Here's the thing about a consolidated cash balance sheet. It will be discussed whether you provide it or not. I just think it's going to be a more productive conversation if there's an agreement on what those numbers are. Then the government can trot out all the reasons why they think they did the right thing for the right reasons, and that's your job. If we agree, we probably won't say much, and if we disagree, we will trot out all the reasons why the government is wrong and you should have done something different. But at least that's a legitimate public debate that serves Albertans' purpose. Arguing what the numbers are doesn't make anybody look good. For that reason I think this is reasonable. I think it's actually in the government's interest, I think it's in the opposition's interest, and more importantly, because we all need to remember that we work for Albertans out there, I genuinely think this is in Albertans' interests.

For that reason, Madam Chair, I intend to support this. I don't think there's any risk to either the government or the opposition providing this. The one thing the last speaker said that I agree with is that the government's accountants have this information anyway. It's only a matter of consolidating numbers that they already have and printing a spreadsheet.

I would appeal to my hon. colleague the Finance minister to consider asking your government colleagues to support this. I think you're going to end up producing the numbers anyway. It's actually better for you if you can say, "I provided these numbers because we're running a transparent government" than having to provide them later, which you will, and having us say, "We dragged the guy to the altar. He had to provide these numbers." I think it actually makes you look better if you offer them up in the first place. I could see how you could say, "Well, I don't have to offer them up at all," but I think that if you actually look at the past history, if you don't offer them up in the first place, you'll probably end up offering them up anyway. So why not look good and be able to say, "We're transparent, and we offered up what the public wants?" For that reason I think it's reasonable to support this, and consequently that's just what I'll do.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A7? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I guess that when I get up to speak, I always think back on my family and my responsibilities as a husband and as a father. I know that when I looked at this amendment, it made sense to me. I would agree with the hon. member in the PC caucus that I'm not an expert when it comes to understanding how budgets necessarily flow and doing line items. I know that one of the things that this job has done is expand my horizons in that area.

But I know that when I've looked at my income and my cash balances and my family budget over the last 30 years, an income statement was always a pretty important thing. It was something that helped my family to get a truer understanding of what we had as a family. What was our cash balance on hand? How much were we spending? How much were we taking in? Those were pretty important to us. I think that those principles that have allowed me to balance my family's budget are important for this government as well. It's important for any government. It doesn't really matter your political stripe.

I would speak in favour of this amendment, that we've got to perhaps change the way we do some of our reporting. Maybe we have to add a budget line in there, but it doesn't sound like it should be too burdensome. It sounds like there's lots of opportunity for us to make this better. You know, governments do need to show the people of Alberta where we stand fiscally and provide a cash statement, I believe. They need to be able to show us how much money is being spent, how much money is being brought in: does the government have a positive or does it have a negative cash balance?

I know, again, that in my family, when we needed to take a look at our finances, if we started to have a negative cash balance, we needed to start slowing down our spending. We needed to figure out where we were going to find the money that would accompany that. I think that while governments are dealing – and we would all agree – in the billions of dollars rather than just maybe, as in my budget, in the hundreds of dollars, you know, that's still an important concept and still an important idea.

I think this amendment speaks to this issue, that having a cash-adjusted balance reflects all of the spending decisions that this government makes. By doing that, you start to understand the patterns, and you start to understand where you are and whether you can afford to spend that money or you need to start cutting back on your spending. If you don't, it's pretty hard to decide. If you don't have that cash-adjusted balance, it's really hard to decide where the money should go and whether you have the ability to spend that money.

This amendment, I believe, provides some transparency. We've heard that said already, and I can understand that. I think it provides the people of Alberta and the Minister of Finance with some accountability. I believe that Albertans are very practical people, and I think that if we take a look at the history of our province and the kinds of governments that they've chosen and that they've supported, they support governments that are practical in how they view the services that they provide for their people. I believe they have always supported governments that were open and honest and transparent with the monies that we entrust them with. We have always as Albertans supported fiscally responsible governments.

Conversely, we've also seen that the people of Alberta have withdrawn their support of governments that over a period of time have shown that they're not transparent with the spending of their money, that they're not fiscally responsible with the tax dollars that we give them, whether you were the United Farmers of Alberta, whether you were the Social Credit, whether you were the Progressive Conservatives. I guess we'll see with the new government, the NDP government, if you can continue to be fiscally responsible, if you can show the people where they stand financially, whether you'll maintain Albertans' support. That's for the future.

I think most Albertans believe that there's no reason to hide behind numbers. They want clarity. As a matter of fact, they demand clarity. The current system, the so-called consolidated balance, can sometimes leave out money in capital spending, and that can sometimes grow to be very large amounts of money: $3 billion, $6 billion. Sometimes it's very difficult to know just what the real balance is.

We've talked about creating a contingency fund. Well, if we don't know what the cash-adjusted balance is, how do we know what to put into the contingency fund? We've got various monetary instruments that we can put money into: a contingency fund, the heritage savings trust fund. We can put money towards debt reduction. All those are very important things that, as we take a look at this province, we need to consider. Yes, we've done a very poor job, I think, of setting money aside in a contingency fund and saving for our future with the heritage trust fund. I think many Albertans, as we look back over the last 20 or 30 years, would say that we could have done a better job for our children. If we don't have a true understanding of the cash-adjusted balance, it becomes much more difficult to be able to figure out where we put that money.

We're going to have somewhere around a $50 billion debt. How much of the income that we bring in, how much of the revenue that we bring in as a government should be going to paying off that debt? We need to know what our real bottom line is. This government needs to know it just as much as I need to know that when I deal with my family income. How many times have we heard from various political parties of all political stripes across this country and across this world that after they've gained power and after they've opened up the books, there are some pretty big surprises as to the real status of what the budget is and where the country or the province or the municipality stands.

I think we heard that from this government when you first gained power. I think we heard it from the Liberals after they'd taken over from the Conservatives nationally. I know that this is not something that is partisan. It's not something that is particularly political. It's dealing with numbers and realities of economics, that sometimes when you take over the books, if we haven't had a cash-adjusted balance, if we haven't had clarity, there can be some pretty big surprises, and of course those surprises are not without consequence. They can mean the difference between being able to have a health care system that can meet the needs of its people or not. So we need clarity, and would a cash-adjusted balance not have helped the government and the people of Alberta to make wise economic choices? Well, I think it would.

I believe that there are times when being transparent is perhaps one of the most important things that a government can do, and I know that in Alberta understanding the debt and the savings balance is something that our people, our Albertans, expect out of us. You know, the more I stand here, the more I realize that sometimes you can put a suit on the person, but you can't always change the person that's inside the suit. [interjections] I'm seeing something happen here that I am completely amazed at. I'm wondering if maybe we need to have a story on this today. Well, I'm not going to go there because I know that there are times when what happens in Vegas has got to stay in Vegas.

You know, I guess that when I look at this, I believe at the core of it that the people of Alberta want this. While I said that you can put a suit on the person but you can't always change the person, I know I've spent my days in my classroom at times wondering if I was droning on to myself and wondering if anything that I was saying to the kids was actually connecting dots for them and wondering if I was really having an impact or making an effect on the lives of my students.

You know, I guess I'll start to close my remarks with this. I really do believe that the people of Alberta are well served when any government and any Finance minister are transparent, when they can show us what our bottom line is, when they can show us what revenues we have coming in, when they can show us what outlays of expenditures we have, and more for the people of Alberta than for any political party. I believe that when we do that, it not only provides for a good government, but it provides for good results for the people of Alberta.

I would speak to this amendment. I would encourage this House to support it. I would encourage the members on the government benches to consider this amendment, to give it serious consideration, to consider supporting it because I think that it actually makes the bill better and will help the people of Alberta and, I guess, at the end of the day, the people of Canada.

So I would ask for your consideration for this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. I'm suspicious. I know the opposition presents this as an innocuous addition, a small consideration for our budget. We have presented the budget. We presented the budget on October 27. The budget is presented on the basis of nationally accepted standards for accounting that our Auditor General has supported.

[Mr. Feehan in the chair]

In the past – and I wasn't here – former Finance minister Horner presented a budget in three parts. He presented the operational part of the budget, the capital part of the budget, and the SUCH sector, the schools and hospitals and colleges, and that ran afoul with the Auditor General. The Auditor General did not like that and argued vociferously that it should be a consolidated approach.

Former Finance minister Robin Campbell last March presented a consolidated budget. This government has continued what former Finance minister Campbell did, and we presented our budget on the same basis as his budget. I'm suspicious because the last speaker talked about how we were leaving capital spending out. Nothing could be further from the truth, which makes me think that this seemingly innocuous, small amendment really is just hiding behind something else that the Wildrose wants to push, that no other government in Canada does, which is cash-based accounting. We will not do that here. We're going to follow what all governments, both subsovereign and the federal government, do with regard to accounting. We're going to use nationally accepted standards for accounting and not something that is presented as – you know, it will make things clear. It is clear already.

Last week I was in Toronto talking to economists, and they were complementing the government of Alberta and the people in the room, and it wasn't my work. They were complementing the people in administration of the government of Alberta, and they were saying: "This budget is clear. We know what you're doing. We understand your approach, and you should be very proud." The only person not happy with our approach, it would seem, is across the aisle, and that person has been pushing for a cash-based accounting system since we started here in May. We will not do that. We will follow what's nationally accepted, what our Auditor General requests of us, and what Robin Campbell before me provided. That's what we'll do. We've done it. It's clear. It's going forward like that.

I will not support the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and I thank the Minister of Finance, if I'm not mistaken, the first member of the government's side to participate in debate this morning. Members on this side of the House have been here to work. I will not call the member out by name, but I did see someone snoozing over there pretty recently, but I'm very happy to be here to debate Bill 4 and the amendment.

Point of Order Decorum

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Chairman. It is completely unacceptable for the hon. member to make statements like that unattributed. I mean, you just don't do that in this place.

The Deputy Chair: Government House Leader, do you have a citation for your point of order?

Mr. Mason: Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j).

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Chair, if the Government House Leader would like me to cite the member who was snoozing or very visibly appearing to be snoozing laying back in their chair, I can do so, but I feel better not to call that one out. The Government House Leader himself in the media has misleadingly said that members on this side didn't want to come to work, effectively the same accusation – the same accusation – and he felt that that was reasonable to do to the media. They have said so in the House, misleading people.

We were here until 1:30 in the morning representing our own constituents, working hard, while none of those members were standing up, working hard. We were here at 9. We've been debating since 9. Finally, a member of the government has stood up to debate. I think it was a fair comment, and the Government House Leader is not prepared to take as good as he gives. He has been accusing members on this side of the House of the exact same thing, except we actually found someone snoozing in the House. I don't think that the Government House Leader has any argument. This is not a point of order. We are saying a much toned-down version of the same that he has been saying.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. I'd just like to take a moment to use this opportunity to remind everyone in the House, on both sides, that decorum in the House is quite important to the proceedings and that everyone should stick to the topics of the debate and refrain from making comments about individual members' behaviour or looks or presence in the House.

I'd like to leave the point of order at that point and proceed on with the debate.

Debate Continued

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I was thanking the Minister of Finance for the first part of the government's contribution to the debate since we began, at 9 a.m. I think that it is good to have members of the government finally participating in the debate that has been taking place for the last three hours. We are nearing the end of our morning session here. I had been led to believe that morning sessions would lead to the end of night sessions, but we all have some bags under our eyes because we were here till 1:30 a.m., debating. But that is another point.

The Minister of Finance's comments are not addressing the issue. The Minister of Finance is arguing that this amendment is somehow going to change the entire accounting structure of the government. Nothing could be further from the truth. The Minister of Finance went on at some length about accrual accounting and the Auditor General and that they wanted to stay with their current accounting practices, practices adopted by the former government. The minister is most likely greatly confused when he talks about this amendment changing the accounting of the government.

Now, let me read the amendment for the members opposite, for their clarity. We would amend schedule 1 in section 4 by adding the following after subsection (3): "The consolidated fiscal plan must clearly state a projected consolidated cash balance for each fiscal year included in the plan." The wording is clear. The consolidated balance must clearly state a projected cash balance. This amendment does not say, imply, or in any way construe that the government must change the accounting practices of the government. This amendment requires the minister to ask his department's officials twice a year, once in the budget and once in the government's annual report, to provide a table that . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I am sorry. I must interrupt. It is now 11:55. It is time for us to have a report from the Committee of the Whole. We will ask the Member for Banff-Cochrane to report on that.

The Acting Speaker: The Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 4. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The Member for Banff-Cochrane has read the report. It's not debatable. I ask for a vote. Does the Assembly concur with the report? If so, say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Those opposed? So ordered.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn until 1:30.

[The Assembly adjourned at 11:56 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, December 3, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Leader of the third party, I understand that you have some visitors.

Mr. McIver: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a former colleague and his wife, who are visiting here today. Dave Quest was a member in this House for Strathcona-Sherwood Park from 2008-2015. He also served as Associate Minister of Seniors during his time at the Legislature. His wife, Fiona Beland-Quest, is also dedicated to serving the public. She is a Strathcona county councillor who has a long record of community involvement in Sherwood Park. My guests are seated in your gallery, and I ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The opposition leader.

Mr. Jean: Thank you. I'd just like to introduce Ken and Betty Epp. Ken Epp, as many people know, served with distinction with the Conservative Party of Canada in the federal government for some years. I believe they are sitting in the Speaker's gallery. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that they rise and receive the warm, friendly reception that they're due from this House.

Thank you.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Are there any school groups to be introduced today? Seeing none, the hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members, today I want to recognize a group of remarkable individuals in the galleries who are truly key to our democratic process in Alberta, our constituency assistants. They are the first point of contact with us for our constituents, they help maintain a nonpartisan presence, and they put up with a heck of a lot on our behalf, especially this past week. We want to say thank you to all of them. This evening they're here for a winter seminar, and tonight we're having a recognition dinner. I especially want to also recognize my own constituency assistant, Susan Thompson, who is among them, from Peace River. They're from every part of the province. If they could all rise, and can we give them the traditional warm welcome of the House. [applause]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. I'm very proud of you, that you did that for all of these good people.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my absolute honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you distinguished members of our community who have contributed as advocates of human rights on indigenous, LGBTQ, and immigrant issues: Gurcharan S. Bhatia, former citizenship judge, recipient of the Order of Canada and founder of Daughters Day; Sonia Bitar, former citizenship judge and executive director of Changing Together: A Centre for Immigrant Women; Robert Philp, QC, chief commissioner of the Alberta Human Rights Commission; Muriel Stanley Venne, president and founder of the Institute for the Advancement of Aboriginal Women and recipient of the Order of Canada; and Dr. Kristopher Wells, director of the Institute for Sexual Minority Studies and Services at the University of Alberta. I'll ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour and pleasure to introduce to you and to the House several distinguished men and women who've used art and journalism to advance human rights for marginalized people in society. I'll ask them each to stand as I mention their names: Kristina de Guzman, an artist who uses music and art as common ground to connect people from diverse backgrounds; Arnim Joop, publisher of community newspapers which cover stories of diverse ethnic communities in Edmonton and across Alberta; Trina Joshi, a journalist who co-organized the first public screening of India's Daughter, a controversial documentary on gender rights in Canada; and finally, Judy Piercey, former managing director of CBC Edmonton and northern Alberta. Her work on sexual violence against children created significant impacts. I request all now to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions here this afternoon. I'll start by rising to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of people who have worked hard to promote justice for all, using law and labour relations. They're here to commemorate international Human Rights Day, which is coming up next week. I'll ask that they please stand as I read their names: Carrie-Lynn Rusznak, vice-president of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees and chair of AUPE Human Rights Committee; Susan Slade, vice-president of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees and chair of the AUPE Women's Committee, which supports women to realize their leadership potential; Matthew A. Woodley, a legal expert in constitutional law and a teacher at MacEwan University; and Doug Stollery, a human rights lawyer with more than 30 years of experience, best known for progressing the rights of people marginalized due to their sexual orientation. I ask them all to please rise and receive the traditional and very well-deserved warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you – and it's a little bit redundant because they all stood already; I didn't realize that was going to happen – my two assistants from the St. Paul constituency office, Monica de Bruyn Kops and Nancy Pratch-Wiebe. If they'd both rise and receive the warm welcome of the House, please.

The Speaker: Yes. Hon. members, if there are some other members, in recognition of the time – on the notes that I've prepared, I will be contacting each of you. But if that's the situation, I think it would be appropriate that we accept the introduction by the Member for Peace River. Agreed?

The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some powerful voices from Edmonton's multicultural communities. With us are Vivian Abboud, a public servant and a strong voice for immigrant women, especially for the Lebanese community; also, Lindsay Daniller, the director of community initiatives and development at Reach Edmonton; Yazmin Juarez and Sergio Olivares from Memoria Viva Society, which works closely with Latin American communities to raise awareness on human rights issues; Clarizze Truscott, a foreign workers and migrants advocate for 15 years and the president of Kabisig Society of Fort Saskatchewan; Renée Vaugeois, the executive director of the John Humphrey Centre for Peace and Human Rights, dedicated to bringing social equality; and Leslie Weigl, a public educator and director of the U of A's International House and recipient of the 2015 daughter of the year award. I ask them to rise and accept the warm wishes and welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Education and Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members six Albertans, our 2015 Stars of Alberta volunteer award recipients. I'd like them to rise as I introduce them. Number one is Ravina Anand of Edmonton. She's been a committed volunteer since the age of 12, including at Big Brothers Big Sisters of Hope Mission. Mohit Kumar was instrumental in setting up a program called water wings and in EXCEL, assisting elementary students with their school work. Deanna Lennox from Fort Saskatchewan, from the RCMP, now has an amazing program using horses to help people with posttraumatic stress disorder. I have Roberta Rehill from Hanna, who has contributed many thousands of volunteer hours to organizations like the Hanna Front Row Centre Arts Council, performing arts association, and so forth. Dawning Boston from Edmonton is a driver extraordinaire working through the helping hands seniors association and just does an unbelievable amount. Dwayne Hlady from Vegreville is an important senior citizens volunteer as well, driving and helping. I would like everyone to please recognize these individuals today. They work tirelessly to make all of our communities a better place.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you two proud Albertans who have supported and believed in me through five trying years of Alberta politics. They reside in my heart and have been instrumental in almost every major life decision that I have made, including the best decision of all, coming to Canada. Santhi is my strong and loving wife. She was a star in academics and sports, and she earned a bachelor's degree in architecture. She's also a survivor of the Bhopal industrial gas leak tragedy. When Santhi and I first came to Canada, she wanted a return ticket. That's right. She survived the largest industrial disaster in the history of the world, but she didn't know if she could get through the Alberta winter. Now we know that we can get through anything.

Himanish, my son, was a young socialist in high school, who, like the opposite members, expected a lot of freebies from the world. But when he worked in the oil sands and received his first paycheck and saw all the tax deductions, his approach to life changed, and he quickly joined me on the right side of the table.

Himanish was recently accepted to med school in Australia. He leaves home next month, and we'll miss him terribly, but I'm proud to say that he has made a promise to Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor and will return to Alberta after his studies conclude. At least, he'd better.

Santhi and Himanish are here today to show their support for Alberta's farmers and ranchers in their fight against Bill 6. In 2008, Mr. Speaker, the Calgary Zoo had two pandas. Well, today in the House we have done one better. I ask that my family stand to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly one of the most important people in my life, my best friend, my husband, Kent Pitt. When we first discussed that I was going to be running to become the next MLA, I believe his first response was actually considered unparliamentary in this House. Despite his initial lack of enthusiasm, he's been such an amazing support and such an amazing dad. During all this excitement Kent managed to complete his final tests and training to become a journeyman electrician. He is proof that it's never too late to follow your career goals. I'm so grateful for Kent and our two wonderful children, and as I'm sure many other members would agree, I would not be here without their support. He is seated in your gallery. I will ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you seven special guests today. These individuals are members of a volunteer-run charity, the Dil Walk Foundation, which is committed to increasing the awareness of heart diseases. Their work focuses on the south Asian population, which studies show is at a much greater risk for heart attacks and cardiovascular diseases. I also have had the honour of attending their very successful fundraiser two weeks ago. I commend their efforts and work and would like to introduce these guests now. Dr. Anmol Kapoor, Mrs. Raman Kapoor, Mr. Mandeep Duggal, Kuldeep Nahal, Jocelyne Lamoureux. Also in attendance are two other guests, Roop Rai and Saby Paul, but the Member for Peace River already introduced them. They are my constituency staff, so I will not introduce them. Now I ask all my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly a distinguished friend of mine, Mr. Nima Dorjee, currently the vice-president of the Association of Professional Engineers and Geoscientists of Alberta. Born in India in a Tibetan refugee camp, Mr. Dorjee came to Canada and has had a distinguished life, including previously serving as the president of the University of Calgary Students' Union. He is also the president of the Project Tibet Society, which is an entirely volunteer-run organization that will help up to 400 refugees from Tibet come to Alberta to resettle. I ask that Nima please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions. I am pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the construction crew of a favourite part of the Legislative Assembly for visitors, staff, and members alike: the people who did the Lego Legislature. Representing the building crew in the gallery here today are project managers Chris Gray and John Koob and members of the building crew Nadine Leenders and Michel Magnan.

I also would like to recognize the following guests. They, like me, have a passion for cycling, and we'd love to see Members of the Legislative Assembly join them on their rides Wednesday evenings in the river valley or in training rides for the MS Leduc and Beaumont rides. I would like to recognize Al Carlson, Dennis Miller, Dan Boonstra, and Greg Pommen. I'll ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to introduce to you and through you the elected body of the Alberta College of Paramedics. They consist of Ian McEwan, president; Kieran Moore, vice-president; Dusty Schlitter, treasurer; Ted Langford, public member; Enzo Della Rocca, councillor; Jon Jaekel, councillor; and Tyler Douglas, councillor. These people not only serve on the front line and in other areas, but they dedicate so much of their private time to make EMS better. I have nothing but great respect for them and ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Oral Question Period

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation

Mr. Jean: I want to welcome the Premier back. She has been away in Paris not making news, but she is coming back to a mess of her own making. Now, the Premier says that all these good people are mad about Bill 6 because of misinformation put out by government officials. However, the same misinformation was given to us as the Wildrose and reporters in private briefings, and of course the same misinformation appeared in government information sheets and government websites. Is it just possible that the information given was correct but that the Premier just got this bill all wrong?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very, very proud that when passed this fall this bill will ensure that paid farm workers in Alberta will finally enjoy the protections enjoyed by every other farm worker in the country. What this bill will do, and the only thing that this bill will do as of January 1, is that it will ensure that if somebody is seriously injured while working as a paid farm worker, they will not lose their house and their families will not go hungry because they will be entitled to compensation, as is the case in almost every other jurisdiction in the country.

Mr. Jean: I'm going to repeat a point because I think the Premier needs to hear it. Family farms are sophisticated operations. They monitor commodity prices and markets and scientific developments. They hire accountants to structure their farms to minimize their tax bills. They put family members on the payroll and actually give them T4s because that's the smart thing to do. That's just one of the many reasons why the government's amendments will not help at all. The Premier needs to stop this bill. When will the Premier admit that this government doesn't know anything about farming and ranching and kill Bill 6?

Ms Notley: Interestingly, Mr. Speaker, I grew up in a farming community, and I do understand farming and ranching. You know one of the things I also understand? I also understand what it means when a person is injured when working on a farm or ranch and they have no compensation and they are permanently injured for the rest of their life and they have no ability to make a living. Then we say: "I'm sorry. This is just a thing about Alberta. You're going to have to be on welfare for the rest of your life because the government doesn't care about protecting vulnerable paid farm workers." Farms exist very well in other provinces that have this kind of protection, and they will here, too.

Mr. Jean: It's actually about consultation and not doing any. The government's town halls on this bill have been an absolute joke. The crowds get bigger; the answers get far less clear. Farmers and ranchers tell the government to stop. The government is deaf. Today we had the largest of three rallies on the steps. Each has been larger than the one before. If the government doesn't relent, they will get bigger. I know the Premier's top advisers are telling her to stay strong, to be tough. It's a mistake. It's bad for Alberta. It's bad for your caucus. Will the Premier do the right thing, the smart thing, and relent and kill Bill 6?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As has been the plan all along with Bill 6, once the bill is passed and farm workers, vulnerable paid farm workers, have their health and safety protected and their right to compensation protected, we will engage in fulsome consultations both before regulations are drafted and after regulations are drafted on the application of the Employment Standards Code and the Labour Relations Code and the specifics of the occupational health and safety legislation. That's the way you move legislation forward. I look forward to working with those farmers to talk about how this will impact them. Even if they're angry, that's fine. We will consult until we reach a consensus on how those work.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Her Majesty's Official Opposition leader.

Mr. Jean: So it's clear that NDP consultation is ramming legislation people don't want down their throats without talking to them about it first. Leaders accept responsibility. They step up when they're wrong, and they admit their mistakes. Businesses say that minimum wage is hurting their bottom lines. The Premier ignores them. The energy sector says that it's being crushed by the uncertainty of the royalty review. The Premier doesn't care. Now farmers and ranchers say that they're very worried, and the Premier tells everyone that it's not her fault. This is a failure of leadership. When is the Premier going to stop blaming others and accept the blame for her government's out-of-touch policies for Alberta?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I will say that I take full responsibility for the confusion that exists around that. As the Premier it does ultimately rest with me, but I also as the Premier have to think about the 177 farm workers who are paid who will be hospitalized between January 1 and April 1 who will not receive any compensation if we do not move forward on this legislation. Ultimately, that's what I think about when I go to bed at night. Those are the people that this government will act to protect, and we will do so while protecting the integrity of family farms.

Mr. Jean: Alberta has one of the best farm safety records in the country. The Premier's problem is that she has lost the trust of Albertans. That's the truth of it. The Premier asks farmers and ranchers to trust her. Well, she has done absolutely nothing to earn that trust of hard-working Albertans. She has not consulted on this bill. Her government's consultation meetings are a joke. Now we learn that the four crop commissions proactively offered to help this government, but this Premier ignored them. The Premier thinks that she knows better than farmers and ranchers. Her arrogance is shameful. Why won't the Premier listen to Albertans and kill Bill 6?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, you know, there were on average 17 paid farm workers who die in Alberta every year. Their families receive no compensation because we do not provide workers' compensation. That will change January 1. Interestingly, in B.C. when these rules were introduced, the farm fatality rate was reduced by 68 per cent, the farm injury rate was reduced by 52 per cent, the serious injury rate was reduced by 41 per cent. That's what happened when these rules were introduced in B.C., and – you know what? – they still have farms in B.C. That is the way we are going to go here in Alberta.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After all of those changes in B.C. Alberta still has a better record of safety for farmers.

The Premier seems totally unwilling to listen to Albertans. That's what it's about. She even seems unwilling to listen to her cabinet and her caucus. We see her rural caucus members walking around with hand-dog faces all over this place. We know the ag minister has told farmers that he is recommending that the Premier pull this bill. We can see the pained looks of ministers when we read farmers' letters, thousands of them. It's not too late for the Premier. She could do the right thing. It's not too late for her to show real leadership.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, you know, it's interesting, Mr. Speaker, that the member opposite is able to talk about the comparative injury rates between B.C. and Alberta because – you know what? – the stats aren't collected in Alberta because these people are not protected in Alberta. So once again the member opposite has just made it up, much like he made up everything else in his preamble.

The fact of the matter is that this caucus is committed to moving forward, protecting vulnerable paid farm workers, and working together with farmers on the application of the other parts of this bill over time.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Now the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Public Education Collective Bargaining Legislation

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We just saw at the rally against Bill 6 how well legislation without consultation goes. Now the NDP government is trying to pull the wool over the eyes of another group of Albertans. The Alberta School Boards Association has said clearly that they want the minister to stop the bill from being "rushed through the Legislature." It's time to take off the government's training wheels. These bad bills and lack of consultation are hurting people on the front lines. When will this government realize that they need to listen to those impacted by legislation, and when will the Minister of Education slow down . . .

2:00

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. It's very important at this juncture that we put together a coherent framework to negotiate collective bargaining with the teachers in the province of Alberta. From the time that I started as the Minister of Education, we knew that this was very important. Over a period of many months we did consultations with everybody. I think the member is confusing consultation with people sometimes having concerns. We're consulting. We're working with those concerns now. We have been in the past, we will be in the future, and we will build a framework that we can use to do good bargaining.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Edmonton public school board, the Calgary board of education, the Golden Hills school division, the Fort McMurray Catholic school board, and many more boards across the province have expressed concerns about the time provided for consultation on this bill. Wildrose is doing something that will likely seem revolutionary to the NDP; we are reaching out to the school boards and consulting with them. To the minister: can you please provide me with a single board who has given you sign-off on your rushed bill?

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I tabled yesterday the process that we used for consultation, and I think the member saw that clearly. It's very important not to misrepresent the consultation that we did do. People have concerns, and that is a normal process that we are working through, but to suggest that we didn't consult is a misrepresentation of reality. I think this member could use maybe a better dose of reality to think this through properly.

The Speaker: Your first supplemental? Second supplemental. It was a late night.

Mr. Smith: Yes. I agree.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The timeline for passing Bill 8 is too fast for meaningful consultation. We've also seen what happens when school board negotiations go awry. It impacts students and learning. The minister knows that he could direct school boards and the ATA to wait on starting negotiations until this bill has had more time for real consultation. Why won't this minister – and here's a novel thought – slow down on ramming through Bill 8 and send this bill to committee for real review and consultation?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. It's very important for everyone to understand that by December 31, if we do not have a framework in place, then individual school boards can start to negotiate, and you end up with the same circumstances that you had for the last 15 years, with people negotiating here, there, and everywhere. This opposition is very concerned about – and I am, too – making sure that we control costs. The best way we can do it is to have the funder at the table to negotiate wages at a provincial level.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since I know that the Premier brought me back a new T-shirt, I'm going to appeal to her higher aspirations. We know this government cares about farm and ranch safety. We only want the government to realize that farmers and ranchers also care about farm safety for themselves, their children, and their employees. To the Premier: could we just do what's right for the people that feed us? Will you demonstrate the patience and leadership that Albertans expect and at least put Bill 6 on pause until farmers and ranchers feel heard?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By moving forward with the bill on January 1, the fundamental duty of care and the right to receive WCB if you are a paid farm worker will apply. The details around the application of the Employment Standards Code, the details around OH and S, the details around the Labour Relations Code will all be worked out through regulation, through consultation, extensive consultation with the very farmers and ranchers that you're talking about. Nothing will go forward until that has been done. So, effectively, we're not moving ahead on all the things . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I often disagree with the Premier, but I hope, at the end of the day, our goal is the same, safe farmers and ranchers and their families and employees. Respectfully, I listened to her answer, and the farmers and ranchers don't agree. We work for them. They're Albertans. I'm just saying: can we not let the voice of reason rule and let them have their say before you forge ahead? It seems just reasonable.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as I said, there will be a multitude of opportunities for farmers and ranchers to have their say on the vast majority of this, but while that goes on, say between January 1 and April 1, over 170 paid farm workers will end up in the hospital. They will have no entitlement to workers' compensation, they will have no ability to refuse unsafe work, and roughly seven or eight people will die, and their families will get no compensation. So we do not need to delay that part of the bill, and I will not delay that part of the bill. But we will work very closely with farmers and with ranchers to negotiate the remainder of the regulations, which will not . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I will continue to try to give the Premier all the credit that I can, but here's the thing. Your government has admitted the communication was botched. You've said that we need amendments. When you do put the legislation in place, certain things become permanent that can't be changed without coming back with more legislation. All the more reason to talk to farmers and ranchers before you put the regulations in place. I'll ask a third time. Will you please listen to the people that we work for, that feed us, and talk to them before you make it permanent?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said before and will continue to say, there are a number of different regulations that need to be fully thought out and discussed and negotiated with farmers so that we develop a common-sense approach to the application of the Employment Standards Code, the application of specific OH and S standards, and the application of the Labour Relations Code. That is what we've always intended to do, to engage in a common-sense discussion about those things, and we will do that. But because it's involved and because it's complicated and because it involves a great deal of consultation, it is going to take a while, and we're not going to let those injured and killed workers suffer while that happens.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, I care about farm safety, and I know the government does, too, but how legislation is passed matters as much as what is passed. Webster's dictionary defines consultation as seeking information or advice from someone with expertise in a particular area. Now, given that there was yet another big rally on the steps of the Legislature today, it's pretty clear that the experts from Alberta family farms don't feel particularly well consulted, and the government has the opportunity to make it right. To the Premier: will you withdraw Bill 6 and start again with real, honest consultation?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is a fabulous opportunity to make my case over and over, so this is great. What we will do is that on January 1 we will make sure that paid farm workers have the legal right to refuse unsafe work, and we will make sure that paid farm workers who are injured will receive compensation, and we will make sure that for paid farm workers who die, their family will receive compensation. In the meantime, while that is happening, we will engage in fulsome consultations, both before the regulations are drafted and after the regulations are drafted, with everybody so that everybody's issues are acknowledged, the farm . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Consultation after the fact isn't consulting; it's telling. I'm an MLA from a big city, and I've heard from dozens of my constituents in Calgary-Elbow. They tell me that they are all for farm safety, but they don't like Bill 6. I am here to tell rural Alberta that urban Alberta has got your back. Now, if I'm hearing from people in inner-city Calgary, I can't even begin to imagine what the backbench rural MLAs are hearing from their constituents. To the Premier: why have none of your . . .

2:10

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, I'm not entirely sure what the question is. Nonetheless, what we know is that workers' compensation . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Madam Premier, please proceed.

Ms Notley: What we know is that workers' compensation has been in play for almost a hundred years, and it has provided compensation and benefits to the families of injured workers and to injured workers when they are injured at their workplace. For almost a hundred years that has not applied to vulnerable paid farm workers in Alberta, mostly only in Alberta. For about 40 years vulnerable paid farm workers in Alberta have been the only farm workers and the only workers in all of Canada who . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, there was a huge convoy in Lethbridge today and the same in Okotoks and Red Deer yesterday, and I don't need to tell you that family farmers in Alberta are obviously not happy. Now, the NDP doesn't have many veteran MLAs over there, but there are a few, and when they were in opposition, they knew when it was time for the government to step back, seek input, and start again. They knew that any bill that requires extensive amendments is not a good bill. To the Premier: given how badly this has been handled, do you feel your government has earned the right to pass Bill 6?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, when I think about the roughly 170 people who will be hospitalized in the next three months who won't enjoy workers' compensation benefits if we don't act, I absolutely believe we have the right, and we have the obligation.

Environmental Policies

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, the government's climate change policies put a price on pollution, but my constituents in Banff-Cochrane want to know that this will be effective. Communities like Banff and Canmore also know that co-operation in investment supported by GreenTRIP funding on regional transit is one of the best ways to reduce our impact on the environment. To the Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation: what kind of infrastructure supports are we providing to control greenhouse gas emissions on public transit?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, hon. member, for the question. One of the key priorities of our government, Mr. Speaker, is public transit. I'm pleased to say that we've set aside a significant amount of money in the capital plan for an extension to the GreenTRIP program. There is going to be a third call for applications from municipalities as well as support for municipal water, waste water, and so on. I think there are going to be some exciting new programs as well as we implement our climate change initiative to enable Albertans to reduce their carbon imprint.

Mr. Westhead: Well, thank you, Minister. I'm looking forward to those programs.

Mr. Speaker, given that we are addressing climate change to protect our shrinking glaciers, to the same minister: what are we doing to support better water management in our communities?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government understands the importance of clean water . . .

Mr. Fildebrandt: Go easy on him, Brian.

Mr. Mason: . . . public health, and healthy waste-water programs for the province, and that's why I was pleased to announce our government's $170 million increase to the water for life program and the Alberta municipal water/waste-water program. They are cost sharing with municipalities in order to ensure that all Albertans have access to clean, safe drinking water and safe waste-water systems.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, could you desist from using first names in the House. I'd appreciate that. Thank you.

Please proceed.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the important role that Albertans play in all communities in supporting the sustainability of our province, to the same minister: how will these programs affect and improve the lives of rural Albertans?

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Rural Alberta is a critical part of our province, and the government is pleased to support rural Alberta with municipal infrastructure that allows sustainable growth. That's why we've made investments in the priorities that matter to rural Albertans. We're going to continue our grant program so that communities are able to access them. For example, our water and waste-water grant programs operate on a 75 per cent government cost-shared basis for municipalities with populations under 1,000 people. It ensures that rural communities are able to take advantage of these important programs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, it is my hope today to be able to represent the concerned faces of our farming brothers and sisters. It's important to note that Bill 6 is not only going after the farmer's pocketbook; it's going after what farmers love to do. It's going after their heart, their passion, and their way of life. That's what this government doesn't seem to understand. This is why they will never, never, never give up. It's not easy to give up on your passion because it takes a piece of your heart with it. On behalf of my farming brothers and sisters I humbly ask: please, stop Bill 6.

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. On Friday, Monday, Tuesday, and today I have been there listening to the pain and anxiety and stress from the misunderstandings of what Bill 6 is about. When I tell them that it's very small, that it's about protecting and compensating those paid workers, that we will protect the farming way of life, then they're good with it. I'm so thankful to bring that information back.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the members opposite have rallied in the past for issues that they have felt passionate about – and I respect them for that. It's their right to do it. It's a democratic society. I ask my colleagues to think about how the farmers and ranchers outside feel, hoping that you will listen, as you hoped when you rallied, that someone would take your concerns seriously. Will you crush their hopes now, or will you stop Bill 6?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. As the hon. Minister of Education said, consultation is about listening and about hearing those concerns. You know what? We've been listening, and we hear those concerns, and we're working with those concerns. We're committed to continuing to work with farmers to ensure that we protect their way of life so they can have their kids on the farm, can live that way of life, can work with their neighbours, and can do all the things they still want to do.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think you have a second supplemental question.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The number of Albertans standing against this bill grows by the day. In fact, it could turn out to be the largest movement against the government in Alberta's history. Given that we've seen rallies in every corner of the province, from Grande Prairie to Medicine Hat, and given that we've seen protests numbering in the thousands, including the one right in front of the steps of this building, to the minister: will you take the only option left to you and stop Bill 6? For the sake of farmers please do the right thing.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I've been talking with many farmers, and all of my colleagues, who represent over 11,000 farms in this province, have been listening to our members and bringing forward those concerns to this team. We will recognize that farming is a way of life. We will protect that. When I go to my partner's family farm, I'll be out there to help build the fence. I'll be there with their nieces and nephews riding the horses, and I'll be at 4-H with my daughter in the future.

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Fraser: Alberta has the distinction of having one of the best emergency medical services in the country. Over the years other jurisdictions have looked to cities like Calgary and Edmonton and their best practices to develop and enhance their own emergency medical services. It's not the size of the ambulance or how good the ambulance looks or how the uniforms look or how good the siren sounds that determines how good an EMS is. It's what's inside the ambulance. It's the paramedics, the EMTs, and the EMRs that determine how good the service is. In Alberta we have the best-educated and -trained professionals, and that's why the service has been so good.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Your time is gone.
Is there a response? The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: I want to thank the hon. member for his many years of service as a front-line first responder. I also want to thank him for the continuous leadership that he shows. I enjoyed a meeting this morning with the hon. member and with the College of Paramedics to discuss ways that we can expedite their ability to serve in the most acute ways. In the spring I will be bringing forward Health Professions Act amendments to make sure that we can include paramedics as well.

Mr. Fraser: Thanks, Minister, and thanks again for your generosity today.

Minister, we've heard a lot about PTSD, and we see more reporting since the bill passed in 2012. Given the fact that paramedics deal with heartbreaking circumstances, physical and mental, and they're particularly susceptible to PTSD themselves, Minister, would you consider putting a paramedic on the mental health review to get a better perspective of front-line and prehospital care for all Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I think that it's a very good proposal. The mental health review is actually just wrapping up their process. We wanted to make sure that it was completed by the end of this year. I think it would be most appropriate, though, when the recommendations are complete, to get feedback from the various colleges and organizations. Certainly, we'll be happy to have a dialogue around their feedback around that piece moving forward.

Mr. Fraser: To the same minister: given the fact that EMS plays a vital role in our community, having one foot in health care and one foot in public safety, and given the fact that the province has experienced unprecedented growth and that with the poor economy history tells us that EMS call volumes will rise, Minister, will you commit to following through with our former Progressive Conservative government's commitment to increase funding for desperately needed EMS infrastructure and operational needs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We are certainly bringing forward a variety of ways to make sure that we spend the $4.4 billion allocated toward capital needs in a thoughtful way that's evidence based and driven by where the most acute pressures are in the province as well as through the various systems that we serve. We will look forward to bringing further updates in a timely fashion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Physician Service Contracts

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The culture of doctor bullying and intimidation is alive and well at Alberta Health Services. It's sickening. The Premier once called for doctor intimidation to be part of the health inquiry. Quote: patients who suffered as a result of their doctor feeling they could not advocate for their health and safety will continue to suffer. End quote. The NDP used to rail against doctors being muzzled. Now they call it nothing but an "HR situation." Hypocritical. Why is the Health minister now letting ongoing bullying of doctors by Alberta Health Services go unchecked?

Ms Hoffman: I have to say how disappointed I am that this hon. member continues to bring up in this House a very personal situation involving an employee and an employer. I think that it is most inappropriate, Mr. Speaker. If she wants to discuss this, there are certainly ways to do that in a professional and appropriate manner. In this House is not one of them.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, our doctor, Dr. Kyne, was fired for sticking up for the people of Airdrie. The NDP used to stick up for front-line workers. Now they stick up for bureaucrats at Alberta Health Services. Given that we all know Dr. Kyne was doing his job as a relentless advocate fighting for a 24-hour urgent health care centre and given that we know that Alberta Health Services and this NDP government are steadfast against the project, why can't the minister clearly see that this was nothing but revenge against a doctor fighting for his patients?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had nothing to do with this situation. My department had nothing to do with this situation. If the hon. member wants to have an appropriate conversation about what is actually legally allowed to be talked about – of course, everyone deserves rights to privacy and protection of information. I'm going to respect the law. I'm going to respect employees and employers, and I wish the hon. member would do the same.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, this isn't the change that Albertans wanted. It's just more of the same from a broken, out-of-touch government. Given that we know that the Health Quality Council clearly laid out in its report that doctors feel constrained in their ability to stick up for their patients and seeing that this Premier once called for a public inquiry around the culture of intimidation in our health care system, does the minister think that the Premier was wrong then, or is she just happier to stick up for bureaucrats at Alberta Health Services?

Ms Hoffman: I will stick up for the protection of privacy of employment contracts and privacy of information. When it comes to making sure that we address the workplace culture, we certainly have made a number of efforts in that way. I'd say number one was making sure that we had stable health care funding as opposed to proposing cuts of billions of dollars for front-line services, nurses, teachers, doctors. Give me a break, Mr. Speaker. I've had enough.

Coal-fired Electric Power Plant Retirement

Mr. Orr: The energy sector is vital to Alberta's economy. Coal has been a crucial part of that sector, but now with an accelerated shutdown of coal-fired operations 7,000 more Albertans will be out of a job. They know that our province is moving away from coal-fired power, but to say that these 7,000 Albertans will easily find a new job is laughable. To the minister of jobs, skills, and training: why is this government waging war against these 7,000 employees in a year when 65,000 jobs have already been lost?

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The premise of the hon. member's question is patently false. First of all, our government is showing leadership on the climate by the introduction of our climate leadership strategy, which is going to work with the coal sector and work with those folks working at plants in communities affected. Our plan, Mr. Speaker, is to phase out coal emissions by 2030, a phase-out that we are accelerating, but we're going to do this in a way that's fair to employees, fair to companies, and fair to communities.

Thank you.

Mr. Orr: Given that the coal industry currently provides millions in revenue to this government, in fact to the tune of $90 million in royalties over the past five years, and given that an Industrial Alliance Securities report has said that the accelerated phase-out of coal plants will result in $12 billion in forgone revenue to plant owners, will this government acknowledge that on top of risky economic policies like the carbon tax, they are hurting our economy even more with this phase-out when we can afford it the least?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, we're committed to a thoughtful transition away from coal that ensures that our electricity system is stable and that the lights stay on in people's homes. We're also committed to working with all of the workers in the coal industry. This is a task that the Premier has given to me, to work with the affected communities and their families to look at ways that we can work with workers either with transition as well as look for opportunities for them to work in other sectors. Quite frankly, our plan includes an adjustment envelope, and we are going to ensure that there is funding and that workers, families, and companies will be treated fairly.

Mr. Orr: Again to the minister: given that Alberta actually has a proud record of clean energy and given the fact that it's about time that the NDP government started being proud of and not embarrassed by our energy sector, will the minister of environment acknowledge that Alberta does energy better than anyone else in the world?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, our climate leadership plan will invest in new technology, diversify the economy, and help us gain access to new markets. Unlike the Official Opposition, that would like us to pretend that climate change doesn't exist and do nothing about it, we are showing leadership, and by doing that, we are going to create new jobs in this economy, new access for our products, and ensure that Alberta is the best place to live, raise a family, and invest in.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

2:30 Lower Athabasca Regional Land-use Plan

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An independent review panel was established back in June 2014 to investigate the effects of the lower Athabasca regional plan. Six First Nations communities applied to the review to determine if the plan directly or adversely affects them. According to the Land Stewardship Act here in Alberta the panel had one year to submit a report with accompanying recommendations to the minister, and that deadline was back on June 22 of this year. To the environment minister: have you received this report, and if so, when?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, of course, it's challenging for me to speak on behalf of the minister of environment, but I have been working quite closely with the minister of environment with respect to the lower Athabasca regional plan. Certainly, you know, our caucus has had concerns about the planning going back to the past, and I've certainly heard concerns from indigenous communities. We have been working quite closely on a strategy to move forward with this. In terms of the specific report I'm afraid I'll have to get back to the member.

Thank you.

Mr. Rodney: Again to the minister. Given that section 45(c) of the act requires that the government of Alberta post this review panel's report on the Land Use Secretariat website and given that as of today at 1 p.m. the report is still not available on the website and given that lawful transparency is not occurring, please tell us and Albertans across the province: when are you planning on releasing this report so that First Nations communities and all other interested Albertans can review its findings and its recommendations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, of course, we have been working very closely with a number of First Nations communities on multiple concerns that they have with policies that were brought forward under the last government, including environmental policies and land and resource consultation policies. Again, as I've said, I can't comment on the specific report. We'll have to get back to the hon. member on that.

Mr. Rodney: Mr. Speaker, I'm seeing a time lag and a disturbing trend.

Given that the six First Nations that applied for the review deserve to learn if the panel has recommended recourse for addressing any negative effects to health, property, income, and more and given that we have heard feedback from aboriginal groups indicating they are at a loss to understand why your government has not shared this information with them – keep in mind six months – and given the vow to forge a new relationship with Alberta's aboriginal peoples, Albertans are wondering: what are you hiding from them, and is this the kind of consultation that aboriginal peoples can expect from this kind of government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, of course, we've been working very closely with indigenous communities on a number of issues. Certainly, some of those issues surround the management of cumulative effects because they feel that nothing was done under the previous government with respect to that policy. In terms of the specific report I've told the member that I'll get back to him, so I'm not sure what else he wants me to say. But we will be working very closely with First Nations going forward to address the concerns.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Aboriginal Peoples' Economic Development

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my constituency many are struggling in these tough economic times. In particular, indigenous communities are feeling the effects of the slowdown surrounding their communities. To the Minister of Aboriginal Relations: what are you doing to help indigenous people, who often live in rural, remote areas of Alberta, take part in the resource sector and participate in our economy?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, in my conversations with First Nations we have heard some real concerns from them and some genuine pleas from their leadership on behalf of their people that they be included and involved, going forward, in Alberta's economy and that they, too, share in the wealth that this province has to give. So we are moving forward with our consultation on the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. We intend to use a whole government approach to this issue, so we have a number of funding mechanisms available for jobs on that front.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in Edmonton and Calgary there are great opportunities for entrepreneurs to access capital and to start up or expand a business and given that it's not the case in many First Nations communities, to the Minister of Aboriginal Relations again: what are you doing to support the many entrepreneurs in indigenous communities of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and, again, to the member for the absolutely critical question. One of the policies that my department has is the aboriginal business investment fund. This fund is designed to increase the number of indigenous-owned businesses, increase the number of employment opportunities, and create local revenue streams. We also just recently announced a partnership with the Siksika Nation and the Indian Business Corporation to provide access to capital, which is sometimes difficult to access on reserves.

Thank you.

Ms Babcock: Mr. Speaker, these programs sound like a good idea, but my constituents need help now. Can the Minister of Aboriginal Relations please tell us when this money will start flowing?

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the incredibly timely question. The application submission period for the aboriginal business investment fund goes on until January 1 for this current funding year. The evaluation process will be completed in mid-January, and decisions will be announced for applicants during the week of January 15. We are absolutely committed to working with indigenous groups in this way, and we hope that they will bring forward applications in this process.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Job Creation and Protection in Calgary

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like farmers, Calgarians are very concerned with the direction this NDP government is taking with the economy. Last month Statistics Canada found that Alberta lost 11,600 jobs, many of these in Calgary, and now this government is making it worse for Calgarians with a new carbon tax, a tax on everything and everyone. To the minister: why is your government doing nothing to help Calgarians who have lost their jobs but, instead, doing your best to make . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for his question. Quite frankly, our government is doing a number of things, and we are doing our job. In fact, we're working with the private sector to create jobs. There are a number of initiatives that we've already taken under way, from giving start-ups and budding entrepreneurs access to venture capital through $50 million in the Alberta Enterprise Corporation, increasing the debt ceiling of ATB or their lending capacity by $1.5 billion, and we've also introduced the job creation incentive program.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Panda: Employment insurance claims are up almost 100 per cent in Calgary – this is shocking – and this is more than just a number. These people who have lost their jobs include many friends of mine. They are good people who want Alberta to succeed. They're Albertans that are being hurt by this government's bad ideas. Given all this, why is the new economic development minister not speaking out against his government's bad ideas, which are punishing all Calgarians?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I want to say, first of all, that when any layoff is announced, we're not talking about a number; we're talking about people, and we're talking about Alberta families. Our government takes this very seriously, which is exactly why about six weeks ago the Premier created this Ministry of Economic Development and Trade to do just that, to focus on economic diversification, looking at ways to develop our economy further, looking at ways to build more value-added within our growing sectors, and also looking for new markets to access as far as exports and bringing investment dollars back to Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Panda: Not helping Calgarians.

Let me try again. Given that this NDP government is not helping Calgarians in a time of economic need and given that it is time they stop hurting Calgarians with their risky economic policies, Minister, it's clear that this government is hurting the economy and not developing it. I ask the minister: when will your government increase economic development rather than work to kill our job-creating industries like the energy sector?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, we are working with the energy sector. In fact, we're working with all sectors and all job creators, which is, again, the reason that we introduced the job creation incentive program, to create up to 27,000 jobs. But I'll tell you this much. We also introduced the climate change strategy, which is going to build our economy and create jobs. The opposition here, their approach is to ignore the problem. Their approach created barriers that we need for our energy. Their approach is not leadership.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly distinguished guests who have worked untiringly to improve equal rights for all: Ratna Basappa and Jagjeet Bhardwaj from the Indo-Canadian Women's Association, who work tirelessly to prevent harmful cultural and domestic violence against women; Vasant Chotai worked with organizations, including the Edmonton Social Planning Council, to promote social equity and affordable housing; Indranil Chaudhury, active community volunteer who raised funds for UNICEF Canada to help Syrian refugees; Charan Khehra, co-founder of Daughters Day, an initiative to support Alberta women; and Dr. Mohyuddin Mirza, a passionate advocate and public educator for human rights in the Ahmadiyya Muslim community. I request that they rise and receive the traditional welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Brandon Gibb, a fourth-generation farmer-rancher. He grew up on a small family farm in southwest Alberta, where he learned many valuable lessons in life about working safely. He doesn't employ anyone full-time, but he does rely very heavily on the help of family and neighbours. His wife is a full-time nurse and works to help support their small family of two young boys and a third one due in March.

Brenden Scott is a grade 10 student at Cardston high school, who helps his grandpa and uncle on the farm they own.

Blake Gibb is a grade 8 student at Paterson middle school in Lethbridge. His parents own a trucking company and almost his entire family is involved in the agriculture trade. During the last four summers he has worked with both his grandpa and uncle on their farm.

Kenyon Jackson is a fourth-generation farmer on the land that his late grandfather posted in the late 1800s. He has four children who wish to remain on the farm. They have had various farming operations, from raising pure-bred cattle to farming hay. His wife is a part-time school assistant. They both wish to keep their rights and privileges to use their land as they see fit.

They have risen, and I'd like to give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to be able to rise today to introduce to you and through you my beautiful daughter Ashley. Ashley Taylor is up there. She came in a little bit late, so I didn't get to see her right away. It's an honour to be able to see her up there. She's the youngest of my three children, and she worked tirelessly throughout my campaign. Now she's actually finishing off her fifth year of university. She's taking an education degree, and she's going to be teaching elementary. Ashley, could you rise and accept the warm welcome and the greetings of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Carol Robertson Baker, our Mental Health Patient Advocate, as well as Deborah Prowse, our Health Advocate and interim Seniors' Advocate as well. Joining them are patient rights advocates and health advocate representatives and staff. I ask that they also rise. They are Beverly, Ryan, Lorraine, Mark, Lisa, Wendy, Ashley, Than, and Janina. I want to thank them for the amazing work they do for Albertans, a lot of which is outlined in their annual reports, which I look forward to tabling today.

I also want to extend a special thank you and congratulations to our Mental Health Patient Advocate, who is celebrating a 30-year anniversary as a public servant with the government of Alberta. I'd ask that we extend the warm welcome and congratulations to the hon. guests.

The Speaker: Are there any other individuals who have guests that I might have overlooked? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House Bev Anuszewski. She farms with her husband, Barry, in the Whitemud area. They're here to rally on the steps for Bill 6. Of course, it's great to see them here today. They've travelled a long way to be here today. Bev, if you could stand. I introduced your husband the other day. If we could give her the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Human Rights

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. International Human Rights Day, celebrated on December 10 of every year, commemorates the day, in 1948, when the United Nations General Assembly adopted the universal declaration of human rights. The universal declaration is, of course, universal, but a Canadian law professor, John Humphrey, wrote it, and that document has two daughters inside the Canadian federation, our Charter of Rights and Freedoms and our Bill of Rights. In a world of war and tyranny that sets millions fleeing their homes in search of justice, these documents are lighthouses in the storm, guiding freedom seekers to a land where they can stand without fear, with dignity and hope and peace.

It gives me great pleasure to announce that Canadians for a Civil Society has developed a poster containing the universal declaration, our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and our Bill of Rights. They produced this poster because they are convening a national conversation in 2017 on how Canadian values can contribute to making Canada the best country it can be and a beacon during the storms that shake the world.

I encourage all members to use this poster to inspire everyone to learn the planet-shaping significance of what no political prisoner, no refugee, and no oppressed person anywhere at any time has ever taken for granted, human rights. We need to understand our profound and inalienable rights. Without understanding them, given the right scare tactics we could be tricked into losing them, surrendering freedom for the illusion of security.

The universal declaration enshrines three main categories: freedoms, equality and political rights, and social rights. It's neither simple nor easy to guarantee that we protect all three categories of human rights. But, Mr. Speaker, it wasn't easy for a small population like Canada's to fight fascism in Europe and in Asia. It wasn't easy to face our sins within truth and reconciliation, but we did it. So, too, can we respect and protect these three sacred covenants.

As legislators we share an enormous responsibility. Ultimately, we must accept our true duty as members of this Legislature to clear away systemic barriers that keep Albertans from living up to their full potential, providing the opportunity to increase their standard of living and be treated with dignity.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Human Rights

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to continue on with the same idea. The next week will obviously mark the 67th anniversary of when the United Nations adopted the universal declaration of human rights, drafted after the horrors and unspeakable evil of the world wars. It is a document that reminds us of our humanity's own past atrocities and the obligation to protect all peoples from the forces that seek to repeat and make new these horrific crimes. Despite the document's binding moral clarity and the need to protect the rights of every person and their rights to life, liberty, and security of the person, evil still persists.

There is perhaps no better reminder, as we look beyond our borders, than men and women still being forced into hiding, tortured, or ultimately killed because of whom they don't pray to. Basic religious freedoms are constantly ignored and abused from Afghanistan to Syria to Iraq. In states and countries across the world religious minorities are suffering from persecution. Others have to go into hiding or face unspeakable discrimination and violence just because of the colour of their skin, who they love, their family name, their nationality, disabilities, or other statuses.

Behind these actions remain the states and political leaders that continue to oppress their people, suppress free thought, rip up property rights, and make unconscionable and brutal violations of these basic human rights. Let's never forget our moral obligation to continue to speak out against these abuses and do what we can do to prevent them.

Here in Alberta we have much to be thankful for. As a province we have been world leaders in advocating for rights for all peoples. We are truly fortunate to have the Magna Carta within walking distance of this House today. This 800-year-old document is the very foundation of our laws and Canada's democracy. It has established clear boundaries on the power and the rights of the state against the individuals. It led to the establishment of property rights and other basic liberties and freedoms.

As legislators may we always remember to stay vigilant, to speak against evil, and to promote liberty and equality for all. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Human Rights

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, next Thursday is Human Rights Day, which commemorates the anniversary of the adoption of the UN universal declaration of human rights. Sixty-seven years ago the UN presented to the world a commitment to equal rights for all people. The chief drafter, of course, was the Canadian John Humphrey, so it's fitting that we would take some time to celebrate both him and the John Humphrey Centre for Peace and Human Rights here at the University of Alberta, of which I'm a member.

Mr. Speaker, it seems particularly appropriate that we would mark this anniversary at a time when the Magna Carta is visiting the Legislature. Eight hundred years ago the barons forced King John to sign the document. We saw one of the first official charters outlining the rights of human beings. Of course, that document was extremely limited, applying only to a select number of white, landowning men. Over time we've expanded that notion of human rights beyond those select few. The UN declaration marks that expansion, declaring, "Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth . . . without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status."

We continue to struggle with this commitment. Our society continues to grow as we gain greater understanding of those who have been left in the shadows, denied those rights and human dignity. Just this week, Mr. Speaker, this House was able to take an important step towards protecting the trans and gender-variant community, and in this House we've been debating human and constitutional rights of paid farm workers. We know all too well that the rights of First Nations continue to be neglected in this society, and I'm pleased to see that the government has embraced the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples.

The UN declaration on human rights remains a work-in-progress. We continue to strive to meet the high bar that it has set for humanity, so even 67 years later the work goes on.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Calgary-North West.

Human Rights

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In recognition of Human Rights Day, on December 10, 2015, I'd like to reflect on our privilege and power as legislators in order to advance and protect human rights in Alberta. Although it's crucial to enshrine human rights in formal legislation such as the International Bill of Human Rights and the Alberta Human Rights Act, it is equally important to engender respect for human rights in individuals both at home and abroad.

The last few months of discussions about gender rights; refugee, immigration, and indigenous rights; and vulnerable Afghan minorities have all allowed progressive defenders of human rights to demonstrate a depth of caring, compassion, and motivation to make this world a better place for those whose enjoyment of human rights is hampered at best, yet our human rights champions constantly face individuals and groups who believe that we don't have the capacity to welcome refugees into our hearts and our homes.

Although we've stumbled at times in our efforts to protect basic human rights in Canada and in Alberta, oppressed people worldwide have looked to us to defend the core values that everyone on this planet has a right to. Those rights include a life free of fear and oppression regardless of their nation, language, religion, or ethnic origin. We see an excellent example of Alberta's passion for human rights in our warm welcome for Syrian refugees, our resolve to show them how we value human rights in Alberta.

As Alberta's voices of reason we must each exercise social responsibility as legislators to become educated about the human rights issues faced by some of our new and established constituents and to educate and help each other and our constituents understand and sympathize and connect personally with those in need.

Female refugees face particular vulnerability when fleeing human rights violations around the world. Often, as heads of war-torn households they are simultaneously responsible for feeding, clothing, housing, and educating their families. They're targets for human trafficking, pressured into forced prostitution.

All of these things we must remember, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The deputy House leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to ask for unanimous consent of the House to waive Standing Order 7(7) to continue the Routine past 3 o'clock.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Human Rights

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we celebrate international Human Rights Day, although a bit early, I think it's telling that all the different parties in the House have been given an opportunity to mark this very important occasion. It is important that we rise and speak as it is celebrated around the world.

In 1948 the United Nations General Assembly adopted the universal declaration on human rights, a declaration that has allowed for the basic human rights of all to be fought for by those who seek to live in a better world. This year's Human Rights Day is devoted to the launch of a year-long campaign for the 50th anniversary of the two international covenants on human rights, the international covenant on economic, social, and cultural rights and the international covenant on civil and political rights. These, alongside the universal declaration of human rights, create the International Bill of Human Rights, setting out civil, political, cultural, economic, and social rights that are the birthright of all human beings.

Today we rise to honour the better future centred around the four freedoms: freedom of speech, of religion, from want, and from fear. It is this last one that we have been dealing with in the House this week, Mr. Speaker. When we pass Bill 7, the Alberta Human Rights Amendment Act, 2015, we are seeking to allow gender-variant and gender-diverse individuals to live a life free of fear, where they can live and be accepted in a world that is inclusive and understanding. It is as an ally for those individuals that I am honoured to rise today and speak to the importance of international Human Rights Day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Family Farms and Bill 6

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to discuss Bill 6. I grew up on the family farm. I know all too well the work that goes into making the farm successful. The family had to work together as a unit to ensure that chores got done. This included feeding chickens, turkeys, ducks, geese, and many other livestock. No one or anything went without food or water, 24/7, 365, and we respect that. Calving season, spring seeding, later summer haying, making forage, taking the crop off in the fall, and also tending the very large gardens went on for many years without any issues. I think we were extremely lucky considering some of the work that we did on the family farm, but sometimes we weren't so lucky. My brother was hurt when his arm was broken in three places when it was wrapped in the knotted of a square baler. No coverage; no insurance.

Bill 6 does not kill the family farm or rob children of experiencing the life of growing up on a family farm or participating in 4-H projects that make our communities proud. Bill 6 does nothing more than bring Alberta safety standards on farms and ranching operations in line with every other province in Canada. Bill 6 provides two simple things. A paid farm worker who is directed to do something dangerous can simply say no, just like any other worker in Alberta and Canada. Second, if the worker is hurt or even killed at work, they or their family can be compensated like any other worker in Alberta and Canada as well. Neighbours and relatives . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts I am pleased to table five copies of the committee's report on its 2014 activities.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table in the approved format the following petition:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to immediately withdraw its proposed Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, from the legislative agenda, request its withdrawal from the order paper and we petition the Assembly to cease all further readings and debate of its content.

Thank you, sir.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Cortes-Vargas: Mr. Speaker, as the chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and in accordance with section 4(2) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act I would like to table five copies of the 2014 Annual Report of the Chief Electoral Officer: the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act for the 2014 Calendar Year.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Minister of Seniors.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies of the two reports I mentioned earlier, Helping Bridge the Gaps: Annual Report of the Alberta Health Advocate 2014-2015 as well as Alberta Mental Health Patient Advocate: Celebrating 25 Years of Advocacy and Protecting Patient Rights. Just so everyone is aware of the mission of this organization, they assist Albertans in dealing with concerns about services impacting their health and becoming empowered and effective advocates.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General and Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a document entitled Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act, summary of public access to compensation disclosure. This document discusses the estimate with respect to the cost of creating a searchable database as discussed yesterday in committee.

I also wish to table the requisite number of copies of follow-up answers to questions in my Justice estimates.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with respect and humility that I rise today to table two reports, that I referred to last night, of individuals that were tragically affected by farm accidents.

The first document is a report to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of a public fatality inquiry for Mr. Kevan Chandler, who tragically lost his life.

The second document is a newspaper article about a farm worker who is disabled for life, Mr. Speaker.

I urge all the members to read these documents.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a letter that I read last night.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of letters from constituents, that I referred to last night in the second reading debate on Bill 6.

The Speaker: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies from constituents and people around Alberta that I spoke about last night in second reading of Bill 6. I have several copies of letters from Albertans who don't trust this government on Bill 6.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm pleased to table the requisite number of copies of the Legislative Assembly Office 2014 annual report, Stewards of the Parliamentary Process.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of eight letters from constituents who have wished to be able to express their concerns over Bill 6.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. Or Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Now we're going to fight each other here on this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table letters from farmers and some people that are from my riding, that have been sent to me. They are the constituents of Battle River-Wainwright, and they're trying to get their message across to the government about Bill 6. I have the required five copies.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the requisite number of copies of a letter from Chinook's Edge school division, which contradicts statements made by the hon. Minister of Education that he had some sort of universal support for Bill 8. This letter clearly indicates the opposite.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'll call the committee to order.

Bill 4

An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act

The Chair: We are on amendment A7 as proposed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks. Are there any comments with respect to this amendment? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is an honour to continue debate on Bill 4, the fifth amendment coming from the Wildrose Official Opposition. We are having a strange debate in this case. The Official Opposition and the third party are having a debate about one topic, and the government is having a debate about another. This amendment clearly states, "The consolidated fiscal plan must clearly state a projected consolidated cash balance for each fiscal year . . . in the plan." This is requiring the government to provide a piece of information. It is requiring the government to merely provide a data point, that they could easily put together in Excel, taking about five minutes, with information that they already have.

The Minister of Finance appears to believe that this is a huge, earth-shattering motion to change the entire accounting structure of the government.

The Minister of Finance stood up and argued a different topic altogether. He was arguing about his desire to see the government continue with accrual accounting methods, his desire to see our expenditures reported in such a way that they include operational spending but only a small fraction of capital spending for each given year, to keep it in that way, without providing a simple income and expense statement.

What we are calling for is a consolidated cash balance. We are not arguing about switching to another accounting system for the government. We are not arguing about accounting for the government's finances in a different way. What we're calling for is simply for them to ask their officials to go into and print off an Excel sheet, that they already have, to take up about half a page in the budget and print another table in it. We could do an interesting study on the printing cost of this, a little bit more ink, slightly more ink for the budget, and half a page.

Mr. MacIntyre: I'll pay for it. I'll donate.

Mr. Fildebrandt: The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake has volunteered to donate the extra costs of the ink for an extra table. I thank him for his charity.

Mr. MacIntyre: I want a receipt.

Mr. Fildebrandt: But he wants a charitable tax receipt. I see.

This is asking the government to provide information in the budget that they already have. Their departmental officials have already told everybody that they have an income statement – they have a cash-adjusted balance that they have as an internal document – but since Budget 2013 the government has declined to provide one. That is unfortunate. What we're asking for is simple. We're asking that they just put it in the budget.

There are important reasons for this. This is an important accountability measure that will help Albertans understand their budget. It's an important accountability measure that will help the 99.9 per cent of Albertans who don't open up the fiscal plan documents every year with glee and sit in a budget lock-up eagerly awaiting their chance to get into the operational plan and the capital plan and the savings plan and sit there with a calculator and try to do their best to sort it all out. This is for Albertans who want to have a clear idea of how much their government is spending: money in, money out. There are good reasons for this.

There is a place for different metrics of the deficit. What was used in 2013 was three separate buckets: a totally separate budget for operational, a totally separate budget for capital, a totally separate budget for savings. That was rather confusing to pretty much anybody who read the documents. I think most people here would agree.

Mr. Rodney: Agreed.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'm always glad to have the eager agreement of the Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Agreed.

Mr. Fildebrandt: He agrees with that.

The government made attempts to improve upon that system subsequently with what they called a consolidated primary balance, which blended them somewhat, but they were not fully reconciled. It was and remains still a valuable measure, based on accrual accounting, of the operational costs of the government and the amortized cost of capital for a particular year. It is a valuable measure, that I find useful when analyzing budgets, but it does not tell the entire picture. By that measure, governments could make, as we're doing this year, between $8 billion and $9 billion in capital commitments, important projects for the most part. They could make commitments of between $8 billion and $9 billion on capital, but only a small fraction of that actually shows up in the spending ledger for a year. That's dangerous. [Disturbance in the gallery] I believe someone is calling for mommy in the gallery. Madam Chair, I think we've got the government crying for mommy after the last few days.

The government's current form of a consolidated budget figure is a useful measure as it includes the operational costs of the government and it includes a portion of the capital costs amortized for a particular year. But that is a dangerous measure if it's left on its own, without more context behind it, other important data metrics to help explain the budget. That number on its own would allow a government to make approximately $8 billion a year, as we're doing, in capital commitments but only have a few billion of that show up in the expenditure ledger for the year.

This downplays the true size and scope of the deficit significantly. It allows the government to run massive consolidated deficits, borrowing money and seeing its net financial assets decline year after year, but claim that it is running a balanced budget because the operational side of the ledger may or may not be balanced. But overall the government is still spending significantly more money than it is bringing in. Now, this is not an argument that the government should do that. That is a separate argument: if the government should be borrowing or not or what it should be borrowing for or not borrowing for or how much it should be borrowing or not borrowing. This is an argument about the transparency of that borrowing. This is an argument about the ability of Albertans to understand the size and scope of the borrowing.

The next important metric that we could look at when we're measuring, essentially, the primary balance of the government is our net change in financial assets. It's an extremely valuable metric for us to use when measuring the financial health of the government. This is what we use when we measure, effectively, the change in the wealth of the province. The way we do that is that we look at the net change in financial assets; that is, in English, are we richer or poorer this year than we were the year before? Do we have more money to our name this fiscal year than we did last? It's a simple calculation. We take our assets, and we net them against our liabilities on a financial basis.

Assets. We lump together the heritage fund; external investments; self-supporting lending organizations; the sustainability fund, which has been renamed the contingency account; endowment funds; the capital account; what we used to have as the debt retirement account – that is a line item I would like to see returned to the budget some day – and anonymous other financial assets. Together those constitute the financial assets of the government. We net that against our accumulated debt and liabilities, against our pension obligations, against liabilities for self-supporting lending organizations like ATB, liabilities for government-owned capital, other liabilities, and direct borrowing for capital purposes. These two broad categories of liabilities and financial assets we used to net against each other and compare that year over year as our net change in financial assets.

This particular year our net change in financial assets – effectively, the überdeficit, the overarching deficit number, net change in financial assets for the overall government – will be a negative decline of $8.7 billion. That constitutes the single largest decline in the net financial assets of the government of Alberta in our history. The next largest change in net financial assets was, if I'm not mistaken, in 1992. Off the top of my head, I believe that that change in financial assets was a negative $4.2 billion to $4.7 billion. So we have now effectively doubled what was previously the largest deficit, as defined by net financial assets, in the history of the province. It's a staggering figure. But defining our deficit as net change in financial assets, as valuable as it is, is still one snapshot. We're blindfolded, touching the elephant in different areas, and all finding different things.

The fourth metric to define the overall financial health of the government is our income statement. That is the cash-adjusted balance. That's what we're asking for. We already have the three other metrics, those three other metrics that help us define the financial health or ills of the government, but we're missing the fourth, being our cash-adjusted balance. It is important as another metric so that Albertans can understand the balance of money coming into government and the money leaving government. The cash balance truly reflects what borrowing or savings are possible for the government. Right now, under the current system money is moved around, but it's very difficult to follow.

If we had a hypothetical balanced budget in this province – and I long for the day when we finally do . . .

Mr. MacIntyre: Three and a half years.

Mr. Fildebrandt: It will take longer than three and a half years because it will take us a little time to do it, I think, when we get there. But in three and a half years the healing can start, however much I wish that we could start today.

If we had a hypothetically balanced budget, we wouldn't have a difficult time understanding in a transparent way how much money we can allocate to the contingency account to rebuild what we used to call the sustainability fund, which once reached $17 billion. That was more than a rainy-day fund. That was a retirement that we blew on a really great vacation. We wouldn't know how much money we have to clearly allocate to the contingency account, but having an adjusted cash balance would allow us to know that. It would allow us to know how much we can clearly allocate to the heritage savings trust fund account. It would allow us to know how much we could put towards an account which I believe we no longer have, effectively, the debt retirement account.

The government has put forward no plan whatsoever to pay down the debt. They have a plan to rack it up, and that's easy. It's always easy to go into your online banking and do an Interac transfer from your line of credit to your chequing account or from your line of credit to your credit card. That's always easy, but finding a time and finding a way to save money is always more difficult.

The easiest way to understand how we effectively do that in a transparent way is to provide a cash-adjusted balance. It's not difficult to do. The data already exists. It's sitting on a spreadsheet of some bureaucrat a few hundred metres away, probably not more than a kilometre, saved in an Excel file on their desktop. It's just sitting there waiting for the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake to donate some money for the ink to print it. He is reaching for change right now. He probably has enough money in his pocket to do it right now. Probably a few dollars of ink. This is easy to do.

Perhaps the only reason that the Minister of Finance is opposed to this is because it's an embarrassing metric. Frankly, all of the metrics in this budget are embarrassing. A record decline in our net financial assets of $8.7 billion. Again, every time I say that, I feel I need to put my pinky to my lip and say: $8.7 billion. It is a sad, sad number to have to read. The minister should be less worried about being embarrassed by the figure and more concerned with providing transparent numbers on the financial health of the province to Albertans.

I thank the members for their time and hand the floor to the next member who wishes to speak.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. Earlier today, when the Minister of Finance was here, he made a statement regarding this very amendment which I found – well, it would have been amusing if it wasn't so sad. In reading this simple little amendment, the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board came back in his response saying that this amendment means that the Wildrose wants to change our accrual accounting method to a cash accounting method. It had already been stated on a number of occasions by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks that this simple little amendment did not change the method of accounting used by the government. It did not do away with the accrual accounting method.

The minister's statement took me aback a little bit because it meant to me that he actually didn't understand the amendment or doesn't understand the difference between accrual accounting and cash accounting or doesn't understand what a cash-adjusted balance means. The lack of whichever one it is concerns me, that the man in charge of the purse strings of our province doesn't understand basic financial reporting 101. Yet he is effectively riding herd on tens of billions of dollars of other people's money – our people's money, taxpayers' money – and could not understand, from a very simple amendment, that we are simply asking for a listing of the cash-adjusted balance in budgets and annual reports. It is the cash position of the government. To make the statement that he did, reading this simple little amendment that we put forward, just boggles my mind. This is the individual in charge of our money? It's concerning to me.

This simple amendment would provide extra transparency and understanding and clarity of the province's true cash position – true cash position. That's why it's called cash-adjusted balance. It's more than just the balance; it's cash adjusted. It reflects all the spending decisions made by the government, and it includes capital. It is – no kidding – a superior measure to the current so-called consolidated balance, which currently leaves out about $3 billion to $6 billion worth of money. Now, I don't know about you, but I would rather know that than not know that.

Actually, the adjusted cash balance gives a true reflection of the cash position and what borrowing or saving we can then move forward with. Those are important numbers to know, and the strange thing is that the government has these numbers already. It has to. It already has these calculations done. It has to. Otherwise, the government would never know how much room it had to borrow or how much money was still there to save. So the math has even been done already. The numbers are known. All this amendment is asking for is that all the rest of Alberta be told, too. It's just that simple. It's not a change to the accounting method; it's simply a change to the reporting method, to include in the current reporting method one more thing.

For this to be met with the kind of opposition that we heard from the minister is very disconcerting. Why is the Minister of Finance, the person in charge of and handling and responsible for and the steward of the taxpayers' money, so concerned about a simple little table in a document? Why is that number that critical, that important, that he would buck against something so simple? It concerns me. It makes me question: what are we trying to hide here? Is there something we're trying to hide or not? That's a valid question. You know, I don't want to go back in history too much, but there was a government recently that was rejected by the people of Alberta because they didn't like the way their money was being handled, and here we go again. Something similar is going on.

The people of Alberta want to have faith in their government handling their money, and this sort of an amendment is another one of those trust-building measures that I've spoken to before here. It's such a simple thing. We're not asking for a change in the accounting method; we're simply asking that these numbers, which the government already has, be reported to the people of Alberta. It is, after all, their money. It's their bank account. It's not our bank account. It is not the Minister of Finance's bank account. It is all Albertans' bank account, and they have a right to see what's in their bank account. It's a right, really. To deny Albertans this information, in my opinion, is to deny them their right to accurate information about what they have in their bank account. It's just that simple. I do not understand the government side's rejection of this amendment. It makes no sense to me, and I'm sure that it makes no sense to a lot of Albertans either. I believe that it further erodes the trust that Albertans have in this government's forthrightness, which is not a good thing.

So, Madam Chair, I support this amendment for all of the reasons that I think I made very clear. I am surprised that this government is not also supporting this very simple thing, and I would hope that all members in this House would genuinely have a sense of responsibility to our people. This their money. We ought never to be shy or attempt to hide from our people information about their money and what this government is doing with their money. So I would hope that every member in here would feel the responsibility, would feel the accountability to be forthright in the reporting of the true cash position of the government when it makes reports to the people.

I thank you for this time, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment?

If not, we'll call the question.

Mr. Hanson: Excuse me. I'd request a call for one-minute bells.

The Chair: Hon. member, according to our standing orders we are unable to do that when we sit again as a committee. The first bell has to be the full 15 minutes even with unanimous consent. It's a technicality. It's explained that it is a fair way because it allows for the members to come in and know that we're starting this process. You know, it just is what it is, so unfortunately we can't entertain that motion.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A7 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:37 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

For the motion:

Aheer	Hanson	Orr

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Chair: We are back on Bill 4. Are there any further comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Madam Chair. If I could move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill: Bill 4. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All in favour, say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, say no. So ordered.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, I need to confirm that you're reporting progress. I believe we missed that piece.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 5 Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to move third reading of Bill 5, the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act.

The bill will follow through on our commitment to make the government more transparent. It will extend what is commonly referred to as the sunshine list to include our province's agencies, boards, and commissions. Albertans expect and deserve further insight into how their tax dollars are spent. Agencies, boards, and commissions, including Alberta Health Services, will be required to disclose names and salaries of employees that earn more than $125,000 a year. All compensation paid to board members will be required to be disclosed. In addition, Madam Speaker, the bill enables municipalities and school boards to disclose the names and the compensation paid to employees if they wish to.

In order to ensure that we further the goals and underlying principles of this bill, we accepted some amendments proposed by the hon. members for Drayton Valley-Devon and Calgary-Elbow, which were passed yesterday in Committee of the Whole. These amendments set up minimum thresholds for employees of school boards and municipalities to ensure that it is consistent with the threshold for other public-sector bodies. We believe that these amendments strike the right balance, Madam Speaker.

Another amendment was passed yesterday to address concerns raised by offices of the Legislature. We respect the independence of these offices, so we have made the changes.

The hon. Member for Calgary-North West also brought forward an amendment that was passed yesterday. This amendment stipulates that the legislation will be reviewed every four years and the review shall last no longer than six months. We support this amendment, and I think we can agree that ensuring that legislation is reviewed to ensure that it is having the intended effect is the prudent and responsible thing to do.

Madam Speaker, in conclusion, this government is committed to helping to ensure that Albertans know how their public money is being spent, and I urge all members to support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to rise once again and speak to Bill 5, the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act. First, please allow me to express how appreciative I am for the collaboration and the co-operation and, overall, the spirit of working together that have gotten us to this point. Thank you.

Very briefly, I'd like to take the opportunity to address some of the concerns expressed by several of my MLA colleagues during the presentation of this bill, the main concern being why all agencies, boards, and commissions would not be required to publicly disclose the salaries or per diem rates of their members under this bill. It's my understanding that many of the agencies, boards, and commissions not covered under Bill 5 have little government role or funding. One example of this is the Law Society of Alberta, where the government appoints a couple of members and is not providing substantial or any funding. That being said, I'll remind the members of this House that the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board has announced a much-delayed review of the province's agencies, boards, and commissions, and therefore additional agencies, boards, and commissions may be added through regulation at a later date. So I think we're on the right track here.

Again I want to express my thanks to all the members here in the House for their collaboration and co-operation. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll just close by speaking strongly in support of this legislation. There are small areas that can be improved. It's an interesting day when the member across and I will be voting on the same piece of legislation in the same way. It's a very good day, in the holiday spirit, before we all go and enjoy the holiday season together.

I will call the question and move that we vote.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any further speakers who wish to comment on this bill?

If not, the Minister of Justice to close debate.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In closing, I will just say that teamwork makes dream work.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a third time]

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, I will move that the House stand adjourned until Monday at 1:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:02 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m. pursuant to Government Motion 14]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 1st Session (2015)

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, December 7, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us take a moment and reflect. Let us acknowledge the 26th anniversary of the horrendous Polytechnique massacre that took place on December 6, 1989, in Montreal, killing 14 innocent women. Let us be reminded by these brave women how important it is to highlight the ongoing issues of gender inequality and violence. Let us in this Chamber use our voices and the power of unity to take steps to address these issues in the future. Take a moment.

Hon. members, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark. I would invite all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, it appears we have no school groups with us today. Is that correct?

I would acknowledge the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my absolute pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two of my constituents from Red Deer-South. Garnet and Sharon Ward have both lived in Red Deer for over 30 years and have always been active citizens throughout the city. Garnet has been a member of the Rotary Club of Red Deer East for 17 years, and Sharon has been a part of many great organizations but is most proud of her time as chair of the central Alberta women's committee, a member of the Festival of Trees steering committee, and part of Big Brothers Big Sisters. I'd like to ask them both to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two guests, John McDonald and Ben McConnell. They unfortunately could not be here last week when I introduced them, but I'm so happy they could be here today. John is the executive director and regional vice-president of CNIB, who recently announced the My Wish Is advocacy campaign, asking Albertans to tweet their support for the visually impaired using #mywishis. Ben is a strong advocate for his community and for the CNIB. Ben is currently finishing his articling, after recently completing his law degree at the University of Victoria, and is also a motivational speaker. John and Ben are also both constituents from my wonderful constituency of Stony Plain, and I'd ask them both to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a tremendous privilege to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the three people who make me look good in the Assembly, and trust me, that is even harder than you might think it is. These are the folks who are the brains behind the Alberta Party shadow budget, behind our climate change plan, behind all the bill briefings, and behind anything halfway intelligent I get to say in the House. You know, in all honesty, we all know what it takes to come prepared into this House, and that is all the more challenging as a solo MLA. So I'd ask that Barbara Currie, Natasha Soles, and Jonathan Bilodeau now please rise and receive the traditional and well-deserved welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my good friend Mr. Thom Bennett. Thom is a well-known drummer, producer, and engineer who's been involved with numerous artists in multiple genres, including his own project, the A/B trio, since his graduation from Grant MacEwan college's esteemed jazz performance program in 2001. Thom is also the main driver behind the Edmonton live music, or ELM, initiative, which is looking to not only preserve Edmonton's live music scene but to guarantee its sustainability and growth for years to come. I've been working with Thom and city councillor Scott McKeen to support this important initiative, and today he's here to witness debate around Motion 507, which we'll discuss here in the House later this afternoon. I'd like to thank Thom for attending today and ask that we present him with the warm traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two guests today. Jim Visser is a retired farmer that has lived in Edmonton-Manning since 1949. He took over the family farm from his father in 1960 until he retired in 2000. Currently his son and extended family work the land. Jim arranged for several Edmonton MLAs to tour the agricultural lands in Edmonton-Manning and continues to spend his time as an advocate for the preservation of agricultural land, especially in the Riverbend area. As a farmer he is a strong supporter of Bill 6.

Also joining us today is Robin Tharle-Oluk, who grew up in a farming family in southern Alberta that included her great-grandfather, grandfather, her two uncles, her dad, and now her brother. She recognizes the importance of safety for everyone on the farm and ranch, whether it be farmers, families, workers, or neighbours. Today she lives in Edmonton-Manning, where she works as a certified athletic therapist, advocating safety for athletes.

I'd like them both to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

CNIB

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to begin by asking my colleagues in this House to imagine what life would be like without sight. If all of the lights in this Chamber were to suddenly go out, would we be able to navigate ourselves to the nearest exit? Would we be able to travel safely and tend to our work or return to our homes and families and come back to the Chamber the next day? Though lights can be turned back on, for nearly 53,000 Albertans blindness and partial sight is a reality that will remain for the rest of their lives.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and speak about this issue, which has been brought forward to me by the CNIB and one of its employees, Ben McConnell, whose mother, Dianne, works in my riding as the associate superintendent of Parkland schools. Ben is the manager of advocacy for CNIB, the organization that has worked hard to bring to our attention some of the many issues facing Albertans living with blindness or partial sight.

For people living with vision loss and their family members, CNIB is a pathway to a life of hope, mobility, and independence. From humble beginnings in 1918 the organization has grown to become the main support organization for Albertans and Canadians living with vision loss. In Alberta CNIB is the sole provider of essential rehabilitation for visually impaired Albertans. Its dedicated staff of specialists offer individualized rehabilitation support to clients, focusing on enhancing their independence and mobility in their homes and communities. This support is made possible thanks to support from the government of Alberta, through the ministries of Human Services and Health, as well as community support through donations and funding agencies like the United Way.

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that Ben could join us in the House today alongside John McDonald, the organization's executive director. I wish them well, and once again I commend the CNIB for the incredible, invaluable work they do on behalf of Albertans who are blind or partially sighted.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, at first reading the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour introduced Bill 6, an omnibus bill. Then on November 27 the minister released a statement in an attempt to do some damage control, saying that the legislation "provides two simple things." A paid farm worker can say no to something dangerous, and if they are hurt or killed, they can be compensated. Now everyone is wondering if she's confused. Is this an omnibus, or is this two simple things?

If the Premier's true intent is simply to provide farm and ranch employee protection, she could have accomplished that with a much simpler bill, but instead, Mr. Speaker, she has chosen to introduce omnibus Bill 6. The Premier has chosen to introduce a bill so wide open to interpretation that no Albertan knows what her true intentions are and what will come next. This bill is so poorly drafted, it has this government backpedalling so fast that I think time may go back to before they introduced the bill. Every day the communication changes. It was a mistake, so she says, that her intentions were not included in the text of the bill. It is now up to her to clearly put her intentions in writing before expecting anyone to trust her.

The minister said on November 27, "Our legislation allows us the flexibility to develop common-sense regulations." In other words, this legislation allows the Premier the flexibility to do whatever she wants to after Bill 6 is passed. Nobody in their right mind would agree to that, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is expecting Alberta family farms to trust her as this government develops common-sense regulations. Alberta does not believe that this government possesses any common sense about life on the family farm or in those farming communities. They certainly are not prepared to give free rein to a government that has broken their trust on this issue and others.

Bill 6 legislation does not exist on family farms in every other jurisdiction in Canada, as the Premier would have us believe. Alberta farmers and ranchers have spoken loud and clear. Do the right thing, Premier. Respect the . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Parliamentary Language

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Twenty-six years ago a man walked into l'école Polytechnique in Montreal and killed 14 women. His decision to use violence to make his political statement is sadly not a rare occurrence. We see examples of violence against women every day in our society. As female politicians we are subject to a dizzying array of verbal attacks. Hate a piece of legislation? Then depict the Premier with a pitchfork in her back. That a cartoon as offensive as that is casually passed off as biting satire is bad enough; to do it on the heels of the anniversary of one of this country's worst examples of violence against women is in startlingly poor taste. We have so far to go as people to understand that the power of the pen and the word to damage is so profound.

We face that responsibility as legislators every day. When we walk into this Chamber, we all have the tools to set an example for the province, but too often we use our time to toss insults across the aisle, to inflame our supporters with gross overstatements of each other's nefarious intentions, to wound politically. If we face our jobs every day with the intention to be legislators first and partisan politicians later, we might engender more respect from the public. It is easy yelling "commie" or "climate change denier" across the aisle, but taking the higher moral ground requires us all to work a little bit harder.

I don't believe that there is a single MLA in this room who wants to make Alberta worse. So perhaps it's time to start using the language of facilitators, communicators, and advocates. There is nothing acceptable about a cartoon of any politician with a pitchfork in their back. It is unfunny, ill-timed, and feels more than a little threatening, but our incendiary words are weapons, too, and when we stop plunging them into each other's backs and start using them to find solutions to our problems, we create the most powerful weapon of all, the example of leaders who have earned the right to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Alberta Hospital Edmonton

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and speak to an important service that is being provided within my constituency of Edmonton-Manning. Alberta Hospital Edmonton is one of the key mental health centre providers caring for Albertans and Northwest Territory residents through ongoing mental health supports.

It first opened on July 1, 1923, to support returning veterans who were struggling with shell shock, now considered PTSD. Since that time Alberta Hospital has become essential for those requiring in-patient mental health supports. In fact, the hospital supports over 40 per cent of provincial mental health in-patient services.

Alberta Hospital offers services ranging from acute care to forensic care, providing support to youth, seniors, and everyone in between. The expertise that is available at Alberta Hospital is second to none. Doctors, psychiatrists, social workers, nursing staff, and support staff all provide a safe and nurturing environment for those who are in need of critical mental health supports. Through the hospital's expert care many individuals in need of mental health supports are able to stabilize and transition back into the community and lead successful lives.

Mr. Speaker, I know many of my constituents are proud to have Alberta Hospital within our constituency. They know of the good work that is being done there and look forward to the report of the mental health review that was called by our Premier earlier this year. These constituents know that our government takes the mental health of all Albertans as a serious issue and want to ensure that all Albertans feel safe and included in all of our communities.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta Hospital is a leader in the services provided to Albertans with mental health challenges, and I am thankful for all the work that they continue to do within the constituency of Edmonton-Manning for all Albertans.

Thank you.

CBC Radio Edmonton Turkey Drive

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to tell you and this Assembly about CBC Radio Edmonton's turkey drive, CBC's annual fundraiser in support of Edmonton's Food Bank. This is the turkey drive's 20th year, and since 1995 CBC has raised more than $3 million for Edmonton area food banks. This year CBC hopes to raise $500,000, and the need is great. According to the Hunger Count published in November, food bank usage across Alberta has spiked 23 per cent since 2014. Forty per cent of those served will be children, most of them children in single-parent families. By donating generously to this fundraiser, you'll be giving help and hope to those who need it most in their hour of need.

I'm pleased to say that the turkey drive spirit is alive and well in my constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. The Holyrood school in my constituency has participated in this fundraiser for many years. Under the direction of music teacher Mrs. Helene Magus the students of Holyrood school eagerly participate in the turkey drive. Students forgo birthday presents to collect donations instead, and the whole school community pitches in to contribute. Holyrood has won the junior turkey spirit trophy award seven times since 2008. This is awarded to the school that raises the most money for the turkey drive. Last year they raised the impressive total of $33,275. I'm keeping my fingers crossed that Holyrood school wins again.

I know that many families in my constituency will also be the beneficiaries of food baskets from Edmonton's Food Bank this Christmas. I can't say that I'm happy about this situation, but I am happy that neighbours are helping neighbours in their time of need. The turkey drive this year kicks off on December 11 and runs through December 18. You can support the drive by taking donations to CBC Edmonton's donation desk, by taking donations directly to the Edmonton Food Bank itself, or by going to the CBC Edmonton's website and clicking on the link that will allow you to make an online donation. I encourage all of my colleagues at the Legislature to make a donation and help those in need have a merrier Christmas and to start 2016 on the right foot.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Public Consultation

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to talk about consultation. Consultation is defined as the action or process of formally consulting or discussing, a conference in which advice is given or views are exchanged. When you don't consult with those who are most affected by legislation, it is no longer a fair and open process. To paraphrase a constituent, any bill designed to protect us should be written with us so that it doesn't harm us.

Due to a lack of consultation from the government on Bill 6 several members of the opposition have been asked to hold town hall meetings. I myself held two this weekend, one of which was in the Deputy Speaker's own constituency of Peace River. More and more cities and towns are asking Wildrose for consultation, including the town of Mayerthorpe in the minister of agriculture's riding. Wildrose MLAs have attended meetings in Bassano, with over 600 in attendance; Killam, with over 300 in attendance; and in James River, with over 175 in attendance. This is how consultation should be done. Industry has also spoken out against Bill 6, with a large number of agricultural organizations taking a stand against this government's risky approach.

But it's not just farmers and ranchers decrying the lack of consultation from the NDP. Recently the Alberta School Boards Association expressed concerns regarding a lack of consultation on Bill 8. A news article on the weekend showed that a vast majority of Albertans have concerns about this NDP government's carbon tax on everything as well. It all makes you wonder who the NDP is listening to, because it's certainly not Albertans.

Camrose county has come out with a letter to the Premier, where they quote the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose as saying: it is difficult as a politician answering questions, much like standing in quicksand as the target and intentions of the bill are constantly changing. Well, Mr. Speaker, at least he's honest. Now he knows how Alberta farmers are feeling. This government promised to do things differently and be more inclusive, but that hasn't been the case.

The opposition is listening to Alberta families who are worried about this NDP government's ideological agenda. Listening is core to who we are, and that will never . . . [Mr. Loewen's speaking time expired]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Job Creation and Retention

Mr. Jean: Our economy is in crisis. Over 80,000 Albertans have lost their jobs, bankruptcies are on the rise, and the number of those suffering from depression is climbing. We know that the NDP isn't helping. Their risky experiments are scaring away investment, and the $3 billion carbon tax will hit families the hardest. What's the Energy minister's advice to those hurting? Well, leave the province until things get better. First we are embarrassing cousins, and now this. Will the Premier stand today and apologize to Albertans for members of her cabinet insulting Albertans when they're already down?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I believe that the minister has already issued an apology for misspeaking about what her intention was with respect to jobs in B.C. That being said, Mr. Speaker, this is a wonderful opportunity for me to reinforce the strategy that our government has put in place around economic development and job creation. We have invested unprecedented amounts into infrastructure, for instance. Just recently the Conference Board of Canada has indicated that that will help remediate the effects of the drop in the price of oil, something over which this province doesn't have control, but we can control our response to ensuring . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Growing numbers of these jobless Albertans think it's time for the NDP to start looking for jobs in other provinces, and the only thing they have to blame for this is themselves. Companies like Encana are moving money away from Alberta, higher taxes are strangling our chance to recover, and investment is fleeing Alberta. Next door, in British Columbia, where they actually reduced taxes and are holding the line on spending, their province is expected to lead growth across Canada. To the Premier: why do Albertans now have to look out of province for work instead of here at home?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, to be clear, Alberta is an energy exporting economy, and B.C. is not, so there's a difference there. That being said, we are aware that this is hurting Alberta families. We know that the drop in oil prices means that families are struggling and jobs are being lost. That is why we took action to stabilize front-line services, to invest in infrastructure, to free up capital for small business and medium enterprises, and to engage in a job-creation program. These are the kinds of things you do when you want to help families who are suffering from job loss.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: For the very first time since the early '90s Alberta has higher unemployment than Ontario. Unless we change track, Alberta will see higher unemployment than Quebec for the first time since 1983. While the NDP are working on building their new fantasy economy, they're telling Albertans to move somewhere else. It's disgraceful. Albertans deserve leaders who fight for them, not against them. When will the Premier back down from her bad policies so Albertans can get back to work?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, it appears as though the folks on the other side really think that cutting back and laying off teachers and nurses is the way to raise the price of oil, but we know that's not true. We know that it does create major challenges for Albertans, and we are working together with industry, with job creators, with stakeholders to ensure that we do everything we can to ameliorate the effect of the drop in the price of oil and to stabilize jobs in Alberta and to do everything we can to soften the blow of something over which we, unfortunately . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Second question.

Carbon Tax

Mr. Jean: Everything the NDP is doing is hurting our economy, and Albertans are worried. They're upset that the NDP are ramming through a new carbon tax that will mean $3 billion out of their pockets and into a government slush fund. A new poll shows overwhelming opposition to this backdoor PST and for good reason. It will cost families an extra $1,000 a year, hurt our economy, and raise the price of everything for Albertans. Will the Premier admit that she does not have the support of Albertans to bring in the largest tax grab in Alberta's history?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, in fact, just recently the Conference Board of Canada released projections which indicated that the economy should begin to recover next year. One of the reasons that will happen, they say, is because of our government's policies with respect to infrastructure investment. That's leadership. We will continue to work with stakeholders and with industry to do what we can to invest in technology, to invest in job creation, to invest in diversification, and to stabilize front-line services as we work through, together, these challenging times.

Mr. Jean: The NDP talk about a new carbon tax as some kind of a gift to get enemies of our energy sector on board for new pipelines. Environmental Defense and ForestEthics stood side by side with this Premier when she announced her new carbon tax. Here's what they've been up to since. One has a petition wanting to shut down the Energy East pipeline, and the other is campaigning against any pipeline expansion to the west. Will the Premier admit that this new carbon tax will do nothing to get new pipelines built and will just hurt Alberta's families?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, the Official Opposition believes that the thing to do about climate change is simply ignore it, and that is not the responsible way forward. It's not the responsible way forward for our industry, it's not the responsible way forward for our hopes to get pipelines built, and it is not the responsible way forward for our children and people who rely on our air and our land and our water. We are going to take action, we're going to be responsible, we're going to do our part in Alberta, and that's going to help our environment and our industry.

Mr. Jean: Maybe the Premier can listen to her new deputy chief of staff that once said that a carbon tax – and I quote – threatens to penalize families who are already doing their part for the environment. End quote. Albertans remember an NDP that used to fight for fairness, and now they're pushing a new tax that will raise the price of everything for Albertans, all to satisfy enemies who want to shut down our oil patch. It is shameful. Premier, what do you have to say to every family in Alberta that will be poorer and is out of work because of your new carbon tax, that will not reduce emissions?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to point out that the carbon pricing plan that we introduced includes provisions for rebating low- and middle-income families. The member opposite knows that. He's just decided not to talk about it. He also knows that this government has committed to taking every cent of that carbon price and reinvesting it in diversification, in technological development, in working with industry to help them bring down their emissions so that we can grow our market, not lose it. That's what our plan will do. They know that's what it will do, but they just don't want to talk about the real outcome.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Jean: The NDP plan is to bring in a carbon tax that will not reduce GHG emissions by one iota.

2:00 Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation

Mr. Jean: Bill 6 continues to anger Albertans right across the province. Each government town hall is a bigger fiasco than the last one. This weekend Wildrose MLAs hosted seven Bill 6 town halls. At every town hall the message is clear: kill Bill 6. This afternoon the government will talk to press about amendments to this bill. This is the third time this government has tried to get Bill 6 right, but the fact is that amendments won't cut it. Farmers want the Premier to kill Bill 6 and consult with them. Why . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not exactly sure who's doing the Official Opposition leader's math, but this is the first amendment, and it's the one amendment that we've been talking about all along. [interjections] That being said, what we've done is that we have listened to Albertans, and we have heard that they were . . .

The Speaker: I will stop the clock. I am having difficulty hearing the Premier.

Hon. Premier, finish your answer, please.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we have done is that we have listened to Albertans, and we've heard that as a result of our miscommunication, for which I take responsibility, they misunderstood the application of Bill 6. So we are bringing in an amendment that will make it perfectly clear that family members and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: This NDP government did not consult with farmers. The Premier fails to understand that many farmers already carry insurance that is far superior to WCB. She'd know that if she'd actually talked to farmers. She should also know that farmers are not the only industry exempted from mandatory WCB coverage. Unions are also exempted. They're allowed the freedom to choose the kind of insurance that works best for their members. If the Premier was to change that, you can bet she'd get Gil McGowan on the phone first thing. Why did she not provide that same courtesy to Alberta farmers before introducing Bill 6?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every year in Alberta 17 people, at least, die in work-related injuries on farms. Between now and April 1 almost 140 people will be seriously injured and lose income. This is why we are moving forward on this. We are still moving forward in a way that ensures that family members, volunteers, and even paid family members are not covered by this legislation. But we do think that vulnerable paid employees who are not related to the owners of the farms need protection, and that is what we will give them.

Mr. Jean: The Premier has blamed the rejection of Bill 6 on misinformation from government officials. We have checked. Everything the officials said about Bill 6 was correct. The government's own websites and information sheets confirm that. Bill 6 was designed to cover kids doing farm chores and to apply to neighbours volunteering and helping out. Bill 6 applies to 4-H because selling that cow is a commercial activity. The only misinformation around Bill 6 is coming from the Premier. Did the Premier not read her own bill, or is she blaming others for her own mistakes and arrogance?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is where, of course, misinformation does become a problem because this does not apply to 4-H – and it never would have applied to 4-H – it doesn't apply to family members, and it doesn't apply to neighbours. To be perfectly clear, the amendment to be introduced today – although we would have still had this outcome without the amendment, the amendment will make it absolutely clear that that's the way we are going to go forward with this. We have listened to farmers. We understand that they were concerned. We are now moving forward to ensure safety while ensuring that family members are excluded.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

The hon. leader of the third party.

Public Consultation

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP has spent the past days complaining about misinformation about Bill 6. The hyperbole and rhetoric from some people could have been avoided if the government had not begun by publishing what they themselves call misinformation and been up front and honest with Albertans from day one. To the Premier: since even you have admitted that communications have been ineffective and confusing, which has farmers and ranchers in an uproar, don't you think you should stop on Bill 6 until they actually feel heard by you and your government?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that question. As I've said before, in the next four months if we were to delay it, we would have almost 140 people injured that wouldn't have coverage, we would have four or five people who might die, and there would be no right to refuse unsafe work. These are the levels of fatalities and injuries that are happening on farms, so we're going to take action now. In the meantime all that other regulation, all the other specificity, will be consulted on rigorously for months with all parties.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, an amendment introduced today at 3:30 guarantees there's been no consultation because the farmers couldn't have seen the amendment.

Just last week the School Boards Association sent a letter to the Education minister stating that they had not been provided the opportunity for meaningful consultation. Given that we repeatedly hear the same sentiments from farmers asked about Bill 6, to the Premier: why do you think dictating policy to Albertans instead of listening to them is the best course of action?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as we have said before, it is very common to put in place the architecture of legislation, and that is what we are doing with Bill 6 to keep paid farm workers safe and to ensure they are eligible for WCB. But we are also committed to moving forward with rigorous consultation at a number of different technical tables to talk about how the regulations will apply and will be refined in exactly the same way that they have been in every other province while still maintaining the viability of family farms. That's what we're going to do here in Alberta, too.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, consultation after the fact is like telling prisoners when mealtime is after they're convicted.

Last week this government blamed hard-working department staff for the fiasco that is Bill 6. Albertans are now against government on bills 6, 8, and 5 as well as on climate change, carbon tax, royalty review, the budget, and a pile of other issues. Isn't it time to admit you need to start listening to Albertans before launching in on legislation, that they seem to almost always dislike?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as I've said before – and it's interesting to see this coming from the member opposite – it's standard, you know, that you pass legislation, and then you move to regulations, and you consult on the regulations. That's the way it works. [interjections] That's the way it's worked for a very, very long time. The fact of the matter is – I mean, writing regulations behind closed doors and never talking to anyone about them is not cool, but that's not what we're going to do here. We've been very clear that we are going to invite stakeholders, industry people, farmers to the table to talk about how the Employment Standards Code, the Occupational Health and Safety Code, and the Labour Relations Code apply to farmers in a . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, would you please not raise your voice so high next time.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dental Care Costs

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dental care is more than the key to pearly whites; it's a major contributor to individuals' overall health and lifespan. However, costs of dental care are the highest in the country and remain a serious barrier for Albertans to get dental care. Without a fee guide, most patients don't know what they're going to be charged until they get into the chair. The Minister of Health has admitted that high cost is a barrier and launched a review of dental costs and the Dental Association and College last summer, but we haven't heard a word since. To the minister: when will we see dentists post their fees, and how is the dental association involved with . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Of course, it's important for us to make sure that Albertans get good value for the investment they're making in their own health, including dental care. Certainly, when the fact that Alberta was among the highest in the country was brought to my attention in the summer, I worked immediately to make sure that my officials were moving forward on a way to make sure that we address, in consultation with a variety of different stakeholders, some of the root causes that are contributing to that. I'll be happy to update the House in 2016. I'm not going to give a month quite yet because I want to make sure we get the review right.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, ironically, the Dental Association and College is actually standing in the way of real competition among dentists by putting extreme limitations on dentists' public information and advertising and disallowing special offers for low income and seniors. To the minister: will the minister take steps to require the ADAC to free its members so they can let the public know where and when they can save money on expensive dental operations?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the idea. Certainly, there will be a variety of different outcomes contemplated throughout the report. That's one of the reasons why we're taking our time. We're working in collaboration with the Alberta Dental Association and College to ensure that we understand their opinions as well as the opinions of others throughout Alberta.

I have to say that the number of responses when we made the announcement that we were going to be moving forward with the review on dental fees was very positive from Albertans. Clearly, they want to make sure that we move on making sure that they get good value for their investment as well. Certainly, this is one of the things that we'll be considering. I look forward to updating the House in a timely fashion.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, I'm quite sure that the Alberta dental association did not give a positive response to investigation of their activities.

Now, scores of dentists have raised concerns about how the Dental Association and College governs itself. Most urgent is the need to separate the association and the college since the college is trying to protect the public and the association is trying to protect and promote dentistry. To the minister: when will you require, as other provinces do, the separation of the association and the college into two separate organizations and eliminate this conflict of interest?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government is conducting a review of the dental fees. We've also engaged the Alberta Dental Association and College in that review. In terms of specific outcomes resulting from the review, the review hasn't been completed yet, so it would be premature for me to say what direction we might be taking on the idea that the hon. member is presenting or other ideas that have been brought forward from insurance providers as well as within government and within the dental association itself. Certainly, it's all food for thought at this point.

Don't forget to floss.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-East.

PDD Housing Safety Standards

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard plenty of concerns from PDD-funded individuals and their families as well as service providers in my constituency. Particularly, the SCOPE Society and Disability Action Hall, I recall, were some of the first meetings that I took after I was elected. They say that these regulations are particularly strict and that compliance would require costly renovations and would unfairly marginalize PDD clients. Some even fear that landlords will evict PDD clients or refuse to rent to PDD clients because of these regulations. To the Minister of Human Services: what is your government doing to address these troubling concerns?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Every Albertan deserves to live in the community of their choice and to be supported to live safely and independently. We have heard those concerns as well. The previous government failed to take into account those concerns. That's why last Friday we announced consultation that will guide us on a go-forward basis as to what path we should take and how we can balance safety with those concerns.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

First supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the answer. Given that some PDD clients require assistance to leave their homes in case of an emergency and given that some have complex needs, careful consideration is needed when it comes to ensuring their safety. To the same minister: what will be the goal of consultation on this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by saying that the safety of PDD individuals is of paramount importance. It's also vital that whatever measures we put in place are practical and that they are affordable. The goal of this consultation is to look into those concerns raised by PDD individuals and service providers and to guide the department and the government on the safety standards and what's appropriate in the circumstances.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important that consultation focuses on those most impacted by this government policy and that the engagement is meaningful, effective, and inclusive. Again to the minister: how did you choose who makes up the consultation committee, and what expertise do they bring to the table?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I'm very proud to say that the consultation team brings a wealth of knowledge and experience in the relevant field. It consists of members of academia, it consists of service providers, it consists of self-advocates, and it also includes an MLA on this team. This consultation team is a very balanced team that will help us guide the future direction.
Thank you.

Medicine Hat Town Hall Meeting

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, as you know, over 1,200 people attended the town hall in our city of Medicine Hat. I hope you heard everyone speak passionately against Bill 6. Thousands upon thousands of people in our ridings simply do not trust this government. To the Premier. They don't trust that you have their best interests at heart. They don't trust your agenda. They don't trust you to get this right. Will you kill this bill, consult with farmers and ranchers, and try to earn this trust back?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the majority of Albertans believe that paid workers on farms need to be kept safe, and they also believe that they need to receive an income should they be injured, and that is what we are going to do. We are also going to go forward with technical consultation tables with respect to the application of the detailed codes in the form of regulations.

Mr. Fildebrandt: After the bill has passed.

Ms Notley: Exactly. You don't consult on regulations before the bill passes.

So that's what we're going to do. It's absolutely the reasonable way to go forward, and we will earn their trust.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, at the meeting in Medicine Hat it was noted that the Health minister has repeatedly rejected funding for the local air ambulance service, HALO. I must ask the minister: given that safety is apparently so high on your list for the people of southeastern Alberta and given the known problems with emergency services in rural Alberta, why do you steadfastly refuse to help our emergency air ambulance while paying lip service to safety?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, we do appreciate that a number of members in the community have contributed to make sure that there is an air ambulance. We have a responsibility to make sure that we use the public resources in a way that's derived based on where the greatest needs are, and I know that everyone wants to have access to an air ambulance in their own community. In terms of specific funding for HALO I'd be happy to follow up in additional conversations with the hon. member, but at this point the demand in the area hasn't warranted public investment.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, whereas this government has made an absolute mess of Bill 6 and given that the government story seems to change every single day and given that even the agriculture minister could not give his full support to his own bill at a town hall hosted by my Wildrose colleague, will this government admit that it made a mistake, listen to the overwhelming majority who oppose this, and kill the bill?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, actually, I found it quite interesting because apparently at that town hall that the minister of agriculture attended, one organized by the Official Opposition, pretty much a first I think, by the way – nonetheless, I believe that one of the members opposite suggested that there are parts of the bill that he was in favour of. So, you know, I'm not sure who's in favour or who's not in favour. I know that our caucus is completely behind moving forward to protect workers in Alberta.

Workers' Compensation for Farm Workers

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, speaking to the Canadian Injured Workers association in July 2012, the Premier said, and I quote, that the Alberta Workers' Compensation Board functions solely as a means of providing cheap insurance to Alberta employers at the expense of the dignity and the health and the future of Alberta's workers and, further, that workers, quote, suffer the consequences of that day in and day out. My question to the labour minister. In 24 days Bill 6 will force WCB upon Alberta farm workers even though the Premier says that WCB causes workers to suffer. If the Premier is right, why are you forcing WCB on Alberta farm workers?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I actually want to thank the member opposite for that question. Let us be clear. WCB could be better and could be improved, and our government is committed to doing the work that the previous government never did to improve WCB. But, that being said, it is far better than the alternative, which is forcing poor, vulnerable, injured workers to hire lawyers to sue insurance companies, which is the way it would work in the absence of the WCB. That is why most workers abandoned that idea and embraced the WCB model over a hundred years ago, except farm workers.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's getting crowded under the bus.

Given that in the same speech the Premier states that, quote, we have a long list of how we would change Workers' Compensation Board to make it fair and given that in the past seven months none of these changes have been made, to the labour minister: why haven't you fixed all the flaws on your long list before foisting this system that the Premier says is unfair onto Alberta farmers and farm workers?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as the member opposite probably knows, we have engaged in a review of agencies, boards, and commissions, and the Workers' Compensation Board is part of that. We are in the process of trying to do a fulsome consultative review of how we can improve the service provided by WCB, but that being said, it is fundamentally different than saying that you remove WCB or keep people from having access to it and tell them to sue a private insurer to try and get a fraction of the benefits. That's what happens in the absence of WCB, and that's what we are trying to change. Then, once farm workers are covered by it . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, we hear again and again – and we heard it again today from the Premier – that the motivation behind Bill 6 is to protect injured farm workers. Now, given that Bill 6 makes WCB mandatory without provision for other forms of coverage and given that in her own words WCB causes injured workers to suffer a loss of dignity and health, why are you forcing a system that you yourself have described in words that I cannot use, because they're unparliamentary, on the very farm workers that you purport to be protecting?

Ms Notley: Well, as I've said in the answer to the previous two questions, which I will say again, workers' compensation in Alberta after 44 years of that government does need to be improved. However, it is far better – far better – than there being no compensation available to workers and far better than forcing vulnerable, injured workers to sue insurance companies to get a fraction of the benefits that they would otherwise get. That is why we're going to move forward to protect paid farm workers in Alberta.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by thanking the minister of agriculture for showing up to a town hall meeting on Bill 6 in Bassano this weekend. I also want to thank 600 farmers who did their best to open the minister's eyes and explain how Bill 6 will hurt their family farms and ranches. Premier, my constituents at the town hall voted unanimously against the bill. Your agriculture minister was there. Polls show that your bill is hugely unpopular in every corner of the province, rural and urban. Will you listen to the people of Strathmore-Brooks and all Alberta and kill Bill 6?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, the same poll that the member opposite quotes suggests that should farm owners and their family members and volunteers be excluded from the application of the bill, which will be very clear once our amendment is introduced, over 60 per cent of Albertans support protecting farm workers, and that's why we're going to move forward on it.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, nobody trusts this government to get it right.

Given that the agriculture minister is attacking family farms when farmers are telling them by the thousands not to, the Energy minister is telling laid-off workers to get a job in B.C., the environment minister is ramming through a massive $3 billion ND PST carbon tax on everything, why is the Premier consulting with union bosses, hardline activists, and a few CEOs but not the everyday Albertans that her policies are hurting?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a good opportunity to actually talk about the extensive consultation that went on with respect to our climate change plan. In fact, as the member opposite has indicated, a number of industry people are in favour of our climate change plan, including the Calgary Chamber of commerce and other chambers of commerce and other business groups, because they see it for what it is, which is an opportunity to move forward, acknowledge the problems that we have, and reinvest in technological upgrading and diversification in our province. That's the kind of forward thinking that this government will do. We will not ignore a problem and pretend it doesn't exist. We will take it head-on and try . . .

Mr. Fildebrandt: Albertans see it for what it is. It's an ND PST socialist cash grab that will go straight into a slush fund. They never campaigned on it. They have no mandate to do it; 70 per cent of Albertans are against their cash grab. The hardline activists running that government have an agenda totally at odds with the common-sense values of everyday Albertans. Does the Premier really believe that she has the support of Albertans to impose the single largest tax increase in Alberta's history?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, I believe that we have consulted with a broad range, that we have the endorsement of well-known socialists like the president of CNRL and additional well-known socialists like the Calgary Chamber of commerce and the Conference Board of Canada. It's amazing, the socialists that are lining up behind this plan. It's amazing. They're everywhere. Wherever you turn, there are socialists.

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation Consultation

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, over the last two weeks, while the Wildrose caucus went out and actually listened to our farm brothers and sisters, we have heard two recurring messages. First, nobody cares about the safety of the family farm more than the mums and dads who run them. Second, this government needs to back off their socialist agenda and listen to the tens of thousands of farmers and ranchers who have been chanting, "Kill Bill 6." To add insult to injury, the Premier decided to exempt Hutterites. They were offended that she would try to pit them against their farmer brothers and sisters. To the Premier: when will you start representing all of Alberta's farmers and ranchers rather than just some?

Ms Sigurdson: The farm and ranch legislation is about protecting paid workers on farms and to make sure that they have the same rights that workers do in every other workplace in Alberta and in Canada. We know, actually, that the farm fatality rate in B.C. was reduced by 68 per cent when similar legislation came in, and the injury rate went down 52 per cent and serious injuries by 41 per cent. So we know this will help, for sure.

Mr. Hunter: Given that the Premier has said that she wants this to be an open and transparent government – in fact, she made a big deal over the opening of the front doors to show her resolve – but the legislation introduced by her government so far is anything but open and transparent and now, with the first real push-back from voters, she has removed contact information for herself and all of her caucus members, Premier, will you take one small step in the right direction and once again allow the people of Alberta to know how to contact you?

The Speaker: The minister of labour.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Well, we – myself and many other ministers – have been out at the consultations, and this is just the beginning. We’re going to rigorously have consultations to make sure we get it right, and we’ll keep working with farmers and ranchers, with industry leaders to make sure that the regulations are right. We’re putting forward an amendment later today to clarify things because people asked us to put it in writing, which is what we’re doing, and we’re making it clear. I’m proud to stand here to do that and to make sure that farmers and ranchers know that we’re working with them.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that this bill has been handled in the most deplorable manner and that each consultation – I mean, told-you session – degrades each time and given that this government doesn’t seem to respect hard-working farmers and ranchers in our province, when will this government concede that Albertans don’t want anything to do with their risky socialist experiments?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We’re continuing to work with farmers and ranchers, industry leaders, to make sure that we get all of the details right with this group of people. We’re committed. We’ve gone out to public consultations and we’ve heard – I’ve heard first-hand. I sat and talked to many people all across this province, and I’m proud to do it again. There’s been a tremendous amount of misinformation, and we need to make sure that we get it clear now. We’re working to do that. We’re going to continue to work on that. This is a bill that I can stand behind, and I’m proud to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Fentanyl Use

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On November 23 the Mental Health Review Committee provided the Minister of Health with recommendations to address Alberta’s fentanyl crisis. The immediate action plan includes allowing all first responders to administer the life-saving fentanyl antidote. To the Minister of Health: given that last week you told the Globe and Mail that you would make the change “before the end of the year,” when almost one person is overdosing on fentanyl and dying every day in Alberta, why would you wait even one day to save lives?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. It certainly is an issue of concern, and we want to make sure that we’re acting quickly to try to get the life-saving antidote into the hands of people as quickly as possible. That’s why we’ve purchased and we’re distributing an additional 2,000 naloxone kits across this province, but it’s only one part of the larger solution. It would be a lot easier if the federal counterparts were of the same awareness as we are in Alberta. We certainly have work to do in collaboration, but we’re doing our part provincially, within the current legal legislation that we have, to try to move it forward as quickly as possible.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. That doesn’t explain why the recommendations from the mental health committee haven’t been implemented yet.

Given that as minister you can immediately implement the recommendations of your own Mental Health Review Committee and no legislation is required for the five immediate action recommendations and given that the committee has called upon you to display “clear leadership and partnership,” why have you not implemented the immediate action recommendations of your own committee? What are you waiting for, Minister?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question and the opportunity to address it. Now doctors and specialized pharmacists can prescribe naloxone. All paramedics and pharmacists can administer naloxone in an emergency. We are fast-tracking regulatory changes so that other first responders can administer naloxone as well, including paramedics. The Alberta Health Professions Act is an option that we’re working on. We want to make sure that we get the right answer moving forward. We’re working hard to make sure that we get the antidote into the hands of people who are likely to abuse, and that’s one of the reasons why we’re working to invest in these additional 2,000 kits. But it does take time, and in the meantime we’re doing everything we can.

Mr. Ellis: “Immediate” means now.

To the same minister: given that this government is wasting no time in pushing through legislation for 331 farm-related deaths from 2007 to 2014 and given that fentanyl is on track to kill that many Albertans this year alone and given that for every day wasted 15 more Albertans, 15 so far, may have already died, why are you not reacting with the greatest urgency to this crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The piece around having other first responders able to administer naloxone is the one piece I was speaking specifically to. With regard to addressing this, we have certainly increased public awareness. We’re improving addiction treatment across the province. We’ve created a fentanyl response team that is pulling the right people around the table, and they’re connecting on an almost daily basis around what’s happening in different parts of the province as well as reducing the supply and trafficking of the drug. We take this very seriously, and we’re doing everything within our own authority to be able to move forward on this. The federal government has legislative authority over prescription drugs, so we’re trying to make sure through information that we’re urging them along around . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hospital Infrastructure

Mr. Carson: Mr. Speaker, the people of southwest Edmonton are in need of a modern hospital. My constituency of Edmonton-Meadowlark is home to the Misericordia. My constituents were glad to see $20 million allocated in Budget 2015 for much-needed long-term planning for the Misericordia and Royal Alex, but they know that there’s still a lot of work ahead of us to fix these serious problems within both hospitals. To the Minister of Health: can you update the House on how you’re working with hospitals like the Misericordia to address our health care infrastructure needs going forward?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Our government has inherited significant deferred infrastructure maintenance, and our government is committed to investing in hospitals that Albertans need like the Misericordia and the Royal Alex. That's why we're working with Alberta Health Services and Alberta Infrastructure to ensure that the buildings meet the current and future demands in those areas. We want to make sure that we get this right moving forward, and part of that means that we do the planning work up front, before you make an announcement, a lesson that the former government didn't know.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that places like the Misericordia are crumbling and in need of repair, to the same minister: why is it important that we take the time to consult, study, and plan before moving forward?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. After 44 years of a PC government, where there were projects after projects announced without realistic timelines or realistic budgets, we are absolutely committed to making sure that we get it right at the front end moving forward so that we can give the facilities that are so desperately needed. The result is that communities are waiting and waiting and waiting, based on what's happened in the past. The budget also contains $4.4 billion in unallocated funding for projects exactly like this so that we have a plan that suits the needs of the community. We'll be transparent about the costs, and we'll get it done right.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that in many cases, after years of neglect Alberta's health infrastructure deficits stretch across the province, again to the Minister of Health: what are you doing to address the backlog?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. In terms of reducing Alberta's health infrastructure backlog, that certainly is a priority. That's why the new capital plan helps make that a reality by investing more than $2 billion already in the infrastructure strategy. As I said, we also have the $4.4 billion. We're going to be using evidence to ensure that we continue to make the right decision moving forward. Capital plan 2015 also includes $652 million over five years for capital maintenance and renewal specifically in health care facilities.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Government Policies

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP government should know full well how frustrated Albertans are with their performance. I'd like to take the opportunity today to ask questions submitted to me by frustrated constituents. Quote: if you push Bill 6 through without consulting all Alberta farmers or at the very least making consultation available to all Alberta farmers, that is an abuse of power. To the Premier: what do you have to say to this Albertan about your consultation process?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as I've said a number of times today, this is an issue that has been outstanding. It has been the subject of debate in the province for many, many years. We are moving forward to ensure that the basic ability to refuse unsafe work and that access to workers' compensation are in place as of January 1 for paid farm workers who are not related to the farmers. That's something that is long overdue. That is something that is in place in almost every other jurisdiction. The health and safety piece is in place in every other jurisdiction, the workers' compensation in most other jurisdictions. It is long overdue in Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that just last week we found out that another 15,000 Albertans lost their jobs, I'd like to highlight one incident in my constituency where my constituent wrote: my trucking business has seen a drop in work, loss of customers, layoffs, and idle equipment; we have no debt, and we have cash, but we will not be investing. Again to the minister: what does this government have to say to the thousands of Albertans losing their jobs and the many more companies seeing business dry up?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We absolutely know that there are many families who are hurting through this drop in world oil prices and the economy. Just as the Conference Board of Canada said, though, next year is going to get better. We believe that it'll get better. We're investing in infrastructure to make it so. We're also investing in job development so that more people will be working.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the NDP government's jobs plan includes sending workers to B.C. and hurting Alberta's biggest industry and given that Albertans are overwhelmingly opposed to the carbon tax that this government is proposing, I'd like to quote one more constituent directly: this government needs to get the confidence back into the major players of this province by not increasing royalties and to forget the carbon tax as their way of funding all their election promises. To the Minister of Finance: is this government willing to listen to Albertans and follow this wise advice?

Mr. Ceci: Yes, this government is always willing to listen to everybody, and we're doing so through our budget consultations, that we did before the budget and that I did after the budget. Budget 2016 is going to be built on that same information. Going forward, we've also looked at the forecasters for WTI and are taking their views into account. Yes, this government listens.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Forest Industry Issues

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Forestry plays an integral role in the diversification of our economy. I have and continue to advocate for the forest industry to ensure that our resource remains viable, which allows forestry to further diversify and continue to stabilize Alberta's economy during economic downturns. This being said, forestry cannot continue to survive and be sustainable unless the government takes the lead on forest-related policy development. To the minister of forestry: what steps have you made to ensure that a new softwood lumber agreement is reached?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Forestry is a critical sector of our economy. Over 15,000 Albertans work in forestry, and the industry is a key economic driver in at least 70 Alberta communities, including many in the minister's own constituency. The minister wants to see a long-term solution which provides our industry with market access and certainty for years to come. This government will be working with the federal government, industry, and other provinces to ensure that Alberta's interests are well represented as we move forward with this process.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the mountain pine beetle is expected to continue to spread west and that the area affected continues to rise and given that the mountain pine beetle is jeopardizing Alberta's forestry business and communities, to the minister of forestry: what is your government doing to help control the spread of mountain pine beetles?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that question. Mr. Speaker, the minister just today signed an agreement with Saskatchewan to confirm their commitment to fight this infestation. This government is committing $35 million next year to fight the infestation of pine beetle, which is having a tremendously negative impact on one of our most important industries.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that discussions continue on the establishment of caribou habitat areas and given that forestry is one of the few industries that demonstrates exemplary land stewardship and land-use planning, with range plans prepared for 120 years into the future, and given that, if not carefully selected, these caribou habitats will affect access to fibre supply, to the minister of forestry: what are you doing to ensure that the forest industry is part of the consultation process?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, clearly, the preservation of caribou habitat is very important to this government, and I think it's something that should concern all Albertans. The forestry industry has an important role to play. It's one of the most important industries in our province, as I said a bit earlier, and certainly the views of the forestry industry with respect to this issue are of great importance to our government.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to table the requisite number of copies of the written responses to questions stemming from the Aboriginal Relations estimates, from the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship.
Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I'm pleased to rise to table for the information of the House the required copies of an amendment, which the government plans to bring forward, confirming that family farms will be excluded from occupational health and safety and from mandatory WCB coverage under Bill 6. I look forward to debating these amendments when the bill reaches Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table a letter I quoted last week in debate on Bill 6 from the crop sector working group regarding their consultations earlier this year and also from ablawg.ca, the University of Calgary legal review of the constitutional violations that exist in Alberta relating to farm worker rights.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've had a request to introduce a visitor we have today. I think I need unanimous support to acknowledge that.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you for the accommodation, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly representatives from Alberta KC Affordable Seniors Housing Society and the John Bosco Child and Family Services Foundation affordable seniors housing project. Visiting us today are Gus Rozycki, president, seniors housing society; Mr. Stephen Dufresne, secretary, seniors housing society; Ms Maria Lupul, board member, St. Peter's Columbus Club; Mr. Gerald Bernakevitch, president, Bosco foundation; Mr. Julian Hnatiw, president of Edmonton chapter, Knights of Columbus; Mr. Ron Schuster, St. John Bosco Council 10986, Knights of Columbus. Hopefully, if they're here, they may rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Residential Tenancies (Safer Spaces for Victims of Domestic Violence) Amendment Act, 2015

The Chair: We have under consideration amendment A3, as introduced by the hon. Member for Airdrie. Are there any comments with respect to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I believe that I was on my feet last week when the hour was such that debate concluded, so it's my pleasure just to rise briefly.

Some will recall that there was a little bit of debate around this particular amendment. The Wildrose and many members on this side of the House have been steadfast in their support of this bill. While the time for private members' business may be coming to a conclusion quite rapidly and the time that we have left in this session may be coming to a conclusion, not knowing how many more Mondays there are left and knowing that this is a very important piece of legislation to be able to move forward on for many Albertans, upon speaking to my colleague from Airdrie, I would like to ask for unanimous consent of the House to withdraw the amendment.

The Chair: We're back on the main bill, Bill 204. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: I just would like to take a minute to speak in support of the bill, Madam Chair. Shelters in Alberta are over-subscribed. Roughly two times as many women seek shelter as there are spaces. A lot of women feel trapped by the financial circumstances that they're in, and that's part of the reason why they stay in the situations that they're in. I know I've had that experience myself, and it's very isolating and lonely to be in that spot.

Another couple of things I wanted to highlight. Violence against women is a major public health issue, and it's also a human rights issue. By passing this bill, we can accommodate the opportunity for women to be able to leave dangerous situations. We can give them an opportunity for safety.

I think that on those merits alone those are really good reasons to pass this bill, and I encourage everyone to vote in favour of it. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Seeing none, then we will call the vote.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 204 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

A motion for the committee to now rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 204. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would request unanimous consent of the Assembly that notwithstanding Standing Order 64(2) the House should proceed immediately to third reading of Bill 204.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 204

Residential Tenancies (Safer Spaces for Victims of Domestic Violence) Amendment Act, 2015

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to move third reading of Bill 204, Residential Tenancies (Safer Spaces for Victims of Domestic Violence) Amendment Act, 2015.

I would like to thank all the members for engaging in the debate surrounding this bill and for participating in the discourse around domestic violence, a strong step towards ending domestic violence in this province.

I would also like to specifically thank the Member for Lethbridge-East for her courage and strength when championing this bill. The member shared her story with Albertans and, in doing so, became a role model to so many survivors of domestic violence. The member's strength in this House showed other survivors and anyone currently in an abusive relationship that they are not alone and that they, too, can break the silence. For that, I thank you.

This bill protects survivors of domestic violence from the financial repercussions of terminating a lease. These are high-risk situations, Madam Speaker, where survivors are often fleeing for their own personal safety and that of their loved ones. Bill 204 seeks to address the growing problem of domestic abuse here in Alberta. The ongoing discussion on sexual and domestic abuse occurring in the media, in this Assembly, and in the conversations of everyday Albertans shows that, clearly, abuse does not discriminate amongst gender, age, or socioeconomic lines. In Calgary alone domestic violence is up 16 per cent since last year, and the Calgary Police Service receives two calls every hour that deal with domestic abuse, 1 in 5 of which deals directly with physical violence.

Domestic violence affects not only those directly involved but also those who experience it indirectly. Research from the RCMP shows that "witnessing family violence is as harmful as experiencing it directly." I, Madam Speaker, was one of those children. I have first-hand experience witnessing my mother being a victim of domestic violence. I have memories of waking up in the middle of the night and my mother trying to flee with my sisters and I from her abuser. I have woken up confused by my surroundings to remember that I was in a women's shelter or a children's shelter. It is something that I've always carried with me throughout my life.

This is an ongoing problem in this province. Alberta women have the highest rates of self-reported spousal violence across the 10 provinces. This bill is a positive first step towards addressing this and helping victims of domestic violence. However, I want to state that we as a Legislature must continue to remove barriers for those fleeing violence as well as explore preventative solutions in order to eliminate domestic violence. This bill does not mark the end but the beginning of prioritizing ending domestic violence in this province.

Since the second reading of this bill, my office has received numerous phone calls and e-mails from survivors thankful for this legislation, and many Albertans have reached out to me personally to share their stories. I have spoken with many of my colleagues, who have received similar feedback from some of their constituents. These survivors are hopeful that this legislation will offer those who currently find themselves in dangerous situations a way out. This bill has the support of survivors of domestic violence, both past and present, and has the support of stakeholders who deal directly and indirectly with survivors of domestic violence.

I ask one last time for your support in passing this bill today. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wishing to speak to the bill in third reading?

Ms McKittrick: Madam Speaker, I am delighted that in this Assembly we are spending time considering what happens to the persons who have to flee violence in the home. Actually, it makes me really glad to be a member of this Assembly, where other members have spoken about their own experience and why this bill is important.

Last night I attended a ceremony in Fort Saskatchewan where a man involved in the White Ribbon campaign held a service for the 14 women who were killed in Montreal 26 years ago. Every time I attend one of these events, I am always reminded of the danger that many women face. I was delighted this year that this event was led only by men, who realized how they themselves have to be aware of the role that they have in violence against women.

If we pass this bill tonight in third reading, I think it's very appropriate because yesterday was December 6, and we will forever link this bill with the events that lead to the death of so many women. I wanted to really thank the member for having raised this bill at this time in our year.

So many women, and I should also say men, when they are faced with violence in their home cannot make decisions because they face poverty. In my work as a community developer I have seen so many situations where when somebody leaves their home, it means that they're forever living in poverty, not just at the moment but forever and forever, because of the tie-in that they either have because of their apartment that they live in or because of the situation that they face because their other partner abuses the bank. I'm glad that this bill is going to make it easier for persons who face domestic violence to be able to not stay in the apartment.

I wanted to talk about an organization in my own riding, A Safe Place, because I think that we often think that these issues only happen in the big communities of Calgary and Edmonton. In my own little riding of Sherwood Park we have an organization called A Safe Place, that has a shelter. One of the things that they keep telling us is that one of the hardest things is for the women to leave the home because they have no place to go, because they don't have the security that if they do leave the home, they'll be able to have a life with their children in the future. I wanted to take the opportunity to praise A Safe Place for the work that they do and for the actions that they've taken to make sure that everyone who is fleeing their home is safe and has a safe place to go.

I would like to urge every single member of this Assembly to vote for this bill. Even though this is not going to end violence against women or men in a domestic situation, it is going to provide the opportunity for those who face the situation to be able to live and not to feel that they have to stay in their place or to feel that they are going to be forever tied to a situation that makes things even more poor.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Miranda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise also in support of this bill. Like many of my colleagues today – in fact, I believe all of us here today are in favour of this bill. Most of us were very moved, I think. Personally, I was deeply touched by the story that we heard from one of my own colleagues in caucus.

I have to tell you, Madam Speaker, thinking about this issue, that I've had the opportunity to actually work for A Safe Place in Strathcona-Sherwood Park – I've met some of the wonderful people doing great work there – as well as for WIN House. In the history of at least A Safe Place I think I was the only staff that was ever allowed to come onto the actual site of the shelter for issues of security. The stories that I heard there and the impact that violence had on their lives impacted me, and I was just basically hearing the stories from them. It's impossible to walk away from this issue and not be affected by it. It affects your well-being, I think, your emotional well-being as well. When you're looking at a society as a whole and we're looking at many other issues that are impacting us, this, I believe, is one that has to be given a lot of priority.

Having said that, as much as I believe in this bill, I think it's only the first step in many, many other steps that are required of us as legislators to promote a safe environment for women, not only in Alberta but in Canada. Of course, we have to start here, and I'm glad to be among all of you, actually willing and very much taking leadership on this issue. But I also want us to think about the fact that this is not over. This is something that we're going to have to fight, and it's going to take us a long time to do.

Here we are, 26 years after the massacre in Montreal, and we're still talking about this issue. That, Madam Speaker, is absolutely unacceptable. I believe that we need to start thinking as a society about what it is that we need to learn from these stories and what it is that we need to put in place. It's not just an issue that affects women; it affects every single member of our society. We as men also have a responsibility to take action and to stand up, and I'm so glad to hear the stories. I've seen as well the men in my family and many others here today wanting to be part of the solution, wanting to speak out on this issue, and wanting to support.

I'm very, very glad to be able to stand here today and support this member and her bill. I commend her for the work that she has done. I think that it's remarkable, and I'm extremely proud to stand here and say to all of you: please vote for this.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand in support of this bill. I think that it's important work that we're doing here today. I think that we all agree that there's never an excuse for domestic violence. Nonetheless, it exists. It happens. Women are usually but not exclusively the victims, and it's not just physical violence, of course. It can be psychological, it could be financial, a number of things. Of course, when there's domestic violence in the house and someone is trying to leave, usually the woman, there are so many pressures. This is the time when she needs help because if there are children in the household, of course, the woman knows that if she leaves behind one of the children, then that child could be subject to who knows what form of abuse.

In other words, what I think that this bill does is help a victim get out of the house when there is an opportunity. Of course, if the weakest, smallest, slowest child can't get out with the adult victim, then the weakest, smallest, slowest child, the one least able to defend themselves, is stuck with the perpetrator. Then the victim, usually a woman but not always, has gotten out, and there's a psychological pressure to go back and not leave the weakest, smallest, slowest child there for that abuse.

What I really think that this bill does is that it attempts, and I guess time will tell how successfully. But I will applaud the attempt to make it more viable for a victim of domestic violence when they get the opportunity to get out, removing some of the roadblocks, providing a place for them to stay. On that basis I certainly don't know how I could not vote for this. I'm hopeful that this, in the years to come, will actually lead to a safe exit strategy for victims of domestic violence for a long time. While that's a terrific outcome, it's not quite as terrific as avoiding domestic violence. However, human nature being what it is, you never know whether that bright and shiny day will ever be here. So until that happens, I'm very pleased to support this effort to make the world safer for victims of domestic violence.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my honour to rise in support of Bill 204. Over the course of my 10 years as a social worker I worked with many individuals and families in vulnerable situations. At times this job can be very challenging; however, the success stories always outweighed the bad. As a social worker you quickly learn to deal with the issues that you face on daily basis, and I've seen many things. However, there was one situation which was particularly vivid in my memory.

I remember sitting with a mother who was asking me to take her child because she had nowhere to go and feared for the safety of her children. Madam Speaker, no parent should ever have to ask for their child to come into care. This story is not a unique story, and many child-protection workers have been faced with the same dilemma. So it speaks to a bigger issue. It speaks to the inequality that women continue to face, it speaks to the lack of shelter beds and the ongoing support for women who are dealing with domestic violence, and it speaks to how our society continues to hide domestic violence and violence against women and violence against children in everyone's closets.

It is time for change. It is time that women feel that they have a safe place to call home and that they can protect themselves and their children against domestic violence. Together, in this House, we can make that happen.

Madam Speaker, I am so thankful to the Member for Lethbridge-East for sharing her story with us in this House and for the work that the Member for Calgary-Bow has done in ensuring that women can stay home and stay with their children, for their work will support change for women and it will keep families together.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my honour to rise today to support this bill, and I would urge all the members in the Assembly today to support this bill. Domestic violence is, sadly, one of the ugliest diseases of our society, and the victims are highly traumatized in the experience they go through when it comes to the physical, emotional, mental damage they experience, especially the children that are with the victim. They are the most affected ones, and they're our future. By approving this bill, we are not only protecting the victims but also our future and the children and our province.

It often happens that, from what I understand by interacting on a personal level with people going through domestic violence, especially when I was acquiring my certification in conflict resolution – there was a time when I was a warden for families, in other words society, when I was focusing on family and domestic violence. When the individuals would come and discuss their issues, it was mostly the fact that, first of all, they were not able to recognize what domestic violence was because they were inclined to believe that this is the kind of life they're born for and that this is something usual for them, so breaking that cycle and coming out of that cycle seemed impossible to them. Giving them that hope that there is a way to get out of the cycle and to stand up for yourself, to protect themselves and have a life with respect and dignity, that each individual deserves – this bill would be a great opportunity to mitigate domestic violence and help the victims to get themselves out of the cycle.

I would encourage all the people sitting in the Assembly to approve this bill. I highly support this bill. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I, too, want to offer my sincerest thanks to the Member for Calgary-Bow for bringing forward this bill, and I want to thank the Member for Lethbridge-East and others who've shared their personal stories of what they have gone through and the journey they've travelled. It is important for all of us in this Assembly to hear that but also through us for all Albertans to hear that. I am struck by how common that lived experience is for people, not just here in this Chamber but all around this province.

I had done work volunteering with HomeFront in Calgary, going back over 15 years. We thought at the time that we were getting a great handle on domestic violence and domestic conflict. In many ways we've come a long way since that time, but not nearly far enough. Clearly, not nearly far enough. So this bill is a very important step to help, in particular, women fleeing domestic violence and violence of all kinds, mental cruelty, sexual assault. It is one step; it's an important one, but it is still just one step.

I was looking at some statistics yesterday as I reflected on the 26th anniversary of the Montreal massacre. The Calgary Police Service via the YWCA reported a 16 per cent year-over-year increase in domestic conflict calls in Calgary this year alone – that's one clear indication that the problem is not getting better; it's getting worse – yet another reason why we need important legislation like this, to allow those fleeing gender-based violence more tools to find safety.

I will give the government credit for the increase to funding, the badly needed and overdue increase to funding, for shelter spaces throughout this province. As women flee violence, they have somewhere to go. Turning women and their children away from shelter as they flee violence is something no one wants to do, but it's been the unfortunate reality in this province for a very long time.

We all have a role to play. A big part of the role that we can play today, obviously, is passing this bill. It's telling victims of domestic violence that we believe them, it's helping them out of that situation, and it is advocating in our communities for all of the supports to break that cycle of violence so children growing up know that this is not an acceptable way of resolving conflict. Perhaps with leadership like the Member for Calgary-Bow has shown, we can end that cycle of violence permanently.

I stand to enthusiastically support this bill, and thank you again for the opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. I, too, want to briefly rise and speak in support of this bill. I think it's an important statement about who we are as a society, what this Legislature is really about.

Giving credit where credit is due, I also add my voice to the increased investment in women's shelters that this government has made. Turning away 14,000 women and children a year is not stepping up, and this government has appropriately made an important investment in our future, in mental health, in the success of children and families that are unable to manage on their own because of domestic violence or poverty or addictions issues. These shelters are a critical part of a progressive, healthy social contract.

In that regard I'd like to mention Inn from the Cold, which is an organization that's been increasingly under siege. It's the only family shelter in the city of Calgary. They were forced to expand into a church, Knox United church, in Calgary, where they take an extra 70 families as a result of the increased pressures on these families over the last year. It's a 130 per cent increase in the demands in Calgary over the last couple of years for shelters for families.

Prior to the United church opening their doors to this, families, including children, were bused to churches every night at 5 o'clock, a different church every night: a church basement, a church gymnasium, whatever it was. Volunteers in the church would serve supper, provide supports for the evening – games and reading and play – and then at 6 o'clock in the morning, after a quick breakfast, these families would be shuttled back to Inn from the Cold, in the main part of downtown Calgary, and have to fend for themselves for the day until coming back later, at about 5 o'clock, again to another church. These children were not getting educated. The children were not in any way secure. They were not provided any stability and security during this time.

The condition is desperate for many of these families, and we're setting the stage, if we don't deal appropriately with these folks, for further mental health problems in these children, addictions problems, joblessness, a cycle of poverty, further abuse if they come from an abusive family and don't get the appropriate care and support they need. As I've written to the Minister of Human Services, we need to step up, perhaps even more, to make sure that this winter, when there are more jobless and there are more stresses and more cold conditions and people are out on the streets, we don't have families with children on the streets. This is simply unacceptable in a province of the 21st century, with the wealth that we have and the philanthropy that we also have to draw on. If government and all of us can step up, especially during this season, and ensure that these families are supported financially, socially.

Indeed, in some cases, maybe some families, as we are doing for the Syrian refugees, could extend, if they have space in their own home, provision of temporary accommodation for a month or two for some of these families until they find a place to stay. I haven't heard that recommendation yet, but as many Albertans are stepping up for Syrian refugees to house them for a temporary period, maybe we should also be registering those kinds of intentions for families that have been disrupted by family violence or addictions or mental health issues.

Enthusiastically supporting this bill with one other comment, I guess. It's also been raised in this House, of course, and beyond that the owners and operators of rental accommodations deserve to be compensated at times when there has been significant loss of finances, as many of us have felt. There is a victims' fund. In this case the victims were both family members in some cases and the owners and landlords of some of these rental accommodations. So I would hope that some of that fairness that is Alberta and some of that recognition – especially those landlords, owners, and operators who have extended themselves and enabled this important provision for victims to escape a contract could also be in some way accommodated. I'm not sure what other avenues besides the victims' fund the government could look at, but I think that would do well in terms of encouraging that communal support for this important bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I wonder if at this moment I could have unanimous consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Doug O'Halloran. Mr. O'Halloran is the president of United Food and Commercial Workers local 401, one of the prominent union locals in our province. He's organized many unorganized workers and given them the rights that all should have. He's been a very good friend of mine, an adviser, and very supportive of me when I was leader of our party and, as well, continues his support today. I'd ask all members to please give him the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to Bill 204? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is an honour to rise today to show my support for Bill 204, put forward by the Member for Calgary-Bow. Our government ran on a campaign that promised to better support gender equality and organizations that take initiatives to support women and families who currently face domestic violence. We must do all we can to support those taking the first steps to flee violence in our communities and across the province. I believe that Bill 204 is one way to do that. Besides the initiatives that this bill takes, it is also important that we carry this conversation forward to come up with even more ways to support those who are impacted by domestic violence.

As was stated, Edmonton and Calgary rank second- and third-worst respectively as safe Canadian cities for women. These are very concerning numbers, Madam Speaker. To think that one day my friends or my family or even my little sister may have to deal with such unthinkable acts and, even worse, to think that if they were to come forward, there's a possibility that they wouldn't be believed – we must do our best to show those dealing with domestic violence that as legislators and decision-makers we are here for them.

I will support this bill, and I hope to see more initiatives like Bill 204 moving forward. Thank you once again to the Member for Calgary-Bow for undergoing consultation to find ways to support those fleeing domestic violence as well as those who had the strength and courage to share their own stories within this Chamber.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and speak in favour of Bill 204. The debate on this bill has been profound. It's been filled with some incredibly moving and some deeply personal stories of the effects of domestic violence. This inexcusable social ill continues to touch far too many lives, hurt far too many people, and damage the hearts, minds, and bodies of far too many Albertans. As we seek to eradicate this blight, I believe it's imperative that we hear these stories, that we listen to the victims and those who advocate on their behalf, that we honour their experience and hear their voices. It's important that we continue to increase awareness, offer education through our schools, workplaces, and the public sphere to make it known that this behaviour is not acceptable, that we as a society can be far, far better than this, that we can work to ensure that vulnerable Albertans are afforded every possible protection when they seek to flee abuse.

Madam Speaker, I recall an experience from several years ago when one of my roommates at the time invited some neighbours from down the street to join us for holiday eggnog. They were a couple, a man and a woman, and they seemed a bit uncomfortable as they sat in our living room. The woman in particular seemed reticent, avoiding eye contact and not speaking very much. Two days later there was a knock on our door, and there she stood, crying on our front porch. She told us a story of ongoing physical and emotional abuse at the hands of her partner and how she simply couldn't take it anymore. She had no money; she had no family or friends that she could rely on for help and nowhere else she could go. We were able to help her get in touch and file a statement with police and connect her with a local women's shelter.

Unfortunately, the psychological trauma and damage that she was dealing with proved difficult for her to handle. She left the shelter, went to call her former partner, and got drunk. Unfortunately, this was a dry shelter, so she found herself again without a place to go. She found her way back to us. We were able to talk to her for a bit and try to help her where we could, and we were able to find another shelter where we were able to bring her. Unfortunately, in the end she did end up going back to her partner.

These are incredibly difficult circumstances, Madam Speaker. I can't imagine the experiences of these women, the difficulty of enduring these years of abuse, trying to find the strength to overcome it, to break free when many times there's a lack of support and a lack of resources to do so. This bill doesn't fix everything, but it does take a very important step forward. It provides a fantastic means to make it that much easier for men, women, children who are caught in a cycle of abuse to be able to break free. It gives one less reason why they should have to choose to stay in a place that only causes them harm.

So I'm incredibly thankful to the Member for Calgary-Bow for bringing this bill forward. Certainly, we as a government strongly support finding any means and all means we can to support those who are fleeing and dealing with the damage from domestic abuse. I thank the member for all the consultation she's done, the time she spent speaking to so many on the front lines. I thank her for sharing her own story today, her own experiences with this. I look forward to the opportunity to see the member continue working with Service Alberta as they work on the regulations, as they work through the amendments to ensure that this legislation will be as effective and as fair and help as many victims of abuse as possible.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Acadia.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak in support of this bill. Domestic violence is a serious problem here in Alberta. At a December 6 National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence against Women event last night I heard from a local shelter, the Bow Valley shelter, about how the rate of domestic violence in our province is nearly double the national average. Bill 204 is one simple act that we can take that will help support women who are leaving domestic violence and help ease the passage to safety for themselves and for their families. It won't eliminate the problem overnight, but it offers a needed tool in the tool box for any woman who is trying to leave an abusive partner.

Recently I received an e-mail in my riding of Calgary-Acadia from a woman who had actually been a victim of domestic violence herself and is currently a landlord. She had a couple of concerns about how the bill would impact smaller landlords. That's why I think it's so important that the Minister of Service Alberta will be working with landlords and landlord associations to ensure that details around this bill are worked out through regulation to ensure that her concerns and others' are addressed. By taking the time for regulatory development and consultation with the affected stakeholders, our government will be able to implement Bill 204 effectively and ensure that all stakeholders understand their roles in protecting tenants who've experienced domestic violence.

I'd also like to offer my sincerest thanks to the Member for Calgary-Bow for her very hard work on this bill and the extensive consultation that she has done before and after tabling this bill. I'm very proud to call her a friend.

This bill is an important first step to help support women and to eliminate violence against women. Domestic violence is far too common in our society, and even with additional supports and funding from our government the demand for women's shelters in Alberta far exceeds the available spaces. We know we can do better, and this bill is an important step in that direction. We know that the survivors of domestic abuse are worried about leaving their homes and how that will affect their finances. Many times their abusers have controlled their finances in such a way that they have no access to resources. This bill gives victims of domestic abuse a way to leave their homes without facing additional financial penalty. It is a small but important step.

As the mother of a young daughter I often think about the likelihood that she will one day be a victim of violence against women. I want to believe that if I raise her to be strong, to speak her truth, she will be protected and that if I raise her to know that she deserves to be loved and deserves to be safe and that she has the right to say no or to say yes when it comes to her body, then she will escape the statistics. But, as my friend the Member for Lethbridge-East, who is herself a strong, outspoken woman, has shown us, there is no profile for victims of domestic violence. It can happen to anyone, and I hope that we in this House have the courage of our convictions to do what we can to eliminate this problem.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I thank the Member for Calgary-Bow for bringing forward this piece of legislation. It is innovative and a very creative solution to a problem that I know many of her constituents have come to her with and have discussed at length. I know that she has spent a long time consulting with a variety of stakeholders as well as the people on the front lines of this issue, whether they be support workers or those who have been directly affected as victims of domestic violence.

I'd also really like to acknowledge MLA Drever's statements today in the House about her own lived experience as a child whose family experienced domestic violence. I know that it is difficult to share a personal story, especially when it's part of the catalyst or driver for some of the work that we're doing in here. That work, you know, is often criticized and fairly so because everybody in the province wants to make sure that we get things right. I really do think that the amount of support that has been expressed from all sides of this House has shown that Ms Drever . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Just a reminder that we don't use names in the House.

Ms McLean: Thank you.

. . . that the Member for Calgary-Bow here has in fact gotten things right.

I would like to address this from a bit of a legal point of view. In my experience, having worked in the courts in the area of domestic violence, assault in the domestic violence context is extremely common, and the law as it currently stands makes it difficult in many circumstances to gain a conviction on domestic violence. So frequently what we see happen is the following. We see, typically, a woman call and make a complaint to the police or a neighbour make a complaint to the police, who then attend upon the scene of what's occurred. The police then have the ultimate discretion to determine whether or not to lay charges. That is not up to the victim themselves.

However, we find ourselves then in court. The victim attends that court appearance, and victim services is typically there in order to provide support to the victim of domestic violence. At that time, the victim is often not sure of what their rights and entitlements are and what supports are in place for them and frequently is also of the impression that they are responsible for laying the charges. I think that we have American media to thank for that misconception. They feel that maybe they have some control over whether or not those charges go forward. In speaking with the victim services folks, who are community social workers as well as representatives from the police force, they find out that they have little to no control over the progress of the prosecution.

Often these women will then turn to the support workers and say: I'm on the hook on this lease for the rent, and the abuser has been the person paying the bills; I ought not to have called the police in this situation because now he's kicked out and telling me that he's no longer going to pay the bills; I'm on the hook, and I can't afford to pay this by myself. Now, through victim services there is some financial help in place, but as much as victim services and other support organizations like Elizabeth Fry and John Howard would try and connect these people with these services, they very frequently do not cover the actual cost of living and the bills that these victims can simply not afford to pay without the other person living on the premises. So you have a family unit of some sort paying two rents, and the victim is left on the hook. This bill very uniquely addresses that situation.

It may sound, as I've been quite detailed in my explanation of a scenario, that this is an uncommon scenario. However, this was, in fact, the most common issue that I would deal with when I was working with the Elizabeth Fry Society and that I would see support workers deal with and the number one reason, really, that the victims of domestic violence would try and change the mind of prosecutors, try to stop the charges from going forward, not because those charges should not go forward or not because the abuser is at fault and ought not to be, you know, brought through the justice system but simply because the victim was concerned about their very practical situation. They could not afford for the charges to go forward and for the abuser to be prevented from returning to the home. This particular bill gives the victims in those situations an out.

The interesting thing about this is that other jurisdictions have seen fit to do the same thing. My information is that in Ontario and B.C. they are looking at ways of also addressing this issue in similar forms of legislation. We're not the first to do it, but it's about time that we've gotten on board to help put an additional tool in the tool box of women and men who find themselves at the hands of an abuser so that they're not finding themselves in court trying to convince a prosecutor to drop the charges simply because they cannot afford to continue to live in the home where they resided with their abuser.

From that experience I can very unequivocally state that this provides additional assistance and another option. It's not required that the victim leave their home; it's simply an option. They can leave the home and leave the financial requirements that bind them and tie them not only to the residence but also to the abuser. As it stands, a lease can very much make someone feel tied to the other financial contributor to their situation, and this legislation helps people feel and practically know that they are not tied to that financial situation and that they can find other accommodation. It's very surprising how often a financial relationship can dictate our actions, but at the end of the day when people are looking at being able to put food on the table for themselves and their children, unfortunately, victims will often go back to the abuser just to ensure that their basic needs are met. We as a province and as a government cannot allow individuals to feel that they need to be financially bound to an abuser.

Every opportunity that we have to provide an extra tool such as this, I think, should be supported. This is a unique and innovative solution for Alberta and for Alberta families. I think that we can all be very proud of the work that we've done with respect to this legislation, with respect to the amendments, and with respect to our support and the many stories that also have come forward in this House with respect to domestic violence. It's very timely, the timing of this bill, particularly in light of November being an opportunity to shine light on domestic violence and the Polytechnique massacre that occurred on December 6. Domestic violence has been an ongoing topic in this House, and this is a great opportunity.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Madam Speaker, I'm very pleased to stand today in third reading. Since I made my statement, I've received thousands of messages. I did not expect that to happen. I expected that it would have an impact here in the House, that would help move the bill forward. I'm pleased that it happened. Certainly, I know that at least two women are safe because I spoke up.

As one of the other members spoke today, we've come so far, but in fact we've only moved a little. When this happened to me over 35, 40 years ago, there were certainly lots of challenges that happened, and there weren't as many women who left those situations. What's happened now is that many more women and men leave those situations. As you can see, the fact that we put $15 million into shelters says that, yes, lots of other people are leaving those relationships, but the fact that they still have to leave those relationships and that those situations occur really speaks to: the attitude in society has not changed very much.

Everybody is appalled when they hear a story, but how do we change that? Last night I spoke about domestic violence at the YWCA in Lethbridge. A young man very bravely stood up after I did and talked about how the day after I made my statement, he was speaking because he's actually been doing some work on domestic violence, but he had never told his story. He said that that day he told his story of being a child in a domestic abuse situation and how when he tried to defend his mom, he was victimized by his father. He did share that his mom finally left that relationship after many, many years and how this whole bill has affected his family. He was so relieved that his mother is finally safe.

Some of the other stories that I've heard are from women who thanked me for speaking out and said that as much as they'd like to speak out about their situations, their abuser is still alive, and if they speak out, they felt that that abuser would come after them and that they would be in a dangerous situation again. However, it did allow them to speak out in groups where they felt they were safe to speak out. I think that's moved it a few more steps forward.

The bottom line for this whole situation is that if in our society we treated everyone and respected everyone as we wish to be treated and respected ourselves, when that happens, domestic violence, domestic abuse will stop.

