a pleasure to be here with you tonight and talk about this very interesting bill that we've had delivered to us in the past few weeks in such a robust fashion, to say the least. I have to say that I'm pleased to get a chance to speak to this proposed legislation.

You know, I don't think I've heard more from my constituents on any other bill since I was elected in 2012. I don't think I've ever seen on TV or on radio – and I asked, actually, some of the very experienced people here that work for this House if they have ever seen anything in the past 15 years, and they said they had not except for one health issue. I believe it was way back when and around 2001. But let me get back to this bill.

You know, I've never seen a bill that looks like this, that is so thin. It is, I see, a white bill like normal, and it has a little bit of stuff in the front that never really seems to mean much to anybody anyway. As you get inside, then you find that there are one, two – there are three – four, I guess there are actually five pages that have caused so much rebellion in this province in so short a period of time. I can't actually believe it. When I look at it, I see that all it is is a bunch of amendments to existing legislation, a bunch of amendments that will cause all of that, and we're trying to ram this through in so few days without giving the key people that will be affected any consultation prior to even bringing this forward. It is absolutely shocking. I am sorry, but I just needed to say that and get it out because it has not yet been said tonight, and it needed to be said.

The constituents are very concerned about the speed at which this bill has been rushed through, as we all know. Like all Albertans they want to make sure that we get this legislation correct, so they want us to take the time to make sure we get it right the first time. That's what I'm going to be talking about. They want to make sure that their voices are heard, that their insights and experience are considered by this Assembly in the crafting of this legislation. Every one of them is concerned that this is not happening. I think we've heard that time and time again in these protests and all of these speeches that we've heard in this House in the past few days. The government is, as I said, pushing this through without considering those voices and the very needs of the people it will most affect.

We talk about 50,000 to 60,000 – I can't remember the exact number – of farms and ranches in Alberta. How many people does that affect? It's not the number that was quoted in the document that was on the website here just a few days back but now has mysteriously disappeared, that was about 11 or 12 pages with all of the rules. It's probably in the neighbourhood of 300,000 to 400,000 to 500,000 people it's going to affect.

Farming and ranching is fundamental to Alberta's economy and culture, as we know, and this is as true today as it's been for generations. Our province grows wheat and barley, canola, alfalfa, oats, and peas. We raise cattle and horses and chickens and pigs, as we all know. We grow vegetables and berries. We have orchards and wineries and honey farms, just to name a few. The abundance of our farm and ranchlands provide the province, much of the country, and even many parts of the world. There are 43,000 farms in the province, as I just said a moment ago, and up to 60,000. Much of our population has some connection to these farms. Much of our population. Not just in the rural areas themselves, not just in the towns and the cities, but all over Alberta people are being affected.

And this said, it's important to note that farming is not just solely an aspect of rural life. Urban citizens are increasingly rediscovering the satisfaction themselves of growing things, growing plants, and raising animals for food, from backyard chicken coops, even, to community gardens. I know they're allowing chickens to be raised in the town of Turner Valley. Well, the town is in my constituency now, Mr. Speaker. Municipal governments are actually encouraging this kind of shift, and this Assembly is considering a private member's bill to encourage local food production because Albertans recognize the value of farms.

I've received, as I'm sure all the members of this Assembly have received . . .

Dr. Turner: Safe farms.

Mr. Stier: The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud wants to interrupt, I gather, but I'll continue on without answering your stuff.

I received, as I'm sure most of the members here have, hundreds of letters and e-mails from Albertans asking the government to slow down and to consult with stakeholders before ramming it through. You would think that these all came from rural constituents only, but that is simply not the case, actually. I would like to quote a letter from a self-identified Edmontonian.

I appreciate the intent of Bill 6, and daresay even support the spirit of it, but it is short-sighted and requires much more consideration and time than it is being given. While I truly believe the desire is to protect farmers, their families, and their employees, in its current state it has the potential to do more damage than good to farming communities.

Given that farming and ranching are so important to Alberta and Albertans, it would seem self-evident that we should carefully consider how we can best protect the people who work so hard doing it. Rather than legislate and consult, we should consult and then legislate. It makes simple sense. You don't plan a house without going out to the people who want the house to see how many rooms they want, to see how many bathrooms they're going to need, to see how many cars are going to be needed in the garage. For a government that was swept to power on the promise of change, this seems more like the same old, tired, top-down, well-known, best style of governing that Albertans thought they had shown the door.

I want to stress that no one – no one – in this province opposes safety on our farms. Opposing this bill is not opposition to the safety and security of our province's farming community. Not one farmer, not one rancher, not any MLA thinks that farms should be less safe. Not anyone wants to see themselves or anyone working with them to get hurt. No one cares more about safety on farms than the moms and dads who own and run them, and I'm sure members on the other side of the House would not disagree with that. This is not in dispute, and neither is our concern that all employees can go into work every morning knowing that they will be afforded protections to ensure they'll be returning to their families at the end of the day.

While this government may have some good intentions towards a goal that is shared by all, then, we don't believe this government's actions towards attaining that goal are the appropriate ways, nor have they been fully considered. By the way that this bill is written and the way that the other side is rushing into it, it concerns me, and it concerns my constituents.

Number one, there are no provisions to differentiate large commercial farms from small family farms. It's not in these five pages that are in that little pamphlet we got.

Number two, there's no distinction between a feedlot and a hobby farm.

9:00

Number three, there are no provisions recognizing the long days that calving or harvest necessarily bring with them. [interjection] No, it's not there, Minister of Municipal Affairs. It is not. They've taken it off the website. It's gone.

Number four, there is no recognition of the role that children and teenagers play growing up on family farms, helping with chores around the property, and learning about farming safety and life from their parents while doing so. There's no guidance for distinguishing the home from the work site on family farms, where each is so often blended into the other.

There's no recognition of the long culture of neighbourliness in our farming communities, where everyone helps each other as they're able to do so that they can get everything done and finish ahead of their deadlines. How neighbourly can you be when helping out might hit your neighbour right in the pocketbook?

My constituents and I just have so many questions on this bill. By the way, my constituency has 22 towns. That is 22 communities, 14 councils. Not one public hearing was scheduled in my constituency – not one – and it is the largest and most choice farming area and ranching land in Alberta. There are not a lot of answers forthcoming from the government. The government should know better.

The Premier said the following when announcing the royalty review, quote: we have outlined a mechanism that includes transparency, consultation, a careful, considered approach that takes into account the fulsome contribution of our industry partners. Well, let's talk about that. Firstly, a considered approach, Mr. Speaker. That is what she promised to our oil and gas industry. Why should our farming families be treated differently than big oil and gas companies? Why? Why, Premier? Why should they do that?

Secondly, consult before you legislate, Mr. Speaker. If the government had made efforts to consult with farmers and ranchers before they introduced this bill to the House, they wouldn't be worrying about miscommunication on it, but they're sure worried about miscommunication on it now. The government could have chosen to do right by Albertans and gone out and held town halls and consultations and asked for advice while they were formulating the bill. Certainly, this bill and all the thought that might have gone towards it would have been started some time ago. You would have thought that would have allowed them time to go and do that. But they chose not to, and now they're surprised by the backlash that their arrogance and their mistakes have caused.

They shouldn't be surprised since they themselves so often commented on the previous government failing in exactly the same way. If I may, I'd like to quote the current Government House Leader, who said the following just last December on a different piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker. He said:

Because of the clear problems we're hearing about this bill and the utter lack of notice and complete consultation with all concerned stakeholders, we would like to see the legislation delayed.

He said that. He said:

It's been pushed forward too fast, and not everyone has had their voice heard.

One of the members that is in the room this evening on the government side has heard those quotations before because he was sitting with the Government House Leader when he said that. I see him shaking his head a little bit right now. I couldn't agree more with him, Mr. Speaker.

I don't understand how the other side can't understand that our concerns with this are not with the intent of the legislation but with the way the government wants to legislate. I hope that common sense will prevail on this matter and that this government will send this legislation to committee, where it can be studied, reflected on, and where Albertans can testify and advise on it. We've talked about this throughout this week in question period and through other statements. It is where this House can get it right the first time if we do that. There's no need and no excuse for sowing the confusion and discord that has rocked our province on this issue, especially an issue where it should be so easy for all of us to find agreement.

What is their reason for not wanting to consult ahead of time? Why don't we take this extra time? Can anyone over there bring me a valid reason to bring this into effect without doing . . .

Dr. Turner: Seventeen farm deaths per year.

The Speaker: Hon. member, through the Speaker, please.

Mr. Stier: Again the Edmonton-Whitemud member wants to interrupt, Mr. Speaker. If he wants to bring that up, he can do it all the night. I don't really care, but, you know, we'll finish the speech. Thank you.

The moms and dads on our farms are more concerned than anyone about safety, and if this government had engaged with them, consulted with them, and drafted legislation with them in mind, there wouldn't be demonstrations on the steps of this building, there wouldn't be thousands of letters pouring into the constituency offices, Mr. Speaker, there wouldn't be hundreds and hundreds of people driving up the highways in their farm machinery to come to this Legislature, and there wouldn't be hundreds lined up at the door when this government could not even plan to hold proper meetings and actually book rooms that would hold more than 40 in some cases.

Our party has advocated for weeks, since this started up, on the education. Earlier on the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View had mentioned that for 10 years the past government had talked about education. They did that for a reason: because they were right. If they're going to have safer operations, people need education. You were right, hon. member. They need that education.

There's no disagreement that safety and a fair workplace are deserved by everyone in the workplace. This means that we can do it in many ways, though. We have choices. We can have insurance, yes, but we can have choice in that insurance. We can have different companies proceed with that.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To my hon. colleague here: the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View spent some time telling this House that the government of Alberta has been consulting with farmers for 10 years and that it's enough. Could the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod please explain to me and to this House, especially the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, how it could be that with that 10 years of consultation, we had 1,500 farmers on the steps of this Legislature claiming that they had never been consulted? Could you explain to us how there have been thousands and thousands of e-mails and letters, thousands and thousands of farmers attending these rallies who are all saying the same thing, "Kill Bill 6; it's going too fast, and we have not been consulted"? How could this possibly be if there have been 10 years of consultation as claimed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake for that question. It's always strange to me how people can make statements about previous governments and not have been participating directly in them and say that they fully understand what has taken place.

We've had so many statements regarding consultation, and so many times we've heard from various entities that consultation was done for years and years and now is the time to go ahead and smack in legislation. Well, how can you say that you have consulted on the legislation currently when you're not talking about the same type of considerations? We weren't talking about this before. So I don't think it's fair for the Member for the Calgary-Mountain View to have made those statements in that way.

Certainly, I can say this. We have considered this pretty carefully. We have our own set of solutions, and we believe that – you know what? – there is a strategic approach that we could look at. There is a very good strategic approach we could look at. First of all, we have to figure out what we want as an outcome. We should probably develop some comprehensive income insurance for farm employees when they are injured, disabled, or worse, something that is going to cover them very well.

Now, most farming operations already have those kinds of things in place, and most big commercial ones, of course, have in the past gone with WCB, which is fine. But we can recognize that WCB is only one of several options that might be available. There are other comprehensive and more cost-effective insurance tools that some operations are already using, Mr. Speaker, and I think that these could be used in a creative manner so that we could find unique and individual needs and solutions for those situations.

The next outcome we want to talk about is reducing the frequency of farm accidents. It seems as though one of the members across the way has that on his mind, so we have a solution for that. We want to encourage farm safety behaviours that result in low accident rates. We want to educate employers and employees through education and a certification program. Instead of having punitive measures, we could take the time and the dollars spent and invest those dollars in an education program designed specifically for agricultural operations. We could even involve courses on the Internet. We could involve testing. We could even involve what I had to go through for my boating card. It's not that hard to take all the energy that this government has and the expertise and put them to good use and create those programs, that we do apparently seem to need.

We could work with all the farm organizations we have in Alberta and try to supply some sort of a support mechanism for those education programs, Mr. Speaker. We could use previous farm accident data, and we could actually make very good use of that data to help us manage and understand accident prevention. We could develop and communicate acceptable employment standards for farm workers. We could recognize that both employers and employees accept that long and variable hours are part of the job and that they work together, so we could tailor our program to meet those specific needs.

We could also recognize and support positive farm labour relations. We know that we could create a relationship between employees and employers tailored to these specific situations, that would provide us with respect, productivity, and satisfaction. With the Internet and social media, Mr. Speaker, we can provide all that and more.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. I hope that I can just take a moment in the House. I wanted to offer a sincere apology to a woman – her name is actually Isabelle Fournier; I hope it's okay to say her name in here – who had received an e-mail from my staffer today.

The Speaker: You're making . . .

Mrs. Aheer: I'm just doing an apology for something that happened earlier, and it's just before I dig into Bill 6. It has to do with that. I wanted it to just be on the record. It directly relates to Bill 6, and I'll get to that. Just on behalf of my staffer, if you don't mind, I'd like to read the letter that was sent, which, of course, will have . . .

The Speaker: This is with respect to Bill 6?

Mrs. Aheer: Absolutely, it is. Thank you, sir.

Earlier today I received an e-mail from Peter. I was obviously insulted on a personal level; but mostly a little hurt. I was hurt because the e-mail made me question Wild Rose's stance on Bill 6.

I reacted, and posted the email on social media. As the Liberal leader would say "it's 2015".

I was then contacted by a friend, who spoke [out], and urged me to call him. Which I did.

At any point in one's life, we have choice words for people. I know, I have had my fair share. What I haven't done though, is apologize for some of those people who I may have insulted.

Peter reached out thru facebook and my friends, urging me to contact him. While speaking with him, I realized he is just a man. As overworked as we all are during these trying times. We are both fighting the same fight. We both have the same goals.

I also realize he is only human. He reminded me of my grand father who worked his land, day and night. Who also had words for us kids when we were making too much noise or being annoying.

I believe that Peter deserves the chance to prove himself with the Wild Rose party. Because he has . . . more qualities than any NDPer; and Honesty and Integrity. His apology was honest, and I am more than happy to have had the chance to have a conversation, with a great man; who hit "reply all", in a moment of haste.

Peter and I will be fighting this bill 6 side by side at the Legislature tomorrow. Because together our fight will only be stronger.

That's in regard to Bill 6, and it is with humility that I stand here to speak on behalf of farmers in my constituency

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I'd like to also bring to light that yesterday in our banter the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville had sort of pointed across at me and asked if I had actually talked to anybody in my constituency. Yeah. I mean, I've had like everybody else hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of letters and e-mails and phone calls. I mean, it's actually impossible to keep up with everything that's going on. Everybody wants to have their point spoken to, and I have so many things to share with all of you. I'm sure you're excited as I am to tell you all about that.

An Hon. Member: We are. Can't wait.

Mrs. Aheer: I know, right?

I've been in Chestermere since 1979. One of my greatest memories, actually, as a child was when I was asked to come in and help out with some calving. I actually only got the opportunity to do it once. I have long, stringy arms, so you can imagine what my job was that day. I got to go in and turn and help. It was amazing in a very odd and sort of weird, strange way. But one of the more beautiful things that I saw was when that little guy came out, and we saved him. I don't know if you've ever seen a calf. When they're first born, they're absolutely stunning: beautiful, beautiful creatures with big eyes, long eyelashes. I immediately fell in love. You know, had my father let me, I probably would have taken him home and, like one of my favourite movies, called him Norman and dragged him around from place to place. It's one of my favourite memories.

Where I lived, there were a couple of jobs that you could do. You could babysit, or you could help out with farming. Depending upon what the job was, I was quite often on some of my friends' farms. Not being a farmer myself but living in a farming community, I was able to do all manner of things. I wasn't able to lift the heavy hay bales, but there was a lot of rock picking and other things that you can do, which I was very good at.

Just to elaborate on my moment of being with my constituents. Originally, I had planned to have a meeting with my constituents, with our farmers this Friday. But when all of this started coming to fruition, I phoned one of my friends who's in my constituency – his sister actually taught me when I was in school and is actually teaching my son now – and they managed in under 24 hours to get together just under 200 farmers. That was on Saturday, November 28, with less than 24 hours' notice.

I mean, I must have held – I don't know? – seven or eight town halls during the election, and I can tell you that I probably didn't get that many people in all of them at any of those times. I really thought, you know, that people would come out and want to talk to me about what I was doing. But this was unbelievable. It was in Indus, and not only did they show up in fine form, but they had also signed that petition as well, to kill Bill 6.

As a new MLA I look to my colleagues for wisdom, and I've heard so much in here, on this side especially. We would love to hear from you on your side, especially because there are so many of you that do have farming communities. It would behoove all of us to have you stand up and have an opportunity to speak on behalf of them. As has been said in the House previous to myself, it's an imperative side of understanding what we do to have both sides of that story. You owe it to yourself and to your constituents to make sure that you are supporting them. It may not be what you think is right. But as has been said in the House previously, we are seeing massive amounts of reaction to this. Please don't ignore this.

Madam Speaker, if you don't mind, I'd like to share some other sentiments from my constituents via the hundreds of phone calls and e-mails and letters. The central point that I see and hear time and again is that they feel that this process has been a backdoor approach. I think that that speaks to the mentality of how – they're feeling like they've been betrayed. This is another term, I'm sure, you've heard over and over again. I think it's worth saying. When a person feels cornered and attacked and they feel like they haven't been consulted, this is the kind of reaction that you're going to get. I mean, there's so much frustration and anger out there that would be easily handled by some moderation, by some thoughtfulness on this part.

I have to say, again, that all of us in this House are after the same goals when it comes to safety. Every single one of us. Having been in a farming community and having had the privilege of spending time on a farm and spending time with the people who do these amazing jobs and bring food to our tables, we owe them that respect of listening. We owe them that respect of slowing down.

Again, I beg you just to consider that it's not so much about – we know that it's about safety, but you need to take a step back. Please just take some time and think about what it is that you're actually trying to accomplish here. As the hon. member from the party to the left of me here had said earlier, if you had the opportunity to go and spend time on the farms and breathe in that environment and what that actually means to people, it's just a different mentality. It would be like bringing somebody into any of your other jobs that you had previous to this one and having them spend a day on the job with you to understand how hard you worked at that and who you were at the core and how that defines you.

What you're actually saying right now is that that definition doesn't matter. You're saying that who they are, how they're parenting, who they are as people doesn't matter. You are giving them the impression that that doesn't matter. I honestly don't think that that is your intention, but that is what is transferring out to the people of this community. They feel disrespected. I would love nothing more than to be able to say that that's not the truth, but that's exactly how it's being interpreted.

Ultimately, that responsibility of how that's being interpreted lies on your shoulders, and the opportunity has been presented to you in a thousand different ways, as many times as we can, to give you the opportunity to make this right. How is it that that can be ignored on so many different levels and so many times? I mean, as a parent, you know, I sit and I do the circle talk, a typical mom thing, until my kids get the idea of what it is that I'm trying to get through to them. I don't know how many times it will have to be repeated, but we will continue to repeat it on behalf of these people that we represent until you hear it. Don't just hear it; listen to it. Take it in. We're asking for moderation. We're asking for consultation.

I have to give a small shout-out to the Member for St. Albert. In a bill that she's going to be presenting, she is asking for consultation with regard to PDD, something that is very close to my heart. That's the way it should be done, and congratulations in advance. If that member has that ability to think about how this is going to impact a very important group of people in society, why is that any different than what we're trying to accomplish over here? You need to actually answer that question.

Some of us aren't even sleeping at night because we feel nauseated by what our farmers are going through. We understand at a cellular level, I guess, for lack of a better word. I'm not sure which minister had mentioned earlier – I think it was actually the hon. member to our left here that . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Excuse me, hon. member. I just have to interrupt here at this point. According to House of Commons Procedure and Practice, debate at second reading needs to focus on the principles of the bill, not on your personal feelings and emotions about situations that are going on in here.

Thank you.

Mrs. Aheer: Sure. I'm sorry. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I will continue on the principles, then.

The bill has been pushed forward, thrown in the faces of family farms, and it looks as though it will be rammed through without appropriate consultation. The government needs to slow down, revamp the process, and go and talk to the people most drastically impacted. Make no mistake: the 40,000-plus farms will be impacted. Just in case that number has not resonated with you, it's 40,000-plus family farms. When seeking votes, the government had promised to stand up for farmers, to review federal transport, and to keep it fairly priced. Now, we are hit with this platform bait and switch.

When we speak about safety, as many have said, we all agree that safety is of the utmost importance, but rushing in and imposing legislation on family farms is not the way to do it. Education is key, awareness, training, materials. These farms are unique and diverse, like a thumbprint, all the things that create the fabric of this province, things that I think the entire House can agree on. This is transformational rural legislation, the most transformational in a generation, and it's proposed to be done in 45 days, start to finish. Think about that just for a second, 45 days to talk to 40,000-plus farms. That's just under a thousand farms a day, that I'm sure will not be consulted. We would suggest that you tap the brakes. How can you expect to get it right when so many voices are neglected?

Farming is a lifestyle. Perhaps, the government should be spending some time with these families and consulting with them. Farming is also uniquely seasonal and very much at the mercy of nature. I've heard from many that the amount of hours on a farm during seeding or bringing in crops can hit 90 hours a week. Running a farm does not adhere to regular times, and they can't stop for statutory holidays. The work gets done – it's needed – or livelihoods are put on the line. It is the civic duty of government to reach out to constituents and make sure that we are doing right by the people and families affected before we rush into legislation.

The list of concerns goes on and on and on, and the government would understand if they had bothered to ask. How are neighbours supposed to help neighbours? This is more than just a culture. This is a lifestyle. It's been said before, and I'll say it again. It is a lifestyle, and it is one that has always involved the help of community and neighbours. It is the fabric of this province.

I've spoken with my friends, the farmers in my constituency. You know, it's funny. They're usually standing beside a friend of theirs going: well, this is my neighbour Bob who helps me with calving. That's how they introduce each other. I heard it over and over and over again outside on the steps the other day. This is a community of fellowship, and like safety, these are all important aspects that we can agree upon. These are in all parts of our constituencies. Farming or not, it's about community.

Inappropriately crafted OH and S or labour relations stop this culture from enduring, the culture of passing the skills learned by the father and the mother on to the son and the daughter.

The Deputy Speaker: Just before we go on to 29(2)(a), hon. member, at the beginning of your speech you read a letter. Would you be prepared to table that tomorrow in the House?

Mrs. Aheer: Absolutely. Thank you so much. I'd be happy to.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to ask my constituency neighbour a question here. You know, she challenged us during her statement to hear some of the stories, to take in the stories and see how people are affected by this kind of legislation. So my question to her would be – I'd like to read her some stories here of some people who have been affected, and after hearing those stories, I wonder if she might consider changing her mind on the bill.

The first story I would like to read – and I'm prepared to table these documents tomorrow in the House, Madam Speaker – is about Philippa Thomas, whom the Member for Calgary-Mountain View mentioned earlier. Philippa is actually – I believe she's one of my constituents, but she's very close to yours. We border each other's constituencies. So I'd like to read some of the story to you.

Six times a week Philippa Thomas heads out from her Cochrane home with her dog Gaffer to go for 12-kilometre walks through woods, meadows and cow pastures.

Thomas's four-hour treks are her moments to meditate; to put out of mind the agonizing pain she has endured since she injured her thumb almost seven years ago while working as a farm worker at a local equestrian facility.

At first the injury was just a small cut but it morphed into complex regional pain syndrome (CRPS), a chronic progressive disease characterized by severe pain, swelling, and changes in the skin. It progressed to her wrist, elbow, shoulder, and then to her neck. Ultimately, the condition rendered her right arm useless.

"I never knew a body could handle this amount of pain. My back teeth are all broken as I grind. I vomit every day, copious amounts," . . .

To combat her CRPS, a spinal cord stimulator has been implanted in her back. She must wear morphine patches and take four daily doses of methadone for the pain.

"This is a forever thing. I will never get better."

9:30

Madam Speaker, I'd also like to read to the member a bit of a story from the public fatality inquiry, that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View mentioned earlier, on Kevan Chandler. Here are some of the circumstances surrounding his death. I'd be prepared to table this document as well tomorrow.

The deceased, Kevan Chandler, was an employee of a feedlot. Just before noon he went inside a silo to clean out grain that was encrusted on the inside wall. He was attempting to knock down the grain when it collapsed, burying him and causing his death by smothering.

It goes on, Madam Speaker. I'll skip to some of the more germane points here.

A Fatality Inquiry was ordered after the Fatality Review Board recommended that one be held to determine if the death of Kevan Chandler was preventable, and address the advisability of having the Occupational Health and Safety Act investigators involved in farming accidents that occur on large farming and livestock operations.

Go figure.

It was noted that Mr. Chandler had expressed concern on the morning of June 18 as to the danger of clearing out silo 7. However, Mr. Chandler was known to be eager to please, and confident in his abilities.

Much like the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

The opinion of the co-workers was that Mr. Chandler made an error in judgment, caused by his enthusiasm and lack of experience.

I'll skip to the end here, Madam Speaker, where the hearing tribunal makes an explicit recommendation. This is in regard to the applicability of the Occupational Health and Safety Act to farms. It is recommended that paid employees on farms . . .

Mr. Hanson: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: You raised a point of order, hon. member? Go ahead.

Point of Order Question-and-comment Period

Mr. Hanson: Under 29(2)(a) it allows members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Madam Speaker, this is not a point of order under 29(2)(a). Any member in this House has the opportunity to comment or to ask a question, and there is much precedent in this House of members that are setting up some background, some context before they get to a question. Simply, the member standing up on a point of order is pre-empting the member here from getting to his point, to his question. This is not a point of order. This is standard practice in this House.

The Deputy Speaker: I will point out that earlier the Speaker did allow a great deal of leeway on the use of 29(2)(a), which, if you strictly interpret what you just read from there, hon. member, doesn't really allow for the original speaker to finish off their dialogue. But it has been used in that way, and there has been traditionally a lot of leeway given in this House. I believe that the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane is reaching a point. He did say that he was looking for the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View's opinion, so I feel that there isn't a point of order on this particular matter.

Debate Continued

Mr. Westhead: Thank you. I'll finish up quickly here. It was recommended that paid employees on farms should be covered by the Occupational Health and Safety Act, with the same exemption for family members and other nonpaid workers that apply to nonfarm employers.

An Hon. Member: What was the date?

Mr. Westhead: This was from 2008, I believe.

Again, to the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View: after hearing these stories and the explicit recommendations of a judge here, have you changed your mind?