On that note, thank you very much to the MLA who put the bill forward, and thank you, all, for supporting it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to stand and speak to this in third reading because it takes us a step towards a larger discourse in this province on this issue, that has been kept silent for a very long time. It needs to occur because intimate partner violence and abuse flourishes in an environment where the misuse of power against the vulnerable or less powerful is tolerated. It's tolerated in this province and in this environment that we have today, and it's something that we need to stop tolerating in any way. The environment may be behind closed doors, but in our case it's also in our larger communities because people just don't want to speak out on it. This allows this discourse to open, and it's a larger conversation that we must have.

We heard from the member herself that one of the most common reasons for a survivor of domestic violence to stay is that they feel they can't leave their home, or they haven't been successful in getting the abuser to leave. All forms of violence and abuse are serious criminal matters, with a huge impact on our society. As the National Clearinghouse on Family Violence states: health costs for injuries and chronic health problems caused by abuse amount to billions of dollars every year; we also pay a social cost in the form of children too traumatized to learn or develop normally.

This isn't just affecting one person; it affects everybody. When there's a child in a classroom who can't develop normally, when there's a child in a classroom who cannot learn, that affects a lot of the children in that classroom, that affects the children in that school, and that affects their parents when they get home. We have adult victims at that point unable to function to their full potential and a diminished quality of life for families and communities.

Intimate partner violence is abusive and pervasive. No one is immune to this. It affects people of all ages, rich and poor, rural and urban, from every cultural and educational background. The majority of abusers are men, and the majority of victims are women, but that is not the case in every case. Serious abuse is most often committed by men against women and their children. It's estimated that in 30 to 40 per cent of reported cases where the partner is abused, so are the children. However, there is a growing understanding that simply witnessing intimate partner violence in their home can affect children in the same way as if the abuse was directed at them.

The first step for anyone in or close to an abusive relationship is to call and get help, and this bill can help with that. Organizations such as the Victim Services Society of Stony Plain, Spruce Grove and District can provide immediate assistance to survivors of domestic abuse, but knowing that a bad reference from a previous landlord will follow them and make it nearly impossible to find a new home for themselves and often their children, many victims feel they have no way out.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the time allotted for this portion of business has now expired.

I will call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow to close debate.

Ms Drever: I just want to say thank you to everyone here for sharing their experiences and their thoughts on this bill. It's vital for Albertans to get started on this discourse on ending domestic violence. I'm honoured to close the debate at third reading.

Alberta Local Food Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to move third reading of Bill 202, the Alberta Local Food Act.

I think there have been a lot of discussions about the importance of supporting our local food systems and helping them develop. I believe that this bill, by striking the committee, would be essential in developing a system that supports the growth of the local food system. The bill would establish an advisory committee to review the current state of our agriculture systems, and they would look for ways to create connections on a local level that would maximize economic returns and food security.

I think there have been a lot of examples made of community initiatives that have really incorporated our local food system. That creates community, it creates culture, and it creates a knowledge of what Alberta is. Not only that; it provides economic return and invests in diversifying our economy, and I think that's what this local food bill is taking a part in. By having a committee look at the details of where the efficiencies are or are lacking or how we can support the growth, it's vital in making sure that the consumers can also access the kind of food that they are looking for.

It becomes a problem when someone from an urban centre is trying to connect with a farmer and just can't find, you know, a farmer that is growing in a very specific way because they are not connected to it. I mean, farmers engage in a lot of different methods from using Facebook to direct marketing, and finding provincial ways to connect the consumer to the farmer is incredibly helpful in developing a strong system.

Those are some of the things that this committee could look at addressing. They would do that with consultation with the stakeholders – and there are a lot of them when it comes to local food – because that takes in the public sector that procures local food. It looks at the grocery stores, the farmers themselves, the processors, the producers, and that requires a lot of work. That's why the committee has a year to talk to each one of them to develop a system that they feel would support their growth. And it would support it both ways. It would be something that connects both urban and rural areas.

My constituency is somewhat rural, to say the least, because it has a little bit of both. Having things that bring those together is extremely important because it creates a connectivity and an understanding of the situations that farmers face on a daily basis. Urban constituents have already shown – I've talked about the stats of how many people find that it's important to support local food. By providing systems that allow them to procure local food, then we're really supporting their connections.

So as we continue, I hope to hear more discussion about other members' opinions on the bill, and I look forward to that discussion. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm standing in support of Bill 202, Alberta's food act, because I'm a big believer in locally produced food as well as small businesses. When I was in B.C., I worked at quite a few small locally owned businesses, and I saw the importance of what happened when a dollar was spent locally in the economy as it provided economic benefit beyond just the transaction between that consumer and the provider of that good.

For this bill, you know, we can all believe that fresh food is better food. I've gone to farmers' markets in Calgary many times myself.

One of the things I always appreciate about going to those farmers' markets is the great diversity of fruits and vegetables as well as other products such as honey and meat and the ability to see a selection that I otherwise normally wouldn't have had a chance to see or to access through . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, if you could maybe just move your laptop. I'm having a little bit of difficulty hearing you.

Mr. Malkinson: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Where was I there? By going to a farmers' market, I am able to see a selection of products that I might not otherwise get exposed to or see if I'm going to, you know, my generic chain grocery store. It gives me an opportunity to talk to the farmers and the producers of those products, and I always find that very valuable. I find that when doing that, I have the opportunity to get ideas for new recipes as well as suggestions on other products that I may want to try based on other ones I've liked and get solid recommendations from the people who produce that food.

To that end, you know, it was mentioned previously that farmers' markets have actually grown 27 per cent since 2010, and that again is money that is coming from consumers to the producers' good and is activity locally in the economy. Consumers at these farmers' markets also spend, on average, $55.

Another thing that was brought up before is that according to a 2012 AF study, $878 million was the market value of farmers' markets and retails of Alberta's food goods. So there is a huge market opportunity for connecting local food producers with local consumers here in Alberta. I believe that this act allows our local producers to seek direct access to those markets. As I talked at length about before, by connecting directly, it allows local agriculture businesses to gain new customers and also educate local Albertans about the industry. As local producers grow the local market, those channels continue to grow in value and are a significant source of farm receipts for farmers.

I will be voting in support of this bill, and I would encourage the rest of the House to do so as well. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in support of Bill 202. I think that this is an excellent private member's bill that really reflects the sort of spirit and ingenuity and innovation that was shown in Bill 204. I commend the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park for coming up with this. I think it is a great idea to highlight the interaction between those of us that live in an urban setting versus those of us that live in a rural setting, showing that we all have a common need to support economies, to support a healthy diet, to support, basically, measures to mitigate greenhouse gas emissions. I could go on and on about how beneficial this sort of thing would be if we do enact it.

I was just in a farmers' market in the Premier's riding, in Strathcona. It's one of the largest farmers' markets. It's held every Saturday in Old Strathcona. The place was packed. It's a large building. People were really happy. Most of them were happy with me when I introduced myself, including the farmers. What I was happy about was that it was giving me and my wife the opportunity to shop locally, to participate in an economy that stretches several tens of kilometres outside of Edmonton, and I was getting a very good product. I think that's what this bill is all about. I think this bill is to try to promote measures to promote the benefits of thinking about buying locally and removing the barriers from getting that locally sourced food to our government institutions.

For instance, at the farmers' market I was able to buy some bison. I think the bison was raised probably 60 kilometres away from here. It's a very healthy meat. It's the healthiest red meat. I would recommend it to any of you that are worried about your cholesterol or about the other adverse effects of eating too much saturated fat. It also has a lot of beneficial oils in it such as omega-3 oils. I would not have been able to buy it as readily at a large grocery store, and I was able to talk to the farmer that actually raised, slaughtered, and prepared the bison. I think it was a fantastic thing. Other examples of things that I don't generally get in the grocery store were: fresh pasta, tzatziki, made by hand by probably a great baba, and hothouse tomatoes. Great tomatoes. I had them last night. Very tasty.

In my riding of Edmonton-Whitemud in the summertime we have a farmers' market that is very well subscribed to by my constituents. It's held once a week. One of the most memorable things that I did after getting elected was actually hold, basically, the equivalent of a Klondike Days celebration at the farmers' market. I locally sourced some orange gelato, and I think it was appreciated. I'm not sure if the members across would have appreciated the orange colour, but the gelato was very, very good.

As I've said before in this Assembly, I actually am the product of a family farm. I spent the first 18 years of my life in a family farm environment, and I have had a lot of experiences with locally grown food on my farm. I think it accrued to my benefit. However, I'm wondering and am just throwing this out here. My father paid me a cent for every three potato beetles that I picked off the potato plants. Would that make me a paid employee and subject to WCB? It certainly wasn't minimum wage.

I also learned how to milk a cow. One of the biggest, best tests for knowing if somebody has been raised on a farm is: do you know which side of the cow you approach if you want to milk it? Or taking the horse example – and I learned this from the minister of agriculture – which side of the horse do you get on? If you don't know the answers to those questions, you probably didn't spend a lot of time in a farm environment.

Just getting back to the local food thing, in those days – and this was a long time ago, unfortunately – we would get fresh apples only in the fall because they had to come in from B.C. The B.C. apples, McIntoshes, were brought in only for a few weeks at a time. I remember gorging on them when they did come in because I knew that they weren't going to be available later on. The same thing with the oranges that came from Japan at Christmastime.

Nowadays, with the local food movement, we can be assured of food security. I think this is one of the key things in this bill, that we're talking about making sure that people have access, our citizens have access, to fresh and healthy food that's always available. We have to basically promote a situation for our suppliers on the farms and other agribusinesses to be able to supply those things. It's kind of a codependency. That's a word that you often use describing sort of adverse psychological things, but this codependency here is a positive thing. We're codependent as urban citizens with our friends and supporters in the rural areas to provide this food.

I had mentioned just briefly about climate change. I think that this is something that hasn't been discussed enough. We have to be doing everything we can to reduce the release of greenhouse gases. Those aren't gases coming from the greenhouses; those are gases coming from fossil fuel combustion. If you fly in food from someplace or if you truck it in or if you bring it in behind a locomotive, you're burning a lot of fossil fuels that add to the total of the greenhouse gas emissions. This local food initiative is an important part, I believe, in mitigating that sort of situation.

In summary, we're promoting a good economy for particularly our rural colleagues. We are promoting a healthy diet. We are promoting a way to mitigate against greenhouse gas emissions. We are teaching our youth, and I think that the experience I had picking potato beetles is an example of this. If my children come with me to the farmers' market and see the fresh food and see the choice that's available there and learn what a good choice is about food, it's a very, very positive thing.

So I would urge all members of this Assembly to be in full support of this excellent bill.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today also to speak on proposed Bill 202, the local food production act. There are many farmer co-operatives and commissions in the province that also are local food producers, and they produce it in commercial volumes. They all have websites. They are the Alberta Wheat Commission, the Alberta Barley Commission, the Western Barley Growers Association – that's an organization which I used to be secretary-treasurer of – the Alberta Canola Producers Commission, and the Alberta Elk Commission. We also have many associations: the Alberta Pulse Growers Commission, Landscape Alberta Nursery Trades Association, the Alberta Greenhouse Growers Association, and the Alberta Oat Growers Commission. These are all local Alberta producers, and they, too, provide local food in various ways.

The member opposite had spoken about eating bison. I have neighbours who raise bison, and he is exactly correct that it is a wonderful health food, but it is not singularly available at a farmers' market. It's available in a commercial fashion. You can buy it commercially through restaurateurs, and you can buy it online through their website organization.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Beef Producers is also a large commercial organization which has complete and absolute traceability of their products. Most any grocery store in the province of Alberta carries their products, and that is a sign of local food production. Many of you will see those animals at the side of the roads.

The Alberta Beekeepers Commission is also a prominent organization, and you'll see the development and the wealth creation that this organization continues to have when you drive through the southern part of the province and, particularly, in irrigated areas, where they have multicoloured hives throughout the canola fields and also the alfalfa fields, where the leafcutter bees are at work doing their function in the pollination of those plants to increase the development of that.

These are local food producers. Many of them are and have been in function for some great deal of time. Also, we have the Alberta Cattle Feeders' and the Alberta association of – excuse me. I think I've overstepped my list there.

Mr. Speaker, the goals of this bill are indeed admirable, and the intention, not unlike what we've seen with Bill 6, is indeed admirable, but in some cases to the extent of the organizations that I've already mentioned and who are already in effect and in operation – actually, today and tomorrow are the annual general meeting of the Alberta Beef Producers in Calgary. Western Stock Growers', for example, is also a long-term, local food production organization. It's been in effect for I believe it's some 90 years, but I think that with the recent letters that they've penned in public, they feel that there is legislation that's coming forward in this province that is redundant and onerous to their opportunities and their ways of operation.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill 202 is similar to that. Even though it's simply believed to be an advisory committee, these organizations that I've spoken of already are and for a great number of years have been in operation and producing food – healthy food, traceable food, with recordable food sources and supplies – going forward for a great number of years. The supply management sector that is in the province, that I've mentioned here in this list, has great consternation when they see a gentleman like – I think his name is Buddy – the turkey demonstrator that goes to many of these rallies. He is cause for consternation because there is no traceability to his whereabouts, and that can cause great issue in regard to the viability of that poultry industry. There are diseases that are transmittable by that, and that causes great consternation for large commercial producers that produce local food in a sustainable, large volume.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 in some cases, in many cases, is unnecessary. I'm hoping I've given enough evidence that Alberta farmers already are local producers. One can't help but think that the phrase "local" is a code word for some set of producers that the government approves of and others that it may not. These organizations in many cases are voluntary, other than the supply management organizations. There's an organization in Nobleford, Alberta, called Galimax, that is a voluntary co-operation of producers coming forward for the marketing of eggs.

I have to ask: why is this government bent on creating a new form of legislation and indeed a subsection or a subculture of agriculture? Would it not make more sense to expand the scope of farmers' markets rather than, in this case, starting from scratch in a new environment, a new era, whether it's voluntary or not? There are questions there.

I have difficulty learning: what is the evidence that any Alberta farmers are having difficulty in getting their direct products to market? In the case of commercial agriculture I've been the subject of the failure of the commercial market in regard to grain transportation. The government has come forward now with new taxation on the fuel that those very trains use to distribute or transport their commercial products to market. It's a hindrance on the activity that they do.

I have to question whether these difficulties are so great that we need to have the government intervene and promise to buy a certain amount every month. Is it the mandate of a government organization to supply or procure food for certain government entities, whether they be schools or hospitals or some other form of institutions? There are issues of safety and security of supply that these organizations depend on. Once the government mandates that the government agencies buy food from certain people, what's to prevent those prices from going up unnecessarily to supply this captive bureaucratic buyer?

The proposed Alberta Local Food Act purports to give rise to more local production of agricultural products, yet this proposal still has not determined which producers will qualify under the program.

Mr. Speaker, the government hasn't identified exactly who this bill is intended to help, and it's entirely unclear what problem, particularly, this bill is attempting to solve. There are many organizations, farmers' markets, et cetera, and the member opposite has talked about the full and fulsome development of that. Do we need to create more legislation going forward to assist that? It seems to me that it's operating in a fairly healthy environment already.

It's also unclear what kind of added cost will be put on taxpayers and whether more taxes or services, pro or con, will help or be incited by this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, for these reasons I believe I cannot and will not support Bill 202.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to take this opportunity to speak in support of Bill 202, the Alberta Local Food Act. I know that the sponsor of this bill put forward some very thoughtful amendments during the committee stage, and I'd like to thank the member for the work that's been put into this bill.

You know, Mr. Speaker, Alberta farmers have a lot to be proud of. They work hard at all times of the year, and they produce goods of outstanding quality. I know that other jurisdictions do an excellent job of promoting their local produce, and perhaps there are some things that we can learn from them as well. One example is Foodland Ontario. They promote recipes, food facts, an availability guide for the seasonality of their different produce, and also nutritional facts. I remember fondly, growing up as a child in Ontario, when my mother would bring home baskets of fresh peaches, raspberries, strawberries, apples – you name it – grown in Ontario. We'd make apple crisp, apple pie. So many great things came out of the ground there.

I think we also have the same thing right here in Alberta to be extremely proud of. You know, look at the popularity and basically the world-renowned status of Taber corn. Everybody knows Taber corn. People look forward all year to when the first Taber corn stand appears. That's something that we can be proud of. My mouth is starting to water just thinking about that. Look at the world-wide popularity of Alberta beef, too. This is another thing where our international reputation is something that we're known for all around the world. We produce excellent produce right here at home, Mr. Speaker. Our farmers are proud of what they do, and we are very proud of them, too. They already do a great job at marketing their products.

As I said before, we have an international reputation, not just for our food but also as a reliable source for agricultural technology expertise and the food that we grow. We have over 50 million acres here in Alberta that are used for crop and livestock production.

I also know that the minister of agriculture was recently over in Japan. They were praising the quality of the pork. Is that correct? Yeah. They were, you know, really impressed with the quality of the pork: the way it tastes, the way it cuts, just about everything around the pork. I'm sure there was much more. I was just following the minister's Twitter feed and happened to see that, and I thought that was a really interesting revelation. I'd like to thank the minister also for the work that he's done promoting Alberta on the world stage like that.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I also support this bill because it works towards enhancing the development of a sustainable food system for Albertans and by Albertans. It will enhance the ability of local producers to achieve more direct access to markets and also give Alberta consumers better access to locally grown food.

Another reason why I would urge this Assembly to support Bill 202 is because of the way it will promote the value-added supply chain as it relates to some complementary industries such as the food and beverage and tourism sectors. As I've mentioned previously, Mr. Speaker – but I think it bears repeating – Alberta-based craft brewers and distillers have told me that the raw ingredients to make the best possible products are found right here in Alberta. Bill 202 will also further enhance a mutually beneficial opportunity for Alberta brewers and distillers to open up new markets to Alberta farmers to showcase the world-class grains produced right here at home.

Indeed, the Alberta Small Brewers Association has given high praise to some recent changes the government made to markup rates on beer, and I'd like to actually quote from their news release from October 28, 2015. I'd be happy to table this document tomorrow. Here's the statement.

As one of the world's premier barley-growing regions, Alberta has the potential to be a national brewing powerhouse. Alberta's brewing entrepreneurs are ready for this challenge.

Budget 2015 has taken the [most] important step of streamlining the "Brewer Mark-up" to align taxes levied with the organic growth of the brewery. In the past, brewers faced barriers to growth due to sharp tax increases at arbitrary volumes. The change contained in Budget 2015 removes this barrier, and is warmly welcomed by ASBA members.

I think we have a lot to thank the Finance minister for in putting some of those changes forward in his budget, Mr. Speaker.

I also believe that Bill 202, like I said before, acts in a complementary manner to further showcase the delicious, frosty beverages that are being produced right here at home. Mr. Speaker, of course, beverages and food go hand in hand. Alberta's diverse and vibrant culinary scene is another element to the value-added chain that Bill 202 will support. There is a huge potential for enhancing the dining experience if more restaurants were to serve a greater proportion of locally grown food complemented by locally sourced beer and spirits. I also know, coming from a tourist destination like Banff and Canmore and other portions of my constituency, that food and beverages play a big role in attracting tourists as well.

Many destinations around the globe already pride themselves on marketing the freshness of their locally grown food, wine, and beer, and we can do the same thing right here in Alberta, Mr. Speaker. Jurisdictions around the country and around the world have seen their tourism numbers increase through successful marketing campaigns. They have diversified their economies with this simple formula. You see, Bill 202 has the potential to promote and enhance not only local food production and agriculture but value-added sectors such as beer, spirits, and tourism. At this time, when Alberta is striving for a more diversified economy, Bill 202 will promote an increased awareness and capacity for food grown right here at home.

Once again, in closing, I'd like to thank the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park for thoughtfully introducing Bill 202 and the amendments that were tabled by that member. I would urge this Assembly to support this important piece of legislation to enhance local food security and sustainability and the economic diversification that it will usher in.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise in support of this bill. I wish that the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster was here today because I wanted to start praising him . . . [interjections] Okay. Sorry.

I wanted to praise you for starting Open Farm Days. I understand that you were influential in making that happen. I wasn't sure how many people in this House knew that you had been so involved in doing that. It's definitely something that I have enjoyed. I think it's been a very great initiative, so I wanted to make sure that you were recognized in this House for this.

I am also very lucky in my constituency to have somebody who has been teaching me a lot about the work that the government has done around local food, and I've appreciated this person's wisdom.

Sometimes I am not sure if I'm a farmer or a rural dweller. I belong to a community-supported agricultural project in the riding of the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose. For those of you who may not have heard of community-supported agriculture, I've actually bought a share of a farm, and I get products every week during the summer and during the winter. I am taking a risk with the farmer so that the farmer can be sure of having a market for their product. I think this is the kind of thing that this bill is intended to do, to make sure that our farmers who are growing local food can have a very viable operation. I'm delighted to be a member of this community-supported agricultural project. I'm also very delighted in the fact that I have to spend a number of hours every summer digging potatoes, digging carrots, and preparing the products.

I'm not only a member of a CSA that supplies me with my vegetables; I'm also a member of a CSA that supplies me with a chicken every two weeks, a free-range chicken, and eggs every week that are free range. Again, by having bought a share in the production of the chicken and a share in the production of the eggs, I'm helping those farmers.

In my house we have not bought meat at the supermarket for a very, very long time because every year I buy half a pork, a quarter of a beef, and half a lamb, again, so that I can support local farmers in my area, and they have the assurance that they can sell the products that they grow.

I'm really delighted that this bill has been introduced in this House. I think by doing that, we are valuing the work and the importance of all of these local farmers, who very often take a lot of risks. Now, I take some risk in being a member of a CSA. This year the carrots didn't grow very well, but the squash grew very well. Between the squash that I grew in my own garden and the squash that I got as part of the CSA, we've been eating squash. But at least the farmers knew that they had the money to grow their products and customers for the product.

What this bill I think is going to do is focus on the fact that even though Alberta is not seen as a place where you can grow a lot of food, what we're going to be doing is valuing all of these farmers that are growing food for all of us that live in the urban areas. I'm really hoping that every single member of this House can support this bill and in a way tell the farmers that are growing our local food that we value them and that we support them. We want to make sure that they have the support that they need to enhance their production and the food that they give to all of us, that they sell to all of us.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly a pleasure to have the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 202. The act, of course, was brought forward by the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, and I'm certainly happy to support that. This act is going to allow our local producers greater direct access to markets and consumers, just like my constituents in Edmonton-Decore, to enjoy more homegrown products. I know my household tries to take part in a lot of those local products as much as possible, and my wife is certainly trying to convince me to eat a little bit more healthy from time to time despite our busy schedules.

When we're talking about consumers, they want to see the choices to be available to them, and that choice is starting to lean more to local producers. Having come from a warehouse atmosphere, I've seen all the different producers that come in, and they're coming in in great big loads, but I've noticed that there are not a lot of grown-in-Alberta labels; not to say that there aren't any, but it would be nice to see even more, especially when you're talking about folks like myself: very busy schedule. I sometimes will tend to pick convenience over what is probably better. For me to try to reach out to these local growers and get out to the farmers' markets, it's a little bit harder just because there simply aren't any in Decore that I'm aware of.

I know that there have been arguments saying that they already have this access. In part that is true, Mr. Speaker, but, like I said, when you're talking about having to travel outside – you know, it may sound silly. It's only 20 minutes away. Well, that's 20 minutes that for myself I could be dealing with a constituent's concerns whereas if I can stop at my local big grocer, get really good locally grown foods, that will certainly make my wife a little bit happier with some of the choices. The reality is that we do live in a fast-paced world, and the Alberta food act will greatly expand that access, providing fresh local products that my constituents have been looking for without that extensive travel time to purchase them.

I see this bill, Mr. Speaker, definitely as a win-win situation here. Our local producers get to have that greater access, more so than they currently have. Constituents like mine get to have access to those local food products that they're looking for, thus growing not only the businesses here within Alberta, but consumers get a chance to support those businesses. It just becomes a great big circle as our economy gets to grow. We're still getting those quality products that we're all looking for.

Mr. Speaker, I'm certainly urging all of my colleagues in the House to support Bill 202, support the growth of local producers, support the consumers that are looking to support those producers, and we'll even get some really good products on our dinner tables at the same time.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to Bill 202?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I'm very glad to have the opportunity to speak in support of Bill 202. The previous speakers have made some really good points about the growers and availability to market. A few things I was thinking of.

Another reason for supporting locally grown food is, number one, that you've got a decrease in cost. We've talked a lot about distances. The farther food is conveyed, that's going to add to the cost because we are paying for the transportation, and it tends to result in some deterioration of food quality. If food has to be able to travel long distances, sometimes it's grown to be tough rather than flavourful. Sometimes it doesn't travel as well as it's supposed to, so there's a loss. There are a lot of things that can happen over a 1,000 kilometre trip.

Another thing that I was thinking about was the variety of food. One of the things that we've all seen, especially with our mass-produced foods and foods that are not locally produced, is that there's a decrease in the variety. It's like with apples; 30, 40, 50 years ago commonly available apples would have included about, I think, 30 to 40 kinds. Nowadays you'd be lucky to find five or six in a grocery store. The ones that they keep producing are the ones that are the best sellers. What happens is that some of those varieties just die out. They're no longer available. The more people that you have growing, especially small operations, locally produced foods, the more likely it is that the varieties will be maintained, and for the future that's very valuable. We're in the situation right now where bananas might be a disappearing food from our diets because there's only one seed. There's only one type, and, you know, they figure that it may disappear in the next 10, 20 years.

One last point I need to make is that the more encouragement there is for people to continue using good agricultural land for agriculture of any kind, the more it is kept. It's not being built over. Building over doesn't destroy the land, but it takes it out of production, and around cities that's a terrible loss.

Those are the main things that I wanted to add to the conversation. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Government – Opposition Leader.

Mr. Cooper: The Government House Leader? In one fell swoop, just like that? Someday. We can all dream, Mr. Speaker, of a better day. No; I'm just teasing.

It's my pleasure today to rise and speak to Bill 202, the Alberta Local Food Act. We've heard a lot of fairly robust debate in the Chamber today, particularly around some of the good things that are happening when it comes to local food. I myself couldn't be more pleased about those really positive things that are happening already with respect to local food. We heard the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud singing the praises of farmers' markets, and we heard the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane speaking about honey, I believe. I might just add that in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills Canada's the third-largest producer of honey exists right there in the constituency. I would welcome everyone to come down, and I would be happy to – I know that he is very receptive to touring his facilities. A lot of the exciting things are happening with local food right there in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, particularly with respect to honey.

Also in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills there's a meadery, which many in this House will be familiar with. Some would say honey wine. They wouldn't say that because . . .

An Hon. Member: Meadery?

Mr. Cooper: Yes, meadery, not to be confused with a meatery. But while we're speaking of a meatery, Olds College produces wonderful local meat.

I guess my point is that we see situations all across the province . . .

The Speaker: I would hesitate to interrupt the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills; however, the time for consideration of this item has concluded.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Liquor Regulations for Live Music Venues

507. Mr. Shepherd moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to consider amendments to the Gaming and Liquor Regulation, Alta. reg. 143/96, that would extend the hours associated with the provision of liquor for venues that offer live music and to consider supporting further initiatives that will allow the live music industry in Alberta to prosper and grow.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is truly my pleasure to rise today to bring Motion 507 to the floor for debate. Over the last six months I have been working with local musician and studio engineer and producer Thom Bennett and city of Edmonton councillor Scott McKeen on the Edmonton live music, or ELM, initiative.

This is an initiative to enhance and increase the presence and value of live music in Edmonton by offering supports to new and existing venues by considering changes to the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, or AGLC, regulations and, in partnership with the city of Edmonton through the Edmonton Arts Council, exploring how we can best support and remove the barriers to the culture of live music within our city and around our province. This motion today supports the work of the ELM initiative by urging the government to consider reviewing and encouraging changes to the AGLC regulations to accomplish this goal, including the possibility of allowing venues which host live music to stay open and provide service one hour later.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is home to an amazing array of incredibly talented musicians. This is evidenced by the incredible number of talented performers that we have catapulted onto national and international stages, including such stalwarts as Ian Tyson, k.d. lang, Tommy Banks, Jann Arden, Corb Lund, Feist, Jr. Gone Wild, Shout Out Out Out Out, and the smalls. This continues with the steady climb of newer artists such as Michael Rault, Faith Healer. . . [interjections] Yeah. That, too. The Emeralds: how could I forget the Emeralds? And, of course, we have many new artists coming up like Michael Rault, Faith Healer, Rueben and the Dark, Purity Ring, Joe Nolan, the Wet Secrets, and the band formerly known as Viet Cong.

Mr. Speaker, all of these bands have one thing in common. They cut their teeth and perfected their skills in venues right here in Alberta. Our province has an incredible wealth of institutions which provide fertile soil for an incredibly rich and diverse music scene. Through postsecondary programs offered through MacEwan University, Red Deer College, and Mount Royal University, arts-focused elementary and secondary schools like Victoria school for the performing arts, and independent initiatives like Edmonton School of Song and the school of rock, we consistently generate an incredible number of skilled and talented musicians, performers, and songwriters. These performers, in turn, are supported by local radio stations such as CKUA, CJSR in Edmonton, CJSW in Calgary, and CKXU in Lethbridge.

Once they're established, they have the opportunity to play at the dozens of festivals which take place across our province every year. But their first opportunity to practice and hone their craft, the first thing to which they are able to aspire is the stage at their local music venue. Mr. Speaker, over the last few years Edmonton has seen the loss of many beloved venues, which were loved for offering that chance. Local venues are the lifeblood of a music scene, providing musicians the chance to cut their teeth and local residents the opportunity to discover and support up-and-coming acts.

They bring vitality to our communities and create cultural hubs which support and celebrate our local communities and draw business to other nearby restaurants, cafés, and shops. This, in turn, makes our communities more attractive places to live, drawing in businesses and young professionals. In cities like Austin, Nashville, Memphis, London, Melbourne, or Berlin music tourism generates millions of visits, billions in revenue, and thousands of jobs. Mr. Speaker, given the incredible cultural resources here in our province, with focused work and effort we could begin to lay a real foundation for the same.

In terms of the motion, Mr. Speaker, it's common knowledge that liquor sales play a key role in the profitability of live music venues. Therefore, one of the most effective ways we can support these venues and ensure their long-term sustainability is to ensure the regulations surrounding these sales work in venues' favour and not against them. One way we could possibly do this is by extending the hours of service for venues hosting live music by one hour, to 3 a.m.

This suggestion was presented to the ELM initiative by one of their board members, the former senator Tommy Banks. According to the senator prior to 1960 Alberta had largely been a dry province, where the only alcoholic beverage you could order in a bar or restaurant was a glass of beer. Other adult beverages were required to be smuggled into one of the local ballrooms or nightclubs. However, in 1960 the government of Premier Manning moved to allow that, under very strict regulation, dining lounges and their attached bars would be permitted to serve alcohol until midnight Monday through Saturday. However, from Monday to Friday a venue could serve until 2 a.m. if they offered entertainment consisting of at least a three-piece musical act. To quote the senator: only an arithmetic-challenged idiot would fail to see the benefits and fail to take advantage of such an offer.

Accordingly, the music scene in Alberta exploded. According to the senator Edmonton soon boasted no fewer than 15 live music venues within one block of Jasper Avenue between 100th and 109th Streets, all of which hosted live music six nights a week. Musicians in Edmonton went from a select few scratching out a meagre living to hundreds that worked full-time. This remained the case well into the late '70s and to the new Liquor Control Act of 1980.

Of course, I recognize that now that we have much more liberal legislation in place, making tweaks to the regulations isn't going to have nearly so dramatic an effect. However, allowing venues hosting live music that additional hour of service could help provide a much-needed boost in revenue that, helps them offset the costs of paying musicians and maintaining the equipment required for live music.

Currently the regular hours of sale and service set by the gaming and liquor regulations are 10 a.m. to 2 a.m. However, as we've seen in the past, the AGLC regularly considers requests for extended service hours. These are evaluated on a case-by-case basis, with consideration given to the scale of the event and the operating track record of the licensee making the request.

For example, during the 2014 Olympic Games the AGLC authorized blanket approval across the province for early liquor service for the gold-medal hockey game. The AGLC also . . .

An Hon. Member: Hear. Hear.

Mr. Shepherd: Yes. Thank you.

The AGLC also allows early openings for licensed establishments in Calgary during the Stampede. So far the AGLC has not received any reports of concerns or issues with these practices. Of course, any decisions related to extending liquor service past 2 a.m. would have to be based on broad support from industry and community stakeholders as well as the public, and consideration would have to be given to the broader impacts of extending liquor service in regard to policing needs, availability of transportation and transit, and other necessary services. However, I'm pleased to report, Mr. Speaker, that the AGLC remains open to discussions and that they've stated that they're committed to maintaining an innovative liquor model, responsive to industry and consumer trends and considerate of public safety and obligations of social responsibility.

Now, while today's motion is mainly focused on this extension of the hours of service, it's my hope that opening these discussions could allow us to consider some other innovations as well; for example, for smaller venues like Edmonton's Blue Chair Café, which is geared around offering dinner and a show, or the, hopefully, soon-to-be-open Aviary. Such venues don't have an interest in extended hours and staying open until 3 a.m., but perhaps, instead, we could consider offering such venues a small reduction in the provincial liquor markup rates. Any loss of revenue from this reduction would likely be offset by increased sales at the larger venues who do choose to stay open later, which would make the proposal, effectively, revenue-neutral.

Or we could explore removing the regulations introduced in 2007, which forbade underage musicians from playing in licensed venues. This is a cause that's been championed by Terry Evans of Edmonton station K-97, whom I met with a couple of weeks ago myself, himself the father of a talented young musician. As he pointed out to me, this is a form of apprenticeship that is allowed in Ontario, Manitoba, B.C., and Saskatchewan, that gives advanced young musicians the opportunity to hone their skills and gain valuable experience by working with and being mentored by older musicians. In turn, this grows the audience for live music by drawing out their family and friends.

We could also examine ways to ease restrictions on hosting all-ages shows and independent hall shows, helping us to create a new generation of Albertans who truly appreciate and support a culture of live performance. In the years I spent playing with long-time Edmonton musical icon Mr. Mike McDonald, I heard many stories of the vibrant music scene of the 1980s and how so many bands, including his now reunited band, Jr. Gone Wild, thrived in a culture of independent hall shows. Young promoters capitalized on their entrepreneurial spirit, helping to develop the local music community while honing their own business skills. Finding ways to provide easier access to liquor licences for these kinds of shows could improve access to live music in . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, your time has concluded.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I continue to learn a lot of history of this province by the various presentations in the House.

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm thrilled to rise in this House for the first time to actually engage in debate on a motion. This motion actually addresses something that's very near to my heart. As many of you know, in another life I was a musician. I had my first band when I was 16 with some friends, and this eventually over the years kind of morphed into different incarnations of groups. I had a dance band with my siblings, and we travelled all across Alberta. We went from Sundre to Fort Mac to – you name it – Jasper, Athabasca, Cold Lake. We were everywhere, and it was a great experience.

Later on I formed a show trio with my brother and sister, and we became fortunate enough to actually land a house gig at the Beverly Crest. Now, the Beverly Crest was one of those in the '80s that was a big supporter of musicians. They had three rooms running all the time with different kinds of music. We were fortunate to get in on that, and we were there for six years. I got to do something I loved and got paid for it. It was fabulous.

Mr. Cooper: Like now.

Ms Jabbour: Like now. This was even better, though. Playing as a musician is a lot more fun, and you get more appreciation.

Back in the '80s, of course, the music scene in Edmonton and across Alberta was vibrant and alive. There were venues. There were players. We had people like Tommy Banks, already mentioned, P.J. Perry, Big Miller, Charlie Austin, Kennedy Jenson – they were everywhere – and so many talented people. We had these venues and, you know, musicians were out there. We could go any night. We could go anywhere and enjoy live music. It kind of started to die, though, over the years. The DJs took over, and a lot of the venues started to close.

My own band over the years also ran afoul of the AGLC regulations against underage performers. My sister was only 16 at that time and in our band, and when we had arrived for a weekend gig, they shut us down when they discovered she was 16 – “oh, sorry; you guys are cancelled for the weekend” – leaving, of course, the room with no entertainment. They finally compromised, and they said: “As long as you don't let anybody know, you can perform tonight only. But she has to go and stand outside during your breaks.” That was the compromise. Again, later on I performed with my daughters. We were able to get an exemption based on a special permission letter. But in 2007, as mentioned, AGLC again cancelled all musicians who were under 18 performing in licensed venues.

It's something I'm very much in favour of. There are so many talented young people out there. My own daughters learned from that. My own band benefited from being able to perform. I think it's important that younger people get that chance and that it becomes more of a family-friendly kind of a venture, encouraging appreciation of live music from a very young age.

It's sad, too, to see that so many wonderful venues have shut down. I mean, when we lost the Sidetrack, many of us mourned. More recently we lost New City, which was another fabulous live music venue. I know that one of the reasons that they were forced to shut down – Brad, Terry, and Tabitha were a family, and they worked really hard to run this business. But their margins were so small, even though they were packed every night, they simply couldn't make a go of it, and they had to shut down. My own brother-in-law tried for a while. So I know first-hand how hard it is for these venues to support live music.

Really, we all benefit when we have a vibrant live music scene. We have talented musicians who can practice their craft. We support small businesses and entrepreneurs who flourish not just through the direct music venue but the peripheral industries and the businesses that support that. We have tourism, as already mentioned. One of the first things that I ever do when I go to visit a city is that I check what's happening, what's out there. Is there a band or music I can go listen to? Unfortunately, Edmonton kind of has fallen back on that, and I think that it's something we would do really well to promote. It would put Alberta on the map. Again, as I mentioned, being able to have all-age performers could promote family-friendly venues. We all benefit because listening to music makes us feel good. You listen to live music, it makes you feel better, you get up and you dance. It's good for our health, it reduces stress, and it's just positive all around.

I'm really in favour of this motion because I think that anything we can do to help support and grow the live music industry in Alberta is a positive. Extending the hours is just a small step. Reducing some of that red tape, these regulations that maybe are prohibitive and prevent owners and the venues from being able to at least turn a profit, however small: I think that's just the first step. We can go from there and find other ways to support live music. I'm very much in favour of this motion, and I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre for bringing it forward.

Mr. Cooper: Sing us a song.

Ms Jabbour: You know what? We can all sing together. How's that?

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured, actually, thrilled to be able to speak to this motion. It's a proposal that is aimed at encouraging Alberta's music industry, and I do think that the performing arts are truly an integral part of our culture, something that we really do need to grow, to enhance, to encourage. Our province does boast a truly flourishing music scene. It makes sense that we can make some of these services more accessible. I believe that I'm correct in saying that Alberta actually is the second-largest live music area in our country. I'm essentially in support of much of the idea.

I think it is important, though, that we also consider striking a bit of a balance between free society and the ramifications with regard to public safety. That would be my only real concern. By extending the hours associated with the provision of liquor for venues that offer live music, there are some obvious benefits for music but some real potential risks that I do think need to be examined. I guess the real question is: will this have an increase or a decrease in the likelihood of impaired driving issues? That's an important thing in my riding. With a more staggered exit from bars and pubs, will taxi services find it harder or easier to keep up with late-night demand? Will it decrease impaired driving? I don't know. Will later closing hours mean later consumption and possibly higher risks for impaired driving? That would be the question.

I think that organizations like Mothers Against Drunk Driving and particularly our law enforcement agencies really should have some opportunity to speak to this. I would hope that they would be consulted when it comes time to actually consider where this might go and give them the opportunity to actually share their thoughts and if they would add anything to it all.

I do agree that on the surface and for culture there are probably some significant positives and also for businesses, business owners, musicians. One possibility is that later hours of operation will allow for more alcohol and ticket sales, which is positive for businesses, and potentially, hopefully, a growth of the local music industry. However, I think the question also has to be asked: what actually constitutes live music? DJs, open-mike nights: do they count as live music? If so, would that remove the incentive for business owners to actually hire more costly live musicians and eliminate the benefit to them? If hours of operation are extended but consumption and alcohol sales are not, then there's less incentive for business owners to increase their operating costs and, again, no benefit to real musicians. In reality, you can see how different tweaks to this legislation could create numerous kinds of outcomes, actually.

The motion proposes further examination, which is great, into how we can foster the music industry in Alberta. In reality, that's what I'd like to see us do with all legislation: have a comprehensive analysis of the proposal, ample opportunity for stakeholders to submit their input, analyze that in conversation with various people, and produce results that best reflect the engaged stakeholders and enhance our quality of life here in Alberta. Doing so will provide a more thriving and safe Alberta. I think the success or failure of the motion, like most legislation, in terms of the public eye, will be contingent on transparent and comprehensive consultation.

As arts and culture shadow minister, though, I have to say again that I am deeply interested in this subject. I think that as a society both the commercialization and the mass production of music has in fact led to somewhat of a decrease in the cultural engagement of people with amateur music, and it's a great loss to our society.

Personally, I'm drawn to live music like a moth to a street lamp. That's the kind of restaurant I always look for to go for dinner or whatever. But I do grieve with the victims of drunk drivers. The carnage and the sorrow that it produces – wow, I didn't know this would affect me. Sorry. In my riding a teenage girl just two years ago, three years ago was in a crosswalk, and she was hit by a drunk driver. She lost her leg. She's finally beginning to find her way again. She's trying to speak about it in various places. I've met her. I've talked with her.

I truly wish that the music and the artists could be enhanced without it being tied to increased reasons for intoxication and a drinking culture. I think that is a risk, and I would really encourage the Member for Edmonton-Centre to truly look at what he said about: are there other creative ways also to enhance the music industry? I think that would be a great result if we could enhance it and somehow decouple it from the alcohol that seems to have to go with it in this case.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak in favour of Motion 507. I see this as a great opportunity to support local bands and artists on the music scene by allowing venues to stay open later to host them. Service extended by one hour, until 3 a.m., is offered in other regions of Canada such as the province of Quebec, and I believe that the extension would help venues offset the cost of hiring musicians through increased liquor sales and cover charges. Some might be critical that the 3 a.m. finish time might be quite late, but in some of the tourism markets in this province such as Banff and Jasper many people are on holiday and would enjoy a vibrant music culture of live music and the late nights. They're also often within walking distance of their hotels and homes. This is good for the tourism economy and good for the Alberta economy as a whole.

Some might not realize this, but in my younger days I worked as a bartender in an Austrian ski town [interjection] – that's a true story – to help raise money for lift passes, ski wax, Wiener schnitzel, and schnapps. Then in Hamburg, Germany, again I worked in a bar area and made some extra money when I wasn't teaching English by day. I was in Germany teaching English. In both cases the bars were open until 6 a.m. or later, so I don't see how a 3 a.m. finish would be much of a problem, based on my former experiences.

Also, during certain times of the year the AGLC regularly considers extending service hours for major events such as the Calgary Stampede right here in this province, like previously mentioned by the Member for Edmonton-Centre. No concerns have been reported by the AGLC so far regarding this practice.

In the case of Calgary-Northern Hills we have a mix of larger bar and pub venues, and I'm quite convinced that they would benefit from the opportunity to extend the hours to offer live music at their locations. When considering many of the advantages of this proposal, I will be supporting this motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in support of this motion. As a professional live musician I've been doing this pretty much my whole life.

Mr. Rodney: Could you sing, please?

Mrs. Aheer: I would happily sing a song, but we'll wait till 4 in the morning – how about that? – and then I'll sing. It might be necessary at that point.

My experience as far as the alcohol portion and all of that goes: it's relevant. I think it'll be dependent upon the business, and I'm assuming that most businesses will be able to make that decision based on what is best for their business.

One thing to consider, though, that I'd like to bring up and that my colleague brought up, is to perhaps look at the overall idea of what is considered to be live music, Mr. Speaker. I've had the privilege of working with many DJs. They are creative, amazing people that actually offer a humongous amount of artistic creativity to this particular genre. There are so many ways that you can look at a performance. I would highly recommend – I don't know if it's worth doing a definition of what that is, but I think that it would be worth opening the door to what we consider creative expression at that level.

Like, you were mentioning the open mikes. There are a lot of different opportunities to look at that. I think, too, for myself, I've been dragging my kids out, too. There are certain open mikes that we have in Calgary, actually, that are all ages. They're a wonderful opportunity. My son has been at them since he was eight years old. As a result, he's also pursuing a career in music and has in fact taken over my studio since I'm here now. I really, really think that it's a beautiful opportunity, as you had mentioned, Mr. Speaker, for new musicians to cut their teeth, to bring in other musicians that have already, you know, blessed us with their music, and to bring older music back to the new generations that have an opportunity in a small venue to be able to see these things.

However, there are a few things, I think, in terms of sort of the approach that we're taking as far as extending the hours. To bring up a few of the things that the hon. member had mentioned, we just want to make sure, as far as all venues go and whether it's live music or not, that we don't take away any sort of competitive advantage for any of the venues that have the opportunity to benefit from people who are out in the evening for whatever reason, whether you prefer live music or not. We want to make sure that it's sort of an even playing ground for all of the proprietors for those late-evening situations.

We already have mitigation in terms of consumption. We have existing ProServe legislation. I think it's been meaningfully applied in the province, and it will mitigate a lot of the overall concerns that we have. I think that due to the effectiveness of ProServe, extending consumption hours could probably bring in numbers, and it has positive externalities. Like has been mentioned, there's the staggering of those times so that as people are going home, if they are not within walking distance of the venue, then grabbing cabs, getting to other spaces may be a little bit easier for people going home so that we do get them home safe and sound from these venues. I'm sure that that's at the top of the list of the priorities, Mr. Speaker, as we're deciding how to go forward with this legislation.

I think that overall the idea of encouraging the arts is really the guts behind this, and any time we can open up that aspect – and I've been performing for 20 years. It is an absolutely magnificent part of this province, and I truly believe that anybody who's given that opportunity adds to the fabric and the culture of our province. If we're able to give them the opportunity to do that by way of extending the hours, then I think that that's a wonderful, wonderful idea. But I think that we do need to consider the part about the alcohol, make sure that that's not the guts of why we're doing this, that the reason for doing this is exactly what the hon. member had mentioned, that our artistic fabric is actually growing.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, if you and the Member for Peace River would like to team up, I have a grandson who plays a mean Jimi Hendrix.

The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to stand and speak on this motion today. I think it's a good idea, and I'm happy to support it. Let me say this. I think it's great that you're encouraging live music. To be clear, I would probably support this motion even if you weren't, only for the simple reason . . .

Dr. Starke: You want to drink at them?

Mr. McIver: Yeah. Well, I just don't think that it's up to the government to tell me or any adult when to go to bed. That's all. I'm just like that. At my age the chances of my staying up to listen to music till 3, 4 in the morning are getting pretty slim. There was a time when that might have been a regular occurrence. That time has passed.

Nonetheless, for people that want to do that, I just don't think the government should be looking over their shoulder. There are certainly lots of people who work in the hospitality business and things and other businesses that finish work at 1, 2, and 3 in the morning, and I don't see any reason why they can't go out and enjoy the same type of hospitality that a nine-to-fiver can enjoy after the end of their shift.

To be clear, Mr. Speaker, for those watching who might decide to be offended, the fact is that I'm making no excuses for drinking and driving and any of those things. On the other hand, I've often thought and have articulated it publicly – so I'm comfortable saying it again – that if bars and restaurants that serve alcohol are open later, then I think there's a good chance that when people leave those facilities at 4 in the morning, there will be a taxi available rather than kicking everybody out the door at 1 and 2 and then, you know, having 50 people who need a ride and 25 taxis sometimes. In my opinion, that can lead to bad decisions. I'm not excusing any of those bad decisions. I'm just saying that sometimes it can lead to bad decisions.

Whatever you can do to have people go out on the street after enjoying themselves with the best possible odds of them getting a safe ride home the better. If you wanted to extend it just a little bit further, public transit sometimes starts running at 5 or 6 in the morning. [interjections] I'm just saying. I'm just saying. Safety first, Mr. Speaker. Safety first.

I in no way want to diminish your support for musicians and, you know, people that want to perform in bars and restaurants. I think that's a wonderful way to spend time when I'm out with friends and family. Like I said, in my case it's bound to be a little earlier than 3 in the morning. Nonetheless, your idea is a good one, and I'm happy to support it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak in support of this motion. I have the privilege of living, actually, on 17th Avenue in Calgary, which many will know as the Red Mile. Thinking of my street in relation to this bill is quite easy. I can sort of walk out my door and look down the street, and the restaurant closest to me on my left would be a Mexican restaurant, that often hosts Latin American acts, local as well as brought in. Looking further down the street, there's another bar, that specializes in metal music and '80s revival glam rock.

Going down the other way on the street, there's a place that specializes in jazz music. Going down further, there's yet another restaurant, that focuses on Atlantic music and folk music. And going even further into downtown, I can think of several places that also specialize in rap music, underground music, and other up-and-coming urban acts, including things such as synth pop, which, if you don't know, is the '80s synthesizer music you thought died long ago. It's back.

I am supportive of this motion. You know, it allows venues to stay open an extra hour later, which helps offset the cost of hiring live musicians through the increased liquor sales.

Also, some of the other members here pointed out the experience during the 2014 Olympic Games, where there was a blanket approval process for the early gold-medal hockey game. Now, as somebody who lives on 17th Avenue, if there were going to be residents that were going to be adversely affected by that, I would like to think it would probably be me, from the location where I live, and it was fine. Everyone behaved themselves. There was hooting and hollering after the game, but besides that, everything was fine. I think that is an excellent example of how, you know, the sky will not fall with an extra hour of responsible drinking at particular venues. As was mentioned, too, there have been no concerns reported thus far by the AGLC about this practice.

You know, what I'd like to highlight is that for communities that may have concerns about this, this motion doesn't preclude an individual community from deciding that they do not want to go to 3 a.m., that they would like to stick to the current regulations or some number in between based on stakeholders from their community or based on the history of that particular venue.

I agree with what some of the other members said here as well about, you know, how we obviously have concerns that we do not want people to be out drinking and driving. That's not acceptable under any circumstance, but having lived on 17th, there is definitely something to be said for the importance of staggering when various people who are out on, say, a Friday or Saturday night having a good time leave the various establishments. I have seen many a time lines on 17th Avenue waiting for cabs around these particular venues that are letting out right at 2 o'clock. So there's something to be said for staggering it.

Also, another member mentioned about good-quality sound systems and that potentially an establishment might not want to upgrade because they've been hiring DJs. Well, I can tell you, as somebody who has gone to a DJ show or two in my lifetime, that a good-quality sound system that would be used for a live music act is also a good-quality sound system for a DJ act as well.

With that, I am going to be voting in support of this bill, and I hope the other members of the House do as well. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to speak to this motion. First things first: nothing good happens after midnight. My mother was right on many occasions.

In listening to some of these concerns, first of all – I just wanted to get this out of the way – I've worked with the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission in the past. I ran an events company. I mean, these guys are top-notch professionals. Depending on what this looks like down the road, I have no doubt in my mind that they'll be able to regulate whatever changes are made to this industry. I think that's okay, and I think that through continual marketing programs aimed towards not drinking and driving, we'll be able to achieve some of those goals down the road.

I was also living on 17th Avenue during the Red Mile, and I didn't sleep for however long those hockey games went on. It was sort of, you know: if you can't beat them, join them. Certainly, it would have been quite handy to have an extra hour, if you could get into a bar, to enjoy the festivities.

Having worked in the bars as well, I do know – I mean, we all live and work at different times and different hours. We used to have hockey groups that would actually come at about 1:30, and these poor guys just want to have a beer and some nachos. Unfortunately, I think, you know, the carbon tax and the minimum wage are going to affect that price and make it a little bit less affordable, so perhaps we should give them a little bit more time to consume the liquor.

Now, I realize that this is a motion – and I'm happy that it's a motion – to explore the opportunities that this presents to all those involved. I'm excited for that. I don't necessarily think this encourages, you know, an overconsumption of alcohol, but it perhaps allows for two members of a party of four to stick around for an extra hour of music because they can have beer, and the other ones will just enjoy their ginger ale or whatever that might be. If this helps to encourage live music and musicians, certainly in the constituency of Airdrie, in which there has been a big push for this more recently, this is definitely a motion that I can get behind and support. I think it's actually a really unique, creative motion, and it's exciting to be a part of something like this. [interjections] There are some things we might disagree on every now and then, but I think this is really good. I think it's really great. Kudos for the creation of this motion. I'm excited to see the progression of this. [interjections]

I believe that maybe the movers are up here. It's good to see some supporters live. Unfortunately, I just sort of found out about this this morning. I've been able to reach out to some interested stakeholders. My other brother, Steve Jevne, is, I think, an up-and-coming musician, so check him out. I think he has a website. He also runs an open-mike night at Bambino's in Airdrie that's really successful and brings in a lot of different musicians. Christian Hudson, the kid who won the Calgary Stampede talent search, is from Airdrie. He donated his prize winnings of $10,000 to the homeless in Calgary.

Anyway, really great people in Airdrie, really great musicians. I think this is something that they will get behind and support. As I said, I look forward to the rollout of the results that come in, I guess.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak in favour of Motion 507. I think that it's an excellent initiative on the part of the Member for Edmonton-Centre and something that I hope we can all support.

You know, over the years that I've been in the city, I've enjoyed many live music venues in the past. I know that for many people going back to the Sidetrack is maybe the earliest one that comes to mind, but being a little older than some, I can remember a music venue in Old Strathcona called Dante's, where the music was excellent. I remember one evening dancing to Big Miller in Dante's, and it was very exciting. And just to really, really date myself, Mr. Speaker, when I was in university, there was a place, a coffee house, near Jasper and 109th called the Hovel, that had a wide range of folk music venues and so on.

There's a long history. I think that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has identified the policy change that helped create that and generate that, and I can see that he is seeking to draw on that historical experience to try and initiate the same kind of thing. I think it's a very worthwhile thing.

I know that in terms of hours there's been considerable concern on the part of many in the Old Strathcona area on Whyte Avenue and, I think, probably in other areas that all the bars get out at the same time and that it creates a real difficulty. I know that Edmonton city council has discussed this from time to time. I think that having some different hours is actually a good thing and helps manage some crowds and so on.

The last point that I want to make is relative to the point made by the hon. member with respect to underage performers. There are many excellent, outstanding even, performers who are younger than 18, and I understand that Alberta is the only province in which they are not allowed to perform in licensed premises. Nobody is suggesting that they're there to drink, but as performers I think it's somewhat discriminatory to exclude them from being able to perform as part of a group. I hope that that's something as well that the liquor board will take a look at. I think that whatever we can do to encourage live music and to encourage, particularly, younger performers in our province is something that's worth supporting.

I want to commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre for this initiative and indicate that I'll be very much supporting his motion. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, I think that some of those places you identified may be historical resources that are being protected.

Mr. Mason: As am I, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also wanted to congratulate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre for bringing this motion forward.

I think that some of the concerns raised earlier are ones that we all note about responsible drinking. But responsible drinking is not about the time; it's actually about the responsibility of individuals to make appropriate decisions, whether that be at 8 in the morning or 8 at night or 3 in the morning as the case may be. I think that education around that, not only of individuals in the community but, of course, of people within the hospitality industry, is important for us to address, and I'm sure the AGLC will do so.

But culture is another great and interesting thing that, I think, comes in many, many forms. I think that we've all enjoyed culture in Alberta in many ways. I like to think of Alberta as a place that works hard. We also like to play hard, and sometimes that involves playing some great music. In my wayward youth we used to do something we called the seedy bar tour, and that involved places like the National, the Shamrock, the King Eddy, Mad Trapper's, Lucifer's, Ten Foot Henry's, which was a nonalcohol venue, surprisingly. We usually took taxis there with the intention of listening to some great music and perhaps imbibing a few alcoholic beverages during that time. Again, great music and great responsibility. I think that that's a tone we have to set.

Mr. Cooper: With great music comes great responsibility.

Mr. Gottfried: There you go.

The other thing, of course, is that through the musicians that we encourage in this province, we also get great activists and community leaders, Paul Brandt being one, who's done a lot of great work for Habitat for Humanity. More recently maybe he's not quite as popular with the members on the other side. Indeed, we have some activists that move forward with that through their musical endeavours. A young man I know well, Aaron Pollock, who actually used to be an employee of Culture and Tourism, is now a budding musician and has just written a song with the Calgary Homeless Foundation. Once it's produced – he's producing it in conjunction with them – all the download proceeds are going to the cause of homelessness in Calgary and possibly across Alberta. I applaud those sorts of initiatives, that are brought forward through culture and through talent and through young people and people of all ages taking those talents and using them for great causes.

The other thing, of course, for us proud Calgarians is that 2016 will be the opening of the National Music Centre. Hopefully, that will be a source of pride not just for Calgarians but for all Albertans as well. Enclosed in that centre, obviously, will be the rebirth of our wonderful and favoured location of the King Eddy in a much newer and enhanced facility, with the Rolling Stones' mobile recording studio in the halls there. As important, we'll have the Canadian Country Music Hall of Fame, the Canadian Music Hall of Fame, and the Canadian Songwriters Hall of Fame. I think this is a great time for us to embrace this.

I will be supporting this motion enthusiastically, and if any of the venues that the hon. Government House Leader mentioned are still open or if there are any younger members who know Edmonton better than I do, I look forward to enjoying some of those venues in the future, hopefully, with the motion taking effect sometime in the new year.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I feel the need for all of the members in the Assembly to know that Hansard and the LAO will be sending a bill to you for all of the free advertising that you've provided.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise in support of this motion, and I kindly disagree with the Member for Airdrie, who says that nothing good can happen after 12, for the plain reason that most gay bars don't really have anyone going there until about 11 o'clock. About gay bars: the best thing is the drag shows, and those are amazing live shows that start usually around 10 and then can go anywhere between then and the close of the bar.

Dr. Turner: But is it music?

Mr. Connolly: It is music. There are live drag singers. Some will just dance and mime, but there are live drag singers. Thank you very much, Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

In Calgary we have the Backlot as well as Twisted, which are amazing venues where many Calgarians often go to view such shows. In Edmonton we have Evolution, which, again, is a bit newer than the two in Calgary but is very popular with the LGBT community, especially with their copious drag shows.

I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Centre for putting forward this motion to support live music in all of its kinds as well as entertainment including the drag community.

Thank you.

5:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Yes. I'm in full support of this motion. There are two parts that – I don't sing or dance or anything; that's probably a good thing. Anyway, I own a fairly large sound system, and we set it up at the local Legion. We promote live music, and we encourage people throughout the community to come and enjoy the festivities and those kinds of things, plus it promotes the Legion, which is a good thing that we do.

Also, on top of that, that hasn't been mentioned yet, are music festivals. Being one of the main organizers for the Wild Mountain Music Festival, in mid-July, in Hinton – we have thousands of people that arrive there for that weekend event, and of course it's promoting live music across Canada. Musicians and people show up, like I said, from across Canada. We even get some people up from the States. CKUA helps to sponsor the event, and of course we have big Baba, that shows up and helps to do the announcing and everything like that. It's a great promotion for live music. I was hoping that – with the music festival, of course, is the liquor portion of it – changes to the liquor side would be a good thing for the festival. We allow camping on the site. We have buses going to and from the site all the time, to the community, so that nobody is drinking and driving. We have these things, so it's great.

I'm in full support of this because we need the additional alcohol to help pay for the singers that we bring from all across Canada. So it's great. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a former restaurant manager at this time last year I was getting ready to stay up till 1 a.m. for the busy Christmas rush, and now I'm getting ready to stay up till 1 a.m. for other reasons. I want to thank the hon. House leader for supporting an extra hour of folk music as well.

You know, in the restaurant industry this is something that we've been talking about in the last few years, looking at ways to diversify, to promote growth within our sector. One of the things that gets thrown around a lot is live music, except that with live music comes a risk. It's a monetary risk. You're taking a gamble any time you bring a live act in, and you need to recoup that cost, that comes with having a live act. So providing an extra hour in which you can provide some service – I even noticed that the Member for Calgary-Hays spoke about attracting people who may not be able to come out to these venues because they work till 1 in the morning – would be a good way for us to really promote growth within the industry as well.

You know, we've seen this with special events like the 2014 Olympics. We've seen this with World Cup events as well, where there are modifications or amendments made to liquor laws for a single basis. When those occur, we never hear about any problems that occur with that. Usually people are quite responsible with events like these. Having seen venues where they're hosting musical events, you tend not to see binge drinking compared to venues that aren't doing musical events as well.

As it stands for AGLC – and, you know, I heard the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View speak briefly about this as well – there's very strong training in place. Having been in the industry when AGLC started implementing things like ProServe, you actually start to see a little bit of change when it comes to the service of liquor and the responsible service of it as well, and I have complete faith that people with ProServe certification will be responsible with the service of liquor as well.

You know, there is some opposition that may say that some cities would be opposed to this. There are a lot of systems in place for municipalities who might not see this as the best option for them as well. They can put bylaws in place. They are the ones who are issuing business licences and can put restrictions on those businesses' licences as they see fit. We see that in areas like Cardston, which actually is a dry town. So that gives them options there as well.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but Standing Order 8(3) provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate.

I would invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close debate on Motion 507.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you so much to everyone that's risen and spoken today. It's fantastic to hear so much support for an issue that is truly very near and dear to my heart. I'm very happy that Mr. Thom Bennett was able to join us here today – he was, as I mentioned earlier, the driving force behind the ELM initiative – and Mr. Terry Evans, a great supporter of young musicians here in Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, we're incredibly fortunate that in this province we have so many people who are deeply passionate about and committed to growing our local music scenes. You know, I've been greatly encouraged watching musicians, promoters, booking agents, people that have spent decades here in the trenches, people that I came up through the Edmonton music scene with rise into positions in municipal and provincial government, where their dedication to live music has the potential to yield great dividends for our music communities. Many of these individuals are deeply involved in discussions with colleagues in other provinces, with an eye to growing more Canadian municipalities as music cities, cities with thriving grassroots music scenes that generate measurable value for their local economies and communities.

Again I thank everyone who has risen to speak today. I thank the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka for his thoughts on the potential challenges and how we'd have to examine how some elements of this bill might be defined. I think that's an important consideration, something we need to look at closely to make sure that any adjustments to the regulations don't leave loopholes that could be exploited. We'd want to make sure that we word things very carefully to ensure that we achieve the intended benefit of supporting the hiring of professional live performers. I also appreciate the considerations you brought forward about potential effects in smaller communities, where there may not be transit services or as many taxis available. That's certainly something that's important to consider, and for that reason, I'd certainly want to ensure that in considering these changes, we have good conversations with police, municipal authorities, and community stakeholders to make sure that we get their views on how we could mitigate those kinds of potential effects.

I also really appreciate the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek's observation that, you know, these performers do become great leaders, advocates, and activists in their community. I know for myself that the skills that I learned and that I honed on the stage played a large role in leading to my standing in this House today, so those are incredibly important and very transferable skills, Mr. Speaker. As he noted, we have many other cultural and musical resources across the province – certainly, the National Music Centre, in Calgary, is another one of those – that we could couple with a vibrant music scene to create a much stronger music tourism industry here in our province.

Of course, more vibrant music scenes in our large urban centres support musicians who then play all across our province, so it's a benefit to all communities in Alberta as many of these musicians then go on to play in festivals and venues in smaller areas around Alberta, things like the North Country Fair, the South Country Fair, Pembina River Nights, the Canmore folk festival, or even in smaller venues like the Twin Butte general store.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, a vibrant culture of live music has strong economic spinoffs. It supports local recording studios, music stores, other businesses. It has spinoffs that benefit other cultural groups as well. There's an enormous amount of potential here, enormous opportunity. We have so many wonderful musicians that we grow here in this city, so many institutions that help nurture that. I think that by taking this opportunity, we could really look at continuing to develop and truly benefit from a great cultural resource here in this province.

Thank you again to everybody for your support on this motion today, and I look forward to the opportunity to open discussions.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Everyone else mentioned venues that weren't here, but it seems appropriate that you would have somebody who's live here today.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 507 carried]

The Speaker: The Assembly stands adjourned until 7:30 p.m.

The King's University College Amendment Act, 2015

The Chair: Hon. members, we have under consideration Bill Pr. 1. Are there any questions, comments or amendments with respect to this bill? Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill Pr. 1, The King's University College Amendment Act, 2015 be amended as follows. Section 7 is amended in the proposed section 6 by striking out clause (a) and substituting the following:

has authority to provide programs of study, approved in accordance with the Post-secondary Learning Act and the regulations made under that Act, that lead to the granting of baccalaureate, master's and doctoral degrees; to provide institutionally approved programs of study that lead to the granting of diplomas and certificates;

I have a sum total of one copy of the amendment. Oh, hey, look at that. The script doesn't tell me where to stop speaking, so do I just fill the time until . . . [interjections] I'm going to filibuster my own bill, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions regarding the proposed amendment?
I see none.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: We are back now on the main bill as amended. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill Pr. 1 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

7:40

Bethesda Bible College Amendment Act, 2015

The Chair: All righty. Moving on. Are there any questions, comments or amendments with respect to this bill?

I see none.

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 2 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: That's carried. [interjection] Opposed? I figured everybody was in agreement, so I didn't ask "Opposed?" What can I say?

Bill Pr. 3
Rosary Hall, Edmonton Repeal Act

The Chair: All right. Moving on to Bill Pr. 3. Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

I see none.

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 3 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Any opposed? That's carried. We're getting there.

Bill Pr. 4
Canadian University College Amendment Act, 2015

The Chair: On Bill Pr. 4. Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 4 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill Pr. 5
Concordia University College of Alberta
Amendment Act, 2015

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and move an amendment to Bill Pr. 5 on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Varsity. This bill was reviewed by the Standing Committee on Private Bills, and the committee recommended that the bill proceed with this amendment, being as follows. Section 6 is amended in the proposed section 4(1) by striking out clause (c) and substituting the following:

- (c) to provide programs of study, approved in accordance with the Post-secondary Learning Act and the regulations made under that Act, that lead to the granting of baccalaureate, master's and doctoral degrees.

The copies of the amendment are being distributed.

The Chair: All right. On amendment A1 to Bill Pr. 5, are there any speakers with respect to this bill?

Mr. Cooper: I just would love a moment or two to have the amendment in my hand prior to the vote.

Thank you, Madam Chair. I will rest.

The Chair: You're welcome. Thank you.

All right. Everyone now has the amendment. Are there any questions or comments with respect to the amendment?

I see none.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: On Bill Pr. 5, are there any further speakers, questions or comments, amendments?

Seeing none, get ready for the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill Pr. 5 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill Pr. 6
Covenant Bible College Amendment Act, 2015

The Chair: We are now on Bill Pr. 6. Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 6 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill Pr. 7
Living Faith Bible College Amendment Act, 2015

The Chair: Finally, Bill Pr. 7. Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 7 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

Bill 7

Alberta Human Rights Amendment Act, 2015

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I will be relatively brief. It's a pleasure for me to rise to speak to Bill 7 in committee and to outline my personal pleasure in the fact that our government has been able to move forward on this bill as quickly as we have. I'm also, of course, very pleased with the level of support that it is now receiving throughout this Assembly as we move forward on this bill.

You know, it's interesting, going back to when I was first elected, in 2008, Madam Chair. At that time, the big get in our human rights legislation was to get the legislation to actually include reference to sexual orientation. Soon after I was elected, we celebrated – celebrated, in quotations marks – the anniversary of the Vriend decision, when the Supreme Court of Canada essentially told the previous government of Alberta that it had to read in protection for people on the basis of sexual orientation. That was a wonderful decision, but, notwithstanding that, it took over a decade for the previous government to move and actually have that language included in the human rights legislation, and that was unfortunate.

In fact, even when it did finally get introduced – some people here, being rather new to the House, might not recall – it was paired with the rather unfortunate section 11.1 of the bill that brought in sexual orientation, which allowed for all that weirdness where teachers could be disciplined were they to talk about sexual orientation in classrooms without first having gone through a rather laborious process to get permission and to warn everybody that that topic might possibly come up. It's a pleasure to see that we've moved such a long way from that.

Instead, in our case, you know, our government has been in office now for just over seven months, and assuming that we pass this bill in this session, it will be before eight months that we're able to move to that point of including the issue of protecting Albertans on the basis of gender, gender identity, and gender expression. While we know that it would be read in by the Supreme Court of Canada anyway, it is highly symbolic not just to Albertans who need their rights protected on the basis of gender, gender identity, and gender expression, but quite frankly it is symbolic to all Albertans who care about human rights and care about the actualization of protecting critical human rights and the rights of minorities each and every day in our province. That's what this bill does.

I'm very pleased that the Minister of Justice worked very hard to ensure that this bill came forward as soon as we could bring it forward. I want to thank her for that. Of course, I want to thank the many members of caucus who've worked so hard as well to advocate for this bill and who have spoken in favour of it and again thank my colleagues across the way for their support of this bill. I think it matters a great deal to, as I say, all Albertans who care about protecting the rights of minorities, particularly those Albertans who find themselves in positions where they suffer discrimination as a result of their gender identity and gender expression.

I'll finally just end on the fact that it really is so incredibly refreshing to see the differences amongst our young people. If there are people, perhaps not in this House but still across the province, who are nervous or uncomfortable with this, all you need to do is go, frankly, to most schools now and walk down the halls and see that the majority of kids get it now. The reason they do is because we talk about it and we make it real through doing things like including this in the legislation. Certainly, when I talk to my kids, it's just so amazing how far they've come compared to where I was, many, many years ago when I was in school.

So we can make progress as a community. It doesn't just happen with young people; it happens with people changing the way they view things, understanding the importance of protecting minorities, understanding the importance of people being able to be who they are, express who they are, live who they are without fear of repercussions. I'm so pleased that we now will have legislation that ensures that here in Alberta.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Again, it's my great pleasure in standing to support this bill and give credit and congratulations to the Justice minister. This was timely, this was needed, this was very welcome to, I think, most Albertans now, in the 21st century needing to see evidence that we actually will enshrine some of the uniqueness that is now identified as not abnormal, not bizarre, not in any way to be condemned or treated. Even the medical profession, unfortunately, over some decades – it's not been a decade that it's not been considered an anomaly or an illness or a disorder needing treatment.

Fortunately, we have come into a new age in understanding gender issues, gender identification and ambiguity, and the range of issues that have to do with how we identify ourselves. It's been a real education for me, too, going through this, having grown up in the '60s and having seen and experienced a lot of the prejudice in my own family and now having several members of my family who are ambiguous, gay, lesbian, not yet transgendered as far as we know, but it's quite okay.

I've hesitated to bring forward an amendment simply because I did not want to in any way distract from the main focus of this bill, the recognition under the Human Rights Act that gender identity, gender expression have to be singularly spelled out, but I thought it would be good for us to have this discussion around, in this case, aboriginal heritage. I think that although it's not identified specifically, this may be the only chance we get in the next decade to look at the human rights code and ensure that it's very clear that we are protecting aboriginal heritage as a prohibited grounds of discrimination.

I hear, especially in this mental health review, that there are a lot of people that feel the effects of racism and have somehow lost confidence in government to protect their rights. I will pass out the amendment and chat a little bit about it so that we can move along, having said that that is another dimension of the Human Rights Act that I think people sense is there, but it isn't explicit that aboriginal heritage would be a prohibited grounds for discrimination.

I can tell you that almost every First Nations, Métis, or Inuit person that I talk to feels that they are being discriminated against. Whether it's in school, in the workplace, in other venues, there is a sense that aboriginal heritage is somehow a disadvantage for them in the lives that they lead. People tell me they feel discriminated against in the health care system, which is absolutely unacceptable to me as a health care professional.

If it's not explicit, then maybe since this is one of the rare times that we will be opening this act, it's an opportunity for us to show it in a very clear way, as this Premier and this government have tried to do. To ensure that First Nations, Métis, and Inuit are clearly given a high priority by this government, we are going to honour the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous persons. We are going to revisit the whole TRC, Truth and Reconciliation Commission, and ensure that we bring forward some of the recommendations around that to all levels of government, all levels of society, be serious about the reconciliation process, that is so needed if we're going to move our First Nations people to the forefront of healing and reconciliation with our society.

This is an opportunity, I guess, while we have this bill open, to recognize something that may have been an oversight. I think it's assumed in the existing human rights code. It's not explicit, just like transgendered was not explicit. We could, I think, make this a little more explicit, send a message, and let everyone in this society know that this is an important area of consideration and reconsideration for many of us, to think about the way that we treat our First Nations people.

I won't say anymore. I want to hear the debate. We've singled out transgendered because it, too, needed to be highlighted. In my view, aboriginal heritage is just one of a number of areas, and by singling it out, we highlight it, we say it's important, and we register it on the minds of Albertans, that maybe it's something that we haven't taken quite as seriously as we should if we really want to see healing and success in our First Nations community. Any ways that we can find to highlight them and encourage their full participation and feel that we're there to protect those rights in a very explicit way, I think, would be to all of our benefit.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any speakers to amendment A1? The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to this amendment. We are somewhat surprised by its arrival. I think that the intention behind it is absolutely noble. I'm somewhat confused because this particular ground would be subsumed into at least one if not two other grounds which are already listed in the Human Rights Act, so that has confused me somewhat.

I do absolutely think that the hon. member is correct. Indigenous people in this province suffer a great deal of discrimination, and there continues to be, I think, even at this time a substantial sort of disparity in terms of educational attainment and a number of other things.

I guess my question to the hon. member would be why he thinks it's important to include this explicitly given that it's already covered under additional grounds and, in addition, why he thinks we want to move forward with this at this exact moment without consultation. Of course, we had considerable consultation on the amendments we were moving. Those would be my questions for the hon. member.

Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you. Madam Chair, again, I guess it's an oversight that we didn't send this around earlier to give a chance to discuss it. I do not in any way want to detract from the importance of the transgendered identification in this addition.

What I don't see in the Human Rights Act is an explicit statement about aboriginal heritage. By explicitly stating it, I think we would gain not only awareness in our population, confronting a very blatant issue, probably one of the more unfortunate aspects continuing in our society; it would also send a very strong message to First Nations that we honour that, and we are going to champion it, and we are going to make it so that it's not ambiguous in any way by saying that on the basis of ethnicity, which is the way the act currently reads – discrimination on the basis of ethnicity is not specific enough as far as I'm concerned.

For the indigenous people in this province and this country, many of them there is a strong sense that this is not good enough. This is not clear, and in practice it is certainly not something that they have been successful or even chosen to take to the Human Rights Commission. Apparently, given that there have been no cases, that I'm aware of, brought forward to the Human Rights Commission, they don't feel that it's worth while.

I think it's an opportunity to send a much stronger message than we have about our respect and willingness to single out First Nations, who have not seen improvement in the last few decades in terms of the protection of their human rights. I don't think there's anything to be lost by adding this. It just simply makes something more explicit that has not been as explicit as I think it should be.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Well, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has proposed an amendment to the bill, which is in itself an amendment to the Human Rights Act, which is specifically to deal with gender, gender identity, and gender expression, and he's added an additional category; specifically, "aboriginal." Now, there are some concerns, and quite frankly we could have probably dealt with these concerns had we known that this amendment was coming.

First of all, with respect to the word "aboriginal" the government has adopted the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. The preferred word with respect to that policy is "indigenous" as opposed to "aboriginal." That's one point.

Secondly, there's the question of singling out one particular group. The act clearly contains protection on the basis of ancestry and of race. There's, I think, a risk here of starting to add individual groups within that when it's clearly covered.

While we think that the intent of the hon. member is very honourable and we can certainly see the good that he is trying to achieve through this amendment, it is unfortunately catching us by surprise. There are some outstanding issues that would need to be sorted through before we could support this amendment at this time. With appreciation to the hon. member and the greatest of respect for his intentions, unfortunately we're not in a position to support this amendment at this time.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just rise very briefly to echo some of the same sorts of concerns – and I know we might want to circle the calendar – that the Government House Leader just provided to the Assembly. I think that the intent is quite noble, and certainly there is lots that can be done around this issue. But I think that in light of just receiving the amendment and some of the other risks and challenges that it may pose, I would suggest that while I and quite likely many of my hon. colleagues on this side of the House appreciate the intent of the work that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View was intending to deliver, at this time I think it would be better if we revisited this in the future and possibly had a bit more of a fulsome discussion on some of the nuances around challenges that he has specifically identified.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment?

Seeing none, we will call the question.

The Chair: We are back on the bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Connolly: Thank you, Madam Chair. We've spoken a lot about consultation lately in this Chamber, so I would like to ask my colleagues in the Official Opposition a few questions, starting with: who did they consult with about Bill 7? Have they spoken with their constituents or the party executive? Have they spoken with a single trans or gender-diverse person about this bill or, for that matter, ever? Do you they know why this bill is so important for an entire community? Do they know what the concerns of this community are and why they're being told to vote for this bill? Finally, why did the Leader of the Official Opposition vote against an identical bill, Bill C-279, only two years ago, when he was in Ottawa?

The fact that the Leader of the Official Opposition stated only last week that transgender and gender-diverse Albertans should have the right to choose their gender shows a complete lack of understanding of an entire community, that the Official Opposition chooses to now support. Only one member of the Official Opposition has spoken to Bill 7 thus far, and when that member was asked if his support for the bill was echoed by his party and their grassroots, he remained silent. Well, I'm happy to say, Madam Chair, that this whole caucus and the entire Alberta NDP supports the trans and gender-diverse community, and we will continue to fight for their human rights, which are so often dismissed and forgotten. I look forward to my colleagues, hopefully, answering some of these questions, especially the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I might just rise and point out that the bill received significant support from all members on this side of the House, and I look forward to moving the bill forward as expediently as possible.

The Chair: Any further comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just rise very briefly to sort of outline what it is that this bill does. I'm honoured to rise to speak to it today. This bill adds gender identity and gender expression to the list of prohibited grounds for discrimination. For clarity and for the sake of the record, gender identity refers to a person's internal, individual experience of gender, and gender expression refers to the varied ways in which a person expresses their gender through a combination of dress, demeanour, social behaviour, and other factors. Protection from discrimination on the basis of both grounds is relevant for trans and gender-variant people. Their gender identity and expression may differ from the sex that they were assigned at birth.

In summary, Bill 7 amends the list of prohibited grounds as well as the preamble and the educational mandate of the tribunal to expressly include gender identity and expression. There are numerous sections within the act that deal with prohibited grounds.

Madam Chair, we have consulted with members of the trans and gender-variant community. We know that these individuals feel that having their gender identity and gender expression expressly listed in the act will promote awareness and understanding of the issues they face on a daily basis. We believe it will empower them to confront the stereotypes and discrimination that we know still exist today. Madam Chair, no one should have to fear being who they are.

The Alberta Human Rights Commission is supportive of this update. Madam Chair, the government is committed to upholding the rights of all Albertans. We know that this bill makes trans and gender-variant people feel more welcome in this province. We have heard concerns from members of the trans and gender-variant community, and Bill 7 is one way that we're acting to help address those concerns now although we must take more in the future.

Madam Chair, this is a historic step forward, and I would encourage all members to support this bill. Thank you.

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments to the bill?

Dr. Swann: I was just going to ask – and there was someone else who was ready to speak, too – whether we could move to one-minute bells.

The Chair: No. Unfortunately, the way the standing orders are written, the first bells always have to be 15 minutes, and then subsequent bells are always one minute automatically. That gives everybody the opportunity to know that the members have been called in.

Hon. member, go ahead.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. I appreciate this opportunity to speak to something which is so significant and very important and allows us all to take one of those profound and significant steps forward in our world, where we take the ideas that we've been building for literally hundreds of years under the Magna Carta and move them forward. I'm delighted to be here to speak to Bill 7, the Alberta Human Rights Amendment Act, 2015.

I was happy to hear Premier Notley refer to the Vriend decision and how that was a transformative moment. I have a personal relationship with that decision as I shared space in a co-op house with Mr. Vriend just at the time of the decision. Having met him and admired his determination to stand up and to be counted, I'm happy to hear that his work is being acknowledged yet again these many years later.

I wish to move on and speak about the issue of providing rights for transgendered individuals in the community because this issue has touched my own life in a variety of ways. As a therapist working with people who have experienced a variety of forms of trauma, I did encounter a number of people who were in the process of discovering their own identity and making courageous decisions to move forward, and I supported them as they underwent various forms of transition, including surgery.

As well, I had the opportunity to support students at the university who were undergoing the same kinds of transitions. Actually, I was privileged to witness that moment when a student makes a decision to, for the very first time, declare who they are to a whole class of 30 people and to watch that class receive that statement with openness and warmth in a way that would not have been seen many years ago and to assist that student to process their emotional work with the class as they made their decisions and changes and moved on. Now, I have run into that student in the community and have seen how their life has been so fulfilled by following up on that courageous decision and how all of the grief that they experienced at one point in their life, including having their life threatened by their own parent, was now put aside, and they were moving on in just a beautiful way to contribute to the community, fulfilling themselves and fulfilling beautiful roles in the province of Alberta.

Thirdly, it's touched my life in that I have someone very close to me, someone who I have deep love for, who is just now beginning this process, and it's just great to feel like this is happening in a new era, in a new place, a new time, when we can embrace this moment and celebrate it and go through this journey, just like we go through so many other journeys with the people in our lives.

Having had this touch my life in so many different ways, I can tell you that it is both joyfully and with some sadness that I stand today because I know, from my experience with all of these people, that they have had to go through so much unnecessarily up to this point. They've had their lives threatened. They've had their families reject them. They have become addicted to various substances or even to self-abuse. I'm just thrilled that we're part of the message to these people that none of that is necessary anymore and that we're moving on, away from all of those terrible statistics that we heard last week about people who have experienced this: the fact that the average income of people, individuals in the trans community, is below the poverty line, approximately $15,000 a year; the fact that about 77 per cent of these individuals have considered suicide and 43 per cent of them actually have tried to commit suicide; and that 20 per cent of them have experienced physical and sexual assault just for being who they are. They're terrible statistics, and I know they're only numbers, but I can assure you, having been present in heart-wrenching therapeutic sessions and conversations with people closer to me, that those are not just statistics; they are traumatically disgusting and awful numbers.

Recently I had the opportunity to attend the Transgender Day of Remembrance here in Edmonton and was deeply saddened to learn that they were going to read out 270 names of people who had been killed largely as a consequence of the transgender reality, so much so that I didn't stay till the end. With some shame I say that, but it was an unbearable horror, like listening to a listing of names from Auschwitz or one of the other tragedies that we have experienced in our history. While I have that sadness, I also have the joy: here we are. As Premier Notley said: we're having a very different discussion about this now. We are moving forward, and we're embracing all of those people from gender and sexual and romantic minorities.

I'd like to pause for a moment and say thank you to the groups that have been working on this issue relentlessly for decades. There are many I can point out, but I've had some involvement particularly with the Pride Centre of Edmonton, so I just want to take this moment to do a quick shout-out to the Pride Centre and tell you that while they have done this profound work, they are continuing to struggle financially. I'd like to take this moment to encourage everyone who listens to consider donations to the Pride Centre, support to the Pride Centre, whether it be the Edmonton one or the similar centres in Calgary or outside of the major cities.

This is really a profound change for all of us. One of the things I learned, many years ago, is that when we make a significant and important change for one group of people, it really isn't just about that one group of people. It's really about all of us and how it expands our lives and our world and how each of us then lives a different form of life than we would have if we'd allowed one of our brothers or sisters to live a diminished life.

I'm reminded of a man named Pierre Garipey, who worked with the CPA. He was injured during the Second World War, a spinal injury, and was in a wheelchair from that time, came to Edmonton, where he married, adopted and raised beautiful children, and helped to raise a grandchild who I now call my son. He was a wonderful man, and I'm reminded of him because he is the fellow, amongst many, who came to the city of Edmonton and asked the city of Edmonton: would you please put curb cuts on all the corners so I can get my wheelchair up and down? At the time he was admonished for wanting to waste public monies and do terrible things and cause nothing but grief and slow down the process of construction.

Nowadays, how many of you have stopped at a street corner and thought, "That's a waste of money"? None of you, I'm sure. What you have done, though, is that you've used those cuts in spite of the fact they were built for one community, people in wheelchairs. Now they're used by everyone with a stroller, everyone wheeling their bicycle along, everyone who has difficulty stepping up onto a curb. As we expand the rights and recognize the reality of some people, we expand our own understanding of who we are as human beings, and it is a good thing for all of us.

I'd just like to finish by thanking everyone in this House who has offered support, including the Official Opposition, who has provided some unanimous support for Bill 7. I want to thank you for the respect you're showing for gender diversity as an expression of human diversity. I want to also thank the Wildrose for their support of the notion of gender diversity and gender fluidity, that they exist and that they need to be recognized and that they need to be supported. I would like to thank the Wildrose for their support of the right of children and youth to be affirmed as the gender that they understand themselves to be rather than the one that they were assigned at birth.

Thank you for the support for all of these ideas and notions and to everyone else in the House as well. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, just a reminder that we do not use proper names in the House.

Mr. Feehan: I'm sorry?

The Chair: We don't use proper names in the House.

Mr. Feehan: Oh, I am sorry.

The Chair: Just a reminder.

Mr. Feehan: Yes. I apologize. You may withdraw that.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is my pleasure to stand today briefly and speak in support of Bill 7. I just want to share a bit of a different perspective than perhaps some have been sharing. I grew up in a family where trans rights would not have been defended, and I grew up where it was not okay to pass judgment on most things. However, it was okay, seemingly, to pass judgment on those of other races, religions, women, and, sadly, the LGBTQ community. Thankfully, I did not take that with me as I grew up, and I've come to really appreciate the saying that you rise above your raising sometimes. I was really glad to be able to rise above my raising.

I stand proudly in this House to help defend trans rights, to do my small part in being able to help with that cause. I know that some are more ready than others in their journey towards the acceptance of others and, lots of us, towards self-acceptance. I know that this will be one more step for all of us down this road together, but I know that it is one meaningful step that we can take as a province.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other comments, questions, or amendments to the bill?

[The remaining clauses of Bill 7 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Madam Chair, I'll move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: bills Pr. 2, Pr. 3, Pr. 4, Pr. 6, Pr. 7, Bill 7. The committee reports the following bills with some amendments: bills Pr. 1, Pr. 5. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Alberta Human Rights Amendment Act, 2015

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and move third reading of Bill 7, the Alberta Human Rights Amendment Act, 2015, which would add gender identity and gender expression to the list of prohibited grounds of discrimination in the Alberta Human Rights Act. I would like to thank the hon. members for their unanimous support of this bill. It was clear to me, while listening to the sincere and positive comments of support from all parties, that our province's shared sense of justice and inclusiveness is reflected in these amendments. I would also like to thank the hon. members who shared with the Assembly their very moving personal experiences.

Madam Speaker, no one should ever be denied basic services or be singled out simply for being true to themselves. By including gender identity and gender expression in the Alberta Human Rights Act, we would be doing more than clarifying an essential piece of legislation. This amendment would empower trans and gender-variant Albertans to confront discrimination that we know continues to exist within our society. It would reinforce the promise of the Alberta Human Rights Act, that everyone who calls this great province home is ensured fair treatment and equal rights regardless of who they are.

Madam Speaker, I commend the Assembly for its support. This is an important step in terms of standing up for Albertans. This bill is an opportunity to send a clear and powerful message that no one should be afraid to walk down the street or go to school, that no one should worry about being fired or refused medical treatment simply because they express who they are. Most importantly, it's an opportunity to say to our family members, friends, colleagues, and neighbours: love who you are, and know that you are loved because of who you are.

Madam Speaker, in the name of acceptance, equality, and diversity I ask all hon. members for their support in moving Bill 7 through third reading. Going forward, we know there needs to be more done to support trans and gender-variant people, specifically in regard to changing perceptions and attitudes, raising public awareness, and sweeping aside harmful stereotypes. Today we take a big step forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers to the bill in third reading? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just very, very briefly, it is remarkable how far this Assembly has come in what seems like a short period of time, that we're all here on the same side. It all seems relatively easy to be where we are here today, but this day is hard won, especially by those who join us here in the gallery today and so many others. I think it's very important that we acknowledge that. I just wanted to rise here at third reading and acknowledge the tremendous respect I have for the work that you have done and the work that so many others have done to blaze this path and acknowledge the work that remains. There is still work to do.

I think, most notably, we've seen the steps that the Minister of Education has had to take, and I encourage him to continue down that path. Should the imposition of policies on certain school boards to recognize gender expression and gender identity be required, I certainly encourage the Minister of Education to do so. I think that would be very much in keeping and consistent with what we've heard tonight.

With that, I will end my comments and thank the House again for its unanimous approval of this very important bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I will keep my remarks brief. Well, it's getting late, and I'm only getting started. I believe we have a very long evening, potentially, ahead of us tonight, so I'm not going to speak long to this. I'll save most of my comments for the rigorous debate we can expect this evening.

I wanted to add my voice to all members of this House that this is the kind of thing that we can work together on, the kind of thing we should not attempt to politicize. It's the kind of thing that Albertans want us to do regardless of our party stripes. I know I've met independent members and members of the government side, Progressive Conservatives at the Strathmore Rocky Mountain international rodeo, great events that bring people together. [some applause] Oh, that was unique applause. It's always interesting when I get applauded by the government members.

I'll keep my remarks on this brief, but I wanted to add my voice to something that I'm so proud to see all members of the House support and that I believe we're going to pass unanimously tonight. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Justice to close debate.

Ms Ganley: Thank you again, Madam Speaker. I will simply close by saying that I think this is a fantastic step forward for all Albertans. I'm thrilled to have unanimous support in the House on this bill, and I think that we have made Alberta a more welcoming place for everyone who lives here. I'm just thrilled.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 7 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'll call the committee to order. Just before we start, I need to clarify this 15-minute division bell thing for the members. The first one always has to be 15 minutes, but the subsequent ones are one minute only with respect to the bill that is under consideration. If we move on to a new bill, it goes back to, again, the 15 minutes, one minute. If we want to do a motion to shorten the bells after the first 15-minute bell for the rest of the evening, we can do so. Does that make sense?

Mr. Mason: Madam Chair, I'm just curious. It's my understanding that an exception to the standing orders can always be made with unanimous consent. Is that not the case here?

The Chair: Not in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Mason: Oh, okay. I didn't know that.

Bill 4

An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act

The Chair: Are there any further amendments, questions, or comments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, that's my cue, Madam Chair. I'm thrilled to continue our fulsome debate on Bill 4, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. This is an act that replaces the Fiscal Management Act, the Fiscal Management Act having replaced the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act. We've put forward so far a series of amendments: five amendments from the Official Opposition, one amendment from the fifth party, and one amendment from the third party.

Our goal in these amendments has been to put forward constructive improvements to the legislation. Our goal has been, as I put it in the opening part of this debate between the leader of the third party and myself, to make the legislation less bad. We've spoken about the broad strokes of this legislation, that I believe it is fiscally irresponsible . . .

Mr. Cooper: Totally irresponsible.

Mr. Fildebrandt: . . . totally fiscally irresponsible, that it is reckless, that it is asking the members of the Legislature for a blank cheque, that it is omnibus.

It touches on the budgetary framework of the government, its very structure around borrowing, financing, deficit rules, debt rules. It also includes in it various tax measures, as the title enthusiastically points out: measures to raise insurance taxes – I'm not sure why we would want to be doing that to begin with – measures to raise tobacco taxes, perhaps a little less controversial; measures to raise beer taxes, that is a bit more controversial with some members, I'd imagine; measures to raise locomotive taxes. It's a very far-reaching piece of legislation that no self-respecting fiscal conservative or even mildly fiscally responsible person could ever hope to vote for. It's a piece of legislation that we as legislators have a responsibility to examine in-depth, carefully, line by line.

I remember being in the technical briefing for Bill 4, approaching a month ago, a few weeks ago at least, with the Department of Finance's bureaucrats, who sat down the Official Opposition, the third party, and the fifth party and ran through the legislation. I recall there being a few small improvements, particularly in the area of tightening up the language around quarterly reporting, language that had been significantly watered down when the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act were repealed. The repeal of those two acts is a day that will live in infamy for many a fiscal conservative in Alberta because it really put us on the wrong track.

The bill positively firms up some of the language around quarterly reporting but then goes in entirely the wrong direction. So we've begun to put forward a series of amendments to try to make the legislation less worse.

An Hon. Member: Thank God for us.

Mr. Fildebrandt: We're just here to help. We're here to help all night long.

We put forward an amendment that would tighten up the rules around the use of the contingency account, once named the sustainability fund. I suppose it became embarrassing for the government to refer to something as a sustainability fund when it was nearly out of money, so it had been renamed. Our goal had been to tighten up the language and the rules around the use of the contingency account so that the contingency account could be used for what it was originally intended to be used for; that is, covering off short-term cyclical deficits, where there would be an emergency or there would be a significant economic disruption. In those cases it would be unfortunate but sometimes necessary to run a limited and short-term deficit.

The sustainability fund had grown to such a level, $17 billion at one point, and the level of the sustainability fund allowed the government, beginning in 2008, to run deficits, perhaps reasonably at first, but those deficits never seemed to stop. It went to one year, two years, four, six. We've now completed eight years of deficits in the province, at least deficits as we once defined them here, that we have been spending more money than we've been bringing in, that our net financial assets have been on the decline for some time. We wanted to tighten up the rules around the contingency account so that use of the contingency account would be limited to short-term cyclical deficits, not long-term structural deficits, as we now find ourselves in. Unfortunately, the government did not see fit to support the amendment.

We tried to bring some sensibility to the debt ceiling that's been proposed. Once upon a time Alberta was debt free. That was something for every single Albertan to be proud of. It was something that every single Albertan could be justifiably proud of when they talked to someone from Quebec or Ontario or British Columbia. Everybody across the country remembers the front page of the Herald and Postmedia outlets from coast to coast with Ralph Klein's beaming smile, holding a paid-in-full sign over his head. We were justifiably proud. It had been hard work to get there. It required sacrifice. It required toughness. It required grit. It required political courage. It required a government willing to say no. It required a government willing to clean up the mistakes of the past and not compound them further. I believe that's what we're seeing today.

Sure, there's plenty of blame to go around for the previous government. I've talked about it for years. I've made a living out of it. In some ways I'm still making a living off it, but I'm trying to limit that. There's plenty of blame to go around, and I'm sure there'll be a time to talk about that, but I think that rather than focus only on the sins of the past, we need to look at how we fix the future.

To say that the last government took on lots of debt would be accurate, but it would be irresponsible to say that we should just keep on doing so because, hey, that's what we were already doing. How bad can we be?

When this government took office, the sustainability fund was about to run out. The debt, the exact debt on the debt clock, stood at $14 billion and was projected to continue running up. The previous government had projected deficits, as defined by net change in financial assets, of $6 billion to $7 billion, and it was a bad spot to be left in, but it is our job to fix it moving forward, not to merely shrug our shoulders at how the past had been managed and say: well, that's not our fault, and we're going to continue doing what we're doing; in fact, we'll accelerate how fast we're going.

Well, once upon a time we had been debt free, and the province had legally banned debt. The province had made reasonable changes for financing of infrastructure through P3s and very limited borrowing for assets like toll roads that earned a cash return, smart business investments. Unfortunately, it didn't stay there for all that long. The borrowing of the province began to spin out of control. It began to go off the rails. Our debt laws in the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act were gradually loosened and loosened and loosened until eventually a Premier said that debt was not regrettable but that it was hope, and so much hope we now have. We're drowning in hope. We have to check the debt clock. I print it off about every week or so. I come into the office. I go to debtclock.ca, and I look at the screen. It makes me very, very sad. I click Print Screen, and it comes off, and I tape it to the wall right behind my chair, and it reminds me what we're doing, what we're fighting for every week: to stop that bloody clock, to make it go away.

I remember being in Medicine Hat – yes, you can plug Medicine Hat – in the summer of I think 2014, where I stood beside then two Wildrose members from Medicine Hat as they signed pledges. We called it the balanced budget and debt-free Alberta pledge. The Member for Medicine Hat and the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat put their signatures to that pledge standing in front of the debt clock underneath a giant teepee.

An Hon. Member: It was a nice teepee.

Mr. Fildebrandt: It was a nice teepee, I agree.

It was a nice photo op, but, you know, perhaps one of the people who signed the pledge thought it was just a photo op. Another one took it very seriously, and he's standing right beside me today. I'm very proud to have him here. He's a guy who stood beside his principles and has been fighting for fiscal conservatism through the darkest days of the conservative movement in Alberta, when there were only a small handful of members who would stand up in this House and fight against reckless tax increases, who would fight against continually taking on debt, who would fight to live by the pledge that they had signed. When they had inked their signatures on that pledge, they were willing to stand up and fight for it. Because they were willing to fight for it through that dark period, we're able to be here today in greater numbers than ever, fighting for it.

To that, we put forward an amendment to lower the proposed new debt ceiling from the 15 per cent that the Minister of Finance has proposed in this bill down to a still very high but, I believe, much more reasonable 7 per cent. That would have been a $25 billion, roughly, debt ceiling. The government in its wisdom and spirit of co-operation decided that that amendment would just not do, that $25 billion of debt would not be enough but that they would have to run up $50 billion in debt. You know, every time I say "$50 billion," I feel I just need to put my pinky to my mouth and say: $50 billion; $50 billion of debt. I just can't get tired of doing that. It is truly something Dr. Evil would do, to take on $50 billion of debt and make his poor kid pay for it. But I'm here to tell you that the international caucus of mystery is here to fight against Dr. Evil. I think that's Scotty in the back who's going to pay for it.

Mr. Cooper: Do we have the power?

Mr. Fildebrandt: We certainly have the power to fight against raising the debt ceiling, and we're going to fight against it all night long if we have to. Unfortunately, the government has not managed to see things the way that the fiscal conservatives on this side do, so I'll take this opportunity to do you all a favour and present another amendment to make this bill less bad. I love my job, Madam Chair. I love making bills less bad. One day I'd like to just write a good one from scratch, but we'll have to wait three and a half years for that.

With that, I will hand this out.

The Chair: This will be amendment A8.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll speak to this in some more detail as the evening goes on. In short, to keep my remarks brief – it is getting on, but it'll probably get later – this is to ensure accountability in this year's quarterly update. It was discussed earlier that improvements have been made in some of the quarterly reporting aspects here. I like to give credit where credit is due. It's probably a habit that I'm going to have to work myself out of in politics eventually, but I want to give credit to the government where credit is due, that they are a few minor tinkering in quarterly reporting, but we seem to have missed a quarterly report this year. That's against the law. I generally don't think that politicians should be allowed to break the laws that they make, and that is why, as I've got five seconds left, I want to put forward an amendment that corrects that error.

The Chair: Before I recognize someone to speak to amendment A8, can we just have unanimous consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

Introduction of Guests

The Chair: Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to rise and introduce to you and through you some members from the Livingstone-Macleod riding. Their names are Nicole Monkman, Laci Pighin, Allen Topp, Derek Ully, Kyle Kohut, Eric Kinserdhal, Vern Habraken, Freeman Herron, and Wade Nelson. They're here as part of the group of industries against Bill 6. They're here to support the Wildrose along with their PC colleagues to fight for hard-working farmers and ranchers. They have travelled here from a long distance, and we'd like you to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

Bill 4

An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act (continued)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on amendment A8.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to the amendment. I know that it might come as a bit of a surprise to the House, but I'll be speaking in support of the amendment. One of the significant challenges with this bill is the continual eroding of accountability of the government to the people of Alberta, and we've seen a number of things happen with respect to this eroding of the trust of Albertans in a number of pieces of legislation. I hope that later we'll have the chance to talk about some of the concerns around Bill 6 that speak specifically to that trust of the government by Albertans being eroded and this real lack of accountability. This real lack of transparency, a real lack of openness: that's exactly what we see in Bill 4 as well. We see the government taking all sorts of steps to be less accountable, to increase debt, to change legislation around the borrowing of operational spending, and this headlong rush to $50 billion in debt.

So we have an opportunity here – and I've said this before in the House, but I think it bears repeating because it's so critically important to what we do here – and that is that we have to not only think about today, but we have to think of tomorrow. In every single piece of legislation this is exactly what we should be considering, which is not just the ramifications of today but the ramifications of tomorrow. We've seen this government with a lack of reporting around the quarterly updates, and the Finance minister rose just a few days ago in the House saying: well, Bill 4 changes the law; I don't have to provide a quarterly update.

Madam Chair, the challenge is that the law hasn't changed yet, so we're in a situation where Albertans and the Alberta public should have a much better idea of our fiscal picture. They were entitled to an update, and the law that's still in place today speaks specifically to a requirement to provide updates. These updates are critical to the openness and transparency of the government, and right now we don't have it.

I can tell you that in conversations that I've had with people in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, they're disappointed. They're disappointed in a number of things, in the lack of consultation around, I mean, obviously, Bill 6. Certainly, some school boards have raised concerns around the lack of consultation. It looks like over the weekend they might have tidied up some of that. They're also concerned with this question of trust and whether or not they can continue to trust this government, that's only seven or eight months old or whatever it is. We didn't see a quarterly update, and we ought to have seen a quarterly update.

One of the things that my hon. colleague from Strathmore-Brooks is intending to do – and I hope that all members of the House, including the Finance minister, will stand in their place and recognize that it is critically important that these quarterly updates take place. They're so important, Madam Chair, that my hon. colleague from Strathmore-Brooks has proposed an amendment that will do exactly that, that will ensure that what happened just a few days ago doesn't happen in the future, that the government won't be able to say: "Oh, don't blame us. We're just in the process of changing a law. Don't worry about the fact that we kind of might have broken the last law, that's in place right now. We're just going to move forward and do our very best to try and get this new law passed quickly, but disregard the old law that's been in place."

Say what you want – and I know that the government likes to blame the third party for all sorts of things – but one thing I can tell you that the third party did consistently and without skipping a beat, even when the numbers were disappointing, even when the numbers weren't perfect, even when the numbers told a story that wasn't great to tell, was that they stood in their place and provided a quarterly update. For that, we should all be thankful because it's not the same transparency and openness that we're getting from this government.

It's my hope that my hon. colleague will expand upon some of the nuances of this amendment because it's a sound, solid amendment that provides a path forward, that will ensure that the government isn't tempted to break another law in the future.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. I won't be supporting this amendment. It's no surprise. I like not surprising people. The reason I won't be supporting this amendment is because of the late timing of the fall budget. I mean, it was unusual. I'll give you that. The budget that was proposed in March did not get passed. The new government had to create a budget, and we created that budget. We were hearing a lot from the other side: when are you going bring the budget? Well, it came out on October 27. It was put in front of this House. There was a lot of pomp and circumstance and ceremony, but the budget did get presented.

The budget was a month and three days before the proposed time for the quarterly updates, the second-quarter updates, the first six months, so because we provided a complete budget on the fiscal situation of this government going forward, we did not believe there needed to be an update before November 30. That's why we wrote this the way we did. We said, "notwithstanding subsection (1)(b)," which is with respect to a three-month update by August 31, a six-month update by November 30, and a nine-month update by February 28. It says, "Notwithstanding subsection (1)(b) [above], the responsible Minister is not required to report on the accuracy of the consolidated fiscal plan for the first 6 months of the 2015-16 fiscal year." Just this year, not every year. Going forward, there will be budget updates at three, six, and nine months: August 31, November 30, and February 28.

So the statements by the opposite side saying, you know, "If you give them this, they're going to take a mile; if you give them this, we need to shut it down," are not accurate. It's written in here that notwithstanding the above, we'll do it all the time for three, six, and nine months, but this year only, because we provided a full and complete budget, we are not doing a six-month update. It's logical. It makes a lot of sense. We're not asking for the moon. We're just saying that we gave you more information than you could possibly need. That's what we're going to do.

This amendment is not needed. It'll never be needed. It will never be our place in the future to come forward with another change to this with regard to not providing a three-, six-, or nine-month update.

Members of the government side: please refuse this amendment, the next one, the next one, and the next one that comes before you.

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I listened carefully to the Finance minister's comments just now, and that's why I'm rubbing my forehead.

Dr. Starke: Your brain hurts?

Mr. McIver: Yeah. My hair is falling out fast enough.

Madam Chair, I'm sorry, but the explanations just don't hold water, unfortunately. I heard the hon. minister talk about how they provided a full budget. Even that little piece I have to take issue with. There is 4 and a half billion dollars in capital that actually isn't disclosed as to how it's going to be spent. I don't call that a complete budget. I don't call that a reasonable budget. I don't call that any kind of disclosure to the public, that they deserve. You know, if you're going to take a billion dollars from the public, maybe you should kind of tell them where you intend to spend it, and if you take 4 and a half billion, maybe you should really tell them how you're going to spend it. Unfortunately, that's a gaping hole in the budget process that we've seen so far. So the explanation that it's a complete budget doesn't hold water.

I'm going to have to agree with my colleague from the Official Opposition on this one that breaking the law just once: really, Premier? Premier, I'm picking them over you this time. I'm telling you. You know why? Because they're right. I'll tell you why. It's because – you know what? – breaking the law just once isn't good enough. It's like saying, Madam Chair: "If I just do this one bank job, forget about the fact that I broke the law once. I won't break it again. I won't break it again."

Now, I appreciate, to be fair to the Minister of Finance, that I know you're not robbing a bank, okay? But the fact is that you're breaking the law, and the law of this province says that you need to report to the citizens. You haven't followed the law, and making an excuse that it's okay just this time really doesn't do it.

The problem is that I also heard the minister talk about how: well, we just did this budget; it took six months. Well, respectfully, Minister, it didn't need to take six months. We talked to you right after the election, in the first sitting, and we said: Albertans need to know.

In fact, the budget that you brought really was pretty unsatisfying for Albertans. They've been unsatisfied with a whole bunch of things in your budget. They're unsatisfied with the tax increases. They're unsatisfied with you not telling them where you're going to spend the money on the capital. They're surely unsatisfied with promising – talk about a great promise: we're going to put Alberta $47 billion, $50 billion in debt, and then we're going to start paying it back with $1 billion five years from now.

I've said in this House before, standing here, and I'll say it again because it's that important. You're putting Alberta, based on the fact that Alberta spends – well, it's going to be more with your government but historically about $47 billion. So you're going to put Alberta a whole year's wages in debt, and then five years from now you're going to start paying it back with a whole week's wages, $1 billion. Albertans would lose their homes if they handled their mortgages that way. That's why I think they deserve to be reported to on a regular basis, particularly when you're promising such precarious financial policies, such risky and dangerous debt levels.

Again, I'll give the government credit. They say that Albertans love their services. The problem is that the way this government is going, they're putting those services at risk. Not this year, not next year, but four or five years from now then suddenly they become at risk. It's bad enough that you're trying to pay off a year's worth of government revenue with a week's worth of government surplus five years from now, but the fact is that when Alberta loses their triple-A credit rating, which is highly likely to happen on the path we're on, then even that bill is going to start multiplying faster. Everything is going to get more expensive for the government. It's going to be harder to buy things at the right price. Even borrowing money is going to cost more. Then this negative roller coaster that you've got the taxpayers on and you've got this province on is going to speed up in a very negative way.

I think the very least that the taxpayers of this great province should be able to depend upon is a quarterly report, that the law says is required. It's not much to ask for. It's the law. It's a reasonable request. In this particular case this is a very reasonable amendment and one that the government ought to stand up and say: "We'll support it. We'll get the report out to you." It's late. It's against the law, but I'm sure that the citizens of Alberta will be somewhat understanding if the government at least makes an effort to obey their own laws, particularly on the quarterly report, you know, a quarterly report for a government that spends $45 billion, $50 billion a year, depending on what year it is. I think that if spending 12 and a half billion dollars isn't worth a quarterly report, then I really have to wonder how big the number has to be before citizens deserve to hear where their money went.

Madam Chair, I could go on longer, and I know there are a lot of people here that want me to, but I think I've to a large extent expressed what I think is right. I think I've to a large extent expressed what I think a lot of Albertans feel. With that, I will sit down, with the assurance that I will be supporting this amendment when the opportunity comes up.

The Chair: Any others? Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I thank the leader of the third party for his remarks. I find myself in agreement, I think, with the vast majority of what he had to say. This is a breakthrough in our relationship. I believe we had a moment. We felt the moment here where there was a coming together of people in some kind of a common-sense sense of fiscal responsibility here.

The minister has made many excuses that just don't hold water. If I made excuses to my mom like that, I wouldn't get dinner.

Mr. McIver: That's why you're so skinny.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Watch it, Calgary-Hays.

You know, this amendment: its purpose is accountability. The quarterly update, the quarterly fiscal and economic update, was due on November 30. For those keeping time – and I'm sure many are watching the clock – November 30 has passed, and this bill is not law. I'm not a lawyer, but I think that if you've broken the law and if the law you intended to pass to make it legal to break that law has not passed, then you're in violation of the law. It seems a pretty simple point to me, Madam Chair. Perhaps it's not a simple point to the Minister of Finance and President of the Treasury Board, the Premier, and some members on the other side.

I've asked the minister in question period – and Oral Question Period can be a little more exciting than debates going to midnight on individual amendments on specific clauses of bills in Committee of the Whole – a simple question: did he break the law? Well, actually, I asked: why did he break the law? He by implication admitted that he'd broken the law, but the minister has not really fessed up to breaking the law. I'll repeat at the end, but I'm going to ask a question of the minister. Why did he break the law?

Now, he might think that it was reasonable. If he thought it was reasonable to break the law, he can make that argument, but first he should explain why he broke the law and admit if he did break the law. I think it's quite obvious to anyone who has a second-grade reading level here that the minister has in fact broken the law. The quarterly update, as I said, was due on the 30th of November 2015. It's too late for this clause to be abided by as the minister has already contravened the law, a point that I think has been established by most people who are thinking about the issue.

I think that it sets a very, very dangerous precedent – it's a dangerous, dangerous precedent – to have ministers of the Crown, ministers responsible for our government, especially a minister responsible for the budget, passing laws that retroactively say that their previous violations of the law are now legal. You know, in other amendments we've discussed the issue of retroactivity, of changing a law when the government is in violation of the law. It's dangerous. If you get a parking ticket, you can't go to city council and ask them to pass a bylaw two weeks after you got the parking ticket and say, "Give me a pass on this one, Mayor Iveson" or "Do me a solid, Mayor Nenshi; can you pass a bylaw and give me a mulligan on that parking ticket?" Oh, how I wish they could. I wish they could. I've tried. Alas, you can't. But it seems that at this level of government you can. The government is asking for a $50 billion mulligan.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Fildebrandt: It's a $50 billion mulligan.

You have to excuse me. My voice is a bit hoarse from our rigorous discussions into the evening last week.

The government is asking here for a $50 billion mulligan from Albertans. Well, I think that's dangerous. Since the date for this has already passed, however, the section is moot, but it would compel the government, after the bill is passed, to abide by the law. They'll have still broken the law, they'll have still been in contravention of the law, but they'll be compelled to follow it afterwards. It allows me to come to question period day after day and ask the minister to finally present the quarterly update.

I remember that my first quarterly fiscal update for the province here was roughly around the end of August 2012. The Minister of Finance of the day was giving a quarterly update in the press theatre in the basement of this building. He went in and gave a report, a quarterly update. I called it a brochure. It didn't provide a balance sheet. It didn't provide a breakdown of revenues and expenditures. It was really just sort of: everything is fine, folks; move on. That got the minister in a lot of trouble. The Auditor General called him on it. He got in a lot of trouble. But at least the minister gave us a brochure. At least he tried. You know, he may have gotten an F, but at least he did his homework. He turned something in.

The Minister of Finance today didn't even do his homework. He didn't hand anything in. You know what happens to – well, maybe not in Alberta anymore under discovery learning education. Do you know what happens if you don't turn any work in, at least when we were kids? You got a fail. That's what happens when you don't turn your work in although I'm not sure if teachers are allowed to fail kids for not doing the work anymore. Perhaps that attitude has permeated its way into the cabinet.

So that part is moot because the law has already been broken. But it would compel the minister to finally give us something. Like a tolerant teacher, we'll allow him to hand in his homework late. There's no penalty for breaking the law, as we've already discussed. When governments break the Fiscal Responsibility Act, which became the Fiscal Management Act, which is now proposed to become the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, an Orwellian term if there ever was one, there is no penalty for it. There won't be a penalty for the minister if we pass this amendment, however much I think there should be. It will still require the minister to put one in.

If the minister is saying that the budget, which was likely, I think it's fair to say, written more than a day or two before it was tabled on the 27th of October 2015, was written more than a few days before then, all of the second-quarter information in it would be there. If it's all there, then why aren't we doing these quarterly updates only a month after the quarter ends instead of two? It speaks to how ready the data is. It speaks to: if the government has this data one month after it's done, then why not give it to us one month after it's done instead of two? It's a legitimate question: if the Minister of Finance and the government would be open to an amendment to move the dates up a month.

What does all this say about our deficit laws? We understand the circumstances, which the minister was speaking of, when the budget was tabled, but the best way for us to make up for this slight oversight, the $50 billion mulligan, is to simply produce some minimal second-quarter financial and economic update.

An Hon. Member: This is slight?

Mr. Fildebrandt: It's a slight oversight, a $50 billion oversight.

The old law is quite lax, and it is at the discretion of the minister what form that takes. That was part of my problem with the Fiscal Management Act as it currently stands.

It would not take very much work for the government to do this. The Minister of Finance could ask a bureaucrat in his department to produce this report in probably about an hour's work. They have the data, surely. Surely, they know what their second-quarter results were in the economic update, in the fiscal update. The government has the data. It would take a low-level official about half an hour to put this all together, no more than an hour. They don't need to do a fancy press release. They don't need to hold a news conference. They just need to give us the data, give us a second-quarter financial update. It would make those of us on this side who care about the numbers oh-so happy.

Things have changed for the worse since the budget was tabled, and by the time the third-quarter update comes, we'll be about ready to talk about the next budget, however much taxpaying Albertans probably fear it. Things have changed quickly. The price of oil has continued to stay low. It is significantly below the government's projections, $37 today. Did the government project that oil would be $37 in its budget? Did the government project that oil would go down, not up? No.

It seems to me that the government is probably not on track to meet its second-quarter results, that its second-quarter results would not meet their targets. That is exactly why we need our second-quarter update. We need each quarterly update to ensure that the government stays on track. We have quarterly updates because in the 1980s and early 1990s governments would regularly budget one thing and tell Albertans in between budgets that everything was fine and everything was going to be just fine; trust the government. Well, we've been asked by this government to trust them quite a bit lately, haven't we? And I think they've shown quite clearly why they don't deserve that trust. Albertans don't trust them with the finances. Albertans don't trust them with farmers. Albertans don't trust them with the carbon tax.

Things have changed for the worse in our financial picture since the budget was tabled. That budget is now working off old data, data that was flawed to begin with: oil assumptions that were far above most market rates, GDP growth that predicted a superboom, a 15, 16 per cent increase in revenues in the fourth and fifth year of the budget without an iota of explanation about how they would do that.

Albertans deserve an update on their fiscal situation at times like these, in good times and in bad. Governments shouldn't provide quarterly updates only when the times are good and then get a good-news story in the Herald or the Journal on it. They should also provide it when times are bad. In fact, that's when we need it. That's why we have it, because governments in the 1980s would tell people it was fine and then finish the fiscal year having blown their budgets and coming under budget on revenues.

It was not a fiscally responsible thing to do, so Finance minister Jim Dinning put forward the strongest set of financial rules and budgetary framework in the country. He put forward a set of rules that served us well for nearly a decade and a half. Jim Dinning is a Conservative that we can look to for a good example of how we should be conducting ourselves in our budgetary framework, about where we should be getting back to basics.

It is our duty as legislators and representatives of the people to be careful with people's money, to report regularly on how we're using that money. If you have investments in a portfolio and they don't give you your quarterly update as you've agreed to in your contract, you probably want to pull your money out. Well, some businesses are pulling their money out right now.

We'll have to continue this some other time.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thanks to my hon. colleague for presenting this amendment. I'm rising to say that I support this amendment. I'd like to ask the House to support it as well.

I want to compare the promise, the law to have this second quarterly update out, to one that we all had to deal with in May. The last government made a law that we would have fixed election dates every four years. Of course, it turned out that it wasn't quite a law or that the law wasn't written quite fairly or that it just wasn't quite the way it should have been. So because the Lieutenant Governor asked for one, it was okay to have an election.

Now we have a situation where the hon. Minister of Finance is saying: yeah, I know it was the law that I had to do the second update, but we did do a budget even though no one knew when that budget was coming. Many, many Albertans for certainty, clarity, and to get their finances in order would have liked to have had it sooner. "Okay, but we have a reason now where we sort of don't need it," even though many of the hon. members from the opposition have clearly explained how Bill 4 is not law yet, hence why we're here tonight and hence why we're debating these amendments and debating the law itself. To me, it comes squarely down on the Minister of Finance and the government's shoulders for trust. You know, the shock – Albertans told me after the budget that they absolutely couldn't believe that our great province, with high revenues and tons of entrepreneurs and hard-working, educated people, is actually borrowing to pay for the groceries now. An operational deficit: the shock that that has reached.

The other thing equally as much is when my neighbours, friends, community members in Cypress-Medicine Hat and all around Alberta, Madam Chair, look at the job losses, 10 to 30 per cent reductions. The shock and awe of Albertans who told me that this government appeared to look for no efficiencies. "Yeah, we absolutely don't want to cut front-line workers and front-line services either, but, my goodness, we want more value for our hard-earned tax dollars," many, many Albertans have told me. Then to be $47 billion in debt just three years from now . . .

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Barnes: Forty seven billion dollars in debt.

And that is based on oil being at $56 or $53 this year and around $62 next year, I believe, when today it closed at $37. My goodness. Three years from now we'll be running an election, if the fixed election date law is valid, with you guys some side of $60 billion in debt. If that doesn't shake the trust of Albertans to the core, I don't know what will.

So what do you do to earn trust? What do you do to make it so more than 50 per cent of Albertans show up at the polls? What do you do to make it so when we go to coffee shops we don't hear that Albertans aren't able to be involved in their system in their province? You do it by being as open and as transparent as you can, and that means living up to fixed election dates even though there might be a little technicality in the law. That means filing the second quarterly report. Okay; maybe you don't have to. Maybe it's a loophole, but, darn it, there are many, many Albertans that rely on that information, Madam Chair, so they can make capital investment decisions, so they can build jobs, so they can plan their family, plan whether they think they can afford to send their daughter or son to university, and that information was not here.

You know, I'm pleased to see so many Albertans up in the gallery tonight. Government, I think that's a trust issue, too. Albertans everywhere don't trust writing a blank cheque, don't trust a law that's vague, without information. Again, many, many Albertans have given their hard-working lives, many hard-earned tax dollars, fourth, fifth, and sixth generations working to make our province strong. At the very least they deserve an update as to their financial position. They deserve an update to know where they're going to be, going forward, when it comes to being able to afford the tax-and-spend government that we've had since May 5. They need to know that they can afford, you know, that they can live up to their business and their family and their community commitments and their not-for-profit donations rather than a government that gets bigger and bigger and seems to hide where they stand.

In closing, I will support the amendment for openness and transparency, and as often as I get the chance in this House, I will stand up and I will speak on behalf of as much openness, as much information, and as much transparency as possible.

Thank you.

The Chair: Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am very happy to rise and support the amendment tabled by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. It's becoming painfully obvious that we have a minister in this House that has already contravened the law, and now he's trying to retroactively make a special exemption, which is a truly enviable position to be in. I'm reminded that the chairman of the Alberta Securities Commission was late reporting one time, and the Ontario Securities Commission fined him a thousand-dollar penalty for being late in issuing a report. That particular report was only to report that he'd made a $171 profit on a deal. So for a $171 profit and a late report the Ontario Securities Commission, which had rules about reporting on time, fined Chairman Rice of the Alberta Securities Commission $1,000.

Of course, had the chairman been of the same mindset as our Minister of Finance, he would have gone back and said: well, I would like to make an amendment to this existing regulation, and let's make it retroactive so I don't have to pay the thousand-dollar fine for filing this report so late. But, no. He paid his thousand dollars. He fessed up, and he paid his thousand dollars.

Of course, he wasn't the only person that's had that kind of an issue. I'm sure that everyone in this room remembers the collapse of the mortgage-financing industry in the United States and that the rating agency Standard & Poor's changed their rating metrics following that collapse after they did an investigation into why it was that their rating metric wasn't downgrading some of these companies as fast as they should have been downgraded. Well, Standard & Poor's changed their rating metrics to include, quote, such things as timely filing of required reports.

So my point in bringing that to the attention of this House is that if the Minister of Finance believes that the bond-rating agencies are not watching the timely reporting of quarterly reports, he is sadly mistaken. You know, we have already heard that we are on a watch by these rating companies. They are watching Alberta. If this was a corporation traded on the stock exchange, the bond-rating agencies, at least Standard & Poor's, would say: uh-oh, a red flag; they missed filing a quarterly report.

It's not going to go unnoticed. It is an indication, according to their own words, of competence in management. Competence in management. So the corollary of that would be true, that if you're a company that can't manage to get your reports out on time, that's an indication of incompetence, and it reflects on your ultimate rating from that rating agency. That's how important this is. This is not a minor, little thing. It's serious. It is very serious.

Now, something else was an interesting study that was conducted by Glass Lewis, who is an organization that studies market trends when companies do bad things. In one of these reports they studied what happens to publicly traded corporations when they file late. I'll quote this to you:

As for late filers? Companies that let their deadline pass "without filing a management report or auditor opinion on the effectiveness of the internal controls," the study found, saw their share prices drop.

In other words, the stock market itself punishes those companies that file late.

Glass Lewis actually quantified just what the impact was from the market when publicly traded corporations failed to do their reporting on time. They found that the share price dropped an average of 2.13 per cent after just one day late; after seven days, 2.89 per cent; after 30 days, 3.81 per cent; and two months late, a 7 per cent decline in that company's share price. That is a significant amount of money. We're talking, in some cases, billions of dollars with some of the larger corporations. What we see in the marketplace, what we see in the Alberta Securities Commission, the Ontario Securities Commission, the United States securities commission is that there are consequences, adverse consequences for failing to provide necessary quarterly reports. It's not just a little thing.

Though our minister is required by section 11 of the Fiscal Management Act to make public the actual results of the fiscal plan for the first six months of the fiscal year on or before November 30, this Finance minister failed to do so. In order to get around the law, the minister has now included in this act an exemption excusing them from bringing this information in in time for the law. This was in spite of a long-delayed budgeting process, which, I would have to conclude, took so long for no other reason than to help their federal partners avoid suffering any consequences from this Alberta budget.

Then for the minister to stand in this House and say, "Well, I'm sorry it took so long to get this budget out, and then we had to get this report out, too," frankly, just doesn't hold water. It doesn't hold water at all. This government, in my opinion and in the opinion of many other people, purposely delayed bringing this budget out on time, in a timely manner, for no other reason than to skirt the federal election. Now, to blame that as the reason why this report was not filed on time according to our law is simply unacceptable.

Furthermore, the minister told this House that the budget meant that there was no need for a November 30 update. I want to provide the minister a little bit of information, that a budget is a projection of the plans for the future. It's a projection. The quarterly report is the actual. To suggest that having a budget therefore negates the need for a quarterly report indicates a very serious misunderstanding of what a budget is and what the quarterly report provides us.

The minister is claiming that this fulsome budget somehow impedes the reporting of what's been spent and received or that the budget is somehow good enough and that we don't need a quarterly report. It's quite nonsensical, actually, and it causes me to wonder. Is the minister trying to hide something? The reason that it causes me that suspicion is because the very law requiring quarterly updates was brought into this provincial body of law to hold governments accountable for their handling of Albertans' money and to have a quarterly report that all Albertans could look at and say: oh, look at what's actually happening. The budget is one thing; quarterly reports are another.

This action, actually, is an affront to Albertans, and it shows a disrespect for transparency and accountability, a direct contradiction of the name of this thing. With the inclusion of permission for the minister to skip this year's quarterly update, we are now building a new precedent. We've seen this government, you know, take away accountability laws before. We now have a change in the borrowing cap. We now have this government getting rid of a law that would stop the government from borrowing for operations. We see this government time and again actually becoming less transparent and less accountable, and that's not what you promised Albertans during the election.

Now, regardless of external pressures it was really unacceptable for the Finance minister to not table the actual results of the fiscal plan for the first six months of the fiscal year in time for this requirement. At the very least he could have been up front about the reasons why he was not following this law. He knew about this law from the beginning. His staff knew about this law. They've had it in place for a very long time. It's not that it came as a surprise to him, and the fact that he made no mention of the issue and tried to sneak the November date past us all, well, without mentioning it shows that he was not proud of what he was doing. Tabling these figures would have been transparent. Tabling these figures would have demonstrated accountability. Tabling these figures would have demonstrated competence. You owed this information to Albertans. It's their money.

I'll remind this government that disrespect for our laws and our people took down a governing party before you, and this disrespect will do the same to any government. This NDP government already asked Albertans for a blank cheque this summer. To then turn around and break the laws designed to prevent irresponsible politicians from spending beyond our province's means without accountability is disrespectful and, furthermore, shows quite a callous lack of concern for Alberta's taxpayers of today and those even of future generations. The NDP has already committed themselves to a continuation of the funny-money accounting of the previous government. To break this province's fiscal law in addition to these practices is, frankly, a step too far. This is not the kind of precedent that we want to see set in this government's processes.

However, let's grant the minister his main line of defence, that because of the timing of the budget, it is somehow acceptable to skip the update. That issue is now moot. November 30 has come and gone, and the damage, however extensive it is, has been done, and there's no need to clutter up this bill permanently with a reminder of this minister's failure to follow the law. The government put it here with the intention of passing it before the critical date of November 30 but failed. I ask the government to seriously consider whether they really want this testament to their ineptitude sitting on the books, enshrined in law. Laws are supposed to be permanent documents, not filled with little one-offs that excuse the transgressions of the minister of the day.

A government using its powers to make their misdeeds retroactively legal is insulting to the province's fiscal laws, Alberta's taxpayers, and it is also a mockery of democracy. Albertans deserve to see these laws, that promote accountability, respected and upheld. This is the wrong course to be taking our province on. Today it is the actual results of the fiscal plan; there is no telling what law this government will break tomorrow only to retroactively change it. There should be no wondering why Albertans have already lost faith in a government that was elected on a mandate to change the old tide of corruption. Voting down this amendment today is a slap in the face of Albertans that elected you. The voters in our province have been disrespected for too long. Good governance is transparent governance. Good governance is self-disciplined, holding itself accountable to the law. This is about transparency. This budget and our time today should be used toward increasing transparency. Is that not what we all heard on May 5?

Albertans deserve an update on our fiscal situation, especially in these troubled and rapidly changing times. Given the grave state of our economy at the hands of this socialist agenda Albertan mothers and fathers and young adults are being forced to make many very serious and painful decisions, that are going to affect their future. They need to be able to assess the state of the economy and hedge appropriately. So I implore all of you to rectify the Finance minister's very grave mistake by making it clear that there are no circumstances under which it may be permitted to happen again and not to let him compound his failing by enshrining this little episode eternally in law. Let's just delete that clause, that this amendment attempts to do, since as of December 1 it is meaningless.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any others wishing to speak to amendment A8?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

The Chair: Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. I stand today to speak to Bill 4, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. This bill is about enabling the NDP government to implement higher taxes and more debt because this government refuses to reduce its bloated spending practices. No government has ever borrowed its way to a balanced budget, and certainly no government will ever be able to borrow its way to a surplus budget. We need to somehow curtail the money this NDP government is throwing around in this province. Let's get it straight that deficit budgets lead to higher debt, which eventually leads to an unstable economy, something we're already seeing because of this government's and the previous government's spending practices. The costs associated with paying off this debt take away money that could be used to build schools, bridges, hospitals, roads, and the list goes on, Madam Chair. In fact, if we continue down this road for too long, it could have an impact on how many people will be feasibly employed in the future. The unionized workers that the NDP are trying to protect right now will be the same people they will not be able to afford to keep because there won't be enough money.

The members on the other side of the aisle have tried to make Albertans fearful of Wildrose fiscal policies. [interjections] Yes, you tried to do that in the Calgary-Foothills by-election, and we saw that. But the damage that will be caused by this government's fiscal policies is something to be really afraid of, and Albertans are afraid in sitting there listening to this.

If we calculate the amount of money we'll be losing every year that could be used on infrastructure projects like the Calgary cancer hospital, the amount we will lose is eight hospitals every year that we pay $2 billion in interest alone.

Mr. Nixon: How much?

Mr. Panda: Two billion dollars in interest alone.

It's not a good plan to increase the debt limit. The unavoidable effect is that we are throwing away money through interest payments, $2 billion in interest payments. That's a ton of interest, Madam Chair, an amount of money so large that most of us have to really think about what that number means. In this bill we have seen the government raise the debt ceiling at the stroke of a pen. They have shown that it is really not that hard to do. There are not any real consequences for doing it since they turned down some of our amendments that would have instituted real consequences.

Let's break this bill down and be clear about showing what will eventually happen. This bill is about enabling the government to inflict higher taxes on Albertans and to run operational deficits, which for decades have been illegal. You say that you want both businesses and those who are well off to pay just a little bit more, but you have a 266 per cent tax increase on railroad fuel. Is that what you call just a little bit? This is another disappointing move. This government seems to feel that pipelines for getting our oil to market are a low priority, and they're also willing to increase the cost of shipping that product by rail. Businesses may look at other jurisdictions to get their fuel at a lower cost and look for all sorts of other possibilities to reduce their costs. We must create a business-friendly environment by keeping the cost of doing business as low as possible. It just makes sense.

The analogy is almost the same as giving someone irresponsible a credit card and them having the idea that the money borrowed is free money. Their thought, just like this government, is that as long as you max out the credit card while prices are low, you will get more for your money. This government needs to take the time to go and talk to a financial adviser to find out if their concepts are accurate and how long they would be able to keep their house if they ran their personal finances the same way. The tax on cigarettes went up $5 a carton, and on loose tobacco products it went up to 3.75 cents per gram, a product I neither consume or I advocate for, but it will have, I believe, unintended consequences.

In my constituency office in Calgary-Foothills, if I exceed the budget allotted to my office, I personally have to pay back every penny. Why is the government not held to the same principles? I wish there were some sort of penalty they would legislate every time the government exceeded a certain percentage instead of legislating something that in the past had been considered illegal.

An Hon. Member: In three and a half years.

Mr. Panda: Yeah. Help is on its way.

We need consequences in place when they exceed the budget. What protections do we have in place for future generations? Maybe we should legislate that. Unfortunately, the only possible consequence of reckless spending and irresponsible tax increases will be to drive money and jobs right out of Alberta. They will only be able to borrow so much money, and the next generation will be the one responsible to pay it back. I'm afraid that young families, such as of the Member for Calgary-Shaw, will be burdened to pay this debt. I believe that this government's view is short sighted, and it needs to be stopped. You need to reconsider what these changes will do to this province.

Unfortunately, Madam Chair, this bill is going to give this NDP government full permission to spend Alberta into further debt. For this reason I'll be voting against Bill 4. I encourage my colleagues to do the same.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill? Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's that time again, when we're going to try and make the bill a little less bad than it is in its current form. I will introduce this amendment to be distributed.

Thank you.

The Chair: This amendment will be A9.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 4, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, be amended in schedule 2 in section 1 by striking out subsection (27).

Now, I always feel a little strange reading the title of the bill. Any bill that begins with the title "An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures" has probably lost my support right there. I try not to judge a book by its cover or even a piece of legislation by its cover, but in this case I feel pretty safe doing so.

This amendment seeks to repeal the government's inexplicable move to increase the insurance tax rate. It's a nonsensical idea. Increasing a tax on something that is mandatory for Albertans is gouging. If the NDP across like to rail against the idea of a conspiracy, of a cartel working together to price-fix or drive up the cost of a particular product that people need, well, they call that gouging. In this case the government is increasing the cost of something that their own laws make mandatory for Albertans, not just necessary but mandatory, and they're increasing taxes on it. Cigarettes, liquor, carbon: the government can make at least a reasonable argument that they want less of these things, but do they want less insurance? [interjection] Apparently, it's bad.

I get the idea of taxing a social ill – they call them sin taxes – that gasoline is bad so we should tax gasoline, that cigarettes are bad, quite obviously, so we should tax cigarettes.

Mr. Mason: Opposition members.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Taxing opposition members, taxing our time, taxing the government's patience. If we taxed the government's patience, I think we could have gotten out of the deficit by tonight. [interjection] It is perhaps the only tax I will support.

Taxing cigarettes, taxing alcohol, taxing gasoline: I get that these are sin taxes. These are things that government wants to discourage. They're called sin taxes because we're taxing sins. But is insurance not a good thing? Does this, then, constitute a virtue tax? Shouldn't government be encouraging insurance, not discouraging it? Insurance is a social good. It benefits everyone. Why should people be punished for being responsible? Why should they be punished for insuring their home? Why should people be punished for insuring their car or if they've got a boat? Why should they be taxed for life insurance? Why would we want to make it more difficult or more expensive for people to protect their families with life insurance than it already is? Do we not want more of that, not less of it? For some reason this lumps insurance tax in with cigarettes. Well, it is strange that we've gotten to the point where we are increasing taxes on both cigarettes and life insurance at the same time.

With over 60 taxes and fees raised on Albertans, surely we can rescind at least one of them. Madam Premier, do taxpayers a solid. Give them one. With a massive increase in income tax, a 50 per cent increase at the top marginal rate; a 20 per cent increase in corporate income taxes on our businesses; a $3 billion carbon tax on everything; a myriad of small taxes and fees on gasoline, cigarettes, alcohol, and on countless products and activities that Albertans engage in – 60 taxes and fees are being raised – can you do one for them? Can you do them a solid?

Madam Chair, I think this is a pretty reasonable amendment. It will not cost the government a significant sum of money, but it would be perhaps a spiritual breakthrough for the government. I mean, we've had a few moments in this place where we can all get along, where we can come to consensus on a few issues.

Now, we're not likely to vote together on many things tonight. But insurance tax – I saw an interesting eyebrow raised over there, so that probably is a good idea. Well, this is unlikely to have any significant impact on the budget. It's not a huge tax increase. The huge tax increases are elsewhere, in personal income taxes, business income taxes, and carbon taxes. This is not going to significantly affect the budget, but as I said, it would signify a spiritual breakthrough that they could actually cut a tax or rescind a tax, especially one that is on something that we should be encouraging, insurance. We should want more insurance, not less.

Mr. McIver: WCB.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I suppose, while we're on the topic, the government is extending mandatory workplace insurance and WCB. They are trying to make it mandatory on swaths of people, many of which do not want it. But they're going to tax it. Interesting question: would WCB be taxed under this? A new definition of government recycling.

I suppose we can give the minister a few moments to ponder this one and think about it. I think he already said, roughly half an hour ago, that there won't be anything good coming even though he hasn't seen it. But I ask him to really think on this one. This one makes sense. It makes sense for all Albertans. Let's try to get along on this one and pass amendment A9.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any others wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you. I would certainly like to speak to this amendment. Man, there are so many similarities between the PC budget and this budget: taxes, taxes, taxes. This one has, you know, unfortunately, quite a few extra taxes. Cigarettes and liquor: I think it's sort of a general understanding; it's the first tax that goes up. It's the one that nobody argues too much about. It's unfortunate, but it happens, and we expect that.

Carbon tax is shocking because people aren't going to drive less. They're really not. They're going to choose to not do other things like eat out, go to the movies, you know, spend some quality time at Calaway park with their children. It's just absolutely unbelievable. There are a lot of things that are going to change for a lot of people.

But insurance? The people of Airdrie, specifically, are not going to take well to this one. We just had an epic hailstorm come through, and everybody's rates just went up. Now they're going up again. I'm not quite sure when this stops. Insurance is something that is supposed to protect the people, protect their property, and it's hurting. It's absolutely hurting. This is surely one amendment that we can all agree on that would make just a small, little pea in the pot. It would make a big difference for so many families, so many children. I'm really hoping we can work together on this one.

The hail in Airdrie was just absolutely devastating. What would we have done without insurance? I mean, surely there are some. Still, we're paying our deposits on the insurance, and then the rates go up, and now thanks to this government they're going to go up one more time. When does it end? We can't even imagine what's going to happen in the springtime. This is just absolutely shocking.

You know, fortunately for those in this room, you just got fancy pay raises. You're probably not used to spending that kind of money yet, which is a great thing for your family budget because you might be able to make ends meet. But there are a lot of people out there that are suffering, and this government doesn't seem to care.

I'm really not quite sure why this government is choosing to punish people. They're punishing Albertans. You're borrowing money and making strange decisions on how to spend it, and that's only the money we know about. Please. I plead with you. On behalf of the people of Airdrie and Albertans: please. When there are 60 other taxes and fees that you've implemented, we, please, ask for this one little take for the people of Alberta. We will surely appreciate it.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I am rising to speak against this particular amendment. I know it shocks the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. We've heard a lot of talk in the debate for Bill 4 and for the various amendments that it is important to take into consideration the people of our particular ridings. We have often heard many of the members opposite talk about how they need hospitals in their ridings: hospitals in Airdrie, hospitals in Wainwright, Lac La Biche, Fort McMurray. We've also heard from other members opposite that their particular ridings have a need for more staff at various facilities that are publicly funded.

Cortes-Vargas: Maintenance.

Mr. Malkinson: Maintenance as well.

All of those things, of course, are good. You know, good on the various members for advocating for those needs in their particular ridings.

Also, the members opposite have talked at length throughout this debate about the importance of having zero debt, the importance of having zero structural debt even in times of a downturn.

Now, unfortunately, for me, that math doesn't add up. You know, my question would be that if you are advocating for things, for new hospitals in various areas, that, of course, would cost large sums of money, I would say billions of dollars. If you want to cut back by not going into debt some say for capital spending, some say for structural deficit when we have a massive downturn, that we have right now – the price of oil, for example, not that long ago was over a hundred dollars a barrel. Now it is under $40 a barrel. That leaves a massive hole in our budget for the province because of the downturn.

Now, if we want to have those hospitals and extra services and we don't want to be in debt in the time of a downturn, if we do not want to act as a shock absorber, which I believe Albertans have wanted us to do, then I would ask the members opposite: what do they want to give up? You cannot have new hospitals and new services and not go into debt in a downturn. I just don't see how that would work.

Now, this particular amendment, if passed, would take away a bit of stable revenue – granted, a small amount but a bit of stable revenue – to help in a time of a downturn, a downturn that is definitely affected by the price of oil. It would also keep our premiums and tax rates comparable to other provinces. This rate was also mentioned in the March version of the budget.

I think it is a reasonable amount in order to have us act as a shock absorber, to provide the services that Albertans want, and of course I'd like to point out to the members that we recently passed a budget that has a path to balance.

Dr. Turner: A very clear path.

Mr. Malkinson: I highlight that the member beside me said: a very clear path to balance.

For those reasons, I will not be voting in favour of this amendment. Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. This is an interesting amendment. It talks about taking away the increased taxes on insurance. I'm a little surprised, actually, that this particular government would put this in place, because you know whom it's going to hurt worse than anybody: the lowest income people in Alberta, the people that have the hardest time paying the monthly bills. Of course, these are exactly the people that this current government says that they care about, and they're the ones that are going to pay the price for this new tax. Now, people of high income can afford it, I suppose, although every time they afford it, they will spend less money in the economy, and a lot of that money will be spent in places that provide jobs for lower income Albertans.

But the real place that I think it'll hurt lower income Albertans is that there are going to be some of them that will probably have to choose not to continue their insurance. Nobody likes it when disasters happen: fires, floods, all those types of things. In terms of fires, we have seen instances where multifamily units have burned down, whether it's a high-rise or townhouses or whatever it is.

Sometimes it's homes close to each other, where the fire jumps from one to the other. You know, the saddest thing when that happens is that some of the homeowners or apartment owners or renters don't have insurance.

It's not good for anybody, and I'm not trying to make light of this, but the fact is that I always feel bad when I hear, you know, that in a building of six, eight, 10 units, whatever it is, there are four or five them that didn't have renters' insurance or homeowners' insurance. What happens, then, is that they lose some of the biggest investments that they have in their life, some of the possessions that they have. Now, whether it's a little or a lot, the fact is that it's the family's possessions. This is a tax that is going to make it particularly hard, particularly for those low-income Albertans, to make that decision to pay that much more for the insurance.

It's particularly going to make it hard for Albertans that have lost their jobs due to this government's policies. You might say: what Albertans have lost their jobs, you know, due to this government's policies? Well, it could be one of thousands of people in the coal industry. We know they're under attack. It could be one of tens of thousands of people in the energy industry. We know they're under attack. Soon it could be farmers and ranchers. We're really sure they're under attack. It could be somebody that has a small business that's incorporated, and they're paying more taxes. It could be somebody of middle income that has a business with the additional income taxes put on. Every time you do this, you make somebody make a different decision about what they can afford and what they can't afford. Of course, what you don't hear about when something happens, when a multifamily unit burns down – I'm sorry to say, but it's typically low-income Albertans that are the ones that don't have insurance on their possessions or on their home. So this is this government putting more pressure on the exact people that they're purporting to want to help.

So many times through the taxes in Bill 4 it is the case. Unfortunately, this doesn't seem to be the end of it. You know, there are more things coming up. I mean, we haven't seen all the details yet, but the government has even talked about, with the carbon tax, that they want to give money back to 60 per cent of Albertans. It's just another case where, again, all Albertans will pay more for their energy. With low-income Albertans, that are going to pay more for their energy – and the government is going to artificially inflate the price with the carbon tax. Then they're going to rebate low-income Albertans back to where it was in the first place and then say: we want you to thank us now by voting for us next time because we artificially inflated your energy price, and then we rebated it back almost to where it would be anyway, and then we sent you a cheque for what we hope will be the difference. It will probably be light of the difference, but hopefully that will buy enough gratitude to get their vote next time.

It's really indicative of a pattern here from a government that actually doesn't seem to realize yet – I'm not sure if they ever will – that low taxes are actually better for Albertans. Low taxes are actually better for low-income Albertans. It provides more opportunities, more jobs, more places. It actually provides more incentive for those people with money to invest, who want to invest in Alberta, to create those jobs.

This insurance tax is just one more way in which – all Albertans will pay it, at least the ones that can afford insurance in the first place. But the ones that will find it the most tough to pay are the ones that are closest to the line in making ends meet at the end of the month. You know what? Every family will make a different decision. Some will have less food. Some will have less entertainment. Some will, you know, maybe drive an older car, have older appliances. Some, unfortunately, Madam Chair, will decide that they can't afford the insurance anymore, and that, of course, just puts them at greater risk.

There is the stress of worrying about it day after day as opposed to people that believe they have their affairs in order, that are properly insured and looked after. All of those, of course, worry about fire and other things happening, too, but they'll have the peace of mind of knowing that they have themselves protected. This, of course, will take some Albertans that can least afford it – some of those will likely have to make the decision to forgo their insurance and then lose that peace of mind. Even if they don't have a fire, it's hard on them. It adds stress. It probably takes time off their life because stress will do that. This is just one more pressure that this government is putting on Alberta families, the ones that can afford it the least, adding stress to them. That's why I'm going to support the amendment, because I think the less that you put Albertans under financial pressure artificially, the more opportunities there are and the better their lives will be.

This, unfortunately, is an example of going in the exact opposite direction from what will most benefit Albertans. I'm hoping that the government members will have an appreciation for how hard it is for a lot of Albertans to make ends meet, particularly those that have a fine line between what they bring in in their family income and what has to go out to pay for insurance and rent and food and utilities and car payments and repairs and all those things.

Please don't add more pressure onto them. Please support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I guess some of the concerns I have with Bill 4 but speaking specifically to this amendment are that, you know, when the government has an $8 billion hole that they need to fill, obviously it makes a lot of sense for them to go after a captive tax audience. What's sad about this is going after insurance. Many of the insurances are mandatory. It is the law that they have to have this insurance. With vehicles you have to have a minimum of PL/PD. Members will have to have at least a minimum insurance, and this tax will affect them.

People who are on fixed incomes: I'm concerned about them. It may not be a lot, but everything that this government has brought forward like the carbon tax, which is just another way of saying PST, will add to the costs for fixed-income people, to the point where they have no ability to make up the extra money that it's going to cost them.

I understand the idea about sin taxes, as has been said before, even though I think that again is a cheap shot for people who have addictions and are struggling. They know that it's an easy way to be able to get more money. In fact, a brother of mine who smokes like a chimney always says: "You know what? The first thing the government will do is that it will go after me because they know I have a hard time. I can't quit." I think it's a cheap shot. But this is the worst kind of shot, Madam Chair, because people who are on fixed incomes don't have the ability to go shop anywhere else. They can't say: "You know what? That insurance company hasn't earned my business, so I'll go to a different insurer." They can't do that because this tax will go to every insurance company out there, and they will have to pay this.

All of these costs that this government has added onto senior citizens, fixed-income earners, will add up to the point where they will feel the burden, and they will make them pay in the next election. They say that hindsight is 20/20 vision. Well, I don't need to go three and a half years down the road to tell you that seniors have excellent memories. They have excellent memories, and they will remember this day when they had the opportunity to say: we're not going to tax this group; we're not going to add this tax to people who are fixed-income earners. Yet the idea that we've heard from some of the members opposite is that the government needs this money. If they don't get it, then they can't do the things that they need to do.

Albertans need the money in their own pockets. I'm going to tell you something, and it's very important to realize this. There are three types of purchases: first-party purchases, second-party purchases, and third-party purchases. A first-party purchaser is a person who says: I know exactly what I want to buy, and I know how much money I have to buy it. That person is using their own money, and they're going to consume that product. That's a first-party purchase.

Second-party purchasers may buy something for someone else, but they're going to use their own money. They're concerned about their money, but maybe they're not going to consume it themselves.

A third-party purchase is where someone buys something with someone else's money, and they're not going to personally consume it. All government purchases are third-party purchases. I think the problem is that this government doesn't seem to understand that all government purchases are third-party purchases. This is the reason why as the Official Opposition we need to be vigilant with where the money is going. We need to make sure that the tax dollars are spent effectively and efficiently. We need to make sure that they only take the bare minimum because the people who have the money, the people who have the means, have the ability to be able to make first-party purchases, and it's the most efficient and effective way to be able to spend money. That's why the most successful countries in the world are the ones that keep the most money in individuals' pockets because they know how to spend it and they spend it the best.

This amendment is trying to make a bad budget a little better. It's a small concession to make. This is why I will be voting for it, Madam Chair, and I hope that all members will take this seriously. This isn't just a little bit of money. This is a lot of money for someone who's on a fixed-income.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment?

If not, we will call the question.

The Chair: We're back on the bill. Any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, Madam Chair, I did have two more amendments, but I'm going to make the government a deal. This is your last chance to do something good. This is your last chance to repeal at least one tax, to have a spiritual awakening, as it were. I assure Madam Premier that she has missed many opportunities to make this a better bill tonight, but this is a limited-time offer. As people are watching late night TV right now, if you dial the number below your screen, you can get a tax cut.

I'll distribute this now.

The Chair: This will be amendment A10.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. This is a limited-time offer, if members vote now, to finally vote for less taxes somewhere, that An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act be amended in schedule 2 in section 3(7)(a) by striking out subclauses (iii) and (iv). In short, this is to undo the proposed railroad tax hike, the cost on locomotive fuel. This poses huge problems for market access in Alberta. It hurts the grain growers in my constituency, the barley and canola growers, the beef producers, and oil producers.

I urge all members of the House to support it.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A10? The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. It's my pleasure to speak to this amendment on the railroad fuel tax. Madam Chair, this is probably one of the most harmful elements out of the current bill, largely because it attacks essentially all of Alberta's core industries. Albertans, as we know, are very industrious people. They produce more of almost everything than they can consume themselves. Albertans produce more forest products than Albertans can use. They produce more agricultural products than Albertans can consume. Albertans produce more energy products than Albertans can use. And how do we move these products? Well, one of the main ways is on the railway.

This is essentially an attack on the forestry industry, the coal industry, the agriculture industry. The minister in charge should actually be real nervous about this particular tax. You should be voting for this because this would be one of the things you could do to indicate that you're actually in support of the industry that you get paid to support.

On top of that, this is something that will make virtually every consumer product in Alberta more expensive because anything that comes from anywhere else, or at least a good part of those things, travels at least some part of the way on a train. When they come from overseas and land in a port in Vancouver or Montreal, very, very often they get closer to here on a railroad. Really, again, this is a tax that is going to hurt the low-income Albertans by making the consumer goods that they in many cases can barely afford more expensive.

It will make the coal industry less competitive by making it more expensive to ship their products. I know that there are probably people on the government side that don't like the coal industry, but the fact is that some of that coal goes over to Japan to make the Priuses that you're so fond of. In fact, some of it actually produces your electricity. I appreciate that the government doesn't like that, but the fact is that the coal part of the load is the most reliable, cost-effective part of the electricity supply. It is. I appreciate that some of the older plants aren't as efficient as the newer ones are, but the newest coal plants in particular are reputed to be about as clean as burning natural gases. Why would we make that industry less competitive?

Why would we make the forest industry less competitive? It's a very competitive business. Lord knows, our province and our country have been in trade wars with the U.S. over the lumber trade for years, one appeal to the World Trade Organization after another after another after another. Canada won the vast majority of those if not all of them. So you know that it's a competitive business.

What's our government's answer to low energy prices and high unemployment? To make the industries that we have left even less competitive by making it more expensive to get their goods to market. The same goes for the energy products. Now, I appreciate that we've heard the Premier and some of the ministers say that they're in favour of pipelines – maybe they are; maybe they aren't – but I don't think that the evidence has really supported that to date. Certainly, we've heard the Premier say that she's in support of a pipeline to the east but not to the west coast, which is the closer one, not south to the U.S., not to the north. In the absence of pipelines, how is most of the energy that leaves Alberta getting shipped? On rail. So what's the answer to saving jobs? To make the energy that we're producing less competitive by making it more expensive to get to market. Well, Albertans actually know better.

I appreciate that the government has big spending plans and that they're trying to raise money. But at the end of the day, I think that it's going to be obvious that if you make Alberta less competitive, there will be fewer goods leaving, fewer jobs, fewer people with those jobs paying taxes, fewer corporations providing those jobs paying taxes, or they will be there and they'll be less profitable, which means there are fewer taxes to pay. Any way you look at it, this is a tax that directly negatively affects the core economy of our province. Why would you support that?

Certainly, the agriculture minister should be voting for this amendment because I've heard him say: I'm the champion of agriculture. I've also heard him say in this House: I'm the champion of forestry. Well, here's a place, champ. Now you can be the champion. This is the opportunity.

Energy minister, I know that you want to support the energy industry. This is an opportunity for you to stop them from being less competitive. This is an opportunity for you to stand up for the energy industry and say, "As the minister I am your advocate; I'm your champion; I'm the one you can depend upon to make it easier for you to make a living and provide jobs for Albertans and pay taxes," which, of course, pay for schools and roads and hospitals and social services, and you can say: "Today I stood up for the energy industry. I voted for this because I know that it's going to hurt jobs in the energy industry."

What a great opportunity. What a tremendous opportunity for the ministers who are advocates for those industries to stand up in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and do their jobs and say: "Today I was that champion for the industry I'm responsible for. Today I kept the promise to the forest industry and the energy industry and the agriculture industry. Today I was what I promised to be. Today I stood up for you. Today I stopped you from being less competitive. Today I protected the jobs that Albertans depend upon in the industry. Today I was a good minister."

You know what? I will thank the hon. member that made the amendment. You are providing these ministers with a tremendous opportunity to be able to go out to their industry stakeholders tomorrow to say: "I had your back. I had your back after 11 o'clock last night. I was there in the House doing my job. I saw an opportunity to make the industry that I am responsible for either more competitive or stop it from being less competitive, and I did my job right." Don't let this opportunity go by. I'm not sure when the next time will come.

That's why I will be supporting it, because I care about Alberta jobs. I care about Alberta families that depend upon those jobs. I care about having a place where industry will be competitive, where there will be opportunities for my kids and my grandkids 20 and 30 and 40 years from now. Don't waste this opportunity. I know I'm not going to because at the end of the day – and the Finance minister should probably get his pencil out and think about this, too – this may well cost Alberta more tax dollars for the treasury in the long run than anything close to what it might gain in the short run.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment and enthusiastically so. If I'm going to be here this evening, I'm sure you all wanted to hear from me. So here I am, finally.

There are some very curious tax increases in this bill and in this budget, but this is one of the more curious tax increases because it makes exporting Alberta goods more expensive. As an exporting province and an exporting country surely we should be trying to make our goods less expensive to get to market. You know, one of the rationalizations for increasing the rail fuel tax, I've been told, is to prevent train companies from filling up their train engines in the lowest tax jurisdiction while using infrastructure in other jurisdictions. If that, in fact, is the case, it seems a little odd that we in Alberta would want the train companies to purchase less of our product. It seems a little bit odd. But it seems consistent, perhaps, that when you make rail transportation more expensive, it makes it even that much more difficult to get one of our core products, that being oil sands bitumen, to market in the absence of pipelines.

I sincerely hope the government members on that side are working diligently day and night to ensure that Alberta oil sands and products of all kinds get access to markets east, west, south: all directions. We need safe, reliable, efficient pipelines ... [interjection] We could go north, absolutely. Pick all four. I have no preference. In fact, if I were to express a preference, my preference would be all of the above.

Let's get access for this product that adds a tremendous amount of value to our society, to our economy, to our province, to our country, and to the world. Let's get that to market, and let's do it through pipelines, which we know are safer, which we know are more cost-effective, which we know are less carbon intense than rail travel.

In the meantime and in the interim we need to get it to market somehow, and markets will always find a way. The way they found is rail travel. To make that more expensive now seems at odds with what it is we're trying to achieve in this province or what we ought to be trying to achieve in this province.

The other thing that I think is important to talk about is this government's bringing in a price on carbon. We're adding a price on carbon on top of a fuel tax increase, and costs quickly start to spiral out of control. I've said many times that I think, broadly, the idea of pricing carbon is a good idea so long as it is, in fact, revenue neutral. The definition we've heard from this government of revenue neutrality is a very odd definition indeed given that the dollars are to be recycled back into the economy. My question would be: would this fuel tax be revenue neutral because the dollars would be cycled back into the economy? It seems unlikely, not by any normal definition that I'm familiar with.

So I absolutely and enthusiastically support this amendment and would hope that perhaps we could convince the government also to do the very same. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to this amendment?

Mr. Ceci: Maybe to continue on with the theme, prior to the last speaker, that the previous speaker was on, today I stand up to support the locomotive fuel tax. Back on March 27, 2015, the previous government brought in a gasoline and diesel tax of 4 cents per litre. The previous government brought that in in March, and they didn't include locomotive fuel, but what we found with the absence of locomotive fuel was that the trucking industry became less competitive to railways. So we have decided to do what should have been done in the first place and not favour one industry over another, as the previous government had done, and we brought in a locomotive fuel tax at 4 cents. That starts on November 1, the 5.5 cents per litre of locomotive fuel, but if you look at the fiscal year, the average for locomotive fuel will be 3.15 cents or 3.25 cents for the whole year. It only starts in November, so there's an averaging down for the entire year if you look at it from a fiscal-year basis.

As the hon. member on this side talked about on the previous amendment, which got defeated, that helps our health care, education, and other services because we are able to have more sustainable financial resources to address those needs. We haven't had sustainable financial resources in a very long time, and we have taken the tack that to be a good government, there needs to be a range of revenues and not just a single commodity. So we have brought in this 5.5 cents a litre for locomotive fuel, which puts us in the middle of provinces with regard to this tax. We believe that it is going to assist us to diversify the revenues and be able to afford the things like health care and education, and we are committed to following through.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment?

Seeing none, we'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A10 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the bill. Are there any further comments, questions, or amendments with respect to Bill 4?

If not, we will call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 4 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

11:20

Mr. Mason: Madam Chair, I move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Miranda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 4. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 4

An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to rise today to move third reading of Bill 4, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. I'd like to touch on a few points to recap two important streams of legislative changes covered in this bill.

I'll start with the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. We heard a lot of interesting points raised during Committee of the Whole with respect to the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. Members from the other side focused a lot of their attention on the debt cap, and I certainly appreciate that. We are concerned about Alberta's long-term fiscal health, and we don't want to saddle future Albertans with an excessive debt burden. That is why the government put a debt cap in the bill based on 15 per cent of debt to GDP. Credit-rating agencies see this as a prudent and manageable level of debt consistent with a triple-A credit rating.

A member across the aisle brought forward some interesting suggestions to compel the government to live up to its legislation, and the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake stressed the importance of trust. Budget 2015 shows how we are implementing our commitments over the next three years, and this bill will help us to deliver on many of them. I believe that we will keep Albertans' trust by keeping our commitments and, as the Member for Calgary-South East put it, by doing our job. Madam Speaker, that is why we are protecting front-line services, so that Albertans know their children will have teachers in the classroom when they go to school. That's why we are reinvesting in our public infrastructure and working to diversify the economy, to ensure that we lay the foundation for long-term economic growth, and that is why we are showing a reasonable and responsible path to balance.

For the record I want to reiterate that the main points of the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act along with Budget 2015 will deliver on our promises. They will be that Alberta's finances will be presented in a three-year fiscal plan. The fiscal plan will be presented on the same scope and basis as the consolidated financial statements in the annual report, following public-sector accounting standards and supported by the Auditor General.

The contingency account will continue with its defined purpose, to provide funding for years in which the actual expense of government exceeds the actual revenue. Government will continue to inflation-proof the heritage fund through the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act.

The legislation continues the requirement for a government strategic plan and ministry business plans as well as the requirement that government and ministry annual reports be released by June 30. Regular quarterly fiscal updates will continue with an exception for this fiscal year only because the quarterly fiscal update was released as a part of Budget 2015. Quarterly and annual reports for the Alberta heritage savings trust fund will continue.

The 1 per cent rule limiting in-year spending increases and operating expenses to 1 per cent of the budget, included in the fiscal plan, will remain in effect under the new legislation, and as was debated at length, a new debt cap based on a debt-to-GDP ratio of 15 per cent will be established, ensuring that government maintains a prudent level of debt, consistent with a triple-A rating.

To sum up, the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act reflects our government's commitment to fiscal responsibility and transparency, and it reflects that we're keeping our debt under control, with a set of fiscal rules that are firm yet offer just enough flexibility to respond to economic and fiscal challenges like some of the ones we face today in Alberta, while presenting the government's finances in a format that is clear and easier for Albertans to understand.

There are tax changes. There were also some important points raised with respect to the tax changes covered in Bill 4. I recognize that the opposition put forward some amendments, and I appreciate the contribution of all of the hon. members to that. But, Madam Speaker, we all know that this government faced a number of challenges with the budget. It's no secret that we have a significant revenue shortfall, that has to be addressed. The tax changes outlined in this bill strike the right balance between moving away from volatile resource revenues and protecting the tax advantage that all Albertans have become accustomed to.

Raising the locomotive fuel tax was a platform commitment, one that Albertans supported and one that helped level the playing field with the other forms of transportation in this province. The increase will generate approximately $13 million in new revenue in 2016-17 and still keep the locomotive fuel tax well below the fuel taxes paid in other industries.

As for the insurance premium tax, this represents a stable source of revenue also. The modest 1 percentage point increase will generate an additional $158 million in 2016-17.

Madam Speaker, as I've also said, the tax changes brought forward this year provide necessary revenue to help sustain funding for the public programs and services Albertans rely on, and it's important to keep in mind that even with these tax changes Albertans will continue to benefit from an overall tax advantage of at least $8.5 billion compared to all other provinces.

Once again I thank the hon. members for their input and discussion on this important bill. The changes proposed here will not only enable us to move forward on our path towards balance; they will also ensure that we can continue to provide the programs and services that Albertans value.

I'd ask that all members of the House support this bill, and I move third reading. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Increasing taxes, any taxes but especially a series of cumulative taxes that universally impact the cost of everything like these taxes do, during a recession is an atrocious and hurtful economic decision, impacting the hundred thousand or so unemployed in this province at the worst possible time. I don't care if you follow the principles of Keynes, Hayek, or any other economist. It is never a good idea to take more money out of the pockets of Albertans during a time of great suffering like we are suffering right now. In a time of recession prices should fall. While the supply of money retracts, so too should the prices being paid for the goods and services that they depend on. Instead, this government has added taxes, increasing prices, making it harder for everyday Albertans to put food on their tables, to pay their bills, to make ends meet, especially Albertans who have lost their jobs and those that are on fixed incomes.

This government has ignored our warnings and increased a series of what are known as regressive taxes, taxes that inescapably harm the most vulnerable Albertans, those on fixed incomes. That's what regressive taxes do. A regressive tax is called regressive because people of little means pay a higher proportion of the money that they earn to satisfy their family's basic needs for things like food products. As a percentage of their overall earnings they will be paying more towards this tax increase than a family of higher means, hence the word "regressive." So the very people that this government claims to be fighting for all the time are the ones that are going to be hurt the most by these taxes.

The NDP is entirely and directly responsible for increasing the cost of every single good imported into this province by train and truck, goods that Albertans need to survive. The vast majority of these tax increases will have a regressive impact. The NDP is literally paying for their pay raises to their public union cronies on the backs of the poorest Albertans.

Government services are great, and the Wildrose believes that they are of the utmost importance and would not have cut any of the front-line workers that provide these services. In a province with a population as industrious as ours and in a year where we have taken in amongst the province's highest ever revenues, providing Albertans with the front-line services that they need is more than possible.

What is not possible is providing these services and maintaining the bureaucratic bloat of agencies like AHS. What is not sustainable is increasing the pay for public-sector unions while the Albertans that pay their wages are facing job losses and pay cuts in every sector every day. We have these ludicrous ideas coming from other parties about our policies, claims that we in opposition would make unemployment worse by insisting that overpaid managers reallocate their skill set to a more industrious purpose in the private sector, managers like the AHS manager making seven figures to dictate the type of art on the wall. What they fail to understand is that taxpayers are paying these salaries for nonproductive and inefficient pursuits, that Alberta taxpayers do not receive any value in return for make-work projects. Instead, the Albertan taxpayer is facing a slow and unnecessary, redundant social system with rapidly declining levels of satisfaction.

You know, we used to have among the best education systems, among the best health care systems, and now we're paying well above market value on the backs of taxpayers for inferior services. It is time that this government does the right thing and looks inward to fix the problems that our people are facing every day. It is time that this NDP government admits that they are responsible for our province's slow, expensive, ineffective, and underperforming government services. We're paying billions of dollars more than British Columbia on infrastructure, more than a province that literally has to build its roadway by carving through mountains. The government is competing against itself, drastically driving up the costs of these infrastructure projects.

Albertans are not like this government; they cannot leverage their children's future to balance their books. We have to live within our means. Albertans cut costs when times are tough. They do everything in their power to manage their expenses. And while our people are struggling, this government has increased taxes on those same people to run a series of inefficient and underperforming services. What they fail to understand is that every dollar wasted on government inefficiency is a dollar taken directly from the wallet of an Albertan, which will produce nothing of any value.

Government inefficiencies only serve to amplify the dead weight losses inevitably produced through taxation. Every time that we increase a tax, we are lowering the value of transactions to both buyers and sellers. Whether the buyer is paying more for the product or the seller is receiving a lower return for the product, there is a loss in the marketplace, and that is known as dead weight.

Economists have long acknowledged that the losses to either the consumer or the producer are far greater than the revenue received by the government from this taxation. With every tax increase Alberta's economy is losing market value. Raising taxes forces businesses out of the market. A supplier that is otherwise able to satisfy the consumer's needs for a good at a fair and competitive market price will often no longer be able to do so with all of these cumulative taxes. Businesses need to cover their economic cost of doing business. They need to make money or break even or they cannot produce goods and employ people. Taxes change the prices of goods and inevitably push more businesses out of Alberta as Alberta businesses become less competitive.

The same principle applies to the consumer. A consumer that might previously have afforded certain goods and services from a producer such as the purchasers of insurance will often find himself or herself unable to do so after a price increase is induced through higher taxes or new forms of taxation or the cumulative effect of these many taxes. Consumers have a willingness to pay for items, and, especially in the case of economically vulnerable Albertans, this willingness to pay for an item is fixed by the restraints of their income.

What this government should be the most ashamed of is that they have chosen to flaunt that an NDP government's spending is somehow fixed by absolutely nothing. Alberta has a government that refuses to acknowledge the negative effects of cumulative taxation on an already fragile economy with an ever-growing population of unemployed and fixed-income people. We are living in a time when Albertans are already struggling to put food on their table and pay their power bills, and this NDP government is applying taxes that will push these products even further out of their reach. You're shutting down businesses that provide jobs. These tax increases are edging our fertilizer producers, our coal miners, our oil and gas companies, our grocery providers, our farmers out of the market and, with them, the good-paying jobs that they provide.

There is no job plan better for Alberta business, for the creation of jobs, than tax cuts. It has been proven time and again around the world. Businesses are profit maximizers. They know how to increase efficiencies, and they will always hire more staff where they have the potential to increase their productivity. This government has done the exact opposite and could not be more wrong about how to satisfy the economic needs and the social needs of Albertans. This bill will only serve to compound the effect of every other terrible economic policy and risk experiment that this NDP government is pushing for.

One last time I will urge my fellow members of this House to vote this bill down.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak?

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Deficit spending is a poor economic policy, and it will erode services in the long run, contrary to the government's claims. These are real numbers, real people, and real dollars, and they're being diverted for what? So the government doesn't have to look inward and cut significant amounts of inefficiency and waste? The government is more comfortable abusing taxpayer money than improving their operational efficiency in a manner that every other private-sector company does during a recession.

This is a structural deficit. You cut taxes during a structural deficit. You do. The reality is that Albertans are being forced to contribute billions of dollars to servicing debt. These are billions – we've mentioned this before – that are being ripped from an economic cycle. There's nothing new that can be produced from these funds that are being allocated to debt servicing, Madam Speaker, and they do not go into building more infrastructure like roads, something everybody needs to use to get to work, to move product, to be useful, to work, thereby influencing the economy positively. It's an investment. It creates. It means you go to work. You get paid. This debt servicing disrupts an important economic driver. It's a disrespectful management of our funds, and it undermines the proper use of taxpayer money.

The industries are suffering right now, Madam Speaker. Oil prices are low, as we all know. These companies are counting on every penny when it comes to trying to lower the cost of getting their products to market, and the companies are taking every step to reduce their barrel costs, including layoffs of their staff, any staff that can be spared. In fact, a lot of these companies have taken upwards of 20 per cent cuts themselves in order to keep their companies running, in order to maintain their staff. They've looked inward. They've cut from within in order to be able to manage their own companies. It's a wonderful example of how the resilience of Albertans works in order to maintain the companies' productivity during these times. Making it more expensive for these companies to get their product to market will only force these companies to make more cuts.

In 2013 the rail moved about 280,000 barrels per day, almost 8 per cent of western Canada's oil production. Without pipelines we need rail, and in this industry right now we don't have a whole lot of other options. Worse than that, the government has made no progress on pipelines. It's not surprising. I mean, we're hopeful, but we have a lot of protesters, and they've doubled down by hiring a number of noted antipipeline lobbyists. Right now we need pipelines. It's clear that in the oil and gas industries the demand for shipping their products by rail is increasing. The statistics say that 12,054 cars carrying fuel and oil and crude petroleum moved through western Canada in August 2015 compared to just 9,086 in August 2013. To be clear, that increase in the number of cars is in spite of an economic recession. Our most important job-creating industry is dependent upon rail, at least for the foreseeable future, without a pipeline.

As has been mentioned before, we can't seem to get any ideas about what pipelines are going to be built. We know which ones are not going to go through, and we can't seem to get any answers about ones that need to go through. Not only is the government kicking the oil and gas industry when they are down, but on top of that, they're taxing one of the only ways that we have to get product to market. That's not only oil and gas. That's for food, and that's for fertilizer and any other products that are necessary to be transported in this country, in this province.

The spokesperson for CP Rail noted that, quote, the increased fuel tax in Alberta will substantially increase CP's cost of fuel in the province; this change comes at a very difficult economic period for the province, and there is no doubt that it will be compounded by the government's other announced tax increases; this will negatively impact future investments and jobs. End quote. The NDP has not done the analysis to indicate how expensive this will be. The government is choosing to strain the pocketbooks of every Albertan to pay for lavish plans and bureaucratic excess. This is not the right method, Madam Speaker, for attempting to increase revenues. We cannot further hinder the industry this way and the consumers as well.

Reducing taxes has a stimulative effect on the economic activity. In fact, as the hon. member had mentioned, it's a supported aspect of the very economists often invoked favourably by the NDP government. You cut taxes in times of structural deficit. Money left in the pockets of innovators and job creators and industrious Albertans will find productivity given the right encouragement, given the right space to do that in. Innovation is born from these sorts of situations, but the government has to support that.

Higher marginal rates have a directly negative impact on innovation and growth and, most significantly, employment, something that I think is important to all of us right now, especially given, again, the economic environment and the job losses in this province, something all of us should be thinking about right now in all of our constituencies. All of the people in all of our constituencies are suffering right now. The result is lower incomes for individuals and less revenue for the government. The NDP policies are hurting Albertans. These policies are killing jobs. This is a tax that is sure to provide a final blow, and this is what we're talking about right now, the tax on the rail.

Just to reiterate, the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks has given a great deal of thought and a tremendous amount of opportunity for this government to look inward and to find ways to improve what could be better policy at this point.

Mr. Panda: A spiritual awakening.

Mrs. Aheer: A spiritual awakening, as it was called, or however you want to look at that.

The most important thing right now is for the government to understand that we have job losses and that our economy is suffering, and I urge the government to within this third reading take a look at the amendments that were thoughtfully constructed, that have been supported by this side, and to please look within and to cut from within, cut from the bloat, cut from the bureaucracy. That's what we're asking you to do, to look at that from within and find other places. There are places from within that we can cut, Madam Speaker, in order to create the services that Albertans need and have come to expect. We need to start looking at ourselves first in order to make that happen before we go into the pockets of the taxpayers, who are suffering right now.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, if you seek it, I think that you will find unanimous consent of this House for one-minute bells for the duration of the evening.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to rise today to speak against this horrendous bill. This government is asking for a blank cheque to cover their unprecedented levels of spending. We know that this government has little regard for the taxpayers of Alberta and instead sees them as their own personal ATM. We Albertans are a sensible lot, and we expect our government to reflect this. Albertans understand that there are consequences for our actions. We cannot act like someone with their first credit card. We need to live within our means.

Unfortunately, this government doesn't believe in the Alberta advantage, brought in by Premier Klein in 1992 through lower taxes, an investment-friendly economy, ending corporate welfare, cutting red tape, and an education system that was the envy of the world. The members opposite would remember the mid-1990s as the lost decade. I don't disagree that it was a time of hard choices, but the decisions this government makes today will, like the Getty government's, have the same repercussions that caused the Klein government to make those hard choices. We simply cannot burden our youth with the debts from this government's risky fiscal economic experiments. Much like someone with their first credit card, this government will eventually wake up and feel the full ramifications of their decisions to spend recklessly now instead of making prudent, common-sense, responsible decisions, and I can assure the members opposite that a couple of Tylenol won't help alleviate their fiscal hangover.

This bill allows for the government to run operational deficits for the first time since before some members opposite were even born. We make no mistake. The only reason we are forced into this unenviable situation is because the government refuses to rein in a budget that exceeds our British Columbian neighbours' not only by $2,000 in per capita spending but even in total spending in spite of B.C. having a larger population. We should focus on spending taxpayer dollars more efficiently before hiking over 60 different taxes and fees, that this government raised in their recent budget. Their tax increases include personal income tax, the ND PST carbon tax, gasoline fuel tax, diesel fuel tax, propane fuel tax, locomotive fuel tax.

Look at the locomotive fuel tax. We talked about that a little earlier. That was actually an NDP campaign promise, where they said that they were going to have reliable, sufficient, and fairly priced rail service to markets. Madam Speaker, our resources rely on rail to get to the market. Of course, Canadian Pacific Railway said about this raise that the NDP government tax hike on trains is sending Alberta down the wrong track. They said that the NDP government's budget decision to raise the locomotive fuel tax rate from 1 and a half cents per litre to 5 and a half cents per litre, effective November 1, will cost both the company and the province. That's a broken campaign promise right there.

Other rises in taxes: corporate income tax; tobacco tax; alcohol tax; application fee for public land leases; royalty rates on sand; royalty rates on silt; royalty rates on gravel; royalty rates on soil; royalty rates on peat moss; royalty rates on clay; base camping fees; campsite electricity rates; base group camping fees; dump station fees; Canmore Nordic Centre fee; in-park interpretive program fee; cottage lot leasing fee; industrial-commercial land-use, disposition, administration, and land-rent fees; permit and special-event fees; on-site pump-out service fees; 15 different court fees increased; land titles caveats fee; corporate registry for incorporations; corporate registry for annual returns; corporate registry for searches; and an insurance premium tax.

Of course, we just finished talking about the insurance premium tax. This is the tax that includes a tax on vehicle insurance, which we're mandated by law to have, so that's something we can't get out of. For some of these other taxes we have a choice, whether we're going to purchase or use that service, but we're forced to have vehicle insurance, so we're forced to pay this tax. That's not fair, Madam Speaker. That's not right.

What we should be doing is creating legislation that determines how we will save our surpluses, not how we will spend ourselves deeper into debt. We already had a spending problem. At $100 a barrel for oil the Alberta government wasn't able to save anything. For the past eight years we've run deficits, and the plan is to have deficits for the next five years. This bill will simply enable this government to put off addressing this problem. There are no provisions in this bill if the government exceeds 15 per cent of GDP. What is the point of having a law without any consequences for breaking it? Why are there no protections in place? While there may be no penalties placed on the Finance minister or this government, Albertans will be the ones punished when our triple-A credit rating is downgraded because of this government's perilous spending habits.

In a recent Globe and Mail article the DBRS rating agency stated, "We rate Alberta [triple-A] with a stable trend for the time being; primarily that has been based on a strong balance sheet and low debt." Obviously, the low debt has gone out the window. Further, they warned that they would "rethink the province's pristine [triple-A] stable credit rating if provincial debt surpasses 15 per cent of GDP." But let's be clear. The DBRS's version of 15 per cent isn't what this government uses. In the same article DBRS estimates that the total taxpayer-supported debt in Alberta would be $29.3 billion, or about 10 per cent of GDP. Of course, this government's budget is forecasting $47 billion worth of debt. Well, this government is at half of that. Therefore, DBRS has us hitting near 15 per cent before the next election, so a credit downgrade is coming soon.

Mr. Speaker, it should be clear to this Chamber why we must vote against this bill. Like a late-night infomercial cure-all, this bill falsely promises a quick and easy remedy to an issue that requires a long-term, reasonable course of care, something like the responsible, gradual financial recovery plan that the Wildrose proposed during the spring election. Ralph Klein famously said, "Never again will this government or the people of this province have to set aside another tax dollar on debt." Those days are over, and the way this government is going, they will be gone for a long, long time. Even Ralph Klein couldn't foresee the path that this government is heading us down.

Please vote against Bill 4 and force the government to come back to this House with a responsible plan that respects taxpayers and future Alberta generations, a plan that we can be proud of instead of the shameful burden enabled by Bill 4.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? No? Okay.

Any other speakers to the bill? Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nice chair. It suits you.

Mr. Speaker, it is the eleventh hour. It isn't too late for the government to change course although it's getting pretty darn hard at this point. The Official Opposition has proposed many amendments, I think about eight of them, which I'm sure government members have enjoyed debating at every moment. But at every moment the government has rejected them, well-meaning, reasonable amendments that would make Bill 4 less bad.

Bill 4 is possibly one of the most damaging pieces of legislation that this House could possibly pass. It is a piece of legislation that increases our debt limit again – yet again – becoming little better than the U.S. Congress's. We are following down a dangerous path, where before even the next election the government might come back to us asking for an increase in the debt ceiling again. We'll be able to say, "I told you so," but the cost of fixing it won't be worth the gloating. We want to fix it now.

This bill retroactively makes legal the government's illegal actions, the Finance minister's failure to comply with the financial management act and introduce the second-quarter fiscal update on or before the 30th of November. They seek to go backwards in time and give themselves a legal mulligan, a one-off gimme so that they are not in noncompliance with the law. Not that it would make any difference, because the government has in the series of amendments we've debated refused at every single turn to accept legal consequences for breaking their own laws.

We've put forward amendments that would limit ministerial stipends if they broke the debt ceiling. Any investment manager that doesn't do their job is not going to get paid as well. It's performance pay. Many Albertans are paid in their regular jobs based on performance pay, and I think it's time we introduced a little bit of that into this House. Unfortunately, the members on the other side are just working union hours. We are working a little beyond them tonight; I'll give that. But they've rejected the idea of performance pay. They've rejected the idea that there should be any penalty whatsoever for breaking the laws that we ourselves pass in this House. It's a principle that I will fight for in the coming years.

Mr. Mason: Is that how long you're going to go on?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Don't tempt me, House leader. You know I could.

This bill changes the framework of our budget at a macro level. It legalizes borrowing for the basic operations of the government, something that we have not done since 1992, something that was so bad that this province learned a lesson for a time. We made it illegal. We made it against the law to do that. But we've watered that down over the years, with the best of intentions at times, to the point where now the Alberta advantage has died with a whimper. Well, there are three and a half years for the Alberta advantage to squirm under the bus, but the Official Opposition will continue to fight for fiscal responsibility, for conservatism, for the ideas that built the Alberta advantage, the Alberta advantage that made Alberta the greatest province in the greatest country in the world, Mr. Speaker. This is what we will continue to fight for.

Bill 4 is almost sure to pass tonight. We haven't won many votes in this Chamber this evening. Perhaps we'll do better on Bill 6. But before we get to votes on Bill 6, I hope that the government has taken stock over what's happened in this province over the last two weeks. Albertans are waking up. Albertans know that this government can't be trusted, not with farmers and not with finances.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude our debate on Bill 4. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Does anyone wish to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing no one, would anybody else like to speak to the bill?

Seeing no one, I call on the hon. Minister of Finance to close the debate, then.

Mr. Ceci: It's done. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't wish to belabour the – oh, look at that. Midnight. I thank all members for their input. Bill 4 will make a more sustainable set of revenue resources going forward for all Albertans to therefore be able to provide the many programs and services they rely on.

Thank you.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 6

Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act

Mr. Cooper moved that the motion for second reading be amended to read that Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Adjourned debate December 2: Mr. Bilous]

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. member wishing to speak? Hon. minister of economic development, you're not choosing to speak at this time? I think you still had some time.

Mr. Bilous: Sure. Thank you, Madam Speaker. This is on the bill, is it not?

Mr. Cooper: It's on the referral motion to committee. You're supporting it.

Mr. Bilous: Right. No, I'm not.

So this is on the motion, Madam Speaker, just for clarification, the referral amendment?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes. It's on the amendment.

Mr. Bilous: Right. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak against this amendment. I'll make my points very, very quickly. Quite honestly, you know, farm workers are the only workers in this province who aren't covered under OH and S and WCB, and by bringing forward this bill and enacting it, it will ensure that paid farm workers have that minimum basic coverage, which every other worker in the province enjoys except for farm workers. This is a piece of legislation that is long overdue.

Madam Speaker, I look forward to the continued debate in this House, including amendments that will be brought forward when we move into Committee of the Whole. But, again, to remind members: one life lost is one too many, and we need to ensure that those who have been injured while working on a farm have basic protections and coverage. That is why delaying is not the path forward. I think there's definitely a way to ensure that we have a made-in-Alberta solution that applies and takes into account our workers, our farmers, and our ranchers in this province and ensures that we protect family farms. Again, this comes down to ensuring that paid farm workers have the same basic protections as every other worker in this province. Alberta, unfortunately, is the only jurisdiction in this country that doesn't afford paid farm workers that type of protection.

I look forward to the debate as it continues on. I was very clear this afternoon, Madam Speaker, speaking with folks in Leduc, that we are going to ensure that we are protecting family farms and acknowledging the uniqueness that farmers through their occupation, their way of life, that there are unique aspects and elements to it, which we are listening to and that we have heard. We will ensure that we come forward with a made-in-Alberta solution.

For those reasons, Madam Speaker, I cannot support the referral motion. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for once again allowing me to rise and speak on Bill 6. I will be supporting this amendment, which sends this bill to committee, where it can receive the respectful consideration and expert input it deserves.

I want to express my disappointment that once again the members across the aisle that previously served with me here in opposition ranks are going against the ideals they previously held on this side of the aisle. Under previous governments we all knew that there was a problem with the misuse and, frankly, the non-use of legislative policy committees to call expert witnesses, hear public feedback, and iron out important details of legislation out in the open. In fact, many other parliamentary jurisdictions, including our federal government and other provinces here in Canada, already do these things quite frequently. They use policy committees to a much fuller and comprehensive extent than Alberta. I think this is to the benefit of democracy.

Unfortunately, it seems that we are headed right down the same path as previous administrations that preferred to move quickly and without complete public oversight of the legislative process. Madam Speaker, I'd like to remind this Assembly of the words of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who said in regard to pension legislation:

First of all, Mr. Speaker, there was not adequate consultation, especially with the people who are enrolled in the pension, who will receive it or who are receiving it now. That's a critical point . . .

I think that the government has shown that at this point in time, at least, it's prepared to make some compromises, and I think that's a good thing. I think that this Legislature and the opposition have proved their worth in this debate and in this fight, and it has shown that we can indeed influence the course of government policy. We can stand up on behalf of our constituents, fight for them, and get results.

Boy, does that sound familiar, from pensions to changing the way that fifth and sixth generations interact with their families, continuing their heritage, continuing the hard work that built Alberta.

In the same debate the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview stated:

I mean, for a government that loves to talk about the word "consultation" and how they speak with folks, their actions don't seem to live up to their words. Although I could stand here and give numerous examples where consultation never took place even though it was asserted, I won't do that.

This government is the latest to amass quite the impressive list of examples where consultation was asserted and never offered, Madam Speaker. So much for change.

I've attended a number of rallies and town hall sessions now where I've had the chance to speak with hundreds if not thousands of deeply concerned Albertans. What I've come to understand is that this issue is not about urban versus rural. It transcends regional and partisan politics. For every single farmer and rancher I've spoken to, it has nothing to do with skirting the need for safety. While this government as per their own briefing materials may have wished to legislate the family farm as a workplace, I can assure you that each one of these families sees their farm or ranch as their home first and foremost. They take a great deal of pride in their home and the safety of all those on their property, as we all would.

What this comes down to is trust, Madam Speaker. After seeing so much conflicting, confusing, ill-conceived, and rushed information coming from this government, there are precious few Albertans, let alone farmers and ranchers, who are prepared to write this government a blank cheque that unfettered regulatory power could offer. The vast majority simply don't trust that you will take this and get it right. They don't trust that as of yet undefined and mostly unwritten regulations will truly reflect the unique circumstances of our province's farms and ranches.

What we've seen so far, even from government members themselves, is a stream of changes and admissions of the sloppiness and lack of thought that preceded the creation of this bill. We have the minister of agriculture unwilling to give his full support to it and calling its rollout odd, with the consultation coming after the legislation was intended to be quickly rammed through this House. The standard line for the government has been, essentially, that we just need to sign over complete regulatory control; then they'll be able to fix everything they have bungled already through unseen regulations.

But then the curtain comes down, and we have the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose openly admitting that – and I quote – the target and intentions of the bill are constantly changing. It seems that he may have inadvertently given the government's game away. With so many conflicting reports posted right on the government pages and coming from the government side, it's no wonder a few of these members have a hard time keeping their story straight. Ultimately, that's the problem. Nothing this government has done gives anyone any confidence in its ability to get this right or to carry out the will of the people. This legislation was conspicuously absent from the NDP election platform, and their attempt to whisk it through the Legislature has burned any residual trust they might have had.

I would suggest to this government that restoring trust first involves consulting with Albertans in a meaningful way. I'm not talking about the sessions that were planned to take place after the bill was well on its way to becoming law. I'm not talking about going out to sit in front of a crowd of farmers and ranchers and hearing nothing but criticism, then ignoring every single piece of it and pushing blindly ahead. I'm not talking about sessions booked in venues that were far too small, involving bureaucrats who can't even be bothered to take notes but, instead, simply repeat talking points. I'm talking about the kind of consultation that could easily and effectively happen in a true legislative policy committee like this motion is asking for. I'm talking about consultation as a meaningful discussion, a meaningful two-way street. I would like nothing more than to see this government inviting the affected parties in and hearing their unique concerns, challenges, and recommendations.

I don't trust this government to make the right decisions behind closed doors any more than the majority of Albertans who oppose Bill 6 do. They couldn't even get it right out here in the open. Why would they think they will suddenly become trustworthy legislators once they have unbridled regulatory authority and no transparency for their actions? One farmer I spoke with over the weekend put it best when he said that nobody would ever operate his or her business or personal life the way this NDP government is proposing, where the signature on the bottom line is required before the body of the contract is written.

Questions still linger, Madam Speaker. As much as the government desperately tries to patch this broken bill together with half-formed amendments and shaky assurances, we still have no clear definition of what it means to hire a worker and what regulatory burdens would come with that. For example, if a farmer or rancher were to hire a roofer to fix the shingles on the barn or an electrician to install a section of electric fencing, would that operation then need to come into full compliance with every single detail of the OH and S code, that was never ever created with farming in mind? What costs would be associated with this?

We have not yet addressed an issue that many have brought to my attention: foisting an inferior Workers' Compensation Board insurance product upon farmers and ranchers that already carry private insurance. It's no secret to anyone in this House that workers' compensation is badly in need of some reform, and I consider it disrespectful to the agriculture community to mandate their participation in a system that even the Premier feels is broken.

I know these concerns linger, because I'm hearing them every day. It's gotten to the point where I'm hearing from Albertans outside my own riding boundaries, and I'm sure I'm not the only one of my Wildrose colleagues to experience this. I'm hearing from people who want us to represent them because their own MLAs are steadfastly refusing to take their concerns seriously and to actually advocate on their behalf.

Madam Speaker, this is the kind of feedback government members would hear if they were interested in representing their constituents first. From an e-mail from Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley:

I want to express my absolute and unequivocal discontent with Bill 6. This Government has broken the trust of Albertans due to their lack of respect and transparency that you as an NDP party collectively have displayed. Had the Government come to farmers and ranchers to discuss the issues and formulate a plan for future regulation, or alternatively if they came with a fully developed plan to present for review and comment we could have had something factual and concrete to discuss. Instead this Government asked us to give a blank page for you to design the regulation at your will and a blank cheque to pay for the consequences of it after.

Here's another for all the government members in Edmonton.

I feel the NDP government is pushing this bill ahead too fast for the enormity of the outcome it could have. We don't appreciate that farmers and ranchers were not adequately consulted with regards to this piece of legislation either.

This next one comes from the minister of agriculture's riding, where, it's my understanding, my Wildrose colleague will be hosting a town hall.

Why, I wonder, if this legislation is being put into place for the right reasons . . . is it being fast tracked through the system without following proper procedures . . . As farmers we have all taken the time to care to make sure our farms are the safest they can be for everyone on the farm. We have been taking these precautions for many years and nothing will change. Please put a stop to Bill 6 or at least slow it down so you can research it properly.

How about another, this time from Stony Plain?

I truly believe that this bill should be put on hold until you have afforded the people of Alberta . . . their say . . . I was always taught that there was a right way and a wrong way to do things.

Your way is the wrong way. Open communication, honesty, and being accountable for your actions is the right way.

We have one from Medicine Hat, and – trust me – this is one of many I've been tasked with bringing to this government.

If our provincial government truly seeks to have an effective new farm safety legislation, then it needs to engage and enlist the farming and ranching community in creating a truly made in Alberta solution and not attempt to impose legislation that might hinder, hurt, and frustrate those who have helped build our province and who provide us with such a rich heritage and the promise of a prosperous future.

Madam Speaker, through you, I implore all of my government colleagues across the floor to please listen to their constituents, who are so desperately pleading for consultation and to provide their input from experience and expertise. You are representatives of your riding first, and I beg you to remember that.

I will be voting for this amendment to send this bill to committee. Madam Speaker, thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is applicable if anyone would like to ask questions. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My hon. colleague has spent some significant time in this Assembly, and I'm just wondering if you have any recollection if in previous terms, when the government was on this side of the House, they had ever made any sort of comments or statements about the importance of consultation, the importance of committees, perhaps generally around these types of issues, particularly when you saw in the public large, large amounts of feedback. I seem to recall some around bills 9 and 10, which were some pension reform bills, I think. As well, I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity mentioned Bill 10, which was maybe even this time last year, and I seem to recall some discussion around the importance of consultation.

Mr. Barnes: Hon. member, thank you very, very much. Yeah, in the three years of sharing the opposition lounge and on this side watching a 44-year-old government struggle many, many times with consultation and with spending taxpayers' money efficiently, I kind of remember three the most and the shared concern that I had with the NDP, which was in opposition at the time. I remember when the last government tried to do the law about the industrial levy and consultation with First Nations. I remember a government standing here saying how they had total agreement from everyone concerned, and, lo and behold, the very next day there was some side of 50 or 60 people in the gallery who claimed they hadn't been consulted and wanted several changes. I'm absolutely sure that I remember my New Democrat opposition colleagues at the time, you know, expressing laughter and surprise that the government at the time had claimed that this consultation had happened. Obviously, it hadn't and was one of the factors that, no doubt, cost the last government a lot of their support.

The ones that I think of most, though, are the land bills: bills 19, 24, 36, and 50. I absolutely will never forget the meetings that rural property rights advocates used to have around the province, with 250 to 350 landowners, in wanting to understand the issue, wanting to explain the issue to their neighbours and other Albertans. It was amazing, too, how Medicine Hat, the 63,000 of us in Medicine Hat – sure, we're urban based, but, my goodness, our rural roots run deep, whether it's because we've come from the country or we have friends or family in it. A company came – it was Stantec, I think – and did a big meeting so, so similar to these ones that the government is doing now, bringing people in, sitting there and giving them a chance to vent and a chance to say what's on their mind but, at the end of the day, not doing at all what the people were asking for.

What I like about this amendment: they're just asking for the chance to consult, the chance to come here and in a respectful, proper manner share their needs. I actually have a quote here from the Premier from May 7, 2014, where something had happened.

A week ago this PC government apologized to party members for its failure to listen to the grassroots. Yesterday they backtracked again, this time on pension rollbacks, because they failed to listen to Albertans. It's clear that they still don't get it because now they plan to ram through an omnibus bill without written briefings to Assembly members and without listening to Albertans.

Madam Speaker, unfortunately, it sounds like déjà vu. It sounds so similar to this process now.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to speak here to this amendment to send this particular bill to committee. I think the predominant aspect of this particular discussion and indeed the entire discussion surrounding Bill 6 has been one of confusion, one of misinformation, and one whereby farmers, that are directly affected by the legislation that is being proposed, feel that the information that has come from this government, by the very admission of this government, has been inconsistent and inaccurate.

You know, it is particularly difficult to obtain the trust of any group of people, whether that be farmers or any group that you're dealing with, when you're not consistent in what you're telling them. I want to use, you know, just a few examples of the inconsistencies in the messaging and what has gone out on critical issues with regard to this piece of legislation. The question of paid versus unpaid workers and whether paid or unpaid workers would be subject to workers' compensation and OH and S regulations: the initial information that came from this government was crystal clear that this legislation would be applicable to both paid and unpaid workers, not just the paid, as now the amendments are saying and now is being said was always the intention.

Another area of confusion was the applicability of the legislation to the work of children on farms. The initial information that went out: I want to stress that this is information that went out well before the first meeting in Grande Prairie on November 26. This was information that was on the website at the time that the legislation was first introduced, the information with regard to the work of children on the farm that caused so much concern amongst farmers, amongst ranchers, many of whom had come through the 4-H system, a system that has been operating in this province for over a century. Indeed, it was felt that 4-H would become something that was threatened by this legislation. Now we're told: no, no, no; that was never the intent. Very clearly, in the information that came out initially with this bill, the work of children and the work of children through 4-H clubs would definitely be affected.

Now the most recent thing that has caused once again not just confusion but, in fact, has now caused division and has caused resentment is the exemption for the members of Hutterite colonies. Now, in my practice I work with Hutterite colonies. I have five colonies in my constituency, and I find, you know, actually, my interaction with them quite interesting. They speak German, and I speak German as well, and it's an interesting interaction that we have. The Hutterite colonies have been very clear on this message, and that is that they do not want a special exemption that separates them from their farming neighbours. They feel a kinship with those who share the land around them, and they do not want to be treated in a way that is special or different from the others that till the land.

These sorts of things are causing the kinds of anger, the kinds of confusion, and the kinds of mistrust that are now the hallmark of this legislation, a legislation that clearly requires the trust of the people, not the kind of distrust that we've seen.

Sadly, we've also seen some myths crop up. You know, one of the myths that I think is the most damaging and one of the myths that I find the most I'll use the word "disgusting" is this myth that farmers don't care about safety and that to suggest that if you're opposed to this bills, somehow you're opposed to farm safety. You know, that is the easy way out. That is the easy way out, that when you're showing opposition to this piece of legislation, you say: oh, well, those that are opposing it just don't care about safety. I can assure you, Madam Speaker, and I think that this is something we should put to rest right now, that whether you're for Bill 6 or against Bill 6, you care about the safety of farmers, you care about the safety of farm workers, and you care about making sure that everybody gets home safely at night. To suggest otherwise is disingenuous and, in my view, lowers the debate on this subject.

Just the same is this myth that workers' compensation is the be-all and end-all and that workers' compensation will somehow ensure that all workers will be adequately protected in the event of an injury. We know that the Premier is on the public record as being extremely critical of workers' compensation in this province. We know that she has said that workers suffer and that workers' health and their dignity and their future are threatened by a Workers' Compensation Board system that does not properly serve injured workers in this province. They've had seven months to correct all of the deficiencies in the Workers' Compensation Board, but that hasn't happened. Despite the fact that this flawed system, or at least the system the Premier says is flawed, is still in place, still has not been changed, still has not been amended in 23 days now, this system will be foisted upon the farmers and the farm workers of this province. I would suggest that the thing to do first is to fix the problem with WCB before you foist it on those that will supposedly receive protections from it.

But there are myths on all sides. You know, the kind of hyperbole and the kind of myths that then spring up is, for example, one that came around on social media. I was discussing this just a couple of hours ago with the minister of agriculture. I find this myth to be incredible, that somehow Bill 6 allows for wind turbines and solar panels to be established on farmland without the permission of the landowner. This somehow is something that Bill 6 allows? I mean, that's preposterous. It's crazy. Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, when the temperature is elevated in this kind of debate, you all of a sudden get these sorts of myths propagated. They're propagated on both sides.

You know, the problem we have now is that we have these amendments, six pages' worth of hastily thrown together amendments to amend a five-page-long bill. You have to just read something into it. When you need six pages' worth of amendments to amend a five-page-long bill, there's something wrong with the original piece of legislation.

Madam Speaker, this piece of legislation has been poorly conceived, poorly communicated, and dismally executed by this government. They are finding out, to their dismay, that, in fact, governing is not an easy thing to do. They're relatively new at this process, so mistakes can be made. We can acknowledge that, you know, to a certain extent some degree of, shall we say, forbearance should be allowed because mistakes can be made. But the way to then realize that it is in a bit of a wreck right now is not to forge ahead, not to go ahead and just step on the gas; it is, in fact, to pause. It is, in fact, to take time to step back and say: "Look, there are some problems here. We need to basically take a step back and take the opportunity to do some real consultation, to bring in some of the experts."

You know, there has been a lot of work done on farm safety in the past, and I would be curious to know from members of the government: were members of the Farm Safety Advisory Council consulted? Were they brought into the discussions? Indeed, were any of the discussions and any of the recommendations that they brought forward in their 2012 report incorporated into this legislation? Not based on what I've seen in the legislation. No. Yet that particular consultation was province-wide, had representation from a wide range of community and commodity groups, and was provided with some of the most cogent and most well-thought-out recommendations on this issue.

Furthermore, our farmers that have come to us at these various meetings, that have communicated to us through e-mail and other means have given us suggestions as to how farm safety could be incented, how it could be encouraged through a number of means. For example, under the Growing Forward 2 program there is a financial incentive to farmers who improve their animal handling facilities. You know, I've experienced this myself in veterinary practice when doing animal handling. Some people have very good facilities, and some people have very poor facilities. Quite frankly, the risk of injury to either the animal or the operator goes up considerably when facility design and facilities are poorly put together. This is something that, wherever possible, we need to avoid.

There are a number of a means whereby safe practices can in fact be acknowledged, can be recognized, and can be rewarded, but instead of using an encouraging and educational system that moves the farm safety issue forward, we have punitive measures. We have measures that are intended, you know, to cause things like the shutdown of farming operations sometimes at critical times of the year. That does not move this debate forward.

You know, today we had the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour saying that we want to create a culture of farm safety in this province. That's astounding to me. Create a culture of farm safety? Again, I think this is a tremendous insult to our farmers. What do you think they have had as a culture of farm safety thus far? That's suggesting that there has been no concern about farm safety prior to today. To me, knowing many farmers who are tremendously concerned about farm safety, I think that is a tremendously insulting thing.

Finally, Madam Speaker, there's the whole process of legislating first and then putting regulations together afterwards, a process that the minister of agriculture described as odd, a process that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, when he sat on this side of the House, when he was debating the condo act last year, said was the wrong path to go, that, in fact, legislating before the regulations were worked out was a disservice to condo owners, was a disservice to those who made their residences in condominiums.

Well, Madam Speaker, the situation for farmers is no different than it was for condo owners. This is a bad way to proceed. It does not engender the trust in those individuals that will be directly affected by the legislation that is being discussed.

Madam Speaker, the entire execution of this piece of legislation has been poor from the outset. It has been poorly communicated, and it has been, as I said, very poorly executed. The government should recognize this. I believe they have, given the number of apologies that have already been made by members of this government. If they wish to save face and if they wish to save credibility, not just with rural Albertans but with all Albertans, they would recognize that they have done a ham-handed job on this piece of legislation and they would step back and say: we're going to take a step back and give Albertans the opportunity through a legislative policy committee to properly consult on this piece of legislation. That's the mature and prudent way of doing things.

Now, there will be some that will say: "Oh, you're flip-flopping. Oh, you're blinking." Quite frankly, I think the sign of real leadership is to recognize when things have not been executed well, to recognize when things have not been done in a proper manner, to recognize and to admit it. As we say sometimes: if you mess up, fess up. This is what this government needs to do. This government needs to recognize the poor job that it has done in communicating Bill 6 and in executing Bill 6 and recognize that in doing so, it has insulted the very people on the land that feed us, the very people that provide us not just with the food that we eat but the stewardship of our lands across this province, the very people that built this province and the very people whose pride has been shown over these last few weeks, not just on the front steps of the Legislature, not just in town hall meetings across our province but in hundreds of cards and letters and e-mails that they've sent to legislators right across this province.

Madam Speaker, it behooves us to refer this piece of legislation to a committee so that it can be properly discussed, so that we can have proper consultation, so that all Albertans, not just rural Albertans but Albertans in all parts of the province, can have a proper say and we can properly take a look at this legislation and properly study it and, hopefully, improve it so that it can actually do what it is intended to do.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My hon. colleague from the third party, you know, is a veteran of this House, and I'm just curious to know what his thoughts are. He touched on them briefly, but I thought perhaps he would be happy to comment on a comment that the Premier had made just last year and some of the change of opinion from one side of the House to the other, when she said:

Because this has such an incredibly far-reaching set of consequences to the lives of so many Albertans, I would suggest that this not be a bill that we ram through at, you know, 4 o'clock in the morning as this government is scrambling to get out of the Legislature so they can run off and slap a whole bunch of ineffective bandages [on] their broken political vehicle.

Now, I understand that it's not quite 4 a.m. yet, but just last year she recognized the far-reaching set of consequences that affect the lives of so many Albertans. As we head towards the close of a session, I wondered if you're just surprised as much as I am that she said one thing in opposition and now another in government.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Starke: Well, Madam Speaker, I think it is very safe to say and certainly I think that members of government who once sat here and, certainly, members of the Progressive Conservative caucus that are now sitting in opposition that once were in government will tell you that perspective is everything and that perspective on either side of the House certainly changes. I would suggest to you – and I had this conversation with the hon. Government House Leader – that we have been learning over these last seven months how to sit in opposition, indeed an experience that none of us knew very much about prior to May, in the same way the government is learning how to govern. I would suggest that any suggestion that they can do it right and that everything can be done perfectly right from the get-go is, I think, asking a lot of anyone.

Certainly, the hon. Premier, when she sat in opposition, was very effective in calling for a number of things for government to do in order to improve legislation as it made its way through the House, and she was also very effective in reminding us, when we were in government, that there were certain procedures and that there was a process you had to go through in order to engender the trust and engender the support of, especially, those that were directly affected. I would think that those words would be words that she would do well to remember now that she is in the position whereby she and her government can move forward on these pieces of legislation, that are indeed so profound and so far reaching in their potential effects on our agricultural community, on farmers and ranchers across our province, that she and her government should think twice of doing the selfsame ramming through of legislation, that she was so critical of not more than a year and a half ago.

That is the kind of, I think, learning process that certainly we are doing here in our new role as members of the opposition, as legislators that are interested in developing legislation that is, in fact, good-quality legislation. I would suggest that the government is also interested in passing good-quality legislation, and one of the mechanisms for passing good-quality legislation is indeed having the opportunity for parties to come together to discuss this in a less pressure-packed and in a, shall we say, lower temperature environment, whereby good, solid thoughtful decisions can be made with regard to the legislation that we are discussing.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Any other speakers to the bill? Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This has been a very interesting two weeks. I have to admit that when the bill first came out, I applauded the efforts of the government to try to address farm safety. I remember that as the whole process started, I took a look at some of the e-mails that started coming in, and there was one gentleman that e-mailed me. It was a very conciliatory e-mail, saying that he applauded the government as well and thought that their intentions were noble.

The second e-mail that I received from the same gentleman was not so conciliatory. It was an e-mail saying, you know: we're trying to contact the government; we're trying to find out what they're trying to accomplish, what their intentions are; we're getting nowhere with these consultations, or I-told-you-so sessions.

Then I got a third letter from the same individual, and he said: I am disgusted by the lack of consultation that we have received from this government. Now, Madam Speaker, I say that because we have seen in two weeks a progression – or maybe I should say a regression – from one voter, where he started out wanting to believe that the government would do the right thing, wanting to believe that they would actually listen to farmers and ranchers, the people who are in the trenches every day. Yet what he found in a short, two-week period is that the government was unwilling to listen to his concerns and even to contact him back.

Now, we've seen over the last couple of weeks a lot of people upset. We have heard letter after letter, we've read letter after letter about farmers who are distraught about the government's intention to bring this forward. It could have started out, Madam Speaker, with a simple: let's send this to committee; let's figure out the best way to be able to move forward so that all people, both the farmers and the farm workers, are taken care of. I think that this five-alarm fire that we have today would never have been here if you had done that. But that was not done. What happened was that an ideological government dug their heels in.

But there's one thing that the government did not realize. They did not realize who they were up against. Farmers are some of the most hardy, hard-working, and can-be-stubborn people in Alberta. You think that you have met a formidable foe? You haven't met a formidable foe until you've met a farmer, because you're not dealing, Madam Speaker, with a farmer that is concerned about how much he's going to make and that you're going to be taking some of his money from his pocketbook. You're dealing with a farmer that is about to lose that which he or she loves to do.

When you go after the heart and you take away a piece of a person's heart, that's when it becomes personal, and this is the reason why I realized farmers are not going to back down on this issue. They have asked, they have pleaded, they have rallied, they have written letters by the thousands, they have indicated their desire to see this bill killed. The message has been crystal clear. They have travelled from all parts of this province to the Legislature to tell you one thing. They're not happy, and they want you to kill the bill. Yet what we hear from this government is that they are not willing to actually listen to Albertans. They're more concerned about being able to bring forward legislation that will help some other program that they have in store. This is unacceptable to farmers and ranchers, this is unacceptable to me, and it's deplorable.

Now, I received another letter that talks about some of these fallacies or some of these misconceptions or miscommunications, maybe we'd even call them, about Bill 6. Well, the first miscommunication is that farmers have been waiting for this bill for 98 years, and this is what he writes. He says:

I've been on the ground for 56 of those 98 years and have definitely not been waiting for this legislation or anything like it. I live on a family farm and know a lot of farmers, none of whom have been waiting for this type of legislation.

There are approximately 43,000 farms in Alberta. Currently there are nearly 50,000 members on the Facebook page "Farmers against NDP Bill 6."

Fifty thousand members on this Facebook page. I think this almost is the number of our farmers.

An Hon. Member: Do you think that all 50,000 of those people are farmers?

Mr. Hunter: Actually, you know, Madam Speaker, I think the member opposite makes a great point, and I'd like to point this out. This is actually not just a farmers' movement. We have found people from the cities that are also marching with them in solidarity. This is actually starting to become a movement rather than just a few rallies. This is important for the government to understand. Lesser things have taken down governments. This could be the start. This could be the start of the undoing of this government. I think that farmers have the resilience to be able to make this happen, and they are not to be taken lightly.

The second miscommunication that he talks about: "Stakeholders have been consulted." Sitting nose to nose with the NDP government, I can say that I have rarely seen true, proper consultation. In this situation, Madam Speaker, there is no difference. They have said that they will consult, but you can't legislate and then consult. That's not the process. The proper process is to consult, to gather information so that you know the best practices and the best way to be able to go forward. If you legislate and then consult, you have a very good chance of making the mistakes that we have seen over and over and over again with this government.

Now, we in the opposition have said this before, and we've been mocked. We are here to help. That does sound like a cliché, but the reality is that we have warned the government numerous time in past bills that if you go down this path, there are going to be bad consequences. We're here again at the same juncture, saying once again that you're going down the wrong path. The people have spoken. You don't represent Albertans when you pass this bill. Now, you do have a majority. Albertans, I believe, would probably say that they made a mistake on May 5, but you have the mandate. I don't discredit that. You have the mandate. But what are you going to do with the mandate? This is the question. I think a lot of Albertans are hoping that you will say: we're going to do the right thing; we're going to do the right thing for Albertans.

In this situation, Madam Speaker, we have people who have been begging for proper consultation, to send this to committee so that we can gather the right information and make sure that farmers and ranchers are taken care of, not just a certain sector but all farmers and ranchers. Good legislation doesn't pick winners and losers. Good legislation is good for all people. This is the type of legislation that we need to work for. This is the type of legislation they sent us to this House to do. When we don't do it, we do our people a real disservice.

The third miscommunication that he talks about:

"Every province . . . has this legislation." B.C., Saskatchewan and at least two Maritime provinces have exemptions for family farms.

Yet I don't think I've actually ever heard the government say that. They continue to skirt the issue. They forget that these other provinces have studied the issues. They've studied the complexity of a family farm and realized that it's different than a commercial operation. They understand that a family farm has issues that they deal with, the economies of scale, that the way that they deal with issues doesn't work the same as a commercial farm and that they can't be treated the same as a commercial farm is treated. Putting a square peg in a round hole doesn't work. This is the situation that we're seeing with this government and this bill.

Another point that they forget to state is that as a regulated industry Quebec has the least safe standards, safety numbers and that Alberta has some of the safest in terms of numbers.

The fourth miscommunication is:

“Employees have a right to collective bargaining.” Except, evidently, in Ontario where it was struck down by the highest court with respect to farming activities. Collective bargaining makes sense when there is an employer with a large number of employees.

If we had sent this to committee, we would understand that large commercial operations probably do need to have some kind of OH and S and WCB regulations. The problem, again, is that applying the same OH and S and workers’ compensation regulations for a large commercial operation to a small family farm just doesn’t work.

So it was a fantastic letter that this individual sent me.

I would like to maybe take a little different tack, though, and talk a little bit about a book that my family and I read just this summer. It was called Animal Farm, by George Orwell, and I thought it was applicable to this discussion today. Now, in that book it talks about the animals taking over the farm from the humans, who are mistreating them. The animals wanted change. They wanted a better life for themselves. Hey, who would ask for anything less? They wanted owners who listened to them and who had their best interests at heart. In the end the animals that took over the farm turned into the exact same people they had been trying to overthrow. They became the people who did not listen to the animals, who mistreated them, and who did not have their best interests at heart.

The similarities of this situation today are startling. I mean, there are literally goats, turkeys, horses, and pigs outside on the steps protesting on a regular basis. [interjections] Animal Farm has been reincarnated and become Animal Legislature. Every single person here needs to take a look at themselves and ask if this is who they wanted to be and what they wanted to represent. They need to ask themselves if this is how they hoped they would govern. Every single person needs to put themselves in the shoes of those on the steps of the Legislature and ask what they would hope the government would do. [interjections] I know that if I were in their shoes, I would hope that this government would listen to them.

Now, I can tell by the laughter and the mocking tones from the opposite side there that they probably haven’t read the book, so I would recommend it. [interjections] It would probably be one of their favourite books because it actually talks about socialism in the light that it needs to be cast.

Madam Speaker, I do want to say that I don’t really want to bring this into an issue of arguing about this.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), a question for the hon. member? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would love to hear more about this book. Would you mind finishing up your story and relay this book forward to the rest of these wonderful colleagues across the row?

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to my colleague for asking the question. In fact, I was hoping that I would be able to kind of finish my dialogue here. Maybe I could finish here by saying that this is actually, really a serious issue, and I did not want to make light of this. I actually wanted to be able to help the members opposite understand the importance of this issue, and that is that farmers need to be consulted.

The best approach to be able to do that, the best way to do that, Madam Speaker, is to send this to committee. This is what this amendment is for. A referral amendment will send it to committee. The idea that we cannot wait is throwing caution to the wind, and it’s showing the real, true colours of this government, that rather than consulting and then legislating, they are more interested in legislating. The reality is that farmers have been begging to have education, not legislation.

It is extremely important, Madam Speaker, to remind the members opposite that there is absolutely no one that wants better safety on the family farm than the moms and dads who run them, and there is no one who will do it better than they will. Farm families deserve an exemption. I think that if we send it to committee, we would see that, and we would see that they have all the right in the world and that they can have a safe environment for their family farms.

Thank you very much. I appreciate being able to talk about this issue. It is a very important issue to Albertans, not just to our farm families but to all Albertans. This is where our food comes from. This is where hard-working Albertans come from. This is where the bedrock of Alberta comes from. They deserve to have this go to committee.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further comments under 29(2)(a)?

If not, I’ll recognize the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Madam Speaker, I’d like to move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Carlier: Madam Speaker, you know, looking at the clock on the wall, it’s getting very early in the morning. We have made great progress today, so I’d like to move that we adjourn until 10 a.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 1:08 a.m. on Tuesday to 10 a.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us reflect. Bow your heads. Our Jewish citizens recently celebrated Hanukkah, and last week, with the lighting of the Christmas lights at the Legislature, began the celebration of Christmas, a time of peace. As we continue to celebrate, let us be reminded that the one thing we all have in common is the desire to make our province a better place for generations to come. Let each of us reflect on how we can individually and collectively achieve this goal of a greater good here in this Chamber.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 6

Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act

Mr. Cooper moved that the motion for second reading be amended to read that Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Adjourned debate December 7: Mr. Carlier]

The Speaker: The hon. member of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise on Bill 6. I'm going to look at it here. I'm going to try not to break the rule of not having a prop, but I'm not sure that the amendments of Bill 6 can legitimately be considered a prop; it's something that we all have.

Mr. Speaker, six pages.

Mr. Nixon: Longer than the original bill.

Mr. McIver: It's longer than the original bill, as my colleague says. Mr. Speaker, this is not an amendment. The government has shredded, essentially, the original bill and brought forward something completely inconsistent, completely different, completely new. There's just no denying that. The only thing the government hasn't gotten around to doing is actually admitting all of that because if they did that, then they might have to say: let's actually put this thing on pause, let's go back to talk to farmers and ranchers, and let's do it right. Why wouldn't they?

You know what? I'll give the government credit. What's in the amendment is way more consistent with what their ministers have been saying, at least for the last week. Just forget for a minute what they were saying the week before; that was completely different. But in the last week the government has tried to get their act together, in fairness, and struggled, and we'll continue to taunt them about that. But, in fairness, they tried to get their act together, and they've struggled, and what's in the amendment is more consistent with what the ministers have been saying, at least for the last few days. So that's a good thing. We're late to the party – we're late to the party – but the government is trying to get its act together.

But it does really highlight how there's no possible way, Mr. Speaker, that the government can say that they've consulted with farmers and ranchers on any bill that includes this amendment. Why are we all sure about that? Because the amendment was just dropped on the world yesterday, which means the government ministers, probably somebody in their staff, wrote it on a napkin a week ago or four or five days ago, had it typed up nice, sent it to Parliamentary Counsel, and probably the government members and the speakers at best saw it three days ago. If they said five or six days ago, I would believe that. If they said a week, I wouldn't believe it, simply because that's just how it works. In fairness to the government – I'm giving them lots of credit this morning – they haven't even said lately that they have consulted with farmers and ranchers on this amendment because they couldn't have. There has just not been time. We don't blame them for that. There just hasn't been time. So it does actually blow them out of the water their argument that we've talked to people already.

The other thing that government said yesterday in their media conference – they said a lot of things, but I'm going to highlight right now from the notes that I took directly while I was sitting there listening to the two ministers. The minister of labour said that we are going to, after we pass this bill, wait 18 months to two years before we put the regulations in place. Their words, Mr. Speaker, on the record. I'm sure they won't deny them because they're good, honest people. Their words are that they're going to wait 18 to 24 months.

If they're going to take 18 to 24 months, which might be a good idea, just for the record, it does actually put to rest their concern that the previous government wasn't moving fast enough. But it also might actually indicate that the government, having dealt with this bill now, having had all the trouble they've had, having people all over Alberta angry with them – I mean, I've got well north of 3,000 e-mails in my constituency office angry about what the government is doing in Bill 6. I can only imagine how many e-mails the government ministers and the Premier have on this. It occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, again, in fairness to the government, that maybe they're starting to get it. Maybe. We'll know based on their behaviour in the next day or two, but maybe they are.

But, Mr. Speaker, I'm saying to the government that if they're going to spend 18 to 24 months anyway, why not spend six to 12 of those months talking to farmers and ranchers, which is really what they're asking? Why not let them be heard? Why not talk to those farmers and ranchers, show them the bill as it would look if the amendment was passed, find out what the farmers and ranchers can teach the government about what's wrong with it, take credit for what the farmers and ranchers may give the government credit for that's good in it, come back with a bill with the full support of the farming and ranching community, high-five, shake hands, get our picture taken, and have a good bill?

There is a path to success for the government, and it fits on their timelines, Mr. Speaker. Since they've already said that they're going to spend 18 to 24 months, they could actually get it done on their own timelines, look good, force us on this side of the House to stand up and vote for the bill that they could come up with and say nice things about it and be supportive as long as they actually listen to the farmers and ranchers when they're doing this. There's a great opportunity for a great win for the government available if – if, Mr. Speaker, a big if – they will put their pride in their pocket just a little bit and say: you know, we didn't get this right. But they've got a great defence, and I'll give it to you right now. You already know what it is. It says: "But we listened to Albertans. We recognize that they are our boss. We want to do the right thing for Albertans. We want people to be safe on farms. We want people to be safe on ranches. We want to put legislation in place that farmers and ranchers will support.”

Mr. Speaker, if farmers and ranchers have the opportunity to help build the legislation and if they're truly listened to, they will support it. The government could probably save a bunch of money after that on inspectors because you'll have a bunch of farmers and ranchers that'll be obeying the legislation because they support it. Let's face it. They're going to obey most of it if not all of it anyway because they are law-abiding citizens, but wouldn't it be nice if it wasn't painful for them to obey the law? Wouldn't it be nice if the law made sense because their input was heavily considered when the law was written? There's a big win here, folks. There's a big win available for this government and on their timeline. Again I'll go back because I just can't get past that 18 to 24 months. It was music to my ears. It means the government has time to do the right thing.

Now, the wrong thing, Mr. Speaker, would be to ram this through. You know what? I'm sure it's well intentioned. I'm not accusing anybody of anything. But the wrong thing to do would be to ram this through and then talk to farmers and ranchers and maybe find out that some of the common-sense things that you could only know by working on a farm or managing a farm or working on a ranch or managing a ranch are somehow inconsistent with what's in black and white in the amendment. Wouldn't that be a shame? Wouldn't it be a shame if the government's best intentions were unable to be fulfilled because they were too stubborn to wait to put the legislation through?

Wouldn't it be better – it really would – if the government said: “We're going to spend the 18 to 24 months before”? Because – you know what? – when you pass legislation, it becomes cement. Yes, you can come back to the Legislature and chip away the cement and change it – governments do it all the time; that's what we do here – but wouldn't it be better if we didn't have to do that? Wouldn't it be better if, before we put the legislation in cement, the people that work the farms, that work the ranches, that feed the rest of Alberta and feed the rest of the world – Mr. Speaker, Alberta farmers and ranchers produce way more food, way more livestock than Albertans can possibly eat because they are industrious, they work hard, and they're gifted because they're in Alberta, and it doesn't get any better than being in Alberta. It really doesn't. You know what? We're blessed. Alberta has been successful because we're blessed. We've also been successful because the people in Alberta are industrious, hard working, honest, entrepreneurial, excellent people. Partner that up with a government that cares and listens, and who knows how far we could go?

The listening. I'm sure the government cares. I don't agree with the government a lot. I disagree with them on a lot of things, but I've never doubted that they care. I've never doubted that they want to do the right thing. It's just that sometimes they're a little stubborn. Right now they're a little stubborn, Mr. Speaker. They're a little ideological. But there's still time, and that's why I'm on my feet. I'm just trying to help them understand how instead of being the villains of a story, they could be the heroes of the story. It's a pretty simple choice, and it's pretty easy to shift gears from villain to hero just by listening and talking to the people that you care about, the farmers and ranchers, talking about them being successful, talking about them being safe, talking about their families being safe, talking about their children being safe, talking about having coverage that employees may need and want. There are so many wins available. I can't stop talking about it because it's just so huge.

Mr. Speaker, it's important to have this conversation because there's misinformation out there. I saw this morning on the news before I came in that the leader of the Alberta Federation of Labour had a bit of a media event, and at the event the leader of the AFL laid on a desk or a table or a podium 112 pairs of gloves, representing, I believe, what the news story said were 112 people that have died in farm and ranch events. At least as far as I can tell, I'm not sure that that union leader is keeping up because if he read the amendment that was put on the table yesterday, it did some of the right things. It excluded farm and ranch families, and it excluded Hutterite colonies. So if you do all of that, then half or two-thirds of those pairs of gloves would have had to come off that desk because that wouldn't apply to the current legislation.

That doesn't mean that these changes are bad. I'm not saying that. All I'm saying is that at the media event the AFL had, they haven't kept up with what the government is doing because the 112 pairs of gloves are in no way consistent with what the legislation is that the government is trying to put on the table. It isn't. In fact – and I'm trying to be as generous as I can – it's not consistent with the numbers that the Premier has been using in the House about farm and ranch deaths over the last few days either. With the amendments – and the amendments seem to be an improvement, in fairness – the legislation is in no way consistent with the numbers that the Premier has been using in the House about farm and ranch deaths and injuries. When you consider all of that, it really might be time to take a breath and start over, Mr. Speaker.

You know what? Farmers and ranchers have had their feelings hurt, and rightly so. I hate to raise it except that it's important. The labour minister said yesterday at the news conference – and I quote based on what I wrote down, so if there's an error there, it's all mine. But I was sitting right there, so I'm pretty sure I'm right. She said: we are creating a culture of safety. Mr. Speaker, farmers and ranchers should have been really offended by that. The assumption from that silly statement – I was going to use another word, but let's go with “silly” – is that farmers and ranchers have no culture of safety now. I couldn't think of a crazier, less respectful thing for a minister of the Crown, for the government of Alberta, to say in front of a media conference and a microphone, to suggest that farmers and ranchers don't care about safety. I'm sure that probably the minister regrets it. Nonetheless, I haven't heard an apology for it yet, and I think that's overdue.

You know how that minister could apologize and kind of make it right? By saying: “We are going to take the time to talk to farmers and ranchers. We're going to take this legislation off the table. We are going to respect the hundred-plus years of history, the hundred-plus years of caring about safety, the hundred-plus years of feeding Albertans, the hundred-plus years of caring about the safety of your children by stopping and listening to you, the experts.” As bad as it is, it can be made better, Mr. Speaker. It's really quite simple how to do it.

We're at a place, you know – and, again, I'm trying to give the government as much credit as possible because they haven't done everything wrong. I think, actually, they're coming to the conclusion that the previous government didn't do everything wrong. They probably still think they did a lot of things wrong, but I think they've finally come to the conclusion that they didn't do everything wrong. So I'll try to give equal credit to the current government. They are coming around. They just haven't quite crossed the divide where they can be the hero of the story instead of the villain.

I'll tell you what. The other thing that I heard a couple of government private members say the other day was: well, if we do this, the farmers and ranchers won't remember in three and a half years. [interjections] I know. I know. It's hard to say it with a straight face, but I actually did hear that, and I'm not going to bust the members on the other side that said that because I'm a little afraid for their future in the party that they've chosen. But, Mr. Speaker, they don't know farmers and ranchers very well. Three and a half years? I think that if they are mistreated, it will be 30 years, and they'll still remember.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under 29(2)(a), any questions to the Member for Calgary-Hays? The Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the comments from the hon. member. He alluded to a demonstration that had occurred yesterday with regard to 112 gloves that were laid on a table. Of course, I had heard about this and had made the decision to go and see what this demonstration was about. Essentially, what they had done was that since 2009 for each fatality that had taken place in the agricultural industry, there was a set of gloves. They went a step further and broke them up into each separate year, so in 2009 they had a stack of gloves, in 2010, and so forth. I have to admit that it was a little unsettling. Of course, the other thing that the hon. member had mentioned was that, you know, based on certain criteria, maybe we could take out half of those gloves. You might be right; you might not be. I don't know. But I'd still like to know.

Mr. Speaker, even if we did take out half the gloves, there are still 60 gloves left, 60 fatalities, 60 families where their loved one did not come home. So I have trouble looking inside of myself and thinking about taking away a potential safety net and having to stand in front of those families and tell them I had a chance to fix this, that I had a chance to offer you something.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane had mentioned about a family whose wife spent six years in litigation to finally get a decision. What was the result? They destroyed a farm. Mr. Speaker, I'm just wondering if the hon. member might be willing to tell me just how many families he'd be willing to stand in front of and say: we had a chance to put in those safety nets, but we decided to wait over the next year. And based on those figures, there was an average of 18 people. Is the hon. member prepared to stand in front of up to 18 people and say, "We could have had those there, but we decided not to"?

Mr. McIver: I'm glad the hon. member raised this because it does really put this to a point where it belongs here. Unfortunately, he's left himself open because I would say: why haven't you acted when there's a person a day dying from fentanyl? We point that out in this House every day. Every single day.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's own party says that they're going to wait 18 to 24 months, and I agree with that as long as they listen to farmers and ranchers before they do it. Every life is important. Every farm family is important. Every injury is important. It all matters. But legislation by itself doesn't fix it.

Alberta's injury and death statistics are as good as other provinces', and we don't have the legislation, so there's no magic bullet here. I'm not sure. This legislation might be a good idea, particularly to listen to farmers and ranchers, even though it may not save a single life, and it may not save a single injury. There are some good elements to it if you just take the time to talk to farmers and ranchers and get it right.

I'm not even asking you to go slower than your own schedule. Your minister said: 18 to 24 months. I'm saying: use them wisely, talk to farmers, talk to ranchers, get their support, get their buy-in, and then maybe we'll all have a chance of helping them save a life or an injury. Even then there's no guarantee that we'll save a single life or an injury, but your best chance is if you talk to farmers and ranchers, bring them onboard, get their support, have them understand it, and work with them to put in things to educate them and their kids and their families.

You can be the heroes of this story. Don't be the villains. Be the heroes, please. You've got a chance. Your own timeline is 18 to 24 months. I'm running out of time, but that's my appeal to you. We're not even asking you to slow down. We're just asking you to win instead of lose when you do this. Please win. I shouldn't be telling you that. I should say that I want you to lose so that we can get rid of you. But you know what? I love Alberta. I love farmers and ranchers. I love the three meals a day that farmers and ranchers provide for me.

This government could be the hero of the story if you'll just slow down and listen. Please do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and speak against Bill 6. Just with regard to building a culture of safety . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, it's to the amendment that you're speaking?

Mr. van Dijken: Exactly.

The Speaker: Okay.

Mr. van Dijken: We need to send this to committee. We need to take the time to do it right. We need to consult with the farmers and ranchers. We need to do it right. As the hon. member before me stated, when we do legislation poorly, you put legislation into concrete, and you chip away at it and chip away at it and chip away at it to try to get it right after the fact. We need to do it right now.

How do you build a culture of safety on the farms? I'm going to allude to some of my experience with building a culture of food safety on farms. Alberta quality pork is a program that's focused on food safety. How did this program get built? Over two years of consultation with producers and with industry and with processors. Take the time to do the consultation. Get the farmers to help build the legislation, build the regulations, and then after the fact, you already have buy-in because they've had the opportunity to put their words into the process. They've had the opportunity and the respect that's due to them, being part of the industry, to actually build something that will help build the culture of food safety.

We can do the same thing here if we do it right. But if we do it wrong, there's going to be continual push-back and more push-back and more push-back. So it's time to wake up and recognize the problem that is in front of this House at this time. The government needs to start to listen and recognize that they have to get to the country and consult with the farmers and ranchers, that this legislation has the largest impact on.

Now to my notes. Mr. Speaker, Bill 6 is a bill with sweeping changes in one of Alberta's most important segments of the economy, the agricultural sector. My family and I are extremely proud and thankful to be farmers in Alberta. As recent history has shown, with protests over the closing days of November and into December, this bill has been the subject of considerable ire for many thousands of Albertans who have long and proud histories in this noble occupation of farming and agriculture. I'm proud to represent so many voices who might not otherwise be heard in the process of creating legislation intended to enhance safety for farming families and their workers, although with all the deficiencies pointed out today and to date and with the constant changes being introduced, I would question if safety on Alberta farms is really the true intention of this bill.

As I stated yesterday in my member's statement, the Premier has chosen to introduce a bill so wide open to interpretation that no Albertan knows what her true intentions are and what will come next. Bill 6 legislation does not exist on all farms in every other jurisdiction in Canada, as the Premier would have us believe. As the minister stated on November 27, the legislation as it's put forward today gives them the flexibility to develop common-sense regulations. Essentially, Mr. Speaker, it gives them the flexibility to do whatever they want to after they get the bill passed, and that is concerning.

I'd like to share some words spoken by the hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade in May 2014, when he sat in opposition.

The other issue, quite frankly, is that gender is not something that should be left to the whim of the cabinet to decide behind closed doors, without consultation and without assurance of proper consultation. I would imagine that there are several members of this House that are quite surprised to learn that these types of decisions will be made behind closed doors and through regulation, not through legislation.

While his specific comments are directed towards a separate issue, that does not make the words ring any less true for any other group that will be affected by the enactment of particular legislation. In fact, this government while in opposition had plenty to say about the importance of crafting transparent legislation out here in the open debate of the Legislature instead of behind-closed-doors-solely-with-cabinet regulations.

Albertans who work on farms are no less deserving of legislation that is properly drafted with specific input from experts from around Alberta, from the industry, whether it's oil or gas, manufacturing, the service industry, or any other, and, in this case, agriculture. These Albertans do not deserve pronouncements from on high, to have specifics sorted out through regulations when we are capable of doing so much better.

Here's another quote for you, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. We have heard concerns from care providers, service providers, and PDD individuals that these regulations were brought in without proper consultation. What we have done is extended the compliance deadline for another six months. We are in the process of putting together a consultation plan, which I will have more to say about fairly soon.

Thank you.

If those words sound familiar, Mr. Speaker, they should. They were spoken in question period on November 16, just three weeks ago. The hon. Human Services minister recognized that the House had failed in its duty to provide Albertans with the best law possible and was seeking additional time for proper consultation with those people with expertise in dealing with PDD individuals and their needs. As with so many issues, they certainly talked up the importance of consultation on that matter.

So I'm curious, Mr. Speaker, as to why this government is willing to risk getting it wrong on this piece of legislation. Instead, they should take the proper time and get specific industry knowledge up front so that regulations aren't necessary to define the tone and shape of the law, but the law itself can be made to do so. If we get it right, the law will be able to tell us what the true intent of the law is, not where we're continually coming after the fact, trying to explain, trying to identify what our true intent was. It just leads to a lot of miscommunication if we do not have proper legislation in place.

The MLAs from the NDP who had served their constituents in the days before May 5 of this year, so vocal in their criticisms of how legislation was introduced and pushed through without proper consultation, are now even going against their own previous actions to correct this improper practice.

The Minister of Treasury Board and Finance travelled Alberta to gather input from Albertans as to what should be part of Budget 2015, Mr. Speaker, an act that the government wasted no time promoting with great fanfare. In fact, I understand that this government is so committed to promoting their budget to Albertans that they have decided to throw a great deal of tax dollars at that project.

One of the inputs to climate change and royalty reviews is where we saw the creation of specific panels in order to give Albertans a chance to voice their opinions on these major issues. This is a major issue in the agricultural community. This is their livelihood. This is their families. This is their culture. We are playing with their culture. We cannot afford to get this wrong.

Consider that these things were things the government had campaigned on and not hidden, secretive platform planks. If it's worth consulting with the energy industry and other affected stakeholders on these issues that we knew about, how much more important it is that we should consult on this legislation, that has blindsided so many.

Of the panels created, one has reported; the other is due to release its findings by the end of December. On November 26, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour was quoted in the Calgary Herald, saying, "It's really important for us to hear from Albertans and we want to make sure there's enough spaces for everybody who's interested."

The speed with which Bill 6 is being pushed through this Assembly, then being enacted before the end of 2015 appears to be just another manifestation of orange being the new blue. Ideals and principles are fine until you gain political power, it seems; then do whatever you see best fits heedless and regardless of the consequences.

Mr. Speaker, not a single person will argue the importance of safe operations, not in this House and certainly not out there on family farms. That being said, with so many people standing up and stating that they have not been consulted on an issue that affects their very livelihood, their families, their communities, and their culture, it causes me great concern that full and proper advance consultation with the industry is not what is wanted in this House. The agricultural sector has been singled out and treated differently than how this government treated others before it in their short tenure as leaders of this province.

Thirteen government MLAs represent constituents who have significant interests in the agricultural community. I can scarcely believe that these thousands of concerned and vocal citizens, the ones we have all heard out in front of this building, are only present in ridings represented by opposition members. I know you are hearing the same things I am, and I only wish that these government backbenchers would show the courage to speak up for their concerned constituents. The responsibilities of the office of MLA are to represent all of your constituents, not just the ones you agree with politically.

This bill needs to go to committee so that actual industry experts, the people, the stakeholders involved can be involved in making sure these issues get dealt with correctly. This bill needs to be given the proper time for its creation and passage so that the voices of all Albertans are heard before we get into this building to do our work, not after. The alternative, passing Bill 6 prior to such input, has a very high potential to cement in the minds of farmers and agricultural sector workers that the NDP government is every bit as paternalistic and patronizing of the people subject to the laws it enacts as the PC government they swept from power. Albertans didn't choose orange to be the new blue. Albertans made a change so that things could be done better. Please do it better. Send this bill to committee. Help to rebuild the trust in the agricultural sector in this province.

Trust, Mr. Speaker, is built out of mutual respect, and what is being voiced at this time from the agricultural community, from the farmers and the ranchers that this bill will have the most effect on, is a segment that doesn't feel like they've been heard, that they have not been respected, that their views and their opinions are not of validity here. All they're saying is to respect the people, respect the communities that they come from, respect the culture that has developed over 100 years in this province, and come and talk to them. Come and consult before legislating this type of legislation, essentially pushing it down their throats.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a)?
St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. You talked a little bit about the consultation work around persons with developmental disabilities and how it is that a government could take on that process and not a process similar with Bill 6. Well, the reality is that the legislation for persons with developmental disabilities was already passed. What was not done by the previous government was consultation on the regulations, and as a result the regulations do not reflect the needs of the people. I believe that's what we're trying to get to and what we're trying to do here, to get through this so we can actually have meaningful consultations with the experts that you continuously pop up and tell us about, and then we can craft regulations that work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. van Dijken: I think what's missing here, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that we're developing legislation, and the very people that it's going to impact the most, the farmers and the ranchers, have not had that due consultation. To be quite honest with you, with this government being in power for seven months, they need to start building an environment of trust. The people in the country, the way this is being forced down their throats, are essentially feeling like this government does not respect them, and they don't trust this government to do what's right for them.

There's a lack of experience in the cabinet, there's a lack of experience in the caucus of the current government that would allow common sense to come to regulation that will be developed in the future, and I believe a lot of that common sense comes from experience in the agricultural community itself. A lot of the safety programs that are already in place were developed over years and years of consultation within the industry-specific groups, whether they're the beef operations, the dairy operations, the chicken operations, the hog operations, the grain operations. These are things that are learned over many, many years, handed down from generation to generation to generation. A lot of people don't recognize that, and these are things that our farming communities do not want to lose through this legislation, so it's really critical that we have the ability to continue to operate in a way that continues to hand those safety culture aspects down through the generations.

In order to do this properly, this government needs to regain the trust of those people in the country. They need to build respect, start to get respect, do the proper consultation, do what is right here, be heard. The people want to be heard, and right now it's as if the people are not being heard.

I would really try to encourage this government to slow down, as we've heard from so many of the groups already through letters. The municipalities are concerned. The very industry-specific lobby groups, associations that represent industry are concerned that this is going way too fast and that they need to have more time to actually digest what is being thrown at them and to understand what implications will come from this.

I really encourage the government to take a look at bringing this and putting this before committee to get it right and then proceed. If we don't listen to the people, it's going to be very hard to get the people's buy-in after the fact.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), questions?

Mr. Nixon: The member talked about trust. I'll be quick because I know he's running out of time. That's what I heard when I was back home. One of the reasons I think we need consultation is how much this government has lost trust with the people this legislation affects. One of the things that they're most upset about is that this Premier has stood inside this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, for the last couple of weeks and continued to stand up and say that she's trying to rectify a great wrong that farmers and ranchers have been doing to their employees for the last hundred years, which is an absolutely ridiculous and insulting thing to say to my neighbours and friends. I would like my good friend, who is a farmer, to comment on how that is making people feel back home.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you for the question. I think it has everything to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege to be able to rise today and speak a little bit about the referral motion on Bill 6. I don't have a lot of time. I do have some information that I would like to share, and I'll try to share as much as I possibly can.

I think that what has been said in this House has been very clear, specifically relating to consultation and making sure that Albertans feel they actually participate in this process. Today I will be dealing with several matters relating to this bill and to the referral. Specifically, I will introduce it. I will take a position on the bill, Mr. Speaker, and on why I can't support this particular bill. I will go through the specifics of the bill relating to employment standards, labour relations, occupational health and safety, and, of course, the WCB portion of the bill.

Then I will talk a little bit about jobs that are exempt from WCB legislation. You'll be surprised. There are over 170 different categories of jobs exempt from WCB legislation in Alberta, including, of course, unions, Mr. Speaker. I don't know if you're aware of it, but many unions are exempted, including the Alberta Federation of Labour. It's kind of odd that they would come forward with such a dramatic pleasure statement on this particular bill, endorsing it and thinking it's so great, when they themselves are exempt from WCB. Why they think it should be on farmers' heads I'm not quite sure. If it's good enough for farmers, why is it not good enough for them? Why, indeed, would the government take a position, especially if they themselves are exempt from that? I will of course go through that with some interest because I've gone through it a couple of times already and was surprised to see all of the exemptions that are currently in place for WCB in Alberta. Then, of course, I will deal with the number of farms currently in NDP-held ridings and how those people feel about it.

I don't know if you're aware, Mr. Speaker, but I had the pleasure last night, speaking of referral motions, to get somewhere in the neighbourhood of over 16,000 people on a phone call last night, all from NDP ridings, all from ridings that are held by the NDP that are farmers, and I can tell you clearly that the amount of polling that was done on that particular phone call was 88 to 92 per cent relating to the questions we asked. Some of those questions were on how they felt about this bill and how they felt about consultation on this bill. To see, you know, first of all, that we would poll exclusively NDP-held ridings – NDP-held ridings, Mr. Speaker – and that we would get in the 90s, for most of the questions, against the bill, certainly I would think the government should take notice of that if nothing else.

In fact, I see the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater. I know that member and his father. I would just say to him that, clearly, people in his particular riding were contacted, and they were very excited and very negative about this bill. I would suggest that he take the opportunity along with the other 11 MLAs from the NDP side, that represent more than 11,000 Albertans, and talk to the Premier, talk to the House leader, talk to the three or four members of the NDP that actually have any experience whatsoever in this place and that had the opportunity before to legislate and to listen to their constituents and to persuade them that maybe, just maybe, they should listen to Albertans and have the opportunity to send this particular bill to committee.

The reason I say that, Mr. Speaker, is especially because the original position of the government and the Premier was that this was a great bill and that it was overdue, that this bill was absolutely necessary. They came forward with the bill, and they trumpeted how good the bill was and how wonderful it was and how great it was going to be for Alberta and Alberta's future and how Alberta and the farmers and ranchers in Alberta had been waiting for 95 or a hundred years.

Actually, Mr. Speaker, you may not know this, but my family has been farming in Alberta for over a hundred years. That's right. We have one of those homesteads down in Michichee that has actually been farming for over a hundred years. My father was a rancher, and my mother was a farmer. So I do have some understanding of it, not nearly as much as the people that actually farm and ranch today, with all the challenges they go through. As my father used to say to me when I asked him why he got out of ranching: son, if I won $10 million, I'd ranch until it was all gone. It's a tough life. It's not that easy to work on the land, to be a farmer and rancher. To have things thrown in front of you is just not the way to do it in Alberta, especially not without proper consultations.

Mr. Speaker, if this was such a great bill when it was originally brought forward – what I find difficult is that the bill was originally five pages long. Five pages. And it was a great bill, right? The Premier said that it was a great bill. Her entire caucus said that it was a great bill. They couldn't understand why we would speak against it, why we would come to this House and stay until 1:30 in the morning. It's because, as you know, the only power that we have in this place as opposition is the power to speak. We have the power to speak, and of course the government has the power to legislate. They have the power to call the bills when they want, to speak on what bills they want, and to allocate time on what bills they want. They can decide at any time to pull this bill, and the only opportunity that we have to speak to the bill is, like now, to stand up at 10 to 11, after we were here until 1:30 in the morning, and speak to the bill and to try to slow the process down so that farmers and ranchers can have their say because they haven't had their say.

Whether it be on the Legislature steps outside here, where there were a thousand people and then 1,500 people – we've had three different rallies here. There have been rallies and protests right across the province, in every corner of the province, hundreds upon hundreds and thousands upon thousands of farmers and ranchers coming to tell people that they're not happy. Clearly, some people have said, as my reports have been, that most of these rallies were gong shows. Basically, they were come-and-be-told meetings. You come, and you're going to be told what you're going to get as far as legislation, without any ability to have input to change that.

If it was such a good bill when it originally came out with five pages but now the government has come forward with six pages of amendments – now, how can you say that it was such a good bill before if you're now bringing forward more pages of amendments than the original bill was? Mr. Speaker, they've had seven months to come up with the bill, the five pages that were so wonderful that farmers were going to bend over backwards to implement immediately because it was going to be so good for farmers and ranchers. Then they took a couple of days and came out with six pages of amendments to that wonderful bill.

Mr. Speaker, the other part about this bill that's so interesting – you know, I couldn't believe it at first, so I actually had my staff highlight it and make them different colours. I just couldn't believe that there are, I'll say, two pages to the legislative part of Bill 6, that can be changed by legislation only. That means that if they want to change those parts, which are two pages, they have to come back to this place, and they have to deal with the Wildrose caucus again, who, of course, is a strong opposition and will represent farmers and ranchers, and then we can debate it, and we can bring it back to farmers and ranchers and see how they feel about these parts of the bill, those two pages of the bill that have to go through legislative changes to be changed. They have to go through the legislative process, and again we would have more opportunity to have time to debate this bill. We'd have time to talk to farmers and ranchers and go across the province to hold more rallies and more town halls so that we can understand what ranchers and farmers want.

Mr. Speaker, the disturbing part is that when you look at the bill, there are one, two, three, four parts of the bill that are shaded in a different colour, and those four parts are regulations. Now, most Albertans don't realize this, but you can change regulations any time you want. Those people over there can do it without even talking to us, without doing anything related to consultation, not even letting farmers and ranchers know. That's not unlike what they're proposing in this bill. Believe it or not, they're going to make this bill active as law on January 1 but have no regulations, so farmers don't even know what's going on. We're sitting across here, just a few feet away from them, and we still don't know what's going on. We still don't know the specifics of the amendments or how they're planning on going forward with regulation, yet in the bill they've put four pages of regulations that can be changed any time they want without any notice to Albertans whatsoever. Any time. You know, that is not democracy. That's not the rule of law. That's not making sure that Albertans get the opportunity to speak their mind.

Now, we have over 40,000 family farms in Alberta. They're spread all over Alberta. I think there are 43,000 family farms. Now this bill is going to change their lives. For multigenerational farms it's going to change their entire culture, how they believe that they should do things. The thing that I want to bring to the attention of the government is that those 43,000 family farms probably represent over 200,000 Albertans, voting-age Albertans. Yes. That's right: 200,000 voting-age Albertans that are very upset right now. I want this government to have an opportunity to go again in another election and actually not be devastated, because that's what I see, clearly, is going to happen. They're ignoring farms. They're ignoring farmers and ranchers. I've heard from a number of people in Edmonton and Calgary, in Fort McMurray, in many communities right across this province that they're attached to the farm. Their uncle or their grandfather or maybe just a friend has a farm, and they have fond memories of going to the farm and milking a cow or tossing bales. I remember, Mr. Speaker, because I did it. I remember working on a farm very hard, long hours. It's not an easy thing to do, to have that kind of constant, necessary attention.

Now, I did have a speech, Mr. Speaker, but I don't think I need it today because I'm pretty passionate about this. I'm concerned. You know, in grade 10 I remember going to Vilna, Alberta, just outside of Smoky Lake, having a good friend there with a farm and working on that farm from time to time. They had animals. I asked them a question in my 16-year-old lack of understanding. I said: "When do you go on vacation?" "Vacation? Well, there's no such thing as a vacation for farmers. You have to hire somebody to go on a vacation." Hire somebody. You have to hire somebody to go on a vacation.

Mr. Mason: If you have animals.

Mr. Jean: I hear from the House leader on the other side: if you have animals. Well, that's not the case of any farm I've ever been on. All farms need attention because farmers are the stewards of the land, not just the animals but the land. They take care of the land, and they have to be there.

When I ask a farmer about when they go on vacation, they say to me: "Well, the only people that would be capable of running my farm, of taking care of my animals, my livestock, or what I'm growing is another farmer, and it's going to take me just as long to teach them what to do on my farm as it would for me to do it myself." Of course, they would have to pay that other farmer. And who's going to take care of that other farmer's farm? That's the problem. That's why it's a cultural issue.

The government doesn't understand the cultural issue. They don't understand that these people work together at calving season or branding season or when there's harvest. They work together. They trade labour, and sometimes they pay people. They keep track of hours. They T4 those people. In fact, most farmers T4 themselves and – surprise, surprise – they T4 their spouses. Do you know why they do that? Because they're sophisticated. They know what they're doing. They get accounting advice. They get professional advice. They get advice on how best to divide their income because, Mr. Speaker, as you know because you're from a farming area, farming is not something that pays great dividends. It's not something that pays a lot of money. I don't see a lot of multibillionaire farmers out there. Sometimes there are increases and decreases in land that enable somebody to take advantage of a situation like that, but the truth is that many farmers work 12-, 14-, 18-hour days in order to do what's necessary for their farm to be viable.

I remember a time not that long ago, just 10 years ago, when farmers in Alberta were discussing how difficult it was to stay afloat. I remember in 2005, Mr. Speaker, when I was a Member of Parliament, speaking to farmers in Athabasca-Redwater. They were crying to me, this couple. They were in their 50s, and they were crying. They were talking about how they couldn't decide whether they were going to be able to go to church that Sunday because they couldn't afford the fuel because of the situation with farming in Alberta. Now, it's turned around a little bit, but it hasn't turned around that far. That's why I'm very concerned about the four pages of regulations in this proposed act, this bill, that could be changed by them at any time whatsoever, without any consultation, without any ability for anybody to understand what's going on until OHS officers come to their farm and shut them down. There are 43,000 farmers.

They say that they've been waiting a hundred years or 95 years to get this in. Well, what's wrong with another 95 days, just a couple more months so we can have proper consultations, so we can talk to Albertans, farmers and ranchers, OH and S officers, WCB officers, people that are going to be right in this process, not just unions? I mean, I know they have an ideological agenda. They want unions to be on everything. They want unions to be on big farms, small farms, medium-size farms. They want unions everywhere, Mr. Speaker. We know that's their ideological agenda. But, truly, this is a way of life. This is something that is very important to Albertans, and we need to make sure that Albertans are properly consulted.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I did do some research last night. I sat on the Finance Committee federally in Ottawa, and referral motions are, of course, very consistent processes in Houses right across Canada, legislative Houses. This is a parliamentary democracy. Well, at least you'd think so, not necessarily in this case because democracy has gone from this place as far as this government is concerned, in my opinion. [some laughter] I hear them laughing on the other side, but there are only three or four people over there that have any experience whatsoever with any form of government except for looking from the outside in. You can laugh all you like, but I'll tell you clearly that this is not like democracy in the parliamentary democracy system.

Now, let me tell the House leader because he's twerking out, Mr. Speaker. He doesn't understand either that there are actually jobs that you get to do on the backbench. You don't just sit there and parrot what they say. You actually get an opportunity to decide things from time to time, to vote, and to represent your constituents. Yes, that's right; you have constituents. This person is not your boss here. The Premier is not your boss. As you know, our bosses are the people of Alberta, and that's why we listen to the people of Alberta. That's why we're here until 1:30 in the morning. We don't want to be here. We want to be with our families. As you know, this is a family-friendly environment, right? Not. It's not.

The truth is that this government, being ideological, knows what it's like to be in opposition, so they took away the opposition's opportunities to debate things properly. That's why we're sitting from 9 a.m. until 1:30 in the morning. That's why we will consistently do that, so they can shove through all of these things they want to and not give the opposition parties the opportunity to debate them fully so that Albertans can see what's going on. That's why Albertans right now are holding rallies right across the province.

Now, tens of thousands of people, Mr. Speaker, were on the phone call last night objecting to this bill. Tens of thousands of people have been in the rallies, not just one rally but multiple rallies right across the province. They've driven their farm equipment on highway 2. I know that farmers and ranchers have a lot better things to do than watch us in this place, yet we have record attendance on the television. Record attendance. Television, rallies, blockades as far as up and down roads: we don't want that kind of thing.

That's why we're saying to you: pay attention. Pay attention. This is about the people that you represent, folks. This is about the people of Alberta that say: "You're not doing it right. Stop. Slow down. Take a step back. Breathe and listen." Don't just tell them what to do. There's nobody on that side that actually makes a living from farming. None. Zero. That's right: none. We have farmers on this side, but I'm not even saying that they're right. I think they are, but I'm not saying that they are. I'm saying: listen to farmers and ranchers. There are eight agricultural groups that oppose this bill, eight Alberta agricultural groups that have said: "Don't pass this bill. Step back. Consult." Eight of them.

How about communities, Mr. Speaker? They take the time to consult with communities. The Municipal Government Act: they're going to go around; they're going to take a year, apparently, to consult with communities. How many months, how many days have they consulted with farmers and ranchers? Zero. Your come-and-be-told session is not consultation. It's being told. It's dictatorship. That's not what we want to see in this place. We want to see the opportunity for citizens to partake in democracy, to have the opportunity, this referral motion, to go to committee so it can be studied.

You know, I was talking about the federal Finance Committee before. I sat on a lot of committees – a lot of committees – over a 10-year period. This one that I sat on was the Finance Committee. I couldn't believe it when I went through this, Mr. Speaker, and I saw how consultations actually happen. It talks about the federal fiscal situation and projections, and it talks about focusing on fiscal sustainability and economic growth. I'm a bit of a geek, so I read through this stuff. When you go through it, you say: well, what report is this from? Where does this come from?

It's 107 pages of discussion, and on the back page it's – wow – Liberal recommendations. During a Conservative government there were Liberal recommendations in this report. You know what? If you look fairly closely – you're not going to believe it – there are NDP recommendations in this report. The Conservative government under Stephen Harper even listened to the NDP, and they wrote a report after the committee met. It's hard to believe – isn't it? – that Stephen Harper has more democracy than the NDP government in Alberta, that he offered to the NDP opposition in Ottawa the opportunity to discuss, and that's because it took months to prepare this report through committees.

You know, if you look at it, under background it talks about small business and tax compliance, and it talks about changes. Section B: Changes Proposed by Witnesses Invited to Address "Focusing on Fiscal Sustainability and Economic Growth." Witnesses: changes proposed by witnesses. Section C: Changes Proposed by Witnesses Invited to Address Issues Other Than "Focusing on Fiscal Sustainability and Economic Growth." Witnesses: proposals. Now, that's just sections B and C. I haven't even gotten past section C, and already eight of the items out of 12 are about witnesses proposing changes.

Then we get to chapter 3, Helping Vulnerable Canadians. It talks about aboriginal Canadians, beneficiaries of charities, children, youth, and those other things and people that are so vulnerable that we want to make sure that we listen to them. Under section B it has: Changes Proposed by Witnesses. Unique, isn't it? So changes proposed by witnesses, witnesses that come before a committee and give testimony, experts, whether they be fiscal experts or experts on aboriginal people or farmers or ranchers. Unique, isn't it? Witnesses participating in democracy. Mr. Speaker, those witnesses, that came forward, were aboriginal peoples, charities, children's advocates, youth advocates, student advocates, organizations for disabled persons, low-income Canadians, seniors, women. Then you go to section C: Changes Proposed by Witnesses Invited to Address Issues Other Than "Helping Vulnerable Canadians." Witnesses: more testimony. Now, I'm only on page 2 of an index four pages long: Changes Proposed by Witnesses Invited to Address "Supporting Research and Innovation." That's about committees, about committees participating.

I know that nobody over there has ever seen a committee participate because they go into a committee and they do what they're told. They parrot what they're given, and they vote how they are supposed to, supposed to by the Premier, not by the people of Alberta, who elected them, because there is no accountability there, and that's why nobody is going to get elected there. So I'm saying to you here: the Wildrose opposition, who's here to help, is reaching out to you and saying, "Here's a good strategy in the next election, for the next election." Listen to the people, the people that pay your salary, the people that elected you. You know, this is not a confidence vote. The government will not fall. Rats. It's not a confidence vote, which means that the government is not going to fall, so you could actually listen to your constituents and vote how they tell you to vote, because they are your bosses. The NDP government needs you more than you need them.

Mr. Speaker, I could just go through this, but the highlights are obvious. The majority of this entire report – again, a 107-page report – is about witnesses and about changing the testimony, and the report, the 107-page report, where there are Liberal and NDP suggestions and recommendations, is about changing it for witnesses, based on witness participation.

Now, you can't tell me that you had a great bill if you've changed it already, and your changes, your amendments are more than the bill was itself. Now your bill has more pages of regulations, that you can change at whim, than it actually has legislation. Is that the government that you want? Is that the government that you want us to be if we ever get that great privilege to be over there, or do you want that government, the PCs, to do it? Is that how you want to be governed for the future of our children and grandchildren, or do you want the participation of the people of Alberta? Those people will re-elect you or not based upon how you decide on this particular bill. I firmly believe it, and not just . . .

Mr. Westhead: Talk to the Speaker.

Mr. Jean: I am talking to the Speaker.

. . . on this bill but on all bills, like Bill 8, which, of course, Mr. Speaker, we'd like to see go to committee on a referral motion just like this. That's why it's very accurate for this because, of course, we want consultation for all the bills, whether it be teachers or farmers or ranchers or businesspeople. When you campaign on a promise – I agree – you have to follow through with that if it's the right thing to do. If this is the right thing to do, then they have to complete their promise, but let's get the details right. If you want WCB, OH and S to apply, then let's get the details right. Let's listen to the people that it affects.

An Hon. Member: They didn't campaign on this.

Mr. Jean: Yes, they didn't campaign on this.

Especially, then, if you see a good piece of legislation or a good initiative, bring it back a little bit. Just lower the tempo. Let's stop the people campaigning against you, which is happening: farmers against the NDP. We don't want to see that. We want to see a good democracy. We want the opportunity to have good and fulsome debate so that we get proper bills.

We have a job to do, just like you have a job to do, and we understand that job. Our job is to make sure that you get your job right, and that's why we're here today. That's why you've had to go until 1:30 in the morning, because farmers and ranchers and Albertans hired us to make sure that you get it right if we can, but you're not even listening to us. We're right across the aisle from you, and you're not listening to us. You're not listening to the third party, the fourth or fifth parties. It's fairly shocking.

In fact, the most shocking part is that these are some of the biggest rallies we've ever seen in Alberta, the biggest ones I've ever been part of or seen. This is certainly the most letters I've ever received on any single issue, Mr. Speaker, in 11 years as a parliamentarian, through the gun registry, through a lot of different issues, a lot of issues. This is the biggest I've ever seen, the most upset I've ever seen people.

Mr. Speaker, you know that second reading, of course, is the stage where MLAs are supposed to speak to the principles and purposes of a bill, and we know that the purpose of this bill is to change the way of life of farmers and ranchers in Alberta. That's what it's doing, and we're not sure why this government is so ideologically bent on doing exactly that when farmers and ranchers have been clear that the bill wasn't right the first time. The bill is not right the second time even though the amendments are more than the original bill. So, obviously, you didn't get the bill right. Now that you've already agreed that you made a mistake, why don't we just take the tempo down, go to farmers and ranchers, send this bill to committee, and have a referral motion approved? We have a great motion here. We all like it, don't we? Don't we like the referral motion? And it took a Wildrose MLA to propose that, to send it to committee.

Let's talk about committee, Mr. Speaker. We know that the government still has the majority of members on the committee, so they can still decide to do what they want, but democracy has an opportunity to be heard. The perception of democracy is very important. The reality is more important, but certainly nobody even believes that there's a perception of democracy here because nobody is being listened to. There is no venue for these people to be heard except in their own booked events in their communities, and there are a lot of them. There are some today. It's also an opportunity to review the methods a bill uses to achieve its principles and purpose and to express an opinion on them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I know it's going to be hard to believe, but I'm only on page 1. This government says that this is about farm safety. Well, if it was about farm safety, then why did they change the bill? Why are their amendments more than the original bill? Why have they now made it so that the regulations are contained inside the bill and they can change those regulations 15 minutes after they pass the bill? They can totally change the entire meaning of the bill and purpose of the bill 15 minutes after they pass the bill. What recourse do farmers and ranchers have? Zero. None. They can't even be heard. They don't get heard the first time. That's why farmers and ranchers are so upset, because you're not listening. You're not consulting. You're not giving them an opportunity to participate in something that is their way of life.

Safety is very important. I come from a culture of safety. A culture of safety, yes. In Fort McMurray safety is job number one. Syncrude, Suncor, every oil sands plant: there is nothing more important than safety. Nothing. People that aren't safe don't stay on the site. It's as simple as that.

I'm very proud as well that for 10 years I represented the largest percentage of union members in the country. I'm very proud of that. I got 72 per cent in the last federal election. So it's not about being antiunion. In fact, I thought one of the private unions came out with a great proposal, Mr. Speaker, as you're aware, and maybe this will come forward in the referral motion if, in fact, we get to go to committee and we can hear evidence from that particular union. That union proposed that there would be a zero increase for three years because they know that the fiscal position of this government and the fiscal position of oil now – I think it's down to $37 per barrel this morning – are bad. So they've proposed to the managers:

“Listen, we see what's going on. We're proposing to our members no increase for the next three years.” Now, that's good management. That's a good step by a union that understands the realities of the economy.

But, Mr. Speaker, what are we getting out of these people? We're not getting the issues of safety. We're certainly not getting issues of consultation. I don't understand why they wouldn't consult at this stage given how many opportunities Albertans have had to express themselves right across the province. I've seen the pictures – and I'm sure they have, too; I hope so – although we don't get much time outside of this place because we have to be in here. We've not as many members as they have over there. Hopefully, in the next election Albertans will remember that and bring more Wildrose members back here. But the truth is that we have to rely on social media to see what's going on. We see miles and miles of convoys of agricultural machinery on roads, highways, streets, parked outside of buildings where these consultations, or come-and-be-told meetings, are happening with the government.

I might remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the Wildrose MLAs have actually had more town halls just this last weekend, I believe, than all of the government members put together over the previous two. That's because we actually believe in democracy. We believe that the people of Alberta should have the opportunity to be heard. You know what? Ironically enough, they are our bosses. They are your bosses. They should be able to decide what is in legislation that affects their life, that changes their life, that changes their culture and their belief structure.

I know that this NDP government on the other side has not been to many farms, or if they have, they obviously haven't participated very well because they don't understand that farmers and ranchers want to participate in the changes that will affect their lives. It is a way of life; it's not just a job. They don't stop work at 5 o'clock. There's no punch clock. They don't get to go home at a certain time. They don't say: oh, Mr. Calf, Betsy, don't give birth at 2 in the morning and have a problem. They don't pick that. They don't have a time clock.

Some of the questions that have been brought forward were very amusing, Mr. Speaker, as I'm sure you know because you check social media as well, as all of us do. Some of the questions brought forward by the NDP participants in these meetings were laughable at best. You can check out Facebook to see what happened there. But it shows a clear understanding that they don't have any understanding of what's going on on farms and ranches across this province. I don't know who they're listening to, but it's certainly not farmers and ranchers.

What they don't understand – I think the most important thing is that ranches and farms are very complicated places. It's not like they run one machine, then go home, go to a lube shop, and get the oil changed. They do it themselves, Mr. Speaker. Very seldom does a farmer go to a heavy-equipment mechanic and say: fix this. That's because they are a heavy-equipment mechanic, and they fix it themselves. That's because they go and get the part themselves, and they install it themselves. That's because in between lunch being called and lunch being ready, they change the oil in their son's motorcycle or in the combine or the forklift. That's because their jobs are so varied. I don't think there's any job on the planet, frankly, that is more complicated and involves more different things, whether it be heavy equipment such as backhoes, like a 320 backhoe, or a dozer, a skid-steer, all of those things.

You'll find them all on a farm as well as a combine. You find them all there, whether it's scaffolding, heavy equipment, whether it is the chemicals that are found on farms, Mr. Speaker, and not just one or two types of chemicals but chemicals to keep their livestock healthy, chemicals to make sure that their farming is as productive as possible. Some of these chemicals are dangerous, and they do make sure that they're out of children's reach and out of reach of those people that shouldn't be playing with those chemicals.

Why are farms so safe in Alberta compared to the rest of the country on a per capita basis? Well, it's because it's their family, Mr. Speaker – there's nothing more important than keeping your family safe – and it's the reputation of their family. These family farms have been in their families for hundreds of years in some cases or at least a hundred anyway. That's a hundred years' worth of reputation. Nobody wants to see that reputation taken out in one stupid accident, and that's why they're so safe. Their kids are on that farm. That's why they want to make sure it's safe. It's their children, and nothing is more important than our children. Nobody is going to keep it safer than farmers and ranchers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you know, my oldest brother – he is in British Columbia now – raised llamas. Llamas are quite an interesting animal. My father raised cows, and my mom's family raised sheep for a couple of generations. I was actually raised in that family. Quite an interesting background. We farmed quite a few different things. In fact, my brother also raised dogs for a trapline that we had up in northern Alberta, and he also ran a lot of dog races, so he had about 20 or 30 dogs at one time. So we've raised a lot of different animals. I'll tell you that raising a llama and making a llama work so that he doesn't spit at you or stomp on your feet or bite you is a lot different than raising a horse or a pig or sheep. That's why farmers do an incredible amount of research and talk to their neighbours and talk to their friends, to make sure that they know what they're doing with the kind of animal that they're raising, whether it might even be an elk farm.

It's a very complicated process, and there are so many different idiosyncrasies to farming. That's why I wish that, you know, when Albertans do have an opportunity, they do call the minister of agriculture at 780.786.1997. That's 780.786.1997. If you have closed caption on, that should come right across the bottom of the line right here. I have a lot of other phone numbers, but you can find them on the website. I think that the NDP did take it down earlier this week. I would encourage you to call 780.786.1997 and talk to the minister and let him know what's going on. Now, I don't know if his phone still works. I know that ours are ringing off the hook, and we're asking them to call the NDP, so I don't know how many phone calls they're getting. But call the minister of agriculture.

He did say clearly in one of the meetings that happened last week that he thought that the bill should be pulled, and he was going to talk to caucus about it. Now, the bill has not been pulled. Caucus is not talking very much. In fact, we haven't seen them stand up and actually talk about how their farmers feel about this. We've had somebody stand up and say that they have a farmer that lives in Edmonton now that is in favour of this bill. Okay. Well, how about all the farmers that are against the bill, the 95 per cent of them that are against the bill, the 95 per cent of them that think this bill should stop, at the very least? In fact, I think that that number is closer to a hundred per cent, Mr. Speaker, that think that it should be stopped or slowed down.

Even the left-leaning columnists – I have to hold myself sometimes to stop myself from falling – are some of the people that are saying: slow down; change course; listen to the people. Left-leaning columnists, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I read a story this morning where one columnist out of Calgary was saying that Bill 6 is going to dog this government forever. I think what they meant was for three and a half years because that's forever for these guys. When even the left-leaning columnists come out and say that, that should give somebody pause, like an opportunity to slow down.

Maybe, just maybe, Albertans are right. Let's say that they're right. We think that they're right. If they're right – and we've already seen you change your mind once. Mr. Speaker, this government changed its mind once. As I mentioned, there are more pages of amendments than the actual bill, just recently in two days rushed through. If they are right and if you're wrong, not once but twice, maybe, just maybe, we could get a better bill if you held off a bit. Maybe we could get a bill that farmers and ranchers would actually like.

There are some laudable parts of this bill – there are, Mr. Speaker – but some of the parts of this bill are so interfering in their lives that it actually borders on dangerous. When I say dangerous, I mean this. When you stop listening, which means at a referral motion in committee, when you stop listening to your witnesses, when you stop listening to Albertans, when you stop listening to the people that elected you and that are looking to you for hope – I think Albertans were looking for hope, and they're not finding it – that's dangerous because that's when governments lose their authority to govern. They lose it. They can keep governing, but Albertans don't listen anymore. They lose their moral authority to govern because they're not listening to the people who elected them.

Now, I've seen governments, conservative governments in the past, come forward with legislation telling Albertans what they want or telling Canadians what they want. Well, we saw what happened in 1993 to a conservative government that told them what they wanted. Governments are not here to tell people what they want, Mr. Speaker. Governments are here to listen, act, and govern according to the best wishes and needs and desires of the people that they represent.

There is no other work environment like a farm, like a ranch. None. It is very, very complicated. It doesn't matter whether it's with the machinery, with the chemicals, the relationship between other farms and other ranches, with professional organizations, agricultural organizations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have to tell a little story. I know I don't have a lot of time left. I think I have about 40 minutes left, but that's going to go pretty quickly. I'm glad we've got a couple more amendments coming forward.

I remember when I was in Three Hills – I spent four years in Three Hills – and I would get up in the morning to go milk cows. I did work on a farm, Mr. Speaker, just like yourself and many people on this side of the House. I would get up at 5 o'clock in the morning, and I would travel about 20 minutes to Linden, just outside of Three Hills, and I'd milk cows, about 170 cows, if I remember correctly. We'd bring them in, and I'd be pretty tired but excited because I love animals and I love farms. We would milk those cows, and sometimes they had bad milk. We'd have to give the cow a shot, medicine, and we'd have to make sure we'd watch that milk carefully so we wouldn't contaminate the entire batch. We'd have to make sure it wasn't bad and that it was tested properly, and if it was bad, we'd obviously discharge it into the ground or into the sewer system so we'd only get good milk.

Now, why that is important, Mr. Speaker, is because you're trained there by farmers and ranchers, that care about the quality of the product that they put out. I would go in at 5:30 in the morning to milk those cows, spend a couple of hours milking those cows, and because you have to milk them again at night, that's a long day. Of course, OH and S might not let farmers milk in the morning and night. This new legislation might not let them do that. That's interesting. We'd sure like some more details on that, and I know farmers and ranchers would like it, too.

Then we'd go spend some time – and I know the number one or number two habit of farmers is to go make sure gophers don't exist anymore. So at the ripe age of 14, 15 I would go shoot gophers on that farm and then come back and do other farm work, whether it would be mending fences or making sure that the animals were kept separate or behaved properly – there would be just so many things – changing the oil on a motorbike or a forklift. The jobs would change dramatically from one job to the next job, and often there would be a lot of time off in between for a young guy like me.

Mr. Speaker, I don't think that I would be permitted to work in that kind of situation now unless there was a tremendous amount of legislation and regulations in place to govern my ability to or not to do that. I don't think I would be allowed under the proposed amendments by this government. In fact, I think most of the things that we did in those days – I had many friends there who are still friends of mine today – I would not be able to do.

After I had come back from farming and milking cows and doing all those wonderful things, picking rocks and shooting gophers, I would then go back to my friend's place. He had a honey farm. That's where I would stay on weekends. He had a honey farm, and I'd build frames on that honey farm, and I'd take the honey off. I would make sure that that honey, of course, was properly dealt with, hairnets and all that kind of thing. But, Mr. Speaker, under this legislation I wouldn't be able to do that either. I would not.

I learned how to do some very important things in my life during that period of time that have helped me in many, many different things. In fact, those particular lessons help me today because I understand that I am not an expert on farming and ranching. I am not, Mr. Speaker. I can promise you, from what I've seen, that there's nobody over there that's even close to being an expert.

So besides the Alberta Federation of Labour and some other unions, who are they consulting with? I know they're happy that unions are going to be all involved in big farms, small farms, medium-sized farms. They're all going to be unionized now. [laughter] That's what the bill says. It gives them the opportunity to do so. They laugh on the other side, Mr. Speaker, but the problem is that there's no certainty there. [interjections] We don't know, and they tried to give some certainty with the regulations. You know what? We had on the website, we had on handouts – I wish they would control themselves a little bit, Mr. Speaker. They're getting out of hand.

They had on the website and they had in what they passed out to the Wildrose opposition information that now they say was wrong – wrong – although they sent it to the opposition. We're not known for being the biggest cheerleaders of the NDP. The Wildrose sort of have a thing about that. We're trying to be helpful, but it's difficult, especially when they bring forward legislation like this. But they had it wrong in the pamphlets they handed out to us. They had it wrong in the pamphlets they handed out to the media. They had it wrong – you're not going to believe it, Mr. Speaker – on the website. They had it wrong, a miscommunication. Four different places they had a miscommunication. It sounds like a misrepresentation to me. It wasn't wrong. It's just that they saw the pressure, and they backed up and they changed it.

The pressure is still there, Mr. Speaker, but the biggest issue here is not about the pressure. The biggest issue is that they had it wrong once, so how do they know that they've got it right this time? Slow down. Let's listen to Albertans. Let's have the opportunity to bring in Albertans, farmers and ranchers, agricultural groups, experts in the field, and let's hear how they're going to be affected. Let's do up a 107-page document after listening to a committee, listening to experts, and having an opportunity for the Wildrose to present our dissenting opinion or our agreement so we can have the legislation go through. Let's have the opportunity for the third party to come forward with some recommendations. They'll have a couple, I'm sure.

Mr. Rodney: I have one right here.

Mr. Jean: In fact, they have one right there.

Even the fourth and fifth parties: we could have them come in with some recommendations. But, Mr. Speaker, the more important recommendations than all of those would be the recommendations of farmers and ranchers, who actually deal with this every day.

Why would you do this? Why would you ignore farmers and ranchers? Why would you treat them like second-class citizens? You're prepared to consult with the municipal governments across this province. By the way, if you're prepared to consult with them – guess what? – the AAMDC said: don't go ahead with this bill. They said: stop; don't do it. You're prepared to talk to them about the Municipal Government Act when it comes up and to consult with them and get it right, but now they're saying to you, "Don't go ahead with this bill," and you're still pushing ahead like there's no tomorrow, making us sit until 1:30 in the morning, 14 or 15 hours a day. We're prepared to do that. We don't have a problem with that.

But, Mr. Speaker, the referral motion . . .

The Speaker: Point of order by the Government House Leader.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would not normally raise this, but it's about the third time I've heard the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition talk about going to 1:30 in the morning. In actual fact, because of Wildrose delaying tactics and failures to keep commitments that had been made in the House with respect to the timing of Bill 4, we were here last night debating Bill 4, not because we were debating Bill 6, as the Official Opposition leader is suggesting. He is not being accurate in his characterization of the debate that took place.

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you have a response to the point of order?

Mr. Jean: Yes, Mr. Speaker. He doesn't have a point of order. He's wrong.

But I can carry on with my speech if you like.

The Speaker: Do you have any additional information with respect to the point of order?

Mr. Jean: Yes. I would submit that he's wrong, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: That's the extent of it?

Mr. Jean: I don't see any point of order. It's called argument.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, is there a specific citation that you would refer to in your point of order?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest 23(i), imputing false or unavowed motives to another member. He's suggesting that we have kept – that the House was up debating Bill 6 till 1:30 in the morning. Nothing could be further from the truth. It's just simply not true.

The Speaker: Hon. member, that is noted.

I would ask that the Official Opposition leader avoid touching on that issue. Let's respect the continuation of the discussion, if you wouldn't mind. Please proceed.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, I apologize that we were here until 1:30 in the morning debating this and other bills because they don't want to face Albertans and consult properly, with this referral motion. I totally apologize for that.

Speaking of consulting, let's talk about what consulting is, Mr. Speaker. If we look at the early 15th-century definition of consulting – I tried to bring a dictionary in, and they said it might be a prop – it's to deliberate, consider, to call together, and to gather, to ask for advice. Now, they haven't done any consultations. That's not consulting, what they've done. They've gone to meetings, and they've told people what is going to happen. That's not consultation.

I want to talk about another definition here that I looked up as well, which is "ineffective consultation." Those are considered to be cosmetic consultations. This is a cosmetic government, so cosmetic governments do cosmetic consultations, that were done due to an obligation for show and not for true participatory decision-making.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think farmers and ranchers deserve to be consulted. If they were consulted properly, I think what they would choose is to have this bill divided into four different bills. The reason they would want that is because it is so dramatic so far as changes. While we're sitting in here debating bills until 1:30 in the morning and while this government is pushing through those bills without any proper consultation, we've actually been thinking about it and consulting with farmers in town halls right across this province, and they've told us clearly that we should break this bill up into four different parts.

The first part is employment standards and the employment standards changes that are being proposed by the government. Mr. Speaker, you know that there are many, many issues with employment standards in this province that are very complicated. I know that because I've owned and operated over 15 businesses in this province, and I've had hundreds of employees. It's very difficult, it's very complicated, and oftentimes you need a lawyer to be able to interpret this, which is not the way I would like to see it. I would like to see it be in simple language so that people can understand simple concepts, that make sense to everybody, so that anybody reading those documents would understand the full consequences of those documents. If you look on the website of employment standards – and I invite Albertans to do so right after they call their NDP MLA or any NDP MLA from Edmonton or wherever they like – you would have an opportunity to see how complicated those changes are in employment standards and how difficult they would be, especially this one, where it actually changes the employment standards.

The next part, Mr. Speaker, after employment standards changes, that I would bring forward to consult on properly would be the labour relations changes. Of course, this should be done in a separate bill as well so that we could hear those experts. We could have employment standards experts listening to one committee and bringing forward suggestions for that committee and those laws, which, obviously, will change farms and ranches but for employment purposes and employee purposes, and then we would have another that would deal with the labour relations changes. Maybe that would be the proper time, in my humble opinion, to actually do the consultations that this government has already done with the Alberta Federation of Labour and the unions that they've already consulted with. It was surprising how fast the unions got onboard. In fact, I think it was within minutes that they came out with their own press release talking about how great the government was with this piece of legislation. The only people they consulted with, Mr. Speaker, were unions. Are we surprised?

This would be the right place to consult with unions, Mr. Speaker, all unions that are affected by this, not just one union that might be applauding the NDP position and the NDP government – all unions that are affected by this – just like all Alberta farmers and ranchers should be consulted at the appropriate time based upon how it affects them and, even more so, the agriculture industry associations, that have clearly indicated to this government that this bill sucks and should be stopped. They're not even listening to them.

Occupational health and safety changes would be the third bill that it should be separated into, Mr. Speaker, to make sure that we get that right, because it's very difficult. You know, some of the rules that apply to my brother, who's a scaffolder, a member of the carpenters' union for 35, 36 years in Fort McMurray – different rules apply to him on a Syncrude site or a Suncor site than should apply to a farmer because it's a unique environment and it's a much different environment.

You know what? The government might say that they're going to get it right, but the truth is that they're not going to get it right because they've already admitted that they got it wrong. How can you be right this time if you were wrong last time? Last time, by the way, was just a couple of days ago. You wrote out some amendments on the back of a napkin and submitted them, and you said that it was right then, three days ago, and now it's right again.

Then, finally, Mr. Speaker – and I know you're aware of this – the fourth piece of legislation would of course be workers' compensation changes. I did have an opportunity to represent people that were on workers' compensation. I will tell you that I have heard nothing but bad stories from people on workers' compensation. When they're exclusively only allowed to be covered by one piece of legislation and one insurance, it doesn't work out well. That's why farmers want choice.

It's been heard by Wildrose MLAs on this side that farmers already make a choice to have better insurance to cover their employees and their families because most times the employees are their friends or families or people they have long-term relationships with. I'm not talking about, you know, three and a half years like these people have left here. I'm talking, like, 10, 20 years of relationships where one person or one family works with that other family that owns a farm. They want to protect them. That's why most farmers already have better insurance than WCB.

If you look at how WCB covers Albertans on the job site, it is not sufficient. It is not a good piece of legislation. I know that the people that have been here before, the four members of the NDP caucus that have been here before, all know – all know – that the number one complaint they have is about WCB. Or it should be because it's the number one complaint I used to get. It's a big complaint. WCB does not work correctly. Now you're going to impose it on 43,000 family farms, and it's not working right. There are so many different options, and that's the best option you can come up with, to impose a broken system on 43,000 farm and ranch families.

Let's go back to the drawing board. Let's listen to the people that are outside this place and are saying: "Stop. Slow down. Please pay attention." You've heard it. I can tell that you've heard it because I can see it. You're worried, and you should be because you're not listening to the people. And when governments don't listen to the people, governments get tossed aside.

If we did have the opportunity to consult properly on the details of the bill and if we did divide the bill into four separate parts, four separate pieces of legislation, you could then have the opportunity to share those four sets of proposed legislation and regulations with farmers and ranchers, with farm and ranch groups, with agricultural groups, with the people, the organizations that have been doing this for a long, long time. A long time. They have a lot of history. They know what they're doing. They just want the opportunity to tell this government how they can do it better. That would be actual consultation. That would be actually listening to them, taking six months, having an opportunity for them to hear you and then for them to be heard by you. That's what communication is called because that's what communication is.

Then we would come back with four good pieces of legislation, probably four good pieces of legislation, that Wildrose MLAs on this side could support. Wouldn't it be great to go to the people of Alberta with a bill that's supported by the Official Opposition, a bill that's had full opportunity to be vetted by farmers and ranchers across the province and by agricultural groups, and to have them come before a committee, that this referral motion deals with, to be heard, to be listened to, to be consulted, to hear their stories, and to make it better? I think we can do that. Then we can go through the three readings, have the opportunity to vote, and maybe – maybe – just listen to the Wildrose opposition as we propose some good amendments, that reflect what the farmers and ranchers are telling us. That seems to make a lot of sense to me.

I especially found, during the period of time I was a parliamentary secretary in Ottawa, that I had about 25 bills that came before my committee. Now, Mr. Speaker, some of those bills – I made a list. I know you're surprised at that, but I brought a list, a couple of other documents here that I want to go over. One of those was strengthening aviation security. That was Bill C-42. My job as a parliamentary secretary was to take the government's position to a committee, in a minority government, mind you – this is a little different because it's a majority – and try to convince the NDP, who, of course, had a federal presence of two members in those days; the Bloc Québécois, who, of course, are the separatist party and had three members at that time; and the Liberals, who were down to two, I believe. I had to convince at least two members from another party that this was a good bill, or we had to come forward with amendments that they would agree to, or they would come forward with amendments, and we would listen to those amendments.

We would have counsel there, a lawyer there from the government, that was supposed to be impartial, and frankly they were impartial. They do good work. They would tell us what they thought of those amendments, those proposed by the NDP and even by the separatist party. And do you know what? We were able to pass more bills through that particular committee than had ever been done by any Liberal government in the past. Two a year, I think, was our average. Most Liberal governments get about one every two years, I'm told. But two a year, Mr. Speaker.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, whether it was the Strengthening Aviation Security Act, whether it was the Motor Vehicle Safety Act – remember all those recalls with Toyota and other brake recalls and floor mat recalls? That was part of our portfolio as well.

The Marine Liability Act, which dealt with a lot of different things, Mr. Speaker, mostly pollution and strengthening the environmental provisions on a federal basis to make sure that people who polluted actually paid.

The Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act: Mr. Speaker, you must know that things that happen in the Arctic are much more serious than things that happen, environmental spills that happen anywhere else because they stay forever, almost, and that's why the Conservative government brought forward some very hard legislation on that.

The Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act, Mr. Speaker, which was a very important act, of course, because there are a lot of dangerous goods that travel through our country on roads, rail, otherwise.

Even, Mr. Speaker, the Canada Transportation Act, Railway Safety Act, and the railway shippers' rights act: I was very proud to be part of that, where the federal government brought in legislative changes to make it easier for farmers to ship their product, to make sure that CN and CP actually listened to the farmers and were prepared to provide to the farmers what they needed. That was a good bill. I don't think it went far enough to protect farmers and to make available what they need as far as rail to get their product to market, but we went through that process.

We went through it with the Canadian Transportation Act and Canada's Clean Air Act and even the International Bridges and Tunnels Act, Mr. Speaker, that deals with bridges and tunnels between the United States and ourselves. There was no legislation in place before that. It took a Conservative government, after 100 years, 200 years, to bring that into place.

Mr. Speaker, the important part in all these acts and probably about 10 or 15 others, including – you're not going to believe this – budgets, is that they consulted. They consulted with experts. We had prebudget consultations. You know, we went across the country often and certainly across places in Ontario and eastern Canada, including Newfoundland and Labrador, and even different parts of Canada in the west, where there was an economy that wasn't doing very well, and we heard from people how we could do it better, how we could make it better. We did weeks and weeks of consultations before every single budget. We heard from experts in Ontario, we heard from experts right across, and we heard from stakeholders.

Even the manufacturers' association of Canada came forward and gave us really good evidence. You know what they told us, Mr. Speaker? It's funny. He was the president of the manufacturers' association of Canada, and he had a forklift operation company in Ontario. He told us, the Finance committee – I think it was two years ago now; 2012 I think it was – that he would be out of business if it wasn't for the oil sands. I was surprised. He would be out of business if it wasn't for the oil sands. All he did was manufacture forklifts. I was, like: how in the world? Like, oil sands companies use forklifts. I know that they do for the purchasing and different things. He said that over 50 per cent of his forklifts went to the oil sands from Ontario. That's why this country is in a big economic problem right now, because the NDP are not doing the right things relating to our economy, but of course that doesn't have to do with the referral motion. It has to do with the evidence that would be heard on a referral motion if we were successful and got it to committee.

Mr. Speaker, on all of these acts, every single one of them, we listened to the opposition NDP; the Bloc, the separatists. I know you'd find that surprising because I'm a nationalist. I love Canada, and I'm here to stay with Canada. But I was prepared to listen to the Bloc and to have our members listen to the Bloc and to find better legislation because it's not about their ideological views on how the government should work. It's not about their view on how greenhouse gas emissions should be suppressed and we should go back and live in caves and have fires and things like that, how we should stop using oil. It's not about that stuff. It's about listening. It's about consulting. It's about making sure that the people that we work for actually have a say.

You know what, Mr. Speaker? Every person in this place, every person, even down there, except for the staff, of course, was elected by people. That's right. I was even elected by people. I was elected by the people of Fort McMurray-Conklin, and I'm very proud of the fact that today I'm standing in this place, representing their views. What they want is a government that listens.

If it was just one particular case, where they would bring forward a piece of legislation and then two days later they would bring forward more amendments than the legislation was and try to change the legislation – but it's every single bill they brought forward, I think, except for one. They've brought forward amendments after they've introduced it. Like, seriously, Mr. Speaker. They brought forward amendments days after they've introduced bills that they say are perfect. Is that a government that's ready to govern? No, it's not. In fact, it's so bad that even the amendments they bring forward – they never consulted with farmers or ranchers on the amendments. They didn't, just like they didn't properly consult with school boards across this province. That's why every single school board that I've talked to is opposed to Bill 8.

The referral motion, Mr. Speaker: consulting with Albertans, making sure that things go to committees so Albertans have the opportunity to participate in democracy, to participate in their lives. Now, farmers don't get mad very often. You know that. You're from Medicine Hat. They're great people. They're solid people, and very seldom do they voice their discontent. Look at the news. You know, the NDP are famous for running around with placards that say, "Stop the tar sands," and things like that. It's not very often that they get picketed, especially not by farmers and ranchers, but they are. You've seen it outside. I've seen it outside. They just want to have the opportunity to be listened to, to participate in what they have here, which is 87 people that work for the people of Alberta, but the NDP, the government, the Premier don't listen to that, don't seem to understand that.

Now, I do understand that they want to be ideological in their view and in their policies and their implementation of those policies, but what I'm saying to them here today is that there is an opportunity to take this back to the people of Alberta by agreeing to this referral motion and properly setting aside time and a committee to consult and to make sure that Albertans have the opportunity to be listened to. That's what they want, Mr. Speaker. That's what we want here. We want a better bill. We don't want to have a situation where people are caught in a scenario that is not good for them and that shuts down a family farm or shuts down a lot of family farms.

Right now there is so much pressure economically on the people of Alberta, not just in the oil sector but in the farm sector. You know why, Mr. Speaker? You know why? Because most of these farmers operate equipment on the farm, and then they go, on their days off that they can, during the winter or different times when they don't have to seed or harvest or brand or calve, and work in the oil patch. I got a letter from a young lady yesterday that said that she had four sons, and when they're not working on the farm, they go work in the oil patch. Well, right now they're all not working in the oil patch.

So how many times can this NDP kick Albertans when they're down? This is the same issue, Mr. Speaker. We've had our number one sector, the oil sector – wow. What this government has done to our oil sector. I mean, sure, there are some low oil prices, but pretty much the average price of oil in Alberta from 1997 to 2008 was about 40 bucks. That was the average price, give or take. The average price right now for this year is over 40 bucks. Now we're down to $37, but it's better than it was for that 10-year period before, yet we prospered.

In fact, Ralph Klein, a previous Premier, from 1993 to 2004 brought $80 billion in financial capital, $80 billion worth of private capital, into this province to invest in oil sands, to invest in manufacturing, to invest in science and technology, to invest in Alberta. During that same period of time do you know that both Ontario and Quebec had less private capital invested there? Now, Mr. Speaker, we had a thriving economy at the end of that era. It started to really pick up and do really wonderful things. The economy got better, but it got better as a result of a series of things. Yes, even Jean Chrétien brought in a good piece of legislation, capital cost allowance depreciation. That encouraged some work in the oil sands.

Stephen Harper brought in some more things. He lowered taxes. In fact, he lowered taxes to the lowest place they've been since the '50s. Lowered taxes. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I think that by the time Stephen Harper was done being Prime Minister, there were 10 or 12 additional tax-freedom days. That means that Albertans didn't have to pay taxes for those additional 11 days. Instead of paying taxes for those days, they got the taxes in their pocket. They got to decide where they wanted to spend the money instead of the government telling them where they were going to spend money, just like here.

Mr. Speaker, the government is telling farmers and ranchers what is going to be in the legislation: no choice; this is the way it is, lump it or like it. Well, they don't like it. They don't want it, but whether they want it or not, this government has the opportunity and the right to bring in legislation, to force it down their throats. Now they're trying to say: well, you know, it's cough syrup; just throw it back and deal with it, and you'll be okay in the morning. Well, in three and a half mornings from now I think they're going to find that the NDP is not going to be around to see what the doctor is ordering next, and that's because they're not listening.

Oh, excellent. I just got past tab A, Mr. Speaker, and I've only got 43 tabs left. Tab B goes into the specifics of the bill.

Mr. Mason: There aren't that many minutes.

Mr. Jean: I'm sure that I will get unanimous consent to keep going as long as I want, Mr. Speaker. I know that the House leader loves it.

You know, this is actually a small bill, as I've said, only five pages, now six pages of amendments, of course, because the bill was imperfect. Think about that in the back there. Think about that, Mr. Speaker. I want them in the back to understand this, the people that were actually elected by the people of Alberta, that are supposed to represent the people of Alberta, that there are just five pages of a bill and six pages of amendments, which means that the people who are telling you what to do got it wrong. How can you now trust that they got it right? Farmers and ranchers across Alberta don't believe that you got it right, and they're going to keep expressing their opinions. What we want to do is make sure that farmers and ranchers are listened to and that they have an opportunity to participate in this bill.

Even though it's just five pages of original material, it is a short amendment of the Employment Standards Code. It repeals a few sections. It repeals one section in the Labour Relations Code. It even repeals a section of the Occupational Health and Safety Act and changes regulations to that act, and I mentioned already – I know you heard it, but I'm going to say it again. Those regulations, that actually are the details of this bill, they can change at any time they want, and they don't have to tell me. They don't even have to tell you, Mr. Speaker. Can you believe that? That's not democracy, is it? When they don't have to tell anybody what they're doing – they can just do it – that's not democracy.

That's not a government that's listening. That's a government that's doing whatever it wants because they believe they have a mandate to do whatever they want. They don't. The people of Alberta, through driving in convoys, through coming to the Legislature steps – by the way, I think that there's going to be another rally on Thursday and another one on Tuesday to tell this government what they think. Well, those people don't believe they've got it right, and they want to be listened to, but they can't because this government has closed ears. They're not paying attention. They think that they can just storm through this and everybody is just going to say that it was cough syrup.

Well, that's not the way a government should operate. That's not the way a Premier should act. A Premier is supposed to give people hope during bad times, be a ray of sunshine. [laughter] I know you're laughing because I'm Mr. Sunshine and I'm always smiling. I can't help it, Mr. Speaker; I love representing the people of Alberta. They should try it. I really do. It's the greatest honour of my life to be here. You know why I love being here? It's because I feel that I'm actually here representing the people.

I encourage the backbenchers on the other side, the NDP backbenchers, to represent the people that elected them, not me, not the people here, but the people that elected them. You know what? They even have the opportunity in their budget, Mr. Speaker, to consult with the people that elected them. They could have town halls like the six that we had this last weekend. They could listen to the people. You know what the surprising part about democracy is? If you listen and you act in their best interests, they're happy with you and they re-elect you. Guess what happens when they're not happy with you? They hold rallies, they set up convoys; 16,000 people participate in a telephone town hall – I've never had that ever before; I've never had more than 4,000 in 11 years – 16,000, and we only dialed the NDP ridings, only the rural ones. A hundred thousand Albertans in your ridings, and 16,000 of them showed up mad. That should tell you something.

Mr. Speaker, there are a few other things that it changes as well, but all I know is this: as a business owner in this province for a long time, a second-generation business owner, the best thing that they can do is to slow down, to talk to Albertans, to talk to the people whose lives are so affected by this, the mums and dads who every day go out there and farm and provide food for our tables, good, quality food. We have the best reputation in the world for our farmers and ranchers, the best. Nobody comes close to us as far as reputation on quality of health.

I don't know if you even know this, Mr. Speaker, but do you know that we are the fifth-largest honey producer in the world and we have the number one honey quality in the world here in Alberta? Something to be proud of.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you have, I believe, some time left, but the Assembly stands adjourned.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, December 8, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any school groups today? The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you today a fabulous school group from Stony Plain central school. This is a group of grade 6ers who are here this week doing School at the Legislature. I had the pleasure of speaking to them yesterday for a good half-hour, and they asked very good questions. They are intelligent and thoughtful. Their teacher, Mr. Paul McCann, is sitting with them. He's obviously been a great influence on them this week. Please give them the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I hope the students will note that the MLA has lost her voice because in this House there's an awful lot of talking in class.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly several members of AUPE's Committee on Political Action. The committee, chaired by AUPE vice-president Mike Dempsey, seeks to encourage all 89,000 AUPE members to become more engaged and involved in politics. In recent years COPA has spearheaded get-out-the-vote campaigns, reaching out to members, urging them to support the candidate and the party that best reflects their needs. Also joining us in the gallery today are Dustin Abbott, John Lomas, Bruce Macdonald, Edwin Mullin, Danielle Nadeau McMillan, Peter Snowdon, and Henry Wakoluk. I'd ask them to remain standing to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ms Nicole Bownes. Nicole is a good friend of mine and a tremendous asset to the people of Edmonton. For many years Nicole worked as a registered nurse. She also served in various positions with the United Nurses of Alberta, including as president and second vice-president of her local. She has also always been incredibly active in politics over the years, serving as campaign manager and official agent for the MLA for Edmonton-Strathcona, our hon. Premier. It is without a doubt that Nicole has made and continues to make a tremendous positive impact on her community. I would ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House someone who is no stranger to this House or to its members. Kerry Towle served as a member of this Assembly for the riding of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake from 2012 to 2015, and she is still a tremendous advocate for Albertans and Alberta. Kerry is a lifelong advocate for the rights of seniors and also works hard to bring awareness to Huntington's disease and those affected by it. My guest is seated in the public gallery. I would ask her to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a real pleasure for me today to introduce Bob Zaplachinski, a proud Albertan. He's risen in the visitors' gallery. In 1970 Bob, as a young 4-H'er, was named one of the top 14 4-H'ers in Alberta, and he won a trip to the royal winter fair in Toronto and also a trip to Ottawa, where he got a special certificate of citizenship at Rideau Hall. The person that gave him those awards was the hon. Robert Clark, at that time a 20-something-year-old minister of youth. It was my honour today, actually, to meet Mr. Clark again at the Public Accounts Committee. He is the chair of the board of Olds College.

After his successful trip to Ottawa and Toronto Bob Zaplachinski went on to work for Edmonton Telephones and for Telus for 38 years, and he's now enjoying a well-earned retirement. I would ask the Legislature to give him the usual warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other guests to introduce today? Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a number of constituents that have travelled from in and around the Nanton region. They are farm workers, farmers, and ranchers here today to witness the debate of Bill 6 and to stand with the Wildrose and MLAs of like mind to say with one voice: consultation, not information.

There are a great number of them, so I invite them to rise as I read their names and, after I'm finished, to receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly. I apologize in advance if I don't get all the names correct: Rita Reich, Pierre Catellier, Alderic Catellier, Bob Kullman, Bunny Maltais, Noel Hyslip, Murray McLean, Kevin Love, Derek Uilly, Ernie Herron, Freeman Herron, Dale Wiebe, Vern Habraken, Eric Kinserdhal, Wade Nelson, Laci Pighin, Nicole Monkman, Alan Top, Kyle Kohut, Tristan Hopper, Ben Loree, Dustyn Ryll, Bernard Lentz, Dana Brown, Bert Vleeming, Melanie Vleeming, Doug Schneider, Mike White, Sabrina Conroy, Ron Wurban, Darlene Bouchard, Romeo Bouchard, Cor de Boon, Kennedy Chaytors, Presley Chaytors, Cody Jensen, Tiffany Fehr, Jennifer Demyen, Albina Demyen, Greg Olsen, Chase Cox, Randi Tajcnar, Celeste Chaytors, Kris Chaytors, and, finally, Cheryl Nietupski. Welcome to the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other introductions today? The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a former Member of the Legislative Assembly, Brent Rathgeber. He's up here as well. He's also a former MP for Edmonton-St. Albert. If he could stand and receive the warm welcome of everyone.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My riding of Strathcona-Sherwood Park is partly rural, and a lot of my constituents are farm owners or have worked on a farm. This is why I'm glad that our government is taking action on developing a system that supports the protection of farm employees in Alberta while ensuring that family farms continue to thrive. Once Bill 6 is passed, there will be thousands of additional Albertans who will have access to the protections that other workers in this province have received for decades. It will extend protections to employees on farms similar to those that exist in other provinces, where there are thriving family farms.

We know that farmers take workplace safety very seriously, and it's good to see that this government is working with farmers and will continue to work with farmers to ensure that they have the tools they need to protect workers.

We know that farmers work very hard every day to ensure safety in the workplace. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, despite best efforts, incidents still occur. Seventeen people died on farms last year. Over the past three decades more than 380 people have been killed on Alberta farms, and for every one of them, it is estimated that 25 or more have been hospitalized due to work-related farm incidents. It's clear that more must be done to ensure that our farm workers are safe.

Mr. Speaker, in 2008 an Alberta court judge who was reviewing the death of a farm worker said, "No logical explanation was given as to why paid employees on a farm are not covered by the same workplace legislation as non-farm employees." It's clear that these changes need to be made, and I'm proud to see that our government is doing so. We must also work to ensure that when farm employees are injured on the job, they have access to compensation that protects them and their families.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard from farmers that it is important that family farms are exempted from the legislation. While it was always our intention to focus on employees, when families . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Co-operation in the Legislative Assembly on Bill 6

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak about the principle of co-operation and about the importance of co-operation when it comes to good government and the smooth operation of this Assembly. Those of us who pay attention to history understand that the men and women who were the original pillars of this New Democratic Party spoke constantly about co-operation. Henry Wise Wood, the one-time pillar of Alberta's left, was esteemed by Albertans from all parties because he genuinely sought co-operation.

Now, due to Bill 6, Albertans have been presented with a snapshot that reveals in all its starkness the attitude gap that exists between the old CCF-UFA alliance and Alberta's modern left-of-centre representatives. Those members across the way are responsible for Bill 6.

Mr. Speaker, members across the way have demonstrated that they do not value co-operation, and now some of these same members are claiming that what they blatantly and openly stated at an earlier time was merely a miscommunication. This government openly stated that under the provisions of Bill 6 workers, regardless of age, family, or pay status, would be covered by OHS. This would include Hutterite colonies and the children of farm and ranch families. This wasn't a miscommunication. There was no vagueness about what the government said, nor was there uncertainty in the documents that the government previously presented to the public.

Mr. Speaker, let me encourage members of this government to step away from their ideological high horse, look to their roots, cooperate, and listen to the people.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Progressive Conservative Caucus

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the good work done this session by the PC caucus. This is what effective opposition looks like. The Member for Calgary-North West stood up for the good work done on women's issues by the previous government while strongly and effectively advocating for awareness and action on violence against women as well as teen addictions.

The Member for Calgary-West has been relentless in urging the Health and Justice ministers to create a proactive plan to address Alberta's fentanyl crisis. He has also pushed hard on at least two ministers in the House to secure meetings for his constituents.

The Member for Calgary-South East has been a collaborative communicator, working with the ministers of Health and Environment to advocate for front-line health care workers as well as pushing for responsible, industry-partnered planning in our energy sector.

The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has regaled us with tales of his days as a veterinarian while also acting as a measured voice in the debate around Bill 6. Between him and the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti there are no stronger advocates for farmers and ranchers. On top of this, the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti has been a strong voice for the forest industry. From the softwood lumber agreement to the pine beetle problem, the member has raised the concerns of an industry largely forgotten by this government.

The Member for Calgary-Lougheed has repeatedly and tirelessly made sure this government takes definitive and measurable action on advanced education and aboriginal stakeholder issues with this government.

The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, while new to the game, has proven himself more than capable in advocating for increased ASLI housing spaces across Alberta while pushing for increased market access and export opportunities for Alberta businesses.

I am proud we're speaking up for hard-working, everyday Albertans, including farmers and ranchers. I've tried to show Albertans that we are humbled and realize the mistakes of the past. Our party looks to Albertans for guidance as we seek to rebuild and come back stronger than ever.

Finally, we unfortunately had to say goodbye to our esteemed colleague from Calgary-Greenway. He advocated for small business and nonprofits while also being a strong constituency MLA. He spent his own money travelling the globe to advocate for over 2,500 religious minorities in Afghanistan who face ongoing persecution for practicing their faith.

I am proud of our PC team, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Alberta Committee of Citizens with Disabilities

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend I had the opportunity to join the Alberta Committee of Citizens with Disabilities, which is located in the Edmonton-Meadowlark constituency, for their celebration of International Day of Persons with Disabilities. ACCD is dedicated to educating our community about disability-related issues, and they aim to dispel the myths that hinder persons with disabilities from participating in society. Through consultation and research, the committee addresses issues facing those with disabilities and provides feedback to decision-makers like ourselves. ACCD's motto, Together We Hold the Power, reflects their commitment to developing partnerships with like-minded organizations and individuals. This organization offers many supports to its clients, including bursaries and awards for those participating in postsecondary studies. I would like to thank ACCD for their dedication to those with disabilities in my community and across the province.

Thank you.

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, farm safety legislation is one of the reasons that I ran for election. I knew the Conservatives were dragging their feet on farm worker safety for far too long, and the Wildrose was not to be trusted when it came to workers' rights. Only our hon. Premier and the NDP would provide the kind of leadership to tackle this issue in a way that is fair and reasonable for a group of workers who have been denied these rights based solely on their occupation.

When formulating my decision on whether to support this policy direction, I turned to the evidence. The evidence was overwhelming. The evidence was also heartbreaking. I learned that of the roughly 18 deaths per year, they were preventable, Mr. Speaker, and I learned that for every death that occurred, there were 25 hospital admissions and 11 trauma admissions. I've seen some of those accidents first-hand in the operating room: degloving injuries and people run over by combines. I also learned that over the last several years the agricultural sector has had the highest fatality rate among all occupations in Alberta, and it's on the rise. What's more is that injuries in this sector are underreported. We don't even know the true magnitude of this problem. After examining the evidence, the status quo is simply not acceptable to me.

A wise man once told me that history isn't just a thing of the past; it is also a thing of the present, that we are always making history right here and right now. On that note, I'd like to leave a question in the minds of my hon. colleagues. What side of history do you want to be on? I know that I want to be on the side of history where I can look back and be proud of the fact that I supported equal rights for all employees regardless of their occupation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Government Policies

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the past seven months this out-of-touch NDP government has done just about everything in its power to break the spirit of Albertans. They've attacked taxpayers; families; the energy sector; businesses, large and small; and now the very fabric of our identity, farmers and ranchers. They call our oil dirty.

The Finance minister doesn't think there's a single penny of waste to cut from the most expensive government in Canada. When we ask him about cutting taxes, he just laughs.

The Energy minister says that unemployed energy workers looking to our government for solutions should go take a hike and get a job in B.C.

The government backbench jeers and taunts when the Leader of the Official Opposition talks about job losses and families getting hurt in the chaos of this government's risky policies.

The NDP said that they'd be different, but they've broken that trust. They're not even acting the same as past governments. They're acting worse.

All is not lost, however. Wildrose is here to stand up for Albertans every step of the way. Even though this out-of-touch government has caused unthinkable economic damage, their mess can and will be cleaned up with common-sense conservative values and ideas. We will fight their regressive carbon tax, we will defend the energy sector, and we will stand against this NDP government's relentless attack on family farms and ranches.

We will be here when the NDP is just a bad memory, like in Saskatchewan, B.C., and Ontario. We are devoted to Alberta. We will do it because, unlike the members opposite, we came to work for Albertans, not ourselves. We will fight their spending, we will fight their taxes, and at the end of the day we will hold our heads high knowing we did right by the people of this province: past, present, and future.

Wildrose believes in cutting waste and shrinking government, low taxes, trust, and democracy. If the days are starting to feel long, I advise the members opposite to buckle up. We're only getting started. The spirit of the Wildrose is stronger than ever. It is the spirit of Alberta. It is something the members opposite will never understand, and it's something they cannot break.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Government Policies

Mr. Jean: Alberta's economy is in crisis. Financial experts are calling yesterday's markets one of the worst days in 25 years for the energy sector. The NDP's ideological push to implement their risky economic experiments are only making things much, much worse, and here's the social cost for families. Alberta's suicide rate has increased 30 per cent, homeless shelter usage is up 130 per cent, and food bank use is at a crisis level. Why won't the Premier hit the pause button on her radical policies and focus on policies that will actually help vulnerable Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said many times before, we are fully aware of the hurt in this province as a result of the drop in the price of oil. We're aware of the problems that occur with so many families when jobs are lost. That's why we were the only party in the last election to run with a job-creation plan, and we are the party that has introduced an infrastructure plan that yesterday the Conference Board of Canada said was the right thing to do and today the RBC said is the right thing to do. Last night these guys voted against a budget bill that supported that infrastructure plan. We are going to stand up for Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: One hundred thousand Albertans' jobs lost and counting with this government. In neighbourhoods across Alberta accountants, administration staff, engineers, rig workers, truck drivers, and hard-working men and women are sitting at home wondering what's next. They are becoming gripped with self-doubt and a sense of hopelessness. Others are now finding themselves on the streets, fentanyl use is rising, and charities are being overloaded with work. Everyone is looking at the NDP, struggling to understand their stubbornness, pushing forward policies that are hurting Albertans. When will the Premier start listening to these Albertans, who want to get back to work?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Unlike the opposition, we in this government know that the government does not control the world price of oil, but we can act as a shock absorber – absorber – as the economy slows down. That is why we have introduced a plan that (a) stabilizes those important front-line services that work with people that are struggling with the situation, just like the member opposite has talked about. That is why we are investing in infrastructure. That is why we have freed up over a billion dollars in capital. That is why we are moving forward with the job creation incentive plan. These are all things that we are doing in order to ameliorate the very important issues that the member . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: The Premier is right. She is shock observing.

Here's the NDP record on the economy: higher business taxes, higher personal taxes, and higher gas taxes for exporters. Royalty rates are going up, and the review has scared investment right out of Alberta. To top it all off, the NDP are bringing in a punishing $3 billion carbon tax, which is going to cost every Albertan. Albertans are very worried. They're right to be anxious. Their government is more interested in toying around with the economy instead of doing what's right for Albertans. Does the Premier understand the damage her policies are doing, or is she just not interested?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I understand is that the platform that the member opposite ran on, to take billions and billions of dollars away from important front-line services that support the families that he claims to be standing up for, is not the way forward and is not what Albertans voted for. What we are doing is that we are stabilizing public services, we are investing $2.1 billion in making capital available to businesses to diversify the economy, we're investing in technology, we've got a job creation incentive program, and we are putting an extra 4 and a half billion dollars for an unprecedented investment in capital, all of which . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Second main question.

Mr. Jean: One hundred thousand Albertans' jobs lost, and this government has done absolutely nothing. Albertans are worried about jobs and the economy. Unemployment is the highest it's been in decades, and home prices are down and falling. What's the Premier worried about? Attacking farms, introducing a $3 billion carbon tax, and jet-setting to Paris. Surely the Premier understands the terrible optics that while Albertans are suffering, taxes are going up and life in the government has never been so good. To the Premier: what is the government going to do to show Albertans that they're sharing in the same pain that Albertans have?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know the member opposite would like us to show we're sharing the pain by laying off teachers and laying off nurses, laying people off and pulling services back from Albertans, but we are not going to do that because we know that will not help the economy and that will not help Alberta families. That's what Albertans voted for in the last election because they know that we've got to come together as we go through these tough times, not pull back the way these guys over there want to.

Mr. Jean: Alberta is facing the highest personal debt loads in the country. Bankruptcies are on the increase. But it seems the only policy the NDP have for those suffering is to raise everyone's taxes, taxes that will be taken from families and put into an NDP slush fund. Now critics are more determined than ever in their resolve to shut down our energy sector. It's these types of short-sighted policies that are doing damage to families right across Alberta. The Premier did not campaign on this. Will she admit she has broken the trust of Albertans, who are suffering so badly?

Ms Notley: You know, the Official Opposition's approach, for instance, to the issue of climate change is to pretend that it isn't there and to carry on with the same policies that have been in place for over a decade that haven't gotten a single foot of pipeline built and that have done nothing to expand our access to markets or to diversify the economy. That is not the way forward. That is why we are so vulnerable to the drop in prices now. But that's not the way we are going to go forward under our leadership. We're going to change that. We're going to make this economy stronger. We're going to diversify our economy. We're going to diversify our energy sector. We're going to diversify our markets. By doing that, we will be much stronger economically.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Critics of our energy sector have never been more determined than today to shut us down, and the Premier just doesn't get it. ForestEthics, who the Premier proudly shared the stage with last month, said yesterday, and I quote, there's no way we're going to stop working to prevent projects like Kinder Morgan's from being built. End quote. They bragged later that they had a direct hand in developing the carbon tax and climate strategy. How reassuring. Will the Premier admit that her carbon tax will only do damage to our economy and it won't help Albertans in any way whatsoever?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I will say is that our plan to deal with climate change, something that all Albertans know we have to do our part on, enjoyed the consensus support of key industry leaders, of small-business leaders, of civil society, of environmental groups because they know that is the right thing to do. The members opposite want to continue to pretend it's 1950. They don't want to change anything. They don't want to move forward. They think that that's somehow going to make things better, but it's not. It's 2015. We've got to move forward.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Jean: It's 2015, and Albertans are definitely against your carbon tax.

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation

Mr. Jean: Yesterday was a day filled with misinformation about Bill 6. The Premier said that we had to pass the bill so that the government could write the regulations. That's simply not true. Bill 6 is a weird law. Six of its 10 sections actually amend regulations and not laws. That means that cabinet can change or cancel 60 per cent of the bill through a closed-door cabinet order, and there is nothing anyone can do about it. This includes undoing all the amendments about family farms and the WCB. Why has the Premier . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I'm very surprised to hear that coming from a lawyer, but anyway. At this point, as a result of that less than professional opinion, the only confusion that is coming on this issue after we had brought forward our amendment is that that is coming from the Official Opposition.

Speaking of confusion, Mr. Speaker, in this week alone the Official Opposition has said that Bill 6 should be killed, then they've said that they agree with parts of Bill 6, and then yesterday their critic of accountability told the media that he has no position on Bill 6. Quite frankly, they sound very confused and not . . .

Mr. Jean: Again there was more misinformation from the jobs minister. She said that it was never the intent of the government to cover family farms or neighbours volunteering in Bill 6. Not true. The government's original briefing for the media made it absolutely clear that the bill applied to unpaid labour from neighbours and family members. The NDP produced flyers, websites, and Power-Point presentations and circulated them to us and everyone else that all confirm this. Either this government didn't read its own documents on Bill 6 or they are willfully deceiving Albertans. Which one is it?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I have already taken personal responsibility for the fact that the wrong information went out. As a result of that, we have introduced an amendment to make it very clear – very clear – that farmers' family members, unpaid volunteers, and paid family members are exempted from the application of this bill. It's now in the act. These guys know it. They won't admit it. They're continuing to sow misinformation and confusion because this is about politics for them now; it's not about doing the right thing.

Mr. Jean: The jobs minister had even more misinformation yesterday. She said that the government-proposed changes to Bill 6 would only allow OH and S farm inspectors to enter a farm if there is an injury or death. That is not true either. Nothing in this bill says that. Nothing in the amendments say that. The minister made it up. The NDP keep deceiving Albertans about their intentions on Bill 6, about what is in Bill 6, and about what is in their amendments on Bill 6 because it keeps changing every day, yet this Premier wants farmers and ranchers to trust her. How can they possibly trust you, Premier?