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you so much for taking the time to tell us those stories. I think, again, it comes back to some of the same things that we've been talking about. [A timer sounded]

The Deputy Speaker: I believe I have next on the list Strathmore-Brooks. Is that correct?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Speaker, this week has been extraordinary. This week I have been swamped by e-mails, phone calls, letters, and visits by farmers who are extremely upset about Bill 6. Right now the phone on my desk is buzzing with angry e-mails and Facebook messages from farmers who are angry that they have not been consulted about a bill that affects their way of life.

The majority of these concerns are about the way the government has gone about imposing Bill 6 rather than the nitty-gritty of the contents of it. Hundreds of my constituents are astounded that a new government, elected on a platform of transparency, would impose changes that affect their lives and livelihoods without speaking to them first. Sure, the NDP government belatedly decided to hold a few token meetings in a small, select number of towns across the province. The majority of these meetings have been scheduled for after the NDP had planned on passing this bill. I have a feeling that they're not going to meet that deadline anymore. These are not town halls; these are town tells. These are not consultative sessions. These are sessions where they tell farmers and ranchers how to comply with the bill and not find out what farmers and ranchers want in the bill.

Let me quote the dictionary on the definition of consultation for the members on the government side. Quote: a meeting with an expert or professional such as a medical doctor in order to seek advice. Earth-shattering stuff, Madam Speaker. How could one put advice to use if the bill has already been rammed through the House and passed into law before we solicit the advice?

Our job as MLAs is to be the representatives of our constituents to the government, not representatives of the government to constituents. Now, I wonder what the constituents of the 11 ridings represented by NDP MLAs who are rural or partially rural think right now. Do their constituents really believe that their MLAs are representing their views to the NDP government, or do they think that those MLAs are representing the NDP's views to their constituencies? We are not voting machines. We are representatives of the people.

There were over 200 people protesting Bill 6 on the steps of this Legislature last Friday. There were between 1,500 and 1,800 people protesting on the steps of the Legislature on Monday. How many are going to have to be here later this week before the government will listen? How many people will it take before the government realizes that they are not doing what is right for farmers and ranchers?

My office has been swamped by farmers and ranchers in my constituency who want to discuss Bill 6 because I'm their representative. Unfortunately, the government held no consultations whatsoever in Strathmore-Brooks. Nothing. In one of the most agriculture-intensive constituencies in Canada not a single government consultation with my farmers and ranchers. So you know what I did, Madam Speaker? I did what every member of the NDP caucus representing rural constituencies should have done. I called my own town hall meeting. I booked the Bassano Elks lodge for 2 o'clock this coming Sunday. I found out very quickly that we are not going to have enough space in the Elks lodge.

I've had constituents who have gone out with their own money and bought local radio advertisements in Brooks informing people about the town hall, out of their own pockets. A constituent of mine went out to put up some posters around the county telling people about the town hall. You know what that constituent found? That constituent, in going out to put up her printed posters, found that random constituents, unprompted by me or my office, had gone and put up their own posters telling them to come on out to our town hall because that was their only chance to tell the government what they thought of Bill 6. Rural Albertans are waking up to this, and they're not happy with what they've found.

The Bassano Elks lodge is likely to be too small for what we had, so we've had to scramble to find a larger venue. We've now had to move it to the Bassano school gymnasium. There this Saturday I've invited farmers and ranchers in my constituency and adjacent communities who have not been consulted to tell me what they think we should be doing about Bill 6. Has a single member of the government side of the Legislature done so as well? Has a single member of the government side of this House representing rural or semirural constituencies held an open forum in their constituencies for farmers and ranchers to come and tell them what should be done about Bill 6? The silence is deafening.

This is what we do in a democracy. We listen to those we represent in our constituency, and we represent their interests to the government, not the other way around. Is it not the purpose of this House to listen to the people and be their representatives, or did that notion, once held by the NDP in opposition, change once they won power? How many signatures on petitions asking this government to stop Bill 6 will it take for them to listen? Will it take half the farmers in Alberta to sign a petition? Will it take every single farmer to sign a petition before they'll listen? How many thousands need to stand outside these doors before we'll do what they need us to do?

Judging from what I've heard from my constituents so far – and I've heard a lot – the reaction has been almost unanimous. Let's look at two historical examples in Alberta of what happens when the government ignores or disrespects farmers and ranchers. In 2008 the Premier of the day pushed through a series of laws that violated the fundamental property rights of landowners in this province. That set in motion a long chain of events that led to the ousting of that Premier and the creation of the Wildrose. But in looking further back, Alberta's first Liberal government – and, I might add, last Liberal government – thought that they knew better than farmers and ranchers and governed like they didn't matter. In short order farmers organized into the United Farmers of Alberta and swept that old government from office. Governments worthy of this province must respect both urban and rural Alberta. No government worthy of its office should treat one or the other as second-class citizens.

This government did get one thing right. Every single farmer wants to have a safe farm that their children can live and prosper on. Every single mother and father wants to ensure that their child is as safe as they can possibly be on the family farm. After years of no mandatory WCB or OH and S officials on the farm, Alberta still has the lowest fatality rate per capita in Canada. Now, one fatality is one too high, but this is not a record that should be overlooked. This is because Alberta farmers do care about safety, and they take it more seriously than any government bureaucrat possibly can. The workers on farms are the sons, daughters, aunts, uncles, grammas, grampas, moms, and dads of rural Alberta. These people care more about each other than any OH and S bureaucrat ever will. These people will do anything possible to ensure that every single member of their family comes back from work safe and secure every single night. They've been doing it for generations.

In fact, the government should know this. There have been numerous studies done on this topic by the government. And you know what they said? They said that OH and S does not necessarily need to be legislated. They said that more education would be beneficial for the agricultural industry but that imposed legislative changes to their way of life are not recommended. This government does not even listen to their own research, nor are they listening to the Albertans who stood outside those doors protesting just the other day. What will it take for this government to listen?

We could all agree here, every member of this House, that safety is a priority. The way this bill is being rammed through this House, however, is not ensuring safety. We must consult with the experts – the farmers, the ranchers, the people who live and breathe agriculture – to ensure that we're getting this legislation right the first time. This cannot be done by legislating first and consulting later. By forcing this bill through the House without proper consultation, this government is doing a disservice to all Albertans, urban and rural.

If my point has not yet been made, I'll make it now. Bill 6 should not be rammed through this House at midnight without any due consideration for the people it affects. This bill, like several others that we have seen in this session, should be sent to a committee for review and consultation. By sending it to committee, we can ensure that everyone who wants and needs to be consulted is consulted. Unfortunately, the only farmers who will participate in this debate in the Legislature are the farmers on this side of the House because there are none over there. By sending this to committee, we can ensure that this bill is what Albertans want, not what the union organizers and the NDP want.

The NDP has insisted on sending opposition bills, private members' bills, to committees for study, bills that, while important, do not fundamentally alter the character of half the province. If those bills proposed by us, that have already had significant consultation done before they were introduced, should be going for further consultation at committees, then surely an omnibus piece of legislation that will have significant consequences for everyone in rural Alberta should also go to committee to ask rural Albertans what they think.

On December 5 I will be in Bassano to listen to rural Albertans, to listen to my constituents. The NDP might be waking up to it now. They have lit a prairie fire in Alberta that they cannot undo.

I urge all members of this House, especially those members on the government side representing rural constituencies, to do what they know is right, to listen to their constituents, and to kill Bill 6.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Yeah. Madam Speaker, as I was listening to the Member for Strathmore-Brooks talk about his constituents – well, I was sitting, and now I'm standing, so I'm going to ask the question. I wondered how many cards and letters or e-mails you've got. I know you've probably consulted with your constituents, your farm constituents. You're going to consult with them on the 5th, I understand. I intend to be there myself.

You know, I don't know that it sinks in. I don't think that it's sinking in around here, what these people are telling us. We keep telling the people across the way there what people are saying here, and it just doesn't seem like they're listening. I'm hearing: "Time. We need time. We need consultation. We need someone to care. We need our government, that represents us, to slow things down, and to be compassionate and try to understand where we're coming from." I just wondered if you're hearing those things in your constituency, hon. member.

9:50

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you to the Member for Little Bow for the question. Little Bow is probably the closest, adjacent riding to mine, and Bassano is quite close to many of his constituents. He can correct me if I'm wrong, but I'm also of the understanding that the government did not hold any consultations in his constituency, in many of the constituencies, especially on this side. I invited the Member for Little Bow to attend my town hall meeting in Bassano because it's close to many of his constituents who are farmers, who are not being listened to.

[The Speaker in the chair]

You know, members on the other side have tried to fearmonger and say that the Wildrose has just whipped the farmers and ranchers into a frenzy. [interjections] They say that we whipped farmers and ranchers into a frenzy. You know what? The hundreds of calls and e-mails and Facebook messages that I've had come into my office whipped us into a frenzy to fight for their interests.

You know, this was an uphill battle. We did not think that this was going to be an easy fight. Pretty much every major province-wide media outlet endorsed the bill before they read it. They thought it was a slam dunk politically. We all knew that this was a bad bill and it wasn't doing the right thing, but we listened to our constituents, and they told us what they wanted us to do. They told us what they wanted us to do.

I don't have an exact number, Member for Little Bow, but it was hundreds of calls. My two constituency assistants, one from Strathmore and one from Brooks, are in town for training today, and I talked to them. We had a sit-down. I said: what's it been like? And they said: we don't have enough lines in the office to even take the messages that people are leaving. They don't even have enough lines to take the messages. Rural Alberta is standing up. They're mostly modest folks, who don't get too angry about a whole lot, but when you do something like this, you're going to hear from them, and we heard from them on Monday.

What are they saying? They say a few brief things: don't treat the family farm like a big corporate factory. They're saying: consult with us. They're saying one thing unanimously right now: kill Bill 6.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just curious to know if my hon. colleague might elaborate. One of the things that I'm hearing a lot from the constituents in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills is that their primary concern is actually around the lack of consultation on the regulations when it comes specifically to OH and S and the labour code. Many of my constituents have been quite sympathetic and willing to have this conversation around WCB and ensuring that appropriate insurances are in place. But the real concern isn't on that half of the bill; really, it's on the regulations. From all accounts it seems that the government is intent on saying: "Don't worry. Trust us. Over the next year we promise not to have any misinformation get out around the regulations, and the regulations are going to be okay for you."

The Speaker: Hon. member, your question was so brief that you used all the time.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to be able to stand in this House and speak to this proposed bill, which I consider a threat to the viability of small farms, family farms. I live down in the south part. You and I have had discussions before. You know where I live. I live in a little area called Feedlot Alley. I've been getting calls from all across my constituency on this Bill 6 issue.

Firstly, regarding feedlots, most if not all feedlot operations in the area already carry private health and safety, death, dismemberment, disability, and critical illness insurance for their workers, and my constituents report that these are very good insurance products, better than the coverage and support provided by the Workers' Compensation Board. Feedlot operators are watching these debates on this bill, getting ready to potentially have to drop their far superior insurance products due to being mandated by government to adopt Workers' Compensation Board insurance.

It costs hard-earned money to try to carry both a superior insurance product and a mandated insurance product, a mandated subpar product, I might add, that the Premier herself said was not a great creation. I think she said that the Workers' Compensation Board is the most miserly workers' compensation board in the country. That's from a few years ago, but she was standing in front of the building and making a speech and stated that this was some of the worst insurance possible. Why the Premier would believe that this is something that she should force on someone else, I'm not sure. If one is mandated, obviously that's the one that the employer would have to use and workers will have to live with.

I should say here that farmers and ranchers and feedlot operators alike would like to have a choice as to what kind of insurance they carry. I had an owner of several feedlots in my office here in Edmonton on the day of the rally, and he was explaining that the insurance he's carrying for his employees has much better coverage and is available at a better rate than Workers' Compensation Board insurance. The part that he liked is that if there were an unfortunate incident, the insurance simply kicked in for, he told me, 16 weeks or so. It was no muss, no fuss, no arguing with the insurance company, as there is, it's well documented, with WCB claims. It just worked as you would hope insurance would work.

So how about that, Mr. Speaker? The government is mandating workers to be worse off, insured less, and takes more of the business profits. I wonder what ever happened to the old adage: do no harm.

Mr. Speaker, speaking of insurance, it seems there must be a problem over there at WCB. Since being elected, I've lost count of how many individuals I've seen protesting in front of that building, at the corner of 107th Street and 99th Avenue. Then my constituency assistants get calls at the office from individuals who, unfortunately, have had an injury, are not healed from that injury, are still not able to go back to work, and Workers' Compensation Board calls and tells them that their benefits have been dropped. They're told: you're all done; get back to work. Yet these folks aren't able to work because of that injury. I think it's clear, the issues with WCB that claimants have had over the years. It's known very well as a one-sided insurance.

At that point it gets interesting again. Those workers that can't go back to work do their best to try to get on a different government program like AISH, for instance, and they get denied that because the Workers' Compensation Board says that they can go back to work. It's like a never-ending circle of problems; it never seems to end. It's just unbelievable. Look on the Internet. You'll have no trouble finding people who have had bad experiences with WCB.

I received a letter from a constituent about Bill 6 that was actually pretty short, but I want to share a couple of lines from that e-mail. It says: I understand that farm safety is a top priority on Alberta farms, but I strongly disagree with Bill 6. Farmers understand that safety is paramount on farms. I mean – good grief – all farmers and ranchers do. This legislation is ramming something down the throats of the very folks that it affects. That they have no input into this legislation is the ultimate problem here. Just to get back to that email, the last line says: I refuse to support Bill 6, that has no definitions, and I refuse to support the undemocratic process by which this bill is being implemented. That's a common thread with the hundreds of e-mails that I've received.

Another e-mail that I received puts it differently. These particular folks have a small family farm in southern Alberta, that has been in their family since the '40s. It's a quarter-section farm, and they're looking to do their best to hang onto it and see that it gets passed to another generation. I want you to hear the words of these folks. I quote: we are writing out of desperation and frustration as this government, which is supposed to be working for us, seems to be not listening to the very stakeholders that this Bill 6 is supposed to be for. End quote. You know, Mr. Speaker, I can clearly hear the frustration in that person's voice through the letter that I got from him.

Another letter, that I received about five days ago, speaks to several generations of a family living on a farm and working together. I'll just share a couple of sentences from it.

To understand my reasons in opposing Bill 6 I must fill you in on my personal . . . background. I grew up on a family farm in southern Alberta. We were a mixed cattle and grain operation that included my Grandfather, my two uncles, and my Dad. My cousins and siblings were all involved in the daily operations. Currently my brother is a 4th generation farmer as our cousins . . . have taken over their [family's] farms [as well] . . .

I do understand why the NDP government believes that this bill is important, ask any farmer and they will agree that farm safety is important. However the way the government has gone about in getting this bill passed . . .

Those are the words that are written there.

. . . and everything it includes it is flawed. By creating a bill that combines, WCB, OHS, Labour Code and Employment Standards you are mixing safety, insurance labour and employment issues. Some of these should be together [but] others should not.

The safety of everyone on the farm and ranch setting is important no matter what group you are talking about, be it farmers, family, workers or neighbours. As in all industries those who are on the ground working are the experts, you need to take this into consideration. Listen to the farmers and ranchers, their families, and workers.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 6 is, well, to put it politely, bull manure and heifer dust.

An Hon. Member: What did he say?

Mr. Schneider: Sorry. Bull manure and heifer dust, for those that didn't hear me. You should hear what my constituents are calling it. Because I'm a gentleman, Mr. Speaker, and because you would run my backside clearly out of here, I can't repeat the anger that my constituents are relaying to me through their e-mails and letters.

There's another rally on the steps of the Legislature tomorrow, right outside that door. Mr. Speaker, I know that it will be a peaceful event. Farmers are angry and confused and demanding answers, but they won't be unruly here tomorrow. But before this is all done, it would not surprise me in the least if a few truckloads of bull manure were spread on the lawn of the Legislature. Not that I'm promoting that.

In other provinces there are varying exemptions recognizing that farms are unique workplaces given that they are often a family's home. As of yet there are no distinctions made in Bill 6 as to what a family farm is.

I have another e-mail here. I'd just like to read one paragraph.

A family farm is an excellent place to live and to learn and to love. It is often two or three generations living and working together. Children have the experiences of watching and learning how to get along and work with others. They are taught many different skills; it is like an apprenticeship where you learn about working well with others, learning business skills, mechanics, animal husbandry, driving and operating equipment (at a proper age) and yes even about Safety. Accidents do happen and this is heartbreaking, but accidents happen in urban areas as well.

With the haste that this bill is being pushed through this Legislature, it is crystal clear that this government has no intention of consulting with farmers in Alberta, that all have an opinion on this bill. That's right, Mr. Speaker. The very folks that this bill is intended to serve have absolutely no input as to its outcome. Oh, sure, the government will stand up and say that they're having consultations with farmers in nine different centres or whatever the number is throughout the province. That all sounds great in a newspaper article or on a television news program, but the part that is never mentioned is that those consultations basically take place after the bill has been passed. Considering what's going on now, the consultation meetings that are being held across the province while we stand in this House and debate this bill are really ending up being anything but consultation meetings. That's not a consultation meeting; it's an information meeting and barely that. On behalf of farmers all across this province I say: thanks a lot.

One more. I have another e-mail here I'd like just to read a paragraph from.

Bill 6 has serious impacts on how farmers operate their business and how they work with their families on the farm. All I am requesting is that the current Alberta Government asks the agricultural industry for input before the Bill is passed to ensure proper and complete legislation and regulations are created. This will ensure producers have access to and understand the details of the legislation which will enable them to properly implement and support Bill 6. At this point the Alberta Government has handed us a box and said "here, this is Bill 6. You must follow it." When we open up the box and look inside it is empty. Without all of the details of Bill 6 an environment that breeds fear-mongering, distrust and animosity is created.

I feel that I need to explain one thing, Mr. Speaker, because I, honest to God, don't think that the folks on the other side have any kind of understanding of the life of a farmer. The operations include seeding, spraying, haying, harvesting, feeding cows, calving cows. These things all have seasonal work requirements . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, it's been drawn to my attention – and I think it applied to others – that if you have some documents like e-mails, letters, et cetera, you would table those documents during daily Routine. Are there other comments that you'd like to make?

Mr. Schneider: Regarding that?

The Speaker: Other than the letters that you're reading.

Mr. Schneider: I'm not reading from letters now. I read from a letter before, Mr. Speaker. I'll be tabling 400 letters tomorrow, and these will be included if that's all right.

All of those seasonal working operations are not seen in other workplaces. Now, Mr. Speaker, you've heard the saying: making hay while the sun shines. Well, it's true. Farmers work long hours. All of those jobs that I just mentioned require a lot of hours at the correct time of year in the life cycle of grain production or animal husbandry or the like, and the hours that a farmer absolutely has to work in order to get those jobs done cannot be legislated. A farmer works until the job is done. Sixteen-hour days are normal fare in those busy times, and farmers do it because they love it, and those that work for farmers are generally there because they love it and the lifestyle that it provides.

I'm sure the government can go around and say that farm groups were surveyed and consulted for years, and studies have been done and reports have been written, but the push to get this legislation in place is reminiscent of the behaviour of a previous government. They would ram legislation through, find a mistake, and amend the legislation at the next session ad nauseam.

In an ideal world I would suggest that important legislation like this would be sent to a legislative policy committee for study. Even though age-old consultation may have been done, going to committee is the final discussion, the final meeting, the final conference to make sure we get things right. On an important piece of legislation like this, that affects so many family farms, so many family ranches, so many Albertans, family farms and ranches that are the backbone of this province, consultation with those people and expert opinion are paramount.

Even the Premier, in the debate last session on Bill 2, the Alberta Accountability Act, stated:

So what we need to do instead is refer this matter to an all-party committee so that we can look more expansively at those parts of legislation that would at least get us to the base camp of the mountain that needs to be climbed by this government in its effort to ascend to minimal levels of trust, integrity, and accountability to Albertans.

Well said. I commend her on saying it. It just doesn't seem like she remembers, several months later, saying it here.

I firmly believe this bill needs to be sent to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, where expert witnesses can be called, comparisons to neighbouring jurisdictions done, and real, living, breathing farmers can come before the committee to report on the impact that this legislation will ultimately have on their lives. But it's not enough to have committee meetings and to have people come in. No, Mr. Speaker. We need to go out to rural Alberta and have committee meetings there and be accessible to the people that this legislation will impact.

I can see members in the back row of the majority benches shuddering over there – shuddering – at the thought of interacting with real people and getting a dose of reality from those people. The hallowed walls of the academy and the institution they dabble in . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Opposition House Leader, do you have a brief question?

Mr. Cooper: A very brief question, Mr. Speaker. One brief question: would you like to continue with some of your thoughts?

10:10

Mr. Schneider: Oh, my goodness, would I ever.

Mr. Speaker, what if I have children on my farm? You know, my farm is their home, too. The ridiculousness of this proposed legislation is that when OH and S applies, I would have to submit paperwork to some bureaucrat in Edmonton outlining that I'm going to have my 12-year-old child go milk the cows or feed a couple of pigs, collect some eggs, maybe run out on the quad and fix some fence so that the cows don't get out. Now, that bureaucrat is probably going to look at a list of chores, and because it's not on his list . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, the answer to the question that was asked of you: would it be yes or no? If that was the question to be asked, it would be a one-word answer, yes or no.

Mr. Schneider: He asked if I would like to continue with my thoughts, Mr. Speaker. That's what I'm doing.

The Speaker: So the answer to the question would be yes or no?

Mr. Schneider: I said that, absolutely, I'd love to.

The Speaker: Okay. Now, do you have another question, hon. Opposition House Leader?

Mr. Orr: I have a question.

The Speaker: I have one right here. Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Orr: I'd like the member to just clarify for me. I think I heard in your earlier statements what I interpret as a conflict of interest for the government. If the government is to mandate monopolistic, WCB, poor-quality insurance and the government is under obligation to try and save some money, I think that puts them in a considerable conflict of interest if they're also supposed to be supporting and caring for workers. It means, then, that they, in fact, have to reduce their costs and cut benefits for injured workers. Whose side are they on here? Are they on the side of saving money, or are they on the side of caring for the workers? You know, in law the same lawyer cannot represent opposing parties normally. Why is this so in this situation, and does this, in your opinion, contribute to the dysfunctional aspects of WCB? Would private insurance actually be a better choice?

The Speaker: The Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: You're welcome.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you very much, sir. As I mentioned, an owner of three or four feedlots was in my office the other day, and I have to believe that what he was saying was true. He said: "We don't use WCB. We use private insurance because WCB is so onerous and troublesome." All the data would state that certainly there are lots of success stories with WCB, but it does not take four minutes on the Internet to dig up 30 where people are having trouble. The bulletproof glass on the building would let me assume that there may have been issues at one time and that there may be issues in the future, so I would have to say to the hon. member that private insurance has got to be a lot more beneficial, probably cheaper, with a wider range of protection and coverage for employees.

Can I continue with a different thought? There's one organization in this country called 4-H. The 4-H program has a mission statement that states, “Learn to Do by Doing.” Learning through experience is a key objective of 4-H. At all levels of 4-H members are encouraged to learn through active participation. 4-H is young people and adults learning project and life skills, co-operating and having fun together, sharing leadership, and learning to do by doing. 4-H has been around in Alberta communities since 1917. This is an honourable organization that teaches children life skills by allowing them to do.

We don’t want the government telling parents how to raise their children on family farms, farms that have operated safely and without government interference for generations. It’s education in the home and schools and in the media that is the best way to encourage worker safety. Education, not legislation. No amount of bureaucracy and red tape can make a workplace one hundred per cent safe. There’s always going to be something getting by all the due diligence implemented.

You know, Mr. Speaker, if anything or everything that I’ve just talked about will not appear in the legislation and the legislation will not be more in line with what farmers and ranchers in Alberta would expect from a compassionate government, then there’s only one entity, only one source, if you will, that needs to take the blame for that, and that is the government, that is pressing this bill down the throats of farmers and ranchers in this province. This government has had a great opportunity to engage the people that this bill affects. It has had a great opportunity to prove to the farmers and ranchers . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I prefer today, actually, to speak mostly to my constituents because I have the very real sense that the members across the floor aren’t really listening anyway. They say that they’re consulting, but they aren’t actually listening to anything that’s said, and I do know who elected me. So to my friends in the riding: that’s who I’m speaking to, Mr. Speaker.

As they already know, agriculture is our second-largest export industry in this province.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you direct your comments through the Speaker.

Mr. Orr: Yes, sir. I did think I said “Mr. Speaker” several times, but I’ll try and focus that.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Orr: According to the 2014-15 Agricultural and Rural Development annual report there are actually 62,000 farm operators in Alberta, and then they go on and point out that of these many operators 90 per cent of them sell a gross net of less than $500,000 a year, which means that if they manage to keep even 10 per cent of that, they’re making a very modest income in many ways. So 90 per cent of them truly are family farms and farm families. The numbers actually tell a story that I think probably most of the farm people in our communities actually know already, and that is that the vast majority of these ranches and farms are small, owner-operated businesses.

Now, there’s something that needs to be said there. What that means is, Mr. Speaker, that these are free-enterprise endeavours. They are free enterprise to the core, to the heart, and to the soul. If I may, I would like to take a minute and explain to my riding people why it is that the members across the floor, although they say that they hear, aren’t actually listening. I’d like to explain to my members what is at the heart and soul of an NDP mindset. I know that our owner-operated farm businesses are free enterprise at heart, but if one is reminded and goes back and takes a few moments for a little bit of a history lesson, the beginning and the birthplace of the NDP government is in a document called the Regina Manifesto.

If I may, I would like to quote a couple of lines from that manifesto because it is the guiding document and the heart and soul of the NDP Party. The manifesto states, “We aim to replace the present capitalist system.” Now, the word “capitalist” in modern language, up-to-date language, is free enterprise, so their intent is to replace the free-enterprise farm system. Part of the reason they cannot and they will not listen to you, no matter how many protests you make, is because their intent is to replace the very system by which you exist. I’d like to quote a little bit farther from the same document. Their intent is one “in which economic planning will supersede . . . private enterprise.” Now, if farmers are not private-enterprise individuals, I don’t know anybody that is, but their intent is to supersede you entirely. You could translate that to say: destroy you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, the “you”: is that the Speaker? Direct it through the Speaker. When you use the phrase . . .