Ms Notley: Well, as I didn't get a chance to finish this in my last answer, let me be clear. In the last week the Official Opposition wanted to kill the bill, agreed with part of the bill, and then were unwilling to take a position on the bill just yesterday when asked about it by the media. So the Official Opposition, I would suggest, should take some time to figure out what their position is, and in the meantime we are going to move forward on protecting paid farm workers in Alberta, as should have been done a very long time ago.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Carbon Tax

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to open by saying that the average retail electricity price for major providers in December in 2015 is 5.31 cents per kilowatt hour. Write that down because we need it to compare it to the price of electricity after the NDP climate change policies take effect. To the Premier: since the PC Party will be reminding you how much electricity prices are in the future, what do you say to low-income Albertans who are already struggling to make ends meet even before your carbon tax price increases?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I will say two things. First of all, as we have said repeatedly, when the carbon price comes into effect, we have every intention of rebating completely to low-income and middle-income families. As well, though, the member opposite should be a little nervous about this issue because as a result of their actions with respect to transmission upgrades, we do have some concerns about the price of electricity going forward, and that will be as a result of decisions taken by that government over the objection of Albertans and the rest of the Legislature.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the NDP will artificially raise energy costs, and then they're going to ask Albertans to thank them for paying a little bit back. Some Albertans may think those rebates look like vote buying. Increased utility bills and energy costs will hurt business, agriculture, nonprofits, recreational facilities, community halls, arenas, and individual Albertans. To the Premier: what will your government be doing to make sure these important public services and businesses do not close due to the fallout of this and all your other new taxes?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We will be looking forward to working with impacted businesses, trade-affected businesses, low-income families, middle-income families, to make sure that every single cent of the carbon price is reinvested into the economy to help diversify the economy, to support technological development so that we can move towards more renewable energy, so that we can ensure that technology is invested in the oil sands so that they can produce a lower emission product so that they can expand their markets. This is all about economic diversification. This is all about growing the ability of . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 6 has demonstrated that repeating nonsense does not make it fact. This government is trying the same tactic with their carbon tax, stating again and again that it's revenue neutral when it is not. To the Premier. You say that you will distribute 60 per cent to low-income Albertans. After that what percentages will go to administration, general government revenue, and what percentage, if any, will be left over for your undetermined climate change efforts? I don't see anything revenue neutral here.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what Albertans got on climate change from the former government was action neutral and results neutral. We were the only province in the country without an energy efficiency plan, so that's one of the key things that we will be ensuring that that money goes to. We will support Albertans who want to move towards renewable energy on their farms, in their towns, in their community leagues, in their businesses. All those things will be done so that together Albertans can get support to reduce their emissions and ultimately reduce the cost of their energy.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Traffic Accidents Involving Pedestrians

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In August of 2014 the mother and future sister-in-law of one of my constituents were struck by an SUV in Calgary. Tragically, her mother died a week later due to the injuries she sustained. However, if that weren't enough, an unfortunate miscommunication between the Calgary Crown prosecutor's office and the Calgary Police Service traffic unit resulted in the case ending up in the wrong court, and the driver only received a fine of $690 and a loss of eight demerit points. To the Minister of Justice: what is this government doing to ensure that this situation and others like it . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the critical question. Well, of course, the circumstances surrounding this case were absolutely tragic, and our hearts go out to the victim and to the family of the victim. No one should have to suffer such a loss as this. In the wake of that incident, while I can't comment on specifics because of the case, Crown prosecution service is working with the Calgary Police Service traffic unit to ensure that the terms of a memorandum of understanding are used so that a criminal prosecutor is always informed when there is a death in a traffic incident.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Transportation: given that in 2014 in Calgary alone 411 pedestrians were struck and injured, more than one a day, and that's not including incidents where pedestrians were struck and walked away or collisions with cyclists, what changes are this government considering with regard to amending the Traffic Safety Act to better protect pedestrians?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our government is committed to ensuring safety for everyone who uses our roads and sidewalks, including cyclists, drivers, and pedestrians. In conjunction with the Ministry of Justice we're reviewing the Traffic Safety Act. It's currently under way, and it addresses pedestrian safety, and we're looking at fines, demerit points for a variety of traffic violations, including those which involve pedestrians.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: how is this government engaging with municipalities to better ensure traffic safety, especially in regard to pedestrians?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we're always looking for ways to listen to Albertans and to collaborate with them on ways that we can improve safety for the people of Alberta. As we review the act, we'll be seeking input from within the government but also from our stakeholders, our municipal partners, and members of the public. It affects us all, it's crucial, and we need to make sure that all voices are heard as we go forward with the review of the act.

Thank you.

Economic Development

Ms Payne: Mr. Speaker, oil prices have continued to fall this week, and I'm hearing from families and businesses in Calgary-Acadia that they are worried. To the Minister of Finance: what is the government doing to strengthen our economy in this situation?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government has a responsible plan that will diversify the economy and better protect Albertan families from the boom-and-bust cycles of oil. We're investing $4.4 billion in new infrastructure for our communities and to get people working again. We're mobilizing $2.1 billion so that economic growth through entrepreneurship and diversification can occur. Finally, by getting it right on climate change, we're building strong support for new market access for our energy products.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that families and businesses are experiencing challenges because of the dramatic drop in global oil prices, to the same minister: when will the province get back on its feet, and when will we see a return to positive growth?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government has a sound and stable plan that will see a return to growth next year. In fact, the Conference Board of Canada agrees with our plan and projections. Yesterday they said that the provincial government will be spending billions on infrastructure projects, including schools, hospitals, and roads. Over the next few years that will help meet the needs of a growing population. These measures along with the strength in the bitumen exports will help lift the real GDP.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that global oil prices are projected to remain low for a longer period of time, will the minister revise his revenue projections and economic forecasts?

Mr. Ceci: You know, everybody knows that the price of oil is volatile. They also know that we consult with industry, expert economists, banks to develop our own forecasts and that our own forecasts are more conservative than theirs. That's why we keep our projections conservative, and that's why we revise our estimates quarterly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Job Creation and Retention

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government talks all the time about how important it is to diversify the economy. What they don't seem to realize is that their actions and risky ideological experiments are killing multiple related industries. Today I would like to put a face to those job loss numbers, not to tell them to move to B.C. I would like to ask the minister of economic diversification and trade, the superminister: what do you have to say to the more than 500 people out of work at PHX Energy, a Calgary-based drilling company?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've said before, we are very concerned about the fact that we're seeing a drop in energy prices and the implications that that has for job creation and economic stimulus in Alberta. As part of the royalty review – interestingly, the member opposite suggested that we already had conclusions and that we already had outcomes. That's interesting because that's not true. One of the things that we are doing is working with industry to talk about how we deal with the current challenges that they are facing in terms of profitability and continuing their economic viability, and you'll see more . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, those in the Wildrose caucus here understand that when work in the energy industry dries up, it has a ripple effect. Given that tens of thousands of Albertans have lost their jobs in the energy sector and also that that trickles down to the support service sectors as well and since we all know that thousands of Albertans are facing this cruel reality, what does this minister have to say to Stephen Scott, who lost his engineering job at Cenovus Energy in Calgary during an October wave of layoffs?

Ms Notley: As I've said, Mr. Speaker, we have a multifaceted program that our budget introduced, that was just passed two weeks ago, that is focused on economic stimulation and job creation. One example of things that we'll be doing is that we have $2.2 billion of capital that we are freeing up so that small business and innovators and medium enterprisers can get access to capital to help them through the downturn, and indeed some of these drilling companies were exactly who we had in mind when we introduced that project and that process. We've also, of course, as I've said, through our investment in capital . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, the Premier should know full well that the economic downturn our province is facing spreads well beyond the oil patch. Given that I'm very worried about the thousands of families that are sitting around their kitchen tables trying to figure out how to make ends meet and given that we already have seen the impact of some of the NDP government's economic policies, will the Premier commit to killing the risky, job-killing carbon tax at a time when Albertans simply can't afford it?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I will commit to doing is not moving forward on some of the ideas that the opposition has put forward that would have involved laying off nurses, teachers, front-line service providers, and taking job loss and making it worse, which was absolutely the plan that they had wanted to go forward on. [interjections] What we will be doing is working with industry, working with stakeholders, working with economic partners to ensure that we can move forward with diversifying the economy and providing a broader range of job opportunities for Albertans as we move forward.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, would you keep your volume down a bit, please.
Calgary-Lougheed.

Lower Athabasca Regional Land-use Plan

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the Aboriginal Relations minister could not assist in this regard last week, I'll ask this question again in a slightly different way. A review panel was struck in June 2014 by the former minister of the environment after six First Nations applied for a review of the way in which the lower Athabasca regional plan was affecting their way of life. The review panel was to have submitted its finding by June 2015. To the Premier: did you receive this report, and if so, when?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, again, cabinet has not been in receipt of such a report. However, we will commit to getting back to the member when we can determine what's going on. Certainly, we have been working with our First Nation partners in terms of the lower Athabasca regional plan. They have identified for us that there are some concerns around the way the previous government proceeded with respect to the lower Athabasca plan, and we are working with them to address those concerns.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Rodney: That's alarming.

Again to the Premier: given that section 45(c) of the Land Stewardship Act requires that the government of Alberta publish the review panel report on its Land Use Secretariat website and given that the minister's own rules require the ministry to post the report within 60 days after it was submitted, which means that it is over 100 days late, and given that as of today at 1 p.m. the report is still not public, when are you planning to release the report, and why did the ministry contravene its own law for over three and a half months?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, I'm not really sure why we're going over this territory again, but I'm happy to repeat the same answer. You know, no report has been brought forward to cabinet.

In terms of the lower Athabasca regional plan, we are proceeding forward with our First Nations partners. We are listening to their concerns, which they feel the last government didn't listen to, and we are working with them to develop a way to go forward so that we can respect their traditional territory rights as well as the environment.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Rodney: Given that six First Nations went to the trouble of seeking a ruling by a review panel and that after one and a half years they deserve to learn the panel's findings and given that aboriginal groups have told us they're at a loss to understand why your government has not shared this information with them as per your own rules and given that your government has been vowing that it's forging a new relationship with Alberta's indigenous peoples, what possible reason could you have for withholding the review panel's report on LARP, and what kind of message are you sending to our First Nations friends when you're blatantly failing to consult with them on issues that are vital to their way of life?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, in my consultations with First Nations on a number of issues, including issues related to the previous government's action on the lower Athabasca regional plan, I haven't heard any particular complaints that we're failing to consult on that issue. But you know what? I am happy to hear voices from First Nations. I've had many meetings with many First Nations and many other indigenous groups, but I'm happy to have more. So if the hon. member would like to bring that to my attention, then I am happy to take that meeting.

Thank you.

2:20 Emergency Medical Services in Southern Alberta

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, as unbelievable as it may seem, Alberta Health Services has spent half a million dollars this year on an unnecessary, unoccupied facility in Calgary. Space has been rented, and staff has been hired, at a cost of over $60,000 per month. Over half the year and hundreds of thousands of dollars spent and no work done: I thought you had to be an NDP backbencher to get that gig. Will the Health minister immediately put an end to this thoughtless waste of tax dollars on an empty building?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We want to build an EMS system that's there when people need it. We need to make sure that they get the right care in the right place at the right time for the right investment, and that's why we are taking our time to make sure that we get it right in working with Calgarians. I've met with the mayor, I've reviewed the original Health Quality Council report, I've reviewed operational data from Alberta Health Services and the ministry, and I want to make sure that we get this right for the long term. I'm not going to rush into a decision today if it's not the right one.

Mr. Barnes: There are so many higher priorities. Centralization of emergency services under AHS has been shaky at best and a serious burden for communities at worst. Given that in our own city of Medicine Hat response times worsened once dispatch was centralized under AHS and seeing that Mayor Nenshi and the city of Calgary have said that they don't want to be forced into a top-down, centralized system either, will you commit right now to scrapping this AHS project and listening to the local decision-makers in Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm absolutely working in collaboration with local leaders in Calgary as well as reviewing comprehensive data from throughout the province to make sure that we get this right moving forward.

I also want to add that I'm offended that the member said that the staff who were working at the facility aren't doing work. They're doing valuable work. They're doing transfers from southern Alberta, making sure that patients who need support in transfers are getting the support they need. They're taking calls from the central and north zones. I think that the staff who are working there are doing a great service for Albertans, and they deserve our respect, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, I think pretty much everyone on that side of the House was against AHS and the superboard before they flip-flopped.

Given that the waste continues to pile sky-high, it's no wonder that the communities want no part of AHS centralization. To the Health minister. Waste, inefficiency, decreased service, zero accountability of our finances: is this what Calgarians can look forward to once they are forced into this broken, centralized system?

Ms Hoffman: The government that Albertans elected, Mr. Speaker, is there to make sure that they're using evidence to drive solid decision-making, and we're going to be acting in the best interests of Albertans. We're not going to be proposing billions of dollars in cuts, as are being proposed by members opposite. That's not in the best interests of Albertans. That's not in the best interests of comprehensive health care. We're going to make sure we put patients first, and I wish the members opposite would do the same.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Several open letters on behalf of members of the agriculture community – the Alberta wheat, barley, canola, and elk commissions, associations like the Alberta Pulse Growers, landscape and nursery trades, Alberta greenhouse growers, and the Alberta Oat Growers – have all said: stop, consult, and start over on Bill 6. Will the Premier admit our farming community was not properly consulted while her friends at the Alberta Federation of Labour got special consideration?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Limbs are lost, bodies are crushed, and there are fathers, mothers, sisters, brothers, aunts, uncles – family members – who don't come home, and that's the point. The workers, the farm and ranch employees, should be safe at work. They should know that we are all doing our very best to ensure that they can be compensated if they are injured or hurt. [interjections]

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Alberta Beef Producers, the Alberta Beekeepers Commission, the Alberta Cattle Feeders, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties are all encouraging the Premier to stop Bill 6 and start over, will the Premier accept these groups' advice to stand down and send Bill 6 to committee?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 6 proceeds with protecting the very basic, core rights of employees to be protected, to ensure that if they are injured or they are killed, they have compensation, to ensure that they have the right to refuse unsafe work without punishment, to ensure that if there is an injury, there's investigation on it. We will proceed with the very basic rights and move forward with very full and open and transparent consultation on any other details regarding that.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. This government stood in this House and promised fulsome consultations with farmers and ranchers. When they demanded more, several ministers proclaimed loudly that there will be more information sessions. As of 2:20 today this government's own website has added no information sessions. Will the Premier admit that they misled farmers, and will she rectify the situation by personally attending one this Friday in Hanna?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have been listening to the concerns of the farmers and ranchers who've been speaking to us, and as a result of addressing their concerns, we have moved forward the amendment to ensure that it is protected, that families are . . .

Mr. Mason: Order. Mr. Speaker, these goons over here are . . . [interjections]

Mr. Fildebrandt: Point of order. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Mr. Mason: A bunch of gangsters.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Point of order.

The Speaker: I noted it, hon. member. Don't yell, please.

Hon. member, your point of order is taken. However, the phraseology that you used was inappropriate for the House.

Mr. Mason: I apologize, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you very much.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're back at it again today. I thought we went fairly well. Today I can't hear the ministers. I also find it somewhat inappropriate on both sides of the House to be pointing to people in the Assembly. I find it inappropriate. I think you should keep that discussion within this House. They are there as observers. Please do that practice into the future.

Now, you have to decide, folks, if you want to have this time for discussion or not. It's up to you.

Calgary-West.

Alberta Law Enforcement Response Teams

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta law enforcement response teams, otherwise known as ALERT, have been fighting organized crime, weapons trafficking, biker gangs, and child sexual exploitation for 10 years, but funds are running so short that ALERT will have to cut 70 of its 268 officers next year. To the Justice minister: given that organized crime is embedded in communities in ways that would shock Albertans and given that ALERT has a successful record of making our communities safer, what are you doing to ensure ALERT can continue its invaluable work protecting Albertans?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the critical question. Of course, ALERT performs a number of critical functions. With both the support of ALERT and the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police we have undertaken an audit of ALERT, and that has come up with several findings. We are moving forward with a strategy that will ensure that there is no loss in front-line services or those critical functions which ALERT performs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. Again to the Justice minister: given that the loss of ALERT would impact rural communities the hardest and given that the government has spoken proudly of the work ALERT is performing to keep Alberta communities safe from drug traffickers, child predators, drug cartels, and bikers and given that ALERT is our front-line defence for fentanyl and that this government promised not to affect front-line workers, what consultation have you had with the law enforcement agencies in communities in rural Alberta about the potential eruption of drugs and organized crime because ALERT is about to lose one-quarter of its resources?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, as I've just said, we have received an audit of ALERT. We are working on a strategy going forward to ensure that they lose none of their front-line resources. We are looking at restructuring a number of things so they are better placed. We have been working with our law enforcement partners across the province, including the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police and the ALERT board itself, to ensure that none of those functions are lost and that they all continue to be performed.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that fentanyl has become ALERT's priority this past year, with communities such as Bonnyville-Cold Lake and the Blood Tribe all desperately asking for help, and given that since the fentanyl crisis began a year ago, ALERT has seized 26,000 pills, 70 per cent of them in 2015 alone, and given that popping just one pill can be the equivalent of putting a bullet into your head and given that ALERT is running out of money, will you commit today, Minister, to fully funding ALERT to ensure that it can continue to save lives?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, as I've said twice now, we are working with ALERT and with the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police to ensure that those front-line functions are still being performed. When it comes to fentanyl, of course, this is a critical issue. ALERT has been enormously helpful in this area, and we will ensure that that work continues. In addition, I think that the important piece is to realize that we must work with our partners also in health care and in education to ensure that we are addressing the underlying drivers of these sorts of addictions.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Condominium Property Act Regulations

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton-Centre is one of the densest parts of Edmonton, with thousands of existing condominium units and, as of this past January, another 2,600 in development. Now, I've heard from condo owners and organizations like the Alberta Real Estate Association about changes to the Condominium Property Act, with concerns about protecting new condo owners. Service Alberta recently publicized the first draft-regulation phase for public feedback this fall. To the Minister of Service Alberta: can you update the House and myself on the responses that have been received and your progress on these important regulations for condo property owners?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We are committed to strengthening consumer protection for the condo market for Albertans, which is why we're proposing stronger disclosure and clear options for new buyers when their condos are not completed on time or as promised. We are an open government that values the thoughts and opinions of condo owners, and I'm proud that we've made those regulations available for all to see and provide input on, just as we will proudly provide the regulations to the farm and ranch industry to provide input on. We received nearly 300 responses.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that some stakeholders expressed some concerns about this legislation when it was first introduced by the previous government, though I have heard from stakeholders that they have been very happy with the adoption of many of the things they've brought forward in the past months, how is the minister ensuring that all voices will continue to be heard as we continue this review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that there were concerns with the previous government's handling of this legislation, but that's why we're here, to move Alberta forward and correct the mistakes of the past. We took the unprecedented step of putting those draft regulations online for all to see and comment on. My ministry continues to meet with both critics and supporters of the bill. All voices are being heard on Bill 9 regulations, and we will continue to take an open, public, and consumer rights based approach to completing these important regulations.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that I've spoken with many constituents and, again, stakeholders like AREA, who are eager to participate and certainly have indicated their happiness with their ability to so far, can the minister tell us what further opportunities are going to be available for these people to participate as we proceed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More regulations are needed to complete Bill 9, including those that will regulate the condominium property management sector and create a condominium dispute tribunal, another situation in which regulations come after the bill. As mentioned, we will continue to take an open, public, consumer rights based approach on all phases of regulations to complete Bill 9. That includes opening up future draft regulations to the public and stakeholders for their valued input, and we will get it right because we will take the time to listen and deliver to Albertans on all issues before this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Workers' Compensation for Farm and Ranch Workers

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This NDP government is still lost in the wilderness when it comes to Bill 6. The NDP is still committed to making farmers join the WCB, but I want to enlighten the House on the Premier's very own views of this dysfunctional government board. On November 26, 2014, she said, "WCB does not function as an objective, neutral arbiter or judge between workers and employers." To the Premier. Farmers want choice for disability insurance. Clearly, the broken WCB isn't good enough for you. Why do you think it's good enough for our farmers and ranchers?

The Speaker: The Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I answered that question yesterday, it is true that the WCB needs to be improved, and I won't back down on that fact. In the speech that people keep quoting, what I was referring to was the fact that I think that there could be improvement with respect to how the WCB handles occupational disease, how it handles repetitive strain injuries, and how it handles mental health claims. None of those really are the primary kinds of injuries that we're talking about, that occur on farms and that devastate the families of farm employees, who do not otherwise receive income should they be injured or killed. That's why we think . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, the Premier isn't the only one who called the WCB broken. Given that the Education minister said, "It's really important that we show . . . solidarity with the workers who actually are compelled to make claims to the WCB because . . . they are in a compromised situation to begin with," does the Education minister think farmers are good enough for his solidarity, or does he want to throw them under the bus, too? Can the government look at private disability insurance as an option for Bill 6?

Ms Notley: Well, first of all, the member opposite keeps referring to farmers, and to be perfectly clear again, this applies to the paid employees of farmers who are not related to them – okay? – just those people, not to the farmers. That being said, farmers can opt in or opt out of WCB unless they have paid employees, and then those employees need to be covered because, quite frankly, the private options the member has referred to are not as good as what the workers would get through WCB. There's a significant difference in how they're administered. It would create huge hardship to make those injured paid farm workers subject themselves to the private system you're proposing.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, given that many farmers and ranchers already have private, superior, and lower cost disability insurance and they just want to be able to choose and given that this NDP government is changing Bill 6 by the day and adding amendment after amendment to correct their incompetence, to the point where the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose described Bill 6 as quicksand, will the Premier just do the right thing, back down on her plan to force WCB membership on farmers and ranchers and give them the choice of private disability insurance?

Ms Notley: First of all, Mr. Speaker, our government has introduced one amendment, one amendment to clarify that farmers . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, for the second time, please don't yell.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, first of all, one amendment to clarify what was the intention all along.

Secondly, let us be very clear. The private options that the member talks about are not the same. They're not as good. There is a delay, they are not no-fault, you have to hand off a whole bunch of money to lawyers, and there is a significant difference in the benefit that accrues to either the injured paid farm workers or their family. That is why we will not go that way. It's very, very different.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fifteen different ag focus groups previously mentioned by the Member for Drumheller-Stettler, some oddly applauding this government's apparent efforts to enhance farm safety, have all indicated that the process has sadly been more of a monologue than a dialogue. To the minister of jobs: given the hasty, nonconsultative attempt to remedy the shortcomings of Bill 6, will this government do the right thing and hit the pause button on this legislation to reassure Albertans that safety truly is a priority here and not a hidden big-labour agenda?

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to emphasize again that this bill is about introducing the most basic protections for paid nonfamily farm and ranch workers. It is the right thing to do, to consult on all the other details, and we will consult on all the other details. I look forward to doing that very intently with the farm and ranch workers to ensure that those details are common sense and meet the needs of those farm and ranch workers moving forward.

Mr. Gotfried: Again to the minister of jobs: given that we now know how many Alberta farmers and ranchers it takes to stand up for their livelihoods and given that they were waiting on the Leg. steps again today to begin the process of true consultation, will you commit to a dialogue around meaningful and appropriate measures to enhance farm and ranch safety across Alberta, or will you continue ramming this legislation down the throats of rural Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are committed to moving forward with the most basic protections for farm and ranch workers in this province, but we have fully committed to a very extensive consultation process in terms of the regulations, which will add those details to ensure the safety of farm and ranch workers in this province. We will work with farmers to ensure that employment standards, occupational health and safety standards meet the needs of those Albertans, and we will have that conversation with those farmers and ranchers over the next one to two years to ensure that we come up with the best Alberta-made solution.

Mr. Gotfried: I think the term is a day late and a dollar short.

To the Minister of Agriculture: given your own laudable personal efforts at real consultation over the past few weeks, including the admission of your government's shortcomings, and given the passionate voices of many hard-working, dedicated, experienced, and safety-conscious rural Albertans, can you honestly say that this government has gotten this bill right? Please tell us what you think about the need for further consultation.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to say that I have been at many of those sessions. I've been at the rally out on the steps, and I have been listening to the farmers and ranchers who spoke with me about their questions and concerns, and I brought them forward. Those very basic protections we will move forward on with Bill 6 because they're very basic and a small piece of the big picture moving forward, but we will consult extensively. We have very openly committed to ensuring, both before they're drafted and after they're drafted, that those regulations reflect the needs of farmers and ranchers in this province.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, do you have a motion?

Mr. Mason: I do, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. I have three notices of motions. First,

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in second reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage will be put forthwith.

Second,

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Third,

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in third reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have a notice of motion today, and I thank you for recognizing me. I rise today to give notice of the following motion pursuant to Standing Order 30.

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely the devastating human, health, and social costs of the economic downturn, the resulting employment losses, and the bleak fiscal picture many Albertans are facing.

I have the appropriate paperwork in order, sir.
Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a news release, which I referred to last night, from the Alberta Small Brewers Association.

Mr. Hanson: I'd like to table five copies of the letters I referred to in my speech to Bill 6.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have tabled the appropriate number of copies of questions that were put forward to me during Committee of Supply for Education.

The Speaker: Any other members?

Hon. members, I believe there was a point of order raised by the Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Maintaining Order in the Assembly

Interrupting a Member

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I raised a point of order at 2:25 p.m., during answers from members of Executive Council during the question period. I rise under section 13(1) of the standing orders, that says, "The Speaker shall preserve order and decorum and decide questions of order," and, secondly, subsection (4)(b), "When a Member is speaking, no person shall . . . (b) interrupt that Member, except to raise a point of order."

Mr. Speaker, the opposition has done something that hasn't happened to me for a long time. They made me lose my temper, and I apologize for those comments that I made, but the situation is really beyond the point where we can just let it continue as it stands. The Wildrose opposition continuously shouts, heckles, and attempts, essentially, to shout down ministers or to intimidate ministers in the course of their answers. They ask questions and then don't listen to the answer. A number of members are constantly speaking directly across the aisle the entire time that ministers are making their points. Others are yelling. Others are shouting. I've not seen this kind of disorder in the past.

I've always been someone who likes to have a good back and forth in the House, Mr. Speaker, a defender of the occasional bit of heckling. It's not a bad thing. But what we're getting from the Official Opposition, from the Wildrose, is a solid wall of noise, which is nothing more, in my view, than an attempt to prevent ministers from answering properly in this House legitimate questions that are put to them. Quite frankly, I think that it is interfering with our ability as members to perform our jobs, as ministers of the Crown and members of Executive Council. I would ask that you take steps to ensure that in the future ministers are able to answer without having to shout over a chorus of what appears to be co-ordinated heckling by pretty much the entire Official Opposition in this House.

Mr. Speaker, it's essential, I think, that if we're going to have a question period, questions can be put, ministers are able to answer and to be heard without feeling that there's an attempt to intimidate them from giving the best possible answer they can.

It's a difficult thing. I have been on both sides of the House. I can tell you that I infinitely prefer asking questions to answering them because the pressure is quite great to try and make sure that you get it right and you get an accurate answer. I think that our ministers are doing an excellent job in attempting to answer these questions. As it goes now, it's interfering with the ability of members on this side to provide the answers that they are expected to in question period. I would ask that you rule and take measures in the future to make sure that the question period functions with a little less dysfunction than it has at the present time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The House leader for the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. member for his comments. I'm a little unclear as to what is actually taking place here right now. I'm not sure if the hon. member has called a point of order against the Speaker or against the opposition. I guess the challenge lies in that while temperatures in this place clearly today reached a boiling point – obviously, members on this side of the House are extremely concerned with the direction that the government is taking, so from time to time during question period they express that displeasure. It's difficult to dispute the fact, that the hon. member mentions, that the volume did get loud in the Assembly today.

I guess part of my concern, Mr. Speaker, is, one, that it's our belief that it's your discretion that needs to be used during the exchanges that take place in the Assembly, and while I have a lot of respect for my hon. colleague on the other side of the House, it is not his role or job to call this House to order. Unfortunately, that's exactly what we saw happen today. He didn't rise on a point of order; he rose and called for order. I'll speak momentarily on some of my concerns around the language that he used in his efforts to call the House to order.

While it is quite reasonable and possible that this side of the House needs to do things about the volume they're using engaging in the debate during question period, I think that it is concerning for me to see, you know, hon. members taking the decorum and order of this House into their own hands in the middle of question period. Just as the opposition's behaviour today, perhaps, was unbecoming of the opposition, certainly that type of behaviour also isn't assisting the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I will be asking the third party, but could I ask you: could you comment on your volume from your side of the House? Is it excessive in your opinion, respectfully?

Mr. Cooper: Well, I think, Mr. Speaker, that I provided some reflection that from time to time the volume on this side of the House does rise, and I think that I did say that perhaps we need to be respectful around that particular issue.

I might add that during the hon. member's discussion he had specified or pointed out the Official Opposition, and certainly today and many other days we've heard members of the third party expressing their displeasure. Certainly, we've heard members on the government side also engaging in this sort of decorum, that from time to time has become a distraction. You know, I think it's a little untoward for the hon. member to only point out the fact that our volume was raised. I have noted that, and I think it would be the right thing to do, for members of this Assembly, including on the government benches and backbenches, to also have that same personal reflection.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been an interesting little discussion here, and we in the third party do our best not to complain a lot. I would say that we've done our best to have the best decorum in the House. I think even the other parties might even agree that we do that. I'm not saying that we're perfect, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the House leader from the opposition. We heckle a bit. We do. I think it's part of being here, Mr. Speaker. We talk about important things. We represent Albertans, and that's what we're here for.

But in the standing orders 23(h), (i), and (j) it talks about language in 23(j): "... abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." We've seen examples of that here. Again, I'm only raising this because it's the discussion now. You know, the government side's members have decided to make a habit of banging the desks long after their last answer so whoever is asking the next question can't hear themselves say it. Without complaining, mind you, I've taken to using this device so I can hear what's going on.

I think there's a little bit of gamesmanship going on here. This is a competitive place. This is where we do that. But I also notice, you know, a minister of the Crown turning around when asked about a different bill, taunting members of the gallery that are there supporting a position that our side of the House is taking. I would definitely say that that qualifies as language designed to incite, likely to create disorder in the House. It was successful. Congratulations, Minister. You wanted to create a ruckus, and the minister created a ruckus, Mr. Speaker. It's to be expected.

You know what? I would say, respectfully, again, that our party will still continue to try to be the most orderly people in the House and the voice of reason here. Mr. Speaker, the government can get their feelings hurt, but I hope they didn't expect to be here and not be held to account by the opposition. You know, there's an old saying about if it's too hot in the kitchen. This is a hot kitchen for all of us. If you're going to be here and you're going to be in government, the idea of question period is to hold the government to account. You don't ... [interjection] Actually, the Government House Leader quietly interrupted me, but I'm going to repeat what he said. He said: it's not to shout them down. I agree with him on that.

But, Mr. Speaker, we need to hold the government to account. Those Albertans watching need to know when the government minister is over the line and when they're not answering the question and when they're not being accountable to Albertans. It's our job on this side of the House to make that known, and we have limited tools. One of the tools we have is to bang and make noise and, I guess, Mr. Speaker, you have the difficult job of deciding when it's too much. We all as a group elected you to do it. God bless you. We know you're doing your best. But, at the end of the day, I think, if people are concerned about having their feelings hurt, they might be sitting in the wrong room.

Mr. Clark: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I just want to rise very briefly. Let me say this. It is the role of the Official Opposition, of course, to hold the government to account, but it is our choice as members how we behave.

You know, in my observation in the brief time I've been in this Assembly, it is up to the government side to set the tone for the House. You have a tremendously challenging job, Mr. Speaker, to decide when that tone gets too much. Our job on this side is to hold the government to account, and it's the government's job to respond or not. There's a reason it's called "question period" and not "answer period," but it is ultimately up to the government side to set the tone.

Now, I will say that sometimes that tone gets a little bit too boisterous from this side, but that is us on this side using the limited tools that we have at our disposal. I have the benefit, perhaps, of being at the end of the House where I can't quite hear everything that goes on on that side. It just seems like a wall of noise at times. Perhaps it's the same experience on your side. There's a quid pro quo. There are two sides to this. I think that there are members who perhaps would find that their responses today, in particular, were a little bit too boisterous, but my urging to the government side is that it's up to you to set the tone in this.

Mr. Speaker, I don't envy your job here in having to sort all of this out, but we have a limited set of tools at our disposal to hold the government to account. We ask questions. It's up to the government to choose how you respond to those questions. Sometimes you can choose to ramp it up, and sometimes, I might suggest, it might not be a bad idea to ramp it down.

With that, I'll cede my time. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, first of all, I'd like to acknowledge and appreciate the apology that the Government House Leader made and also acknowledge that, some might say fortunately or unfortunately, the responsibility for that rests with the Speaker, which you all elected. Thank you for that comment. I also appreciate, however, that these are my observations. I've mentioned them on a couple of occasions.

With respect to the third party and to the leader of the fourth party, the comments that I hear – and I do not hear them all, but I can tell you that the volume has largely been, in my experience, particularly today with respect to the Official Opposition – and I'd respectfully ask that the Opposition House Leader discuss that with his caucus and attempt to reduce the volume that's in the meeting. What I do see is that I have difficulty hearing the response to the questions that the opposition asks, so I'd appreciate your toning it down.

To the government side, to the point that's been made by several leaders, my job is to ensure that the opposition has ample time. They have limited tools, so you must appreciate that that balance is necessarily governed by the Speaker, and the tone – more the volume than the tone. There have been occasions at times when comments have been made which are inappropriate, but the larger situation that I'm experiencing is the volume, and I would respectfully ask – and I will be addressing it more closely in the future – to please keep your volume down.

I note that the Speaker will be recording that the point of order is well taken. I will be using that as a guiding principle for both sides as we move forward.

I understand that there is another point of order. Is that correct, hon. member?

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Cooper: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I guess I hesitate to rise given some of the comments, but we just can't ever get to a place in this House where any member of the Assembly rises and calls anyone a goon or a gangster. While those two words might not be unparliamentary in the definition of words that are unparliamentary or not, certainly under 23(j) they clearly created disorder today. While the apology wasn't specific to the words, I'd ask for a full and complete withdrawal of those statements and will endeavour to keep the decorum much more becoming of all members.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, if it wasn't clear for the hon. Opposition House Leader, I will make it clear. If the words "goon" and "gangster" are not unparliamentary, they should be. I in an unqualified way withdraw them and apologize to you, Mr. Speaker, for rising in my place when I should not have. To the hon. members opposite, I withdraw those words and sincerely apologize to them and to the entire House.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. House leader. The point is well taken. I have checked at some length the words, and I can tell you the list is quite lengthy respecting the words that are unparliamentary. Thus, the apology is accepted today.

I have a ruling, so we close the matter. I would appreciate that that's dealt with on both sides.

Official Opposition leader, you have a resolution, I believe.

Request for Emergency Debate

Provincial Economic Situation

Mr. Jean: I do, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to move pursuant to Standing Order 30(2):

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the devastating human, health, and social cost of the economic downturn, the resulting employment losses, and the bleak fiscal picture many Albertans are facing.

Mr. Speaker, I've requested time in the Assembly to bring this matter forward under Standing Order 30 because the impact of an underperforming economy and the resulting job losses across this province have become a matter of urgent public importance.

Over the last few months we have actually seen and talked about a number of statistics used to measure the performance of Alberta's economy. Alberta's real GDP fell 1.2 per cent in 2015. Unemployment has risen above 7 per cent, where it's expected to stay for all of 2016, even higher. For the first time in over 25 years Alberta's unemployment rate will surpass the national average. That's the first time in 25 years, certainly a matter that, on its face, looks to be of public importance. Today we watch as world oil prices drop to $37 a barrel, and major job creators like Husky just announced plans to pull capital out of Alberta. In November alone, Mr. Speaker, 15,000 jobs were lost in our great province, 15,000 jobs of Albertans. That's 500 jobs per day lost in Alberta. The numbers are absolutely staggering, and we have seen absolutely nothing relating to concrete steps taken to do anything about it.

The urgency of this debate does not come from those statistics alone, Mr. Speaker. The urgency of the debate comes from the very recently revealed numbers that provide a glimpse into the human, health, and social costs of the downturn, which are staggering and will continue to be if nothing is done. The number of Albertans filing for bankruptcy has actually skyrocketed. The number of Albertans who have had their homes foreclosed is trending upwards as well – I saw first-hand in the '90s what bad government policy can do – and record numbers of foreclosures in my hometown of Fort McMurray. In fact, when speaking to a local real estate agent just a number of weeks ago, he indicated to me that more keys were given back to the banks in the previous four months than in the 25 years before as he worked as a real estate agent. That is very troubling.

Most concerning, at the heart of this matter is yesterday's report from the province's Chief Medical Examiner. It is very worrying, Mr. Speaker. The Chief Medical Examiner brought forward . . .

The Speaker: Hon. Member, Standing Order 30(2) says "briefly," so I would urge you to get to the point.

Mr. Jean: Yes, Mr. Speaker, indeed, as precedent sets about seven to eight minutes for this, I believe.

The medical examiner shows that the number of Albertans who have tragically ended their life has increased by 30 per cent this year. That's correct: 30 per cent. In the first six months of 2015, Mr. Speaker, 327 Albertans took their own life. At that rate over 650 Albertans will commit suicide by the end of this year.

Now, nobody should be so crass as to suggest this is the fault of any policy or any initiative of this Legislature or this government. We are not suggesting that at all, Mr. Speaker. That needs to be absolutely crystal clear. The fact is that many Albertans currently face life's greatest struggle because they are out of work and out of hope, and we want to give them some hope. It's absolutely heartbreaking. A counsellor from Calgary's Distress Centre said yesterday, and I quote: for me it says something, really, about the horrible human impact of what's happening in the economy, with the recession and the real, felt effect, the real suffering and the real struggle that people are experiencing. End quote. Demand for counselling service has actually increased by 80 per cent, Mr. Speaker. That number tells me that Albertans are looking for help. They're looking for hope, and they're in desperate need of hope. They're looking for someone to tell them that while things are tough right now, somebody has their back, somebody understands their plight, and somebody is working to get things back on track.

I'm calling for the debate of this important matter of urgent public importance because if we do not speak about it today, Mr. Speaker, we will not have another opportunity for at least two months to debate this issue in this House. At the current rate . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I'm deciding on brevity.

I recognize the member of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me say at the outset that I think our party talks about the health and social costs and jobs every single day in this House, but that's not to diminish the importance of it. I will say that the motion of the Leader of the Official Opposition is made all the more urgent today by the government's notice of their intention to put time allocation on and to shorten the amount of time that we will have in this House to talk about the urgent issues that matter to Alberta.

This is an important issue. It can in no way be diminished. The greatest dignity that human beings have is the dignity of having a job. Mr. Speaker, I don't think it's a matter of debate. I don't think anybody on any side of this House will argue the fact that there's somewhere in the neighbourhood of a hundred thousand Albertans who have lost their jobs in recent months. If that's not an emergency, I don't know what is. I think it's probably worth talking about what the Official Opposition has in their motion because the social costs – and I think it would be interesting and important to hear the government talk about the costs to their social programs based on the unemployment, the lack of revenue affecting the government, the human costs in all these things.

I will say in closing that I think it's just slightly ironic that 86 people whose wages are guaranteed for the next three and a half years are going to debate this, but because we do work for the other 4.4 million Albertans, I think it's worth doing. I've certainly heard from my constituents that it's important. When you consider that a town the size of Chestermere, Cochrane, or Camrose, 100 per cent unemployed in the last month based on the 15,000 number we heard, if that's not worthy of having a serious discussion in this House, perhaps we're in the wrong business.

The Speaker: The leader of the fourth party.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The question is whether or not Alberta is in crisis, whether that merits an emergency debate in this Chamber. Whenever a question like this arises, I reflect on what I've heard from my constituents and from those people all over the province of Alberta, those who have lost their jobs, those who know people who have lost their jobs or fear losing their jobs or have taken a pay cut or have taken a reduction of hours, and when they do find themselves out of a job, they have very limited prospects of finding another job. If you ask those folks, they will tell you that there is, in fact, an emergency and a crisis in this province. It goes beyond the direct jobs in oil and gas extraction, of which there are very many although fewer as time goes on. There are many companies that don't count in the statistics about oil and gas extraction, and I think it's important to remember those.

There is a lot of doubt in the province, Mr. Speaker, and a lot of concern, and it goes beyond just simply the energy sector. Confidence in the small-business sector is incredibly low. You know, when I think about what is going on in this province, I reflect on a story that I heard from one of my constituents. He was a fairly senior manager at an energy company. They were going through a round of layoffs. Instead of firing two people in his organization, he chose to resign his position himself to save two families their mortgage payments and their jobs. That is the kind of thing that goes on every day in this province: the number of companies that have taken a 5 per cent or 10 per cent or 15 per cent wage cut and that in the new year will be taking another wage cut just so the people in that company can continue to pay the mortgage, can continue to pay the bills, continue to put food on the tables for their families. Yet still they live in fear that they will lose their jobs.

Now, I know the NDP doesn't control the price of oil. I'm sure you wish you did, but you don't. But what you do control is how you react to that, what the government does in response to externalities. The first thing you can do is advocate for Alberta industry. I'd like to see much more of that. Use that strong climate announcement of yours to aggressively advocate.

The Speaker: Hon. member, brevity. Brevity, please.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All right. I will close, then. Let me say this. We deserve to have a healthy, fulsome debate in this House. We can talk and collaborate together and come up with ideas that will better the lives of Albertans, and from that healthy debate comes good policy. When my team and I consider an issue, we do a little exercise. The first thing we ask is: what is the problem that we're trying to solve? And then: what's best for Alberta? What's best for Alberta here is evident. Albertans need to know and deserve to know that we in this House are working together to come up with solutions that will address the challenges they face every single day. I think a debate of this kind will do exactly that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's standing orders state that a motion brought under Standing Order 30 must meet a number of conditions, including that it "must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration." That is Standing Order 30(7)(a). House of Commons Procedure and Practice provides further instruction on the appropriate use of these debates as well as examples of topics that meet the test.

An emergency debate should be on a topic "that is immediately relevant and of attention and concern throughout the nation". Thus, matters of chronic or continuing concern, such as economic conditions, unemployment rates and constitutional matters, have tended to be set aside whereas topics deemed to require urgent consideration have included work stoppages and strikes, natural disasters, and international crises and events.

That is at page 690 in O'Brien and Bosc. Beauchesne's similarly states that the item "must be so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention."

Mr. Speaker, there's no question – there's no question – that the economic situation facing Alberta is very, very serious and that the impact on families and individuals throughout the province is equally serious. There's absolutely no question of that. This government is very much aware of that and is taking what actions it deems appropriate in order to counteract that.

What is not an emergency debate? Well, the procedural guides as well as Speakers' rulings in the Assembly can give us guidance on what is not a valid topic for an emergency debate. Critically, those are meant to deal with items for which there are not other avenues of debate. Beauchesne's states, one, that such a debate must deal with a matter within the administrative competence of the Government and there must be no other reasonable opportunity for debate.

That's citation 387.

It also states:

Emergency debate provisions cannot be used to debate "items which, in a regular legislative program of the House of Commons and regular legislative consideration, can come before the House by way of amendments to existing statutes, or in any case will come before it in other ways."

That's at page 694. In other words, if there are other avenues in which to debate this matter, it should not be brought forward under an SO 30.

Mr. Speaker Zwodzesky ruled:

Urgency deals with whether or not there are other opportunities available to raise the matter. Now, I want to clarify for you that there are several vehicles available to you to do a variety of things. One of them is question period, where a well-crafted question that meets the rules and proprieties of this House and of Houses across the world that are part of the Commonwealth parliamentary system – that exists there as one of those vehicles.

He went on to say:

Secondly, a carefully crafted motion for return might accomplish something very similar, or a carefully worded written question might accomplish something similar. There is room for some debate within some of these vehicles.

That's from November 28, 2012.

I should note, Mr. Speaker, that there are ample . . .

The Speaker: Government House Leader, brevity, please.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Well, I need to quote my authorities, but I will try to do that quickly.

There are ample opportunities for this to be debated in the House, and this is the question. It's not the importance of it. It's critically important. But, Mr. Speaker, this has been coming for a long time. We knew before the election, in fact, that oil prices were collapsing, and we knew the consequences of that. There's been a tremendous amount of debate on the budget, on the capital plan. For example, we were trying to count the number of questions dealt with in this House on this matter. There are too many. Between October 26 and 29, the four days following the budget, there were 75 questions on this point precisely in this Chamber within four days. I'd argue that there's ample opportunity for the House to debate this matter and that it has, and it will continue to.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, the chair is prepared to rule on whether the request for leave for this motion to proceed is in order under Standing Order 30.

The Leader of the Official Opposition has met the requirement for providing at least two hours' notice to the Speaker's office by providing the required notice at 11:08 this morning, so that condition has been met.

The motion reads as follows:

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the devastating human, health, and social costs of the economic downturn, the resulting employment losses, and the bleak fiscal picture many Albertans are facing.

The relevant parliamentary authorities on this subject matter are pages 689 to 696 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, and Beauchesne's, paragraphs 387 to 390.

Hon. members, I believe that all members of this Assembly are acutely aware of the severe economic circumstances facing Alberta today. While this in no way ought to detract from the seriousness of the effects of this economic downturn on many of our constituents, I'm unable to find that the request by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition meets the criteria to proceed to an emergency debate today. Standing Order 30(7) provides that "the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration." As is noted in paragraph 390 of Beauchesne's, sixth edition:

"Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the House do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and the public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

At page 690 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, the authors note:

Matters of chronic or continuing concern, such as economic conditions, unemployment rates and constitutional matters, have tended to be set aside whereas topics deemed to require urgent consideration have included work stoppages and strikes, natural disasters, and international crises and events.

As all members know, the current economic situation in Alberta has been the subject of numerous debates in this Assembly thus far this session, including a debate on the Speech from the Throne, the Budget Address, the main estimates consideration, and, most recently, Bill 4. Accordingly, the chair does not find the request for leave in order, and the question will not be put.

Bill 6

Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act

[Debate adjourned December 8: Mr. Jean speaking]

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to talk some more about Bill 6. I never got through more than a couple of tabs, and it's a great opportunity to stand up today and talk about businesses.

If we had the chance to send this particular motion to committee, as we've asked for in this referral motion, we'd probably find out, you know, that there have been a hundred thousand jobs lost, and we'd probably find that tens of thousands of families are suffering through some of the most bleak and dark times that they will ever face in their lifetimes. In fact, we may even find, Mr. Speaker, evidence that would suggest that Edmonton's Food Bank last month counted 18,500 recipients of food hampers. That's actually up 20 per cent. That's what you find when you send things to committee and have the opportunity to talk about it, the same as Bill 6. You'd find out, for instance, that the Christmas Bureau provides holiday meals and Christmas gifts for at-risk teenagers and children, and they expect to see a 12 per cent increase this year because of the economic downturn, yet they're struggling to raise money. In fact, we'd find in this situation that they've only reached 20 per cent of their fundraising goal for the year.

Now, Mr. Speaker, those are the types of things that, obviously, like Bill 6, we'd find out if we actually sent Bill 6 to committee and listened to farmers and ranchers and listened to and gave them an opportunity to express their dissatisfaction with this bill. We'd probably hear some other things at that, including that there have been some significant costs – human, health, and social costs – as a result of the economic condition that we're currently in but also as a result of the government's action or inaction, as the case may be. We've seen a government that has taken absolutely no steps other than some draconian legislative initiatives that don't listen to farmers and ranchers, that they bring forward without any opportunity for any input from the people that this bill actually affects.

They've suggested, Mr. Speaker, a number of times that this province hasn't had this legislation for 95 years, yet we know clearly that Alberta has the safest farm environment in Canada or one of them, for sure. It does so as a result of consulting with farmers and ranchers to find out the education needs, to find out the futures that they want for themselves and their children and their way of life.

Mr. Speaker, you might be surprised – and I know some people would be surprised – that farming and ranching are complex. They deal with a variety of issues, and a variety of skills is necessary as a farmer and rancher, whether it be as a mechanic or whether it be as somebody taking care of livestock or growing things. They are people that have to be multitalented.

You might also be surprised to find out some of the conditions that are for WCB and for portions of WCB exemptions. In particular, there are some organizations and job categories that have exemptions. It sounds like a big deal when the opposition talks about exempting farmers and removing that opportunity to exempt farmers from WCB, but they say that farm workers need protection. We know clearly that they already get protection through their own forms of insurance, and nobody cares more for their family and the people that work there than they do themselves.

If you look at the facts, Mr. Speaker, if you look at the 19 farm- and ranch-related job exemptions, well, you might not realize, if WCB exemptions are gone, what will take place. I don't know if you know this. You see, after these 19 agriculture-related jobs are removed, you still have 180 different jobs that are exempt from WCB, as farmers and ranchers were before this piece of legislation, Bill 6, came in.

I have to tell you some of them, Mr. Speaker. In fact, believe it or not, circuses – circuses – are exempt from WCB. That's right, much like this place from time to time. Circuses and all forms of entertainment are excluded from WCB. In fact, you're going to find this surprising – and I'd like all members of the opposite side, of the government, to hear this – and that is that the Alberta Federation of Labour is exempt. They're exempt. They're exempt from WCB.

Isn't that something? They're all, "Rah-rah-rah, let's cover the farmers," but they're not covered. Isn't that ironic? Yet they're the only ones the government consulted with, the Alberta Federation of Labour and unions, other unions. They're exempt. Isn't that ironic?

Without delay, let me tell you a few things, and I've only got 170 different ones to read. I know you're probably going to cut me off, Mr. Speaker, because I do like to talk about Bill 6 a lot, and I'm looking forward to my, I think, three or four other opportunities to talk on Bill 6 for 90 minutes each. Accounting, auditing, book-keeping, or income tax services: they're exempt. Actuarial services are exempt. Advertising agencies: does that mean people that actually have to go up high and hang big billboards are exempt from WCB? Addressing and mailing services: that means people that operate equipment, folders, collators are exempt from WCB. Isn't the government worried about them? Are they not worried about people that provide advertising display services or advertising distribution services? They're exempt. What about the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation? They're actually exempt from WCB, too, Mr. Speaker. So it's not unusual that farmers were exempt from WCB and that ranchers were exempt.

In fact, I'm only at number 6 on a list of 170 exemptions. I haven't even started. Yet we have the government side that says: no; we have to make sure that farmers are covered by WCB.

Mr. Speaker, we have, wow, a travelling amusement fair. They're not covered by WCB. Now, these are people, I would imagine, that do circus tricks and things like that. Aren't we worried about those people that are doing circus tricks being covered by WCB?

How about animal grooming or boarding or training establishments for animals, Mr. Speaker? They're exempt. Now, why would they be exempt and farmers not exempt? They're dealing with animals, they're dealing with stock, yet they're exempt.

Apartment building or housing rental agencies: they're exempt from WCB. Appraising services: exempt. You're not going to believe it, Mr. Speaker, but even architectural services are exempt.

Art restoration services, that use those nasty chemicals to refine equipment and furniture: they're exempt from WCB, with all those nasty fumes and chemicals. Even, Mr. Speaker, number 20, assaying services. Now, that seems kind of weird.

Artifacts, historical documents, or art exhibits, assembling or displaying those things, all of those art exhibits: they're exempt. A big statue falling on somebody's head: I can see the WCB wanting to run in there and cover them for sure, but they're not because they're exempt. Under this government's legislation those people are all exempt, and I'm only at number 20 out of 170.

Let's talk about the other positions that are exempt. I'm looking for some good ones, Mr. Speaker. Oh, look at that one. The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission: they're exempt. The Alberta Mental Health Board: they're exempt.

And, best of all – I like this one – the Workers' Compensation Board: they're exempt from themselves. How about that? Workers' comp is exempt from workers' comp. How do you like that? So not just the union buddies but also the workers' comp buddies. Interesting. That's an interesting one. Mr. Speaker, I'm at number 23.

Auto racing. Now, auto racers in Alberta can drive a car around a track; they don't have WCB. That sounds like a pretty dangerous job compared to farming on a combine.

Provision of babysitting services: no WCB. Maybe that's next. Maybe that's the NDP plan. We're going to have babysitters unionized right across the province and join the WCB. They're going to force that on them next. Now, that's only number 25, Mr. Speaker. I have another 152 to go.

Wow. A band or an orchestra: they're exempt from WCB.

Even operation of baths, including steam, Turkish, and sauna baths: they're exempt, Mr. Speaker. I can't imagine any place more dangerous, a slip-and-fall accident waiting to happen, than a public bath, and they're exempt from WCB. Is the NDP government not worried about covering those people, protecting those people? They're certainly interfering in farmers' and ranchers' lives.

A baseball club, Mr. Speaker, the operation of a baseball club: now, that's one that's exempt. Why doesn't the NDP look at making the WCB cover them? Even the billiard parlour: you know, they don't have to worry about WCB. A bonding company or a booking agency doesn't have to.

Mr. Speaker, I'm worried. I am worried. Number 35 is a bowling alley. That's a WCB accident waiting to happen. Now, why are they exempt and farmers aren't?

Buying and selling livestock. Just the farmers and ranchers that operate have to be covered, but if you buy and sell livestock, you don't have to. Now, I don't understand the difference, and I don't see anybody on the other side standing up to talk about the difference.

I challenge the Premier. I haven't seen the Premier talk once on this bill. Talk to Albertans. What's going on, Madam Premier? Why are you not telling Albertans what's going on? How can you justify a bill where you're not even prepared to stand up and talk about all the great things that you've done? In fact, Mr. Speaker, if she would have talked the first time that it was announced, she could then talk about a totally different message after the amendments. Of course, we all know that the bill was totally transformed in a matter of two or three days. Why? Because the bill wasn't right. News flash: the bill is still not right.

Kill Bill 6, Mr. Speaker. Go back to the people. Listen to farmers and ranchers. Send it to committee. Follow through with this referral motion. I say that especially to the members in the back. I think that they should look at this list that we've put in, and I'd be happy to table it. Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that you'd like that so that you can go over it later.

Computer processing services. Competitive sports of all descriptions: no WCB for any competitive sport of all descriptions. That sounds like an accident waiting. Community recreation centre: I like that one, too; no WCB necessary if you have a community recreation centre.

If you carry on business as a commissioned livestock buying house, that's another place that you don't need it. Yet farmers and ranchers need WCB even though they have the safest record in Canada, and they've had that good record for many, many years. It shows that Albertans already know what they're doing. The farmers and ranchers do know what they're doing. It's this government that doesn't.

Now, let's look at this. Foreign embassies, consulates: they don't need WCB. Why do farmers and ranchers need it even if the people that come from outside of this country don't need it if they work here and do things? It seems odd, Mr. Speaker.

Consulting services other than consulting by a professional engineer as defined in the engineering and geoscience profession: they don't need WCB either. They've been exempted by this government, yet the government wants to cover farmers and ranchers.

Counselling service: they don't need it. A convention bureau doesn't need it. A credit union doesn't need it.

A curling rink doesn't need it, another accident waiting to happen. Can you believe that a curling rink doesn't have to have WCB? They're exempt from it. Farmers and ranchers: they have to have it, but a curling rink doesn't.

Even dance studios – and we've seen a lot of dancing lately from the other side – don't need it. They're exempt as well from WCB. I see the look of surprise on your face. I'm not surprised.

Demonstration services: well, I guess the NDP aren't required. Designing services or anybody that provides domestic help: they don't need WCB. Drafting services don't need WCB.

An employment agency, even an escort agency, doesn't need WCB. They're prepared to exempt escort agencies but not farmers and ranchers. If you expedite goods and materials, you don't need WCB because you're exempt under this government, but farmers and ranchers need it.

Well, let's see. Extraprovincial or foreign-based charter flights: they don't need WCB, Mr. Speaker, on a plane. Those people operating on a plane are exempted, yet farmers and ranchers, that have been doing it for years and years, need WCB.

Wow. A fire protection association: they don't need it. A football club doesn't need WCB. They've been exempted as well. Even fraternities are exempted.

Geological services are exempted. Geophysical services are exempted. A golf course is exempted. Now, it seems a very strange situation when a golf course is exempted, even a miniature golf course. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker? A golf driving range: the way I golf, they need WCB there for sure. A golf school doesn't need it. When you bring in students and you have all these students around with all these clubs, you don't need WCB. You've been exempted. But farmers and ranchers are mandatorily required to have WCB even though we've heard evidence that they have the best record in Canada.

A gun club, Mr. Speaker: the operation of a gun club doesn't need WCB. Now, I'm surprised that they didn't see gun club at number 81. Maybe they passed it off. Maybe they're starting in the 50s and working their way up or down. But a gun club is exempted from WCB. Farmers and ranchers have to have WCB.

A health studio – I'm missing some. I missed hair removal, Mr. Speaker. I don't need that yet. Hockey clubs: they don't need WCB. They've exempted hockey clubs. They're okay with that. Holding companies. Hostess services.

Ice-skating rink: can you imagine a place waiting for an accident more than an ice-skating rink? Now, why would an ice-skating rink have to be excluded from WCB, not have to have WCB coverage, and farming and ranching does have to have WCB coverage? Even a family farm, a mom-and-pop operation, has to have it, or else they don't get any vacations. They don't have any opportunity to do anything except have WCB coverage and be taxed, not only a carbon tax of a thousand dollars per household but more expenses for WCB.

Any industry carried on by any band on any reserve or any corporation doesn't have to have WCB if they're operating as a band.

An information bureau: no WCB required. An inspection bureau or service other than for testing or inspection of pipe: no WCB required, Mr. Speaker, on any of those inspection services.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Official Opposition leader.

Are there any questions for the member under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

3:40

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More of a statement/question. I'm guessing you didn't read through the entire CBC article. The top sentences actually said about the suicide rates that it's too early to say if there's a correlation between what is happening now and the rates of suicide. I find it incredibly offensive that this is just one more little trick in the game that you're playing. Let me tell you why that is. There are 500 Albertans that die by suicide ... [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you have a question?

Ms Renaud: Yes, I do. I do. I will ask a relevant question.

When my brother took his life because of mental illness, I'm guaranteeing you it wasn't because of the economy. Explain to me how you know better than all of us that suicide is increasing because of the economy.

Mr. Hanson: Point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

The Speaker: The point of order is noted. Hon. member, do you have the point of order you'd like to speak to?

Mr. Hanson: Yeah. If you please, Mr. Speaker, under 23 ...

The Speaker: Well, I'll tell you what. I think the point may well be in terms of moving the discussion ahead. I think the relevance principle was missed in this question.

Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, do you have another under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Hanson: No. I'll withdraw the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Withdrawn. Thank you.

The Speaker: I saw you standing. You're going to respond to the question?

Mr. Jean: Yes. I'd be happy to respond to the question. I understand. I have had that same situation in my family, and my heart goes out to you. It really, truly does. It's something that no family should have to wrestle with, the loss of a family member. That's why I think it's so important to do exactly what I did in relation to this, Mr. Speaker. I looked to the experts. I looked at research. I made sure we researched the issues properly and saw that there was a direct correlation relating to the economy.

Mr. Speaker, that's exactly what we should do here. We should refer this motion, Bill 6, as I've asked, to the committee so that we can listen to experts, farmers and ranchers and the other experts, the eight agricultural industries that say: "This is the wrong bill. The bill should be killed." I would listen to experts, just like I would listen to experts here, because experts are the ones that would be able to give us that testimony that would be backed up by facts.

That's why I'm suggesting to this government: "Stop Bill 6. Don't go any further." We heard it clearly the first time, when you got it wrong, and then three days later, when you tried to get it right, you still got it wrong. We know it's wrong, Mr. Speaker. We know they keep getting it wrong. Stop getting it wrong. Just stop Bill 6. Stop killing the farms and ranches of Alberta, and make sure that we have an opportunity to have a vibrant economy and economic conditions in farming and ranching that are the envy of the world. That's how you diversify an economy: by keeping it strong, by not putting roadblocks in front of it, by not making it so difficult to farm that nobody wants to farm anymore, and, most importantly, by listening to the farmers and ranchers that built this country and that continue to build it every single day.

Mr. Speaker, it's not about what I think. It's not about what anybody else over there thinks, not even the Premier. It's about what Albertans want and what's best for Albertans long term. Nobody is ever going to tell me that the best thing for Albertans is to tell them what they don't want to hear or to do what they don't want to happen. What we are here for is to do what they ask us to do, and right now they're asking this government to kill Bill 6 and to take six months to a year to talk to farmers, to listen to farmers, and to listen to experts. That's what the Wildrose is here to do, to make sure the government listens, because they clearly don't.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Westhead: Yes, under 29(2)(a), Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much to the Leader of the Official Opposition. He talked about looking at the research. You know what? I did that, too, and I mentioned that in my member's statement earlier today. You know, as a registered nurse we actually take the time to go through the research, look at the academic literature, and find out the truth. I did just that. Actually, when I read the open letter that the hon. opposition leader mentioned, he talked about education being sufficient to change behaviour. My question to the hon. leader would be: did he read any research to inform the statement he made in the open letter? Especially considering that there's a lot of contradictory evidence if you look at the academic literature on injury prevention techniques, Mr. Speaker, my question to him would be: can you tell us what research you looked at? I'd like for you to table those reports so that I could have look, too.

Mr. Jean: You know, Mr. Speaker, it goes on and on. Can you believe that the operation of a mobile museum doesn't have to have WCB? It's exempted. A modelling agency is also exempted. In fact, this government has a ton of exemptions, 170. It goes on page after page, and I'd be happy to table these organizations that are exempt.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.
Oh, pardon me.

The Speaker: I'm sorry. I'm leaving the chair. Proceed.

[Mr. Feehan in the chair]

Mr. Clark: Thank you, sir. I'm going to take the opportunity here in my time to hopefully change the tone a little bit. What I want to talk about is the purpose of consultation, the form that it may take, and where this particular government has succeeded with some of the consultations that they've undertaken. We've used this word "consultation" in relation to Bill 6 over and over and over again, so many times, in fact, that it may almost have lost some of its meaning. What does it mean to consult?

What I see when I see, I think, a successful consultation – again, we can quarrel with the outcomes of the climate consultation, whether members of this House like the carbon tax, don't like the carbon tax, like the way it's been implemented, don't like the way it's been implemented, but I don't think we can quarrel with the fact that the consultation was comprehensive and that it happened before rules were made. You went around the province and struck an expert committee. You included Albertans. You asked their opinion in many different forms. You asked their opinion in person. You asked their opinion online. You solicited e-mail responses, written letters. You had experts weigh in from industry, from the environmental movement, and you came up with a work product where you cannot deny that the process that was used was a valid process.

Now, the experts in agriculture and ranching and farming have not been asked about Bill 6 and about these sorts of changes.

This government has done the same thing on royalties, and I certainly hope the outcome for that is a positive one. I do have my doubts and my worries, but I sincerely hope that it's a positive outcome.

You've done the same thing on mental health, a vital topic that has come up in this House today, something that's close to my heart, that I know is close to the hearts of the government side, and that I know is close to the hearts of members on this side. I know it's close to the hearts of Albertans. You have an expert, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. The hon. minister of Municipal Affairs and of Service Alberta is involved. Other members of various communities have gone around Alberta and consulted and have asked for the input of Albertans, have asked for the input of experts. That report is forthcoming in the next couple of weeks, and I'm sure it will be a worthwhile exercise. It will have tremendous information that is actionable, that this province can do something about, and with which we can start to address some of the challenges that we have in this province around mental health. It's important.

This government is also consulting on payday lending. There's currently a survey up around payday lending. That's an important topic as we think about poverty in this province and cycles of poverty and whether Albertans get trapped by unreasonably high rates of interest charged by payday lenders. That doesn't feel right to me. I know the Minister of Finance has done a tremendous amount of work, before he was elected to this House, on that topic. I know that many members on that side have done a tremendous amount of work on that topic, but you've consulted and are continuing to consult on payday lending.

But you haven't consulted on Bill 6, so that's why I rise to speak in favour of this amendment that we send it to committee. When we consult, what might we learn? Well, we might learn that the amendments that we anticipate once this bill finally, eventually, gets to committee, in fact, don't go far enough, that the rules that are proposed to protect paid farm workers may actually not go far enough.

I've gone and looked at what other provinces do in this country, what our neighbours to the east and to the west and in Manitoba do. The Western Producer has a very good article on, I believe, December 4. Perhaps I'll table that tomorrow for the records of the House.

I just want to read out some of the standards that are in place in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba. There are some interesting ideas here that we may be able to adopt with a made-in-Alberta solution. Unless we properly consult and actually ask people in farming and ranching communities, we won't know what people in farming and ranching communities want. If we pass legislation first and then seek to consult, I think what we'll find is that the response to that will be, "Well, you've already decided what you're going to do. Why are you asking me now?"

Consulting after the fact isn't consulting; it's telling. That's the problem here. That's why we have 1,500 people on the steps of the Legislature. That's why there are people in the galleries today. That's why my office in inner-city Calgary has received dozens and dozens and dozens of e-mails and letters and phone calls on Bill 6. You've made a mess of it, my friends. You've made a mess of it, unfortunately, but you have a way out. You can pause the bill, and we can properly consult.

Let's talk about occupational health and safety standards in the province of British Columbia.

Every workplace that employs workers must have a health and safety program, including farms.

However, only employers that have twenty or more employees and have a workplace with moderate to high risk . . . must develop and maintain an occupational health and safety program.

That's interesting.

In Saskatchewan:

Regulations apply to all workplaces, including farms. The act places responsibility for health and safety on everyone who works at the workplace, including owners, workers, self-employed people, contractors and suppliers.

The level of responsibility for each of these is based on authority and control. An employer has the most responsibility to ensure health and safety standards are met . . .

A self-employed person, such as a farmer, who does not employ others, has the same responsibility under the act as both an employer and worker combined.

That's interesting.

In Manitoba:

The act governs the relationship between employers and employees with regard to workplace safety and applies to all workplaces, including farms.

Every employer must ensure the safety, health and welfare of all their workers. The act gives direction on how farmers should protect those who work on a farm as well as how workers are required to protect themselves and others.

Let's talk about workers' compensation. Let's talk about British Columbia's act.

[It] applies to all employers and workers who are engaged in paid work, although it does allow for some exemptions.

Exemptions are not based on industry . . . but rather duration of employment and if the employment is taking place at a private residence.

So for example:

Exemptions are if a person works an average of less than eight hours a week and a person is employed for a specific job for a temporary period of less than 24 hours.

That's interesting. Some of those exemptions we may want to adopt in Alberta.

All paid workers [in B.C.], and the employers of those workers on all commercial farming operations, regardless of size, are included under WCB legislation. Unpaid workers, such as children and family members performing chores or assisting in seasonal activities, are not included under the legislation [in B.C.].

In Saskatchewan:

Like Alberta, the WCB manages a compensation system for workplace injuries on behalf of workers and employers. There are exemptions for certain areas, including dairy, demonstrating and exhibiting, feedlots, grazing co-ops, land clearing, fur farms, livestock brokers, mobile farm feed services or portable seed cleaning plants, pig farms, poultry farms, trapping and voluntary workers.

Voluntary workers perhaps like your neighbour coming to help.

In Manitoba:

The act applies to all employers . . . in all industries. It does exempt farmers and family members of farmers from WCB regulations . . .

Farmers [in Manitoba] can voluntarily apply for coverage for themselves and their family members.

Labour standards in B.C.:

A farm worker is anyone employed in farming, ranching, orchards and agricultural operations who grows or raises crops or livestock, clears land, operates farm machinery or other equipment, sells any products from a farm or washes, cleans, sorts, grades or packs a product from harvest.

Farm workers are covered by most sections of the act except minimum wage, paid wages, deduction of wages and statutory holidays.

Interesting. From British Columbia:

Farm workers are not entitled to overtime, but a farm worker must not work excessive hours detrimental to their health.

That's a pretty broad definition.

Saskatchewan:

The legislation outlines the relationship between employer and employee, including application of minimum wages, holidays and maternity leave.

The act does not apply to employees in farming, ranching or market gardening, but it does apply to those in [some other areas like] egg hatcheries, greenhouses, nurseries, bush clearing, feedlots, confined feeding operations and commercial hog operations.

I could go on, but I think you get the point. I can keep going.

I will table that article. I think it's actually very instructive and very interesting. There are some very interesting aspects of laws that apply in other provinces, our prairie province neighbours in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, our neighbours to the west in British Columbia, that I think we would perhaps welcome in this province as a way of protecting those on farms, both paid workers and perhaps family as well. What matters is keeping people safe. We get to that point by asking the question of the people who are impacted by the changes, just like we've done with climate and royalties and mental health and payday lending. We haven't. The government has not asked those questions in a way that is authentic, where Albertans both rural and urban feel that you've done your homework, that you intend to actually genuinely consult.

I've got to say, my friends, that the risk of invoking time allocation to shut down debate on this discussion doesn't help. It doesn't help in the slightest. It creates headlines that you don't want. It creates a very easy narrative. What I would ask is that you take the time to get it right, take the time to make sure that what we come up with actually protects paid farm workers, gives them the protections they need.

We talk about timelines here. Well, what can we do in the interim? Does that mean that we sit around and we do nothing for six months or for a year? What it means is that we, you the government work with ag societies. There's already a lot of tremendous work that goes on in this province, driven by ag societies, driven by farm families, that helps address issues around farm safety. You can put some resources into that as the government today to help improve farm safety all around the province.

This amendment, by sending this to committee, doesn't mean that you do nothing. It doesn't mean you have to abandon your principles. It doesn't mean you have to abandon support for farm workers or the desire to keep people safe. You can help promote farm safety by working actively with ag societies all around the province, by providing some resources to them. That can happen right now, today. It should be happening right now, today, from this government. Ag societies all around the province already do a tremendous amount of work on farm safety. It's a topic that I know is top of mind for farmers because – trust me – no one wants themselves to be injured, no one wants their family to be injured, no one wants their neighbour to be injured, and no one wants a paid worker to be injured. No one – no one – wants that.

I know that my friends on the opposition side here have taken some heat from the government, perhaps, with their motives. No one on this side, I promise you, wants to see anyone hurt. I know that my friends in the government have taken a lot of heat, from myself included, for the process. I think we all agree that the process hasn't been ideal, but no one, certainly, at least, not me – I guess I can't speak for absolutely everyone. I don't question your motives.

I don't. I really don't. I genuinely believe that every single person on that side wants people to be safe, and I genuinely believe that you feel you're doing this for the right reasons, consistent with your principles, the reasons that you were elected to this House, the reasons you chose to go into public service in the first place, relating back to work that you probably did in your communities before you even became elected. I know that you're doing this from a good place. I genuinely believe that.

Unfortunately, the way that you've gone about this means that the outcome isn't going to be what you want. You had to amend this bill dramatically. The amendment is longer than the bill itself. The protections that will actually be offered up as a result of these amendments, actually, are relatively thin. You could have gone further. Had you consulted properly, had the process that you followed been an open and comprehensive and fulsome process, I think you'd find in the course of three months, six months down the road that we'd have far greater protection for farm workers in this province and you would have the buy-in of the vast majority of farmers and ranchers in Alberta. The outcomes would have been much better.

So you have an opportunity. You have an opportunity to make it right. You have an opportunity by supporting this amendment, sending it to committee, initiating a proper consultation process that starts by asking questions. What problem are we trying to solve? What's the nature of that problem? What's already in place? How do people around this province want to address that problem? Once you've got to that point, come back to the Legislative Assembly with a comprehensive bill that is detailed, that spells out exactly what the parameters are for farm safety legislation and occupational health and safety, in the labour code, the Employment Standards Code, in WCB. In doing that, we'll find, I think, a lot more success.

Why is it that a city MLA is standing up and talking about farm issues? It's about the way that you go about coming up with an answer. It is in response to what I am hearing from my constituents.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

I recognize the Member for Lethbridge-East on 29(2)(a).

Ms Fitzpatrick: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I will ask a question, but before I do, I'd like to make some comments that are pertinent to my question. Yesterday in the House Bill 204 was passed unanimously. I'd like you to keep that in mind as I continue with my comments.

The first comment is that I am hearing over and over again in this House that we must develop the regulations first. I did a little checking since I have, actually, considerable experience in this area. I worked in the federal public service for over 32 years, and about 10 of those years I spent developing policy, bills, and regulations.

Always – always – the bill is done first. Now, while that bill is developing, certainly there's consideration in terms of what the regulations might be, but the bill is developed first. I will say . . .

The Acting Speaker: Excuse me. Member, can I ask you to proceed to your question, please.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Okay. I can't make any further comments on it?

The Acting Speaker: I'd like you to proceed to a question, please.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Okay. I am getting there, and I just want to give an example before I continue. Bill C-4, which was an omnibus budget bill, was passed by the federal government. I worked for the federal government; that's why I'm fairly conversant in this area. The federal government refused to provide any details. There were no regulations done when that was passed. What they said was that after it received royal assent, the details would be provided.

A similar situation is happening here. I would suspect that some of the members on the other side of the House may have forgotten that this process was followed in almost every piece of legislation that was ever done here. In fact, Bill 204: there were no regulations attached to that yesterday. They will be developed in the next eight months.

I attended a meeting in Lethbridge. Eight hundred people attended, and a number of those who attended also identified that they attended most of the other previous meetings. They provided their input.

Point of Order

Question-and-comment Period

Mr. Stier: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. We've heard quite a bit. Is there a question coming from this person?

The Acting Speaker: I recognize the Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod and his point of order, 29(2)(a) says:

Subject to clause (b), following each speech on the items in debate referred to in suborder (1), a period not exceeding 5 minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses to each Member's questions and comments.

It has always been the practice of this House that a question is not required, but a comment may be substituted or both together. One or the other or both are permitted under the rule.

The Acting Speaker: I recognize the leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: I'll be brief. What he said.

The Acting Speaker: I think that we should take a moment to address this question before we move on. As the Government House Leader clearly said, the matter at hand is that a period not exceeding 5 minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses to each Member's questions and comments.

It would seem to me that that indicates there is some limitation on the speaker to come to a question at some point because it does indicate that it does allow responses to those questions, and if you use a hundred per cent of the time, it would not allow for that response. However, it does not specify a specific amount of time, so I would ask all members that they try to strike some form of balance, and if it continues to be an issue, we will define "briefly" in the next little while as necessary, and I will seek precedent. I understand from the two comments made that the practice in the past has been that there has not been a limit. I will reserve ultimate judgment until tomorrow, but I felt that it was important to have said these things.

I also want to comment to members on both sides that it really is not your judgment to be deciding when the question is to be called. It is my judgment, and I will continue to reserve that authority.

Thank you.

Can you please proceed.

Ms Fitzpatrick: As I was saying, with those 800 people who were at that meeting, excluding the people at the back who were calling the two ministers names, there were some very productive comments provided by some of those participants at that meeting. In fact, at the end of the meeting I spent close to an hour talking to about 40 people who provided comments to me, and those comments I brought forward to our caucus.

Now, back to the devil is in the details. I appreciate that the member indicated that it would be a good idea to go to committee, and perhaps when the formal consultation on the regulations occurs, then that will happen. But the actuality is that the bill gets done. You can't develop regulations without a bill.

Now my question to the member: were you aware that, in fact, a member of the Official Opposition actually voted to support not providing any details on Bill C-4?

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I guess I'm not up to speed on every single vote that may have happened in Ottawa. I would hope, though, that the member is not holding up the Harper government's omnibus bills as a model to be followed by this House. I would certainly hope not. I would also note that all federal bills, as I understand it, do go to a committee phase, which is also important.

You know, you mentioned the productive comments that came out of the Lethbridge consultation, and I know that there have been productive comments coming out of all the consultations, some noisier than others. I think that that's exactly what needed to happen before legislation was presented.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of sending this poorly drafted bill to committee. From the moment that this bill was introduced, it became apparent to all the farmers in this province that this government made the ridiculous presumption that a handful of nonfarmers, a handful of politicians and bureaucrats, know more about farming and farm safety than the 43,000 farm families in this province, and that's simply not the case. I am quite certain there are 16-year-old children that have been raised on farms that have forgotten more than the politicians and bureaucrats will ever know.

Furthermore, to address the statement made earlier by another hon. member about lengthy litigations being one of the reasons why we need to foist WCB on our farmers, I think we could not find an insurance company more embroiled in litigation over their deplorable treatment of injured Albertans than the Alberta WCB. As the hon. Premier herself has previously noted, the place is a miserable mess, yet suddenly, now that the NDP are in power, that story has changed. Not one attempt to fix the WCB has been made by this government, and now suddenly it's okay. It's okay to subject an entire sector of our economy, farmers, to this problematic WCB insurance regime and in very great haste.

Although members opposite won't know this, there are insurance providers that some farmers use that provide better coverage at a lower cost without the red tape or the delays common at WCB. But under this legislation farmers are not given that choice.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, if this bill was really about farm safety, if that was the true intent of the bill, if this government was really interested in transparency and accountability, they would not presume to know more than the thousands of farmers who live the farm life each and every day and understand the risks each and every day, but that's not what has happened. A small group of bureaucrats and politicians think they know better and cobble together a bill that is so flawed that this government had to hastily drop six pages of amendments to try to quell the very loud protest coming from Alberta farmers in justifiably protesting this bill.

Furthermore, when it comes to the lack of consultation, I was amused to see a report that even the minister of agriculture said that he had no input into this bill – and he's the minister of agriculture – and that he had, according to the report, quote, no authority to change it. I would question: well, then, what on earth was he elected to do?

This government is demonstrating a very clear and imminent threat, to coin a phrase from a former president of the United States. We have this weapon of mass destruction that's descending upon our farmers known as WCB and OH and S, and they were never asked if that's what they wanted to have happen to them. So we have this threat. The other threat, of course, is that this government is consistently ramming legislation through here without appropriate consultation, without giving heed to the experts, many of whom are up there in the gallery today, and they are not having their voice.

If this bill, however, was to go to committee, then we could invite the experts, the farmers themselves, to come in and one by one advise this Legislature on the very best measures for farm safety.

Mr. Cyr: Do they want to hear what they have to say?

Mr. MacIntyre: Good question. Do they actually want to hear what the farmers have to say? We keep hearing that they're hearing, but all I've been hearing from farmers is, "Kill Bill 6," and somehow it still manages to be alive today. I'm not sure why. Perhaps some more phone calls need to be made to the various NDP MLAs that have farms in their ridings.

For example, the minister of agriculture himself, the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, has 1,230 farms in his riding, and he can be reached at 780.786.1997. We also have the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater. They have 1,159 farms and ranches in that riding. If the folks at home are watching, they can call 780.675.3232 in Athabasca and voice their concern. You know, if the government won't send this to committee and invite testimony from farmers, maybe the testimony needs to come by phone messages to these numbers. Even the Member for West Yellowhead has 695 farms in his riding. There is no office in Edson, but you can reach him by phone at 780.865.9796 in Hinton.

I'm really quite appalled at the NDP's decision to draft this bill without first entering into significant and meaningful consultation with rural Alberta as to how this thing happened. Albertans are being represented by a government that has too quickly forgotten that good governance requires a commitment to the best interests of Albertans, not a commitment to pushing through rapid-fire atrocious legislation too quickly to check with those that would be most affected, and we know that that's precisely what happened. It was pushed through too quickly. No proper checking, no due diligence was done. We know that is the case because we just had an amendment dropped, six pages long, trying to correct a series of mistakes. If that isn't evidence enough that a bill needs to go to committee, I'm not sure what is.

We have a lot of talk from this NDP government on their commitment to proper legislation. Well, let's have a couple of examples. The Minister of Energy, speaking about the royalty review, told the House on June 17:

As with all the projects, we are consulting with industry as we move forward and looking at the pros and cons of all of that.

Again, we're in constant consultation with industry to look at those projects that will bring value and jobs to Alberta.

The Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour, speaking about the minimum wage hike, told the House on June 18:

The Premier and I met last week with industry leaders, with labour, and with advocacy groups to hear their input on this, and we're going ahead with those consultations.

Here we have consultations, but when it came to the farmers, no, no. In a backroom some bureaucrats and politicians whipped together a bill on the back of a napkin, it looked like, to jam it through the House. Somehow farmers don't qualify for this level of consultation.

Here we are, and now we've got massive protest after massive protest because this government's definition of consultation for farmers is substantially different than for everyone else. That's unacceptable. Instead of consultation meetings and information sessions, it's a come-and-be-told session. That is not consultation. Consultation, as was defined earlier by the hon. member, is to come, listen, learn. The process should have been that, first and foremost. Consultation is not just a buzzword that you throw around.

The farmers have said that they feel like this government does not care about rural Albertans enough to deem them worthy of proper consultation before drafting a bill, and we have a Premier that appears to be more focused on foreign affairs than listening to people who are trying to convince her that this bill needs to die.

There are some facts here about this. Fact 1, there are more small family farms in Alberta than in any other province.

Fact 2, 45 days to consult and pass a law is insufficient for any law. This is a huge industry with many stakeholders, and the thing that ought to stand out uppermost in the minds of everyone in this House and all Albertans, really, is that every farm is unique. They are complex systems, and they are not considered by the family farmers to be a job. It's their life, and this legislation is imposing on a life and a quality of life.

Fact 3, in this government's addresses on Bill 6 it has continually glossed over the fact that B.C. recognizes the unique position of family farms and provides them with special recognition under their laws because that government recognizes the uniqueness and the complexity of farms. We heard the hon. member earlier talking at length about British Columbia and their laws.

If this went to committee, we could take a good long look at what British Columbia has done and go through that, and we just might find a lot of very good concepts that could be incorporated into this bill. By not going to committee, we are robbed of that opportunity and the farmers themselves are robbed of the opportunity to look at British Columbia's legislation and say: "Wow. That's really good. We like it. We think that's what we should have here in this province." But we will never have that discussion because this government seems to be determined not to send this bill to committee and, instead, just ram it on through this House for who knows what reason.

Fact 4, this ill-conceived plan is going to directly impact the lives of some 43,000 farms in this province, people who make their livelihood and who have their life on that farm. And they just could not be bothered to consult. It's just shameful.

Because I represent Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, I have a very large demographic that are farmers, and they are furious. My constituency office is just absolutely overrun with phone calls, e-mails, letters. They're furious because they feel like this government did not consult them, and now this government is turning a deaf ear to their cries. It's one thing not to consult them at the front end of this bill, but now the farmers are rallying right across this province, thousands of them, and they're all with one voice saying the same thing: stop; slow down; kill the bill; send it to committee. And now, having not been consulted on the front side of this bill, they feel like they're being ignored in the midst here. It's going to be an interesting next election. I think the orange crush might get crushed by a farmer's boot.

Earlier this week I received a letter from a cattle rancher, and I'm just going to quote a little bit from that letter if you don't mind. She works on a cattle ranch, and she and her husband apparently own this. She says:

My husband is a second generation rancher. We ranch with his parents. We also have two young [children]; aged two and one. We are a family owned and operated ranch.

She says:

I am opposed to Bill 6. I feel it affects a way of life . . . Also, if any changes are to be done, they must be done with as much feedback from fellow producers as possible. Not just big [corporations], but the family farms as well.

Mr. Speaker, this NDP government's inability to recognize the significance of what the writer of this letter and so many other letters just like this are telling us is exactly why we should not be legislating in such a rush on this matter.

This lady goes on to say:

Farming and ranching is a way of life. It is not a job, it is a lifestyle. We live what we do every day, it is our home. On the family farm it is impossible to draw the line between our home and the barn and determine where home ends and work begins. We can't draw a line between our garden and the corrals because to us it is all our home.

The whole thing is home. The gardens, the corrals, the barn: it's all home.

We don't wake up every day and head out to work. We wake up every day to live our life.

Here's the concept that the other side just doesn't seem to grasp about farming. They don't drive into their farmyard and say: oh, I'm at work now. No, they say: we've come home. It's just ludicrous. And now this government wants to legislate home. That's why these farmers are so upset. That's why they're here. We have a government that's trying to legislate and regulate home. It's crazy. You can't legislate and regulate home. Go ahead, send OH and S out to draw a line between the home and barn and say: okay; well, this side is work, and this side is home. Is that ridiculous or what? Is that ridiculous or what?

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Just before we go to 29(2)(a), I'd like to remind members not to communicate with the people in the galleries.

Anybody who'd like to speak to 29(2)(a)? Proceed.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the member a question. But, first, I'd like to thank him for his presentation through you, Mr. Speaker. I enjoyed it.

The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake is my neighbour, one of the many neighbouring MLAs I have surrounding my riding. The other day he took the time to travel down to Sundre to participate at a town hall with me before we came back up here on Sunday, and I do appreciate his time for that. I think he would agree with me that one of the things that stood out as we met with farmers and ranchers on Sunday night was trust. This government has broken trust with farmers and ranchers, which is one of the reasons why we probably need to send this to committee, just to get that trust back.

The question, of course, is: how did the government break that trust? Well, let me be clear, Mr. Speaker. The government released documents that they now say they didn't mean to release or that somebody accidentally released. I don't know. They can't seem to come up with an explanation on why they did that. But here's one of the things, just one of the things: does the legislation include unpaid workers such as neighbours who help during busy times? Do you know what the answer was? Under the proposed legislation the OH and S Act and regulations would apply when an employer engages the services of a worker regardless of whether or not the worker is paid – for example, neighbours who volunteer to help – and regardless of the worker's age.

Now, I can tell you that farmers and ranchers will be very clear – and I live in a farming and ranching community – that neighbours help neighbours. That's pretty important for our lifestyle. It's pretty important for our operations. So they see a document like that on a website, and now the government says: oh, we didn't mean to do that. And we think that they now trust this government, going forward, to write regulations over the next 18 months that they're not a part of? I know that the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake will agree with me that that was a big concern.

The second thing – and I'd like to hear his comments on both of these – is that the Premier of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, has stood up in this House repeatedly saying that she is trying to right a great wrong, saying that farmers and ranchers for almost a hundred years have been forcing people to do unsafe work, have been forcing people to do things that they don't want to do, which hurt and kill them. That is outrageous. Farmers and ranchers from my community are some of the best neighbours I have. I'm proud to call them my friends. I'm proud to call them my neighbours.

So I'd like to know, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the member, how the member thinks that this government can get trust back when she would speak about farmers and ranchers like that.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you for the question, hon. member. Well, you know, there is a simple solution to getting trust back. I'm sure that each and every one of us in this House have done things in our past, maybe not even that far back, where we have inadvertently caused someone harm, someone who trusted us. The thing to do, of course, is to genuinely apologize for that breach of trust and also to take those steps necessary to start earning that trust back.

In relation to the town hall meeting that the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is talking about, the farmers that we met with one-on-one after the meeting was sort of dispersing repeatedly said the same thing over and over and over again, Mr. Speaker. They said – and I'll try to paraphrase – that the government is ramming this bill through and then telling us, "Trust us; we'll get the regs right," when, in fact, the trust has already been broken. To go now to those farmers and say: "Yeah, we blew it. Here are six pages of amendments. We didn't consult with you when we drew this thing up first. But, yeah, just trust us. We'll get the rest of it right." That's not going to happen. That trust is gone.

If this government wants to get the trust back, there are a couple of things that need to happen. First of all, they need to apologize to the farming community across this province for some of the insinuations that somehow farms in this province are horribly unsafe places and that somehow children are being forced to do unsafe things and workers are being forced to do unsafe things. Nothing could be further from the truth. Not at all.

I am a former farm boy and a paid farm worker, and nobody could tell me to do something unsafe. I'm a free man in a free nation. I'm not a slave to anyone, and neither is anyone else in this country. There is nobody in this country that can force someone to do something unsafe.

4:30

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I call upon the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti next.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak to this amendment. I support the amendment, you know, a referral motion to send it to committee to do further consultations with the farmers across this province. I encourage the government to take the time to get it right and to talk to the experts. I won't point to the members in the audience because I've been asked not to do that, but I'll speak for all farmers across all Alberta, not just the ones here today. All farmers should be consulted on this important piece of legislation. The government has said that they could take up to two years to consult on the regulations, and that's fine. But why won't they take even six months to consult on the legislation? That's the question I have for them. You know, there are two pieces. There's regulation and legislation, but they should consult on the legislation as well before they bring it forward.

Mr. Speaker, I support farm safety. Farm safety is important, and I think all farmers support farm safety and protection for farm workers. I don't think there's one farmer in Alberta that doesn't think safety is important, especially for the protection of their farm workers. I don't think it just has to be WCB. You know, even the Premier herself says that WCB isn't the greatest program and that there are lots of flaws with it, so why force farmers to have WCB and not good private insurance? There's lots of good private insurance out there, and most farmers have that. Actually, private insurance goes further than WCB. It protects them 24/7 whereas WCB only protects them when they're on the job. One accident is too many. We don't want to have any accidents on the farm, but when you do, it's good to have an insurance program to cover it.

You know, the amendments haven't been brought forward yet, but everybody has been talking about them. The amendments that were presented yesterday by the government say that it's only going to affect paid employees, and then we saw last night the unions and everybody talking about I think it was 112 pairs of gloves. The members across can correct me if I'm wrong because I'm taking information that I've heard from across there: 112 pairs of gloves. What I've heard is that out of all the farm accidents, only 9 per cent are paid farm workers. The rest are the owners, the relatives, the neighbours, and the people that visit. So when you're talking about 112 pairs of gloves, you're really only talking about 9 per cent of 112 pairs of gloves, Mr. Speaker.

Plus, out of that 9 per cent, you know, the government assumes that no farms have any insurance. Well, I've heard that anywhere from 80 to 90 to 96 per cent of farms today already have insurance. Now, I would hope that the government would have done that research before to come up with a clearer number. I've heard up to 90 per cent, and it could be higher. Nine per cent of 112 brings you down to – I don't know – somewhere around 11, but 90 per cent of them are already covered, so with all this legislation they're bringing forward about protecting farm workers, you're talking about one or two people since 1997. Well, we lose one every day to fentanyl. I'm not playing that down, Mr. Speaker. As I said, one life is too many. But I think they're not playing with all the facts over there. I don't think everybody understands exactly the true facts of what they're talking about. Farms are safe, they have good insurance programs, and farmers care about their workers. Somehow this government doesn't think that the farmers do care about the safety of their employees, but believe me, I know they do.

You know, this government just kind of assumes that no farms have any safety programs: no insurance or safety or WCB. The numbers they use talk like no farms have any coverage at all when we all know that that's just not true. I think farmers really do care more about the safety of their farm and their workers than the members sitting opposite do. I don't say that they don't care, but I'll guarantee you that farmers care about somebody getting hurt on their farm more so than somebody sitting in this House does. I can tell you that.

You know, we can always improve. I'm not saying that we can't. I'm not against bringing in some legislation, but have a minimum amount of insurance that farmers have to have for coverage. Don't specify WCB; just say that you have to have a certain level of coverage. I'm not against OH and S coming in and inspecting a farm if a fatality has happened or something has happened on that farm. You know, if you inspect it and figure out what went wrong, they can use that information to get it out to the other farmers and maybe prevent it from happening somewhere else. We've heard it lots in this House that education does more than legislation for saving lives on the farm. A piece of paper with legislation probably isn't going to save one life, but if you can go in and figure out what went wrong, tell everybody about it, educate people, that could save some lives. It's real, Mr. Speaker.

I mean, I could go on and read all kinds of e-mails and letters that I've gotten and repeat everything that's been said in this House. I think there's lots of good stuff that's been said, but I'm not going to repeat it, and I'm not going to read all the letters I've gotten. I've gotten lots of them, believe me. I'm just going to sit down. Those are the points I wanted to get made.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
You wish to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Nixon: I do, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again, through you, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member for the presentation. I was listening intently and certainly found some wisdom in it. I know the member has been a member of this Assembly for a long time, certainly more than the class of 2015, which makes up the bulk of the members right now. I was wondering if he could just comment on the size of the protest, on the size and the volume of the e-mails and the phone calls that he is getting on this issue, and on how that compares to his experience with other issues in his time as an MLA.

Then I wonder if he could advise the House a little bit on his thoughts on the complaints that we are getting from constituencies that are adjacent to our ridings. In my case I have a rather large riding, as you know, about 25,000 square kilometres. It borders my friend from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills' riding on the western side as well as a member's riding from across the way, Banff-Cochrane. It's ranching communities all through there. As you know, just because there are riding lines – they don't quite line up. Counties are on this side and that side, and neighbours are on this side and that side, so the communities overlap our ridings. I'm having ranchers coming into my office in Sundre almost every day saying: "I cannot get help from my MLA in Banff-Cochrane. I cannot get help. I cannot get an answer."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I sympathize. My office has gotten over a thousand phone calls on this in the last week, but we are responding to them. I held a town hall when I was back shortly for the weekend to see my family. I'll have a town hall when I come back next weekend. Even if the government tries to limit debate on this bill, I will still continue to hold town halls in my constituency across the riding.

I'd like the hon. member to just comment on the sheer size of this and how big a deal this is, for some of these rookie MLAs to understand that, as well as his thoughts on constituents having to go to other MLAs to be able to get representation in this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Would you wish to respond, hon. member? Please proceed.

Mr. Drysdale: I thank the member for the question. I don't always consider myself an old-timer, but when I look around here, I'm getting up there, and I'm hating to admit it. I don't think I've been in this House that long, Mr. Speaker. I was first elected in '08, and now, actually, I am one of the longest serving members here. There are a couple that have been here longer than me but not that many. When I came, there were members that had been here 30 years and 20 years, so I don't feel like it's been that long. It's only been eight years, but I'm actually one of the longest serving ones now, believe it or not.

You know, in that time, as the member asked, I haven't seen this kind of demonstration and outcry from the public. This is the biggest I've seen. I have to admit that in my years of being around, I've never participated in a rally before in my life, and I've now participated in three or so in the last week. We know that something is going wrong, Mr. Speaker, because I'm not one to take that lightly. So it is unusual. It has definitely caused an uproar.

The other question the member asked, you know, was on the representation. For me, I'm the only PC MLA in northwestern Alberta. The ones farther north are ND, so of course I get calls from Manning, Grimshaw, Peace River, Fort Vermilion, which is like 300 kilometres from me. They have nobody else that will listen to them on these concerns.

So he's right. It's widespread, and I get calls from lots of people outside of my constituency. You know, I mostly work on behalf of my constituency, but I'll listen to any farmer and bring their concerns and thoughts forward on this issue. It's just too bad that it's come down to this, and now we've got time allocation coming in. I guess this government is going to ram it through, like it has been said. We'll all do our best to speak for the farmers in Alberta, and we'll continue to do that even after this is rammed through, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.
You wish to respond under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Strankman: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Strankman: I'd also like to speak to the member. The Member for Calgary-Elbow made some mention of a farm magazine, the Western Producer, that gives some options that other provinces have. I was wondering if the member could respond about the possibility of appeals to regulations coming forward. With his experience in the Legislature . . .

The Acting Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member, but our time is up.
Now, anyone else wishing to respond? I will recognize the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to the referral motion. You know, this referral motion is about trying to get it right. Bill 6 and the amendments that we hear are coming to Bill 6 appear to fall far short of what farmers are asking for and that ranchers are asking for. It speaks to the need for consultation, and I believe that this referral motion would grant that by sending it to committee, so I speak in favour of the referral motion.

Farmers and ranchers have rightly been wary of the suggested changes of this bill, that don't really take into account the complexities and the distinctive intricacies of family farm life. Many of my colleagues have discussed and talked about, you know, the difficulty that happens between trying to figure out where farm and work life begin and where home and family life begin and how that's very difficult to decide and how different farms bring in different complexities. It's very different being a grain farmer versus a cattle farmer versus a dairy farmer.

You know, these complexities, I believe, are understood by the farmers in our province. They understand that this bill, Bill 6, even with its amendments, is onerous and often misguided. Sometimes their livelihoods are even threatened. To highlight this, I know that like many of the other MLAs in this Legislature, we've received immense amounts of e-mail and letters and feedback from our constituents. I would like to take the time to perhaps read some of the more eloquent e-mails that I've received, because I believe that the House and this Legislature need to know how our farm families are feeling about this piece of legislation.

If we are the representatives of the people of Alberta in this Legislature, as we are, then I would pray that we'd actually listen to these people. I've said many times to the people in my constituency: "I'm your mouthpiece. I take your ideas, I take your values, I take your beliefs, and I place them into this Legislature. I'm your representative." So when we can bring the people – this is actually their Legislature. It's not yours, and it's not mine. It's the people of Alberta's. When we bring their ideas, when we bring their comments into this Legislature, I think it's important that we actually listen to them. You know, I would ask you to listen carefully, and I would ask you to give these words careful consideration when we debate the merits of this bill.

I have one constituent that writes, I believe, very heartfully:

Tonight I feel sick inside as I comb over the list of changes the Alberta government has in store for our family farm. I dread what will happen to our life and our livelihood when the government imposes itself on our family.

Our little unit consists of my 82 year old father, my 79 year old mother, my husband and myself. We have a seven year old daughter who loves all our animals, especially our cows. She watches and participates in every facet of our farm life. This is the only life she has known, and she emphatically states it's the only thing she ever wants.

Now, I don't know if you've ever had a seven-year-old little daughter, but I can just hear that seven-year-old little daughter because I used to have a seven-year-old little daughter, and I can understand what she sounds like. I think that sometimes maybe we'd be a little further ahead if we would refer this to the committee so that they could hear little seven-year-old girls speak or the farm families speak directly to this.

She loves checking cows on the pastures, watching and helping during calving, raising chickens and bunnies, riding her pony, and joining us for haying. That's all going to change and the life we have will never be the same. It breaks my heart to tell her the government doesn't trust her family to keep her safe. She won't understand how a stranger will be able to come on our farm and change our lives. I can't even begin to explain ... how the changes will likely mean we will have to quit.

Tell me that a committee doesn't need to hear this.

Am I emotional? No doubt. Losing my freedom and the work I love is painful. Am I over reacting or uninformed? Absolutely not. As the saying goes, this is not my first rodeo.

My husband and my father have both managed oilfield operations. I was a television journalist for the CBC. My mom was a tax consultant. We know a great deal about OH&S, WCB, Labour Relations and Employment Standards. We know these rules and laws have no place on our family farm. These are great rules for corporate farms and larger family farms who have paid employees [on staff]. [These rules] won't work here, and are frankly an insult to us and our way of life.

By placing our small family farm under the same rules as big feedlots, commercial grain farms and other big corporate outfits, the Alberta government has shown it doesn't understand or respect, how we live, what we need and who we are.

You see, Mr. Speaker, we need to ask the farmers what they want. In a democracy it ultimately comes down to that. The people are supposed to rule. We need to ask them what they want. We need to address their concerns in this bill. With anything less, I believe, we're not living up to our responsibility as legislators.

This farmer asks:

How will Bill 6 cover these scenarios?

These would be great questions for a committee that we refer this to.

If I bring a calf into the house to warm up after its mother has dumped it in a snow bank, will my home become the workplace, subject to unannounced inspections?

I maintain and run older machinery to avoid debt. Will I be forced to buy new?

How many safety meetings should I hold? Do I need a Job Hazard Assessment for each task? Will I have to write a Job Safety Awareness Book? Where will I keep all the documentation stored for the seven years required by law?

When the OHS inspector shows up on my property what type of biosecurity measures will he take? What is my course of action if he causes a disease outbreak or infection?

These are good questions, and they're questions that a committee needs to hear, that they need to consider, that they need to discuss. We need clarity on this for our farm families. While most of my family are farmers, I've never been a farmer myself. While I've been around farms and I've been around cattle, I don't stand here trying to say that I'm an expert on OH and S or WCB and how they apply to farm families, but this committee needs to hear these questions. This is a wise referral.

You know, I guess it's up to the government, and ultimately, I guess, it's probably up to the backbench of the government. One of the things that I'm beginning to learn as an MLA is that, at least in my party, when we make a decision about where we're going to go, it actually is a caucus decision. When my leader or when my leadership team comes to us and says that we need to consider a particular course of action, we actually have the conversations. I've heard my leader say: "Listen, this is a team thing. We go down this path only if we have the consent of the caucus." We actually do have and you folks over in the government benches do have significant power to impact and to intervene on this piece of legislation.

This constituent asks another set of questions.

If a normally gentle cow has a fit of bovine rage because she is having trouble calving, and [somehow] someone gets hurt, will a stop work order be issued? What happens to the cow? Is she left to suffer and perhaps die because no one is allowed to complete the necessary work?

If a neighbour needs my help, and he has no WCB coverage for me, do I stop being his helpful neighbour?

Now, maybe we've started to address some of that.

If I see animals loose on a roadway should I just leave them to cause a wreck and get killed, or kill a driver? I may not know who owns the animals. I've always helped in the past for the safety of all. Once the animals are contained I search for the owners, but with the new rules, I could be causing untold problems for a fellow farmer just because I was trying to keep everyone safe.

I know this happened to me just coming to the Leg. here just about a month ago. Driving down the road, I saw three horses running down the ditch in the highway. Knowing that they can spook and jump out in front, you know, you slow down, and eventually you push them off into a fence that's broken down, into a field. Then you go up to the farmhouse, and you see if they're their horses: no, no, no; that's the neighbours down the road. They know who they belong to, found out from one of the kids from my basketball team. You know what? You do those things because that's the way agricultural life works in Alberta.

Will my child be allowed to help calm a frightened calf, watch a birth, help with paperwork, join a cattle drive? Will she be allowed to handle a 4-H steer?

The scenarios may seem outrageous, but Bill 6 creates more problems than solutions for the small family farm. It horrifies me to think a government bureaucrat could come onto my farm, [into] my home, and into my life and change everything.

I hope we're listening, and if we're not, I hope we have enough care about these kinds of scenarios that we're at least willing to put this before a committee that can listen.

There is nothing worse than giving too much power to an individual. While I have met government workers who tried to be helpful and were genuine in their concern, I have seen others who have too much power and wield it maliciously. This bill will put my family at the mercy of a government bureaucrat. If passed, a wonderful rural way of life will be gone. [That] is heartbreaking.

That's just one letter. I thought it was one of the most eloquent, and I think it speaks to this whole issue of: how do you divide this issue between a workplace and a home? How do you do that? Where do you draw the lines?

Mr. Speaker, I think we can see that these are not the words of some robber baron who wants to take advantage of their workers. These are not the words of a parent who does not care about the safety of their children. This is not a selfish entrepreneur that cares more about profit than workers' safety or their neighbours. This is a typical Albertan farmer, who does not want the onerous regulations that will be placed upon their livelihood and their way of life. These are real issues that she's bringing up, and they need further discussion at the committee level. I don't see why it's difficult to see that.

Perhaps this Legislature and this government need to recognize that maybe some of the answers, rather than being found in onerous legislation, really are found in education. You guys know enough about me now to know of my history as an educator. One of the things that I loved about this next one, that I want to share with you, is the whole tack that she takes towards education and how this could be used to address this issue. "I had offered all my curriculum-friendly materials to [Alberta] Education free of charge."

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Under 29(2)(a) I recognize the Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do find it distressing that the hon. member continues talking about these outrageous scenarios, that we've explained already, but I will ask a question. You know, we brought this bill forward because of lobbying that has come to us, over years and years, from farm workers and families that have been impacted by injuries and from farm groups. That's how this came to be and why we brought it forward. We thought it was important. My question is: of all the people that come to your office, there must have been some people who want this bill, so how have you talked to them about it? What have you said to those who want to see this bill in place?

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member: I can honestly say that I have not had one conversation in my office with a farmer or with a rancher that has supported this bill, okay? I mean, I believe you when you say that there are people that have come to you requesting this, okay? I do believe that they have, but at the same time I think that an honest, open discussion on this issue would also recognize the many, many, many, many people that have been coming forward saying that they've got serious problems with this.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: I recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the member: thanks for his presentation. This matters. Sometimes it's trivialized as we debate it, and we can be a long way from home in this place, but this matters to people. When I was back home – I know the member will have seen the same when he was back home – there were grown-ups with tears in their eyes as they talked about this. Today in our gallery there were people with tears in their eyes. This morning we watched the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock give a great speech about why this matters to him. He raised his five kids on a farm. He's a farmer. This matters. This matters. This is important.

People should be given the opportunity to speak to it. I know that the member believes that they should be given an opportunity to discuss something that matters so much to them, to participate in something that – it shouldn't be trivialized. Nobody has said that they don't want to do safety. I haven't talked to one farmer or rancher who has said: hey, we don't want to do anything to improve things. But every farmer or rancher says that they want to participate, and I know the member has heard the same thing. I know from my office that I haven't gotten one e-mail yet that was for this bill.

The question that I have is – and I was proud today to sit in this Assembly as the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition stood up in this Chamber and talked for about an hour and a half. An hour and a half he stood in this Chamber. He used all the time that he could to defend the constituents, to defend the farmers and ranchers across this province, and I still, Mr. Speaker, have not seen the Premier stand up in this House and do any speech. The Premier has not stood up. Her members are not standing up. We're giving you lists all the time. They're not standing up. They're asking questions, but they're not standing up and explaining what they want to do, as you know. The Premier of Alberta, who is forcing this on farmers and ranchers, has not stood up in this Assembly, but the Leader of the Opposition has, for an hour and a half.

I want to know what the member thinks about that as far as leadership and what a shame that is on this Premier for not standing up and communicating to farmers and ranchers across this province and not standing up for Albertans, because, Mr. Speaker, that is her job.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. You know, there are times in life when you get the chance to listen to somebody articulate and for somebody to speak to an issue with passion and with veracity and with understanding, and I can tell you that today I was never prouder of the leader of my party than when he stood up and spoke for an hour and a half, so articulately explaining the issues in and surrounding this issue.

The chance that we have, the most important thing that we can do in this Legislature as MLAs, as elected members, is to represent the wishes of our constituents, so I do not understand how we cannot do that here. I'm so proud of my leader and of the people on this side of the House that I've heard speak against this bill because they have spoken what the people are telling them. You maybe don't have to agree with what the people are saying, but they are saying it, and they are saying it loud and clear. As representatives we have only one other . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Would anyone else like to speak? I recognize the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I come from an urban riding, Calgary-Fish Creek. Many may not know, but Bow Valley Ranche, in Calgary-Fish Creek, is one of the original hearts of Alberta's ranching community and farming community. I'd like to think that all Albertans have deep roots in the agricultural and farming and ranching spirit, which is really the pioneer spirit, which has built our province. I think we should all be proud of that, and I think it's something that is embedded in Albertans' DNA. Again, I think we're all proud of that.

Farmers and ranchers were the original innovators, I believe, in our community. They were problem solvers. A can-do attitude came from them, indomitable stubbornness that actually got us to where we are in the face of a lot of challenges. Prairie work ethic: I think that term came from the farmers and ranchers of not only our province but across the prairies. They've overcome hardship and drought and other natural disasters, freezing in the middle of winter when they didn't have power, cutting the logs they needed to stay warm, and harbouring the animals and the grains and the implements and the supplies they needed to survive hard winters. But, Mr. Speaker, they're having a hard time surviving this NDP government.

Self-reliance is something that they pride themselves on, and that self-reliance is part of the problem that we're seeing here today. That self-reliance is one which is a fierce sense of family spirit and a sense of community but also a deep sense of family and safety for those families that, quite frankly, is probably the greatest source of safety we will find: in the warm hearth of their families, the love that they have for each other, and the fact that they want them all to come home safely at the end of the day. Many of them cross acres and acres, hundreds of acres during those days, watching cattle, raising crops, and other things.

I like to think of the image of barn raising. You know, barns were not raised in this country, in this province, across the prairies by architects and engineers. They weren't raised by cranes. They weren't raised by unionized labourers. There weren't catering services there, and certainly there were no safety officers watching out for them. They watched out for themselves and each other. Yet it all got done safely and with each person watching out for the man, woman, or child beside them. I think we should all be proud of that. In fact, probably the safety that we have in the workplace comes from that sense of independence and innovation and caring that came from the farms of Alberta and made its way into the workplace, not the other way around.

You know, I grew up as city boy in Calgary, but I became friends with some of the largest ranchers in southern Alberta, and they invited me down to their farms and their ranches. We had an opportunity for me to learn. I'm very proud that when I was 14, I spent the summer working on a farm. I can tell you that I never worked harder in my life. I was never more well fed in my life. It was probably one of the most memorable occasions of my life, and I sure slept well at the end of the night, I'll tell you, for the short nights.

And I was safe. You know what? I was 14, but there were 18-year-olds and 19-year-olds and 22-year-olds and 30-year-olds and 50-year-olds, and they were all watching out for me, and when I was in the way of a piece of machinery, they pulled me aside. They wanted me to work hard. They gave me a baling hook and said: kid, you're going to get some muscles here, and away you're going to go. But there was always somebody watching out for me. Now, I had to fight for food at the table at the end of the day, but they were always watching out for me.

Those families of southern Alberta that I've gotten to know, again, some of those large ranches: those are the pioneers and the spirit, those are the people that founded the Calgary Stampede, the Big Four. Those ranchers have sustained themselves. Mr. Speaker, sustainability is what we're talking about here. That sustainability now has gone on for over a hundred years amongst not only the large ranches but the small family ranches of this province.

Sustainability is something we could learn about in this House because that sustainability is under attack. Quite frankly, the sustainability of our family farms and ranches is under attack, but it doesn't have to be that way. We could do the right thing in this House, members on all sides here, and truly consult, not by going back and scrambling and trying to find a way to backfill a lack of consultation, a lack of information, a lack of talking to the neighbouring provinces, who could probably tell us what they've done right and maybe what they've done wrong and what we could do better.

We have an opportunity to be the best in Canada here, which we're used to being. This is a province of leaders, this is a province of innovators, and this is a province where, I think, we like to think that we do things on a best-practices basis. Here is an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to do just that. I would suggest that this is an opportunity that should be seized by this Legislature on behalf of Albertans and rural Albertans and farmers and ranchers across this province. We have the opportunity to do that here today.

[The Speaker in the chair]

You know, the very fabric of Alberta's family farms is really, again, under attack here; hence, a way of life and sustainability not only could be but is likely to be seriously undermined unless we change course here today and tomorrow.

To really end my comments here, again I'm pleading to the government, with the support of the House. We all, I think, as has been mentioned by many of the members here, do indeed believe that the government has the best of intentions, is doing it with the clear conscience that they have done the right thing. But I'm here to tell you that we've had not only 15 or 100 or 2,000 farmers and ranchers on our doorstep here but also across Alberta, in arenas and fields across this province, telling us and asking us to get it right. I think this is an opportunity that needs to be taken, Mr. Speaker. Let's consult before we ram this through. Let's consult Albertans, let's consult our neighbours, and let's do what's right for this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler .

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. To the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek: as a city boy and seeing the outpouring of reaction to this, could you give your more personal relationship and that from your friends and neighbours in your constituency?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Gottfried: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for his question. Indeed, I've been flooded with hundreds of e-mails and phone calls, which was surprising, quite frankly, but I've heard that from some of our other urban members as well. You know, we all would like to think that there is maybe an urban versus rural issue here, but there's not.

You know what I'm hearing? I'm hearing about the 70-year-old who's had a successful corporate career, who grew up on the farm. They still have those values. That prairie work ethic, that pioneer spirit actually helped them. There's a great book called Cowboy Ethics, which everybody in this House should read, that is being used on Wall Street to teach people about ethics, to teach people about values, to teach people about doing the right thing, to teach people about hard work, not easy money. Those are the things that I'm hearing.

Quite frankly, it is encouraging, you know, to hear people tell their stories of having grown up in an agricultural community or on a farm family. Again, it's the story of Alberta. They're not from Alberta. They're from Saskatchewan, they're from Manitoba, they're from B.C., they're from Ontario, and they're from the Maritimes. They came to this province because of the Alberta advantage, which was alive and well not just in the corporate boardrooms of this province, not just in the small businesses, not just in the corporations but in the hearts of all Albertans that were working there and in the farms and ranches of this community.

Mr. Speaker, this is not just a rural issue. This is an urban issue. This is something in the DNA of all Albertans. I think what we're finding out now is that those people who grew up on the farms are now sharing those stories with their children and their grandchildren to make sure that that is not lost, that pioneer spirit that is the heart, the lifeblood, and the livelihood here in this province, that drives us all to have that entrepreneurial – and I like to use the term “agri-preneur.” The agricultural entrepreneurs were our first entrepreneurs in this province. They got things done. They were faced with problems, and they found ways to innovate and get around them.

Many of those people became successful in many other walks of life, and we see that today with our farmers and ranchers across this community. They're not just farmers and ranchers. They're engineers. They're doctors. They're veterinarians. They're scientists of many different sorts. They've got MBAs. They're tax accountants. Many of them have those other careers, that they juggle, but the only way they can do that is through the strength of their families.

Again, I thank the member for his question and an opportunity to speak a little bit about something that's a little deeper in our society, I think, than just an urban issue.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Hanson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a question for the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. Being a city boy, even you should be able to answer this one. Going back to our leader's debate there, for an hour and a half he mentioned all of the other industries that are exempt from this legislation. One of them was accounting. Now, this is a hypothetical question, but it did come from a document off the WCB website. It was trying to compare what would be considered a farm accident and a nonfarm accident. It referred to a woman doing her farm books in her farm office, and it said that if she dropped her stapler and broke her toe, that would be considered a farm accident. Now, this document says that accountants are exempt from this legislation but apparently not farm accountants. If the same woman goes into the kitchen to get a cup of coffee while she's working on her books and knocks a toaster off the counter and breaks her toe, that's not a farm accident.

This is very, very confusing legislation, to say the least. Could you just give us an idea of what your thoughts are? How bad is this, and how onerous is this legislation going to be to implement?

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, thank you to the member for his question. Again, I think that it's indicative of the confusion that we're all facing here. The people we're hearing from who live on the farms and ranches of Alberta are confused and worried, but Albertans across the country . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, before we proceed, my apologies to the Member for Livingstone-Macleod. He had made a request earlier in the day for unanimous consent to introduce a visitor. With the indulgence of the House I would ask if you're prepared to allow the member to make that introduction.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate you bringing this back to light here today. There is a large group that have been here for some time, and today I announced their names. They're from the Nanton-High River-Cayley-Longview-Claresholm region. I recognize a lot of the names, and I'm so pleased to see them here. But in the lengthy list that I had today, apparently one of the names was missing, so I would now like to mention another name to you and through you and the members of this Assembly. I'm not sure if she's still here. I'm getting a shake of the head up there; I guess she's not. I'd just like to read into the record that Amy Davidson was here today as well. I think that all these people deserve a big thank you from all of us for sitting here throughout and contributing as much as you do because it sure helps on this side to know that we've got people that are working as a team with us against this situation with Bill 6.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. My apologies for the oversight.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 6

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak on the amendment to refer Bill 6 to committee. I would like to outline why the need is so great that we refer this to committee. I recently hosted a town hall, just last Friday, for my constituents in Bonnyville-Cold Lake. The reason I hosted this town hall was to hear from my constituents what their thoughts are on Bill 6 and maybe to bring some of the questions that they may have to this Legislature. Now, because of the short time frame that this bill has been in the House, I didn't get to give a lot of notice to my local community. It would have been nice to give, say, two or three weeks to get it in the papers, maybe some news radio. Maybe more folks . . .

Mrs. Pitt: Make a song.

Mr. Cyr: Yeah. Make a song. Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: Or a parade.

Mr. Cyr: Well, a parade might be going a little too far.

But I had 36 hours' notice, and in that 36 hours I had 140 farmers come out. That's a lot of farmers to decide to call. I started off the night to them, and I said: here's Bill 6. You know, the thing with our farmers and our ranchers is that they already knew exactly what was in Bill 6. They had already read and understood what was in Bill 6. So they just wanted clarification. I said: "Okay. Well, I will give you the information that I have," and they continued to pull out the literature that was posted on the government website. One of my constituents actually said, "Which version are you working with?" I said, "Well, what I know now is that there are no versions on here, but I'll go through the one that I do have."

I would like to say that some of my constituents were saying: "We've been trying to get hold of the government. We've been trying to get hold of the agriculture minister. We've been trying to get hold of the Premier." Some were even going far enough to reach out and talk with some of the other MLAs, my colleagues as well as NDP. They just want answers. They have questions, and they're not getting replies. Right now what we're seeing is that apparently the information to contact the different ministers and the Premier has been taken down from the website. Now, I did a favour for the NDP. I'm trying to help.

Mr. Ceci: You're here to help.

Mr. Cyr: I am here to help. Thank you, Finance minister.

I was wonderful, and I gave them the wonderful e-mail addresses for the Premier and the agriculture minister. Yes. They can thank me. I definitely was helping out so that my constituents could actually reach out to these ministers and the Premier.

Now, I will say that several had deep concerns with the fact that they didn't try just once to contact these different MLAs and the Premier and ministers; they tried several times, dozens of times, trying to get hold of them. Some waited 20 minutes, half an hour on hold to get through, and when they finally got through to some of these phone lines, their name and phone number was taken down, and then they were told: thank you. That's what they got to do. Now, this is shameful. This is very shameful. The fact is that we have a serious disconnect between Albertans and our government. That's concerning. That is deeply troubling, that Albertans can't get to MLAs that are in the government. Apparently, the only MLAs that are responding are opposition MLAs. This is a deep concern.

Now, whether it's a lack of insight from the government or just plain incompetence, I can't say. But I can say that a lot of my constituents are definitely questioning: how do we trust a government that is bringing out a bill and that hasn't consulted us? These farms are going through a trying time right now because many of them, in my riding especially, have oil and gas industry to be able to offset their farming income. As I've stood up in the House – I don't know – three or four times, I have gone to the jobs minister and asked: what are we doing about Bonnyville-Cold Lake? We're losing jobs. It's crazy. We've got crazy amounts of empty houses. We have incredible – incredible – need on our charities right now, that are depending on the generosity of their fellow constituents.

Now, I will say that to arbitrarily apply regulations and standards but not actually consult is still a bit of an insult. I would like to read into the record some of the questions so that the government could actually hear some of the concerns that are coming out from across Alberta. I'm sure that it's not just my constituents that are asking these questions. I am sure that these questions are coming from almost every farmer. The first question is: if the NDP are determined to pass this during this session, who are they consulting in order to write up the regulations, and who is all participating in this process? This cannot just be producer groups as some only represent their paid members. That's question 1.

Question 2. Farmers and ranchers do not want to talk to the NDP about safety and have asked for the bill to be killed so that they can be given the opportunity to actually consult with them or go into dialogue with them about what is happening and what the NDP's concerns are. What are they trying to achieve? Every one of these farmers and ranchers are safe. I reinforce that: they are safe. It comes down to education, not legislation.

Now, the majority of farmers – here's question 3 – and ranchers are okay with them bringing forward an insurance. However, they just want to have the option to use private insurance over WCB. Most already have private insurance for their employees. If the government's real care is for the workers, why are they not happy with this type of compromise?

Question 4: how would you define a family farm? Some family farms are run by just families. That's not a bad question.

Question 5: you say that all information prior to the consultation has been electronically available; what about the basic right to know what's going on for those older operators or those who do not have computers or for areas that do not have high-speed Internet service?

Question 6. One farmer said that this is the most intrusive agricultural legislation he's seen in his lifetime. Why would the NDP bring forward this type of legislation without even talking to them first?

Question 7: are you using the legislation as a smokescreen to divert our attention away from other legislation that you are introducing, and do you think you are diverting our attention away from increasing taxes and the debt bill and the carbon tax right now? That's a fair point. Picking a fight with the farmers right when you're introducing a carbon tax, or what I would say is a hidden PST – it's unfortunate that you would choose this route if this is where the government is going.

Question 8. Hutterites are saying that they feel singled out by the proposed changes and do not want their names to be used if you do not use others. They felt discriminated against. Hutterites have not asked for specific exemptions and said that the agriculture minister's flip-flop on this issue has created concern, just like these proposed new amendments.

Question 9: what are all the fines that OH and S can lay on farmers, and what type of control will they be allowed to exert? This is a good question. Again, there were questions and answers that were put out, and they were very clear. Alberta government put out questions and answers that were very clear on this but withdrew it and said: we're going to fix it; it's the bureaucrats' misunderstanding.

Question 10. They would like the government to look at statistics that say that Alberta has the lowest amount of farm deaths per capita in all of Canada. This is without legislation.

Question 11: will the government please represent all Albertans, not just a few opportunists?

Question 12. We don't appreciate the quote from a newly elected NDP MLA who said: four years to correct 40 years of conservative government. Is this an appropriate comment?

Question 13. Please tell us where the critics are coming from. Who did you consult?

Question 14: can the government please make public all consultations they have had, with who and when? Who are the stakeholders? Now, we just saw an e-mail going out inviting some of the major stakeholders. Apparently, that is a bit of a shock because they already know exactly what they're going to do with this bill.

5:30

Question 15: what will happen to the farms that have been in the same family for generations that cannot keep up with the changes?

Question 16: why are you spending taxpayers' money to buy radio time to promote this bill and the carbon tax bill?

Question 17: how can you not see that this is not democratic; this is not Alberta?

Question 18: there are so many unanswered questions; why don't you take the time to explain it and write up properly laid-out legislation so farmers can trust you completely? Well, we got the answer for that today with these wonderful motions that have gone through giving us an hour tomorrow. That's most unfortunate.

Question 19: 2012 was the last farm safety review, and the panel's recommendation afterwards was that there was no consensus on legislation and that education is needed. They say that the Premier . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Banff-Cochrane, questions under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under 29(2)(a) I thank the member for sharing the concerns that he's heard from his constituents and also for his offer to help. I think his offer to help is genuine because he's an honourable member. I know he's a hard-working guy. You know, they've said, "We're here to help," many, many times. Sometimes if you say it enough, maybe it comes true.

I guess my question is that we all need to work together. We all need to work together on this very important issue of safety. We all agree that farmers are very, very safe people. There's no question there. We all agree with that. You know, there's a WCB process actually called partners in injury reduction, so I'd like to think of all of us here as partners in injury reduction, too. You know, that program in WCB is actually a way for employers to get discounts on their premiums as an incentive. If they have a safe workplace, they actually get a discount. We can all be partners in injury reduction, too.

There's been a lot of miscommunication. We've made that clear. The Premier has taken responsibility. As a member of this caucus I take personal responsibility for that miscommunication, too. But because there's been that miscommunication, we've issued clarifications and amendments and tabled the amendments here in the House. We've had press conferences, extensive communication about how we made a mistake. We also put forward some amendments to clarify that.

What I would like to know from the member is that when these people contact his office with very legitimate questions and concerns – if new legislation was going to come into my workplace, I'd have a lot of questions, too, and well they should. What I'd like to know is: when you've had these people come into your office, given the fact that we have clarified information, given the fact that we have retracted the WCB and OH and S communication that was incorrect – we retracted that – what have you done in your office to help these people, to quell their fears? I mean, they've got some legitimate fears, and we've heard a lot from the opposite side about all the preposterous things that exist out there, and a lot of them are preposterous because they're just simply not true. The member is nodding his head; he agrees that they're not true. So what has your office done to calm the fears of those people that come into your office that say: what's going to happen here? Have you shared the amendment? We've defined family farms, and "family" is actually defined very clearly.

Some Hon. Members: What amendment?

Mr. Westhead: The amendment's been tabled, and you all know exactly what I'm talking about.

The Speaker: Hon. member, are there any other questions that you have?

Hon. member, could you respond to the question that was asked?

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, I'm not done.

We've defined . . .

The Speaker: I heard a question. Please be seated.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. First things first, the answer that I give is: kill Bill 6. That needs to be it. It's absolutely the answer, but if the NDP is not willing to kill Bill 6 – and that is where they're going with this; they're not looking to kill Bill 6. What they are saying is that we're going to limit what the opposition can do to discuss this bill. The answer that I was saying was that at least the NDP could make a compromise with the Wildrose or the third party or fourth party and send it to a standing committee. This is what they're for. They're refusing to go through with this. They're pushing this through. There's no good reason to push it through in these last few minutes. The fact is that this amendment, that has been tabled, just hit our hands yesterday, and we're still going through it just like all of the farmers. We have some good indications that there are flaws in it, and our leader spent 90 minutes explaining exactly what some of these flaws are. Some of them, in fact, are that some of the . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to support sending Bill 6 to committee. I was elected to represent the people of Grande Prairie-Smoky. Each of us here in this House was elected to represent a different constituency so that all Albertans are represented here. Now, when I think about that responsibility, I'm extremely humbled to be in this position, where I am here to represent the people of my constituency. When the people in my constituency come to me with concerns, I have to respect those concerns. When Bill 6 came forward, the number of people that started e-mailing, calling, texting, all these different forms of communication, all against Bill 6: I have to respect that. I have to represent those people. It's my job and the job of each person in this House to represent the people in their constituency.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe in safety. Every single person that expressed concerns over Bill 6 has expressed to me the same thing, that they believe in safety, too. They don't want a life lost. They don't want a limb lost. They don't want to have any harm done at all because any of those things that happen on a farm happen to people that they're concerned about: their family members, their friends, their employees. To suggest that the members on this side of the House or any farmers in Alberta are not concerned about safety is insulting. But Bill 6 is about much more than farm safety. It's disingenuous for the government to suggest it isn't or to suggest that opponents of the bill don't care about safety.

Mr. Speaker, I'm still receiving e-mails and calls and texts, lots of them, and these communications, again, are unanimous. Each person speaks with passion, with intelligence, with respect, and they call for withdrawing Bill 6. "Kill Bill 6" is quite often the phrase they use. We hear it on the steps of the Legislature multiple times from thousands of Albertans driving hours to be here to express their concerns with Bill 6. We hear it in the town halls over and over and over again, people expressing the same thing: kill Bill 6; send it to committee; consult with us.

Now, when Bill 6 came forward, it didn't have a lot of words in it. It basically was fairly simple. It removed the farm exemption from employment standards, labour relations, occupational health and safety, and workers' compensation. But, Mr. Speaker, just on a quick Internet search, when I looked at some of the codes and regulations and acts that are involved with those four different organizations, I came up with over a thousand pages that people will have to live by.

Now, I can't imagine, Mr. Speaker, being in a position where all of a sudden on a certain date I'm going to be responsible to live up to a thousand pages of regulations in different kinds of acts and stuff like that. There could even be more, but that's what I found on a quick look. It's very understandable that people are upset, that they're worried, that they're concerned.

Now, I understand that the ministers' offices and the Premier's office are getting a lot of calls, a lot of e-mails, and I understand that it's hard to handle that kind of volume of communication. Obviously, this kind of outcry, Mr. Speaker – the rallies on the steps, the town halls, the e-mails, phone calls, texts, all those different things that are going on – should be some indication that something is wrong, but sadly, of course, we have the Premier and this government doubling down and tripling down, and now they're going to force this bill to pass.

Unfortunately, the members opposite that represent rural ridings have not represented their constituents. This is sad for democracy. But there's still time; this bill hasn't passed yet. I guess I become a little concerned when I see them jumping up to ask questions under 29(2)(a) just so they can take a couple of cheap shots followed by maybe a question to those of us that are speaking to this bill. I have yet to see one of them stand up and take the 15 minutes that's allotted to them to speak to the bill and represent their constituents.

Mr. Speaker, I've got constituents that have expressed concerns to the point where they're wondering whether they're going to continue farming. I find that alarming. I find that upsetting. I can't imagine people sitting at the kitchen table and, because of Bill 6, having to make a life decision: am I going to continue with the career I've chosen, that I've done my whole life? I can't imagine having that kind of stress and that kind of worry.

Mr. Speaker, most farmers already cover their regular workers with WCB or equivalent. In fact, quite often I've heard that they have something better than WCB, but under Bill 6 they won't have a choice. They will have to give up better insurance and be forced to take substandard insurance.

Now, we've all heard the quotes of the Premier in the past and her concerns with WCB, many quotes over and over again about a broken, miserly system. She spoke at protests in front of the WCB building, but for some reason she feels that WCB is perfect for farmers. She's willing to force them to sign on to something that she didn't even support herself. Now, has she fixed the WCB? Has there been any attempt by this government to do anything for the WCB to correct some of the problems it may have? Nothing. They've had all this time, and they've done nothing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this government doesn't even know what their rules are. They want a blank cheque. They want to fill in the details later. They want us MLAs in this Legislature to pass Bill 6 without knowing what it'll end up like. How can we in good conscience pass something when we don't know what it is? How can we expect the people of Alberta to sit here and accept something when they don't know what it's going to be?

Now, we've already learned today that the amendments that they've brought forward contain more pages than the original bill and that the majority of the amendments can be changed by cabinet at any time. They don't have to go back to the people. They don't have to come back to the Legislature. They can just do it any time. I think that alarms farmers.

We hear about the misinformation regarding this bill. Though there may be some misinformation, the truth is spelled out in black and white, and that's scary enough. Farmers are resourceful, intelligent, and willing to work with government regarding any concerns they have. But in order to do that, you have to consult with them. You have to sit down with them. You have to talk to them. And you have to do that before you bring the bill into the Legislature.

Now, at some of the first meetings they had technical experts. They were willing to give expert advice on the regulations. They had them there at the Grande Prairie meeting. The information that they provided contradicts what the government said the intention was. What information was given to these technical experts that were there to give information? Who gave them that information to go to the meetings with?

Now, we've heard the Premier say that she wants to give farmers the right to say no. She wants them to have the right to say no to dangerous work or any number of things that they think this bill is going to correct. But if she truly believes and this government truly believes that they want to give farmers the right to say no, then they should listen to them because that's what they're saying. They're saying no over and over and over again. Can't this government listen to the farmers? They say that this is about giving farmers the right to say no. That's what they're saying.

The NDP MLAs should have the right to say no, too. They should have the right to say no to Bill 6. That's what democracy is about. So when this comes up to a vote, they have the right to say no. I don't know that the NDP MLAs understand how much power they have. They could stop this. The ones that have farmers in their constituencies, particularly them: they could say no. They could stop this bill. They have that power. They could correct this problem.

An Hon. Member: People will be watching how they vote.

Mr. Loewen: People will be watching how they vote. They will.

Now, I had two meetings this past weekend. I'm a busy person, too, Mr. Speaker. I have a family at home. I spend my week here, I go back to my family, but I had people calling me, concerned about Bill 6, people from other constituencies. So with short notice I planned two town halls with the help of the constituents there. One was planned with 24 hours' notice. One was planned with 10 hours' notice. I just want to read through some of the questions and comments that I took because I had somebody taking notes at the meeting because that's what it's about. It's about listening. These are just some of the random comments and questions.

This is from the Peace River meeting. There are more accidents on the highway than farms, 11 farm accidents. Did they have anything to do with farming? What is the hurry to put Bill 6 through? Why didn't their MLA come to the meeting tonight? No response from their MLA. Doesn't answer calls, et cetera. Boards and commissions were asked to consult with government, but they didn't get any information. Do petitions help? Is there a format for petitions? Retractions? The Hutterian brotherhood are exempt. Hiring for one day: do we need WCB? OH and S will be forced on us. Concerns about fuel tanks, paint cans, oil, and trucks, et cetera. OH and S. Criminally responsible if someone is hurt. Very serious. Need safety committees, says OH and S in manual. Can Bill 6 be repealed with change of government? Exemption if owner-operator? Will make sure I never hire anyone. Hunters on land will have to be safety trained or WCB? Best timing for this bill . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions under 29(2)(a)? Rocky View-Rimbey.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. It's a long one. I know it's always tough to get it into the speech when I do it myself, so I sympathize.

I do have a question for the member, but through you, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank him for his statement. I found it very informative. During question period today there was an exchange with the Municipal Affairs minister, and as she was answering a question about Bill 6, she said, and I quote: this is only the beginning. This is only the beginning. So we're debating right now whether we should be sending this bill to committee and whether we should be consulting with farmers, and essentially what the government members continue to tell us is: "It's okay. Give us a blank cheque. We'll regulate afterwards. We'll fix everything with farmers afterwards. It's going to be okay. Just trust us." That's what they're asking. They're asking us as elected representatives who represent a lot of farmers: just trust us. It's okay that there are thousands of people calling their office. Just trust us. There are thousands of people on the stairs of the Legislature, protesting. Just trust us. Then she says that this is only the beginning. What is the next step?

Now, she was referring – and I'll get to the question here shortly – to Bill 6 as she makes regulations. She's saying that the regulations she's just making are only the beginning. Now, this is a government who released this on their website. [interjection] I thank the hon. Finance minister for his opinion, through you, Mr. Speaker. Maybe he'll get up shortly and give a speech on why he supports this bill.

The Speaker: He gets the opportunity if you'd ask the question.

Mr. Nixon: Absolutely. I'm making brief comments first, Mr. Speaker, as 29(2)(a) says.

Would children be covered? Would regulations set a minimum age to work on a farm or ranch? These are the government's documents. The government is committed to meeting international standards and ensuring young workers are protected. Under the proposed legislation workers regardless of age would be covered by OH and S. This would include the children of farmers and ranchers who are helping out on the commercial operations of the farm.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this document was released – let's be very clear – by the government with the bill. Now the government is saying that they're miraculously trying to change regulations to deal with this. That's what they're saying, and they're saying: "Just trust us. Just trust us. Don't worry. Tell your constituents that it's going to be okay." Then the minister says that this is only the beginning.

Mr. Speaker, the question for the member – and it's a brief comment – is very clear. Will his constituents, will the farmers that are in the gallery today, will my constituents be expected to continue to trust a minister that says that this is just the beginning, a minister that has already tried to change the way of life on farms? How can that be? To the member, through you: how can we be expected to trust this government?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: I'd like to thank the member for the question. Of course, it's very hard to have trust in a group of people that have decided just one day to drop something like this, this kind of regulatory burden, on farmers in Alberta and then say that they've consulted. Now, of course, what they've done is that they've come up with some amendments that they plan on ramming through, probably tomorrow because they brought forward something on the agenda to shorten debate. Mr. Speaker, we have an amendment. I haven't had time to go to my constituents and ask them what they think of these amendments. So here we are in the same situation, no consultation.

We ask about trust. We have government members running around saying, "Well, that isn't what we meant" even though that's what was said and that's what was in writing. Then they come along and say, "Yeah, trust us," and they drop these in our lap and say: this was our plan all along. Obviously, it wasn't. It's very disingenuous to suggest that it was.

Again, no consultation. This government seems to have a different definition of the word "consultation" than I would have. Now, I gave the definition of consultation the other day in my member's statement. "Consultation is defined as the action or process of formally consulting or discussing, a conference in which advice is given or views are exchanged." Does that represent what's happened here? I don't think so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

The Speaker: No.

Mr. Orr: Okay. Fine. I thought that's where we were, so I'm fine.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and speak to this amendment. I will say that I appreciate the tone that has come about this afternoon because I think it truly does demonstrate the seriousness of what we're dealing with here. This isn't just about people who are upset and ranting and raving. This is a bill that truly does need to be sent to committee for further study and for further consideration, and it is extremely important.

In many ways Alberta has become a distinct jurisdiction in our nation because we actually rarely use committees in our House here. It's a parliamentary tool for the benefit of study and examination, but it's become an unfortunate trend that we rarely use it. Committees really do allow for greater clarity, insight from stakeholders. They allow for experts within the field of knowledge to share their knowledge. But we're not using them. I doubt that it's possible for even all of us combined to be truly absolute experts on all matters. That's why it's of utmost necessity, actually, that this bill does get put to committee. Therefore, I support the amendment.

The government is proposing this legislation, yet it has very little experience in the industry that they're trying to change, certainly, at least, not experts. So I think it's critical that we go to committee. The government doesn't have a single career farmer among them, yet they feel they have the expertise to impose wide-sweeping, history-changing legislation without any other members having professional agricultural experience, and, worse than that, they haven't reached out to industry stakeholders. Today only they sent an e-mail inviting a telephone conference with some of those stakeholders, yet we've also had today closure invoked on the bill. There is going to be no conversation on this. They're essentially telling Albertans that they're listening to their concerns, but there's been very little real consultation actually hearing them. You know, when you have to keep telling somebody that you're doing it, generally it's an indication that they don't realize . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, it is 6 p.m., and I wish to announce that the Assembly stands adjourned till 7:30 p.m.

Bill 8 Public Education Collective Bargaining Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak this evening on Bill 8, the Public Education Collective Bargaining Act. Again, this will establish a fair and effective bargaining process, I believe, which will allow all parties to proceed in negotiating in good faith and keep close hands on the purse strings. It institutes a two-table structure, that allows local issues to remain local and provides a provincial bargaining table as well to address issues that affect teachers and school boards. I believe that this bill provides a stronger voice for school boards and a more formal role in all parts of the process and an opportunity to provide direct input into issues that affect all of them.

Since this bill was introduced, I've been working with school boards, education partner groups, and others, and certainly it's important to understand that this bill is all about how we bargain, not what we're bargaining on. Still, we know that boards have expressed concerns, and certainly I wanted to work with those as well. It's part of an organic, natural process by which we make strong legislation. It's my intention to move an amendment. I think that it goes a long way to address some of those concerns, and we certainly value all of the input that we've had. I believe that Bill 8 is a positive step forward, and I encourage all members in this House to vote in favour of it. You have to see the amendment, though, of course, first.

The model will allow school boards, government, and teachers to have input on which items should be bargained centrally and bargained locally. Of course, Madam Chair, we have to be mindful of cost, so that's why it's so pivotal to give government a role at the central table in bargaining with the teachers, okay? It's part of a realistic plan, I believe, to manage spending, and I want to assure all partners and reconfirm our commitment here that we will work together with school boards and the ATA and the general public to develop a fair negotiating system that develops regulations and policies that Bill 8 enables. We want to continue to do our best and put Alberta students and their families at the forefront.

So, Madam Chair, in the spirit of that, I have an amendment that I would like to distribute, please, and I have the appropriate number of copies here for you with the original on the top. Do you want me wait for distribution?

The Chair: Until at least I get the amendment.

Mr. Eggen: Okay.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A1.
Go ahead, hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Thanks, Madam Chair. The amendment is being distributed now. The amendment would strike out section 8 of the bill as tabled and amend the language in sections 1, 11, 12, 14, and 20 to reflect this removal. This move, Madam Chair, comes from direct feedback provided by school boards after the bill was introduced. I had held three consultations with school boards to gather feedback, and I definitely saw that there was consensus to remove this section.

If people would be so kind as to approve this tonight, I will accelerate the establishment of the teachers' employer bargaining association so that it is able to negotiate with the Alberta Teachers' Association on which matters will be bargained centrally and which will be bargained locally. The original version of this bill proposed that government would negotiate with the ATA on these matters, and I was doing that to have haste and speed. It was a matter of speed, but we found that we could in fact gather together the TEBA and the necessary components so that we could do it as I'm describing here in this amendment.

Since gathering feedback, my ministry has worked with Alberta Education officials on a process that would allow the acceleration of TEBA. The TEBA, of course, is made up of school board and government representatives. I want to make this abundantly clear, that school boards will have their say on which matters will go to central and which will go to local tables. We heard the school boards loud and clear, and we're continuing to listen, and we will be convening further conversations in the new year around this process. Indeed, Madam Chair, I'm sure we'll spend a great deal of time together after this new year.

Still, it should be also stated that the government as the funder of education will be at the bargaining table with teachers as well. This is a historic change, and I think it's very, very, very important. This will put us in a much better position to meet our fiscal obligations and bargain in a manner that is fair, stable, and responsible.

I also want to make a change that will clarify the bridging provision in section 14. This is a technical change, and it does not represent any shift in policy. The change is being done to clarify how bridging, which is a process that occurs during the collective bargaining process, occurs in a two-table bargaining structure. Section 14 of this act clarifies that the existing collective agreement is in effect until a new collective agreement is concluded; in other words, it is bridged because either the teachers' employer bargaining association or the ATA have given the other a notice to commence bargaining for central terms. This amendment is necessary because of sections 73 to 75 of the Labour Relations Code, which provide that a strike or lockout may only occur when "no collective agreement is in force, other than as a result of section 130." So these collective agreements will be in force not as a result of section 130 of the Labour Relations Code but as a result of section 14 of the Public Education Collective Bargaining Act, should it be passed by this Assembly. I would ask for support from the House on this change as well.

Madam Chair, let me close by stating once more that our government is very aware of the valuable role that teachers play in shaping the lives of Albertans. By working collaboratively, we can keep our focus on what matters most – that is, to provide our students with a world-class education, that they deserve, and one that they have enjoyed here in this province for a long time and will continue to do so in the future – and we can have an agreement that is affordable and sets a proper precedent for fiscal responsibility.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any comments regarding this amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the minister for bringing this forward. It certainly addresses a lot of the comments and feedback that I've heard from school boards from around the province, so I do commend you for both engaging with them in the consultation as well as hearing what they had to say.

You know, in any matter dealing with education, my number one question and concern is always: is it good for students? So as we get into the bargaining process, that's always got to be top of mind. School boards, of course, have a big role to play in determining classroom conditions, so it will be very interesting to see how that process plays itself out in terms of what the two-table bargaining looks like.

I have a couple of questions for the minister. I'd be very interested to know what exactly falls in which table and how that will be communicated to Albertans: to this House and through us to Albertans, or just directly from your office. I'm interested in that.

The Alberta School Boards Association uses what they call a 60 per cent supermajority. Any policy resolution must pass by a vote of 60 per cent of the board members present representing at least 60 per cent of the students in Alberta. It doesn't say so in the bill, but I'm curious if that's something that you would anticipate TEBA adopting as well.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Member, for the questions. Madam Chair, in regard to communicating the composition of our deliberations, I believe it will be an ongoing process. We will be entering the negotiation, using TEBA and with the other side of the table being the Alberta Teachers' Association, as a full negotiation, as you would be negotiating a contract with provisions for arbitration as well. You know, as they come to those points of agreement – right? – that are mutually agreed upon on a legal basis, then we will communicate those. It all has to happen in an accelerated sort of way. Because, of course, I'm making this amendment change, we're pushing ahead some of the other timelines for the commencement of collective bargaining. I should expect that it should be fairly early in the new year.

Part of the legislation is that it creates an assembly council of the 61 school boards, that will vote and choose their representatives. How that is deliberated on I will get to you, how that voting process will go. I think that they will use probably a system that they have used. I'm not sure. I think that they might use a two-thirds majority in ASBA. That seems to ring a bell, but certainly I will check on that for you.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would concur with my colleague from Calgary-Elbow. Certainly, I've been getting a lot of feedback and a lot of concerns from some folks who really were concerned about: how do we clarify the process of negotiations? I think that the concern that I heard from a lot of stakeholders was, you know: what is the role that the ATA plays in future negotiations both at the local level and at the central level? We felt that this should be established in the legislation, so the idea that TEBA is there right from the start is, I think, going to be comforting to a lot of the folks who have been contacting me.

You know, we believe that the teaching profession in Alberta is unique in that the ATA is an advocacy group. The union is the same group that's ultimately responsible for regulating the teaching profession. Most other professions have a role split between two different organizations. Certainly, some of the folks we talked to said that they believe that the ATA's focus and role during these negotiations should be as an advocate for teachers both at the central and local negotiation level. We do believe that the actual piece around dealing with the professional regulation of the teaching profession should be the purview of the government. We're certainly as well looking forward to see what lands at which table because that certainly is still a concern for my stakeholders, but this amendment, actually, I think, they will be pleased with, so thank you for that.

Mr. Eggen: Madam Chair, I appreciate the member's comments. You know, ultimately, we're trying to make something that is going to not just kind of preserve our education system but strengthen it. I think this is something that the idea's time has come. I won't say that it's overdue because that always has that negative implication to it. Rather, we found that the time is right to do this. Let's put it that way. It's a great way for us to make sure that we're watching the public dollar as well very carefully. We always have to do that but now more than ever. This is the first set of public servants that are coming up for contract, so the stakes are even higher.

Your comments on – it's interesting because when we deal with the ATA, it is quite unique because it is their regulatory body as well. That's a conversation for another day. Over time, I think, if we look across the country, we've enjoyed a fairly stable landscape for teacher-government relations, and this, I think, will help to strengthen that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to come back to that point of exactly how TEBA establishes itself. I understand that there would be one representative selected from each school board and that TEBA will decide, but based on my reading of section 16, establishing TEBA, it appears that it is up to TEBA to determine how it will govern itself. I'd like the minister just to correct me if I'm wrong about that and just perhaps provide a little insight from the minister's perspective about his ability or perhaps even desire to control the terms of reference for TEBA as it establishes that for itself.

Again, my understanding of ASBA is that how it governs itself is a 60-60 supermajority. A vote must be 60 per cent of the voting members present, assuming a quorum, obviously, and those 60 per cent of members must also represent 60 per cent of students in Alberta, so it's not a simple two-thirds majority. What I'm really driving at, so I can be as clear as I can, is that we have a small number of large boards, which your colleague to your left, I'm sure, understands intimately, that represent, if not the majority of students, probably the majority of students. Four large urban boards represent – I don't know the numbers – a majority of the students of Alberta. That's four votes. You could have a 57 to 4 kind of scenario. I don't think that's going to be the case, but I guess I'd appreciate the minister's comments and thoughts on how those sorts of issues may be addressed in TEBA. Have you given some consideration to that and just any comments on that particular dynamic?

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Thank you, Madam Chair. Yes, of course, I have, and this representative assembly needs to determine that together with myself. We'll look for a collaborative way by which that can be determined. You know, we're going to start those conversations straightaway. I mean, we want to be in the spirit of how I've tried to compose this so far. The co-operation that I've seen, the level of engagement – let's put it that way – would suggest that we will come to an amicable result for that conversation, yeah.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, ma'am. I guess I rise to speak to the amendment on Bill 8. I want to thank the minister for his hard work on this. I believe that as a caucus we have qualified support or, I guess I would suggest, on the amendment support with some concerns. What I would like to be able to do is just give some background to how we're thinking with regard to this amendment and then build into some of the concerns that we may have for the minister.

I think we all realize here that the history of collective bargaining has been one that's been local, and it's been one that the school boards and ASBA and PSBAA and many of the major stakeholders have obviously supported for a great deal of time over the years. I guess I would suggest that this new model of bargaining is a significant departure from what we have done in the past. Each school board would enter into bargaining with their local ATA, and they would come up with a locally bargained agreement. I can see and I think we appreciate that this new model, this two-tiered model of bargaining, has tried to find a balance, I would argue, between local bargaining and the desire for a little more control provincially.

We know that under the old bargaining model each school division could have a unique agreement, that was unique to their school board, to their school division, and they could have unique agreements with regard to wages, with regard to benefits, with regard to local issues, days that they would be teaching, all sorts of local issues that would surround the local bargaining process. You know, that, obviously, was changed significantly by the Klein era, when they took away the municipal property tax rates. In order to pay for the negotiated settlements, it became a difficult thing to fund the other costs with regard to education.

Of course, one of the problems they dealt with back then – the reasons that Premier Klein decided to intervene were, as we've said before, two major reasons. One was that there's an inequitable funding arrangement, where local levies, wealthier school boards would settle earlier and would be able to have a collective bargaining agreement that would be by some people considered maybe too generous and the poorer school divisions could find themselves in a bind. They had an inequity in the process, where they could not requisition the same level of property taxes and found themselves having to try to keep up with the wealthier school boards, creating an inequity in the funding and an inequity that was often difficult for them to overcome, probably rightfully so.

I think all of the school boards across this province agreed at that point in time that it was a good thing to try and find a way around that inequity. So the government, when it took away the right to requisition the property tax levy, pooled that money and then gave it back to the school boards in a per-student funding formula. Now, it's become a little more complex than that over the years, with special funding for special issues, but I think that all would come to an agreement and I believe even, you know, the hon. minister would agree that it was a more equitable distribution and that when we look at this amendment and this new bargaining formula, it too allows for that equitable distribution to continue and to be maintained.

Of course, the problem that the government had when they set their budgets was that often, by setting a budget and by deciding what the percentage of the increase was going to be for education in a budget, they were already setting the increase for the teachers and the local bargaining agents and the local school boards. So teachers' salaries had essentially already been decided, and it threw into question the whole bargaining process. How fair is it to the teachers, how fair is it to the school boards when the government sets that percentage and then they have to go through a process of negotiations that really doesn't reflect real, fair, and honest negotiation? Sometimes that meant that if they did try to negotiate in good faith, the settlements could sometimes be greater than the funding which the government was providing. So, then, how do school boards deal with that if the government isn't going to step forward and fund above what they've set in their budget for that negotiated local settlement?

There were some problems, and I think the minister, with this bill and with this amendment, has understood that there were some problems there. We are happy, I guess – I'm not sure that "happy" is the word. But we're willing to consider this two-tiered negotiated model with the amendment that has come forward.

I guess we see that teachers and the ATA along with school boards often weren't particularly happy with the model that they've been stuck with over the last number of years. We know that the last several settlements over the number of probably – what? – 10 or 12 years have been the result of a central table, if you want to use it that way, where the provincial government has gone to the table and has negotiated with the ATA to find a sometimes mandated agreement with regard to the collective bargaining process and where local bargaining, some would argue, Madam Chair, has broken down.

When we take a look at this two-tiered model and we take a look at the amendments that have been made here tonight, we can see that this goes, at least in some ways, part of the way towards addressing some of the issues that happened as a result of the local bargaining model, with the breakdown in the bargaining process. It's because of that history that, I think, we as the Wildrose Party understand the desire of the minister to address this bargaining model and to bring forth perhaps, as he has, a new bargaining model.

I think it's important that as we look at this amendment, Madam Chair, we look at what Bill 8 actually does, and then we can understand and perhaps take a little bit of look at the amendments and some of the responses to the bill and the amendment. Bill 8 formalizes a province-wide, if I understand it correctly – and maybe the minister can correct me on this. If I have misunderstood this, it's not because I'm trying to. It's just because, you know, sometimes – we're looking at this – it can be complicated. Bill 8 formalizes a province-wide, two-table bargaining model. We got that right. Okay. There will be a local and there will be a provincial table.

When we look at the provincial table, it addresses the broad issues that are common to all of the school divisions, at least in theory. When we take a look at teaching and at education across this province – I've often said that it really didn't matter where I taught in this province; kids are kids are kids. It didn't matter whether I was in my classroom in Drayton Valley or whether I was at McNally in Edmonton or whether I was at Western in Calgary. It didn't matter where I was. There's a pretty standard thing with being a teacher. You love kids, and you enjoy being with kids. When I look at the issues in education, I think the minister and this bill and the amendments, Madam Chair, do recognize that there are some broad issues.

Now, it does bring up a question, though, and maybe at some point in time the minister can address some of these questions. I've heard school boards talk about the fact that because issues tend to be so common from school board to school board to school board as much as they're all very diverse schools and school divisions – how much difference is there going to be on some of these? Most issues are common issues. How much room will that leave for the local table if most of the issues that are common across this province are shared by so many different school boards?

The intent of the provincial table is to not only address those concerns, those issues that are common to all school boards, but of course it's to ensure consistency across this province with respect to the big-picture issues, as the minister has talked about earlier, things like school fees. You know, you're working through a review process, I believe, Mr. Minister, and trying to look at: what are the commonalities across the school boards when it comes to school fees, and can we bring some decisions and some finality to that issue of school fees? I think that's the kind of thing that maybe you're going to be looking at with this process, and maybe you can comment on that at some point in time. So the intent of having a provincial table is to ensure consistency across the province with respect to some of these big-picture items.

I believe that I can actually talk as many times as I want to this, so maybe what I will do is that I'll stop right now, and maybe the minister can address that issue right there and then we can . . . [interjection] Well, with regard to this I'm asking you to talk about the big-picture items, the common items that will be dealt with at a provincial level, and whether or not that's going to leave any room for, you know, local bargaining on those kinds of issues. Then maybe we can resume our conversation.

Thanks.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Madam Chair, and those are very good questions and a very succinct assessment, I believe, of the history of bargaining here in the province in the last 30 years or so as well as a synopsis of what I'm trying to achieve. Certainly, in my technical briefing people said that you caught on very quickly and you certainly got the right idea straightaway, so that's great. Yeah. I mean, it's important for us, when we establish TEBA, to have everybody there to have those discussions, right? So it's very important for me not to predetermine those things as well because I don't want to give an undue influence.

You know, just brainstorming on local issues: that can be quite significant, really. Transportation jumps out straightaway – right? – because, of course, of the geographic differences that different boards have to deal with. I mean, you have school boards in this province that are the size of a small European country, you know, and put in hundreds of thousands of kilometres of busing every day, even.

Another one is substitute pay, which, again, is quite a geographic variation, I believe. For substitutes to be covering places like Oyen and so forth, it's, again, many, many kilometres of driving. I know that there are northern allowances in different areas or extra pay for certain districts where they go. I think some places supply housing or housing subsidies in various ways.

An interesting regional variation is around instructional days. We mandate the number of minutes for a school year, but people will again insert different days based on perhaps regional holidays or religious holidays and so forth. Professional development days, you know, come into play as well. But I really don't want to predetermine how those discussions go. I think the very sort of elegant way by which we've amended this bill allows for all of those discussions to take place amongst the people that it affects the most – right? – which is the school boards, the teachers, and then, of course, the funder, which is my department.

I guess that's the direction that I'm heading in, and I think we've created an organic circumstance by which to somehow jump over some of those historic problems that you described before, where we did have, previous to maybe Klein, maybe 17 or even 18 years ago, some local bargaining, but then you had the sort of interference or insertion of the funder, not in a systematic way but just in sort of an incidental way, that sometimes got in the way of good, rational bargaining.

I mean, we know that we have excellent teachers in this province and an excellent school system. It's renowned around the world, but because of that lack of a systematic sort of approach to bargaining, sometimes our wages got out of control as well and exceeded the ability of the government to pay for those said wages. That's part of the reason that I'm trying to do this here today.

Thank you.

The Chair: Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you, Mr. Minister. You started to talk a little bit about that provincial table now and the salary side of things, so maybe we can spend a little bit of time sort of working our way into that and perhaps some of the concerns that we've got there. We know that the intent of the provincial table is to deal with salary. Bill 8 establishes this employer bargaining association, that you're calling the teachers' employer bargaining association, or TEBA. From what I understand, it's a statutory corporation.

Mr. Eggen: Yes.

Mr. Smith: Okay. That means that it's formed by the government for really just one purpose, and that's to engage in contract negotiations for the school boards whenever the term of a collective agreement is coming to an end. Correct? This is not something that's going to be meeting, you know, necessarily every year even. It could be the term of the collective agreement if we understand each other correctly. Correct?

Mr. Eggen: Absolutely.

Mr. Smith: Okay. Now, we know that membership in TEBA is mandatory for all school boards. If I understand things correctly, each school board will send a representative to an assembly that would then choose a directorate, that we would call TEBA. Is that correct?

Mr. Eggen: Yes, sir. Yes, that's correct.

Mr. Smith: I thought so. So Bill 8 isn't really prescriptive; it simply establishes this two-table bargaining system. It's the how of this. Correct?

Mr. Eggen: Yes.

Mr. Smith: It's how the process will work, but it does not establish the actual issues that will be negotiated at the table. That's going to be something that will be negotiated between the ATA and TEBA. They will decide what matters will be bargained at a central table while some issues or some matters will be bargained at the local table. The general criteria, that you've got in the bill here, to be used to decide which issue is central and which issue is local will consider the following: does the matter result in a reasonably significant expense? That's where this provincial table with the salaries would be a part of it, right?

Maybe you could explain for this side of the House and for this party a little bit about how you define "reasonably significant impact." How does that work out as you're going to be negotiating between the ATA and the government and TEBA?

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you. The ATA and then the government and the school boards. TEBA is the government and the school boards now, right?

Mr. Smith: Yeah.

Mr. Eggen: I've been reflecting on this. Again, you know, we've created a place in which this can happen. I know that another concern or area of concern that boards brought up to me last week, when we were meeting, on three different occasions was that in section 10 of the bill there is an area that talks about what's significant or what's not significant and so forth. But the current language doesn't restrict the ATA and TEBA from agreeing on matters to remain local items if all parties are in agreement that a specific matter could be best handled locally, and, vice versa, the agreement or the discussion to determine what goes to that big table or the central table is worked out in the same manner, too.

I wouldn't presuppose what that central table would be discussing, but the obvious ones, I think, of course, are wages and other items that cost a great deal of money, right? But it doesn't preclude the other local tables from talking about some money issues as well. I mean, we use a granting system for things such as transportation and so forth. Because of the first amendment I made, creating that place for people to sort out the issues of the main table and the other table, I believe that solves all the other problems.

Thank you.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. We've established, then, that there's this TEBA and that TEBA is made up of both the government and the representatives of the school boards and that this TEBA and the ATA are going to meet. They're going to debate. Now, the amendment speaks to the fact that TEBA is going to include, unlike the original bill – the school boards are going to be a part of that negotiation from the very beginning, and that's what the first amendment does?

Mr. Eggen: Yeah.