Mr. Orr: I’ll speak to you. You don’t want me to speak to my residents, to my riding?

The Speaker: I want you to speak through the Speaker if you will, sir.

Mr. Orr: I’ll speak to you. They can hear me.

Mr. Bilous: Point of order.

The Speaker: Excuse me.

You have a point of order? Proceed.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Bilous: I am citing from 23(j). The member is clearly trying to use language of a nature to create disorder. I’d also like to clarify, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member is referring to a document that is not adopted or created by the Alberta NDP, so inferring that what he is reading is the policies of this party is incorrect and needs to be corrected for the record.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, I’m rising to speak in defence of my colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka. He is reading from a document, one of the founding documents of the NDP. The NDP is a federated party that has no distinction from the federal or provincial levels. It is a single party registered at different levels of government, but it is structurally a federated party. The CCF is a founding, constituent part of the New Democratic Party of Canada and the New Democratic Party of Alberta.

He is quoting from its founding documents and founding principles. It is highly pertinent to this debate. It is a factual document. If the NDP members wish to disassociate themselves from Tommy Douglas and the CCF and their own history, which they proudly proclaim regularly, that is a different issue, but this is highly pertinent. This is not intended to create disorder. If the members across have any issues with members on this side quoting their founding documents, then I recommend they disassociate themselves from their own founding documents.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I do not believe that this is a point of order. However, I would ask, firstly, that the members direct their comments – you must use the first-person you; it’s the Speaker that you're speaking to. And I would ask, as this hour draws on, that you cease and desist from using the kind of language that's going upset the House.

Please, hon. member, let's get back to Bill 6, please.

Debate Continued

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, I truly do not believe that this is irrelevant to Bill 6. The reason that Bill 6 matters to farmers is because they are free enterprise in their heart and soul, and the reason that the members opposite cannot and will not listen to them is because they are socialist in heart and soul. We're talking about a political, social difference here. It's history. It's the reality. I'm not trying to be inflammatory. It's just a simple reality of history. Their name, NDP currently, was previously CCF, and that's their history. I'm just drawing a point to it. I'll move on from that. Obviously, I've hit the heart and soul of the issue because it's gotten a tremendous response.

Alberta farms are not just workplaces. They are free-enterprise places, and they are also homes and communities. For the families that work the land, it isn't just a job; it's a way of life, as we've already heard. I don't feel like I should need to repeat these kinds of things over and over and over, Mr. Speaker.

Farmers do rely on their community, their neighbours, their friends, their extended family to get the job done. Not that this government has expressed any interest in it to date, but I highly suggest that they go and ask some of these people, sit down at their farms and ranches, and learn this from them or go ask how it is that, by community, they harvest each other's fields. Running a farm often means helping your family or your neighbour run their farm, too. Everybody pitches in, and they get the work done in a single season with long hours. Now, that seems to require that we have labour laws to prevent them from working too many hours in the day or hiring people to do that.

I'd like to pull an example though, of the vitality and the excitement of long hours from a completely different field. My oldest son works in hi-tech venture cap. down in Silicon Valley, and he tells me that one of the most energizing, exciting, moving parts of being involved in that is the fact that they are a team, together working and creating something new. They are creating things that nobody's ever worked on before. They work, literally, sometimes 24 hours a day. They work day and night. They don't even pay attention to hours. The whole point of it is that it's so exciting, there's so much camaraderie, day and night. It's a triumph. It's a celebration. It's an incredible social thing that they do together, and he says: I wouldn't trade it for anything or any amount of money.

Farmers experience the same thing. This legislation wants to take that away from them. It's their culture. It's their life, and they will not allow it to be taken away from them. Yes, there's a big amount of work that is needed to run a successful farm. It can be unfathomable to those who are used to working a 9-to-12 and having all kinds of rules and regulations that they shouldn't have to do anything more. But, Mr. Speaker, the long hours, which are often harsh working environments, that do pose serious health and safety risks to farmers, are something that they understand and that they embrace. [interjections] Safety is always top of mind for them, and I would like to point out that although they understand – yeah. See? They're not listening, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'll be sad with you. Please keep going.

Mr. Orr: Okay. Fair enough.

The reality is that they know this risk, and they embrace it completely.

Now, I'd like to draw another illustration from our current society. We have today a social phenomena, that's often spoken of in regard to family, called helicopter parents, who seek to bubble wrap their kids and protect them and keep them from anything that might be any risk at all. I'd like to suggest that this legislation wants to bubble wrap our farmers and wants to be a helicopter government to our citizens. We have a generation of young people who have grown up in a bubble-wrapped world and who actually crave some adventure. My second son is actually one of these young men who hates the sterile, safe, controlled environment of modern society. He's a rock climber, and today we have all kinds of young people who take all kinds of risks, with whitewater kayaking and snowboarding off the zone where they should be and taking endless kinds of . . . [An electronic device sounded]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please. Does somebody have a phone on in here?

An Hon. Member: The member from Lacombe has his phone on his desk.

The Speaker: Okay. So there is not or there is?

An Hon. Member: It's vibrating, possibly.

The Speaker: Carry on.

Mr. Orr: The reality is that in a bubble-wrapped society we have young people in droves who crave some risk and some danger, and why? My youngest son articulates it with so much more passion than I do: because I finally feel alive.

Psychologists have actually pointed it out in a large number of articles, actually. One from 2011, Evolutionary Psychology, published an article on risky play. We're talking about farm safety and risk here. It's entirely relevant, risky play. It's quite widely spread. They actually argue that without some risk in life children have an increase in eroticism and psychopathology – the doctors should appreciate this – in a society if children are hindered from partaking in risky play. Over the past 60 years we have had a decline in risky play, a continuous, gradual, ultimate, dramatic increase also in all sorts of childhood mental and emotional disorder. Risky play helps develop the ability to regulate fear and anger and creates healthy beings.

A University of British Columbia study recently published by the child . . . [interjections] This is about farm . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm having some difficulty in trying to make the assertion. Please be seated. Please be seated. Please be seated. Hon. member, please be seated. I'm speaking. Please be seated. Thank you.

Please, can you make more clear how your story ties to Bill 6? It's been a very scenic route. Could we get to the substance, please?

Mr. Orr: This bill is about farm safety, the fact that farm children are at risk. If we put them in bubble-wrapped society, we are in fact putting them at risk because they grow up with less ability to cope.

The University of British Columbia study says that where children take risks, they have increased social interactions, increased creativity, increased resilience, and are more healthy adults. Farm families know this. They embrace the risk, and quite frankly they do not want their children put in a bubble-wrapped society. Unfortunately, I understand that accidents will happen. The psychologists and the authors from around the world who talk about this acknowledge that, yes, there is some risk, but we can't live in a nonrisk world. It just isn't out there. It's a fantasy. Too often it does cause some harm.

But let's talk about the harm to farm workers. Research has showed that in Alberta the number of farm accidents that happen to hired workers versus family owners is 9 per cent hired, 91 per cent family owners. That's the reason why farmers are opposed to this, because 91 per cent of them are actually family owners.

Yes, farm safety is extremely important. It has to continue to be at the top of the priority list. Immigrants should be protected, no question about that. But farmers do not want their lives or their culture destroyed, and adding red tape doesn't improve safety, but increasing awareness and sharing best practices does. The agricultural community has a lot of knowledge that is immeasurably important in this, and beginning from an early age, farm kids are taught about how to deal properly with livestock and other farming methods and all kinds of things that actually make them the best children in this province.

Speaking about children growing up, which is what this bill is all about, their safety, with regard to 4-H, will this government be including these clubs under this policy? Will children at farm clubs be subject to OHS and WCB?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Orr: Yeah. They say no, but I would like to read to you from the WCB website. If you are operating a for-profit farming operation, which almost all of them are, it is defined on the website as one which sells goods commercially to individuals or other organizations: you must cover any unpaid workers including family members and children performing work on your farm. WCB website. Don't tell me it isn't there.

When a child is learning about how to look after his 4-H cow, is that labour? What I just read off the WCB website seems to say that. I come up again. How is the bureaucrat that goes on the farm to administer these rules going to deal with the 12-year-old who has used his 4-H profits? He bought six cows just this fall. He actually only bought five because he didn't have that much money, so his grandmother bought the other one with him, so now he learns how to be in a business partnership. How is WCB going to administer that when they come on the family farm, which is a for-profit farm, and the cows are mixed up with his father's? Are six cows not WCB liable, and the rest are? Are they going to have to have a separate barn? Are some of the cows subject to OHS and labour legislation? What about . . . [interjections] Don't tell me it isn't there. It's written on your WCB website.

What about the three little girls, seven, nine, and 10 years old, in my riding who have 70 chickens and sell the eggs and make a pretty good profit from them?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under 29(2)(a), are there any questions to the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka? The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. I might just add a few comments, if I might, as 29(2)(a) gives some latitude around comments or questions, and the hon. member might have an opportunity to respond should time allow. I hope that I'll be able to be concise enough so that he would be able to respond.

I heard the hon. member talking about the importance of the family farm, and we had the opportunity to receive a little bit of a history lesson around the family farm. Certainly, we've seen an attack on that very way of life, and we've seen some real vagueness on behalf of the government when it comes to regulations and exactly what those regulations will look like. The government has made a commitment to consult on these regulations, and there's a significant concern amongst family farmers. Many of those family farms employ multiple people, but they still remain a family farm, with friends and neighbours helping.

The challenge that I've been hearing – and my question to my hon. colleague will be around the consultation on these regulations. We have the regulations that will come into effect in a year and consultation around the OH and S regulations as well as the labour standards. I've been hearing a lot that this is real concern for farmers, that they're not being consulted prior to . . .

The Speaker: The question, hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Yes. I'm moving in that direction.

The Speaker: Yes. Faster, please.

Mr. Cooper: I still think that these comments have been brief; 29(2)(a) gives about five minutes of brevity.

The Speaker: Hon. member, ask the question, please.

Mr. Cooper: The question, I guess, is around this consultation. If they haven't been consulted prior to the coming-into-force date or until the law passes, which is creating the fear and the concern . . .

The Speaker: You've said that already. Ask the question.

Mr. Cooper: Is the hon. member hearing similar concerns from Lacombe-Ponoka around this consultation issue?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Could we have the answer to the question?

Mr. Orr: Absolutely. The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that the people do not trust that they are being heard. They absolutely do not trust a government, if I may refer to the history again, that comes out of the roots of a socialist background, and . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, there was a question about the people of Lacombe that the hon. member asked. Could you answer the question?

Mr. Orr: The people do not trust the consultation. They do not trust the government. In this particular case, NDP governments in other provinces have continually proven that – those that are for free enterprise are not prepared to trust this government to write willy-nilly rules after the fact. They are not prepared to give a blank cheque and then trust that when they send out legions of bureaucratic police to enforce it all, it's all going work out in the wash in the end. They don't trust this government and its history and what it stands for in its heart and soul. That is the answer.

There are all kinds of complicated issues for which there are no answers, and they're not prepared to trust a blank cheque. They want to be consulted. They want to know what the answers are going to be before. For instance, right out here on the Legislature grounds the other day I was approached by a farmer who said to me, "Okay. I own a U-pick berry farm." He says: "How are they going to value that? Pickers are paid in berries. They're going to charge me WCB on that? Can I pay my WCB in berries?" That's what he asked me. There are so many issues about this whole thing that are absolutely not clear. It's impossible.

Another farmer right out here the other day asked me about rodeos. In Ponoka we have the second-largest rodeo in the province. Is this going to kill rodeos? At the moment WCB . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise and talk about this bill. You know what? I'd like to begin by discussing duty. You know, the first thing we have to do is talk about duty. We have a duty to consult, a duty to go out to our riding, to our constituents and consult. "Duty" truly is a term that conveys a sense of moral commitment. I have to repeat that – moral commitment – because I'm not hearing enough of that out of enough people. Let's put it that way.

You know, it's also an obligation to someone or something. This moral commitment should result in an action. It is not a matter of a passive feeling or of mere recognition. All too often I've heard this government saying that they've heard, but are they hearing? They're listening, but they're not hearing. I'm not getting that. This moral commitment: you've got to embrace this, and you've got to internalize what you're hearing. When someone recognizes a duty that the person theoretically commits to himself for fulfillment without considering their own self-interest, that's part of this duty.

An Hon. Member: How does this relate to the bill?

Mr. Taylor: Okay. Let's go to consultation. How about consultation? This is part of the duty, you know. Consultation, on the other hand, is a conference at which advice is given or views are exchanged. You consult first, and then you can look to see if it's a good bill or not. If you're making proper consultation, you'll have gone out to the people in your riding. That's what I would like to be able to do, to go out to our riding and ask the people in my constituency, and I would hope that you would want to do more of that consulting. And if we kill Bill 6, you'll have an ability to go out there and consult with your constituents. You can take this time off and use that time . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, through the Speaker, please.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sorry. I should be making sure that I'm addressing you. My apologies. I'll do that. Sorry.

Mr. Speaker, anyone conducting an undertaking has a duty to consult so far as it's reasonably practical with workers who carry out work for the business or undertaking who are likely to be directly affected. If you look out there, with the farmers, the ranchers, these people are actually directly affected, very much so. Farmers and ranchers are by this definition very directly affected. They're the ones that work on the land, work with each other, are tightly knit together with their families and communities.

But for some reason they're being left out. They're being left out of the most important process and are in no way having real consultation. That's what I'm hearing. I'm getting phone calls. My office in my constituency is getting phone calls. I'm getting phone call calls. I'm getting e-mails, letters. On the last day that I talked to my assistant back in Battle River-Wainwright, he told me that he had 200 letters that came in with regard to this.

Where does this duty lie, Mr. Speaker, with the farmers and ranchers? Why does this government not want to have this first go to committee – I think it's a reasonable question – and have this pass with consultation, meetings with our farmers beforehand? You know, it would sure make our lives a whole lot easier, I think, in this whole process if we went to committee first. It would make your lives a whole lot easier.

The nature of consultation means that information, Mr. Speaker, and matters must be shared with farmers, and they must be given a reasonable opportunity to express their views and to raise health or safety issues and to be able to contribute to the decision-making process related to this matter. They need to be able to contribute to the decision-making process. That's an absolutely important part of this consultation. This must be done in an open forum, I believe, before a decision has been reached. Otherwise, you are basically forcing an act upon them. Farmers and industry stakeholders have been in this profession for many years and have a lot to offer when it comes to considering the whole range of operations in the province in ways that, I believe, this government has not thought through.

A small family farm, Mr. Speaker, does not operate the same as a large-scale operation. I believe that the government is leaving out the most important part. They are removing the part for the right of the people to have a say. Without taking time to get this right the first time, I think that this government will learn that you have to come back and redo this and redo it if you don't take the time to properly consult and send this to committee. It needs to go to committee, or it needs to be killed. One of the two things needs to happen. Kill Bill 6. I heard "kill Bill 6," chant after chant after chant, and I'm sure that anybody in the NDP that went outside heard "kill Bill 6" as well, shouted from the steps of the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, forcing compliance before discussion will only serve to create a situation where farmers feel hostility towards the government. I don't think the government wants to have those ill feelings, you know, thrown at them, but this is what's going to happen. Well, this is what has happened. I shouldn't say, "going to happen." It has happened. What does the government have to hide that they're trying so hard to pass legislation without proper consultation?

Mr. Speaker, history has proven that a safe workplace is achieved when everyone involved in the work communicates with each other beforehand. So let's consult and get it right. Farmers are the first to understand safety on their farms. They don't want to have anybody injured. They don't want themselves injured, they don't want their children injured, and they don't want their workhands injured. They don't want anyone injured, and I believe that's what both parties agree on, that we want safety. We want safety in this workplace. Safety is critical to farmers and their families and their friends, to their lives. It's absolutely important to them. You know, nobody cares more about family farm safety than the moms and dads that work on the farms. They want to improve the lives of their families.

You know, by drawing on the knowledge and experience of the workers that are out there, more informed decisions can be made about how work should be carried out. If you're going out and you're relying on the information and the knowledge that they've garnered over decades, you're going to learn something from farmers, and this legislation could be that much better if we took the time to consult and just asked the farmers about what they think and what should be done. You know, Mr. Speaker, it's about education, not legislation.

Mr. Cyr: Educate, not legislate.

Mr. Taylor: Yeah. That's right. That's what I meant to say.

Education is absolutely the most important thing that we can do. It doesn't matter what happens with legislation if they don't understand what the process is, Mr. Speaker. If the process is to be safe, they have to understand that. Farmers understand that farming and ranching is diverse and dynamic and can be a high-risk environment. They absolutely understand that, but they would like this government to also take into consideration their thoughts on safety instead of just ramming through this agenda.

This Bill 6, as was pointed out earlier, has only five pages. It seems like not very much information is being sent out to the farmers, and it seems like there must be a hidden agenda behind this. Farmers have said that at these town halls. They go to town halls, and I'll be having a town hall meeting in Kinsella this Sunday at 2 o'clock at the Kinsella centre to discuss with farmers. This is part of the consultation. At the town halls they've been saying to slow down, and that's what I've heard when I've talked to farmers over the phone and heard about the other town hall meetings that were discussed already.

These farmers love to do what they're doing. Why don't you want to listen to them? Mr. Speaker, I heard this government say that they're working in partnership and listening for feedback, but it seems that they're not. All these people are asking you to kill the bill. That's what I've heard. Kill Bill 6 and reconsider consulting with them first and come up with better safety practices. Government should be trying to foster positive relationships because understanding the views of others leads to greater cooperation and trust. Farmers are trying to communicate. They're trying to communicate with this government, but it seems that this government is just not listening.

Mr. Yao: Say what?

Mr. Taylor: This government is just not listening.

Why does this government repeatedly say that they are consulting with farmers when we know that this is not an absolute truth or a fact? The government is telling the farmers that they're consulting on something to change their lives, but you're not in consultation with them and taking into consideration their issues. At best this NDP government has put on information sessions, which, up to just a couple of days ago, the members have not attended. They have let the folks from WCB and OH and S run these information sessions. How is this fair, how is this consulting, and how is this transparent for these farmers?

I have not heard, Mr. Speaker, that there have been any consultations coming from these meetings. These farmers and ranchers are just being told what information the government wants them to hear. The farmers have been told: this is what's going to happen on January 1, 2016. That's what they're being told. That's what it says at the end of the bill, that in 2016 this is going to be passed. That's what they're concerned with, that they don't have a chance to have that consultation. They don't want you to go ahead and implement this bill on January 1 the way it's worded. That's what I'm hearing time and time again.

Mr. Speaker, they would like this government to stop this process, start consultations, and come to a reasonable agreement, which includes cultivating a safe, fair, healthy workplace for Alberta farmers and ranchers. This government is confusing consulting with informing. Finalizing and submitting plans: that is not consultation. This government is choosing to ignore farmers.

Mr. Speaker, they need to apologize for their mistakes and commit to working with these farmers. These farmers have spoken. Frankly, they're angry that you're not consulting with them. I should say "the government." I shouldn't say "you," Mr. Speaker. Sorry about that. For these farmers, opposing Bill 6 is not opposing farm safety. They are disagreeing with the ramming through of this legislation without truly understanding the family farm.

If this government had consulted with special-interest groups, which they have, who have an interest in one thing, to make a profit off these farmers – it seems like that's what's happening. I'm sure these consultations are one-sided. This government needs to hear all sides.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Hanson: Yes, sir, 29(2)(a). Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A question for the member. As elected officials it's our duty and responsibility to represent the concerns of our constituents and to listen to their concerns and opinions and bring them forth to this Legislature. Our job is to provide a voice in government for the people we represent.

Now, my constituency office for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills has been fielding calls from outside of my area. Specifically, residents from Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville and Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater have been calling my office because they don't feel that they're being represented fairly, that their voice is being heard. Their members in the Legislature are not standing up and speaking for them. They don't feel that they can get through to the office. They're not getting the answers that they want.

I was just wondering if you're experiencing the same thing from surrounding areas in your constituency office. How many calls are you getting? How many letters are you getting? [interjection] Sorry, Mr. Speaker. How many letters are you getting? How many calls are you getting, if you are, from outside your constituency? Could you just expand on that a little bit?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the letters and the communications that I've been getting – the phone calls, the letters, and the e-mails – frankly, it's been literally hundreds of e-mails that we're getting, and the phone goes nonstop. We've had to put an extra person on staff while this Bill 6 has been going through just to be able to field all the calls and to be able to help communicate with the different ranchers and farmers out there.

There's a great concern for the people that are out there. They're looking and they're questioning; they're wondering what's going on. They don't trust what's happening, Mr. Speaker, what's going on. They don't trust the process. The process has not been communicated to them well. The process is broken. It's broken down and it's confusing and it's causing them to be angry. It's causing them to want to come over here. It's great to see the people that are coming out to the Legislature grounds because it's showing that they're very concerned. It's good to see that they have a unified voice saying: stop this bill; kill this bill.

At the very least, take it to committee. Let's stop and communicate this more fully. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I've got a question for the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright. In his address he talked about us having a hidden agenda behind, you know, our proposed changes to Bill 6. I'd just like to know the member's opinion on whether he thinks that's a constructive and helpful way to characterize what we're doing and to present that message to the constituents in his riding and, indeed, our ridings as well. I mean, the hon. opposition has been saying over and over again that we need to have respectful, careful, reasoned consultation. I just wonder what his opinion is on inflaming passions and, I guess with his colleagues as well, making assertions which they know are not true because of the press releases that our minister of jobs and our Premier have put out. I'm just wondering: why is he implying that we have a hidden agenda, and how does he think that's helpful to us getting through this debate?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. You know, really, this is about consultation. When you ask that, it's about the consultation. Where's the consultation been on this? Being able to go out to the different ridings – I don't know if any of these members have gone out and consulted. The Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose has, I believe, 1,955 farmers in his riding, and I would ask: has he gone out and consulted with those farmers? Has he held a town hall meeting? That's where this becomes very questionable. The document itself, like it was mentioned before, has only these five pages. Without proper consultation and without . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great sadness that I rise today to speak on behalf of the constituents of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre against Bill 6, the so-called Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act. Now, I say "with sadness" because I'm so very disappointed, I don't have to tell you, with this current NDP government, which has chosen to force through this legislation without proper consultation. Now, I never in my wildest dreams thought that a day would come in Alberta when a government would so blindly ignore our critical farm and ranch communities and force through wide-sweeping legislation without even taking the time to talk with the farmers and ranchers that it affects. This current government in particular, in my view, should be ashamed because it was elected in part due to public anger over the previous government's frequent use of similar practices.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these duck-and-cover tactics in support of blind ideological belief tend to breed turmoil, and I think we're seeing it now across the province. I must say that I'm heartbroken to report that in the case of both my communities back home in my riding as well as communities across the province, this is the case. Travelling back home this past weekend to my constituency, I was shocked to hear from my own children that kids in elementary classrooms are worried about what this government's policies mean for them, mean for their families, mean for their parents' livelihoods, and mean for their homes. My kids are getting phone calls and e-mails from their friends begging them to ask their dad to make the government listen. While it's great to see youth engaged with the political process, I wish it was under much better circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, this is just one indication of the level of frustration and fear among our farm and ranch families. In every community I stopped in while back home this weekend, I heard the same thing. People are mad. They're shocked and extremely concerned about this government's move to force this legislation through this House in less than two weeks and into law within a month. It's not just farmers and ranchers who are worried. It's entire communities, from coffee row to church parking lots. The people of our communities know just how important farmers and ranchers are. We're proud of them, and we stand with them.

Our farmers and ranchers are rightfully outraged that no one has talked to them about this bill. They are furious at these so-called town hall meetings where the government claims consultation is supposed to be taking place, but it has not happened in any meaningful way. Instead, these meetings have featured bureaucrats telling farmers and ranchers how it's going to be. Now, Mr. Speaker, does that sound like consultation? Displays were set up to provide information on the new law and rules yet with no opportunity for stakeholders to speak or ask questions. Again, does that sound like consultation? Farmers and ranchers are demanding better. True consultation demands better than handing out brochures, patting people on the head, and pledging to help them set up WCB accounts.

My constituents back home and the hundreds of Albertans who are contacting my offices from across the province are infuriated that this government has asked this Assembly to put through a piece of legislation that is essentially a blank cheque. Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what this bill accomplishes when it opposes OH and S and the entire agricultural sector without providing any OH and S agricultural standards. What will these codes entail? Nobody knows. Essentially, this government is saying: hey, just trust us; we'll fix the things you're worried about after we pass the law. This is a ridiculous miscarriage of the legislative process and an affront to the oaths we have taken as servants elected to represent the public interest. There simply can be no major advancement in farm safety or on any other major policy initiative the government demands when they're asking for blind trust and no consultation for the people it affects.

The hard truth is that at the time of the last general election the vast majority of people in my riding did not trust this government. That's the truth, Mr. Speaker. This certainly has not changed in the past six months, which have seen this government systematically attack every employer, large and small, and every major economic sector. Yet blind trust with this bill is what this government is demanding.

Since this bill was announced, the government has systematically denied that any and all concerns raised by the public are valid. Rather than engage, discuss, or consult, the government chose to immediately leap into fear-and-smear mode. We have witnessed the Premier of Alberta stand up in this Assembly in front of all of us and accuse farmers and ranchers of forcing people to do unsafe work. She said that she was trying to rectify this great wrong that has been taking place in Alberta. Does she really think, Mr. Speaker, that farmers and ranchers have been systematically forcing our friends and neighbours to do unsafe work, tasks that these folks are pleading not to do? Does she really think so low of farmers and ranchers?

Whether she truly believes this or not or is just cranking up her ridiculous rhetoric, she really needs to get out of her office and meet the farmers and ranchers of this great province because, Mr. Speaker, they are some of the finest people this province and country have to offer. Let's be clear. The Premier's rhetoric has become unnecessarily provocative. To gain support for her government's actions, she has cast farmers and ranchers in a poor light, turning Albertans against Albertans. I'm willing to concede that that is perhaps not her intention, but this government needs to understand the consequences of implying that farmers and ranchers are improperly or selfishly motivated. Farmers and ranchers are proud of their operations and remain committed to the safety and well-being of all who work and live on their land. These farms are also their homes, and no one desires any less than the best for his or her family.