Mr. Smith: Okay. So if the government and the ATA cannot agree on which matters will be discussed – in the original bill it says that it goes to an arbitration board if you cannot agree on what is a central matter versus what is a local matter and that if, again, either of the two parties have significant disagreements over the arbitrated settlement, they then would have access to the courts. Am I correct in understanding that?

Mr. Eggen: Well, arbitration will sort it out, yeah. I mean, they make the decision, and that's it. It is a court.

Mr. Smith: Okay. I want to just change the discussion here and just go into a little bit of a different track. We know that as we were making our way towards this bill and as we were making our way towards this amendment, one of the concerns that was expressed was the timeline, and perhaps with that shortened timeline for this there was maybe a little lack of consultation, Madam Chair. You know, we were looking at this with support but with some concerns. One of the concerns that we would have both for the bill as well as for the amendment would be that this government had significant time, six months, to put this legislation together and to work with stakeholders to ensure that it reflects a reasonable approach to bargaining.

But now, with less than a week to go in the session and maybe even considerably less since the government has decided to use a piece of legislation that will shorten things, we're maybe wondering if there has been adequate time for the boards to work with the teachers or with their administrators to determine the impact of this legislation on their school district and on their classrooms and whether they've had the time to get the information back to their school boards and then eventually back to the government to ensure that the consultation process results in informed legislation.

Indeed, many of the boards that we've been in conversation with and many of the major stakeholders like the ASBA have expressed some concerns about the timeline that has been placed on, first, the bill and even this amendment process.

I'd like to quote a letter prepared by the Golden Hills school division, where they prepared an analysis of the bill, and they were very concerned.

We believe that it is unreasonable and disrespectful of locally elected school boards, for the Minister and the Government to rush to pass this legislation. A reasonable amount of time must be allowed for us to review it, and then to provide the opportunity for us to be engaged in meaningful consultation with the government on what we believe is best for our students.

One of the things I liked about the Golden Hills response to the timeline for both the bill and the amendment was the analysis that they put together. I want to just read a bit of this.

The legislation designates . . . the Government and the ATA as the negotiators for the first precedent setting list of "matters that are central matters and what matters are local matters for the purpose of collective bargaining" thus setting the precedent for all negotiations of agreements to follow. In the future it will be very difficult to move anything back to being a matter of local bargaining.

It gets tougher if not impossible to make a change, when the proscribed criteria the Act specifies . . . "a matter is a central matter if either . . .

- (a) the matter could result in a reasonably significant impact on expenditures for one or more employers; [or]
- (b) the matter involves issues common to most of the parties to the collective agreements that can be addressed in central bargaining more appropriately than in local bargaining."

The Chair: Hon. member, if I can just interrupt you for a moment, could we maybe keep this strictly to the amendment? That sounds like that's more directed to the bill in general.

Mr. Smith: As a matter of fact, Madam Chair, what I was going to suggest was that in here they say that if the hurdle is reasonably significant, it's hard to see how anything meaningful gets to be local.

Well, what I was going to point out was that, I think, actually, Minister, we can see, at least as part of the consultation, that this has been addressed by the amendment – correct? – and that there are some concerns which the school boards have brought forward but which the minister seems to have addressed at least to some degree, maybe not completely but to some degree, with this amendment. Okay? But there are other concerns, we believe, that have been brought to the minister that maybe haven't been brought up in this amendment and that maybe the minister should continue.

You know, if we take a look at St. Thomas Aquinas school division, they bring up a number of concerns, one of them being a continual erosion of the rights and responsibilities of school boards. In the absence of local autonomy, we may see rural education taking a hit as labour solutions that work in the city don't always fit in rural communities. Additionally, should a provincial model be initiated, it was our board's position during the preliminary consultations that the ASBA should be the body that represents our boards as [the] EBA.

I guess I'd ask the minister this question. Do you believe, Minister, that your amendment addresses this concern of St. Thomas Aquinas? Does this amendment address what they see as a continual erosion of rights and responsibilities of school boards?

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Sure. Thank you for that. Yes, I'm aware of Golden Hills' concerns, and certainly I think that we are on the path to addressing them. When you establish those first decisions that the TEBA board will do, which includes school boards, about local bargaining and central bargaining, yes, it certainly will sort of plant the course in place, but because the school boards are there, I think it sets precedents for negotiating those changes over time as well. I think we've democratized it sufficiently. I mean, yes, the first time you do establish it, it's like putting, you know, flood controls around a river. It's less likely to flow in any other way after that, right? Certainly, by having the boards there to set those parameters in place, it will probably go a long way to goodwill in case there is a big change that requires something to move to the local table.

In regard to St. Thomas Aquinas, it's part of STAR Catholic, I think. Is it? Yeah. Again, it's a fair play descriptor about different local issues, but there are discrepancies between how much teachers are paid in different places. We're not going to be changing that, but we're standardizing the movement on the grid. However that might go, we don't know. I mean, ultimately, we're the funder, right? So if STAR Catholic, you know, says that they can't afford it – well, we're the ones that are distributing those funds. It's not like they're raising those funds anyway.

There is a lot of interesting history. You're working through lots of dynamics of change, of political dialogue over a long period of time. I mean, a lot of school boards are feeling like they haven't been empowered since they lost their power to tax, right? You're working through those historical things as well. What I've done from the beginning, and I think I've reflected it here again today – it wasn't easy, let me tell you, to get this done – is: judge us on our actions, not our words. Everybody likes to say, "Oh, I respect school boards," but if every time they're losing incrementally their power to make local decisions that they are elected to do, then that's no good, right? Here I think I've actually re-established at least that course by which they do have that level of power to make significant decisions for the jurisdictions to which they're responsible. I firmly believe that.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I was only rising to refer to Standing Order 20(2), just with a reminder that we can get through this a little quicker if we stick to the argument on the amendment and deal with the main bill at an opportunity when we have time to speak to the main bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: Actually, first, I will recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise this evening in support of this amendment. I believe that school boards play a critical role in ensuring the stability and success of our educational system. I also know that they exist to represent their local communities first and foremost. It is quite common that matters that are important for public and Catholic school boards in my home city of Calgary can vary greatly compared to those in areas like Rocky View or Edmonton as well. That is why I believe firmly that having school boards negotiate on the local level, if you will, certainly is of central importance here. They should also have the ability for input on these matters that are important for them, too. This amendment will solidify the role of school boards in determining what is bargained centrally and locally.

Last week, I had the opportunity to attend two consultations with school boards. These were attended by 59 of the 61 school boards in Alberta. I heard concerns about section 8 of the bill, which would have kept them out of the deliberations on the matters while the teachers' employer bargaining association is established. By expediting the establishment of TEBA, we are signalling to the boards that we respect their role and value their input as well. We will also continue to discuss with our partner organizations as we move forward to draft regulation after this bill has passed. This bill marks the start of a path forward towards a better bargaining process. It will also restore trust, that was eroded during legislated settlements and labour strife in the past.

I'm encouraged by this amendment. It shows that, yes, we are listening to our partners in education. I want to thank all the board members for their feedback and advice. The consultation meetings that I attended were very constructive, and I really, truly want to thank them for their feedback as well. We all care about the quality of public education that our children receive. It is of the utmost importance that we collectively do the right thing for them as well, too.

That is why I support this amendment and Bill 8 as a whole, and I encourage this House to do the same as well.

The Chair: Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm also going to be rising today in support of this amendment because I see in my own riding every day that we have school boards and we have students and we have schools that really do show how a strong education system is going to build a better Alberta. I also attended a consultation with boards last week on Bill 8. I heard their concerns as well on things like section 8. I've spoken with numerous trustees. I've spoken with numerous teachers.

I believe in what the minister has tabled in this amendment. I believe that what the minister has created is a very effective way to balance that need to recognize that there are multiple stakeholders at this table, that there are multiple stakeholders that need to be making decisions centrally and locally. It's critical that while these bargaining processes continue and these negotiations go on, we establish a stable system for our students and, as members opposite have mentioned, that we look and say: is this what is best for the students?

I think that this amendment strikes that balance so that all the stakeholders – the school boards, the teachers, and us as the funders in the government – can say: look, we're going to be able to decide what goes to each table in a fair way so that those local issues are going to be discussed and those central issues are going to be discussed, and everybody can agree on these so that we can get back to doing what we want to do, which is to provide a quality education program for our students.

Further to that, I think it's very important that we as the government are at the central table as the funder to bargain with the teachers and to bargain with the boards because it is really important that we can meet our fiscal obligations as a province and that we can work towards that balanced budget. With us being there as the funders, with this amendment, with those school boards, it is going to create that structure and is going to create that ability for us to work with all these stakeholders to say: how are we going to get to that end goal? I believe that in the spirit of collaboration with school boards and teachers, this amendment is going to be a major move towards involving all of these parties.

We're not talking about discussing the "what" of what is going to be at each table but, I think, the how. This amendment solidifies the how, solidifies that everybody is important in that how. Moving that TEBA process up and expediting that system creates a strong system that will allow everyone to be happy and everybody to be involved at the level they necessitate.

I really do pledge my support for this amendment. I pledge my support for Bill 8, and I encourage all my colleagues, from both sides of the aisle, to support this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Further speakers to the amendment? Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise this evening in support of this amendment. As I said previously in the debate on Bill 8 when I offered my support for Bill 8, I believe it is imperative to respect the roles and responsibilities of school boards. They play such an important and key role in our education system. I meet regularly with the school boards in Sherwood Park and wanted to take the opportunity tonight to thank Justine Wright, the chair of the Elk Island Catholic board, and Trina Boymook, the chair of the Elk Island public board, for their really helpful feedback on this bill.

Like some of my fellow MLAs, I too attended some of the consultations with boards on Bill 8. I appreciated at those consultations the real thoughtful feedback from the boards and their willingness to make this bill work for them, especially for the benefit of the students in their schools. The message in those discussions was very clear. School boards want to be involved in the bargaining process immediately, and I agree that they should be.

I particularly appreciate the Minister of Education's introduction of this amendment. By removing a section of the legislation and accelerating the establishment of the teachers' employer bargaining association, known as TEBA, we are going to ensure that boards are involved right from the beginning.

I believe in a stable and effective bargaining process, and I'm fully behind Bill 8, which I think will improve on past struggles in this regard. It is critical that all parties be involved in the bargaining process and that all come away from the process feeling like their voices have been heard.

I support the amendment, and I will be supporting Bill 8 as a whole. Thank you.

The Chair: Any further speakers to amendment A1?

Seeing none, we'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: We're back on the bill. Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Chair. We did want to recognize, of course, as we knew in the past with our government, that there were issues with the current methods of handling collective negotiations with our teachers. Our former government was actually working on a policy that addressed these issues, and it's similar to what we are talking about here today. The major difference is that we believe that what's debated at each table needs to be financially owned by the table that makes the decisions. What we heard in our consultations – and we talked to a lot of boards, as our colleagues did, and I know that you and your colleagues did as well – was that there was significant concern about the vagueness of who is responsible for addressing the ultimate cost of the negotiations. I know that we've touched on that at various points.

There were concerns about the vagueness in this legislation, which commits to negotiating what will be negotiated in the future. Their concerns were about what the legislation means for school boards, for teachers, for future negotiations. Numerous school boards and associations did ask for time to review the legislation, and they had some suggestions for changes that they believed would enhance the legislation.

They were also concerned about how the legislation would affect the school board's ability to cope with a growing population and the potential for the government to put regulations in place that would be expensive, with those costs being downgraded onto local school boards. I see you nodding, Minister of Education, so you've clearly heard that feedback as well.

At this point I would like to introduce an amendment that clearly specifies that when the two tables deal with different items, no one other table should be responsible for covering the costs of a negotiation that they weren't part of. I know that my colleague in the Wildrose had touched on the idea that there were some school boards that saw the price was pretty high on some of the things, and maybe they didn't have that money in some of the boards whereas they did in some of the other boards.

I've got an amendment. Right now I'm going to allow a moment for it to be distributed, and then I'll keep on with my points.

Thank you.

The Chair: This is the original, right?

Ms Jansen: The original is on its way.

The Chair: Perfect. Thank you.

8:30

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Chair. This specifically deals with 12.1. I move that Bill 8, Public Education Collective Bargaining Act, be amended by adding the following after section 12:

Central terms requiring an increase in funding

12.1 If the central terms to which TEBA purports to agree will require an increase in expenditure by one or more employers, TEBA shall, prior to agreeing to the central terms, take steps to obtain assurances that the necessary increases in funding will be made available to those employers for the years to which the collective agreement relates.

This amendment to the legislation is really meant to clarify the process of negotiations that are right now broadly outlined in the legislation. It reflects the concerns, as I said, from stakeholders and constituents and provides what we think is a solid solution. It simply clarifies that each bargaining table will be responsible for funding the agreements to cover any increase in expenditures. It really makes sure that the funding is in place before anyone enters into a final agreement from a central-level negotiation.

This legislation fundamentally transforms the role of school boards – we know that – and the relationship they have with the government and the ATA. The amendment makes sure that they don't have to worry about funding commitments made during other parties' negotiations. It allows for more open negotiations and a better, more stable final agreement.

It also encourages all levels of government to make sure that they're making the agreements that benefit the provincial government, the local school boards, the teachers, the parents, and it means that multiyear deals, I think, will be a little bit easier to reach.

The amendment doesn't constrain the government's or TEBA's or school boards' ability to act during negotiations anyway and provides a little bit of peace of mind, certainly to the parents I spoke with, who were a little concerned about agreements being negotiated at one table that perhaps, you know, a board may be constrained to provide the funds for.

With that, I'll allow for comments now. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you very much for the amendment. I think this is a clever analysis of what can happen. Always when you're building these things, you have to think of different scenarios and which direction things can possibly go. Sometimes south: they can go in that direction, too.

You know, let's remind ourselves that the government is the funder, and we fund both tables based on enrolment and based on our capacity to do so. As we determine what is being negotiated at the central table and the local table, so too will we apportion the funding that would be appropriate for those two responsibilities. It precludes the capacity for any local table to exceed the funding that they have available to them. They can't promise things at their local table that they don't have money for, basically. I feel comfortable that based on the funding formula that we use, we should be okay.

Respectfully and with an appreciation of the insight that this amendment does reflect, I don't think we need it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, and I thank my colleague for bringing this forward. I think it's, obviously, a fiscally responsible amendment to make. I would say, Madam Chair, that if the members of the House were to look at the amendment and remove the words "TEBA" and "employers" and insert any other two names – husband and wife, Martha and Henry, Dick and Jane, mom and dad – then what it says is that if one takes the other one's credit card and buys something, then they have to pay them back for what they spent, or don't spend it. Although it's a little more sophisticated when you include "employers" and "TEBA," the principle remains the same. It says that you don't spend it unless you can afford to pay for it.

I don't know how I could possibly vote against something as common sense and responsible as that, and I hope the other members of the House can see just how basically reasonable this is. I hope that members of the House will agree to support it.

Thanks.

The Chair: Any further speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I guess I would like to hear from the minister on what his hesitation is. If he feels that the legislation already encompasses these important points, I guess I would ask: what is the hesitation in including it? My British wife has a term: belt and braces. Why not have both? I wonder in this case what the downside might be in accepting an amendment such as this, which just ensures that what has been told to us by the minister is to be the intent is in fact codified in the act itself. I do think that is important. It's an important principle that we're talking about here as well.

I certainly support it and would just be curious if the minister could be persuaded, perhaps, to change his mind.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. I mean, certainly, it's important, to just revert to the first principles here, that Bill 8 as amended is the how we build the structure, and then the what, that we do negotiate on, will take place over these next few months, with the structure in place. I just don't want to presume any of the what in this bill because the spirit of bringing the school boards and the funder, which is the government, and the teachers into place to sort that out is the purity of the bill, that I want to remain intact.

Certainly, as I said before, as a general principle we fund enrolment, and as a general principle we fund, you know, each of the tables in accordance with our responsibilities to students and in accordance with our capacity to pay, too. Then based on those two things – I mean, again, respectfully, I certainly understand the member's intention here, but I would choose to not vote for it. People can choose how they like.

The Chair: I'll hear from the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka first, followed by Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll be brief. The largest school board in my riding, Wolf Creek, has not yet actually had opportunity to formally meet and form an official position, but the board chair has expressed, essentially, that they're in favour of government being at the table. Her concern with regard to the amendment would be that the school board would not be sort of saddled with the costs of all of this going forward. Obviously, there are concerns amongst the school boards about how the cost sharing takes place. I think it's an important consideration, and I'll just leave it at that.

Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Madam Chair, I'd just like to sort of follow up on some of the points that were made by the hon. members for Calgary-North West, Calgary-Elbow, Calgary-Hays, and as well now by the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka. This is a redefinition of the negotiation process for what is, you know, truly a critical negotiation, that, of course, being with the teachers of our province, that are charged with education of our students. It is one that is being slightly redefined although the idea of a two-table negotiation is not entirely unfamiliar. Accordingly, the school boards that I've spoken with, the various trustees and the boards, have expressed to me just a certain hesitation because this is somewhat of a new relationship. All this amendment tries to do is to provide those boards with some level of assurance so that they know that any additional costs that are negotiated at the central table, that will fall to them as the employers, will indeed be covered by the funding agent.

Now, the minister is quite correct. The minister is quite correct that the government is the funder and that the government will be responsible for it, but I think that, especially when we are embarking on somewhat uncharted territory and when there is a new negotiating relationship being put together, it is prudent for all the possible mechanisms to be put in place so that there is comfort. You know, just as an example, I do know that the notion of a comfort letter was an important aspect of what the ATA wished to have in past negotiations. This is not a comfort letter. This amendment is merely a clause that assures the school boards, who still have a certain degree of trepidation about this whole process, that the minister – and I have no doubt whatsoever that he will be true to his word. But this gives them comfort in that they know that within the scope of the legislation, this amendment gives the assurance that any funding that is required by a negotiation made at the central table will also flow to the necessary employers that are affected by it.

I think this is an amendment that does not take away in any way from the legislation. I don't think it weakens the legislation. In fact, you know, I rather like the analogy used by the Member for Calgary-Elbow; that is, that it just provides some additional security for school boards, that are entering into this new relationship.

I would certainly encourage the minister to reconsider his stance on this. I don't believe that this is an amendment that in any way detracts from the intent of the bill or detracts from the negotiation process. I think that, in fact, it strengthens the level of assurance for all parties involved.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and for the interesting debate around this amendment as proposed. I think that if I am to reflect on where I was a year ago, the thing that I really like about TEBA is that TEBA actually has the employer and the funder at the table. Of course, these are discussions that school boards as the employer and as partners at the table would be having with the funder. That's why they're both to be at the table as opposed to past negotiation cycles, where sometimes it was just boards and employees or just the funder and employees but not actually having both the board and the funder working in partnership.

I think that in terms of items that'll be negotiated at TEBA, that's to be discussed in consultation with the employers themselves. They'll actually be at the table, and if any monetary items were to come up, they absolutely have the right to raise those questions at the table through the processes that they'll be outlining through the what piece. And, of course, the funder is at the table to guarantee the how.

While I appreciate the intent of this, being similar to what we as employers as well asked for around a comfort letter, I'd say that being at the table is far more comforting than actually having to trust that something is going to happen and that your considerations will be taken after the fact. I think TEBA itself is the dialogue where the conversation happens and the assurances can be laid. I think that if things are negotiated at TEBA, obviously, with the funder at the table, the funder is going to be working to ensure that monetary implications will be addressed.

There might be monetary implications at some of the local table discussions, and I certainly don't think that we would want to put a requirement that those come back to the funder for sign-off on every ad hoc basis. I think this really creates a structure through the original motion where we have the right people at the table to discuss the significant monetary pieces that I think the intention of the motion refers to in a fluid way so that that can be established prior to the agreement being reached.

I would be inclined at this point to vote in opposition to the amendment. However, I want to honour that in times past something like this may have been helpful, under the former process, but I don't think it is necessary moving forward in what's being defined under TEBA.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any further comments to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise in favour of the amendment as presented by the Member for Calgary-North West. I think it's a very reasonable amendment that provides some clarity to the school boards, that are presenting some concerns with some of the lack of consultation that has come forward previously. Now this can give them a level of comfort that what does happen at TEBA will not inhibit their ability to actually do the things that they need to do.

I would encourage everyone to be in favour of this amendment.

The Chair: Any further comments to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the bill. Are there any further comments? Go ahead, hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Perhaps I will just hand out the amendment. I'd like to present an amendment to the bill addressing section 16(5). I will allow this to make its rounds. It's a simple one. I propose to strike out section 16(5). I will hand those to you now, and I will just pause for a moment while those amendments are handed out.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Subsection 16(5) reads as follows: "The Financial Administration Act, the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act, the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act and the Auditor General Act do not apply to TEBA." I imagine that those of us in this House – I would hope that you all love governance as much as I do.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, yeah.

Mr. Clark: Oh, could we all agree? Could we all agree that we love governance . . .

An Hon. Member: Process.

Mr. Clark: . . . and we love process, we love oversight, and if we don't, well, I wonder what the heck we're all doing here. These four acts do precisely that. They provide governance, they provide oversight to bodies such as TEBA. I'm just going to take you very briefly through the provisions of each of those acts.

The Financial Administration Act governs how TEBA can operate. It cannot end operations without government control. It governs how provincial or Crown corporations can be dissolved, liquidated, wound up, et cetera. It places controls over spending in terms of debt provisions. It allows the government to regulate any fees that TEBA may charge. It may not be relevant, particularly in this case, but it allows a regular review of the business of TEBA.

The Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act provides for details of a specific governance framework and what is required of that governance framework; for example, "within 3 months of its establishment or continuation, have a Mandate and Roles Document that is jointly developed by the public agency and its responsible Minister." That includes a description of a long list of important things, which I know the minister has already discussed, his intention to have something along these lines from TEBA. Most importantly, that mandate and rules document must be made available to the public, which provides transparency and accountability.

This next one is, I think, perhaps my favourite amongst equals, but this is my favourite. It exempts the TEBA from the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. Those of you who have been following along in the last number of weeks will recall that the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act up until yesterday was known as Bill 4. We passed Bill 4 yesterday, over some objection from this side. We passed Bill 4, and that does things like placing spending controls on TEBA. There's been a lot of talk in this House about the wonderful aspects of that particular act. It also includes reporting requirements.

The Auditor General Act, of course, allows TEBA to be audited by the Auditor General or a proxy and provides audit reports on TEBA to government and, through government, to the people of Alberta.

I feel very strongly that this level of governance is absolutely appropriate for a public body like TEBA, that has an important role to play. I would be curious for the minister's thoughts on why TEBA, amongst all government agencies, somewhat uniquely should be excluded from these provisions and this governance oversight.

The Chair: Any further speakers to amendment A3? The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. This came up under my scrutiny and, I believe, the Official Opposition Education critic's as well. We asked about this. I believe that it was, number one, that this is a representative assembly – that is, of school boards – so the structure of the TEBA doesn't align with the ABCs under this legislation. It's a negotiating body as well, so our legal staff had advised that this was a structure that doesn't use these other acts. Yes, it caught my eye straightaway, too, but because it is an assembly of school boards and, as such, a statutory corporation of a special nature, that is only designed for negotiating, that's why they put this in there. I've been told that it needs to be there. I appreciate the sharp eye of the Member for Calgary-Elbow to see that, but it wasn't like we're trying to skirt around the law in any way, shape, or form.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any further speakers to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, and thank you to the hon. member for bringing this forward. I know that on this side of the House and in this party we also took a look at that, and we had some questions about it, as the minister has alluded to. In our conversations with Parliamentary Counsel they seem to believe that this was a reasonable part of the bill. We had some concerns. We wondered if maybe the Auditor General, more specifically, should be overseeing and have oversight over TEBA, and the Parliamentary Counsel came back to us, saying, "Well, you know, I suppose you could probably do it." But she believed that it was not necessarily something that would be a huge amount of value, adding it to the bill. I don't think it probably would hurt, but it was her opinion that that's what would have happened.

The Chair: Any further speakers to amendment A3?

If not, we'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: Back on the bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on Bill 4. I'm sorry. Bill 8. I'm still in last-night zone. What can I say?

Mr. Smith: Can I rise and speak to the bill?

The Chair: Yes, if you still want to speak to Bill 8. We're back on the bill.

Mr. Smith: Back on the bill. Thank you, Madam Chair. I guess I really just have one question, and it's to deal with perhaps the flexibility that goes along with the bargaining process when it comes to salaries and to that provincial table, okay? You know, under local bargaining each school board had the authority to bargain locally and to negotiate salaries and benefits and a wide range of local issues like early retirement and teacher retention and incentives. All of those things were at the table locally, weren't they? In Bill 8 we know that teachers' salaries would probably, in all likelihood, be negotiated at the central table, but there's no indication as to how exactly that would work.

I guess this is my question. Maybe it's just my overactive imagination, but here's the question I've got for the minister. Once a wage or a percentage is agreed to in the central bargaining process, will there be room for local school boards then to negotiate with their local ATA over how those funds would be disbursed within the local collective agreement? For instance, will the local school boards be able to decide that one grid increment might only receive a 1 per cent increase while a fourth-year teacher on the grid might receive a 2 per cent increase as a retention bonus? Do you understand the question that I'm asking?

In the past couple of negotiated agreements, you know, there was a percentage agreed to, and it was just applied to everybody across the board, so if the teachers got a 2 per cent increase, they got a 2 per cent increase. I guess what I'm asking here is that if you bargained a 2 per cent increase or a 4 per cent increase, would you then be able to go back in local negotiations and say, "Well, we're going to give first-, second-, and third-year teachers 1 per cent, but we'll give 3 and 4 per cent to fourth- and fifth-year teachers"? Would you be able to work out locally bargained percentages, depending on the increment grid, and see if there's more local bargaining that way?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you so much for the question. Madam Chair, I mean, I can speculate on this, but I think that structurally everyone should know that these are part of the questions, what the TEBA group and the teachers will negotiate. This is the structure or the superstructure, so to speak, of how. For the purposes of, you know, today, if we can just certainly understand that we've created a representative body that includes the funder and includes the school boards, and then on the other side of the table are teachers. They will determine, through this how-system that we've built here together, really, collectively, how that will be employed to answer questions such as what the hon. member is asking here this evening.

You know, while change is often not easy and certainly we want to make sure that we are dealing with this in a democratic and a forthright manner, I believe that the progress that we've made over the six months since I started working on this has been considerable. I think it'll pay dividends for us to be able to negotiate within the parameters of what we can afford as a government and within the parameters of due process for fair bargaining for the excellent work that our teachers do here in the province of Alberta.

I certainly thank everyone for their contributions. You know, I found it to be an excellent learning process. We've just begun. All of those parties that we've started to work with we will spend a great deal of time with over the next few months to ensure that we come up with an equitable, affordable agreement that allows our school system to continue along the excellent path that it has done so over these past decades.

Thank you.

The Chair: You had further comments, hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Yes, please, if I may. Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd just like to speak in regard to Bill 8 and some of the concerns that a couple of my school boards have brought forward to me. I have four in my constituency. With the changes that the government has put forward with the amendment, I will support this bill, but I also have to be diligent in bringing the concerns of the school boards that I'm working with to the attention of the minister. The thing that was most concerning to the school boards was the lack of consultation, that they felt was done before the legislation was presented here in the House.

I'll read from the letter I received from the Sturgeon school division. It's dated December 1.

Dear Mr. Piquette and Mr. Horne . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, even when reading something, we do not use members' names, please.

Mr. van Dijken: Okay. I'm sorry. I'll retract that, then. Thank you.

To you, as MLAs for (part of) our school division area, and members of the government caucus, the Board of Trustees of Sturgeon School Division hereby requests that you have our concerns with the precipitous passing of Bill 8 – The Public Education Collective Bargaining Act – heard and responded to by our provincial government. We understand that this Act is about to go through third reading in the House and we strongly oppose this non-consultative approach to such an important piece of legislation. Please use all your voice and influence in government to have this reading postponed until there can be meaningful, informed consultation among school boards, Alberta Education and government.

Sturgeon School Division strongly endorses Local Bargaining as the only effective way for school boards to work with their teacher-employees to provide top quality cost-effective education to our students. However, if Local Bargaining is to be marginalized, as Bill 8 would have it, then it is necessary for us to more fully understand how this new bargaining model will impact education administration. This can only be accomplished by delaying the passage of this legislation until the governance and administrative processes can be satisfactorily clarified for the understanding of all concerned.

That's from the board chair, Tracy Nowak, of Sturgeon school division.

Then Pembina Hills regional division sent me a letter dated December 1. It's actually addressed to the Minister of Education. Some of the work that the minister has completed now with the school boards, Alberta school boards in particular, is not relevant in this letter.

On behalf of the Board of Trustees of Pembina Hills Public Schools I am writing to encourage you to allow time for school boards to provide input into Bill 8, the Public Education Collective Bargaining Act that passed first reading in the Alberta Legislature Thursday, November 26.

We understand that Bill 8 is scheduled to advance through the Legislature this week and could be passed into law by December 3rd, just one week after it was introduced. This does not provide Boards the chance to ask questions or provide feedback on the bill.

Of course, now they have had the opportunity to provide feedback, but these were some of the concerns previously.

Bill 8 is precedent-setting legislation that will affect school boards across the province. School boards were not provided with the opportunity to review this legislation prior to November 26.

As locally elected school boards representing our students and communities, boards need time to review the proposed legislation and provide recommendations on items needing clarification prior to it being passed into law. School Boards need an opportunity to meet with the Minister or Alberta Education staff to understand the proposed legislation and be able to ask questions about the process and engagement of boards.

Pembina Hills Public Schools respectfully requests that you do not pass Bill 8 before providing consultation with school boards on the components of the legislation and the role of boards in the decision making of negotiations. We will be in attendance at the Alberta School Boards Association meeting on December 4th and look forward to working together through the stages of the bargaining process.

With that, I also want to thank the minister for giving them the opportunity to consult at that time. I'm glad that we were able to continue on with our Legislature sitting in that it actually gave them the opportunity to provide that feedback before the bill was passed.

Like so many bills brought forth by the government, there have been many good intentions. Good intentions, however, do not necessarily make good legislation. I have received these letters from my local school boards outlining their concerns. I guess what I am trying to bring to light here, Madam Chair, is that we seem to have a pattern of behaviour here. I really want to encourage this government to proceed with thorough consultation previous to bills like this being presented here so that the stakeholders feel like their concerns have been heard and so they have a clearer understanding of what will be brought forward in this Legislature and so they can have a certain amount of comfort that what is being brought forward does not catch them off guard with regard to a full understanding of how it will affect them in the future.

Thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I guess I'll start by just kind of breezing through a little bit of a letter here from one of the school boards in my constituency.

Since the release of this important legislation last Thursday by Minister Eggen, school boards have not had the opportunity to review and discuss the implications. Plans to do so had been made for this Friday, December 4, in Edmonton.

Certainly, there seems to be a difference between the input school boards indicated they provided Alberta Education and the comments the Minister is making suggesting this bill reflects the input and wishes of school boards – a product of having missed a step in the Minister's consultation process where input could have been validated with school boards and related decisions explained.

Madam Chair, it seems we're standing here again talking about lack of consultation. While Minister Eggen did engage in stakeholder consultations in the fall, there was no feedback provided to school boards with respect to the direction this legislation was taking. This sounds very similar to Bill 6, of course, where some of the stakeholder groups had discussions with government but no indication of what direction the government was going until, of course, the bill was slapped down here in the Legislature. That's when they finally knew what was actually going on.

Another concern that the school boards have is the lack of response time. Most stakeholders say that the time between tabling and the projected passing of Bill 8 is too fast, that there is not enough time for meaningful input or debate before the government intends to pass it. Again, it's the same thing as Bill 6. Of course, they've come up with some amendments now. They've dropped them on our tables, and now we don't have time to go back to the school boards in our constituencies to find out what they really think of this. I'm madly trying to text people to find out, you know, what their opinion is of this, but of course there's no way to do proper consultation when you do business this way. Obviously, this has become a pattern, this lack of consultation and, of course, amendments. Every time they bring something forward, it ends up that the amendments seem to be more important than the bill itself. I think it's very unfortunate, Madam Chair, that this government feels like this is how they should be doing business.

Now, I just want to have maybe a couple of questions answered or cleared up here. The boards are clear that the only issues that should be decided at the provincial table should be salary and the length of the agreement. All other things should have been negotiated at the local level, with a predetermined dollar percentage amount to put limits on the asks. I guess I'd like to ask the minister to confirm if that's true or not.

I'd also like to ask the minister: since you've brought this amendment in, have you had an opportunity to consult with all 61 of the school boards? If so, what specifically has been the support level for this bill with the amendments that you've put forward? When I say "specifically," I would like to know if the smaller, more rural school boards have any more concerns than other school boards? Could you clear that up, Minister?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you for your questions and concerns. I mean, certainly, it's important that you interact with the people that the legislation does affect. Certainly, we have done so, not just in the six months up to this point but even in the last six days. I think that with many of the concerns that the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock had brought forward, if he was to note what those amendments were and how they are, if he was listening to me now, for example, he would know that, in fact, we did address those things.

Also, to the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky: certainly, again, the idea of making sure that the TEBA is including the school boards and the funder and the government is very important. I think this is the principle that will move a lot of these other concerns forward, right? The determination of what is being negotiated will be at that grouping. They'll determine if it will be wages and other things like you mentioned as well. Those are all things that will take place with the framework that we have.

You know, it's interesting that your school board, actually, is right in my media release here tonight. They say:

This amendment shows the Minister is actively listening to school boards.

God bless them.

Local matters may be unique in some communities, and this amendment acknowledges the importance of managing those locally.

Yeah, I worked hard to try to work with different individuals. That was the chair for one of your districts.

Other endorsements, including the ASBA, which is the overriding body, acknowledge that this is something they can work with as well. So I did work hard.

It's very important in politics not to overreach generalizations. If you do so, then you compromise the message that you're trying to get across. I mean, this is always a lesson that I try to refer back to in my mind when I'm doing this, when I used to be in opposition, and I would advise the members opposite to do the same.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Yes. Minister, I appreciate that you have some information from one of the school boards in my area, but I actually have five in my constituency, so if you could maybe confirm which one you were quoting from there.

Also, I did ask the question: have you consulted with all 61 school divisions . . .

Mr. Eggen: Yes, I have.

Mr. Loewen: . . . and if so, what specifically is the support level for this bill with these amendments?

Mr. Eggen: VS, very strong. It's looking good.

Mr. Loewen: Sorry. I said specifically.

Mr. Eggen: Very strong. Yeah, it's good.

The Chair: Hon. members, while I've been allowing some of this back-and-forth dialogue, it's important to remember that for the purposes of the official record, Hansard, if we don't get the answer on record, sometimes it's problematic. If you're prepared to answer the question, hon. minister, we could get it on the record. Otherwise, we'll proceed.

Mr. Eggen: No.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Yeah. I just want to make sure it's on the record that he's not willing to answer the question.

Thank you.

The Chair: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I guess the most unfortunate part about this bill, Bill 8, is that we're still here talking about it at a quarter after 9 tonight. It's fairly obvious that with a little bit of consultation prior, this would be water under the bridge by now.

What I want to stand up and talk about is, basically, that I've got four school boards in my area: Lakeland Catholic, St. Paul educational region, East Central francophone, and Northern Lights school division. When I talked to them, they all kind of reiterated the same thing. It was like: we talked to them this fall, but we had no idea that this was coming through and that this was what it was going to be. I think a little bit of consultation prior to the bill going out would have probably eliminated the need for these amendments that have come forth. I think it's unfortunate, but maybe it's a lesson going forward, that we do need to negotiate a little bit more and keep people in the loop on exactly what's going on.

I did talk to at least one of my school boards tonight and ran over these amendments that came through. Unfortunately, they don't have a meeting until tomorrow. I said: well, unfortunately, the bill is going to be passed tonight. They were a little concerned about that still, that they weren't going to have a chance to sit down as a board and talk about it, because it's been one or two of them on a phone call and that kind of thing. That's the unfortunate part about it.

I hope that at the end of it they're all happy and that we don't cause some dissension among the school boards themselves. They are concerned still about what this TEBA board is going to look like and all that stuff. They still do have some concerns about that. I hope we get that right and make sure that we talk to all the school boards involved and make sure you get their input on that. Hopefully, I don't get a whole bunch of phone calls asking about what I'm doing.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. I appreciate those comments. You know, it's quite valid as we work through. You know, this is the first bill that I've ever passed in the Legislature. I've been here for a decade. I haven't passed it yet. But part of what I've learned over the years when debating and being in opposition is that the constructive engagement that we can generate on the floor here is quite good. We talk about committees and so forth. We're in a committee right now. This is a committee. I mean, I just wanted to try to use that as part of how we built this. Of course, you can't give the bill out before. It has to come here first, okay? That's another thing.

Ms Hoffman: Legally.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah, legally. I mean, you can kind of, you know, give them a wink to give them some idea of where it's going.

That's the way I kind of tried to play it. If I can make adjustments the next time I do this, then I will do so. It's all in good faith. I mean, this is a good way, members of the Legislature, for us to move forward in a more equitable way and a more fiscally responsible way to make labour contracts with the teachers. It's a big moment. I think it'll take us maybe a few days and weeks to figure out just how we've accomplished something here if we choose to vote for it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. Go ahead.

Mr. Hanson: If I could, Madam Chair. Just to clarify, this is Committee of the Whole. It's just a step in the process. This is not a committee. This is not what we want for Bill 6.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other comments with respect to this bill? Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. I greatly appreciate your time in this. I'm going to put a more positive spin on this. I just really, really want to thank this NDP government for listening to the Wildrose on this. I mean, thank God for the Wildrose. Thank goodness for the opposition. We have to remember that if the NDP had had their way, this bill would have been rammed through last week. We had to get a little bit of time for there to be some consultation.

Up in Fort McMurray, as an example, Madam Chair, the school boards came back to us when we asked them for some information on this, and they did come back with some concerns. They came back with the fact that there was a lack of consultation, and this was something that was really province-wide. We have no doubt that the good minister had conversations with the school boards, but they weren't quite clear what these conversations were leading to. They lacked a lot of information. They didn't have enough time to look at the information, which was the second part of that, the time constraint. They were very concerned that the information was getting rushed through rather quickly, and they didn't have time to evaluate it.

Again, with these bills that can affect so many things, there has to be a certain level of consultation. It's about discussions, about asking the right questions. Whether you're a school board trustee or a social worker or a geologist, you have to ask those right questions.

The last part that they were really concerned about was a lack of proper representation with a centralized board, Madam Chair. The school boards were concerned that they might be isolated from a lot of these talks. In Fort McMurray, as an example, we have some different parameters that we work around up there. They were concerned that they'd be overwhelmed by the larger school boards here in the cities. Fortunately, the good minister was good enough to recognize this and address this with the two levels of school boards, board representation, and it is a really great thing that they were finally listening to us. Even though they, you know, just finished their consultation this afternoon and spent the whole weekend, I'm sure, and the week discussing these things, it was only at our behest, and we really appreciate your listening to us. I'm so glad for this.

The two school boards have expressed their concerns about a lot of these issues, but they're a little bit happier. Again, a lot of the school boards have come back and said: you know, some more time would have been nice. At least they have more information now. There obviously were some heavy work sessions over these last few days. I'm sure that our good Minister of Education was working very hard to try to get a lot of clarity and to write that law, and we really appreciate that. That helps a little bit. So when you take the lessons from this bill and you try to carry those through your next bills, recognize that consultation is really an important issue when we're coming up with these laws because once these laws are built – someone else used the analogy about concrete. You can manipulate that concrete when it's still wet, but once it's cast in stone, once that bill is passed, it's very hard to change it. We have to chip away at it, and it's a much longer process.

Again, kudos to hon. Minister of Education for, you know, speeding it up. It was a fast process, but at least he did contact a lot of these schools boards and was able to provide some feedback. They also had a few more days to evaluate the information, and that's to be commended despite the fact that, you know, we had to provide you with that guidance, but that is good. There are many, many great things that the Wildrose can provide for this government if you just listen to us all the time. All the time. The hon. Minister of Finance agrees with this, and that's good to see.

So I just want to say on behalf of the Wildrose: thank you for listening. A lot of school boards do also appreciate this last-minute consultation enough that they're more comfortable with this bill. So thank you very much. Keep up the good work, and congratulations on your first bill.

The Chair: Are there any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 8 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Mr. Westhead: Madam Chair, I move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Dr. Turner: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 8. Madam Speaker, I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 8 Public Education Collective Bargaining Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Certainly, we've had very good debate around this, and what I truly enjoy is the sense of consensus on how we are arriving at a place where we should be as a governing body, as a legislative body to deal with collective bargaining for teachers. Certainly, this is just the beginning. As I said before, this is how it will take place, hopefully, if we manage to pass this. The what and the heavy work in the next few months are still to come.

However, I fully expect, Madam Speaker, that all parties recognize, first and foremost, the integrity and the strength of our education system across the province and will invest in the success of this collective bargaining process with the best interests of our students, of our parents, and the smooth functioning of our communities with which each of the schools is so deeply entwined.

I am both edified and thankful for all of the input that I've had over the last months and weeks and in the final few days as well, as we worked through the actual bill. It's a remarkable experience, and I believe that we can all perhaps learn from the spirit of co-operation that we've managed to hit on here. Maybe everybody just had a big dinner tonight, and they're not scrapping and fighting as much as usual. No. Seriously, it's a mechanism by which, you know, the Legislature can function. It's something that ultimately I'm very proud of, how this process can work here to make a better society for all.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Education minister. I want to echo the sentiment that when we gather here and we have adult discussions without the yelling and without the heckling, we actually can get some pretty good work done. I think it's an excellent example of being able to sit down and discuss the merits of a piece of legislation and introduce amendments, and even though my amendment wasn't passed, the fact is that it was still a respectful discussion, and we had a chance to have that discussion.

I think that for those of us who have heard a lot from our school boards, we certainly all brought up those concerns. Going forward,

I still have those concerns. We all want to see a system of collective bargaining that works for everybody. I have lots and lots of teachers in my constituency, and they want to see a pain-free system. I don't know if we'll ever get to a pain-free system, but we want to get as close as possible to that. We also have lots of school board members and lots of parents who want to see us get to a place where we have that.

None of us benefits, especially those of us who are parents, when we're in a situation where we have labour disagreements. We want our teachers to be happy, and we want them to work in an environment where they are functioning at their optimum. We do that when we have labour agreements that are strong, when we have collective bargaining that doesn't have people leaving the table extremely upset. We also need to make sure that our school boards feel the same way.

I am cautiously hopeful going forward that this system is going to be an improvement. I look forward to being able to examine it from the other end once we've been through this process. Certainly, I would really just like to finish by saying that I would like to have more discussions like this in the House on a regular basis.

Thank you.

Mr. Clark: I, too, will echo the sentiment of the Member for Calgary-North West as well as the minister. It is quite remarkable what we can do in this House when we sit and listen to one another. It can be done. It's a good example to set. As I go through my briefing notes, that my very capable team has prepared for me, I reflect on some of the concerns that we had as we went through the bill as a team. The vast majority of those concerns have been addressed by the amendments to the bill, and the questions that we've had have been answered through debate, so I very much appreciate having gone through that process.

What's important in any collective bargaining process, especially for something as important as education, when we're talking about students and student outcomes, is that we have great teachers in the classrooms and that, of course, schools are not interrupted with any work disruption. Of course, as representatives here of all citizens, both students as well as taxpaying Albertans, we need to make sure we get a fair deal. In these difficult and challenging economic times that, I would hope, is going to be in the forefront for the TEBA group. We need to make sure that it's the right deal for teachers and, in particular, the right deal in challenging economic times for the budget as well.

So I look forward to paying close attention to this as it plays itself out. Let's hope – although I don't know how long this feeling of unanimity will last as we move on to debate a different bill later this evening, I live forever in hope that it is at least possible. We've shown it can be done.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) does come into effect if anybody has any questions or comments for the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow. Go ahead, Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Madam Speaker, I am delighted that we are able to have a discussion on an issue as important as education. I was going to ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow: why do you think when it comes to the matter of public education that we can have such a congenial time in this House? [interjection]

Mr. Clark: I won't repeat the comment from my Wildrose colleague over here.

You know, I think some issues are more controversial than others. I mean, I just think that's it. I think on this one there's broad agreement that everyone in the House is broadly trying to do the same thing.

In my comments earlier on Bill 6 I hoped to try to bridge some of that, but there's obviously a very fundamental disagreement and difference of opinion on that bill whereas on this one it appears there isn't. There has been an acknowledgement in this case that perhaps consultation wasn't done as fulsomely as it could have been although some fairly extensive consultation had taken place leading up to the introduction of the bill. Once the bill was introduced, there were questions asked by school boards in particular. Those questions were addressed by the minister, and I think that helped turn down the temperature and calm things down.

So perhaps there's a lesson there for the government in terms of how this has been approached. But I think, also, that we're all in this House in pretty broad agreement that we need to get to a negotiated settlement as quickly as possible to keep teachers in the classrooms.

Thanks for the question.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further comments under 29(2)(a)?

If not, I will recognize Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 8, and I would say that I'm very happy, to a degree, with the process that has gone on throughout here. The Wildrose believes in local decision-making, that decisions are best made by those that are closest to the situation. Probably, as we started off this process, our position was pretty close to the idea of maintaining a local bargaining position with regard to negotiations because we do believe in local decision-making.

We were aware that the minister began this process of looking at a two-tiered bargaining system in the summer by discussing bargaining models with the various local school boards. I guess I would commend the minister for starting the process off by going to the major stakeholders and by asking them where they stood and what they were looking at when it came to bargaining and whether or not they should move to some other form of bargaining. That first step in consultation was probably a very wise thing to do by the minister, so it probably started well by meeting with all the school boards.

Consultation is effective if at the end of the day that consultation and the bill that comes out of that consultation reflect a consensus of what the people actually want. In this case, you know, consultation is effective if the bill that is passed or is discussed and debated in the House actually, at the end of the day, meets the needs of the major stakeholders in education, whether they be local school boards or the organizations like the ASBA and the PSBAA, if the consultation actually comes out with a bill that reflects the views, the values, and the decisions of the major stakeholders involved. I think that's a pretty important thing to remember about consultation, that at the end of the day it does need to, in a democracy, reflect what the major stakeholders would desire.

You know, part of the process that I know we went through as a party in the Wildrose was going back to those major stakeholders and asking them where they stood. What did they believe the bill did? Where did they stand on this issue? One of the things that became really obvious to us at the beginning of this part of the process was that the major stakeholders believed in local bargaining. We really wondered – and we said it at the beginning of this process – if Bill 8 would become a new Bill 6. Would it end up not listening to the needs of the major stakeholders? If it wasn't going to listen to the stakeholders and if it wasn't going to be reflective of the needs of the people that are actually providing educational services in our province, that was going to be issue.

I guess what I would argue, then, is that the consultation started off well, but it appeared to us that it was starting to break down when the bill actually came out. When the bill was made public and the school boards and the major stakeholders first got a chance to take a look at this bill, two things began to be of concern to both the stakeholders and the Wildrose Party. One was the timeline for further feedback on this consultative process. Was there going to be time for the local school boards, for the major stakeholders, to be able to actually provide feedback on the bill that the minister had brought forward? You know, that's a major concern.

I think it's reflected – and I won't read the whole letter from, in this case, the CBE. We could have picked any one of a number of different school boards. They all reflected some of these early concerns with this process. I guess I can't refer to the member. I'm sorry, ma'am.

On Friday, ... [the] Minister of Education, provided Alberta School Boards with information about Bill 8, ...

This is dated December 1.

... the Public Education Collective Bargaining Act. We learned that many details are still to be addressed. There was no opportunity for trustees to ask questions during this conference call ...

So they were informed of the bill through a conference call but never got the opportunity to ask questions about the bill during that conference call, and that's a concern. It's a concern because: will the consultative process actually allow this bill to reflect the wishes of the boards and the major stakeholders?

We are concerned about the speed with which this legislation is moving and would appreciate the opportunity to work with government to learn more. In particular, we want to understand how a provincial-wide structure will benefit CBE students and their families. We also seek clarification on what items will be provincially negotiated and what will be left to local bargaining.

You see, when you have a consultation process, there are things and there are issues that have to be worked through, Madam Speaker, and they need time. While this got started off with time, talking with them over the summer, when the bill came out, there were some real concerns.

The CBE Board of Trustees continues to support a local bargaining model ...

So a two-tiered model was going to be a problem if there wasn't consultation and discussion about some of these issues. They were concerned that their "voice will be lost and the interests of Calgary students will be diminished.

We are concerned that erosion of local control will not be in the best interests of students, parents, and the community ...

There appears to be a difference between the input school boards provided to Alberta Education previously on this issue, and the comments the Minister has made in which he suggests the Bill reflects the input and wishes of school boards.

Some serious concerns, Madam Speaker, and that was on December 1.

I know that we as the Wildrose Party, believing in local decision-making, believing that bills need to reflect the wishes of the people, had some pretty serious concerns about Bill 8.

Now, we understand that there were further consultations that came forth. We understand that there were some more consultations beginning, I believe, on December 3, that, while short, did seem to address some of the major stakeholders' concerns with either the bill or with the government and how it was proceeding.

We have again – and we can table this later – a letter from the board of trustees for the Calgary board of education, received by the hon. Minister of Education on December 4. It says:

Thank you for the opportunity on December 3, 2015 to provide feedback to your staff on the government's proposed Bill 8 . . .

I think it was wise of the minister to go back to the school boards and to the major stakeholders and to ask for their concerns. This letter does go through the concerns with sections 8 and 9 in the bill.

In addition, the criteria for determining central matters in section 10 is too broad . . .

They start to list some of their concerns with the bill, but they end off with this comment.

Should Bill 8 be amended as we propose above, The Calgary Board of Education can support Bill 8, notwithstanding our consistent position that local school boards should retain exclusive responsibility for bargaining teacher collective agreements.

I think that when you have a consultation process that actually consults and actually listens to the major stakeholders and actually tries to reflect their concerns, you do get positive results in the end.

I believe the amendment that the hon. minister brought forward this evening – while it isn't probably everything that we as the Wildrose Party would prefer to have seen in the bill and while we would have preferred to have seen a few other things addressed and some movement in some other areas, we do see that by allowing the school boards to be a part of the first bargaining session as a part of TEBA, to be able to set the tone for what matters will be local and what matters will be provincial from the very beginning, this has taken a step towards providing a better bill. It has reflected some of the concerns that have been brought forward by some of the school boards and some of the major stakeholders, and I think it does show what successful consultation can start to look like.

Having said that, we would have preferred to have seen a more exhaustive consultative process, one with longer timelines, one that would have allowed school boards to have met, to have discussed, to have met again at their provincial level through the ASBA, that would have allowed the ASBA to have had a more confident process in moving forward and having discussions with the minister. So while we still have some concerns, I think we can say that this consultative process has been better than others that we may have argued about over the last week. I think we can say with confidence that there has been some movement on behalf of the government to listen to some of the stakeholders.

With those comments, while we may have as the Wildrose Party some concerns about some of the specific issues, we will be supporting this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes of questions or comments under 29(2)(a) should anyone wish to take advantage of that.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'd like to read three short letters into the record to make a certain point, which may be obvious after the first sentence. The first is from the Calgary Catholic school district, who write:

The Board of Trustees of the Calgary Catholic School District would like to urge you to delay the third reading of Bill 8, the Public Education Collective Bargaining Act until such time as appropriate consultation may occur with key stakeholders, the publicly elected school boards of Alberta.

We, along with many boards in our province, have concerns about the consultation process and the extremely tight timelines associated with this legislation. Initial consultations occurred in September/October of 2015 to gather input from boards. It was the understanding of our board that this information would be compiled and further consultation opportunities provided prior to the passing of any legislation. We invite the opportunity to dialogue more fully with you and your staff to understand the legislation, the role of school boards in the collective bargaining process and share our own concerns and interests.

We understand that the legislature continues to move forward with this Bill. We respectfully request that the third reading of this bill be paused to allow for more consultation and opportunities for feedback with Boards.

Madam Speaker, you might notice I did not interject with any editorial comment. I don't believe any was necessary. I believe this says it all. That's the perspective of one board.

Yet a second letter:

We are writing to you with respect to Bill 8, the Public Education Collective Bargaining Act that you presented for first reading in the Alberta Legislature Thursday, November 26th.

Bill 8 is [a] very significant [piece of] legislation that will dramatically affect the vast majority of school boards in this province.

We understand there is consideration for second and third reading to be completed and the passage of this legislation into law before the currently scheduled December 3rd end of this sitting of the legislature.

We have not seen this legislation prior to November 25th. It contains measures that we did not anticipate from the single consultation on potential bargaining frameworks that was facilitated by your staff.

We believe that, as locally elected school boards democratically chosen to represent our students, their families and our constituents, we should be given more than a few days to properly review the proposed legislation and to provide you with our recommendations on Bill 8 prior to it [becoming] passed into law.

We certainly recognize that there is a need for school boards to act quickly, and will undertake to do that, however, you will understand that attempting to do this hastily, before the close of this legislative sitting, will be a disservice to our students and severely compromise our ability to serve our electorate.

We, the undersigned publicly elected school boards respectfully request that you do not pass Bill 8 before you have met with us and listened to our concerns and heard our recommendations.

Madam Speaker, that from Golden Hills school division.

The last one, although I could do more, for tonight would be this, from the Calgary board of education, simply their last paragraph in a very short letter.

We would appreciate if you would add our name to the list of school boards that is requesting that the minister ensure that Bill 8 is not passed prior to consulting with school boards.

Now, the only thing I will share in terms of an expert is the summary from that letter.

No consultation with school boards with regards to the unintended consequences of this Bill.

No opportunity for school boards to be at the table on the initial bargaining framework. (Items for central vs local tables)

Erosion of present local bargaining opportunities and solutions based on the current language and criteria used in the Bill to identify local vs central bargaining items.

The criteria in Bill 8 used to identify central/local bargaining items as well as the arbitration process that ensured that all items will be at the central table.

And, finally:

We believe it is critical that we have the opportunity to work collaboratively with our local education team to develop the best plan in each of our different schools for our students. Bill 8 does not provide for that.

As such, Madam Speaker, the only way that I could vote for this bill would be if it were indeed to be put on pause and taken out for true consultation and collaboration with boards just like this, who are being very polite and very professional and very respectful in offering their advice to work together with this government. That's not happening right now, so I can't vote for this bill at this point in time.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, you will be tabling these letters tomorrow in the House?

Mr. Rodney: I'm very happy to. Thank you.

9:50

The Deputy Speaker: Wonderful.

Any further speakers to the bill in third reading?

Sorry. I forgot 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments? Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed for reading those letters. In fact, we share many of the same trustees. I think it's very important for us to remember those letters because most of them were drafted and submitted before we consulted with the school boards, and since then the tone of the conversation has changed immensely. We've seen a lot of positive support coming our way in regard to this. You know, I had a chance to, as I said, attend some of these consultation meetings, and the overall vibe that came from that was a very positive one leaving the room. The school boards felt like they were being heard. One of the main things that we were hearing as concerns was section 8, and because of that, we have seen an immediate shift in tone from a lot of the local boards throughout Alberta.

So it's very good to sort of see those reflections that the hon. member is bringing up because it kind of shows us where we've come from and where we are going, which is a collaborative direction with all of our school boards here, to work together. Ultimately, I need to thank all those school boards for working with us to really build this, the final product, to where it is today, too.

That being said, I just want to take this time to thank the hon. member for bringing those forward because I think it is important for us to see where we have come from and where we are going as well.

The Deputy Speaker: Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Under 29(2)(a) as well. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I wanted to rise to make a few comments. I also received numerous letters from the Calgary board of education, very respectful letters but with some very specific concerns on clauses 8, 9, and 10.

In addition, I received a letter from the Clareview public school board outlining similar concerns with clauses 8 and 9. That, to me indicates, again, a concern with the consultation that has transpired to date, the short time, which is something that we have perhaps seen a bit too much of with respect to consultation, a monologue versus a dialogue. I think that there is an opportunity here to take a step back and to ensure that for the school boards that are being most deeply affected, their parents, their students, and their finances are being addressed.

I'd like to ask the member if there are any other threads or patterns within the communications he has received which would indicate specific concerns with certain clauses within this bill as well.

Thank you.

Mr. Rodney: Well, I'd certainly like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, my next-door neighbour in more than one sense of the word. The fact of the matter is that this is an alarming pattern that we're seeing. And, Madam Speaker, I recognize that we're not debating Bill 6 right now, but it is a similar theme, the lack of consultation. Those who are affected by both Bill 6 and Bill 8 are telling us that the bills are important, that they're ready, willing, and able to work with government on these issues that are pivotal to them as they provide service for all Albertans as we eat and all Albertans as we learn.

The fact of the matter is that any kind of heavy-handed approach from any government, no matter the political stripe, is fought vehemently by people who really believe in those that they are serving, again, whether it's those in the agricultural communities or the educational communities.

Honestly, sitting over here for the first time, it is absolutely boggling to me why a government in this position wouldn't take the opportunity to get this right. These are good people: our farmers, our educators, our students. They want to work with you. So why wouldn't you take the time to do that? You know, I've heard some language which is a little bit extreme when people say things like: you could go from zero to hero. I think that's a little extreme. And you don't do it for that reason; you do it because it's the right reason.

These people are asking me: what is the urgency that this needs to be done in the next couple of days? That's what they're asking. They're asking that about farming. They're asking: why is it that you would take 18 to 24 months for regulations, yet you have to steamroll legislation through in a matter of days? To them I submit, you know, respectfully through you, Madam Speaker, that it just doesn't make any kind of sense.

What we do in here should make sense. It should be common sense. Hon. member, through the chair, they're telling me that that is sadly lacking.

Thank you. That's all we have time for.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today at third reading of Bill 8. We've heard some very good debate this evening. Much of it has been very respectful, and for that, I appreciate the tone of the debate in the House this evening. I think that what happens when stakeholders are treated with respect – even though at times during the process they didn't feel exactly consulted, if at the end they are granted that respect, it also quite easily translates into the House. And when that doesn't happen, I think it often translates into the House. We've seen that over the past couple of weeks around this Assembly.

I think that some very good work has happened here this evening. Certainly, my hon. colleague chatted about how we arrived here and the consultation that took place in the summer and then the breakdown in consultation and the speed at which Bill 8 was taking place and some significant concern and uprising, if you will, around a few sections of the legislation on behalf of school boards, some of the concerns around TEBA not being at the table in the early stages of negotiations. We saw the government and the minister, much to his credit, respond to some of that concern and criticism quite quickly, and as a result, some positive work got done here.

But I think that there are two challenges that we face. I know that hon. members across the road say: "December 31. We have to have this done by December 31. That's why we are proceeding at breakneck speed. We're up against this deadline." I appreciate that. But so far, in the seven months of this new government, at every single turn the government has had a reason, an excuse to rush through legislation. While I don't expect this question to be answered – in many respects it's rhetorical – I wonder when that will stop, when the crisis of the day or issue of the day that is pressing will be such that the government can appropriately plan or whatever they need to do to make sure that we're not always up against some crisis looming, that they can use this excuse in the House that we have to do it, that we need to rush things through.

One thing that this government promised when they were campaigning – certainly, the four members of caucus that were part of the fourth party and sat on this side of the House at times talked a lot about their frustration around these very issues, that the government of the day was rushing through pieces of legislation, debating till all hours of the night so that they could get out at the end of a session. I seem to recall rising in this place not that very long ago proposing that that very thing might happen in this session. Sure enough, the things that I had said then are coming true today, for whatever reason, whether it's the impending deadline of the 31st or invoking closure on other pieces of legislation. The things that this government used to speak out against are now happening.

The government of the day likes to blame the third party for all sorts of things and how, after 44 years of terror and reign, they used to do this. But it took them a long time to get to this point, and here we are a mere seven months in and we're rushing through legislation.

While I appreciate the good work that's been done and many of the issues that have been addressed, the challenge is that 15 minutes ago we were in Committee of the Whole, where there were some significant changes that took place, and now we're in third reading, and this bill is very likely to pass in the next few minutes, perhaps an hour, perhaps two. I don't know how many more hon. members want to rise. But it being 10 o'clock, I felt it was inappropriate to send some text messages to the chair of, say, the Golden Hills school division, whom I have consulted at great length about this bill.

Mr. Price is a wonderful man doing a wonderful job for much of the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and he has provided a number of letters to the government. I would have loved to say: hey, this was the actual amendment that they proposed, and clearly on section 8 there is agreement. I have a letter that says: "with the [recommendations] to section 8 and deletions of Section 9 and 10" and a number of other issues. He goes on to say: I would love to have the opportunity to follow up and make sure that the consultation that took place after the encouragement from the Official Opposition, that the consultation that they had all had over the weekend is actually what's delivered here today.

But when we go through legislation at such a pace, passing Committee of the Whole and third reading in mere hours, that type of consultation and that type of feedback and checking in proves impossible. I just don't think that this is the type of change. Certainly, we saw this in the past, and many members of this Assembly expressed concern over this. I had the opportunity to read some of those concerns into the record last week. Now here we are today with similar sorts of challenges and concerns. It's clear that the Golden Hills school division had many concerns about the bill and still, in fact, may have some additional concerns. But this is the challenge when legislation is passed at breakneck speed. We've seen that, basically, at every turn.

In fact, Madam Speaker, with virtually every single piece of legislation that has come before this Assembly, the Official Opposition and, in fact, myself – I have a strong desire and commitment to seeing the Assembly work better and in a much more respectful manner, as it has this evening – have recommended a motion that would send these pieces of legislation not to Committee of the Whole, as they were addressed and fixed today, but to legislative policy committees so that proper consultation and appropriate timelines for important legislation that sets out the future of our province can be done in a manner that doesn't put undue pressure on school boards to call special meetings, to rush to Edmonton over the weekend but to allow us thoughtful reflection.

We've seen that on many pieces of legislation, that this government has refused to send any piece of legislation to committee. Oh, my apologies. They did send one, one private member's bill that was introduced by the opposition, a very simple bill that had agreement amongst most members of this Assembly, not even a difficult bill that changes the framework of negotiations in our province. Well, I think we arrived at a pretty positive point but not even something as significant as that, with all due respect to my hon. colleague, who introduced an important piece of legislation that initially was killed. Every once in a while the government likes to take some advice from the opposition and recognize when they've made an error, stop, turn around, and in this case even reverse a decision of the Assembly, resurrect from the dead this particular bill, and then send that bill to committee, a bill that we basically had agreement on in the House. So this is my concern with the direction of the new government.

Every once in a while, though, the government decides: "You know, the opposition is not all that bad. They have a good idea once in a while." They've taken the opportunity, like after killing my hon. colleague's bill, of resurrecting it, 7.25 per cent pay raises, that sort of thing. Unfortunately, for whatever reason there are other pieces of legislation that are before this House that this government doesn't choose to offer the same respect as they did to school board trustees in their desire to come to a good solution.

It seems to me that in this case and in the case of other pieces of legislation that may be before the Assembly, they have this desire to consult some groups but not others. I think it's unbecoming of the government, I think it's unbecoming of the process, and I think it's awfully disappointing that virtually no pieces of legislation have been sent to committee for full, robust discussion, where members of the community, expert witnesses, stakeholders, other members could come before the committee and provide feedback. Then we wouldn't be where we are today – we're rushing, with people driving all across the province to provide feedback to the minister – because we could do that in a manner that's respectful of the Assembly, respectful of the people that the bill affects, and respectful of the process.

While I might wrap up my comments because I don't want my concern around the process to detract from the fact that I think the government arrived at a pretty reasonable solution for school boards, I might just add on behalf of the Golden Hills school division a small quote from a letter that they wrote on December 4, after all of the additional consultation took place.

With the recommended amendments to section 8 and deletions of Section 9 and 10, though Golden Hills' first choice remains local bargaining for all labor negotiation, at this stage of the legislative process we are prepared to support an amended Bill 8.

If I would have had the chance to circle around and go back to the school division to make sure that they got what they laid out in this letter, it would be much easier to support, knowing that the people whom this bill greatly affects also support where we ended up. What this bill does do is lay out . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Comments or questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: I was just enthralled with the conversation, Madam Speaker, and I was wondering if the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills could complete his statement.

Mr. Cooper: What this bill does do is that it lays out a framework for a very important negotiation for our province that is just around the corner, and it's my hope that under the new parameters TEBA and the ATA and the ministry and the minister's office will be able to get the best available deal for all parties concerned. I say that with all sincerity. It is important for the future of our province as many of these people are doing just that, investing in the future of our province.

My hon. colleague from just down the road has done an incredible job over a lifetime building the future of this province, which he continues to do today here in this House, so that the new framework can ensure the appropriate cost measures for the province and the public purse, so that local school boards will be able to negotiate in a manner that is reflective of the individual and unique needs of that school board.

I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that those needs are vast and varied, particularly in a constituency like Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, that has many very rural, very small schools that have to be very innovative to remain competitive. It's my hope that this framework will allow them to be able to continue under those parameters and negotiate a number of the things that are important to them on the local level and that TEBA and the ministry will be able to ensure that we have a fair deal not only for teachers but for the province in ensuring that under the current economic circumstances all factors are considered fully and fulsomely.

The Deputy Speaker: Still a couple of minutes remain under 29(2)(a) should anybody wish to take advantage.

Seeing none, are there any further speakers in third reading? The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll be almost as brief as my colleague from the Official Opposition. You know, I've been listening here, and I will say that I agree with my colleague from Calgary-North West's comments that the tone of the conversation has been constructive, and I think that's good. That doesn't make the bill perfect, but in fairness I will give the minister credit for trying to cobble together some consultation at the last minute with the School Boards Association.

But there are a few things that are, for me at least, outstanding. One is, actually, the amendment that my colleague from Calgary-North West put forward. I thought that would have helped the bill, the principle that the party at the negotiation that triggers a financial obligation ought to be able to be responsible for the financial obligation that they trigger. To me, that was just full of too much common sense to ignore, and I'm just a little disappointed that it didn't carry because I thought – my compliments to my colleague – that that would have been good.

One of the other things that is troubling me, unfortunately, is the consultation. As much as I know that the minister tried to, though, in my humble opinion, too late in the day, cobble together some public consultation, he hasn't really gotten it done as evidenced by the letters read out by my colleague from Calgary-Lougheed today. I think that he's really presented to this House evidence that indicates that the job isn't done.

So, unfortunately, Madam Speaker, this is a continuation of an unfortunate pattern by the current government, that they keep bringing forward pieces of legislation – and, again, I'm not trying to be unfair. I'm sure that their intentions are good. But the fact is that they haven't talked in most cases to the people most affected by the legislation that they're bringing forward. Consequently, they're in trouble all over the map with Albertans for not talking to them before they drag legislation into this House. It's an unfortunate, negative pattern that still exists. Clearly, based on the letters read out loud by my colleague from Calgary-Lougheed, such is the case on this bill.

So when I don't support it, I wanted members of the House to know why. I still think that there's some work to do, and I still think that there are some lessons for the government to learn about the fact that we all work for Albertans, and we need to talk to them before making them live under legislation that we pass in this House.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any further speakers to the bill in third reading? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd also just like to read a letter into the record if I may. This is from Rocky View schools. One thing that I'd like to say before I start is that – and this has been going on since this was brought up – I still have not received any new correspondence from any of my trustees or from my area that they've had any correspondence regarding this change. So it's a little confusing to understand whether or not people have been consulted correctly or not. This letter was based on potentially previous information, but as I can tell so far, there hasn't been any consultation with my group.

The board of trustees of Rocky View schools is respectfully adding its voice to the swell of protest from other school boards around the province, regarding the Government of Alberta's introduction of Bill 8.

Firstly, we are aghast at the speed at which this very important legislation – which will affect Alberta's students now and in the future – is being rushed through the legislative channels and into law. One week is hardly enough time for our democratic process to do its work. We are disappointed that the government is opposed to sending this legislation back to Committee. Now it is our turn to urge you to delay this bill.

Secondly, we are puzzled by the lack of open, two-way dialogue with school boards from a Government that promised to do business differently. Surely there was a time to draw school boards into the conversation in the two months before your staff's consultation with the school boards and tabling the legislation?

As publically-elected officials who represent the interests of students, parents and their local communities, we ask that you take the time to listen to our concerns and hear our recommendations. We understand there is a need to be nimble.

Again, we are urging you, as have our colleagues, to immediately press the pause button on Bill 8. Rocky View Schools will willingly participate in the ensuing dialogue, ensuring Bill 8 serves the interests of Alberta students long into the future.

So, Madam Speaker, this is ultimately the issue. It sounds like that some school boards have been contacted. It sounds like there has been some consultation, but I honestly say that right now, even still now, I'm trying to get hold of people to find out if they've been consulted with, and I can't get an answer. I'm having a difficult time trying to understand what's going on with this consultation. I have to mirror some of my colleagues' comments on the aspect of the lack of consultation again and that the pattern is there again. I really felt that it was important to read this into the record.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

10:20

The Deputy Speaker: And you will be tabling this, of course, tomorrow.

Mrs. Aheer: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) for the hon. member? The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you. To the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, who has just spoken, as it happens, one of your trustees is the president of the Alberta School Boards Association. She has said:

School boards needed a voice in this first round of negotiations, and I am pleased to see the Minister taking steps to ensure this happens . . . we would still like to see [some] other changes, we look forward to working with the government in an authentic partnership to strengthen the role of school boards as we move forward. So, yeah, we got that.

I mean, you know, you have to look at the interaction between the idea – people knew we were going to some provincial level of negotiations – and the drafting of the bill and then the short strokes in the intervening seven or eight days that we've worked through. So I recognize the issue. Certainly, many of these letters that you're reading, if you check the date on them, they are – yeah. Anyway, that's one of your school board trustees, who happens to be the president of the ASBA as well.

Mrs. Aheer: Yes, I'm quite aware of the date. December 3 is on here.

I'd like to mention again that that's wonderful that the minister is aware of that information. I'm not sure when you received that information. Having said that, though, in here it is obvious that whatever consultation was done has been done in a very, very fast manner. Again, if I may repeat, that pattern is not positive nor is it conducive to appropriate consultation.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Eggen: Some people don't like the results as well, Madam Speaker. That's an issue. Yes, the December 31 deadline is very real, so certainly we worked through this process to ensure that we can have this sort of provincial bargaining take place. The subtext of some of these comments is that people don't want that to happen. If we miss that deadline, then we would go back to the unstable circumstances that we've had to deal with for the last three bargaining rounds, which did not produce necessarily the best results.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. leader, on 29(2)(a)?

Mr. McIver: No. Just – I'll be brief.

The Deputy Speaker: I've still got two more minutes on 29(2)(a).

Any further speakers to that piece? If not, then I will recognize the hon. leader.

Mr. McIver: I just – actually, 29(2)(a), Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Oh, sorry. My apologies, hon. leader; 29(2)(a) is fine.

Mr. McIver: You know what? Respectfully, Minister, I don't want to pick on you too much. However, you just talked about the December 31 – you can call it a deadline, but it's a point where you'd want to have this done. All I wanted to ask you is: don't you think this would have been a little easier had you not spent six months getting a budget ready and spent maybe three months getting a budget ready? Would this not have – again, I'm not trying . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, the intent of 29(2)(a) is a comment on the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View rather than a totally different subject with the budget.

Mr. McIver: To the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View: do you not think this might have been a little easier on the minister had the minister actually brought this thing forward and the government had brought a budget forward with the House three months ago instead of one month ago as we had helpfully suggested? [interjection] The Premier talks about 44 years. There's a reason that the previous government was here for 44 years. I would suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that it's because while the previous government was very imperfect, they actually listened to Albertans. Albertans didn't actually elect them for 44 years; they elected them for four years about 13 times in a row probably because they were happy. [interjections] However, at the end they didn't, and there were lessons to be learned, and we're working hard to learn them.

The Deputy Speaker: Could we have some order, please?

You've got a few seconds, hon. member.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. I would like to respond to that. You must be getting tired of looking over your shoulder in the rear-view mirror. I'm sure our new government will have that opportunity as well.

I'd like to just answer your question: yes. Time is of the essence, evidently, and I think that when we are looking at small time periods like this, it is very difficult to make legitimate decisions, legitimate choices, and they're being forced to make these much . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any further speakers to the bill?

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just feel that I've got to go on record as well. I've got letters from school boards that I could also read. But, again, they were dated, you know, back in November, November 30.

My concern is the four school boards that I represent. Yeah, we're voting on this bill and the amendment, and we've gone through two phases of this bill. I have had pretty much zero – I managed to sneak in one phone call with one trustee, so I can't say for certain whether I'm speaking for the four school boards in my riding or not, those being Lakeland Catholic, East Central francophone, Northern Lights school division, and St. Paul education regional division. It is with a bit of trepidation that I vote either way on this.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any comments or questions under 29(2)(a) for the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills?

Seeing none, any further speakers on the bill? The Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you. I actually need to speak up on behalf of the school boards that I have spoken with. I may or may not share an area with the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View. The wording in the letter that I received from Rocky View schools just needs to be taken to heart in the consideration of this.

Firstly, we are aghast at the speed at which this very important legislation – which will affect Alberta students now and in the future – is being rushed through the legislative channels and into law.

I mean, pause. Jeez. There are so many questions here.

There's more to this letter.

Secondly, [they're] puzzled by the lack of open, two-way dialogue with school boards from a Government that promised to do business differently.

I hear that over and over again, guys. It's just something really to consider. You're really not doing this differently. "Backwards" is a good word.

Some of the questions that I had initially heard from the school boards, again, not in regard to the amendment necessarily but the bill itself. They are concerned that this is mandatory, that all school boards will have to join. There are concerns that the ATA and the government will be deciding first, and then the school boards will be told after, again, sort of a theme with this government. That's a very valid concern.

Just tonnes of questions. There's been, maybe, consultation before, but since this has come out, there's just been no dialogue afterwards. That's certainly something that I think would be easily rectified but not yet done. The consultation itself was only two hours with the school boards prior to this, of course, not after. There is a definite concern for local bargaining. There are so many individual needs for individual schools in many different areas.

I understand that the minister did describe that there is still going to be sort of a northern pay raise so that teachers in northern areas will have a higher compensation, I'm assuming. You're going to correct me if I'm wrong after this. I think that is a good thing because that is at least recognizing an individual need for different school boards.

I mean, government doesn't do anything very well, and this is one of those tools that seems like we're going to be going down that path. This isn't what the school boards that I've spoken with are for or against. They just – there's been no time. There's been no consultation. I think it would be okay to put this on hold. I understand there's an urgency for bargaining there in the spring, and I certainly won't pretend to be an expert in that area, but the experts that I have spoken with are: put it on hold. If you could bridge the gap here, take some time.

I won't be voting for this. Thank you.

10:30

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments for the hon. Member for Airdrie under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any further speakers to the bill in third reading?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: We'll call the question, but first we'll have the hon. minister close debate.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to everyone for contributing to the debate this evening and in the last number of days and weeks. Certainly, we've worked hard to build a framework here that can move forward on how we choose to develop a collective agreement with teachers across the province. There's been a great deal of urgency in having this take place for many years, really. In the interim we've seen school boards doing some local bargaining and then the provincial government intervening, sometimes in very sort of awkward ways, which ended up distorting the collective bargaining process and distorting the capacity for the government to pay for those results as well. This is a way by which we've rationalized the process and worked hard over quite a long period of time to make it happen.

I know there's lots of residual sort of resentment about how school boards have had their powers diminished over the last 15 or 20 years, really. Certainly, we also know about the importance of having the funder at the table to ensure fiscal prudence and responsible bargaining on these very important issues of compensation for teachers. We found this to be the best, most rational way to do so. Certainly, I know that while it's up to school boards to, you know, put up their defences and demonstrate some reluctance in regard to these things, they also know that this is the most logical and reasonable way to move forward.

We have a responsibility through this Legislature to make sure that we are making responsible decisions about public monies that we have available to us, of which we have less than before. There will never be a better time to set a precedent by which we negotiate with the funder for these wage and big-money issues, not just with teachers but with the public service in general. Those of you who are onside with us in being responsible, pulling in and spending our public money in a responsible way, have a responsibility to vote for this bill. You know, I would urge you to do so. You will feel good as a result, I'm sure, when you go home to bed tonight to go to sleep. You'll turn over and feel really good about yourselves.

We know as well that it's very important for us to have a fair contract for teachers. We have one of the best education systems in North America and indeed in the world in regard to the standards that we produce, and I certainly intend to keep it that way. The first persons who are responsible for that are the teachers and the staff on the ground, who do the work every day with our children.

With those two things in mind, Madam Speaker, plus the fact that, in fact, if we don't do this by December 31, the whole discussion that we've gone through here will be moot because we'll revert to individual bargaining – so you must keep that in consideration as well. While some people might think that things have been rushed along, really they haven't. I know that the debate around these two-table bargaining processes has gone back at least 12 or 14 years. Certainly, from the day that I assumed my role as the Minister of Education, I have been engaging in this very actively, and I look forward to the next, more important round, which is what we are bargaining for.

Madam Speaker, I urge everyone to vote for this bill. I've been very proud to sit through the process, which has been most amicable and constructive, I believe, on the whole.

Thank you.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 6

Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act

Mr. Cooper moved that the motion for second reading be amended to read that Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Debate adjourned December 8: Mr. Orr speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm more than thrilled to be able to pick up where I was earlier today. I was saying that if consultation had been taking place in reality, there wouldn't be a need to keep lecturing farmers that it had been taking place; they would already know. I realize the hour is late, but if you'll grant me the indulgence of a little bit of reasoned and considered debate, I would like to introduce a bit of a multidisciplinary analogy if I could. The reality is that we have been seeing a trend in this government of not consulting, of moving ahead. One of the most famous books in the world of architecture is called A Pattern Language. A Pattern Language basically makes the point that the patterns that we create do in fact speak a language, and the language is what people hear about who we are. So I would suggest that the patterns being produced here of nonconsultation will in fact communicate to the people of this province.

I would like to take the core idea, actually, from that book, and then I'll not digress any further. At the core of A Pattern Language is the idea that people should design for themselves their own houses, streets, and communities. This idea comes simply from the observation that most of the wonderful places in the world are not made by architects but by people. I would like to suggest that with Bill 6 what we have is the government trying to be architects and on the other hand what we have is the people trying to create for themselves their own community, their own life, and their own place. When the trend is that the architects are continually trying to tell the people how they should live, the pattern that's being created here communicates to them in a way that is incredibly powerful, and they've heard it – they've heard the message – and quite frankly they don't want to have their life created for them by the professional experts, or the government in this case.

I know the Premier has stated numerous times that this government will push Bill 6 through regardless of stakeholder feedback, and I strongly urge the government caucus to seriously reconsider that. This pattern of pushing things through without consultation is creating a pattern, and the people are beginning to hear the language.

I come from a rural riding, as do some of the other caucus members. Ranching and farming are intertwined with the lifestyle of my constituents, as they do with the other caucus members. There are government members who have rural ridings. These members have the same kinds of rural constituents, and I know their offices are being inundated with phone calls and letters and e-mails. I know this because their constituents are frustrated with their complaints falling on deaf ears, and they're contacting my office. I've heard from people all over Alberta, actually, calling in to my office because they feel as though their MLAs are not representing their interests.

Madam Speaker, the people are always right. This government just needs to be doing a better job of bringing Albertans to the table, listening to their input, and crafting legislation that reflects the best solution for those who are farming and ranching, and only then can there be meaningful contribution to the true safety of Alberta farms.

I'd like to just read a tiny bit from a letter that I've received. Really, the invitation here is that farmers just want to be invited to the table. This person says:

Farmers are [actually] pretty clever at figuring out how to do things, to make them work. Perhaps your government could get a few together and I assure you, they would figure something out that would make everyone happy. Please reconsider [this bill] as it stands today.

Well, as it is, it's going to be closed very quickly. But the invitation is to actually engage with farmers, allow them the opportunity to speak with you and to the legislation that's being formed. I actually believe that the discussion could lead to some increased farm safety but only if it actually engages those that have to live it and practise it.

What I have to say, I guess, is most concerning is that the government members from rural ridings haven't been rising to speak to this issue, haven't been speaking their constituents' wishes for them. I don't know whether they've been ordered not to speak, but I say to you that you have been elected to express the views of your constituents, not just to gain office and then be pushed or choose to push an ideological agenda onto constituents when they're repeatedly telling you not to. Stand up for your riding. Do your job. I mean, the people are making their voices heard. When will these members rise and speak for their people?

I've spoken to the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose. I know he's here or he has been here, and he's watched much of this debate. I know he's heard the outrage from farmers across his riding, yet he has not stood up to speak for them. It's as if he's a bystander. I know there are close to 2,000 farm families in his riding. My challenge is: what are your constituents telling you, and are you going to speak for them?

I would like to read a letter, actually, that the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose has already seen, but he hasn't chosen to stand up and speak toward it. It comes from the Camrose county, signed by the reeve of Camrose county. He speaks to the bill. He says that they would like to express their support for the importance of safety and the protection of workers ...

However ...

It seems like all the letters go that way. They have a "however" or they have a "but" in them.

... pushing a somewhat confusing and misunderstood bill through the Legislature, into law without further consultation seems counter productive.

County Council has had an opportunity to meet and discuss ...

So this isn't just an individual. This is county council in a formal letter to the hon. Premier.

It goes on to say that they have met with their local MLA, Bruce Hinkley, and it became abundantly clear that there is indeed some ...

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, please, a reminder about names.

Mr. Orr: I'm sorry. I retract it. You're correct. Wetaskiwin-Camrose. I'll get that in my brain.

[The member's] comments indicate, "it is difficult as a politician answering questions, much like standing in quicksand, as the target and intentions of the bill are constantly changing." In our conversation with [the MLA for Wetaskiwin-Camrose] the other common expression was "this is the first I have heard of that."

The county councillors express that they are concerned that adequate research into how this bill should be handled has not been completed or communicated to Cabinet much less the farmers and ranchers.

That's what the county council says.

Camrose County [council] would respectfully request that the Provincial Government suspend implementation of [this bill] until complete and extensive consultation with all affected parties can be completed.

That's from Camrose county council.

While I'm on the subject of letters, I also have one from Lacombe county council. Lacombe county council met recently. This letter is dated December 4 to the hon. Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour.

On behalf of Lacombe County Council and the Lacombe County Agricultural Service Board . . .

They have concerns with the current process. They go into some details about that. They say:

There is clearly an information gap . . .

We strongly encourage the Legislature to defer further consideration of Bill 6 until the agricultural community is fully informed as to contents of the bill and proposed regulation, and that a meaningful consultation process with all agricultural sectors is completed . . .

Specifically Lacombe County Council is asking:

1. That further consideration of Bill 6 be deferred . . .
2. That information be disseminated to impacted parties [and]
3. That a public consultation process be initiated.

Signed, again, by the reeve of Lacombe county council.

Clearly, not just individuals are concerned about this. Now we have various government agencies also expressing their concern with this government. As well, I don't have the letter, but AAMDC has expressed the same kinds of concerns, and there are others. I think it's important that we realize that this is not just individuals who are alarmed and don't understand what's happening. These are considered people writing formal letters of concern and request for consideration.

I know that government members have seen the protests, the ones going on outside the building and all over the province. I suspect there has also been discussion at the cabinet level about the plans being made by various individuals to have convoys and all kinds of things. I know that the LAO sheriffs and the RCMP and the city of Edmonton were called about how to have a major convoy into the downtown part of Edmonton. They put that off. You know, I think the only reason the government has introduced amendments, has even blinked on this, is because of the degree and the intensity of the protests and the concerns about having the highways blocked and the complete chaos that this bill is creating.

The highly ineffective information sessions are just garnering more anger toward Bill 6 because they're condescending. They express that government-knows-best attitude. It's just sparked and fuelled outrage at the atrocious piece of legislation, which, unfortunately, is becoming the pattern language. A hallmark of the NDP government is that they barrel ahead without consultation or consideration, a government that has only been in power for eight months yet knows more about family farming than families who have worked their lands for over a hundred years.

Madam Speaker, this government says that they're hearing, but they're by no means listening. How can this government consider putting forward Bill 6 after the concerns of Albertans all over the province are still not actually listened to? We've seen these information sessions, which are a far cry from consultation, conducted in venues that are too small, and they don't allow for proper dialogue. I'm sure I don't need to remind anybody about how ineffective these sessions have been. For those who haven't heard, the Okotoks session actually took place on a bench in a parking lot.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments for the hon. member under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Now, the hon. member stated that he'd received letters from municipalities. I think it was two municipalities. I know we've all received letters probably from ranchers and farmers. That's who we're receiving our letters from. But a comprehensive letter written by a town or a county or an MD, that was clearly discussed among several leaders of the community who took the time from their own municipality's business to write a letter about how the government is not listening to its farmers or ranchers, is significant. I'd like the member to respond to that.

Also, how has the member calmed the nerves of people that he has been in contact with that have been talking to him about this bill?

Mr. Orr: Well, I guess I would just add that we all know that there are all kinds of I guess we call them trolls on social media, who are out there saying all kinds of radical and extreme things that none of us, actually, quite frankly, wants to listen to. Half of what's said – I don't know – belongs in the Twittersphere somewhere. The reality is that when you have considered and measured officials who take the time to sit down in an official meeting and express their concerns, I at least can't write those things off as people just venting. I think these are far more serious than that, and some weight needs to be added to the fact of where these letters come from and the process whereby they have been delivered.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before we continue with this, just a reminder that we are no longer in committee. Could everybody, please, take their proper seats or take their conversations outside. Thank you.

Any further questions for the hon. member under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will recognize Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise in second on Bill 6. Good policy decisions can have a profound and positive impact on the well-being of populations, and equally important is the process of policy decisions. Clearly, significant work needs to be done to rebuild the trust in Alberta of the agricultural community and the important values around ownership and respect for the family farm. I have no doubt that the new New Democrat government has learned important lessons about this process in the last four weeks.

Also important are the values for paid employees of occupational health and safety standards, workers' compensation, employment standards, and child labour standards, available in nearly all other workplaces in Alberta and in Canada. Just today the CBC reported on a fatality inquiry I was involved with following a death on January 31, 2014. A 46-year-old, Stephen Gibson, a New Zealander drawn by the romance of a prairie cowboy life with his wife, became entangled in an exposed power takeoff as his employer looked on, owner Robert Hamilton, fighting back tears, told a two-day inquiry set up last Monday to investigate the death. The victim's wife said, quote: he did mention to me concerns about how things were being done safetywise. Mr. Hamilton was asked by the court if he'd made any changes since Gibson's death. He said that the next day he got rid of the power takeoff, which lacked the proper protective shielding and pulled him right in and wrenched him and killed him in minutes. Mr. Hamilton admitted that he didn't have any safety procedures in place on his farm near Cochrane, hadn't taken any safety courses, and that everything he knew about safety he'd learned on the job.

Disappointing to me are this government's communications and consultation. More disappointing is the absence of concern and action from the parties to my right for basic rights of farm workers, such as the seriously disabled and impoverished Eric Musekamp and Darlene Dunlop, who have been here many times over the last 12 years arguing for basic worker rights, some of which have been in place for decades in other jurisdictions. In fact, their active resistance to any progress on worker rights has been most profoundly disappointing. Nellie McClung in the last century said this about women: we are persons, too. Indeed, farm workers are persons, too.

Where has the Wildrose been in the last 20 years? Fighting for the rights of landowners – fair enough; fight for the rights of landowners – but denying the rights of farm workers? Why? The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills chided the government earlier tonight for being selective in its consultations with educators and boards in Alberta over Bill 8. How many farm workers did you invite to your rallies? How many farm workers have you consulted about this critically important bill to their fundamental human rights? The Wildrose leader speaks of being a champion for human rights; his actions speak otherwise. Even last week he added his voice to that of the MC at the rally on the front steps, blocking my ability to speak to the audience.

Now, Madam Speaker, we have all been moved by the experience of our 800-year-old Magna Carta, which has been brought to Alberta, the only place in Canada to receive it. Our sense of justice, full participation in decisions that affect us, democracy, fundamental human rights: they emerged from this important historic document. Notwithstanding the miscommunication and lack of consultation over here by the New Democrats on Bill 6, it's fundamentally that this bill is about safe work, the right to refuse unsafe work, investigation of injuries and learning from deaths, fair treatment, and freedom to organize. How long do we have to say that?

The Wildrose has mobilized and incited many family-owned . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member, we have a point of order. If I could just pause you for a moment, we need to deal with that right away, and then we can continue.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I refer to 23(b) section (i). It speaks to matters other than "the question under discussion."

I believe that we are on the referral amendment for Bill 6, referring the bill to committee.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, did you wish to respond to the point of order?

Any other hon. member who wishes to speak to that? We are on the referral amendment. Go ahead, leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: I agree with the point of order and the citation. The hon. member is discussing something that is clearly not before the House. I would ask you to rule in favour of the point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Did you wish to comment, hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View?

Dr. Swann: Yes. Madam Speaker, with respect, this is related to whether we move ahead on a bill that has been decades overdue or whether we refer it for significant delays, leaving more people injured, more people killed, and more people abandoned by a system that should have been in place for everyone. I don't see that this is out of order. I have 10 minutes to give my argument about why this needs to go forward.

Mr. Bilous: Madam Speaker, you know, I appreciate the tenacity that the Official Opposition is showing in relation to the debate on this bill. However, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View was merely working his way to talking about the amendment, but it is still about the bill itself. There is precedent in this House of members, even as early as this afternoon or yesterday, talking about other bills when a bill was on the floor; for example, when Bill 8 was on the floor, members from the Official Opposition talking about Bill 4, which passed yesterday.

The point of the matter here, Madam Speaker, is that this is not a point of order. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View has the floor and is speaking to the bill and to the amendment, which affects the bill, and his position on not agreeing with the amendment to refer this bill to committee.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I will rule on this. I find that it is not a point of order. I was giving the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View a little bit of leeway to explain his rationale for not referring the bill to committee. I will ask you to keep that in mind as you proceed, hon. member.

Please proceed.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. For years these issues have been referred, denied, and each successive PC government has agreed that these are human rights violations. Unfortunately, quietly at least, while they would say that the risks were unacceptable, they could not – and I quote former Minister Hancock – get their members in the rural areas to support this change.

Make no mistake. The Alberta Federation of Agriculture has been consulted – it was formerly the wild rose agricultural producers – over many years, representing many commodity groups, as well as the Alberta Wheat Commission, CropLife. Barley, canola, potato, and beekeepers have been involved for years. To be fair, many farmers and ranchers, though, have not been individually consulted, probably because they're not associated with the Alberta Federation of Agriculture or have an association with them. But I believe that the most ethical landowners in Alberta want Alberta to move into the 21st century and protect workplace safety and compensation for their workers.

Goals of the bill are to respect Canada's Constitution, fundamentally, and the Alberta Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which guarantee that paid workers have fair treatment, a safe workplace, and the right to organize. A legal review by the University of Calgary law school indicated four key areas of our Constitution that were violated by the exemptions currently in place in Alberta. New international buyers like McDonald's, PepsiCo, Walmart are signing on to international food production standards consistent with the ILO and the European Union through a food sustainability set of criteria. They plan to purchase increasingly over the next one to two years from sources that demonstrate indicators of environmental, social, and economic performance, including the following four criteria, Madam Speaker: humane animal practices; food safety; environmental protection, including carbon footprint; and safe working conditions for farm workers.

I'll skip down to the bottom. Clearly, the values of Canadians and most Albertans are now demanding action to address the inconvenient truth that we do not respect the most basic rights of some 40,000 paid farm workers in this province, who are exposed to mechanical, electrical, chemical, and other aerosolized risks without guarantee of compensation for injury and death, with employment standards that do not ensure fair treatment. It's time, Madam Speaker. It's long past time. We owe it to New Zealander Stephen Gibson; to Philippa Thomas, crippled and abandoned nine years ago and still speaking out for farm workers; to Lorna Chandler, the widow of Kevan Chandler, whom I've spoken about before. We owe it to ourselves as we all, I think, would adhere to: we want to be treated as others want to be treated.

I encourage all members to support Bill 6, to reject this amendment. With the protection afforded both worker and operator under the WCB and respectful consultations ongoing over occupational health and safety standards, which will form the code of standards within 12 to 14 months, including employment standards, child labour standards, in the months ahead we will all be proud to be Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for his very passionate reason for wanting to reject this silly amendment. I'd like to ask the member . . . [interjections]

11:20

The Deputy Speaker: Could we have order, please, hon. members?

Mr. Westhead: I'd like to commend the member for all the work he's done on this issue over the last several years and the passion that he has put into this. I'd like to ask him: how many e-mails, how many phone calls, how much communication has your office received in support of this kind of legislation? Also, if you could speak to your experience as a physician with farm-related injuries. You also mentioned briefly the WCB. I'd like to know your thoughts around the WCB and whether or not that's an appropriate insurance product to offer to these workers.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's very relevant to the amendment. If we refer this to committee, it will be many months before we see the basic protections for people with injuries, the security for family members following an injury. I would say that one thing that has not been well communicated to the farming community is that WCB actually protects both the worker and the owner. There can be no lawsuit when you're under WCB.

Tongue Creek Feeders around Black Diamond, where Kevan Chandler was killed, went bankrupt after they were sued by the widow because she got no compensation. That's part of what a seven-year battle in court cost both her and Tongue Creek Feeders. WCB is a win-win, and there's nothing to compare to that relative to a private insurance company, which will fight, especially, long-term disability and require the individuals to go to court and battle for every dollar they get. WCB is there. It's a standard approach. Rehabilitation is an integral part of it, long-term disability, and significant compensation for loss of limbs and life are there. So I certainly endorse that.

I think it's also important to say that we've had over 450 deaths in the last 20 years, and some of those could certainly have been saved if we had in place standards, if we had investigated those injuries and deaths, if we had learned from those injuries and deaths, if we had made the changes that were basic, fundamental changes to improve safety like the power takeoff that I described earlier, that wasn't covered because the farmer was used to having it uncovered. He knew how to be aware of it, but a new person that came onto the property and walked too closely to the power takeoff got caught up in it, and he was gone in minutes.

These are aspects of employment that we have all come to take for granted, and we have somehow accepted the fact that farm workers deserve less. That's no longer acceptable. I have heard from hundreds of Albertans over the 11 years that I've been doing this – hundreds of Albertans – both farming community and urban community, who say that this is unacceptable. I feel badly about those people who are feeding me if we cannot provide some of the basic supports for their well-being, safety, and children. So 17, 18 people a year die on our farms. It's been the same for 30 years. I think we can do better. B.C. cut their rate by 60 per cent after bringing in mandatory WCB and occupational health and safety standards.

Education programs are absolutely important, but they have not been enough. They are an important component; they are simply not enough. They do not respect, really, the onus of the employer to create the safest possible standards for their paid employees to work under. I dare say that it's part of creating a culture of safety. When you actually legislate something like seat belts, it suddenly becomes part of the norm in our society, that safety is important, so important that we actually legislate it. We become attuned to playing a part in assessing risk, assessing changes, and not, in fact, as some of these large industrial operations are doing, taking advantage of paid farm workers by having cheap rates or no rates, no compensation on the backs of those people that actually provide the essentials of life for the rest of us.

I feel very strongly about this. It's been, well, since the '60s, when Social Credit brought in these exemptions for farm workers because they didn't want to burden the family farm with extra expenses. That's no longer acceptable, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for allowing me to rise and speak to this amendment, which I feel is desperately needed to provide some clarity and consultation for all Albertans. Bill 6 has elicited an unprecedented response from Albertans, who are resoundingly speaking out against this ill-conceived legislation. For the last two weeks the Wildrose and other opposition parties have actively called on the NDP government to stop, take a breath, and take into consideration the tens of thousands of Albertans that they represent, people who have been marginalized by Bill 6 and the total lack of discussion surrounding the changes to their way of life.

Madam Speaker, as the Official Opposition we've heard the concerns of the farmers, and we are here to represent their voice. The response we heard from one of the NDP members today I'm really shocked to hear, you know. When they call the amendment silly, in turn, they are calling the farmers silly. That's unacceptable. That's not fair to farmers.

Mrs. Aheer: It's disrespectful.

Mr. Panda: Very disrespectful.

Our office phones have been ringing off the hook, letters have poured in, and stacks upon stacks of petitions have been dropped off at our offices as Alberta's agricultural sector has fought to preserve its way of life. Wildrose heard constituents go to great lengths in both time and personal expense to actively participate in the legislative process and fight to have their voices heard overtop of the NDP's deafening cries to legislate first and then consult later. Our office has had constituents who have travelled eight hours, round trip, just to drop off a petition that they have had signed in the hopes that their hard work would make a difference in stopping the NDP from trampling over the farmers in this province. This extraordinary effort represents the lengths that tens of thousands of Albertans have gone to speak out against Bill 6 and protect their way of life because, Madam Speaker, that's exactly what these Albertans are fighting for.

Farming is not just a means of making a living. It is not a nine-to-five job. It's a way of life that cannot fully be comprehended by those who have not lived it. For the NDP, particularly those members representing the huge agricultural areas, to stand up for a bill that legislates on something they know little to nothing about without bothering to take their constituents' concerns seriously is arrogant and misguided. That's why they are calling them silly. Perhaps if they had taken the time to actually sit down with farmers and ranchers to hear their concerns and listen to their stories, they would have a leg to stand on.

Sadly, the NDP did no such thing and has consistently refused to engage with and truly listen to the Albertans most directly affected by this legislation throughout this entire process. To date government members have been conspicuously silent on this issue in this House, rarely standing to speak to this legislation, that affects so many of their constituents and that so many of their constituents are decidedly against. The silence on this issue, both from government members and in the election campaign, is deeply troubling.

This government seems bound and determined to ram this legislation through with no regard for those it will supposedly protect. All indications are that they have intended to do this silently and secretly. The people living and working in Alberta's agricultural sector deserve a level of respect not yet shown to them by this government. They're proud, hard-working citizens who work diligently day in and day out to provide for Albertans and play an essential role in our economy, and they deserve to have their democratic voices heard. On this side of the House, despite what the members opposite have claimed, we are in no way, shape, or form opposed to safety practices that protect all Albertans.

However, why is it that those very same people that are supposed to be protected were not consulted in this process? Is it not fair to say that those directly affected by Bill 6 would have a better idea of the best way to legislate and implement regulations on farms? Would they not have a better idea of the core problems facing farmers and ranchers and some well-thought-out solutions to these problems? Do you not think they could bring a level of nuance and understanding to these very complex issues the government is now trying to discreetly untangle? Bill 6 is a mess of the government's own making, and it would have seen its errors had they bothered to ask.

The NDP's handling of this issue illustrates their lack of support for Albertans and their unwillingness to put the needs of everyday Albertans over their own skewed agenda. Madam Speaker, we were under the impression that this government would respect that the laws that govern this province should represent the will of the people and that our job as representatives of the people of Alberta should be as advocates for our constituents. Apparently, we were misinformed. If we were to take our cues from this government, perhaps our roles as MLAs would be to bully our way through legislation despite mass public outcry and to push our agenda regardless of whether or not it best represents the will and interests of Albertans. I encourage all those MLAs across from me to reconnect with the democratic spirit and to remember that their first allegiance is always to their constituents.

Madam Speaker, just because a party has the numbers within the Assembly to push a piece of legislation through does not make it the right thing to do. The speed and aggressiveness with which Bill 6 is being forced through are unacceptable. Although the NDP's tabled amendments are a step in the right direction, Bill 6 is still not a reflection of what Alberta's farmers and ranchers want. We are still left waiting for a number of complicated details to be hammered out, and the public is not prepared to lend this government the trust to do these things behind closed doors. The trust is spent.

Madam Speaker, this government needs to see past its political pride, set aside its ego, and send this bill to committee, where the critical stage of proper and meaningful consultation can take place. The Wildrose remains baffled as to why the NDP feels that they're under the gun to pass this legislation. They have nothing to lose and everything to gain by taking the time to comprehensively consult, specify, clarify, and then put forward legislation that reflects the specific wants and needs of those who it directly affects. I need to repeat this: the needs of those affected, the needs of those for whom we all govern, not the wants and needs of the bureaucrats writing or enforcing it.

Madam Speaker, farm safety is an integral concern, but imposing broad-based, vaguely defined omnibus legislation on this sector is not the solution. The solution is not, as the Premier claims, to let the government pass whatever they feel like and work on the regulations behind closed doors. Democracy suffers when decision-making cannot be exposed to the light of day. This is the people's House, and we have a solemn duty to uphold by ensuring that public debate happens in this Chamber and in committee.

This bill needs the input of industry leaders and all stakeholders. To pick just one of the many groups concerned with the planning and implementation of Bill 6, a spokesperson for the Alberta Barley Commission has panned the faulty construction of the legislation, saying:

In September, the four crop commissions issued a news release stating we were ready and willing to contribute to the discussion ... We were ready to provide input before the specifics of Bill 6 were announced to ensure farmers' best interests were being represented, unfortunately that process was never initiated.

So the NDP has not only alienated the 60,000 farmers and ranchers in Alberta but also the groups representing the interests of all farmers.

Madam Speaker, the NDP needs to send this Bill 6 to committee. They need to listen to the heartfelt pleas of Albertans and to take the time to hear their voices so that they can make informed choices. They need to nail down the nitty-gritty details of this legislation, that will determine the details of employment standards, OH and S, WCB, and to whom and how these entities apply. They need to put these specifics in place before this bill is passed, not after. There has to be some accountability, and it has to come now if the government hopes to salvage the trust they have so carelessly thrown aside. The people of Alberta deserve to be heard and supported, and that is exactly what the Wildrose will continue to fight for for as long as it takes.

I urge all members to use the legislative policy committees to their fullest extent and to work with, not against, Albertans to get this right. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments for the hon. member?

Mr. Nixon: Thank you very much. I thank the hon. member for his comments. I certainly appreciate it. I appreciate seeing an urban MLA standing up in the Assembly and speaking on behalf of constituents all across the province. I have a couple of things I'd like to talk to the member about, through you, Madam Speaker.

The first is just a quick story that I have. I used to run a lodge west of Sundre, about two and a half hours away from pavement. One day I was out riding my horse – I know that everybody is going to make fun of me. I do have a big horse, obviously. His name is Tank . . .

An Hon. Member: A Clydesdale.

Mr. Nixon: . . . and, yes, he is half Clydesdale.

I was out riding with my family near the Ya Ha Tinda area in my riding, which is where the Brewster brothers started their organization. Of course, now if you go to Banff, you'll see nothing but buses, but a long time ago the Brewster brothers were breaking horses outside of Banff, and Ya Ha Tinda is where they train all the horses for the rangers. But that's not part of this bill, of course, Madam Speaker. We were riding, and we ran into a cowboy on a horse. Now, what happens out west of Sundre, all through that area, is that cattle free-graze during the summer. Ranchers own allotments, and they allow their cattle to graze in those areas, and then, of course, these guys have to work the cows through the summer and move them to different grass spots, make sure that they're cared for.

Now, this cowboy already had one rope on the cow, one rope on his horse. The cow was clearly hurt. You could tell that something was going on with the cow's feet. Let me tell you, Madam Speaker, that the skill of the cowboy and the horse – the horse was amazing as well. We stopped to watch. He's got this one rope on there, and he has to get off his horse, manage to rope the back feet. He's got to tie another rope to a tree. We're on the side of a mountain. We're two and a half hours away from pavement. It's amazing, the skill of the horse and the skill of the cowboy and all of the work that had to go into getting this cow secure so that it couldn't hurt itself, couldn't hurt the horse, couldn't hurt the cowboy, of course.

When he had got that all done, he then, on the side of the mountain, had to measure the exact medicine that that cow would need for what was going on with its hoofs and then, you know, give the cow the medicine and then, miraculously, let the cow go without anybody getting hurt. I know that I couldn't have done it. I can tell you that the skill sets of both the cowboy and the horse were spectacular.

The first question that I have – and I'll have two questions for the member – how could you regulate, legislate that without talking to somebody who does that for a living? To me, I don't understand how you could even begin that.

The other thing, Madam Speaker, is that I was back in my riding this weekend, and I spoke with a local feedlot just outside of Sundre. This feedlot had about 25 employees, T4 employees, definitely not family members. They would definitely follow this legislation that we have here today. This feedlot puts a significant amount of money into the economy both from what it purchases in the Sundre area as well as, of course, in a small town, by employing 25 employees in the area, so an important employer. I spoke to these workers about what kind of insurance they have while they work there. They went through their insurance plan that they have, and this insurance plan protected them 24 hours a day. So even when they were in their beds, they were protected under the insurance plan that their employer had provided. When they were on vacation with their families, they were protected by this insurance plan, that their employer provided, a good insurance plan.

Now, in talking to their employer afterwards, if WCB comes in with this legislation – and we know that this government is getting ready to time allocate and force this on people – that employer will have to remove that insurance for those people. So now we've taken these people, that have an excellent insurance plan, and we have forced them into WCB. We have forced WCB, which this Premier has said is terrible, on an entire segment of our society. How can we take something that the Premier herself has acknowledged is broken and force that onto them?

The other thing, Madam Speaker, through you to the member: in talking further with this employer, if this legislation comes through, he's worried about the union side of the stuff. He's almost 70 years old. He's been running this feedlot for a long time. He's just going to shut down. That's 25 employees without a job because this government wants to pass a bill without consulting people. Now, does that seem fair?

I don't think that you think that's fair, Madam Speaker. [interjections] You can hear the government members talking away there, laughing about this. You know, there were people in the gallery today crying. This is going to affect our communities. This is going to affect the people that live there, terribly. There are kids back home crying – crying – because their parents are scared about what they're doing, and they find that silly. You can hear them there, laughing and heckling away about that, about the people in my community that are suffering or scared. [interjections] See? There they go again. It doesn't have to be . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The time for 29(2)(a) is finished, hon. member.

I will recognize the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and good evening, everyone. It's a pleasure to speak tonight to this amendment that's been proposed, to send this to committee, as it should. That's where I think that this should go. There's an opportunity there to finally – finally, finally – have some full, robust consultations and get a lot of this stuff discussed with the people who will be most affected before this bill becomes law, and that's very important. It's before the bill becomes law.

I'm a guy that's been raised on a family farm, and I'm a Member of this Legislative Assembly, and I happen to represent one of the most pristine areas in all of Alberta, with some of the greatest, choice farm- and ranchland that there is. I understand therefore the unique lifestyle of farming and ranching and why it simply cannot be compared to other jobs.

Madam Speaker, farming and ranching provided this province the very foundation on which its greatness was built. My own family came up from the States and settled here when the bull trains came up across the border. Having been raised in a pioneer family, I have a great appreciation for what this means. There was an attitude back then. It was like a can-do attitude of a welcoming nature. They had an independent outlook. They had an unrelenting work ethic and a willingness to lend a helping hand no matter who it was. Neighbour helping neighbour: that's what living in the country is all about. You can trace their roots back to the farmers and ranchers who settled way back, way back in the early eras of the shaping of the United States of America and prior to that, when people came across from Europe. Whether or not an Albertan was raised, though, in the farming and ranching lifestyle or lives in a rural or urban community today, we have been influenced and shaped by the heritage of those people that I just spoke about, and it's the heritage of farmers and ranchers predominantly.

Before becoming a member of this Chamber, I was privileged, actually, to be a municipal councillor for the MD of Foothills. While serving on that council, I was fortunate to be part of the decision-making process, of course, and the most important part of that decision-making process was asking the public what they thought on various matters. That's right. Public consultation: what a concept, huh? You know, it was done in front of constituents. We had meetings all over the place, at various halls all over our municipality, regarding numerous, numerous issues that came about. We had all kinds of people coming to talk about everything from subdivisions to development to development permits to feedlots, all kinds of different ideas and projects that were coming forward. Not only was that consultation important; it is mandated in the Municipal Government Act, actually.

Think about that. A council has to consult with their constituents. What that does is that it prevents the council from ignoring public input and ramming through legislation without allowing for consultation. That's what we're trying to do here, and that is wrong. It was common sense when I was on council, and it remains common sense today. It's for that reason that I'm supporting this amendment. It's the only thing that makes logical sense. Why wouldn't you do this? Try to tell me what the logical reason is for not putting this to committee and having a public consultation.

You know, I was on a committee a few years ago, the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future. We went around this province to consult on pensions. Our committee went all over this province and went to every major centre and consulted with all the people that were concerned about pensions. It was crucially important. It was vital. Some of the members that are now on the opposition side served on that committee with me. The Minister of Education is smiling right now. He recalls those meetings, I'm sure.

This is an important piece of legislation, and it should be made only after a series of these kinds of public consultations that I've just described. They're not just information sharing but information gathering. That's what it's really about. If the purpose of this bill is ultimately to improve safety for farm workers, then, for goodness' sake, the first step can't be legislative. It must be consultative. If this government had consulted that way, they would have known that the key to improving safety is educating, not legislating. By holding thorough consultations with stakeholders, we not only allow for information gathering, but we allow for stakeholder buy-in and greater ownership of the implementation of those changes.

As the member representing my constituency, one of my many responsibilities includes participating in some of the committees and meetings that we hold down in the south, in Lethbridge, once a month. One of them is the highway 3 committee with the mayors and reeves and also the major mayors' and reeves' meetings for southwest Alberta, where we continue to discuss how to encourage new industries to consider the corridor as a place to locate. Smart program development can only occur when public consultation takes place to ensure that major changes are given exhaustive review, to ensure we unlock the full potential of that community. So we're meeting every month to discuss how we can improve things. We're meeting with people from the public, people from the various government departments to try to improve the economic capabilities of our area.

In the past, you know, major decisions such as the installation of power lines and the South Saskatchewan regional plan, in fact, involved significant public consultation. Step by step, at every stage of the decision-making process, consultations were done by the previous government. There were opportunities for all stakeholders, including business owners, locally elected officials, and the general public, to ensure that they were properly informed at each and every stage.

Contrast that with what we're trying to do here today with this bill. Contrast that with this government's action on Bill 6, where it is clear that not only was the normal public consultation process not followed; it was purposely controlled and sometimes avoided altogether. Now, I know that in my own riding no meetings were held by the government. In a riding adjacent to mine, Little Bow, no hearings were held. You know, that's amazing because that is one of the largest farming areas in all of southern Alberta. None were held.

I'm not the only one in this Chamber that believed at one time in conducting robust consultations, actually, and I've got several examples I'd like to read tonight. On May 14, 2013, my hon. colleague the current Minister of Economic Development and Trade said:

A great relationship starts with trust. It starts with, well, building trust and having a conversation, a conversation or multiple conversations which lead to consultation, where they are equal partners with an equal voice at the table.

Amazing. He added further that discussions and notification is not consultation.

Well, imagine that.

The day before, May 13, 2013, the same minister also stated in this Chamber:

First and foremost, the greatest concern that I'm hearing – I mean, there are several, and it's difficult to number them or prioritize them, but it all boils down to the fact that there was a lack of consultation and there was a lack of engaging in meaningful dialogue with the very groups that this bill is going to impact and govern.

Imagine that he said that then.

The minister wasn't the only one of my hon. colleagues across the aisle who mentioned these kinds of things. The current Premier, in fact, spoke on May 8, 2013, and declared:

It deserves to be given full debate . . . with genuine consultation in an open and transparent fashion, where we can all see what everybody has to say about the components of this.

Of course, she was referring to the bill she was discussing at that time.

In addition, Madam Speaker, 18 months ago the Minister of Infrastructure and Minister of Transportation, who was then a member of the fourth party in opposition, stated that there's been no consultation with workers directly affected, and there's no negotiation, just more dictation.

Then again on April 23, 2014, rising in support of his caucus colleagues, the Minister of Education stated:

If you're only consulting and then you bring the hammer down in a very short time period after, then that consultation is nothing but adding insult to injury from the process that's been changed so radically in the first place.

Well, I'm not sure if the Minister of Education tonight remembers that, but there's definitely some precedent set here, where members on the other side definitely supported what we're advocating tonight, to send this bill, with this amendment, to the committee.

More recently, actually, the Minister of Human Services also spoke of the importance of consultation when he said just three weeks ago:

We are committed to consulting extensively. If there is anybody who was left out who approached you, I would invite you to bring forward the names of those stakeholders, and I will pass it on to the consultation team so that they can consult more inclusively and more broadly to get it right.

A consultation team. Think of the concept over there. A consultation team might be a great idea. I guess the Human Services minister thought it was at that time.

Madam Speaker, I'm starting to feel like I'm the ghost of Christmas past here, you know. It's like Jacob Marley scolding a cold, grumpy, impudent, know-it-all Scrooge, who cares little for the concerns of his peers and dependants. I remember that he said: "I wear the chain I forged in life. I made it link by link, and yard by yard; I [secured] it on of my own free will, and of my own free will I wore it." Scrooge's associate, Jacob Marley, tried fruitlessly, I might add, to get Scrooge to see the error of his ways and become the person everyone wanted him to be.

This government still has that chance, Madam Speaker. By sending this bill to committee, holding robust, thorough, and exhaustive consultations with farmers and ranchers, this government can attempt to regain the trust of Albertans before it is too late and in three and a half years' time they, too, wear the chains of irrelevance that the current third party must wear.

My office has received hundreds and hundreds of letters and phone calls raising concerns about the lack of any meaningful consultation process. It is my hope that this government takes a step back for a thorough review by sending this bill to committee prior to putting this new legislation in place. It would certainly make for a good Christmas miracle.

The Deputy Speaker: Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On the topic of consultation the Member for Livingstone-Macleod and I share a special bond with the Minister of Education. I remember that in I think it was roughly August 2014 he referred to a committee that travelled around the province. There were controversial bills on pension reform, and it was one of the very few times, actually, in my old role that I sided with the PC government of the day against the Wildrose. It created some headache for me, but I thought it was actually a reasonable bill. The government had taken some flak for it, rightly or wrongly, and under intense pressure from the NDP, then in opposition, the government did the right thing, which it should do with all bills, reasonably, at least, and sent it to committee.

The committee travelled around the province, and I remember going to be the lone witness to testify in support of the bill in a room with at least a few hundred screaming union activists. It sounded, actually, a bit like the House today. It was a rather hostile atmosphere, that I actually found quite enjoyable for reasons I'm not quite sure of. It was a chance for members of the government and the opposition to travel the province, to listen to members. I remember that before I went in, the Minister of Education took me aside and warned me not to make my remarks too incendiary as the crowd might not receive them very well.

Mr. Loewen: Oh, you would have never done that.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I've never made incendiary remarks with the intention of getting a rise out of the unions.

In any case, it was a fruitful exercise that the Minister of Education was on, that the Member for Livingstone-Macleod was on and perhaps a few other of the few veteran members in this House. Perhaps the Member for Livingstone-Macleod can talk about that experience where they went out and listened to Albertans with their experience and their views on a particular piece of legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you. Thank you, hon. member, for the suggestion and the question and the comments. Yes, I do fondly remember with great enthusiasm one evening that I believe was actually in Calgary at the Coast hotel. We had a fairly robust discussion. A fairly large number of people were speaking with great, great, great levels of concern and volume regarding the Member for Strathmore-Brooks' comments that evening, in fact, with respect to pensions and them being unsustainable if I recall.

Certainly, we did on Alberta's Economic Future Committee embark on a number of ventures, and that was only one of many where we went out and talked to a lot of people about a lot of things. I do remember going to Grande Prairie for that same reason, with that same committee, and to Fort McMurray, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Calgary, Edmonton. It was a very well-done, I think, exercise in trying to garner the support from the people that wanted to support what was going on and to also get great feedback.

In other events during the time when I was on that committee we also worked on, believe it or not, high-speed rail. We spent an awful lot of time in committees going around talking to people about the potential for high-speed rail in Alberta. I thought that was a very interesting and rewarding venture as well. Another one that comes to mind in that same regard is the long-time duration of meetings and the work that we spent in looking into the best way to actually develop other forms of electricity in Alberta, and that would be with more hydroelectric projects. It was a great time and a great way to get the information. We had I don't know how many different companies and organizations coming into these committees to provide us with information.

Madam Speaker, I think it's the kind of thing that this government again needs to look at seriously. There's nothing wrong with sending it to committee. There's absolutely no reason in the world not to do it. There's no valid justification not to proceed in that manner.

I would urge the members of this House to please vote yes to this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments?

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak against Bill 6 and in favour of sending it to a legislative policy committee, the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship.

I spoke against this bill in second reading. Since that time there's been another rally out here on the steps of the Legislature and several town hall meetings against this bill, at least one of which was held in an NDP riding. Even the fact that a couple of these town halls were held in NDP ridings, organized by someone other than the NDP MLAs in that riding, who haven't been – well, I want to say that they haven't been listening. I hate to say that, but I keep getting their e-mails and their calls, so even if those people didn't organize those meetings for farmers and ranchers, it didn't slow down the questions from the farmers and ranchers. They absolutely and completely do not understand why their government refuses to listen, refuses to tap the brakes on this piece of legislation, refuses to give any inkling of an answer, even from the cabinet ministers. This is a slap in the face to the questions that are being asked by the farmers and ranchers.

You know, Madam Speaker, all parties within these walls, within this room, that is considered the centre of democracy in Alberta, likely hold some or all of the same values dear: freedom, equality, diversity, tolerance, and respect. But when we look at what is happening with this intolerable bill that's being shoved down the throats of voters, voters that represent one of the most established and important industries in this province, I can't help but think that these values are just not being represented in this House.

I want to quantify the importance of this issue before us. Next to oil, gas, and petrochemicals, crop and livestock represent one of the province's biggest exports, and as global demand for food rises, these markets will continue to grow. The voters and constituents that represent this portion of Alberta's economy, which, of course, is agriculture, that is destined to grow exponentially as demand across the world rises, wonder out loud: why is it that this government is lacking in one integral part of the human condition, that being compassion, that would make it abundantly clear that the people in this province who are charged with feeding the world actually matter to this government, matter enough to listen? They wonder why this isn't part of the Alberta government's list of values, at least when it comes to them.

It's one thing to listen, but as we've seen here, there's no guarantee that the concerns will actually be addressed. It's entirely another to actually take what you're hearing and let it affect your decisions, to show respect for the people giving you these suggestions by involving them in that decision-making process. The part that is missing, Madam Speaker, is compassion.

It's compassion in this situation. A compassionate government would listen, in a real sense, to people that take the time to come to town hall meetings. A compassionate government and its representatives would answer questions that are put forth by voters and constituents and give reasonable answers rather than simply saying: I can't answer that. I think that Albertans are actually quite concerned that their government is showing no compassion for a portion of the population that wants some answers, a portion of the population that's willing to give up days of work or have a neighbour help them by doing their chores so that they can make their way to a consultation meeting or a town hall meeting to try to get some answers to a piece of legislation that is about to change their lives.

I just want to read a few lines from a letter I've got here, Madam Speaker. I'll be happy to table these letters tomorrow. I have a few I want to read from.

In her election platform, Premier Notley promised this: "We will build standards based on independent science and international best practices, designed transparently in careful consultation with Albertans."

In her speech on election night, she promised to "always work to keep your trust."

Repeatedly we have been promised transparency and consultation . . .

Please hear this. Farmers don't want a few exemptions or amendments. They want consultation on issues that run deeper in order that they can feel secure that you understand all the consequences of this legislation that they can clearly see.

I'm reading verbatim.

At the moment they feel that you are throwing the small farms of Alberta on some sacrificial pyre and not one of them understands why. What really is the agenda here?

Regarding WCB: It is a system that isn't working well in Alberta. Please fix the system before mandatory inclusion of the agricultural sector. No farm or ranch, no employer or employee will say no to a system of protection and compensation that works!

So how do we answer this e-mail from a constituent? She wants consultation. I just want to define consultation, Madam Speaker. The NDP government has held several what they call consultation meetings, that were deliberately held with, well, far too few seats for the folks that were expected to arrive. The consultation meeting in Okotoks, I understand, was actually held out in a parking lot. I understand that the minister stood on a chair, stood on something, and hollered for over two hours.

I just want to read from an e-mail that I received from a constituent that was at that meeting.

I was at the Okotoks Town Hall meeting when the question was put forward to your Agricultural minister and your Jobs, Safety, Training, Labour minister about the intent of Bill 6 to override any existing legislation at any government level, giving the current provincial government the authority to install wind turbines and solar panels on farm land, with or without land owner consent. There are two huge concerns with this component of Bill 6 but I will only touch on one. You say Bill 6 is all about safety, how can you possibly say that when other jurisdictions here in Canada and in other countries have deemed wind turbines a health hazard? Wind turbines are very controversial . . . Until you can prove beyond a shadow of a doubt that wind turbines pose no threat to the farm family/worker's health, you are contradicting yourself in saying Bill 6 is all about safety.

In your haste to pass this bill because of safety concerns, you are not allowed to pick and choose which safety issues are worth protecting the farm family and worker from. Either our safety is the utmost importance or something else is . . .

We simply do not trust you or your word that you will make amendments after the fact. You stated that you talked to stakeholders, yet farmers deny you contacted them. You have access to land titles and it would have been very easy for you to send out a questionnaire/survey to every farmer in this province. Another example leading to distrust is you said during your campaign that "not in your watch" would we have a PST. Yet you introduce a Carbon tax. I say if it walks like a duck, quacks like a duck, it must be a duck. I don't care what name you give it, you are trying to add an additional tax that you said you wouldn't. We don't trust you.

You know, Madam Speaker, it's not that there isn't some compassion shown by this government. We sit in this Chamber day after day, talking about passing bills to the segments of the population of this province that require some compassion. Each group we legislate for pays taxes. They buy homes, they buy vehicles, and on and on. They contribute to the economy of the province, and members from both sides of this House show compassion for those affected by our legislation. We all try to, anyway. But that isn't happening in this case. Certainly, the population numbers of farmers and ranchers could be considered a small segment of the voters and constituents of Alberta. That would be fair.

But, as I've stated earlier, they are obviously monster contributors to the economy. Yes, it is fair to say that economic contribution shouldn't be the only guiding light as to how you treat any segment of the population – you'll get no argument from me there – but I guess the question then becomes: why is this agricultural segment of the population not being treated with the same compassion as any other small segment of the population that's been dealt with? The government side of this House is definitely not showing any compassion for these folks, or people wouldn't be gathering on the steps of the Legislature.

I have another letter here, Madam Speaker.

The farmers protesting this bill are being described as against safety and regulations. This is not true.

Once again, I am trying to read these verbatim.

We are asking for the legislation to be written . . . yup, they are trying to pass it without having any of the details, telling us "trust us, it will be fine." When we ask questions about how it will affect our day to day lives, we are either given no answers or given answers that change every day . . .

We are asking for consultation. We're not asking for every farmer to be asked their opinion. We are though asking for a governmental party . . . to meet with [farmers and listen to them.]

We are asking for safety . . . yup. We are not opposed to protecting farm workers and insuring that someone working is not in unnecessary danger. What we are trying to create is a safe environment for everyone. After all, most farm work is done by friends, family and neighbours. Their safety is a huge priority. We just ask that it takes into account how each different level of farming goes about business . . .

We are asking for the ability to decline WCB coverage. WCB coverage has always been available to farmers but because it was optional it gave us the ability to research our own coverage. What farmers learned is that more wide ranging, industry specific coverage is available and most of the time at a lower cost. Why should we have to settle for less or pay extra to have both?

Just a line or two from another e-mail:

This bill covers too many aspects, with too little information on every aspect. It needs to be sent to committee, or dissolved and re-tabled as separate bills for the multiple areas it covers, with increased detail and information regarding each and every area. The NDP is asking citizens of Alberta to trust what they may do in the future, when they refuse to take the time to listen to us now. Consultation after the Bill has been passed is unacceptable. The NDP as a government has a responsibility to be informed, by their own consultative process – not those done by past governments, which is the leg they continue to stand on as their reasoning for pushing this bill through.

The NDP's platform during the Election was for Transparency in Government. So far, the NDP have failed Albertans with their back-door negotiations . . . and hidden agendas!

Stop this bill and take the time required to do comprehensive consultation on each and every point of this bill – not slap a Band-Aid on one concern in hopes that the public and citizens of Alberta will accept and be quiet.

I was privileged to be part of a town hall meeting this weekend in Bassano. We had four MLAs from the Official Opposition as part of the meeting, with about 500 farmers and ranchers that had a ton of questions. The agriculture minister was in attendance at this meeting as well and sat with the opposition MLAs in front of this crowd. At the end of the meeting I shook the minister's hand and told him that I thought he showed good intentions by showing up to a meeting that his government hadn't organized for him. Unfortunately, that meeting was indicative of the meetings that have been held across the entire province, meetings that have included cabinet ministers of several different portfolios.

Madam Speaker, there is a common theme from all these meetings, and that theme is that everyone that leaves these meetings is more frustrated than when they showed up for the meeting because the answers that are given are, at the very least, canned answers, answers that don't have any meat in them, answers that tend to make the persons querying feel that their brand new government has no intention of listening to their concerns about their proposed legislation. Do you know what they're told? They're told time after time: I'll take this back to my colleagues. Now, that's not an answer, especially when it is stated time after time in a two-hour meeting. Furthermore, the feedback certainly does not seem to be making it back to their colleagues as promised if the Premier's and the NDP government's cavalier attitude is any indication.

I have another couple of lines from another e-mail.

If it appears that the rural community is over reacting to Bill 6, please consider this. We react because we feel threatened by too much regulation . . . Our industry is already heavily regulated by the unpredictable things like weather, animals, markets . . .

The issue I have is with the NDP's attempt at sneaking such a bill through without any consultation or even comprehension of the bill, particularly when we are told some amendments might be done after the bill is firmly in place. The NDP has done nothing yet to earn our trust so we can't trust the NDP on this one either.

Forty five days to pass a bill without proper consultation is wrong when it will affect many Alberta futures.

I sincerely hope that for my constituents and the constituents of the NDP MLAs, to be perfectly honest, that won't return calls or letters with regard to this subject, and for those constituents that feel compelled to send those letters to me or other members of the opposition, something is being brought back to the colleagues of this government, that has been referred to in about every consultation.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?
The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Yes. I just wonder if the Member for Little Bow has any further comments he would like to add to his discourse.

Thank you.

Mr. Schneider: Madam Speaker, I hope that every question that's been asked of this government by farmers and ranchers in those meetings is being brought back. But do you know what the problem is? The problem is that the people that are asking these questions in these meetings, that they aren't getting reasonable answers to, do not trust that this government is listening to anything they're saying, let alone bringing information back to Edmonton, to their colleagues, for further study or examination that would influence the outcome of Bill 6.

Another couple of lines from a different e-mail:

This intrusive legislation that the government has produced without any consultation whatsoever with the people it will affect is not only harmful to farm safety; it is just plain wrong. This government has lost any trust that they might have had with the people of Alberta by deliberately misinforming them regarding this flawed bill. I implore you to please table this bill and send it to committee or defeat it altogether until such a time as the government has consulted with the people it affects.

A few more lines from a different one, Madam Speaker:

You and your government should be ashamed of yourselves, saying that you are concerned about Farm Safety while pushing through a bill that your party would have fought against during the old regime because of its clarity. There has been no education, limited consultations regarding the proposed changes in this over reaching bill. Change never is achieved with laws; only education can effect change. I propose that you kill Bill 6 and do the appropriate education and consultations and re-do the proposed changes with multiple bills.

With regard to your consultation in Okotoks on December 2, 2015, I was shocked at how you treated the people there; your government did not provide a safe environment to consult in. Holding it outdoors without prior knowledge meant that many were not dressed appropriately, all because your government didn't reserve a larger venue . . .

Stop and think about what your government is doing and how it will affect the family farm.

Just one more letter, a couple of lines from it. This was sent to every MLA, so if you haven't read it – well.

As an agricultural producer in southern Alberta I am e-mailing you to ask that you slow the process down for Bill 6 so that it can be carried out in a way that encourages open communication, engages industry stakeholders, allows for industry input and provides more time for details to be formulated and presented.

I am concerned that by rushing this Bill through without proper study and agricultural producer involvement the Bill will lack proper design and will lack supported implementation. The method by which the Alberta Government has chosen to push this Bill through is alienating the agricultural community and dividing the province. I have always been a proud Albertan but I am saddened by the lack of respect the Alberta Government is showing this industry.

Bill 6 has serious impacts on how farmers operate their business and how they work with their families on the farm. All I am requesting is that the current Alberta Government asks the agricultural industry for input before the Bill is passed to ensure proper and complete legislation and regulations are created.

For these reasons I ask that Bill 6 be sent to the legislative policy committee for a proper consultation to be done and answers provided throughout the consultation process. Only in that way can we help the NDP improve the bill and get it right or, failing that, move to kill the bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

If not, then the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's been a long and extensive evening, that I look forward to continuing tomorrow morning. I would move to adjourn debate for the night.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Bilous: Madam Speaker, I move that we adjourn until 9 tomorrow morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 12:19 a.m. on Wednesday to 9 a.m.]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning. Let us reflect. As we begin another day in service to our province and its people, let us continue to work in a spirit of co-operation, always mindful of the traditions of parliamentary democracy that guide our work.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 6

Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act

Mr. Cooper moved that the motion for second reading be amended to read that Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Adjourned debate December 8: Mr. Fildebrandt]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today, which is a fine day in the province of Alberta, to speak to the amendments on Bill 6 as an agriculturalist, a lifetime agriculturalist. Bill 6 is an important piece of legislation and, primarily, important legislation for farmers, farmers like myself. The implications of that bill will affect our family farm and many across the province. We've seen many producers at the Legislature, on the Legislature steps, at various government consultative meetings, and at town halls in locations like Bassano. There a great number of producers came out.

I was pleased to see the people from the Hutterian Brethren come out at Bassano because those people have a particular religious belief. The Hutterian Brethren are in North America because of their persecution in eastern Europe. They came to North America to escape that form of persecution based on political events of that time.

Madam Speaker, I have some notes that I'm hoping to go by here in speaking about the Bill 6 amendments. One of the things that I find is that, of all departments that this government of Alberta administers, agriculture is indeed the most diverse. Agriculture is affected by the weather, the elements, but there are secondary resource industries, not unlike what's happening on our farm: the development of the petroleum resources, the development of the mineral resources in gravel and other things like that. In the area that I represent, Drumheller-Stettler, the diversity is represented by an agency of the Crown called the special areas, and it truly is special in many ways.

With this diversity comes an endless list of scenarios that play out every day on Alberta's farms and ranches. It was interesting. As we were attending the Chamber here, Madam Speaker, my compatriot here to my right, from Edmonton-Rutherford, was talking about the issues with calving and how the hours that we're keeping in the Chamber here are not unlike the calving times. It's completely irregular.

I remember on one occasion – and the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock is also appreciative of that – my wife and I purchased some cattle to improve our cattle herd, and the seller assured us that these calves were not going to arrive before the 1st of April. But when we were in Vancouver on a family holiday on Family Day, in February, the neighbour that was looking after our stock assured us that we had been told a fib, that these calves were arriving in great numbers. When we did finally come back from Vancouver, it was 30 below for a week constantly, so my wife and I took shifts to make sure that these newly born calves would not perish in the weather. We knew and we know from personal experience that legislation does not necessarily apply in those types of extreme circumstances.

Common sense and education are what the orders of the day are, and trying to legislate changes to a diverse industry like agriculture requires a comprehension that takes into account the concerns and the conditions of all sectors of this industry. I have business acquaintances at great distances in the fertilizer industry, and I found it interesting that just two days ago at the fertilizer plant in Medicine Hat there were two employees who were taken to the hospital because of their exposure to ammonia. We use anhydrous ammonia on our farm. My son is fully qualified to transport the pressure vessel and required material, and he has his hazardous-goods, his WHMIS, and his safety qualifications to do that. At 24 years of age I'm pleased that he also has his class 1 driver's licence to operate the semis that are required to move this fertilizer product.

Madam Speaker, safety is fully comprehensible at our farm and many like it. These sectors are fully coherent and relevant to that. We are not allowed to attend plants like the plant in Medicine Hat that had the safety accident because we don't have OH and S and WHMIS qualifications presently, and we would not be able to unless we complied with the requirements, the workmen's compensation and the OH and S requirements, that that plant site has. I find it interesting that even though that plant site in Medicine Hat – and the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat fully is aware of that. Those people have all those safety qualifications, safety training, safety material . . .

An Hon. Member: One guy died.

Mr. Strankman: I understand that, unfortunately, one of the workers did pass. Although it's not a farm accident, it's a work-related accident. It was horrific, because in the training that we've taken – and I, too, have the same qualifications as my son. How anhydrous works is that it takes in the oxygen, and you simply can't breathe.

Madam Speaker, I have to reiterate that safety – safety in capital letters – on farms is of the utmost importance. A loss of one life – and I wasn't aware until just immediately that there was a loss of life regarding an agricultural product that we use. It's an important product for the growth of foodstuffs and the enhanced development of these plants. What anhydrous ammonia does is that it increases the uptake of carbon dioxide, which is believed in some circles to be a greenhouse gas. In some circles there is that belief.

Madam Speaker, the loss of one life or the injury of one is too many. I can relate to a family member. Just at the tender age of two my cousin also received a serious arm accident, and it affected his life. Even to this day he still is recovering, if you will, or adjusting to a farm accident, a machinery accident that affected his arm.

With that, Madam Speaker, farming is just not a job; it's a way of life. We know that while we're out there in the special area or in east-central Alberta, in the diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler, we are a great distance from safety, remedial services. It's a 45-minute to a one-hour drive just from our farm to a hospital.

Some of the members in the Chamber, repeat members, will know that the emergency care service in Consort is on a rotating basis, so when we drive to the community of Consort, we don't necessarily know whether there'll be a doctor there. That may only be one stop on the way to where you're going for emergency care.

The advancement of cellphones in regard to safety has been exactly perfect for our conditions although, because we live by the Saskatchewan border, many people do not realize that should they phone 911, sometimes the cellphones ring out to Saskatchewan. Therefore, there is no way that the Saskatchewan people will respond to an Albertan call.

With that, Madam Speaker, we know that safety is important. It's imperative that we have that because in these jobs we create the food that goes on Albertans' tables and indeed Canadian tables. The packing plants, Lakeside Packers in Brooks and Cargill at High River, are international-quality plants. They provide food that's distributed across Canada and indeed into the United States. In some cases, like Lambco at Innisfail, their processed lamb food goes internationally, and they make a marvellous market out of that.

Madam Speaker, I'll reiterate that there is no farmer in Alberta who does not want their operation to be as safe as possible. Hopefully, I can reiterate that because on our farm we do use a dangerous product, anhydrous ammonia, and we do use certified and licensed chemicals. On our farm we do use and have hired a complete aerial application, and we have since 1967. My father started it in 1967. My wife's father started aerial application in 1964. There are some goodly members across the way and even possibly on our side of the Chamber – it's interesting – that maybe don't relate to those kinds of years because that was somewhat before their cycle of gathering knowledge. Nobody cares more about farm safety than the moms and dads who operate them and call them home.

The gap between this government's proposed Bill 6, the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, and the common sense that Alberta farmers inherently believe in and deal with on a daily basis, when they're working with cattle or bison or even farm machinery that uses hydraulic equipment, powered, motorized equipment that is capable of inflicting damage, not unlike, Madam Speaker, the vehicles that we see on one of the main thoroughfares, Jasper Avenue – it's uncanny to me to watch people stand three to six feet away on a curb while a multitonne, industrial-sized vehicle, i.e. a city bus, goes by at 30 kilometres. The people stand there impervious to the potential danger that that piece of flying steel could inflict upon them. It's based on the fact that they do it every day, and they become complacent with that. You see people standing there, reading their newspapers, looking at their cellphones within six feet of a vehicle that probably weighs 20 tonnes, that's passing them at 30 kilometres an hour. Then you'll see out in the intersection, where people are passing at 30 kilometres an hour, which is a closing speed, a closing rate of 60 kilometres an hour, and they have no consequence to that.

It's interesting that a lot of those people don't have WCB coverage either. Possibly the bus driver does. I don't know; we haven't checked into whether that union actually has WCB coverage when they're at work.

Madam Speaker, agriculture is a vital part of Alberta's economy. It is shocking to me – and I'm trying to give some relative examples here – that this government has decided to introduce this legislation, Bill 6, which now we're debating amendments to, without a full, consultative, in-depth relationship with the ranchers and farmers. The ranchers and farmers that I've talked to in my constituency – I'm hoping to speak to many more in the community of Hanna this Friday night at a town hall. I'm offering a full and complete invitation to any member of the government caucus to attend. I did that in question period yesterday, and I'm doing it now so that they will attend.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments for the hon. member under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was riveted by what my colleague was saying, and it would be appropriate to hear him continue along the same way that he was going. Please, I would love to hear the rest of your thoughts.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for that. I don't know that it was exactly riveting. I don't perceive to be speaking at a quarter after 9 in the morning in a riveting conversation.

I am going to follow up with the theme of consultation. In the democratic facility that we're in, where we have a chance every day when we're in the Chamber to have a direct back and forth, the in-your-face portion of democracy, that the government would be wanting to bring forward this bill and its extremely wide-reaching impacts – I sympathize with the Premier in her belief in the idea of protecting people. I hope that I've given examples that we do that on our farm, and I know others and many Albertans who do. The statistical information that we've had says that even without regulation Albertans are not statistically above any other safety record of any other province.

To bring this forward in 45 days or less without full consultation – I've brought forward letters, and I've spoken to some 18 different stakeholder organizations, who are not happy with the consultative process that's brought forward. We've had unprecedented demonstrations on the steps of the Legislature to that effect. It's frustrating that we can't achieve a democratic solution to this, and the government is resorting to the powers that they have, whether it be closure or any other method within this place, to bring this legislation forward. We're still getting calls and letters coming in. Our constituency offices are inundated with this material. It's frustrating that we are in this place, where we do get a chance from, in this case, 9 in the morning to the wee hours of the morning to have these debates, and the government is marginalizing the comments that are coming from our side of the House and marginalizing, I believe, the voices that are being heard outside the House in relation to this. It's openly frustrating.

One of the bigger comments that we bring forward is the definitive wish by the government to bring forward only one agency, the WCB, to be allowed to provide these workers with insurance. Many operations already have a choice solution that they bring forward, and that is private suppliers of insurance. It's openly frustrating. Reverting to the 18 farm organizations that I've been in consultation with, they do believe there needs to be some reform, and they've sought out these private sources to effect safety for their workers, for their employees. In some cases they have a very close personal relationship like the rancher-owner of Little Gem Ranches in my constituency, who called me and said that their employee, who has a family relationship with them, now has to have a completely different relationship, which may cause animosity, may cause contempt. It may create a completely different relationship than what was there. Bill 6 is one of these pieces of legislation that may lead to that.

These people are working out their solutions on their own, and they simply don't need to have legislation to do this. They've been doing this for a goodly number of years, statistically within the range of any other province across the land, and we can't see how WCB coverage would make anything better. Even the Premier has stated on previous occasions, recorded conversations, that WCB is in sore need of overhaul. Why did the government not try to achieve the benefits of that organization?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise once again to bring the voices of my constituents to this Legislature and to all Albertans by speaking about the importance of referring Bill 6 to the legislative policy committee.

You know, daily I'm told – in the last two weeks it's been daily, hourly. We've been getting so many e-mails, so many phone calls from constituents about their voices not being heard. They have hired me to be their representative in this House and to bring their message here, just as all the members here have been hired to represent all Albertans in this Legislature. When I say all of the constituents, these are the farmers, too. We need to listen to the farmers, and they're clearly giving their voice. They clearly have a voice that's been shouting out and saying: stop; kill Bill 6; send it to committee.

That's what we're talking about now. This is a referral motion to send it to committee. Consultation: that's what they're saying to me. They want to have consultation. They don't believe that they've had an opportunity to have that consultation, that opportunity to talk to the government about what they believe is a problem. They've been using us as their sounding board to speak for them, but they would really, truly like to have this in committee so that they would have an opportunity to talk to the government and tell them their concerns.

Governments need to work for our constituents. We're all public servants, every one of us here. We're public servants, not public dictators. We shouldn't be running this from the top down, in an autocratic tone. We should be working here from the grassroots up, especially with these farmers, listening to their concerns and finding out what they want and how they can make this better. I believe that their input would help change this, Madam Speaker, and I think that we would have a better chance of having a bill that wouldn't be so contentious if we had conversations with constituents, the farmers and the ranchers.

I hoped that this government would be different. I hoped that they would listen. They said that they would. I know that the NDP government said that they would, but I guess not.

You know, I talked to one of my constituents in Killam. We had a town hall meeting in Killam. His name was Doug. Doug told me that no one in the room was against a conversation about safety or change. He said that this is a problem about the legislation. He told me: "I had an opportunity to participate in the rally on the steps with nearly 2,000 other producers and then attend question period. As the opposition parties defended farm interests, the governing party seemed more concerned about the success of Christmas lights in Calgary being changed to LED." He felt that was shameful. They came there with a true concern, and that's what they heard out on those steps of the Legislature. They heard from different people that they were excited about these LED lights. That's the word that I got from him.

I'd like to go on to a word, the word "represent." Represent means to be entitled or appointed to act or to speak for someone, especially in an official capacity. That would mean that we all have been commissioned with a great privilege to represent Albertans, an absolute, great privilege. I'm awed by the honour. Every time I look at the building and I walk through these doors, I'm awed by this honour that I have to represent Albertans and represent my constituents, and I'm sure every last one of you, at least in our Wildrose Party, is honoured to represent your constituents and to be able to talk about Bill 6.

Wildrose believes in real representation. The farmers and the ranchers have asked this Assembly to stop and pause so this bill can be dealt with in a committee so that all the stakeholders – all the stakeholders – have time to provide input. The majority of the stakeholders represented in this situation are farmers, Madam Speaker.

The community of farmers and ranchers isn't quite sure what has hit them, Madam Speaker. When the legislation was tabled a few weeks ago, farmers and ranchers were surprised to find that the bill combined many complex elements like WCB, OH and S, the Employment Standards Code, and the Labour Relations Code. I think I referred to it as an ominous – I can't even say the word now.

An Hon. Member: Ominous omnibus.

Mr. Taylor: Omnibus. It's a tongue twister. Try saying that three times fast.

Since that time they have gathered across Alberta and here at the Legislature to let this government know that these changes should not have been pushed ahead. Rushing this bill through over a couple of weeks, especially due to the outrage, is clearly a mistake. I would think that now would be the right time to reflect and think about what it is that we are really trying to achieve here. If it's power and control at stake, I understand why this government wants to push this bill through, but if it's actual concern for the farmers and their families, the neighbours, the workers, then let us take our time and include the needs of about 44,000 or 45,000 farms in this bill.

Rushing through the amendments that have been introduced on this, given the backlash, will not correct this situation. We have reached the stage where we need to take some real time before making these changes, some real time, not just a few days, not till January 1 and then have consultation afterwards. Farmers don't like the idea of having consultation after this bill is passed. They've clearly told me time and time again that that's not proper consultation. They want to bring it to a committee and have their voices heard, have their voices heard over a period of 90 days, 120 days, you know, a year. Let's get this bill right. Why can't we slow down and start by improving education and holding discussions with farmers and ranchers and learning?

These are massive changes that we need to get right, not just draft up legislation that will affect so many people. We need consultation. We need their voices. We need that consultation. I know I've said it before – and I'll be saying it again – but it's so important that we listen to the farmers and consult with them. If we consult with them and we can actually look at what they've done on other bills, I think we could make a great bill. If we look to B.C. and say, "Okay; you've got these parts there; now we've got what we want here in Alberta," I think you can come up with something that's going to be tenable for the farmers.

They want safety. There's nobody that cares more about safety than the moms and dads that own and operate the farms that are out there, so let's make legislation that has education and has an opportunity to let them have their voice – their voice – to be able to speak about this. You know, by pushing through in such a forceful manner, without consultation and recognition of the farmers, we have begun a process whereby they are starting to feel alienated and picked on. They feel as if they're being perceived as uneducated and that their industry is not valued, and nothing could be further from the truth.

Farmers take on so many different jobs. They take on jobs like being accountants, mechanics, welders. They have to be hedge fund traders. They have to go look and see where this market is at, how they can make the most money off this. The more legislation and the more things cost: well, they're market takers; they're not market makers, so they have to be even more cognizant and more risky with what's going on in the market. It's super important for them. I know they are experts. They are also experts in soil conditions. They've got to be able to read the soil and make sure of what fertilizer goes into that soil. So they've got to know so much more than just, say, the average person.

I talked to a guy named Brandon. He's from my riding, and he's sitting over in Holden. He was telling me that he works in a variety of different careers. He's six months away from becoming a mechanical engineer. He's worked in the construction industry. He's also worked in the oil industry and realizes the importance of safety and regulations. However, he feels Bill 6 will cause unsafe working environments. He doesn't feel there's going to be total compliance. He wants consultation. That is what he takes away from that. He feels it's going to take away rights of the individual. We need to bring this to committee, to let them have a chance to talk. He feels that he has not been given any say in how this bill has been laid out. If this bill is going to be passed, many aspects need to be changed, he was telling me. This bill considers farming as a job, a career, and it is not a job or a career. It's a lifestyle, and he's proud of it.

I've seen some of the signs they have used in the protest, one in particular that reads: farmers feed everyone. I mean, where do you think the food comes from? Farmers feed everyone. Have you thanked a farmer? Have you guys gone out and just done that much, thanked a farmer and said: "Thank you for the food. Thank you for the grains so we can have our bread. Thank you for the cattle so we can have the beef that we eat or the pigs so we can have our pork or for any one of the different dairy products, the milk, the eggs – there are so many – the poultry that we have"? Everybody needs to stop and thank a farmer for what they contribute to this society. Without them we're not eating.

Madam Speaker, are we truly showing farmers the respect they deserve? They do feed everyone. Is this how we thank them? I would like to know what other MLAs would eat at home, in restaurants if it weren't for the farmers. Every time you eat bread, a vegetable, a piece of meat, do you think about the work that went into it and where it came from or the many hours of work feeding and planting and harvesting?

Madam Speaker, they don't stop. When the cows are giving birth, they don't stop. They keep with the cattle. That has to be a safety issue for the farms. They have to make sure that that calf is born correctly. If the weather is in such a state, they know that in three days they're harvesting, and they know that in three days this weather is going to go, and it's going to change. They can see that on the Weather Network. When they look at the Weather Network and it says that it's going to snow and it's going to snow for the next week, do you think the farmers are going to stop working? They have to keep going out in those fields.

This needs to be able to go to committee so they can be consulted. This government has forgotten about the farmers' insight because it wants to pursue its own agenda and make some changes, some of which may not even be needed. Why can't we take the time to get this right? Farmers want to protect their families, their neighbours, their workers. They also want to have a little say in what goes down in this important piece of legislation. I think that it's only fair that we include them, and that is what they are asking. They've been clearly asking this. They asked it on the steps of the Legislature. They've asked it in e-mails. I know they've had e-mails that have been sent to all the ridings because I've been CCed on the letters that they've sent to the Premier or to the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, who has 19,055 farms in his riding.

In fact, if people are interested, his phone number, if you want to make sure you get a hold of him, is 780.352.0241. Again, that's 780.352.0241. Call now before we don't have a chance.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, under 29(2)(a)? Go ahead.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. member. I've received several e-mails and phone calls from third- and fourth-generation ranchers around the entire province that are hopeful that this Bill 6 will get hoisted to committee, where they come in and talk about how to ensure that the family farm gets safer. They're hearing from a lot of other Albertans – oil and gas workers, construction workers – that are very, very concerned that at this time this bill is going to have effects on employment in the agriculture industry at a time when they are facing such tremendous hardship themselves in our overall Alberta economy and with the lack of confidence that seems to be out there. I wonder if the Member for Battle River-Wainwright is hearing similar things.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yes, I'm absolutely hearing concerns about the employment and how many people they can actually hire as a result of what's going on here. They're saying: how is it going to – well, they don't know what's going to be rolled out, and they don't know how it's going to be rolled out. They don't know the effects of what's going to happen to them. Just like the other member, I've talked to people that have had five generations of farms, and they're frankly concerned about what they're going to be able to hire. Do they have to now prove that they have WCB coverage if they're an independent worker? Or do they have to hire these people on and now go through all the work of having to get all this WCB and OH and S and different paperwork that's involved and then have the worry of making sure that it's in a good, orderly fashion in a desk somewhere when the OH and S operator comes and knocks on their door asking to see this paperwork, that they have to make sure that it's in good working order?

Some of them are saying that this is too much, so they're questioning if they should be hiring more people or if they should just go with automation and quit hiring more people. This could really affect jobs. I know this government has said that they want to protect jobs, but what's happening here, I'm afraid, is that it has the opposite effect. It's going to have the opposite effect in that there are going to be fewer jobs that are going to have people employed. If we have these certain hours of work that they are restricted to work at, well, there are only so many people that actually know how to operate farm equipment and how to operate things on the farm. There are very specific tasks that occur on a farm, and these people are concerned about being able to find them, so if they have to stop and let this person have the break – like I was mentioning before, it's going to be coming, and they know this is going to happen – well, they'd rather have that person for a couple more hours.

The people that are signing on to work on these things understand. They understand that if they tell their employer, "No, I can't work anymore," the employer will just say: "Fine. That's good." But the majority of people that work on farms are more than happy to go ahead and work and work with the farmers that are there.

Thank you.

9:40

The Deputy Speaker: We still have a few minutes under 29(2)(a). Any further members wishing to comment on the Member for Battle River-Wainwright?

Go ahead, hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: I appreciated the hon. member's speech. I know he's coming from a sincere place, and I know that he's attempting to represent his constituents, but he made a couple of statements about our views over here that I wish to correct. He said that the farmers were feeling that they were unappreciated, that their industry was unappreciated, and that they were seen as, you know, pretty unsophisticated. I just wanted to correct that because we have the utmost regard for that industry and the people who work in it. We know where food comes from; it's not the store. We know that. I think that if there was a prevailing view on this side, it would be that farmers are sophisticated businesspeople, and in some cases they run quite large industries – quite large – and they employ lots of workers. So from our perspective, Madam Speaker, I think it's important to note that people in business who employ people have responsibilities as well.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. Madam Speaker, I rise to not support the amendment to Bill 6. Referring this to committee is not what I think needs to happen. Now is the time to deal with this bill, for reasons of timeliness. I find the whole issue of farm safety critical, that we move forward with it in a timely fashion.

It's been a while since I've been on a family farm. As a teen and even up to when I was 22, I was working on farms in southern Ontario for extended family members. They were managed by my older cousins, and I can remember those times with a lot of fondness. They were the best wages I ever made in my life up to that point. While I never felt unsafe in the workplace, there were things that could have been harmful, of course. There was exposure to herbicides that was happening on a regular basis early in the crop year. There was lots of work with heavy machinery. But, thankfully, you know, the kinds of things that were done to pass on the safety from the farm owner to the manager to the lead hand to me working in the fields all worked out okay.

While I haven't had a tremendous amount of experience on farms – and it's been a long while, for sure, since I've been working on farms – I have had experience working in workplaces, in factories in particular, where I felt quite unsafe. But being young and needing the job, I didn't do anything other than the best I could to protect myself in the workplace, by not partying a lot, going home and resting, coming back to work and being focused. To be sure, those were hard jobs, working a brake press that could bend quarter-inch steel, and the ramifications of a slip-up on that job would have been disastrous for me. It felt like there wasn't a lot of safety equipment, and there were old machines. For eight hours a day I was standing. It was tiring and laborious, but I did what I had to do to get past that job on a daily basis, get it behind me, and never look back, of course.

My point is that while that wasn't a ranch or a farm, I was a young man needing the money. I was not aware of what workplace rights I had, and I didn't speak up a lot because I needed to get the money so I could come back out west, frankly, and make my life out here. It's been a great life. But I can see how workers, paid employees in a farm or ranch setting like I was when I was a young man – and nothing bad happened to me on the farms that I worked on. But I could see how a young man in a ranch or farm setting who needs the money or is desperate or doesn't know his rights – and, frankly, there are no kinds of protections like OH and S or WCB on a farm or ranch in this province – might not feel like they could refuse a dangerous job, how they might do all they could for their employer because they need the money or because they're really conscientious and want to do the best job they can possibly do. I can see how they may get into situations that could lead to outcomes that would be disastrous for them in the long run.

I think the time is now. We've heard many stories here about employment on farms and ranches that is not ideal. I've heard a lot of stories from people saying that, you know, it was the best time they ever had. There were talented people who could rope cows. They could treat them with medicine on a hillside. They could let them go, and everything worked out fine. But there are probably lots of situations that aren't ideal for workers on farms, and it's those situations we don't want to delay by a referral to committee. It's those situations. We want to kind of put some basic protections in place through this bill. It's those situations that aren't ideal, that would cause long-term ramifications for the person who was injured in the workplace, that need to be addressed.

I am conscious that this probably is a defining moment for us all with regard to a decision around the bill. I want to say that coming down on the side of protecting workers' rights is not a bad side to be on for any of us. It's a side we all should be on. So it should go forward now. It should put some basic protections in place for paid employees on farms. It should ensure that there's clarification that if you are an owner of a farm, if you're an extended family member, if you're a volunteer, that's not the situation we're endeavouring to address. We're endeavouring to address the situation where a person may feel like they don't have protections in the workplace.

Madam Speaker, I think a hoisting, as somebody called it, or an amendment or, ultimately, a referral to committee, which would prevent us from moving forward in an expeditious fashion, is not the right thing to do.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Jean: Thank you. I did have an opportunity to listen to the speaker, the Minister of Finance. My question really relates to two things he said. The first was that he said that, of course, this is a defining moment. I agree with him. This is a defining moment for the government. It shows clearly, whether it be Bill 6 or Bill 8, that they're not consulting and not doing proper consultation with stakeholders, in particular school boards, who are still confused in relation to Bill 8 because we haven't had enough time to actually look at what's been brought forward, and Bill 6, of course, because there's been absolutely no consulting by this government whatsoever for farms. So I do agree with him. I think it's a defining moment, and it especially is going to be defined in the next election in rural Alberta.

You know, one thing that I do notice is that he kept mentioning: it should; it should; it should. Now, that is clearly what the Wildrose is talking about. We don't know – and neither does the Minister of Finance – what this bill is going to do. It should do things, but nobody knows what it's going to do, and that's because there has not been proper consultation.

I just say to the minister this. They brought forward a bill. The bill on its face and on content was totally inappropriate, and in fact Albertans rejected that bill. The government itself rejected that bill after saying and arguing in this place that it was a perfect bill. They rejected their own argument by bringing in not just one amendment, not just half a page of amendments but more pages of amendments than the original bill was, and they did it in just two days, Madam Speaker. Doesn't that clearly say that the government was wrong the first time? What makes this minister believe they're right this time after only two days of changes and still no consultations with farmers? Farmers are still angry. They are not listening, Madam Speaker. What does he say to that?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you for the question. I think this is the first time that the Leader of the Opposition has asked me a question, so thank you very much for the opportunity to address the concerns.