This Premier and this government certainly should apologize to farmers and ranchers for the unfortunate rhetoric being produced as well as trying to force this bill through the Legislature without proper consultation. Now, Mr. Speaker, through you I challenge the Premier to stand up right now and admit that she got it wrong, admit that this process is hopelessly flawed, and at the very least send this bill to committee for proper consultation. She should stand up and make it clear that she is going to ensure that family farms are protected like they are in other provinces. She should stand up and make it clear that she'll make sure that kids' agricultural involvement will be protected. Perhaps most importantly, she should make clear that all the OH and S and employment standards will be fully transparent and completed in full before this bill proceeds so farmers, ranchers, 4-H clubs, rural communities, and all Albertans know exactly what this legislation will require.

I can tell you this, Mr. Speaker. Demanding blind trust without consultation is a recipe for disaster. In fact, as soon as I saw this bill from this government, I knew trouble was brewing. I knew folks at home would be upset, that hundreds of thousands of Albertans would be livid. The sad part is that this government is so out of touch with some parts of this province that they simply did not know. They really didn't see it coming. They only saw things from their own point of view, and they had no idea how entire communities could be so upset, so hurt, and so angry. I believe the word for that is arrogance. They didn't realize that this would anger even more people than the former government's horrific property rights bills a few years back. In less than a week I received more than a thousand phone calls on this issue and more letters and e-mails than I can count, and they're still coming in even as we sit here.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, is simply unacceptable. This government would be wise to step back from this course of action and commit to working with the communities affected to get this right. The bottom line is that the government's campaign of misinformation against ranchers and farmers is not making anyone safer. The folks who can actually take concrete action to improve safety are farmers and ranchers, and they're willing to help, but they cannot get anywhere with those who refuse to take into account what real life is like on a farm or ranch. In short, they want this government to work with them. Why won't the government work with them? It is an affront to them when they see this government take steps to ram this legislation through the process.

They aren't stupid, Mr. Speaker. They know that the provincial and federal governments regularly send bills to committee to allow expert testimony and consultation. They have seen this government send matters to committee to ensure that legislation is well thought out and that any and all ramifications have been addressed. They know that this NDP government put together a special committee on ethics and accountability and has sent relatively simple private member's bills to committee for review. Farmers and ranchers know all of this, and they're asking why Bill 6 is different, and I have nothing to tell them.

The fact is that Bill 6 is the most wide-ranging and important piece of legislation ever written with respect to agriculture in this province. Depending on how the OH and S and employment standards are written, this bill could end the concept of family farming as we know it, yet this government can't see fit to send this bill to committee and ensure that farmers have an opportunity to consult. For shame. Mr. Speaker, through you, shame on this Premier, who promised a better approach to the legislative process, and shame on these rural MLAs in this NDP caucus, who are not stopping this behaviour by this government for their constituents.

Now, I know that they're getting the same calls and the same e-mails that I am about this bill. I know that the bulk of their constituents are saying: hey, wait a minute. I'm sure of this because the same folks are calling me for help. Their constituents are calling me for help. They're calling my colleagues for help. Now, think about that, Mr. Speaker.

I challenge them through you, Mr. Speaker, all NDP rural MLAs, to stand up in this Assembly and explain why they think Bill 6 needs to be forced through with no consultation.

I ask them through you, Mr. Speaker, to explain to their constituents how the so-called town halls are in any way adequate.

I challenge them through you, Mr. Speaker, to explain why they think farmers and ranchers should blindly trust bureaucrats to protect family farming.

I ask them through you, Mr. Speaker, to stand up and explain, and if they cannot, then do their darn jobs and stand up to the government.

Mr. Speaker, through you I remind them that they are supposed to represent constituents' views on these bills and make sure that constituents' views and interests are on their minds first and foremost, not their Premier's. They need to explain right now why this bill has to pass this House at lightning speed, because I guarantee you that they will face questions during the election, not to mention every single day between now and then. This will not just go away. Duck and cover is not a legitimate long-term option on this one. Now, I understand that some of them are conflicted with the orders from the Premier's office, and I truly hope that they reach for the courage necessary to stand up against this. However, in the past we have seen government backbenchers choose to toe the line, abandon integrity, and cling to talking points.

Now, I certainly hope that is not the case here because the government's talking points on Bill 6 are truly ridiculous. How ridiculous is it to ask Albertans to trust this government after it attempts to force major legislation through the process without talking to farmers or ranchers? How ridiculous is it to refer to these town hall meetings as consultation when there is no dialogue other than to seek advice on when it would be most advantageous for unions to strike on farms? That's consultation?

How ridiculous is it to say that consultation isn't necessary because the previous government consulted four or five years ago? The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that thousands of farmers are coming forward right now, and they're telling us that they want their say, and no one from this government has bothered to ask their opinion. This flawed argument also ignores the fact that the last government chose education over legislation precisely because it did consult.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we're going to talk a lot about this in the coming days, particularly in Committee of the Whole, but with the limited time I have left to speak in second reading, I want to talk about why this matters. This bill in its current format hurts family farms. It hurts farming, it hurts ranches, and it hurts rural communities. You see, in Alberta farming is primarily a family enterprise. Only a small percentage of all farms and ranches sell more than half a million dollars a year. These farms and ranches are not just places for work; they are homes. The people who live in these homes are not just farming as a job but as a way of life. It is who they are. It is their family's identity. It is who their neighbours are, and it is crucial to their community.

Representatives of this government like to stand and accuse farmers and ranchers of forcing people to do unsafe work and say that all other provinces have the same legislation. Now, what they do not tell you, Mr. Speaker, is that other provinces also protect the family farm, and this bill does no such thing. Now, we've heard some vague promises over the weekend, as farmers and ranchers began to register their anger, about this government considering steps to protect family farms after the bill passes. I have not found one person in my riding willing to entrust the future of their home and their livelihood to the empty promises of this government. They need this bill to provide a hundred per cent ironclad protection for family farms immediately upon implementation of this bill, and anything else is unacceptable.

The success of family farms relies on the help of not only the family but of the entire community. As a farmer from my community wrote to me:

When family farms have a major project, everyone pitches in. The neighbours and friends, and families pitch in. We do not pay each other, we help each other out. Let me please say that again. We do NOT pay each other, we HELP each other out! This is one of the greatest aspects, of farm life. The tremendous community support system we get to enjoy. This may not make sense to people from the city. But, it is because of this great support system that small farms and ranches are able to exist, and keep costs to a minimum. Many hands make light work.

Mr. Speaker, what will this legislation mean for the way that family farms are operated and how they interact with their neighbours? Under Bill 6 OH and S applies to volunteers, and it will have an impact. There's nothing in this bill that says otherwise. Pass this bill as currently worded without fully written employment standards, OH and S, and you risk attacking the very foundation of the family farm. Full stop.

I've heard from my constituents. This is a big deal.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any brief questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to ask the hon. member – you know, in my time as a paramedic I've seen certain things, and there are always certain trends around times and eras. When you think about the farm and how it's evolved, there's a lot of use of recreational vehicles versus horses, and there's also that part of the tradition of riding a horse to do some of the work. Now there are kids on ATVs and that sort of thing. One of the pieces in this legislation that I'm not clear on – and maybe the member can speak to it a little bit – is that as we go through this, statistically I don't know that any of that was vetted out in this process in terms of consultation. Now, one of the things I can commend the government on is the mental health review board that they put in because they understand that mental health is complex. What we're seeing here and what we're seeing play out in this Legislature and in this province is that this issue that the government has brought up with Bill 6 is a complex issue between the family farm and the corporate farm.

I mean, having had an uncle and a family farm that I used to go to – that work is complex because it's part of your day-to-day life. It is part of your enjoyment. It is this labour of love. It is everything that you put into it, your whole family. That's how you're raised. You know, there are traditions. There's tea, which I used to love. Grandma used to make the best chocolate cake. I remember being a kid. When I walked out the door, I walked out the door in a pair of running shoes, shorts, and a T-shirt. The first place I went to was the corrals and to the hay bales, and I ran around when I was old enough. The thing is that when I think about the complexity of this, statistically wouldn't it be wise – to the member on this question. We've talked a little bit about some of the changes in the evolution of the family farm and how complex it is, but there's a lot of grey area, a grey area that I think the family farms would want to know about.

Then, secondly, you know, how are we going to vet this? [interjection] Thank you, Member. Ultimately, at the end of the day, this is a good thing. If there are occupational hazards, let's identify those. Let's educate farmers, like the former government did. Thank you for that shout-out because education is always better.

Here's the other thing, to the member. There are a lot of questions on this, hon. member. I ask the hon. member: if this bill goes through, can you not see a lot of family farms just stop reporting incidents and driving a lot of this underground? This is the last thing we want. I'd ask the hon. member that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: Well, I only have a little bit of time left, so I'll just probably touch on the one main area. Given the hour I assume my children are in bed sleeping before school tomorrow, but at any other time of the day, if you ask me where my kids are, they're either attempting to get on a horse or thinking about getting on a horse at home. We live in the middle of cattle country, just outside of Sundre, and there are major ranches all around us. Their highlight is when they get to go participate in branding or to be able to participate in cattle drives, and that's how kids are all over my community.

In addition to that, you often see my neighbour – there's water that we share between our livestock and their livestock – as she's working her cattle and checking the fences, travelling with her youngest child on the front and another child on the back of her ATV as she checks the fences and does her chores. That's because, obviously, she's being a mother. She's taking care of her kids, but she's also being a farmer. That is how life is on a farm. You work at your home, and your kids are at your home, and you need to take them with you. She can't leave the kids at the house. It's intermingled. It's every part and every aspect of being on a farm or a ranch when you're on a family farm or a ranch because that's what your life is. You can't predict when a calf is going to come. You can't predict when one is going to need to be pulled. You can't predict when your spouse is away and you're going to need help from a neighbour to come over and do your chores.

You know, there are a lot of issues with this bill that need to be answered for farmers and ranchers. One that I think is unique – and I think the member was hinting at this area – is respite milking. That happens in all of our communities. When a dairy farmer gets sick, other neighbours and people in the area will work their farm. They'll milk their cows. They'll make sure that their operations can keep going. They'll do it when they go on vacation. Dairy farmers don't get to go away a lot, and if it wasn't for respite milking, they wouldn't be able to go away. How is this bill going to affect it?

The problem with this bill is that there's no explanation. You could drive a truck through the holes in this bill. It's wrong, Mr. Speaker. What the government should do is send this to committee, talk to farmers and ranchers. Kill Bill 6: that is probably what they're going to tell you. But at least get farmers and ranchers around the table and find out what they need. Find out how this bill can accomplish the goal that we're trying to accomplish.

We're all for safety. Every farmer and rancher I talk to in my riding: no problem; they want to make things safer. Nobody cares more about their kids than their moms and dads, Mr. Speaker. I think we can all agree on that. How do we do that? I don't know how you can determine regulations and rules around an industry without talking to the people in the industry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to second reading of Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act. It's a bill which will force family farms to be covered under traditional OH and S and WCB legislation, the Employment Standards Code, and the Labour Relations Code.

Mr. Speaker, with family farms, a way of life is under attack. I do not claim to be an expert in farming, but as a parliamentarian I believe that it is my duty to approach every issue with an open mind, consult with many people, absorb as much information as I can before I make a decision on any issue. This government is quickly falling out of grace with Albertans and branding itself as an ideological force that does not care to consult with those affected.

11:20

Yesterday as hundreds of farmers gathered on the steps of the Legislature to voice their concerns, I was listening, and so was the entire Wildrose caucus. I heard from grain farmers, cow-calf operators, dairy producers, honey producers, and others across this industry. The thing they all wanted most was just real consultation.

Mr. Speaker, this government, in an attempt to mitigate the damage caused by their agenda, set forth to host various town halls across the province seeking input on this legislation. However, they were not allowed to voice their concerns with the bill. They were only allowed to speak to suggestions on implementation. The message was clear: the NDP government will not listen; they will only impose. Many of my colleagues in this House have noticed this trend as well, with the speed and limited debate with which we are moving through these motions. This bill has obvious concerns and many for which the government does not have answers other than: trust us; it will be addressed in regulations. My constituents of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo did not elect me to vote for legislation which gives more power to ministers and bureaucrats to decide on a whim without consultation.

These are decisions which affect the livelihoods of thousands of Albertans, and it is important that when this legislation is introduced, all consequences are realized. At Monday's protest insight was shared with me as to how the employment standards regulation will apply to family farms and, in particular, to the children on the farm. While the NDP are prone to extremes, exploiting accidents and other personal tragic situations, it is not necessarily representative of the truth. In part 5 of the employment standards regulation it places restrictions on employees under 18 years of age. An adolescent is defined as an individual that's 12, 13, 14 years old. Adolescents may work in the following approved jobs: delivery person for flyers, newspapers, and handbills; delivery person for small goods and merchandise for a retail store; clerk or messenger in an office; clerk in a retail store; certain jobs in a restaurant and the food service industry, with restrictions.

My list is the approved list as defined by the code. To one farmer this means that he will now be in contravention of the act. You see, Mr. Speaker, this parent and rancher owns a small dairy farm, and a large portion of his day is looking after livestock. Filling up the trough with water from the hose is now a prohibited action and in contravention of the code. There's even, quite certainly, no harm posed by this, but he could be charged under the act.

Just so that everyone in this House is aware, these are not charges to be taken lightly. Section 132 of this code lays it out quite clearly.

- 132(1) An employer, employee, director, officer or other person who is guilty of an offence under this Act is liable,
- (a) in the case of a corporation, to a fine of not more than $100,000, and
 - (b) in the case of an individual, to a fine of not more than $50,000.

As if this was not bad enough, when I think of myself when I was 15, 16, 17 years old, I remember being quite responsible, and I'm sure that is the case with many young adults these days as well, as the member opposite can attest to.

In this code the 15- to 17-year-old age range is defined as young persons. Here the code stipulates what they cannot do rather than what they can. Some are common sense – no selling of liquor, as was pointed out – but many are not in the context of a family farm such as working without the continuous presence of an adult from the hours of 12 a.m. to 6 a.m. When you're working on a farm, you're dealing with living, breathing things that do not follow the government-imposed schedule.

For this I was given a story of cow-calving. I was told the story of a gentleman's 17-year-old son who was left alone in the early hours of the morning while his father was out. When the dad returned, the son had successfully helped deliver his first calf. This is a typical story of pride, ownership, and responsibility for many ranchers, but to this ideologically driven government it is an unlawful act of child labour. Farm life cannot adhere to stringent codes, and if they are policed in this manner, the legislation must reflect the real-life situations they face.

I'd like to quote a letter addressed to the agriculture minister from one farmer who opposes Bill 6.

Please consider the effects Bill 6 could have on what farms and ranches in Alberta look like. Right now we are the family farms, who cannot afford to be legislated off the land. Does the government really want the people growing our food to be employees of land-owning corporations who may not care about the land like a family member, who has the knowledge and wisdom of generations who cared for it before him? I beg of you: do not rush this legislation through. Take the time to ensure that our shared core values are at the heart of how it will affect those in the field. We all want to share the utmost safety of every person involved in raising our food and fibre. Let's do it in a way that will not force family farms out. Please engage in meaningful consultation with farmers and ranchers about what they need and what they want from a farm safety bill.

I echo these concerns and sentiments and those also raised by my learned colleagues. I strongly urge the members of this Assembly to refer this back to committee so that you can consult or to just vote outright against it. The point is that you have to do your due diligence. You have to ask the people. This is bad legislation. In fact, all your stuff is bad legislation because you are not consulting a lot.

Mr. Speaker, you know, the NDP was in opposition for such a long time. Why are they trying to rush everything through right now when they understand that they have to do their due diligence when they're writing these bills, that are going to affect so many people?

Mr. Speaker, if I might give an analogy that perhaps they can relate to a little bit more, when you don't ask the right questions or when you don't ask any questions, when you don't consult properly, it can impact anything regardless of the subject matter, regardless of the profession. It doesn't matter whether you're a school board trustee, a social worker, a geologist, or a paramedic; you have to ask the right questions to do your job.

When we talk about due diligence, if I might speak from my own experience from my previous life, it's the simplest of phone calls to 911, and we're responding. It's for someone who's not feeling well. I get to this call. If I might relate it, it's more of the atmosphere around here, just so they can relate to it a bit more. I went to respond to a fellow by the name of Jack, and he was kind of not feeling very well. You know, we do our due diligence; we start asking him some questions. We ask him his name, what happened. "Do you know where you are right now?" He's, like: "Oh, my name is Jack." "What happened?" "I don't know. I was listening to the budget by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, and some hard feelings started to come down." "Do you know where you are right now?" I ask him these kinds of questions. "Yeah. I'm in the House; I'm here in the Legislature." "Do you know what time it is?" "I know it's very late. I thought this government was going to promise us none of these night sittings, but here we are." I ask him questions about: did this happen before? He'll respond to all these questions. He'll tell me his name is Jack. He tells me what happened, that he was listening to the budget. He tells me he knows where he is, right here in the House. He knows what time it is, and he knows what he was doing before this all happened.

Some people might just call it a day right there and say: "You know what? I've asked you enough questions. Let's get you on that stretcher, and let's slide you on out." But if you're doing your due diligence, you're going to ask a lot more questions. You're going to try to get to the root of the problem, figure out what the causes are, try to address all the issues. You know, I might be asking him: "Why did you feel so uncomfortable? What's going on?" "Well, I'm having some discomfort." "Some discomfort, you say? My goodness. Can you describe this discomfort?" "Well, it's a pain, something in my chest." "A pain in your chest? My goodness."

It's a good thing I'm asking these questions because right now we're going to find out what provoked this pain, what's the quality of this pain, what's the rate. We're looking at little tricks like his rate of respiration, the rate of his pulse, some little things to give us some indications of what's going on with this fellow. I'm asking for severity: "On a scale of 1 to 10 how would you rate this discomfort in your chest?" I'm going to ask him, "How long ago did this start?" and he'll tell me, "An hour ago, when that budget started." You know, we're going to go on and on with all these questions. I'm going to keep on asking more questions.

I'm going to do an assessment on this patient. I'm going to feel for the pulse. I'm going to continue to ask him all sorts of stuff. Is he allergic to anything? Because all these little questions that we have to ask might give us an indication of what is going on. "I'm not allergic to anything." "Are you on any medications?" "Well, I'm on nitroglycerine." "Pardon me? You're on nitroglycerine, you say?" Well, that's telling me now that he might be having some heart issues, and I'm going to ask about his past medical history, sir.

Mr. Speaker, these are important questions to ask, and they're questions that you have to ask. You can't just ask a couple of questions and walk on by. You have to make sure that you're doing a thorough job. I'm going to ask him about his medical history. He's going to tell me that he might have been having some heart problems in the past. Maybe's he's at McDonald's lots. Maybe he smokes a ton of cigarettes. Who can say for certain? But these are the questions that we have to ask because we have to find the root cause of what's going on here.

You know, I'm going to ask him things that might seem irrelevant, like a last meal. Why would you care, if you're having chest pain, that I'm going to ask you when you ate last? Because it could be something as simple as indigestion. Again, it's about asking the right questions, Mr. Speaker. We're going to ask for the events leading up to it. We ask all sorts of things. We're going to put things on this person, and we're going to assess him, in the same way that when they're looking at legislation, they should be looking at all the angles. They have to look at the measures and take a look at certain things.

But in the case of where I was, you know, we're putting on things like an electrocardiogram. We're checking his heart, looking at the patterns there with the electrical impulses. I'm getting his blood pressure. I'm taking his pulse. Because all of those things contribute to what could be going on with this fellow. I'm going to be counting his heart rate, and it's not just: do I feel a pulse or not? It's: is it a strong pulse, or is it a weak pulse; is it fast; is it regular, irregular? We have to ask all sorts of these kinds of questions, and I know there are people in this room that can account for all these things here. The questions. It is so important to do that consultation, ask those questions, come up with all those answers so that you can come up with that perfect solution.

When we're talking legislation, when we're talking something that can impact so many people, we have to make sure that we do it right and we do it once. I'd be proud to be in the opposition and work with this government on a bill if they would do that proper consultation, if they would do that proper management of what this legislation is, what these documents are, because they do impact so many people. You know what happens when you're a paramedic and you don't ask all those right questions? Your patient dies. It's a pretty frustrating situation to be in. Fortunately, I didn't really encounter that too much because I was doing my due diligence.

Sir, I have to tell you that it is such an important thing that they do this due diligence because this does impact so many people. No one believes more in safety here. Commercial operations, those big ones: yes, we recognize that there need to be some things there. But these small farms run under a totally different operational mode.

I can personally talk to being and working on a farm. I worked on the only farm in Fort McMurray, owned by Mr. Jack Peden. I grew up with these folks. They would take me quadding and triking. Actually, they had trikes back then, highly illegal today. But we were safe. His father taught us all the most responsible things on how to operate this machinery.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I know that under 29(2)(a) we're going to hear how Jack made out.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Sure, Mr. Speaker. I was just wondering if the member would like to elaborate a little more on where he was going with those comments.

Mr. Yao: You know what? Growing up in Fort McMurray – you all might not think of it as a city, but it is a city – we were very close to being exposed to that country flavour, for sure, if you want to differentiate between them all. I was very fortunate to grow up with the Peden family because – you know what? – they had cows, they had horses, they had chickens. We helped with everything. His parents were so good to me. They guided me along. They taught me so many rules.

My parents – my father is a physician; my mother is a nurse – met this family, had been out at that same farm. They respected the fact and they enjoyed the fact that I would go out there because they knew that I was being taught some really good lessons about safety and respecting animals and livestock, respecting nature. There is no one that believes in a healthy environment more than this team over here. I can tell you that.

The simple things, like fishing, I might say. He even taught me how to tie a line properly, a lure, and how to take a hook out of a fish without jamming my finger on that hook, how to hold that pickerel properly without getting chewed up by its fins.

An Hon. Member: They're nasty critters.

Mr. Yao: They are nasty.

It was great fun. You know what? I learned how to use a knife. He taught me how to use a knife properly, so I could whittle a stick and have a hot dog, and we could start our own fire without cutting ourselves. It's a lifestyle that when you're in it, no one emphasizes safety more because no one wants anyone to get hurt. I mean, we're all people. We're all humans. We all believe in the same base things. When you put legislation on certain things, you can sometimes have an adverse cause and effect to what your intent was.

So do we understand your intent? Yes, we all recognize safety. We are all on the same team in that regard. But when it comes to legislating the backyard, your kids playing in the backyard and maybe helping mow the lawn or shovelling the walk – as bizarre as that sounds, that’s certainly what the impact seems to be on the small family farms – if you would provide that clarification in your legislation, you would make this all go away. That’s all we are asking you to do, to provide that clarity in your legislation. Again, your legislation, like everything else, is really vague.

The Speaker: Hon. member, again, your comments through the chair, please.

Mr. Yao: Apologies, Mr. Speaker.

I guess my point is that, you know, this legislation is very sparse, and they have to admit that. It’s like the budget they gave us. They want us to provide a shadow budget. I can’t provide a shadow budget. I know something about business, and there’s not enough detail in there for me to be able to provide a budget of any sort. It would be a lot of guessing, to be quite honest.

Mr. Hanson: Looks like that’s what they did.

Mr. Yao: Yes. Yes.

Mr. Speaker, I’m very disappointed by all the folks on the other side that represent these areas that we consider to be more rural areas. You know, maybe they should just step up and step out of that closet and recognize that they’re not country mice; they’re city mice. They certainly are not representing their country mice cousins. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member, any other comments?

Mr. Yao: I just want to say that it’s really disappointing that they aren’t taking this seriously. Really, this is legislation that they can refine. They can avoid a lot of this conflict if they would just recognize and listen to the people and perhaps consider adding some amendments, tweaking it. Sending it back to committee would be the best thing so that it can be properly assessed. Consultations are so important.

That is the challenge. Mr. Speaker, I challenge you to ask these fellows and ladies to speak up.

11:40

The Speaker: Are there any other comments?

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think you need to say that with a little more enthusiasm for the evening and for the event that we’re going through tonight and for the topic that we’re discussing. However, I can understand. The last time we were together this late at night, I seem to remember some of the young pups on the other side saying: are you sure that you can stay up; are you going to be able to get up in the morning? So this old dog over here is going to try to do his best to talk to you and through you to the people of Alberta on this pretty important topic.

I have to admit that being born in the city, perhaps somebody could accuse me of not really knowing what country life is like, Mr. Speaker. But I have to assure the House that I come from good rural stock, that my family homesteaded in this part of the world around 1908, 1909, 1910, and that I, too, know what it feels like to be in the southern parts of this country where the wind blows and you can see your dog run away for the next five days.

I want to start, maybe, by talking a little bit about an experience I had tonight. I had to leave a little bit earlier and then come back to the House tonight. One of the things that I was doing was talking with a young man, a young fellow in about grade 4. He wanted to know a little bit more about what Bill 6 was all about. He wanted to know what was happening in the House with regard to Bill 6 and how it was working, and I had to try to sit down and help him to understand that, you know, when we come into the House, there’s first reading and second reading and Committee of the Whole and how this all works and how it relates to Bill 6. He was just in grade 4 or grade 5, yet this has touched him.

I’ve had, as many of the members in this House have said already, lots of people calling, lots of people phoning, some pretty frustrated. Sometimes you have to explain to people that, no, you can’t have a petition to call a general election. That’s not the way our system works. But that’s how angry they are sometimes. They’re looking for a way to try to have an impact on this bill and on this issue. They’re frustrated, whether they’re that young man that’s in grade 4 or grade 5 or whether they’re a senior who’s ranched all of his life and just wants to get rid of a government that he doesn’t think is listening to him, and I have to try to explain to him that, no, that’s not the way it works in our system.

In my short term as an MLA this bill has by far been the one that I think I’ve received the most feedback on, well, I know I’ve received the most feedback on, from my constituents. They’re extremely worried about this bill. Mr. Speaker, I want to start with this. Lots of people have said this, but I want to reiterate it because I think it does tie to the commonality that we have in this House. No one – and I mean absolutely no one – that earns a living through agriculture, no one in this House, no Albertan wants to see workers hurt or maimed on the job.

I can speak to personal experience from my own family history on this. Everyone on my dad’s side of the family are farmers and ranchers, every single one of them. You know, I can speak to an incident, about 25 years ago now, where my uncle was working out on the field and his bailer gets clogged up with hay. He jumps on top, and he thinks, “Oh, if I just grab it, if I just get it out of there,” and he got sucked in by the wrist. The belts are burning his wrist off. They were cutting through his wrist, and the only thing he can do to try to save himself from being sucked into that bailer is to try to grab the knife that’s in his pocket and cut his wrist off. That was the choice: get sucked into the bailer, or cut his wrist off.

An Hon. Member: Did he get compensated when he was injured?

Mr. Smith: Excuse me. It’s my turn to speak right now.

So when he’s trying to save his life, he dropped the knife, and he got sucked up to his arm, here. And he had to stay there for half an hour while the belts on that bailer burned through his arm, burned through the bone. Eventually, he was pushing himself so hard that when they finally gave way, he flew 20 feet off the bailer. I’m sorry. I didn’t mean to create a problem there, but I bring that to your attention because nobody here wants to see that happen.

When I look back on that experience my uncle faced, I’m not sure – I mean, my uncle farmed all his life. He knew the dangers of being around a round baler. He knew he should have shut off that PTO. I’m not sure that legislation would have solved that problem. Education, maybe. Maybe. But in the real world that we live in, we know that we can all be educated and we can all have really good laws and sometimes we’re still going to make the wrong choices in life. That’s just the nature of life, isn’t it, Mr. Speaker? We’ve all been there, haven’t we? We’ve all been in those situations where we’ve known what to do, we’ve known we should or shouldn’t do something, yet sometimes we make the wrong choice. My uncle made the wrong choice.

You know, on a little more humorous side, I never had a chance to go out and do any of the branding. For some of you maybe over on the other side you've gone out to brandings and you've been a part of that side of the farm culture and farm life, but I never had that opportunity until I moved out to Drayton Valley. I was a teacher, and we had some families in our church that were farm families, and I got invited out to a branding, and I got to learn what it was like to be on the back end of a cow and to have to sit down there and see the hooves smacking around the top of my head and wondering how I was going to get out of this. They took a great deal of pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in watching this civified teacher running down the end of a rope and grabbing the cow and putting him down on the ground and having to try to figure out how to keep this cow from killing me. Well, you know, I went home with an awful lot of bruises that day. Went home with an awful lot of satisfaction that day, having learned what it was like to be out on the farm and what farming life is really all about.

I learned about 15 years later, after becoming a vet, at every branding and castrating in our little area and in our church to keep my mouth closed because we went from slamming the cow down on the ground to having the cow run into a chute or a cattle squeeze and flipping that cattle squeeze up. One of my best friends in Drayton Valley, a mechanic: we were working, and the farmer was castrating a calf, and somehow that calf had scours, and I'm sure that if he'd had to do it over again, he would have kept his mouth shut because he actually got very sick and almost died. I don't know how you legislate that. I don't know how you legislate keeping your mouth closed so you don't get it full of something, okay? So the reality is that sometimes in this life you're best not to legislate; you're best to just let experience teach you what to do and what not to do.

I'll give you an example here again. Just last October my uncle had his 80th birthday, so we went down to experience this 80th birthday. It was really quite tragic because my other uncle, who was in his 90s, passed away on the same day as the birthday, so it was really quite awful. But as we were down there, you know, as families do, you get together and you try to have some fun as a family even in those hard times, Mr. Speaker.

I've got one cousin that has got a ranch that's 64 sections of land. Now, for those of you that don't know what that means, that's like one square mile. A section of land is one square mile. I mean, that's large. You understand that, Mr. Speaker, because down in your area you need about like 3 sections of land to feed a cow, right? You know, that's the way it is down there. To get to his farm, you actually have to drive like 15 kilometres.

So we get out there, and what are they going to do? Well, I've got all my cousins with all of their kids, so there are about 25 kids out there. What are they going to do? They're going to have a great big paintball fight. They've got this whole yard with old machinery in it that they can hide behind, and we've got kids from four years old to 15 years old going to paintball. He's got 20 paintball guns. You know what impressed me? It wasn't the paintball. I was too scared to go out there. I don't need to get hit by paintballs. What impressed me was that from the four-year-old on up, every one of those kids knew how to operate a quad, a bike, and a paintball gun safely.

When they came up, they put their vests on and their coveralls, and they had their neck protectors on and they had their helmets on and they had their visors on, from the four-year-old on up. When that four-year-old was given that paintball gun, that four-year-old already knew to keep his finger off the trigger and keep that gun pointed down, at four years old. Why? Because in the farming culture they start to teach their kids young how to behave safely on the farm. That's the truth.

I'm not sure that sometimes we need to legislate as much as we need to just educate. Nobody here, whether they support this bill or whether they have concerns with this bill, wants to see people abused. Nobody here wants to see people treated unfairly from unsafe or hazardous work sites on a farm. So any discussion on the merits of this bill or the problems surrounding this potential piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker, must start from the recognition that all Albertans are concerned with safety and all Albertans are concerned with safety within an agricultural community and on a farm. I think we have to start there.

Let's understand something. I don't think that you believe this, and I know that I don't believe this. I know that it's not a lack of compassion, it's not a desire to maximize profits on the backs of farm workers that has held this legislation back. We've talked about 98 years to legislate. Well, I don't believe that it's been a lack of political will that has held back legislation in this area. Rather, legislation has been slow because of the complexity of farming, which makes it difficult to enact legislation that will adequately recognize the needs of the various sizes and types of farming units.

You know, I've talked a lot about my family. I'm very proud of my family. I've got one cousin that has a predominantly mixed farming operation: a grain farm, some cattle, that kind of thing. I've got an uncle that was a dairy farmer for most of his life. I've talked about the one cousin that's a cattle rancher. You see, they don't fit the same style of farming.

My one cousin, Mr. Speaker, who was a dairy farmer for many, many years, decided that because of his diabetes he had to get into another line of farming, so he's joined his farm together – and it's a corporate farm. He's got three or four other farmers that have all joined their farms together, and they farm as a corporation, very different from my other cousin who's got the old family homestead and who's got nine sections of land and farms very, very differently. You can't always put them together the same way. They have different needs, different desires, different ways of operating. I don't know if the legislation that we're trying to pass here with Bill 6 is recognizing the differences and the complexity of farming. I think that's a weakness in this bill.

The current government, I think, to a certain degree is – and I don't know if this is too strong a word or not; I'm going to use the word "baffled" although that may be a really awful word to use. I don't know. I'm not sure that you really understand some of these things that come as a result of a farming lifestyle. I think that perhaps some of the lack of progress that we're seeing in initiating this bill and understanding what we're doing comes from a cultural difference there of not understanding sometimes.

What this government has not acknowledged sometimes is that the farmers themselves who live and breathe and work in agriculture have challenged this legislation. They've challenged legislative proposals, not only this one but through the long history that we've seen of trying to find appropriate legislation for farm families in this province. It's not the city people that are protesting this so much as it is the farmers themselves. I think we need to realize that either the past legislation or today's legislation is probably not adequately addressing the realities that the farm families of today face. You know, I grew up in a city, but we always went back to the family farm.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Really quick, a little question I'd like to discuss. One of the big things we're hearing around this is around kids and agriculture, and it's created a lot of controversy. It's causing a lot of people to be upset. I can tell you, living in an agriculture community, that kids participating in agriculture is important. It's important to farmers and ranchers. It's important to their communities.

I know that tonight we heard the Member for Calgary-Mountain View talk about slave labour and stuff in regard to the kids, and I don't think he's meaning it, you know, about all farmers. I get it. But it's really not a nice way to talk about farm kids. My friend, Mr. Speaker, the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock has raised five kids: four girls and one boy. I've had the privilege of meeting some of them. They're great kids. Farm kids all across the province are excellent. What we need to do is talk about why people are concerned about kids.

This is the question I'm getting to, Mr. Speaker, with the member. This minister of labour yesterday said: the government has always planned to exempt children and other unpaid workers on family farms from mandatory WCB coverage. Now, this bill deals with a couple of the areas, OH and S and the labour side, but I just want to talk about WCB for a minute. That's what she said yesterday in Okotoks. But in the middle of November this was what was on the website about Bill 6. It states this about the implications of Bill 6: if you are operating a for-profit farming operation, i.e., one who sells goods commercially to individuals or other organizations, you must cover any unpaid workers, including family members and children performing work on your farm. That was posted there.

You, the minister's staff, and the people putting this out were wrong, or they've changed it after the fact. I don't know. But it's caused a lot of confusion, a lot of frustration. And this was on the WCB side. The OH and S side gets even worse, very, very confusing. But I'd like to ask the hon. member – you know, he has a riding that borders mine, and we share many of the same farms and those types of areas – to elaborate a little bit on how ridiculous it is that after this type of stuff, talking about farmers' children, something so important to our communities, this government would ask for blind trust to pass a bill that is a blank cheque. Maybe just explain why farmers aren't going to go for it. A blank cheque is not acceptable to them at all.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Smith: Thank you to the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre for asking me the question here. You know, I've taught rural kids all of my life, Mr. Speaker. I had the chance to start my career in Drayton Valley, and probably about a third of the kids in our high school were kids that grew up in a rural environment. You could absolutely tell the difference between a student that grew up in a rural environment from one that didn't, and I was always very, very impressed with the kids that came from a rural environment, from a farm. They seemed to be so strong and independent. They learned at a young age how to work, how to be responsible. I saw that, for instance, when I was dealing with them in the classroom. Somebody doesn't bring his homework. "Excuse me. Where's your homework?" "Mr. Smith, I was doing chores last night. I'm sorry. I'll get it done." And they always made sure they got it done and showed it to me.

The farm breeds a different group of kids, a different culture of kids. I think that perhaps one of the problems that we're facing here is that when you try to impose legislation on people that are strong-willed, independent people that are used to solving their own problems, that are used to being able to make their own choices and their own decisions, when you don't engage them in the right way, I know in my family their backs get up, and the conversation ends. You have to go a long way to regaining that trust, and you have to go a long way before they're going to start to listen to you about whether or not they're going to give you the permission. Government has to ask that permission. We really do. We have to earn the right to be able to pass legislation that will govern people.

12:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It truly is an honour to stand here in front of you today. I'm here to talk about Bill 6, in case anybody isn't sure what we're talking about.

An Hon. Member: What's the title of that bill?

Mr. Cyr: The title of the bill? It's the no-consultation bill, a bill given far less thoughtful and informed consideration from this House than it deserves.

I would like to read just a paragraph from Beauchesne. It's not because I'm looking for a point of order or a point of privilege. I think that it's important to understand, when you're looking at the Legislature, to be actually looking through these texts that we use all the time. I myself have heard this book being referenced so many times that I decided that I wanted to start reading my way through it. Paragraph 1 on page 3 is the one I want. It's just going to be a short paragraph.

The principles of Canadian parliamentary law are . . .

The Speaker: A quick comment. You ought to get a life if that's what you're . . .

Mr. Cyr: Pardon me?

The Speaker: I'm sorry. It's after midnight.

Mr. Cyr: I do agree that, apparently, I've got too much time on my hands if I'm going into this book.

But to get back into the book on paragraph 1:

. . . To protect a minority and restrain the improvidence or tyranny of a majority; to secure the transaction of public business in an orderly manner; to enable every Member to express opinions within limits necessary to preserve decorum and prevent an unnecessary waste of time; to give abundant opportunity for the consideration of every measure, and to prevent any legislative action being taken upon sudden impulse.

This was written by Sir John Bourinot.

I think that what we need to focus on here is that we truly are blessed to be here. When we're looking at these texts that we go to, we usually only pull parts of these texts to go into defences against things that may have happened in the House. So I think that everybody here should consider reading this book. It has so far been a very informative read.

But to get back to Bill 6 and to relay this back to what I'm trying to get to, I feel strongly as the chosen representative for Bonnyville-Cold Lake that I need to bring forward and represent all the silenced voices that need to be heard in this Legislature, and that's what I'm trying to get to in paragraph 1. We need to get the voices of our constituents out into our Legislature. I'm not seeing these voices in Bill 6 being heard. I have farmers in my riding that are saying right now and sending me letters right now that are stating that they are not being heard.

Now, I did table several letters yesterday. I'd like to refer periodically to one of those letters. Now, to start off, this says that "I have contacted both my MLA," the minister of agriculture, "and Premier Notley with no response from either. Now I am looking to all MLAs for clarification. Thank you for your time." You know what? I sent a letter back to her saying: I'm listening. That's what we want to be going to our farmers and saying, that we are listening.

She goes on to say:

I am a 20 year old female that until recently worked as a safety consultant in the oilfield, upholding various OH&S standards to help people have a safe workplace. I realize the importance of safety in people's day to day lives and applaud you for trying to make people's lives better. There is always room for improvement and I understand that.

I am also ranch born and raised. Since learning to walk I've been outside, bottle feeding calves at all hours, branding cattle, chasing livestock. I've been riding horses and chasing cows since before I could walk. . . . I've been called redneck, short-sighted and uneducated. Sometimes it's a really tough hill to climb. There are challenges I face every day, accidents waiting to happen. You do the best you can to make it a safe environment but when the first year heifer is calving at 2 a.m. on Easter Sunday, you plow on, because lots of farm situations are choosing another animal's life over your comfort.

Now, it's important to clarify here – and many of my colleagues have mentioned this, actually all of this side of the House – that farming isn't just a job. Farming is a lifestyle, a lifestyle that has gone on generation after generation. I have that in my riding, a constituency that is proud farmers and ranchers.

To go back to the letter:

It taught me that your life has value beyond what your bank account states. Allowed me to gain bonds with my animals that gave me confidence to be my own person no matter who stood in your way. That hard work and dedication are always appreciated, because it doesn't matter if you're not the best, so long as you try your hardest. It showed me that you can have a competition, but that at the end you had to be able to shake hands and walk away friends. These are invaluable lessons that I learned on the farm, from my family and from friends whose bonds are thicker than blood.

Now, this is important because what we're looking at here is a person that is describing what living on a farm is like. Again, I'm going to get back to the point. This isn't a job; this is a lifestyle.

Now, I say that because, unless this bill is put aside for consideration and further consultation, the farmers will have no voice in matters that will affect them, their families, and their communities. I have been going out and talking with my local farmers. I have been wanting to hear what my local farmers are concerned about with this bill. The fact that they're being consulted after the fact that it was tabled in this House is insulting. It needs to go to committee or . . .

An Hon. Member: Kill Bill 6.

12:10

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. We need to kill Bill 6.

Now, to go back to the letter again, to say that this constituent of the agriculture minister has stated:

I feel like your bill is completely disregarding my voice, and yet I am the newest generation. We are the ones you want to instill confidence in, want to push to succeed, keep encouraging to keep on keeping on because when you leave you're handing it over to people like me [the next generation]. It's my life this bill is affecting. But you're not allowing my voice heard. You're trying to push it through without allowing us anytime to weigh in or make any changes that effect my lifestyle. I want to see a more open discussion about Bill 6. I want my voice to be heard.

Why can we not bring these conversations to communities that will be affected, make it easier for us to help you. This is important. She's actually saying that they want to contribute. They're not given the opportunity. We're hearing that there are meetings being put on right now and that there are not any notes being taken at all at these meetings. That's not consultation; that's information.

We're feeding them information on what we as a government are going to force on them, and that's not okay. She goes on to say:

We are really a humble group and all we want is to have our voices heard and make sure that we can still pass our traditions and way of life on . . .

to the next generation. I don't think that's unreasonable.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Now, the government wants to pass this bill a few days after being made public. We're looking at last Thursday. It's a week, and we're already at second reading. This is crazy. This bill is one of many reasons why they previously passed motions for the House to sit. Now, they are passing the legislation too fast. We're not getting through the consultation that we need to, and consultation, as we heard from members over here, is of the utmost importance.

The fact is that I would consider every one of us to be a person that really wants to do what's best for our constituents. Right now what's best for our constituents is to actually listen to the constituent. Our constituents right now are saying: consult. They're also saying that education is better than legislation. We need to be making sure that is out there. A bill of this magnitude, that affects hundreds of thousands of people, needs to be dealt with in a proper way and should only be completed with extensive consultation with those who are affected.

Now we've heard from across the aisle here that there's been 10 years. Well, my question. Ten years: how come you got it wrong? How could we have gotten this wrong? Did you just ignore everything that the past government did in consultation and just throw this together? This is just another way that this government is reminding rural residents that their voices do not matter.

If they won't go to farmers, I want to see the farmers bring their voices here. Their voices need to be heard, and if that means on the front steps of the Legislature that we will finally start to listen, then they need to come here and help the Wildrose push forward the fact that they have not been consulted.

Again, it's important to realize why this is so important. It's because of the fact that this is a lifestyle. These farmers tell me that farming is not just an occupation or a job.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I thank the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for his presentation. He has a big riding like mine. He has one less name in it, which I know makes it easier for people when they are addressing him. Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, besides having three towns in its name, is an area that encompasses 25,000 square kilometres. It's about an hour south of Edmonton and about an hour and a half northwest of Calgary. At the bottom it goes to the B.C. border and east to the shores of Sylvan Lake and Gull Lake.

Now, I tell you that, Madam Speaker, because I just want to give you an idea of the area that I have to cover when I want to consult with my constituents. I have farmers all across those 25,000 square kilometres who are trying to talk to me right now. This government has brought forward a bill that will impact them drastically, I would argue the largest agriculture bill, definitely, that we've seen in my lifetime, possibly in Alberta history. I have to say that as the elected representative of over 40,000 people in the riding of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre I am offended by this government's behaviour. I'm offended by them bringing forward a blank-cheque bill and then not providing MLAs in this very Assembly enough time to properly consult with the people back in their ridings, to properly take the time to hold town halls.

Again, I've described the area that I have to deal with. I know that you, Madam Speaker, have a large area to cover as well, and it's very unreasonable to do that to MLAs but not because of work.

I want to work. I want to go back to the riding, and I want to talk to a lot of farmers, make sure that I know what's going on. We're going to be asked in the coming days to vote on a bunch of amendments now, as the government has indicated, and we're not going to be given a chance to consult with our constituents yet again. Farmers in my riding are being punished. They're not being given adequate opportunities to give their feedback to this Assembly.

Through you, Madam Speaker, I ask the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake how he feels about that and, you know, if he's as offended as I am about this process and the challenges that he has in the tight timeline that the government is providing to push this through at, I would say, lightning speed – they're trying to put this through now, not giving anybody opportunities to talk to their constituents – and if he feels that that's an appropriate thing.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, did you want to contribute under 29(2)(a)? [interjections] Oh, I apologize. Sorry. I didn't realize there was a question. I thought it was just a comment.

Go ahead.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would thank the hon. member for the question. The question that I heard, that he brought forward on these amendments that we are having thrown in front of us – we have, like, an hour to consider them. Some of them come in with four or five pages of literature there. The fact is: how can you be working as an effective opposition when you've got an amendment that hits your desk and you're voting within an hour or two later? This means that we can't go out to our farmers and say: what is it you think? No. Well, obviously, the fact is that we can't even fully get through the amendment without even being able to come out and say: "What is it you're trying to do? Obviously, you made a mistake with the original bill. Now you're coming forward with an amendment that we barely even get to see in a short window."

12:20

It is offensive. My colleague is right. This is offensive, and we're going to be doing that when Committee of the Whole starts. They're going to drop – who knows? – 10 amendments. The fact is that when you're looking at these amendments, we need time, and that means we need to send it to a committee like a standing committee. The fact is that when we're looking at what we're doing with these bills, they're going too fast. The fact is that this bill, in the way it is currently worded, may well be beneficial in some capacity to corporate farms but will severely affect the small family farm, who is safe. Let's be very clear: they're safe.

Now, when we're looking at what actually needs to happen, it comes down to consultation again. If there are concerns with safety, then why didn't we ask what exactly is . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'd like to welcome everybody to a brand new day at 20 after 12. I am very, very pleased to stand up and represent the constituents of Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills with regard to Bill 6. This bill is about lack of consultation. We can call it the lack-of-consultation bill.

Albertans want this bill sent to committee or shelved completely. That's what we're hearing, "Kill Bill 6; kill Bill 6," everywhere we go, every time that people show up on the steps or go to – what do they call it? – a consultation meeting.

Mr. Cooper: A come-and-be-told meeting.

Mr. Hanson: A come-and-be-told meeting. That's what it is.

Anyway, as elected officials it's our duty and responsibility to represent the concerns of our constituents, to listen to their concerns, their opinions, and bring them forth to this Legislature. That's exactly what I'm doing. I'm here talking because I'm representing the people in my riding that have phoned me and sent me e-mails and sent me letters. I have some of those letters here. As a matter of fact, I'm getting calls from other areas outside of my constituency.

An Hon. Member: Really?

Mr. Hanson: Yeah, from 1,430 family farms in the Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville area that don't feel that they're being represented in this House, from 1,159 farms and ranches from Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater that also feel that they are not being represented in this House because they're not hearing from their MLA. I've actually gotten a phone call from as far away as Slave Lake. Our job is to provide a voice in government for the people we represent.

This government never ceases to amaze me. Just last week in debate I spoke about the government members' lack of consultation with their constituents with regard to Bill 4 and the overall budget. If you're not willing to stand up in the House and speak for or against the legislation, how are you actually effectively representing your constituents? We were all elected to be a voice in this Legislature representing our constituency. If we are not consulting with our constituents and then representing those opinions in this House, we are simply filling a chair and not acting in the best interests of our province or Albertans.

Madam Speaker, today we are addressing another example of how this government refuses – and I repeat that: they refuse – to consult with the people that elected them. If the government was serious about getting this bill right, they would have actually consulted with the stakeholders prior to proposing the legislation, not dropping wide-ranging, omnibus legislation that will have a huge impact on the 60,000 people who make their livelihood in farming.

Farming and ranching have been a way of life in Alberta since the very first settlers arrived in this area, the people that opened up this country and who have made it the wonderful province it is today. They should be exempted from the bureaucratic nightmare that this bill represents. This is totally unfair. This NDP government has already aggravated Alberta's largest industry, the energy industry, with drastic tax increases and economic uncertainty by their various policies and regulatory changes, and now we're going after another one of our most important industries and bringing in these changes that will affect the daily lives of farm families too hard and too fast.

Madam Speaker, if they intend to make this bill take effect January 1, 2016, there will be no opportunity for effective consultation or dialogue with farm and ranch families, period. They feel that this is being shoved down their throats.

Madam Speaker, this government intends to have this bill passed through the House by the end of the session in early December, and we're already there. We're getting very close. Most of the scheduled consultation sessions are taking place after December 3. What the heck is the point of asking people for their input to help craft legislation after the legislation has already passed?

Madam Speaker, is this the NDP version of democracy? Let's not forget that the D in NDP stands for democratic. Is this indeed the new democracy? Really? Really? Stand up and tell us. Is this indeed the new democracy we can expect until the day this government is defeated, which I hope is damn soon? [interjections] I'm sorry. I'll withdraw that comment.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

An Hon. Member: He's talking about the Springbank one.

Mr. Hanson: Yeah, the Springbank dam. It fell right in here. Sorry about that. [interjections] Who writes this stuff?

Madam Speaker, this new law will make massive changes to the way farmers conduct their daily operations. Is the ultimate goal of this government to see the end of the family farm? That's the question on a lot of people's minds. When the government lumps together occupational health and safety and workers' compensation legislation, the Employment Standards Code, and the Labour Relations Code into one bill, it demonstrates quite clearly that they do not understand the complexity of what they are trying to enforce. The cost to farm families for the WCB portion alone will put financial burdens in place that will make it impossible for many smaller operations to continue. I've heard from one family in my area that they figure that, based on their gross income, it's going to cost them $15,000 a year just for the man and his wife.

In many cases these are families that have operated for four generations in farming. Their families, grandfathers and grandmothers, came to this country and endured many hardships to build up their operations so that their children could have a better way of life and share in the abundance this land provides, not so that their lifestyle could be turned on its head without any consultation whatsoever. I don't know of any farm families that have asked for this government to step in and save them from themselves. I don't know of a single family that doesn't care as much about the safety of their own farms as we do here in this Assembly.

Madam Speaker, now farm families are stepping forward by the hundreds to stop progress on this bill until proper, democratic consultation can take place. This government had best pay attention to these voices, or it risks wading into an unfamiliar area and causing any number of unintended negative consequences. Nowhere in this bill is there a recognition of the differences between small family-run farms and large commercial operations. Other provinces have this legislation in place, and they do exempt small family farms.

Madam Speaker, while there is definitely the need to bring in some sensible, reasonable regulations for larger operators, we are disappointed there is no recognition of the special nature of the family farm and the contribution that they make to our society. Farmers and ranchers have the right to have their voices heard when it comes to legislation that will affect their ability to operate and prosper.

Running a family farm in no way resembles running an industrial fabrication shop, a packaging facility, or a major greenhouse operation as we see in, for example, Redcliff, Alberta. Family farms need to be treated in a different way. Madam Speaker, we should be encouraging the next generation of farmers to stay on the land, not make it such an insurmountable task that they give up before they start. I've been contacted by locals that expressed concerns over the high cost of the WCB premiums they will be subject to, premiums they have no control over. They are concerned about the implications of the OH and S regulations, that can be very confusing, even to industries that have dealt with them for years. Part of the problem is that a lot of the people that are working on farms in my area also work in the oil patch. They've seen the cumbersome OH and S regulations and paperwork that has to be filled out, and it really hasn't changed safety a bit in their industries.

One family expressed the concern that according to new regulations their 15-year-old daughter in 4-H would not be able to work unsupervised with her 4-H horse. She would not legally be able to help out for more than two hours on a weeknight and then must be supervised, and that includes her 4-H program time.

Madam Speaker, busy farm mothers during harvest time will no longer be able to take their children with them in a harvester, in an air-conditioned closed cab. It's no different, really, than a person taking their children on a car trip to the grocery store or on a road trip.

Madam Speaker, many farms are run by moms and dads and maybe temporary hired hands during peak times. What right does this government have to interfere with how they teach their children on the farm operation? I truly believe that farm parents are way more concerned about the safety of their children than this government, made up mostly of people from urban areas. Parents do their utmost to protect children and families.

Pushing confusing, vague, expensive, and at times inappropriate legislation onto the backs of our hard-working farm families is not what we were elected to do. We're just asking for some time. Push it to committee, or scrap the bill completely. We hear it all the time: kill Bill 6. Implementing this bill without consultation on the true needs of farm operators will only serve to be a huge windfall for WCB, and it will not affect farm safety one bit and will undermine our democratic process. Bill 6 must be sent to committee to allow for actual democratic consultation and to give the Alberta farmers involved a real chance to have their voices and concerns heard by this government.