You know, the defining moment: perhaps we need to kind of get our head around who it's defining for. It will be defining for the person who is injured. That's who will see this moment as a period in time when they were let down by their Legislature in this province. It's defining for them because they will not be able to go back and receive adequate insurance coverage for their disability, their injury. It's defining for them because they will live a life like the stories we have heard of some Albertans who have had to go through much pain and suffering to get basic workplace coverage for themselves and their families. That's who it'll be defining for. All of us will be fine. We will get up the next day. We will say: it's a great day in Alberta. But that person and the person after them and the person after them will be defined by our inability to move forward on this issue.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think just some comments. This goes to the trust issue. We've seen this minister now just do exactly what the Premier has done in this Assembly over and over and over again, and that is to blame farmers and ranchers, say that for a hundred years they've been trying to hurt their employees, trying to kill their employees. This is why they're mad in rural Alberta. So through you, Madam Speaker, let me say: shame on the minister and shame on the Premier.

This is absolutely ridiculous. This is a government whose own documents show that they've tried to stop kids from participating in their family farms. They've tried to do that. Their minister now has risen in this House and has said that this is just the beginning, so we don't even know if we can trust their changes. Over and over and over the cabinet and the caucus across from me have stood up in this House and blamed farmers, said that farmers were trying to hurt people, said that farmers were trying to kill people and that that's what they're trying to rectify. That's not true, Madam Speaker. That is not true at all.

Farmers and ranchers are my neighbours. I love having them as my neighbours. I respect them very much. What these ministers are saying is absolutely ridiculous and not true. This caucus is all for safety, and so are farmers and ranchers. What we aren't for is a monster bill where nobody knows what it is, where this government doesn't even know what it is, that takes away the rights of farmers and ranchers. Let's be clear on that. It takes away the rights of farmers and ranchers without any consultation with the people that this legislation affects.

The only thing that this cabinet can do is to continually stand up in this House and blame good people: good people that make this province work, good people that have been here since long before any of us, good people that feed the world and feed this province. All this minister can do is stand up in this Assembly, Madam Speaker, over and over and blame farmers.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak in favour of the referral amendment for Bill 6. It should be no secret where I or my colleagues stand on this issue. We do not support Bill 6. The farmers and ranchers of Alberta do not support Bill 6.

Madam Speaker, my caucus has heard from thousands of Albertans, and we've actually consulted with farmers about this bill. I believe it's quite easy to see that this bill needs to be completely redrawn. We have hosted telephone town halls, actual community meetings, responded to thousands of letters from within our constituencies and from others, especially from members opposite. Most importantly, we really listened. We listened to Albertans when the government did not.

The government wants this bill passed after only 45 days of being made public. This bill is one of the many reasons why they previously passed a motion for the House to sit mornings as well as afternoons and evenings. The NDP are determined to pass as much legislation as possible without consultation and education. They claim that this bill is about safety and protecting farmers, yet it ignores the key components of safety. I will repeat this very slowly, Madam Speaker: education. Education. Only this NDP government would conclude that legislation is the cause and effect of safety.

Madam Speaker, a bill of this magnitude, that affects 47,000 farms, needs to be dealt with in a proper way and should only be completed with extensive consultation. Consultation. Extensive consultation. If we say it enough, maybe you'll understand. The fact is that farmers have been left out, forcing even Albertan musicians and icons like George Canyon and Paul Brandt to lay out to the Premier how the family farm is a way of life and not just a business. Paul Brandt is an Airdrie boy, by the way.

To put it plainly, this Premier and her government are completely disconnected from rural Albertans. Further, and more importantly, this is just another way this government is reminding rural residents that their voice does not matter. These guys aren't going to forget, either.

If they won't go to the farmers, I will bring their voices here to this Legislature along with my colleagues here. I have spoken with many farmers in my riding and want to tell this government what I am hearing. To quote one Albertan:

I am a resident of a small town in Alberta. I am also a rancher's daughter that knows the value of being raised on a ranch in northeastern B.C. There are many different hours than any other industry. There is an opportunity to learn about animals and planting, from being a little person up until an age to safely work on my own. I chose town life; however, I will always celebrate who grows our food for everyone and who works hours without compensation to make their farm or ranch the best it can be.

The farmers want the government and the urban people to understand and respect them. They feel like they haven't been asked, just told, and that is because normally they keep working and they're quiet. Please listen to them for the next few months or years before the bill is proposed again. Set up meetings in every constituency and really listen to their needs.

I am thankful that I was raised on a ranch. I have many skills that others do not. Please look for those skills when listening to the food producers.

This is one letter. It's representative of thousands. Don't bite the hand that feeds you. You've done that.

Community consultation is not simply a stand-alone exercise but the building of nurturing relationships. We can't create policy without listening to the people whose lives are impacted by these policies. Truly, guys, give your heads a shake. I truly believe that farm parents are way more concerned about the safety of their children and will absolutely do the utmost to protect them. They will protect their children, not the government. Pushing unenforceable, expensive legislation onto the backs of our hard-working families and farms is not what we were elected to do.

The implementation of this bill without consultation will only serve to be a huge windfall for WCB, will not affect farm safety one bit, and will only denigrate our democratic process. This is not just a business. Like we've said, it's a way of life. Workers are not the proletariat; they are children, family members, friends, and neighbours. I think it is absurd to think that bringing in broad legislation will change anyone's willingness to keep their loved ones safe, especially when it comes to their children. Farmers will accept anything that will make farms safer, better, and more efficient, but as you can see from the mounting opposition, this is not the case. Never before has this Legislature seen protests like the ones that have been happening here – never before – from real people, not paid activists.

I would like to now talk about an article in the National Post which tells the story of a family who run a poultry farm and how a Saskatchewan OH and S official attempted to sanction parents for assigning their children farm chores, labelling them as an act of child labour. The following is a quote from the article, which I will table tomorrow in the House.

Cool Springs Ranch & Butchery north of Yorkton, Sask., is a magnet for the local food enthusiast – the kind of place that hosts farm to fork dinners and describes their animals as “pasture-fed” and “free-range.” It's family-run, to boot – with Janeen and Sam Covlin allowing their daughters Emma, 8, and Kate, 10, to help raise their animals, bring them to slaughter and prepare them for market.

That was, until the government dropped by last week with an Occupational Health and Safety order prohibiting the girls from working in the chicken processing plant, a major part of the farm's operation.

The couple posted their plight to social media and support came their way in waves, much of it critical of an overbearing government trying to mess with tradition and grassroots family life.

Hmm. Kind of like what's happening here.

In this article is an explanation which I believe will help many members in this House.

Since the Second World War, children living on farms performed all kinds of heavy labour, said Anne-Marie Ambert, a retired professor of sociology at York University who has written on changing family roles and expectations. “A farm can be very dangerous, but crossing the street can be very dangerous too,” she said.

That's something all of us here have taught our children, right?

As social values shifted to make children, as one U.S. sociologist put it “economically worthless, but emotionally priceless” labour laws also evolved in each province, though farming has remained somewhat of an outlier. Farms are what settled this country and they instill a work ethic that seems to be on the wane, Prof. Ambert said.

“It makes life meaningful to children to contribute [in this way] and maybe this is why we have so many kids in high school who feel very depressed,” absorbed by Facebook and on smartphone games. The case was also framed as an unjustified attack on a family farm. Though surprised the government withdrew the order, Prof. Barnetson said standing by it would have been a bad move politically. “They can't afford to lose rural seats,” he said, of Western provincial governments.

I'm sorry. This is just all too fresh and familiar right now.

This bill poses too many serious questions to be left up to the hope that the government gets it right in the regulations. They don't trust you. We need to be voting on what is before us and ensure that we are getting it right the first time. There is no need to rush this piece of legislation through the House. The minister and the Premier should refer this to committee so it can receive the due attention it deserves and the farmers can have the input that they deserve. To many farmers this is another slight to their livelihood and way of life, making criminals of parents who are trying to teach their children a hard-work ethic – shame on you – and neighbours who receive a hand from their community. Shame again.

Madam Speaker, this government needs to engage in real consultation with the hundreds of people who are voicing concerns. Simply put, this government must send this bill to committee for further study. I will support the motion put forward by my hon. colleague, the referral amendment, and I urge all of you in this House to do that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)? Go ahead, hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you. I appreciate the words from my esteemed colleague, and I have a question for her. Previously, when the NDP were on this side of the House in opposition, they referred to the government of that day's omnibus bills many times and even asked the government of that day to keep Alberta omnibus bill free. Somehow that's been forgotten. It must be the dome effect, when you get over on that side, or something. They referred to them as a tool that the federal Conservatives had been using and called it “odious and offensive.” Again, I guess that's forgotten. That's that dome effect again.

Farming, being one of the oldest occupations that we have in this province, doesn't seem to be recognized too much. This seven-month-old government wants to come in and slam down a bill in less than 45 days – and I trust that the hon. Member for Airdrie has been hearing about that from the farmers – a bill that really should be dealt with in four separate bills. They've done this without consulting the main stakeholders, who are the farmers, the experts on farm safety, by the way, and somehow expect the farmers to just sit quiet and take it. Well, what we're hearing – and I trust the hon. member is as well – is that this bill should be pulled apart into four separate bills, not an omnibus, so that the details of employment standards and OH and S, in particular, can be included in legislation so everyone knows what's involved when it has to be voted on.

Farmers all over Alberta have told us – and I trust they've also told the members opposite – to come to this House and represent them, and that's not what we've been seeing. We've also heard them repeatedly in the farmers' rallies and in the town halls saying: slow down; put this bill to committee. Call in the witnesses, the farm safety experts, those farmers out there that rallied around this place, and reflect and refer on this bill deeply. Call in experts, and have advisers come and discuss this bill.

Now, we've heard from the Premier that it's important for the sake of potential injured workers that this bill be passed yesterday, like that wouldn't be fast enough, and that for the sake of those potential injured workers we just have to ram this thing through the House right now and somehow that will immediately save people. When this thing comes into law on January 1 – shazam – everybody is safe now. Isn't that how it's being portrayed?

Hon. member, could you maybe just elucidate a bit on this business of how all of a sudden on January 1 we're all going to be safer on the farm because the Alberta Legislature passed this Bill 6?

An Hon. Member: Shazam.

Mr. MacIntyre: Shazam.

Mrs. Pitt: I would absolutely just love to speak to that comment. Wow. January 1 is going to be such a big day for farm safety here in Alberta. You know, unfortunately, the government sort of backpedalled on their plans for this bill, claiming just a day or two ago that these changes, when this bill is passed, the regulations that define how these changes with OH and S and WCB will apply, will actually be developed over the next 18 to 24 months. Sometimes it's 36 months – we've heard that as well – so clarification from this government is certainly of the utmost necessity here. I'm absolutely shocked that this government would ram through safety regulations and protect farmers as quickly as possible, but we forgot to ask what year that was going to be. Just absolutely shocking. You know, it's really quite interesting that this government is so quick to ram through this piece of legislation without consultation.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to rise to speak to the referral amendment to send this bill back to committee. I'd like to start off by saying that my constituents of Chestermere-Rocky View and actually many of the constituents that I've heard from in many of the other constituencies on the other side of this House are reacting with nothing less than outrage. To them, the NDP does not understand the uniqueness of operating a farm, and they have no interest in taking advice or consulting those who do.

I would like to start off, if I may, by entering some letters into the record here, which I will happily table later.

I and my husband emphatically oppose Bill 6. You have not consulted actual farmers and ranchers adequately. You cannot apply 9 to 5 job rules in an industry that never was and never will be a 9 to 5 job. This is unfair and discriminatory. OH and S rules do not fit the ag industry, and any regulations legislated must be made with the ag industry's unique needs and the function in mind. This must be done in consultation and in partnership with grassroots farmers and ranchers, with lots of time for input and discussion and with all the rules and applications hammered out . . .

I am sure that it's starting to sound redundant, Madam Speaker, but I will continue on because perhaps with as many family farms as we have, we maybe need to say it 47,000 times before it starts to resonate.

. . . not after a bill has been passed that is completely unacceptable and undemocratic.

Madam Speaker, he goes on to say:

Bill 6 is an attack on families, imposing regulations on how people raise their kids, threatens the livelihood and the right to work and provide. Furthermore, it limits kids' abilities to work and bond with their families while on the farm, a good work ethic, and responsible ownership.

He goes on say that Bill 6 – and he adds in the carbon tax, which he also officially opposes – attacks the family farm.

The NDP is not for people, and they're blatantly trying to squeeze out smaller businesses in favour of large corporations; unions, a conflict of interest; and excessive government control. This bill also attacks private property and ownership rights.

This is one of my constituents, Madam Speaker.

I mean, let me be perfectly clear. I don't believe for one moment that this House is not committed to safety. That has been stated over and over again, and I am appalled that there are people on the other side of this House who would take the attitude about our farmers, the people of this province, the people who are the fabric of the beginning of this province, and say out loud that farmers do not care about their families, their children, or the workers that work on those farms. It's appalling to me. Absolutely appalling. It's disgusting.

Safety comes through proper consultation. How does the opposite side, how does the government understand what safety even is, how to regulate safety if they've never been on a farm, if they don't understand things that need to happen on that farm? Every farm is a thumbprint, Madam Speaker. Every farm has different needs and different consultation. Every farm has different buildings, fences, equipment, people, whether it's a beef farm or a grain farm. Whatever it is, it's a unique experience, and until that consultation is done, there is no broad-spectrum bill that can be passed here that will help out each of these individual farms.

We cannot trust the NDP when they promise to consult after this bill is passed. Regulations can be passed without consultation. Without consultation: let me make that clear. I'm appalled that the NDP deems farmers unworthy of proper consultation in advance of drafting this actual bill. It's shameful. Attempts at consultation after introducing this bill have been insufficient so far, and they have failed to realize that our farmers deserve an opportunity to speak to the ministers or the government or the MLAs by whom they are allegedly represented. Let me tell you. The amount of letters and e-mails and phone calls that I have gotten in my office from other constituencies is overwhelming. We are maxed out. We can't even keep up.

The attempts that this government has made to communicate with Alberta farmers so far have resulted in, and I quote: a miscommunication. This is unacceptable and entirely the fault of the government. I appreciate the fact that there has been an apology for the miscommunication. Mistakes are made. We are all going to have to hold that we've made a mistake at some point in time, and I appreciate that. But with the miscommunication in mind, perhaps we want to look at it from the point of view that it is time to slow down. How many more miscommunications does this government want to be responsible for in advance of making sure that this bill actually represents farmers? Perhaps that is exactly the reason to take the time to slow this down to talk to farmers.

Talk to us. We are more than happy to provide you with the information that we've been given so far. We have thousands of letters that were tabled that will give you the information and help to make succinct decisions with regard to safety.

They want safety. As it's been said by hon. members, there's nobody that wants safety more than the families on these farms, that want safety for the children and the workers that actually work on these farms. Please, we are begging you to listen to the people that we represent, that you represent. You represent them. This is their House. You are here to represent them. Since you refuse to listen to the cries of farmers outside this House and inside this House, I might add – unfortunately, you do not have the view that I had yesterday of people weeping in the stands. It was hard to look up there. These are our people, the people who put food on our tables weeping in the stands, out on the front steps, in my constituency. [interjections] Please don't laugh. It's not funny. It's not funny. These are our people. You are laughing at the fabric of this community and the fabric of this province.

I am going to read another letter. Let me just give you a small smattering of what I'm getting here, a tiny bit of what I'm receiving.

I am writing to you as my MLA to express my concerns and opposition to Bill 6 as it currently stands. I would hope to see further discussion and education . . .

I think we've said this before, but I'll say it again.

. . . with farming communities before anything is passed through legislation. I am concerned that the supposed NDP, who campaigned on the promise of open and transparent government . . .

Let me say it again: open and transparent government.

... would underhandedly and secretly try to push this bill through without proper forums or discussions.

Madam Speaker, I'd like that to be entered.

I have more. Let me continue.

Please, please, do all you can to stall Bill 6 until after the consultations with farmers and ranchers in the coming month. There needs to be much more consultation with grassroots producers, or the freedom for farms to be successful in Alberta will disappear.

Madam Speaker, please, they are asking. I know you understand this when I say this to you.

Please do this immediately. This draconian measure must be stopped.

This is from a retired farmer and rancher in my constituency who worked more than 50 years of hard work.

This next letter actually comes with a name, and if it's all right with you, Madam Speaker, I would like to mention this person's name from my letter.

My name is Janet Carr, and my son Riley and his young family farm and ranch in this area. We have approximately 235 head of beef cows and bulls on our cow-calf operation. As well, we grow our own feed, with about 610 acres of hay land, and we have over 900 acres in grain. We also do local custom farming to supplement our income to make ends meet in order to support our two families. My grandson and granddaughter are the fifth generation from farms in this very community. The following is an e-mail that I have sent.

And she sent this to everybody in this House. Everybody has received this e-mail.

The government must stop interfering in our livelihoods as to when we can work and how we raise our children. If they have their way while ours is being limited, who will spend all day and night in a winter storm looking after the cows and calves ...

Maybe it would be the members opposite. I'd love to see that happen. We'd invite them at 3 o'clock in the morning onto our family farms in our constituencies to come help out with this job so that you can actually have an understanding of what goes on to get food to your table.

Let me continue, Madam Speaker.

... especially when you have 18 calves born in a 24-hour period that need assistance calving, nursing, kept warm and dry, in an effort to keep both calves and cows alive? Who will get the hay off in time when there's five days of rain in the forecast and the hay is your livestock's food, their winter feed, where the quality affects the animals' health and production. How will we get our crop seeded in time in the spring? How do we get rid of our crop diseases and the bugs on our plants, that don't care if it's somebody's day off when they're harming the crop's quality and the yields so they need to be sprayed when time is of the essence? How do we get our harvest completed in time when winter is looming? As we know, in this province winter could come at any time. We do not have any control over the weather and are one of the few industries that has no control over commodity prices that factor in our successes or our failures, yet we do this anyway as it is our past and our future, our way of life and our homes. All of this affects our animals, our crops, and our financial well-being. There are farmers and ranchers, and there are some that do both. That calls for even longer periods of their busy times. No one ...

10:20

And let me repeat to the members opposite, through you, Madam Speaker.

No one that we know would ever – ever – put their children, themselves, or their employees in harm's way.

Just in case it hasn't been said enough, let me say it again: never would put them in harm's way, ever.

Let me continue, Madam Speaker.

This is not some commercial type of industry that has a construction-type yard in the city with the consistent danger that requires such strict safety measures.

Safety is of the utmost importance. They are willing to speak with the members opposite. They want to speak with you. They want to be consulted. This House owes them that consultation. That's why we're here in the first place.

This is just a farm where kids run and play, ride their horses, do their chores, and help work alongside their parents, grandparents, friends, and neighbours. The very nature of our way of life is having all of those around for branding, cattle drives, hauling bees, getting cattle to the grass, harvest times. We all pitch in to help each other in order to get the work done before the weather turns.

This sounds to me like a high-functioning community. Is that what this sounds like?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mrs. Aheer: Yes, a high-functioning community. If you go into any community, some aspects of this will be in that community.

Again:

This is our livelihood and our way of life and always has been, the way it has been since farmers and ranchers existed. Yes, we hire casual and part-time labour throughout our busy season, but we have high levels of liability insurance because farmers actually care about who is on their farms, taking care of them, and making sure that they are safe.

Again, if I can mention one more time for the record, it is appalling to me that members of this House would assume that our farmers and ranchers would not be willing to take care of their own and the people that feel honoured and privileged to work on those farms in the first place.

She continues on, Madam Speaker:

The government interference is completely inappropriate. Are they going to pay us for livestock or crop losses because we weren't allowed to take care of our own business because of something that happens that might need to be addressed and the person on duty cannot do anything because they might be a few minutes over their allotted work time? We all have safety protocols for safe beef, chemical, and grain handling, et cetera., and we follow them. Enough is enough. When we all go broke due to their new workplace legislation and fines, who will feed us?

I have a constituent, Madam Speaker, who after 50 years of work is pleading that I do all that I can. He's willing to do all that he can to help me address this situation and address the House so that our members here understand what we're actually getting at here. We are behind the safety measures. We are with you on that. This is not a matter for discussion. We, the farmers, the people that we represent want safety on their farms, have safety, have liability insurance, have those things. They are willing to discuss it and have consultation with you so that as you go through the process with these farms, we can find the necessary things that need to happen. But you owe them that consultation. Again, consultation.

I'd like to read another letter, please, Madam Speaker.

We are deeply disappointed in the Bill 6 proposal by the NDP government. We are not thrilled with this outright attack on the family farm.

The Deputy Speaker: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Through you, I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View for her words. I found that presentation interesting. I'd like to ask her a question about something that is applicable to why I think we would need to send this to committee and what many of the people of my constituency are concerned about and why they think this should go to committee. That goes back to what the Minister of Municipal Affairs said yesterday in question period. Yesterday in a response to a question about Bill 6 she said, "We will move forward on with Bill 6 because [this is just a] very basic and a small piece of the big picture moving forward."

Now, this government, again, put documents – we've talked about this – on websites that have said that they would restrict children on family farms. They said that they would restrict neighbours helping neighbours on family farms. The government, of course, says that they didn't mean for those documents to go up. I don't know the exact situation that happened there, but they do acknowledge those documents were up. So farmers and ranchers are very concerned, and I would say rightly so, after seeing documents like that that could significantly affect their livelihood and significantly affect their lifestyle.

Then what the government is doing is saying: "Here we go. We have this blank cheque. We've put in these little changes to the bill that we are saying will protect you, but we have a blank cheque that can do all the regulations afterwards, after this bill is passed and the elected officials of this Assembly that represent farmers and ranchers can no longer defend them in this place." Then the minister, Madam Speaker, is standing in this Assembly and saying: actually, this is only a small part of this; this is only a tiny part of the big picture. Well, that concerns me, and I know it concerns constituents that heard it, and I think that's all the more reason why this bill should be going to committee so that farmers and ranchers can have their say, because, quite frankly, they've lost trust in this government. I've lost trust in this government; most definitely farmers and ranchers have lost trust in the government. I don't have to tell you; it's pretty clear why. I'm sure you recognize that they have not acted in a very trustworthy and honest way with farmers and ranchers.

So I'd like the member to maybe comment on how she thinks the farmers and ranchers in her community feel given that the Municipal Affairs minister stands up here and hints that there's more to come, that there'll be maybe more punishment or more restrictions on farmers and ranchers in the future, you know. I'd be curious about what she has to say about that.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you for the question. To my point on the broad nature of that statement and on the flip side to say that it is a small portion of what is actually going to come forward: they're extremely concerning statements regarding an industry that, as I said before, Madam Speaker, is complex. It's a thumbprint. You could talk to any of the farmers on this side of the House or to people who've had the privilege of working with farmers, knowing farmers, growing up with them. Each farm is like a family. They have unique situations; they have different relationships on that farm. They also have various types of things that they do on those farms. They're not all the same.

So for a comment like that to be made, that things are coming down the pipe that we will be legislating, that they have some ideas and that this is just a small portion is extremely concerning. That just goes to show that the government actually doesn't have any idea what they're talking about. They haven't consulted with farmers because that comment would have come out with details, suggestions, thoughtful discussion regarding an industry that is the fabric of Alberta.

Thank you for the question.

The Deputy Speaker: Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My question, actually, to the member is: if a farmer was to have an accident under this present legislation with one of his workers and OH and S was to come onto that farm and, in order to be able to do a proper assessment, shut everything down during harvest and that farmer was to now be unable to get the harvest in because of maybe a freak snowstorm, which happens in Alberta, or was to lose his harvest, would the government be responsible? Because insurance would not cover that, would the government be responsible for that loss for that farmer? I'd like to ask the member what she thinks about that.

Thank you.

Mrs. Aheer: Yes. Thank you for that. That's actually a very . . . [Mrs. Aheer's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

10:30

Government Motions

Time Allocation on Bill 6

26. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in second reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

The Deputy Speaker: There is a period to respond for the Official Opposition. Go ahead, hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes, thank you very much. Madam Speaker, it's become clear through the words of the members opposite and through their actions in this Chamber that not only do they want to block important safety measures for Alberta farmers from coming into force, but they even want to block the bill from getting to the Committee of the Whole.

Members of this House will know that based on feedback from the members of the public, our government has announced our intention to make amendments to Bill 6, which confirm that farm and ranch families will be excluded from the new rules. Members of the opposition parties have been briefed on this amendment, Madam Speaker, and it's been tabled in this Chamber for the review of all members. Rather than allowing the bill to get to committee, where our amendment and, presumably, amendments of the opposition as well could be discussed, we are still stuck in second reading, with a number of motions designed to delay second reading coming from the opposition. The bill has been debated for over 10 hours at second reading. All members have had ample opportunity to speak. Rather than getting the bill to committee, the opposition would like us to spend another 10 hours debating a bill that the government has already indicated will be amended.

For that reason a time allocation motion has been put forward to help move the bill along while also providing the opposition time to participate in debate and, in particular, to focus the remainder of our time here in Committee of the Whole so that we may discuss our amendments and amendments that the opposition may have.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre to respond.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to first point out that I think the hon. Government House Leader's assertion that the opposition is filibustering is unfortunate. We're not anywhere near a stage where anybody can discuss that yet. I'd like to maybe illustrate that through you, Madam Speaker, to the Government House Leader and talk about the first time that time allocation was used in this Assembly. At the time the Government House Leader said that debate on the motion would be limited to six days on an opposition filibuster on spending from the heritage trust fund. Six days. This Government House Leader is attempting to do that for one hour.

Now, at the time that that happened, there was a combined total opposition of five, one NDP and three Social Credit MLAs as well as an independent. That's five. In this Assembly today we have 33 members of the opposition. Not all of them have even been given an opportunity yet to speak on this bill. Not all of them have. Many of them have, but they've been working their way through there. So for the Government House Leader to say that this is a filibuster is completely unrealistic. The members on this side of the Assembly have just as much of a right and just as much of a responsibility to their constituents as the government members do to theirs.

Now, Madam Speaker, as you no doubt know, the government chooses not to speak to their bills. That's unfortunate. I can see why they would want to end debate and go home, but the people that sent me here and have sent my colleagues in the Official Opposition party as well as the third party and the independent colleagues in this Assembly, our constituents, have made it clear that they want us to speak to this bill. They want us to debate this bill because it affects their lives. Yesterday we sat in this Assembly and we watched people crying in the gallery because this bill means so much to them. We're getting thousands of phone calls. We can't even keep up with the phone calls, trying to process the information on how this bill will affect them. And this government has the gall to put forward time allocation of an hour – an hour – not six days, not something reasonable so that we can get our constituents' views on the record.

Madam Speaker, I think we'll go with some quotes from opposite on how they felt about this when they were in opposition because I think their arguments at the time made sense. To quote our hon. Premier, on December 6, 2011:

All of this balancing back and forth ultimately leads . . . to several conclusions. This is not a piece of legislation that is either completely good or completely bad. There are problems within this legislation. It is being rammed through very quickly. The use of time allocation has made that go even faster than it should have.

That is not acceptable to Albertans.

Again the Premier, Madam Speaker:

A week ago this PC government apologized to party members for its failure to listen to the grassroots. Yesterday they backtracked again, this time on pension rollbacks, because they failed to listen to Albertans. It's clear that they still don't get it because now they plan to ram through . . . [a] bill without written briefings to the Assembly members and without listening to Albertans.

Again the Premier:

That apparently is the emergency that has pushed us into this situation, where the government is, I would suggest, misusing the rules of the House to ram through this bill. So just in principle it's really difficult to support such a mechanism . . .

Madam Speaker, that's exactly what they're doing now. It's unacceptable.

This government has made some mistakes on this bill, and they're running scared. We've seen it. They're getting beat up back home. They're getting the same number of calls. So what they're doing now, Madam Speaker, is trying to stifle debate so that they can get through this. They can hopefully change the story and go home for Christmas, but that is unacceptable to Albertans, and it should be unacceptable to Albertans because this is the Assembly where their issues are supposed to be dealt with. This is where democracy is supposed to take place. This is where debate is supposed to happen, and by the government taking this action, they are stifling debate. They're not just stifling the opposition members; they're stifling the people who sent us here to represent them, and I think they should very much be ashamed of their behaviour.

I will very much be voting against this motion, and I would humbly ask all members of the Assembly, including the backbench NDP MLAs, who do represent the constituents who will be very upset about this decision.

Thank you very much.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act (continued)

[Adjourned debate December 9: Mr. Mason]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd seek unanimous consent for one-minute bells on the referral amendment only, please.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any further speakers on the referral amendment?

Seeing no further speakers, we're calling for the question on the referral amendment to Bill 6.

[Motion on amendment R1 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: Back on Bill 6. The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am honoured to rise today and speak to second reading of Bill 6. To begin, I will quote the Premier and Government House Leader on their views on closure. Sadly, the following is not a tragic comedy; it is reality. The Premier said, on Wednesday, April 24, 2013:

To further limit debate by significantly limiting the amount of time allowed for budget debate within each of the days when we're allowed to debate, in my view, represents an excessive use of its majority by the government caucus.

She went on to say:

Marleau and Monpetit on pages 66 to 67 speaks to the issue of privilege and states that any disregard of or attack on the rights, powers and immunities of the House and its Members . . . is referred to as a "breach of privilege" and is punishable by the House.

Erskine May, 22nd edition, on page 108 states that any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of such House in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results may be treated as a contempt even though there is no precedent of the offence.

Madam Speaker, very strong words. Some – some – would say: reeking with hypocrisy today.

To add fuel to the fire, the Government House Leader said, on December 3, 2013:

According to Beauchesne, section 75, "The privilege of freedom of speech is both the least questioned and the most fundamental right of the Member." House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 89 also states that freedom of speech is the first right of members. "By far, the most important right accorded to Members of the House is the exercise of freedom of speech in parliamentary proceedings."

He continues:

In 1977 the First Report of the Special Committee on Rights and Immunities of Members stated that freedom of speech is a fundamental right without which [the members] would be hampered in the performance of their duties. It permits them to speak in the House without inhibition, to refer to any matter or express any opinion as they see fit, to say what they feel needs to be said in the furtherance of the national . . .

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Pardon me, hon. member.

You have a point of order?

Mr. Mason: I hesitate to raise this, Madam Speaker. I know that the third party is precluded by the rules that are in place from speaking to a motion to invoke time allocation, but the motion that's now before us is, in fact, second reading of Bill 6 and not the closure motion, which has been disposed of by the House. One ought not to reflect upon a decision that's already been made by the House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: And that's a perfect segue. Thank you.

It is clear, according to authorities, that time allocation was not intended as a mechanism by which the right of members to speak could be limited arbitrarily by the government of the day.

Madam Speaker, as the second longest serving MLA in this Legislature I can tell you that I have never seen anything like what is happening now with Bill 6. For this government to proclaim that they will take up to two years to compose regulations for this bill and only dedicate a precious few days to debating it is baffling. If you don't take it from me, take it from thousands of Albertans clear across the province. Equally absurd are introducing a bill without consultation and a set of amendments that's even longer than the original bill. As mentioned, for the government to invoke closure when ranchers and farmers are demonstrating clear across the province with a simple, decent request for consultation is simply beyond comprehension. Many find it utterly disrespectful.

Madam Speaker, I am not an expert in this field, clearly, but as a youth I lived and worked on my uncle's farm, so I can relate to the plight of our ranchers and farmers.

Here in this Legislature we've heard from many members of this House about the lack of consultation and about lumping together pieces of policy that really should not be pushed through as one piece of legislation. Madam Speaker, there is one simple way forward. The bill can be amended so that we can legislate on what this government has marketed this bill as, a piece of safety legislation for farm and ranch workers, by omitting the elements of the bill that have nothing to do with safety for ranchers and farmers. Or we can pause. We can take a step back in a very meaningful way, and we can decide how best to proceed after meaningful consultation. We might actually find that increasing education and supports and creating a system where best practices can be shared and implemented is a much more meaningful way forward. You may also decide that this legislation needs to be put again before the House, but that's a decision that you do have the ability to make.

Throughout their time as opposition members those in the government who previously sat in this Chamber were very critical of omnibus legislation. For instance, the Minister of Economic Development and Trade said, on March 19, 2015, "Omnibus bills that group together significant pieces of legislation that should be given their due course for debate in this Chamber . . . hinders our ability to get into each of these . . . as separate issues." On May 7, 2014, the member spoke of "the breakneck speed with which this PC government rams through legislation." Madam Speaker, it's obvious that history is repeating itself and not in a good way.

A year earlier the current Premier spoke to an omnibus bill that tied together three pieces of legislation. She noted that the general rule is for each issue to have a separate piece of legislation. The Premier said, on May 8, 2013:

By putting three pieces together, of course, we cut that opportunity . . .
the time for discussion,
. . . by two-thirds.

Madam Speaker, Bill 6 is actually four pieces of legislation, so all the more reason for sober second thought. If this government wishes to rush this legislation through in the next 24 hours, they have the ability to do that given the position this government has, with a majority government. However, they would be doing a massive disservice to those Albertans who've braved the cold across the province as they protested against this legislation.

Ironically, one year ago, almost exactly on today's date the Minister of Economic Development and Trade said, in his capacity at that time as opposition critic, regarding the Condominium Property Amendment Act, which was on the table at the time – one of his criticisms was that passing legislation but leaving many decisions to regulation left Albertans in the dark as to what the new rules would actually be. Essentially, some of the members opposite believed that decisions would be swept into a dark corner, where they could be developed away from the light that is the Legislature.

Madam Speaker, the member stated:

Changes that impact people's homes should happen in the Legislative Assembly through, you know, our robust debate, through different points of view, and through adequate oversight.

He went on to state:

Well – you know what? – nobody said that democracy is the most expedient form of government, but we do live in a . . . Westminster-style democracy, and details that affect condominium owners should be discussed in the light of day, not behind closed doors in the cover of darkness. That, I think, is a very legitimate concern.

If the member stands by this sentiment, then why is he prepared for his government to do the opposite for issues that are critical for ranchers and farmers?

Madam Speaker, I have some friendly and timely advice for the current government. We as the previous government made errors of judgment on legislation. That contributed to the fact that we are now sitting on this side of the aisle, so please consider this: do yourselves and all Albertans a favour; do not do the same thing. By this Premier's own admission she has lost the trust of farmers and ranchers, and if the Premier and the government want that trust back, they have the time to allow for extensive consultation, starting now. This government has a wonderful opportunity to evolve from what's perceived as a heavy-handed group that, many say, is suffering from dome disease to a much more reasonable organization. It's simply nonsensical to invoke legislation before true consultation, and that's the opposite of what any government, including this one, would strive for.

Thankfully, that can be fixed easily. They can listen to the advice of our party and the Official Opposition and the Alberta Party, but if they won't do that, they would be applauded for taking the advice of thousands of farmers and ranchers clear across Alberta, who are pleading for this government to slow down and be reasonable. Madam Speaker, I shudder at the possibility that this NDP government thinks that they're the only ones who are right on this issue and that rural and urban Albertans are all wrong. It's time for the tail to stop wagging the dog.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, I am honoured to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

I have so much more prepared, Madam Speaker, but out of respect for other speakers, I will conclude with the . . .

11:10

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, could you just pause for a moment while we get the amendment, an original copy.

Mr. Rodney: I will just conclude with these thoughts as you come to collect. This time, Madam Speaker and all hon. members, is critical for the government and all Albertans to go back to the drawing board, to do the due diligence that is not only necessary but extremely beneficial, to achieve the true goals that you have originally intended so that all of those who are affected by this bill in their lives every day have the information they require to make any and all necessary changes on their farm, so that any and all of the very well-publicized pieces of misinformation and imperfections of the bill are actually addressed in a way that reflects the opinions of those who have made sure that these serious concerns are heard.

Madam Speaker, I do not feel the need to use up all of my time. I'm happy to pass the puck. I can't wait to hear the debate on this, and I trust that, indeed, we all will do the smart thing in this House for all Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Well, I thank the hon. member for his motion. It is, in fact, for those that have not experienced this before, a hoist motion. Were it to come to completion, every member would have a right to speak again, and then it would be voted, and if it were passed, the bill would just disappear. It's a way that the opposition has of trying to basically defeat a bill by making a motion that it not be read now, because if, in fact, the House is not sitting six months from now, the bill just dies because there is nobody there to catch it.

Having said that, Madam Speaker, this is clearly an attempt to get rid of the bill and to prevent its passage by this House. As the government has indicated its intention that the bill should be passed, I urge all hon. members to vote against this amendment when the question is put, and the question will be put at the end of the hour of debate, as will the main motion. If it is defeated, then we will go on to the main motion, just so all members are clear. I urge all hon. members to defeat the hoist motion that the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed has put forward and to support second reading of Bill 6.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment H1? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm very pleased to stand up in support of the amendment put forward by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed. One of the first assignments I had as a new MLA was to get to know my constituents and the stakeholders in my portfolio. The goal of these meetings was to make sure that I understood the issues and challenges faced by the people I represent as well as the stakeholders across the province. I was supposed to find out what was unique about my constituency and what is similar to things that are happening across the province. Bill 6 has been a very eye-opening experience for all of us.

Since May I've worked very hard to provide a voice for issues of importance. You may remember me asking questions about that dialysis unit in Lac La Biche or the Mennonite school in Two Hills. Those are not the only issues I've addressed, though. I have met with First Nations and Métis. I've attended powwows and was on hand when the evacuations were happening due to the fires in Saskatchewan, along with my counterpart from Bonnyville-Cold Lake. I've met with municipal councillors to discuss local issues, and I have met with several government ministers to address broader provincial issues. My point is that for me and the rest of the Wildrose caucus our objective is to stand up in the Assembly and provide a real voice for constituents. Our goal is to ensure that what we do here reflects the concerns that we hear.

One of the concerns I heard at a town hall that I held on Saturday in St. Paul: one of the constituents stood up and was very concerned about the implications of OH and S. He related a story of a machine shop owner who had a drill press. The drill press was, you know, in the area of 30 years old, was out of manufacture, and the start-up switch went on it. Unable to get a proper start-up switch from the manufacturer, he called in an electrician, and they made it work. Unfortunately, one of his workers caught a finger and had a finger injury in the drill press, went through OH and S and Workers' Compensation Board. OH and S came and investigated. All of his paperwork was good. Everything was in place. They had a look at this unit and discovered that they had modified this drill press. Now, the switch had nothing to do at all with the incident. There was a foot pedal switch, and that was just a manual override on that thing. The company faced such an onerous fine by OH and S for modifying that piece of equipment that they went bankrupt and closed their doors. These are the concerns – these are real concerns – from my constituents.

We don't just stand up here and throw out ideas or questions that we make up in our legislative offices. We use what we have heard to inform our work, to inform our policies, and to inform our approach to addressing the government's proposed legislation. Bill 6 is a prime example of how out of touch this government is with respect to tax-paying Albertans. This legislation has angered so many Albertans that it makes it very clear how little respect this government has for the people that elected them. It seems pretty obvious that the NDP government does not have the same approach to working with Albertans.

I have received many calls from concerned constituents from very many neighbouring constituencies, frustrated that their voice and opinions are not being relayed to this Legislature unless it's through an opposition MLA. They cannot get through to their NDP MLAs, and even if they do, they do not see them standing up and voicing those views in this House. They do not feel that they are being adequately represented. I have not heard one person call and tell me that they are in favour of this Bill 6. To quote the minister of jobs, skills, and labour: I've been listening to Albertans about what Bill 6, the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, will mean for their family farms. End quote. Well, I would suggest that the minister should have consulted with farmers and ranchers before this legislation was tabled to ensure that it contained provisions suggested by the very people it supposedly protects. Listening after the fact is not the same thing as consultation before legislation.

I very much look forward to the standing votes coming up on Bill 6 and watching as the members sit down one by one by one like lemmings jumping off a political cliff.

Farmers and ranchers wanted consultation before legislation. Now this government is having to make amendments to the legislation they tabled, again without consultation. We will be expected to vote on this new amendment, again without having an opportunity to hear from our constituents. This is unacceptable and is not democratic. We need time to get this amendment out to our people so that they can have time to look at it, and this hoist amendment would give us that opportunity. We need to understand it and provide feedback. This is real consultation. That is what hard-working Albertans deserve. Most farmers and ranchers in Alberta are second, third, or even fourth generation. They know their business. If it was as dangerous as the government would like us to believe, do you not think that they would have moved away from such a horrific industry?

I'd like to at this point bring up a survey, an online survey, on labour legislation. I'll just read you a couple of the questions. Number 1, "Hours of work for employees: Limited to 12 hours in a day except during critical times."

Question 2, "Break: 30 minute break after 5 hours of work in most situations."

Then they go on to where you can check off: "Please indicate the impact you feel providing employees with a break after 5 hours of work would have on farm or ranch employees." You know, I've been involved in a lot of harvest activities where people are working, driving combines, driving the grain trucks, and mom and auntie and grandma come out to the field with a table and set it up, and everybody stops. They're not punching clocks or looking at clocks, Madam Speaker.

"Rest days: One day of rest for every full week worked (7 consecutive days)."

"Overtime: Overtime pay of at least 1.5 times the hourly rate" or banked time "for hours worked in excess of 8 hours a day or 44 hours in a week." It gets onerous there. Then, again, they ask you how it's going to affect farm or ranch employees. You know, I have been a union member in my past. This reads just like a collective bargaining document to me.

Getting back to my question about the generations of farmers, if agriculture was so dangerous, I'm surprised that farmers and ranchers survived for four generations to be here today with all of their limbs intact. It's an absolute miracle.

Had the government listened first and done a true job of consulting with farmers and ranchers, they would not now be faced with the embarrassing reality of having to amend their own legislation coming forward. I certainly hope that they get it right this time. But we know that until we hear from the people, they will not get it right. To quote the Premier from Hansard in June of this year: "I think that's a good start to show that we're all going to be working together. But we'll do that transparently, and we will consult with . . . Albertans to make sure that what we do works." She seems to have forgotten her own statement. Even though at the time she was talking about working on a climate change policy, her supposed commitment to consultation certainly fell short when it came to Bill 6.

Only after continued pressure from average Albertans and the Wildrose Official Opposition has this government decided to have a second look at this bill. Unfortunately, again, we will not likely have the opportunity to bring it to our constituents for consultation first. The Premier seems to be blaming public servants for miscommunication and confusion about the contents of this bill instead of taking responsibility, which she actually finally admitted to here in the House a few days ago, for the shortcomings of the legislation itself. Had she simply followed a proper consultation process, we would likely be a lot further along with a lot less trouble from our farmers and ranchers.

This government tabled a bill that impacts over 45,000 farms. The resulting public backlash is pretty clear. This bill does not reflect the concerns of farmers and ranchers across this province. This government and the Premier need to own up to the fact that her government is trying to rush through legislation that will have negative consequences for a major piece of Alberta's economy.

There was a clear attempt to try to cause a division amongst farmers over the last weekend by reports that the Hutterite colonies would be exempt from this legislation. Well, it didn't work. Farmers stand united in this fight against Bill 6, and the Hutterite leadership has spoken publicly against accepting any form of exemption that does not include all family operations equally. You will not divide family farming communities.

Farmers in my area that attended a quickly formed town hall in St. Paul this weekend were unanimous in supporting putting Bill 6 to committee, where they can have their input. It is time for real consultation on this matter. We need to support this hoist amendment and get this bill stopped for at least six months.

I wonder how many NDP MLAs in rural ridings held town hall meetings over the past weekend to find out what their farm and ranch families really think. That many: quite likely zero, as they do not want to hear what the farm community has to say. Easier to ignore people and hope they go away. They're not going to go away. They have asked me to fight this to the end, and that's exactly what we're doing as an opposition.

The fact that the government may propose amendments to clarify this bill speaks more loudly than anyone ever could that this legislation is ill-advised and misinformed. The fact that they have to make corrections on the fly further supports our concern that the government really does not know much about the potential impact of their legislation and probably not a lot about the industry itself. If they had gone about this properly, they would have spent time working with farmers and ranchers to ensure that the legislation they tabled actually made sense and addressed necessary safety issues properly in a way that actually supports the industry. While there is definitely the need to bring improved regulations for large operators, we are disappointed that there is no recognition of the special nature of the family farm.

This bill is much more important than partisan politics. This government is trying to rush through legislation that will undermine the industry that impacts approximately 60,000 people in this province. You need to get it right. Wildrose is strongly urging the government to take our advice, slow down this bill, vote for this amendment, and send it to committee for authentic consultation with the agricultural community of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments for the hon. member under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise on the amendment before the House. You know what? The first thing I'm going to do is start out by agreeing with the Government House Leader. He said some things that are important. This is normally what's called a hoist amendment, and it's normally what is designed to get rid of a piece of bad legislation or what the opposition thinks is a piece of bad legislation. This is a little unique in that this is actually an opportunity for the government to get it right. As the hon. House leader for the government said, this is to bring it back in six months. Six months from today, June 9, is a Thursday. Between now and June 9 the government could, if they decided to do the right thing and serve Albertans, use that time wisely, talking to farmers, talking to ranchers, getting it right, deciding what the rules and regulations will be around new legislation for safety for farmers and ranchers, and come back into this House and force us on this side of the House to bang our desks in approval and vote for it and cheer the government on. They have that ability right now if they love Alberta enough to do the right thing and only if.

I can only imagine, Madam Speaker, the joy that the government would have in forcing us on this side of the House to bang our desks in approval after all we've gone through in the last week or two on this particular bill. I think members on this side of the House, while we don't expect it, actually will agree with me that they could force us to do that.

The government has done something almost impossible, Madam Speaker. They have united the far right, the medium right, the centre right, the centre, and even a good part of the left against what this government is doing. You know what? Unfortunately, without the consultation this is completely disrespectful of all farmers and all ranchers in rural Alberta. In fact, this government has actually united rural and urban Alberta against this government. I can tell you as a Calgary MLA that people are not happy. I'm getting e-mails and phone calls constantly, and they cannot believe the heavy-handed, high-handed – sorry to say it – arrogant way in which this has been handled. What's most disappointing, Madam Speaker, is that the opportunity to make it better is so easy.

You know what? I'm not going to name where the member from the government is from because they're not a minister and I think we're here to hold the government to account, and private members, of course, are not part of government, but there was a private member from the government side this last week that stood up in front of 500 of that member's constituents and said: no, we're not going to listen to you; we're going to ram this through even though you pretty much all want us to not do that. Wow, Madam Speaker. The member signed the member's own political finish line. I'm trying to avoid using overexaggerated words, but really she set the expiry on her political career to the next election. It doesn't have to be that way. It doesn't have to be that way.

You know what? The Progressive Conservative Party – our members have tried every which way to get the government to do the right thing, to listen to farmers and ranchers, to let the family farm survive and work with them to put safety regulations and legislation in place with their co-operation. They've made it quite clear, the farm and ranch community, that they want to co-operate. They do. I say: let them. Let them. We could do this together. What a great day that would be.

Madam Speaker, I could go on. There's an hour. We've gotta share it between all of our colleagues. Out of respect for this House, out of respect for my colleagues, out of respect for the farmers and ranchers and all Albertans that may be listening, I'm going to sit down saying that I will be supporting this motion, and I implore the government to do the right thing between now and June 9. There is still time.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

If not, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Klein, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's been stated ad nauseam in this Assembly that we have regrets, the government has regrets, about how Bill 6 was initially communicated to the public and to farmers. However, I am proud to be part of a government working to protect the rights of vulnerable working people and to provide them with the basic protections that they deserve, and I'm not prepared to delay these rights for another minute.

I appreciate that farm families have concerns, but let's be clear, Madam Speaker. This government and this bill will delineate between what it means to be a parent and what it means to be an employer on a farm. There is no desire to change the way family farms operate and how farm families raise their children. The only goal is to protect paid employees and give them a financial safety net in the event of injury or death.

Madam Speaker, I always appreciate the sage input from our loyal opposition. What's been missing from their input, however, has been the positive aspects of this bill and the positive aspects that it will bring to families who make a living hiring themselves out for farm work. This is primarily the peace of mind that comes with the financial safety net and the ability to be able to refuse unsafe work and working conditions. We've heard the stories over the years of paid farm workers being killed and leaving their family without any means. We've heard the stories of how these families have to litigate to receive any type of compensation. This bill will give peace of mind to these families and will also help to protect farmers from the aforementioned litigation.

Madam Speaker, the lack of rights for paid farm workers is a black hole in Alberta's legislation. When I read the OH and S Act, with all its protections around refusing unsafe work, et cetera, and I see that there's an exemption for farm workers, it makes me sick to my stomach. This exemption is disturbing, antiquated, and long overdue for change. With this bill we'll be able to provide paid workers with basic protections, and through consultation we will be able to provide the exemptions necessary to run a farm such as hours of work, days of work, et cetera. Other occupations have these types of exemptions, made in consultation, and the same will be true for farms. We've heard in this Assembly over the past week that when labour and OH and S legislation was first crafted, workers were given basic protections first and that the details such as hours of work were worked out in consultation after the basic protections were in place. That's what will happen with this bill.

There have been a lot of alarmist things said both inside and outside of the Assembly, and one of those things is that our government is trying to unionize all farms in Alberta. Well, Madam Speaker, that's not true. No government in Canada has this ability. While the ability for paid farm workers to organize is available through this bill, the Supreme Court of Canada already gave them this right in a decision. I well know that groups that do organize unions do so when they feel unsafe and unhappy about their working conditions. Well, Bill 6 just may give paid farm workers the say that they need for good working conditions, that may remove the need for these workers to organize.

I read a quote recently from the leader of the third party from January 2015, and I believe it was an interview coming on the heels of the death of a paid farm worker. He was asked why his government wasn't moving to protect farm workers with legislation. His response – and I paraphrase – was that it's an Albertan tradition that we don't want to change. A tradition, Madam Speaker? Hazing on kids' sports teams used to be a tradition, but it's dangerous, so it's not done anymore. Tradition is not a reason to put paid farm workers and their families in danger or leave them without a means of livelihood.

I encourage everyone in this Assembly to move past the early miscommunication and move forward with the work of protecting all of Alberta's workers and developing the necessary regulations to make it work through consultation.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Westhead: Well, I'd really like to thank the member for his take on this subject. He talked a little bit about changing traditions and, you know, sort of sometimes breaking from the status quo, so I'd like him to maybe expand a little bit about what that means to him and maybe about what his motivations were for running for election to do some of these kinds of things.

My other question. He talked about occupational health and safety, and I'd like him to, if he wouldn't mind, elaborate on how our occupational health and safety system here in Alberta contemplates a joint relationship between the employer and the employee, to work together in a collaborative manner, to determine and create a safe workplace.

Mr. Coolahan: I'm sorry, hon. member. What was the first part of that question?

Mr. Westhead: You talked about sort of challenging the status quo and breaking from tradition. You know, some of us here ran for election for the purpose of making some positive changes for the people here in Alberta in the best interests of the public, and I wonder if you want to talk a little bit about that.

Mr. Coolahan: Certainly. I've been advocating for rights for paid farm workers for many years. I think it's something that's been sorely lacking from Alberta's legislation – there's no question – and that was part of the NDs' platform during the election.

OH and S legislation says that we have joint health and safety committees. That's usually run between the employer and, if there's a union, a union rep there. If there's not, then there'll be a representative from the workers. They're great at maintaining safety. You know, there's been a lot of talk about education being a source of protection. It's very true. I mean, you need education to make sure that people are safe. What's missing in that piece is the compensation piece, that I think is very important with this bill. Education is not going to compensate a family whose breadwinner died.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Cardston-Taber-Warner under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Hunter: Yes, Madam Speaker. I find this absolutely rich. We have had a debate about this. Now we've been time allocated to one hour, and all of a sudden now the NDP decide to start getting up and talking about this issue. It's absolutely hypocritical. Absolutely hypocritical. Now what we're going to find here is that . . .

Mr. Schmidt: We've got lots to say now.

Mr. Hunter: Yes, they have lots to say after we have one hour to be able to discuss this. "Okay. Now we're going to add insult to injury." We have a situation where we have one hour to be able to talk about this now, and they're going to take and make sure that they use up that hour. It's absolutely hypocritical that they would do such a thing.

Now, under the rules, from what I understand, I have to ask a question, so I will ask a question. You talked about miscommunication. Here's a miscommunication for you. Madam Speaker, the Premier said that the Hutterites were going to be exempt from this. The Hutterites never asked for that, but let's just go with this for a second, that the Hutterites are exempt. The Premier also said that every Albertan deserves to be able to come home safe. Now, she can't have it both ways. Do Hutterites have the right to come home safe? If she's saying that they're exempt, then she's saying that they don't deserve to come home safe. They're one of the biggest farmers in Alberta. I would absolutely love to see the spin on this one.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Klein, did you wish to comment?

Mr. Coolahan: Sure. My colleagues are telling me that the Premier didn't say that, for one, and that Hutterites are not paid farm workers.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To the hon. member. In your speech you mentioned hazing, one of the extreme forms of bullying. I found that interesting during this discussion, this time-shortened discussion, on Bill 6. I'd like you to clarify, please.

Mr. Coolahan: I was only using it as an example of tradition, Madam Speaker. That's all. If it was a poor analogy related to bullying and the hon. member takes it that way, I apologize.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am in support of this hoist motion, and I'd like to speak about it. "Peace, Order, and good Government" is the introductory phrase of section 91 of the Canadian Constitution Act, 1867 – "Peace, Order, and good Government" – generally stating the scope of the legislative jurisdiction of Parliament. In the eyes of some of the Fathers of Confederation this clause was a general power enabling Parliament to enact laws. When we as legislators sit in this House, we must remember the foundations on which our representative democracy is built. "Peace, Order, and good Government" is not just a phrase; it is a responsibility we have when we make our decisions.

I want to quickly lay out the process for the hon. members of this Assembly. Madam Speaker, here is what we know as absolute facts. Bill 6 was tabled in the House on November 17, 2015. Consultation, this term used very lightly, was done, whereas some have dubbed it as the come-out-and-be-told meetings, where the bureaucrats kicked out opponents to the bill and failed to listen to the concerns. I don't know if this is considered as consultation. Thousands of farmers have come from all over this province to protest this piece of legislation through rallies in every way that they know how, yet this government has still not listened.

To abate some of these issues, the Premier has thrown the bureaucrats under the bus – I would hate to be a bureaucrat under this government – offered divisive, politically charged exemptions for certain groups such as Hutterite colonies, and is now haphazardly amending their own legislation. The law was five pages, and the amendments are six pages. Obviously, there hasn't been enough consultation amongst themselves on this issue. The NDP have denied that they meant to include children on family farms despite a government-issued document where they clearly state that this is their intent.

This morning the government not only said, "No more debate in this House" – we don't get to debate this anymore in the House; I guess you could say that one hour is a debate – but now they're saying that farmers and ranchers no longer get any representation on this issue. That's the most deplorable part about this, Madam Speaker. In this House we will differ – that's the democratic process that we have signed up for – but this isn't about us. This isn't about an individual person. This is about 65,000 farmers and ranchers that have not been consulted on this issue. They have not had the right to be able to say yes or no. It will take time to be able to get that information. If they don't get that information to the government, how will the government know what they want? Do they represent the people? Do they represent the farmers and ranchers? They say that they do, but if they're not willing to consult on this issue, really, where is the representation?

Madam Speaker, farmers are confused, and so am I. I'm confused as to why this government insists on trudging through on an ideological piece of legislation without fully considering the effects it will have on our farmers. I'm confused as to why this government has not properly consulted with stakeholders, the people who are in the trenches. They deserve this. I'm confused as to why this government cannot get their story straight, their facts right, but I am even more confused as to how they can honestly expect us and all Albertans to trust them from now on.

Madam Speaker, this is not a democracy; this is a party running off ideology and refusing to listen to its citizens. They're telling rural Albertans how to live their lives and how to get paid doing it and how much they can make. This is a government that does not create peace. It creates disorder. But, most importantly, they have shown that this NDP caucus is not a good government.

I urge the members opposite to follow these tenets of our parliamentary system and respectfully ask them to vote in favour of this hoist amendment so that the bill, that all of our farmers have been asking for, can be killed.

Now, one of the members across the way mentioned their work experience dealing with federal bills. If I understand the member's underlying message, it was that government should take things to committee. She referred to the federal government. At the federal level all bills go to committee to ensure proper consultation, Madam Speaker. All bills. Here we have seen a few bills being sent to committee so that we can get proper consultation and proper direction from our stakeholders. But on the ones that really matter, such as Bill 6, for the farmers and ranchers, the 65,000 that are represented here: no consultation. That is shameful.

At the federal level they consult. They don't rush things through. They do their due diligence. Hearings are held. These are special meetings, where different people inside and outside the government can comment on the bill. They ask government officials and experts, also known as witnesses, to come and answer questions. These special meetings are called committee meetings. These committees can suggest changes or amendments to the bill when it gives a report to the House. They then go to a report stage. This is where the committee reports the bill back to the House. All parliamentarians can then debate the bill. The bill then goes to third reading, where it is debated again. Madam Speaker, this is the proper process. This is the Westminster process, that has taken hundreds of years to develop because it is the right approach, because if you do it this way, you have the best chance of being able to get the legislation right for the people you're supposed to be representing.

Now, the message from the farmers and ranchers has been clear, and they have chanted it on the steps of our Legislature over and over again: kill Bill 6. I don't think you can miss that message unless you're not listening. I didn't see a lot of our members opposite out amongst the crowd out there.

Now, this is the worst part, Madam Speaker. While farmers and ranchers sat in these galleries over the past two weeks, they wrung their hands, they shook their heads, and they shed tears because of what this government is doing. The most deplorable part about it is that I've sat back here and looked over to the other side, and I've seen the smirks, the smiles, and the absolute disrespect for the farmers and ranchers and the plight that they're in. This is the sort of thing that is so unclassy, absolutely unclassy. I would hope – I would absolutely hope – that the members opposite would think about their actions, think about the people that they're going to be affecting by this legislation, that they're ramming through, and remember that if the tables were turned, would they appreciate this kind of behaviour towards them? I highly doubt it. I highly doubt it.

The people of Alberta, the farmers and ranchers that we have talked to have spoken clearly and have told us their message. We have over 30,000 petition names that we will be presenting. The parliamentary secretary has been overwhelmed by the names. We only have 20,000 that we can present today, which we will. We have over 10,000 more that we will present as soon as we can have them go through the proper processes and be checked. We have letter after letter that concerned Alberta farmers and ranchers have presented to us. I have no doubt, because I've seen who they've CCed these letters to, that they have sent them to the members opposite. I have never heard you read one of those letters. That is deplorable. Do you represent the people in your riding? If you do, then you should read the letters. You should represent the face of them.

This is the sort of thing that we in the opposition are opposed to. We are opposed to this government and the NDP caucus not representing their people, having the courage to be able to say that this is bad legislation or at least the courage to say that we need more consultation for the people we represent. We have not heard that, Madam Speaker, and the question is: why is it so silent on that side?

Improving safety on farms is critical, but these changes are coming too fast against our second most important industry and without consultation. The small family farm, the people who put the bread on our table, deserve to be better consulted about these changes. We are calling on the government, through this hoist amendment, to stop this bill and consult thoroughly before making any changes. The hoist amendment will postpone the passing of this bill for six months, which effectively means that it will not pass. This will also allow time for the government to really think about the best amendments, the best way to approach this issue. It will also allow time for farmers and ranchers to be heard, to come to Edmonton to discuss their concerns, and to digest the proposed changes. Hopefully, the government will realize that an omnibus bill is the wrong way to go and break it up into maybe four bills and consult properly on each of those.

While we understand the need to bring in improved regulations for larger commercial operations, we are disappointed that there is no recognition of the special nature of the family farm. B.C. allows this special recognition for family farms. Alberta farmers are now at a competitive disadvantage to our neighbours.

The pace that this government has set will allow only 45 days to consult and pass a law that will make massive changes and bring in big costs and red-tape increases to our agricultural industry, especially for small farmers. Madam Speaker, we are in a situation already in this province where young children of farmers on small family farms are struggling with wanting to take over the family farm. Do you honestly believe that adding more red tape, more regulations, more cost to small family farms would incentivize young children to want to take over family farms? In fact, what you're doing is that you're actually saying, "Let's get rid of small family farms, and let's make the big corporate farms bigger," because you'll drive small family farms out of the industry. This is the sort of thing that we don't want to have.

We live in a province that has one of the highest per capita family farms in Canada. Do we want to stop that? Do we want to inhibit that? We should be proud of that. That's something that we should be proud of. This government needs to recognize this. Had they done the proper consultation, they would have recognized that. They would have seen that. But because they're pushing this through because of ideological reasons, they have not given this the proper due diligence that they need to, and farmers are upset because of that.

Farmers that we have talked to across the province do not feel consulted and were looking for more flexibility to achieve the desired outcome of improving safety on farms. If the government was serious about getting the legislation right, they would have actually consulted with stakeholders, not dropped wide-ranging omnibus legislation that will have an impact on the 45,000 farms and ranches across Alberta. The NDP has already aggravated Alberta's largest industry, energy, gas and oil. Now they're going after the second-largest . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt you, hon. member, but pursuant to Government Motion 26, agreed to earlier this morning, the time allotted has now expired.

I must put the hoist amendment motion to a question.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, December 9, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Hon. members, I hope that you'll give me some licence to make this introduction myself today. I have the honour of introducing a friend, a mentor to not only myself but to this Assembly. The former member is with us today in two capacities, first, as a former Speaker of this Assembly; and, secondly, as a board member for the Alberta Association of Former MLAs, which you may hear more about later today. It is my great pleasure to introduce Mr. Gene Zwodzsky, who is seated in our Speaker's gallery. If he would rise and receive the warm welcome.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Ms Jacquie Fenske. Jacquie is the former Progressive Conservative caucus colleague who represented the good people of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville from 2012 to 2015. Previous to her election to this Legislature, she served a distinguished career as a three-term councillor in Strathcona, where she was a respected advocate for her rural areas. She has brought not only effective advocacy to the provincial Legislature, but she remains a strong voice for rural Albertans to this day. Despite the fact that Ms Fenske is being eclipsed by the Legislature clock, I would ask that she slide out from behind it and accept the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any school groups with us today?

I would recognize the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. Hon. members, on behalf of yourself, Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to rise and introduce to you and through you the Legislative Assembly Office managers. We have Scott Ellis, senior financial officer and director of FMAS; Cheryl Scarlett, director of human resources, information technology, and broadcast services; Jacqueline Breault, manager of corporate services; Val Rutherford, manager of IT planning and development; Lyndsay Tischer, human resource services manager; Jillian Tilley, manager of IT operations; Darren Joy, manager of financial services; Val Footz, Legislature Librarian; Rhonda Sorensen, manager of corporate communications and broadcast services; Al Chapman, manager of visitor services; Allison Quast, executive assistant to the Clerk. They are joined by Jessica Dion, paralegal; and Trafton Koenig, legal counsel. They are here for this historic and special day of recognition for Dr. David McNeil, Clerk of the Legislative Assembly. They have had the privilege of working closely alongside Dr. McNeil over the last several years. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm pleased to meet the people who do the real work around here.

I would also acknowledge the Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the great honour today of rising to introduce to you and through you Dr. Mary Machum, who happens to be our Clerk's fiancée, and his little sister, Ms Linda McNeil. Now, it says here that this is a real surprise to the Clerk, but I suspect he's kind of had a sense that this was coming. I know we're all thrilled to welcome these two women, who are able to join us today to see the Clerk in his home away from home. I would ask both Mary and Linda to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome, guests. This is a particularly pleasant day for this House and a milestone.

I would ask the Member for Edmonton-Decore to please rise.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some of the hard-working staff from the Edmonton North primary care network. The Edmonton PCN, located at Northgate Centre, is comprised of family doctors and health care professionals working together to improve the health of the community. Visiting us today are Leanne McGeachy, general manager; and Carly Strong, communications co-ordinator. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Education and Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly here today the AUPE Pay and Social Equity Committee. With us observing the proceedings are Susan Slade, Phyllis Faulkner, Raminder Gill, Barbara Brolly, Janet Ansah, Val Whelen, Cassandra Campeau, Christina Misquitta, and last but not least, my wife, Somboon Eggen. If they could please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Theresa Levasseur. Theresa joins us today because of the outstanding work she does within our city. As the founder of Smile-Edmonton Theresa spends every Sunday in front of the Hope Mission, feeding and interacting with as well as clothing the people waiting in line for the shelter. Her goal from the onset was to connect those who have enough with those who don't. I have watched Smile-Edmonton grow over the last few years, and I am very grateful for the work that they have done within our community. Theresa is accompanied today by her daughter Rachelle as well as Eve Butz. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm extremely happy today to be able to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my cousin Tracy Douglas-Blowers. Tracy is currently the director of membership and industry relations with the Alberta Hotel & Lodging Association. She also served as councillor for the city of Lloydminster, being elected in 1997. Her election and desire to give back to her community was a huge motivation for me to aspire for public office as well at such a young age. I'd ask that she please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.
Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise on this most special day – it's bring-your-cousin-to-work day – and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly my second cousin Mike Shiplack. Like so many before him, he has brought his talents to Alberta, from Saskatchewan most recently. Mike, I would ask you to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure for me today to introduce through you to the Assembly five prominent community members from Mill Woods, active members of the Alberta Liberal Party. I'll introduce them to you and ask them to stand as I mention their names so that we can recognize them. Sital Singh Nanuan is a successful engineer. He has been president of the Edmonton Mill Woods Liberal Party of Canada's riding association for many years. He ran as a candidate and has helped many other candidates in various capacities. Mr. Nanuan also played a major role in the water treatment system for Golden Temple as an engineer. Amarjeet Singh Grewal is a renowned community leader and has held various positions with the Liberal Party of Canada along with running for the federal Liberals in Edmonton Mill Woods in 2006. He also has a strong background as a union leader and activist.

Maghar Singh Ubhi is a very successful hotelier and leader in the Sikh community – stay standing, if you will; that's fine – and has held various positions with the Liberal Party over the past many years, also as a fundraising chair for Edmonton-Mill Creek. Parminder Singh Boparai is a successful entrepreneur and is currently serving as treasurer for the federal Liberal EDA of Edmonton Mill Woods, and Avtar Singh Pannu has served as president of the Sikh Federation of Edmonton and was one of the key members in then Liberal leader and current Senator Grant Mitchell's leadership team.

Thank you for joining us. Let's give them the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.
The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Leah and Christine Allen. Leah is a proud born-and-raised Albertan from my constituency who lives in Cochrane. She lives with posttraumatic stress disorder from a former abusive marriage. She is also a mother of three fantastic girls, one of whom is with us today. Leah is a volunteer in her community of Cochrane not only as a 4-H leader but in the local schools as well. Leah's daughter Christine became interested in the Legislature a year ago after learning about government in her grade 7 social class. She also took part in a mock vote for the recent provincial and municipal elections, and she is involved with 4-H, curling, volleyball, and the chess club. I'd ask them both to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, you will note that at the table today we have all of the table officers present. This Assembly has very many devoted public servants who every day assist and support us in this institution we call democracy. One of those individuals will be soon leaving us after some 28 years of service.

I will make a few additional comments, but I know there are several members of the House who would like to make some comments. I would ask the Government House Leader to proceed.

Dr. W.J. David McNeil Clerk of the Legislative Assembly

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure today to acknowledge the distinguished service of the Clerk of our Legislative Assembly, Dr. David McNeil. After 27 years and as the second-longest serving Clerk in Alberta's history Dr. McNeil is retiring. We've had six Clerks since the first sitting of the House in 1906, and only one has served longer. David McNeil has served with five Speakers and seven Premiers over that time. David McNeil became Clerk of the Legislative Assembly on August 1, 1987, the day after Edmonton's tornado, the worst natural disaster in our history, and he has weathered many storms since, deftly guiding this House through procedure in a nonpartisan, informed, and objective manner.

Now, Mr. Speaker, knowing that this was coming up, I took the opportunity in the halls on the way out of the building to look at all of the pictures – you know, they have the pictures of all the MLAs and the officers of the Assembly – and I saw that the most consistent photo in each Assembly's picture was Dr. McNeil. I could follow him back into, well, not quite his youth, but he had the most amazing pair of 1980s glasses in one of the earliest ones.

No doubt his doctorate in management science has served the House well as he helped the Legislature navigate a course through, shall we say, some rocky situations from time to time. Equally, his chemical engineering degree, unique amongst parliamentarians, prepared him to be a problem solver. He knows which things not to mix.

Whether it was ensuring that office space was provided in all corners of the province for our constituencies or tackling complex issues over caucus allowances, Dr. McNeil's approach has always been based on finding good solutions. As he described his role: my job is to look after the 87 politicians and make sure they have the office space, the staff, and all the other resources they need to do an effective job representing their constituents.

Beyond his duties in the House, Dr. McNeil's responsibilities extend to all government and opposition caucus offices, constituency offices and allowances, the Legislature Library, Hansard, and the smooth running of the offices of the Assembly, including the Information and Privacy Commissioner, the Auditor General, and the Ethics Commissioner.

Dr. McNeil's distinguished career has guided this Legislature through many transitions over the past 28 years, and through those transitions he has offered a steady hand and learned advice. He has also embraced technological advance so that, for example, the records of the Legislature are now available digitally to all Albertans no matter how remote. Recognizing his exemplary service, Dr. McNeil was awarded a Queen's Diamond Jubilee medal in November 2012. His prior public service includes duties with the Alberta government's personnel administration office and the government of Saskatchewan. He has been actively involved with organizations such as the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, Athabasca University, and the United Way.

Hon. members, in view of his significant contribution to current and, particularly, to former members of the Assembly, it's my great pleasure to announce that the board of directors of the Alberta Association of Former MLAs this last weekend voted unanimously to make Dr. David McNeil its first honorary member. In this regard I was very pleased that former Speaker Zwodzesky, who chairs the membership committee of that organization, has delivered to me a letter confirming this, and I will later table that in the Assembly for the record.

On a personal note, I just want to say that Dr. McNeil has been a good friend. I've admired his advice and his great sense of humour. We've had some great talks about fast cars, of which he is a bit of an aficionado, and he is a big fan of NDP Christmas videos as well, I think, Mr. Speaker. I believe I speak for all MLAs when I congratulate David McNeil for this honour, thank him for his dedicated, exemplary public service, and wish him a long and happy retirement. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I know there is much more applause to come. There are a number of other individuals who would like to extend their appreciation.

The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, representing the Official Opposition.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise here to honour a great man and a great friend to all in the Assembly, Dr. David McNeil. Dr. McNeil has served the Assembly with honour and distinction for almost 30 years. Dr. McNeil has seen seven Premiers come and go from this House during his time as Clerk. Some of them went before they were ready to go, but you, sir, you always served well. The Clerk was also there to provide assistance and leadership to 392 MLAs during his tenure, and I am proud to be one of them.

I first got to know Dr. McNeil four years ago, upon my election in 2012. At that time 15 of the 17 members in our caucus were brand new. I remember thinking that Dr. McNeil would need a lot of patience with the sizable crop of new MLAs. While some might say patience, I like to think that we were just testing him to keep him sharp. I sure hope the experience working with those rookies came in handy this time around because the Wildrose elected 18 brand new MLAs, just a fraction of the 70 new faces.

All of us have done our job better because of Dr. McNeil's kind assistance. Dr. McNeil's ability to handle the demands of new members requires a special kind of patience and delicacy that he has demonstrated both time and time again. It was about a year ago that some of my former colleagues decided that Christmas would be a good time to really test the mettle of our Clerk and our entire staff. With just a day or two before LAO staff were to break for the holidays, news broke that some significant MLA office and personnel changes were required.

His service to the province and this Assembly is well known, but I want to take the opportunity to thank him on a personal level for all you did for me and the Wildrose caucus at that time. I also know that my colleagues who were here at the time share that feeling as well.

Our House leader can attest to the value that Dr. McNeil provided to our caucus as our House leader previously served as our chief of staff. I know he wishes that he could be here to speak his tribute, but he wanted me to let the Assembly know that not only is our Clerk the consummate professional; he is also one of the friendliest people on the grounds. I agree. He wanted to particularly thank the Clerk for the kindness and attention he gave to the House leader's small children. I know that a generation of school kids have experienced that very same thing.

I am just one of the about 400 former and current members of this Assembly who could stand up and wax poetic about their experience with Dr. McNeil. Sir, you've served us all well. I want to thank the Clerk for all the help and guidance he has given me. I want to thank him for his determination to protect and safeguard democracy in this place, and I want to thank him for his wonderful sense of humour. Those are all qualities I will always remember.

On behalf of the Wildrose Official Opposition I wish Dr. McNeil all the best in his much-deserved retirement, and I know he'll enjoy much of it ripping around in cars, as the Government House Leader said, often too fast. Best of luck, Dr. McNeil, and thank you for all your service. We will all miss you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

On the way in the Clerk did not know that his other table officers were in the line behind us. I whispered to him as we were coming in if I could have some licence to seek that other members might get a chance to speak, and he gave me the same line that he's continued to give me: "Mr. Speaker, follow the procedure. Follow the procedure."

Notwithstanding that, I will therefore ask for unanimous consent to recognize the comments from the third party and the leaders of the Liberals and the Alberta Party.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to speak on behalf of both present and past members of the Progressive Conservative caucuses that have served with Dr. McNeil in this august Chamber during his long and distinguished career as our Clerk. In speaking to my colleagues both past and present, there is a universal sense of respect and admiration for Dr. McNeil.

He has been integral to the development of the Legislative Assembly Office, the LAO, as an independent and highly professional body serving Members of this Legislative Assembly and assisting them in discharging their duties to Albertans. In fact, the LAO did not exist as an independent, nonpartisan body in this province until 1972. Since taking on the role of Clerk in 1987, Dr. McNeil has brought his professionalism, his analytical ability, and his steadfast adherence to the principles of independence and impartiality. As only the sixth Clerk, as has been noted, to serve this Assembly since 1905 – and I would say that I take a certain amount of guilty pleasure in saying that we in the Progressive Conservative caucus helped pad his Premier statistics – he has gained a national and international reputation, well deserved, as the dean of Clerks in all of the Commonwealth parliaments all around the world.

I know that people know Dr. McNeil for his unimpeachable professionalism and his calm demeanour, but he is also well known for his enthusiasm for working with the youth of Alberta, whether it's been with the hundreds of pages that have served in this Chamber, with the thousands of children that have attended the School at the Legislature program as well as the MLA for a Day initiative. Professionalism, mentorship, leadership, and devotion to duty: these have all been the hallmarks of his service to this Assembly and to the people of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, when preparing a tribute such as this, I always like to probe for some personal anecdotes and accounts that might be lesser known about the individual. Well, I found a few. Dr. McNeil is a true Renaissance man. He keeps up to date with the latest trends in music, in art, and he also worked for many years as a ski instructor at Snow Valley. I guess it's not as little known as I thought it was, but our Clerk drives a Porsche and regularly attends, as he did this year, the Porsche Sport Driving School. Well, finally we've answered the mystery as to who was burning doughnuts in the Legislature parking lot earlier this year.

Mr. Speaker, on a final note that is very personal to our caucus, I want to thank Dr. McNeil for his friendship and compassion on the day of the tragic accident that took the Member for Calgary-Greenway from among us. Doctor, your calm on a day when our hearts were broken and emotions were laid bare was a source of great comfort to our caucus and indeed to all members of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all of the members of Progressive Conservative caucuses past and present, our legislative staff, our constituency office staff, those present here today, and for the hundreds that have served in the past with you, we all convey our very best wishes to you for a retirement that is filled with many new adventures, very few points of order, and that your orders of the day and your daily routine include many hours of cruising around our wonderful province, that you have served with such dedication and distinction.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A real honour to stand today on behalf of the Liberal caucus and express my personal appreciation and that of many, many past Liberals to Dr. David McNeil, a gracious and distinguished Clerk, as he prepares to close his final days in service of this Assembly. For 28 years, Dr. McNeil, you have helped our Assembly do the people's work. Your time in office has seen passionate debate on issues of importance, filibusters some of us will never forget, amendments, subamendments, Orders of the Day, sittings that stretched through night into morning, and even perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the occasional violation of orders 23(h), (i), (j), or (k).

Whatever the issue, David McNeil was there to assist all of us – our Speaker's predecessors and all members of the Assembly – to operate in a productive and orderly and sometimes respectful fashion, including the very challenging renovations he oversaw on the federal building, which have been a phenomenon for all of us today.

David, your time in service to this Assembly has witnessed a sea change in technology, functionality, and ideology. You've witnessed changes in ministers, ministries, leaders, Premiers, parties, and governments, yet at all points, no matter the challenge or test, your abilities were always equal or superior to the task. Please accept my personal thanks and that of the Assembly and all Albertans, that we represent, for your wonderful service, and to you, sir, good health in the years ahead.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, in a Legislature that is filled with ever-evolving procedures, tumultuous change, robust debate – sometimes maybe a little too robust, as we've seen – there has been Dr. David McNeil, serving, as we've heard today, with five different Speakers, seven different Premiers, through eight elections, and with 392 different members. I've just briefly done some quick math, and that is 44 per cent of all members who have ever served in this Assembly.

He is a stalwart, reassuring presence within the Legislative Assembly Office, and I can say, as a new MLA and, I hope, on behalf of all of the new members who were recently elected, that he has given us comfort and assurance, answered every single question. It has been remarkable, a remarkably easy transition. But despite those changes – the government moves to new buildings, the ever-changing uses of technology in the way we conduct business – Dr. McNeil has guided us through all of these adjustments with a steady, calm, and professional hand.

When I was elected, I assumed, like I'm sure most of us did, that Dr. McNeil was, in fact, a lawyer, but he's not, as we've heard today. He's a professional engineer, which I believe makes him absolutely unique amongst Clerks of all Assemblies in Canada and very likely the world.

Dr. McNeil has referred to himself and his processes as that of a problem solver. We give you lots of problems to solve, I think, as well. Problem solvers have a different way of looking at the world. They give themselves room to analyze, think laterally to come up with unique and innovative solutions, and when determining budgets, who but an engineer would turn to algebraic formulas to ensure a lack of bias and fairness in something that could be – how should we say it? – somewhat contentious? In tackling these complex issues with an analytical approach, gathering information and then coming up with practical, pragmatic, and fair solutions, Dr. McNeil should be an inspiration to us all, and indeed I think you are.

I want to thank you for your years of service, for guiding us, and for teaching so many of us new members what it means to serve as a professional. Dr. McNeil, thank you, and good luck in your next adventures.

The Speaker: Dr. McNeil, I've always felt that when one makes changes in one's life, as you are now doing, there's no greater acknowledgement that can come from two groups: first of all, your family and, secondly, the peers that you work with. I've always measured that as a good, sound measurement in determining that I was successful or not successful. I think you can see, by the tone and the presence of the people here, that you truly have been successful.

I want to personally thank you. Contrary to what the hon. Government House Leader may have said, this particular transition with this particular Speaker was a unique one, and I hope I don't end up sometime in a book that you've written. I personally want to thank you for the time and effort that you've provided to me. It is very much appreciated.

Hon. members, there will be another, more formal event that will be taking place at a later date. But I would ask that we all rise again and express our collective appreciation. And you know what? The table can stand up, too. [Standing ovation]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP is pulling every trick out of their book to ram through legislation that farmers and ranchers are simply asking to be consulted on, tricks that the NDP once railed against. Once upon a time the Government House Leader said that, quote, this time allocation thing is a way for the government to short-circuit democracy. Premier, we've seen consultation ignored, debate muzzled, and now democracy subverted. Is there any principle you won't sacrifice to ram through your agenda?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, to begin with and to be clear, the principle that we are actually pursuing with respect to Bill 6 is the protection of vulnerable workers, that have been prevented from accessing that for far too long. That is the principle that we are pursuing. I'd like to read a quote as well. It goes like this. "I mean, we're prepared to do anything, as long as it has an exit strategy. We're not prepared to continue on in the same filibuster that we've had all day today." That, Mr. Speaker, is the Leader of the Official Opposition when he was in Ottawa.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the NDP have broken the trust of Albertans. The story changes all the time, and they have no interest in letting debate see the light of day. We've gone from the NDP proclaiming family farms would have to be covered to flip-flopping and blaming it on misinformation. This isn't about misinformation. This is about the government deceiving farmers and ranchers and playing fast and loose with their lifestyles. To the Premier: how could Albertans ever trust you when you operate under such confusion, secrecy, and arrogance?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said before, we very clearly brought in an amendment to clarify the confusion, which I said very clearly that I take responsibility for. But this bill is about protecting vulnerable, paid farm workers and ensuring that they get access to workers' compensation and have the ability to refuse unsafe work. These are fundamental human rights, and it's about time that they, like other Alberta workers, can enjoy them.

Mr. Barnes: You reap what you sow. I can promise you this, Mr. Speaker. The NDP will reap a legacy of broken trust, deafness to the concerns of constituents, ignorance of Albertan values, and a constant attack on Alberta's industries and economy. We've seen massive taxes on all consumers, burdens on the energy sector, and now they've sharpened their focus onto agriculture. It's with a heavy heart I ask: which group of Albertans will the NDP go after next?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think just on the issue of Bill 6 and the process, one thing that I forgot to mention previously was that the Leader of the Official Opposition, when he was in Ottawa, voted in favour of time allocation 60 times. Six, zero. Sixty times. Now, I'm sorry that we haven't given him that opportunity to vote for it that many times here in Alberta. But you know what? I think that perhaps they should consider establishing just a little bit of consistency on that side of the House on some of these issues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to tear down relationships with rural Alberta and make a mess of Bill 6. Yesterday they invoked closure to muzzle debate and force Bill 6 through this Assembly without consultation and, indeed, co-operation. This is a drastic step. In the words of the Government House Leader: this time allocation thing is a way to short-circuit democracy. To the Premier: why are you short-circuiting democracy and muzzling free speech in this Legislature?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, to be clear, the Assembly has debated Bill 6 so far for 17 hours, and that's just in second reading. I'd like to just read another quote. "This motion . . . to time limit debate and to get it done today [is being done] so that we're done in about 15 hours." That again is a quote from the Leader of the Official Opposition when he was in Ottawa justifying a time limit motion, fifteen hours. We're at 17, and we're not done, as much as I'm sure you'd like to be today. The fact of the matter is that we've given tremendous opportunity for debate in this Legislature, and we'd like to get to a point where we can introduce our amendment.

Mr. Strankman: Again, Mr. Speaker, the Premier talks about regaining trust with rural Alberta. The only way she can regain that trust – the only way – is if she sends Bill 6 to committee or kills it outright. She doesn't understand that farmers hold the notion of co-operation in high regard. We are in a constant state of co-operation. To the Premier. Farmers want to work with you, not against you. Why will you not co-operate and put the brakes on Bill 6?

The Speaker: Hon. member, again, through the Speaker if you would.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I've said before and will say again, it's very important to us that vulnerable, paid farm workers who are not related to the farmers for whom they work can refuse unsafe work should they be directed to do it and they and their families can receive the benefits of workers' compensation should they be injured or killed. After that what we are going to do is consult on the regulations extensively. We've said that over and over. Those guys don't want to believe it, but the proof will be in our actions and in our record. You can trust that we will absolutely do that, and that's my message to farmers.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, regulations are unaccountable law.

If the last few weeks were not enough evidence that the Premier should know better than to take farmers and ranchers for granted, there will be more protests, there will be more rallies, and there will be more letters, phone calls, and e-mails. They won't forget, and in 2019 this government will pay a heavy electoral price. Does the Premier think that it is worth it, or does she want to start over, consult, and do Bill 6 right?

Ms Notley: Well, as I've said before, Mr. Speaker, what I'm very committed to doing is respecting and enforcing the basic human rights of this very vulnerable group of workers, human rights that have been ignored for far too long, and I am very, very proud that our caucus is coming together to make sure that those rights are finally being recognized in this province like every other province in the country.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Climate Change Strategy

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The price of oil is below $40, and 80,000 Albertans have lost work, the majority of them in our energy sector. What's the NDP response? Bring in a $3 billion carbon tax that targets businesses and families across the province. We know that this isn't satisfying our critics, but now we are hearing that Ottawa is about to sign a deal in Paris that will make things even worse. It's crazy to think that Alberta has both its provincial and federal government working against their main industry. How can the Premier stand for this?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's been our view and one that has been supported by an unprecedented level of consensus that it is in the best interests of future Albertans – our children, our grandchildren – and also in the best interests of our current energy industry for us to do our part in a reasonable, productive way on climate change so that we can increase our access to markets, so that we can remediate our reputation, and so that we can help diversify the economy and strengthen the energy industry. That's why we've had such unprecedented support for the plan that we have moving forward. We will continue to work with Albertans, and we believe that in the long run it'll prove to have been a good decision.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mrs. Aheer: Our children and grandchildren are going to be paying for this debt for generations.

Our energy companies are barely able to keep their heads above water, and all the NDP talk about is this new way to further strangle our economy. Companies are cutting wages and shedding 500 jobs a day. If Ontario manufacturers were getting hammered like this, they would be talking about bailouts, but because Alberta has now lost its voice, they're talking about how they can make things even worse. A Trudeau government sticking its nose in Alberta is bad news. Can the Premier tell Albertans why the government isn't fighting back?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, in fact, our climate leadership plan is a practical, made-in-Alberta solution that will protect Alberta's interests. That was one of the reasons we moved forward so ambitiously with this plan. We knew that if we put a practical solution in place that enjoyed the consensus that this one does, we could then say to the federal government: "We've got our plan. We're doing our part. You do your thing, but that's what we're doing here." That's what we did. We're standing up for Alberta. We're standing up for Alberta industry, and we're making sure that we all move forward in a way that builds our economy here in this province.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. It's clear that when the Premier called us embarrassing cousins, she meant it. That's why they're bringing in a $3 billion backdoor PST, it's why they don't take these threats against our industry seriously, and it's why they're forcing through a royalty review. The carbon tax brought Alberta goodwill for less than a week. ForestEthics is back to campaigning against pipelines. Ottawa is blocking tankers on the west coast, and now we're talking about even more risky policies coming from this Trudeau government. Why are you standing up for everyone but Albertans? Why, Premier? Why?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as we move forward with our climate leadership plan, we will continue to work as productive partners with industry and with other civil society leaders in Alberta. At the end of the day this plan will help our industry. It will help our access to markets. It will help all Albertans. It will help our kids. At the end of the day, you know, ignoring climate change is not the solution to a low price of oil. I know that those guys think that laying off nurses, laying off teachers, and ignoring climate change is a solution and that somehow the price of oil will come up if you do that, but that's not the solution. We need to take action, and that's what we've done.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Municipal Affairs, when talking about Bill 6, stated: "We will move forward on [changes] with Bill 6 because they're very basic and a small piece of the big picture moving forward." Minister, given your government's ongoing fondness for legislating first and hastily consulting later or not at all, please elaborate on what the big picture is for farmers and ranchers in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really appreciate the opportunity. What the member was referring to yesterday was the fact that what we are doing as of January 1 is this very basic thing where we are giving vulnerable paid farm workers access to the right to refuse unsafe work and ensuring that they have access to WCB. As we've said over and over, as with any sector of the economy, whether it be agriculture, oil and gas, manufacturing, any one, there is a lot of work that has to be done to negotiate the specific health and safety standards, and that is the work that we will do in consultation with industry stakeholders going forward.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. McIver: So, Mr. Speaker, it's about WCB. On May 16, 2013, the Premier decided to absolutely trash the WCB. During her drive-by smearing of WCB she stated, and I quote: employers pay almost half the national average of what employers in every other province pay into the workers' compensation system. To the Premier: if you really believe this to be true, after you are done forcing WCB onto farmers and ranchers, can they expect their premiums to double under your direction?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I have said is that certain issues that the WCB deals with can be improved, and we're going to move forward with that because we think injured workers deserve fair compensation. The other thing, to be clear, is that those farms that will be adopting WCB will be those farms who have paid farm workers, not unpaid neighbours, not family members, and not even paid family members. So to be very, very clear about that because the member misstated the presumption in his question, overall what we're going to do . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. McIver: Brace yourselves, farmers and ranchers.

Just yesterday a minister of the Crown, while answering a question from the opposition, turned and taunted hard-working farm and ranch families who were seated in the gallery. This comes after the Premier, shortly after winning on May 5, stated, and I quote: Alberta has voted for change; they voted for a new kind of respect and a renewed relationship with their government. To the Premier: is your minister's rudeness to guests of this House yesterday indicative of the respect that Albertans can expect from you and your government?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I completely disagree with the untrue characterization of the answers that were given by our ministers yesterday as they were struggling to be heard over the din over there. What is indicative of the respect of this government is the fact that our ministers have gone to 8 consultations across this province in the last two weeks, and they have met with Albertans. They have gone to rallies of people that were very angry with them and talked to them one on one. They stood on benches in the middle of rallies to try and get their point across. They've made themselves accessible in a way that members from the former government couldn't even begin to imagine because they never ever did it, and that . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Members' Accommodation Allowance

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, we as MLAs get a pretty fair deal. We have stable income at a time when many Albertans are losing their jobs, and our travel and living expenses are taken care of. MLAs are allowed to claim $1,930 per month, irrespective of what it actually costs us, for a living allowance. In my case that's nearly $700 a month more, or $10,000 a year more, than it actually costs me. Now, I've found a way around the rules to claim less, but the system is set up to allow MLAs to actually claim more than it costs them for rent every month. To the Premier: do you feel that's fair?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With respect, I believe the question is not in order as it deals with a matter that has been delegated by this Legislature to the Members' Services Committee. It is not a matter for the government to answer.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I'll keep trying because the Members' Services Committee, in fact, is not . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I believe that the Government House Leader is correct. This is a matter for the administration of the Assembly. Do you have a first supplemental question?

Mr. Clark: I'll ask the second question, Mr. Speaker. I think I know what the answer is going to be.

One of the first things that I did as an MLA, even before I was sworn in, was in fact to request this of the Members' Services Committee, that the rules change to allow MLAs or require MLAs to claim only up to the $1,930 cap, not absolutely that amount. When that does come before the Members' Services Committee, Madam Premier, will your members support my motion?

The Speaker: I believe, hon. member, that if that line of questioning continues, you are out of order with respect to this question.

I would like to move on to Red Deer-South if I could.

Promotion of Alberta's Energy Industry

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents know that if we want to gain access to new markets for our energy resources, we need to improve our international reputation when it comes to the responsible and sustainable development of our energy resources.

To the Minister of Energy: how will a climate leadership plan help our energy producers access new markets for their products?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, it's been up to us to demonstrate to people that we're taking climate change seriously. A few weeks ago that was proven to us when President Obama made his decision on Keystone. When it comes to market access, we need to improve our reputation environmentally and work on those markets to get our product to tidewater.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that building and maintaining positive relationships with other provinces will be crucial to ensuring the future health of our energy industry, to the same minister: what are you doing to improve relationships with your energy counterparts in other provinces when it comes to Alberta's energy products?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, we continue to meet with industry, and many of our industries are multiprovincial, in fact multinational. Last June I met in Halifax with my minister counterparts. Recently I met with the Minister of Natural Resources, and in the last few weeks I've met with four pipeline companies to talk about how we can work together as government and industry to make those pipelines a reality.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that promoting Alberta's energy industry to oil and gas investors is of particular importance given the current economic situation, again to the Energy minister: what are you doing to assure energy investors that we are open for business and to encourage investment to stay here in Alberta?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, first of all, from day one I've said that we are an energy province, and we will continue to be an energy province. We meet constantly with industry. We've conducted talks back and forth with industry on their concerns with business and markets, and we have worked with investors, talking to them both in Calgary and across the country to discuss knowledge. We're also putting money into ATB and AIMCo and Alberta Enterprise Corporation.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to be an MLA for a riding that represents so many farmers and ranchers. They are the pillars of their community, the hardest workers I know, and they embody what being an Albertan is. The NDP's handling of Bill 6 has been a complete slap in the face to these tens of thousands of Albertans, and they won't forget how you've broken their trust and how they have been treated. To the Premier: why do you insist on pushing forward with this bill without consulting the very Albertans whose livelihood you are destroying?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We certainly have heard a number of concerns, and we've honoured those. We wanted to make sure that the intent of our bill, which was the intent from the beginning, protecting vulnerable paid farm workers, was going to move forward. In terms of the specifics that have been raised, a number of them will be fleshed out in collaboration with different types of industry experts in the months and years to come because we want to make sure that we get this right, but we aren't going to stop standing up for vulnerable farm workers in the meantime.

Mr. Nixon: Given that the yells and chants of thousands of Albertans who have showed up at rallies all across this province won't make the Premier listen and use common sense, maybe this will. Given that last night as we debated Bill 6 in this Chamber there were farmers and ranchers up in the galleries listening closely and all they heard from the NDP was the deafening roar of silence, I'd like the minister of agriculture to answer this question. What does he have to say to the two ladies who drove all the way from Nanton and listened with tears in their eyes?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is incredibly proud of our agriculture minister for his leadership on this initiative. Yes, there have been times that he has had to enter into difficult conversations, but he has stood strong to the principle of supporting and standing up for people when they are killed on the job, injured on the job, making sure that they have basic protections and that they have compensation. That is fundamental. He has to answer to the family members of those people who die on the farms in unsafe workplaces if we don't move forward with this legislation. He's not willing to do that, so he's going to make sure that he continues to work in collaboration with farmers and ranchers and industry while protecting workers.

Mr. Nixon: What they did, Mr. Speaker, was taunt them.

Whereas the NDP know full well that they have dug themselves into a hole on Bill 6 that they are too stubborn to climb out of and given that their treatment of farmers and ranchers should be a rude wake-up call to all Albertans about how this government is willing to govern, I would like to give the NDP one more chance. For the thousandth time, will you do the right thing, listen to Alberta's farmers and ranchers, and kill Bill 6?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know that members opposite may find it difficult to actually think about when you promise you're going to do something in an election and you get elected, you fulfill that promise. We promised that we were going to move forward on protecting farm workers and ranch workers. We heard that there are concerns about how that is going to happen and protecting neighbours who want to help out with neighbours and ensuring that there can be 4-H going forward, ensuring that family members who may get paid through the corporation can still do that without having to be part of this legislation. It isn't intended to cause any concern. It's intended to protect vulnerable workers, and that's exactly what it's going to do.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, we applaud the government's enthusiasm, but we're more concerned with their inexperience: the climate change strategy, Bill 5, Bill 6, Bill 8, and growing concerns from the energy companies, school boards, nurses, doctors, teachers, of course farmers, taxpayers in general, and we're also hearing from their own appointed government experts. To the Premier. The head of your climate change panel has recently stated that if Alberta is the only player in the game trying to achieve the climate change goal, we will run the risk of losing all future investment in our energy sector. Premier, wouldn't it be wise to start listening to the people and slow down?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the member for that question. I think, unfortunately, that he has the comments out of context. The head of our panel has said that were we to move beyond what is currently recommended in terms of carbon pricing and other initiatives, we would then run into difficult problems with respect to emissions leakage and trade-exposed industry. But it was the opinion of that panel, which achieved great consensus as you know, that the carbon pricing mechanisms and the other mechanisms included within the recommendations are sufficient to get us to emissions reductions while ensuring we don't experience emissions leakage or . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Fraser: Given the fact that Germany has already surpassed Alberta's targets in terms of green energy delivery and given the fact that they have just commissioned 16 coal-fired energy plants to get up and running and that here in Alberta we don't even have that green energy yet or the transmission lines to feed the province's energy and the current government is in a rush to shut down coal-fired generation plants, to the Minister of Energy: can you please articulate the plan moving forward so that Albertans won't literally be left in the cold or the dark?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, in our plan we are moving forward to work – we've described the what; now we're working with industry on the how. We will be shortly appointing a facilitator that will work with the coal industry, the communities, and the workers for a plan. We have 15 years to transition these folks, and we will be doing that in a thoughtful and collaborative manner.

Mr. Fraser: Given the fact that the information coming from the Paris climate change summit is telling us that the federal Liberals have deferred to the Green Party's Elizabeth May to represent Canada around further discussions and now the Liberals are setting a target of only a 1.5 degree increase in global temperature versus the 2 that Alberta has set, experts are saying that if we follow this, it will be catastrophic to Alberta. Premier: will you stand up for Alberta and ensure that you will listen to your own experts and put a stop to this idea?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that question because that's exactly what we're going to do. As I said before, the reason we developed this plan was so that we didn't have a different plan from Ottawa or elsewhere imposed upon us. We have confidence that this plan represents real action with real progress and real, measurable outcomes, and we will stick to this plan because it is what represents the best balance between environmental issues, civil society issues, and industry leadership and it preserves and protects the integrity and viability of our economy, including the energy industry. So that's what we will do. We will take a balanced approach, and we'll move forward in a way that protects Alberta's interests.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills

Northern Alberta Concerns

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For weeks we have been warning NDP MLAs that rural Alberta is upset and that they feel they are being ignored. This is especially the case in northern Alberta. They've been forced to drive hours just to try to get someone to listen. In Vegreville farmers and ranchers were either furious or have been driven to tears with their opinions being completely ignored. When is this NDP government going to start listening to the people of northern Alberta instead of ramming through misguided legislation?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, the first consultation meeting we had was in northern Alberta, and we did not feel that the information being shared through official channels was in line with what the bill and the intention of the regulations were going to be. That's why we changed the structure of the meetings. We've had cabinet ministers at every single meeting since then. I was in Medicine Hat. We've got members in northern Alberta. We've had members consulting throughout Alberta, and we are certainly happy to take their feedback into consideration as we move forward in partnership on supporting vulnerable farm workers and protecting the family farm.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Northern Alberta is tired of being ignored. Given that northern Alberta, where one-third of government revenues come from, has been plagued with many issues along our main transportation corridors, from road bans to crumbling highways, loss of rail services, when will this government stop ignoring northern Albertans, stop hurting our economy, and start listening to us on issues such as Bill 6 and the job-killing carbon tax?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I'm proud of the fact that I grew up in northern Alberta. Many of our caucus members did, and we are certainly engaged in collaborations with communities. We have strong representation in our government caucus as well. I've also visited the hon. member's riding and taken concerns that he's raised about local health care desires into consideration as we continue to move forward in partnership. We're elected to serve all Albertans no matter where you live, and that's exactly what this government is doing.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Whether it's in Lac La Biche, Athabasca, or the Peace Country, northern Alberta farm and rural families are feeling shunned. Given that no one in any of the northeastern Alberta Wildrose ridings was even offered one of your come-and-be-told consultation sessions, are northeastern Albertans correct in assuming your government doesn't care to hear the real concerns of our farmers and ranchers and oil field workers?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As I said, I, for example, attended some of these consultation meetings. It certainly was a lot of time that the government was there paying attention, listening, and honouring the concerns that were being raised. That's exactly why they said: "Put it in writing. Put it in writing, Minister, that this isn't going to apply to me and my family if we don't have any paid farm workers on our farm." That's exactly what we plan on doing when we finally get to the committee stage and can introduce our amendments.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Emergency Medical Services in Willow Creek

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, in 2013 the MD of Willow Creek entered into a pilot project with AHS to provide emergency ambulance service in southern Alberta due to inadequate coverage, the non-emergency interfacility transfer issue, and the ambulance flexing problems from region to region. To restore service, the municipality purchased three ambulance units. However, seven weeks ago the executive director of EMS suddenly decommissioned these units, rendering them useless. To the Health minister: will you take control of this bureaucratic disaster and restore the authorization of these crucial emergency units today?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We certainly want to make sure that no matter where you live in Alberta, you get the right care in the right place at the right time by the right health professional, and that, of course, includes having confidence that you've got adequate emergency response services in your own community. That's why, certainly, one of Alberta Health Services key priorities is making sure that that is a driving value moving forward. I have certainly been holding them to high account in that regard and look forward to collaborating with the hon. member in terms of the specific community that he refers to. I have received some information about the matter, and I'll be happy to follow up with him offline.

The Speaker: Through the Speaker, hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Well, Mr. Speaker, this has become an enormous safety concern for patients and their families in southern Alberta. Given that rural ambulance service is a vital artery to getting patients into emergency care and that residents cannot trust this government and this faulty system and given that, unlike AHS, the MD of Willow Creek recognized the desperate plight that local residents face with unnecessary risk caused by this inadequate system, why is the minister punishing and not rewarding Willow Creek for picking up these pieces where her government failed?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess at this point in the discussion today it's going to be a spend day – why won't you spend more money? – when we spend hours being told how we need to be cutting billions of dollars from front-line services, that go towards supporting things exactly like EMS. I have to say that this is very surprising to me, that today we're being asked to spend more money. We are, of course, in collaboration. Alberta Health Services receives an allocation from the government of Alberta, and they are responsible for emergency medical services. I'll be happy to provide more details to the hon. member.

The Speaker: Through the Speaker, hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Well, Mr. Speaker, to the minister: they sent you a letter; they think they deserve an explanation for their dedicated efforts.

Given that the adjacent community on the Blood reserve found themselves in similar circumstances due to AHS mismanagement and the lack of adequate services and seeing as they were allowed to keep the emergency unit they purchased whereas Willow Creek's remain in a storage facility collecting dust, will the minister and AHS stop bullying the MD of Willow Creek, exercise a little common sense, and reinstate the authority to utilize these units. They spent the money. They are the ones that are making the effort, Minister; you're not.

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question and for the opportunity to clarify to everyone that it doesn't matter where you live, you deserve to have access to the right care in the right place at the right time by the right professional. We do this in consultation with communities throughout the province. I actually met yesterday with two different municipalities to talk about their concerns and with members of the hon. member's own caucus to discuss some of the issues there. We're working to make sure that we can maximize the opportunities for local communities to meet local needs. In terms of this specific situation I'll be happy to follow up afterwards.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Primary Care Networks

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Crowfoot Village Family Practice is one of the great innovators of health care delivery in Alberta. They have developed a unique model to provide a high quality of care to Albertans. This PCN provides service to 2 per cent of all Calgarians, including myself and my entire family and 25,000 other people. It saves the government up to $17 million a year in hospital costs, so I was surprised to hear that Crowfoot might be facing a sizable reduction in their funding for the coming year. To the Minister of Health: is it true that CVFP is facing a 20 per cent cut?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. When I moved into this portfolio back in May, I learned about the cuts that were being proposed by that very same government that had been in previously that were far greater than what we've discussed with PCNs to ensure that we have stability of front-line services. There are a number of PCNs that have millions of dollars in surplus. We've said that having money sitting in the bank when you have patients who need to be cared for is not the right way to spend taxpayer money. So what we've done is work in collaboration with PCNs to discuss ways that they can use their reserves to offset this year's current operations so that money isn't sitting in the bank.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. We can appreciate the issues around cash reserves. However, given that the work done by Crowfoot has resulted in significant reductions in ER visits and hospital admissions and given that we have heard from constituents that Crowfoot was already denied the 2.5 per cent increase in physician funding that was approved in 2015 and given the government's stated goal to ensure stability in the health care field, can the minister explain the rationale as to why Crowfoot might be penalized?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. As the House is well aware, I launched a financial review of PCNs because I wanted to make sure – a number of them are being very responsible with their allocations, spending them on primary care within a reasonable time frame, a year or two years of when they received those allocations. Others have been sitting on millions of dollars of reserves. That certainly isn't in the best interests of Albertans. The financial review is in the process of wrapping up. I've been working in collaboration with the PCN leads to make sure that they have an opportunity to give their feedback on the report. I'll be happy to share an update with this House, likely in the early months of the new year, around specifics of how we're going to be moving forward in partnership with PCNs.

2:40

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm assuming that you're insinuating that Crowfoot is not being responsible. I just want to be clear on that. It's worrisome that primary care networks like Crowfoot, who are showing such great results, would face these kinds of cuts. Given that the government has prided itself on standing up for front-line services and with Crowfoot providing world-class service to the community, can the minister tell us whether she supports the work of PCNs like Crowfoot, and if so, will she reverse these cuts?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The budget that was proposed by the party that the member opposite is a part of would have had all of the reserves taken back, and that was rejected. That was seen as being rash and short-sighted. What we've done is work in partnership with the PCNs to find ways that we can be responsible with the money that's sitting in the bank, working in collaboration. Every PCN receives $62 per patient per year towards operating the PCN. What we've said is: if you have significant reserves, we want you to help offset that allocation this year. Of course, everyone knows what a difficult financial year this is for Albertans and for Alberta families.

The Speaker: Edmonton-South West.

Student Assessment

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We need to be able to assess and provide proper feedback to our students so they can excel as they progress through the school system and on to graduation. We know that assessments in Alberta have been controversial in the past. I've heard from my constituents, from teachers, from students, and from parents about this. To the Minister of Education: what plans do you have to evolve how we assess students so we can ensure that they have the tools they need to succeed?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Certainly, I've been working with our education partners, with parents and students and teachers, to ensure that we improve our methods for assessing students. For example, the SLAs, or the student learning assessments, at the grade 3 level: we ran a second year of pilots, and it was very successful, a made-in-Alberta construction for assessment at the beginning of the year rather than at the end of the year. These are the sorts of innovations that we're using to ensure that all of our students get a high quality of education.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now that the minister has brought up the SLAs, given that these SLAs, or student learning assessments, in particular, were criticized by some during the first year of the pilot, what have you changed this year to improve the program, and what has been the feedback on that?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, in response to feedback from teachers and from parents as well, we have put in different evaluation models. For example, with the SLAs we reduced the time to administer the evaluations by half this year. I still made it optional for each of the school boards, and I had 59 out of 61 school boards participate, expressing the value of this SLA testing. The feedback is very positive, and I'm working together with partners to make it even better next year.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the SLAs will help ensure that our students have the building blocks they'll need to succeed and given that students are required to write diploma exams before graduating high school, to the same minister: how are these assessments going to be conducted going forward?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thanks for the question, Mr. Speaker. We know that there had been consensus amongst our partners, amongst teachers and parents and students, that we needed to reassess the weighting of the grade 12 examinations. We know the importance and the value of those diploma exams – indeed, I was a diploma teacher myself – however, we did see the utility of reducing those to 30 per cent. It allows teachers greater latitude for their assessments to come into play. Certainly, it's important to note that we've seen our high school completion rates increase by 5 per cent in recent years, and we'll continue to push that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Battle River-Wainwright is a provincial hub of agriculture activity. The people I represent are honest and fair, but they simply can't believe the way this government is ramming through Bill 6. The mayor of Bashaw wrote me yesterday saying that she wants the same level of collaboration and consultation for farmers that she gets as an elected official. To the Premier: will you put the brakes on Bill 6 and take the time to collaborate and consult with farmers?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We are committed to making sure that we move forward with the most basic human rights protection for farm workers and ranch workers. That includes, if you are in a work situation that you feel is unsafe, the right to say: I can't do that; I don't feel safe in that situation. It includes, if you are injured or you die on the work site, your family having compensation, your being able to provide for your family because it wasn't your fault and it wasn't your employer's fault. Certainly, we are moving forward with the very basic protections, and we'll be working in collaboration with industry, with farmers, with ranchers, and with the workers to make sure we get the regulations right moving forward.

Mr. Taylor: It's not just Bashaw.

Now, given that I'm getting flooded with letters and calls from mayors and reeves who want this government to kill Bill 6 and I'm sure the members opposite are flooded with letters and calls opposing Bill 6, too, and given that we know that the NDP government took the time to consult with union bosses and failed NDP candidates, why does this Premier think they know better than the farmers, the ranchers, and the officials who represent them?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and for the question. Certainly, just in NDP ridings alone there are 11,000 farms, and we've been working to make sure that the concerns that have been raised are honoured and reflected as we move forward with the legislation. That's why we hope to get to committee stage so that we can introduce the very clear amendment that the farmers and ranchers, who own the industry, have actually asked us to do, to bring forward in writing the specific protections. This is about protecting workers. This is about also making sure that we protect the family farm.

Thank you.

Mr. Taylor: Given that last week I held a Bill 6 town hall meeting at Killam and I saw over 300 people in attendance and given that the room was unanimously against Bill 6 – in fact, the rooms were unanimously against Bill 6 at town halls right across Alberta – when will this NDP government get the picture that people in rural Alberta understand this bill and what it is? Why are you forcing this through on farms without consultation?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we've been at meetings throughout the province, and I think that what we've heard very clearly is that we want to make sure that farms are safe places for Albertans. I think all members of this House agree with that. We want to make sure that we move forward in collaboration, but I also know in my heart of hearts that nobody wants to deny a family member who is left widowed with no means of providing for her family because her husband or her other partner has died on the work site. That's why we're moving forward, to make sure that we have the most basic human rights protections for farm workers and ranch workers. We'll work in collaboration to get the rest of the details right moving forward.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Coal-fired Electric Power Plant Retirement

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, this government is intent on irresponsible acceleration of coal phase-out while attacking jobs, communities, and the Alberta advantage of safe, reliable, and relatively inexpensive electricity for consumers and businesses. Ontario's NDP leader has stated, and I quote: people are paying more for electricity because this government arrogantly chose to ignore the advice of experts. To the minister of environment specifically: how will you assure Albertans that the rejection of responsible, industry-proposed, dial-down, dial-up strategies will not also lead to overpriced green energy, unsustainable government intervention, and unreliable service in our province?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, since we unveiled our climate leadership plan, where I said that we created the what, we have met with industry. All of our electrical partners have agreed that there's a lot of work to be done but that it is doable, and we will move forward in collaboration to do that work.

Mr. Gottfried: Work to be done, indeed.

Again to the minister: given that the Auditor General of Ontario issued a damning report outlining that taxpayer costs associated with attracting investment under a flawed, uneconomical, unsustainable coal-reduction plan could reach $170 billion by 2032 and given that this government has rejected a responsible dial-down, dial-up strategy proposed through industry consultation, can you tell Albertans and Alberta businesses today how many more billions of taxpayer dollars it will cost them for your irresponsible plan?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, we have committed to take action on renewables, and we have committed to take action on coal phase-out. We are working with the industry, we're working with the Alberta Electric System Operator and the Alberta Utilities Commission to make sure that this is done in a responsible manner, keeping prices as low as possible, keeping the lights on, and working with industry, workers, and communities.

Mr. Gottfried: Given your party's leadership in a world of unintended consequences, this government has not delivered a concrete plan on how to attract investment to replace the dependable, peak-generating baseload that coal provides, nor have you been honest with Albertans on the likely cost to taxpayers of compensating stranded capital. Minister, can you give us at least a rough estimate in the billions of dollars of the costs to taxpayers of industrial compensation related to accelerated coal phase-out?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll tell you what's irresponsible: being in power for 44 years and failing to act to protect our environment, to protect our jobs, to protect our international reputation. We are absolutely committed to making sure that we move forward in partnership. That's why there were so many people supporting us and standing on stage at our carbon announcement. I wish members opposite would stop standing alone.

Public Service Compensation Disclosure

Dr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to being open and transparent, a big change from the previous government. Part of that means ensuring that Albertans are made aware of salaries for management positions. To the Minister of Justice: how will the public-sector transparency act impact agencies, boards, and commissions?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I'm very proud to say that the disclosure of those earning more than $125,000 per year – this goal focuses on higher income earners – will apply to agencies, boards, and commissions since this bill passed with unanimous support from the House. The ABCs under the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act will also have to disclose all compensation of their board members. We think that expanding public-sector disclosure will give Albertans a better idea of where their tax money is going.

Thank you.

Dr. Turner: Given that medical professionals and physicians are compensated through a variety of rules and given that we are hearing different opinions about the disclosure of salaries of hard-working physicians in our community, to the same minister: how is your ministry ensuring that their voices are heard?

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, of course, the act only brings in the general enabling provisions with respect to physicians because, as the member has noted quite correctly, their compensation is incredibly complicated. Going forward, we will be working with physicians and with the AMA to ensure that we get it right on physician compensation disclosure. I know that my colleague the Minister of Health has already been in contact with the AMA to discuss their concerns, and we will be working closely with them to develop regulations going forward.

Dr. Turner: Given that there are also concerns about publishing names of those over the threshold, to the same minister: can you explain why we are doing this and how safety concerns will be addressed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, of course, this bill just expands salary compensation disclosure to agencies, boards, and commissions. As we're all aware, whether rightly or wrongly, some of those positions have been criticized as being patronage appointments, so by disclosing the names, this bill will ensure not only that the taxpayers know how their tax money is spent but that the government is hiring the right people and putting the right people in the right positions. In addition, the legislation allows for people to make an application for personal safety exemptions.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, before continuing with Members' Statements, I wonder if I might ask for the unanimous consent of the House to continue the Routine past 3 o'clock.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Referral Amendment on Bill 6

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans from Nanton were sitting up in our gallery yesterday. They are honest people, they live off the land, and they don't ask for anything special from the government, just to be listened to and, for the most part, to be left alone as they conduct their business. They are moms and dads who care more than anyone about keeping their family farms safe, and like almost everyone in their province, they're worried about their livelihoods.

Imagine how the farmers and ranchers in Banff-Cochrane felt when their MLA stood up on a referral motion that we put forward and said that it was silly. Imagine the consternation of those people in that area and the family from Nanton, who left in tears. This government should be ashamed of themselves – these men and women feed us; they keep our province moving – and what this government's arrogance is doing to our province. What a proud moment for the constituents of Banff-Cochrane to see their MLA stand up, but instead of defending farmers and ranchers in his riding, he chose to call the referral, that will engage stakeholders and shed light on how to make this legislation successful, silly. The farmers have clearly said: do not ram Bill 6 through. Listen to their concerns and consult them. That's why we put the motion forward to send Bill 6 to committee. It's what farmers wanted. It would allow them to be consulted on all aspects of this ominous omnibus bill.

The NDP response has been absolutely appalling. I beg of the government to please listen to farmers, to please listen to us over here, and to please consider putting this bill to referral to consider all of the aspects that have been put forward by the members of this side of the House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

War Horse Awareness Foundation

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise and recognize the efforts of Deanna Lennox of Fort Saskatchewan, who joined us here in the House last week, and the great contributions she has made in establishing the War Horse Awareness Foundation. As a 16-year veteran of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Deanna has dedicated her time and efforts in support of first responders who suffer posttraumatic stress disorder and other occupational stress injuries. For her contributions Deanna was nominated and awarded the Stars of Alberta volunteer award just this past week.

Being a first responder in our province is a noble cause that brave women and men take up the charge to do every day. The price they pay can be very high: divorce rates as high as 84 per cent; 1 out of 4 struggles with alcoholism; life expectancy is reduced by an average of 15 years compared to the general population; between 10 and 30 per cent, depending on the department, suffer from PTSD; and these responders are twice as likely to die from suicide as in the line of duty.

This is where Deanna Lennox has worked to bridge the gap. Her foundation provides something very unique, the opportunity to engage with horses as an effective means of therapy. In addition to facilitating horse therapy, the foundation is committed to getting front-line service providers and their families connected with the resources and programs that best suit their needs. Deanna Lennox and her work through the War Horse Awareness Foundation is rightly recognized by the province, exemplifying community service, demonstrating exemplary initiative, leadership, and creativity. Deanna serves as a role model to her family, her community, inspiring others and improving the quality of life of Albertans.

I thank Deanna for her service, and I look forward to seeing the fulfillment of her future plans for the foundation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Government Policies

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's only been seven months, but the list of accomplishments of the new NDP government already includes passing legislation that could take Alberta to an unprecedented $50 billion in debt; clandestine borrowing of an additional $6 billion while reversing all spending restraint; increasing all sorts of taxes, including a $3 billion carbon tax that was never even hinted at before the election; drawing every last cent out of the multibillion-dollar contingency fund; failing to deliver on the promise of balancing the budget by 2017; failing to deliver on the promise to build the new cancer centre by 2020; cutting millions of dollars from addiction and detox centres during this fentanyl crisis; a regrettable list of world-class officials who've been let go, including the chief medical officer, the addictions and mental health officer, the cancer control chief, the AHS CEO, and dozens in other disciplines; promoting a job-creation plan that has created no jobs; proposing a raise for the budget of the officers of the Legislature while thousands of Albertans are losing their livelihoods; declaring that coal has no future in our electricity system; and turning a blind eye to U.S. Senators visiting the oil sands while referring to Albertans as Canada's embarrassing cousins; throwing their own employees under the bus and delaying the opening of partisan constituency offices for months; selling access to the Premier and her cabinet at a fundraiser; creating a sunshine list that they admit may never see the light of day; leaving an untold number of decisions to be made behind closed doors on cabinet-approved regulations; offering lip service at best instead of real consultation; launching a three-minute briefing lecture on Bill 8 to school boards but not allowing any time for questions; invoking closure on Bill 6, which tells ranchers and farmers that they are not worth talking about. Sadly, there is so much more, but I only have two minutes, Mr. Speaker.

I'll say this in conclusion. Albertans are left to wonder who this new NDP government is targeting next, but I can assure you that our PC caucus will defend the quality of life of every Albertan every step of the way.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:00 Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation

Dr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak about one of the greatest opportunities we have to make a real impact in preventative medicine in this province. As a practising physician it's my professional responsibility to be alert to these opportunities. Similarly, we as legislators have a responsibility to recognize and remediate our laws and associated regulations so as to reduce preventable deaths in Alberta.

Examples of far-sighted past legislation include pasteurization, highway speed limits, and clean water acts. Another example is our stringent food safety rules. These rules are enacted at the slightest possibility of food-borne illnesses, resulting in recalls, investigations, and mandatory remedies. Public health investigations can enter an agribusiness on a report that the business may be a cause of food-borne illness because it's widely agreed that it's important that farm businesses be accountable to the customers and the marketplace.

Recently large restaurants have also indicated that they expect farm workers to be safe. However, current Alberta law doesn't allow for OHS inspectors to review accidents in order to prevent them from recurring. In presenting the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, we legislators have an opportunity to ensure that paid farm and ranch employees work in as safe a workplace as possible. This is not a new idea. Every other province does it. A 2008 Alberta fatality inquiry explicitly recommended it. At least two previous Premiers promised it.

In April 2015 the journal OHS Canada reported that the chief medical officer of Alberta said that there were 17 work-related deaths on farms and ranches in 2014. It also reported, “The progressive parties, the Liberals and New Democrats, are full-square in favour of equality for farm workers.” That was before the general election, and I was proud to run on that promise, which appealed to the many nurses and doctors in Edmonton-Whitemud who are concerned about the injuries they see every day in our hospitals.

I ask that my MLA colleagues all work together and pass the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act to reduce the toll of preventable deaths.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Postsecondary End of Semester

Mr. Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s the most wonderful time of the year. No, I’m not talking about Christmas but about the end of the fall semester, which means final exams and papers. I want to wish all postsecondary students in Alberta good luck in finishing their fall semester. If you’re watching this right now, you’re either in political science or desperate for a reason to procrastinate or, as was the case when I was in university, a nice mélange of both. Nevertheless, I sincerely hope that the tuition freeze our government announced earlier this year has made completing your studies a little less stressful.

Calgary is home to the Alberta College of Art and Design, SAIT Polytechnic, Mount Royal University, Saint Mary’s University, Ambrose University, the University of Calgary, and numerous other institutions. My riding of Calgary-Hawkwood has almost 1,500 students at the University of Calgary alone, and I couldn’t be prouder to help represent all of Alberta’s students, who are pulling all-nighters along with us here at the Legislature.

Soon you’ll all be free to deck the halls, be jolly with friends and family, and catch up on washing your gay apparel. Once again, good luck, merry Christmas, and happy holidays.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Democracy: rule by and for the people. Good governance is the result of citizens coming together to ensure that the decisions, the laws under which they will live, are created by them, that the laws that will govern civil society are not created by an elite that thinks they know what is in the people’s best interest. As MLAs our most basic responsibility is to represent our constituents, to speak and vote in such a way that we represent those that have elected us to this public office. It is clear to all Albertans that the NDP government has abandoned this most basic requirement of an elected official.

When we review this past session, and especially their actions on Bill 6, the facts are clear. The NDP decided that they knew better than the people they serve, who are farmers, ranchers, and farm workers. Alberta’s farmers and ranchers were not asking for Bill 6. The NDP did not campaign on Bill 6. The NDP did not consult with farmers ahead of time and only created a consultative process as an afterthought. In spite of massive protests across the province, they refuse to listen and kill this bill. In spite of farmers listening respectfully and crying in the gallery, they will not kill this bill. In spite of opposition questioning and protests, in spite of the petitions that have been tabled, the letters of protest that have been read into the legislative record, this government refuses to either kill Bill 6, send it to committee for proper consultation with the people, or amend it in any significant way.

The facts are clear. This government will invoke closure on Bill 6 and silence the debate. This government will end debate in the people’s Assembly. They will shut down the meetings which so imperfectly allowed the people to voice their opinions on Bill 6, and the people of Drayton Valley-Devon have spoken. This MLA will vote against Bill 6.

I leave this government with one last thought. In a democracy a government that wishes to stay in power must always remember that the people always have the last word.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in order to table almost 30,000 names on petitions for this Legislature and to show the resolve of farmers and ranchers unified together to stop Bill 6. This is the message they’ve given us. I have all the petitions here for Parliamentary Counsel.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, stand to present petitions against Bill 6 from my local riding. I have 900-plus signatures on here, and I will table those.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also rise today to table a petition to this Legislature. These petitions have been approved by Parliamentary Counsel. Farmers, ranchers, and constituents right across my constituency have signed about 1,000 names here with regard to Bill 6, which has been debated for a short time in this House. More petitions are to come from my constituency next time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a considerable number of petitions, almost numbering 2,000. One that touches my heart dearly is from 15-year-old Tanner Madge from Youngstown school. He writes in one paragraph, “We are the next generation that are going to put the bread and meat on the tables of many, so don’t rush this bill.”

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strankman: Apparently a miscommunication, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last night, when Madam Speaker was in the chair, she asked me to table the requisite copies of three letters, one from the Calgary Catholic school district, one from Golden Hills school division, and one from the Calgary board of education board of trustees urging the government to delay the third reading of Bill 8, the Public Education Collective Bargaining Act, until such time as appropriate consultation may occur with key stakeholders, the publicly elected school boards of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table letters sent by my constituents in opposition to Bill 6. Again, there are 278 letters here from my constituency alone, and I wish to table these for Parliamentary Counsel.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Drumheller-Stettler, let's try again.

Mr. Strankman: Practice makes perfect, Mr. Speaker. I'm sorry. I'm starting to wear thin here. Yes, I do want to table the letter from my young constituent, Tanner Madge, from Youngstown. He writes, "We are the next generation that are going to put the bread and meat on the tables of many, so don't rush this bill." That's included with almost 2,000 letters.

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, today I have three reports to table, beginning with the requisite number of copies of the Report of Selected Payments to the Members and Former Members of the Legislative Assembly and Persons Directly Associated with Members of the Legislative Assembly for the year ended March 31, 2015.

Also, in accordance with the Gaming and Liquor Act I'd like to table the 2014-15 Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission annual report as well as the Charitable Gaming in Review report. Over the past year the AGLC has continued to provide gaming and liquor choices that Albertans can trust, ensuring that revenue generation goes hand in hand with high standards of integrity, security, and social responsibility.

Last fiscal year, members may be interested to know, the Alberta charities in this province raised over $342 million through charitable gaming activities. These charities worked hard for numerous causes, including nature conservation, arts programs, and seniors' services.

Thank you very much.

3:10

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of letters from constituents in my riding in regard to Bill 6, clearly indicating that they would like to see Bill 6 killed.

As well, I would like to rise on behalf of the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock to table the requisite number of copies of a reasoned amendment that he had planned to introduce before the government took away his right to speak on behalf of his constituents. This amendment shows very clearly that the government did not consider an exemption for family farms prior to introducing their bill.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to table the requisite number of copies of a letter from the Alberta Association of Former MLAs, signed by Karen Leibovici, president; and Gene Zwozdesky, chairman of the membership committee, to Dr. David McNeil, granting him an honorary membership in the association. They wish to do that, recognizing his outstanding contributions as Clerk and his untiring efforts to help former members who had the honour to serve with him. I suspect they also are hoping that he will give them a spin in his Porsche.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand to submit the requisite number of copies of 130 letters and correspondence from constituents against Bill 6 and also stand for the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. He has 117 letters as well from his constituents. We're looking at a total of close to 260 letters here.

The Speaker: Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today with two tablings. First of all, I have several hundred e-mails here, that I've received from constituents all across the province, actually. These e-mails all have one common theme, and that is farmers' and ranchers' concerns regarding Bill 6. There are several hundred more to come, but there are about 300 here, and the next one will have to wait till next time. I have the requisite number of copies here.

The second tabling is five copies of eight e-mails that I read while I was involved in debate on Bill 6 last evening, and I told you that I'd have them here.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the following letters, the requisite number that is required, that represent that the people of Alberta are trying to speak through the Wildrose and express their views about Bill 6.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to present for the Leader of the Official Opposition letters regarding the concerns for Bill 6.

I also have tablings for both Highwood and Livingstone-Macleod, that have had letters sent in to them, that I'm tabling as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the following letters from constituents with their concerns with regard to Bill 6 and would pray that they would be listened to by the government.

The Speaker: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have two tablings. The first one is copies of letters, the requisite number of copies, that I've received from around Alberta from constituencies held by the government members, people that are also against Bill 6. Here are the requisite copies of that.

Mr. Speaker, I have copies of 193 of the over 2,000 letters I have received in my constituency office that are absolutely against Bill 6. I will table the requisite copies of these 193 letters and forward the other almost 2,000 to the government electronically.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of an online article from the Western Producer that I referenced yesterday in debate entitled What the Other Provinces Are Doing about Farm Worker Safety. It talks about the rules and exemptions that exist in three neighbouring provinces to Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. members, any other returns or reports?

Mr. MacIntyre: I have two tablings, Mr. Speaker. First, the requisite number of copies of two letters that I referred to yesterday.

As well, I have the requisite number of copies of letters that I have received in opposition to Bill 6, and I might note that a significant number of these came from NDP-held ridings, who apparently are not getting responses to their mail from their MLA. So I submit those on their behalf.

The Speaker: Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I rise to table these copies of letters from my constituents and from Albertans that are in opposition to Bill 6.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Hoffman, Minister of Health and Minister of Seniors, pursuant to the Health Professions Act the Alberta College and Association of Chiropractors 2014-15 annual report; the Alberta College of Optometrists 2014 annual report; the Alberta Dental Association and College annual report 2014; the College of Alberta Dental Assistants annual report 2014-15, June 1, 2014, to May 31, 2015; and the College of Opticians of Alberta 2014 annual report.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 6

Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Madam Chair. We recognize our province has long enjoyed the many contributions of farmers, ranchers, and their workers. Thanks to their commitment to the land, the livestock, and the lifestyle, Alberta continues to benefit, both socially and economically. The people in this industry deserve our utmost gratitude and respect. They also deserve the same basic workplace protections enjoyed by workers in every other industry.

As a government we have said from the very beginning that farm and ranch employees should be safe at work and that when they have an incident that prevents them from working, they should be compensated for that. The statistics are clear, Madam Speaker. On average in Alberta 18 people die in work-related farm incidents. For every one of those deaths, 25 more are hospitalized as a result of a work-related injury. Laws to protect wage-earning employees on farms and ranches work in other provinces, and they can work here, too.

Madam Chair, it's a fact that since laws to protect farm and ranch employees were introduced in British Columbia, the farm fatality rate was reduced by 68 per cent, the farm injury rate was reduced by 52 percent, and the serious injury rate was reduced by 41 per cent. That's why we're extending OH and S protection and mandatory WCB insurance coverage to nonfamily wage employees who work on Alberta's farms and ranches.

Madam Chair, many ministers and government members have participated in eight town halls held across the province. These town halls gave the government the opportunity to hear from producers and share information with them about the proposed changes. We heard loud and clear that we needed to clear up some misconceptions. That's why I am introducing amendments to confirm our intent to exclude farm and ranch owners and their families from OH and S and WCB.

The Chair: This will be amendment A1.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Madam Chair. These amendments will also make it clear that volunteer assistance on the farm will be exempted from OH and S and WCB. It's not right that Alberta has the least protection for workers when compared to all other jurisdictions in Canada. Other provinces make it work, and Alberta will, too. Extending protections to farm and ranch workers, as I have outlined, is the right thing to do.

This important conversation has only begun. We will continue discussing other elements of this legislation with industry in the new year. Those elements include employment standards, labour relations, and technical requirements for occupational health and safety.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Are there any hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? Sorry. I didn't see who stood first, but I'll go with Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak to this amendment as I believe it does not fully nor accurately reflect the message that farmers and ranchers have been saying about Bill 6. It's because of that that I do not and cannot nor will I support this amendment. In the letters that we tabled today, in the petitions that we tabled today, if you took the time to read them, the farmers and the ranchers of Alberta have clearly spoken. This does not go far enough: they've clearly spoken. If you stood on the stairs of the Legislative Assembly and you heard that they want us to kill this bill, you didn't have to have ears that were very wide open to hear that.

The government cannot see itself through to killing this bill. We can see that this amendment does not go even as far as referring this bill to committee, where ranchers and farmers and farm organizations would be able to present, would be able to provide suggestions, would be able to ensure that their voices have actually been heard, that their recommendations have had a fair hearing, and that they would be able to see by the actions of this committee that they are responsive to the concerns of the farmers and ranchers of Alberta.

This amendment is sadly lacking. It's clear that Alberta farmers and ranchers do not want these amendments for they do not address in enough detail their concerns. It is clear that Albertans, whether this amendment is passed or it's defeated, do not want closure in this House. They want further consultation. They want further debate, of which this amendment is only a part.

This amendment, while it may exempt family members from WCB and OH and S, does not address the many other issues that arise when they hire even one part-time worker. Once a farm has an employee, then the full weight of OH and S and the WCB will fall upon the already burdened shoulders of the average Albertan farm family.

I read yesterday into the record some of the concerns that a constituent of mine had brought to the table and that I have brought into this Legislature with regard to OH and S and WCB and just how many of these regulations these farm families would actually have to comply with and how burdensome those would be.

Regulating work hours in a situation where, when you're farming, you cannot predict when a cow will calf, when a cow will have problems in calving, when, Madam Chair, you have no idea exactly when the rains are going to stop or begin – farming by its very nature is unpredictable. The hours will be unpredictable. I think of all the farmers in my family, and I have seen them combining through the night. I have seen them getting up at all hours of the evening and the day to be able to check the cattle. I have been out in the fields with the farm families of Drayton Valley bringing in calves when it's minus 40, rubbing them down, making sure that they will survive. That's not something that happens between 9 and 5. I have been out helping farm families when they are on the verge of exhaustion, because farming never really stops. I believe this amendment, while probably well intentioned, does not go far enough.

I would like to read a portion of a letter that was sent to me by one of my constituents that, I believe, speaks to this issue of OH and S and the WCB and their concerns with regard to Bill 6.

Although I agree that safety should be paramount in handling equipment and animals, I do not agree with the way the bill wants to instate it. It should be done through education, not OH and S.

Also, in regard to regulating the hours worked, farm and ranch schedules are not run by the clock. They are determined by the weather, the seasons, circumstances, and the animals themselves.

A person with a horse down with colic cannot just take a break in caring for that animal because OH and S says so. I stayed up 24 hours with my mare when she had colic. You cannot tell the cow not to calve because it is time for you to take a break, nor can you take a day off from feeding your stock and let them go hungry just because OH and S said so.

See, Madam Chair, if I hire even one employee, my farm now falls under those regulations.

This farm family, my constituents, has an issue with this. You cannot take a forced break during a cattle drive when you've just worked to get the cattle organized and where you want them or finally have them moving nicely. You have to make hay while the sun shines and take advantage of the long summer day hours. Days, hours are dictated by season, not the clock. I think a fair-minded person can understand that the amendment that we're debating right now does not go far enough to meet the needs of this farm family. They're not being unreasonable, and they're not trying to be unsafe. They are trying to ensure that they can continue to farm.

You see, Madam Chair, for many farmers mandatory WCB just makes no sense. It makes no sense when private insurance is often a better option for the farm families and for their farm employees. I know that I attended a rally just outside on the steps here, and I had at least one farm family, one mother, approach me. She couldn't understand why they would have to go with WCB, which they saw as completely inferior to the private insurance plan, which would cover their employees 24 hours a day. To expect them to have private insurance and WCB would be an unnecessary and burdensome problem in an industry where the margins are very narrow to begin with.

This amendment does not recognize the realities of the farm families that we have in our constituencies across this province. This is bad legislation. This needs to go back. It either needs to be killed or it needs to go back to committee, where it can be studied, where you can do more listening.

I have a second letter that I would like to read portions of.

My father came to Canada as a small child with his family in the 1930s. They settled in southern Alberta where they were sugar beet farmers. As a grown man, Dad moved his family to the Drayton Valley area where we continue to farm today. Our farm consists of beef cows and feeder calves. We also grow our own feed barley and oats in addition to canola. Mostly, I manage this operation with my adult son. We farm together as a family as we have always done.

There are busy times of the year, though – calving, silaging, harvest – that we hire on additional staff. I believe I treat all of my staff fairly. They receive a fair wage – until recently we had fierce competition from oil field salaries.

That's something that I think sometimes we forget. If we've never been in the farming industry and if we haven't lived in rural Alberta, perhaps we don't understand how fierce the competition for labour has been in Alberta over the last 10 years. When I can make $17, $19 – well, I believe my son made something like $24 the last time he worked in the oil industry as he was going to university. Most farm families can't afford to pay that kind of a salary. They've had to compete for people and for workers, so they've had to treat them properly. They've had to ensure that what they were doing was safe, or they would not have those workers because usually they had to pay them a smaller salary than what they could get in the oil industry.

I never ask my workers to do anything I would not be prepared to do myself. Sometimes, they must work long days, but I can guarantee you their days are hours shorter than my own. Sometimes, they must work on holidays. Easter usually falls in the middle of calving and Thanksgiving during harvest. But my staff has always been invited with their families to enjoy turkey dinner with my own family.

I can support a requirement for producers to have a certain level of insurance coverage for their workers. But mandatory WCB coverage is not the best choice for producers or for farm workers. Many workers will have less coverage under WCB come January 1 than they currently have under their employer's insurance coverage.

See, I will readily admit that I perhaps don't understand all of the ins and outs of WCB or OH and S regulations, but the people that are on the farms are the experts. Why is it that you're not willing to listen to those experts? I don't understand it. They are coming to you right now, today, through this letter, and they're saying to you that WCB is not necessarily the best way of going through this and that you shouldn't have to have WCB put on yourself as a farmer. It's clear. But this amendment doesn't recognize that. Why would you support the amendment on either side of this House when you can clearly hear from the farmers themselves that this is not a good enough amendment?

This letter ends with this comment.

I believe in doing things right the first time, even if that means it takes longer. I'm concerned about the government's haste in introducing this legislation without genuine consultation from the agricultural community. We are talking about mere weeks before this bill becomes law.

We're talking days now, maybe even less.

I urge the government to truly think about the consequences of their actions. We all want safe, viable family farms, but Bill 6 puts a huge regulatory burden on farmers and ranchers without achieving these goals.

What more do you need to say? This farmer has given you the advice that we've tried to present to you over the last four, five, six, seven days. What was that advice? Take the time and do this right. Your goals are laudable, but the means and the way that you're doing it are not going to end up doing what you want to have done.

It's a mystery to me. It truly is. It's a mystery that we can speak the same language, we can live in the same province, we can love the same people, want at the end of the day many of the same things, yet we can't seem to break through to get good legislation on this bill.

You know, it's clear that we make exemptions for all sorts of jobs and for all sorts of occupations when it comes to WCB and OH and S. Traditionally, farming has been one of them because that recognized the realities of farming. This amendment doesn't recognize those realities. This amendment doesn't recognize that farming has a legitimate reason for being exempted from these pieces of legislation as they stand right now.

Some of the jobs and occupations that are exempted: agricultural financial services, animal grooming. I've been around enough farm animals, horses, et cetera, to know that you can get bruised pretty quickly when you're working around animals and trying to groom them. I hazard a guess that if any of you good members in this Legislature were to see my first day of castrating and branding, when they threw the city slicker out into the middle of the barnyard and said, "tackle that calf and put him on the ground," you'd have laughed yourselves silly, and you would have laughed if you saw all the bruises at the end of the day on my shins and my forearms and a couple on the top of my head, where a cow gave me a kick in the head as I was trying to be on the back end of that calf.

You know, we don't dispute that some of these jobs that you do on a farm are dangerous and that you can get hurt, but there are times when we understand that in the real world, when you've been given the experience and you've been given the ability to learn, these jobs become far less dangerous.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Go ahead, Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I've been trying to get through this amendment. Again, the unfortunate part is that we have no opportunity to go back to our communities and go through this stuff and talk to them. It's been the problem through this whole debate on Bill 6. Yesterday, against my better judgment, I voted in favour of the amendments to Bill 8, again, without being able to consult with the four school boards in my area. I'm hoping that they were for it and they don't lynch me when I go home.

This amendment is almost there. You know, it starts to address the exemption for family farms, and then it ties their hands behind their backs if they need to hire somebody to help out with calving or with fall work. I'm still having some issues with the WCB. I've dealt with it with employees of my own and people that worked for me over the years, and it can be quite a problem.

I had an e-mail from a constituent up by Plamondon. He sent it to me at 19 minutes after 12 today, as a matter of fact. He started talking about some brushing that he wanted done on a road. He had contacted Transportation, and they kind of brushed him off: oh, there's no money. He kind of sank that around to: everybody's concerned about farmer safety. The most dangerous part of anybody's day is driving down our roads. You can read any newspaper any day of the week or listen to the news. There are wrecks all over the place. He was trying to get a corner on his property brushed so that people could see when they came up to a stop sign and see what's coming and going.

In his fourth paragraph he mentions that, you know, his concern is that everybody is concerned about farmer safety, yet there's no money when it comes to actual, real safety issues. Then he brings up a point and says that he's been paying into workers' compensation as a rancher for years and years and years. He says that just recently he got kicked in the shoulder and broke his arm. He went to put a WCB claim in, and they denied his claim. They said that he wasn't covered. It was only after him digging and pestering and digging and pestering to a very, very frustrating end – I wish I could find the e-mail here so I could read you the exact words – that they finally said: oh, yeah; I guess you are covered. I've got it now. I'll read it for you. It says:

Alberta Transportation's response to my request for financial assistance has been that there is no money to help with the clearing of brush along [the] roadside to [my] fence line. This is an outrage because Bill 6 is all about safety for farms & ranches in Alberta, and it seems to me that getting this section of road is not being seriously considered to clear & brush.

This is a contradiction to Bill 6 – all about safety and WCB coverage for Farmers & Ranchers. I have recently been injured (broken arm) from being kicked by a cow, and when I put in my claim for benefits, WCB informed me that I was no longer covered. I have been paying premiums for Ranching WCB coverage for many years and my claim was declined benefits . . . on that I phoned to complain and asked how all of a sudden I was no longer covered.

Just as a sideline I wonder how many other people phone in and get the runaround that they're not covered and then just walk away from it. This is a real heck of a good deal for the Workers' Compensation Board and the managers' bonuses.

I'll carry on here.

Upon their research, and my persistence they found that I was covered for benefits. This recent experience with WCB has not been pleasurable and Bill 6 is pushing WCB coverage for ranches & farms.

I just want this situation to be taken seriously because we Ranchers & Farmers work hard to keep our operations going and safely. If Bill 6 wants us to take them seriously I need to see more effort when needed to keep our roads safe for all.

I have contacted the Lac La Biche Post regarding the road allowance stated above and they are interested in my story. You may contact me . . .

And he gives his name and phone number at the bottom.

You know, there are going to be ongoing stories. People in the opposition have stood up and said that the number one concern that our constituency offices have to deal with is Workers' Compensation Board issues. What are they going to do when they have another 45,000 farm families dumped on them? They're already run ragged.

They held a training session for our constituency staff here last week. They didn't have any idea what the legislation was going to be, what the amendments were going to be, so we wasted our people's time coming into Edmonton for this training session. They got absolutely zero benefit out of it. Another waste of government funding.

Farming coverage. This is a document that I think I might have tabled already, but if not, I can table it again. It was on the WCB website but has since disappeared. It talks about the farm rates that people will be paying. You know, if you're claiming $50,000 a year in revenue, you're going to pay $1,485 per year. Well, that's pretty small potatoes these days when it comes to even a medium-size or a small farming operation.

Now we'll look at a couple of the work related and nonwork related. This is where it gets very confusing. It's going to be very confusing for doctors. It's going to be very confusing for people that work at the Workers' Compensation Board. One of them: "Sue is driving a quad to check on the fence line. She hits a large rut and flips the quad, injuring her head." That's a work-related injury. And it says: "Sue is riding along on a tractor as a passenger, without any specific duties to perform. As the tractor hits a large dip, she falls off, injuring her head." That's nonwork related. I'm getting very confused as to where the farming operation starts, where recreation starts and ends, and where your house and property starts and ends. I think that this is one of the very confusing issues that's never been defined in any of the, well, lack of debate and lack of consultation that we've had with this government over this bill. This is the confusing part.

This bill has been put forward here. There are currently down in Olds over 800 people at a town hall. They are opposed to this bill. They are opposed to this amendment. I will not be supporting this amendment. Last weekend I held a town hall in the town of St. Paul. People were very adamant. They want this bill put to committee for consultation and discussion with them. They told me that whatever I had to do to oppose it, they would be behind me a hundred per cent. I have not had one phone call telling me to back off at all. Everybody wants us to keep going. Of the people out there that are watching – and there are a lot of them that are watching – not one of them has phoned me and said: "You know what? We're probably going to be okay with this. You guys can probably pull back a little bit." Not one. The people down in Olds right now: no; keep going, guys. They want this thing pushed off, the bill killed, and to start some real debate on it.

There is almost unprecedented outrage over the bill. This amendment is not far enough. As I said before, it ties farmers' hands as soon as they happen to hire somebody. There has to be some real distinction put forward here about what constitutes a small farm and what is a medium farm and what is a commercial operation that should be put under OH and S and workers' compensation coverage.

Like I said, I've talked about this one farmer and rancher here. He's been with WCB for years. A lot of people have been doing it voluntarily. Why do we have to force it down their throats? There's absolutely no reason for this bill. This is nothing more than a money grab and an increase in bureaucracy in the Workers' Compensation Board.

The amendments to the bill – my goodness – were six pages.

Mr. Rodney: Yeah. It's longer than the original bill.

Mr. Hanson: Is that longer than the original bill? Are you serious?

Mr. Rodney: It's hard to believe.

Mr. Hanson: That is hard to believe. Isn't that something? A bill that was perfect.

The Chair: Hon. member, through the chair, please.

Mr. Hanson: I'm sorry, Madam Chair. I just get a little carried away. It's been a long couple of days.

A bill that was so perfect that it did not require any consultation with farmers, ranchers, or the opposition. A bill that was so perfect that it did not require any consultation with farmers and ranchers.

Now, after a bunch of outcry and people getting a little bit nervous on the other side, all of a sudden we have an amendment that's longer than the original bill. Does that make sense to you, folks? Sorry. Does that make sense to you, Madam Chair? No, it doesn't.

Let's have a look at this. Section 1 is amended

- (a) by adding the following after (k):
 - (k.1) "family member", in relation to a shareholder, sole proprietor or partner, means
 - (i) the spouse or adult interdependent partner of the shareholder . . .

Interdependent partner of the shareholder. Okay. That's legalese that we're going to have to get clarified. You see, this is the thing. How can farmers understand this? We need to sit down and consult and get this stuff clarified, put it into common terms.

It goes on.

- . . . sole proprietor or partner, or
- (ii) whether by blood, marriage or adoption or by virtue of an adult interdependent relationship, a child, parent, grandparent, sibling, aunt, uncle, niece, nephew or first cousin of a shareholder, sole proprietor or partner or of the shareholder's, sole proprietor's or partner's spouse or adult interdependent partner, . . .

Oh, my God. This is very confusing.

- . . . and includes any other person prescribed by the regulations to be a family member.

That's incredible. That covers a lot of people.

Section 2(b):

by repealing clause (s)(i) and substituting the following:

- (i) farming and ranching operations that are specified in the regulations and in respect of which
 - (A) no wages, as defined in the Employment Standards Code, are paid to persons for the performance of farming or ranching work, or
 - (B) wages, as defined in the Employment Standards Code, are paid only to the following persons for the performance of farming or ranching work.

Again, you know, now we've got to dig out the Employment Standards Code so that we can get to the bottom of this clause.

We need time to talk to farmers and ranchers to see if they're going to accept this amendment. We're not given any time. Just like yesterday with Bill 8: whammo; here's your amendment; you've got one hour to debate it, and we're going to vote. Like I said, I hope that those of us that voted in favour of that don't get lynched by our school boards when we get home.

Okay.

- (B) wages, as defined in the Employment Standards Code, are paid only to the following persons for the performance of farming or ranching work:
 - (I) shareholders of a corporation engaged in a farming or ranching operation of which all shareholders are family members of the same family;

Well, that's fairly clear.

- (II) family members of a shareholder of a corporation engaged in a farming or ranching operation of which all shareholders are family members of the same family;

That's kind of a double, family members of the same family. Nice wording, for sure.

- (III) family members of a sole proprietor engaged in a farming or ranching operation;
- (IV) family members of a partner in a partnership engaged in a farming or ranching operation where all partners are family members of the same family.

There we go again, family members of the same family. Incredible.

The next one is (c):

by repealing clause (bb) and substituting the following:

(bb) “worker” means a person engaged in an occupation, but does not include, except for the purpose of section 2(2), the following persons engaged in a farming and ranching operation specified in the regulations:

(i) a person to whom no wages, as defined in the Employment Standards Code . . .

Okay. Now we’ve got to go back to the Employment Standard Code and find out what that means.

. . . are paid for the performance of farming or ranching work;

(ii) a person referred to in clause (s)(i)(B)(I) to (IV) to whom wages, as defined in the Employment Standards Code, are paid for the performance of farming and ranching work.

Very confusing. Again, six pages of legalese that we don’t have time to debate properly or talk to our constituents about and get their input.

Madam Chair, this amendment to the bill is almost – almost – as bad as the original bill itself. I can’t support the bill. The people I represent don’t want me to support the bill. They want this bill brought back to committee, not Committee of the Whole. They want it brought back to committee, where they will have time to consult with the government and get it right. Personally, I think this is a waste of our time to even debate or look at this bill, but I mean, we can continue.

You know, we get to a bunch of the businesses that are being struck out here.

(3) Schedule A is amended by striking out

“apiary . . .”

“artificial breeding services . . .”

“breeding of animals, birds, fish, or reptiles;”

“collection of urine from pregnant mares;”

I don’t think that’s even happening anymore. Is it?

Mr. MacIntyre: Oh, yeah.

Mr. Hanson: Is it?

Mr. MacIntyre: A little bit.

Mr. Hanson: A little bit. Oh. Okay.

“dude ranch . . .”

Operation of a dude ranch.

Mr. Strankman: How do you define a dude ranch?

Mr. Hanson: How do you define a dude ranch? Is that just for dudes?

“egg producer, commercial, carrying on business as;”

I mean, there are some egg producers that are pretty big businesses.

“farming, carrying on business of;”

What all does that include? Is that a small farm? Is that a big farm, Madam Chair? We need some clarification on this.

Some of these things that are being removed, while they may make sense, need to be defined. How big is a family farm? Is a Hutterite colony a family farm? It’s all family, you know, families of the same family, as I’d stated. There are a lot of family farms that are third and fourth generations at home, that grandpa is still there. Grandma and grandpa are still there and help with the cooking and help with the machinery, right down to the great-grandchildren. But as soon as they hire somebody, it changes everything.

I mean, I could go on and on and on, but in the interest of having some of my fellow members get a chance to speak, I’ll just say that I’ll be standing behind the decision that was given to me by the people in my constituency that are against Bill 6. All the hundreds of letters that we turned in today, all the thousands of names on the petitions that we turned in today: the people are against Bill 6. They want us to kill Bill 6, and I can’t wait to watch the lemmings stepping off the political cliff.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: I’ll recognize the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by the hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just a question to the members opposite. [interjections] Well, I can speak freely, though, right? You know you’re not obligated to speak, but I’m just giving you an opportunity to maybe elaborate, either for the member who just spoke or any of the members opposite. I’ve heard this, WCB, referred to as a cash grab. I just want to know from people over there: what is your understanding of how the WCB premiums are handled and how those funds are managed? Just a simple question.

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. You know what? I think WCB does a good job, but there’s room for improvement. That’s one thing I’ll agree with the Premier on although the Premier goes a lot farther than saying that they need room for improvement. As I said in the House today, the Premier has done some pretty severe drive-by smearings of the WCB, claiming that they are severely favouring the employers and that the rates should be twice as high as they are. At the same time she says this, she’s trying to force all farmers and ranchers into WCB, after which time, we can only assume, she’ll double their rates because that’s what she suggested she’ll do. These are the Premier’s words. The gentleman was asking about what kind of a job the WCB does. Maybe he should ask his own party leader because she is extremely uncomplimentary of the WCB. You know what? I know that they’re imperfect.

Here’s the problem, Madam Chair. Again, my colleague there talked about how there’s a six-page amendment to a five-page bill, which absolutely is a complete indictment of how bad this bill is. There’s just no getting around that. There’s no defending your position. There’s no saying: yeah, but this is a little bit of an adjustment. This is an absolute admission that the job was botched. Yet the government is taking the position that they don’t need to talk to farmers and ranchers until this is already passed, because now they’re so sure they’ve gotten everything right that they need to seal this in legislative authority before going back and trying to adjust it to something that makes sense to farmers and ranchers. If they were so right about that, you would think that we’d have 2,000 farmers and ranchers out on the front steps of this Legislature saying: “Pass this bill. Pass this bill.” But you know what? That’s not what they were saying. They were saying: “Kill Bill 6. Kill Bill 6.” Clearly, there’s a big disconnect between what the government is saying and what Alberta people want, a complete divergence, 180 degrees, opposite directions.

I’m on my feet to make sure that I know that Albertans know that I and our members of the PC Party are aware of this and will continue to fight against the government arrogance that would have them drive a bill through the Legislature that is so at odds with what the will is of the people of Alberta.

You know what, Madam Chair? It's not just the farmers and ranchers. City people, towns and villages, urban people in Alberta, are getting almost as unhappy with this bill as our rural people. Why? Because Albertans respect each other. City people respect rural people. City people know that all the wealth in Alberta is earned in rural Alberta and that that allows us, we people that live in the city, to make our livings administering that wealth. It's how it works. That's how Alberta works: mutual respect between rural Alberta and urban Alberta, everybody doing their part, working together, which is why a good part of urban Alberta is as upset as rural Alberta is. They care about their fellow Albertans.

What does drive them crazy is that the people in government don't seem to have that connection. They don't. I'm not calling them bad people. I think they're good people across the aisle, Madam Chair, but they're not connected, clearly, or they would be taking a different position than they're taking. It's a lack of connection, and really it points, unfortunately, to the fact that, well, some people here are just probably not suited for this line of work. Nonetheless, I respect democracy, and those that get elected should get to do the job, suited or not. I've always respected democracy, and I think the voters should have the representative that they elect. That includes all of us. It includes me, it includes the other opposition parties, it includes everybody in our party, and, yes, it includes everybody in the government. Everybody that's here has the right to be here, and I support that. It just makes me crazy that the connections between those people that the voters have selected and the best interests of those people are so at odds, and the government just refuses to accept that obvious fact.

Now, if this was a good bill, the government wouldn't need to roll out a bunch of misdirections in order to do it. I'm not going to call them half-truths, because I'm going to talk about some things that they said that are true. It's just not the whole truth. I've heard several members on the government side stand up and talk about how British Columbia put in legislation and their injury and death rate dropped dramatically. That's true. I'm not calling anybody a liar here. I'm saying, in fact, that they're telling the truth. The problem is that they're not telling the whole truth. Even after that, the fact is that without this legislation Alberta's injury and death rates are as good as B.C.'s already. They say half the truth, hoping that Albertans will think, by them passing this legislation, that nobody wants, that it's going to save a whole bunch of lives and injuries on Alberta's farms and ranches when the fact is that Alberta's farms and ranches are as safe as British Columbia's already.

In fact, Madam Chair, I'm looking at a document here dated November 17 from the Alberta government. It's on the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act. Here's another truth in there. At some point in this document it talks about the average number of deaths in Saskatchewan being 13 and Alberta being 17. The Premier said 18, but I won't quibble with her; it's a rounding error. I'm not saying – you know what, Madam Chair? That's the truth, but once again it's not the whole truth. The whole truth is that Saskatchewan has a million people and Alberta has 4 million people, so when you look at 13 deaths versus 17 deaths, Alberta's death rate on farms is way better than Saskatchewan's is. Yet the government has selectively chosen true facts but not the whole facts. If the legislation was so good, they could actually tell the whole facts, and the legislation would still look good. Folks, you know what? If it's a good piece of legislation, you don't have to play those games. You don't have to stand up in the House.

I also hear members from the government side talking about how every worker needs to be covered by workers' compensation and every worker needs to be covered by occupational health and safety. They wave the flag and wrap themselves in the flag of safety, and they say: this is the way it's got to be, or Alberta farmers and ranchers will be dying by the dozens or the hundreds. But you know what? Then in the next breath – let's read – they're exempting Hutterite colonies, and they're exempting family farms. One minute everybody has got to be covered, and the next minute 40 per cent don't need to be. They don't seem to see the inconsistency. Albertans, though, see the inconsistency, city folk see the inconsistency, and rural folk see the inconsistency because they're Albertans and they're intelligent and they listen and they care. That's why I'm so proud to represent all Albertans, why our whole PC caucus is so proud to represent all Albertans, urban and rural, because they are hard-working people that deserve to have the truth told, the whole truth, not half the truth, and deserve to be supported by their government.

Again, on the November 17 document it talks about immediate impacts, mandatory workers' compensation – of course, with the amendment that changes that – employers protected from legal action. Well, isn't that interesting? The Premier was talking before about how she's all fired up about protecting workers, yet their own document says that they're worried about protecting employers. Well, actually, I think that you need to protect both. It's just that the government has chosen one side, and the documents they produce seem to support the other side. It would be better if they were more consistent, and that points to the problem, that this bill is not ready to be passed and it's not ready to be proclaimed.

It talks about how certain regulations would apply related to equipment, general protection of workers, duties of workers, and safety training. All of that sounds good. It also talks about how occupational health and safety officers could visit work sites to investigate serious incidents. There's been conflicting information from the government here, too. In some cases they say that the inspectors will only come when there is a serious incident. At other times they'll say that they'll drop in and see.

Well, you can just imagine how concerned farmers and ranchers are about that. Certainly, they don't have anything to hide, but farms and ranches are not like other businesses in Alberta. The fact is that if you're running a shoe factory or a button factory and the safety inspector shuts you down for six hours, you fire up the machine and you start making shoes or buttons. It's not like that during seeding. If you missed the weather window, you're done. You may lose a whole year's revenue. If you don't make the harvest window – and sometimes it comes down to six or eight hours before the hailstorm, before the snowstorm, before the rain, before the wind, before whatever the good Lord sends to this wonderful land called Alberta – you might miss the harvest window. The government is not giving farmers and ranchers assurances that that will not happen. So you can only imagine how reasonable farmers and ranchers are when they're upset about the government ramming this down their throat before they've sat down with them and agreed on a set of reasonable regulations and rules that they could live by to, yes, keep them safe.