Madam Speaker, I've got a couple of letters here, that I will be happy to table tomorrow, and I would just like to read you a few notes from them.

This is against Bill 6 and asking why it's being pushed through the Legislature before all of the details are laid out. It says:

I am from Warburg Alberta. I have been raised on the family farm and my husband and I are presently farming.

She goes on to say:

Farming teaches responsibility and commonsense. Something many people do not learn in other workforces. Growing up on a farm you learn how to care for animals and to be aware and safe around them. You learn how machinery works, the dangers around equipment and to be aware of your surroundings. You accept that you work with what Mother Nature has in store for you that day, no matter how long the day may be, not having to watch the clock for the amount of hours that legislation has allotted you.

Further down she says:

I understand the government has a very difficult job [to do], but please use your commonsense when implementing legislation . . . Implementing the Farm Safety Program in schools in Alberta is a great idea. Education of our children, whether they are on the farm or not, with this type of program is important. Pushing legislation through that treats the family farm like a 9:00 - 5:00 job is impractical. Take the family farm out of this legislation as it has been done in British Columbia.

Another letter came from La Glace. She says:

I live on a working cattle ranch located near La Glace Alberta . . .

I am opposed to Bill 6. I feel [that it will] affect my way of life greatly. Also if any changes are to be done, they must be done with as much feedback from fellow producers as possible . . . Farming and ranching is a way of life. It is not a job, it is a lifestyle.

She goes on to say:

We don't wake up every day and head out to work. We wake up every day to live our life. It is our life, it is the way we live . . . We are pro efficient people, we work safe. We love the land and we love our stock. Only we understand that accidents do happen and at times are unavoidable, just as accidents happen in your home and in your vehicle. Bill 6 will not change this.

She concludes with:

If you guys truly care about Alberta and her farmers/ranchers this bill would be dismissed. I myself cannot differentiate work from home. My work is my home, this is what I live for. Why can you guys not see or understand this? It feels as though we are losing our rights. Our rights to raise our kids as we were raised. And to share our knowledge with our children. And our way of life. How is this a just cause?

Another one is an open letter to the hon. Premier and the hon. ministers and CCed to the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. It's from St. Brides. He says:

You were . . . elected on the platform that the former government had a sense of entitlement, which may very well have been the case . . .

Mr. Rodney: No.

Mr. Hanson: Sorry. I'm just reading from the letter. Bear with me, sir.

. . . but if you fail to consider all involved with this bill, and any other bills, you are just proving what we all know and that is [that once] you become a government that sense of entitlement comes with the job. Please prove me wrong and stop this Bill till all have been consulted and [before] you destroy an industry that feeds you all [and] provides employment for thousands of Albertans, and just wants to have a way of life.

Another letter:

I write today in protest of Bill 6 . . . I am 29 years old, and a fifth generation farmer from the James River area. Which is about ten minutes North of Sundre AB. My family has been farming in this area since 1904 . . .

As a mixed farmer, you need to be educated. Not only on what the price that your commodities are selling for. But, also you need to know what fertilizer, pesticides, herbicides, fungicides, to use on your crops. You need to be able to diagnose illness in your herd, and also what the best form of treatment is for your animals. You have got to be able to treat and maintain your herd. You have got to be able to fix breakdowns on equipment . . .

[Mr. Hanson's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud under 29(2)(a).

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is actually a great honour for me to stand and speak under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. I've been waiting for this opportunity for some time. My impression is that the members opposite actually are blocking rational questioning of their statements.

Just to establish my bona fides, I am actually a fifth-generation family farmer, who continues to operate the farm. I actually have farm income listed on my ethics disclosure, unlike, I think, everybody that's sitting across the way. There is one of your members that is a full-time farmer, but he – I can't say it.

I actually consulted with my family farmers that are renting the farm that I own. These are fourth-generation family farmers. They live in Manitoba, which has an enlightened government, which, many of us know, is an NDP government. That jurisdiction, like all the other jurisdictions except Alberta, has effective – and they're well received by the farming community – OHS, WCB, and labour regulations for paid farm labour. I consulted with my family farm tenants, and they told me that what they saw of the reaction in Alberta was completely over the top. In their experience this gives the protection to their business from lawsuits in the event that an accident does occur. They have actually never had an OH and S inspection on their farm because they actually operate a very safe farm.

My question to the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills is: how can he justify the fact that Alberta does not have this kind of farm safety and financial safety provisions in its legislation, and why is he slowing down the transition of this bill to Committee of the Whole?

Mr. Hanson: Actually, I'm not trying to slow this bill down to Committee of the Whole, Madam Speaker. I'm trying to stop it completely for the people of Alberta, and if it takes dragging my feet on this for another four days in this House and another 10 hours, I'll do it.

Every one of these letters that I have – and I said that I will be tabling them along with probably another hundred that I have on my desk – has talked about nothing more than consultation. They're all happy to talk to you about safety, but they want to be consulted. They don't want this stuff rammed down their throats. They want consultation, true consultation, not somebody throwing a bill at them and giving us four days to consult in here and drag our feet on it. They want true consultation, where their people sit at the table and discuss issues that affect them daily and how best to deal with them. Some of these people have their own insurance policies, that are far better than the WCB policies that you guys are trying to push on them.

I'm going to end this with page 5 of the letter from this fella. He calls it "The Farmer's Creed."

I believe that a man's greatest pride is his dignity and that no calling bestows this more than farming.

I believe that hard work and honest sweat are the building blocks of a person's character.

I believe that farming, despite its hardships and disappointments, is the most honest and honourable way a man can spend his days on [this] earth.

I believe that farming . . .

[Mr. Hanson's speaking time expired] Oh, I'll finish it up tomorrow.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 6. You know, some will say that this side of the House is trying to slow down debate, but let me be clear. If there's one thing that I've heard from the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, it's that they would like to have strong representation that is willing to rise in the Assembly and speak to legislation, that best reflects the people of that area. That is exactly what this side of the House has done today. Many, many, many of my hon. colleagues have risen in this place to defend the interests of the constituencies that they represent, and I'm proud to stand with them. I'm proud to stand shoulder to shoulder and arm in arm with them along with the 45,000 farmers and ranchers across this province.

Let me be clear. Every single one of those farmers and ranchers wants a safe farm. In the consultation that I've done, I have heard some relatively positive comments about sections of the bill. Not all farmers are adamantly opposed to all portions of the bill, and I've heard many of them speak to me about the reasonable possibility that some form of insurance, be it privately held or WCB, can be a positive step forward. But the way that this has taken place is unbecoming of this government and communicates a lack of trust. It is exactly what this government promised they wouldn't do when they were in opposition. I can tell you that there is a significant amount of disappointment from the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

I am proud to rise and speak immediately after my hon. colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills because in his remarks he provided a lot of context and comments around the need to send this bill to committee. So it's my pleasure to rise and offer that very opportunity to this government.

I plan to move an amendment, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to hand it out myself. I know that the hour is late and that our pages have gone home. So let me just say thank you to the Legislative Assembly staff and security, who have given of their time to ensure that the important debate on Bill 6 can continue. That is exactly what we're doing here this evening, important debate on an important issue that drastically impacts hundreds of thousands of Albertans.

I rise to move an amendment, that the motion for second reading of Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

This should be no surprise to this House. In fact, I have risen on numerous occasions to talk about the need for the use of committees, to talk about the need for proper consultation, the opportunity for expert testimony and witnesses, and that is exactly what this amendment does. Madam Speaker, I have chosen the Resource Stewardship Committee because this committee currently has no tasks before it, so there is a wide open slate of opportunity. In fact, the committee could begin meeting tomorrow, should it be called. But the point is that this committee would have the opportunity to do meaningful consultation right across this province, tap the brakes, as a prominent blogger in this province said – and some would call him a left-leaning blogger – on this bill to ensure that trust can be restored. I can tell you right now that the trust of many rural Albertans and, certainly, farmers and ranchers has been broken by this government. I can tell you that that's not good for them. It's not good for this province because we need everyone in this province pulling in the same direction right now. Right now they have a government who's working against them.

If I might just take a moment to talk about the importance of consultation, the important work that committee does and provide some context for the House. There have been many great people that have spoken in this House prior to all of us here. Many of them believed in proper consultation, the use of committee, and many of them believed that in a very, very similar situation as we're in today.

So I'd just like to take a couple of moments. In fact, I won't go through them all, but I have about 85 points of reminders, over 10 pages of comments made by the NDP on this exact matter. I hope that the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview will have the opportunity to listen because it brings me a certain amount of joy to be able to reflect upon some of the words that he's used in Hansard. There's no real need to table these words because they are well documented in Hansard on December 9, almost a year ago to the day.

I think it's important that Albertans are reminded that there are many examples of bills that have been brought forward hastily, poorly written, and without adequate and proper consultation, which then have to get yanked or paused or repealed, Madam Chair. I mean, a great example of this was Bill 10 last week, that has been put on hold because it falls into that category of hastily written, inadequate, and improper consultations. And here we are repealing Bill 1 from the spring.

Mr. Jean: Who said that?

12:50

Mr. Cooper: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview just last year on the importance of proper consultation.

I think that it's important to note that he's not the only one that believes in proper consultation and sending pieces of legislation to committee.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will be supporting the amendment. I do think that it would be very useful at this stage to have some open public consultation.

The Minister of Infrastructure, Hansard, December 8, 2014, on the Condominium Property Amendment Act, 2014.

That same day from the hon. minister:

Because of the clear problems we're hearing about this bill and the utter lack of notice and complete consultation with all concerned stakeholders, we would like to see the legislation delayed. It's been pushed forward too fast, and not everyone has had their voice heard.

The Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation, Hansard, December 8, 2014.

I think that I might have heard those same sorts of words being spoken by members of this side of the House earlier today. The same things. We would like to see the legislation delayed. It's been pushed forward too fast. Not everyone has had their voice heard. There are thousands and thousands of farmers and ranchers that feel exactly like that.

I'll go on to quote from November 26, 2014.

So we will be seeing those this afternoon sometime, I'm sure, in due course.

Certainly, we oppose this lack of consultation, first and foremost, that came up with this WCB portion of this omnibus bill.

The Minister of Culture and Tourism.

While we're on a good thing and speaking of the former NDP caucus, I'm quoting here from Hansard, May 7, 2014.

A week ago this PC government apologized to party members for its failure to listen to the grassroots. Yesterday they backtracked again, this time on pension rollbacks, because they failed to listen to Albertans. It's clear that they still don't get it because now they plan to ram through an omnibus bill without written briefings to Assembly members and without listening to Albertans.

The Premier of Alberta when she was in the fourth party, just in 2014. The similarities are startling. I don't quite understand how we've gone from believing in consultation, believing in taking time, believing in listening to stakeholders to today: this bill needs to be passed before the Christmas break so that we can turn our backs on consultations and listening to farmers. What farmers and ranchers are concerned about is, Madam Speaker, the fact that this legislation gives a blank cheque on regulation. The good news is that I have some quotes on regulation and passing legislation and dealing with the regulations later. Hopefully, I'll have the opportunity to get to those. Farmers and ranchers are concerned that their trust has been broken. How can they trust to get the consultation on the regulations right when they can't even get the consultation on the bill right in the first place?

I'd like to quote one or two more because I think it's just so, so relevant to the amendment that's been proposed, an opportunity for the government to do the right thing and to tap the brakes on this. I know for a fact that there have been thousands of e-mails, phone calls, and letters received by members on all sides of this House from workers quite frustrated with this government and rightly so. I mean, for a government that loves to talk about the word “consultation” and how they speak with folks, their actions don’t seem to live up to their words. Although I could stand here and give numerous examples of where consultation never took place even though it was asserted, I won’t do that.

I just wanted to say, Madam Speaker, that once again we’re in a position where this bill should be . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Three Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Two Hills.

The Deputy Speaker: Two Hills. I’m seeing double at this point.

Mr. Hanson: It’s getting late.

Anyway, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. To the member. You had mentioned that you had some references to regulations. I was wondering if you could expound on those a little bit for us.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, hon. member. I will be happy to get to that, but given that I was just in the middle of a sentence – maybe I’ll just start this sentence over for the sake of ensuring that we have the full context of the quote.

Madam Speaker, once again we’re in a position: should this bill be referred to committee? I do see that as a positive step, but I do need to voice my frustration with the fact that once again it’s another example of the government putting forward poor legislation then being stopped in its tracks by the public and by opposition parties and forced to go back to the table. If it was done with adequate consultation in the first place, then we wouldn’t have to be here constantly going in circles. We’ve seen examples of this from the amendments to the municipality act, where, again, amendments that the NDP put forward were voted down originally last year, and then amendments to the bill came forward and – surprise, surprise – half of the changes were the exact amendments that we put forward.

The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade and all of the other things that he is responsible for in Hansard, November 26, 2014 – I think that it’s just so unbelievable that we can go from the exact spot we’re in today when the hon. minister stood on this side of the House, railing against the government of the day about lack of consultation, about lack of committee to a point where today the government front bench is essentially silent other than to say: some of the bureaucrats have provided misinformation. To not stand up and take responsibility for the bureaucrats is one thing, but to continue this narrative that they are on the side of angels in this is absolutely flabbergasting, to know that just last year they stood and said the exact same things that members of the opposition have been saying for going on 14 hours today.

This is an incredible chance to do the right thing. This government, to their credit, on at least three occasions have been going in the wrong direction and said: “I’m sorry. We weren’t doing what was right. We promised that when we were doing the wrong thing, we would stop, turn around, apologize, and do what’s right.” That’s exactly what farmers and ranchers want. They’re not saying that they don’t want safe operations. They’re not saying that they don’t want a safe home and workplace. What they’re saying is that they want to be consulted and assured and know that they can trust the government, that the regulations that come into force at the end of next year aren’t going to be a surprise, aren’t going to do all of the things that the opposition is concerned that they might do.

The only way forward, the only way that that can happen is if this government taps the brakes, sends it to committee, or even better, kills the bill altogether then comes back once they’ve consulted. They can provide a clear view of what the regulations look like, and then they can start this process over. One thing that I am very confident in is that if they choose not to do that, the rest of the quote from the hon. minister will also come true.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I think we made quite a bit of progress tonight – very interesting debate – but seeing as the hour is late, I will move that we adjourn.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 1:03 a.m. on Thursday to 9 a.m.]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. As we come to the end of a busy week, let us remember that our role as public servants is to put aside our own self-interest and work to make life better for the people we serve. Today we mark the start of the holiday season, so may peace and goodwill towards others be our guide.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 4

An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act

[Debate adjourned December 2: Mrs. Aheer speaking]

The Chair: We are on amendment A6. Do we have any speakers to this amendment? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. If I'm not mistaken, we are debating a subamendment right now regarding ministerial stipends.

The Chair: We're just on the amendment. It would have been your amendment, yes.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. We'll continue debate on this.

I think it is an important and common-sense amendment to this bill. Bill 4 is not the budget itself, but Bill 4 is legislation that will enable the budget to be implemented. Interestingly enough, I'm not sure that this budget is able to be implemented until this bill is passed, which is interesting because the government seems to be moving forward with some of the measures in the budget before it is even enabled by this bill.

This amendment is a constructive point being put forward by the Official Opposition to ensure that if the government does not follow its own laws, there are some consequences. The government has put forward a significantly higher debt ceiling than has previously been in place. You know, after the tough budget measures of 1993 we came to a point where once the budget was balanced, the government outlawed deficits on both an operational and a consolidated basis.

As time has gone on, governments have subsequently loosened those rules, allowing for minor borrowing and then major borrowing. A debt ceiling had been put in place. When the Fiscal Responsibility Act and Government Accountability Act were repealed in the winter of 2013, we protested. We said that the debt ceiling being put forward was a soft ceiling. It's a ceiling that any government, any future government, can easily change as soon as they run into that debt limit. But we were assured at the time that it would never go further, that that was an appropriate amount of debt to take on, and that we could just trust the politicians that it wouldn't go any further.

Well, I was skeptical then, and I'm skeptical now of the government's claim that they will never exceed the 15 per cent debt limit. In fact, I'm almost positive that they will. DBRS said just the other day that without a significant course correction the government of Alberta is likely to blow right through that 15 per cent debt limit.

Now, I know the hon. Minister of Finance has publicly stated that that will not be the case, that we will stay below our 15 per cent debt limit, but I don't think the numbers for that add up. We've seen the fiscal projections in the budget itself, which have oil projected to be significantly higher than virtually all other major credible indicators that aggregate oil prices. Compared to the Parliamentary Budget Officer's estimates, that will leave an $8 billion hole in our budget over the next three years alone. That will have a significant impact on our debt-to-GDP growth as our revenues fall short. Also, the GDP projections in the PBO and other credible private-sector forecasters have GDP growth lower than the government is projecting here. So the lower GDP and the higher debt make it much easier for us to run into our new proposed cap of a 15 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio even before the next election.

Compounding this is that in years 4 and 5 of the budget there are no details. In fact, years 4 and 5 of the budget are little more than a brochure where the government promises to get back to balance but doesn't provide a shred of data about how they'll do that. They don't provide a line-by-line breakdown of revenues. In years 1, 2, and 3 of the budget you can see how much the government projects to bring in from personal income tax, corporate income tax, gasoline tax, insurance tax, tobacco tax, alcohol taxes, royalties from oil, royalties from gas. There is a long list that is at least somewhat defensible for years 1, 2, and 3 of the budget. But in years 4 and 5 they provide nothing. They say only how much money they expect to have in total revenues, and then they say how much they expect to spend in total expenditures.

They don't break down, as they do in years 1, 2, and 3, how much they'll spend on the Department of Finance or the Department of Health or the Department of Education, Human Services. That breakdown is provided for earlier years but is not provided for years 4 and 5 of the budget. All they show is that they'll have a reasonable level of an ability to curb the growth of expenditures but that revenues will somehow increase by a whopping 16 per cent, a 16 per cent increase in revenues without any justification whatsoever as to how they expect to get there. So an unreasonably high projected GDP growth, unreasonably high projected oil prices for years 1, 2, and 3, and for years 4 and 5 no explanation whatsoever of how they'll get a 15, 16 per cent increase in revenues. This all leaves me to believe that the 15 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio that they are proposing will be easily shattered.

Now, the Minister of Finance has assured us that that 15 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio will not need to be increased. Well, I suppose we have little choice but to take the Minister of Finance and Executive Council at their word. So we are proposing to amend Bill 4 with a subsection requiring that if the government exceeds its debt-to-GDP ratio of 15 per cent, a 15 per cent debt ceiling, ministerial stipends will be clawed back. That is requiring that the government put its money where its mouth is. That is requiring that if this government actually believes its own laws that it's proposing, they should have no problem passing this.

When ordinary Albertans break the law, there are consequences. If one of us drove home, to our Edmonton residence – you know, just the other week I got a parking ticket. I parked where I shouldn't have.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Fildebrandt: It was shameful indeed. Shameful indeed.

I was quite upset to see that I had a parking ticket for $40, but – you know what? – I deserved the parking ticket because I didn't obey the rules. The same thing should apply to the government. When the government does something against its own laws, they deserve a ticket. They shouldn't go to jail for it, but they should probably pay a fine. The same goes for any Albertan. If you get a speeding ticket, well, you don't get to just answer for it with a police officer in question period. If you get a parking ticket, you don't get to debate with the bylaw officer in question period and wiggle off the hook and not answer any questions about it. You've got to pay the ticket. The only person you can argue with is the judge. The government would certainly be free to argue its case in front of a judge if they'd broken their own laws. If you don't pay your credit card on time, you pay a penalty.

In life there are penalties for not following the rules, but for some reason there is no penalty when politicians break the rules. When the Minister of Finance broke the law and failed to table a second-quarter fiscal update in this House on or before November 30 of this year, he was in violation of the Fiscal Management Act. He has said that the government had put forward Bill 4, which gives him, essentially, a mulligan on that one. But we're debating Bill 4 right now. Bill 4 is not law; Bill 4 is merely a proposal. Assuming that this House will change the law doesn't mean you're allowed to break it before that law changes. In fact, if we do not have any kind of penalty for breaking the law and the government can bring forward legislation willy-nilly to allow it to break the law retroactively, we are setting a very dangerous precedent. We're allowing the government to break the law one day and then insist that it will change the law a week later to retroactively let it break the law.

Now, I haven't paid my parking ticket yet, and I'm considering doing the same thing with the city of Edmonton. Perhaps we should propose a bylaw to the city of Edmonton giving me a one-time exemption on my parking ticket. [interjection] I'm pleased to see members support this. We'll have to put it forward to Edmonton city council. We'll put forward a motion to the Edmonton city council saying, "Well, I really should have been parking there anyway. Why not? I'm a politician. Why not? We should be parking where we want. So let's retroactively pass a law to let me get away with that one. It's a gimme; it's a mulligan. It's a mulligan. Give us a mulligan, but going forward we'll obey the law." But if we run into that law again, well . . .

An Hon. Member: We'll do it again.

Mr. Fildebrandt: We can do it again. We can do it again.

That sounds familiar. Who does that sound like? Another elected body that constantly changes its own laws, a debt ceiling if you will. A debt ceiling. Who would that be? Who would it be? Bizarre to see the NDP follow the example of the United States Republicans. Bizarre that we would have to make a comparison of the Alberta NDP to the U.S. Republicans, constantly changing their debt limit.

Dr. Turner: A pretty successful government.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I think the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud just called the United States Republicans a very successful government. I'm shocked and interested.

An Hon. Member: They did stop the pipeline.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yeah.

It is a dangerous precedent that we would be setting, Madam Chair. We have an obligation to the people of Alberta to follow our own laws. People are cynical enough about politicians. You know what? They have good reason. I think everybody in this House is here for the right reasons, fighting for what they believe in, but people still have reason to be cynical about politicians. We sit here all day passing laws, making laws, amending laws, but for some reason the laws that we make for ourselves don't have any consequences when we break them. That gives people reason to be cynical.

When the Minister of Finance is required to table a fourth-quarter fiscal update and he doesn't but he's required to by law, people say: well, what can we do? I know we posted the video of question period on that matter on our Facebook page, and I had constituents saying, "Well, shouldn't the police do something? They broke the law," because laws made for the regular people have consequences. We don't make laws for the people outside of this place that they're allowed to break without consequence. Can we think of any laws that we pass for everybody outside here who pays taxes that they're allowed to break and we don't do anything about? Are there any laws that we pass that we don't enforce, that we just pass because they sound nice? Laws shouldn't just be suggestions. Laws should be hard, they should be enforceable, and they should have consequences for breaking them. They shouldn't be mere suggestions for the people who make them.

So what this is doing is putting some teeth in the act. Cabinet needs to be accountable for its spending. If cabinet is not responsible with spending and goes over its limits, then there needs to be consequences for that. Right now there's no accountability. Laws are here to hold us accountable. They're not here to be mere guidelines.

I am not too concerned that the ministers across, if they were deprived of cabinet stipends if they break the law, would necessarily be starving and begging for change. They would still be entitled to their entire MLA pay, a pretty handsome salary, that we all receive. They'll still be entitled to their vehicle allowance. They'll still be entitled to their living allowance. They'll still be entitled to per diems. They'll be entitled to all of their expenses. They'll still be entitled to their offices and their staff and all of the perks that come with being a cabinet minister. All that would happen is that the extra bump in pay that you get for being a cabinet minister would be rolled back temporarily until they're back in compliance with the law. That's actually pretty soft.

Mr. Hanson: No one is going to jail.

Mr. Fildebrandt: No one is going to jail. In fact, you're not even paying a fine. You start earning the money back once you start complying with it. It's more like a parking ticket. Instead of having a $50 fine, it's a dollar an hour. Then you stop paying it once you move your car. It's real soft, real easy. You get to keep your car there. This doesn't stop the government from going over the 15 per cent debt limit. It still allows the government to go over the limit, but there's a soft penalty, but they won't starve in the meantime. They'll still be making far more than the average Albertan. They'll just be making as much as most members of the Legislature, hardly starving.

This amendment still permits the 15 per cent debt ceiling, 15 per cent of the GDP, to be legally exceeded but just attaches penalties to Executive Council for it. This amendment to Bill 4 would have minor, minor consequences compared to the effect that it will have on everyday Albertans. While some cabinet ministers will not earn a huge salary, they'll now just earn a really good salary.

Albertans, by contrast, will have to pay higher taxes because debt is just deferred taxes. Debt today is tomorrow's taxes. By year 3 of the budget the government is already proposing that we'll be spending $1.3 billion a year on debt interest payments. That is the combined equivalent of six entire ministries. Think about that for a moment. The debt interest payments that the government is proposing just by year 3, not even year 5, could afford six entire ministries of the government. If the government exceeds the 15 per cent debt limit, our debt-servicing costs will easily surpass $2 billion to $3 billion a year. That will mean one of two things, either less services or higher taxes. Instead of paying for six ministries of the government at $1.3 billion, perhaps it will be eight, nine, or 10 ministries in the government that could be paid for by debt interest costs.

Or, by contrast, the government can do what its instincts tell it to do and just raise taxes. At every turn when this government has run into any bump on the road, their knee-jerk reaction has just been to raise taxes, even taxes that they have no mandate from the people to implement, a $3 billion carbon tax, a backdoor PST.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. The Member for Strathmore-Brooks is absolutely, one hundred per cent correct again. Section 3 of this act – and an act is law. I've dealt with issues under the Water Act. Some people think that they can flout the act because it's just a guideline, but it is not. These are actually laws.

For a fiscal year Crown debt shall not exceed 15 per cent of GDP for Alberta. That's pretty simple, straightforward. It's fairly easy to ride within that law. It's no different than the argument that's used for photoradar or for speeding. If you don't want to get a fine, don't speed. It's as simple as that. So it's pretty easy for the government, and I see no reason why they wouldn't accept this amendment on those grounds. All it does is put some reason and some penalty that if you do break the law, you pay the consequences. I don't think it's unreasonable for anybody in this House to consider that a manageable amendment. The cabinet has to be accountable for government spending, and those responsible for spending beyond their means should face consequences for their actions. It's fairly simple, straightforward.

Another one of the amendments that was asking to reduce this limit was defeated. Now we're at 15 per cent, which is in the act. I think it's not unreasonable to put some consequences to that penalty. Therefore, I mean, I'm going to be voting in favour of this amendment, and I think that all members should consider that there should be some penalty. You know, it's easy. If there's absolutely no penalty for speeding, people aren't going to slow down. It's absolutely ludicrous to think so.

I would ask if somebody else would like to talk about their feelings on breaking the law. Is it a good idea? Should it be allowed? At what point, if we allow this to go through and the government breaks its own law with no penalty, is somebody going to use that as a defence in court when it comes to a charge under the Alberta criminal code? You know, there are laws in Alberta that they could say: "Hey, well, you know, the government broke the law, and they had no penalty, so I broke the law. Why should I have a penalty?"

Those are my thoughts on it. I'm going to be voting in support of this, and I look forward to any other comments.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to this amendment. You know, when I think about 15 per cent and a debt ceiling that is going to cost this province as we accumulate more and more debt, we're just saying that we're going to only accumulate debt to a 15 per cent debt ceiling. That scares me a little bit. I know that I've talked with many members of this House, and some of the members of this House have come from jobs and backgrounds that have provided them with a very significant remuneration. I'm not trying to claim poverty or anything like that. I think that as a teacher I got a good salary, but as a single-income teacher with three kids, and three kids now in university, there are some realities in life, and one of them is that usually at the end of the month there was less paycheque than there were bills. That meant that sometimes we had to be very creative.

I wish I'd had the opportunity to have a debt ceiling in my life sometimes, to be able to know when to borrow and when not to borrow, to know how much I could borrow, and if I needed more than what I thought I needed originally, to be able to borrow more.

I know that I taught with many wonderful people over my career, and everybody approaches this differently. That's fair enough. Everybody's got to make their own choices in life, and everybody's got to make their own decisions about how best to take care of their families and how to spend the money that they make. I know that I can think of one colleague who always surprised me a little bit in that they always could find another reason to borrow money and to spend. You know, they needed the latest gadget, the latest iPhone, or they needed this car, or they needed that. And because we were a single-income family, we just never had those options.

So when I look at debt and when I look at a budget and when I look at a debt ceiling, I guess it's one of the reasons why I am a fiscal conservative. It's because of where I've come from and it's because of the life I've had to live. I look at debt very, very hesitantly. I know that in my life I could have a mortgage, or I could have a car payment, but I couldn't have both. When I started looking at debt and debt ceilings and whether I would increase the debt load that I would put on myself and my family, I had to be very, very careful. That's why, I guess, I would encourage this government to consider this amendment.

In this amendment it does try to put some consequences to a government that faces a lot of pressures, and I fully agree. I mean, I understand that sometimes it's not easy being a minister. You're smiling at me. That's good. I'm glad you're enjoying this. One of the realities and the differences between where you sit and I sit is that you actually have to make the decisions. You have the power to make those choices, and you have the responsibility when you make those choices. We all understand the nature of the game that we play here, of the roles that we play here in government, that in the Executive Council you have the responsibility for setting the direction of spending for the province of Alberta. We've heard many times in this House from various members of Executive Council that everybody's asking for money. There's always a good reason to ask for money. I actually understand that. There's some truth there. I mean, I'm going to be asking for money for Drayton Valley at times, and everybody's going to be asking for money for their constituencies. I understand. It's a tough place to be sometimes, and everybody in Alberta can give good reasons for why they need the money from the government that they need.

I'm not even going to argue that they aren't good reasons and that they aren't valid reasons. That's one of the tough things about being in government, isn't it? You've got to try to make those decisions about when to spend and when not to spend and whom to spend the money on and how to spend it. One of the problems that arises in a democratic system is that we all recognize we need votes. If we don't get voted back into power, we can't have power, and we can't make those decisions. It's very hard on a government sometimes to stop spending because there's a lot of pressure from Albertans and from constituents and from other MLAs to do exactly that, spend.

What happens is that we then go: "Okay. Well, it's a good reason. Let's spend it. All right. This is a good cause. We'll spend here." Pretty soon that debt ceiling gets exceeded, and we've got a problem because you've set that. You've said to yourselves that this is a 15 per cent debt ceiling, that we're not going to increase our debt past that debt ceiling, yet there are all sorts of demands for that money and for that spending.

I think Albertans understand that. I think Albertans understand the pressures that the government is placed under and that the executive has to make these tough choices. I think Albertans would support this amendment because sometimes it actually makes it easier for you to govern. If there's a rule, if there's a law, if there's a ceiling and there are penalties, you can actually go back to the people and say: "You know what? I'm sorry. We have to stop spending. It's against the law for us to go above this 15 per cent debt ceiling."

Now, as a teacher we would try to help our kids understand that there is a thing called the rule of law and that it's one of the cornerstones of democracy, that no one is above the law. Everyone is expected to obey the law. If you break that law, it doesn't matter whether you're the hon. member who just spoke here, who got a parking ticket. It doesn't matter if you're the Premier. It doesn't matter if you're one of the MLAs. It doesn't matter who you are. The law applies equally to all of us. It's a part of our democratic system, and it's a very important part. I don't think there's anybody in here that's going to argue that.

One of the realities of our democratic system is that it's made up of a system of checks and balances that hold the Executive Council accountable for their choices and for their actions. This 15 per cent debt ceiling, if it has some teeth to it, will be another one of those checks and balances which ends up producing good government at the end of the day. My high school students understood that, and I know that every member in this House understands that idea. It's an okay thing to have teeth in the law sometimes because it does hold us accountable. When we're dealing with something like debt, it can amass so very quickly. I don't know if in your lives it's the truth – it has been in mine – that it's a lot easier to go into debt than it is to get out of debt. Trying to find that money to balance that monthly balance is hard. Finding that money to pay off that car loan or pay off that mortgage: that's hard.

When I look at this debt ceiling and I look at this amendment and I see that it actually tries to hold the people that we give an incredible amount of power to accountable for the decisions that they're making, I actually believe it not only makes your job easier, but it's better for the province, and it's better for the people of Alberta.

You see, one of the realities that the government faces is that they are accountable. As a teacher there were times when I had to hold my students accountable for their behaviour, for the work they were handing in. There were times when I would have to sometimes confront them. "Sorry. This just isn't good enough. Do you understand why this work isn't good enough? Can I sit down with you? Can I help you to understand why that decision that you've made or this argument that you've put into this essay or this decision for how you behaved in my class is not acceptable?" Normally you try to find an accommodation. I'm sure that every one of you in this room, in this Legislative Assembly, has probably had that conversation with a teacher or a parent of some sort where they're holding you accountable. It's a part of making us well-rounded people. I always believed as a teacher that if I did not hold my students accountable for their decisions, they would not grow, they would not engage in their learning, and they would not get better. So I believe that this is actually helping our government get better.

When you hold yourselves accountable for the decisions that you make on how we spend money and you put some teeth into it – and this isn't really onerous. Saying that we're not going to give you those stipends because you've exceeded the 15 per cent debt limit, it's not – I mean, nobody loses their job. Nobody is losing their life. But it's that little reminder that says: "You know what? That 15 per cent debt ceiling actually has meaning." It's just another little layer of accountability. It's a part of what we call responsible government, the idea that you have power but not the power to do whatever you want, whenever you want, however you want, to whomever you want, that you actually do answer to other people. In my case I answer to my constituents. When you're on Executive Council, you answer not only to the people of Alberta, but, through their representatives in this House, you answer to the opposition.

This opportunity that we have to talk about debt ceilings and to come together as a Legislature and to listen to each other and to consider is a rare privilege. We must support this idea, not only of the rule of law but of responsible government, that the buck does stop with the minister. Who was it – President Truman? – that said, "The buck stops here"? You know, there is a man who understood the idea of democratic government, who understood that when you're the President of the United States and you have executive power, that power does stop with you. You are responsible for that power, and you are accountable to a Legislative Assembly and to a Supreme Court and to the people.

Dr. Turner: The president responsible for the Marshall Plan as well.

Mr. Smith: Yeah. Absolutely.

Dr. Turner: The U.S. government went into debt for that.

Mr. Smith: You haven't heard me talk about the fact that we should never have any debt, but we have to be very wise. We can have that conversation. But the point is this. Having a debt ceiling and this amendment is actually a very wise idea.

You know, I taught social 30-1 and 30-2 and all the levels of social that you could teach, and I realized that there were times, if you can believe it, when there were kids that would come into my class that weren't always enamoured with the concept of social studies. When they would come into my class, sometimes they were pretty cynical when we started talking about government. Part of my job was to try to break through that veneer, to try to help them to not be cynical when the topic became government. How could I help these students of mine to see that this was an incredibly important job done by people basically of goodwill who are trying to be able to pass laws and uphold the laws that actually help us to have community?

Cynicism is probably one of the worst things that we can have in a democracy. It actually kills democracy. I believe that one of the things that builds cynicism sometimes, not always but sometimes, in ourselves and within our citizens is when we say one thing and we do another, when we pass a law but then don't obey that law or live up to that law and we don't hold ourselves accountable to that law.

Now, we can all fall, we can all screw up, we can all say the wrong thing at the right time, we can all park in the wrong place at the wrong time, and even cabinet ministers and governments can sometimes do the wrong thing. But when you have the ability to point to a law and to say clearly, “You’ve gone past this point, and there’s a penalty for it,” it helps to reduce the cynicism that the people see. If we obey that law, if we follow the rule of law, we actually do what we’ve said that we’re going to do. I don’t think any of us are unaware that sometimes people might think that politicians are sometimes just a little bit hypocritical. We play the game.

Well, I guess I would speak to this amendment and ask that we not play a game, that we actually look at the debt ceiling, see the value of having that debt ceiling – and I’m glad you’ve put it into this bill – but then that we actually make it enforceable, that we actually have penalty to it, not just so that we can control our spending, not just so that we can make it easier for the government to actually say no sometimes but so that we can actually help to improve our citizens’ understanding of how this system works and the accountability that is built within this system.

These are important concepts. They’re important when you’re raising a family, they’re important when you’re trying to make a budget for yourselves, and they’re important when you’re running a government. These ideas are important. It’s why you start with – basically, you should start, I believe, with a principle and then try to find out how that principle should be enacted in the real world. I think this actually speaks to my heart as a conservative who believes you need to control spending at times, that you need to be careful when you’re around debt, that you need to be wise stewards of the finances that we take from the people of this province, that we ensure that if we do go into debt, there’s a limit and that if we have that limit, we stay within that limit and that we try to make it easy for the government to see that they have to stay within that limit.

I think we all understand that the other side has a majority government. I would appeal to you that perhaps we start listening, as we did a little bit yesterday on Bill 5. We actually listened to some of these things. Maybe we’re not going to agree. That’s fine. Maybe you’ve got another agenda, and you need to go one way. That’s fine. We understand that. I don’t know how many of you heard this morning the CBC as I was coming in. They were talking about Bill 5 and the rare occurrence that, I guess, occurred yesterday and the amendments that were passed and how those amendments actually made the bill better and how this House was working together.

I would speak to this amendment because I think it’s a common-sense amendment. I think that it actually will make this government a better government, and it will make ourselves as legislators perhaps move in a direction that will allow the people of this province to re-establish a positive view of the people that are in here, the people that are working hard to try and serve the people of this great province.

You know, I once had an opportunity to talk to the grandson of Frederick Haultain. One of the things that Haultain always talked about was the fact that if he’d had his way with the . . . [Mr. Smith’s speaking time expired]

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this amendment and to encourage all members of the House to consider it and to support it. The current legislation, as it now exists and has existed for several years, is sometimes referred to as Alberta’s financial firewall to protect us from mistakes of government and the temptations of government to extend its reach.

In the IT world no one would consider operating an IT system without a very serious firewall. The point of a firewall, actually, is to protect the integrity of the system. That’s what the point of our financial firewall is: to protect our government, to protect our province.

The other point of it is to maintain the integrity of the system so that it is not broken down, so that it is not destroyed. I think we need to maintain the integrity of our financial firewall. If you have a firewall and you begin to poke holes in it or lower it down to the point where anybody can just pass over it, which would be the case if we move in the direction we’re moving, then the firewall really doesn’t have any merit or value to it anymore. It will be breached. That, I think, is the point of some of the arguments that have been made here.

The reality is that I don’t think the people of Alberta trust the track record of previous NDP governments, at least to not overspend. Reputation, I guess, often precedes us, and reputation in this case causes people to be questioning the reality of even keeping 15 per cent if that’s what it’s set at.

The contingency fund and its limitations are actually meant to deliberately constrain and to create self-restraint on the part of government. When a person owns the cookie jar and can take of it as they choose, there needs to be self-restraint of some sort. There needs to be some way to contain them. One of the great philosophical problems of politics has been the question that’s been asked already: what to do when politicians break their own laws or the will of the people. The answer, the only answer that’s ever there, is to create laws that restrain them or at least help to restrain them.

Blatantly stating, “I will not be constrained” or “I won’t be constrained” has, in fact, the effect of raising the debt limit, raising the debt ceiling, and granting the government authority to just continue to proceed along that way. So I am concerned. Exceeding the debt limit, which is a very likely possibility, would in fact be breaking the law, and I believe there should be consequences to it. The whole point of this is that governments should be accountable. In reality, maybe the focus here should be on cabinet because it is cabinet that has the authority to make these decisions. It is cabinet that can make the spending decisions, is responsible for spending, so they should face the consequences in some form or another. I don’t mean that as a punishment. I simply mean that as an aid or as an assistance to remain accountable. Often if consequences are too many years out, then it’s too easy to break them, so consequences should be immediate and be felt.

Now, the reality is that this amendment doesn’t suggest anything that is overly harsh. Cabinet ministers would still have their full salary, their expenses. In fact, this amendment still permits, if the government insists, the 15 per cent limit to be exceeded legally. But there is a consequence, a minor consequence. It needs to be a minor consequence of some type, and the consequence to cabinet ministers would be minor compared to what Albertans would experience. The reality is that government is not an autonomous body. It has the legal role of a trustee, and trustees are accountable all across our society, so then why should the government not also be accountable? Government that is democratic is accountable to the people.

I have to support this amendment. I have to suggest that it is the only – there has to be some sort of accountability in this. In a way, what we’re trying to do is to protect the government’s reputation on credit rating. I know that the Minister of Finance has quite rightly bragged a number of times that our credit rating is triple A, that we’re in good shape. The reality is, though, that for this government that is an inherited rating. You actually didn't create it, and I am concerned that you are in fact undermining it.

I guess I would wonder if we're not – while I think we should support this amendment because if some sort of consequence isn't in place, then the reality is, as the Dominion Bond Rating Service has already warned, that our credit rating will go down. I wonder what the minister's response to us and comments would be if after his regime and his leadership the credit rating does in fact go down. We need to make sure that it doesn't. I think that it would be to the benefit of all Albertans and the credibility of the government to be willing to make themselves accountable in some sort of tangible means and to demonstrate to Albertans that they actually do want to be accountable and they're not just prepared to keep raising a debt ceiling without any personal consequences.

I think I will leave it at that. Those are my main points. Thank you.

The Chair: Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment. I just want to take a moment to speak about something that maybe hasn't been mentioned yet about the value of an amendment like this but specifically to this particular amendment. Trust in a relationship is a fragile commodity. It takes years of consistent care to build what psychologists call a high-trust culture. It was not that long ago when the world was shocked as major corporation after major corporation was caught cheating in the financial reporting on the health of those corporations. We were all shocked at the scope of that, WorldCom, Enron. My goodness. We no sooner had had a week full of Enron before there was another one and another one and another one. It just seemed like it wasn't going to stop. No sooner had that happened than it was followed by the entire global financial system beginning to collapse as revelations regarding the skullduggery and the backroom deals in the financial services industry started to come out in the press and through investigations by the SEC, in the States, and other such regulatory agencies around the world. Again, we were shocked. Trust had been broken.

Those revelations were also followed by some more revelations. You know, I've been in business and seen some of the just nasty stuff that goes on in board meetings and the decisions that boards take sometimes that are at least questionable. The part of that whole scandal that bothered me personally the most was that in the financial services industry there were analysts, traders, and CEOs that were still receiving bonuses of millions of dollars while these companies were going down. To me, that was the most evil part of it all. A junior analyst, a senior analyst: it didn't seem to matter. How can that person be receiving – I remember one that was a $1.2 million bonus, and the company was going down. It just blew me away.

There was no accountability, and trust was broken on so many levels. So many levels. Even trust in the Securities and Exchange Commission was destroyed. They had a huge trust deficit following that. They recognized that, by the way, and did something about it.

In spite of the inept handling of billions of dollars of other people's money, these people were receiving bonuses anyway. These market analysts, these CEOs, these senior management people are essentially in the very same position that the ministers in this government are in. The ministers in this government control billions of dollars of other people's money. It's just like these people.

Now, there were charges laid. Some of those people are in jail. There were fines levied. You know, the litigations go on and on. They're still going on and on today. Trust had been destroyed in the relationship between the shareholders and corporate executives and even between the consuming public and producers of consumer goods. Trust had been broken.

The issue that I see before this House right now is that – you know, I'm sure that everybody in this room during the election heard a similar story from the electorate: we don't trust politicians; we don't trust government anymore; we don't trust the democratic process anymore. I had people that – and I'm thinking of one particular couple right now, because I come from a floor-crosser riding – were in tears as they expressed to me the grief they had about the trust that had been broken with the former MLA when that individual crossed the floor. They were crying, an elderly couple crying, and it broke my heart to think that that trust had been broken there between them and an elected official that they put their trust in. Every single one of us have people back home in our ridings who have entrusted us to be here.

The people of Alberta have this democratic process, this Legislature, this Executive Council, and so on, these democratic institutions in which they are told repeatedly: "Trust. Trust us. Trust us." Over and over and over again. Well, as I said, trust is a very fragile relationship, and the trust between the people of Alberta and our democratic institutions right now isn't that good. These kinds of amendments that we have before us right now in fact this specific amendment that we have right now, if adopted, could go a long way in starting to rebuild a trust that has been broken. I think that's worth considering by every one of us in this room. We need to do those things that engender trust, and this one will do it.

You know, we have a Minister of Finance that has put forward a budget. That budget is based on estimates given to him by the various ministries and their staff. Of course, you are now asking the people of Alberta, who have lost trust in government – in fact, they've lost trust so much that they threw that previous government out. That was the reason. I remember speaking to one politician from Ontario. He said that Canadians never elect governments; they throw governments out. It's always over trust issues. If you really boil it on down, it's always over trust issues.

So we have now a budget that's before the people of Alberta. The Minister of Finance is saying: trust me. Every minister in the council is saying: "Trust me. Trust our estimates. Trust our revenue projections, and trust our expense projections. Just trust us, Alberta. It's going to be okay." But then this government changes a long-standing law that was a trust law. That law that prohibited a government from borrowing for operation: that was a trust law. The moment that this government removed that law, it was like an axe to the root of the trust tree. You just chopped it again. You removed an element of trust. Well, faith is like a tree, hon. minister. Do you get it? If you go to church, you'll understand what I'm talking about. The faith tree. Faith and trust: same thing.

Now, the minister has told the people of Alberta: trust my budget. All the ministers have said, I suppose, to the hon. Minister of Finance: trust my numbers, hon. minister, and add them up. Then the minister has to trust those ministers' projections and add them all up and come to the House and come to the people of Alberta and say: "Trust us. It's going to be okay. Oh, but, yeah, we want to remove this one law. Oh, trust us, but we also want to change the cap on borrowing. But trust us; 15 per cent will be okay. We'll never go above 15 per cent. Just trust us."

Then along comes an amendment that says: "All right. Put your money where your mouth is. Put your money, Mr. Minister, where your mouth is. If you really trust your projections and you really trust your revenue and expenses, go ahead and put your money where your mouth is. Go ahead and do it." This amendment makes you put your money where your mouth is. That's all that this amendment is asking. It is an amendment that could start instilling trust again, so don't pass this one up. Refusing, in fact, to support this kind of an amendment that fosters accountability . . . [interjections] I'll repeat that again since the hon. members over there are – it looks like video games or something. Refusing to support an amendment that fosters accountability . . . [interjections]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake has the floor.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I was a teacher. I understand unruly classroom chatter. I get that. Those are the same ones that usually didn't get a passing grade when the tests came around.

An Hon. Member: They failed.

Mr. MacIntyre: They failed.

Refusing to support an amendment that fosters accountability really completely destroys any trust that this government was sincere in its claims during the election of providing a more trustworthy, more transparent, more accountable government than the previous government. Those were the claims that were made during the election, yet we have seen instance after instance after instance where this government is refusing to take advantage of measures that could in fact prove trustworthiness, accountability, and transparency.

Now, the good people of Alberta recently threw a government out over these very same issues. This amendment is offering this government an opportunity to take a concrete step toward building trust. But one thing that I have noticed in just the few months that we've been in this House is that this government never misses an opportunity to miss an opportunity. Here we are again. We have an amendment before this House that is an opportunity for you, given to you to build some trust in the hearts and minds of Albertans. Put your money, ministers, on the line because every law that you make puts the people of Alberta's money on the line. They're hurting right now. They're suffering right now. We've seen more taxes, more taxes, and more taxes. Everything this government has done is putting Albertans' money on the line with no cost to those who are doing it to them. There needs to be some trust built, and this is that opportunity for you to do it.

I support this amendment. It is a great amendment. Don't miss this opportunity. Don't miss this opportunity to start building trust with the people.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Just before I call on the next hon. member to comment, with the indulgence of the House I just want to acknowledge that we have a lovely group of young people, a school group, up there. I'm not sure which school they're from, but I would like to welcome them here. It's great to have them.

Do we have the next hon. member willing to speak to this amendment? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm happy to rise and speak in favour of this amendment. I guess that's no surprise. What I'd like to start off with, though, is that the gross domestic product is one of the country's primary indicators used to gauge the health of the country's economy, the province's economy in this case. I'd like to know: what provisions do you have in place to punish a government if they exceed the 15 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio? This amendment addresses that. This amendment puts that disincentive,

I guess, if you want to look at it that way, in place to say: no, you shouldn't be going past the 15 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio.

In my Battle River-Wainwright riding, my constituency riding, I was given a budget. I was given a budget, and I was told that if I exceed that budget, that money is coming out of my pocket. I'm having to put my money where my mouth is. If I go and exceed this, there are going to be punishments in place which hit my pocketbook. What we've talked about with this one is that if you exceed this, there should be punishments in place for the ministers that exceed this.

Mr. MacIntyre: Consequences.

Mr. Taylor: Yeah. Consequences. That's a better word. I agree with that.

We certainly need consequences when they exceed it. We've got to ask: what protections have you decided to put in place for this so that our future generations are not going to be saddled with more debt?

This amendment stems from the bill. This bill is about enabling the government to implement higher taxes, more debt. More debt, Madam Chair. It refuses to reduce the bloated spending. You know, no government has ever borrowed its way to a balanced budget, and certainly no government will be able to borrow its way to a surplus budget. We need to somehow curtail the money that the NDP government is throwing around this province. We have to have a plan. Let's get straight with the deficit budgets that lead to higher debts, which eventually lead to an unstable economy, something that we've already seen because of this government's and the previous government's spending practices.

Madam Chair, does no one understand that the cost associated with paying off debt takes away money that could be used to build hospitals, schools, roads? The list goes on. If we continue down this road too long, it's going to impact how many people we will be able to feasibly employ in the future. It will start cutting into jobs and into employees that government is able to employ. So these unionized workers that the NDP are trying to protect right now are probably going to be the same people that they won't be able to afford to keep because there won't be enough money.

You can't keep running higher and higher debts. If we don't have penalties or consequences to stop people from exceeding the debt limits, then we will look at the problem of perhaps having to lay off people or not hire as many people. The same people, again, like I said, that are the union workers, the same front-line workers that now you're trying to protect: you're going to have to look at them and say: can't afford them. Do you want to be known as the party that kills jobs, kills front-line workers? If you continue down this path, I believe that's going to be the inevitable consequence.

Let's break down this bill and be clear about what it's showing will eventually happen. This bill is about enabling governments to inflict higher taxes on Albertans, to run operational deficits, which for decades have been, frankly, illegal. I don't believe we want to be going there. Other places have tried this. You know, the United States: another example. They've been widening this up. They keep raising their debt ceiling and raising their debt ceiling. Eventually they're going to have to pay the piper. How is it going to affect them in their job situation? It's absolutely going to affect them. Do we want to keep going there?

If we exceed the debt ceiling, you can be assured that it's going to hit Alberta taxpayers. It's going to hit them in the pocketbook through higher taxes. The credit rating for this province will get worse. Eventually, if we keep exceeding this, we'll be dropping our credit rating. We have a triple-A credit rating. Absolutely fantastic. I don't want to see us go to a place where our credit rating will be hurt in the future. Would the Finance minister resign if we drop our credit rating? That's a question.

From worse credit rating to higher borrowing costs, higher taxes, not to mention that we have to pay it all back – eventually it's got to be paid back, so we can't just keep running this way. We need to put teeth into this act. I'm borrowing a quote from the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. He said it earlier, and I thought that it was an apropos thing to say: put teeth into the act to say that you cannot exceed this 15 per cent; otherwise, there are penalties. Then that's probably the best way to go because we now can have a means or a mechanism, consequences, if that gets exceeded.

When I ran my business – and I've run several businesses, and they've all been successful – I had to budget. I had to make sure to budget for myself. I had to make sure I budgeted for a profit. The government doesn't have to look for a profit. They have to look for a balanced budget; that's the goal. For myself, I had to budget for a profit. Whenever I was building a project or working with my different – well, let's go to my real estate company. I hired staff. I hired agents, and I had to make sure that they were looked after, that they were paid, but I had to make sure that, at the end of the day, there was enough money there to keep operating. We want the government to be able to operate that same way. We want the government, at the end of the day, to have balanced books. Otherwise, if we have $2 billion or more in debt, then $50 billion in debt, it's going to take $2 billion just to pay it off, just for the deficit.

Mr. MacIntyre: That's the debt servicing?

Mr. Taylor: The debt servicing. Thank you.

So it's going to be $2 billion in debt servicing. That $2 billion: well, it affects the people in my riding. It affects them because we know that it's going to cost $241 million to build a hospital. That's what we were told from the last estimate, $241 million. We're looking at eight comparable hospitals that will now not be built every year that we're having to service that debt. We don't want to be going down that road. We don't want to be losing schools, hospitals, roads, and bridges that could be built just because we're servicing debt.

We need to run this more like you would a well-run household. You have a certain amount of money coming in, and that's what you can spend. In a household if you spend more than what you have, then eventually the bank is going to come knocking on your door and say: "I want your money. I want your keys. I want all of this. We're shutting you down. You're bankrupt." I don't want to see us in a situation where our credit rating gets lower and lower and we're paying higher and higher debts. Those are the inevitable consequences.