You know, then you get toxic attitudes from the government, the labour minister talking about how we're going to create a culture of safety, and I heard it from another government member today about how we're going to create a culture of safety, an absolute, amazingly huge insult to farmers and ranchers. Suggesting that for the last hundred years they haven't created their own culture of safety: it's an absolute insult, absolute disrespect, absolutely talking down to the people that we should be answering to and respecting. It's disrespectful, and that is not the way that Albertans, whether they're rural or urban, whether they're farmers or engineers or doctors or lawyers or labourers, deserve to be talked to by their government. Yet that's what's happening.

It says here – this is really good – that the government will be consulting in the late fall, after the busy harvest season. Well, apparently, they're going to consult not only after the busy harvest season but after the busy political season, after it's too late to actually change the legislation. It's despicable.

You know, the document talks about how Alberta is the sole remaining jurisdiction that has not made the adjustment to include occupational health and safety. It says that there are four Canadian jurisdictions without mandatory WCB. Again, Madam Chair, the government continues to tell the truth, just not the whole truth. They have. And you know what? They talked about a couple of cases where a farm worker has been injured or killed on the job and they or their family have not been compensated, have not been looked after. They are right about those cases: shameful, despicable, unfortunate.

But here's the thing. What they're offering is not the solution. They're saying that if you put everybody on WCB and OH and S, it's all going to go away. Well, I can tell you that I was the labour minister not that long ago, and I had a parade of people coming through my office with WCB coverage and occupational health and safety coverage that had the same thing and more happen to them, where they lost their home, they lost their family, and they couldn't support themselves. So the government, unfortunately, trotting out terrible examples of real victims and suggesting to Albertans that we will fix all of this with occupational health and safety and the Workers' Compensation Board is absolutely not believable. Yes, the tragedies that they rolled out are tragedies. But you know what? There are just as many tragedies or more from families and individuals that have died or been injured with occupational health and safety coverage or Workers' Compensation Board coverage that to this day are complaining because they can't get paid, they can't get their families supported, and those are tragedies, too. They are.

So while I agree with the government that we need to make some improvements to workers' compensation and occupational health and safety, when you tell Albertans that this won't happen anymore with this change, that is the farthest thing from the truth that the government could possibly tell to their citizens.

Why would they do that? It does say in the document – and I'll give the government credit for this – that this is about unionizing farm workers. You know what, Madam Chair? There was a Supreme Court decision that says that farm workers should be able to unionize and that the government is required to put legislation in place to do that. So good. I agree with that. But if the government wants to do that, why don't they just tell the truth? "We are going to comply with the Supreme Court decision and allow farm workers to unionize." Albertans would say: "Great. That's what the Supreme Court said, and Alberta is law abiding." But why would you hide it behind a bunch of safety things that don't make sense that are supported by half-truths?

Mr. Rodney: A secret agenda.

Mr. McIver: A secret agenda, as my colleague says.

You know what? Whether the government has a secret agenda or not, you can hardly blame Albertans for thinking that the government does because of the way they're operating. Albertans know the difference between the whole truth and a half-truth. They just haven't had the whole truth from their government yet, and it's shameful. It's shameful. That's why you get thousands of people.

You know, there are members on the other side that proudly said that they should be proud for protesting because that's a right that all Canadians have. But the people that were out front here with the protestors: a lot of them were, like, weekly protestors or monthly protestors or regular protestors. I applaud them, too, for doing it, but I can tell you that what's really powerful is when you get 2,000 people from all over Alberta that have never protested before in their entire life coming out for one issue. That's powerful. That tells you the government is on the wrong track and that they're not listening, and people are trying to drill it through their heads to remember who works for whom. The PC Party knows that the people of Alberta are our bosses. Some of the opposition know that. It's time for the government to get on the program, Madam Chair. It really is.

When you add all of this up – and there's more. I'll be back up here speaking before this is done. I'm going to leave some time for my colleagues in the opposition and for the government members, if they're tired of warming their hands, because that's what happens when you sit on them, to get up and talk and defend your bill.

Tell the whole truth, not half the truth. Tell Albertans that the tragedies that you trot out, the real tragedies, the ones we should all feel bad about, that it will not solve that. Occupational health and safety and WCB will not guarantee it won't happen again. Tell them that. Look them in the eye and tell them the truth. They'll respect you more, and they might even think about whether you're on their side or not. Tell them that your leader says that the WCB rate should be doubled, so one day we're going to force farmers and ranchers onto WCB, and the next day our leader is going to consider doubling your rates. Tell them that. They might respect you more. They might actually think that you've listened to them.

Madam Chair, you can tell I'm wound up. You know why I'm wound up? Because it is painful to hear and see such a lack of feeling for the people of Alberta by the people they have elected to represent them, and until that changes, I just can't help but be wound up. You'll have to forgive me because I just care that much, and I just want everybody to.

The Chair: Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Bill 6 is framework legislation. The details that are going to be applied will be worked out in consultation with the very stakeholders that it's going to affect: we've said this time and again. I don't think we can wait to enact basic safety provisions for paid farm workers. I'm not saying that farmers are unsafe. I don't say that they don't care about them. I have never said those words ever. This amendment stems from listening to these farm families that were talking about the exemption they're looking for.

Madam Chair, I know first-hand what kind of effect workplace accidents can have on families. A lot of my family is from Vancouver Island or in the forestry industry and a lot of my friends as well, and that's a tough and dangerous industry. When I was six years old, I lost my grandad to an accident at a log-sorting facility because the safety standards weren't quite as good as they are today. While he and another fellow were tying down the logs on the back of the truck, the chains came loose. The logs back on my island aren't small. They came down, and they crushed my grandad, Ernest Joseph Anderson, our patriarch, our rock. It was hard for us. But he was covered by the laws, and my grandmother was taken care of.

Just 10 years ago I lost my best friend, Robert Arthur Strang, in a logging accident. Forestry is dangerous, but for some it is a calling. My friend was a faller. For some who don't know, that's, I guess, what some people would call a lumberjack. They work hard day in and day out in all types of weather and in dangerous situations out in the forest. Safety is key, but you can't account for everything, and the trees are big on my island. My friend was cutting down about a 250-foot-tall tree. Unbeknownst to him, about halfway up the tree was dead. All we can know is that maybe he heard the crack, looked up, threw his saw, and he ran. He didn't make it. The tree hit him, and he was killed instantly, thank goodness. He was found lying there peacefully in the bush, but he was gone. He had a wife and a young son, and his wife was pregnant with their unborn child. But he had coverage, and his wife and family were taken care of. Madam Chair, I apologize for getting emotional about that.

There are just a few things that I think need a little bit of clarity. The bill isn't going to interfere with the family's ability to teach their children about farming and pass on their way of life. This is a way of life that is cherished and will remain alive and well, as it always has been. Neighbours can still lend a helping hand, whether it be for harvest or the birth of a calf. Kids can still do chores and help out on the farm, so, sorry, kids; you're not getting out of those. The bill won't interfere with the 4-H clubs and all the good that they do, and 4-H clubs are an amazing part of rural life. It's not going to interfere – and I have a lot of friends that are happy about this – with the recreational activities on farms such as hunting, quadding, snowmobiling, and more.

Yesterday I was at a round-table discussion in my constituency of Leduc-Beaumont. I heard stories of second- and third- and fourth-generation farmers, and I heard and saw their fear and their pain. I saw strong men and women bare their souls and tell me about how they thought that the government wasn't listening to them. But that's what I was there for, and I wanted to tell them all that I was listening. I heard them tell me about how they buckle up their grandkids on the combine and that they treat their employees like family. They're worried about how they're going to manage when the growing cost of producing in the world favours large corporate farms. I heard that. They love their way of life, and they'll do anything and everything to protect it, and I have the absolute, utmost respect for that. I'm here listening, and I want to work together on this.

While we do this, I'm glad that farm workers will have more rights under the law and that farmers will have added protection for those nonpaid, familial employees under WCB. Now, I'm bound to represent you, just like all my other constituents, and I'm bound to uphold the law of the land, including passing legislation that brings the same labour standards to employees on farms as in the rest of the country. I'm bound by the Supreme Court of Canada ruling that gives all workers the right to organize – the right to organize – not forced but the right. I'm bound by my conscience in knowing that this bill is a good bill. I'm part of a team, a caucus, a party, but I am not a lemming, and I never will be.

Some members might say that we on the government side are being pushed or bullied into voting for the bill, but that's not the case. It's not true. We have free will and the right to voice our opinions, our concerns, and those of our constituents. I feel that in good conscience I have no choice but to support this bill to give farm workers the basic labour rights afforded in every other industry. I promise this to the farm and ranch constituents of Leduc-Beaumont, that as we move forward with consultation, I will hold this government to account for its actions. I will be a tireless advocate for your way of life, and I won't stop speaking out for you even if it makes me a black sheep in my own party and even if it means that I have to ask tough questions and ruffle feathers.

I'm not going to make excuses for our lack of clarity in communicating this bill. It was an error on our part, and it led to a lot of unnecessary worry, anxiety, and fear. I'll do my best to make sure that we have open and clear communication going forward, and I will be a voice in this government. You have an advocate and a partner in making these regulations work for you, not making you work for the regulations.

We need to take the emotion and the partisanship out of this debate because it's not about politics. I don't have any political agenda here. This is simply about doing what's right. Madam Chair, I will stand up for what I believe is right. These lines to a song kept going through my head this morning as I was driving here, and they say: "You've got to stand for something or you'll fall for anything. You've got to be your own man not a puppet on a string." I won't be played by anyone from either side.

Madam Chair, I do stand for something, and that something is the basic rights of all workers in this province. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would just like to start by thanking the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, who just spoke. I appreciate his comments, I appreciate his very clear sincerity, and, you know, I appreciate his opinion, that he articulates very well.

What I will say is that if this bill was just about and if this bill only did what we are repeatedly being told, you know, certainly in question period, if this was just about vulnerable farm workers receiving some form of compensation in the event of an injury or a fatality, if that was all this was about, if all of it was about whether or not accidents can be investigated – you know what? – there wouldn't be protests. There wouldn't be 800 people in Olds today, there wouldn't have been 500 people in Vegreville yesterday, and there wouldn't be 1,500 people on the front steps. If you talk to farmers, if you talk to people around the province, they say: that's not what it's about.

The problem is that this ham-handed piece of legislation tries to take it all, tries to do it all. It is doing surgery with a butter knife instead of a scalpel. The problem is that there is nothing surgical about the government's approach to this. This amendment that we're discussing right now is a very desperate attempt to improve a very, very bad piece of legislation, a piece of legislation from which, while its intentions are good, while it intends to offer and provide to farm workers some basic protections that they deserve to have – and I acknowledge that they deserve to have them – there is so much collateral damage to the innocent, I'll say, that in its attempt to protect farm workers, quite frankly, the collateral damage of this is astounding.

Now, speaking to the amendment, I am, quite frankly, a little bit torn as to how to vote on the amendment, and I'll tell you why. The bill is awful. The bill is, flat out, poor legislation. It's been poorly executed, it's been poorly communicated, and it's been poorly put together. It tries to do everything all at once instead of having a surgical approach. It is a mess, or as we would say on the farm, this thing is a wreck. In a desperate attempt to salvage this piece of legislation, this poor, poor, poor piece of legislation, the government a couple of days ago came out with six pages' worth of amendments to amend a five-page bill. You know, I will tell you that there are some really, really basic things about writing legislation. If you need six pages of amendments and your bill was only five pages, there's a problem. There's a very basic and a very large problem.

Now, what I will acknowledge is that in the amendments the government is making an attempt to at least provide some clarity as to who is and who isn't covered by the legislation. That clarity should have been there from the outset. That clarity should have been there right from the get-go. A lot of this discussion and a lot of this, you know, miscommunication I lay squarely at the feet of the government, and they have in fact said that it is their responsibility. This lack of clarity is their fault, and now they have to try to fix it. The amendment does make an attempt at fixing it.

Because we know that the government has a majority and because we know that they are even resorting to closure to ram this piece of legislation through regardless, my quandary is that I think the amendment, quite frankly, slightly improves, slightly clarifies a very bad piece of legislation. Since we know that we're going to get this very, very bad piece of legislation because the government has promised that to all of us, my quandary is: well, are we better off with a bad piece of legislation that is at least clear or a bad piece of legislation that is unclear? Frankly, Madam Chair, I don't think either one is particularly good, but I'm leaning towards supporting the amendment because at least it provides some spelled-out clarity within the legislation, which is what farmers and ranchers have indeed been asking for. Now, don't fool yourself. That doesn't mean they like what's in here. At least, though, they're somewhat more clear as to what's in here.

Let me give you an example of some of the miscommunication in clarity. Just yesterday – just yesterday – I attended the government-sponsored information session in Vegreville, and at that session there were brief opening comments, and then the Minister of Economic Development and Trade and the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour as well as the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville were on hand to answer questions. There was a question from one attendee that asked to define what is meant by wage-earning employees, which is the term that's used in the amendment, and the Minister of Economic Development and Trade stated that a wage-earning employee in terms of who would be exempt would be family members and neighbours. Any family member or a neighbour, whether it's calving season or harvest, that comes to help: they are exempt. I said: well, wait a minute; neighbours? This doesn't talk about neighbours; this just talks about family members. It gives the list, and it defines it. You know, there's clarity in terms of who is defined as a family member. It's very broadly defined. I was glad to see that, too. We're talking sisters and nieces and nephews and cousins, you name it. That's good because it creates a fairly broad definition. But the whole thing with neighbours?

Then the question was further asked: well, what about a paid neighbour? The Minister of Economic Development and Trade said: well, whether it's a payment under the table or some work that's done in exchange, it would be exempt. So, once again, there is a lack of clarity. If the neighbour is paid and given a T4, is the neighbour exempt or not exempt? I have it on tape. In the space of five minutes the minister said two different things.

Now, the minister may have misspoken – that's fine – but at least 500 people in Vegreville heard him yesterday and heard what he had to say, so now there is confusion as to whether neighbours are included with this in this act, included in this amendment or not. I've gone through the amendment. There's nothing about neighbours in the amendment. There's certainly a lot about family members.

Madam Chair, this is the problem. This is the problem. I will say – and it's not something I'm necessarily proud of – that I've been in the position of the members of the government. I've been in the position as a cabinet minister; I've been in the position as a private member, not in cabinet. It is a feeling of tremendous discomfort when you know you've got a crappy piece of legislation. It is a feeling of tremendous discomfort when you are being called on to vote and to support, because it is well intentioned but poorly executed, a piece of legislation that is not a good piece of legislation. I could name off some of the ones from the past terms, but

I'm sure that because they're so interested in what's happened for the last 44 years and some of our failings, we'll hear about it from over there, so I won't waste our time.

This is poor legislation. This amendment makes the poor legislation somewhat clearer, so I'm inclined on the basis of clarity to support it, but I will tell you, Madam Chair, that this is still tremendously poor legislation. The amendments that are here do answer some questions. They do provide some clarity, but there is so much in this bill that is still unclear, that is still unanswered. You know, there were two hours' worth of questions, and people were still lined up at the microphones yesterday wanting to ask questions to get some clarity. It is so clear and it should be so obvious to this government that this piece of legislation is poorly executed, poorly written, and really needs to be taken back to the drawing board, but when we gave you two separate opportunities to do that, a referral motion and then a hoist motion, you defeated both of them. We are giving you every lifeline that is available under legislative procedure to correct your errors, and you refuse. This is problematic.

Now, you know, some people will say: "Well, let them dig their own grave. Let them hang themselves politically." But, quite frankly, we are legislators. Our job as legislators is to produce the best legislation that we can here in this Legislature. What happens three and a half years from now: that will sort itself out. We have to worry about what we are dealing with right now. Right now we're dealing with poor legislation, and right now, perhaps more importantly, we're dealing with the broken trust of Albertans across the province: rural, urban, and right across from north to south. That is a problem for this government because when you've broken the trust of the people, I can tell you that it makes it that much more difficult to govern on a lot of different areas, not just on whether you're talking about farm safety but a whole wide range of issues. Whether they're economic issues or social issues, this government will have an increasing level of difficulty governing because they simply are not listening to people. They have demonstrated that they will forge ahead with something that is so clearly being opposed right across this province.

Madam Chair, I'm going to actually listen to the rest of the debate on this amendment. As I said, I'm a little bit torn. I think I'm probably going to support it, which seems odd, but it does provide some clarity to an otherwise very poor bill. You can rest assured that when it comes up for third reading, I will be against the bill. For however long it takes this evening in Committee of the Whole until this government once again invokes closure and cuts off the democratic process, I will be listening and most likely supporting most of the amendments that attempt – attempt – to try to fix, to patch, to amend, to alter the poor elements within this bill that still remain. I can tell you that one night, quite frankly, isn't enough time to do it, but we will work however late we need to tonight on the amendments to try and pass them to make this legislation at least somewhat more palatable to the people of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will be brief because I think that we will talk a lot more about some of the subamendments that are coming as we attempt to fix this legislation. Just briefly, on behalf of the Wildrose caucus, specifically on this amendment, the issue with this amendment is that it doesn't fix nearly enough problems with Bill 6. This government has shown itself to be totally deaf to what voters wanted in this regard leading up to this, and now they might be starting to become partially deaf. Now they're starting to slowly listen, but the problem is that because they're trying to ram this through so fast, I don't think that we're going to have time to make them fully listen to what voters want. So they're going to take this half-measure, and that's disappointing.

First of all, Madam Chair, the amendment itself leaves room where cabinet can later change regulations, which will affect the people whose protection under legislation we are going to take away if this bill passes. Now, for the farmers and the ranchers that I'm speaking to back in my constituency and across the province, that's not acceptable. The reason that it's not acceptable is because they don't trust this government anymore. They don't trust this government because this government tried to put in legislation that would totally disrupt their way of life. Their own website shows it. They tried to put in legislation that would put WCB on kids working in chicken coops on farms, put in legislation that would have affected kids using 4-H cows in their parents' barns or corrals. That's a fact.

Now they've changed that. There was outcry. There were protests, letters. We've seen all of my colleagues bring forward all the letters that have been coming from their riding. We've seen the protests on the Legislature steps. So now the government is panicking, Madam Chair. They know that they're in trouble. They know that they're in trouble in rural Alberta. Despite being known as an urban party, they do actually have a lot of rural seats, as you know full well, and they know they're in trouble in rural Alberta. So they have to try to bring forward this amendment, but it does not go far enough. It still leaves a blank cheque, which Albertans will not accept because they do not trust this government. Let's be very clear on that.

Now, there are several things that we are going to try to do, as my colleague the House leader for the third party articulated very well, I believe. We are going to try tonight, but we know that the government is only going to give us so much time, unfortunately, because they are going to take away our democratic right as MLAs to fight for our constituents. We are going to try to help them fix this legislation even more. We know that they're going to take their majority and they're going to try to force this through, but we want to try to help our constituents back home as much as possible. We're going to go through it. We're going to try to fix it. We're going to start that shortly.

I want to be clear, Madam Chair. I couldn't be in Olds today for the government no-tell session, as we like to call them now, and it sounds like it was about the same, from the reports I'm getting from there today. My wife went. Several members of my family went and several friends, and they spoke with many, many farmers. I know that the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills was there today. He spoke with many farmers. We talked specifically about this amendment, and the message was loud and clear from our constituents: this amendment is still not acceptable. The bill itself is not acceptable, and they were very clear that they expect us to stand up in this House and vote against this amendment, vote against this bill, and stop this outrageous behaviour on farmers and ranchers.

While I respect the Member for Leduc-Beaumont – and I do respect him very much, and I respect him for standing up and having the courage – you know, we have not seen many of his colleagues stand up and defend this bill. He had the courage to do that, and I respect that, but I also respectfully disagree. I was sent here by my constituents to vote for them. Now, along the way, with the burden of office it's going to be tough to decide sometimes what your riding wants. Many of the veteran MLAs in here can probably confirm that there are going to be issues along the way where you're not going to be sure what your riding wants, but I can tell you right now that there's no doubt what the people of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre want. Thousands of phone calls, thousands of e-mails and not one person from my constituency, from my riding, has come to me and said: vote for this.

Madam Chair, I can tell you that I and my Wildrose colleagues are going to do what our constituents sent us to do. We're going to follow their instructions, and we are going to vote against this bill.

I thank you very much for your time, Madam Chair.

The Chair: I'm going to go next to the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow and then Drumheller-Stettler.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm glad to have the opportunity to rise to speak to Bill 6 today. I'm pleased to vote for this amendment, which I believe clarifies the original intent of this bill, which is to offer workplace protections to paid farm and agriculture workers. Although my riding of Calgary-Bow is not considered a rural riding, I have had some constituents who have formerly lived on farms who have contacted me to share their opinions on the bill, which is why I rise to explain my support.

Agriculture represents a vital industry to our economy here in Alberta, and our farmers and ranchers work hard to put food on our tables every day. That's not all, Madam Chair. Our farmers and ranchers are also some of our key job creators in this province. We are a proud province, with workers who realize that a day's work means showing up far before the sun rises and going home far after it sets. What this bill seeks to accomplish is to ensure that we as a government are offering the same level of protection to a vital industry that we as a government offer to every other industry.

Alberta is the only province without employment standards coverage for farm and ranch workers. Our farm workers here in Alberta are currently exempt from occupational health and safety laws and have no right to refuse unsafe work. To clarify, what that means is that if a farm worker refuses to complete a job due to safety concerns, they have no legal protection. We as a government need to ensure that we are protecting all Alberta workers while also ensuring that we are respecting the preservation of family farm traditions and that do-good Alberta nature of neighbour helping neighbour.

This amendment accomplishes that, and for that reason I support this legislation. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Chair. For those of you and even for myself, the understanding of Robert's Rules of Order is going to be important as we go forward. I'd like to give notice of a subamendment to Bill 6, the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act. I have the required number of copies here for that.

Madam Chair, could I proceed through it, or do you want to wait till they're distributed?

The Chair: Just let me get the original. Is this an original? I need the original.

Mr. Strankman: I guess this is the original. Sorry. Thank you.

The Chair: This will be subamendment SA1.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that amendment A1 to Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, be amended in part A in the proposed section 5(2) as follows. Under (a), in clause (b), in the proposed subclause (i), by adding the following after paragraph (A):

(A.1) the operation does not pay wages, as defined in the Employment Standards Code, to more than 5 persons not including family members for the performance of farming or ranching work, or

Under (b), in clause (c), in the proposed subclause (bb), by adding the following after subclause (ii):

(iii) a person employed by a farming or ranching operation referred to in clause (s)(i)(A.1);

Madam Chair, if I could speak to the amendment briefly within the allotted time. I'm presenting the amendment in an attempt to – as we've heard many times today from the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and from the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster and even in a somewhat cordial fashion or amenable fashion, I'll say, from the Member for Leduc-Beaumont, this legislation is in need of improvement. This is a way that, hopefully, we can try an improvement.

I have great consternation about the fact that we are left to try and make these improvements in this Chamber to the best of our abilities because, Madam Chair, I have great consternation about unintended consequences. I think that's what's come forward in spades, if you will, to this legislation and the fact that when it was presented, it was a small number of pages. Then the government, after some feedback, I'll say, from the public and from opposition, came forward with five more pages of amendments.

With that, I looked into legislation that's prevalent in Saskatchewan. In my earlier presentation, speaking to this legislation, I spoke about the options in Saskatchewan. It's actually considerably different from what we have here or what this bill is proposing in Alberta. I find it significant that they talk about it in an interesting fashion. They give several exemptions. It exempts farming. It prescribes that farms and ranches over 10 employees must have an occupational health and safety program. It prescribes that farms and ranches with more than four or less than 10 employees must have an employee representative and must set out in writing who is the supervisor of the work site. These are options that easily could have been presented to the legislation in Alberta. That is for the OH and S portion of it.

Part of the major contentious issue in Alberta is the WCB mandate. The Wildrose has heard significantly from many, many constituents across the province about the unsatisfactory performance of the WCB and about their request for the provision of choice, whether that be any sort of a provider, not unlike what many of the citizens of Alberta are allowed under public liability and property damage, commonly referred to as PL/PD, for their automotive insurance. They have and are able to receive multiple sources or multiple options for that coverage.

In Saskatchewan the WCB exclusion act excludes dairy farming and feedlot or livestock yard operations that are not in connection with an industry within the scope of the act. They go on to list fur farms; grazing co-operatives; land clearing, brush cutting, or stumping that is not in connection with an industry within the scope of the act. Madam Chair, it includes livestock brokers, mobile farm feed service, portable seed-cleaning plants, piggery farms, poultry farms, trapping. There are many options in this other jurisdiction that are brought forward.

What I'm trying to do with this subamendment is to simply increase the designation beyond a single hiree, a temporary farm employee such as what we use on our farm, where we normally hire a single operator to help bring in the harvest, that would require the extent of ongoing OH and S requirements for the whole rest of the year. Fall protection, OH and S designated sites, et cetera, are all required for the short season that that operator would be there, but those extensive and expensive requirements are the unintended consequences of this government's legislation in its present form.

With that, we're trying to achieve some small form of an option and, as the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster pointed out, trying to extend a lifeline to the government to bring forward improvements to their own legislation. We're doing this with the full comprehension and understanding that there may even be unintended consequences to what we're presenting here. It's a dangerous precedent that we're in, but we're trying to work with what's handed to us. It's simply something that's the only option that we have left and are presenting. We're trying to work with the government in many ways to bring these things forward.

Madam Chair, I'm anxious to hear what the comments are from members opposite and from others in regard to this subamendment. At the risk of being complicated and bringing this to a further amendment of an amendment of legislation, it's something that we're trying to do, hopefully in good faith – and, hopefully, it will be received in good faith – to bring forward positive legislation. As representatives of Albertans and representatives of our constituents the onus is entirely upon us to try and do this.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to speak against the subamendment today. This subamendment essentially proposes to amend the definition of our amendment. The amendment was proposed to ensure that family farms were exempted and that a certain way of life was protected, but this subamendment increases the exempted people for farms that employ five or less paid workers.

The entire intent of the legislation is to defend paid farm workers. These people have been without protections for a number of years. Like every other employee in the province, they have the right to be able to refuse unsafe work. You know, if someone says, "Stick your hand in that live machine and take out that block of wood that's stuck," they should be able to say no. That is what our belief is, and that's how we're proceeding forward.

We also think that paid farm workers should have access to compensation in the event that they are grievously injured and unable to work for the rest of their lives. In the event that someone is tragically killed in a farm accident, we feel that their family should have access to that compensation.

You know, it was always our intention to exempt family farms, and we've brought in amendments to clarify this, as we have been asked to do by numerous parties. I think the Official Opposition, in bringing forward this amendment, is really indicating that maybe everything wasn't all about the family farm because this would exempt more than just family farms. An operation with five employees, while being a small business, is not a family business. It's a small business. Like any other small business, they will now be required to be subject to occupational health and safety and to be subject to WCB. This is the case for every other small business across the province, so it's not unreasonable to think that vulnerable workers in this particular sector should also be included in this case.

I'd also like to point out while I have risen here that back in March it seemed that the Leader of the Official Opposition was, in fact, in favour of extending rights to farm workers, so I am surprised now that the Official Opposition is taking the position that they are taking. I understand that there have been some concerns about family farms, and I believe that our amendment makes it absolutely clear what our intention is with respect to that going forward.

You know, this amendment would increase that exemption. It would increase it beyond family farms. It would increase it to include paid employees, the very same paid and vulnerable employees that we are acting to protect and that our party has pretty much throughout its history indicated that it will act to protect.

Madam Chair, I will be voting against the subamendment, and I would urge all members to do the same. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. First of all, I do support this amendment for a couple of reasons. The first is that this bill is going to cost farmers jobs. It's already happening. We're already hearing from the Olds rally today that ranchers are not going to be able to afford to do what the requirements are if they have hired hands now, to be able to keep up with families that don't need as many hired hands. So we've broken farmers into two different groups, which is extremely unfortunate. People are going to lose jobs, and that's tough in my community.

Again, we just watched a minister stand in this House again and accuse farmers, Madam Chair, of forcing people to do unsafe work and say that she wouldn't support this thing because she actually thinks some farmer or rancher somewhere is going around and forcing people to do things that they do not want to do, forcing people to do things unsafely, and that's not true. It's the same thing her Premier has said. Then they wonder why Albertans won't trust them anymore. This is what they keep standing up in this House and saying. They keep standing up and saying: farmers and ranchers are trying to hurt people; they're trying to kill people. That's what this government is saying. Shame on the minister for saying that, and shame on the Premier for continuing to allow it to happen.

Farmers and ranchers are not trying to hurt people, and the quicker we all get that through our heads, the quicker we can try to get some proper legislation done. But saying that you will not vote for this amendment because you think a farmer or rancher would now force somebody to do something and it takes away their protection to not do it is unacceptable.

I can tell you that back home all the farmers and ranchers I'm talking to are outraged, and that is one of the reasons that they will never vote for this government again. This minister should stand up in this House and apologize to farmers and ranchers.

Mr. Mason: I would hope that the hon. member would be able to hear the response to that nonsense that he has just spouted. In all industries there are safe and unsafe situations that arise from time to time. They are not usually or almost never or completely never a deliberate attempt by the employer to force somebody to do something that's dangerous. To suggest that if you talk about the existence of unsafe working conditions from time to time in the agriculture industry, it's somehow an attack on farmers is completely twisting the words of the minister and is attempting to further fan the flames for people who don't understand the legislation. It is not adding any clarity to this discussion whatsoever. It's misleading, Madam Chair.

Every year in Alberta 17 people die in work-related farm accidents, and for every one of those deaths there are another 25 that are hospitalized as a result of a work-related injury. These kinds of accidents occur in all industries, Madam Chair, not just on farms.

To say that if you talk about the injuries, for example, in oil field drilling or deaths in industry, you're somehow accusing those employers of deliberately sending people to their deaths, you know, is an absolute outrage and an insult. For the hon. member to stand here and then have the gall to stand up further and demand an apology from this side when it's that hon. member that actually owes an apology for twisting and misleading and trying to inflame the situation further, deliberately, I might add, Madam Chair, by misleading farmers about what this government is saying and about what the intention of this government is – he is the one, frankly, that should apologize.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka first.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have no intention of inflaming this. But I want to take you to a farm, in a way. I received this very long text message, pecked out on a phone – I don't know how many hours he spent doing it – sharing his story with me, a young family farm. The reality is that he expresses things that I think maybe are not understood about the nature and the reality of the farm world.

The truth of the matter here is that the nature of the farming world has changed in recent years. If you look at commodity prices versus expenses, what farms earn hasn't really gone up in 10 or maybe even in some cases 15 years. Costs have continued to rise. The truth of the matter is that farming margins are so thin right now that many of them are actually going bankrupt. The reality is that almost all farm families, every time they get a break in their farming schedule, go off farm and have to work somewhere else, usually in the oil field, so that they can make enough money to keep their farm alive.

Part of that reality is also that – and this is in relation to the amendment; in fact, it relates directly to SA1 here – I don't think people understand that most multigenerational farms don't get it handed to them on a silver platter for free. What happens is that one generation buys it from the next so that they have money to retire, so that the older people have money to live. It starts over with every generation, with this incredibly massive cost factor that comes in, and then the costs of operating have escalated while the incomes haven't. The reality is that for many farmers it truly is a lifestyle; it isn't a business.

In regard to the business side of it, which is what this relates to, farms that have not grown, farms that have not increased their size are not able to earn enough revenue off their operational expense to actually keep a family alive. There isn't enough income left at the end of the day for a family to live on, hence working outside, hence trying to get bigger so that they can create enough revenue and get a thin margin of 5 per cent or so to try and live on. This is something that really becomes difficult for them to do.

The price of land has escalated to the point where, in my area, land is costing between $4,500 and $12,000 an acre. Farming business analysts have pointed out that you can't cash-flow on that kind of purchase price. You have to fund it some other way: working outside, trying to get bigger. The reality is that about $2,000 an acre is all you can actually earn on a farm.

So this young man, who's been through all of this experience, bought his father's home quarter then had to borrow money to buy two more quarters to try and get a little bit bigger. He says:

I totally get safety. One thing you need to understand is that we just don't hire masses of people. We hire people who are just as passionate as we are. There are lots of farmers at heart that can't afford to farm because of the incredible costs that are related to it. They can't afford to farm themselves, and these are the people who we usually hire. If it's about the money or safety, they wouldn't work for us, in truth. But truth be told, the guys that work for me and all farms will never be a number. They become family. They eat dinner with us every day. They're over for all the holidays. Do you really think we don't care about their safety? Truth be told, my guys are more upset . . .

Now, these are the farm workers.

... and worried than I am now. They know that I don't have a lot of money. I've shown them my books. They will tell you that they are paid more a month than I am. To a very small group of employees that have gotten hurt in the past, gone to the government to complain...

Et cetera, et cetera.

The reality is that in many cases, yes, we need to protect the rights of the farm workers, but what if the farm workers don't want it? Will they have the right to say no, or will it be forced upon them? And I understand that, yes, there are cases where some farm workers need help, but that's where this legislation needs to be fine-tuned and not steamrolled over everyone else. The reality of the farming economy these days is that it's not possible to operate on a one- or two-person operation and actually survive, and family farms have been forced to get bigger in order to even survive. They do care about their people, and oftentimes it is the neighbour's son or somebody from across the next quarter. So there is an extremely important point to this that actually makes it possible for the family farm to survive.

Unless you understand those economics and those realities and those generational passings on, how it is that they even get to become the next generation that farms, I think you don't understand why it is that we are getting so inundated. I mean, we didn't make this up, friends: 30,000 signatures presented today. We didn't go out and con those. We didn't go out and beg people to sign it so we could hand something in here. Thousands of letters were sent to us.

Yes, there are people who need some protection, but this protection needs to be wisely thought about and carefully administered, and that is not what's happening with this legislation. That kind of careful thought has not been put into this. Quite frankly, the partial solution to a very, very bad piece of legislation is in this subamendment, and I have to encourage you, based on one farmer's testimony and experience, that the reality is that without some consideration for being able to do these things in the community of farming, quite frankly, you will drive many of these operations out of business. They will cease to exist, and what you will end up with is big corporate farms. That's what will be left.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Just in regard to the dispute between the House leader and our opposition whip with regard to comments made by the minister, the wonderful thing about this House is that all words are recorded in Hansard, and we'll get somebody to pull those statements and just make sure that there's clarity on that.

Anyway, getting back to the amendment, I find it interesting that the government can put forward a six-page amendment on a five-page bill, and everybody jumps up and rags and says how wonderful it is, and then when the opposition puts through a very small, half-page subamendment to it, all of a sudden, you know, that's got to be rejected.

All it does is to provide some clarity as to the size of a family farm and give them – like I said before, in my previous speech, this six-page amendment, although it is an improvement on the bill, isn't quite clear as to what size a family farm is and kind of ties their hands behind their backs if they do need some help. Sometimes a small family farm is just a couple. I have family members that calve out 350 to 400 head of cattle every year, and it's a 24-hour job. It's tough. They're both, you know, in their 60s, and to be up 24 hours a day checking on calves is just beyond their capability, so they hire a hired man, that comes and stays with them for a couple of months while they do their calving. So all that is that we're just trying to eliminate that. This person that they hire sleeps in their house and eats breakfast at their table, so he is like a family member, but he's not. He's a hired hand.

So I'm pleased to rise and speak in support of the subamendment to the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act. This amendment will provide more stability and security to family farms by excluding them from mandatory OH and S due to the fact that they only employ a handful of paid employees. Again, sometimes it's on a part-time basis, only for a month. It's the paperwork involved in providing WCB coverage and OH and S coverage. A lot of these families already have insurance that covers their employees. It's blanket coverage, and it comes and goes. They're not in the market to have their employee or the person that comes and helps them on a yearly basis get hurt so that he doesn't come back and they have to look for someone else. It's not in the cards.

Nobody disputes the fact that safety is important; however, we seem to disagree on the fact that those most concerned with safety are the moms and dads operating farms. Moms and dads are not only concerned with the safety of their children but also of the workers that they may have. It's a small outfit, so these employees may not be blood relatives, but they're treated as though they are. Like I said, they sleep in the house, they have breakfast, they have lunch, dinner, and supper with them, and sit and watch TV at night together. Moms and dads do everything within their power to ensure the safety of everyone on the farm while also introducing their children to the joys and, at times, burdens of farm life. By broadly instituting OH and S on all farms, the government is in effect saying: "You're not doing it right. You're not looking out for your family, neighbours, and employees. We know better. We can do better. We will do it."

Come to think of it, that's exactly what the Premier said last week, that this bill will be passed. No discussion. This bill will be passed prior to Christmas: no ifs, ands, or buts; no thorough consultation; no consideration. Is that what we've come to in this province? The idea that government can better take care of farmers' families is categorically false. So is the idea that the government knows better on this issue.

Furthermore, at this point OH and S executives don't even know what implementation will look like. According to Ross Nairne, the executive director of occupational health and safety, speaking in Grande Prairie, "Answers will be unclear until technical rules are developed and implemented in 2017." That is as reported in the Western Producer on December 3. What we're doing here is attempting to pass legislation, and it seems nobody knows what the final product will look like, Madam Chair. This kind of uncertainty for at least one full year and likely more is not helpful to anyone, least of all to those family farms who will be stuck in limbo while they await confirmation of what implementation will look like for a small operation. Do they invest? Do they try and grow bigger, knowing that down the road they're going to get legislation that could cripple them?

I don't think it's asking too much for there to be a minimum, basic framework in place. That's all we're asking; that's all this amendment does. It adds to the six pages of the amendment one little section that dictates how many employees you can have before this legislation goes into effect. I think a small farm with five employees on a part-time basis or even on a full-time basis is not going to cripple the government.

Farmers and ranchers have questions for which neither the government, OH and S, nor WCB have answers. That's the problem. That's a problem of more than just misinformation. That's a problem of lack of information. It's also a problem of lack of foresight and, as I'm sure the government is tired of being reminded, a lack of consultation. To address this, in this last-minute amendment the government re-exempted family farms so long as they don't hire a single employee for any part of the year. All we're trying to do is clarify that a small family farm can hire up to five employees. It's not that onerous. [interjections] That's better, but it does not actually exempt family farms; it only exempts the family members themselves, so we still have the same host of problems, just on a smaller scale. But this error can be fixed. That brings me to this amendment, which would actually exclude from mandatory OH and S those family farms by letting them hire a few seasonal employees without suddenly having their homestead treated like a factory.

Questions abound for family farmers. They're asking if they're able to continue operating. They're asking if they'll be able to continue to hire the additional hand or hands that they need to ensure that their family farm runs smoothly and safely, above board, not under the table. They're asking if they'll be able to afford whatever upgrades an OH and S inspector might demand on their 80-year-old farm. They're asking these questions, and they're not receiving answers. In my previous statement I alluded to the machinist company that went bankrupt after being fined close to $300,000 by OH and S because they had modified a switch on a drill press. How many farmers out there have modified a piece of farm equipment?

An Hon. Member: All of them.

Mr. Hanson: All of them. You buy a piece of equipment, and you tinker with it to make it work better. Sometimes you add a little bit. You know, if something happens, is the farmer going to lose his farm because he's added an extra plowshare to a 50-foot cultivator?

Farm families are not large enterprises that bring in big money. They're not large corporations with dozens or hundreds of employees. They're small. They operate on a tight budget, and they do it for the love of the job and the love of the accompanying life. In order to help things run smoothly, they sometimes need to hire only a few people to help out for a season or on a long-term basis.

Exempting family farms from this mandatory OH and S makes sense. It doesn't mean in regard to safety that any corners will be cut. It doesn't mean that safety suddenly flies out the window. Not at all. These farmers are already concerned with safety. For years, without legislation in place, they've already been doing everything within their power to mitigate any injuries. Safety is already being considered and being acted upon on family farms. Nobody wants to see injuries anywhere, least of all families, and 90 per cent of them that we've talked to do provide insurance for themselves and for people that they hire on a part-time basis.

Passing this amendment is one of the best things this government can do, outside of killing the bill completely or referring it to committee, to ensure that proper, thorough consultation can take place. Passing this amendment would only mean that the government stands up in front of all Albertans and says that it recognizes that family farms are different. That's all we're asking for, just some clarity on: what is a family farm?

It would mean that the government is beginning to gain an appreciation and an understanding of the variation that exists in the agricultural community. Passing this amendment would mean that the government is prepared to start listening to Albertans and start taking their concerns into account. In fact, it would show Albertans that the government is not just prepared to start listening but is actually listening to them, which, let's be honest, this government could use a little bit of help on.

In an economy already shaken, fragile, and despairing, the last thing that we need to do in this province is pass legislation that will further hurt our economy. Worse, the last thing this government should want to do is hurt more Albertans by bringing about further job loss and insecurity.

I'm not fearmongering here. I know that the other side of the House enjoys accusing us of that on a regular basis, but that's not what I'm doing. I'm stating facts, and I'm supporting the people in my constituency that have asked me to do this, every day, every letter, every phone call, every e-mail. Not one for Bill 6. Not one.

Numerous farming families have raised their voices and have spoken to MLAs and media about the fact that the potential costs associated with instituting OH and S are very concerning, inhibiting, and unaffordable. Let's read between the lines. That means closure, and that's closure not just of a family business but of a way of life.

Before I finish speaking on this amendment, I'd like to ask a few questions of the government members opposite. Over the past weeks this House has spent some time debating Bill 202, the Alberta Local Food Act. Has the government considered what effect passing Bill 6 may have on the implementation of Bill 202? As far as I can see, we have two bills which share something of a relationship. In previous days a number of members opposite have spoken on shopping locally and speaking with farmers. Have those same members asked those farmers how this bill will affect them? Probably not. They don't want to hear it.

Or consider the implementation of the unpopular carbon tax. The monies that will be owed by small family farms on this will already serve to raise their costs. How will Bill 6 on top of the carbon tax affect the costs imposed on family farms? Has the government, have members opposite asked that question?

These questions are important to answer when you're considering family farms with only a few employees. The intent should be to promote business and employment, not stifle it and not put it under the table, as was suggested in Vegreville.

As mentioned before, safety is a high priority for the moms and dads who run these farms. However, if they see increases in costs, not only from the carbon tax but also barriers from extensive OH and S implementation, there's a possibility that they will be unable to hire those few employees that they need to help maintain operations. That puts extra stress on the family.

If they can't afford to hire some additional people to help, that could, in turn, have negative consequences of making the owners take on even more responsibility, even longer hours, which could affect their safety. Passing this amendment, therefore, promotes safety on family farms by letting them hire the help they need when they need it. Safety is important for everyone, and passing this amendment will not diminish the application of safety measures for anyone, nor will it put people at risk.

In closing, I'd like to reiterate my support for this amendment to exempt family farms that employ fewer than five workers from mandatory OH and S. I don't think it's that difficult to do. I encourage all members of this House to take some time to consider what Bill 6 would look like and what it would mean to family farms both with and without this amendment. Once that has been truly and honestly considered, I believe you will understand the importance and necessity of passing this amendment. Again, I'll add: all we're asking is to add half a page to your already six pages of amendments on a five-page bill.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in support of this subamendment from my esteemed colleague. It would be truly amusing, if it wasn't so insulting, that this government expects Alberta farmers to believe that they had planned to exempt farm owners and family farms all along when everybody, especially farmers, know that that is absolutely not true. Documentation proves it's so.

Although we have heard time and again empty rhetoric about how this government is listening – we hear it all the time – their actions are speaking louder than their empty rhetoric because we still see no formal process in place for farmers to have concrete input into Bill 6. There's nothing there. There's been talk and no concrete process put in place.

Now, this amendment that we have is a good amendment intended to protect family farms. The reason why the members opposite are having a struggle with this is because they do not understand farming. For example, a family farm during harvest time needs an intense amount of work to be done around the clock for a short period of time to get that harvest in.

Same thing at roundup. When it's time to bring the cattle in, they are scattered all over the countryside. I worked for a cattleman. We had cattle in three different locations. I think that the closest location was a mile away, and the farthest location was about 15 miles away at a pasture. When it was time to round up the cattle and bring them back – and there were at any given point in time between 500 and 600 head – we were going to need help. For that short period of time it's not uncommon for family farmers to hire some people to come on over and get that job done and to take as long as it takes to get that job done.

Now, going back to harvest time as an example, you're always fighting the weather when you're a farmer. Of course, at harvest time, the way seeding is done today, the intention is to have all that grain come ready at the same time and get it off the field and into the bins. When a family farm has only two or three family members, quite often they will hire out to get enough manpower there for that short amount of time, and they give 'er all day, from sun-up to sundown. Well, actually, when you're taking grain off, you will combine until the dew doesn't let you anymore. It's called when it gets "tough." That's a farming word. [interjection] Yeah. It gets tough, too. But the last thing you want is dew-laden grain. It will heat up and just go to rot on you.

In this intense operation you're working from as early in the morning as you possibly can till as late at night as the dew falls. That means you have a really short window that day and maybe the next day and however many days it's going to be until that weather comes against you. You need lots of people, lots of machines, and lots of times a family farm will hire out for this short period of harvest. It may only be six or seven days, and that's it for the whole year. There will be no more hired workers needed. So because of this, if a family farm has to hire these workers temporarily for these few days – whammo – they are now subject to everything in this bill although they are, indeed, a family farm.

Because of the way this bill has been so poorly crafted, because this government did not talk to the experts on the farm, you don't know that. You don't know farming. You don't know the cycle of farming and the different kinds of farming that there are, whether it be grain farming, whether it be cattle, whether it be poultry. You don't understand it, but you're trying to legislate it. This is patently wrong, and that is the reason why in our parliamentary system we have standing committees, so that legislation that politicians think is great can go to the standing committees and the standing committees can bring in the experts, the farmers in this case, and the farmers can come to the standing committee and tell you in far greater detail than I'm telling you all of the very unique but complex aspects of farming in the prairie provinces.

There's nothing like it. You can hardly compare this even to, you know, orchards in the Okanagan. I have experience with that. I also have experience with cattle from out here and grain farming and haying and all the rest of it. There are these moments of intensity where the family farmer has to hire out, and when that happens under this legislation as it is now – whammo – that family farm comes under the whole breadth of this legislation, and that's wrong. It shouldn't be that way.

If your intention was to exempt family farms, you haven't done it. I'll say it again. The reason you haven't done it – and I'm not being facetious or malicious when I say this – is that you don't understand farming. You don't understand prairie farming. Since you don't understand all of the complexities of farming because you haven't sent these things to committee, you haven't brought in the farmers – we keep suggesting to you that you do that – since you won't do that, well, okay, we're going to have to introduce a subamendment to your amendment.

Your amendment is an admission by you that your original bill was flawed, and you refuse to admit just how flawed it was, calling it mistaken communication. But, frankly, just think about this. If the farmers had not demonstrated and protested as loudly as they have, if the opposition had not protested as loudly and long as we have, you would have passed Bill 6 as it was, thinking that it's just fine, when in fact it is so flawed that you finally brought forward your own amendment in an attempt to fix it.

Again, the people who brought forward the amendment in an attempt to fix a flawed bill still didn't send it to committee and still didn't invite in a few thousand farmers to come and tell us from their expert testimony the different complexities that we need to know as legislators to draft sound legislation. Again, you relied on politicians and bureaucrats to fix a flawed bill developed by politicians and bureaucrats and not the farmers themselves. That is the fundamental flaw of Bill 6. It was not created by farmers, and it needs to be. There wasn't enough consultation. If you're really serious about farm safety, there are no better experts than the farmers themselves. They have not created this bill, and neither have they created this amendment. That is still your fundamental flaw.

We just keep hearing rhetoric about, "We hear; we hear; we're listening; we're listening," and what have the farmers been telling you? Kill Bill 6. It's a universal statement that you see at every rally, all over Facebook, all over Twitter, all of these e-mails, all of these letters. You know, earlier today my colleagues here in the Wildrose opposition put out – I don't know – five or six dead trees' worth of paper from our constituents and your constituents protesting Bill 6. The one thing that I noticed was: none from you.

Where were your stacks of petitions, of 30,000 names in support of Bill 6? Where were your stacks upon stacks upon stacks of thousands and thousands of letters from your constituents in support of your Bill 6? You don't have them. But I know that you have a lot of the same e-mails that I got, because I can read the header. I know that it was CCed to you, to these members. I also know how many I got in support of Bill 6, and I presented every single one of those letters that were in support of Bill 6: exactly none, not even one.

My constituency assistant in Sylvan Lake has been run off her feet. The phone just keeps ringing and ringing and ringing: we don't want Bill 6. We have letters from the Alberta federation of rural electric associations. They're saying: we don't want Bill 6. Rural Alberta has been pleading with this government, saying: kill this bill. It was flawed from the get-go. No Band-Aid is going to successfully repair it.

We are going to try to propose amendments in an attempt to help repair this thing because this government is so doggedly determined to ram this bill through without listening to the very farmers whose lives this bill is going to impact. That is rude, and it is insulting to the democratic process and every Alberta farmer that's out there and has to be subject to this kind of totalitarian treatment. It's shameful.

Then we've had some statements from the other side that demonstrate clearly the lack of understanding that this government has about farmers, farm safety. For example, we have heard this government state that Bill 6 gives farm workers the right to refuse dangerous work. News flash: all Canadians have the right to refuse dangerous work.

Some Hon. Members: No, they don't.

Mr. MacIntyre: We can all say no. There is no person that can force me to do a dangerous job. Nobody. No one can force me to do a dangerous job. Nobody. So now you're accusing farmers of purposely, consciously ordering their workers to do dangerous work? Is that what that member is suggesting? [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, through the chair, please. Innisfail-Sylvan Lake has the floor.

Mr. MacIntyre: Yes, ma'am.

Charging Alberta farmers with forcing their employees to perform dangerous jobs: that deserves an apology. At 2:11 today, approximately, the Premier said that farm workers' "human rights . . . have been ignored." That's a quote, that farm workers' "human rights . . . have been ignored" for years, I believe she said. By whom? The farmers that employ them? Are you charging farmers who employ farm workers of ignoring farmer workers' human rights? Show me one. Show me one farmer who has ignored the rights of their workers. What a shameful accusation. It is a baseless charge and deserving of an apology from this Premier.

At 2:25 today the Minister of Health called farm workers "vulnerable." I was a farm worker. At no time did I feel vulnerable. Insinuating that farmers who employ them are purposely mistreating or taking advantage vulnerable employees, again, charging Alberta farmers with mistreatment: this is absolutely unacceptable. It deserves an apology from this government. Good grief.

Again, I really believe that it comes down to a genuine ignorance on the part of members opposite as to what farming is all about, the complexities of farming, and especially family farming. You just don't get it. You know, consultation is supposed to be a discussion where both parties speak and listen and – here is the key – respect the wisdom of both. This government has not demonstrated any respect for the wisdom of Alberta's farmers.

They've been farming this land for over a hundred years. I had the pleasure this summer of participating in a celebration at the McAllister farm. I believe it was the 125th anniversary of them farming the same dirt, 125 years. They've been on that dirt longer than this province has existed. That farm is an amazing operation. They have been farming continually, safely, generation after generation, and I was just blessed to be able to take a photograph of four generations of McAllisters: great-granddad, granddad, the dad, and the child. It was a wonderful moment.

I have neighbours who have been farming the same land for 105 years; others, 100 years.

Dr. Turner: What does this have to do with the subamendment?

Mr. MacIntyre: Everything. The subamendment goes to protecting those family farms from this legislation, that simply doesn't understand the family farm. That's what this is all about. We brought this subamendment to you because you're just going to have to accept that the family farms who tilled this province's earth for generation upon generation know a thing or two more than you.

You've rushed in with a Band-Aid amendment brought forth by a government that still fails to get to the core of the problem with this problematic legislation, which is that you still think you know more about farming than the farmers of Alberta. It's not unsurprising given your refusal to slow this process down, to properly consult, to put this thing into committee. You've got an amendment that is proposing to plug some holes, but there are too many holes. You don't have enough fingers and toes to plug them all.

You're claiming that your intention was never to impose this legislation on the family farm, and you've gone so far as to accuse Wildrose of spreading misinformation, but here we are with an amendment that fundamentally fails to exempt family farms, really. As I've just described to you, during harvest family farms are going to have to hire for that little window, and as soon as they do: wham.

Farming is seasonal work. You will be hard-pressed to find family operations that do not at any point require seasonal, additional paid help to do things like get the crops in or branding. These farm hands often live on site. They become part of the family. They come year after year. These relationships are symbiotic. The owner of the farm needs the farmhand just as much as the farmhand needs work from their farmer.

Dr. Turner: And a safe workplace.

Mr. MacIntyre: Are you saying that are farms are not safe, that farmers don't have safe workplaces? There are just more charges against our farmers. Goodness sakes. You need to go work on the farm. You need to learn a thing or two about farming.

Dr. Turner: I own a farm. I actually own a farm.

Mr. MacIntyre: I'm not talking about the computer game. I'm not talking about the app.

The Chair: Hon members, can we have order. The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake has the floor.

Mr. MacIntyre: In a province like Alberta, where the harvest season is short and demanding and there are options for work on any one of Alberta's nearly 50,000 farms, the power dynamics between a farmer and their help are far more balanced than this government would imply. We cannot help on this side of the House but to hear in the words of the NDP what amounts to a fundamental mistrust of the farmers' intentions. The NDP seems to believe that farmers are some type of selfish, oppressive owner of the means of production looking to take advantage of their employees. This legislation and the government rhetoric around it is laced with the notion that farmers are somehow abusing their employees or denying them human rights. It is simply not true, and frankly hundreds of farmers and ranchers whom I've spoken to find it insulting and inflammatory and deserving of an apology. Farmers only ask that you acknowledge that 9 to 5 office hours are not functional or tenable during calving and harvest season or most of the year on a farm.

More than just farmhands, what about contract workers? This legislation says that this only applies to ranch and farm work. But what exactly constitutes farm work, then? Even with this amendment from the government it is still not clear to many in the agricultural community whom I have consulted with that a family farm can bring paid or unpaid workers.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak today against the subamendment. I have spent many hours, many days visiting, calling, e-mailing, and learning from the constituents of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville and their concerns. Among those concerns has been that the people are afraid that the government wants to tell parents how to raise their children. I don't want that for Albertans. I have seen how many issues around provincial legislation in our history have stirred the hearts of parents worried that the government did not believe that parents have the fundamental right to raise their children as they see best.

My father raised me and my sister as a single dad. As an owner of his own painting business, builder of trailers, engineer of geodesic domes, and overall inventor extraordinaire, he believed it was the most important thing to teach his children how to work. I held a paintbrush at the age of nine or 10. I had small hands, so I was well suited to cutting around doorknobs and light switches, and I would take the tape and I would tape off the baseboard, and I would wash windows. As I got older, I carried wood and scaffolding, helping my dad build geodesic domes, which he shipped all across the globe. I helped him build his dream house. It is a geodesic home in Wetaskiwin, and this is how we spent our time. Over that year that was how we bonded. This is what makes me the better IKEA builder between me and my husband.

Sometimes it felt like work, but more often it was just how we spent our time. Sometimes I was paid a few bucks. Sometimes, most of the time, I was not, but I helped my dad. I freely gave of my time to help my dad build his home because of the love of the work that he raised me to have and the love of my dad.

The original amendment speaks to what is fundamental about being Albertan and Canadian, protecting the right to raise your children in the traditions that you choose, whether it's the religion that you choose or the education that you choose or the home that you choose. I have visited hundreds of people across the region since May. I have gone walking in their fields to do crop checks. I have seen first-hand the difficulty of what it means to sow a new crop and wait and see through the season's changes to find out what you will actually get out of that yield come harvest time. I have met many, many families that have deep roots in our province, seen so many Century farm awards that are proudly hung at the outside of ranches' gates. This is what people were telling me. As people that have an identity of farming – fourth, fifth, sixth generation – they wanted the freedom to shape the world that their children live in. They wanted to teach them the values that their family held most dearly. I have listened. I have heard, and now we have that in writing. It is the original amendment, a common-sense approach by the government to underline the intent of the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, that what we value as Albertans is to enshrine the basic human rights and protection of farm and ranch workers.

I will continue to listen to many constituents, to every constituent. I will answer every phone call. I will answer every e-mail. I will go to every event that I necessarily have the human time for. Absolutely, that's what I do. What I've learned is that my constituents have conflicting points of view. There are people that argue on many different sides of a debate, but I am their voice, and I stand in this House, and I stand in caucus, and I speak to every person that I know can make a difference, and I ensure that their concerns and their very special and unique perspectives are voiced to this government and in this House every day, now and in the future.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise again to speak against this subamendment. You know, I'd like to begin by addressing some of the comments that were made earlier. I don't think that myself or any member of our caucus at all has ever implied or ever intended to imply that any farmer is deliberately exposing anyone to unsafe work. The fact is that in any given workplace there is a potential that an unsafe situation will arise, and that's why it's so critical that an employee have a right to refuse that unsafe work if they feel that it is unsafe. We think that that's a pretty basic position to take.

You know, with respect to people who become injured, they should be entitled to compensation. As so many of my colleagues have said, every year in Alberta 17 people die in work-related farm accidents, and for every one of those deaths 25 or more are hospitalized as a result of a work-related injury. Laws that protect wage-earning employees on farms and ranches are working quite well in other provinces in this country.

You know, we have heard the concerns of the people who brought their concerns forward, and those people are concerned about their way of life and their ability to have their children participate in their family life. We have brought forward an exemption which I think outlines that quite well. But to also say that just because there are a small number of employees on a farm those employees are not entitled to the same protections that all other employees are entitled to, whether on larger farms or any other sector in the province: I just don't think that's appropriate. It doesn't carry forward the spirit and intent of the bill, which is, of course, to protect vulnerable farm workers.

You know, in B.C. when similar legislation was brought in, the farm fatality rate was reduced by 68 per cent, the farm injury rate was reduced by 52 per cent, and the serious injury rate was reduced by 41 per cent. I think it's certainly interesting, Madam Chair, that the members across keep citing that we have the lowest rate of injury of any province, because, actually, we don't keep those statistics, because without the protections of the occupational health and safety code, that enables us to keep those statistics and to investigate unsafe conditions that arise and to investigate injuries that occur and prevent such future injuries, we don't actually have that information.

You know, when we talk about education – well, education is important. Absolutely, we should educate people, but when we're talking about education, we also need to be talking about learning. Occupational health and safety provides a really critical learning mechanism, so when someone is in fact injured on a farm or in any other workplace – injuries, obviously, happen in every sector, everywhere – occupational health and safety can come in, and they can investigate that injury. Sometimes that will, going forward in time, cause changes to the code. Sometimes they discover a new unsafe condition, that hadn't previously been listed, and going forward, workers are protected from that. That's how the law advances. We think that that's a pretty good system. It's a pretty good system of both learning and teaching. I think it's a little bit silly to say that legislation and education are two separate things that can't possibly go together.

Of course, we know that everybody wants to keep workers safe, and we certainly know that, you know, both farmers and farm workers want safety in this instance. What this bill does is that it just provides very basic protections. It allows that in the tragic event of an accident, not necessarily the fault of anyone, if someone is injured, they are able to claim WCB. The reason it's so important that they have that WCB protection is because, sure, there are other forms of insurance out there, but if the insurance decides to deny the claim, then the individual is left to sue. Often you're talking about someone who's a vulnerable person, potentially, already. They've now been injured, they are unable to work, – so they're not making any income – and they have to go out and they have to start a lawsuit. That can be very expensive, and it can be very challenging for them.

We just don't think that that's the appropriate way to proceed forward. We don't think that, you know, those people who find themselves already injured and already in a vulnerable position should be forced to go out and retain a lawyer, sometimes at extreme cost to themselves, cost that they can't afford, in order to be able to access compensation like long-term disability.

Unfortunately, some workers, when they are injured, may be permanently injured. They may never be able to go back to work, and with workers' compensation they are provided with long-term disability, and that long-term disability enables them to continue to be able to have the necessities of life, to be able to pay for rent and for food and for shelter so that they can continue to live even though they find themselves without income.

You know, these amendments, I think, clarify the government's intention. Certainly, we have taken responsibility for the fact that maybe that intention wasn't clear from the start, but we think that this makes it clear and this addresses the concerns. We don't think that additionally extending those exemptions to paid workers, the very people that we are attempting to protect, is in any way appropriate. This legislation is intended to cover wage earners, right? Even if there are only five wage earners who are on a farm, they continue to be wage earners nonetheless, and they continue to be entitled to protections, just the same as anyone on a bigger farm. I mean, this would also potentially create an incentive whereby someone might try to stay under that number to avoid the legislation, but certainly we don't think it's the case that this amendment is in any way necessary to get around the situations that have been created.

You know, this government is and has been committed – I think, historically, that it should come as a surprise to no one – to ensuring that vulnerable populations, including vulnerable paid workers, have access to rights and have access to be full participants in society. That's exactly what this will do. It will allow them to have the right to refuse unsafe work, it will allow us to investigate when an injury or a death occurs, and it will allow people to have access to compensation.

In sum, Madam Chair, I think I would now like to move that the committee rise to report progress. Thank you.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mrs. Schreiner: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 6. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Ms Ganley: Madam Speaker, I move that we adjourn the House until 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:56 p.m. to 7:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Wednesday, December 9, 2015

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much. I rise to request through you, Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent to revert to introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this evening and introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly a number of guests representing what I hope will soon be the newly named King's University, located in my riding of Edmonton-Gold Bar. My guests have lobbied tirelessly for this name change, and they are very excited to be here to witness this happening here tonight. I know that this bill has come up for third reading on very short notice, and I deeply appreciate the efforts they have made to rearrange their schedules so that they could join us in the gallery this evening.

I will introduce them one by one, and I ask that they rise as I read their names. We've got Dr. Melanie Humphreys, who is the president of King's University; Mr. Bill Diepeveen, who is the chair of the board of governors; Dr. Henk Van Andel, who is president emeritus; Jim Visser, retired board member; Rick Mast, current board member; Dan VanKeeken, vice-president of advancement; Ellen Vlieg-Paquette, vice-president, administrative and finance; Dr. Gerda Kits, professor; Dr. John Hiemstra, professor; Dr. Peter Mahaffy, professor; Cheryl Mahaffy; Dr. Robert Bruinsma, retired professor; Louisa Bruinsma; Catherine Kuehne, director of marketing; Liam Kachkar; Carol Moreno, manager, alumni relations; Nik Vander Kooy, co-ordinator of marketing; Abigail Douglass, student association president; Melissa Grounds, a student at King's; Elyse Abma, student; Abbi Hofstede, another student.

I ask that the Assembly now please give the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Private Bills Third Reading

Bill Pr. 1

The King's University College Amendment Act, 2015

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad that I don't have to keep our audience waiting.

I'm pleased to rise to move third reading of Bill Pr. 1, The King's University College Amendment Act, 2015.

This bill, if passed, will change the name of King's University College to King's University. It also formally recognizes the ability of King's to grant baccalaureate, master's, and doctoral degrees. Some of the language is modernized, substituting the word "employees" for "servants," which no doubt will boost the egos of the employees of King's but will undoubtedly be a blow to the ego of the president now that she no longer has servants to supervise.

King's occupies the building on 50th Street in my riding that used to be known, I believe, as the Capilano Hotel. You can still see some vestiges of the old hotel in the building. The student dormitories are the old hotel rooms, complete with the original orange shag carpeting. When I took a tour of the building, my hosts were a bit embarrassed by the orange carpet, and I told them not to worry; I really like orange. I'm sure that in the days when it was still the Capilano Hotel, there were more than a few young men and women who received a bit of an education in some of those hotel rooms.

King's has been providing a formal education to young men and women on that site since 1979 and has been formally granting degrees since 1987.

King's is a Christian university, and its mission is "to provide university education that inspires and equips learners to bring renewal and reconciliation to every walk of life as followers of Jesus Christ, the Servant-King." To get an idea of how King's carries out its mission, I asked Melinda Steenbergen, a friend of mine and a ministerial assistant to the Minister of Municipal Affairs, to share her experience at King's. She shared with me a letter that I'd like to share with you, Mr. Speaker. She says:

King's is a caring community – I applied there as my mom was sick, and I needed a last minute transfer to Alberta to be close to her. When my Mom died, I was embraced by the professors, staff, and students. This is a small community that really nurtures and supports its students. I'll always be grateful to King's for the support given to me during a difficult time . . .

King's is academically rigorous – All of my professors had PhDs, and spent considerable time with me in small classes and individual studies . . .

King's gave me a practical education – As a major in Political Science, History, and Economics, I was required to produce briefing notes and policy presentations, and to debate social issues and apply my studies to current issues. I graduated as someone who could hit the ground running as a public servant and now a political staffer.

King's encouraged my ambition – I was editor-in-chief of the student newspaper and student association president. There are benefits to being a bigger fish in a small pond, and King's provides significant leadership experiences for students. My professors have written glowing and thoughtful recommendations for me with every job application and my masters program – they know me and they care about what I achieve.

Edmonton Strathcona MP Linda Duncan has been a long-time supporter of King's University. I asked her for her thoughts about King's, to be read during this bill debate, and she sent me this letter. She admires the breadth of accomplishments of this small campus and the daily interaction between King's leadership, faculty, and students. She's especially delighted by King's efforts to engage their students in global issues through their interdisciplinary studies conferences. This year's conference, by the way, is entitled Change Is in the Air: From Climate Chaos to Climate Justice, and it takes place January 20 and 21, 2016. I encourage everyone to come and learn about our changing climate, those affected most by it, and how our world can chart a course towards a positive climate future.

Perhaps King's most famous student, though, is someone who has never formally registered there at all, Mr. Omar Khadr. For many years several King's professors have worked with Mr. Khadr. One of them, English professor Arlette Zinck, has worked with him for five years. Zinck has been tutoring Khadr, through his detention at Guantánamo Bay to his three prison stays in Canada. She's been called a proselytizer and an opportunist and has received numerous threats by mail, two of which she turned over to police.

with him – accused her of turning King’s into a factory for Khadr groupies and compared her tutorials to conjugal visits. Levant later apologized by e-mail.

The Christian university where Arlette Zinck teaches does emphasize an interdisciplinary curriculum that reflects the Creator’s design and will encourage students to examine real-world issues from a Christian perspective and to become agents of social transformation. She looks upon working with Omar Khadr as a gift: we’ve said to him repeatedly that you don’t have to give back, that you are under no obligation, and if there is a program that interests you that is not at King’s, you know we’ll be walking right beside you; we are going to be writing letters of reference and doing whatever it takes to see you through.

King’s vision is to grow as a university community by creative teaching, passionate learning, rigorous scholarship, compassionate care, and joyful service. Passing this bill to change the name of King’s will aid in their pursuit of that vision. Randolph Haluza-DeLay, an associate professor of sociology at King’s, explained how it would effect faculty at King’s in his letter to me.

The King’s University College is a university in everything but name. The bill allowing a change in name to University would be highly beneficial to this institution, and to the higher education landscape in Alberta.

If I can serve as an example ... here at The Kings University ...

Herein are flyers he included on environmental justice in Canada and on climate change.

I serve on the board of the Parkland Institute. And yet, the word “college” generates a second-class status. Recently, CBC Radio held an interview with representatives of “Edmonton’s two universities.” Wait! What about King’s and Concordia!?

But as this CBC incident shows – and its not the only one – the “college” piece of the name is a problem. It has a definite effect on my ability to secure research grants. It affects the ability to get attention for our research. It affects recruitment of students and yet our teaching has repeatedly achieved very high levels of recognition. A longtime colleague working for the City of Edmonton expressed surprise last year that “King’s offers Bachelor’s? I thought you were a college.” Even my children’s mother tells the kids that their father “doesn’t work at a real university.”

Abigail Douglass, who’s here tonight, kindly gathered input from her fellow students on what the name change would mean to them.

Becoming a university means our school can now officially be part of the CIS athletic conference. It also means prestige! I can say I went to a university and that I have a university degree.

That was from Olivier Prophete, who is in his fifth year.

To me, it makes my school more well recognized as a Post-Secondary institution. It legitimizes the quality education King’s offers, and in the eyes of the public, makes that known and recognizable.

Joelle Noot, who is in her third year.

The name change finally recognizes King’s for what it has always been: a fully-fledged University that offers an amazing education. It also means I no longer have to explain what a “University College” is when I tell people where I study.

Joshua Thomas, who is in his third year.

The King’s University name change shows that a Christian Post-Secondary Institution can have the same standard of academic prestige as any other University.

Daniel Libert, fifth year.

This name change proves that King’s can produce the same value of education as any other University.

Connor De Groot, fourth year.

The King’s University name change is not only a pivotal change for the external perception of King’s but it also allows more pride and confidence in who we are. Whenever someone asks me what being a University College is, I simply respond we are a University and that’s all that matters. Although my grandma still has some convincing, I am very proud of this institution I call my second home and I hope that this name change can only further prove how amazing this place truly is and that King’s can receive the respect it deserves.

Abigail Douglass, third year.

There are a couple of other comments here, but in the interest of brevity, Mr. Speaker, I will table those perhaps at a later date. I want to extend a sincere thank you to Abigail Douglass for putting in the effort to collect those statements.

Mr. Speaker, I’d like to thank all of the members of the King’s community, past and present, for providing me with this information, which I hope the members of the Assembly find helpful in considering whether they support this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I know I speak for all of you. I continue to learn the rich diversity of this province every time I hear presentations and new information like that.

Are there any other members who would like to speak to Bill Pr. 1, The King’s University College Amendment Act, 2015?

Hearing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for closing comments.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was waiting for you to call me again, I had a couple more thoughts. I’d just like to quickly say that I hope that this name change will allow King’s to continue to grow and to serve the community of Edmonton-Gold Bar and all Albertans.

While I’m certain that many positive changes lie ahead for King’s, I do hope that they keep the orange carpet. Thank you.

Bill Pr. 2

Bethesda Bible College Amendment Act, 2015

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is certainly a pleasure to be able to rise this evening to move third reading of Bill Pr. 2, the Bethesda Bible College Amendment Act, 2015.

When Bethesda Bible College was originally founded, it was done as an extension of the Bethesda church. The Bethesda church legally changed its name, though, in 2009 to Christcity Church Ltd. As well, the church itself moved to a new, modern facility located on St. Albert Trail. The theological programs are now being operated out of this new facility and through Christcity Church, which was formerly Bethesda, so the amendments simply reflect the new church name and maintain continuity now between the church and its theological programs.

This, of course, did go through the Standing Committee on Private Bills. It was recommended by the committee to accept this, and I would hope that all the members of this House are willing to take this bill and move it forward to allow these fine folks to change their name.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill Pr. 2?

Hearing none, I would call on the Member for Edmonton-Decore to close debate.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, like my hon. colleague, I don't quite have any last-second thoughts prepared, so I will simply move to close debate on this and allow these folks to get their name changed.

Thanks very much.

Rosary Hall, Edmonton Repeal Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and move third reading of Bill Pr. 3, Rosary Hall, Edmonton Repeal Act.

Rosary Hall was founded by the Catholic Women's League here in Edmonton, back in 1915, and it operated until 2012. Since it has ceased operations and is no longer serving the people of Edmonton, they have requested to have it repealed. That is our reason for bringing this bill forward this evening. I ask all members to vote in favour.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would wish to speak to Bill Pr. 3?

Hearing none, I would allow the member to close debate.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I say that we go ahead and put the question.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 3 read a third time]

Bill Pr. 4

Canadian University College Amendment Act, 2015

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move third reading of Bill Pr. 4, Canadian University College Amendment Act, 2015.

I would just like to say that Canadian University College has resided in the city of Lacombe for just over a hundred years. It represents part of the rich religious heritage of education that we have all across this province, from many different kinds of traditions. They have brought to the city of Lacombe a great wealth of benefit, not just the economic benefit of having a university present in the city but the vitality and life of students, the volunteer work that they and staff contribute as well as the sports facilities and events that they host, and a great deal of truly world-class music, that they bring in on a regular basis. This university college, as it has been called, has been a great blessing, actually, to the city of Lacombe.

As is the case with the others, this is a name change to reflect the reality of their university status and their degree-granting status in the province of Alberta. I would urge all members to vote for the bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill Pr. 4? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that I'm probably alone in my enthusiasm for private bills this evening. But I am pleased to rise today to speak in favour of this bill, which would change the name of Canadian University College to Burman University. This institution was founded in 1907 by Charles and Leona Burman, both of whom devoted their entire lives to the work of the Seventh-day Adventist church. CUC continues to be affiliated with the Seventh-day Adventist church to this day.

Now, my wife has a close connection to both the Seventh-day Adventist church and the CUC, having grown up in an Adventist family, with many members of her family attending CUC. I can't say that I know much about the teachings of the Seventh-day Adventists, but I have learned that they are people who have the courage to live by their convictions. Adventists believe that Saturday, the Sabbath, should be kept holy, and I know that in this secular world laying down work for even one day every week is a difficult task.

Adventists also emphasize healthy living, with many Adventists taking up work in the health professions and eating a strictly vegetarian diet. I once sat through a half-hour sermon at my mother-in-law's church that consisted only of a lesson about the evils of bacon. That was followed up with a potluck dinner that featured that most famous of all Adventist vegetarian dishes, Special K cottage cheese loaf. You only need to try it once. But for those who can stick with the no-bacon and all-cottage-cheese-loaf diet, the payoff is a long, healthy life. My wife's grandmother recently celebrated her 105th birthday, and Adventists live on average 10 years longer than the average North American.

Finally, many Adventists are pacifists, and I know that my wife's grandfather refused to serve in World War II because of his Adventist beliefs. Because he had the courage to stand up for what he believed in, he was belittled by his neighbours and forced by the government of the day to live in a work camp for the duration of the war.

The mission of Burman University springs from its Adventist roots. It is to educate students to think with discernment, to believe with insight and commitment, and to act with confidence, compassion, and competence.

My wife's aunt worked at CUC for a number of years, and I asked her about the name change. She said the following: the new name reminds us to look to the past and the values that have helped establish the school and also to the future as these values guide the university in preparing young men and women for lives of service.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to support this name change and to support this institution's educational mission, and I also, like the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, urge all of my fellow members to do the same.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would like to speak to Bill Pr. 4?

Hearing none, the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka to close debate.

Mr. Orr: Thank you. I appreciate the comments from the member across the floor. Yes, it is a great college. It truly does bring great benefits to our city. I encourage you to pass this motion, please.

Bill Pr. 5

Concordia University College of Alberta Amendment Act, 2015

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments from the member, and I have to say that tonight is a little bit of payback for having sat through so many of his speeches for the last six weeks here in this session.

On behalf of the Member for Calgary-Varsity I'm happy to move third reading of this bill. The Member for Calgary-Varsity asked me to say some comments on her behalf. Concordia University of Edmonton is the Member for Calgary-Varsity's alma mater though it was called Concordia University College of Alberta at that time, long ago, when she attended. The Member for Calgary-Varsity is proud to sponsor this bill as Concordia; its current president, Dr. Krispin; and professors Dr. Strand and Dr. Muir have been like family to her. This bill signifies the great advancements being made by this exemplary postsecondary institution.

I'm pleased to move third reading of this bill, and I encourage all members of the Assembly to support it.

The Speaker: Are there any other parties who would like to speak to Bill Pr. 5?

Ms Jabbour: I just wanted to say that one of my daughters graduated from Concordia with her degree in chemistry. I know it's a fabulous university. The instruction there is just absolutely the best you could get, so I'm so thrilled with this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to support this bill to change the name to Concordia University College. I, too, attended Concordia during my first year of university and can attest that it was a great place to attend university. I went on and got a degree from the University of Alberta, but I'm certainly glad that I chose to attend Concordia for my first year. I have very warm feelings for it and am grateful for the instruction I received there.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the wonderful little Standing Order 29(2)(a) is on the second speaker, Edmonton-McClung. Are there any questions under 29(2)(a)?

Are there other members who would like to speak to Bill Pr. 5?

Hearing none, is the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar prepared to close debate?

Mr. Schmidt: Close, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 5 read a third time]

Bill Pr. 6 Covenant Bible College Amendment Act, 2015

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to move Bill Pr. 6, the Covenant Bible College Amendment Act, 2015.

It's a bit of a shame that you didn't have a longer period of time to enjoy such silence on behalf of myself, but I might just add that I have enjoyed the comments.

The Speaker: Hon. member, it's been suggested – are you moving the motion on behalf of Strathmore-Brooks?

Mr. Cooper: I most certainly am.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: On behalf of my hon. colleague from Strathmore-Brooks I thought that I would take this time to provide a little background on the Covenant Bible College, or CBC, as it's most commonly referred to, a vocational Bible school located in Strathmore, Alberta, where its last campus was held, in 2007. They did incredible work over a long period of time, beginning in 1941, in Norquay, Saskatchewan, and I know that they had a significant impact on the lives of many when it came to the instructional learning that can take place at such a critical facility. Unfortunately, a number of years ago, due to declining enrolment, they chose to close the Strathmore campus. This is the reason why we have Bill Pr. 6 before us.

I encourage all members of the Assembly to support the bill, and I hope that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar might be able to add some context to this debate.

The Speaker: Are there any other comments on Bill Pr. 6?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I can't call a point of order, but, please, gentlemen, my ears are bleeding. Can we hurry up?

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, on behalf of the Member for Strathmore-Brooks do you have anything to close debate?

Mr. Cooper: In light of the comments from my hon. colleague I might just close debate, sir.

Bill Pr. 7 Living Faith Bible College Amendment Act, 2015

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move third reading of Bill Pr. 7, Living Faith Bible College Amendment Act, 2015, and certainly encourage all members of this House to support it.

The Speaker: Are there other members who would like to speak to Bill Pr. 7?

Hearing none, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre to close debate.

Mr. Nixon: I suggest you call the question.

8:00 Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 6 Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act

The Chair: We have under consideration, Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, and we are on subamendment SA1. Are there any further speakers to this subamendment? Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It has to be short. Oh, goodness gracious. I rise to support this subamendment. Subamendment SA1 to Bill 6, in my opinion, does make sense. This amendment would allow a person that is engaged in a farming or ranching operation to have a couple of part-time employees, part-time paid workers, because that's what we're really talking about here, for the performance of ranching or farming work exempt from all OH and S provisions in Bill 6.

If we look at the family farm, because generally this is how this all goes, a father would pass a farm on to his son, so his son would be growing up, and, of course, then the father is getting older as things are moving on. It comes to a point where the father and the son have been working together for years and the father is getting too old to work. The son is old enough to take the place by himself, but because there have been two people working there – now there's going to be one because the father is giving up or quitting or moving on. That's how things work. You would have a son who now has more land, if they happen to have land, cattle. It just ends up being a lot of work for one guy. You know, his children, of course, probably aren't going to be at the proper age for him to be able to start using his 17- or 18-year-old son to help him work.

It seems like in that operation, in those farming practices there's always a spot where one person is left alone until either his children are grown up – well, that's generally the one. The father has been farming. The father is slowing down. Now the son has a bunch of land, and if there are cattle involved, too, he needs help, probably, you know, just really seasonally, fencing, fencing through the summer or hauling grain.

Good grief. I mean, the elevator: it seems like they're always calling for grain at the times when you're doing something else, and they need it right now. The days of hauling grain whenever you felt like it are over. You generally have to have a contract. Sometimes they don't call it in the month that you've contracted it, but – boom – the next thing you know, they've called it. Lots of times I've seen where somebody will get help from a neighbour or somebody to haul grain. Certainly, haying, stuff like that is a two-man job, trying to get hay from one place to another. And, of course, harvest: harvest is a no-brainer. That's going to take more than one person. In that sense it makes some sense.

I guess I get a little confused when I keep hearing about this unsafe work that people are being forced to go do. The Minister of Justice stood over there and said – and it's in the Blues, and I read it, and I'll just give a reference to it – that the boss could tell a man to stick his arm in that machine that's running and take a block of wood out of it. I mean, please, let's be realistic here. I run my own farm by myself. I wouldn't put anyone in any situation that I wouldn't put myself in. It's just that simple. There isn't anybody I know that would be caught dead doing anything like that. I certainly wouldn't ask somebody to stick their arm into a machine that was operating while I stood there and watched him to see if he could get the piece of wood out. It's just absolute fearmongering. I can't believe it.

An Hon. Member: It's in Hansard.

Mr. Schneider: And it is in Hansard. I mean, okay; so maybe she didn't quite mean it that way, but that's how this stuff all gets going, right? “Well, there are people being hurt, and they're being forced to do things that they don't want to do.” Seriously? I've never heard of anything like that, and maybe that happens on places that I don't know anything about, but on a small family farm, that I've been around for 40 years? Never.

So this bill kind of handcuffs the family farm that's passing on a piece of land and some cows to a son because he can't handle all that work. If he can get a little extra help and not be tied up with all this OH and S stuff because he's going to hire somebody for two weeks here and maybe three weeks when we're doing harvest or, gee whiz, calving – you can have a neighbour come down and help you pull a calf in the middle of the night or something, but he's got his own calves.

In trying to do this more than once, it gets to be more than just help, so it's easier to just get somebody from town and say: “Look; if I have trouble tonight, I'm going to call you. Come on in.” Yeah, there's a guy that can put an arm in, turn a calf around, a backwards, upside-down calf. That's the kind of stuff that you do at home. You don't race to the vet – and you know this as well as I do, Vermilion-Lloydminster. Those are the kind of jobs that maybe the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster can do by himself. I'm sure that he can. He's a bit taller, a bit longer in the arm. That's what it takes. You're right up to your nose in this stuff when you're working on something like that. For us guys that are six inches shorter and a little shorter in the arm, it's just a lot easier to have help, and if you've got a couple of hundred head of cattle, there's a lot of work to do. It's not as simple as it sounds.

Down in the country where I live, the wind blows, so, boy, if you blow a door off a building when a door happens to be open, putting that door back on the building is not a one-man job. I mean, it's a big job. It's more than a half-hour job probably, so having somebody around for these kinds of jobs is a good idea. Yeah, it's good.

You know, I'm not supposed to be going very long here, but I am going to go to a letter that I received from a constituent, a third-generation farmer.

Three of our children, their spouses and families currently farm with us. In addition, we have two full time employees and at peak season we may have up to four more on staff. We provide benefits and disability insurance to those who work with us. The key word here is work “with” us, for some have been here for sixteen years [and] others nearly ten. They are more like family, than employees.

We preach safety every day and try to practice it diligently. Other farmers obviously do the same, because farm accident and fatality rates in Alberta are similar or less to other [Canadian] provinces in Canada.

We can argue that number back and forth here probably, well, till it's 8 o'clock tomorrow morning. We probably will.

Mr. MacIntyre: Till the cows come home.

Mr. Schneider: We need help from Richard to pull them.

Your NDP Government says this bill is mainly about safety, but when I asked Minister Sigurdson in Okotoks about Occupational, Health and Safety not having experience in our industry, and how could they possibly set reasonable standards for it without consulting us, she had no answer.

Anyway, I'll go back to where I was, wherever that was. I guess the other point that I kind of wanted to make here – so this bill is going to pass, I expect. We hope to get some amendments, maybe between the two sides, that can make something work and make it look good, but we keep hearing the government talk about sending this to consultations with farmers after this bill has passed. So sometime after the 1st of January we'll expect to see some kind of notification, I guess, that would allow farmers to become part of a consultation that's going to build this document that will help define the codes that are going to be within this brand new, OH and S, agriculture-related document.

I'm curious who the experts will be for this job. To find an expert in agriculture: that will help. Drumheller-Stettler, would you agree? If I was trying to go find an expert in agriculture that would help me write codes for an OH and S document, who would I talk to? Would it be a farmer? Who else in this province would have the knowledge? Edmonton-Whitemud, help me out there. [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, through the chair, please.

Mr. Schneider: I'm sorry, Madam Chair. You're right. You're always right. I mess that up every time.

At any rate, I would suggest to this House that if you're looking for an expert to help write a document such as that, you'd have to talk to a farmer because they know every end of it, inside and out and backwards and forwards.

This amendment would help improve this bill by providing some kind of definition as to what a small farm operation is, just like my own operation. I do have to hire labour on a small scale now and then, and if I had to fit into the OH and S that's coming, I can expect that it would cost a lot of money.

I do want to say that I couldn't be in the House on Monday. I had to do something with my mother. I met a neighbour where I was at. Now, he had just put up a new bin, and I expect it was a pretty big bin. They didn't bring the safety cage that comes with the bin. It wasn't included in the package when he bought it, so he had to go buy it himself. He knew exactly what the package cost to put a safety cage around a ladder going up a bin. He did the math on that and the number of bins that he has on the place. It was going to take him $300,000 if he had to come up to code on OH and S to put up these cages. A farmer can't pass that on to anybody. That's just basically gone, that money.

An Hon. Member: He just absorbs it.

Mr. Schneider: You just absorb it.

I know that I don't want to be bogged down in more paperwork for some obscure regulatory compliance – I need to meet about – about when I should be out on a piece of machinery trying to get the farming done. And I'm pretty sure I'm not interested in filling out pages and pages of paperwork every morning when the guy I hire, that comes and helps me farm, like the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock does – he gets a guy just like I do. Every morning we go out and do a walk around. We make sure that we have tire pressure on all the wheels on the truck. We go look over the loader, make sure that it's greased. We do talk about safety all day long when we're going. I mean, this is just standard procedure. I don't have to fill out a document to say that I did this with my hired guy.

Anyway, I think I'm going to leave it at that. I was told to be short. The subamendment is within the full spirit of the government's amendment, that seeks to reassure that family farms stay family farms, and I trust that my hon. colleagues will support this subamendment.

The Chair: Any other speakers on the subamendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on subamendment SA1 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the amendment. [interjections]

Hon. members, you were not fast enough. I'm sorry. We've already moved on. We are back on the amendment.

I will call on the hon. Member for West Yellowhead to speak.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today in support of this bill. My member's statement a few days ago stated my background in farming, much to the dissatisfaction of the opposition over there. I spent 18 years on a mixed farm, and we did everything on that mixed farm. So I do know about farming and the hours that it needs to make it successful, like I said in my member's statement.

My other background, by the way, is from the industrial work site. Yes, it was unionized, and thank God it was. Health and safety were prominent in this atmosphere, and they had to be. We had to stick up for ourselves. We spent countless hours and dollars training ourselves, and this was time and money well spent. All workers deserve to work in a safe environment, and this training helped ensure that that was true.

Throughout the years I attended many classes over the 31 years in the plant. I attended courses all over the province representing health and safety as one of the main items, environment and many others on top of that. This knowledge helped provide me with the ability to train others, and I spent many years before coming to this House representing workers all across the province, not just in my own riding but all across the province, in all walks of life, unionized and non-unionized. I represented workers across Canada, even on the world stage. One occasion was the world conference on asbestos. Because it's such a horrible substance, I represented workers at that conference, representing Canada. So you can't say that I don't know what I'm talking about when it comes to health and safety because I live it, and I did so for many years in that plant.

I've worked representing workers also at the Alberta Federation of Labour, the AFL. I represented workers on different committees from that organization. One committee, in particular, was the health and safety committee. This committee, by the way, was very busy because of the many issues that we covered throughout the province: all workers, many issues. I still represent all workers here in this Legislature.

The opposition has talked a lot about consultation. Well, let's discuss that. Over my many years at the AFL representing workers, including farmers and ranchers, by the way, we had many meetings with them discussing the issues of health and safety for farm workers and ranchers. It had occurred for over a decade. The farmers and ranchers lobbied the AFL to represent them, to try and get the now third party to address the issue. I'm proud that this government is now finally addressing the issue. It's about time.

This bill is about respect for workers and workers' rights, nothing else. This includes farm and ranch workers, paid workers. Madam Chair, this bill does not kill the family farm. This bill does not regulate or interfere with children's ability to contribute to the family farm. Also, this bill does not interfere in any way with farm kids' ability to learn about and participate in the 4-H system. I talked about 4-H in my member's statement back in November, supporting 4-H. This bill was also never intended to interfere with a family's ability to teach their children about farming and pass on their way of life from their parents and so on and so forth. It wasn't intended to take that away. This legislation will not prevent neighbours from volunteering either. This bill will only cover farm and ranch operations with paid employees and only for the duration of the employment.

This bill will prevent death and injuries and assist workers and their families in the case of accidents. We heard about many when I was meeting with those farmers and ranchers at the AFL, the list of workers that had died and were injured because of the lack of insurance and everything else that they put up with, the loss of some farms because the farm couldn't stay viable because the main operator was no longer there. We heard lots of it over the 10 years that we met with them.

Again, it's about respect for workers and workers' rights, nothing else. I urge all members of this House to join me in supporting this bill. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd certainly like to thank the Member for West Yellowhead for the comments that he made, certainly passionately delivered. While I can appreciate his opinion that this bill is about workers' rights and nothing more, sir, there are an awful lot of farmers in Alberta who would disagree with you and quite vehemently disagree with you. If it was only about workers' rights and nothing more – and we'll have this discussion, I suggest, probably more than once this evening – then, you know, quite frankly, there wouldn't be the objection that is out there from farmers.

Madam Chair, I'm very pleased this evening to move an amendment that I believe would provide some improvement to this bill. I'll first give it to the pages for distribution. There's the original for the Clerk's table.

The Chair: Hon. member, this is a subamendment that you have?

Dr. Starke: This is a subamendment. Yes. Thank you. This is a subamendment to government amendment A1. While it's being distributed, I'll read it into the record. This is probably subamendment SA2, I would suggest.

The Chair: SA2.

Dr. Starke: Okay. I move that Bill 6, the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, be amended in part C in section 9(2)(a) by adding "or" at the end of the proposed clause (d) and by adding the following after the proposed clause (d):

- (e) persons in an industry listed in Schedule D whose employer maintains insurance coverage that provides benefits equivalent to compensation available under the Act, evidence of which has been provided in a form and manner that is satisfactory to the Minister.

Now, what this amendment essentially does, Madam Chair, is that it recognizes what is already very common practice on many, many farms across our province; that is, that employers are providing their employees with various forms of insurance, not just against an injury on the job that covers them while they're on the job, as workers' compensation does, but that indeed gives them insurance coverage around the clock and not just for work-related injuries but for various other perils that they could be facing. This is the sort of thing that employees and employers have worked out together in a co-operative way that, I would suggest, is the hallmark of healthy labour relations.

I know what the arguments against this are because I heard them yesterday in Vegreville. The first argument is: well, WCB is special because it's no fault. That does make WCB different, but unfortunately it doesn't make WCB good. There are still significant flaws in the workers' compensation system. Those flaws have been pointed out repeatedly by the Premier in many of her talks to the Canadian Injured Workers Association. In fact, the Premier has demonstrated in those speeches that she is extremely dissatisfied with how the Workers' Compensation Board takes care of injured workers, that it is insufficient and that it just simply does not do the job. In fact, in one speech the Premier indicated that they have a long list of suggested reforms and improvements that can and should be made to workers' compensation that would be brought in should her party ever form government.

Well, Madam Chair, we asked about this for a couple of days in question period, and we were told that the Workers' Compensation Board is being reviewed as part of the agencies, boards, and commissions that are being reviewed, some 200-plus agencies, boards, and commissions that are being reviewed by this government. You know, there's nothing wrong with that. In fact, that process had actually started to happen before the election was called. But if this was such a high priority for the Premier, if reforming WCB was such a high priority for the new government, then why wasn't this initiated as one of the top priorities after the election? It hasn't happened. In fact, it's all in with the review of agencies, boards, and commissions, all 200 of them, that will be completed at some future date.

If this is such a high priority and if WCB indeed has so many deficiencies, that the Premier has been very public about, you can perhaps understand how farmers have drawn the conclusion that perhaps they don't want to be mandated and told that they have to participate in such a flawed program, especially, Madam Chair, given that so many farmers already provide coverage which they view to be superior to WCB. Really, what's important is that it's coverage that their employees view to be superior to WCB. In fact, we have heard from many farm workers, employed farm workers, farm workers that would fall under this act, that say: "Don't give me WCB. I want to keep my private insurance. If you mandate that my employer has to take out WCB, because of the narrow margins on farming operations, they may well decide to de-enroll or discontinue the private insurance policy that I have, that I like, that provides me and my family with good coverage and, instead, enrol in WCB, and I don't want it."

Madam Chair, I submit to you that while one of the goals of this piece of legislation is that any injured worker in Alberta – or in a case where a fatality occurs, it's the family of that injured worker – is taken care of, that should be a minimum that all employed farm workers should expect. I have no issue with that whatsoever. The question that I have, though, is whether workers' compensation, with the flaws that the Premier has pointed out, with the flaws that we as Members of this Legislative Assembly hear about on a regular basis from our constituents, is the program that should be mandated to farm workers when indeed many, many employers have chosen other coverage, coverage which they feel is superior, coverage which they feel provides better protection for their employees.

Madam Chair, we heard about this repeatedly during the sessions in Vegreville yesterday. You know, one of them was interesting because this was actually from a neighbour of mine. In speaking to the ministers that were on hand yesterday, he described that he provides insurance for his three employees, employees that are paid approximately $54,000 a year. He provides insurance that provides coverage 24/7, round-the-clock insurance, at a cost to him of approximately $16 a month.

Now, by comparison, at the rate that has been publicized for workers' compensation for coverage that would only cover them while they're on the job, at $2.97 per $100 of insurable earnings, that coverage for each of those employees would work out to $1,600 a year, or $133 a month. That's eight times what he is paying now for his private insurance, that his employees prefer, that his employees have said they would rather have than workers' compensation. This legislation does not provide for that choice. This legislation mandates that the workers must take an inferior insurance product compared to the one that they already have.

You know, this came up in Vegreville again yesterday as well, and I will say this to those of you who weren't in Vegreville: farmers aren't stupid; quit treating them like they are. That's a quote, Madam Chair. Those aren't my words; those are the words of the people in Vegreville. Farmers are sophisticated businesspeople. They understand risk tolerance. They understand the multiple factors that go in.

One of the biggest challenges in farming today is human resource management. What I mean by that is that it's hard to find good workers, especially in a situation when the oil patch is hot, and when you have good workers, you want to keep them and you want to treat them well. That's why we had person after person going up to the microphone basically in tears because they felt – and they are sincere in this feeling – that they treat their workers extremely well, that their workers are treated like family. We heard that again and again and again. I know that myself from the various people that I worked with. They treat the workers like family, and because of that, they want to look after not only the worker but the worker's family, and they want to provide them the best coverage they know how.

They know that in a competitive labour market you have to provide more than just a good salary. You have to provide more than just, you know, safe working conditions. You have to provide the various benefits because, quite frankly, if you don't provide those other things, those workers will go elsewhere. In a competitive labour market, where labour is scarce, farmers need to provide those things for their workers.

So that's what this amendment does. This amendment provides workers and employers with a choice. Now, they can still enrol in WCB, and in fact many employers, farm employers, do choose to do that. But just as my friend the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti indicated in his speech on second reading, he has done both. He's done workers' compensation, but he's also done private insurance, and he found private insurance much more effective for his employees.

Now, going back to the no-fault thing, I got to thinking about this. You know, I'm concerned if the thing that makes workers' compensation so good is because it's no fault and we mandate it for everywhere. I looked at the provinces on either side of us, and I thought of car insurance, which is also required. The provinces on either side of us once made the mistake of electing NDP governments, and while those NDP governments were in, they developed state-run car insurance programs – SGI in Saskatchewan, ICBC in British Columbia – that also have no-fault car insurance. If no fault is the be-all and end-all, how long is it before this government brings in and nationalizes car insurance? I worry about that. I hope it doesn't happen. [interjections] Yes, of course, they want to have it. Amazing.

The other area that we're told about is that if there are private insurance workers, we'll have to go through protracted litigation in order to make claims. Well, Madam Chair, you know, my own experience with this situation is that this is also a competitive field. The provision of group insurance plans for workers is a competitive area. The word on a company that is unwilling to pay claims, reasonable claims, claims that are made in good faith: if the word gets out that there's protracted litigation required to make a claim, those companies – word gets around – very quickly find out that they don't have any more clients.

What this amendment does is that it provides farmers and their employees with a choice. It doesn't mandate one form of coverage. It means that they can customize their coverage to the needs of their employees. If indeed the concern of this government is for employees – and I do believe that it is – then they should recognize that this amendment provides for that and that this amendment provides the kind of choice that employers and employees deserve. I would encourage all members of this House to seriously consider this very reasonable amendment, that improves this piece of legislation, and support the amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for – I'm going brain-dead tonight.

Mr. Nixon: It's okay, Madam Chair. It's Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. Am I acknowledged?

The Chair: Go ahead.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd like to first just thank my colleague the hon. third-party House leader. This was something I spoke about a little bit in second reading. I talked – Madam Chair, I believe you were in the chair at the time – about a feedlot that operates near Sundre and has about 25 employees. I visited with those employees, and I asked them about this, in regard to Bill 6 and what they thought about WCB and that this government was trying to bring in WCB to protect them.

They took me through the insurance program that they have currently in place there, and as the hon. member has pointed out, it was better than WCB by a long shot, it was cheaper than WCB by a long shot, and it protected the employees 24 hours a day. Now, that's a big difference. With WCB they would only be protected when they're at work. The program that they currently have at this feedlot: they are protected when they're sleeping in their beds, Madam Chair. That is a big difference.

Now, as the hon. member has also pointed out, the Premier has pointed out the significant problems with WCB, and there are some issues with WCB. I think all sides would agree on that. What this government is asking us just on the WCB side – and there are some other major problems with this bill – is to take some employees that have better insurance options, because that is what their employer is able to provide, and force them to a subpar one compared to what they already have. If this government already acknowledges that there's trouble with WCB, Madam Chair, why would they want to force that on these employees and other ones across Alberta?

I think this amendment is reasonable. It will make sure – as the government says, they want to make sure that all employees that are hurt and their families are covered if there's an accident or a death, and I think that's noble. Most farmers and ranchers I talk to have no concerns with that, but why would we put in something that the Premier herself has acknowledged is broken and force that on these good people? Why would we not give them the option to figure out what's best for their employees, give them the option to figure out what's best for their business if it accomplishes the same thing, Madam Chair, or it accomplishes an even better thing? The question, I think, is why this government would like to force less on these employees at the feedlot that is near Sundre.

I'm going to support this amendment. I certainly encourage all members of this House to support this amendment. I would say, Madam Chair, that members that don't support this amendment clearly show that they're not actually interested in the insurance or in the protection of employees monetarily if there are accidents and death by supporting a subpar system, in my mind, and I do think that farmers are more than capable of making a decision on what package works better for their employees.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to speak strongly against this amendment. [interjections] Yeah. Actually, until recently I was a licensed life and accident and sickness insurance agent. As well, I represented the company that would be the largest farm insurer in Canada. I've dealt, you know, with insurance with hundreds of farmers over the years, and I've dealt directly with the types of products that the hon. members are referring to. Unfortunately, I think that this amendment is, in fact, meaningless because there is no private enterprise equivalent to WCB, and I'm going to explain why that is. I think that it is really, really unfortunate to see members being so irresponsible to think that they can give, you know, professional advice to farmers without understanding how insurance really works.

Unfortunately, many farmers are, in fact, misinformed about the type of coverage that they carry. That was something that we were always very careful about when speaking with farmers, right? A lot of farmers – you're talking about this $16-a-month insurance. That could only be one product. That could only be an accidental death and dismemberment policy. Those policies are extremely limited. They tend to provide cash payouts if certain things happen, and to pay out on death, it tends to be that you have to die within a certain period of time. There are other exemptions as well.

Secondly, I know that a lot of farmers are misinformed and think that we already carry employers' liability as part of their farmers' general liability insurance policy. Every one of those policies, unless it's specifically stipulated in the declarations, have some very, very strong, you know, kinds of limitations. The biggest one is that if you have wages in excess of $10,000 a year, there's no coverage, and secondly, it is how it's being characterized. As the owner you have to be liable in order for the policy to pay out, and it does mean, unfortunately, that sometimes farm labourers do have to take it to court, right? I mean, insurance companies have a fiduciary obligation to protect their premium holders' money, too.

I mean, those are some of the reasons why. The other reason why WCB is actually a superior product and in no way equivalent is because WCB and OH and S were meant to work together. Now, part of the reason that we've been having all of these issues with, you know, how many injuries, how many disabilities, how much lost time is involved is because we don't have any good information, and that's because there are no reporting requirements as it stands now in that industry. If we have mandatory WCB coverage, that information then goes to OH and S, and then OH and S can work to actually, you know, investigate it. We're not just talking about covering people when they become disabled or injured; we're talking about actually reducing injuries and disabilities.

Now, there's another reason why. It's a built-in incentive for the industry. The way the WCB works is that if the industry has a better experience with fatalities and injuries, then everybody's premiums go down. Everybody has a stake in doing what they can to reduce injuries, right?

Finally, speaking from the private insurance side, dealing with, you know, trying to track where people have to have insurance, if you make the private insurance option mandatory and go that way as an option, it's going to be a paper-chasing nightmare because you're going to be having to send certificates here and there and elsewhere. How do you actually enforce this in a way that's going to be as efficient as WCB?

The last point I want to make – and this is something that is fundamental to how insurance works. Generally speaking, we call it within the business the law of large numbers. That means that the larger a group of, you know, people you have insured, the better experience you have, and it gives you two things. One is that you're able to spread risk a lot better, to where you'd be able to adjust your premiums. The second thing is that you're going to have lower administrative costs. But the biggest thing is being able to predict with better accuracy how many claims you are going to have.

For those reasons I think that it's actually kind of irresponsible to suggest that private insurance can replace it. Now, that being said, I mean, the hon. members are correct in that WCB does have some major flaws. The biggest flaw, of course, is that you have to be injured or disabled at work. However, insurance companies – and I sold these products – already offer drop-down coverages and wraparound coverages. If farmers are concerned about premiums, they can talk to their agent and they can actually, you know, remove the work site thing. If they're concerned about dealing with WCB, they can have drop-down coverage, or they can have the 24-hour nonoccupational. The thing is that there are solutions for this.

Once again, I'd like to speak against the amendment. Thank you for your attention.

The Chair: I'll recognize Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and to my colleague: I promise I'll be brief. I just wanted to point out to the member that this amendment – and I'm not sure if he's been able to have the chance to read it yet – says:

- (e) persons in an industry listed in Schedule D whose employer maintains insurance coverage that provides benefits equivalent to compensation available under the Act, evidence of which has been provided in a form and manner that is satisfactory to the Minister.

His argument, I would submit to you, Madam Chair, doesn't make any sense because this would say that the insurance has to be at least the equivalent of WCB or better, so if somebody was coming forward with something that was subpar to WCB, it would not be able to fall under this amendment. As such, I think the member should probably support this excellent amendment.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. The hon. Member for West Yellowhead made a number of statements about how he is an expert in workplace safety. Well, so are all the farmers in Alberta. I wonder how the hon. member might feel if his expertise was ignored or, worse, belittled by an authority who presumed to know more about it than he did. Why are Alberta farmers protesting this flawed bill? Because that's exactly how they feel. They're the experts in farm safety, and they have been ignored from the get-go.

I rise today in an attempt to bring some common sense back to this House. I've heard from hundreds of Albertans through letters and at town halls, and they have told me time . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, are you speaking to the subamendment on the table?

Mr. MacIntyre: To the subamendment. Insurance.

The Chair: Okay.

Mr. MacIntyre: Here we go.

. . . and time again that they already have insurance. In a letter a former Alberta dairy farmer told the MLAs of this House, quote: many farmers who have employees already carry insurance to protect them as it is broader in coverage and more fiscally responsible to employees and employers than WCB currently is. End quote. I want to highlight this reality because, contrary to the misguided notions that the NDP continue to perpetuate, farmers in this province do hold insurance.

Now, we know that this entire bill isn't really about safety after all. It's about the government wanting to push through a socialist agenda at all costs and as quickly as possible. We know that union workers are exempt from WCB, and I would not be surprised if this legislation will encourage farm unionization. But let us pretend for a moment as though this bill is actually about farm worker coverage. We have a Premier that has railed against WCB in the past . . .

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. MacIntyre: Yup.

... and has now turned around and insisted that our farmers are forced to join this system. She implied that the WCB is stingy, that they don't pay out enough benefits, that people have problems with coverage.

I mean, let's face it. There are so many litigations against WCB. If they had to compete with a private insurance company, they'd have been out of business a long time ago. The Premier knows that WCB is not the right course, yet here we are, forcing an entire industry away from better private options that provide better coverage, better payout, and are more responsive to the needs of their customers because they are just that: they are their customers.

Private insurance is better because when it fails to adequately service the customer, the customer has the option to leave. There is freedom to choose. But when a sector of our economy, like farmers, are going to be forced to one insurer, WCB, then WCB really hasn't got any motivation whatsoever to clean up their act. That is the problem with WCB. They don't have to compete. All the private insurers out there compete for customers' business. They are concerned about customer satisfaction. WCB, apparently, doesn't give a rip about it.

Take auto insurance as an example. Alberta legislation gives us the minimum parameters we all have to have regarding insurance of our cars. The government doesn't tell us whom to buy that insurance from, so we have the freedom to go and search the marketplace for the insurer that we think is going to give us the best rate, the best coverage, coverage that meets the minimum requirements or even beyond the minimum requirements of the law.

Why aren't we extending that same freedom to farmers? How come we're forcing farmers to deal with a monopoly system? Instead of respecting customer choice, this government is picking winners and losers. Worse yet, the winner is an agency that our own Premier has railed against, and, worse still, now you're removing the competition from WCB. There is no reason for it to up its game at all.

In a number of cases farmers are able to purchase insurance packages that offer an array of savings. Like more Albertans, they're able to purchase automotive insurance, our life insurance, our home insurance, our errors and omissions insurance, our liability insurance for businesses. We have choice in all these kinds of insurance. But, oh, no; farmers are going to be denied that freedom. Instead of forcing everyone under a system that our own Premier despises, we ought to be allowing for customer choice. WCB ought to be competing for farmers' money because only then are we going to see improvements.

Madam Chairman, competition in a free-market economy like we have – at least we'll have it for a while – naturally results in a better product and more customer-friendly service. That is the reality of competition. Competition is good for the consumer, and competition in insurance is good for the consumer.

Furthermore, private insurance is a thing that these farmers already have. They already understand it. Permitting them to continue with this option might just have the effect of quelling some of their fears about the uncertainty that comes with this kind of monumental change to farm life. Is this really about ensuring that farmers have adequate coverage in the event of a catastrophic loss? If it is, it remains entirely unclear why this government cannot extend to farmers the freedom to choose, that all the rest of us have for our insurance choices.

I urge everyone in this House to grant farmers the same freedom, to choose insurance that is best for them, best for their workers. This is, after all, still a free-market economy.

I urge everyone here to support this very sensible subamendment from our esteemed colleagues. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you. I also would like to support the amendment. I think it only makes some sort of sense. I would like to, actually, refer to a letter that I've been holding here all night, waiting for the right moment. It comes from a gentleman in my riding who I actually think voted NDP by the sounds of other parts of the letter. But this part of it he's not happy with, that "Bill 6 is a half cooked solution." And he says:

WCB will not make any of us less stressed or safer, we already have the option to contribute and most of us choose different insurance. Why? Simply [because] WCB is an insurance program which will not help us cover expenses if we are injured. WCB is not set up for the volatile and unpredictable market place and environment which is farming. WCB has found more ways not to pay workers than it ever has to pay us.

Do you want to know something? The test of an insurance company is its payout record, not its sales line. This is an important test of how an insurance company operates, and anybody who really knows and is really checking commercial insurance would be smart enough to check a payout record of their insurance company, because it is the final test.

He says:

To add insult to injury, WCB interferes with our private plans and delays the much needed funds. I was injured, on the farm in February, if I had gone through WCB I would have been paid nothing for the four months I was off because I didn't sell any calves in January.

Here's something that needs to be understood about farms that many people don't get, and it relates to a lot of what we've been saying. Farmers normally get a paycheque a couple of times a year, not twice a month. I was reading the B.C. WCB website to see how it works. Farm workers have to be paid every two weeks, but farmers get paid twice a year.

Anyway, he argues:

I sell [my] product once or twice a year. WCB makes payouts based on monthly income, some months farming, there is no income.

So now the WCB bureaucrat has a hard time calculating how much payout to make.

He says:

My private insurance plan covered my lost wages, additional medical expenses and developed a back to work program which helped me not only return to work but life as well. Perhaps your government should look at reforms to WCB before forcing their incompetence on farmers and ranchers.

I would like to say to the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater that although he understands the insurance industry, once again I don't think that he's telling us, as one of the other members said, the whole truth. The whole truth is that there are very stiff and difficult insurance programs out there, but there are also very clear insurance programs that cover loss of work, loss of business income, damages, all these different kinds of things. Farmers didn't fall off the turnip wagon yesterday. They are very smart when it comes to reading their insurance policies, buying the right kind of coverage. They know what they're doing. In fact, they take courses on how to do it.

He says:

OHS will not begin to comprehend what we do, how we do it and the variety of factors ... [in] the decisions we make. My family farms, I farm, safety is my primary concern. Many of the proposed rules do not increase safety, they simply become burdens.

I think I'll leave it at that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to speak to the subamendment on the insurance coverage. It's about freedom of choice. That is the epitome of this amendment. The choice to choose an insurance provider is the ultimate in freedoms. The subamendment that the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has provided us is excellent. It demonstrates the freedoms of our society, the freedoms of choice, the freedom of choice to allocate an individual's resources as they see fit to choose a good, a service, or an asset that is available to them, freedom of choice that demonstrates an individual's opportunity and autonomy to perform an action selected from more than one available option, unconstrained by external parties. When a monopoly exists, the consumer doesn't have a choice of freedom.

The Workers' Compensation Board, WCB: the hon. Premier, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona herself, has previously expressed her concerns about this sole-sourced agency that Albertans rely on. By having options, by giving the ability to choose, it gives the consumer the option to have a better choice, a better service, a better product, the opportunity for a better overall quality of product or service. This forces competition to get better to provide that service, that product, that is equivalent to or, if it is not equal to it, then better. Competition is good.

Madam Chair, in one study the Heritage Foundation 2011 Index of Economic Freedom report showed that there is a strong correlation between the index of economic freedom and happiness in the country. Here in Canada we are quite happy. We have the freedom of choice in so many aspects of our life. This House is based on freedom of choice. The people have the choice to choose a political party, a group of Canadians, to lead their legislation. Though members from the opposite side would prefer more of a socialist system like China or Venezuela or Russia, thank God we live in Canada. Here people have the choice of a political party that reflects their beliefs, or in some cases it is simply an opportunity for change, but at least they have that choice, as we have seen here in the 2015 elections in Alberta and Canada.

Insurance is a product, an equitable transfer of the risk of loss from one entity to another in exchange for money. It is a type of risk management that is used to hedge against the risk of loss. With most people, as an example, when we insure our vehicles, we have options. Each option might provide slightly different services, slightly different products for slightly different rates, but we can sift through those options. We have that freedom of choice to look through the various options that are available to us and to choose the one that fits us as an individual. Freedom of choice is a basic Canadian value.

Our government leans more towards that socialist side. You know, they have members and staffers that value more the teachings of Karl Marx than those that teach the values of liberty and freedom. That is a thought that scares me, Madam Chair, a group in government that does not believe in the basic core Canadian value of freedom. This amendment provides us with that freedom of choice. It provides us with an option to give an agency some competition. This is the epitome of a basic Canadian value. It is the freedom of choice.

I suggest that all members of this House strongly support this subamendment because it truly reflects your values of choice and freedom and whether you're truly a Canadian or whether you truly want a socialist state.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

9:00

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I forgot one little note that I did want to add, and I think it relates to the previous comments about the amendment and the reality of insurance. I did also want to comment on the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater's comments about the size of the pool, that the larger the number of people, the more the rates go down, and that is all a hundred per cent correct. I couldn't agree more. The reality, though, is that the actuarial pool of private insurers is a lot larger than one little province. Private insurers cover the entire country in many cases, not always but in many, and sometimes they actually are international and cover the entire continent. The actuarial pool of those private insurers is much larger than one little province, Alberta, and the WCB's insurance pool is actually very small in relation to most of the insurance world that is out there, and that's one of the reasons it's so expensive.

The Chair: Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, one of the values of doing what we're doing tonight is that we do get a chance to listen to more than one perspective, and I value that. I know that in my classroom one of the things that I spoke about with my kids at great length was that you do need to listen to another point of view, that it's important to listen and to consider, and sometimes you have to adjust your thinking.

I'm going to be speaking in favour of this subamendment, but as I've been listening to the various arguments that go back and forth across the Chamber, it's been fascinating for me to listen to it. The Member for West Yellowhead said that this bill is about workers' rights and nothing else. Well, the member is correct. This bill is about workers' rights, but it's also about more than just workers' rights. It's not just about workers' rights and nothing else, at least from my perspective. He said that it's about respect for workers' rights and nothing else. Well, I would agree with him. It is about respect for workers' rights, but it's about more than just respect for workers' rights.

I think that perhaps one of the things that is holding us back from creating a bill that actually serves farmers in this House tonight and for this past week has been that this is more than just a bill, and this amendment speaks to this, Madam Chair. This bill is more than just about workers' rights and businesses, and if you listened to the farmers that I've been hearing from, if you've read any of their letters as they come into your offices, perhaps the one thread that ties this all together is that farmers are saying: we're not just a business, and when we hire workers, they're not just employees.

So we've got two very different views being espoused here between the government's position that this is about safety and safety rights and only about safety or that this is only about workers' rights when the farmers are trying to explain to the government that this is about so much more. You'll notice that you rarely hear them talk about: my farm is a business. They talk about a family farm, and I think that speaks to part of the conflict that's going on here, part of the dynamic that's being heard in this Chamber, and maybe as legislators, as 87 members that have been elected to this Legislature, we need to consider that dynamic that's going on here.

You know, I'm not going to stand here and try to tell you that farming isn't a business. We can see that. When you hire employees and when you do this to make a living and you receive an income from it, it's obviously a business, but that doesn't mean that it's only a business. I know because I've grown up in a family of farmers that have many, many times, all of the time, hired workers on their various farms.

When you've got a 64-section ranch in southern Saskatchewan, you don't farm that farm without help. When I was growing up, at various times all of my aunts and uncles had farm workers for at least part of the year or sometimes for many years. It's been my experience that those farm workers, while they are workers and they did expect a wage and they did expect to be treated fairly and to be provided with safe working conditions, were far more than just workers. In many cases they did become part of the family.

We're dealing with a business here, Madam Speaker, that is more than just a business, that has other values and interests and important questions to consider. So when we speak to this amendment tonight and we consider the idea of choice for insurance, I think we have to remember that this is more than just a business.

So let's take a look. We know that the Premier herself and many of the members in this Chamber have very convincingly spoken to the fact that there are some severe problems with the WCB at times. It's not that it's an insurance program that is unworthy of support but that it has some significant problems. On my side of the family my father was the first life insurance broker in Edmonton. My brothers are still life insurance brokers. They have spent many, many years providing employee benefit programs for businesses. It's not that I'm an expert on this, because I've never been in the insurance business, and I bow to your expertise.

But I do know this. I do know that because they're insurance brokers, one of their prime areas of responsibilities is to take care of their clients, to speak on their behalf, to ensure that that insurance program and that insurer are dealing fairly with the clients and with the employee benefits programs that they are placed under. I'm not going to say that it never happens that an employee might have to go to court, but I believe that the vast majority of times the insurance companies and the insurance brokers and the agents that are a part of that industry ensure that the fair and appropriate payout is done for their clients. I think that to paint any other picture is to take, again, an industry and probably unnecessarily paint it with too broad a brush. [interjection] Fair enough.

I would echo the comments of one of the members of this Assembly when we talk about the idea of choice and how important choice is. Every one of us in this Chamber at one point in time in our lives decides that we have to have choice in our lives. As a matter of fact, our lives become important and they become significant and they become meaningful to us because we have choice in our lives. Now, that doesn't mean that choice is unfettered. We restrict choices, but in a democracy the default position of every democracy is always freedom.

If you take a look at the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, that doesn't mean that my freedom of speech – although I have the privilege of speaking in this Assembly and I can say things that I can't say outside and be held accountable, there are limits to that freedom of speech in the real world. It's a part of what living in a democracy is all about, balancing those rights and those freedoms in what we would consider to be reasonable way in a free and democratic society.

I guess the question that I've got to ask the Legislature and the members of this Legislature tonight is: is this amendment reasonable? Is it reasonable to think that the workers of this province and the employers of this province should have the freedom to choose which insurance programs they would offer their workers or which their workers would be allowed to have? I believe that it's a completely reasonable answer and would be seen as being reasonable in a free and democratic society to allow the employers and the workers to have freedom of choice.

I believe this subamendment actually speaks in a very positive way and actually makes this bill better. I really believe that if we are honest with ourselves and we set aside the party politics and we really ask ourselves, "Is this making this bill better?" we would support this. I know that's a challenge. I guess I don't set that challenge out to the backbenches because we know that in party politics sometimes those decisions are made in the leadership as to how we're going to vote, how we're going to support, but I'd throw that challenge out to you. This is one of those opportunities that the government has to show real leadership.

I don't see a downside to providing choice on this subamendment. We know that there are examples of lots of organizations out there that allow for choice. I don't really want to get into the debate about whether or not state insurance for car insurance is better than private insurance for car insurance. I'm not sure that we need to go down that path. I think it's a red herring. [interjection] Sorry, hon. member. I think we need to consider the fact – and it's the reality; it's the truth – that every province makes some exemptions for farm workers, especially in labour laws. Even in Saskatchewan and Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island we've got the WCB. We just make a few more exemptions in Alberta. I think we need to consider that we do that because we believe in freedom, in reasonable freedom, in this province. Again, I brought up in my very first speech that our motto in the province of Alberta is – what? – strong and free.

I think it's important that we provide and we allow our citizens this opportunity. Getting injury insurance for all employees is a good goal. I don't think that side of the House or this side of the House is going to disagree with the fact that we should have and want to make sure that our workers are safe and that they are covered by some form of insurance. I don't think that's the issue here today. But because that's not the issue, because we can agree on that, I think we should be able to agree on this subamendment.

I believe that if we were to take this bill to consultation and if we were to ask the farmers, based on the feedback that I've received and the correspondence that I've received, we would find out that the farmers of Alberta would support this subamendment.

I guess I would speak to a private conversation that one of the members and I had a little earlier today. You know, I can't speak for anybody else but my own actions in this House. I know that I have not gone out and tried to entice people to write me letters. I have talked with people, and in having conversations, I've said to them: you know, put your thoughts down on paper and send them to me. But I've not gone out and searched the highways and the byways of my constituency and asked for people to send me letters. This has been a grassroots thing, as far as I can see. When these farmers have come to me, it's not because I have been searching them out; it's because they have been wanting to tell their MLA what it is that they want. I've read the letters, and I've read the e-mails, and I've talked to my constituents. I believe that they would want me to support this subamendment.

So, Madam Chair, I would ask that the House consider supporting this subamendment and surprise me and the farmers of Alberta. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other speakers? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to the subamendment. I might just begin by saying that I fully support this subamendment. The reason why I support this subamendment is because I've had the opportunity to consult and hear from a lot of farmers and a lot of ranchers who have expressed concern about the lack of choice.

I had the opportunity today in a driving snowstorm to make my way to the constituency, the wonderful constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills – the wonderful constituency – and was joined by the hon. minister of agriculture, and I thank him for coming down. I'm not sure that the over 800 people who joined us in the meeting, some of them my close personal friends – I think today I actually made a few new friends as well, some that I didn't know but had the opportunity to talk to about this piece of legislation and to hear some of their concerns.

The people who joined us there in Olds today are so passionate, not only about this piece of legislation but about choice, about freedoms, that they would travel from near and far to come and express their concern and opinion around this piece of legislation, and they did it in ornery conditions. There was a significant convoy, reportedly up to five miles long. I know that I showed up at the venue and the convoy had already been arriving for quite some time, and for 25 minutes after the time that I arrived, a steady stream of vehicles came. The conditions were pretty ornery. I understand that they lost a combine on the way because of the road conditions. They were risking life and limb if you will. The reason why they are willing to do that is because, as my hon. colleague mentioned, this is more than their business; this is their life.

What this subamendment does is that it continues to provide choice that makes a difference in their lives. Madam Chair, today at that meeting every single person that I spoke to is concerned about farm safety. They're concerned about ways that they can make their operation safer. They're concerned about ways that they can keep their kids safe and their grandparents safe and their friends and neighbours and anyone who comes onto the property safe. That is always at the fore of what they do. When it comes to the subamendment, their concern is that they're being forced into a system that they know is broken, that the Premier knows is broken.

Madam Chair, the number one complaint that the constituency office in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills receives isn't about the abysmal performance of AHS although it is abysmal. It isn't about the lack of direction that some departments provide. It isn't even about maintenance enforcement although that is number two. It is about the frustration and the pain, the heartache, and the havoc that is wreaked in the lives of Albertans by WCB. We've had this robust discussion around this being a farm safety bill, and just a few minutes ago we heard the hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater say that this isn't as much about WCB as it is about OH and S. So the question begs to be asked: is this about farm safety, or is it about WCB? In his words: it's about more than that; it's about OH and S.

Farmers are confused. Ranchers are confused. They don't understand the direction that this government is actually trying to lead them in. Then they say to members on this side of the House and, I'm certain, members on that side of the House: "Please try to make this bill less bad. Try not to take away some of the fundamental freedoms, including choice, that we enjoy." Many, many farmers and ranchers across this great province of ours already opt in to the WCB program if they like to, and if they don't, many provide care and attention, that their employees deserve, in the form of other coverage.

I can tell you, Madam Chair, that one of the things that I heard today from the very deeply concerned constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills was around their frustration that the government is saying that this is a safety bill and often implying that farms are a horribly unsafe place and that farmers and ranchers regularly create conditions that don't allow employees to refuse unsafe work. While I believe that those things, as horrible as they are, quite likely happen across this province, members of the farming and ranching community, just as they are frustrated about the lack of choice that they quite possibly will end up with, are frustrated with this sense that the government is communicating, I would say, another piece of misinformation on behalf of this government, that farms and ranches are unsafe and that farmers and ranchers that are employers are horrible, horrible, horrible employers and that they continually create unsafe workplaces for their workers, which is categorically untrue.

We've seen the government talk about the WCB piece, the OH and S piece, and then they said: this isn't about the family farm. They've taken it out of the farm safety realm, and they've said: this is actually about paid workers, paid workers not having WCB or similar insurances. When they've taken it from a safety bill and made it about a workers' bill, the question begs to be asked: is this really a piece of labour legislation, or is this a piece of farm safety legislation? The question is an important one. We've seen the Premier, ever since 2009, when she stood in the Legislature media room next to the United Food and Commercial Workers Union, champion the rights of farm workers. The question that they were asking today in Olds is: is this about championing farm workers, or is it about championing safety? We've heard all sorts of different things.

This breakdown in trust has created significant concern, which is why they – "they" being the folks that I spoke to in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills today – don't trust that this is only about WCB. They're concerned that not only are pieces of their lifestyle being taken away but their choices are being taken away. In fact, the unintended consequence of this legislation is that it's going to make it worse for workers, not better, because while the abusers of the situation, the ones who are actually creating unsafe workplaces – well, we would be wise to ensure that that doesn't happen ever again. The net consequence for the vast majority of workers who have other insurance: they may actually be worse off when this bill passes than they were today, and that is a shame. It's one of the reasons why I fully support this subamendment.

Madam Chair, I will close with this. The Official Opposition has had the opportunity to provide a lot of context and good ideas for this government to consider, but my concern is that the Premier and the cabinet have dug their feet in a little on this. They're not really listening to the farmers and ranchers across this province; they're not listening anymore to the opposition. When we've seen the government make a conscious decision not to listen to the opposition, you know what we've seen? We've seen the government have to turn around, go back, fix the error of their ways. I think that 7.25 per cent pay raises come to mind. Killing bills that shouldn't have been killed and then sending them to committee comes to mind. When we get into a place as legislators in our mind, where we come to the point where we say, "Don't confuse me with the facts. We've made up our mind. We know better than farmers and ranchers. We're going to take away their choice. We're going to take away pieces of their lifestyles and their freedom," we are not better off in this province.

This is a small way that we can preserve some of the benefits that many farm workers across this province enjoy, and that's why I will fully support this subamendment.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by the leader of the third party.

Mr. Westhead: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'm afraid that I am going to have to speak against this subamendment. I just want to start out by reminding the House what the title of this bill is: Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act. The key word here is "enhanced." We all know that farmers and ranchers already have safety top of mind. There's no questioning their commitment to safety for everyone in the agricultural workplace. There's no question whatsoever. This bill is about enhancing the already exemplary safety practices that exist. Given their already strong commitment to safety I'm confident that employers will have no problem with the common-sense provisions of the OH and S Act and the specific rules that they themselves will have a direct say in crafting over the course of the coming months and years. I think it's important to keep that in mind as we debate this subamendment.

Madam Chair, it's at times like this that we can really sense that we are playing a major role in the history of our province. Much as we did with bills 7 and 204, we are giving some very basic and fundamental rights to a group of people who have gone without them for far too long. I say: it's about time.

Speaking of history, in 1987 Alberta along with P.E.I. were the two last provinces to bring in mandatory seat belt laws. On the seat belt debate, back in 1987, they made some of the same statements we've heard during this debate on farm safety legislation, things like: educate, don't legislate. Does that sound familiar?

With all of the various opposing points of view being put forward on this subamendment, I decided to look toward some of the academic research to inform my own opinion. I can tell you, Madam Chair, that the research just doesn't support some of the claims that have been made here.

By the way, I really want to compliment the Legislature Library staff for assisting me with my literature search. They are fantastic down there. I will be tabling some of the research to which I'm going to be referring to this evening. I promise to not go on at length citing the research, Madam Chair, but since the library staff worked so hard, I owe it to them to mention a few of the germane points that helped me inform my decision.

First of all, I'd like to provide a brief synopsis of a Cochrane systematic review. Excuse me if I mispronounce the author's name. It's a research review by Risto Rautiainen and his colleagues. Dr. Rautiainen is based out of the Great Plains Center for Agricultural Health at the University of Iowa. For those who have not heard of Cochrane systematic reviews, these publications are held in very high regard by academic researchers. A Cochrane systematic review attempts to identify, appraise, and synthesize all of the empirical evidence that meets prespecified eligibility criteria to answer a given research question. Researchers conducting the systematic reviews use explicit methods aimed at minimizing bias in order to produce more reliable findings, that can be used to inform decision-making.

Now, keep that in mind, Madam Chair. This research is of very high quality and supports the approach that this side of the House is taking. The title of the study I'm referring to here is Interventions for Preventing Injuries in the Agricultural Industry. The author of this study states unequivocally: "The selected studies provide no evidence that education interventions are effective in decreasing injury rates among agricultural workers." Paraphrasing the article now, the point is that education by itself is not effective but is effective when combined with other complementary interventions.

To that end, the same author draws the conclusion that "insurance premium discounts as a financial incentive decreased injuries."

I am pleased to report that this is exactly the way our WCB system works. Indeed, there are several financial incentives that WCB offers to this end. The first one is called partners in injury reduction. This is a voluntary program that can result in up to a 20 per cent reduction in claims while simultaneously creating a safer workplace.

Another incentive that WCB provides is premium reductions for employers that provide modified work for workers who are injured on the job. On a similar note, workplaces can partner with an occupational injury services clinic to further reduce their premiums.

Yet another financial incentive, Madam Chair, is called a poor performance surcharge, or PPS. According to the WCB website PPS applies to large employers with very poor accident experience. These employers have reached the maximum surcharge for their size and experience rating plan. The additional surcharge is designed to encourage employers to take immediate action to improve health and safety and their claims management efforts to help reduce injuries and avoid further surcharges.

So there you have it. There's just one substantive piece of evidence that we can look to in order to inform our way forward. For the very reasonable cost of WCB employers will enjoy indemnity, and workers will enjoy going home alive and with all of their appendages.

Ms Notley: And an income.

Mr. Westhead: And an income.

Madam Chair, that bit of evidence supports one aspect of what we are proposing here.

I'd like to draw your attention to yet another academic research article that supports our position. This one is in relation to the application of the Occupational Health and Safety Act to workplaces. This particular study is titled Perceptions of Risk, Stressors, and Locus of Control Influence Intentions to Practice Safety Behaviors in Agriculture by Dr. Pamela Dee Elkind. Dr. Elkind is a professor and director at the Center for Farm Health and Safety in Eastern Washington University. I would like to quote some passages from this article, Madam Chair, because this article is rich with information. First of all, the author states: "The assumption that one only needs to provide information and develop knowledge, which, in turn, changes attitudes in order to change behaviour, has been demonstrated here to be simplistic at best and perhaps invalid."

I'll quote another passage because this is really good stuff.

An Hon. Member: More facts in the last five minutes than ... [interjections]

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you. Lots of facts here tonight, some of them real, some of them not so real.

Another: "Sociologists argue that structural variables involving ... government policies lead to a contextual situation in which safety decisions are made."

One more quote, Madam Chair, and then I'll get to my point. I promise. "Three intervening variables make a significant contribution to the attitudes leading to the behavioural intentions equation. These are risk perception, chronic stress, and locus of control."

Now, there are a couple of important things here, Madam Chair. First of all, it's clear that there are a lot of complex variables at play affecting people's behaviour as it relates to risk taking and injury prevention. Here again we've heard that providing education in and of itself is simply not good enough to alter injury-avoidance behaviours.

Another thing we can learn from this particular article is that government policies provide a context around how safety decisions are made. Indeed, we've heard before that sometimes legislating common-sense things like seat belts and occupational health and safety laws saves lives.

Finally, Madam Chair, we've learned that attitudes affecting behavioural intentions involve something called the locus of control. What is the locus of control, you might ask?

An Hon. Member: The Premier's office.

Mr. Westhead: Yeah. The Premier's office is probably an accurate description.

The locus of control as defined by the research, Madam Chair, is "the degree to which outcomes are attributed to one's own ability to alter a situation as opposed to external factors such as powerful others, luck, or chance."

An internal locus of control, the author states, is generally associated with the "adoption of health-maintaining lifestyles," and that's a good thing. By contrast, "an external locus of control often results in a lack of health-maintaining behaviour," and that's a bad thing. This so-called externality can lead to disconnection, apathy, a lack of response to risk, and a feeling of being out of control.

Now, I know this research can sometimes be a little dry, but I find this stuff fascinating.

An Hon. Member: We're riveted.

Mr. Westhead: Yeah. Okay. Great. I hope the folks watching at home are having a great time, too.

Dr. Starke: They all fell asleep a long time ago.

Mr. Westhead: Well, I'm building my case, and I'm coming to my point. I promise.

The point here is that the Occupational Health and Safety Act that we have here in Alberta allows for those who fall under its jurisdiction to have a meaningful say in their own occupational health and safety. This comes back, again, to fostering an internal locus of control, and that's a good thing. This provides both employers and employees a substantive role to play in jointly determining their own health and safety.

Imagine that, Madam Chair. We already have an OH and S system here in Alberta that research indicates is positively associated with health-maintaining lifestyles. Now, that's something I can support.

Madam Chair, I've used a lot of my time reflecting on the evidence out there that strongly supports the approach that this government is taking, and there's a lot more that I just don't have time to mention. Sorry to disappoint those who were looking for a little more. [interjections] I'd be happy to share the articles with you. There's some light reading for you.

Given all of these reasons, I am compelled to support this farm safety legislation and reject the amendment that we have before us. Notwithstanding all of that, there are many, many other good reasons that we need this legislation. One of those, I think, is the suggestion that our current laws, that exclude an arbitrary subset of workers, are potentially considered unconstitutional, and that's a dangerous thing. We are opening ourselves up to a constitutional challenge because we're excluding a group of workers based on arbitrary reasons. Now, I'm not a lawyer, so I'm not going to wade too deeply into that debate, but I know that there are certainly some compelling arguments along those lines.

I know that other speakers on this side of the House have put forward some very eloquent reasons to support this bill: the members for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, Leduc-Beaumont, Calgary-Klein, Calgary-Fort, and the Member for Stony Plain, to name a few. I believe there may have been a few more speakers. I know there are many very good reasons out there, that we still have yet to name, and I'm going to leave that in the very capable hands of my colleagues on this side of the House.

I thank you very much for your attention.

The Chair: The hon. leader.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I was very interested to hear that the hon. member was compelled by the locus of control. My observation is that the locus of control is the occupant of room 307, which is the Premier's office. I'm sure he is compelled by that locus of control. On that at least we can agree. I'll give attribution. It was one of my colleagues to the right here that pointed out that the locus of control was the Premier's office. Good observation, if you don't mind my saying.

Madam Chair, I was looking at this amendment, and I have to say that it certainly seems to make sense to provide some choice in insurance. Certainly, the government, I'm sure, will agree with their locus of control, the Premier, who has some very negative things to say or has said some negative things about the Workers' Compensation Board, as we've discussed earlier in the House. It would seem natural that the government would say: well, if we're going to force people to have insurance, why wouldn't we give them a different choice as well? At this point there's every reason to believe that it may actually please the locus of control if there was a different choice.

Let's think about what we're doing here, too, and how many people we're doing it with. There's a report that was published by the Alberta Centre for Injury Control & Research at the University of Alberta and sponsored by none other than the government of Alberta. In this report it talks about agricultural-related injuries in Alberta. Now, in that report there's a chart on page 21 that is entitled Agricultural Deaths by Relationship to Farm Operator, and it covers a period of time from 1990 to 2009, so 20 years. It's a pretty good sample of where agricultural deaths come from. It's particularly pertinent, I think, to this discussion, Madam Chair, because it does talk about the relationship between those who died and the owner of the farm. Of course, with the amendment that the government has proposed, they've eliminated a lot of those groups of people.

Out of the deaths talked about during that 20-year time period, 139 of those were the operator of the farm. Of course, they wouldn't be included in the particular legislation that the government has as the owners of the farm. Out of those deaths, another 68 were the child of the operator – that wouldn't be included in the government's legislation – 15 of those would be a child visitor, which I think in most cases would not be, and 11 of them are other relatives of operator. In other words, according to this, about 233 of those farm deaths during those 20 years would not be covered by the legislation that the government is putting forward, a pretty high percentage.

Who would be? There's a group called hired worker, 26. There are two other categories – we'll give the government credit for that – one called adult visitor or contractor, but it could be a contractor. We'll say that they're included, the 13 of those. There's another category called other, so I clearly can't make any assumption, but – you know what? – I'll make the best assumption I can for the government.

But even at that, even if you figured that, the way the government currently has the legislation structured, it would only cover 49 out of 282 deaths. So what that tells me is that under the current government's legislation there are very few of the agricultural deaths that will actually be covered, which really kind of runs completely counter to the government's argument that everybody has to be included in this and everybody is going to be protected and it's going to keep everybody safe and nothing bad is going to happen if we put this in place. You know, when you take this to the logical conclusion, you end up kind of wondering what the government is actually trying to accomplish.

When you come to bring that small number of people that are involved – private insurance. Madam Chair, there's actually a better chance, probably, that farm and ranch operators and workers could get better insurance from a private company than they could from WCB, just based on volume. According to this again, since out of the 282 deaths there are only 49 covered by the government's bill and 233 not covered by the government's bill, there are a lot more people that need coverage that could get it from the private company than could get it from the WCB under the government's legislation. It's simple math.

You know, insurance is about spreading risk. I think most of us understand that. If it wasn't about spreading risk, you wouldn't have insurance; you'd just wait till your house burned down, and you'd save money to build it again. But the fact is that everybody throws a couple hundred or a thousand dollars a year into their insurance bill, and if you're one of the unlucky ones whose house burns down, you spend everybody else's thousand dollars to rebuild your house. That's insurance. That's essentially the nature of it, and if there's some left over, the insurance company gets it. Since they've stayed in business, there's always some left over. That's just the nature of business.

The point is that if you want to get a good deal on better insurance, you need lots of other people buying the policy so that you can spread that risk and have a bigger base of donors to that risk management pool of money, that you all share in. Again, only the unlucky people get to dip into that pool of money, whether it's for a death or a fire or an injury, whatever it happens to be. Of course, according to this report the vast majority of those would not be covered by the government's current form of the legislation. So it only seems incredibly logical that private insurance would be a more likely, a more viable vehicle for farm operators and workers to use to have that insurance.

Here's what we do know and, I think, has gone missing in this conversation, Madam Chair. The fact is that most – I won't say all. "All" is a big word. Two words that we should be careful about using in politics, in my opinion, are "always" and "never," because it's a long life. There have been many times in my life when I've either said "I always will" or "I never will," and I have lived to regret saying that. So I won't say "all," and I won't say "none," but I will say that the vast majority of farmers right now already have insurance. They do. They have it. They have a relationship with the insurance company, they understand how it works, they've budgeted the payments. It's working for them. So why would you not allow them to continue, as a choice, as an option, to have what they're comfortable with? Now, this would be doubly true if the government was interested in making those people happy with the government's decision. Let them stay with what they're comfortable with.

Dr. Starke: It doesn't seem to be a priority.

Mr. McIver: No, it doesn't seem to be a priority right now.

I see a piece of information from my colleague from Grande Prairie-Wapiti – we have a real, live farmer in our presence, folks, a farmer that knows this business; he's not the only one, but he's in our party – that 90 per cent of farms in Alberta already have insurance. Some of them actually have WCB. Some of them have chosen other insurance companies. So if the government is truly interested in having compliance – and I think it's a pretty good assumption that if the government is going to pass legislation, they want Albertans to comply with that legislation – why would you not actually offer them the choice that they've already made? That choice is the option to have WCB or the option to have other insurance. You'll need fewer inspectors. You won't have to chase people around as much to comply with your legislation if you're providing a choice, that they've already decided and already determined through their current behaviour is a choice that they want.

9:50

Madam Chair, I think that the logic is inescapable here. I think that the subamendment is undeniably sensible. I think that the history and the evidence, based on the fact that, again, 90 per cent of farms in Alberta already have insurance for themselves and their employees, are a tremendous indicator that this subamendment – well, here is what it doesn't fix. It doesn't fix the lack of consultation with farmers and ranchers. The only thing that will fix that is consultation with farmers and ranchers, but until the government comes to the obvious conclusion that they should stop and do that, this will actually make the legislation just a little bit better. If it won't make it better – I'll butcher the language – I'll say that it will make it less worse. Yes, I did butcher the language.

The point is that it won't make the legislation good, but it will make it less bad if you support this subamendment. It makes sense. You might make some people less unhappy. You'll get better compliance. You'll actually extend to people a choice that they're already able to make and are comfortable with. For that particular reason, I'm going to support this, and I recommend that all members of the House join me in so doing because this is a good idea.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Chair. We've spent quite a few hours in this House, so I've had a lot of time to look through Hansard, a lot, a lot, a lot of time. I've gone back two, three, five, 10 years just to get a better idea of what's been going on around farm and ranch safety, and I saw years and years and years of various governments being asked by various members to please remove the exclusion of farm and ranch workers from occupational health and safety, years of various members asking for coverage for farm and ranch workers. Politicians for years have used the very same rhetoric to justify their decisions to not do anything.

All Alberta workers have the basic right to know about unsafe working conditions. They all have the right to refuse unsafe working conditions. They have the right to a meaningful life following a serious injury. I keep hearing that farmers and ranchers already have insurance, but I can't seem to find solid stats. I think you mentioned that the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti thought that 90 per cent had coverage. I haven't found those stats. I've been asking the question. I read 7 per cent somewhere. I haven't seen those stats. So if the number that I've read is incorrect, I'd love to know what the actual number is. What I did read is that agriculture has the highest fatality rate of any Canadian occupation. A lack of access to statutory protection is one characteristic of precarious work.

I managed an organization called Lo-Se-Ca Foundation, and we had employees, anywhere from 100 to 275. We also were subjected to occupational health and safety inspections, and often we did have inspectors come in and look at equipment that we used and check out the places where people lived, where they played. They didn't necessarily always grow things, but that's where they lived. It was their home; that's where they functioned. Sometimes it was an invasion of privacy, but at the end of the day, it was for everybody's safety. It was on a smaller scale, for sure, but at the end of the day, it was for everybody's safety, the employees and the people that we were supporting.

Being accused of being an urban MLA or legislator and therefore unqualified to discuss or have opinions about issues related to rural communities I found incredibly elitist. Is it fair to exclude the opinion of rural MLAs when we discuss urban issues? I don't think so.

I want to take you back to the comment shared by a physician, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud; and an RN, the Member for Banff-Cochrane, members of this caucus, who remind us again and again that if we save one life or prevent one injury, we're doing our job. The injuries and deaths that occur on farms and ranches are preventable. I'm not going to talk about the cost of the injuries because that's not the point here. Shame on us, all of us, for not preventing them for years.

Years ago, when I was a student, I worked at the Abby Road Housing Co-op, where a portion of the condo units were wheelchair accessible for people that needed that kind of access. Let me tell you what life is like for a person with a life-changing spinal cord injury. I didn't have the injury, but I got to see it on a daily basis, and in many cases these injuries were preventable. They were no longer able to do the things that they loved to do, whether it was farming, riding a motorcycle, driving a car. They were no longer able to be with the people that they loved, and every aspect of their lives changed. What once was an accessible, unlimited future became a series of barriers. Certainly, life can be wonderful on two wheels, but it's never the same. I think it's incumbent on us to prevent any injuries we can as soon as we can.

You know, you keep telling us to slow down and stop, but that's the same message I read in Hansard for years and years and years. Who pays for the people who lose their lives while we play politics? Who replaces the income for injured workers? Who pays for the cost of daily living for families who lose income when a loved one dies? And at what point will you accept the political risk associated with regulating farm safety because it's the right thing to do?

When it's all said and done, the preventable deaths and injuries of workers are our responsibility. For that reason, I will not be supporting this subamendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to talk about the lack of consultation, I want to talk about the loss of trust, I want to talk about the importance of choice, and I want to talk about making this bill less bad.

My goodness, how hard would it have been to consult? In just a week I've been at a town hall in Medicine Hat with 1,200 people, followed up the next day in Bassano with 500 people. I've been getting letters, e-mails, Facebook messages, LinkedIn messages, direct messages on Twitter, even phone calls by the thousands. Today alone in my constituency office more than 10 people walked in, all asking for a chance to consult, all asking for a chance to be involved in their livelihood, their lifestyle, to continue the work that in some cases their great-great-grandfather and -grandmother started generations ago.

The Western Producer and five editors, collaborating, came out today with some of their thoughts on it from Saskatoon. I just want to read a couple of lines. The story starts:

Alberta's NDP government has bungled Bill 6.

The Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act has galvanized agriculture into unprecedented opposition, and with good reason.

Unprecedented opposition.

10:00

When I first got interested in politics, in about 2010, 2011, I met a fired-up ranching and farming community then, and it was over what the previous PC government had done on infringement: stripping, taking away covenants and property rights; taking away, without consultation, without access to courts of appeal, and without compensation, property rights, the bundle of rights attached to properties. I remember, in the early going, town halls of 250, 450 people, phone calls. Madam Chair, it's been nothing like this. This is much more galvanized. This is much more serious. To nail it down as simply as I can, it's about Albertans that want to be consulted. They want to have a say and a part in how this goes forward.

The Western Producer's five editors go on to say:

What is the rush, farmers ask. What would be the harm in delaying legislation until the agricultural community understands its ramifications and can prepare for its implementation?

Jeez, that doesn't sound unsafe, un-Albertan. It sounds reasonable when your family has been on a piece of land for four or five generations, when you might have millions and millions of dollars invested in it, when it's not only your job but it's your life.

The article goes on to say:

There could have been widespread support from farmers and ranchers for legislation that meets that goal . . .

That meets the government's goal.

. . . while recognizing the unique needs of the sector.

My goodness, has this side of the House been saying that for seven days?

Instead, the government completely misread farmer opinion . . .

Completely misread farmer opinion.

. . . and solidified the general feeling that the NDP, with a largely urban electoral base, does not understand rural Alberta.

That's the situation that our NDP government has created.

The five editors go on to say:

The Alberta agriculture and rural sector is worth $77.4 billion . . . It is a sector that would be worthwhile to consult . . .

Here is some advice for the Alberta government: when you find yourself in a hole, stop digging. Stop the legislative procedure on Bill 6, undertake consultation and build some agreement on effective ways to improve farm safety and farm worker protection.

It's the execution.

To our government and our government caucus: you're dealing with a group of people who have built Alberta, who take pride in the way Alberta is, who have survived droughts, BSE, and country of origin labelling just in the last few years, labour shortage, property rights attacks, and who keep coming back as strong Albertans to pay their taxes, to build our province, and to build for the next generation.

Now, I want to talk for a second about the loss of trust. Obviously, if trust is high, if trust is there, compliance will be higher as well, but we've seen a Premier and a government rail strenuously against the Workers' Compensation Board, against omnibus bills, against using closure to shut down debate, and against lack of consultation. Now, all those things were very, very true in our last, 44-year government, but, my goodness, you all wear this now. This lack of consultation, this borderline hypocrisy, maybe not even borderline, have caused a loss of trust, that you will wear.

The importance of choice. As a legislator and a conservative I always try to balance things with equity, fairness, and choice. I don't think I can say it better than one of the farmers and ranchers in Medicine Hat. After the first 200 people, all unanimously concerned about not having consultations, spoke before him, he got up to the mike and said something like this: I understand that the workers' compensation part of this bill is effective January 1; currently I have workers and after-hours coverage on all my workers, and carried with that are some extra benefits for health care, for health savings accounts, for life insurance, for other benefits that Alberta families need and that Alberta farmers, ranchers, Alberta employers are willing to pay for. His question was: who in the NDP government is going to come and tell my employees on January 1 that they're losing all these benefits because now I have to carry workers' compensation?

Just another reason why we needed to consult. Just another reason why we needed to work on the implementation time. Just another reason why the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster's subamendment makes this bill less bad. As he outlined, it clearly talks about that it must be "satisfactory to the Minister." The insurance put in place must be satisfactory to the minister. Many of us have heard, some of us have had first-hand experience with how bureaucratic, employee-and-employer workers' compensation has many, many failings. What an opportunity – what an opportunity – to put in a little choice, to put in a little competition, and like the Edmonton Eskimos make the Calgary Stampede better, possibly private insurance would make workers' compensation better.

Here's the level of distrust that this Premier and this government have created. I've had a few people call me and say: "You know why I think they won't give us choice? You know why I think they won't let this happen? It's because if we get choice, other Alberta employees will want private insurance as well." That comes from employees and employers. NDP government, we recognize that workers' compensation has serious, serious deficiencies. We've recognized that thousands – thousands – of farmers and ranchers want to be consulted to make this better for all Albertans, employers and employees.

Because you're obviously not going to back up and do the right thing and send this to a committee, where thousands of Albertans would make it better, I will express my support and ask for everyone to support the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster in improving this bill and giving Alberta employees and employers more choice.

Thank you.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Red Deer-North first, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am speaking against this subamendment. I think the original bill is the way we need to proceed. Bill 6 is important legislation. Bill 6 is long-overdue legislation. Bill 6 will make work life safer for employees who work on farms and ranches. Employees on farms and ranches deserve to have the same protection as other workers in Alberta. Employees on farms and ranches deserve to have the same protection that workers on farms and ranches are already enjoying in all other provinces in Canada.

Madam Chair, employees on farms and ranches have been asking for decades for employee protection. Bill 6 will give them that protection. Bill 6 will prevent injuries and deaths. That is what we have to focus on. Bill 6 will assist workers and their families in cases of accidents. Serious accidents and even deaths occur while working on farms and ranches. We have to do all that we can to protect each and every one of those employees to the best of our ability. We owe it to all Albertans. I am very proud to do my part to protect all employees in Alberta, and that is why I am in full support of Bill 6.

Madam Chair, I would like to share just one of the many stories that I have heard regarding Bill 6. A constituent of mine told me that she was very happy that the NDP had moved forward to introduce a bill to protect farm workers. She told me that approximately 13 years ago she returned to Alberta in search of employment and to move closer to her family. Circumstances led her to very unusual employment, at a cricket farm. It was actually a small acreage with big production. There were old farm buildings that had been modified to house the hatchery and the breeding of crickets for pet food. The process included working in temperatures up to 102 degrees Fahrenheit, with a humidity of up to 60 per cent, eight hours a day in the hatchery. Mostly women worked in the barn, and there was no washroom facility except at the house, approximately half a kilometre away. She told me that the employees were expected to go outside behind the barn. This was happening just a few years ago.

Madam Chair, as the operation of the cricket farm grew, problems developed with an infestation of beetles and pesticides. The employees were not provided with masks to protect their lungs. The employees were expected to spread pesticide that was in crystal form underneath the bins where the crickets were held. The bins had to be stocked and moved daily, and this process would crush the crystals, creating dust. The employees would have to sweep the barn daily, causing the dust to move. No masks.

The employees contacted the labour board, and after much communication someone was sent out to do an inspection. Unfortunately, the inspector drove halfway to Red Deer, then realized that this cricket supplier likely fell under different legislation than a farm. The employees were disappointed when the inspector called and said that he could not set foot onto the cricket farm.

Most employees had stayed employed at the farm for only a few months, maybe a year or two at the most. The farm was a profitable business, and the employees were paid fairly well. However, there was much abuse and many unsafe practices taking place. Most of the employees felt helpless as they were dependent on the income. There were a couple of private claims filed against this farm, and at the same time the Canada job bank would not let them continue advertising.

Bill 6 is definitely a great step forward in protecting farm and ranch workers. Madam Chair, I believe that employees on farms and ranches need to work under the protection and guidelines of occupational health and safety and WCB. Bill 6 surrounds the importance of safety. The importance of this legislation is that it provides safer working conditions for those who are employed on Alberta's farms and ranches. I have listened to my constituents. It has been very helpful to identify the opinions and viewpoints of all those who have responded to Bill 6. I have listened to those who support as well as to those who do not. I am proud of Bill 6. I am proud of the Premier and her ministers for their leadership around this bill.

Madam Chair, the intent of this bill is to protect nonfamily paid farm and ranch workers. The intent of this bill is to ensure that farm and ranch employees can receive compensation if the employee is hurt or killed on the job. The intent of this bill is to ensure that the employee has the ability to refuse unsafe work. The intent of this bill is to respect and enforce basic human rights, basic human rights that farmers and ranchers in every other province in Canada already enjoy.

Madam Chair, the intent is to protect the family farm. The intent of this bill is to ensure that farms and ranches are safe workplaces. Let's not forget all the people who have lost their lives while working on our farms and ranches. This bill is for them. This bill is for the present-day farm and ranch workers, and this bill is for the future farm and ranch workers.

Madam Chair, I urge all to support this bill. Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, just before I proceed with the next speaker, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, can I get unanimous consent of the House to revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I would like to speak to you and through you introduce three ladies that are up in the gallery here. Helen Kawaliuk is a poli-sci major at the University of Alberta, and it is her hospital; Brianna Vaxvick is currently taking a degree in intercultural studies; and Ileana Berezanski has a bachelor of science in animal health and is currently studying veterinary medicine at the University of Melbourne. If you could please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

Thank you very much.

Bill 6

Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act

The Chair: Proceeding on, the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, and then I believe Edmonton-Centre would be next.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. It gives me pleasure to speak to the subamendment. But just for clarification to start with, the Member for St. Albert made a comment about farming being the most dangerous occupation. From a report published in the Globe and Mail in January 2014, with statistics from Service Canada's top 10: farming is not in the top position. Loggers and forestry rate number 1; fisheries, drownings and heavy equipment injuries, rate number 2; pilots and flight engineers rate number 3; roofers, number 4; structural ironworkers and steelworkers are number 5; garbage collectors, number 6; number 7 was electric power line installers; number 8, truck drivers and travelling salesmen; number 9, farmers and ranchers; and number 10, construction workers. I thought we'd just get some clarification on those statistics.

The subamendment that was presented by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster speaks to allowing choice of insurance programs for farms. I do believe that this does make this bill better. Through the consultation it has become clear to me that many of the farmers and ranchers were asking for this to be considered. When we do consultation, we need to try and understand what is going to work best for the stakeholders that are involved.

It does make sense to have coverage be mandatory. I agree with the concept. But I see no reason why we need to force WCB. The subamendment does speak to the need to be "in a form and manner that is satisfactory to the Minister," so it would be comparable or superior to what is being offered by WCB. I'm sure that many of the private providers would develop products that would be able to fit those criteria.

One thing that I did notice with regard to the comments from the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster: he made the comment that it was $16 a month. But the gentleman that made the comment in Vegreville made the comment – a lot was happening during the meeting, but I believe that maybe one of the people that was there knows, the MLA from Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville or our Minister of Economic Development and Trade – that it was $16 more per month than WCB, which gave coverage 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

When I was in my days of having employees on my farm, that was something that we looked at also. The opportunity to have coverage 24/7 was very attractive to my employees. So that is something that I do believe a lot of our farmers and ranchers would enjoy continuing with. There was another gentleman there that had anywhere from 14 to 16 employees at a time, and he did mention that his staff is worried that they might be in a position where they have to lose the coverage that they currently have. So, you know, the subamendment is really to encourage, to allow choice: mandatory insurance, but allow choice.

One of the very first letters that I received, Madam Chair, actually came from a feedlot in my constituency. It came November 18. The partner in the feedlot says:

Although we had heard rumours that there may be legislation regarding farm workers, the news report of the scope in this proposal has us very concerned. I have not had one farm operator in my circle indicate that they felt this move was necessary. It is not in anyone's interest to have unsafe conditions on their farm. Safety is very important on our mixed-farm operation. We have a private accident and health plan for our 14 employees which is superior to what WCB offers. Something voluntary may be appropriate for those that can't carry the coverage.

[interjections] I think it is possible, but it does need to be clarified, and I think the subamendment does speak to that concern of: are we going to have insurance that is comparable to WCB, and would the minister's office be able to verify that?

This operator says:

We are proud of our farm, our safety record, and operate an efficient business. The last thing we need is more government interference. Employees that don't like the farm they work for and how it's operated are always free to work somewhere else.

Another thing, Madam Chair: I don't understand why the government wants to mandate that all farmers and ranchers buy into the WCB fund. Many farmers I know have their own workplace insurance, and it is better. In fact, Shaun Rathy from De Winton – and I would be pleased to table the letter if it has not already been tabled; I do believe that it has already been tabled – sent me a letter with concerns about mandatory WCB. He said – and I quote – that it wasn't that long ago that the Premier was rallying in front of the WCB building, fighting for the poorly represented and unfairly injured worker who had no choice but the independent, mandatory WCB insurance coverage.

He asks:

Whatever happened to her WCB reform platform? She now intends to enforce mandatory WCB coverage onto even more Albertans, leaving them at the mercy of the organization to which she up until recently was vehemently opposed. Why?

Just a thought that possibly we could look at, Madam Chair, is that maybe we could start by not having family farms and ranches mandated to pay into WCB when so many are already offering superior coverage on their own without coercion.

Did you know that the WCB has over $10 billion in assets, with only about 7 and a half billion dollars in liabilities, giving it a funded position of $2.7 billion, or a funded ratio of 136 per cent? The WCB is rolling in the dough from worker premiums and limiting benefits.

With that, I'd like to encourage everyone to be open to the opportunity to provide choice in coverage. I do believe that the subamendment is very clear that it would be coverage that would be equivalent to and possibly even better than the coverage that WCB is offering. I would speak in favour of this subamendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I hadn't intended to rise this evening, but based on some of the comments by my colleague from St. Albert and an occurrence earlier this evening, I felt it was appropriate that I get up and say a few words. As my colleague noted, of course, it's a bit more difficult for us as urban MLAs to stand and speak to this bill. Certainly, we don't have constituents that are as affected. But the members opposite have asked several times for us to share some of the views of our constituents and how they felt about this particular bill, so I'd like to take this opportunity to do so, particularly as one of my constituents is actually here this evening. He's been here with us for much of the day, and he was here with us yesterday as well because of his own personal interest in this bill.

He approached me as I was leaving the House this evening to tell me a bit of his story, having grown up on a farm, spent time working on a farm, having many family members who currently farm. He told me about the story of his uncle, who was unfortunately killed in a farming accident due to not following proper safety procedures and the normal standards of OH and S, which my constituent is well familiar with, having worked in the trades.

My constituent shared with me this evening that he is strongly in support of Bill 6. He's well aware of the implications.

The Chair: Hon. member, could I just confirm that you are speaking to the subamendment?

Mr. Shepherd: Okay. Sure. Absolutely.

I did have the opportunity to discuss insurance with my constituent as well, and he shared his thoughts on that with me. I just wanted to acknowledge that he was here with us this evening. I do appreciate his thoughts on this, the fact that he does support this bill in its current form, that he believes that mandatory insurance and OH and S coverage are necessary for all paid farm workers in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the subamendment SA2?

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on subamendment SA2 lost]

[Motion on subamendment SA2 lost]

The Chair: We're back on amendment A1. Are there any further speakers to the amendment? Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to talk a little bit about this amendment first, and then I would like to propose a subamendment.

Back in the late 1970s, I believe, the governments of the world believed that we were running out of natural gas, so they decided, down in the States at least, that they were going to shut down all unnecessary consumption of natural gas. They decided that greenhouses were considered as nonessential, so they shut them down overnight. The reason why they did that was because they convinced people that the sky was falling and that we were going to be out of natural gas and, therefore, to make sure that all of the houses that need it can have it, to make sure that the people who need it the most will have it. Greenhouses went out of business overnight. It was a terrible situation. What's interesting about that is that we know now that we have well over a hundred years' supply of natural gas. So hindsight is 20/20 vision.

I think that in this situation with Bill 6 we are going to see that the approach by this government was brought forward with fear that the sky was going to fall, that WCB was going to be all of a sudden the silver bullet that fixed everything. I'm concerned that we've heard this argument quite a bit this evening. We have seen some fantastic amendments come forward, good amendments that would have at least mitigated some of the problems that farmers would have faced with this bill. Over and over again we have seen this government quash these amendments.

I have been made aware that this evening is extremely important to farmers and ranchers. They're watching, and they are hoping and praying that something good will come out of tonight. It has been the intent of the members on this side of the House to try to convince, through debate and, hopefully, through reason, that we can make this bill better. I think, from some of the conversations I've had with other members on the opposite side, that they have indicated that this is a free vote for them. Unfortunately, I have seen anything but a free vote on these amendments. It is, I believe, a sad state of affairs when we see good amendments come forward and then be struck down by this government and by the backbenchers in the NDP caucus.

Now, I was happy that the government had finally listened to hours of debate and thousands of protestors coming to this Legislature to voice their concerns. I think that if it wasn't for that kind of pressure, we wouldn't have seen even the amendments that we see today. This was not the government's original plan since we were told over and over again by the website, by releases, and by debaters in the House that family farms were going to be covered in every way, shape, and form under OH and S and WCB.

This amendment seems good at first until you realize that almost every single family farm hires the help of at least one person during the busy harvest season. Let me point out an issue in the OH and S Act that would completely negate hiring that one person. Section 3(1) of the OH and S Act reads, "Every work site must have a prime contractor if there are 2 or more employers involved in work at the work site." If there are two people working in the field, then the owner, as outlined in subsection (2), must also be on-site.

Let me go a little deeper into this. Let me break this down for you. If there are two people working in a field, then the owner, as outlined in subsection (2), must also be on-site. Let's say that to get the harvest in, a farmer needed two people in the field to get that harvest in, two people needed to be in the next quarter section, and one person needed to be tending to the feeding of the cattle, a situation not unheard of on many farms. Now, they only have four people working for them, which means either that harvest doesn't get brought in or the cattle do not get fed. So the owner hires a fifth person to drive the tractor to ensure that the harvest can be brought in. But now OH and S applies to everyone on the farm, which means that the two people working in each field need the owner to be on-site in both fields.

I think this is one of the reasons why we have seen exemptions in other provinces for these kinds of regulations. One of two things needs to happen now. The owner must be in two places at once — he must be in both fields, according to section 3, and then he must also find a way to feed the cattle — or he must hire two more people, for a total of seven people, and promote them in a way that those two new people can be prime contractors to watch over both fields so the owner can feed the cattle. Seem complicated?

An Hon. Member: And expensive.

Mr. Hunter: And expensive.

In this situation, with the way the OH and S Act is currently outlined, if this farmer wanted to hire one person, he would have to hire two additional people to watch over his farm and comply with OH and S regulations. Madam Chair, this is one example of how this government needs to consult with farmers in order to be able to get it right. This is one example to show that this bill, even with the amendments that have been brought forward, is insufficient to meet the needs of family farms and ranches in Alberta.

This is why I would like to put forward a subamendment. I have the required copies that I would like to submit. Would you like me to wait, Madam Chair, in order for you to get that?

The Chair: Until I get that, yes.

This will be known as subamendment SA3.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would move that amendment A1 to Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch

Workers Act, be amended in part C in the proposed section 9(2)(a) by adding "or" at the end of the proposed clause (d) and by adding the following after the proposed clause (d):

- (e) employees of a farm or ranch that employs 5 or fewer employees, whose employer has provided workplace injury insurance coverage equivalent to compensation available under this Act.

The rationale behind this subamendment, Madam Chair, is that by accepting this subamendment, the members allow farmers more options than just WCB as long as the farmers have comparable coverage.

I want to point out that the petition that we just filed had over 32,000 signatures on it. As far as we can tell, Madam Chair, that is the largest, by double, petition that this House has seen, at least in the recent past. Now, I guess the question that I have is: could all of these people, the 32,000 signatures on here, be wrong? If we follow that, that the members on the opposite side believe that they are all wrong, then we need to also say that perhaps many people in Alberta got something else wrong on May 5. If we follow this rationale, that maybe a lot of people made a mistake on May 5, then perhaps this government doesn't have the mandate that they believe they have.

An Hon. Member: Voters are never wrong.

Mr. Hunter: If voters are never wrong, Madam Chair, then I would submit that we have 32,000 people who are not wrong, and you need to listen, government.

Madam Chair, the members on the opposite side have stood up and have talked about the need for safety for farm workers, so they have, I guess, taken the position as being champions of farm workers. My question to the members opposite is: if you are the champions — and we've known about this bill now for two weeks — for the farm workers, would you please be so kind as to table all of the letters that you have received from these farm workers that give you the mandate to bring forward these draconian rules? If you have the ability, I would ask you to go ahead and table the letters.

Second, I would ask you to table the petition of all of the farm workers. There have got to be thousands of them out there. I would ask you to table the petitions. If not, do you really, truly have the mandate of the farm workers? Obviously, you don't have the mandate from the farmers and ranchers because they've spoken en masse and have said: kill Bill 6. So the only people that I can see that you would have the mandate from would be the farm workers, that you say that you're championing. If that is the case, then I ask you to table for this Legislature the names of the people who have written to you or signed petitions saying: this has to happen; please make sure you do this. If you can't do that, you don't have a mandate. We have a mandate, 32,000 signatures on a petition. I think that's mandate enough.

Now, this amendment covers farms under five people so that if a family of three or four needs to hire one more person, they can still operate. A family farm should not be hampered from working efficiently because of a technicality accidentally left in this legislation. This amendment is not perfect and is being created through the brief amount of consultation we have had, that we have been able to do, since this bill was brought forward. We would prefer if this, obviously, went to committee, Madam Chair, so that farmers could have the proper input that they need. This amendment is a last-ditch effort to try and do what farmers want with very little consultation.

We have advocated again and again to consult first, legislate second, and this government has continued to do the opposite. We have continually asked to educate, not legislate. This government has continued to legislate, not educate. We need to kill this bill or send it to committee and take the time to talk to the experts. We need amendments that the experts suggest we create, not just what we think is the right thing to do.

B.C. has exemptions for farms under 20 people. This is a small number by comparison, what this amendment suggests. We're not asking for 20; we're asking for five. Five people may be too small of an exemption, but we are trying to do what would benefit family farms. Alberta has the least amount of red tape for farmers compared to any other province in Canada, and I would suggest, Madam Chair, that the reason why we have prospered and that farming and ranching have flourished in Alberta is for this very reason. At least one of the reasons that they have flourished in Alberta is because of the low red tape, and I believe that when we start adding more red tape and more of these types of measures, it will definitely cause problems for farms and ranches. It will cause problems for their ability to be able to be productive and flourish in Alberta.

I don't know if this government wants that – I will have to believe that they don't – but when the consequences happen in 20/20 vision, after you look back on this situation, I believe you will see that these measures have not helped farmers and ranchers; they have hindered them. This is the sort of thing that I think is a travesty.

Family farms are already having difficulty, and they want to take care of their family farms. It's already a struggle. In fact, some of the family farms that I've talked to say that with the difficulty that family farms have in trying to incentivize their children to take over the family farm, it is very difficult already, and adding this additional red tape, adding this additional regulation is obviously not going to incentivize them to want to take over the family farm. It's going to be a disincentive. This subamendment would alleviate some of those restrictions that are deterring children from taking over family farms.

Now, I'm not sure whether or not I have the attention of the members opposite, so I'd like to get their attention, and I'd like to quote once again a book that they seem to love, Animal Farm. Here's what it says, one of my favourite sayings. It says, "All animals are equal, but some animals are more equal than others." Now, the interesting thing about this is that the Premier has said this. The Premier has said that all Albertans deserve to come home safely, yet not too long after that she said: we're going to exempt Hutterites. Now, my question is: are all animals equal, or are some more equal than others? So my question for the Premier – and I hope that this body here can answer this question for me – is on whether or not the Hutterite exemption and the four and a half other pages of exemptions make us more equal. I don't believe it does.

I've brought forward a couple of different issues that I see or problems that I see with this bill, and bringing forward this subamendment, Madam Chair, I believe will, as we heard a few minutes before, take a bad bill and make it maybe a little less bad. I hope that the members opposite ask themselves whether their assumptions are true, ask themselves whether or not their assumptions are based upon ideological beliefs or, actually, facts. We have heard many things said in this House that have been assumptions, assumptions that have no data to back them up. Here's the reason why the opposition is opposed to this bill: the assumption is ideologically based rather than it being data based. I hope and I would ask the members opposite to make sure that they question their assumptions, as all legislators in this House should, and then ask themselves whether or not it will be the right thing for Albertans.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Chair. All animals are equal. I read this, and I see that five employees don't get to have the same rights that everybody else does; therefore, I can't support this subamendment.

The Chair: Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm thrilled to be able to rise and speak to this subamendment. I think what we're seeing here is the reality that it's actually hard to legislate well. In fact, it's really hard to legislate well. What we're really, really, really, truly dealing with here is an issue of human rights and social justice all the way across the board. I know that the members across the way think that they have some kind of a corner on human rights and social justice and that they're the only ones who live in that corner of the universe, but I have to ask you: what about the rights of the farm families? What about the rights of the farm workers who actually would prefer to refuse or to choose some other kind of legislation? There are those who actually want to refuse WCB and would prefer to choose a different kind of insurance. Do their human rights not count? Does social justice for them not apply at all?

I'm sure that there are a number of you – well, I know that there are several of you that are well enough educated, who have taken some ethics courses in your past. If you will go back and think a little bit about ethics, the reality is that there are very few black-and-white choices in this world and in this life. It's always a balance of good and evil. It's always trying to discern: where is the best good, and where is the least evil? What we're having and what we're seeing here is an attempt to do something that's good for a small group of people. Quite frankly, if this bill had been written in a slightly different way, if there had been consultation along the way so that it could be written in a way that balanced the rights of all of the people that are involved in a different way, you probably would find that you would have a lot of support for this bill. I know that I would support it if it had been presented in a different way.

The reality is that this is about human rights and social justice and not just for one group. I would really like to just gently suggest to you that there are 32,000 petitions and thousands and thousands of letters that have been stacked up in this room from thousands of individuals whose social justice and human rights are being infringed upon. I won't say intentionally. I won't even come close to saying that. I don't believe that was your intent, but the effect is that, for them, your efforts to bring social justice and human rights to one group are actually infringing on the rights and justice of another group, and that's the whole problem here. There hasn't been consultation. There hasn't been the opportunity to actually balance the justices and come up with a truly ethical solution to a real problem. If we could write this differently, I assure you that there would be support for it.

I also would like, since I am on the theme, to remind us of the Canadian Bill of Rights, and one of the things that it does say, amongst many, is that every Canadian should have the right "to life, liberty, security of the person." I fully embrace that. I embrace that for the farm workers, that you are concerned about, but I also want to embrace that for the farm families, who feel that their life and their liberty to make choices and even their security of person and family are being infringed upon and maybe even the fundamental justice of how they're going to be treated here, because they are going to be dictated to. They are going to be legislated over top of without even having been consulted in the process.

I'd like to say that political capital is a fluid thing, just like any kind of leadership capital is. It's never fixed, and I fully agree that the voters are always correct. You had a mandate in May, but now in November you have a no, a “no” mandate. The voters are speaking, and if you won’t listen to them now, I assure you that you’ll have to at the next election. This really is an issue of voters’ rights and human rights in our country. What the people are seeing is a government with its head down, with a determination, like a bull in a china shop, to push forward legislation that actually does not balance human rights and that is not ethical entirely.

The Premier says that she’s pushing this through regardless by Christmastime. Now we’ve invoked closure on debate. These are not democratic kinds of things. What we’re seeing here – and I hate to even have to say this – are the true colours of our NDP government. They sing a siren song, they lure unsuspecting voters, and they promise social democracy. Well, it’s definitely socialist, but it’s not very democratic. We have a new government. Some people think that it’s a new dictator party. That is not what people voted for, I assure you. They voted the last party out for the very same reasons. The people don’t want this. What we’re seeing is a repeat of the days of the Magna Carta, where the common people have to fight against the power of the king. It isn’t right.

An Hon. Member: Who are the barons?

Mr. Orr: The aristocrats who are in power. It doesn’t take long once you cross the floor.

I’d like to say that in our society – oh, I’ve got to hurry up. I’ll hurry up. Nobody believes government should be in the bedrooms of our nation. Anybody think the government should be in the bedrooms of our nation? No. And neither should the governments be in the barns of our nation because the same kind of activities happen there. I assure you that the farming and ranching community does not want this legislation. They don’t want you in their lives doing this. You cannot regulate this and claim to have a mandate from them. It is about social justice. The question is: whose social justice, and how are you going to balance the ethics of that? For that you will have to answer.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Chair. I was really leaning towards supporting this subamendment, but the bitter irony of the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka citing the principles of social justice and the Charter of Rights is just too strong for me, and I’m going to have to not support this subamendment.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to this subamendment?

If not, we’ll call the question.

[Motion on subamendment SA3 lost]

The Chair: We’re back on the main amendment, A1. Any further speakers to this amendment?

If not, we’ll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 11:13 p.m.]

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: We are back on Bill 6. Are there any further comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. Of course, it’s my honour today to rise, as always, for the good people of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and speak to a change that could have been made to this legislation to make it a bit more palatable. As the members of this House are fully aware, the Wildrose along with tens of thousands of Albertans have been actively fighting against Bill 6 since its inception. However, to our dismay and despite the very best efforts, this government appears to be pushing it through before session ends this week.

Wildrose has been busy coming up with ways to make a bad bill better and to provide essential protection for farmers and to shelter them from the fanatical, rushed deadlines that the NDP has imposed with Bill 6. An idea that our party had suggested and that was unfortunately turned down as an inappropriate amendment was to provide Alberta farmers with a much-needed grace period as they adjust to the massive changes that this government will enforce on them in an extremely short time frame. It also would have allowed them time to properly educate themselves on the various changes and to put those changes into effect in their daily routines.

Madam Chair, it shocks me to think that as of January 1 of this coming year farmers will be expected to comply with all OH and S and WCB standards, not even two months from when this bill was first introduced. To describe the pace at which this bill was put forth and forced through by the NDP as frantic would be a grievous understatement. It seems that this government’s new goal is to legislate, institute, and then consult.

Our staff and MLAs have read inspiring letters from all over Alberta with stories of family farms passed down from generation to generation and heartwarming tales and fond memories of families bonding together. Madam Chair, you can feel the nostalgia and warmth that pour out through these letters as people recount mornings spent helping their families milk cows, collect eggs, and work together as a team to create something that is bigger than themselves. The passion they feel for farming is amazing.

For generations these families' farms have been cared for and passed down with pride, with hundreds of years of history and fond memories wrapped up into a parcel of land. These farmers have spoken at great length about the love that they have for the lives on their farms and ranches and how grateful they were to have the experiences that they did growing up in the rural areas, experiences that, it seems, will now be very different if this government has anything to do with it.

Madam Chair, I would like to reiterate that the Wildrose is not opposed to farm safety, but we are absolutely opposed to how the NDP has handled this legislation, and we remain opposed to the pace at which they are aiming to impose it. The current deadline that the NDP has put in place for Bill 6 to be executed by speaks volumes and continues to show their naïveté about the industry they are legislating against. The fact that members opposite think that they can sweep in with legislation that completely transforms the agriculture industry and erases generations of tradition and practice, refuse to consult with those that it directly affects, and then threaten fines or imprisonment against those that aren't willing to get onboard a mere few weeks after this legislation is imposed continues to baffle myself and this caucus. To radically change the way this agriculture industry has functioned as an independent entity since settlers came to what is now known as Alberta and then expect at the drop of a hat that Alberta's farmers and ranchers would be willing or able to accommodate that request is laughable.

Madam Chair, this government is bound and determined to drag Alberta's agriculture sector kicking and screaming towards a government that micromanages and ties the hands of its citizens. The very least that this government could do would be to allow a buffer for farmers to react, to adjust to Bill 6 without the fear of being thrown in jail or fined massive amounts of money, that would further narrow the already slim profit margins that this very bill has already thinned.

Our caucus may not have been able to kill Bill 6, but our hope is that the members of this Assembly will band together to soften the blow that the farmers and ranchers are about to be dealt and to protect their way of life from further attack. I ask that my fellow MLAs take my words to heart tonight, slow down, and show our rural constituents the respect and protection that they deserve.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any further speakers to this? Amendments? Comments? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to move an amendment to Bill 6. Would you like it now, or shall I read it out?

The Chair: If you could just wait till I get the original copy. This will be amendment A2.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, be amended by striking out parts 1 and 2. If this bill is truly about protecting farm workers and the safety of farm workers, as stated by the Premier and many members opposite, then this amendment should be okay with them. It's likely not going to pass because they've already defeated a couple of better amendments. I'm sure they won't pass this one, but we'll give it a try.

This omnibus bill contains two prongs that are about worker safety; namely, occupational health and safety and workers' compensation. It also contains two prongs that are evidently less about worker safety and more about paycheques and forming unions. As many of my colleagues have indicated, it is irresponsible to dilute important worker safety legislation with provisions that are unrelated to safety. A sign of respect for legislators would be to provide us sufficient time to consider this important legislation. Provisions to enable farmers to collectively bargain would not increase employee or employer responsibilities for safety. The government has not explained how farm worker safety would be enhanced by this part of the legislation.

Employment standards could contribute to farm worker safety, but because regulations will not be developed or consulted on for a few years, there's no need to debate or pass this legislation now. As responsible legislators we should take the time to make well-consulted changes to employment standards legislation, which the government itself admits will take months to years to develop and perfect.

We support farm safety, and we can do that without wrecking livelihoods, Madam Chair. Bill 6 goes too far and tries to cover too much without understanding what it means to everyone involved. Reducing the scope of this bill would offer at least some reassurance to concerned Albertans that their concerns have been heard.

This bill is going too fast. The government admits that this legislation will take a couple of years to correctly consult on and implement. How can family farms adjust? The government has not been able to even answer how many nonfamily farm workers each piece of this bill will affect. There's been no proper consultation. Public consultation events have been disastrous, and few farmers can get their voices heard.

We believe that farm workers and their families should be protected by insurance such as the private policies currently purchased by many of Alberta's farms in order to compete for workers with other labour- and machine-intensive industries. We support bringing farms under occupational health and safety legislation to the extent that employment-related farm deaths and serious injuries should be investigated and the learning shared to prevent future similar incidents. If workers' compensation insurance does become mandatory, we would like to see this government enable farm employers to choose workers' insurance that offers a better coverage than that offered by workers' compensation and which many farm employers currently provide.

The government has previously indicated that all farms, including family farms, would be covered under all four pieces of legislation. The government has since revised this position to clarify that only workers with employee-employer relationships on farms will be covered. The government can show responsibility by not passing legislation that the government itself has not yet taken the effort to understand.

Let me paraphrase Premier Notley, from her May 4, 2015, interview with Bridget Ryan of City TV Edmonton: so there's an extra year before we get to implementing this bill, but you know that the sky is not going to fall if that happens; you know, I think it's about just being responsible and listening to what Albertans want to tell us and not lecturing them, because there's been a lot of lecturing, I think, by this government, and I think a lot of folks are getting really tired of it. Those were the Premier's words. The sky will not fall if we take the time to get this important safety legislation correct.

Again to paraphrase the Premier, speaking at a provincial council at the Coast Hotel on January 31, 2015, about solutions built only in regulation: we're not giving any hints about what that solution will look like, but what it does mean is that it will not involve the force of law if it happens outside the Legislature. Based on this government's arbitrary and unconsulted-on policy changes on borrowing $6 billion, restricting logging, optical drugs, adjusting and backtracking on the minimum wage amongst others this summer, we know all too well what NDP solutions that are not in legislation look like, and I cannot accept that this is a way that will be any different.

Consulting and ensuring that important provisions are built into a smaller piece of focused and well-thought-out legislation will not make this policy work. It will make this policy better. So basically the Premier is saying that the sky isn't going to fall if we don't rush this through. She's saying: take the time, consult with Albertans, and consult with the farmers, and let's get it right. She said that herself, speaking last spring, so I don't know why she's changed her opinion from there now that she's the Premier.

You know, I think everybody just needs to take a breath. We all know we can make farms safer. We all know we can work together to make this legislation better. Let's work together and do the right thing and really support farmers in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Chair: Just a reminder, hon. members. A few times tonight proper names have been used in the House, so just be cautious with that.

The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm standing to support my colleague's amendment. It's an important one because it really lays bare what is really going on here. What my colleague is saying is that if the government's wish is truly what they say it is, to enhance safety, then they would support this amendment.

Madam Chair, what I found amazing about this – the government wants to increase safety on farms and ranches. Good idea. Who wouldn't want to do that? The problem is that there doesn't seem to be an understanding about where we're starting from. To listen to government members when they talk about this, you would think that Alberta had the worst record in the world. Such is not the case. Such is not the case. We are amongst the best when compared to other Canadian provinces. So rather than building what's already there, work with farmers and ranchers and try to prevent those last injuries, those last deaths. You know what? Realistically, probably you'll never get rid of all of them because many parts of farming are industrial operations, lots of machinery, you know, animals that in many cases are large and unpredictable just because they're living beings. Nonetheless, it is laudable to try to get to zero deaths and zero injuries. It truly is.

But when you've got one of the best safety records in the first place and the attitude is to sweep away everything that's there because we can build it from the ground up better than almost at the top, that really is where I think we lose Albertans. We lose farmers and ranchers, and we lose city people because everybody in the city, at least the vast majority, knows somebody that works on a farm or a ranch or knows somebody that lives on a farm or a ranch and they know that their practices are safe.

There are a lot of old farmers and old ranchers around. If they didn't care about safety, there wouldn't be very many old farmers and ranchers around. I'm serious. If they've gotten to be an old farmer or an old rancher, the fact is that they have been hanging around and working on what is essentially an industrial site for many years and have managed to stay alive. How? Because they have good safety habits. It's not because they don't care. It's because they do care.

Probably one of the most offensive things about this legislation is that it assumes that today, before this brand new, shiny government – at least, they were; they're not quite so brand new and shiny. At some point, they're actually going to have to take responsibility for their actions. That day hasn't come yet, but it might. This ever-so-recently brand new, shiny government has it in their head that they can erase over a hundred years of safe farming and ranching work and traditions, tear it all apart and rebuild it from the bottom up and do a better job than the people that have been living and breathing that business for a century. That is an assumption within the government's legislation that is false. In fact, it doesn't even have a chance of being right.

There are other things going on here, Madam Chair. If the government supports this, they will actually be demonstrating that this is about safety, and if they vote against it, they will be admitting that it's about something else.

You know what? The arguments that have been made do not hold water. Let's face it. Again, the argument that the government has trotted out, with tragedies that have happened on the farms in the last couple of years – and there are a couple of accidents and terrible situations where somebody has died and the remaining family members can't support themselves or someone has sustained an injury and they can't support themselves. I will agree with the government that those are tragedies, but the underlying assumption from the government to support their legislation, that if somehow occupational health and safety and the Workers' Compensation Board are imposed upon these farms, these things won't happen anymore, is patently false.

I will again remind this House that it wasn't that long ago, when I was the labour minister, I can tell you, that there was a lineup of people who worked in places covered by occupational health and safety regulations and Workers' Compensation Board regulations that got injured and couldn't support themselves. There was a lineup of people whose family member had died or was injured, a family member working at a place covered by occupational health and safety and Workers' Compensation Board, who were losing their home and all their possessions because they weren't covered. Occupational health and safety and Workers' Compensation Board are good ideas, but they are not the panacea and not the silver bullet that this government would have you believe, compared to what farmers and ranchers are doing today. It's just not true. It's just flat not true.

Actually, if they truly are interested in safety rather than tearing apart a hundred years of largely safe practices by people that have grown up and lived and, for some, have become old farmers and ranchers and kept themselves in one piece and healthy and surviving, it would perhaps behoove the government to take some time and listen to those people, that have probably seen the hazards and avoided the hazards, that have probably even seen some injuries and learned how to not repeat those injuries. Some of the poor folks might have seen a death and, as a result, have learned how to avoid future deaths on the farms.

Instead, the government wants to wash away all that knowledge, all that experience, all that successful track record. A caucus of government people made up largely of urban people – that doesn't make you bad people; I'm a city boy myself – thinks that they can wash away all that knowledge and be smart enough to replace it without listening to the people that have actually been living a farming and ranching life, they and their relatives, for over a hundred years in Alberta. It just defies logic. It just defies logic.

Here we are with a common-sense amendment. Honestly, you know what? I will say this, government members. My colleague has very politely, because he's a polite person – he's a gentleman. He's a gentleman, but in his gentlemanly, polite way he's calling you out. If you can't support this, then you are concerned about something other than safety.

An Hon. Member: Like labour.

Mr. McIver: Yeah. Like labour.

You know what? If you want to unionize farms, good. Just say it. Call it the We Are Unionizing Alberta Farms Bill. You know what? The law is on your side. We get that. There was a Supreme Court of Canada decision that requires farm and ranch workers to be able to unionize if they want, so that law is on your side. We acknowledge that. But don't do that and hide it under something you're pretending to be safety. If you want to do that, it's okay. The law is on your side. If it's a good idea, just be up front about it. What we hear from government members is that this is about safety.

My polite and thoughtful colleague, who, unlike most of us in here, is . . . [interjection] Oh, I thought you were calling a point of order or something. I thought I'd offended you, Minister. All right. You know, Minister, how I'd hate to offend you, right?

My polite and thoughtful colleague, who is also a farmer, which most people in this room can't say that they are, in his polite and thoughtful and pleasant way, because that's the way the man is, is calling you out. If you don't support this, then you must be thinking about something other than safety. What he's saying is that if this is truly about safety, then let's cut it down to the part that's about safety, and let's get on with that.

So I'm going to support it because I think that this is a really good point, where the government, if they support it, will reveal itself as being up front and honest with Albertans about being mostly concerned about safety, or they will reveal themselves as having some other agenda, which they haven't honestly and openly articulated to Albertans, if they vote against it. Me? I'm supporting it because I think that this is a good point. This is a really good place to demonstrate to Albertans whether this government is being honest about the fact that they think safety is the most important thing.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Just before we proceed, if I could ask the indulgence of the House for unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Chair: The hon. House leader for the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you so much, Madam Chair and for the indulgence of the House. I really appreciate that. I just saw a couple of very good friends of the Wildrose caucus arrive to support farmers and ranchers during this debate on Bill 6. I'd just like to take a moment. Donna Hanson, Suzanne Dargis, Adrian Pomerleau, if you would rise. If I might just add, a happy birthday to you, Nikita Pomerleau. It's her birthday today. And I would be remiss, while we're talking about birthdays – it's also my wife's birthday. When you see her next, wish her a happy birthday for me in this new family-friendly environment.

Thanks so much for joining us.

The Chair: Do we have any other speakers to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and I want to thank my colleague the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti for his introduction of this amendment, which, as my colleague the Member for Calgary-Hays has pointed out, provides some clarity of purpose to what this bill is all about.

I've been to public meetings. I held a town hall in Vermilion on Saturday, and I went to the Vegreville meeting yesterday, and I heard farmers, a number of them, charge this government, saying: this isn't about safety; this is about you ramming unions down our throats. Of course, the immediate thing was a denial from the government minister, who says: no, no, no; it's all about safety. In fact, the reassurance on behalf of the minister of labour, saying that the rate of unionization of farm workers in provinces that have passed the labour standards act has actually been low: that, shall we say, did not placate the masses. It did very little to calm the edgy nerves in the crowd.

If the members of the government haven't already gathered this, farmers are an independent lot. Farmers choose farming for a number of reasons, but one of the reasons they choose it is because they're independent and they want to be their own bosses. They want to be masters of their own operations, of their own lands, and they do it as a family endeavour. In some cases, those family endeavours have grown to include employees from off the farm, from other households, from other areas. They provide employment to others. They are a fiercely independent lot, and they are somewhat resistant, some would even say very resistant, to the imposition of rules that they see as interfering with that independence. In fact, farmers, when told that their independence is being infringed on, will push back. We have seen that very, very clearly.

Farmers have expressed a great deal of concern, not so much with the Workers' Compensation Board or even the OHS. There are concerns about the OHS because right now the technical requirements have not been defined. Many farmers work off the farm, and they work in areas, like construction and oil and gas, where OH and S is a big part of their lives, and they see some of the challenges that, you know, the application of OHS in those situations would create within their own farming situation. They're asking a lot of very relevant and very pertinent questions as to how that would affect their own operation. These are reasonable questions. Nonetheless, in terms of the sections of this bill that are related specifically to safety – in other words, the sections with regard to occupational health and safety and with regard to workers' compensation – there is less resistance to those areas than we are seeing with labour relations and with the employment standards.

Now, what my hon. friend has stated is absolutely correct, and that is that workers should have the fundamental right to organize themselves into bargaining units, to collectively bargain, and to join a union if they so desire. That is a fundamental human right, and I support that human right. But as he also said, if that is what you want to do, put it in a stand-alone bill, and let's vote on that as a stand-alone bill. If you did that, if you separated it out from the smokescreen that you've created with the farm safety legislation, then I would suggest that you would get support with that because the law, as he states, is on your side, and quite frankly human rights are on your side. It is a basic human right, that workers should be able to collectively associate and collectively bargain. I know this, Madam Chair, because I was once a member of a labour union. Yes.

Mr. Cooper: Shame.

Dr. Starke: No, I'm not ashamed. Actually, I'm proud to have been a member of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America local P243, which has since then morphed to become the United Food and Commercial Workers, as many people will know. I'm particularly proud because that organization, amongst the other things that it does, when I was a high school student provided scholarships and bursaries to high school students. I was the first Canadian recipient of the Earl W. Jimerson award, that awarded me with a scholarship for the first four years of my attendance at university. That's a good thing. So before anyone on any side of the House says that I'm anti-union, just be careful. I know that I owe a lot to labour unions, and I know that labour unions do a lot of good things.

In fact, when I was a councillor for the city of Lloydminster, I was asked to sit on the city's negotiations committee when we had negotiations with our unionized workers. One of the things that I was always very proud of was that the members of the union always said: we like you at the table because at least you're fair and you see the workers' point of view. I have to say that that was not always a view that was shared by those negotiating on behalf of the employer.

Part of the reason I think it's so important that there be a fair balance between employer and employee is that – I wish that the terminology was a little bit like in German. I'm just going to use a couple of German terms, and I'll provide the translation. The German term for employer is "Arbeitgeber," which means the giver of work, and the German term for employee is "Arbeitnehmer," which means the taker of work. The giver and the taker of work. I think that represents a relationship between the two that is more co-operative and represents a relationship that is more a relationship amongst equals.

Now, I recognize that there are differing opinions as far as the relative powers that rest and vest with employers and employees. I would suggest to you that many of the members opposite would suggest that employees have been poorly treated in this province for a long time. In fact, I would suggest that they maintain that employees are constantly poorly treated. You know, it's somewhat reminiscent of some of the charges that are made: "How did you get that? By exploiting the workers, by hanging onto outdated, imperialist dogma which perpetuates the economic and social differences in our society." It is the kind of statement that one looks at and says: well, is that even realistic?

Well, that is the belief that is held by some. Personally, I believe there needs to be a balance between the employer and the employee, and the labour unions are important in maintaining that balance. So while there is suspicion of the motivations of labour unions in some situations, I understand what the basic purpose of labour unions is.

I also understand, from my own childhood, Madam Chair, that labour unions can go too far. I know this because my father, who was a foreign-trained butcher – he was a butcher that was trained in Germany and had considerable skills – received from his union brothers derision. He received taunting. He was called names by those that were supposed to be his union brothers. Why? Not because he was German but because he worked hard. He worked hard, and he worked fast, and he worked well. He took great pride in doing that.

The names he was called by those in the labour union, especially the shop stewards, especially the heads of the union, who charged him with embarrassing his other union comrades, his other union brothers, because he made them look bad because he worked too hard – he accepted overtime too readily, he showed up early for work and was prepared to stay late and didn't complain about it, and he didn't take the extra breaks, that were never part of the contract but were just taken. That was the kind of environment that my father endured, working in a packing house in Edmonton for nearly 40 years. When I asked him, "Why do you take that, dad?" he said, "I take that because I need to provide for you and your sister and your mother, and I take that because I take that as my responsibility."

So, Madam Chair, I want to be clear that I recognize the positive aspects that can come from union involvement and union membership, but I also want to make it clear that I recognize that there is a dark and a seedy side to the labour union movement. To suggest that there is not is simply not looking at things realistically.

I remember when there was a strike at Canada Packers when I was seven. I was less than that; we were in the old house, so I was about five or six years old. I remember my mother watching television every day, praying that the strike would be over so that my father could go back to work because strike pay simply did not keep our household going. I remember when there were other work stoppages at Canada Packers and my father would go work at another plant, a non-union plant, so that he could continue to have income coming into the house. Then his union brothers would call him a scab and a strikebreaker and try to make him stop what he was doing, which was simply providing for our family.

So I've seen the negative side of the labour union worker, friends, and it's not all the idealistic world that many would believe the trade union movement to be. Somebody said earlier today that it's not all about black and white; there are many shades of grey. I would suggest there are many shades of grey in this as well.

With regard specifically to the amendment, Madam Chair, that is why I think it is a good idea to separate the whole question of unionization of farm workers under the Labour Relations Code and separate the question of employment standards because employment standards are more about hours of work, vacation pay, and other things. In fact, when I was at the meeting yesterday, or now just about the day before yesterday, in Vegreville, the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour said: well, we would develop the employment standards specific to farms. But the information on the website had gone out already, stating what the plans were for employment standards, and farmers didn't like it. Farmers were extremely concerned about how it redefined the entire relationship between themselves, their children, their neighbours, their relatives, those that worked on the farm with them.

So, Madam Chair, those two things have muddled this entire argument, and it is one more aspect of how this particular bill has been poorly handled and poorly managed by the government. One could say that they're inexperienced. This is perhaps the first major, complex piece of legislation they've introduced; therefore, they should be cut some slack. If it wasn't such a profound difference to the agricultural communities in our province, I would say: "Okay. Fine. Let's cut them some slack."

But, ultimately, we in this Chamber are responsible for being legislators. We in this Chamber are supposed to pass the best legislation possible. We are supposed to pass it, hopefully, without flaws. We are supposed to pass it, hopefully, after long periods of consultation and debate, in which we consider the pros and the cons of the legislation. Madam Chair, I'm not convinced that that has happened in this case. I'm not convinced that we have developed the best piece of legislation possible.

One way to make it clearer that this legislation is about safety, that it's not about unionizing farm workers, that it's not about imposing employment standards that, quite frankly, run contrary to the way most farms and ranches operate is to separate those areas out. Now, if they want to be introduced as separate pieces of legislation because they're important to this government, by all means, do that – do that – and we can have that debate separate from other aspects of this. But to do an omnibus bill, as this is – and omnibus bills certainly have been criticized at the federal level for being these large pieces of legislation rather than having specific pieces of legislation – and to do it in the way that is being proposed at this point is not good legislation. It is not a good way to proceed. It should be something that we, in our responsibility as legislators, should resist.

Madam Chair, I would urge not just members on this side of the Legislature but members on the opposite side of the Legislature to consider that, to consider at least splitting away these two areas. They have said: this is not what it's about; it's all about safety. Well, if it's all about safety, then let's concentrate on the sections of this that are involved with safety.

We've made some, I think, reasonable suggestions for amendments already. I know they've been rejected. However, I think this gives another opportunity to clarify this bill, to pare this bill down to what really is the main focus of the bill. I think that it gives this bill some additional clarity, that I think we as legislators should always be striving for.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I move that the committee rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 6. I wish to table copies of all the amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

12:00

Mr. Bilous: Madam Speaker, I seek unanimous consent of the House to move to one-minute bells for this next motion.

The Deputy Speaker: For the next motion?

Mr. Bilous: For Government Motion 27 – correct – which I will move shortly.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Government Motions

Time Allocation on Bill 6

27. Mr. Bilous moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. This Assembly has now debated Bill 6 for approximately 24 hours.

Nearly all opposition members have now participated in the debate, including the leaders of each of the opposition parties. The bill has been amended based on feedback that I and my colleagues have heard from farmers and ranchers.

I expect the members opposite to oppose this motion, but I'd like to remind them, Madam Speaker, that as an MP the Leader of the Opposition voted for time allocation 60 times, including on omnibus bills. He had no problem with time allocation to change the Income Tax Act, the Wheat Board Act, and even to change the RCMP Act. I have a couple of quotes from the Leader of the Official Opposition when he was an MP. He said, "Why is there a problem limiting debate on issues? . . . Why will you not agree to a time limit to limit debate?" That was on May 9, 2007. He went on to say, on November 17, 2011, "The motion is to time limit debate and to get it done today, so that we're done in about 15 hours." As you can see, at that time he had no issue with using closure amongst many other times.

As I stated when I first rose, Madam Speaker, we've now debated Bill 6 for 24 hours in this House. The bill has had ample opportunity for debate, for robust conversation throughout Committee of the Whole. I appreciate all of the members from all sides of the House giving their input on this bill, and now I urge the Assembly to move ahead and pass the committee stage.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, I would say thank you, Madam Speaker, but let me tell you that I am not very thankful at all about what is happening in this Assembly this night. [interjections] They think it's funny.

Let me just start with the preposterous comments from the Deputy Government House Leader regarding the Leader of the Opposition voting some time ago. This side of the House has proposed a number of proposals that would make this Chamber work much better, and one thing I can tell you is that in Ottawa they have real committees, who do real work for extended periods of time, where they hear from expert witnesses, where they get testimony, and the only bill that this government is concerned about sending to committee is one from the opposition.

Now, this evening we see them moving closure after one day. Committee of the Whole did not start until 3 o'clock today. There are many members on this side of the Chamber who have not had an opportunity to rise at this stage of the bill. There are many members on this side of the House who also didn't have an opportunity to speak to second reading.

An Hon. Member: Actually, that's not true.

Mr. Cooper: No. I think you'll find that the Member for Highwood, the Member for Airdrie, and the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock did not speak to the main motion at second reading.

We have heard from this Government House Leader in the past that this time allocation thing is a way for government to short-circuit democracy. That's exactly what's happening tonight. Democracy is being short-circuited. Democracy is so short-circuited in this House that the leader of a recognized party doesn't even get to speak to the fact that they are stifling debate, and it is shameful. When the Premier laughs at me, it's difficult not to laugh at her. There are lots of reasons why she shouldn't be laughing at me, but it would be unfair of me to point them out this evening.

Let me just say that on December 2, 2013, in this very Assembly there was a significant discussion with the Government House Leader of the day. "I would [like to] make the argument that the government must apply time allocation in such a way as to permit each member of the House to speak to each bill” at the stage prior to applying time allocation. This side of the House has over seven amendments that they would still like to propose, and now they have one hour. At no time in Ottawa or in this Assembly have we seen one hour of debate for time allocation. This government likes to blame everything on the previous government, and even they provided two hours of debate, the horrible, horrible, horrible previous government. They never limited debate to one hour.

I think that it is a real shame, a real shame, that on a bill where over 30,000 people have signed a real petition, not just sent it around on the Internet but actually taken the time to find a real petition, that’s been approved by Parliamentary Counsel – earlier today we saw over 2,000 letters tabled in this Assembly, and then we see total disrespect for farmers and ranchers clear across this province when this government stifles debate. I think it’s an absolute shame, and I can tell you without a doubt that this side of the House will be voting against this motion, and if they cared about democracy, they would, too.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 27 carried]

The Chair: Have we no further speakers to amendment A2?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: The question has been called.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We are back on the bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Chair. It’s my pleasure to rise in the House today and further the baby steps taken by the NDP government in amending Bill 6 by proposing an amendment to delete employment standards from the legislation.

It’s been a very disturbing few days in debating Bill 6, seeing the government so unwilling to consider the unique nature of farm operations when trying to impose employment standards. We learn at an early age that square pegs do not easily fit into round holes, and failure to consider the unique work of farming with familiar employment standards amounts to the same thing.

With that in mind, Madam Chair, I would like to table this amendment. I’ll just wait until it is passed out.

The Chair: The amendment will be known as A3.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much. Under notice of amendment to Bill 6, I move that Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, be amended by striking out sections 1, 2, and 3.

Madam Chair, it’s worthy to note that across Canada all provincial jurisdictions have some level of exemptions to employment standards. Some of these jurisdictions exempt farms and ranches from virtually every employment standard involving minimum wages to be paid, statutory holidays, overtime, hours of work, and vacation pay.

Farming is a seasonal occupation, meaning that there are significant periods of time that don’t adhere to the niceties of a standard 40-hour workweek, where you can put your feet up on the weekend. Calves arrive when they arrive, Madam Chair, regardless of whether or not you’ve put in a 16-hour day. Mother Nature doesn’t take memos about Thanksgiving and Easter either. A person in the farming and ranching sector works . . . [interjections] A person in the farming and ranching sector works when the weather co-operates, not when some law dictates that they have spent enough time on the job for the day.

The Chair: Hon. members, I’m having some difficulty hearing the hon. member across. Thank you.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Chair. The attempt to try and make this very unique segment of the economy fit a model for a manufacturing operation or a service business is a recipe for disaster and could backfire in a very real way. The nature of an omnibus bill is to try and package a multitude of changes into one neat pile. A serious flaw in this line of thinking, which the NDP was all too eager to point out when they were on the opposition side of the aisle, I might point out, is that each component of the omnibus legislation could and likely should have its own consideration and debate. Given that there has been zero conversation with farmers and ranchers, that this legislation will apply to, and what looks like zero consideration of what unique employment standards the farming and ranching industries have as their normal operating conditions in comparison to other industries, an omnibus bill isn’t the solution to improving farm safety.

Madam Chair, a worker in a factory probably would not accept that someone in a totally unrelated industry, who had never set foot in that factory, could write up useful and sensible safety legislation without working closely with the factory workers. In fact, it would be extremely foolish. Square pegs do not fit in round holes easily. The solution is not to get the omnibus hammer out to force something not designed to fit into a particular hole; the solution is to create a peg that is shaped to properly fit.

As such, the amendment is to separate employment standards from Bill 6 until such time as the unique industry is better understood by the people who intend to pass this legislation and the farmers and ranchers of Alberta have been able to have their say so that the best result for all Albertans is achieved.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A3?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: Back on the main bill. Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill? Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I, too, would like to rise and move an amendment for consideration because we're trying to make improvements to this piece of legislation here. With that, I'd like to move an amendment, and I have the required copies here.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A4.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Chair. Notice of amendment to Bill 6: I move that Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, be amended by striking out section 4. It's very brief.

While the introduction of omnibus legislation from the NDP, who rallied against such introductions when they were in opposition, is not necessarily a surprise to this Chamber, this place, there is one component of this omnibus package that requires extra-special attention. That, of course, is section 4, particularly 4(2)(e), which reads:

This Act does not apply to . . .

- (e) employees employed on a farm or ranch whose employment is directly related to
 - (i) the . . . production of eggs, milk, grain, seeds, fruit, vegetables, honey, livestock . . . animals within the meaning of the Livestock Industry Diversification Act, poultry or bees, or
 - (ii) any other primary agricultural operation specified in the regulations under the Employment Standards Code or to their employer while the employer is acting in the capacity of their employer.

Madam Chair, including the Labour Relations Code in this omnibus legislation is a problem; therefore, this amendment is worth the consideration of this House.

There is so much packed into this bill. It is like a Gordian knot. The more you pick up on one piece, the more the whole thing becomes unmanageable, somewhat like a Rubik's cube. At some point someone has to act like Alexander the Great and simply take a sword to the whole thing and try and get it unraveled. We've tried to put a sword through this thing, and the employment code section is one thing. There may be something else about the employment section that this government really thinks essential, but they did not show us what it is. It's not the first weak argument followed by a whipped vote that we've seen in this House over the last month.

Making the inference that they're especially attached to the employment standards section, which they assure us is meaningless, we will attempt again to simplify this bill or reduce complication, actually focus in a little bit on safety instead of old union battles by striking out section 4. By trying to remove the reference to the Labour Relations Code, we are trying to help government keep their legislation straight and clear. With all the rallies and outcry over this bill never once have we heard anyone say that farm safety is not a concern. By the same token, never once have we heard that farm workers need to unionize. So why are these two separate and unrelated issues tied up in this bill?

One would think, Madam Chair, that in removing the exemption for farm workers from the Labour Relations Code, as this bill does in section 4, there has been a loud and resounding call for the right to unionize and participate in collective bargaining, that prompted the NDP to include this change. If such a call has been made, we haven't heard it. With all of the coverage on Bill 6, in print media, social media, and every other form of communication currently known, if this was such a major issue, surely there should have been coverage from one of these sources. If so many people were demanding the ability to have unions and collective bargaining on farms, there are friendly newspapers who would love to splash headlines all over the country about how unions are needed in Alberta. Yet there's been barely a whimper, if anything at all.

We saw from a consultation placard that the government was asking people if there is a time of the year when a strike would be too disruptive. I would ask the government: do any of you think that farm workers should be able to strike at any time of the year? Why would this government even consider including the Labour Relations Code in this legislation, which opens the door to all sorts of job actions, including strikes and work-to-rule provisions, that would risk valuable crops and the welfare of animals?

Madam Chair, I do not see any place in this legislation that is appealable. The government does not need to remove the exemption for farms under the Labour Relations Code. The relations between farmers and their employees have not generated sweeping calls to bring unions onto Alberta farms. The workers aren't just strangers that show up for a few hours a day. These workers are people passionate about farming and everything good that comes from that. They sometimes are active participants in the actual family farm activities and even form strong and lasting bonds with the people they work with and for. The relationship is not one of continual discontent and strife.

This makes me wonder, Madam Chair, as to why the government thinks it is necessary to put a labour relations component into Bill 6. If there had been long-standing tension between these farm workers and the families that employ them, this may make more sense, yet it seems that this is just another ideological policy, that makes an already vulnerable industry face additional costs and burden. Honestly, the introduction of a carbon tax, the locomotive fuel tax, higher minimum wages, all are driving prices higher on absolutely everything. More cost and administration are the last things that farmers and ranchers need by having to comply with extensive labour relation regulations in this code.

Madam Chair, Alberta isn't the embarrassing cousin that the hon. Premier says it is to impress her friends in eastern Canada and around the globe. There doesn't need to be the same ill-considered rush to force onerous labour relations onto every industry, especially one that doesn't seem to need this type of representation. No matter how much the government wants to believe it, Alberta does not need ideological fixes of this type. Alberta does not need more collective bargaining, unions, interference, and/or more hassles for farmers or individual agricultural producers.

Albertans choose to farm for a variety of reasons, and they may be personal reasons. They want to bring goods and services of the highest quality and value to their neighbours, their friends, and, indeed, to the market itself. They don't need additional barriers and burdens on these ranches and farms. These are already staggering and buckling under the constant pressure of more and more red tape and bureaucracy. They want real solutions to real-world problems, and they are not getting it from a government that spends its time thinking up ways to destroy traditions, business operations, and lifestyle choices of many Albertan farmers and ranchers. Alberta farm workers aren't asking for unions and collective bargaining, and until such time as there is a clear indication from farm workers that such legislation is required, it's a mistake for this government to include it, making this omnibus bill more unwieldy.

The Chair: Any further speakers to amendment A4?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: The question has been called.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: On the main bill, the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's nice to see that it only takes a few thousand loud voices to get this government to actually stop and think about what their legislation says and to make some attempt to fix it. Since the stated objective of the Wildrose opposition is to help ensure that only the best laws are enacted to help Albertans, we take this role very seriously. With that in mind, Madam Chair, I would like to table this next amendment.

The Chair: This will be amendment A5.

Mr. Hanson: Notice of amendment for Bill 6: I move that Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, be amended in section 1 as follows: (a) by striking out subsection (2) and substituting the following:

(2) Section 2(4) is amended by adding "with 5 or fewer employers" after "farm or ranch."

And (b) by striking out subsection (3).

This amendment reassures family farmers that whatever this government ends up deciding to implement for bigger corporate farms, they will have the status quo and exemptions like other provinces. With five or fewer employees they will maintain the status quo and keep their exemption from the Employment Standards Code. As we all know, for a century there have been all kinds of employment standards changes, but farms have been usually excluded from these laws. This is not an oversight. This reflects a fact that farms are unique. Partly it is the fact that workers often are those who live there; partly it is the nature of the work. When the rains are coming and the harvest needs to get in, you don't punch out at 8 p.m. When the cows are calving in the middle of the night, you don't just turn lights off and go to bed.

Now, of course, we don't know what rules apply because they haven't set the standards yet. But that's the problem. Farmers don't trust this government, full of brand new MLAs, with virtually no agricultural background but plenty of nonagricultural labour activism background, to know how to get this right. I had occasion, Madam Chair, to check the various education and employment backgrounds of our esteemed NDP MLAs. As I understand it, virtually none of them have been part of or have run a farming operation. It shows in the lack of understanding of employment standards that could or should be included in legislation for small farms. This makes it harder, especially as new MLAs, to give some push-back when a select few in the Premier's office or even outside the Premier's office insist that something needs to be included in the bill, and: don't worry, we'll sort it out later.

Farm work is not like other work. Proof of that is that across the country there are partial or full exemptions for farm workers in most of the employment standards categories. This includes minimum wages, stat holidays, overtime, hours of work, and vacation pay. In fact, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba have partial exemptions in every category for farm workers. In Ontario farm workers are exempt from every category except for some of the provisions that apply to young workers. So what exactly is the intention in having this section here? Why, if Ontario is willing to exempt farming from the kinds of standards we would expect in a factory or other setting, is this government sticking this section into the omnibus bill?

These exemptions recognize that a family farm or ranch is a business operation unlike many others. The workers often live right where they work and work where they live. There is no 20-minute commute in the car to get to the office. The office is commonly a combination of the dining-room table, with the computer somewhere else in the house. Mornings begin early, and nights run late, especially at critical times in the farming business cycle. Responsibilities begin at a very young age, and everyone has a role to play.

The government seems to have got the sense of this in its amendment, but what it keeps refusing to acknowledge is the problem in insisting that the minute a family farm hires a single person, it is suddenly just like any other workplace. There are large, corporate farms, but that is not the norm. There are lots of smaller farms, and they usually have to hire a couple of people. They are still family farms. No farmer wants to see their family, friends, or employees hurt. It's equally true that in an effort to make this industry safer, simply legislating employment standards that apply to every industry will not meet the needs of small farms. It will instead serve to drive them into the ground under a sea of red tape and expense.

This is a common-sense amendment that recognizes the importance of safety while putting that in the context of small farms. There's tremendous wisdom in that. That is why I urge you to consider the unique needs of small farms when voting for this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A5?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: Back on the bill. Any further comments, questions, or amendments with respect to Bill 6?

Mr. Fraser: Madam Chair, I have an amendment to Bill 6.

The Chair: This is amendment A6.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, be amended by adding the following after section 10:

Review of amendments by committee

- 11(1) A committee of the Legislative Assembly must begin a comprehensive review of the amendments made by this Act
- (a) within one year after all provisions of this Act have come into force, and
 - (b) thereafter, every 3 years after the date on which the previous committee submits its report under subsection (2).
- (2) A committee must submit a final report to the Legislative Assembly within 6 months after beginning a review under subsection (1).
- (3) The report of a committee may include the committee's recommendations for any further amendments to the legislation amended by this Act or for changes to any related regulations.

Madam Chair, I have had a few different jobs in my past, but one that kind of relates is, obviously, my job as an advanced care paramedic. You can imagine that all the calls that I go to are very important calls. For those people, in that time of crisis or need it is important for them and they need to know that the person coming into their home to care for their loved one can be trusted. Part of building that trust is how you present yourself, how you approach the patient. I can't think of any other patients that are probably looked at as more precious, not more so than any other patient but when it comes to adolescents, children.

You can imagine that when you go to treat a child, the child may not be able to speak and may be having a hard time trying to understand what's going on. They're injured. Their parents are there, and you can imagine that they're very protective. As you walk through the treatment plan, not only do you have to engage the child in a way that the child can understand, that the child can relate to, but you also have to explain the procedures that you're going to go through with the parents. As you do that, what it does is it starts to build trust – right? – which is the main key. If you step in and you perform a treatment without going through all of that, you can lose the trust, and once you lose the trust, even though your intent is to help, you can no longer treat that patient in the most effective way.

In fact, this is what we've seen here. The Premier, admittedly with strong leadership, has admitted that she made a mistake and the caucus and the cabinet, that the way it came out was a mistake. The first communication: what it did was it set farmers and ranchers and our farming community on their heels, and to add anything further to that – they were already protective.

Now, I remember a time as a paramedic, with the hon. Premier and the Government House Leader, when we transitioned from the city of Calgary to Alberta Health Services. This was unknown for us, and we had a lot of concerns. In fact, at the time, believe it or not, I was the president of the Calgary paramedic union, CUPE 3421. So I understand the labour movement. I do believe in the labour movement, but I also believe in responsibility and sustainability for the long term because it's not just about one particular group; it's about everybody in this province. You know, as we do that, as leaders we're representing everybody, not just one specific group.

I just remember having meetings back then with the hon. Premier and the Government House Leader and the hon. Health minister because they were concerned about what the government was doing at the time. They weren't consulting with us. They were pushing us into a position where we didn't want to go, and our recommendation, surprisingly enough, was: "Hold off. Wait a minute. It's okay if you want to fund emergency medical services, but allow the cities to own and operate it so that you could get a handle on it." Quite often, when you think of corporate takeovers, that's what happens. They wait. They don't change anything immediately. They just operate it as it was so that they can get a feel for the landscape.

There's an opportunity, through this amendment short and sweet, a way to earn back some of the trust by going back in after you've done your regulations, after you've done this extensive consultation, to review it, to make sure that parts of it, after the consultation, will be amended.

This is a gesture of goodwill, not only to the thousands of farmers – and quite honestly, in all the protests that I've seen, I've never seen anything as big as this one in my time in government or on this side of the House. I've never seen the passion and the tears, and I can tell you, coming from a farming community, my father's farming community – I grew up in the city – that, man, they are super angry. They are super angry. I have never heard my dad that angry on the phone in a long time. He's a quiet, reasonable guy. He is a patient man. He was a small-business owner for over 40 years. You know, if I was half of the man that he is, well, maybe I'd be the Premier. I don't know. He's just wise, and when he gets mad, then I know there's a problem, and I knew it when I was a kid.

The thing is that that could be easily resolved by making some good gestures moving forward, and this is one simple piece: go in; review it after a while.

I thank the members for listening. Please vote.

The Chair: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-South East for this amendment. I just want to speak to it briefly. First and foremost, I have no issues with the spirit of this amendment and what it's proposing, to come back to a legislative committee, once the act has been in place for some time, to review it, to make sure that it stays current and that all members of the House have an opportunity to provide that kind of feedback on an ongoing basis. For that, I commend him, for his idea and, like I said, for the spirit of this.

The challenge that I have, Madam Chair, is that regulations will still be in the process of being developed, again, in consultation with the farming and ranching community next year, and the challenge with this amendment is that the committee would begin next year while the regulations are still being developed. With that, you know, I have concerns, because we need to get the regulations in place to see how they're operating before we can review all of this in a comprehensive package.

Like I said, I appreciate the amendment, but for that reason, Madam Chair, I cannot support this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers?

Mr. Fraser: Madam Chair, in section 11(1)(a) it says, "after all provisions of this Act have come into force." The regulations at that point wouldn't have come into force. Essentially, it allows them to make the regulations, put them into force, and then it's one year after that. So that explains that, and if there's wording to amend that bill, let's amend it and make it so.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A6?

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member. My interpretation – although I am not a lawyer, I still have concerns. We're talking about: a legislative committee "must begin a comprehensive review of the amendments made by this Act," which is what we're debating right now in this House. I appreciate 11(1)(a), "within one year after all provisions of this Act have come into force"; however, I still have concerns on how this could be interpreted.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to this amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the bill. The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I just wanted to take a moment to talk about sort of where I was about five years ago. When I had first been elected to the Edmonton public school board, one of my colleagues brought forward the idea that we create a policy around ensuring safe, respectful, inclusive work and learning environments for staff, students, and families who were LGBTQ. At the time we received tremendous push-back. I have to say that some of the phone calls I received, some of the e-mails I received made me feel very unsafe and very disrespected. But it was the right thing to do. I know that there is great concern about what this is going to mean among some members of the farming community, but I know that the right thing to do is to make sure that the protection is in place to ensure safety for vulnerable workers.

I just want to say that I am so proud to be part of an Assembly that just voted unanimously, last week, to provide protections by adding gender expression and gender identity to our discrimination rights. I don't think that we would have been in a position five years ago to have the courage to do that as a unanimous Assembly. I know that it's efforts that sometimes create great discomfort that actually move us far ahead as a society, and I think that this is going to be one of those bills. I think that five years from now we'll be able to look at some of the changes that we've done in partnership with farm workers, with farm owners, with ranch owners, with ranch employees, and I think that we're going to be really proud of what we've accomplished. There are times of great tension and disruption, but I know in my heart of hearts that we're doing the right thing here by providing the very basic protections to the most vulnerable, Madam Chair.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment to move, and I'll hand it to the pages.

I'll read the amendment into the record and will give a little bit of time for it to be distributed, but I'll preface my comments with a few remarks.

Based on the past voting record of the government on other amendments, amendments that I think were reasonable, amendments that I felt were sincere efforts at improving this legislation, this desperately flawed legislation, amendments that I thought would provide some opportunity for the government to provide at least some degree of – I don't want to use the word "comfort" because I don't think we can comfort rural Alberta at this point with this. With the communications that I've been receiving, at least over the last couple of weeks, Madam Chair, I think what we should all anticipate, if this legislation goes ahead, is a large number of farmers leaving the farm. That will be the effect of this legislation that you're patting yourselves on the back for. This legislation will result in a lot of farmers saying: "That's it. They've pushed me off the farm." If that was your goal, well, congratulations. Good work.

There are a lot of farms in this province that are currently owned and operated by people in their 50s or their 60s or their 70s. These are folks that are perhaps looking at a time when they're going to leave farming, and this will be the straw that breaks the camel's back, this requirement for increased intrusion into the lives of an independent, proud people that don't want government interference in what they do. But that is the NDP way. The NDP way is to intervene, to interfere, and to have a we-know-better attitude from central government. It is very frustrating because one of the things that I learned very early on was that farm people can teach you a lot. I said that in my speech at second reading.

One of the most consistent concerns that has been brought up in the consultations is addressed by this amendment, and I'll just read it into the record. I move that Bill 6, the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, be amended as follows. In part A section 3 is struck out, and the following is substituted:

3 This Part comes into force on January 1 of the year following notification by the Minister to the Assembly that public consultation has been completed on this Part.

In part B subsection (3) in section 4 is struck out, and the following is substituted:

(3) This section comes into force on January 1 of the year following notification by the Minister to the Assembly that public consultation has been completed on this section.

In part C section 8 is struck out, and the following is substituted:

8 This Part comes into force on January 1 of the year following the Minister notifying the Assembly that public consultation has been completed on proposed regulations under the Occupational Health and Safety Act referenced in this Part.

In part D section 10 is struck out, and the following is substituted:

10 This Part comes into force on January 1, 2017.

Madam Chair, these four provisions are in this amendment to provide the government with the opportunity to address a concern that came up repeatedly. One of the main causes of anger amongst Alberta farmers, ranchers, and rural Albertans is that they were not consulted and that not only is this legislation going to be passed in the next 24 hours and the first aspects of it are going to be coming into effect in 22 days but that the consultation that has been promised will happen after the legislation is enacted, after the legislation is put into place. After all of the misinformation, after all of the confusion that has been caused by this government about this piece of legislation, after the way it has been clearly interpreted by farmers and ranchers, not incorrectly, that this legislation threatens the farming and ranching way of life in this province, this government expects to be trusted. Well, I will tell you something: good luck with that one. Whatever else you may think about farmers, farmers aren't stupid.

Ladies and gentlemen, if you want to save some face, if you want to rebuild your tattered reputation with rural Alberta, if you want to have any opportunity whatsoever of regaining the confidence of those that live on the land, those that feed you, then I would strongly suggest that you look at this amendment.

What it does, essentially, in the first three parts is state that the legislation will not come into effect until January 1 of the year, following the completion of consultations, after you've talked to farmers, after you've done your consultation process, not before. Show them some respect. Section D moves back the coming-into-effect date to January 1, 2017, and that is designed that way because I know that the Workers' Compensation Board part of this, which is, ostensibly, the real reason that you've put this into place, will come into effect not in 23 days but in one year and 23 days.

Madam Chair, I do not think that there is anything that this government at this point can do to fully regain the trust of Albertans. They can't regain the trust of rural Albertans, for sure, and I can tell you that this is not an urban-rural split issue because urban Alberta supports the farmers in this, too. They know where their food comes from. Although I realized that it was probably a quixotic quest to suggest that we could pass amendments that would actually help with this piece of legislation, that we could pass amendments tonight with the co-operation of a government caucus that would listen carefully and consider carefully each and every amendment before they simply voted them down to participate like sheep – although I would proffer up to you that they understand very little about sheep or any other farm animal – I will tell you that it is disappointing, to say the least, that these reasonable amendments, these amendments that would have improved these pieces of legislation, were not given fuller consideration. I give the Minister of Economic Development and Trade credit that he at least addressed the last amendment and indicated why he couldn't accept it although, quite frankly, I think that the explanation from my hon. friend was certainly adequate. Nonetheless, we have this last amendment, this last-ditch attempt before democracy is cut off, to try to improve this bill one last time.

Albertans have been watching these proceedings. The ratings for the Assembly Online channel have skyrocketed. If that was your goal, well, that has been accomplished.

Mr. Cooper: They're selling ads soon.

Dr. Starke: They're selling ads? Fantastic.

Madam Chair, that's perhaps a good thing. This has resulted in Albertans becoming engaged in their democracy, and that is a good thing. But I will tell you that there are many Albertans that are not impressed with their newly minted government. There are many Albertans that are indeed very disappointed that this government, that came in with so much promise, with so much potential, and with so much willingness and desire to do things differently – well, quite frankly, I recognize these patterns. I recognize these patterns because I was part of these patterns: the summary dismissing of good amendments just simply because, well, the opposition is the opposition, and we just don't listen to them. I know now that some of that was a mistake, a big mistake.

But even then, Madam Chair, we did accept reasonable amendments from the opposition. Not nearly as many as we should have, but we did accept reasonable amendments. Those amendments, I believe, improved legislation that we had. This piece of legislation can be improved by pushing back the coming-into-force date. That is what this amendment asks for. I urge the government to consider supporting this particular amendment, as I know that members on this side of the House will.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise in support of the amendment. The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster talked about regaining the trust of rural Alberta. One thing that we notice is that you have made a mark. I would say that it was very telling at the meeting in Athabasca today that a third-generation NDP man, who had worked on the campaign for the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, stood up at that meeting and called the member out, saying: "You're breaking your promise. You said to us that you would listen to your constituents, and now you're breaking your promise." You have made your mark, and you will see how it all works out. That third-generation NDPer apologized to all Alberta farmers for this government. He apologized for this NDP government, and I suspect that he might be revoking his membership.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

Mr. McIver: You know what, Madam Chair? This is an amazing olive branch that my esteemed colleague has given to the government, a chance to retain a little . . .

Mr. Cooper: A peace offering to rural Alberta.

Mr. McIver: A peace offering. Really, a chance to retain a little bit of credibility with rural Alberta.

You know, you can laugh at us all you want. You can ignore us. You've got the majority. But you know who's got the hammer? Albertans. And Albertans are not pleased with Bill 6. When Albertans get a chance, they'll wield the hammer. You know what that looks like? It looks like May 5, only you won't enjoy it so much next time they wield the hammer. You know, when you poke them in the eye that much, they notice that. They tend to notice when they are ignored.

You know what? The amendment is incredibly reasonable. My colleague, actually, with this amendment is making the assumption that the government is going to keep part of their promise, that they're going to talk to farmers and ranchers before they put this in action, give them a reasonable amount of time to adjust, and then do it. You know, I didn't think there was any way, with what's gone on so far, that the government could retain any shred of a chance to have faith from the rural community and Albertans. This won't repair all the damage that the government has done to itself in the last week or two, but it will probably repair some of it. What it says, if you do this, is that you will take some time, talk to farmers and ranchers. Even if you don't – I sincerely hope you do – you'll give them some time to adjust.

They've been ranching, they've been farming, they've been running their businesses, and they've been feeding their families on farms, doing it safely and credibly and in a good way for over a hundred years. They deserve some respect. What this says is: give them the respect, give them the dignity if you're going to make changes that they have not approved. Lord knows, you shouldn't make the changes unless they approve them. But it at least gives you a shred of credibility with them. When they think about what's happened here, they might say: we hate what you've done, but we're going to have a chance to adjust before the cement goes hard on the law, before the regulations come into place, before it's all over.

This really is the opportunity that you have – the last opportunity, it seems – to make that happen because of the time allocation that you have put on to cut off debate on something that is so very important to all of Alberta and extremely important to rural Alberta. Boy, I'll tell you what. If I were you and I had a chance to save a little bit of credibility with the very people that you work for, that we all work for – I know they're my boss, they're our caucus's boss, and they're the boss of all of us, the people of Alberta.

You know, respect matters. I've heard members from the government side talk about respect and dignity of Alberta workers and Alberta citizens. I'll tell you that in the Bill 6 debate, the way Bill 6 has been rammed through, the way farmers and ranchers up till now have been ignored, a little dose of respect at the back end of this thing would go a long way and would be a very positive development at this point, certainly one that I think even opposition members would appreciate if the government could see their way clear to doing this.

That's what it comes down to, folks. We're down to the bitter end, the last chance to do the right thing for Albertans, Alberta families, Alberta farmers, Alberta ranchers. I sincerely hope that the members on all sides of the House – and I guess I'm particularly talking to members on the government side – can find their way clear to supporting a very reasonable amendment, which is indeed an olive branch offered by my esteemed colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster.

The Chair: The hon. minister of economic affairs.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much. I'll keep my comments brief. I know opposition members have other comments. I just wanted to respond to the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. I wanted to thank him for this amendment that he's tabled and his colleague, the leader of the third party, for speaking to this.

A couple of things I just want to clarify. First of all, again, this is something where I agree with the spirit of what this is trying to do. I have been to numerous public meetings over the last few days engaging with farmers and ranchers, and I can tell this Assembly that this amendment is not necessary, Madam Chair, because our government has committed to engage in a province-wide consultation that will take anywhere between 12 to 18 months. The purpose of it is to develop the regulations with the very experts, farmers and ranchers. We're going to be going through numerous vehicles, or ways, of engaging with the public to ensure that every Albertan who wants to give their feedback and explain their situation will have the opportunity through a variety of tools. This consultation will take place not just before we draft the regulations, but once they are drafted, we will go back out and ensure that we've correctly captured the carve-outs or the caveats. We want to respect the way of life that farmers and ranchers have built. It's not just a job; it is a way of life. They have very unique working circumstances, and we want to respect that.

Again, I do appreciate the hon. member's intention with this amendment, but the purpose of this bill in coming forward with WCB protections as of January 1 is that Alberta is the only province that doesn't offer paid farm workers that protection. I acknowledge that there are some farmers throughout the province who go above and beyond, who have offered private insurance, who take care of their workers. We recognize that safety is a primary concern for all farmers and ranchers. However, there are examples throughout the province of where there are paid farm workers who do not have coverage, and this bill will ensure that they have that coverage starting on January 1. But we are going to work with the farming and ranching community to make sure that we get our regulations correct.

One last point to what the leader of the third party said. He said that Albertans have said that they do not want this bill. Some Albertans are displeased with this bill, Madam Chair, but no one in this Chamber exclusively speaks for all Albertans. There are Albertans who have been asking for this, who are in favour of this. There are farm workers that have been asking for protections. Quite frankly, it's time that Alberta joins the rest of our country and ensures that paid farm workers have those basic protections.

For that reason, Madam Chair, I will not be supporting this amendment.

The Chair: Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. As we wind down in the stifling pressure of closure, I just want to say one very brief thing. What this amendment does is that it allows the government to walk the talk, to actually have words on paper that require them to do what they say. If the last six or seven months have taught us anything about this government, it's that we've seen a pattern of saying one thing and doing another, of misinformation, of actions and behaviours that don't build trust. What my hon. colleague has proposed is putting down in the legislation that the consultation will actually be meaningful, that they will in fact respect farmers and ranchers clear across this province, because they don't believe that that will happen.

If the government wants to walk the talk, if they want to put teeth into the words that they say, if they want to communicate in such a manner that there is weight behind their words, this is the last opportunity to do that. I strongly encourage the government to think about exactly what this means and how they can put some meaning behind what they say that they will do and reassure farmers and ranchers that they will listen. That's exactly what the amendment does, and I encourage all members to support it.

The Chair: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. Normally I rise in this Assembly to speak for the people of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, and in a few minutes I will speak on their behalf with the rest of my colleagues and proudly vote against this in Committee of the Whole. But I just briefly want to speak on behalf of the thousands of constituents that are reaching out to me and my colleagues from the rural Alberta ridings of these NDP MLAs. Thousands of them are reaching out to us right now, asking us to tell their representative to stand up and represent them. Stand up for them. That's what they were sent to this House to do, just like the rest of us. Today I'm going to stand up, and I'm going to represent the people of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I can assure you that the people where I live are going to remember that I stood up here today for them, and they're going to remember that these rural MLAs did not stand up for their constituents today.

Madam Chair, that shouldn't matter. There is going to be a terrible political consequence to this. There is absolutely no doubt about it. Everybody who has been back home this weekend knows that the rural MLAs in the NDP caucus are in serious trouble, but that should not be what makes the decision for them. They should make the decision because to come to this Assembly here is a great honour. To represent all your constituents is a great honour, and they should be taking that seriously. They should be taking that responsibly. Every one of them on this other side of this Assembly, through you, Madam Chair, knows what their constituents have asked them.

There is going to be trouble along the way, where you're going to have a tough time deciding what to do in this job. There's no doubt about it. You're going to have a tough time understanding what your constituents want. On this issue that is not the case. There is no doubt. The overwhelming number of constituents, of farmers and ranchers, are making it clear that this bill is unacceptable. They have stood inside town halls. The minister has stood there and has heard without a doubt that the message is: kill Bill 6. But these NDP MLAs from rural Alberta, that represent thousands of farmers, are about to stand up and vote with the government against their own constituents. That is an embarrassment, and they should be ashamed of it.

I sure hope they get the courage to stand up and vote for their constituents. I know that I'm going to, I know that my colleagues in the Official Opposition are, and I know my colleagues in the third party are. That is the right thing to do. Again, reach for the courage. Ignore your whip. Stand up for your constituents. Do what you were elected for.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

Mr. McIver: Madam Chair, you know, I heard the minister talk about that nobody speaks exclusively for all the farmers and ranchers, and he's right. But you know what? There were 2,000 of them on the doorstep here. I know that people tried to get rallies in support of Bill 6, and they weren't there.

At some point democracy actually has to be represented. There is no doubt. I am sure there are a few people that disagree with our position, that agree with Bill 6, but for every one of those, it's pretty obvious there are hundreds or thousands that are against Bill 6. Why? Because we've heard them. We've gotten e-mails, unbelievable e-mails, from all over the province, phone calls. We've had people here by the thousands protesting. We've had your ministers being shouted down. I give them credit for talking to them, but sometimes you have to let something come into your head and not bounce off the outside of it if you want to stick around here. I know you could do it. Democracy matters. Representing people matters.

You know what? You're not messing with somebody's hobby. You're messing with their lives. You're messing with the very people and families that feed all of us in one of the industries that so far should have a bright future. You know what? The government has gone to the trouble to trash out the coal industry and the oil and gas industry and to tax everything that moves, but there is one industry that ought to stick around. It ought to include the family farms. You ought to let it happen, and you ought to let them participate when you do it. Bill 6 flies in the face of every ounce and every bit of that. It's wrong. It's wrong.

The Chair: Are you speaking to the amendment?

Mr. McIver: I am speaking to the amendment.

The amendment gives you a chance to actually say that you're going to listen to some of those farmers and ranchers. Frankly, it's the last chance. You know, again, I talked to some members of the government side, and they said: well, how did you guys stick around for 44 years? Well, we didn't get voted in once; it was a bunch of times. But I'll tell you what. Our government, that stuck around for 44 years, was imperfect, folks. You know that. We know that. But you know how we stuck around? When something really bad and something really negative was going to happen, out of everybody's sight, in caucus, people got a hold of the Premier of the day and said: "No, Premier. We're not doing that because our constituents said that that's not what they want." And the government survived, and Alberta was better, and Albertans' interests were represented.

That is the way that democracy is designed to run, that's the way democracy ought to run, and that's the way any government with self-respect ought to represent the people that voted for them, to bring them here. That is what we're asking you to do. That's certainly what people on this side of the House have done. Our party, the other opposition parties have listened to those people, and the message has been crystal clear.

You know what? There are going to be lots of issues over the next three and a half years that can be debated with areas of grey, but, man, if there was ever a black-and-white issue with the vast majority of Albertans, more so the vast majority of Albertans that are directly affected by Bill 6 – boy – while they're not a hundred per cent of one mind, there's not much doubt that a vast majority of them are in agreement that this is bad medicine. It's bad for the future of Alberta. It's bad for our food supply. It's tough on some really nice people – some really nice people – people that you've got in tears, people that are going to lose sleep for the next year or two. You know what? You are killing them. You are killing them.

I'll tell you what. One of the things that I've heard and that I sincerely hope isn't true is that there's going to be bad news, personal bad news, coming out of the farm and ranch community because of the stress that Bill 6 is putting on them. You may see that bad news come out tonight or you may see it next month or you may see it the month after, but when you do – boy, oh boy – I wouldn't want to be thinking about the decision that I made today if you go ahead and plow ahead with Bill 6 without actually taking the time to talk to farmers and ranchers before you do it.

You know what, folks? This is the last minute of overtime because while we will have the third reading, after the time allocation you've put on it, it's too late for amendments, folks. This is your last chance to do a shred of the right thing before . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, the leader of the third party, but pursuant to Government Motion 27, agreed to on December 9, 2015, which states that after one hour of debate all questions must be decided to conclude debate on Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, I must now put the following questions to conclude debate.

[Request to report Bill 6 carried]

Mr. Bilous: Madam Chair, I move that we rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Seeing that the hour is late, I ask for unanimous consent to move to one-minute bells for the duration of this evening.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Ms Woollard: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 6. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. A little drowsy after a very long week that all members shared, I move that we adjourn the House until 9 a.m. on Thursday.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 1:25 a.m. on Thursday to 9 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning.

Please bow your heads. Hon. members, as a new year approaches, let us reflect upon our lives as individuals and as a community of legislators. For most of us this past year was a year of unbelievable change; a year of great privilege, and, much more importantly, a year of profound responsibility; a year of emotion, sometimes of tension, but also of laughter; a year of pain, when we came together with tears and sadness out of the loss of a brother. For some of us this is a time of Christian celebration. It is a time we share with all of our fellow citizens, a time of peace, a time of rest, a time of contemplation. Let us accept our responsibility to repair our province, needing strength, not division; peace, not conflict; hope, not fear.

Please be seated.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Member's Apology

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will need about four minutes.

The last week or so in this Assembly has been particularly heated. That can happen on occasion, not that it does anyone here much credit. Many members on this side have been quite upset about question period, and while I feel that my concerns are legitimate, my anger has caused me to make statements that were inappropriate, and for that I have regret. Allow me to elaborate and to apologize to you, Mr. Speaker, and the members of this Assembly.

Question period has been raucous for a while. The other day an hon. member apologized for using the words “goons” and “gangsters.” The truth is that many of the words thrown our way from the benches opposite were much more R-rated than “goons” and “gangsters.” While question period should be lively, the truth is that none of the parents in this Assembly would want their children to sit at the Clerk’s table and listen.

The other issue which has upset us has been the wasting of time and the impact it has had on opposition questions. Traditionally question period has had an average of well over 17 sets of questions dealt with every day. For a variety of reasons the 29th Session of the Legislature has seen an average of just over 14 sets. That adds up to over 90 missed questions so far this session alone.

The two things together have led to frustration and even anger. I lost my temper, and I should not have. I should have come and spoken directly to you, Mr. Speaker.

Instead, I tweeted something inappropriate. I broke a minor rule in tweeting from this Chamber, and I assure you that that will not happen again. But I also called into question your impartiality and integrity. That is more serious. I ought not to have done that, Mr. Speaker. I have a profound respect for this place, and I have a profound respect for the Office of the Speaker and its critical role in protecting the traditional privileges of members, particularly the privileges of the minority in a Westminster Assembly. I have requested a meeting with you, and I hope that you will grant that meeting. Out of a deep respect for the institution and an acknowledgement of the complexities of your role I am going to apologize to you and to members of this Assembly and completely withdraw any comments in the House or tweets regarding you on these matters, made inside or outside the Chamber.

I look forward to high-quality and fair questions in the future. I think all members on both sides of the Assembly should work with you to make that happen. Mr. Speaker, good manners, respect, and civility require that I extend a hand of goodwill, so I will unreservedly apologize for any incivility or disrespect towards you or your office. It is my sincere hope that members of this Assembly can move forward with productive questions and debate, which fulfill their critical role in holding the government to account.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I look forward to speaking with you personally.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 6

Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I’m pleased to stand to move third reading of Bill 6, the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you seek it, I’m sure you will find it: unanimous consent of this House to go to one-minute bells for the duration of the morning.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Someone who wishes to speak to third reading? Her Majesty’s Official Opposition leader.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all the members of the Assembly. I am a true democrat. I am. I think that the Legislature should work. It should produce good laws for Albertans. That’s what a democrat is. Bill 6 is not a good law. There are so many things wrong with Bill 6. It is a big-government solution in search of a problem. Everyone cares about farm safety. Nobody cares more about farm safety than the moms and dads that actually are operating and own the 45,000 family farms in Alberta.

I also know, from statistics, from empirical evidence – that’s right – from the historical perspective of what takes place on farms, that Alberta’s fatality stats per thousand farmers are the lowest or one of the lowest in the country. Fewer people die on Alberta farms and ranches than in any other provinces in Canada, which, by the way, have far more regulations than Alberta does. No province has a better safety record than Alberta. We should be proud of the moms and dads that operate the 45,000 farms in Alberta.

Alberta farmers have a great OHS record, and most Alberta farmers carry insurance that is cheaper and better than WCB. It’s about offering choice to farmers: choice of WCB, choice of better insurance, choice so they can protect their family and provide better benefits to their families and workers. This government is taking away those choices. The government would actually know these things if they had consulted with farmers, if they’d taken the opportunity to put this bill to committee to hear from those experts, to hear from the agricultural groups, to hear from the moms and dads and farmers and ranchers right across this province.

The Premier actually says that the bill has been studied too much. She’s right. But do you know that every single study has indicated the same thing? Minor tweaks may be necessary for little parts here and there in relation to farm safety, minor tweaks in relation to OHS, minor tweaks in relation to employment standards. Minor tweaks. Every study has indicated the same thing. But the Premier is committed to the big government knows best approach, which obviously does not work. We've seen it in past NDP governments, right across this country, and that's regardless of the evidence, Mr. Speaker. It's shocking that this government would ignore the empirical evidence, years and years of historical data. It shows clearly a government and a Premier that are out of touch with Albertans. Bill 6 is fundamentally flawed, and it will cause anger throughout Alberta for many, many years.

This bill should have gone to committee. All bills, government or private members' bills, should go to committees, where the government would still have a majority, but they would have an opportunity to hear from witnesses. Do you know what? The backbench, Mr. Speaker, would have an opportunity to participate in democracy instead of just strolling in here and doing what they're told. The participation would be huge. I see smiles from the front bench, but – that's right – there are no smiles on the backbench because they're not participating in democracy.

All bills should go to committee. The government talks about my federal record on bills. They're right. I have voted for closure, not at this stage – not at this stage – but after months and months of committee work, after hearing from experts right across the country, after touring across the country and hearing from experts in all provinces and territories. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that that's what the federal Finance committee does? They actually, before a budget, do prebudget consultations. They listen to Albertans. They listen to Alberta businesses, to farms, to ranches. They listen because when you listen, you make the right decisions.

This NDP government, this Premier have closed ears to Albertans. They are so ideologically driven that they are not prepared to listen to the facts, to listen to the thousands upon thousands of farmers and ranchers that have come to this place and protested this bill, that have gone to communities right across this province, that in just weeks, Mr. Speaker, have organized to come here and come to many, many other communities. We have had a number of town halls, and the anger is real. They will not forget this government's lack of consultation

Now, Mr. Speaker, we know that democracy works at the federal level. In fact, the NDP has more opportunity at the federal level by far than the Wildrose Party does at this level, at the provincial level. That's not right. We need to restore democracy to this place. This is what we are here for, to make sure that democracy has a voice. Democracy actually means that the people have to have a voice.

Bill 6 has so many problems. The protections for small family farms are just not good enough. Forcing farms to give up on good insurance, better insurance and replace it with inadequate WCB coverage is a huge mistake. The OHS impacts are yet to be felt, but, Mr. Speaker, with respect, there will be many unintended and unanticipated consequences that will have Alberta farms and ranches suffering.

Let me give you one which has not yet been discussed. I'm from Fort McMurray, and I know what safety means. I know how important safety is. Safety first: it's a motto I've heard since the very beginning of living in Fort McMurray, 50 years ago. It's a motto that's ingrained in our culture there because it's so, so important to the future of the people that work there. OHS requires that people work in safe buildings, buildings that are up to building code. Now, I know that not many members of the NDP have visited a farm, and they certainly haven't done so recently because they haven't consulted with farmers, but the building code has never applied to farm buildings, Mr. Speaker. It is possible that every single farm work site in Alberta will not be considered safe under OHS legislation.

Think of the consequences, Mr. Speaker. Every farm building: not safe under current legislation. I think that's real. The consequences and cost of that to farmers might be so staggering that we might not have farmers in Alberta that are competitive with the world, that are able to continue to operate in that competitive environment, that are able to continue to feed Albertans, Canadians, and the world. It is a serious issue.

The government is struggling to write legislation. We saw it in Bill 4, which the government mismanaged to the point that the Finance minister broke the law. He became a lawbreaker on Bill 4. We saw it with Bill 5, where government sloppiness required amendments to legislation that all parties supported. We saw it in Bill 8, where this government didn't consult, where they lost the support of school boards, and where, as a result, Mr. Speaker, they had to make two amendments after they said that the bill was perfect. [interjections] It's perfect except when everybody complains. That's exactly why we need to consult, why they should have consulted with the school boards, that were so angry, and their anger made them come forward in a couple of days with amendments. We know that because I had the opportunity to talk to school boards. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members. Minister of Education, please.

Please proceed.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate you intervening on that lack of respect here, sir.

We did see it in Bill 8, and we continue to see it, Mr. Speaker. We see the school boards upset. I had an opportunity to sit down with both school boards from Fort McMurray some time ago, and their concern was the lack of consultation by this minister. Clearly, not listening to the people of Alberta will cost this government a lot, and Bill 8 is just one of the examples. After saying that it's a perfect bill and presenting it, they had to come forward with amendments to fix the problems so that they would make people partially happy.

That would be avoided if this minister actually had the opportunity to persuade the government to put all bills to committees for discussion, for input, for expert opinion and advice. You still have the majority on the committees, but that gives people the opportunity to participate in democracy. Participating in democracy, I would submit, Mr. Speaker, is the most important thing that we can allow Albertans to do in this place to feel that they are part of the government's future and a part of Alberta's future.

This government is teetering on the edge of incompetence. After only seven months they can hardly bring anything to the Assembly that is ready to pass and become law. That is worrying. But, Mr. Speaker, we know that they have the majority. We will be oppressed by the majority on Bill 6. We have no choice. As the Wildrose we have done everything we possibly could to stop, to slow down, to change the law. Fortunately, again with Bill 6, they did change some of it, and that is as a result of the Wildrose Official Opposition being so strong.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud, very proud to stand here today in relation to some people. I'm proud of the thousands of Albertans who came to this Legislature, who went to the town halls right across Alberta and spoke. The Wildrose listened. We listened. We came back here, and we made it clear to the government that the people of Alberta, the farmers and ranchers of Alberta, were unhappy. I'm so proud of them.

Just with days' notice they came to this place, thousands of people, not once, not twice; three times, four times. Do you know why the government is shutting down the bill, in my opinion? They're shutting it down because they knew that there were further rallies coming to this place today, next Tuesday. There are more this weekend right around Edmonton. There are thousands of people. Even after this bill is passed by this government, forced through this legislative process, forced through every single process with only one hour to speak, Mr. Speaker, they will continue to have their voice heard through the Wildrose caucus. We are very proud of them. I want to thank them personally for that. It meant a lot to the Wildrose caucus to have the support of Albertans, to have the support of tens of thousands of Albertans.

What am I not proud of? I'm certainly not proud of democracy in this place. I'm not proud of the members opposite, who, although they toed the line for the Government House Leader and toed the line for the Premier, did not toe the line for the people that they work for, the voters and electorate of Alberta.

I'm almost finished, Mr. Speaker. The people that I'm particularly not proud of are those people that did not vote as they were supposed to for the people that elected them. I speak particularly of the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, with 2,000 farms – how is he going to face those people? – or the Minister of Energy, the Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, with 1,500 family farms in her riding. How is she going to go back there and say, "I didn't vote for you. I voted how the Premier told me"? Or the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, who is ignoring and insulting the 1,400 family farms in her riding, and the Member for Leduc-Beaumont, who has 1,200 family farms – 1,200 family farms – and that actually represents over 4,000 people that they're not representing. The ag minister, the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, who has 1,200 farms. The Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, who was yelled at by the 1,100 farms and ranches in the riding. He was, and he knows that. He knows it clearly as all the backbench there knows that have the 11,000 Alberta farms in their ridings.

They know, Mr. Speaker, because we saw it, and they're concerned. That's why they're shutting down debate. That's why they're forcing closure in the strongest way that I've ever seen it done.

Then, of course, there's the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park and her 600 farms. The Member for West Yellowhead: 700 farms. The Member for Peace River: 400 farms. The Member for Stony Plain and the Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert, which I believe have a rally this weekend to oppose Bill 6: 400 farms. Only 400 farms and a rally against this bill, 400 family farms, 400 very important Albertans that don't have a voice in this place because the government has shut its ears, will not listen, is ideologically driven to control the farms that have worked so well and have the lowest statistics as far as unsafe workplaces in the country. Of course, we can't forget the Member for Banff-Cochrane and the 200 ranchers and the Minister of Municipal Affairs, the Member for Lesser Slave Lake: 200 farms. All of them have heard clearly from their constituents. Every one of them has, and what do they do? They do what they're told by the Premier. They do what they're told by the Premier. They ignore their constituents. I'm not proud of those members. I am not proud of democracy in this place today. I am not proud to have an NDP government in Alberta.

Bill 6 is a mess, and I am very proud of our Wildrose MLAs who have participated in the debate on Bill 6 and, Mr. Speaker, some of the longest hours ever in this place over the last few weeks. I'm very proud of the 22 MLAs that represent the Wildrose members across this province. They have debated this bill late into the night and started again the next morning with just a few hours of sleep if any. This place has had more than 12-hour-plus days on this bill. That's more than any bill in recent memory from my perspective. I've only been a legislator for 11 years, but I can assure you that I've never seen anything like this before. That's how anxious the NDP is to push the bill through, though, to ram it through this place without proper debate, without proper consultation, without listening to the people of Alberta, and they should be ashamed of themselves.

Despite our best efforts and the anger of farmers and ranchers throughout Alberta, Bill 6 will be rammed through this morning. They are not listening. When that happens, the anger will be very real. People in Alberta will remember, especially farmers and ranchers, but it's not too late. I have optimism. I am here to help, just like the Wildrose is here to help, and that's why today we're giving them an opportunity, so I would ask them to listen very carefully. The members opposite who represent rural ridings, who have those 11,000 farmers and ranchers and their families in those ridings, can still do the right thing. They can. I'm sure that they're listening, so I am sure that they'll be persuaded.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I am hoping that they will do the right thing. I'm hoping that they will support farmers and ranchers in Alberta and the future of family farms in Alberta.

I will move a motion for third reading of Bill 6, the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, that it be amended, Mr. Speaker, by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence." Do the right thing. I have appropriate copies here in proper form. This is the chance. This is the last chance for them.

Now, to the members opposite, what I would say is: do the right thing. Stand up for your constituents. Join the Wildrose and stand up for Albertans, for Alberta farms and ranches. Vote for this hoist amendment, and go back to the drawing board with Bill 6. Take six months and listen to farmers and ranchers. Listen to the people that know better than we do. Listen to the experts. Listen to them because they have more invested than all of us put together. It is their way of life, their culture, their future. It is something that we should not attack. Vote for this hoist amendment, and go back to the drawing board on Bill 6. Your political careers do depend on it. They do. But, even more importantly, just do it because it is the right thing to do to restore democracy to this place and bring democracy to Alberta for all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to thank the Leader of the Official Opposition for his speech. I think there are a number of things about that speech that bear some examination. The Opposition House Leader – the opposition leader. I apologize. I've got to keep everybody straight here. Yeah. The Leader of the Official Opposition has complained on the one hand that there's not enough time to debate the bill, that the government is running roughshod over the opposition and limiting debate, then in his next breath he talks about the longest hours that have ever been spent on a bill. He says that we've had 12-hour days, that we've had more discussion than any bill in recent history. You know, you can't have it both ways. This government has provided hours and hours and hours of debate, but it's clear what the opposition is doing.

The Leader of the Opposition talks about the good safety record of Alberta farms, and that is a good thing. But what he's saying and what he's suggesting by that is that we don't need to do anything, Mr. Speaker, and that's the real agenda of the Wildrose here. The real agenda of the Wildrose is to prevent this legislation from ever being passed. They claim they're in favour of farm safety, but what they really are saying is that farms are safe enough now and we don't have to do anything, and that's what the leader of the ... [some applause] and some of the members opposite are applauding that remark because that's what they actually believe and that's what they're actually trying to accomplish here. That is so disrespectful to the families of people who have lost ... [interjections]

The Speaker: Please don't yell, whoever that was. Please proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and forgive those interruptions. I want to say very, very clearly that the problem here is that people have been dying on farms. People are injured on farms. It may be less than some other places, but that doesn't matter. Those lives are worth while. Those lives are valuable. Those families who've lost loved ones or whose breadwinners can no longer earn a living: they deserve support. They deserve to have their food on the table. They deserve to have a place to live and put clothes on their children. The Wildrose is saying: "Well, that's not necessary. Everything is fine." I think it's clear from the Leader of the Official Opposition, from the leader of the Wildrose Party, what the real agenda is here, and that is to keep the status quo. They talk all about how we're all in favour of safety, but we just heard the Leader of the Official Opposition basically say that nothing is wrong and we don't need this legislation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I can return to the whole question of how this debate has proceeded. As the Leader of the Official Opposition, the Wildrose leader, has said, we've spent some of the longest hours in this place, more than any bill in recent history, debating this bill. There's been ample – there's been ample – opportunity. The Wildrose, instead of using time to put forward amendments and constructive changes, used most of the time in here trying to delay second reading of the bill. We've spent probably well over 20 hours of debate just on second reading alone. It's the stalling tactics of the Wildrose, getting up and talking to, making these motions, and I know the tactics very well. I know exactly what they're doing and what they're going to do next. This hoist is no surprise because this is the last attempt that they have to try and delay and hold back the bill, at the same time arguing out of the other side of their mouth that they haven't had enough time to debate the bill.

Well, the fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that they've had plenty of time. We've all had plenty of time to debate this bill. We know what the issues are. We know what we have to do, and the government is going to do it. I want to make absolutely crystal clear to all members of this House that this hoist is nothing but a delaying tactic. It's an attempt to derail the bill. The Wildrose doesn't really want to do what they say they want to do. What they want to do is leave things exactly as they are.

I urge all members of this House to oppose this amendment. This is simply a tactic of the opposition to try and derail the discussion and to consume the time of the House. I think that it's shameful, Mr. Speaker, and I think that we need to get on with this debate.

9:30

The Speaker: The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak today with regard to Bill 6 and the potential dangers that are in the legislation as it has been presented. My wife and I own a farm. We enjoy that lifestyle. My wife and I chose the farm lifestyle as the best place to raise our family. I along with my wife and my children work on our farm, but I am not a farm employee, my wife is not a farm employee, and our children are not farm employees. Our farm is a chosen lifestyle, and it is an integral part of our family culture. When my children are able to help with the seeding or harvest, they are not working; they are actively involved with our family lifestyle. This is a family activity. It is not a work site. They have a connection with the land that, I'm sorry to say, most urban people do not comprehend.

We are not doing anything that would cause harm to others, yet this government would believe it is necessary to invade my family space and impose their will on our family lifestyle, our family culture. This government expects my family to trust them, telling us that they promise to develop common-sense solutions, allowing these customary parts of farm life to go on as before. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot leave that to a government that has violated our trust. There is way too much at stake here to just simply trust them.

Bill 6 as it currently stands is dangerous. There will be unintended consequences. Bill 6 as it stands is going to change a way of life: my way of life, my family's way of life, my community's way of life, the way of life of thousands of farmers and ranchers across this province.

I'm a farmer, Mr. Speaker. I grow food so that people all over can eat. It is a unique calling – raising livestock, seeding and harvesting – and it can be challenging, believe me. But I do not worry about those situations where I will be found in a bad situation and not be able to complete my work. I, unfortunately, broke my pelvis in 1994 in a boating accident. I was laid up in hospital for a few weeks that summer, and my community and neighbours and friends were there for my family. For the better part of six weeks they volunteered their time and resources to help my family through a difficult time. Never did I nor do I worry about what would happen. The farming community sticks together, protecting farmers in difficult circumstances in a much better way than anything we could imagine in this place. The farmers that came to help were not workers. They were farmers, and farmers come to help and volunteer their time when their neighbours need them.

Nobody cares more about the protection of farms and farm workers than the people living and breathing the lifestyle every single day. Nobody wants to see farming protected in this province more than our farmers, and they prove it all the time with their unbreakable spirit of giving to and helping one another. Farmers are constantly on the move, making things happen. In our communities they rely on friends, relatives, neighbours, their spouses, their children, and sometimes employees to help make it work. If Bill 6 is passed, I do worry that it may limit the ability of my neighbours and friends being able to help.

Will Bill 6 allow these customary parts of farm life to go on as before, as the minister has stated? I worry that it will not. Bill 6 as it currently stands opens up the family farm to the full weight and exposure of the Employment Standards Code, the Labour Relations Code, the Occupational Health and Safety Act, and the workers' compensation regulation; that is, until the regulations are developed over the next year or so, says the government. That is some dangerous stuff, Mr. Speaker. Bill 6 could have and should have been broken up to deal with each of these pieces of legislation separately.

I do believe mandatory insurance is the right move, the right way to go. As well, Mr. Speaker, farmers and ranchers need the flexibility of choice in insurer as long as coverage is equivalent to or better than the coverage provided by WCB. We have competition in automobile insurance, home insurance, event insurance, et cetera. The fact is that we already have choice in agriculture, but Bill 6 takes away the choice.

Mr. Speaker, farm workers have written both to me and to other Wildrose members, and they're worried about the benefits they already enjoy changing and do not want to downgrade to the WCB. In their case the farmer and farmer-worker relationship has meant that insurance products provide coverage all the time, 24/7, not just when on-site. That's a pretty good employer, looking to insure his employee at all times. This shows just how much the farmer values their farm worker.

Mr. Speaker, I have outlined my lifestyle, and I have outlined the detriments of this Bill 6 to my livelihood and that of my family and my community. I implore the members opposite to suffer the wrath of the whip, use the power their voters gave them, look out for their interests, and defeat this legislation.

When Bill 6 was introduced, this was the responsibility of the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour. She owned it. As the matter progressed and things started to go a little awry, we saw what kind of mistake this was. The Premier took ownership of the bill. The buck stops here, she proclaimed. But today all of us, everyone in this Assembly, take collective ownership of the bill.

The record will show who voted in favour and who voted against Bill 6, and each and every one of us will be held responsible and accountable for our actions. There will be unintended consequences. Each and every one of us will be held responsible for our actions, imposing the legislation or fighting against this legislation. Three and a half years from now the people of Alberta will judge. They will judge us all on the decisions we make here today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'll wait for the next speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm grateful to the Member for Strathmore-Brooks as well.

That was an inspiring speech we just heard. I'll only take one issue with the hon. member. I think city people appreciate a little more than you give them credit for what farming is about.

Outside of that, I want to start, Mr. Speaker, by a quick thank you to our PC Party staff and my colleagues. This has been quite a battle on behalf of Albertans, and we couldn't have done it except as a team.

Mr. Speaker, this is now on my list of things to undo in three and a half years. I'm going to talk a little bit about some context here, which is why I'm supporting this hoist amendment. You know what? There are things you do in government that are mistakes, and you need to fix them, and you need to recognize it as soon as possible and do it. I've been thinking of a couple of proud moments that I had when we were in government. There was a budget-saving decision made once upon a time to change the way people were fed in Alberta homes. It turned out the food wasn't very good. I remember sitting in the meeting when we talked about the fact that there are people – and this isn't just about a gutful. This is the only food they get. We made a decision to go back, at more expense, to homemade meals. That was a good decision. That was admitting your mistake and fixing it.

There was a decision along the way to see if it was the right financial decision to close the Michener Centre. I can remember visiting it and knowing that that was the wrong decision, and I remember being proud of the government when they fixed it. This feels like that, Mr. Speaker. This feels like the government ought to see just how bad this is.

Mr. Speaker, the government members have to think about what damage they're doing. You know what? The fact is that we had thousands of farmers and ranchers out there, and they're concerned about their families. They're concerned about their livelihood. They're concerned that people may lose their farms. They're concerned about suicides. They are losing sleep. The government's promise that it's going to be okay isn't good enough. The government has already said that they're going to take 18 to 24 months to do this. Why not let Alberta farmers and ranchers sleep and talk to them before doing what they're contemplating doing today? Don't wait till you've got tragedies on your hands. You don't need to do that. You don't. It's not necessary. [interjections] Again, I hear people chirping right now. You know what? You need to take this seriously because you're talking about real people and the consequences that you're having on their lives. I know I'm being shouted down when I'm talking about caring about Albertans, and that's a shame. That's really a shame.

Here's the problem, Mr. Speaker. Most of the assumptions that the government has made to support this bill are incorrect. They've said that the Workers' Compensation Board and occupational health will somehow prevent bad employers from doing bad things. You know what? They don't. There are bad employers in Alberta and the rest of the world that have WCB and OH and S that do bad things to employees. The government has kind of told Albertans that this will magically make everyone who is bad good. It's not true, folks. You know it's not true, Albertans know it's not true, and farmers and ranchers know it's not true. You're going to have to look pretty damn far and wide to find a farmer or rancher that's mistreating their staff, because that's not how they live. So that assumption is wrong.

The assumption that people can be forced to do unsafe things and that that will stop: you know what? If somebody is being asked to do unsafe things under the current system, they'll still be asked to do unsafe things under occupational health and safety. It happens in other areas of endeavour. The government's assertion that this will magically stop all bad behaviour is absolutely not correct. Everybody knows it. It's time to actually face up to it and admit it and deal with the facts. This is not a magic bullet.

You know what? Thousands of farmers and ranchers have made their opinions known. Don't crush their dreams. This isn't a job for them; this is what they do. This is their life. This is their lifestyle. The government has claimed, Mr. Speaker, that they will – and I love this – create a culture of safety. Incredibly disrespectful to farmers and ranchers, who have had a culture of safety for themselves and their families, their employees, their neighbours, their friends who help out, for hundreds of years. And this government thinks they can roll in, with an almost entirely urban caucus, and tell farmers and ranchers that they know better. Not so. Think, and think again, please. It's just disrespectful, and it's incredibly arrogant to actually take that attitude, and we've heard it repeatedly. You know, farmers and ranchers have enough problems feeding us. They bet on the weather. They work with world prices that they can't control. They don't need their government, that should be there protecting them, making it worse.

Mr. Speaker, now I'm going to spend a few minutes talking about democracy. You know, we came here to represent the people that voted for us. All of us did, on all sides of the House. This is probably the most reprehensible example of the exact opposite happening here. You know what? Thousands of people came out. They want safety. They have safety. I can tell you what: they actually want to sit down with the government and negotiate. They know that there are no more rules, and they've offered and said that they'll sit down with the government and negotiate good rules. They've said it. You've heard them. You've ignored them, but you've heard them, and it's sad.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Alberta are watching this, and they are not impressed – I can tell you that right now – because Albertans are being ignored by the government. Education minister, I know that you don't like to listen to them. I know you're angry this morning, and you should be. Every Albertan, I'm sure, is on your tail, like they should be on everybody in your government. They're angry. I don't blame you for having your feelings hurt, but maybe you could do the right thing at the last opportunity and stop this craziness. Or you could keep chirping across the aisle because you don't want to listen to Albertans. This is serious.

Mr. Speaker, the fact remains that Albertans have made their message clear. This won't make farms any safer at all. It probably won't save a single life. Alberta's farms and ranches are amongst the safest in Canada. If you think you're going to save a life or an injury with this, you're fooling yourself. Here's what you are doing. You are causing farmers and ranchers to lose sleep. You're causing them to fear losing their farms and their ranches.

You know what else I find a little bit offensive, Mr. Speaker? The government has trotted out a couple of tragedies to make their point. I will give them credit; they're real tragedies. I feel terrible about them. Everybody should feel terrible about them. They are examples where people who have been killed or injured on farms have not gotten the support they need. It's really caused a tragedy for them and their families. They're real tragedies, and I feel bad about them, too.

But the reason that it's reprehensible is because they're telling Albertans that when they pass this legislation, that will never happen, and nothing could be farther from the truth. That happens where WCB and OH and S exist. I know it does. I spent several months as the Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour minister, and I can tell you about people with very similar stories, equally tragic, none of them funny – none of them should be taken lightly – that happened while working for places with WCB and OH and S coverage.

Again, the main arguments that the government has used to support this bill, Mr. Speaker, just do not hold water. Albertans know that. City Albertans know that. Farm and ranch Albertans know that. The government knows that, but they have some other agenda. It's obvious. It's obvious. Every argument that they've tried to make is based on bunk. I think that's a technical term, but I think it's parliamentary, so I'm choosing it instead of some of the other less parliamentary choices that I could make. Farmers and ranchers have made their feelings known. Farmers and ranchers want safety. Farmers and ranchers have offered themselves up, even while they're under attack by this government, to sit down with them and in a reasonable way negotiate new rules.

The government has already said – well, actually, like everything else, they've said a whole bunch of different things. But the official word is 18 to 24 months although one of the government members stood up in the House last night and said 12 to 18 months. We'll mostly take their word for it; we'll imagine that that person misspoke. The fact is, folks, that the government could actually stay on their schedule of 18 to 24 months. Sit down and talk to people, and wouldn't it be nice if you could shove it down our throats in six months, if you did that and have us support the bill after you talk to farmers and ranchers? Wouldn't that be a joy? Maybe you won't have farmers and ranchers losing sleep. Maybe you won't potentially have them committing suicide, and maybe you won't be giving them the false hope that you're going to prevent every injury and death that happens in the future.

It's time to honour the wishes of the people that elected us to be here. The vast majority of Albertans do not want this bill to go forward. The message is clear. The only ones that don't seem to be getting the message I'm looking across the aisle at. It's maybe time to do the right thing, and that's my request.

The Speaker: Are there any questions for the hon. member under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Peace River.

9:50

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I've been here in this House as we've debated Bill 6 for every single one of the more than 25 hours, and I'm glad to finally have a chance to speak. You know, I'm tired.

The Speaker: Hon. member, are you under 29(2)(a)?

Ms Jabbour: Oh, I apologize. No.

The Speaker: Anyone under 29(2)(a)?

Proceed, hon. member.

Ms Jabbour: I will continue. Sorry. I thought it was my time.

Anyway, as I said, I am tired. I am tired of the rhetoric, the fear-mongering, the half-truths that we're hearing from the opposition, and I'm tired of the false accusations that I cannot possibly represent the farmers in my constituency unless I agree with your point of view. I am tired of the accusation that I can't possibly understand farmers.

You know something? I spent most of my growing up years on our family farm out by Hairy Hill. I rode a stoneboat with my grandfather and my uncle every year. I went into the chicken coop with my grandmother. I helped collect eggs. I even followed it through and plucked chickens and did all that fun stuff, canning with my grandmother and my mom. I helped my grandmother feed the threshing crew every year. I helped feed the pigs, the cows. I helped my grandmother churn butter because that's how we did it back then, right from scratch. I did all these things. When we were forced to sell our family farm, I mourned because I wanted my children to have the same experience as me. I value the family farm, and I understand and appreciate the culture. I would never support anything that would destroy that.

You know what? My grandfather was big on safety. I think he coined the phrase: "Don't do that. You'll put out an eye." Honestly. But as kids we still did dangerous things. I remember that we sat in the granary, and wheat would pour in, and as kids we'd just push it around, play in it. I am sick now thinking that we did that. Children die doing that. Somehow we survived, thank God. But things have changed on the farm. We got away with some of those things because back then we didn't have the high-tech equipment. Farms are very, very different now, and the safety culture has to change along with that because farms have become more modern. They use mechanical equipment that didn't even exist back then. They've become far more dangerous places.

This reminds me a lot about the debate on seat belts. You know, the hon. Member for St. Albert last night spoke about going back through Hansards. I had the opportunity to read Hansards from many years ago. The debate on seat belts was huge. There was so much opposition. I myself remember that I was against it because when I learned to drive, we didn't have seat belts. I would sit in the car, I'd put my little child right behind my arm, and that's how I'd drive, keeping her safe. I would hit the brakes, and I'd go like this. That was what I understood safety to be because we didn't have seat belts. When they came in, people argued: "Oh, this is terrible. This is going to destroy our ability to drive and our freedom and our rights.” But you know what? Seat belts came in, and it was the right thing to do.

Bill 6 is enhancing a culture of safety on farms, and this is not an insult to farmers. We know farmers put a priority on safety. This legislation will support and enhance that. While it only applies to paid farm workers, all are going to benefit from improved awareness and attention to safety and elevated safety standards. My constituents believe in farm safety, and they’re supportive of paid farm workers having the same workplace protections as farm workers across Canada, the same workplace protections that every other worker enjoys.

You know, I’ve been really upset on behalf of my constituents, initially because there was confusion and misinformation, and our government has accepted responsibility for that. That upset me, but once the misunderstandings were cleared up and they understood what the intent of the bill was, the attitudes changed. They understood that the family farm was not going to be negatively impacted, and my constituents are supportive because they believe in farm safety.

What was more upsetting to me was the way the Official Opposition stirred farmers up with misinformation and half-truths. You are the ones who created angst and tears among our family farm members because you led them to believe something very different from the truth.

I want my constituents to know that I have spoken up on their behalf, and I will continue to do so. I raised their concerns with caucus and with the minister, and as everybody can attest, I have been very vocal. Consultation is ongoing. We have been very clear about that. It has been happening for many years. Consultation has been happening, and it will continue to happen. I promise my constituents that I will continue to work on their behalf. I will bring their concerns forward, and I will hold my government to account, making sure that we keep our promises regarding this bill. My constituents will be consulted, and my constituents will have input on the regulations as we go forward.

I support Bill 6 because it will finally give basic workers’ rights to farm workers, and it will improve safety on both large industrial farms and, in fact, all farms. I know my constituents also support those concepts of safety. I promise my constituents that I will advocate for them, and I will never support anything that threatens the culture and way of life of the family farm. Bill 6 will not destroy the family farm. Family farms continued to thrive across Canada when safety legislation was brought in, and they will continue to thrive in Alberta under this legislation.

So when I vote for Bill 6, I will be standing up for my constituents. I will be standing up on behalf of family farms, I will be standing up for the safety of paid farm workers, I will be standing up to protect farm employers, and – God forbid – should an accident occur, they will be protected. I will be standing up for farm workers in my constituency, who deserve the same right to a safe workplace that every other paid worker in Alberta receives.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [some applause]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any questions under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, the Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s an honour to be in this august Chamber, as we’ve heard those words, and it’s indeed a privilege to rise, as I’ve said before, as a lifetime agrarian or farmer and to hear our Chamber’s Deputy Speaker from Peace River exhibit her heartfelt beliefs.

I would like to respond to it in a fashion that was presented to me by my compatriot here from Drayton Valley-Devon. We were talking about the effects and the presentations of Bill 6 in regard to communication and why we would as anglos, speaking primarily English, not understand one another. The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon talked about his life experiences as a teacher, where he was trying to communicate his ideas. It seems we are miscommunicating. Why would that be? How can that be? We are here under a democratic process to try and adversarially communicate our ideas, but we’re miscommunicating them.

I certainly appreciate the emotion of the Member for Peace River. You know, at the risk of some consternation from my caucus mates, I, too, would applaud the Member for Peace River for her heartfelt dissertation. It’s well appreciated.

But we are, Mr. Speaker, in many ways miscommunicating. Why would thousands of Albertans approach this august Chamber in discontent? It wasn’t singularly by the actions of this caucus. The Member for Peace River commented about miscommunication by this government in bringing forward their policy.

This amendment that we are speaking to, Mr. Speaker, talks about that this not be read for a third time but six months hence. Those are not exactly the words, but it talks about pushing the pause or the reset button on this. I do know that there are some 11 to 15 members in the government, including the Member for Peace River, who have direct agricultural background, direct agricultural experience. Why are we miscommunicating here?

Madam Speaker – or Mr. Speaker. I’m sorry. I’m looking at the Deputy Speaker. But I was going to . . .

10:00

The Speaker: Hon. member, I just want to mention, with respect, that when you’re referring to the member, she’s sitting as an MLA, not as the Deputy Speaker. I appreciate that.

Mr. Strankman: I’m fully aware of that: the Member for Peace River, Mr. Speaker. I’m apologizing for that.

The Speaker: Correct. Thank you.

Mr. Strankman: I was going to try and rise on a point of humour and relate to my member’s statement that I gave I believe it was two days ago now. The time is running together here now. I was talking about the principle of co-operation. That is the hallmark of the NDP government. In fact, I tried to bring in a private member’s bill using almost word for word, verbatim, the previous government, and because of miscommunication – and there are members across who will agree and know full well what I’m talking about – the bill got put to committee. How did that happen? Why are we miscommunicating? We’re adults here. We’re representatives in 87 different ways throughout the province. We are the representatives of those people. And we are here miscommunicating? I’m short of words, but I’m going to continue on.

Mr. Speaker, one of the other things that I wanted to rise and talk about was how change occurs. This government has a mandate, an elected mandate, to bring forward some of their policies, and that’s absolutely within their purview. It’s absolutely within the purview of this government. But change does not necessarily occur – and I’ve talked about that before – from within. It does not occur from within this Chamber; it comes from without.

The people that are standing on those steps, many of them – and they will know because the sheriffs in this place know that I specifically went out there to make sure that there was no violence, that there were no undue things. I like to think that I’m on a first-name basis with the sheriffs. I’ve been on a first-name basis with some sheriffs at another time and place, when I had a little rash on my wrists from my disobedience, thinking that civil disobedience was the way to bring about change. It’s not. The legal change occurs in here.

You can do all sorts of radical things outside – and we've seen that – not necessarily illegal but people expressing their opinions, without the province, in rallies and gatherings and e-mails. We've had stacks of letters and petitions coming forward, people expressing their opinion to this august Chamber. So why are we miscommunicating? They're not doing it in a vengeful fashion. We are presenting, in our role to this Chamber, the opinions of the people.

I have great consternation about how this government is operating. Members opposite have said, cabinet ministers have said that we have 200 government agencies, boards, and commissions that are to be reviewed. One of them happens to be in my constituency. It's called the Special Areas Board. The Minister of Municipal Affairs will know that it's a corporation of the government. It's not a Crown corporation, but it's a corporation of the government.

These all need to be reviewed, so we need to learn how to communicate as representatives of those people out there in 87 different ways. We need to learn how to positively bring this together. If we continue to miscommunicate, it's going to rise in raucous discussions. Members both on this side of the House and the opposite side of the House have openly and horribly embarrassed themselves with their emotions. We need to be professional about this. It's something that's unacceptable. We need to bring this forward in a respectful manner. That is all we are trying to do here, Mr. Speaker. We are trying to listen. This side of the House is trying to present the opinions of those who are outside this Chamber and as representatives within this Chamber. That's our role and responsibility.

Just to go back, reset a little bit, the Member for Peace River talked about her life experiences. One of the things that came up through indirect questioning at a Bassano rally was the idea of grandfathering in or bringing things in, and the minister of agriculture wasn't able to definitively answer the question because the regulations haven't been formulated yet. There's no accountability to the formulation of the regulations. The Member for Peace River gave a heartfelt dissertation, and I take the member for the worth that's presented, and I take the emotion to my heart. But when those regulations are created – the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin, the Leader of the Official Opposition, talked about building codes, for example. It's a small example. But what about the barns? What about the buildings? What about the grain augers, whatever it may be, on these farms that may not now be within code? Will those farms, effectively, be devalued because they don't pass this regulation, because they only hire one farm worker a year? We brought forward amendments allowing for up to five.

I spoke one time using the example of Saskatchewan. It's not meant to be negative to the farm workers. It's with the greatest respect to the farm workers because, statistically, to the understanding of this side of the Chamber, Alberta does not have a horribly – it's within statistics. Alberta is within the same statistics as other jurisdictions that are equal for safety regulations.

So there are unintended consequences to this type of legislation. We're not trying to be vehement to the government. We simply want to present our ideas, and we present these ideas in this Chamber, Mr. Speaker, with great risk when we talk about trying to bring forward these amendments that may have unintended consequences. That's why 19 different farm organizations, stakeholders, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, and others have come forward saying that they would like to have further input. That input was being progressed with by the third party in this Chamber, but when this government came into effect, there was some sort of a tectonic shift of the plates and then this miscommunication that happened, and the government is going ahead with their farm worker legislation, singularly. It's well respected, well understood that it's completely within their mandate.

But why are we having all these people standing outside? Are they all in some situation where they cannot understand? I find that extremely hard to believe. So I implore the government to take a listen, to take a look, and I implore, particularly, the 11 to 15 members, not unlike the Member for Peace River, who have farmers who may have their farmsteads, through unintended consequences, Mr. Speaker, devalued, for example, because of the potential implication of this legislation that's coming forward. It's something to cause pause for thought.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions of the Member for Drumheller-Stettler under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate on Bill 6.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

10:10 Government Motions

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Time Allocation on Bill 6

28. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in third reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do not need to take more time of the Assembly to discuss this matter. All of the issues related to this were canvassed when a similar motion was made at second reading, so I have nothing further to add.

The Speaker: The House leader for the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's with great frustration, sorrow, disappointment, disgust – the list goes on and on and on – that I rise today to speak absolutely, unequivocally, one hundred per cent against this motion of closure. Only a few short months ago this government was elected on a message of a new way of doing things, on change, on openness, on transparency, on a new Alberta, a better Alberta, but less than eight months later we are exactly back where we were prior to this election.

Mr. Speaker, it baffles me how it's possible. We heard the Government House Leader earlier today talk about how the opposition wants to talk out of both sides of their mouth: "Oh, we've had lots of hours of debate. We haven't; we have. We've had lots of people that could speak to all stages of the bill." This morning we have had three – three – speakers to third reading of a bill that will drastically change much about the way that farmers and ranchers operate clear across this province, all at a time when the Government House Leader says: we've had lots of time for debate. Three speakers. There are 22 members of this Wildrose caucus, and the vast majority of them represent farmers and ranchers, and I can tell you that what they would love to do today is rise out of their seat and speak to the needs and to the concerns of every one of their constituents.

But what do we have, Mr. Speaker? A government that's running roughshod over the thousands and thousands of farmers and ranchers across Alberta. Over 30,000 ranchers and farmers and urbanites and folks right clear across this province asked this government to stop, to slow down, to consult. We presented that petition yesterday in this House. And what did we have last night at midnight? Invoking closure while the opposition was proposing solutions and ideas. Now this morning, after a mere hour of debate in third reading, we have this government invoking closure on a bill that they are trying to run and hide from.

It's not just me, Mr. Speaker – it's not just me – that is disappointed in this government. It's not just the 30,000 people that signed the petition. It's not the overwhelming majority of farmers and ranchers. It includes people that also have a voice in this province in the form of the media. I'd like to just take a very brief moment to speak about that from an article in the Edmonton Journal dated December 9.

Officially it's called "time allocation" – a banal sounding expression like the title of a book written by an efficiency expert. More commonly it's called "closure" – which sounds vaguely like something has been resolved amicably. Both are euphemisms. It should be called the "legislative lynching" or maybe the "governmental guillotine" – a tool used by government to strangle, or cut off completely, debate in the Alberta legislature.

Alberta's NDP government used it this week to choke debate over Bill 6, the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act.

Those aren't my words, sir, although they are just as strong as I would love to use here in this place.

The Government House Leader has risen in his place in the past to speak about this. It's very disappointing.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 28 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:16 a.m.]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act (continued)

[Adjourned debate December 10: Mr. Schmidt]

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I yield the rest of my time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must confess that as this bill has progressed through the House, I struggled with what I would say in third reading. I spoke on second reading, I spoke on the referral motion, and I spoke in the debates on a couple of the amendments. I thought to myself: what could I possibly add in third reading that hasn't already been said? What perspective could I possibly offer that hasn't been introduced? I struggled with that. As a lot of us are, we're running on a little bit less sleep than we might be otherwise accustomed to.

What I returned to were some comments made by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead yesterday, and I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that that's why we have the debates in this House: perspectives. There are jewels and nuggets in what people say on both sides of the House that can trigger thought, that can trigger us to become better legislators. The Member for West Yellowhead was very passionate in stating that this is about fundamental human rights, that this bill is about ensuring the absolute fundamental human right of a worker to refuse work, and it's about protecting vulnerable paid farm workers. When he said the term "human rights," I thought of our colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway because he was recognized as the most passionate defender of human rights in our caucus. I thought to myself: what would Meeta say?

Of course, since we aren't able to ask him, we go back to past notes, and I brought out the notes from his speech on third reading, pages 269 and 270 of Hansard. Mr. Speaker, I'm going to copy the speech and keep it in my desk because it reminds us of what the strongest advocate for human rights would say. What he said on that night is:

There are proud, proud people in Alberta with strong conservative values and an entrepreneurial spirit that will ensure that [the] wrongs are corrected. They will ensure that these wrongs are corrected.

He went on – and he was redressing the government – to say:

You best be prepared to make sure people have income and that strong, dignified people that are used to working for themselves, to making a go of their own entrepreneurial pursuits, are not left to rely on the charity of others.

Mr. Speaker, I had the best seat in the House when the Member for Calgary-Greenway gave that speech. I was sitting here. He went on to quote a Punjabi expression about the strength of my own chest. I have tremendous, tremendous faith in the farmers and ranchers of Alberta because I know the strength of their chests. I know that they're a strong, resilient people, and I know that they will come through this.

I also know those people, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the right to refuse dangerous work. They find this suggestion baffling because whenever I ask them about the right to refuse dangerous work, they tell me two things: "If I know the situation is dangerous, I would never put an employee of mine in that position. That's my job." I know that if you're in a leadership position, if you are in an employer position, that is typical of what happens, not just on the farm. I know that if we had a nasty dog or a cranky cat or a cow that wanted to kill you, I would never say to an associate: you want to go look after that cow? Never. I would take on that risk, that responsibility myself. You don't delegate stuff like that. When we say that workers should have the right to refuse dangerous work, most farmers I talked to looked at me and said: well, no, they don't have to refuse it because I don't ask them to do it.

The second area, protecting vulnerable paid farm workers. Well, the truth of that, Mr. Speaker, is that in many, many cases across the province that is already being done. That is being done by the forward-thinking, concerned employers that employ farm workers in this province. They look after their employees. They look after them because they have to. The labour market is very competitive, and they know that labour is mobile, that these labourers can work anywhere they want.

The real tragedy, in my view, of Bill 6 is that just about everybody I've talked to agrees on those principles. They agree that farm workers should be able to refuse unsafe work. We get that. We agree with the government on that. We get that farm workers should have basic rights to be protected in the event of injury or in the event of a fatality. We get that. Farmers get that. We agree with you. If we could somehow, through skilful crafting of legislation, confine what we're talking about to those issues, this issue would have been looked after, and we could have all said: we have done good work for Albertans. We would be satisfied with that, and I would suggest that we would all be very pleased with that.

The problem with this legislation is that it goes on to do many, many, many other things, and that is the issue here. It's those other things that this legislation does, that have been put out there to the farmers and then retracted. Then they said that it's a misunderstanding, and then they said: no, it's not a misunderstanding. All of the confusion that was created initially by the government: has some of it been added to for political purposes? That's right, too. The Member for Peace River was right. That has happened as well. You know, quite frankly, it does us all as legislators a disservice when we do that, all of us. It does a disservice when we say more than what is there, when we distort what is really there, and when we talk about the intent differently.

You know, I have tried as best I can, whenever I've addressed this issue and this bill, to stay away from the partisan side of things. This is not an issue about parties. This is not an issue, as some have suggested, that will unite the right. This is an issue that should be uniting what's right, not the right, and that is why there is support for this measure not just in the Official Opposition, not just in our caucus but also from the Alberta Party and from Albertans across this province regardless of political stripe. The legislation, simply put, goes too far. Even though the government has done everything in its power to correct some of the misconceptions, to correct some of the things that are now no longer a part of it, to move the amendment that did provide some clarification – and that is why I voted for that amendment – the problem was that there needed to be much more of that, and the problem was that this government needed to recognize that it had responsibility for the misunderstanding it created. Because of that, you have broken the trust of the farmers and ranchers in this province. When you make that error – and you've acknowledged that error – when that error is made, you must pause the legislation and give time to at least try to make it right.

The speed at which this is going through, for the, admittedly, noble cause of protecting vulnerable farm and ranch workers that do not have protection – and it is a noble cause. It's a cause I agree with. But in attempting to do that, you have gone too far. You have stretched too far, and you have extended the consequences of this legislation far beyond what you even intended. When that error was pointed out to you, you said: oh, no, no, no; that wasn't our intention. I get that, but that is still what is believed in rural Alberta. So it is your duty as the government, because we cannot convince you to do that, to recognize that you're in error.

It is your duty to recognize that you have to push the pause button. We gave, I think, eight different opportunities to improve this legislation, to change this legislation, to show the people of Alberta that, yes, you are listening and that you are consulting with them as you have promised you would, and you voted them all down. You voted down every single amendment that would have improved this legislation. I ask you: given that you've done that, why should anyone in Alberta believe you that you're going to listen going forward? Why should anyone in Alberta have any confidence that the consultation going forward, the consultation that will happen after the legislation is passed because you would not delay either the legislation or the coming-into-force date – why should they believe you now? Your actions last night spoke louder than words. You rejected every amendment that would have improved, that would have been amendments that, yes, were proposed by members on this side of the House, but they weren't our amendments; they were amendments that came from the people.

Mr. Speaker, it's our job as legislators at times to put aside the political, and that's what I've tried to do this morning. I've tried to think about my friend. I've tried to think about: what would Meeta say? I'm going to actually, quite frankly, use him as something that is going to inspire me. I know that he did, and he will continue to do so.

I'm speaking on behalf of the people that have contacted me, the 80-year-old grandfather who has 30 cows left, some of whom in cow years are just as old as he is in human years. He goes out every morning to feed them and every night to feed them, and if it wasn't for those cows, he'd have no reason to live. He's told me that. He's said: if I don't feed those cows – they get me out of bed in the morning; they give me a reason to live. But if we force a bunch of legislation on him – and you're saying: oh, no, no; we're not doing that. Well, that's not what your original legislation and not what the original documentation said. If grandpa read that documentation, he still believes it because he wants to trust his government. In order to undo that wrong, you need time, and you're not giving yourself time.

The husband and wife who work two jobs, one in Lloydminster and one in Mannville, and are driving back and forth between a job that they hold in Mannville and the farm that they have in Mannville, are now worried how this is going to affect them because they hire and pay not a neighbour but a friend, who works on the farm because they can't always be there. They're worried about how a carbon tax is going to affect the fact that they have to drive 82 kilometres both ways virtually every single day to look after their farm.

The gentleman that contacted me, that sent me a picture of four generations of his family, along with a neighbour had gotten on their horses to bring the cows home in the fall. He says: according to my reading of the information from this government, we won't be able to do this anymore. They're worried about their lifestyle, and you have to understand that they're proud of that lifestyle. I think you do. I think you understand that. I'm not going to say that, oh, because you're from the city, you have no comprehension. I don't think that's right. I think you understand that. I think that in your heart of hearts you understand that.

But these are the people that I feel for, you know, the groups of friends and neighbours. The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock talked about it. These stories happen every year in Alberta where someone is hurt, someone can't finish doing the harvest, and the neighbours all come and do it for him. That happens all the time. And you know what? That happens not just in rural Alberta; it happens in urban Alberta. It's because that's who we are. That's being Albertan. Quite frankly, when we politicize these issues rather than working together as legislators to try to improve legislation, basically, it demeans us and it makes us less in discharging our responsibility for doing what we are supposed to do.

Mr. Speaker, I will be voting against this piece of legislation. I will vote against this legislation because I believe this legislation is wrong for Albertans. I believe that although well intentioned and although the things that are trying to be accomplished in terms of the insurance are basic human rights that nobody disagrees with, if it had been confined to that, then we could have all agreed, and we would have righted something that should have been corrected a long time ago. I get that. But, unfortunately, the approach that the government has taken has been far too broad stroked, far too broad handed, far too ham handed. As I said last night, you have not adopted a surgical approach to this, and because you've failed to do that, because you've put out misinformation, that it was then – I will say it – multiplied and increased, but the initial source of that information was the government.

Mr. Speaker, I will vote against Bill 6 in third reading as I have throughout, and I will say to my constituents back home that I was proud to do it.

My final comment on this issue is that last Saturday in Vermilion we had a town hall, and one of my constituents, somebody that probably, you know, wants to remain anonymous, spoke against this. He just begged me to vote against this bill. That I am proud to do today, and I would urge everyone on both sides of the House to vote against this bill.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under 29(2)(a) are there any questions of the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster?

Mr. Strankman: One quick question to the member. Can he imbue the House a little more with comments where he talked about the rural fabric, like the 80-year-old constituent that he has, please?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question, but I think in the interest of letting other members talk and given that our time is limited, I'm just going to say that I'm proud of that fabric. I'm so grateful that, since I grew up in the city, I've had a chance to live in that fabric. I'll tell you right now that while I live in Edmonton four days a week and this is where I grew up, Edmonton isn't my home anymore. My home is in the country.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Anyone under 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, finally I get to rise and speak about Bill 6 in third reading. I've been quietly sitting back here and contemplating and listening to most of you people talk about Bill 6, and I'm proud to be part of my Wildrose caucus opposing Bill 6.

I want to talk about "fearmongering," the word that came out this morning. I'm quite curious about that because in my constituency, in the little town of Okotoks, this government had an information session and only booked 100 seats in the auditorium. Well, a thousand farmers showed up with short notice: combines, tractors, and opposed to Bill 6. They were opposed to Bill 6 based on logic and reason, not rhetoric and ideology. So I take offence to this "fearmongering" because we didn't call that meeting, they did, but we responded effectively. Legislation without consultation is not democracy.

Now, I grew up on a farm, and I've seen a few more sunrises than most of the folks in this House. I grew up on a farm, and in the '50s we'd just gotten electricity. We didn't have indoor plumbing. We didn't have running water. You talk about fearmongering. When your outdoor toilet is 300 yards from the house in the middle of winter, that's fearmongering.

I'll tell you that I'm very proud of the Albertans that have shown up at the Legislature, in halls, in church basements, opposed to Bill 6. They're not afraid of Bill 6. They just ask to be heard, and they haven't gotten the answers they deserve. My constituents are extremely frustrated, saying: when we asked direct questions of the ministers who showed up, they did not provide us with answers. This government even admitted that they misled folks, saying: oh, we blame it on the bureaucrats; it's the bureaucrats' fault. Well, it's easy to pass the buck that way. It's just not fair. Ideology, rhetoric without logic or reason is not the way to legislate. It's not fair to Albertans, it's not fair to my farmers, friends, and it's not fair to my constituents.

I for one am extremely disappointed with that side of the House. Tens of thousands of people have stood at the steps of this Legislature, in halls, in constituencies, in communities saying: "We are opposed. Slow this process down. We deserve to be heard." Well, you never listened to them. You haven't listened to them. And 24 hours of debate is significantly not enough. We need more time. We need more effort. We need more consultation with the citizens in my constituency. Albertans deserve better.

Mr. Speaker, I'm extremely disappointed sitting back here as one of the more elderly statesmen, if you will, listening to these young people who sit around with their $8 lattes talking about dirty oil, climate change issues, royalty reviews, carbon tax. Let's talk about the true fabric of our province, the farmers. This is a complete dismantling of a way of life.

Let me put it in perspective. This is not about farm safety. One of my constituents pointed out to me that more people in Canada are injured or die from bicycle accidents. Wow. So what are we going to do, legislate bicycles now? Come on. This is not about farm safety. This is rhetoric. This is ideology.

I am opposed to Bill 6. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions for the hon. member under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 6, the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act. I would consider this a depressing day or a disappointing day in this House, but I will continue. Everyone knows the word "enhanced." You've heard the word. It's a buzzword of people that would advertise. It's something that draws you to something, that makes you feel like you want to get involved and purchase something or get involved in that. I would buy something that was enhanced, and I expect you would, too.

But, Mr. Speaker, when I read through the sweeping, broad, undefined changes contained in this bill, it's clear to see that it's not enhancing much. If anything, the way that it has been so hastily thrown together with no input, sir, from farmers – no input from farmers; there's none given – it is a detriment to the lives of the men, women, and children who live on a family farm and ranch. At first reading of this bill the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour introduced Bill 6 as an omnibus bill. Then on November 27 the minister released a statement in an attempt to do some damage control, saying that “the legislation provides two simple things.” Number one, a paid farm worker can say no “to something dangerous.” Number two, if the paid farm worker is “hurt or killed at work, they or their family can be compensated.”

In Vegreville on Tuesday of this week the Minister of Economic Development and Trade reiterated several times that the government wanted to ensure that farm families were protected. Many participants at the meeting in Vegreville stated that they also wanted to ensure that their employees were protected. That is why they carry private insurance, because they have a choice. What they want, Mr. Speaker – and I think this House has only heard it maybe 300,000 times in the last 24 hours. I understand we've talked about this for 24 hours. Farmers want choice on this. They want the choice to be able to use the insurance that is, at the very least, exactly the same as WCB and, in most cases, more enhanced for less money. They are generally concerned that they are now forced to carry WCB as opposed to what they would feel is superior insurance.

In fact, some of their employees have also expressed concerns they have with WCB. The staff are worried. I received two letters myself while I was standing in Bassano in the Strathmore-Brooks riding. Two employees came up to me and handed me letters that they wanted me to table in the House, which I've done. They're very concerned. They're concerned about how the hours will work out now and how they'll get the work done that they want so that they can take care of their families.

If the Premier's true intent is simply to provide farm and ranch employees protection, she could have accomplished this with a much simpler bill. Instead, Mr. Speaker, she's chosen to introduce omnibus Bill 6, with changes to the Employment Standards Code, the Labour Relations Code, the Occupational Health and Safety Act, and workers' compensation regulations. She has chosen to introduce a bill so wide open to interpretation that no Albertan can really know what the Premier's true intentions are. And what will come next? That's the question: what is next? This is an issue of trust. What were the Premier's true intentions?

By no means is it necessary to implement changes to four pieces of legislation in order to ensure that farm and ranch employees receive proper protection. Many operators already carry private insurance – I've already said it – and they're asking for choice. Others voluntarily use WCB. That's the choice. Something is being taken away with this bill, Mr. Speaker. That's not democracy.

Mr. Speaker, this government is expecting Alberta farmers and ranchers to trust the government as they develop common-sense regulations. Alberta farmers and ranchers have spoken loud and clear. They do not trust this government. They do not trust a government that has little or no experience in agriculture. They do not trust that this government possesses any common sense when it comes to the life on the family farm or in those farming communities, where I'm from, where many of my members are from, and where some of the NDP members come from. They are certainly not prepared to give free rein to a government that has broken their trust on this issue.

The Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour said, “Our legislation allows us the flexibility to develop common-sense regulations.” In other words, Mr. Speaker, the legislation as it stands allows this government the flexibility to do whatever they want after Bill 6 is passed. Nobody in their right mind would agree to that. This government needs to develop the regulations first and prove to the farmers and ranchers that they can trust this government. Trust is earned – trust is earned – not demanded.

Protection for farm employees: fine. But Bill 6 is an attack on the family farm, our way of life, our Alberta family farm culture, and our freedom. In communities across Alberta, culture, as you know, Mr. Speaker, matters. Culture is the window through which the rest of the world sees our province, and it is a beautiful window today. In our farming and ranching communities that culture is a culture of togetherness, of neighbours helping neighbours in times of need, and of an honest day's work. We already heard the member to my left, who had himself been in a hospital for three weeks, and the neighbours came and helped him out and did his job for him. That's what people do. That's what farmers do.

I believe that protection for farm and ranch workers is the right thing to do, but to impose this legislation onto the family farms and ranches is beyond excessive. This government needs to listen to the farmers and ranchers and their employees, that are speaking, and nobody's listening. That's the feeling they get. Good grief, how many letters and e-mails and petitions and who knows what are telling us: we don't trust, we just want to be heard, and we want choice. If Bill 6 truly is about protecting the farm and ranch employees – is it? We won't know that. I guess we're not going to know that for about 18 months.

Mr. Speaker, the minister stated on November 25, in this Assembly:

I think that we can all agree. These folks . . .

those folks being farmers and ranchers,

. . . face enough uncertainty without having to worry about what would happen to their families if they were injured or, worse, killed on the job. When most Albertans go to bed at night, they don't need to worry about that, and that's because most of us are covered by laws that protect our health and safety on the job.

I do not agree with this fearful, misleading, and, I would say, fearmongering characterization of the realities of farm life.

The Minister of Justice stood here last night and talked about an employer – it could be me – telling my employee to stick his arm inside that running machine and take a block of wood out. That's in Hansard, man; I checked the Blues. It's all there. This is the fearmongering I'm talking about.

While safety is the goal of every single farmer I know, they also know what would happen in the event of an accident. Their community would be there in full force to help. We've witnessed it over and over.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 6 as it stands should not be made into law. The family farm is a cornerstone of Alberta's way of life. The blend of personal and business time is inseparable. Bill 6 is a travesty being forced on our rural communities by those with no understanding of the issues – no understanding of the issues – and, as amply demonstrated by their actions, no willingness to listen.

I cannot stand by and watch a way of life and the way of life of so many friends and relatives be impacted so drastically and negatively by a bill so thoughtlessly crafted. For my constituents and the constituents across Alberta that have written me and my fellow MLAs because their NDP MLAs will not return their calls or e-mails, I will not vote for this bill.

10:50

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions for the hon. Member for Little Bow under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, I would recognize the Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's been lots of talk, and last night I did hear – first of all, I'm grateful to be able to speak to this, and I'll try to be brief out of respect for others who wish to speak. Last night it was mentioned by our opposition that he had checked resumé of us and did not find information about farming, and that would be true in my case. My resumé would not say that I married into a family. We spent 28 years as a cow-calf operator. I do understand farming. My adult children are who they are today because of farming. As you can see, this has become emotional for me.

This past week we have received many calls, some in support, some not, but a climate has been created where people are afraid to speak. I myself was somewhat concerned to go home last week. I do know now what it's like to be cyberbullied. I do know what it's like to have threats.

I do want to speak about the concerns of moving forward. I have had offers from farmers in my area about being part of the solution. That's what I want to speak to. We've adopted amendments that clarified our intention to cover wage earners under this legislation. We are not protecting kids on family farms. Sorry. You're not. The legislation covers wage earners who are not farm owners. If there's an accident and a child is injured, there are other mechanisms to investigate. If a child is injured at their home, it does not attract OH and S investigation. Other investigations would occur.

Moving forward, I want you to know that I commit to being part of consultations for these regulations, and I would invite members of all parties to be part of the same solution. We have choices moving forward. We can continue to stir and fearmonger and provide misinformation, or we can all agree to work together to provide the best input we can for these future regulations. We can dwell in the past for political reasons, or we can move forward for Albertans and for our constituents. We need to hold all of us accountable and move forward. We need to stand up for all farms. We will be judged in the future – that's true – but we will be judged by our actions, what we do and what we don't do for Albertans, so I invite all of us to work together moving forward to make sure that we get these regulations right for our constituents and for Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, on all sides of this House we have all felt and seen emotion, and I think that's a statement for all of you of the degree to which you care.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Minister of Energy for her heartfelt comments. I think it is truly a reflection that even on an issue that has been divisive as this, there is much that unites us. We all want what's best for farmers and ranchers. We all want to improve farm safety, and much as we passionately disagree on what has happened in these last weeks, I thank the minister for her comments. I think they were very well received.

I had prepared remarks for right now, but because closure has been invoked, debate has been limited. I'm not going to be able to give them because I want to give my colleagues in this caucus a chance to speak. We're going to have to limit how long our remarks are on third reading on this bill so that we all get a chance to speak or as many of us as possible. Most of this caucus still hasn't had a chance to speak to third reading, so I'm not going to be able to deliver my prepared remarks, which enunciate my concerns about this bill, at this stage. So I'm going to have to wing it a bit, Mr. Speaker, with all the danger that comes with doing so.

As the Minister of Energy has passionately put it, we all want what's best for farmers and ranchers, on all sides of the House. The problem has been how the government has gone about it. The problem has been that the government has legislated first, regulated second, and consulted third. That is not how responsible democracies make laws. That is not how responsible elected representatives reflect the will of their constituents.

My office has been overwhelmed by the e-mails and phone calls from constituents not just in Strathmore-Brooks but in constituencies across Alberta, particularly rural and semirural constituencies held by members on the government side of this House, farmers and ranchers who have been looking for a voice, someone who would articulate what they have to say, looking for their representatives to stand up for them. I have heard members on our side – the Member for Little Bow, the Member for Drumheller-Stettler, neighbours of my constituency – speak up passionately for farmers and ranchers because they are farmers and ranchers. They live and they breathe agriculture. They get it. They understand what we need to be doing here.

Our caucus, the Official Opposition, has put forward consistently constructive amendments and proposals to fix this bill. First, we proposed sending it to a committee, where we can study it. We would not have had half the debate on this bill in this House that we have had if we could have just sent it to a committee for fulsome discussion, to call witnesses and discuss it. We proposed delaying the bill for a few months, after the government rejected a committee, to hit the pause button, let the temperature come down, take a log off the fire, let the temperatures come down both in this House and outside this House, but that was rejected. The Official Opposition and the third party put forward constructive and positive amendments to the bill in the Committee of the Whole. Every single one of those amendments was shot down by the government merely because we are the opposition. That is not the way a responsible Legislature functions. We have tried to make this bill work for Albertans.

Now, eventually we got amendments out of the government. They said that these amendments were just clarifying what they wanted to do all along. Mr. Speaker, I've got to call the government out on that one. The details that were released in the town tells at Grande Prairie and on the government's own websites directly contradict what they're saying. They did intend to impose punitive regulations on the family farm that would cover even farm kids. It would cover volunteers. They blamed it on miscommunication, but it was not. They were just telling Albertans what the bill originally intended to do. It went too far, and it was draconian. It was what we were worried about and warning about. But under pressure from the thousands of farm workers who stood outside of this House on the steps of the Legislature and the Official Opposition, the government eventually backed down.

Now, the bill that is going forward, that is being rammed through this House after debate closure, is still a bad bill. It is bad not just in its contents but because it has still not listened to Albertans. But I think all members on this side of the House can take pride in the fact that we have forced amendments on this bill that significantly water down the punitive regulations that would have badly hurt the family farm. This side of the House, all parties on this side of the House, deserve credit for making this bill less bad than the original intent was.

But the people who deserve the most credit for it, Mr. Speaker, are not the opposition parties. It has been Albertans that fuelled us to do it. We have not whipped Albertans into a frenzy. Albertans have told us how hard they wanted us to fight, and that's why we've been here all night long and all morning, fighting consistently every day – day and night – for Albertans. I would not have fought half as hard, members on this side would not have fought half as hard on this bill if we had not received hundreds of phone calls, hundreds if not thousands of e-mails, 30,000 names on a petition tabled. That is what drove us. That is why we have fought so hard.

While this bill is still being rammed down the throats of Albertans, with an undemocratic time closure being imposed, hypocritically, by members who condemned that kind of action just about six months ago, despite this, we have still managed to take some of the most odious sections of this bill out and get a better piece of legislation for Albertans. All Albertans and all members of the opposition should be proud of that.

Mr. Speaker, there was more I wanted to say, but because of time allocation I'm not allowed to speak on behalf of my constituents for the full, normal time allotted in our democratic Chamber. I will conclude by thanking Albertans for standing up, for signing petitions, for calling their MLAs, for standing on the steps of this Legislature. I assure them that when the time comes and we have the chance, we will fix the rest of the problems with Bill 6.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any questions under 29(2)(a)?

The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be very brief. I just wanted to say that I'll be voting against this bill because of the 32,000 signatures on the petition, because of the 2,000 letters and e-mails that were written to us and presented in this House, because at a meeting last Saturday in my home community of St. Paul that's what I was told to do by the people that I represent. I would like to thank everybody for coming and exercising their democratic right by stepping up in the demonstrations out front, going to all the meetings all over the province. We will represent you as the Wildrose Party.

Thank you.

Mr. Orr: I rise to speak in favour of this amendment. I rise because the people of Lacombe-Ponoka have overwhelmingly spoken against Bill 6. The people of Alberta tried to talk to the government. They were not heard. People from Lacombe-Ponoka have driven to the Legislature, given up a day of work multiple times to try and speak to this government. They have written letters; they've made phone calls. Official county councils have consulted and asked that the bill be slowed down until people can be consulted. Province-wide this protest has grown to a crescendo: 32,000 petition signatures, thousands of letters tabled. In all of that, I received exactly one letter in support of the bill.

I care about farm workers in unjust situations, but you don't do them justice by persecuting tens of thousands of farm families. This is a democracy. I don't see workers protesting on the steps or writing letters or making calls. They are not feeling threatened, or they would cry out. The only letter I've received is actually a lobbying letter.

The farm community has something that forced legislation can never give them. They have true social insurance, far better than socialist interference. When a house burns down, they raise money, and they rebuild it together in my riding. When a car accident happens, they come together and they do the chores, they harvest the crops, and they hold fundraisers and are not forced by social welfare legislation. They have true community. They have true social security. They don't have to fight with inspectors who by default appear to criminalize them. Neighbours do it with honour and respect, not shame and suspicion. Albertans do not want socialists re-creating their culture for them.

The misinformation surrounding this bill comes from the utter mismanagement of the government side. Even this morning I wanted the WCB orientation material that was rolled out to CA staff a couple of days ago so that I could give out reliable information to people. My staff this morning called the WCB, asked for a copy of the materials, and today, now, the WCB says: sorry, we've been told not to give it out anymore. The messaging changes every day. What are we supposed to tell people? And you want them to trust this?

In 1981, when closure was first invoked in this province, the government of the day limited debate to six more days, not hours. This government is limiting debate to one hour. Six days versus an hour? The social democracy crowd are truly strangling debate and democracy.

I urge all members to vote for the amendment and against this bill. I'll stop with that so that other members can speak.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a). The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Under 29(2)(a). Thank you. I just might add very briefly. I know that my hon. colleague for Lacombe-Ponoka agrees that the work that goes into this place, the work that goes into communicating with farmers and ranchers, the work that goes into making legislation happen doesn't take place in isolation. Mr. Speaker, I know that the hon. member agrees with me that there are other people outside of this Chamber, not just farmers and ranchers, who give up their life to try and make Alberta better. There are a lot of people who give up their lives and their time, work extremely long hours. In this past week I know that many of them have been working 15, 16 hours a day. Many on the government side have as well.

I just see that a number of our staff team have joined us in the gallery this morning. I won't take the time to introduce them by name, but I would just like to take the opportunity to say thank you for all of the work you do for this province and on behalf of farmers and ranchers.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Yeah. I'll be brief because I've already been on my feet. My position hasn't changed. We're dead set against this bill the government has. But I want to ask the hon. member over there because it needs to be said this morning. No matter how much we disagree, our party does not agree with bullying, cyber or otherwise. Does your party agree? I'm sure the answer is going to be yes, but I think it's a good day to hear it out loud.

The Speaker: Is there a response to the question?

Mr. Cooper: I don't think I'm allowed, but unequivocally, with no question, there isn't anyone on this side of the House who does not agree with that, and that behaviour should be condemned to the full extent.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Any others under 29(2)(a)?

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I thank the hon. member for his introduction. You know, I won't point out that the Official Opposition House Leader was just maybe not quite in order in his introduction because I want to do the same thing.

In the gallery, Mr. Speaker, is Darlene Dunlop. She and her partner, Eric Muekamp, who is not here, have fought relentlessly on this. To them goes a great deal of credit for raising the consciousness of the public and the Legislature on this matter. It should be a proud day for them, and I thank them for what they've done.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.
Anyone else who would wish to speak?

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I know that the time is short, so I just want to say this. At the beginning of this discussion we said that we are in favour of safety. All farmers have asked us to make sure that everyone in this Legislature knows that they are in favour of safety. They work hard to make sure that the best practices are applied on their farms and ranches throughout Alberta, and this is something that we have to be proud of and stand firm on. This is something that we have to make sure that we champion every single day.

Unfortunately, what we have today is a lessening of their ability to do what they do so well and have done so well for 98 years. This is the sort of thing that we didn't want to see happen. This is why we brought forward amendments, Mr. Speaker, and this is what we have fought against. Rather than allowing them more choice in their ability to provide insurance for their people and for their operation, they have restricted that choice. This is the sort of thing that is unacceptable to farmers and unacceptable to us in the opposition.

Now, one thing that I'd like to say, Mr. Speaker, is that while I was down in Mexico, I had the opportunity to be able to climb to the top of a pyramid at Chichén Itzá, and it was one of the best experiences my family had. Unfortunately, the next time we went back, we were not allowed to climb to the top because someone had fallen off the top, so they had restricted everybody from being able to go up to the top.

That's the kind of legislation that we saw today, that they are reacting rather than acting. This sort of thing does not make good legislation. When you act, that means you consult. You make sure that you have all the figures, all of the information, and all we have seen is a reaction to a problem. This is where we are fundamentally different in our arguments from this government. We will continue for the next three and a half years to oppose any kind of reaction. This is not what this province needs or deserves, Mr. Speaker, and this is why I am one hundred per cent behind the motion to send this to committee.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: That's under 29(2)(a)?

The Speaker: Under Standing Order (29)(2)(a).

Mr. Smith: Can I just speak to it instead?

The Speaker: So long as there is no other member under 29(2)(a).
The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm still learning, as I think we both are.

You know, I would acknowledge today that this issue has brought the emotions to the forefront. I've seen some of us grumpier today than I've seen before in the House. I've seen tears on both sides. I think that that speaks to the commonality that we all have as legislators, that we are all human and that we are all people. However, I want to get past the emotion. As somebody that is as emotional as I am and, as my kids would attest, often cried at Little House on the Prairie, sometimes we have to get past the emotions and look at the reality. I've heard too many of my constituents, farmers and ranchers, too many from across this province voice legitimate concerns about this bill, and as legislators we cannot ignore that. We just can't, not if we're going to do our job properly and appropriately.

At the very heart of this institution, Mr. Speaker, we are democrats. We believe that when the people speak, we should listen, and we should rule in accordance with the wishes of the people. We can all have our own convictions, and we can believe in those convictions passionately. The Member for West Yellowhead spoke very passionately last night. I understand the passion. I have my own passions as well. But we are first and foremost charged with enacting legislation that reflects the will of the people. I think it's clear that a wise government, a government that was acting democratically, a government that was concerned about the wishes and the will of the people would be able to pull back, would be able to understand the purpose of this hoist amendment, would understand that there's value in this for the people of Alberta.

Reflection, listening, getting it right: we've heard all of those comments this morning. They have value. They're important. I would appeal through you, Mr. Speaker, to this Assembly that we don't have to talk past each other, that we can talk to each other. We can together, with each other, take another crack at this. Push it off that six months. To the hon. member: we can talk to each other. It doesn't have to be past each other.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must say through you to the hon. member that I certainly do appreciate his comments. One area that really resonated with me in his presentation was his responsibility to his riding as an MLA. That's something I take seriously. It is a great honour always to rise in this Assembly for the people of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

But I also feel that over the last few weeks opposition MLAs have had to also take on another responsibility, and that is to continually rise in this Assembly and speak on behalf of tens of thousands of people that don't even live in our ridings. That deeply concerns me, that those people's views, in my opinion, have not been brought to this Assembly to be debated properly on such an important bill. Why?

Mr. Speaker, today the government has brought forward closure. Closure. They say that we are trying to drag out the bill. There are 22 of my caucus mates here, who represent a lot of farmers. Beside me there's the third party, which has eight members. So that's 30 members, just there alone, that want to have a chance to stand up and speak to something that is going to affect our friends and neighbours, that have sent us here, in a significant way, in our view, something that has created more turmoil back home than I've ever seen and that I certainly hope I never see again in my career.

This government has brought forward closure, Mr. Speaker. Does that seem fair? They've done it three times in, I think, 30 hours. I'm not sure because I've been in here for so long with lack of sleep fighting for my constituents. What I want to talk to the member about is how he feels and how the people in his community feel about the fact that this government is now going to shut down debate on something that's so important.

Let's be clear. Farmers and ranchers back home and all the communities that surround them and urban communities as well – they're coming along as they're starting to realize what happened – do not trust this government. This government has lost the complete trust of our communities. Now, granted, they didn't have much trust in the community that I come from. That's fair. They did not. But they did have trust in the communities of several members across the way, enough trust that they elected them, sent them to this Assembly to do what I'm doing, and that is to stand up for what the majority of their constituents want, to stand up and fight for what they have asked.

Now, as I said last night, Mr. Speaker, I'm a new MLA. I'm only six or seven months into the job. I know that along the way there are going to be tough choices that we're going to have to make. The burden of office is going to be on us to make decisions when it's not always going to be clear what our constituents want or what the majority of the riding wants. In this case, it is without a doubt clear what Albertans want us to do. It is without a doubt clear what they want. There is no grey area here. We had to bring on extra staff just to keep up with the communications. We had to bring on extra staff to try to help the constituents of the MLAs across the way who are not answering their phones.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I must advise that we have used our 60 minutes. Pursuant to Government Motion 28, agreed to earlier this morning, I must now put every question necessary for the disposal of Bill 6 at third reading.

Firstly, on the amendment.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a third time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank all members of the House for their contribution. While it has been rather contentious, I note that this session has also seen a number of moments of harmony and unanimity on the passage of some bills. I think it's been a productive session. Not only have we passed a budget, but we passed a number of very important pieces of legislation as well. I would like to thank all members, including the Minister of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour and the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry and particularly the Premier, for their leadership with respect to this past bill. I would also like to acknowledge the yeoman work done by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View in fighting for this particular bill. I'd also like to thank the opposition House leaders for their co-operation in helping to bring this week to a conclusion.

Mr. Speaker, it's my duty now to advise the House that pursuant to Government Motion 14 the business for the sitting is now concluded.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Government Motion 14, agreed to on December 1, 2015, the House stands adjourned until February 2016. We have already all lost one member in this weather. Let us make sure that you drive home safely and peacefully and take the time for a rest.

The House is adjourned.

[The Assembly adjourned at 11:36 a.m. pursuant to Government Motion 14]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 1st Session (2015)

Activity to December 10, 2015

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter numbers until the conclusion of the Fall Sittings.