For these reasons I'm voting in favour of this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you. A couple of things I would like to add, and I'd like, if I can, to begin with just a bit of a personal story. I grew up in a situation where we didn't always have money. I suppose one of my most powerful memories is the day – my father was away trying to get work; my mother was home – that a finance company came and repossessed the only car we had out of the driveway. I remember my mother trying to argue with him, beg him, but he took the keys, and he took the vehicle, and she was left in tears. Shortly after that, we lost our house, lived in somebody else's house through their generosity and goodness for about a year, until my father was finally able to find work again. I think it's extremely important that we do manage our finances carefully. Some of my position is born out of that experience and reality of life, that if you get yourself in trouble with debt, there is a day of reckoning.

Canada, in fact, survived the recent financial and banking crisis, that spread around the world – it was actually initiated by the American policies – for one reason. Because Canada's banking rules and regulations themselves were more restrictive and better built than most other countries in the world, Canada as a result has had an extremely positive reputation in regard to our banking practices.

I'm reminded of Henry Ford, who said, "You can't build a reputation on what you are going to do." It's based on what we have done, and other people form their valuation of what our reputation is. You see, the whole point of branding in the financial industry is trust. How many financial institutions can you think of that use the name "trust" in them? A lot of them. Even the major banks, some of them, use it. Financial practices are about trust, and the reason that the marketing, the advertising, the branding of financial institutions is about trust is because trust is so often betrayed.

I fear that the people of this province are going to feel betrayed if our financial firewalls are broken down, holes poked through them, essentially destroyed, because government, if it is anything, is a financial institution. The financial systems that we create are some of the most important systems that we create. In fact, financial systems that this government creates will define it and define its reputation amongst the people of this province. GAAP, or generally accepted accounting practices, are all about procedure, about best practices. Every time you read an audit and sit down with an auditor, that's what comes up, best practices. An ever-changing debt ceiling, removing best practice financial systems, demolishing our financial firewall are in fact going to betray the trust of the people in our province.

I actually think that this bill is probably one of the biggest game changers that Alberta has seen in a very, very long time. I actually think that this bill, in the long run, will be more important than Bill 6 although Bill 6 gets more traction at the moment. This is an extremely important bill, and for us to allow it to change and not speak about it, not try to create motions – we're giving you endless opportunities to establish trust, to establish your credibility, to create best practices financially.

I have to vote for this motion. I encourage you all to vote for it and think about the fact that the people's view of their trust of your financial institution will be determined by whether or not you follow best practices or look for ways to adjust things to make it easier for yourself. That's what happens in far too many corporations and institutions. That's why we have to actually have audits of institutions, because people don't trust that the ones who write the numbers actually write them truly. So it's extremely important that we support this amendment and that we don't betray the trust of the people in this province.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other member wishing to speak to this amendment?

If not, the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to continue on with some of the points from my colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka. My colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka, I think, has made some very good points about trust, the need to re-establish trust in this institution and trust in the members of this institution, trust in the laws that we have, and trust in the laws we pass because as it stands now, there are no consequences when the people passing the laws break those laws. That's what we are trying to achieve through this amendment.

You know, many of us were elected in constituencies where the trust of voters had been very, very badly broken: Strathmore-Brooks, Lacombe-Ponoka, Little Bow, Airdrie, many members in the House right now. We had been elected in constituencies where people's trust had been broken, and it is our job, parties on all sides, to restore that trust.

Now, we're facing a bill here, Bill 4, which seeks to give the government a blank cheque to run up $50 billion plus in debt. They're calculating it as 15 per cent debt to GDP. The purpose of this amendment is to put teeth into those laws so that Albertans can trust that when we pass laws, we will abide by them. Right now Albertans have no reason to trust this government. They have no reason to trust that when this House passes laws, we're actually going to abide by them. That's the point made very well by the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, that we have to put our money where our mouth is.

The Member for Battle River-Wainwright talked about the consequences of breaking these laws for regular Albertans. There are no consequences for the politicians who break them, but there are great consequences for the Albertans who will have to pay the bills. Now, the Minister of Health says that it's not true that there are no consequences for the politicians. Perhaps the only consequence would be at election time, when people throw them out for breaking them. But in the meantime it allows the politicians to waste the people's money, to break their trust. You know, this is not asking for a limit on the government's doing what they were elected to do; this is asking for consequences for the government's breaking a law that they had no mandate for to begin with.

Is there a single member on the government side who knocked on a door and said, "I will take on $50 billion of debt"? Could one of you raise your hand? No. Not one. Is there a single member in the NDP caucus who knocked on a door or gave a speech and told people, "I will take our debt-to-GDP ratio to 15 per cent, and even then we're not sure if we'll go further"? Is there a single member over there who campaigned on taking on 15 per cent debt to GDP? One? Can you raise your hand? Not one of you campaigned on that, but you're doing it right now.

Is there a single member on that side who said that they would run operational deficits, that they would borrow for operational spending? You said that you'd borrow for spending for three years on a consolidated basis and then balance the budget. You're going to go for a lot longer than that on a consolidated level. But is there a single member over there who ran in the election for a mandate to borrow for the basic operations of the government? Is there one of you? It's pretty quiet. Is there anyone? I don't think there's one who ran on that. I don't think that there is a single member elected to this House who has a mandate to borrow for the basic operations of the government.

I don't believe there's a single member of this House in any party who has a mandate to take on $50 billion of debt. I don't think that there's a single member of this House in any party that has a mandate to take our debt-to-GDP ratio to 15 per cent. Not one of you can say that you have a mandate to do any one of those things. Not one of you can say that you were elected to come here and do that. What we are saying is that if you're going to give yourself that mandate, if you're going to say, "We're going to do it anyway, and to hell with what we promised voters," then we should at least put some limits on that.

You've said that it's going to be 15 per cent, but judging by the fact that not one of you can get up and defend this bill, not one of you will stand up and make a case for having a 15 per cent debt-to-GDP level without any consequence for breaking that in the future – is there a single member on the government side who has the guts to stand up and defend this bill? Is there a single member on the government side who's got the guts to stand up and say why they shouldn't pass this amendment? Is there going to be a single member from the NDP who is going to articulate, or are you just going to follow the orders of your whip? Is there a single member?

An Hon. Member: Let's vote on it and see what happens.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Before we vote on the bill, I'd like to see a single member of that caucus stand up on this amendment and tell us why we shouldn't be passing it. Were you sent here to debate and represent your constituents, or were you just sent here to vote as you're told, like Bill 6?

What are the rural MLAs here on that side of the House doing to consult their constituents right now? What are you doing with your constituents? Are you talking to them, asking them about how you should vote, or are you only asking your whip how you should vote? Are you consulting? Are you consulting with your constituents, or are you just going to do what you're told? I challenge members on the other side, who really don't seem like they want to be here right now, to stand up, to stand up and debate, debate this motion about why you think you deserve to give yourself a mandate, that you were not elected to, to take our debt-to-GDP ratio to 15 per cent, to take on $50 billion of debt, to borrow for the basic operations of the government for the first time since 1992, and to speak to the amendment that would put a small consequence – a small consequence – on the government's cabinet ministers for breaking even that soft promise that you're making afterwards.

Is there a single member of the government caucus who could stand up and speak for your constituents? Have you gone back to your constituents and said: "You know what? I know you didn't elect me to take on $50 billion of debt and raise our debt-to-GDP ratio to 15 per cent"? Has one of you gone back and talked to your constituents and said that that's the cost of this? Of course everybody wants to spend more money – it's nice; it's easy – but there are costs associated with that. Has one of you gone back and held a town hall about how you should be going forward with your budget?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Then one of you or a few of you should. Has a single member of the government asked their constituents at an open forum how much debt they should be taking on? Have you asked your constituents at what level it's enough? At what point is debt too much? You can't take it on forever.

I challenge the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud to have another one of our enlightening exchanges and defend the borrowing that he is proposing. I challenge the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud to speak to the amendment, about why he thinks that his government should be allowed to already break its promises and far exceed – far exceed – the debt that it said it would take on in the general election and have no consequences for the new level that it's proposing. I think he's being told right now that he's not allowed to talk.

Ms McLean: Tell him not to feed the trolls.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Nice to see the government caucus member call its own members trolls. [interjections] I'm debating, the government members are perhaps trolling, but it's all fair.

I challenge the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud to articulate his thoughts in the debate on this amendment. He's not in Executive Council, so it won't dock his pay. He may as well stand up and tell everybody in this House and tell Albertans why he should be allowed to take on $50 billion of debt without any consequence whatsoever.

Well, it looks like he was just told – I'm not sure if that's a deputy whip or not – that he shouldn't be talking. I think that a lot of government members in the last few days have been told not to talk. That's why we were here till about – how late were we here last night? – 1:30 in the morning. I know the members want to hear me all night long, and we were here till 1:30 last night debating Bill 6. We were here till 1:30 in the morning last night debating Bill 6. You know how many members of the NDP stood up last night to defend Bill 6 for their constituents?

The Chair: Hon. member, could you confine your comments to the amendment, please.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Chair, I am speaking to the point of having members of the government side represent their constituents in this debate. Unfortunately, it seems to be that only one side of this House is debating. Only one side of this House is getting up and speaking for their constituents right now. I know members over there want to. I know that some people over there want to stand up, speak for their constituents, but they're being told by their whips not to talk. They're being told to ram bills through this House without debate. That's why last night we were here until 1:30 in the morning and not one government NDP member had the guts to stand up and defend their own government's bills.

Last night we didn't have anyone outside of Standing Order 29(2)(a) for questions and comments. No one stood up and gave their own speech, not a single person. Now, on this amendment, that the government seems intent on not voting for, we can't get a single member of the government to even stand up and talk about it. We can't get a single member of the government to stand up and represent their constituents, their constituents who surely must not want any penalty for breaking the law. How many people have we heard stand up and talk to the amendment today?

Mr. Hanson: None.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Have we heard one stand up and give a speech?

Mr. Hanson: Just some beaking from the backbench.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Just some beaking from the backbench.

We've heard nothing from the government side on this amendment. How is it that they know how to vote? Is it just that their whip has told them to vote against anything that ever comes from the opposition today? Or is it that their whip has said: "Don't bother saying anything. We're trying to ram this through"? Madam Chair, if we can't get a single member of the government to stand up and represent their constituents, then I will move that we call the question and get them on the record.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A6? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to speak to amendment A6. Deficit spending is poor economic policy that will erode services in the long run, contrary to what you believe at this point in time. There are real numbers, real people, and real dollars. The government does not have to look inward and cut the significant amounts of inefficiency and waste. The NDP is more comfortable abusing taxpayer dollars than improving their operational efficiency in the manner that every private-sector company is doing right now.

Meeting or exceeding the debt limit has very real consequences. The reality here is that Albertans are forced to contribute billions of dollars to servicing debt. I know you don't like to pay credit card fees on your bills every month. The government and the people of Alberta certainly don't deserve to be paying those sorts of fees as well. These are Albertans' hard-earned dollars. This is money that will not be invested in Alberta industry, families, and local economies although it happens to be their money. This is extremely important to remember in every single decision that you make here in this House: nothing new will be produced from these funds allocated to debt servicing. They do not go to building anything more: infrastructure, roads, something everybody uses to get to work, to move product, to be industrious, thereby influencing the economy positively as the investment creates a means to work, to be paid.

Debt servicing disrupts important economic drivers. This disrespectful management of our funds, all taxpayer dollars, undermines the proper use of taxpayer dollars. Not only that, but we are talking about potentially exceeding the 15 per cent debt cap. What are the consequences to the government for that? What happens is that by increasing our debt servicing, we will lose our credit rating. This could happen even before reaching that limit if the world sees us as an unreliable borrower and an unrestrained spender. Let me tell you that I think we're very close, and I know I'm not alone. We are a resource-dependent economy. As you know, the ebbs and flows of this economy are unique to Alberta, and it requires finesse to handle the fluctuations and the cyclical nature of this province and to deal with the volatility of the product prices that we depend on for our revenue.

A 15 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio has typically been used as a benchmark figure which jurisdictions must stay below in order to qualify for a triple-A credit rating. Alberta, however, being a resource-dependent economy, has a higher risk classification, and therefore it is necessary for us to stay well below this absolute ceiling of 15 per cent. That 15 per cent debt-to-GDP figure applies to economies deemed less uncertain than our own resource economy here, which relies on a volatile commodity.

When we exceed the 15 per cent – and as I said, there's a very real chance that a downgrade could come at a threshold lower than that – we will see an increase in our debt-servicing costs. This will impact future generations – your children, my children, grandchildren – burdening them with this cost, something no generation will benefit from. Interest payments are not an investment that they can use towards empowering their ability to earn a living and have a good quality of life. Is that what this government wants? Is this what you want for your kids, to saddle our children and our grandchildren with unnecessary debt and debt-servicing costs? What a proud moment. What a legacy. Congratulations.

The government needs to create legislation to secure our financial future, not burden it with debt. Give your heads a shake. You are comparing our economy to other economic jurisdictions that have much more stable economies. There is a legitimate reason to cap it at 15 per cent, which is already too high. There are sufficient reasons to impose consequences on the government for exceeding this as that is detrimental to our province. If our children and grandchildren must face the consequences, then the government should be held accountable for their mistakes. I'm sure the children up there agree with me.

For years we have been fortunate to salvage a triple-A credit rating, even through years of rapidly escalating spending and perpetual deficits. Understand that the higher that credit rating is, the less you pay in debt servicing. It is absurd that a government would even consider ruining this rating. It should be a priority. We are so fortunate to have this rating, and it is something to be very proud of. To put it at risk is a danger. It means that our debt-to-GDP ratio is reasonable, that we are able to pay it back, and that the risk of default is minimal. Other rating agencies have already warned that we are at a higher risk to default. Please listen. The lack of confidence in our ability to repay is seeping in already, and this could bring disastrous effects on our budget and economy. Please support this amendment for the sake of the generations to come.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I want to bring a little bit of, I guess, the voice of reason into this. Clearly, Albertans elected this government, like it or not. In my job as a paramedic I need to know when I go out there and with the decisions that I make that, no matter what, I can execute a decision. Sometimes it goes well, and sometimes it goes bad. I worked really hard when I was a paramedic – I'm still a registered paramedic – to be informed, to make sure that I understood the protocols, understood the physiology and everything that goes along with that job and how to treat it. But, like I said, sometimes it goes well, and sometimes it goes bad.

Now, let me speak to the government caucus and the cabinet. They should be very, very careful about the decisions and the things that they say here because it is a record. It is a foundation of what our future generations will stand on. It is completely – completely – irresponsible, in my opinion, that the hon. Finance minister didn't give a third-quarter update. That's his job, and he's made a mistake. He should recognize that regardless of how you want to dance around it. As a paramedic, if I make a mistake, it's time for me to move on, correct whatever that mistake is. To quote my hon. good friend the former Member for Calgary-Greenway: do more; be better. That's what this conversation is about.

Now, we have the privilege in this House to be able to speak because we are protected here to speak on behalf of our constituents without being held liable, to get down to the business at hand for Albertans. Again, to the members that I hear chirping across the way: my kids will inherit every decision that comes to conclusion in this House. It is not a game, and it is important. You're absolutely right that I'm not happy about the debt. In fact, I'm frustrated about the debt. It is something that we need to get control of because if we don't, it will spin out of control, and you will not be able to afford the payments. Who knows what is around the corner?

Now, granted that perhaps we are one of the governments that you can look to today. Former governments said: that will never happen. That is a phrase that nobody should ever use – never – because it happened to us. It happened to us on things like Bill 10, by not getting spending under control.

Like it or not, this is the cabinet that is in charge of this province. They need to be able to execute decisions responsibly. I will not be voting in favour of this because they need to know at the end of the day that they're not being penalized. I'd rather them make the tough decisions and execute those, but I also expect when you're in that position for you to be responsible, and when you make a mistake to own up to it.

I think we're seeing this. Albertans, clearly, after 44 years – yes, in many respects we were number one, but clearly we just couldn't rest on that laurel. We could have done more. We could have done better. This government has an opportunity to be able to do more and do better and follow what has historically been: do your job.

While I'm not voting for this motion because I do believe that you shouldn't be penalized or have something looming over your back, make the right decisions. I encourage the Finance minister to not make this mistake again. Do more. Be better.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak?

If not, I will call the question on amendment A6.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Chair: We are back on Bill 4. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, you can't win them all.

I'm pleased to continue debate on Bill 4. It's a bill of great importance to us. It's a bill of great importance to Albertans. It's a bill of great importance to taxpayers. Try as the government might to not listen to anybody in the province, we're listening, and we're going to do our best to make this bill, as I've said, less horrible. As such, I have an amendment to propose, and I'll wait for it to be distributed.

The Chair: It will be known as amendment A7.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. The amendment is that Bill 4, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, be amended in schedule 1 in section 4 by adding the following after subsection (3):

(3.1) The consolidated fiscal plan must clearly state a projected consolidated cash balance for each fiscal year included in the plan.

Now, every time I get up to speak about the bill and read its name, it makes me scratch my head a bit. An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures – that is a terrifying phrase right there; I'm from the government and I'm here to help – and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. Well, there isn't terribly much fiscal planning taking place in the bill. It is more or less drawing the bowstring, closing your eyes, spinning in a circle, and hoping you shoot towards a balanced budget in 2019.

The transparency part of the act. Well, that is one of the biggest problems with this act. It guts the requirement for any details in the budget for years 4 and 5, as I've discussed previously. It takes away some of the requirements for quarterly fiscal and economic reporting. But what we can do is improve some of the transparency around the act. The act says that it's for fiscal transparency, so this amendment seeks to add a little fiscal transparency to the act.

Albertans once upon a time used to be blessed with having the most accountable, straightforward, and open budget framework in Canada. I've spoken before about the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act of Jim Dinning. Jim Dinning said that any government that attacked those acts by repealing them or watering them down would have to look in the whites of Albertans' eyes and explain to them why they deserved subpar government.

Well, over the last decade our accounting system has undergone some significant changes, and I'm not going to belabour the point about why that was. But the fact is that today Albertans cannot open up a government budget and make any sense of it.

At the end of the day Albertans deserve a clear statement of the state of our finances. They deserve to have a single figure provided that says what the income statement is, effectively, of the government. How much money comes in, and how much money is going out? Well, that is a simple figure that Albertans should have. The government would be very well advised to accept this amendment to provide more transparency for Albertans when they open up a budget.

Now, mind you, not many of us get as much joy out of going to a government lock-up, sitting with bad coffee for a few hours, and reading through an embargoed budget, but I would chance to say that it is a very, very, very small fraction of Albertans who ever bother to open up a budget to begin with. One reason is because they can't understand it anymore. It's convoluted. There are three sets of books that often do not match each other, that are not reconciled, and there is no single cash-adjusted balance provided in the budget or in the annual report of the government nor quarterly reports.

There is no reason to hide facts from Albertans. We're not asking the government to change its accounting system. We're not asking the government in this amendment to change anything that it is doing. We're not asking the government to even change its own reporting structure. All we are asking for, simply, is that they provide one more piece of data in the budget: a simple calculation, effectively an income statement, a cash-adjusted balance.

The cash-adjusted balance reflects all spending decisions made by government; that is, operational and capital. That means spending on the nurses running the hospital but also the cost of the hospital. It includes the cost of the teachers serving in a school but also includes the cost of the school. This is, in my view, a superior and important measure to the so-called consolidated balance sheet that the government currently provides, which leaves out between $3 billion to $6 billion a year in capital spending.

Now, as I said, this amendment does not require the government to change its accounting practices. This does not compel the government to move away from accrual accounting. This does not compel the government to do anything with regard to policy or its reporting except provide a single table in its budget and its annual reports and quarterly reports to give a little more data to Albertans.

Capital spending is one of the most important parts of our budget, but it still comes from our taxes and our debt. It reflects the real-life spending decisions of the government. It is problematic to take away any of the accountability that comes with a capital spending decision and leave only the ribbon cutting ceremony for the public to see. A cash balance statement would reflect the true borrowing or savings that we do every year. It would tell us what is the true cash on hand and how much cash needs to be borrowed. Importantly, if we ever got back to a position where we ran surpluses again, it would provide an important measure of what funds are available to move to the contingency account, what funds are available to move to the heritage fund, and what funds are available to move to debt repayment. Right now, even if the government's budget was under control and running a surplus, it would be difficult to follow the money in a clear and accountable and concise way.

Cash adjustments. This calculation is already done by Finance, so it would not be difficult to present the number in the budget itself. This is work already done by Department of Finance officials. Many capable individuals who have been with the department for a long time already do it. Department officials already know what the income statement is. They already know what the cash balance is. So this comes with no additional monetary or administrative cost to the government, minus a half-page of printing every time we release a budget. Although now that that's three times a year, that might be of some cost.

All of the math for this is on page 101 of the budget, where they do the cash adjustments to figure out how much they'd have to take or put into the contingency account every year. In the past they would actually put it in a line item called cash available for debt repayment or savings. We used to report this explicitly. It is now implicitly reported in the numbers, but it is not clear for Albertans who would pick up the budget to understand.

When the NDP took power, they were surprised by the status of our finances, but I was of the understanding that they wanted all Albertans to have a better understanding of what is truly happening and that they wanted to prevent future surprises. Let me reiterate that nothing in this amendment would prevent the government in any way, shape, or form from continuing to use its current accrual-based accounting. Nothing in this amendment would change the way the government does business. Nothing in this amendment would require the government to move to a cash accounting system. This asks very simply that Albertans be given one more piece of data, one more table in the budget from which to glean more information. This is a simple and virtually costless accountability measure that would go a long way in providing some clarity to Albertans, the 99.5 per cent of Albertans who don't pick up a budget every year.

It's a common-sense amendment that could be supported by small "c" conservatives and small "p" progressives on all sides of this House. It doesn't compel the government to spend more money; it doesn't compel the government to spend less money. All it does is it would compel the government to provide a statement of how much money is coming in and how much is going out in a simple, easily understandable way.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A7?

Mr. MacIntyre: I support this amendment. At the risk of sounding a little repetitious, it comes back to the trust issue again. When we have a reporting method – I'm not talking about changing the accounting method. Those two things are very different. As the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks pointed out, this amendment is not an attempt to change the accounting method of how the government staff accounts and develops the books for the province. All that it does is add to the already in place reporting mechanism another little tidbit of information that is very useful.

Using a cash-adjusted balance in budgets and in the annual reports comes back to this trust issue again. This provides more transparency to the health of the organization. That's why these things are used in business. It allows the owners of a business, basically or essentially the shareholders, to take a look at the financial health of an organization, a corporation, from a little different vantage point than the other financial reporting instruments that are issued by corporations. It helps for shareholders – and in our case that's the people of Alberta – to understand a little bit better the health of the provincial books, just like it helps shareholders to understand the relative health of a corporation's financial position.

The cash balance reflects all the spending decisions because it includes capital. It is a superior measure to the so-called consolidated balance system employed, as it is currently employed by this government. As the hon. member pointed out, it hides from view anywhere from $3 billion to $6 billion. That should not be hidden from view. Albertans have a right to know where their financial position is at. I mean, no member in this House would like to go online to his or her bank account, hit the button that shows you your account balance and transactions, and discover that there are a few thousand dollars that are somehow hidden from your view. I suspect we'd be phoning the Royal Bank call centre, or whatever institution you deal with, and we'd probably come unglued on them. How dare you report that way. I want to know my financial position fully because I have decisions to make. Well, the people of Alberta ought to be entitled to that same freedom and right, I would say.

So a cash balance as a reporting item – and again I want to reiterate that we're not talking about changing the accounting method, the accrual method currently used in government. It's simply reporting information that the government already has but simply collated in a little bit different way for clarification. That's really all this amendment is about, clarification.

Again, I come back to this issue of building trust between the government, the stewards of our people's money, and the people. That trust relationship has been sorely hurt. Here again this government has an opportunity to help restore some trust, start working towards building trust. Don't miss this opportunity.

The cash adjustments, by the way – I'm not sure if the members opposite realize this – are already done by Finance, so it's not going to be difficult to collate and present that number. All that this amendment does is make that reported.

When the NDP took government, they were surprised. You expressed surprise by the status of Alberta's finances. Of course, there isn't anyone in this room that likes those kinds of surprises, that, oh my goodness, we're in worse financial shape than we thought we were. Why were we surprised? Because not all the facts had been made known. This kind of a reporting mechanism helps the good people of Alberta to understand their financial position better. It's clearer. Again, coming back to the trust issue, it would go a long way – a long way, hon. members – in helping to restore some trust in this province.

I support this amendment. I encourage all of you to support this amendment because, after all, every single one of us in this room is here to act in the best interests of the good people of Alberta, and this amendment is in the best interest of the people of Alberta. I would question why any member of this Legislature would not support a measure that helps the people of Alberta have clarity. Are we not here to take care of the best interests of Albertans? I would be a concerned voter if I found that my MLA did not support a measure that made the financial health of our provincial books clearer. That would be problematic for me as a voter. I'm sure it will be for other Albertans, too.

So I support this amendment, and I would hope that every MLA would take this opportunity to be responsible and to help the good people of Alberta understand the health of their provincial finances in a much simpler, clearer way with a very simple – a very simple – line item to have this, our cash position, indicated. As I said earlier, it's not a change in the accounting method; it's an addition to the current reporting method, not new numbers, simply a reconfiguration of existing data that is held by the ministry.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak? The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm going to rise briefly on this because I think it's worth talking about. We don't always agree with the Official Opposition, but I think this is actually a reasonable request. I would say to you and to them and to government members that I think this will actually help the discussion. For the ones on the government side: folks, our job here is to chew on you when you put a budget out and point out to the public where we think you could have done better and we would do better. I'll tell you that what's not productive – I know this from my past experience – is when you can't even agree on what the numbers are. Once you can agree on what the numbers are and have the bureaucrats that have all the data at their fingertips, then you can have an informed debate.

I'll tell you what's not productive and not good for government. Frankly, it's not good for opposition either. It's arguing over what the numbers are. We've done that in the past in this House, and frankly Albertans – I mean, there are people with a great deal of accounting expertise, and they get it, but not all Albertans are accountants. I know I'm not. When the argument is over what the numbers are, again, it's not in Albertans' best interests; it's not in the government's best interest.
